DESCRIPTORS

<ILO pub.>,<Industrial training>,<Skills training>,<India>

ABSTRACT

The report presents the concept and findings of the efficiency study of the industrial training institutes (ITIs) of India. The study focused on assessment of internal and external efficiency of the ITIs and involved large-scale tracer studies and company surveys. Recommendations focus on the need for greater operational autonomy, flexibility and accountability of public training institutes.

06.04	Vocational education and skills development for commerce workers.

<ILO pub.>,<Vocational education>,<Skills development>,<Employment>,
<Commerce workers>

ABSTRACT

The report aims to support governments and employers' and workers' organizations in developing their capacity to deal equitably and effectively with the social and labour problems of particular economic sectors. As the vast majority of future jobs are likely to be related in some way to working with technological devices, employability will require greater information technology literacy and, more generally, training on the use of technology.

13.01.2 Forced labour and human trafficking: a handbook for labour inspectors.

MFN : 4628
CALL NO. : ILO, 13.01.2; AFO. 2008

ABSTRACT

The study finds that the effects of parental migration on the rights of the child are mixed because proxy measures are often used. In terms of survival, the economic advantage resulting from the migration of a parent does not seem to have altered health-care behaviour, which remains poor. In fact, the number of visits to medical personnel actually decreases as older children are considered. There are also indications of a high incidence of hygiene-related health problems in families with migrant parents.

ABSTRACT

The authors find that productivity-enhancing technology shocks have a significant positive effect on employment in the Republic of Korea. Their evidence also indicates that technology shocks can explain fluctuations in output and prices, both in the short and long run, but demand shocks can only explain price fluctuations. This suggests an expanded role for supply-side policies that promote technological progress and innovation.

ABSTRACT

This report underlines the importance for the region both of strengthening its deftness in accessing new and growing markets in the global economy, and of assimilating and adapting to technological and organizational innovations. To ensure continued expansion of opportunities, maintenance of open trading and financial systems remains vital. To minimize risks, countries must learn from their mistakes and diversify their sources of growth.

ABSTRACT

Child domestic labour is one of the most widespread and exploitative forms of child work in the world today, and is also one of the most difficult to tackle. Child domestic workers are hard to reach not only because they work behind the closed doors of their employers' homes, but also because society sees the practice as normal and in relation to girls important training for later life.

ABSTRACT

Migration is an economic, social and political process that affects those who move, those who stay behind, and the places where they go. With the advent of globalization, labour migration has become a worldwide phenomenon. Along this development is the plight of more children being left behind by either one or both parents, leaving them to the care of extended family members or friends.
