INTERNATIONAL LABOUR
CONFERENCE

FORTY-NINTH SESSION
GENEVA, 1965

RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR OFFICE
GENEVA, 1965
CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

Page VII

FIRST PART: LIST OF MEMBERS OF DELEGATIONS, ETC.

| Delegations                                      | XVII |
| Observers                                        | XLVI |
| Representatives of the United Nations, Specialised Agencies and Other Official International Organisations | XLVI |
| Representatives of Non-Governmental International Organisations | XLVII |
| Registered Observers of Non-Governmental Organisations | L |
| Secretariat of Delegations                      | L |
| Officers of the Conference                      | LI |
| Officers of the Groups                          | LI |
| Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office | LI |
| Secretariat of the Conference                   | LI |
| Selection Committee                             | LVII |
| Credentials Committee                           | LVIII |
| Resolutions Committee                           | LVIII |
| Finance Committee of Government Representatives | LX |
| Committee on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations | LXI |
| Committee on Employment of Young Miners         | LXII |
| Committee on Women Workers                      | LXIII |
| Committee on Agrarian Reform                    | LXV |
| Committee on Co-operatives                      | LXVI |
| Drafting Committee                              | LXIX |

SECOND PART: VERBATIM REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS

1st Sitting: Opening of the Session; Address by Mr. Tarcici, Government delegate, Yemen; Election of the President; Presidential Address 3

2nd Sitting: Election of the Vice-Presidents; Appointment and composition of the Selection Committee; Nomination of the Officers of the Groups 10

3rd Sitting: First report of the Selection Committee; Submission and adoption; Second report of the Selection Committee; Submission and adoption; Nomination of the Officers of the Groups (cont.) 12

4th Sitting: Appeals concerning composition of Committees; Report of the Director-General; Discussion 14

5th Sitting: Report of the Director-General; Discussion (cont.) 36

6th Sitting: Third report of the Selection Committee; Submission and adoption; Report of the Director-General; Discussion (cont.) 46

7th Sitting: Report of the Director-General; Discussion (cont.) 66

8th Sitting: Communication of the report of the Appeals Board; Report of the Director-General; Discussion (cont.) 76

9th Sitting: Report of the Director-General; Discussion (cont.) 99
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sitting</th>
<th>Report of the Director-General : Discussion (cont.)</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>10th</td>
<td>111</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11th</td>
<td>131</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12th</td>
<td>140</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13th</td>
<td>157</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th</td>
<td>171</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15th</td>
<td>191</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16th</td>
<td>203</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17th</td>
<td>215</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18th</td>
<td>232</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19th</td>
<td>245</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20th</td>
<td>264</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21st</td>
<td>279</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22nd</td>
<td>293</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23rd</td>
<td>304</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24th</td>
<td>322</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25th</td>
<td>337</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26th</td>
<td>356</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27th</td>
<td>372</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28th</td>
<td>389</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29th</td>
<td>399</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
30th Sitting: Report of the Committee on Co-operatives: Discussion (cont.); Final record vote on the Convention concerning the minimum age for admission to employment underground in mines; Final record vote on the Recommendation concerning the minimum age for admission to employment underground in mines; Report of the Committee on Co-operatives: Discussion (concl.) and adoption; Proposed Conclusions with a view to the adoption of a Recommendation concerning the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries, Submitted by the Committee on Co-operatives: Adoption; Resolution concerning the placing on the agenda of the next Ordinary Session of the Conference of the question of the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries, Submitted by the Committee on Co-operatives: Adoption; Report of the Committee on Agrarian Reform: Submission, discussion and adoption; Resolution on agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects, Submitted by the Committee on Agrarian Reform: Adoption.

31st Sitting: First report of the Resolutions Committee: Submission and discussion; Final record vote on the Convention concerning medical examination of young persons for fitness for employment underground in mines; Final record vote on the Recommendation concerning conditions of employment of young persons underground in mines; First report of the Resolutions Committee: Discussion (concl.) and adoption; Second report of the Resolutions Committee: Submission, discussion and adoption.

32nd Sitting: Sixth report of the Credentials Committee: Submission and noting; Seventh report of the Credentials Committee: Submission and noting; Eighth report of the Credentials Committee: Submission and noting; Report of the Committee on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations: Submission, discussion and adoption; Eighth report of the Selection Committee: Submission and adoption; Closing speeches.

THIRD PART: APPENDICES

APPENDIX I: Reports of the Selection Committee

APPENDIX II: Credentials

APPENDIX III: Resolutions

APPENDIX IV: Second item on the agenda: Financial and budgetary questions

APPENDIX V: Third item on the agenda: Information and reports on the application of Conventions and Recommendations

APPENDIX VI: Fourth item on the agenda: The employment of young persons in underground work in mines of all kinds

APPENDIX VII: Fifth item on the agenda: The employment of women with family responsibilities

APPENDIX VIII: Sixth item on the agenda: Agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects

APPENDIX IX: Seventh item on the agenda: The role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries

APPENDIX X: Communications to the Conference

APPENDIX XI: Miscellaneous decisions of the Conference

APPENDIX XII: Resolutions adopted by the Conference

APPENDIX XIII: Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference: Authentic texts

INDEX TO SECOND AND THIRD PARTS
INTRODUCTION

The Forty-ninth Session of the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation was held at Geneva from 2 to 23 June 1965.

The following letter and memorandum concerning the session and communicating the agenda were sent by the Director-General of the International Labour Office to the governments of the Members on 8 September 1964.

Geneva, 8 September 1964.

Sir,

I have the honour to communicate to you the agenda of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference, together with information concerning the date, place and organisation of the session.

1. Agenda of the Conference.

The agenda of the Conference, as determined by the Governing Body at its 157th and 159th Sessions (Geneva, November 1963 and June-July 1964) and by the International Labour Conference at its 48th Session (Geneva, June-July 1964) is as follows:

I. Report of the Director-General.

II. Financial and budgetary questions.

III. Information and reports on the application of Conventions and Recommendations.

IV. The employment of young persons in underground work in mines of all kinds (second discussion).

V. The employment of women with family responsibilities (second discussion).

VI. Agrarian reform with particular reference to employment and social aspects (general discussion).

VII. The role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries (first discussion).

In addition, the Conference will have before it a special report concerning the application of the Declaration concerning the policy of apartheid of the Republic of South Africa, submitted by the Director-General in pursuance of the request contained in paragraph 6 of the operative part of the above-mentioned Declaration.

I enclose, for your information, a memorandum prepared in the light of the discussions in the Governing Body and at the International Labour Conference, which explains the scope of the items on the agenda and the procedure which the Conference will follow in dealing with them.

Every effort will be made to ensure that the documents submitted to the Conference are communicated to you well in advance of the opening of the session. In this connection, I venture to remind you that the timely preparation by the Office of the final reports for submission to the Conference depends essentially on the punctual communication by governments, by the dates stipulated, of their replies to and observations on the questionnaires and preliminary reports which are addressed to them.

It will be appreciated that the smooth working of the Conference depends on the delegates having an opportunity to study beforehand the documents prepared by the International Labour Office on which the discussions are based. The attention of your Government is therefore drawn to the importance of ensuring that the reports sent to it on the various items on the agenda are in the hands of delegates well in advance of the session.

2. Place and Date of the Session.

At its 157th Session (Geneva, November 1963) the Governing Body decided that the 49th Session of the Conference should be held in Geneva, at the Palais des Nations, and should open on Wednesday, 2 June 1965, the dates of 31 May and 1 June being left free for such meetings of the Government, Employers' and Workers' groups as may be necessary. The opening sitting of the Conference will be held at the Palais des Nations on Wednesday, 2 June 1965, at 10 a.m. and the Conference may be expected to continue until about 24 June.

3. Composition and Attendance of Delegations.\(^1\)

In addition to notes on the items on the agenda, the enclosed memorandum contains in its section D information relating to the composition of delegations. Your attention is drawn particularly to the importance of constituting delegations on a tripartite basis, appointed in consultation with the most representative organisations of employers and workers, and, in such a manner as appeared to them appropriate, methods of developing in practice the powers already existing under article 3 (3) of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation. Certain important considerations which the Credentials Committee of the 46th Session of the Conference desired should be brought to the attention of governments in this regard are set out in the memorandum.

For the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference, each delegate to the Conference may, in accordance with article 3, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, be accompanied by two advisers for each of the following five items: III, IV, V, VI and VII. In order to ensure equal representation of Employers and Workers on the Committees set up by the Conference, it is desirable that, so far as possible, equal numbers of Employers’ and Workers’ advisers should be appointed in each delegation.

In the memorandum, the regular application of the principle that as a general rule the sittings of the Committees shall not take place at the same time as the plenary sittings of the Conference has proved impracticable in recent years as the result of the growth in the volume of business coming before the Conference. The Governing Body recognised this with regret at its 148th Session (Geneva, March 1961) and stressed the importance of delegations being so equipped as to enable plenary sittings and sittings of committees to be held without interference with each other’s work when such simultaneity could not be avoided. Your Government is therefore requested to give consideration when composing its delegation to the importance of making arrangements for representation at the plenary sittings when such sittings are held simultaneously with the sittings of committees.

At its 123rd Session (Geneva, November 1953) the Governing Body of the International Labour Office instructed me to invite the governments concerned to explore, in consultation with the most representative organisations of employers and workpeople, and in such a manner as appeared to them appropriate, methods of developing in practice the powers already existing under article 3 (3) of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation enabling member States to appoint, in appropriate circumstances, additional advisers from non-metropolitan territories to each of their delegations. Article 3 (3) of the Constitution provides as follows:

Each Member which is responsible for the international relations of non-metropolitan territories may appoint as additional advisers to each of its delegates:

(a) persons nominated by it as representatives of any such territory in regard to matters within the self-governing powers of that territory; and

(b) persons nominated by it to advise its delegates in regard to matters concerning non-self-governing territories.

I may also remind you that, at its 124th Session (Geneva, March 1954), the Governing Body agreed that, on the recommendation of the responsible member State, where the latter considered that this would be appropriate having regard to the constitutional, political, economic and social development of any non-metropolitan territory for which that member State is responsible, such non-metropolitan territory may be invited, through the member State concerned, to participate by means of a tripartite observer delegation in sessions of the General Conference, with the rights and status accorded to observers under the present Standing Orders of the Conference.

I venture to express the hope that you will arrange to appoint your delegation sufficiently in advance so as to enable the delegates and advisers to prepare themselves properly for the work of the Conference.

In order to facilitate the organisation of the work of the Conference, it is essential that I should be informed of the composition of delegations at the earliest possible moment. I shall therefore be most grateful for any steps you may be good enough to take to ensure that the composition and credentials of your country’s delegation to the Conference are communicated to me as early as possible, and in any case not later than 15 days before the opening of the Conference.

The Governing Body at its 144th Session (Geneva, March 1960) stressed the importance it attaches to the fullest use being made of the opening days of the Conference. With this in view, the Governing Body has asked me to request governments to notify delegates on their appointment that acceptance of the appointment implies an obligation to be available in Geneva for the work of the Conference, personally or through an adviser authorised to act as substitute, not later than the opening of business on the morning preceding the opening of the Conference and until the close of the Conference. In this connection, I venture to draw your attention to the fact that important votes, i.e. the final votes on the adoption of international labour Conventions and/or Recommendations, frequently take place on the last day of the Conference. It is essential that delegates or their duly authorised substitutes should be present when such votes are taken; they should accordingly make arrangements to be available

\(^1\) The fourth and fifth paragraphs of point 3, which relate to non-metropolitan territories, appear in the letter sent to the Governments of the following member States only: Australia, Denmark, France, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, the Republic of South Africa, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.
Introduction

until the very end of the Conference. I shall be most grateful for your co-operation in this matter and for any steps you may be good enough to take to ensure that the attention of the delegates from your country to the forthcoming session of the Conference is drawn to the obligation referred to above.

As mentioned above, the 49th Session of the Conference is expected to open on Wednesday, 2 June 1965; delegates or their duly authorised substitutes should, therefore, be present in Geneva as from the morning of Tuesday, 1 June and should be available in Geneva until the evening of Thursday, 24 June, when it is expected that the Conference will have completed its work.

It may be assumed that the discussion of the Report of the Director-General will begin, as it has done at recent sessions of the Conference, on the first Friday of the session. In order to ensure the smooth working of the Conference, it is most desirable that a number of speakers should be prepared to speak on that day, namely on Friday, 4 June 1965. I should, therefore, be much obliged if the attention of delegates could be drawn to this fact.

5. Depositing of Credentials and Resolutions.

Finally, the memorandum draws attention to certain provisions of the Standing Orders of the Conference concerning the depositing of credentials and resolutions. In connection with the submission of resolutions, I venture to remind you that, in accordance with the provisions of article 17, paragraph 1 (1) of the Standing Orders as amended by the Conference at its 43rd and 47th Sessions (1959 and 1963):

No resolution relating to a matter not included in an item on the agenda of the Conference shall be moved at any sitting of the Conference unless a copy of the resolution has been deposited with the Director-General of the International Labour Office at least 15 days before the opening of the session of the Conference, by a delegate to the Conference.

In the case of the 49th Session of the Conference, the final date for the deposit of such resolutions will be 18 May 1965.

I have the honour to be,

(Signed) DAVID A. MORSE,
Director-General.

MEMORANDUM ON THE 49th SESSION OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE (1965)

A. DATE, PLACE AND AGENDA OF THE CONFERENCE

At its 157th Session (November 1963) the Governing Body of the International Labour Office decided that the 49th Session of the Conference should be held in Geneva and should open on Wednesday, 2 June 1965.

The agenda of the Conference at present consists of the following items:

I. Report of the Director-General.

II. Financial and budgetary questions.

III. Information and reports on the application of Conventions and Recommendations.

IV. The employment of young persons in underground work in mines of all kinds (second discussion).

V. The employment of women with family responsibilities (second discussion).

VI. Agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects (general discussion).

VII. The role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries (first discussion).

In addition, the Conference will have before it a special report on the application of the Declaration concerning the policy of apartheid of the Republic of South Africa adopted by the Conference at its 48th Session, submitted by the Director-General in pursuance of the request contained in paragraph 6 of the operative part of the Declaration.

1 Not reproduced here.
B. INFORMATION ON ITEMS ON THE AGENDA

I. Report of the Director-General.

In accordance with the Standing Orders of the Conference a Report by the Director-General of the I.L.O. will be submitted to the Conference. For the 47th (1963) Session of the Conference the Director-General prepared a Report bearing upon the I.L.O.'s programme and structure and the adjustment of the Organisation to a changing world. This Report, accompanied by some guidelines for discussion, was put before the 48th (1964) Session of the Conference for further discussion. In his reply to the discussion of the Report at the 48th Session the Director-General said:

Now there has been a full ventilation of views upon the major issues of programme and structure. We know what the main viewpoints are; we know who holds these different views. On certain points I believe there is evidence of a substantial measure of agreement. . . . On other matters there are divergent views, . . . I think now it is for the Director-General to show how our programmes can move forward in those areas of agreement; and also, without in any way delaying the normal development of I.L.O. activities, to reflect further upon the questions on which there is some disagreement, so as to see whether I cannot, in the knowledge of the different views that are held here, come forward with new proposals which might carry a wider measure of agreement. This I will attempt to do in my Report to the Conference in 1965. It will be a new Report, it will be based upon the discussion of the last few years, and it will try to provide some fresh proposals and fresh ideas on those points which clearly still require some further examination.

Part I of the Director-General's Report will be on the lines indicated in the above-cited passage.

Part II of this Report will contain an account of the I.L.O.'s activities in 1964.

It may be assumed that the discussion of the Director-General's Report will begin, as it has done at recent sessions of the Conference, on the first Friday of the session. In order to ensure the smooth working of the Conference, it is most desirable that a number of speakers should be prepared to speak on that day, i.e. Friday, 4 June 1965. Governments may therefore wish to draw the attention of delegates to this point.

II. Financial and Budgetary Questions.

The Conference will be called upon to consider and approve the budget of the International Labour Organisation for 1966 and to deal with any other financial matters that may be brought to its attention in accordance with the Financial Regulations.

III. Information and Reports on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations.

Article 23 of the Constitution provides that the Director-General shall lay before the Conference a summary of the information and reports communicated to him by governments, in pursuance of articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution, on the measures taken to bring the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference before the competent national authorities and to give effect to the Conventions which they have ratified, and on the position in their respective countries with regard to the subject-matter of Conventions which they have not ratified and of Recommendations. Articles 22 and 35 provide that governments which have ratified Conventions shall supply the Director-General of the International Labour Office with information and reports concerning the application of such Conventions in non-metropolitan territories.

The Conference at its 49th Session will have to consider the information and reports supplied by governments in pursuance of the above-mentioned articles of the Constitution, together with the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations. The reports to be supplied this year under article 19 of the Constitution in respect of certain non-ratified Conventions and certain Recommendations will deal with Conventions and Recommendations concerning maternity protection.

IV. The Employment of Young Persons in Underground Work in Mines of All Kinds (second discussion).

The first discussion on this subject took place at the 48th Session. By a resolution adopted on 7 July 1964 the Conference adopted the reports of the Committee appointed to consider this item and in particular approved as general conclusions, with a view to the consultation of governments, proposals for a Convention concerning the minimum age for admission to employment in underground work in mines of all kinds, with a supplementary Recommendation, for a Convention concerning medical examination of young persons for fitness for employment in underground work in mines of all kinds, and for a Recommendation embodying certain provisions concerning the employment of young persons in underground work in mines of all kinds. The Conference decided to place the above-mentioned question on the agenda of its next Ordinary Session for a second discussion with a view to the adoption of two Conventions and two Recommendations.

Pursuant to this decision, and in accordance with article 39, paragraph 6, of the Standing Orders of the Conference, the Office has communicated to governments the texts of two proposed Conventions and two proposed Recommendations, asking for their observations or amendments, if any (International Labour Conference, 49th Session, 1965, Report IV (1) The Employment of Young Persons in Underground Work in Mines of All Kinds (Geneva, I.L.O.,...
V. The Employment of Women with Family Responsibilities (second discussion).

