5. Besides the information referred to in Article 2.66 of the Civil Code, a period of association's activity, if it is of limited duration, shall be indicated in the Register of Legal Entities.

CHAPTER THREE MANAGEMENT OF AN ASSOCIATION

Article 7. Bodies of an association

1. An association shall acquire the civil rights, undertaking the civil obligations and shall implement them through its management bodies.

2. An association must have a general meeting of members or any other body (conference, convention, congress, assembly or other), which enjoys all or part of the rights of the general meeting of members.

3. The provisions of this Law applicable to a general meeting of members shall apply to the body of an association (conference, convention, congress, assembly or other), which enjoys all rights of a general meeting of members.

4. In the event any other body of an association is being set up (conference, convention, congress, assembly or other) which enjoys only a part of the rights of a general meeting of members, then a general meeting of members shall be obligatory. The provisions of this Law applicable to a general meeting of members, with the exception of subparagraph 1 and 6 of paragraph 6 of Article of this Law ~~istatym~~ the decisions provided for in which may be taken by a general meeting of members, shall apply to the body of an association which enjoys a part of the rights of a general meeting of members.

5. The management body (sole or (and) collegiate) must function in an association.

6. Several bodies may be set up in an association.

7. The structure of the association bodies, their competence, the procedure for convening and taking decisions shall be laid down in the statutes of an association.

8. Members of the collegiate bodies, set in the statutes of an association, which are not the management bodies, shall not be remunerated for activities.

9. Minutes must be taken of general meetings of members and sittings of collegiate bodies.

Article 8. General meeting of members

1. A general meeting of members shall:

1) amend the statutes of an association;

2) appoint (elect) and recall members of the management bodies, unless otherwise provided for in the statutes of an association;

3) appoint (elect) and recall members of other collegiate bodies, if such bodies are provided for in the statutes of an association, unless otherwise established in the statutes of an association;

4) fix the amount of initial contributions of members of the association and the amount of membership fees, the procedure for paying them, if the statutes of the association do not lay down the procedure of payment;

5) approve annual accounts of the association;

6) take a decision regarding restructuring or termination (reorganisation or liquidation) of the association;

7) take a decision regarding the establishment of other legal persons or becoming a member of other legal persons, unless otherwise provided for in the statutes of the association.

2. A general meeting of an association shall resolve other issues assigned to the competence of the general meeting of the association by this Law and the statutes of the association, if under this Law such activity is not assigned to the competence of other bodies of the association and if it does not constitute the functions of the management bodies according to its essence.

3. A general meeting shall not have the right to assign to other bodies of the association to resolve the issues falling within the competence of the general meeting of members, with the exception of the cases laid down in subparagraphs 2, 3 and 7 of paragraph 1 of this Article.

4. All members of an association shall be entitled to a decisive vote in a general meeting of members. One member shall be entitled to one vote in a general meeting of members. If the statutes of an association provide for any other body (conference, convention, congress, assembly or other) which enjoys all or part of the rights of a general meeting of members, when such a body takes decisions, each person who represents members of an association shall be entitled to as many votes as there are members of the association he represents. A member shall personally participate in the body which has all or part of the rights of a general meeting of members (a natural person or a single-person management body; in the cases defined by laws and instruments of incorporation – members and participants of other bodies – natural persons acting within the scope of the rights and duties granted to them by laws and instruments of incorporation (statutes of the association, regulations)), excluding the exceptions laid down by laws, or the abovementioned member shall authorise another person or concludes with him an agreement to transfer the right to vote. A member of the association - a legal person may be represented at a general meeting of members only by the employees, participants or management body members of that legal person.

5. Members of the management bodies and other collegiate bodies of an association, provided they are not the members of the association, may participate in the general meeting of members without the right to vote.

6. A general meeting of members shall be convened in accordance with the procedure laid down by the statutes of an association.

7. A general meeting of members may take decisions when more than 1/2 of the members of an association attend it, unless otherwise provided for in the statutes of the association. A decision of the general meeting of members, with the exception of the decisions specified in subparagraphs 1 and 6 of paragraph 1 of this Article and the cases when members of collegiate bodies are being elected, shall be deemed adopted, when more “yes” votes than “no” votes are cast for it by the members who participated in the voting (the persons who abstained shall not be counted, that is they are regarded as persons who have not participated during the voting), unless the statutes of the association provide for a greater majority. In order to take the decision of a general meeting of members, specified in subparagraphs 1 and 6 of paragraph 1 of this Article, the votes of not less than 2/3 of the members of the association participating in the meeting shall be required. In those cases when members of collegiate bodies are appointed (elected), decisions shall be taken in accordance with the procedure laid down by the statutes of the association.

8. If the quorum has not been met in the general meeting of members, a repeated general meeting of members must be called in accordance with the procedure laid down by the statutes of the association, which shall be entitled to take decisions on the issues that were on the agenda of the meeting which failed to be held, regardless of the number of the members of the association who attended the meeting.

9. A general meeting of members of an association may be called by the decision of the court, if it has not been called in accordance with the procedure laid down by the statutes of the association and a member of the association or the management body has appealed to the court in this regard.

Article 9. Management bodies

1. The management bodies shall act in the name of an association in the presence of relations with other persons, and the said bodies shall also conclude transactions in the name of the association.

2. Besides the functions provided for in Article 2.82 of the Civil Code, the management body shall employ and dismiss employees, conclude employment contracts with them, prepare and present to a general meeting of members a report on activities of the association, announce or organise dissemination of public information, organise voluntary works in accordance with the procedure laid down by the Government, resolve other issues within the competence of the management bodies as prescribed in this Law and the statutes of the association. The management body shall also take decisions on setting-up of branches and representative offices, and termination of activities thereof, approve their regulations, unless otherwise provided for in the statutes of the association.

3. If several management bodies are set up in an association, the statutes of the association must define the competence of each body.

4. A member of the management bodies of an association may be reimbursed for his activities in these bodies.

5. Natural persons – members of the association and natural persons proposed by the members of the association – legal persons may be members of a collegiate management body. The statutes of the association may lay down additional requirements for a member of the collegiate management body.

6. A collegiate management body may take decisions when more than 1/2 of members attend its meeting.

Article 10. Report on activities of an association

1. A management body specified in the statutes of an association must, within the time limit set in the statutes, draw up and present to a general meeting of members a report on activities of the association for every completed financial year. This report shall be accessible to the public. At the request of each natural or legal person an association must create conditions for everyone to get access to this report in the registered office of the association or in other ways.

2. The report on activities of an association must indicate:

- 1) information about the activities of the association when implementing the purposes of activities defined in its statutes;
- 2) the number of the members of the association at the end of a financial year;
