<Role of ILO>,<ILO Recommendation No. 193>,<Handbook>,<Workers' organizations>

ABSTRACT

This handbook on cooperatives for use by workers' organizations aims at improving the knowledge on cooperative enterprise. This form of organization, which is not new, is often unrecognized by the public at large, especially by workers and their organizations. Therefore, this handbook is an attempt to alleviate this deficit by analyzing the essential things to know about cooperatives: the characteristic features of cooperatives, cooperative enterprise as a whole, the promotion of cooperatives and the close ties that exist between the ILO and cooperatives.

06.01	Rights at work.

DESCRIPTORS

<ILO pub.>,<Rights at work>,<Human rights>,<Equality>,<Security>,<Deregulation>

ABSTRACT

This paper aims to develop a framework for thinking about rights at work, particularly in response to the argument that rights, such as those articulated in ILO conventions, are of little relevance to the needs and conditions of most developing countries. The rights of working people are based on ideas of social justice.

ABSTRACT

Industrial relations refer to a process in which the worker and the employer are supposed to be engaged in mutual adjustment, and to complement and support each other. In the beginning, both the employer and the worker may not be familiar with the rules, so they may step on each others toes. In such cases, they should forgive each other. As time goes by, one party will adjust their steps with those of their partner's, making beautiful, harmonious and pleasant movements.

ABSTRACT

The study engaged directly and consistently with children underlining and reflecting children's status as rights, holders and their right to express views on all matters that affect them and have their views given due weight.

The central message of the study is that "no violence against children is justifiable, and all violence against children is preventable". The study aims to mark a definitive global turning point: an end to the justification of violence against children, whether acceptable as 'tradition' or disguised as 'discipline'.

ABSTRACT

This book was envisioned for the use of researchers, practitioners, professionals and people who might not have a background in research but are very much interested in working with children. The book is divided into two parts, each of which is divided into three chapters. Each chapter begins with a review of the contents. A section, laying them together, summarizes the main points at the end of each chapter. Part I deals with the principles of doing participatory action research (PAR) with children. It covers the more theoretical and orientation aspects of PAR with children.

ABSTRACT

The book presents undeniable realities of the human rights situation in conflict-affected communities in the country. The research was conducted and this report is released during politically difficult times in the Philippines. Because of this situation and the sensitive nature of the subject matter, many of those involved have asked to remain unnamed in the report itself. This is especially the case for those based in the countryside where the armed conflicts and government "counter-insurgency" programmes are most felt.

ABSTRACT

The study adds to the growing evidence on the welfare cost that child labour entails on human capital. Based on the analysis of national surveys from seven countries, the present study seeks to determine the effect of work on children's schooling (in the age group 12-14 years). It examines whether a relationship exists between the hours of children's work and schooling outcomes, in different sectors, occupations and activities, broken down by gender.

ABSTRACT

This rapid assessment was undertaken by the ILO in response to concerns about a growing problem of child labour in Timor Leste. It aimed to provide more information about the child labour situation, especially in relation to children working in coffee farming, street/market vending in cities and domestic work. It describes the position of child workers in these sectors, including their hours and conditions of work and the reasons for them dropping out or never attending school.

ABSTRACT

This publication highlights some of the most important aspects and underlying principles within the framework of the millennium development goals. Some findings indicate that: multi-sectoral approaches have a much more effective and sustained impact in the elimination and prevention of child labour, combining the involvement of relevant government line ministries, social partners and civil society; education is necessary, but not sufficient intervention in the case of children in hazardous and exploitative labour.

ABSTRACT

The study key findings were that women start their businesses to supplement the family income, but eventually their businesses provided the major source of family income. These businesses most often are home-based. This can be explained mainly through women's struggle to combine family with business responsibilities, which is more easily achieved, if women's businesses are close to their homes.