The first discussion on this subject took place at the 48th Session as part of the discussion on the item: “Women workers in a changing world.” By a resolution adopted on 8 July 1964 the Conference adopted the report of the committee appointed to consider this item and in particular approved as general conclusions, with a view to the consultation of governments, proposals for a Recommendation relating to the employment of women with family responsibilities. The Conference decided to place on the agenda of its next Ordinary Session an item entitled “The employment of women with family responsibilities” for a second discussion with a view to the adoption of a Recommendation.

Pursuant to this decision, and in accordance with article 39, paragraph 6, of the Standing Orders of the Conference, the Office has communicated to governments the text of a proposed Recommendation, asking for their observations or amendments, if any (International Labour Conference, 49th Session, 1965, Report V (1): The Employment of Women with Family Responsibilities (Geneva, I.L.O., 1964)). In the light of the replies received a final report will be prepared containing the proposed Recommendation, including any amendments, as a basis for discussion at the 49th Session.

VI. Agrarian Reform, with Particular Reference to Employment and Social Aspects (general discussion).

In accordance with a decision taken by the Governing Body at its 154th Session (Geneva, March 1963) a Technical Advisory Group on Agrarian Reform met in Geneva from 24 February to 5 March 1964. The terms of reference of the group were to make proposals for consideration by the Governing Body on the manner in which the question of agrarian reform could be examined by the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference (1965) and to indicate those specific aspects of the question, within the competence of the International Labour Organisation, which should be discussed.

At its 159th Session (June-July 1964) the Governing Body had before it the recommendations of the Technical Advisory Group and decided to place on the agenda of the 49th Session of the Conference an item worded as follows: “Agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects” (general discussion).

As follows from the above, the discussion will bear primarily on aspects relating to employment and on some aspects of agrarian reform.

The document prepared by the Office for the 159th Session of the Governing Body noted that the discussion might lead to a comprehensive resolution which might take into consideration the general conclusions of the Technical Advisory Group and state the objectives of agrarian reform and the measures to be taken to achieve these objectives, in each case with regard to aspects of direct concern to the International Labour Organisation; it was indicated that the resolution might also include directives to strengthen the Organisation’s action in the research, standard-setting and operational fields.

The Office will prepare and communicate to governments in good time a report on the above-mentioned question as a basis for discussion at the 49th Session of the Conference.

It should be mentioned that in the course of the preparation of this report the Office will pursue with the other international agencies concerned, and in particular with the United Nations and with the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations, the close cooperation established in the first stages of the consideration of this item.

VII. The Role of Co-operatives in the Economic and Social Development of Developing Countries (first discussion).

Assistance to co-operative development has been part of the accepted policy of the International Labour Organisation since its foundation, and this policy has been translated into practical action through the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance in a manner which has been welcomed and used by a large number of developing countries.

Considering that the time had now come when the experience thus acquired should be evaluated and the lines of future development laid down, the Governing Body, at its 157th Session (November 1963), decided to include in the agenda of the 49th Session of the Conference an item worded: “The role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries” (first discussion), with a view to the formulation of a Recommendation to deal with certain practical aspects of co-operation.

The question is to be examined according to the double-discussion procedure defined in article 39 of the Standing Orders of the Conference. In accordance with the provisions thereof, the Office has prepared and sent to governments a preliminary report (International Labour Conference, 49th Session, 1965, Report VII (1): The Role of Co-operatives in the Economic and Social Development of Developing Countries (Geneva, I.L.O., 1964)).

The first chapter of the report describes the co-operative solution to economic and social problems; the second chapter defines the factors impeding development and the conditions for the success of co-operative action. Some final remarks are submitted in a third chapter. The report also contains a questionnaire, to which governments are asked to reply indicating the reasons for their replies.

On the basis of governments' replies the Office will prepare a second report summarising the views expressed and indicating the principal points which would appear to require consideration by the Conference.

Both reports will serve as a basis for discussion at the 49th Session.

C. COMMUNICATION OF DOCUMENTS PREPARED FOR THE CONFERENCE

Every effort will be made to ensure that the documents submitted to the Conference are communicated to member States well in advance of the opening of the session.

It will be appreciated that the smooth working of the Conference depends on the delegates' having the opportunity to study beforehand the documents prepared by the International Labour Office on which the discussions are based. The attention of governments is therefore drawn to the importance of ensuring that the reports sent to them on the various items on the agenda are in the hands of delegates well in advance of the session.

D. COMPOSITION OF DELEGATIONS

Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Constitution of the Organisation provides that each delegation to a session of the International Labour Conference shall be composed of four delegates, namely two Government delegates, one delegate representing the employers and one delegate representing the workers.

In accordance with the provisions of article 3, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, each delegate may be accompanied by not more than two advisers for each separate item placed on the agenda. Each of the last four items mentioned in section A of this memorandum forms a separate item placed on the agenda of the session. Moreover, as on the occasion of all previous sessions since 1945, the item "Information and Reports on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations" will be considered as a separate item within the meaning of the above-mentioned paragraph 2 of article 3, that is to say, with a view to the appointment of technical advisers. In these circumstances each Government, Employers' and Workers' delegate to the 49th Session may be accompanied by not more than ten advisers. To ensure an equal representation of Employers and Workers on the committees of the Conference it is desirable that, so far as possible, equal numbers of Employers' and Workers' advisers should be appointed in each delegation.

The regular application of the principle that as a general rule the sittings of the committees shall not take place at the same time as the plenary sittings of the Conference has proved impracticable in recent years as a result of the growth in the volume of business coming before the Conference. The Governing Body recognised this with regret at its 148th Session (March 1961) and stressed the importance of delegations being so equipped as to enable plenary sittings and sittings of committees to be held without interference with each other's work when such simultaneity could not be avoided. Governments are therefore requested, when composing their delegations, to give consideration to the importance of making arrangements for representation at the plenary sittings when such sittings are held simultaneously with the sittings of committees.

Article 3, paragraph 5, of the Constitution provides that—

The Members undertake to nominate non-government delegates and advisers chosen in agreement with the industrial organisations, if such organisations exist, which are most representative of employers or workpeople, as the case may be, in their respective countries.

In connection with this provision of article 3 of the Constitution, the Credentials Committee of the 46th Session of the Conference (1962), having before it cases where several representative organisations existed in one and the same country, made the following statement in this regard:

This article requires: (a) that there shall be consultations; (b) that these consultations shall be entered into with the most representative organisations of employers and of workpeople, in the country in question, provided such organisations exist; and (c) that the delegates finally appointed should be chosen in agreement with the said organisations.

Certainly, agreement cannot always be reached. But genuine consultations undertaken in good faith are essential. In Advisory Opinion No. 1 of the Permanent Court of International Justice—which relates particularly to countries where there are several representative organisations...it is stated, in particular with regard to the obligation laid down in paragraph 5 of article 3 of the Constitution, that—

The engagement...is not a mere moral obligation. It is a part of the Treaty and constitutes an obligation by which the Parties to the Treaty are bound to one another.

The obligation is that the persons nominated should have been chosen in agreement with the industrial organisations most representative of employers or workpeople. There is no definition of the word "representative" in the Treaty. The most representative organisations for this purpose are, of course, those organisations which best represent the employers and the workers respectively. What these organisations are, is a question to be decided in the particular case, having regard to the circumstances in each particular country at the time when the choice falls to be made. Numbers are not the only test of the representative character of the organisations, but they are an important factor; other things being equal, the most numerous will be the most representative. The article throws upon the Government of the State the duty of deciding, on the data at its disposal, what organisations are, in point of fact, the most representative....
The only object of the intervention of industrial organisations, in connection with the selection of delegates and technical advisers, is to ensure, as far as possible, that the Governments should nominate persons whose opinions are in harmony with the opinions of employers and workers respectively. If, therefore, in a particular country there exist several industrial organisations representing the working classes, the Government must take all of them into consideration when it is proceeding to the nomination of the Workers' delegate and his technical advisers. Only by acting in this way can the Government succeed in choosing persons who, having regard to the particular circumstances, will be able to represent at the Conference the views of the working classes concerned.

The aim of each Government must, of course, be an agreement with all the most representative organisations of employers and workers, as the case may be; that, however, is only an ideal which is extremely difficult to attain.

What is required of the Governments is that they should do their best to effect an agreement, which, in the circumstances, may be regarded as the best for the purpose of ensuring the representation of the workers of the country.

The Credentials Committee feels bound to appeal very strongly... to all the governments of the States Members of the Organisation to conform strictly to the Constitution when appointing non-government delegates to the International Labour Conference. Arbitrary choice of such delegates by the government from lists submitted by organisations of greatly varying sizes, without any effort at genuine consultation to reach an agreement with the most representative organisations, constitutes an abuse which, if it is not remedied, could lead the International Labour Conference into a situation which would be dangerous for the entire Organisation....

Governments will no doubt take the necessary steps to ensure that the delegations attending the Conference are appointed in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, that they are complete and that they include the advisers necessary for dealing adequately with the technical questions on the agenda.

Women Delegates and Advisers.

It will be noted that not only do the items on the agenda of the 49th Session concern women as much as men but that one of them, i.e. item V: "Employment of women with family responsibilities", specially affects women. The attention of governments is therefore drawn to the fact that women are equally eligible with men for appointment as delegates or advisers to the Conference, irrespective of the nature of the items on the agenda, and that article 3, paragraph 2, of the Constitution of the Organisation provides that, when questions specially affecting women are on the agenda, one at least of the advisers should be a woman.

E. CREDENTIALS

The credentials of delegates to the Conference and their advisers should, in conformity with the provisions of article 26, paragraph 1, of the Standing Orders of the Conference, be deposited with the International Labour Office at least 15 days before the date fixed for the opening of the session of the Conference. As the Governing Body decided that the Conference will open on 2 June 1965, the final date for the deposit of credentials will be 18 May 1965.

For the convenience of governments, a suggested form for the credentials of delegates is appended to the present memorandum.

F. RESOLUTIONS

According to the provisions of article 17, paragraph 1 (1), of the Standing Orders, as amended by the Conference at its 43rd and 47th Sessions (1959 and 1963)...

No resolution relating to a matter not included in an item of the agenda of the Conference shall be moved at any sitting of the Conference unless a copy of the resolution has been deposited with the Director-General of the International Labour Office at least 15 days before the opening of the session of the Conference, by a delegate to the Conference.

As the Governing Body has decided that the Conference should open on 2 June 1965, the final date for the deposit of such resolutions will be 18 May 1965.

G. ENTERTAINMENT DURING THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

H. ACCOMMODATION FOR DELEGATIONS IN GENEVA

1 Copies of Advisory Opinion No. 1 are available on request. (Note appended to the original text.)

2 Not reproduced here.
* * *

This Record of Proceedings of the Forty-ninth Session of the Conference is arranged as follows:

First Part

List of members of delegations, etc., comprising the names of all persons who took part in the Conference, classified according to the functions they performed.

Second Part

A verbatim report of the proceedings in plenary sitting, including stenographic reports of the original speeches in the case of speeches delivered in English, and translations based on the simultaneous telephonic interpretations into English given by the official interpreters to the Conference in the case of speeches delivered in other languages.

Third Part

Appendices, including the reports and documents submitted by the committees to the Conference and the texts (Conventions, Recommendations, resolutions, etc.) adopted by the Conference.

In addition, the volume contains a table of contents, which precedes this Introduction, and, at the end, an index to the Second and Third Parts.
FIRST PART

LIST OF MEMBERS OF DELEGATIONS, ETC.
LIST OF MEMBERS OF DELEGATIONS, ETC.

Delegations

AFGHANISTAN

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Ali Mohammad ZAKARYA, Secretary, Royal Afghan Embassy, Belgrade.
Mr. Faqir M. BAIZAY, Director of Vocational Training, Ministry of Mines and Industries.

ALGERIA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. HADJ Boudissa SAFI, M.P., Member of the Central Committee; Minister of Labour; Vice-President, All-African Trade Union Federation.
Accompanied by:
Mr. Mebarek DJILANI, M.P., Chairman, Social Affairs Committee of the National Assembly.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Raouf BOUDJAKDI, Chief of the International Organisations Division, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
Mr. Abdelmadjid BOUHARA, Assistant Director of Labour Regulations, Ministry of Labour.
Mr. Abdelaziz BOUCHOUK, International Organisations Division, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
Mr. Mohamed LARBI, Technical Adviser, Ministry of Labour.

Advisers
Mr. Mokhtar BOUBDELLAH, Technical Adviser, Ministry of Labour.
Mrs. Fatima GHANI-GHARBI, Attaché, Ministry of Labour.
Mr. Mohamed ABDELLAZIZ, Technical Adviser, Ministry of Labour.
Mr. Mohamed BENAMARA, Official responsible for social affairs, Ministry of Agriculture and Agrarian Reform.
Mr. Idir AIT AMAR, Departmental Director of Labour and Manpower.
Mr. Mahmoud BELLAL, Division of International Organisations, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Abdelkader TAOG, General Union of Algerian Merchants (U.G.C.A.).

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Mohamed KHAZNADJI, General Economic Confederation of Algeria; Vice-President, UNALBA.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. Mouloud OUMEZIANE, General Secretary, General Union of Algerian Workers (U.G.T.A.).

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Lahcene MIMOUNI, General Secretary, General Union of Algerian Workers (U.G.T.A.).
Mr. Azzedine MAZRI, Secretary, Constantine Regional Union of the General Union of Algerian Workers (U.G.T.A.).

Advisers
Mr. Youcef BRIKI, Secretary, Algiers Regional Union of the General Union of Algerian Workers (U.G.T.A.).
Mr. Mohamed BERKACHE, Secretary, Oran Regional Union of the General Union of Algerian Workers (U.G.T.A.).

ARGENTINA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Fernando SOLÁ, Minister of Labour and Social Security.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Germán LÓPEZ, Under-Secretary for Labour.
Mr. Miguel Ángel ARMENDARES, Director-General of Legal Affairs, Ministry of Labour and Social Security.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Jorge Luis FERNÁNDEZ PASTOR, Secretary-General, Ministry of Labour and Social Security.

Advisors
Mr. Mario Alberto CÁMPORA, Secretary of Embassy; Member of the Permanent Mission of the Argentine Republic accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.
Mr. Juan Carlos ARLÍA, Secretary of Embassy; Member of the Permanent Mission of the Argentine Republic accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.
Mr. Jorge BRAVO, Under-Secretary of Labour, Province of Buenos Aires.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. Ildelfonso RECALDE.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Severo Simón BARTOMBO.

Advisors
Mr. Jorge León RODEYRO.
Mr. José B. GELBAED.
Mr. Laureano ARAYA.
Mr. Juan Severo TARTARA.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. José ALONSO.
Advisers
Mr. Juan RACCHINI.
Mr. Luis A. ANGELEIER.

AUSTRALIA

Government Delegates
Mr. Philip Halford COOK, First Assistant Secretary, Industrial Relations and General Division, Department of Labour and National Service.
Mr. Brian Clarence HILL, Ambassador; Permanent Representative of Australia to the European Office of the United Nations; Representative of the Government of Australia on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Miss Alison Mary STEPHEN, Principal Research Officer, Planning and Research Division, Department of Labour and National Service.

Advisers
Mr. Keiran DESMOND, First Secretary, Australian Embassy, Brussels.
Mr. Campbell FLEAY, Senior Industrial Relations Officer, Department of Labour, Territory of Papua and New Guinea.
Miss June Hyett BAENETT, Second Secretary, Australian Permanent Mission to the European Office of the United Nations.
Mr. Humphrey ALLEN JONES, Assistant Secretary, Department of Labour of West Australia.
Mr. Thomas TOBUNBUN, Department of Education, Territory of Papua and New Guinea.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Joseph Randolph GIBSON, Past President, Queensland Chamber of Manufactures; Member of the Executive, Associated Chambers of Manufactures of Australia.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Robert William Charles ANDERSON, O.B.E., Federal Director, Associated Chambers of Manufactures of Australia.

Advisers
Mr. Graham Ernest PYKKE, Secretary, South Australian Employers' Federation.
Mr. George POLITES, Executive Director, Australian Council of Employers' Federations.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Albert Ernest MONK, President, Australian Council of Trade Unions; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Gilbert Edward HAYES, Secretary, Victorian Branch, Australian Boot Trade Employees' Federation.

Advisers
Mr. James William COLEMAN, Secretary, Trade and Labour Council of Western Australia.
Mr. Richard William Brian HARRADINE, Secretary, Tasmanian Branch, Federated Clerks' Union.

AUSTRIA

Minister Attending the Conference
Mr. Anton PROKOSCH, Federal Minister of Social Administration.

Belgium

Government Delegates
Mr. L. SERVAIS, Minister of Employment and Labour.
Mr. L.-E. TROCLET, Senator.
Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Mr. G. SCYNS, Member of the House of Representatives.
Mrs. G. COPÉE-GERBINET, Member of the House of Representatives.
Mr. L. VERHENNE, Member of the House of Representatives.
Mr. R. ROTHSCCHILD, Belgian Ambassador, Berne; Permanent Representative of Belgium accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.
Mr. M. HOUILLEZ, Deputy Permanent Representative of Belgium accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.
Mr. J. DENYS, Counsellor, Ministry of Employment and Labour.
Mr. Fernand VAN BLADEL, Conciliation Officer, Attached to the Office of the Minister of Employment and Labour.

Advisers

Mr. A. UYTDENHOEF, Director-General, Ministry of Employment and Labour.
Mr. VAN MALDEBEN, Chief Engineer; Director, Mining Administration.
Mr. E. H. DE SUTTEE, Chief Engineer; Director, Ministry of Agriculture.
Mr. DE WINTEE, Principal Inspector; Chief of Service, Ministry of Agriculture.

Employers' Delegate

Mr. A. VERSCHUEREN, Director, Social Department, Federation of Belgian Industries; Substitute Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. R. DE SUTTEE, Chief Engineer; Director, Ministry of Agriculture.

Workers' Delegate

Mr. J. DE BRUYN, General Secretary, Federation of Non-Industrial Undertakings of Belgium.
Mr. A. GILBERT, Managing Director, S.A. des Charbonnages du Nord de Gilly.
Mr. J. HIEBEL, Chief Agricultural Adviser, Belgian Agricultural Federation Special Lecturer, Catholic University of Louvain.
Mr. G. SLADDEN, Agronomist; Engineering Consultant, Cominère.

