KEYWORDS : CD ROM / ILO pub / Report / Employment / Employment creation / Labour market / Quality of working life / Information technology / Telecommunications / Developed country / Developing country
ABSTRACT : The Report examines employment trends at the global and regional levels, and explores the implications of the communications revolution on the world of work. Through the Internet and other networking technologies, access to information has never been greater. Barriers of time and distance in communication are diminishing, markets are changing as a result, and new patterns of job creation and loss have arisen. It evaluates the overall prospects for job creation and the quality of life at work in the information economy. It explores in detail whether employment stability will remain the norm and why education and lifelong learning now top policy agendas
