ABSTRACT

The title of the report Managing transitions: Governance for decent work signals that the heart of the matter is the management of change during people's working life: change from school to work, between jobs or occupations, from one country to another and from full-time employment to a well-earned retirement. It is about how societies organize themselves to have the flexibility to adapt, raise productivity, grow and compete, while maintaining a balance with the security that all families and communities need to build a happy and fulfilling existence.

ABSTRACT

This document presents an overview of the findings and recommendations of the UN Millennium Project, an independent advisory body to UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan. The report also directly integrates many of the ideas developed by the UN millennium project's task force on poverty and economic development, including many outlined by its interim report of February 2004. Another special aspect of the project is the rare and powerful opportunity to help give voice to the hopes, aspirations and vital needs of the world's poorest and most voiceless people. This triumph of the human spirit gives us the hope and confidence that extreme poverty can be cut by half by the year 2015, and indeed ended altogether within the coming years.

ABSTRACT

This report examines the impact of economic and financial crisis from a gender perspective. Case studies, research and agency reports were used as a basis to explore how and why women and men are differently affected by a crisis and crisis recovery measures. The report also provides a set of recommendations for crisis response largely based on the ongoing work of the ILO.

ABSTRACT

The economies of developing Asia and the Pacific generally showed remarkable resilience in 2003. Despite the uncertainties cause by the Iraq conflict, high oil prices, and the outbreak severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) epidemic, gross domestic product growth reached 6.3 in 2003, much better than expected earlier in the year and making it the most dynamic region in the world. The Asian Development Outlook discusses recent trends in foreign direct investment (FDI) flows in the region, their impact on the domestic economy, and the importance of the policy context in which these flows occur. While incentives and regulations targeting FDI may have some effect, a conducive environment for domestic investment and competition is more important.

ABSTRACT

The case studies reveal that national cooperative laws can generally be considered "gender neutral" and do not discriminate directly against women. Nevertheless, since women's participation in formally registered cooperatives is relatively low compared to that of men's, particularly in certain sectors and at the decision-making and higher levels, further investigation into other legal constraints was clearly warranted. Moreover, cooperatives are based on a broad set of democratic and egalitarian values, which would indicate equal opportunities and possibilities for both women and men alike.

ABSTRACT

The book details the findings of ILO field research on the global sports footwear, apparel and retail sectors between 2000 and 2002. The goal of this research was to identify and examine the ways in which companies adopt, implement and evaluate policies regarding codes of conduct in their global business operations. The main objective was to illustrate the different methods and strategies by which multinational enterprises achieve their labour practice objectives and thereby provide a learning platform.

ABSTRACT

Families who put more adults in the labour force and who moved from the informal to the formal sector often did so to try to earn more money and have a better chance at finding decent housing, obtaining adequate food and clothing, and providing the essentials for their families. At the same time, these transformations meant that there was no longer an adult at home in most households to care for young children and adult family members in need of help. This document focuses on addressing the following question: How are workers with family responsibilities faring in the workplace? In addressing this question, the paper will present cases from the in-depth ethnographic studies conducted as part of the project on global working families.

ABSTRACT

The book is the result of the work by nine independent scientists who agreed to contribute their time to write on specific topics within their individual expertise on live reef food fish (LRFF) trade issues. It was agreed that the alarming data and information published recently about the perilous state of most of the world's fish populations more than justified the need to document the special concerns about the LRFF trade in a stand-alone publication. The book does not in any way claim to cover all the different aspects of the LRFF trade, but should be read as offering a thorough analysis of the situation in 2003.

ABSTRACT

In this issue, Labour Education contributors look at the nature and quality of the participatory process and assess trade union involvement in shaping the content of official poverty reduction strategy papers (PRPs). Many obstacles remain. According to the World Bank's own findings, consultations with trade unions have not been systematic. In some countries, unions were totally left out of the process. In many others, there was little union involvement beyond the PRSP formulation stages. Moreover, in a number of eligible countries, repressive governments are still out to curb the exercise of trade union rights.

ABSTRACT

The Yearbook of Labour Statistics is a publication of the ILO, prepared by the Bureau of Statistics. The 2004 issue presents the principal labour statistics for over 190 countries, areas or territories. Most of the tables cover the 10 years from 1994-2003. However, not all countries are in a position to provide the ILO with series covering the whole period; for some, figures may not be available until several years after the reference year.

ABSTRACT

In this paper, the author analyses "employment with a human face". This, as has been already emphasized, can be viewed as a classic statement of the first principles underlying the study and practice of modern human resources and industrial relations. As we all know, industrial relations can make an important contribution to good governance and push forward the ILO strategy of decent work for all.

ABSTRACT

Disability issues are now increasingly viewed as issues of human rights. The basic idea of human rights law, centered on the concept of human dignity, is that all people have equal rights, notably the right to live a full and decent life. This guidelines reflect the reappraisal of disability as a human rights issue. Intended for policy-makers and drafters of legislation, they have been developed with a view to assisting in improving the effectiveness of national laws concerning training and employment of disabled persons.