Employers' Delegate

Mr. N. DE BOCK, General Secretary, Belgian General Federation of Labour (F.G.T.B.); Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Auguste COOL, President, Confederation of Christian Trade Unions.

Advisers

Mr. E. MACHELS, President, Central Christian Association of Workers in the Food Industries.
Mr. G. SAuvAGE, Assistant Secretary, Confederation of Christian Trade Unions.
Mr. R. METTENS, Legal Adviser, Belgian General Federation of Labour (F.G.T.B.).

Workers' Delegate

Mr. Antonio CORRÊA do LAGO, Ambassador; Head of the Permanent Delegation of Ambassador in Geneva.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Lopo de CARVALHO COELHO, Representative of the Government of Brazil on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. Max do REGO MONTEIRO, Chairman, Supreme Social Welfare Council.
Mr. Marcelo PIMENTEL, Legal Adviser, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.
Mr. Carlos Alberto NEMBRI de BRITO, Cabinet Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.
Mr. Rodolfo GODÓY de SOUZA DANTAS, First Secretary of Embassy, Permanent Delegation of Brazil in Geneva.
Mr. David SILVEIKA de MOTA, Jr., First Secretary of Embassy, Permanent Delegation of Brazil in Geneva.
Mr. Augusto de ULHOA REIS, Physician, National Occupational Safety and Health Department.
Mr. Bernardo de AZEVEDO BRITO, Secretary of Embassy.
Mr. Carlos Alberto TENÓRIO MACHADO, Substitute Representative of the Government of Brazil on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.
Mr. Vicente BEZERRA NETO, Senator.
Mr. Gilberto Ronaldo CAMPELO de AZEVEDO, M.P.

Employers' Delegate

Mr. Raymundo N. FONTENELLE de ARAÚJO.

Advisers

Mr. Nério Siegfried WAGNER BATTENDIERI.
Mr. Antonio FERNANDES, Jr.
Mr. Buy NOGUEIRA MARTINS.
Mr. Diego GONZALVES BLANCO.

Workers' Delegate

Mr. Mario LOPES de OLIVEIRA.

Advisers

Mr. João WAGNER.
Mr. Eduardo PRINCIPA.
Mr. Antonio PEREIRA MAGALDI.
Mr. Rômulo MARINHO.
Mr. João Regis FASSBENDER TEIXEIRA.
Mr. Avelino GOMES de CASTRO.

BULGARIA

Minister Attending the Conference

Mr. Mishe MISHEV, Chairman, Labour and Work Remuneration Committee, Council of Ministers.

Government Delegates

Mr. Angel TZANKOV, First Vice-Chairman, Labour and Work Remuneration Committee, Council of Ministers; Representative of the Government of Bulgaria on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

BRAZIL

Government Delegates

Mr. Arnaldo LOPES SUSSEKIND, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare.
Mr. Methodi POPOV, Minister Plenipotentiary; Permanent Representative of the People's Republic of Bulgaria accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the international organisations in Geneva; Substitute Representative of the Government of Bulgaria on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Mr. Petko KIREY, Professor, George Dimitrov Higher Institute of Agricultural Sciences.

Mr. Pepo COHEN, Head of the I.L.O. Department, Labour and Work Remuneration Committee, Council of Ministers.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mrs. Zdravka Borisova PEEVA, Engineer; Director, "Pirine" Amalgamated Industrial Enterprise.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Mladen IVANOV, Secretary, Central Council of Trade Unions.

Adviser

Mr. Nikolai DESSEV, Central Council of Trade Unions.

BURMA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Captain Maung KYI, Deputy Director-General of Labour Affairs.

Mr. Thein TIN, Deputy Director of Labour Affairs.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Tha HAN, Assistant Engineer, National Housing Board.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Win HTEIN, Assistant Foreman, Union of Burma Railways Board.

BYELORUSSIAN SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLIC

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Anatolii Emelyanovich GURINOVICh, Vice-Minister, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Anatolii Nikitich SHELDov, Member of the Collegium, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Mr. Vasilli Ivanovich PESHKOV, First Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Eduard Yosifovich BORSCHCHEVSKY, Second Secretary, Permanent Mission to the European Office of the United Nations.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Alexei Vasilievich KAZANTSEV, Director, Minsk Watch Factory "Luch".

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Anatolii Petrovich OBUKHOVICH, Secretary, Byelorussian Council of Trade Unions.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mrs. Evgenia Timofeevna SMIRNOVA, Secretary, Byelorussian Republican Committee of Unions of Workers in Education, Higher Institutes of Learning, and Scientific Establishments.

CAMEROON

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. NZO-EKHHAH-NGHARY, Minister of Labour and Social Legislation.

Mr. Paul FOKAM KAMGA, Director of Labour.

Advisers

Mrs. D. GWANULA, representing the women of Western Cameroon.

Mrs. Jeanne BOULOU, Third-Class Primary School Teacher, Eastern Cameroon.

Dr. Joseph BOWEN, Medical Inspector of Labour.

Mr. Georges-Henri CONNILLIÈRE, Technical Counsellor, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. OBAM MFO'OU, Director of Co-operation and Mutual Aid, Federated State of Eastern Cameroon.

Mr. W. E. MAKIA, Representative of the Co-operative Movement, Federated State of Western Cameroon.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Louis BEKOMBO, Manager, Cameroon Automobile; President, Federation of Occupational Unions of Eastern Cameroon.

Adviser

Mr. Braimoh Sanusi AGBABIAKA, Personnel Manager, Cameroon Development Corporation, Federated State of Western Cameroon.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Jacques NGOM, General Secretary, Federation of Trade Unions of Cameroon (F.S.C.).

Adviser

Mr. Gabriel FOGAM, General Secretary, West Cameroon Trade Union Congress.

CANADA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

The Hon. Allan J. MacEACHEN, Minister of Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. George V. HAYTHORNE, Deputy Minister of Labour; Representative of the Government of Canada on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. John MAINWARING, Director, International Labour Affairs Branch, Department of Labour.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Saul F. RAE, Ambassador; Permanent Representative of Canada accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.

Advisers

Mr. P. J. LAVELLE, Executive Assistant to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. R. M. ADAMS, Counsellor (Labour), Canadian Embassy, Brussels.

Mr. B. N. ARMASON, Deputy Minister of Co-operation and Development, Saskatchewan.

Mr. J. Alan BEEESLEY, First Secretary, Permanent Mission of Canada to the European Office of the United Nations.

Mr. C. J. MARSHALL, First Secretary, Permanent Mission of Canada to the European Office of the United Nations.

Miss M. V. ROYCE, Director, Women's Bureau, Department of Labour.
Mr. W. H. SANDS, Deputy Minister of Labour, British Columbia.
Miss E. WOOLNER, Legislation Branch, Department of Labour.
Mr. Félix QUINET, Labour-Management Division, Department of Labour.
Mr. Jean-Pierre CÔTÉ, M.P.
Mr. R. BASFORD, M.P.

Representatives of Provincial Governments
Accompanying the Government Delegates
The Hon. Carrier FORTIN, Minister of Labour, Quebec.
Mr. G. CHARBONNEAUX, Labour Relations Counsellor, Ministry of Health, Quebec.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. K. HALLSWORTH, Director, Industrial Relations, Ford Motor Company of Canada.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. J. P. DESPRES, Director of Industrial Relations, Iron Ore Company of Canada.

Advisers
Mr. J. E. DAVIDSON, Davidson, Davidson & Neil.
Mr. George LACH, Assistant Vice-President (Personnel), Canadian National Railways.
Mr. P. L. SCHMIDT, Industrial Relations Department, Canadian Manufacturers' Association.
Mr. W. J. WHITTAKER, Wardlaw and Whittaker.

Workers' Delegate
Mr. Joseph MORRIS, Executive Vice-President, Canadian Labour Congress.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Kalmen KAPLANSKY, Director, Department of International Affairs, Canadian Labour Congress; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Miss G. LACHAINE, Vice-President, Confederation of National Trade Unions.
Mr. Jim MacDONALD, Executive Secretary, National Labour Co-operative Committee.
Miss H. PLAMONDON, Vice-President, Canadian Labour Congress (Quebec).
Mr. John F. WALTER, Member, National Legislative Committee, International Railway Unions.

Central African Republic

Government Delegates
Mr. Jean-Gauthier LEDOT, Minister of the Civil Service and Labour.
Mrs. Marie-Joséphine FRANCK, President, Central African Women's Association; Chief, Women's Advancement Service.

Advisor
Mr. Fernand-Michel WALLOT, Director of Labour.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. André HALIE.

Workers' Delegate
Mr. Maurice ROKEY.

CEYLON

Government Delegates
Mr. R. M. C. R. BELIGAMMAMA, Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Labour, Employment and Housing.
Mr. A. O. WIRASINGHE, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Labour, Employment and Housing.

Advisor
Mr. R. L. GUNASEKEERA, Deputy Commissioner of Labour.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. C. RAJASURIYA, Secretary, Ceylon Estates Employers' Federation.

Workers' Delegate
Mr. S. THONDAMAN, M.P., President, Ceylon Workers' Congress; Substitute Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

CHAD

Government Delegates
Mr. Ali KEKE, Minister of Labour, Youth and Sport.
Mr. Eloi YAMSALA, Cabinet Director, Ministry of Labour, Youth and Sport.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Augustin NODJITEL, Director of Labour and Social Legislation.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. François ISSENMANN, President, Chad Inter-occupational Federation (UNITCHAD).

Advisor
Mr. Jean-Pierre SCHAMBÉ, Chief of Personnel for Chad, Air Afrique Company.

Workers' Delegate
Mr. Robert GORALLAH.

CHILE

Government Delegates
Mr. William THAYER, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare.
Mr. Ramón HUIDOBRO, Permanent Representative of Chile accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Patricio BUSQUET IBRIBARRA, Legal Adviser, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.

Advisers
Mr. Fernando CONTRERAS TAPIA, Counsellor; Deputy Permanent Representative of Chile accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.
Mr. Rolando STEIN, Secretary of Embassy.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. César SEPÚLVEDA LATAPÍAT.

Workers' Delegate
Mrs. Gioconda DEFILLIPPI MORENO.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

CHINA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. LEE Yen-ping, Senior Specialist, Ministry of the Interior; Substitute Representative of the Government of the Republic of China on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. HUANG Yung-shih, Deputy Director, Department of Social Affairs, Ministry of the Interior.

Mr. HU Fu-sen, Chief, International Labour Affairs Division, Ministry of the Interior.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. CHENG Tien-shih, Vice-President, Taiwan Sugar Corporation.

Adviser

Mr. LIU Kuo-tai, Board Chairman, Taiwan Mutual Loan and Savings Corporation.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. TENG Wan-hsi, Member of the Standing Committee, Chinese Federation of Labour.

Adviser

Mr. LOH Kwang, Member of the Standing Committee, Chinese Federation of Labour.

COLOMBIA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Eliseo ARANGO, Permanent Representative of Colombia accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.

Mr. Rodolfo MARTÍNEZ TONO, Director of the National Apprentices Bureau (SENA).

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATES

Mr. Ignacio REYES POSADA, Assistant Manager (Legal), National Association of Industrialists (A.S.D.I.).

WORKERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Tulio CUEVAS, President, Union of Colombian Workers (U.T.C.).

Adviser

Mr. José Raquel MERCADO, President, Confederation of Colombian Workers (C.T.C.).

CONGO (Brazzaville)

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Gabriel BETOU, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare, in charge of civil aviation, ASECNA and the Tourist Bureau.

Mr. Agathon NOTE, Director of Labour and Social Welfare.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. A. MABOUNGOU M'BIMBA, President, Social and Economic Council.

Adviser

Mr. Jean DUCUP de SAINT-PAUL, President and International Delegate, Unicongo.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Idrissa DIALO, Secretary-General, Congolese Trade Union Federation.

Adviser

Mrs. M'BEMBA, Primary School Teacher, Delegate of the Women’s Revolutionary Union of the Congo.

CONGO (Leopoldville)

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Dismas MWALU, Chief of Section, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Alphonse MAKWAMBALA, Secretary-General, Ministry of Labour; Representative of the Government of the Congo (Leopoldville) on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office (Deputy Member).

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Abdon MUNGA, Assistant Director, Ministry of Labour.

Advisers

Mr. Henri PLATTEAU, Cabinet Adviser, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Victor HODY, Adviser, Secretariat-General, Ministry of Labour.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Jean P. M. J. Gh. JONCKHERE, Director, Federation of Congolese Undertakings (F.E.C.).

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. MASANGU, Administrator, Agence Maritime du Congo.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. TAMPUNGU, National Secretary, Union of Congolese Workers (U.T.C.).

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Thomas BOOKA, Deputy General Secretary, Confederation of Free Trade Unions of the Congo (C.S.L.C.).

COSTA RICA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Alfonso CARRO ZÚÑIGA, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.

Mr. Guillermo PADILLA CASTRO, I.L.O. Correspondent in Costa Rica.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Ms. Elizabeth ODIO BENTO, Chief, Legal, Information and International Relations Office, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.

Mr. Claudio GONZÁLEZ QUIRÓS, Chief of the Branches, Section, Costa Rican Social Security Fund.

Adviser

Mr. Aristide P. DONNADIEU, Deputy Permanent Delegate and Consul-General, Geneva.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Luis Felipe MORÚA CARRILLO, Administrative Board, Chamber of Industry.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Amado LÓPEZ CHINCHILLA, General Secretary, Costa Rican Confederation of Workers—Rerum Novarum.

CUBA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Faustino CALCINES GORDILLO, First Vice-Minister, Ministry of Labour.
Mr. Enrique CAMEJO ARGUDÍN, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; Permanent Delegate of Cuba accredited to the international organisations in Switzerland.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Roberto MULET DEL VALLE, Director of International Affairs, Ministry of Labour.

Advisers
Mr. José Manuel ANTELO VILLANUEVA, Head of the Department of Specialised Agencies, Directorate of International Organisations, Ministry of Foreign Relations.
Mr. Manuel GONZÁLEZ NORIEGA, Official, National Institute of Agrarian Reform.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Bernardo DOMÍNGUEZ OCEJA, Director, Amalgamated Soap and Perfumery Undertaking.

Adviser
Mrs. Waldina ESTANO CASTRO, Member of the Executive Committee, Cuban Workers' Union.

CYPRIUS

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Tassos PAPADOPOULOS, Minister of Labour and Social Insurance.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Mikis D. SPARISIS, Ag. Director-General, Ministry of Labour and Social Insurance.
Mr. Anthony PROTOPAPAS, Senior Employment Officer, Ministry of Labour and Social Insurance.

Advisors
Mr. Andreas AZINAS, Commissioner for Co-operative Development.
Mr. Pavlos PAPAIOANNOU, General Secretary, Department of Co-operative Development.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Costas KAPARTIS, Secretary-Director, Cyprus Employers' Consultative Association.

Advisers
Mr. Leandros ZACHARIADES, Chairman, Cyprus Employers' Consultative Association.
Mr. Antonakis PIERIDES, Personnel Manager, Cyprus Mines Corporation.
Mr. Stelios STELLAKIS, Personnel Manager, Bank of Cyprus.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Andreas ZIARTIDES, General Secretary, Pancyprian Federation of Labour.

Advisers
Mr. Nicos ZIVANAS, General Secretary, Cyprus Workers' Confederation.
Mr. Petros STYLIANOU, General Secretary, Democratic Labour Federation of Cyprus.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Vilém PITHART, Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs.
Mr. Ladislav PISCA, Director, Social Security Institute, Bratislava.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Jaroslav DOSTÁL, State Planning Commission.

Advisers
Mr. Václav ERMIÁŠ, Director, Institute for Agricultural Economy.
Mr. Mikuláš CAPEK, Head of Department, Central Council of Co-operatives.
Mrs. Albina BUCKOVÁ, State Planning Commission.
Mr. Milan JURZA, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
Mr. Jan PECHÁČEK, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Vlastimil PLECHÁČ, Director, Záluzí Chemical Works; Member, Council of the Czechoslovak Chamber of Commerce.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Zdeněk GREGOR, Central Council of Czechoslovak Trade Unions.

Adviser
Mr. Albin ŽILA, Slovak Council of Trade Unions.

DAHOMEY

GOVERNMENT DELEGATE
Mr. Jean SAKA, Cabinet Director, Ministry of the Civil Service, Labour and Social Affairs.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Arnold LOTSU, General Secretary, Chief of Personnel, John Walkden Company.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Léandre AMILON.

DENMARK

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Erling DINESEN, Minister of Labour.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Gunnar COLN, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. P. JOUTL-CHRISTENSEN, Director, International Relations Department of the Ministries of Labour and Social Affairs.

Advisers

Mrs. Nina ANDERSEN, M.P.; Secretary.

Mr. Clemens PEDERSEN, Secretary-General, Central Co-operative Committee of Denmark.

Mr. Greger FRANDSEN, Assistant Chief, International Department of the Ministries of Labour and Social Affairs.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Arne LUND, Director-General, Danish Employers' Confederation.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Poul Schade POUlsen, Assistant Director, Danish Employers' Confederation.

Adviser

Mr. Age TARP, Consultant, Danish Employers' Confederation.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Svend Bache VOgNBJEERG, Secretary, National Confederation of Danish Trade Unions.

Advisers

Mr. Thomas NIELSEN, Secretary, National Confederation of Danish Trade Unions.

Mr. Hans JENSEN, President, National Union of Bricklayers.

ECUADOR

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Luis JARAMILLO PÉREZ, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare.

Mr. Enrique PONCE y CARBÓ, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; Permanent Representative of Ecuador accredited to the European Office of the United Nations; Representative of the Government of Ecuador on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser

Mr. Mentor POVEDA, Director, Land Administration Department, Ecuadorian Land Reform Institute.

ETHIOPIA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Getahun TESEMMA, Minister of National Community Development.

Mr. Michael AMEDE, Director-General of Labour Relations, Ministry of National Community Development.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Mr. Teferra Haile SELASSIE, Acting Director-General, Labour Inspection Service.

