119th Session

Judgment No. 3437

THE ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNAL,

Considering the complaint filed by Mr I. T. against the Technical Centre for Agricultural and Rural Cooperation (CTA) on 13 July 2012 and corrected on 5 September, the CTA's reply of 14 November 2012, corrected on 31 January 2013, the complainant's rejoinder of 20 March, corrected on 25 March, and the CTA's surrejoinder of 26 June 2013;

Considering Articles II, paragraph 5, and VII of the Statute of the Tribunal;

Having examined the written submissions and decided not to hold oral proceedings, for which neither party has applied;

Considering that the facts of the case and the pleadings may be summed up as follows:

A. The complainant was recruited in 1996. At the material time, he had a contract for an indefinite period of time and held a post of Senior Programme Coordinator.

In December 2010 the Executive Board of the CTA adopted the Centre's Strategic Plan 2011-2015 and in February 2011 it approved the Strategy Implementation Plan, which involved, amongst other things, a restructuring of the CTA's operational departments and the concomitant creation of nine new positions. Since the number of statutory posts in the new structure could not be higher than in the old one because of budgetary constraints, the creation of these new positions entailed the abolition of several existing positions, and the Centre therefore carried out a two-stage “fit analysis” in order to identify the staff members who could be retained in the new structure. On 14 April 2011, during the first stage, at the end of which the Centre decided which of the positions from the old structure could be kept in the new one, the complainant was interviewed by a panel including the Director of the Centre and an external consultant who had been engaged by the CTA. On that occasion he expressed interest in six of the nine new positions. On 16 May 2011 he was informed that his post did not fit into the Centre’s new strategy and on 27 May he received a score chart showing the assessment of his suitability for two of the positions which he had mentioned during the interview on 14 April. The purpose of the second stage of the fit analysis was to determine whether it would be possible to reassign the staff members whose posts were to be made redundant. On 15 June 2011 the complainant was informed that the fit analysis had shown that he did not possess the qualifications required for “the new duties”. He was advised that his contract would therefore be terminated as of 14 March 2012 and that he would receive compensation equal to 12 months of his basic monthly salary.

On 9 August 2011 the complainant lodged an internal complaint against the decision of 15 June 2011, in which he requested inter alia his reinstatement or, failing that, payment of a sum equivalent to the salary which he would have received between March 2012 and the date of his retirement. Having been informed by a letter of 5 October that his requests could not be granted, on 17 November 2011 he requested the opening of a conciliation procedure.

In his report of 26 April 2012 the conciliator concluded that the Centre had not breached the principle of sound administration or its duty of care in implementing the CTA’s restructuring process. However, he took the Centre to task for not supplying the complainant with sufficient information with regard to the “ineligibility of his qualifications” for any of the new posts created. Although he took the view that this failure did not render the decision to terminate the complainant’s contract unlawful, the conciliator found that it had caused the complainant moral injury which should be redressed by granting compensation in an amount to be determined ex aequo et bono by the parties. On 10 May the complainant told the conciliator that the compensation he had been offered at a conciliation meeting on 27 April was insufficient. The next day the conciliator recorded the failure of the conciliation process. On 13 July 2012 the complainant filed his complaint with the Tribunal, in which he impugns the decision of 15 June 2011.

B. The complainant contends that the Centre did not comply with its duty to state the reasons for its decision, particularly because the score chart which he received on 27 May 2011 lacked clarity. He considers that, in accordance with Article 28 of the Staff Regulations and the Tribunal's case law, he should have been reassigned as a matter of priority to one of the new positions. He also submits that the Centre did not examine all the possibilities for reassigning him to one of the new positions, including at a grade lower than the post he was holding, and he considers that post holders in the old structure should have been reassigned to the new positions and, if necessary, provided with suitable training.

The complainant contends that the CTA committed several glaring errors when assessing his professional situation. He is surprised that the Director of the CTA endorsed the opinion of the external consultant, whereas he could have based his decisions on the assessment reports of each of the staff members concerned. He also maintains that the CTA's restructuring process was unlawful in that the Staff Committee was not properly consulted on the matter. Lastly, he accuses the Centre of breaching the principle of sound administration and its duty of care, mainly because, in his view, the restructuring process was not transparent.

The complainant requests the setting aside of the impugned decision and of that of 5 October 2011, and his reinstatement as from 14 March 2012. If he is not reinstated, he claims 601,534.01 euros, a sum equivalent to the salary he would have received until retirement age. He also asks the Tribunal to award him 10,000 euros in compensation for moral injury and costs.

C. In its reply the Centre contends that it complied with its duty to state the reasons for its decision and that, on several occasions, it provided the complainant with an explanation of the circumstances surrounding the restructuring of the CTA and the termination of his contract. It considers that if the complainant did not understand the score chart which he received on 27 May 2011, he could have requested clarification. Furthermore, the CTA says that it examined the possibility of reassigning the complainant to one of the new posts, but his profile did not match any of them.

The Centre denies that it made glaring errors of judgement in assessing the compatibility of the complainant's profile with the new posts. It explains that the external consultant played only an "administrative role" and merely gave "an opinion, which did not bind either the panel or the Director". Moreover, it stresses that it consulted the Staff Committee during the restructuring process. It acknowledges that it did not do so "when taking the individual decisions which led to the termination of the appointment of some staff members", but says that it was not bound to involve the Committee in the preparation of those decisions. Lastly, the Centre endeavours to show that, throughout the restructuring process, it complied with the principle of sound administration and its duty of care.

The CTA asks the Tribunal to make an award of costs against the complainant.

D. In his rejoinder the complainant enlarges on his arguments.

E. In its surrejoinder the CTA maintains its position.

CONSIDERATIONS

1. The complainant joined the CTA in December 1996 and was given a contract for an indefinite period of time as from 1 January 2008.