ABSTRACT

Many people with disabilities find themselves on the margins of society, excluded more by their social and physical environment than by their individual impairments. The ILO is committed to promoting equality of opportunity and treatment in the world of work for persons with disabilities. The handbook is an important tool to help all ILO staff create an enabling environment for people with disabilities. It is based on the principle that people with disabilities should, as far as possible, be able to obtain access to ILO buildings and services. We should make good use of this handbook which is also part of the first step in a wider ILO policy initiative to promote access and participation for people with disabilities.

ABSTRACT

The report looks at the relationship between freedom of association and the settlement of labour conflicts. This is particularly important in societies in transition. In a centrally led single-union system, labour conflict was not supposed to exist; to the extent that it did exist, it was dealt with by the centralized structure. When economic transformation leads to insecurity and unemployment, if no appropriate mechanisms are in place to deal with their effects with the full participation of those concerned, protest action and conflicts which erupt are dealt with by the law enforcement authorities, and criminal charges may be brought against the leaders of such action.

ABSTRACT

The report is based on a multi dimensional approach to poverty following ADB's poverty reduction strategy, which defines poverty as a deprivation of essential assets. The analytical framework of the country poverty analysis blends a more traditional analysis of income poverty with an assessment of access to five different types of assets. Taken from the sustainable livelihoods approach, these assets are human, physical, natural, financial and social capital.

The information document on ratifications and standards-activities provides an overview of developments in international labour standards during 2003. It supplements the information contained in the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations.

Part I provides general information on recent developments, concerning international labour standards, constitutional and other procedures in relation to the supervision of standards and technical assistance in the field of standards. Part II provides information on the ratification of individual conventions and protocols in table format. Part III contains "country profiles" which bring together information on the ratification and application of conventions and on the submission of instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to the competent authorities in a table format by country.

ABSTRACT

The Asian Development Bank's (ADB) position on user charges is established in a variety of official documents. A review of those documents shows that ADB believes tariffs should be: simple, transparent and predictable; ensure financial sustainability without subsidies, with a few exceptions; help the poor satisfy their basic needs, if other means are not feasible; promote efficient use of resources; and avoid cross-subsidies.

ABSTRACT

This paper advocates a rigorous, scientific approach to the evaluation of innovations in micro-savings products. Such rigorous, randomized evaluations can help microfinance institutions have a clearer sense of why certain products are successful while others are not, and can help researchers and policymakers investigate the mechanisms and incentives involved with successful savings mobilization.

ABSTRACT

New forms of work organization were pioneered in the automobile industry, but many established practices were being renegotiated, underscoring the need for effective social dialogue. The types of jobs in the vehicle companies were also changing, leading to more scientific, information technology and engineering occupations, for which access to lifelong learning was key. The report addressed the impact of legislation, in particular safety and environmental legislation, and social dialogue - one of the themes for discussion. Other issues addressed in the report were international framework agreements (IFAs), global works councils and the global reporting initiative.

ABSTRACT

In this paper there is still much heated debate on how, and whether, the growing integration of the world economy has caused greater social and economic differences, some broad trends are observable: Past decades have coincided with increasing inequality within a majority countries, and at the same time nation states have been under increasing pressure to reduce government interventions, a trend that has reduced their ability to apply redistributive policies. The paper makes an attempt to reduce gap by analysing survey data from the international social survey programme that covers some 30 countries.

ABSTRACT

The paper presents the method to address both legal and labour market outcome aspects of a wide range of labour standards regarding: minimum wages, overtime and working time, paid time-off, unemployment and employment insurance, workers' compensation, collective bargaining, equal employment opportunity, unjust discharge, occupational health and safety, advance notice, workers' rights to information and consultation, parental and family leave, and transfer of undertaking and ownership. The paper presents indicators constructed for the United States, Canada and the European Union and addresses the applicability of the method for developing countries. The paper also provides a comparison with other methods of quantifying labour standards, providing an assessment of their different strengths and weaknesses.

This report will provide an explanation of the new labour laws and the stage reached with their development and implementation; and identify ways in which the ILO/USDOL Project might assist with the labour law reform process. Labour law in Indonesia has developed rapidly in recent years.

There are special challenges in the labour law reform process in Indonesia because of the current state of the laws and institutions, the fundamental and far-reaching nature of the reforms proposed and the need to consult widely about the reforms and to ensure that they have support from key groups in society.

ABSTRACT

Because of the uneven availability of published information on migration in different regions, it has not always been possible to present a fully global picture of certain aspects of labour migration, much less to discuss them in their full complexity, especially in countries or regions where governance capacities are particularly limited. Every effort has been made to include in the report those issues that are of common concerns to most if not all policy-makers dealing with migration questions. It is hoped that by bringing together in this volume the lessons that may be drawn from experience with policy successes as well as policy failures, the report will have facilitated the work of the general conference in deciding what the organization can contribute to the establishment of a fair deal for migrant workers in the global economy.