Mr. Melake Selam BEKELE, Legal and International Section, Ministry of National Community Development.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Seyoum GEBREGZIABHER, Executive Secretary, Employers' Federation of Ethiopia.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Beyene SOLOMON, President, Confederation of Ethiopian Labour Unions.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Tisseha Taion TEKIE, General Secretary, Confederation of Ethiopian Labour Unions.

FINLAND

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. Juho TENHÍALÁ, Minister of Social Affairs.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Rafael BINNE, Director of the General Department, Ministry of Social Affairs.

Mr. Veijo LAPPALAINEN, Cabinet Secretary, Ministry of Social Affairs.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Mr. Klaus SNELLMAN, Counsellor of Embassy, Permanent Delegation of Finland to the international organisations in Geneva.

Mr. Erik HEINRICH, Secretary of Embassy, Permanent Delegation of Finland to the international organisations in Geneva.

Mrs. Anikki SUVIRANTA, Chief Actuary, Ministry of Social Affairs.

Adviser

Mr. Vesa LAAKKONEN, Pol.Sc.D., Co-operative Institute, University of Helsinki.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Harry MILDH, Executive Secretary, Finnish Employers' Confederation.

Advisers

Mr. Timo LAATTUNEN, Legal Adviser, Finnish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Kauko RELANDER, Secretary, Finnish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Jyrki VIHMA, Legal Adviser, Confederation of Commerce Employers.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Nils NILSSON, Secretary, Confederation of Finnish Trade Unions.

Advisers

Mr. Kauno LIUKKONEN, Secretary, Confederation of Finnish Trade Unions.

Mr. Niilo KOLJONEN, Secretary, Finnish Trade Union Federation (S.A.J.).

Mr. Lauri HYPPÖNEN, Executive Secretary, Confederation of Salaried Employees.

FRANCE

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. Gilbert GRANDVAL, Minister of Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Alexandre PARODI, former Minister of Labour and Social Security; Vice-President of the Council of State; Representative of the Government of France on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Mr. Pierre LECLERC, Inspector, General Inspectorate of Social Security; Technical Adviser to the Minister of Labour.
Mr. Yves DELAMOTTE, Civil Administrator, Ministry of Labour.
Mr. Dante ROSENTHAL, Civil Administrator, Ministry of Labour.
Mr. Maurice RAMOND, Deputy Inspector General, Inspectorate of Social Security.
Mr. Albert VANTHIER, Foreign Affairs Counselor; Chief, Liaison Service for the Major Non-Governmental International Organisations.
Mr. Michel LENNUYEUX-COMMeNE, Secretary of Embassy; First Secretary, Permanent Mission of France accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.
Mr. Jean DAMIAN, General Mining Engineer, Ministry of Industry.
Mr. Marcel SERRAIN, Inspector of Rural Economy attached to the Ministry of Co-operation.
Mr. Pierre MARÉCHAL, Assistant Director of Economic Structures, Ministry of Agriculture.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. Pierre WALINE, Member of the Governing Board, National Council of French Employers (C.N.P.F.); First Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Miss Nicole CHAUVEL, Head of the Social Questions Branch, National Federation of Agriculturists' Associations (F.N.S.E.A.).
Mr. Jacques André LEBLANC, Director-General of the National Council of French Employers (C.N.P.F.); Vice-Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.
Mr. Louis MERMILOD, Chief, Liaison Service of the National Council of French Employers (C.N.P.F.) with the International Labour Organization.
Mr. Jean MONSEMPES, General Delegate, International Federation of Clothing Industries.
Mr. Pierre NEGRE, Chief, Labour and Social Relations Service, Charbonnages de France.
Mr. Gabriel SAINTIGNY, Administrator, Chemical Industries Association; Member of the Paris Chamber of Commerce.
Mr. Jules SALLENAVE, President, National Federation of Dye Works; Chairman, Interfederal Committee for Liaison between the Laundry and Dye Works Industries; Member of the Directorate of the General Confederation of Small and Medium-Sized Undertakings.

Workers' Delegate
Mr. Maurice BOULADOUX, Honorary President, French Democratic Confederation of Labour (C.F.D.T.).

Advisers
Mrs. Simone TROISGROS, Deputy General Secretary and Member of the Confederal Bureau, French Democratic Confederation of Labour (C.F.D.T.); Chairman, Confederal Women's Committee.
Mr. René DUHAMEL, Secretary, General Confederation of Labour (C.G.T.).
Mrs. Renée PEUVIER, Secretary, C.G.T. Federation of State Workers; Member of the Administrative Committee, General Confederation of Labour (C.G.T.).
Mr. Roger MARIO, Secretary, Confederal Committee on Social Security, General Confederation of Labour (C.G.T.).
Mr. Roger LOUBET, Confederal Secretary, General Confederation of Labour—Force ouvrière (C.G.T.-F.O.).
Miss Madeleine DUPEYRON, Secretary, Trade Union Federation of the Postal, Telegraph and Telephone Services (Force ouvrière).
Mr. René MONNEROT, International Envoy, General Confederation of Supervisors (C.G.C.).

GABON

Government Delegates
Mr. Michel ABESSOLO, Minister of Labour, Social Affairs, the Civil Service and Administrative Technical Co-operation.
Mr. Marcel MINTSA, M.P., President, Social Affairs Committee of the National Assembly.

Advisers
Mr. Martin REKANGALT, Director of Labour and Manpower.
Mr. Jean-Christian DENDÊ, Manager, Gabonese Social Security Fund.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. Jacques KIEFFER, General Secretary, Interoccupational Economic and Social Union of Gabon (UNIGABON).

Workers' Delegate
Mr. Bernard NTUTUME, General Secretary, African Confederation of Believing Workers (C.A.T.C.).

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Government Delegates
Mr. Wilhelm CLAUSSEN, Secretary of State, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs; Representative of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.
Mr. Hermann ERNST, Ministerial Counsellor, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Hansheinrich KRUSE, Counsellor of Embassy; Deputy Permanent Delegate of the Federal Republic of Germany accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.
Mr. Fritz THOMAS, Governmental Director, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Advisers
Mr. Rudolf ECHETERHÔLTER, Ministerial Counsellor, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.
Mr. Karl JUNG, Senior Counsellor, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.
Mr. Walter SCHNASE, Senior Mining Counsellor, Federal Ministry of Economy.

Mrs. Christa MORAVE, Economist, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Mr. Theodor SCHMITZ, Counsellor of Legation, Permanent Delegation of the Federal Republic of Germany accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Ernst-Gerhard ERDMANN, Deputy Managing Director, German Confederation of Employers’ Associations; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. Eberhard GOEBEL, Director of Mining, Sachtleben Mining and Chemicals Company, Pyrite and Baryta Mining Section.

Mr. Hanns HAMPE, Scientific Consultant, Federation of Mining Undertakings of the Ruhr.

Mr. G. W. KELLER, Lawyer; Director, Association of Employers in the Textile Industry of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Werner LÖW, Adviser, German Confederation of Employers’ Associations.

Mr. Walter SCHLOTTFELDT, Lawyer; Chief, International Social Policy Division, German Confederation of Employers’ Associations.

Mr. Rudolf SCHNIEDEBS, Adviser, German Agriculturists’ Association.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Hermann BEEEMANN, Vice-President, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.); Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mrs. Maria WEBEB, Member of the Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Advisers

Mr. Bernt HEISE, Adviser, Social Policy Division of the Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mrs. Hilde JUNKER-SEELIGER, Adviser, Women’s Section of the Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mr. Alfons LAPPAS, Adviser, Federation of Agricultural, Horticultural and Forestry Workers.

Mr. Heinz MARKMANN, Adviser, Economic Policy Division of the Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mr. Armin PETER, Adviser on Co-operative Questions, Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mrs. Herta METER-RIEKENBERG, Member of the Executive Board, German Federation of Salaried Employees; Chief of the Women’s Section.

Mr. Herbert TUROWSKI, Member of the Council, German Federation of Salaried Employees; Chief of the Federal Mine Employees’ Group.

Mr. Hans WEISE, Adviser, Federation of Workers in the Mining and Power Industries.

Ghana

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. K. AMOA-AWUAH, Minister of Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. B. F. A. AYEH, Chief Labour Officer.

Mr. R. M. AKWEI, Permanent Representative of Ghana accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the specialised agencies in Geneva.

Advisers

Mr. J. D. VANDERPUYE, Principal Labour Officer.

Mrs. Mirinda GREENSTREET, Lecturer, Ghana University.

Miss Adelaide V. A. WOOD, First Secretary, Embassy of Ghana, Bonn.

Mr. J. A. BROBBEY, Second Secretary, Ghana Permanent Mission accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the specialised agencies in Geneva.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Frank BANNERMAN-MENSON, Deputy Chief Executive, Ghana Employers’ Association.

Adviser

Mr. George Akumfuo BOATENG, Personnel Manager, Mobil Oil (Ghana) Ltd.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. G. A. BALOGUN, Administrative Secretary, Ghana Trades Union Congress.

Advisers

Mr. G. K. AMPAH, National Secretary, Ghana Trades Union Congress.

Mr. R. H. ATTIMU, General Secretary, Municipal and Local Workers’ Union.

Miss Pauline CLERK, Political Adviser, Ghana Trades Union Congress.

Greece

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. George BACATSELOS, Minister of Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. John ZABRAS, Special Counsellor, Ministry of Economic Co-ordination.

Mr. George PAPOULIAS, Deputy Permanent Delegate of Greece to the European Office of the United Nations and the international organisations in Geneva.

Advisers

Mr. Socratis CLADAS, Special Counsellor, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Leandros POLYCHRONIS, Special Counsellor, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Evangelos FLOKOS, Director, Ministry of Labour.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Alexander BARDAK, Legal Adviser, Federation of Greek Industrialists.

Adviser

Mr. Georgios ANGELOU, Legal Section, Federation of Greek Industrialists.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE

Mr. Nicholas PAPAGEORGIOS, Secretary-General, Greek General Confederation of Labour.

Advisers

Mr. Nicholas VITORIS, Deputy Secretary-General, Greek General Confederation of Labour.

Mr. Constantinos PAPAIOANNOU, Member of the Executive Board, Greek General Confederation of Labour.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

GUATEMALA

Government Delegates
- Mr. Jorge José SALAZAR VALDÉS, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare.
- Mr. Romeo Manuel HERNÁNDEZ CARDONA, Co-ordinating Secretary, Regional Technical Committee for Labour Affairs, Central American Labour and Social Welfare Council.

Advisers
- Mr. Alberto DUPONT-WILLEMIN, Consul-General; Permanent Representative of Guatemala accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation.
- Mr. Alberto Luis Enrique DUPONT-WILLEMIN Jr., Vice-Consul; Attaché, Office of the Permanent Representative of Guatemala accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation.

Employers’ Delegate
- Mr. Walter S. EISNER, Permanent Representative of the Employers’ Organisations on the Executive Committee of the International Organisation of Employers.

Workers’ Delegate
- Mr. Mauro MONTERROSO.

GUINEA

Government Delegates
- Mr. Sihkée CAMARA, Ambassador of the Republic of Guinea, Belgrade.
- Mr. Bohssein EOUAD, Cabinet Director, Secretariat of State for Labour.

Employers’ Delegate
- Mr. René BETZEL, Managing Director, Société Duffour & Igon.

Workers’ Delegate
- Mr. Habibou BAH, Teacher; Professor, Trade Union University of Conakry.

HONDURAS

Government Delegate
- Mr. Nicolás CRUZ TORRES.

Employers’ Delegate
- Mr. Augusto BARÓN LUPILAC.

Workers’ Delegate
- Mr. Salvador RAMOS ALVARADO.

HUNGARY

Government Delegates
- Mr. József MEKIS, First Deputy Minister of Labour.
- Mr. József BÉNYI, Deputy Permanent Representative of the Hungarian People’s Republic to the European Office of the United Nations.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
- Mrs. Edit KONRÁD, Head of Section, Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

Advisers
- Mr. Ferenc SOMOS, Second Secretary, Ministry for Foreign Affairs.
- Mr. Andor WELTNÉR, University Professor, Head of the Chair of Labour Law, Loránd Eötvös University.

Employers’ Delegate
- Mr. Tamás SATTLER, General Director, Mineralimpex Foreign Trade Enterprise.

Workers’ Delegate
- Mr. László KARAKAS, Secretary, National Council of Trade Unions.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
- Mr. János LÁZÁR, Head of Subdivision, Department of International Relations, National Council of Trade Unions.

INDIA

Government Delegates
- Mr. BHEEKHABHAI, Minister of Panchayati Raj, Community Development, Forest, Labour, Ayurveda, Social Welfare, Khadi and Village Industries, Government of Rajasthan.
- Mr. P. M. MENON, Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Employment.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
- Mr. H. P. DUARA, Commissioner of Labour, Government of Assam.
- Mr. S. V. PURUSHOTTAM, Consul, Consulate General of India, Geneva.
- Mr. R. RANGANATHAN, Second Secretary (Commercial), Indian Embassy, Berne.

Employers’ Delegate
- Mr. Babubhai M. CHINAI, M.P.

Advisers
- Mr. P. Cheentaal RAO, Secretary, All-India Organisation of Industrial Employers.
- Mr. V. J. ROSS, Secretary, Madras Chamber of Commerce.

Workers’ Delegate
- Mr. ABID ALI, M.P.; Vice-President and International Representative, Indian National Trade Union Congress; Member of the Executive Board, International Confederation of Free Trade Unions; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
- Mr. Kali MUKHERJEE, President, Indian National Trade Union Congress, Bengal Branch.
- Mr. Jagannath SINHA, General Secretary, Indian National Trade Union Congress, Assam Branch.

IRAN

Minister Attending the Conference
- Mr. Atta-ollah KHOSROVANY, Minister of Labour and Social Affairs.

Government Delegates
- Mr. Sadegh AZIMI, Minister Plenipotentiary, Permanent Delegation of Iran accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.
Mr. Hassan FABZANEH, Engineer; Director-General of the Bureau of Economic and Social Studies, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Mohsen ACHETY, Member of the Governing Council, Social Insurance Organisation.
Mr. Abdol Hossein Mohammad KARY, Director of International Relations, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Advisers
Dr. Keckhinneh KAZIMI, Chief, Women’s and Young Workers’ Labour Affairs Division, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.
Mr. Mahmoud FARKHONDEHEPI, Engineer; Head of the Land Reform Department, Kazvine.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. Massoud GHAYOUE, Member of the Governing Board and the Executive Committee, General Secretary, Iranian Chamber of Mines and Industries; Member of the Governing Board, Associations of Metallurgical Industries; Member of the Iranian Higher Council of Labour.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Javad MALEKNIA, National Iranian Oil Company.
Mr. Mohammad SHAHEED-SALESS, National Iranian Oil Company.

Advisers
Mr. Jahanbakhsh ABFAZANGANEH.
Mr. Heshmatollah FAEBOOD.
Mr. Hassan PAESHI.
Mr. Gholamali TAEPI.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. Abolghassem POURSATE, Secretary, Workers' Union of the Rey Calico Mills; Workers' Representative on the Higher Labour Council.

Advisers
Mr. Abolghassem GHODRATY, Representative of the Petroleum Workers' Union of Teheran.
Mr. Ebrahim LOTFIPOUR, Deputy Representative of the Workers of the Zirab Coal Mines.
Mr. Abodorrza AKHAVANKALDAI, Workers’ Representative, Masjed Soleiman.
Mr. Amir Ali SEYFI, M.P., Adviser, Silk Workers’ Union.

IRAQ
GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Dr. Abdul-Karim HANI, Minister of Labour and Social Affairs.
Mr. Abdul Razzaq AL-WAKIL, Assistant Director-General of Labour.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Abdel Amir ALSOUIZ, Assistant Director-General of Agricultural Co-operation.

Advisers
Mr. Mohammed Ajeel AL-DAFFAI, Chief Superintendent, Ministry of Industry.
Mr. Wahbi AL-QARAGHOULI, Permanent Delegation of Iraq accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. Hashim AL-DABBAGH, Director-General, Iraqi Federation of Industries.

Advisers
Mr. Abdul Amir AL-JUMAILI, Member of the Governing Body, Iraqi Federation of Industries.
Mr. Amir AL-FAHILI, Iraq Petroleum Company.
Mr. Mundhir ABBAS, Member of the Governing Body, Iraqi Federation of Industries.
Mr. Saadi NAZHAT, Iraq Petroleum Company.
Mr. Hussam AL DHAIH.
Mr. Tahsin ISMAIL.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. Ali SHAGHATI, Member of the Executive Council, General Federation of Trade Unions.

Advisers
Mr. Riyad AL-DABBAS, Member of the Executive Council, General Federation of Trade Unions.
Mr. Zeghair SARHAN, Member of the Executive Council, General Federation of Trade Unions.

IRELAND
GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Patrick Denis McCAETHY, Assistant Secretary, Department of Industry and Commerce.
Mr. Thomas TOBIN, Assistant Principal, Department of Industry and Commerce.

Adviser
Mr. Brendan O’GORMAN, Higher Executive Officer, Department of Industry and Commerce.

EMPLOYERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. William Victor GRIFFITHS, Member of the National Executive Committee, Federated Union of Employers.

Advisers
Mr. Callaghan McCAETHY, Cork Area Branch Secretary, Federated Union of Employers.
Mr. John O’CONNELL, Assistant Secretary, Federated Union of Employers.

WORKERS’ DELEGATE
Mr. William J. FITZPATRICK, Member of the Executive Council, Irish Congress of Trade Unions; General Secretary, Irish Union of Distributive Workers and Clerks.

Advisers
Mr. Jack MACGOGGAN, Member of the Executive Council, Irish Congress of Trade Unions; National Officer, National Union of Tailors and Garment Workers.
Mr. Raaidhri ROBERTS, Joint Secretary, Irish Congress of Trade Unions.