2. In December 2010 the Executive Board of the Centre adopted a new strategic plan covering the period 2011-2015. In February 2011 it approved an implementation plan which involved restructuring and redundancies at the CTA.

3. As the complainant's job was to be abolished in the context of this restructuring, he expressed interest in six of the nine positions which were to be created in the new structure.

He was informed by a letter of 15 June 2011 that the fit analysis, as evidenced by the score chart which he had received on 27 May 2011, had shown that he did not meet the requirements of the new positions and that consequently his appointment would be terminated as of 14 March 2012.

4. On 9 August 2011 the complainant lodged an internal complaint against the termination of his appointment under Article 66(2) of the CTA Staff Regulations. The Director decided to reject that complaint on 5 October 2011. The complaint filed with the Tribunal after the failure of the conciliation procedure provided for in Article 67(1) of the said Regulations must be deemed to be directed against this decision. The complainant requests the setting aside of the decision of 15 June 2011 and therefore of that of 5 October and, principally, his reinstatement in the CTA. Failing that, he asks that the Centre be ordered to pay him a sum equivalent to the whole of the salary which he would have received until retirement age, as well as compensation for moral injury.

5. Precedent has it that international organisations may undertake restructuring entailing the redefinition of posts and staff reductions in order to achieve greater efficiency or budgetary savings (see, for example, Judgments 2156, under 8, or 2510, under 10). However, each and every individual decision adopted in the context of such restructuring must respect all the applicable legal rules and in particular the fundamental rights of the staff concerned (see, for example, Judgments 1614, under 3, 2907, under 13, or 3169, under 7).

6. The Tribunal's case law has consistently upheld the principle that an international organisation may not terminate the appointment of a staff member whose post has been abolished, at least if he or she holds an appointment of indeterminate duration, without first taking suitable steps to find him or her alternative employment (see, for example, Judgments 269, under 2, 1745, under 7, 2207, under 9, or 3238, under 10). As a result, when an organisation has to abolish a post held by a staff member who, like the complainant in the instant case, holds a contract for an indefinite period of time, it has a duty to do all that it can to reassign that person as a matter of priority to another post matching his or her abilities and grade. Furthermore, if the attempt to find such a post proves fruitless, it is up to the organisation, if the staff member concerned agrees, to try to place him or her in duties at a lower grade and to widen its search accordingly (see Judgments 1782, under 11, or 2830, under 9).

7. In the instant case, it cannot be disputed that the CTA embarked upon a procedure designed to permit, as far as possible, the reassignment of staff members whose posts were to be made redundant.

8. However, it is clear from the submissions that, in order to help it to analyse whether staff members' profiles fitted the new posts available after the restructuring, the Centre called on the services of an external consultant who assisted in drawing up score charts to assess the suitability of the staff members concerned for these new posts.

9. By thus commissioning an extraneous body to undertake a task which entailed interfering in the assessment of staff members' suitability for the available positions, whereas the Staff Regulations made no provision for this, the Centre established an assessment system parallel to that which existed officially and which, moreover, did not offer staff members the safeguards inherent in the official system. Although the defendant organisation submits that this skills assessment was conducted by a panel which had full discretion in the matter, it is plain that the positions of the panel were, at the very least, influenced by the conclusions reached by the external consultant. The evidence on file shows that the failure of the process for reassigning the complainant as a matter of priority was at least partly due to consideration of the results which he obtained in that parallel assessment process, as reflected in the score charts assessing his suitability for two of the positions for which he had applied.

10. It follows from the foregoing, without there being any need to examine the complainant's other pleas, that the above-mentioned decision of the Director of the CTA of 5 October 2011 and that of 15 June 2011 terminating the complainant's appointment must be set aside.

11. Having regard to the nature and length of the complainant's appointment, the Tribunal will therefore order the CTA to reinstate him, to the full extent possible, in the Centre as from the date on which the termination of his contract took effect, that is 14 March 2012, with all the legal consequences that this entails.

12. However, if the CTA considers, in view of its staff complement and budgetary resources, that it cannot actually reinstate the complainant, it shall have to pay him material damages for his unlawful removal from his post. In this connection, the complainant has no grounds for claiming the payment of all the emoluments which he would have received until he reached retirement age because, although his contract was concluded for an indefinite period of time, it did not guarantee that he would be employed by the Centre until the end of his career, since its functioning is contingent on various unforeseeable factors. The CTA will, however, be ordered to pay the complainant the equivalent of the salary and allowances of all kinds which he would have received had his contract remained in force for a period of five years as from 14 March 2012, less the compensation he received on termination of his contract and any remuneration he may have received during this period. The Centre must also pay the complainant the equivalent of the contributions to pension, provident or social security schemes which it would have had to bear during the same period.

13. The fact that the complainant's appointment was terminated unlawfully has caused him moral injury which must be redressed by the award of compensation in the amount of 5,000 euros.

14. As the complainant succeeds for the most part, he is entitled to costs which the Tribunal sets at 5,000 euros.

15. The CTA has entered the counterclaim that the complainant should be ordered to pay costs. In view of the foregoing considerations, this claim must obviously be dismissed.

DECISION

For the above reasons,

1. The decision of the Director of the CTA of 5 October 2011 and that of 15 June 2011 terminating the complainant's appointment are set aside.
2. The complainant shall be reinstated in the Centre to the full extent possible as from 14 March 2012, with all the legal consequences that this entails.
3. If the Centre considers that such reinstatement is impossible, it shall pay the complainant material damages calculated as indicated under 12, above.
4. At all events, the Centre shall pay the complainant moral damages in the amount of 5,000 euros.
5. It shall also pay him 5,000 euros in costs.

6. The complainant's remaining claims are dismissed, as is the Centre's counterclaim.