ABSTRACT

The paper discusses the poverty measurement techniques being used in and the poverty profile of Bangladesh. Data used in the paper are mainly taken from two national surveys: household income and expenditures survey (HIES) and poverty monitoring survey (PMS) conducted by Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics. Findings from the surveys indicate that the incidence of poverty has declined over the years. The distribution of income and expenditures shows that though nominal income has increased, income distribution has become skewed with high concentration of income in the highest decile and comparatively lower income share in the lowest decile.

This paper examines the performance of Asian asset management companies (AMCs). The analysis reveals that the AMCs vary in their design and performance. The paper claims that AMCs can trigger moral hazard-induced bank lending. Empirical examination of the Thai experience of AMCs reveals that moral-hazard induced bank lending resulted in creating more new non-performing loans in the case of public AMCs.

ABSTRACT

The paper reviews the poverty measuring practices, available measures of poverty, and economic growth figures of Nepal. The currently available three poverty rates for fiscal years 1976/77, 1984/85 and 1995/96 are found to be not comparable mainly due to change in methodology over time. This incompatible results is partially explained by comparing growth of the agricultural sector with the role of the sector in providing employment and income generation at the household level, and by comparing social indicators particularly literacy rate with the growth of the non-agricultural sector.

ABSTRACT

The paper covers several common goals of user charges; good governance, financial sustainability, distributive justice, economic efficiency and fair pricing. It shows that they can be pursued jointly, with little compromise or sacrifice, by following three steps: (a) set usage charges for distributive justice and economic efficiency; (b) if additional revenue is required for financial sustainability, set fixed charges for sustainability and fairness; and (c) increase or adjust charges at a rate consistent with good governance.

ABSTRACT

This working paper attempts to show the relevance of policies for employment generation and the reduction of the decent work deficits, as well as the policy linkages that can and should be taken up in such a sector-specific case. The report of the ILO Director-General entitled: "Reducing the Decent Work Deficit, global challenge", drew the attention to the deficits that continue to prevail against policy goals, the shortfalls that exist with regard to policy- and decision-making institutions or to the organizational and negotiating capacities of the public and private stakeholders; and the need for comprehensive and better integrated approaches to bring down these deficits and improve the effectiveness of the governments, social partners, and the entire world of work in taking up these challenges.

ABSTRACT

This book describes the basic techniques of work study as practised in many parts of the world, has been widely recognized as the best available introduction to the subject for work study practitioners, teachers and students. If one aims to improve methods of work, it cannot achieve the goal in isolation from current thinking and future trends that relate to operations technology. Furthermore, advances in technology, particularly in the field of information systems, can be harnessed to become a powerful tool of work study.

ABSTRACT

This report provides an overview of trends and problems in regard to the manner in which the general aspects of the employment relationship are regulated in different countries. This is based on a comparative analysis of the relevant laws of more than 60 ILO member states. The employment relationship is a legal notion widely used in countries around the world to refer to the relationship between a person called an "employee" (frequently referred to as "a worker") and an "employer" for whom the "employee" performs work under certain conditions in return for remuneration.

ABSTRACT

The report contains the project context and justification. This part describes the situation of children/youth in drug trafficking in Indonesia, Philippines and Thailand and their links to children in worst forms of child labour. It also describes the project design, research process and the pilot intervention models implemented in the schools, streets and in the communities. The report concludes with a set of recommendations for subsequent interventions for children/youth engaged in drug sale, production and trafficking of drugs.

ABSTRACT

ILO-IPEC has been executing an action-oriented research project in South East Asia, covering Thailand, Indonesia and Philippines since September 2002. The project aims to develop and demonstrate an action-oriented research methodology that provides better understanding and information on the use of children in the production, sales and distribution of illegal drugs. It also aims to reach children at risk as well as those involved in drugs through raising awareness and youth mobilization in communities, schools and as well as in work related environment.

ABSTRACT

The report is the mid-term implementation report of the ILO-IPEC for the biennium 2004-05. It reviews the current state of research and knowledge on child labour and IPEC's research projects underway to help close some of the existing gaps. It summarizes IPEC's response to the problem of child labour and its strategy to assist ILO member states to prevent and eliminate it.

ABSTRACT

The study has yielded a wealth of information. While findings confirm the notion of a culturally distinct, ancient tribe with intriguing customs and an endearing character, some other findings bring out an alarming range of issues that need urgent attention. Areas of concern include problems related to health and family indebtedness, which have gray effects especially on women and children. The report suggests that awareness, through appropriate non-formal education, would be a step forward.

ABSTRACT

This code of practice is based on principles established in international instruments relevant to the protection of workers' safety and health. The first two chapters deal with the objectives and application of the code. The next two chapters address, within a national framework, the responsibilities, duties and rights of the competent authority, the labour inspectorate, employers, workers and their organizations, suppliers, manufacturers and designers, and contractors, and occupational safety and health (OSH) management systems and services and OSH reporting.