ISRAEL
GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Oded MESSER, Director-General, Ministry of Labour.
Mr. H. RADAY, Chief Labour Relations Officer, Ministry of Labour.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Moshe BARTUR, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; Permanent Delegate of Israel to the European Office of the United Nations.
Mr. M. HARNIV, Legal Adviser, Ministry of Labour.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Advisers
Mr. Ephraim P. HABAN, Counsellor; Deputy Permanent Delegate of Israel to the European Office of the United Nations.
Mr. U. COHEN, First Secretary, Permanent Delegation of Israel to the European Office of the United Nations.
Mr. M. N. BAVLY, Second Secretary, Permanent Delegation of Israel to the European Office of the United Nations.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Joseph HAUSMAN, Director of the Labour Department, Manufacturers' Association of Israel.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. B. A. FRIEDRICH, Chairman of the Board of the Labour Department, Manufacturers' Association of Israel.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Aaron BECKEE, Secretary-General, General Federation of Labour (Histadruth); Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Yeshayahu KEREN-ZVI, Legal Adviser, General Federation of Labour (Histadruth).

Advisers
Mrs. Y. SIMHONI, Head of the International Department and Member of the Executive Bureau, General Federation of Labour (Histadruth); Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.
Mr. E. MAEX, European Representative, General Federation of Labour (Histadruth).
Mr. M. A. GILBOA, Director, Department for Cooperation, General Federation of Labour (Histadruth).
Mr. A. TARSHISH, Member of the Ein Harod Kibbutz.

ITALY

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Umberto DELLE FAVE, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Roberto AGO, Professor of International Law, Rome University; Representative of the Government of Italy on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.
Mr. Rosario PURPURA, Director-General of Industrial Relations, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare; Substitute Representative of the Government of Italy on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Gianni PERAZZO, Chief Inspector, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare; Chief, International Labour Questions Division.

Advisers
Mr. Luigi COTTAFAVI, Counsellor of Embassy, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
Mr. Carlo BESERRO, Medical Inspector-General, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare; Chief, Central Inspectorate of Occupational Medicine.
Mr. Gaetano AGRO, Inspector-General, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare; Chief, Co-operative Division.

Mrs. Elena GATTI CAPORASO, Director, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare; Chief, Protection of Women and Young Workers Division.
Mr. Augusto FILONZI, Chief Inspector, Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry; Chief, Studies and Reform Statistics Division.
Mr. Gennaro FORLENZA, Counsellor, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare; Member of the International Labour Questions Division.
Mr. Bernardo Maria ACUTIS, First Secretary, Permanent Mission of Italy to the international organisations in Geneva.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Pietro CAMPANELLA, Industrialist; Member of the Executive Committee, General Confederation of Italian Industry; Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Mr. Renzo ROCCARDI, General Confederation of Italian Industry.
Mr. Nicola GIOVE, Economic and Legal Adviser, General Confederation of Italian Commerce and Tourism.
Mr. Eldo CHERICONI, Representative of the Associations of Undertakings with State Participation, Intersind and the Association of Oil Undertakings.
Mr. Giuseppe MISSERVILLE, Chief, Foreign Labour Relations Service, General Confederation of Italian Agriculture.
Mr. Ferruccio TOSTI, Chief of the Legal Bureau, Association of Credit Agencies.
Mr. Manuzio MOCHI-ONOEI, Chief, Bureau IV of the Vocational Training and General Labour Questions Department, General Confederation of Italian Industry.
Mr. Livio MALFETTANI, President, Italian Co-operative Confederation.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Italo VIGLIANESI, General Secretary, Italian Workers' Union (U.I.L.).

Advisers
Mr. Dionigi COPPO, Senator; Deputy General Secretary, Italian Confederation of Workers' Unions (C.I.S.L.).
Mr. Appio Claudio ROCCI, Member of the General Council, Italian Confederation of Workers' Unions (C.I.S.L.); President, National Institute of Social Assistance.
Mr. Giuseppe RAFFO, National Secretary, Italian Workers' Union (U.I.L.).
Mr. Giuseppe MARTUCCI, Confederate Secretary, Italian Confederation of Workers’ National Unions (CISNAL).

IVORY COAST

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Charles ALLIOT ABOUT, Ambassador of Ivory Coast, Berne.
Mr. Léon KOFFI KOUASSI, Director of Labour and Manpower, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. KONIAN KODIO, Member of the Social and Economic Council; Chairman, Ivory Coast Agricultural Credit Fund.
XXX

List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Adviser
Mr. Auguste BASTID, Vice-President, Federation of Entrepreneurs and Industrialists of Ivory Coast.

Workers' Delegate
Mr. Joseph COFFTE, M.P., General Secretary, General Union of Workers of Ivory Coast (U.G.T.C.I.).

Adviser
Mr. Georges KASSY, Member of the Executive Committee, General Union of Workers of Ivory Coast (U.G.T.C.I.).

JAMAICA

Government Delegates
The Hon. Lynden Gladstone NEWLAND, Minister of Labour and National Insurance.

Major Eric Herbert Augustus GRELL, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Labour and National Insurance.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. Sidney Beresford CHAMBERS, O.B.E., Director, Jamaica Employers' Federation.

Workers' Delegate
The Hon. Joseph Edward McPHEBSON, Senator, Assistant Island Supervisor, Bustamante Industrial Trade Union.

Adviser
Mr. Thossy Augustus KELLY, President, National Workers' Union of Jamaica; President, Caribbean Congress of Labour.

JAPAN

Minister Attending the Conference
Mr. Hisao KODAIRA, Minister of Labour.

Government Delegates
Mr. Morio AOKI, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; Permanent Delegate of Japan to the international organisations in Geneva; Representative of the Government of Japan on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. Ihei SHISEKI, Parliamentary Vice-Minister of Labour.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Masuo TAKASHIMA, Counsellor, Permanent Delegation of Japan to the international organisations in Geneva; Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. Seiji KUDO, Counsellor, Ministry of Labour; Substitute Representative of the Government of Japan on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. Nobuo TAKIZAWA, First Secretary, Embassy of Japan, Bonn.

Mr. Kazuo ADACHI, First Secretary, Embassy of Japan, London.

Mr. Keitaro HIBONAGA, Chief, Women Workers' Section, Women's and Minors' Bureau, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Ayako OBA, Chief, Women Workers' Section, Women's and Minors' Bureau, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Junichi NAKAMURA, Second Secretary, Permanent Delegation of Japan to the international organisations in Geneva.

Mr. Yuzuki KITO, Third Secretary, Permanent Delegation of Japan to the international organisations in Geneva.

Mr. Osamu OKAWARA, Secretary, International Labour Affairs Sections, Ministry of Labour.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. Akio MISHIRO, Chairman of the I.L.O. Committee, Japan Federation of Employers' Associations; Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Mr. Kitae OGAWA, Managing Director, Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. Ltd.

Mr. Takao TAWARA, Managing Director, Nippon Mining Co. Ltd.

Mr. Koji KONDO, Correspondent in Europe, Japan Federation of Employers' Associations.

Workers' Delegate
Mr. Ichiro SHIOJI, President, Federation of Japan Automobile Workers' Unions.

Advisers
Mr. Kitae OGAWA, Managing Director, Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. Ltd.

Mr. Takao TAWARA, Managing Director, Nippon Mining Co. Ltd.

Mr. Koji KONDO, Correspondent in Europe, Japan Federation of Employers' Associations.

Mr. Saleem SOUSSAH.

Mr. Fahd ALNAJDAWI.

Mr. Muhammad JAWHAR.

Mr. Kamel Mohamed EDDEAN, Minister of Labour and Social Welfare.

Government Delegates
Mr. Naji ABDUL-AZIZ, Assistant Director, Department of Labour.

Mr. Ghazi DIAB, Conciliation Representative.

Employers' Delegate
Mr. Walid ASFOUR.

Advisers

Mr. Saleem SOUSSAH.

Mr. Fahd ALNAJDAWI.

Workers' Delegate
Mr. Muhammad JAWHAR.

KENYA

Minister Attending the Conference
The Hon. J. ODERO-JOWI, M.P., Assistant Minister, Ministry of Labour and Social Services.

Government Delegates
Mr. M. A. O. NDISI, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Social Services.

Mr. J. H. I. OBIMBO, Labour Officer, Ministry of Labour and Social Services.

Advisers
Mrs. Rachel MZERA, Director, Kenya Red Cross
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Mr. Joseph Gerard AYUGI, Acting Deputy Commissioner for Co-operative Development.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. D. RICHMOND, Executive Officer, Federation of Kenya Employers.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
The Hon. C. K. LUBEMBE, Senator; General Secretary, Kenya Federation of Labour.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Chadwick ADONGO, General Secretary, Union of Posts and Telecommunication Employees of Kenya, Kenya Federation of Labour.

KUWAIT

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Abdul Aziz SARAWI, Minister of Social Affairs and Labour.
Mr. Issa YASSIN, Supervisor of Unions and Industrial Relations.

Advisers
Mr. Abdul-Mutaleb AL-BIKAI, Supervisor of International Relations and Follow-up.
Mr. Mohammed Taha MADEOUR, Labour Expert.
Mr. Nasir AL-MALHAS, Head of International Relations Section.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Abdul Mushtin AL-TUWAINI, Kuwaiti Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Ajnan Kabalan DAHY.

Adviser
Mr. Nasser Sa’ad AL-ARIFI.

LEBANON

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Edouard HONEIN, Minister of Labour and Social Affairs.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Rida WAHID, former Minister; Director-General, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs; Director-General, National Social Security Fund; Representative of the Government of Lebanon on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.
Mr. Fouad Naar ABI RAAD, Substitute Representative of the Government of Lebanon on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Father André LE GENISEL, Expert, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.
Mr. Joseph DONATO, Director-General, Social Development Office; Substitute Representative of the Government of Lebanon on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Marwan NASR, Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser
Mr. Georges HABBIB, Personnel Officer (Refinery), Iraq Petroleum Company Ltd., Lebanon.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Afif ZAINATI, President, Esso Trade Union; Chairman, Permanent Committee for Workers' Education and Trade Union Training; Secretary, Lebanese Federation of United Trade Unions (S.U.L.).

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Gabriel KHOURY, President, Bank Employees' Union (S.E.B.L.); President, Lebanese Federation of United Trade Unions (S.U.L.); President, Lebanon Confederation of Labour (C.T.L.); Member of the Managing Board of the Lebanese Social Security Fund; Substitute Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Mr. Fouad DARIAN, Former Secretary-General, Lebanese Federation of United Trade Unions (S.U.L.); Member of the Labour Court; Legal Adviser, General Confederation of Labour.
Mr. Antoine AOUN, Former Secretary-General, Lebanese Federation of United Trade Unions (S.U.L.); Member of the Board, Medico-Social Centre of Lebanon; Administrative Secretary, Lebanese Federation of United Trade Unions (S.U.L.).
Mr. Ali HOUMANI, President, Beirut Dockers' Union; Vice-President, Federation of Independent Trade Unions; Member of the Executive Board, Lebanon Confederation of Labour (C.T.L.).
Mr. Khaled BARADHI, President, Bakery Workers' Union of Northern Lebanon; General Secretary, Northern Lebanon Federation of Trade Unions; Secretary, Lebanon Confederation of Labour (C.T.L.).
Mr. Izzet SEMAAN, Member of the Executive Board, Workers' Union of the American University of Beirut; Member of the Executive Board, Lebanese Federation of United Trade Unions (S.U.L.); Member of the Executive Board, Lebanon Confederation of Labour (C.T.L.).
Mr. Halim MATAR, President, Printing Workers' and Bookbinders' Union; Vice-President, Trade Union League; Member of the Executive Board, Lebanon Confederation of Labour (C.T.L.).
Mr. Ahmed SULTAN, President, Northern Lebanon Hairdressers' Union; Member of the Executive Board, Northern Lebanon Federation of Trade Unions; Member of the Executive Board, Lebanon Confederation of Labour (C.T.L.).
Mr. Khodr DAYEH, President, Cinematographic Workers' Union; Secretary, Trade Union League.
Mr. Abdelkader FAYED, General Secretary, Union of Employees and Workers of the Port of Beirut; Secretary, Lebanon Confederation of United Trade Unions (S.U.L.).
Mr. Khalil KHALAJIJ, President, Union of Workers and Employees of the Tripoli Petroleum Refinery (I.P.C.); Secretary, Federation of Petroleum Employees' and Workers' Unions.

LIBERIA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
The Hon. A. Dashward WILSON, Jr., Under-Secretary for Labour.
Mr. J. Urias NELSON, Director of Labour Standards.

Adviser
Mr. James B. FREEMAN.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. George PADMORE.
Advisers
Mr. Joseph BENSON.
Mr. Douglas Hugh GREVE.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Mohamed A. RAHMAN.

LIBYA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Abdel Mola LENGHI, Minister of Labour and Social Affairs.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Mohamed Ali El MARIAMI, Under-Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.
Mr. Mahmud DERBI, Assistant Under-Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Advisers
Mr. Mohamed MEIR, Assistant Director-General, Co-operation Department.
Mr. Mohammed MAHJUB, Specialist, Manpower Section.
Mrs. Bassima EL-SADAWI, Official, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Abdulhalim BEN HALIM.

Adviser
Mr. Mohammed Mansur BEN BAEKAH.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Salem SHITA, M.P., General Secretary of the National Federation of Trade Unions; Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Mr. Antoine KRIFER, President, General Confederation of Labour; Substitute Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

MALAGASY REPUBLIC

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Pierre RANJEVA, Director of Labour and Social Laws.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. RAOLISON, Chief, Research and Development Division, Commissariat-General for Co-operation.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Daniel ANDRIANTSITOHAINA, Vice-President, Confederation of Trade Unions of Economic Interest, Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Philgène RAVEROSON, Fivondronamben'ny Mpiaga Malagasy Trade Union.

MALAWI

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. Alfred Beatres James CHIWANDA, M.P., Minister of Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Ian Gilmour McCulloch, Permanent Secretary to the Minister of Labour.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Edward Albert NEILMS, Industrial Relations Officer, Agricultural Employers' Association; Secretary, National Employers' Consultative Association of Malawi.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Frank Lewis MATTENJE, President, Railway Workers' Union of Malawi.

MALAYSIA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. V. MANICKAVASAGAM, Minister of Labour.
GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. S. KUMAR, Commissioner for Labour, States of Malaya.
Mr. ABDUL RAHMAN bin Abu Osman, Senior Assistant Commissioner (Industrial Relations), Department of Labour and Industrial Relations, States of Malaya.

Advisers
Mr. A. NADESAN, Acting Deputy Secretary, Ministry of Labour, State of Singapore.
Mr. WONG Siew Wai, Deputy Commissioner (Administration), Department of Labour and Industrial Relations, States of Malaya.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Advisor
Mr. G. C. THIO, Personnel Manager, Bata Shoe Co. Ltd.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. S. J. H. ZAIDI, Hon. General Secretary, Malaysian Trades Union Congress.

Advisor
Mr. George CHUA, Secretary for Welfare and Social Programmes, National Trades Union Congress, Singapore.

MALI

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Oumar Baba DIARRA, Secretary of State for the Civil Service and Labour; Representative of the Government of Mali on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.
Mr. Mamadou DIARRA, Labour Controller.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Balla DEMBELE, Deputy Managing Director, Office du Niger.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Mamadou Famady SISSOKO, M.P., General Secretary, Mali National Union of Workers (U.N.T.M.).

MALTA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Dr. Alexander CACHIA-ZAMMIT, M.D., M.P., Minister of Labour and Social Welfare.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Joseph M. ROSSIGNAUD, Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.
Mr. Joseph L. BONNICI, Enforcement Officer.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. George John RANSLEY, General Secretary, Malta Employers' Confederation.

Advisor
Mr. Joseph GASAN, Member, Federation of Malta Industries.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Joseph ATTARD KINGSWELL, General Secretary, General Workers' Union.

Advisor
Mr. Guido CALLUS, General Secretary, Confederation of Malta Trade Unions.

MAURITANIA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. SIDI MOHAMED DIAGANA, Minister of Health, Labour and Social Affairs.
Mr. Brabil SOUEIDAHMED, General Director of Labour.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Christian TROUVE.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Elimane KANE.

MEXICO

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Omar PACHO CARRILLO, Official, Secretariat of Labour.
Mr. Enrique BRAVO CARO, Minister; Acting Permanent Delegate of Mexico to the international organisations in Geneva.

Advisers
Mr. Alejandro KUHNE, Engineer.
Mr. Héctor BLANCO MELO, Adviser.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Manuel FERNÁNDEZ LANDERO.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Alfonso SÁNCHEZ MADARIAGA, Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Francisco J. MACIN.

KINGDOM OF MOROCCO

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Abdelkader LARAQUI, Ambassador of the Kingdom of Morocco, Berne.
Mr. Mohammed BENNIS, Secretary-General, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Mohammed GOURJA, Chief of the Employment Injuries Service, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs; Substitute Representative of the Government of Morocco on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office (Deputy Member).
Mr. Abdallah BOUMHOUCH, Special Inspector of Labour; Chief of Service, Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Advisor
Mr. Ahmed GHOMARI, Chief of the Manpower Service.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Abdallah SOUTIRI, President, Moroccan Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry.

Advisers
Mr. Kacidi BELHADJ, President, Agadir Chamber of Commerce and Industry.
Mr. Haj Ali SEIF, President, Safi Chamber of Commerce and Industry.
Mr. Hassan ZEMMOURI, General Secretary, Moroccan Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry.
Mr. Bouabdellah TAIEB, President, Taza Chamber of Commerce and Industry.
XXXIV  List of Members of Delegations, etc.

NEW ZEALAND

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. H. PARSONAGE, Secretary of Labour, Department of Labour.
Mr. C. D. MACAN, District Superintendent, Department of Labour.

Advisers
Mr. G. THORP, Permanent Representative of New Zealand to the European Office of the United Nations.
Miss M. C. RICHES, Second Secretary, New Zealand Permanent Mission to the European Office of the United Nations.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. W. H. TUCKER, Vice-President, New Zealand Employers' Federation.

Adviser
Mr. P. J. LUXFORD, Executive Director, New Zealand Employers' Federation

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. T. E. SKINNER, President, New Zealand Federation of Labour.

Adviser
Mr. R. A. HILL, Secretary, New Zealand Clothing Trades Federation.

NICARAGUA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Luis ZÚÑIGA OSORIO, Minister of Labour.
Mr. José Antonio TIJEREINO MEDRANO, Director-General, National Social Security Institute.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate
Mrs. Marta E. de CHÁVEZ, Consul-General Geneva.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Constantino CAMPOS PÁIZ.

NIGER

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Ibra KABO, Minister of the Civil Service and of Labour.
Mr. Yacouba Issa KONE, Director of Labour, Manpower and Social Security.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Henri GEORGET, Vice-President, Employers' Association for Undertakings and Industries of Niger.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. René DELANNE, General Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

Advisor
Mr. Abdoulayo DIALLO, General Grievances Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

NIGERIA

MINISTERS ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. Adeleke ADEDOTUN, Federal Minister of Labour.
The Hon. J. O. ADIGUN, Minister of Labour, Western Nigeria.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Bene DELANNE, General Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

Adviser
Mr. Abdoulaye DIALLO, General Grievances Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

NEW ZEALAND

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. H. PARSONAGE, Secretary of Labour, Department of Labour.
Mr. C. D. MACAN, District Superintendent, Department of Labour.

Advisers
Mr. G. THORP, Permanent Representative of New Zealand to the European Office of the United Nations.
Miss M. C. RICHES, Second Secretary, New Zealand Permanent Mission to the European Office of the United Nations.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. W. H. TUCKER, Vice-President, New Zealand Employers' Federation.

Adviser
Mr. P. J. LUXFORD, Executive Director, New Zealand Employers' Federation

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. T. E. SKINNER, President, New Zealand Federation of Labour.

Adviser
Mr. R. A. HILL, Secretary, New Zealand Clothing Trades Federation.

NICARAGUA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Luis ZÚÑIGA OSORIO, Minister of Labour.
Mr. José Antonio TIJEREINO MEDRANO, Director-General, National Social Security Institute.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate
Mrs. Marta E. de CHÁVEZ, Consul-General Geneva.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Constantino CAMPOS PÁIZ.

NIGER

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Ibra KABO, Minister of the Civil Service and of Labour.
Mr. Yacouba Issa KONE, Director of Labour, Manpower and Social Security.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Henri GEORGET, Vice-President, Employers' Association for Undertakings and Industries of Niger.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. René DELANNE, General Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

Advisor
Mr. Abdoulayo DIALLO, General Grievances Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

NIGERIA

MINISTERS ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. Adeleke ADEDOTUN, Federal Minister of Labour.
The Hon. J. O. ADIGUN, Minister of Labour, Western Nigeria.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Bene DELANNE, General Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

Adviser
Mr. Abdoulaye DIALLO, General Grievances Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

NEW ZEALAND

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. H. PARSONAGE, Secretary of Labour, Department of Labour.
Mr. C. D. MACAN, District Superintendent, Department of Labour.

Advisers
Mr. G. THORP, Permanent Representative of New Zealand to the European Office of the United Nations.
Miss M. C. RICHES, Second Secretary, New Zealand Permanent Mission to the European Office of the United Nations.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. W. H. TUCKER, Vice-President, New Zealand Employers' Federation.

Adviser
Mr. P. J. LUXFORD, Executive Director, New Zealand Employers' Federation

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. T. E. SKINNER, President, New Zealand Federation of Labour.

Adviser
Mr. R. A. HILL, Secretary, New Zealand Clothing Trades Federation.

NICARAGUA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Luis ZÚÑIGA OSORIO, Minister of Labour.
Mr. José Antonio TIJEREINO MEDRANO, Director-General, National Social Security Institute.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate
Mrs. Marta E. de CHÁVEZ, Consul-General Geneva.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Constantino CAMPOS PÁIZ.

NIGER

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Ibra KABO, Minister of the Civil Service and of Labour.
Mr. Yacouba Issa KONE, Director of Labour, Manpower and Social Security.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Henri GEORGET, Vice-President, Employers' Association for Undertakings and Industries of Niger.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. René DELANNE, General Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

Advisor
Mr. Abdoulayo DIALLO, General Grievances Secretary, National Union of Workers of Niger (U.N.T.N.).

NIGERIA

MINISTERS ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. Adeleke ADEDOTUN, Federal Minister of Labour.
The Hon. J. O. ADIGUN, Minister of Labour, Western Nigeria.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. M. A. TOKUNBOH, Permanent Secretary, Federal Ministry of Labour.
Mr. A. OBOGUN, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare, Benin-City.

Advisers

Mr. J. I. O. BOSAH, Senior Labour Officer, Federal Ministry of Labour.
Mr. E. U. ONUOHA, Senior Labour Officer, Federal Ministry of Labour.
Mallam M. MAIBE, Labour Officer, Federal Ministry of Labour.
Mr. O. EKUMANKAMA, Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Federal Ministry of Labour.
Mr. M. K. FALODE, Acting Assistant Chief Agricultural Extension Officer, Ministry of Agriculture and Natural Resources.
Mrs. J. O. AGWUEGBO, Social Welfare Officer, Federal Ministry of Labour.
Mrs. Norma NELSON-COLE, National Council of Women's Societies.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. C. E. ABEBE, Personnel Director, United Africa Company of Nigeria Ltd.

Advisers

Mr. H. M. OFUBUM, Shell-BP Petroleum Development Company of Nigeria Ltd.; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.
Mr. D. A. BOBBIE, Director, Nigeria Employers' Consultative Association.
Mr. John E. H. KEYLOCK, M.B.E., A.M.I.M.M., Deputy Chairman, Nigerian Mining Employers' Association; Chief Industrial Relations Officer, A. O. Nigeria Ltd.
Mr. W. Z. COKER-DICKENS, Chief Industrial Relations Officer, Nigeria Ports Authority.
Mrs. A. ASUNI, Managing Director, Nigeria Educational and Vocational Aid Co. Ltd.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

The Hon. L. Lawrence BOEHA, M.P., Trade Unions Supreme Council; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. E. N. OKONGWU, Trade Unions Supreme Council.
Mallam Yunusa KALTUNGO, North Regional Secretary, United Labour Congress of Nigeria.
Mr. W. O. GOODLUCK, Joint Action Committee of Trade Unions.
Mr. Paul NWOFILI EBO, President-General, Nigerian Ports Authority Clerical Workers' Union.
Mr. E. C. OKEI-ACHAMBA, Joint Action Committee of Trade Unions.

NORWAY

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. Olav GJÆREVVOLL, Minister of Social Affairs.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. K. J. ØKSNES, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Social Affairs; Representative of the Government of Norway on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office (Deputy Member).
Mrs. Rakel SEWERN, M.P.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Mr. Halldor HELDAL, Chief of Division, Ministry of Social Affairs; Substitute Representative of the Government of Norway on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office (Deputy Member).

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Bue OTNAESS, Deputy Director, Directorate for Labour Inspection.
Mrs. Kari VANGSNES, Counsellor; Secretary of the Norwegian Council on Equal Pay.
Mr. Evina BERG, First Secretary of Embassy, Norwegian Permanent Delegation to the European Office of the United Nations and the other international organisations in Geneva.
Miss Eldrif BJORDAL, Principal, Norwegian Agency for International Development.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Kaare SELVIG, Advocate; Director, Norwegian Employers' Confederation.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Lars AARVIG, Director, Norwegian Employers' Confederation.

Adviser

Mr. Ivar OFSTAD, Regional Director for Western Norway, Norwegian Employers' Confederation.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Einar STEAND, Member of the Executive Board, General Confederation of Trade Unions in Norway.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Kaare HALDEN, Deputy Legal Adviser, General Confederation of Trade Unions in Norway.

Advisers

Mr. Viktor JENSEN, President, Norwegian Federation of Municipal Employees.
Miss Mirjam NORDAHL, Secretary, General Confederation of Trade Unions in Norway.

PAKISTAN

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Malik Abdul LATIF KHAN, C.S.P., Secretary, Labour Department, Government of West Pakistan.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Niaz NAIK.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. WAJID ALI, President, Employers' Association of West Pakistan; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Afzal ALI, President, East Pakistan Federation of Labour.

PANAMA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Rigoberto PAREDES, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; Member of the National Assembly.
Mr. Miguel AMADO BURGOS, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; Permanent Delegate of Panama accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

PHILIPPINES

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Vicente ALBANO PACIS, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; Permanent Representative of the Philippines to the United Nations and the other international organisations in Geneva.

The Hon. Onofre GUEVARA, Under-Secretary of Labor.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
The Hon. Emiliano TABIGNE, Judge of the Court of Industrial Relations.
The Hon. Amando C. BUGAYONG, Judge of the Court of Industrial Relations.

Adviser
Mr. Sergio BARRERA, Second Secretary, Permanent Mission of the Philippines to the United Nations and the other international organisations in Geneva.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
The Hon. Primitivo LOVINA, former Secretary of Labor; Director, Chamber of Commerce of the Philippines.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Gregorio IMPERIAL, Jr., Personnel Manager, U.S. Industries-Philippines Inc.
Mr. Benedicto G. ASCALON, Member, Chamber of Commerce of the Philippines.

Advisers
Mr. Cipriano CID, President, Philippine Association of Free Labor Unions.
Mr. Juan C. TAN, Secretary-General, Brotherhood of Asian Trade Unionists (I.F.C.T.U.); President, Federation of Free Workers.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates
Mr. Democrito T. MENDOZA, National President, Philippine Labor Center; President, Philippine Transport and General Workers' Union.

Advisers
Mr. Antonio V. POLICARPIO, First Vice-President and General Secretary, National Labor Union.
Mr. Pedro D. FERNANDEZ, President, Philippine Union of Stevedores (U.O.E.F.).

POLAND

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Aleksander BURSKI, President, Labour and Wages Committee.
LIST OF MEMBERS OF DELEGATIONS, ETC.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Leon CHAJN, M.P.; Member of the Council of State; former Vice-Minister of Labour and Social Welfare; Representative of the Government of Poland on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. Jerzy LICKI, Director, Labour and Wages Committee.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Mrs. Maria JAKUBOWICZ, Deputy Director, Labour and Wages Committee.

Mr. Stanislaw TURBAŃSKI, Chief of Section, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Kazimierz SZABLEWSKI, First Secretary, Permanent Delegation of the People's Republic of Poland to the European Office of the United Nations.

Mr. Waclaw FRONCZAK, Counsellor, Office of the President, Labour and Wages Committee.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Henryk BOGACKI, Director, Union of Linen Industries.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Eyszard POSPIESZYNSKI, President, Polish Seamen's and Dockers' Union; Member of the Presidium, National Council of Polish Trade Unions.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Mieczyslaw JUEEK, Deputy Chief, International Relations Section, National Council of Polish Trade Unions.

Adviser

Mr. Eemigiusz BIEZANEK, Professor, Lodz University.

PORTUGAL

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Carlos Augusto FERNANDES, Minister Plenipotentiary; Assistant to the Director-General of Economic and Consular Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Alexandre RIBEIRO da CUNHA, Senior Inspector for Political Affairs, Ministry of Overseas Territories.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Fernando de ALCAMBAR PEREIRA, Permanent Delegate of Portugal to the International Labour Organisation.

Advisers

Mr. Nuno ÁLVARES DUARTE MATIAS FERREIRA, Senior Inspector for Political Affairs, Ministry of Overseas Territories.

Mr. António Maria da COSTA MORAIS, Inspector for Political Affairs, Ministry of Overseas Territories.

Mrs. Aurora da FONSECA, Assistant, Social Welfare Services.

Mr. Carlos António LUNA da COSTA LEÃO, Assistant Inspector of Labour.

Mr. Manuel da CÂMARA de CARVALHO DAUN e LORENA, Chief, International Relations Service, Ministry of Corporations and Social Welfare.

Mr. José Manuel Ribeiro SÉRVULO CORREIA, Assistant, Corporation and Social Study Centre, Ministry of Corporations and Social Welfare.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. António MORALES de los RIOS LEITÃO, Union of Bein Manufacturers' and Exporters' Associations.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate

Mr. António Júdice BUSTORFF SILVA, Association of Banks and Banking Undertakings.

Advisers

Mr. Joaquim PENA DA COSTA.

Mr. José BERNARDO.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. António LOPES RIBEIRO, National Union of Cinematographic Workers.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Pedro António MONTEIRO MAURY, Regional Federation of Unions of Office Workers of the South, the Azores and Madeira.

Advisers

Mr. Armando PEDROSO de LIMA, Member of Mozambique Legislative Council and National Union of Office Workers of Mozambique.

Mr. Assahel Jonassane MAZULA, Member of Mozambique Legislative Council and National Union of Office Workers of Mozambique.

RUMANIA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Vasile DUMITRESCU, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the People's Republic of Rumania, Berne.

Mr. Ion DATCU, Director, Directorate of International Organisations, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Nicolae ECOBESCU, Acting Permanent Representative of the People's Republic of Rumania accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the specialised agencies in Geneva.

Advisers

Mr. Nicolae ALEXE, Counsellor, State Committee for Labour and Wages Questions.

Mr. Tache TABACARU, First Secretary, Permanent Mission of the People's Republic of Rumania accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the specialised agencies in Geneva.

Mr. Valeriu TUDOR, Chief of Service, Directorate of International Organisations, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Ion COVACI, Second Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Aurel SANISLAV, Third Secretary, Permanent Mission of the People's Republic of Rumania accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the specialised agencies in Geneva.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Bujor OLTEANU, Director-General, "Brazi" Refinery.

Workers' Delegate

Mr. Constantin TUDOR, Member of the Presidium, Central Council of Trade Unions.

Advisor

Mr. Gheorghe FLOREA, Central Council of Trade Unions.
Rwanda

Government Delegates

Mr. Martin UZAMUGURA, Director-General, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Thomas NTAWIHA, Director-General of Labour, Ministry of the Interior.

Employers’ Delegate

Mr. SAUVENIER, Director, Georwanda; President, Association of Undertakings of Rwanda.

Workers’ Delegate

Mr. Pedro NIYITEGEKA, Chief Public Relations Officer, Minétain.

El Salvador

Government Delegate

Mr. Gustavo Adolfo GUEBRE, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary; Permanent Representative of the Republic of El Salvador accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.

Senegal

Minister Attending the Conference

Mr. Abdou Rahmame DIOP, Minister of the Civil Service and Labour.

Government Delegates

Mr. Souleymane SIDIBÉ, Technical Counsellor, Office of the President of the Republic of Senegal.

Mr. Coumba N’Doffène DIOUF, Director-General of Labour and Social Security.

Advisor

Mr. Oumar BA, Assistant Director of Social Security.

Employers’ Delegate

Mr. Jean-Baptiste DIOP, Chief of Personnel, Senegal Canning and Preserves Factory.

Advisor

Mr. Georges ANTOINE, General Secretary, Inter-Union Federation of Undertakings and Industries of West Africa (UNISYNDI).

Workers’ Delegate

Mr. Alassane SOW, Deputy General Secretary, National Union of Senegalese Workers (U.N.T.S.).

Sierra Leone

Minister Attending the Conference

Mr. Aloysius Joseph DEMBY, M.P., Minister of Lands, Mines and Labour.

Government Delegates

Mr. G. L. V. WILLIAMS, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Lands, Mines and Labour.

Mr. M. A. E. DAVIES, Commissioner of Labour, Ministry of Lands, Mines and Labour.

Spain

Minister Attending the Conference

Mr. Jesús ROMEO GORRIÁ, Minister of Labour.

Government Delegates

Mr. Ricardo GÓMEZ-ACEBO y SANTOS, Under-Secretary, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. José Antonio GIMÉNEZ-ARNAU y GRAN, Permanent Delegate of Spain accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Francisco Javier ELORZA y ECHÁNIZ, Marquis of NERVA, Director-General for International Organisations, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Manuel ALONSO OLEA, Director-General of Labour Jurisdiction.

Advisers

Mr. Alfredo SANTOS BLANCO, General Technical Under-Secretary, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Alfredo CERRAZOLA ASENJO, Secretary-General, Directorate-General of Social Promotion.

Mr. Electo José GARCÍA TEJEDOR, Deputy Permanent Delegate of Spain accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.

Mr. Manuel TROYANO de los RÍOS, Chief, International Relations Section, Ministry of Labour.

1 From 11 June only.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Mr. Antonio Cándido NANG ONDO, Labour Counsellor, Governing Council of Equatorial Guinea.

Mr. Manuel de VILLEGAS y URZÁIZ, Counsellor; Member of the Permanent Delegation of Spain accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.

Mr. Gonzalo FERNÁNDEZ de CÓRDOVA y MORENO, Counsellor, Directorate-General for International Organisations, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Mr. José Ramón de CÁRDENAS RODRÍGUEZ, Chief, Central Section of the Labour Inspectorate.

Mr. Miguel JABALA GONZÁLEZ, Second Secretary, Permanent Delegation of Spain to the international organisations in Geneva.

Mr. Héctor MARAVALL CASENOVES, Chief, Labour Advisory Bureau, General Technical Secretariat, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. José María ESTEBAN VARGAS, Chief, Vocational Counselling Section, Directorate-General of Employment.

Mrs. María Jesús SÁEZ de PARGA, Chief of Section, Central Internal Administrative Service, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. José María CAMPÁ-BLANES, Attaché, Permanent Delegation of Spain accredited to the international organisations in Geneva.

Mr. Luis GALDÓS GABÍCÍA, President, Central Economic Section (Employers), Chemical Industries Association; Managing Director, Unión Eesinera Española, S.A.

Mr. Francisco-Javier LOZANO BEEGUA, Managing Director, Ebro Compañía de Azúcares y Alcoholes S.A.; President, Central Economic Section (Employers), Sugar Association.

Mr. Moaquin FERNÁNDEZ LÓPEZ, President, Economic Section (Employers), National Merchant Marine Association; Secretary of the Board, Armadores de Pequeño Tonelaje S.A. (ARMASA).

Mr. Fernando FUGARDO SANZ, President, National Workers' Committee, National Association of Wood and Cork Industries; Workers' Representative; President, Woodworkers' Mutual Aid Society; Staff Counsellor, Bank of Spain.

Mr. Santiago ÁLVAREZ-AVELLÁN, President, National Committee, Building, Glass and Ceramic Industries Association; Workers' Representative; National Workers' President for the Building Industry.

Mrs. Purificación SEDEÑO FUENTES, Member, Central Social Section (Workers), Transport Association.

Mr. Paronk Bedawi EL-SAWAHLI, Head of International Relations Department, Ministry of Information and Labour.

Mr. Ahmad Izz EL-ARAB YOUSIF, Chief Factory Inspector.

Mr. Mohamed Ali AHMED, Establishment Officer, Ministry of Finance and Economics.

Mr. Snad El-Fatih EL-BEDAWI, Lecturer in History, G.I.T.T.C., Khartoum.

Mr. Mohamed El-Sayed OSMAN, Manager, Mitchell Cotts and Co.

Mr. Abdel Ghani GAWHER, Sudan Railways Trade Union.

Mr. Fadl Ahmed FADL, Sudan Workers' Federation of Trade Unions.

Mr. Sven ASPLING, Minister of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Sten-Eric HEINRICKI, Chief of the International Relations Division, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Lars-Åke ÅSTRÖM, Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Reidar TILBERT, Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Ingemund BENGTSSON, M.P., Special Adviser, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Ian LAGERBREN, Secretary, Budget Department, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Ingemar LINDBERG, Principal, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Dr. Åke LARSSON, Special Adviser, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Hilding STARLUND, Chief Engineer, Head of Technical Division, National Workers' Protection Board.

Mrs. Ingeborg JÖNSSON, Secretary, National Labour Market Board.

Mr. Bertil MATHSSON, Former Director of the International Co-operative Alliance Education Centre, New Delhi.

Mr. Göran WALDAU, Head of the International Division, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Gullmar BERGENSTRÖM, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. Erik FORSTADIUS, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Gideon GERHARDSSON, Graduate Engineer, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Stig SANDELL, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Abdel Aziz El Zein ISMAIL, Acting Director of Ministry of Information and Labour.

Mr. Farouk Bedawi EL-SAWAHLI, Head of International Relations Department, Ministry of Information and Labour.

Mr. Ahmad Izz EL-ARAB YOUSIF, Chief Factory Inspector.

Mr. Mohamed Ali AHMED, Establishment Officer, Ministry of Finance and Economics.

Mr. Snad El-Fatih EL-BEDAWI, Lecturer in History, G.I.T.T.C., Khartoum.

Mr. Mohamed El-Sayed OSMAN, Manager, Mitchell Cotts and Co.

Mr. Abdel Ghani GAWHER, Sudan Railways Trade Union.

Mr. Fadl Ahmed FADL, Sudan Workers' Federation of Trade Unions.

Mr. Sven ASPLING, Minister of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Sten-Eric HEINRICKI, Chief of the International Relations Division, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Lars-Åke ÅSTRÖM, Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Reidar TILBERT, Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Ingemund BENGTSSON, M.P., Special Adviser, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Ian LAGERBREN, Secretary, Budget Department, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Ingemar LINDBERG, Principal, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Dr. Åke LARSSON, Special Adviser, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Hilding STARLUND, Chief Engineer, Head of Technical Division, National Workers' Protection Board.

Mrs. Ingeborg JÖNSSON, Secretary, National Labour Market Board.

Mr. Bertil MATHSSON, Former Director of the International Co-operative Alliance Education Centre, New Delhi.

Mr. Göran WALDAU, Head of the International Division, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Gullmar BERGENSTRÖM, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. Erik FORSTADIUS, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Gideon GERHARDSSON, Graduate Engineer, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Stig SANDELL, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Abdel Aziz El Zein ISMAIL, Acting Director of Ministry of Information and Labour.

Mr. Farouk Bedawi EL-SAWAHLI, Head of International Relations Department, Ministry of Information and Labour.

Mr. Ahmad Izz EL-ARAB YOUSIF, Chief Factory Inspector.

Mr. Mohamed Ali AHMED, Establishment Officer, Ministry of Finance and Economics.

Mr. Snad El-Fatih EL-BEDAWI, Lecturer in History, G.I.T.T.C., Khartoum.

Mr. Mohamed El-Sayed OSMAN, Manager, Mitchell Cotts and Co.

Mr. Abdel Ghani GAWHER, Sudan Railways Trade Union.

Mr. Fadl Ahmed FADL, Sudan Workers' Federation of Trade Unions.

Mr. Sven ASPLING, Minister of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Sten-Eric HEINRICKI, Chief of the International Relations Division, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Lars-Åke ÅSTRÖM, Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Reidar TILBERT, Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Ingemund BENGTSSON, M.P., Special Adviser, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Ian LAGERBREN, Secretary, Budget Department, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Mr. Ingemar LINDBERG, Principal, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Dr. Åke LARSSON, Special Adviser, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Hilding STARLUND, Chief Engineer, Head of Technical Division, National Workers' Protection Board.

Mrs. Ingeborg JÖNSSON, Secretary, National Labour Market Board.

Mr. Bertil MATHSSON, Former Director of the International Co-operative Alliance Education Centre, New Delhi.

Mr. Göran WALDAU, Head of the International Division, Ministry of the Interior, Labour and Housing.

Mr. Gullmar BERGENSTRÖM, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. Erik FORSTADIUS, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Gideon GERHARDSSON, Graduate Engineer, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Stig SANDELL, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

Mr. Abdel Aziz El Zein ISMAIL, Acting Director of Ministry of Information and Labour.
Mr. Lars STRÅNGH, Director, Swedish Employers' Confederation.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Bertil BOLIN, Director for International Affairs, Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions.

Advisers
Mr. Nils LINDELL, President, Swedish Miners' Union.
Dr. Clas-Erik ODHNER, Research Department, Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions.
Mrs. Sigrid EKENDAL, M.P., Former Secretary, Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions.
Mrs. Britt-Marie BYSTEDT, Secretary, Swedish Central Organisation of Salaried Employees.

SWITZERLAND

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Max HOLZER, Director, Federal Office of Industry, Arts and Crafts, and Labour; Honorary Professor, University of Berne.
Mr. Arnold SAXER, Director, in charge of Social Insurance Agreements.

Advisor and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Bernardo ZANETTI, Assistant Director, Federal Office of Industry, Arts and Crafts, and Labour; Lecturer, University of Fribourg.

Advisers
Miss Alice ZIMMERMANN, Assistant, Subdivision of Labour Law and Workers' Protection, Federal Office of Industry, Arts and Crafts, and Labour.
Mr. Charles SCHLUCHTER, Assistant, Federal Office of Industry, Arts and Crafts, and Labour.
Mr. Hans POPP, Chief of Section, Federal Division of Agriculture.
Mr. Marcel BOSON, Scientific Counsellor, Swiss Union of Consumer Co-operatives; Privat-dozent, Lausanne University.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Charles KUNTSCHEN, Honorary Secretary, Central Federation of Swiss Employers' Associations; Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Mr. Edouard DUC, Secretary, Central Federation of Swiss Employers' Associations.
Mr. Manfred FINK, Deputy Director, Swiss Federation of Arts and Crafts.
Mr. Jörg MÜLLER, Secretary, Association of Swiss Employers in the Textile Industry.
Mr. Willy NEUKOMM, Assistant Director, Swiss Peasants' Federation.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Jean MORI, Swiss Federation of Trade Unions; Vice-Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Mrs. Maria ZAUGG-ALT, Member of the Women's Committee, Swiss Federation of Trade Unions; Secretary of the Women's Committee, Swiss Federation of Workers in Commerce, Transport and the Food Industry.
Mr. André GHELFI, General Secretary, Swiss Federation of Metalworkers and Watchmakers.
Mr. Alfred DOESIGER, Secretary, Swiss Foremen's Association; Member of the Governing Board, Federation of Swiss Societies of Salaried Employees.

SYRIAN ARAB REPUBLIC

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Ali TALJABINI, Minister of Social Affairs and Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Moussa CHAHOUHD, Secretary-General, Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour.
Mr. Ali Mohssen ZEIFFA, Director of International Relations, Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour.

Adviser
Mr. Hicham PHARAON, Ministry of Agrarian Reform.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Charif CHARABATI, President, General Federation of Employers' Associations.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Khaled AL-JOUNDI, President, General Federation of Workers' Unions.

TANZANIA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
The Hon. F. V. MPONJI, M.P., Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Labour; Representative of the Government of Tanzania on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser
Mr. F. P. MWANJISI, Assistant Labour Commissioner, Ministry of Labour.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. H. O. KIPILE, Federation of Tanganyika Employers.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. A. C. TANDAU, Deputy General Secretary, National Union of Tanganyika Workers; Substitute Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers
Mr. D. ZIMBIHILE, Director of International Affairs, National Union of Tanganyika Workers. Miss T. EDWARD, National Union of Tanganyika Workers.
Mr. K. AMEIR, General Secretary, Federation of Revolutionary Trade Unions, Zanzibar.

THAILAND

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Thien ASHAKUL, Deputy Director-General, Public Welfare Department, Ministry of the Interior.
Mr. Porn UDOMPONG, Chief of Labour Research and Statistics Division, Labour Bureau, Public Welfare Department, Ministry of the Interior.
EMPLOYEES' DELEGATE
Mr. Jayant ABIRARG.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Suvitya RAIVWONGSE.

TOGO

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Ombri PANA, Minister of Labour, Social Affairs and the Civil Service.
Mr. Jacques TOGBE, Civil Administrator.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Michel SAMAROU, Director of N.E.T.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Abdoulaye SALAMI, Controller, Post, Telephone and Telegraph Services.

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
The Hon. Robert E. WALLACE, Minister of Labour.
Mr. L. P. E. RAMCHAND, Commissioner of Labour, Ministry of Labour.

Adviser
Mr. S. ALEXANDER.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. V. PEREIRA, President, Employers' Consultative Association of Trinidad and Tobago.

Adviser
Mr. T. B. HUGHES, Director, Employers' Consultative Association of Trinidad and Tobago; Director, Caribbean Employers' Federation.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. J. M. HACKSHAW, Acting President, Trinidad and Tobago National Trades Union Congress.

Adviser
Mr. W. W. SUTTON, General Secretary, National Federation of Labour of Trinidad and Tobago.

TUNISIA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
Mr. Íhsan Sabri ÇAGLAYANOİL, Minister of Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Halit ÜNAL, Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Labour.
Mr. Necmi SARI, Chief, Research Department, Ministry of Labour.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. H. Fahir ALAÇAM, Permanent Delegate of Turkey accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and to the International Labour Office.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Sahap KOCATOPÇU, President, Confederation of Turkish Employers' Associations.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mr. Mümtaz ALTINELLİ, Vice-President, Association of Employers in the Textile Industry; Member of the Executive Board, Confederation of Turkish Employers' Associations.

Adviser
Mr. Mennan OZGÜTÜRK, General Secretary, Association of Employers in the Textile Industry.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Seyfi DEMİRȘOY, President, Turkish Confederation of Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS).

Advisers
Mr. Ziya HEPBIர, President, Turkish Petroleum Workers' Union.
Mr. Hasan TÜRKAY, Vice-President, Turkish Confederation of Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS).

UGANDA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. George B. K. MAGEZI, Minister of Housing and Labour.
GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Eldad John BASAZA-MPYISI, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Housing and Labour.
Mr. J. W. B. NYAGAHIMA, Labour Officer, International Labour, Ministry of Housing and Labour.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. M. S. OWOR, Senior Labour Officer, Ministry of Housing and Labour.

Adviser

Mr. B. B. GODDA, Senior Co-operative Officer, Ministry of Agriculture and Co-operatives.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. James Mackay WALKER, Federation of Uganda Employers; Substitute Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. E. R. KIBUKA, Federation of Uganda Trade Unions.

UKRAINIAN SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLIC

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Mikhail Mikhailovich MAKHINYA, Vice-Chairman, State Planning Commission.
Mr. Mikhail Denisovich POLYANICHKO, Member of the College, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Advisers

Mr. Sergei Grigorievich BUTOVSKY, First Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
Mr. Viktor Gavrilovich BATYUK, Second Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Pavel Mikhailovich KUCHEROV, Manager, Kharkov Air-Conditioners Factory.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Evgeny Ilarionovich EFREMENTKO, Secretary, Ukrainian Trade Union Council.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Ivan Fyodorovich POIDA, Chief of Division, Ukrainian Trade Union Council.

UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Aleksandr Sergeevich MALIKOV, First Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R.

Advisers and Substitute Delegates

Mr. Afanasii Fyodorovich BORDADIN, Chief, International Relations Section, State Labour and Wages Committee, Council of Ministers, U.S.S.R.

Mr. Vladimir Glebovich SHIKUNAEV, Senior Scientific Collaborator, World Economics and International Relations Institute, U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences.

Advisers

Mr. Vasili Ivanovich KHORIN, Deputy Director, Central Union of Consumers' Associations of the U.S.S.R.
Mr. Sergei Dmitrievich CHEREMUSHKIN, Chief of Section, All-Union Agricultural Scientific Research Institute.
Mr. Semyon Aleksandrovich IVANOV, Principal Scientific Adviser, Law Institute, U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences; Editor of the Journal Soviet State and Law.
Mr. Vladimir Aleksandrovich LYSIKOV, First Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Zoya Petrovna IVANOVA, Scientific Adviser, Moscow State Institute of International Relations.
Mr. Viktor Petrovich SMIRNOV, First Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R.

Mrs. Nina Ivanovna PLIPLICHUK, Senior Economist, International Relations Section, State Labour and Wages Committee, Council of Ministers, U.S.S.R.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Vasiliy Vasilevich POLYAKOV, Director, Moscow Carburettor Works.

Advisers

Mr. Grigoriy Matveevich LOZA, Member of the Presidium, V. I. Lenin All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences.
Mr. Erik Panteleimonovich PLETNEV, Doctor of Economic Sciences.
Mr. Pyotr Yakovlevich USIKOV, Head of Sector, All-Union Agricultural Scientific Research Institute.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Pyotr Timofeevich PIMENOV, Secretary, All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions.

Advisers

Mr. Georgii Eliseevich KANAAY, Assistant Secretary, All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions.
Mr. Vladimir Aleksandrovich KOROLOK, Principal, Moscow Higher Institute of Workers' Education.

Mrs. Lyubov Petrovna LAZAREVA, Chief of Sector, International Section, All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions.
Mr. Igor Leonidovich CHUYEV, Senior Consultant, International Section, All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions.

Mr. Igors Mikhailovich KRUGLY, Consultant, International Section, All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions.

UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. Adwar SALAMA, Minister of Labour.
GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Hussein KAMEL, Director-General, Foreign Labour Relations Department, Ministry of Labour.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. El-Sayyed Salaheldin AYOUB, Counsellor, Foreign Labour Relations Department, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Mohammad El-SAID Mohammad KHAIRT, Secretary to the Minister of Labour.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Mohammad Ali RIFAAT, Member of the Board of Directors, Federation of Industries ; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Hussein Aly ORPHY, Chairman and Managing Director, El Nasr Tobacco and Cigarette Company.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Ahmed FAHEEM, President, United Arab Republic General Federation of Trade Unions ; Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. Sayed Abdel Latif BOLTEIJA, Secretary-General, United Arab Republic General Federation of Trade Unions.

Adviser

Miss Gehad El DEMERDASH MOHAMED, Member of the General Trade Union of Petroleum Workers.

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

MINISTERS ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

The Rt. Hon. R. J. GUNTER, M.P., Minister of Labour.

Mr. E. THORNTON, M.B.E., M.P., Joint Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Denis Charles BARNES, C.B., Deputy Secretary, Ministry of Labour ; Representative of the Government of the United Kingdom on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. Conrad Frederick HERON, O.B.E., Under-Secretary, Ministry of Labour, Substitute Representative of the Government of the United Kingdom on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Miss Winefred Evelyn COOMBS, Executive Officer, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Michael William DRAFER, Principal, Ministry of Power.

Mr. George FOGGON, C.M.G., O.B.E., Labour Adviser to the Ministry of Overseas Development.

Miss Barbara GREEN, Assistant Secretary, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Charles Peter SCOTT, C.M.G., O.B.E., Permanent United Kingdom Representative to the European Office of the United Nations.

Mr. William SLINGER, Assistant Secretary, Ministry of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland.

Miss Tessa SOLESBY, Deputy Permanent United Kingdom Representative to the European Office of the United Nations.

Mr. Brewster Joseph SURREIDGE, C.M.G., O.B.E., Adviser on Co-operatives, Ministry of Overseas Development.

Miss Marjorie May SWAN, Executive Officer, Colonial Office.

Mr. Matthew WAKE, Principal, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Claude Edward HILL, Head of the Marketing Development Department, National Farmers' Union.

Mr. Richard Geoffrey Dennison HOUGHTON, C.B.E., Industrial Relations Adviser, Dunlop Rubber Company Limited.

Miss Agnes Cowan MASTERTON, Education Officer, National Federation of Building Trades Employers.

Mr. Cecil Charles Dudley MILLER, International Assistant Secretary, British Employers' Confederation.

Mr. James Howie MITCHELL, Deputy Director-General, Industrial Relations, National Coal Board.

Mr. Roy William WATSON, Head of Labour Division, National Farmers' Union ; Member of the Council and of the General Purposes Committee, British Employers' Confederation.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Lord COLLISON, C.B.E., Chairman of the Trades Union Congress General Council ; General Secretary of the National Union of Agricultural Workers ; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. Wilfred Blackwell BEARD, O.B.E., Member of the General Council of the Trades Union Congress ; Secretary of the United Patternmakers' Association.

Mr. Edward James HILL, Member of the General Council of the Trades Union Congress ; General Secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Boilermakers, Shipwrights, Blacksmiths and Structural Workers.

Mr. William Ernest JONES, O.B.E., Ex-member of the General Council of the Trades Union Congress ; formerly President of the National Union of Mineworkers.

Mr. Joseph O'HAGAN, O.B.E., Member of the General Council of the Trades Union Congress ; General Secretary of the National Union of Blastfurnacemen, Ore Miners, Coke Workers and Kindred Trades.

Mr. Cyril Thomas Howe PLANT, Member of the General Council of the Trades Union Congress ; General Secretary, Inland Revenue Staff Federation.

Miss Marian VEITCH, National Woman Officer, National Union of General and Municipal Workers.
LIST OF MEMBERS OF DELEGATIONS, ETC.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

The Hon. George L.-P. Weaver, Assistant Secretary of Labor for International Affairs, Department of Labor; Representative of the Government of the United States on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Mr. George P. Delaney, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State, Department of State.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. John F. Skillman, Special Assistant to the Secretary of Commerce, Department of Commerce.

Advisers

Mr. William H. Ayres, House of Representatives.

Mr. Adam Clayton Powell, House of Representatives.

Mr. Robert P. Griffin, House of Representatives.

Mr. James Roosevelt, House of Representatives.

Mr. Herbert W. Baker, Labor Attaché, American Embassy, Rio de Janeiro.

Mr. George H. Gooss, Assistant to the Director, Food-for-Peace, Executive Office of the President.

Mr. Roger W. Grant, Chief, Division of International Cooperation, Department of Labor.

Mr. Howard L. Hill, Economic Research Service, Department of Agriculture.

Mrs. Mary Dublin Keyserling, Director, Women's Bureau, Department of Labor.

Mr. John E. Lawyeb, Director, Office of International Affairs, Department of Labor.

Mr. Irvin S. Lippe, Labor Attaché, United States Mission, Geneva.

Mr. Edward B. Persons, Office of International Economic and Social Affairs, Department of State.

Mr. Howard T. Robinson, Labor Adviser, Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs, Department of State.

Mr. Theodore Sellin, Office of International Conferences, Department of State.

Mr. William M. Steen, African Area Specialist, Department of Labor.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Richard Wagner, Director and Past President, Chamber of Commerce of the United States; Consultant, Champlin Petroleum Company, Barrington, Illinois; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. Richard J. Anton, Manager, Business Education Service, Management Development and Employee Relations Services, General Electric Company.

Mr. Richard P. Doherity, President, Television-Radio Management Corporation.

Mr. Frank P. Fogarty, Executive Vice-President, Meredith Broadcasting Company.

Mr. Harry J. Lambeth, Attorney, Labor Relations Department, Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Mr. Edwin P. Neilan, Chairman of the Board, Bank of Delaware.

Mr. Robert W. Norris, Director of Corporate Relations, Philip Morris, Inc.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Rudolf Faupl, International Representative, International Association of Machinists; Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. Edward J. Hickey, Jr., Attorney, Mulholland, Hickey and Lyman.

Mr. John J. McCartin, Assistant General President, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industries of the United States and Canada.

Mr. Ralph Reiser, President, Glass and Ceramic Workers of North America.

Mr. Bert Seidman, European Economic Representative, American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Mr. Miles C. Stanley, President, West Virginia Labor Federation.

Mr. Lester L. Zosel, Special Representative, International Affairs, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

UPPER VOLTA

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Victor Thombriano, Minister of Labour and the Civil Service.

Mr. Zacharie Baluma, Director of Labour, Manpower and Vocational Training.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Georges Sauveur Anguelis, Honorary President, Vice-President in office, Federation of Undertakings and Industries of Upper Volta; Treasurer, Chamber of Industry and Commerce of Upper Volta.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Bruno Ilboudo.

URUGUAY

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Mateo J. Magarinos De Mello, Ambassador; Permanent Representative of Uruguay to the European Office of the United Nations and the specialised agencies; Representative of the Government of Uruguay on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office (Deputy Member).

Mrs. Maria Elena Bidart de Lopez, Counsellor, Permanent Delegation of Uruguay to the European Office of the United Nations and the specialised agencies.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Antonio Terra Ilarranz, Representative of the Uruguayan Chamber of Industry.

WORKERS' DELEGATE

Mr. Jose Figueras, Representative of the Uruguayan Confederation of Trade Unions.

VENEZUELA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. Hens Silva Torres, Minister of Labour.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES

Mr. Andres Aguilar Mawdsley, Ambassador; Permanent Delegate of Venezuela accredited to the organisations of the United Nations in Geneva; Representative of the Government of Venezuela on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office (Deputy Member).

Mr. Alfredo TARRÉ MURZI, Member of the National Congress.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate

Mr. José I. MALDONADO PONCE, Director of Labour, Ministry of Labour.

Advisers

Mr. Carlos SEQUERA YÉPEZ, Member of the National Congress.

Mr. Martín LARES GABALDÓN, Member of the National Congress.

Mr. Marco Tulio BRUNI CELLI, Minister; Counselor, Permanent Delegation of Venezuela accredited to the organisations of the United Nations in Geneva; Substitute Representative of the Government of Venezuela on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office (Deputy Member).

Mr. Raúl SOSA RODRÍGUEZ, Counsellor, Permanent Delegation of Venezuela accredited to the organisations of the United Nations in Geneva.

Mr. Óscar MÁRQUEZ PÉREZ, Chief of the Cooperative Division, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Marcial PÉREZ CHIRIBOGA, First Secretary, Embassy of Venezuela, Berne.

Mrs. Consuelo NOUEL GÓMEZ, Second Secretary, Permanent Delegation of Venezuela accredited to the organisations of the United Nations in Geneva.

Mr. Augusto HERNÁNDEZ, Second Secretary, Permanent Delegation of Venezuela accredited to the organisations of the United Nations in Geneva.

Employers' Delegate

Mr. Félix MARTÍNEZ-ESPINO O., Member, Inter-American Council of Commerce and Production; Member, National Council, Venezuelan Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production; Secretary-Consultant, Caracas Chamber of Commerce and National Banking Association; Member of the National Economic Council; Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. Horacio Guillermo VILLALOBOS.

Mr. Gastón VIVAS BERTHIER.

Mr. Eduardo OYARZÁBAL.

Workers' Delegate

Mr. José GONZÁLEZ NAVARRO, M.P., President, Venezuelan Confederation of Workers; Substitute Deputy Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Advisers

Mr. Juan José del PINO, Member of the Executive Committee, Federation of Workers of the Petroleum Industry of Venezuela.

Mr. José del C. CAMACHO, M.P., Member of the Executive Committee, National Building Workers' Union.

Mr. Alejandro FREITES, Member of the Executive Committee, Venezuelan Confederation of Workers.

Mr. Ramón ROJAS ROJAS, Member of the Executive Committee, Federation of Metalworkers.

Mr. Luis Guillermo HERNÁNDEZ, M.P., Member of the Executive Committee, Venezuelan Confederation of Workers.

VIET-NAM

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. TRAN-Thanh-Hiêp, Secretary of State for Labour.

Government Delegates

Mr. PHAN-Trong-Nhiêm, Cabinet Director; General Secretary, Ministry of Labour.

Mr. NGUYỄN-Thai-Hai, Director, Industrial Relations Service, Ministry of Labour.

Employers' Delegate

Mr. NGUYỄN-Vân-Lạn, General Secretary, General Confederation of Vietnamese Employers.

Advisers

Mr. BÙI-Khắc-Chiên, First Vice-President, National Association of Employers of Viet-Nam.

Mrs. NGUYỄN-Thi-Hai, Adviser, National Association of Employers of Viet-Nam.

Workers' Delegate

Mr. QUYẾN-Trần-Hữu, General Secretary, Vietnamese Confederation of Labour.

Adviser

Mr. TRẦN-Quốc-Bửu, President, Vietnamese Confederation of Labour.

YEMEN

Government Delegate

Mr. Adnan TARCICI, Ambassador; Permanent Representative of Yemen accredited to the European Office of the United Nations and the international organisations.

YUGOSLAVIA

MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE

Mr. Risto ĐURUNOV, Member of the Federal Executive Committee of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; Federal Secretary for Labour.

Government Delegates

Mr. Jovan POPOVIĆ, Deputy Federal Secretary for Labour.

Mr. Stanislav KOPČOK, Ambassador; Permanent Delegate of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia accredited to the European Office of the United Nations.

Advisers

Mr. Marko PEROVIĆ, Counsellor, Federal Labour Secretariat.

Mr. Vladimir STIPETIĆ, President, Economic Council of the National Assembly of Croatia.

Mr. Sreten ILIĆ, Counsellor, Secretariat of State for Foreign Affairs.

Mrs. Stanka RADIĆANIN, Official, Federal Labour Secretariat.

Employers' Delegate

Mr. Ljubiša TUCAKOVić, Counsellor, Labour Research Service, Federal Economic Chamber.
WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Rafael TABOR, Secretary, Central Council of the Federation of Yugoslav Trade Unions.

Adviser and Substitute Delegate
Mrs. Mileva PLANJEEVIĆ, Secretary, Central Council of the Federation of Yugoslav Trade Unions.

Advisors
Mr. Dragomir VASILJEVIĆ, Counsellor, Central Council of the Federation of Yugoslav Trade Unions.
Mr. Andrija BAJIĆ, Counsellor, Central Council of the Federation of Yugoslav Trade Unions.

ZAMBIA
MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. Nalumino MUNDIA, M.P., Minister of Labour and Social Development.

GOVERNMENT DELEGATES
Mr. Hankey Blackskin KALANGA, M.P., Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Social Development.
Mr. Jones Blackson NYIBONGO, Principal Labour Officer, Ministry of Labour and Social Development.

EMPLOYERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Frank Basil CANNING-COOKE, O.B.E., T.D., Manager, Copper Industry Service Bureau Ltd.

Adviser
Mr. David Abel RAY PHIEI, Personal Assistant to the Managing Director, Anglo American Corporation (Central Africa) Ltd.

WORKERS' DELEGATE
Mr. Amoson MUGALA, President-General, United Trades Union Congress of Zambia.

Adviser
Mr. Fanuel Chileyamwea SUMBWE, Treasurer-General, United Trades Union Congress of Zambia.

BARBADOS
GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVE
The Hon. W. A. CRAWFORD, Minister of Trade and Labour.

EMPLOYERS' REPRESENTATIVE
Mr. D. N. LEWIS, Director of the Barbados Employers' Confederation.

WORKERS' REPRESENTATIVE
Mr. F. L. WALCOTT, O.B.E., M.P., General Secretary of the Barbados Workers' Union.

BRITISH GUIANA
MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. C. A. MERRIMAN, Minister of Labour and Social Security.

GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVE
Mr. F. G. TAHERALLY, O.B.E., Acting Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Labour and Social Security.

EMPLOYERS' REPRESENTATIVE
Colonel G. B. THOMSON, C.B.E., M. Inst. T., Director of the Consultative Association of Guianese Industry Ltd.

WORKERS' REPRESENTATIVE
Mr. J. H. POLLYDORE, General Secretary of the British Guiana Trades Union Council.

MAURITIUS
MINISTER ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE
The Hon. R. JOMADAR, Minister of Labour.

GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVE
Mr. G. RAMASAWMY, Principal Assistant Secretary, Ministry of Labour.

EMPLOYERS' REPRESENTATIVE
Mr. René de CHASTETIGNIER du MÉE, Chairman of the Mauritius Employers' Federation; President of the Association of Port and Harbour Employers; Managing Director of the Mauritius New Dock.

WORKERS' REPRESENTATIVE
The Hon. H. RAMNARAIN, M.L.A., President of the Mauritius Labour Congress; President of the Plantation Workers' Union.

Representatives of the United Nations, Specialised Agencies and Other Official International Organisations

UNITED NATIONS
Mr. P. P. SPINELLI, Director, European Office.
Mr. Georges PALTHEY, Deputy Director, European Office.
Mr. Norman G. LUKER, External Relations Officer, European Office.
Mrs. Edith GOMORI, Division of Human Rights.

OFFICE OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES
Mr. J. COLMAR, Chief of the Cabinet of the High Commissioner for Refugees.
Mr. J. ASSCHER.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANISATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS
Mr. Paul LAMARTINE YATES, Regional Representative for Europe.
Miss E. B. YOUNIE, Liaison Officer, International Agency Liaison Branch, Programme Liaison Division.
Mr. E. H. JACOBY, Chief, Land Tenure and Settlement Branch, Rural Institutions and Services Division.
Mr. D. CHRISTODOULOU, Land Tenure and Settlement Branch, Rural Institutions and Services Division.
Mr. G. St. SIEGENS, Chief, Co-operatives, Credit and Rural Sociology Branch, Rural Institutions and Services Division.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANISATION
Mr. A. PRAGEE, Division of Relations with International Organisations.

INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT
Mr. E. LÓPEZ-HERRARTE, European Office.

WORLD HEALTH ORGANISATION
Mr. Carlo R. FEDELE, Chief, External Relations.
Dr. S. FORSSMAN, Chief, Social and Occupational Health.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE
Mr. Albert BALENSI, Assistant Director-General for External Relations.
Mr. Gustav HORTLING, Counsellor, External Relations Department.

ORGANISATION OF AMERICAN STATES
Mr. Raúl C. MIGONE, Director, European Office.
Mr. Louis O. DELWART, Deputy Director, European Office.

COUNCIL OF EUROPE
Mr. F. TENNFJOED, Head, Social Division.

HIGH AUTHORITY OF THE EUROPEAN COAL AND STEEL COMMUNITY
Mr. Hermann OLENHAUER, Chief of Division, Directorate-General for Questions of Labour, Rationalisation and Reconversion.

EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY
Mr. Lionello LEVI SANDRI, Professor; Vice-President of the Commission.
Mr. J. D. NEIRINCK, Director-General of Social Affairs.
Mr. Lamberto LAMBERT, Head of the Office of the Vice-President of the Commission.
Mr. Jacques WERQUIN, Principal Administrator, Directorate-General of Social Affairs.
Mr. H. J. RIMKUS, Principal Administrator, Directorate-General of Social Affairs.
Miss Germaine SAUVAGE, Principal Administrator, Directorate-General of Social Affairs.

Mr. Willem ESSEUR, Directorate-General of Agriculture.

Mr. Gerardo ZAMPAGLIONE, Director-General, Secretariat-General of the Councils of the European Communities.
Mr. Ernst HEYNIG, Director.
Mr. Enzo CHIOCCIOLI, Principal Administrator.

INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE FOR EUROPEAN MIGRATION
Mr. W. M. BESTERMAN, Deputy Director.
Mr. Eduardo BECERRA, Chief of the Department of Liaison and Information.
Mr. R. Y. RODIE, Senior Liaison Officer.
Mr. E. van WERVEKE, Liaison Officer.

LEAGUE OF ARAB STATES
Mr. Dardiri ISMAIL, Deputy Secretary-General.
Mr. Gamal ZOHEIR, Second Secretary.
Mr. Hassan AKKAD, Second Secretary.

Representatives of Non-Governmental International Organisations

AFRICAN TRADE UNION CONFEDERATION
Mr. Gilbert PONGAULT.
Mr. LUANDE.
Mr. David SOUMAH.
Mr. Abdoulaye BA.
Mr. Alphonse KITHIMA.
Mr. Michel TINA.
Mr. Jean DIALLO.
Mr. Blaise ROBEL.

ALL-AFRICAN TRADE UNION FEDERATION
Mr. John K. TETTEGAH, Secretary-General.
Mr. John REICH, Secretary.
Mr. Alex HUTTON-MILLS, Research Office, Headquarters Secretariat.
Mr. Prosper AKANNI, French Secretary.
Mr. Francis NEHWATI.
Mr. Bernard DOMBELE, International Relations Secretary, U.N.T.A.
Mr. Charles SEMAHUNA, Permanent Secretary, P.T.B.
Mr. Ken ACQUAH, Assistant Research Officer attached to the Secretariat-General.

CONFEDERATION OF ARAB TRADE UNIONS
Mr. Mohamed Assaad RAGEH.
Mr. Abdallah EL ASNAG.
Mr. Aly HASSAN.

INTER-AMERICAN COUNCIL OF COMMERCE AND PRODUCTION
Mr. Félix MARTÍNEZ-ESPINO O.
Mr. Lorenzo Adolfo RAGGIO.
INTERNATIONAL ALLIANCE OF WOMEN
Miss Marie GINSBERG.
Mrs. Laurel CASINADER.
Mrs. Irmgard RIMONDINI-SCHNITTER.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR SOCIAL PROGRESS
Mr. Moïse BERENSTEIN.
Mr. A. HIRSCHFELD.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF CRAFTS AND SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED ENTERPRISES
Mr. J. J. DISERENS, Secretary-General.

INTERNATIONAL CONFEDERATION OF EXECUTIVE STAFFS
Mr. André FERRERO, Permanent Delegate accredited to the International Labour Office.
Mr. Angelo SENIN.
Mr. Giulio PRIULI.
Mr. R. GUILLOTIN.
Mr. Paul GREISCH.
Mr. Carlos SCHULZ-KNAPPE.
Mr. Mario TABARELLI.

INTERNATIONAL CONFEDERATION OF FREE TRADE UNIONS
Mr. Omer BECU, General Secretary.
Mr. Albert HHEYER, Director, Geneva Office.
Mr. Enzo FRISO, Representative in Beirut.
Mr. M. PAVÓN, Secretariat, Inter-American Regional Organisation of Workers of the I.C.F.T.U.
Miss Marcelle DEHARENG, Brussels Office.
Mr. Heribert MAIER, Geneva Office.
Mr. Jean VANDERVEKEN, Brussels Office.
Mr. Borek ZOFKA, Liaison Officer in Geneva.
Mr. H. LUANDE, President, Uganda Trades Union Congress; Chairman, African Regional Organisation of the I.C.F.T.U.
Mr. Esone N’DONG, General Secretary, National Confederation of Gabonese Workers.

INTERNATIONAL CONFEDERATION OF SENIOR OFFICIALS
Mr. Roland PULVEREL.
Mr. Marcel Robert COBS.
Mr. Ange PAOLINI.
Mr. Robert A. STEIMER.

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE ALLIANCE
Mr. W. G. ALEXANDER, Director.
Mr. W. P. WATKINS.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF COMMERCE EMPLOYEES
Mr. Paul HARRIS, President, Denmark.
Mr. Gunnar NORDHOLM, Honorary President, Sweden.

Mr. Walter PFUND, Vice-President, Switzerland.
Mr. Victor VILNER, General Secretary, Denmark.
Mr. Joseph de BONNAFOS, General Director, France.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF NURSES
Miss Sheila M. QUINN.
Miss Mary E. PATTEN.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC WOMEN
Miss Rita de BRUYN OUBOTER, Chairman.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN
Miss Anna H. B. van der ENT, Vice-Convenor, Standing Committee on Trades and Professions.
Mrs. G. MEYER.
Miss Louise van EEGHEN.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS
Mr. R. D. HEWLETT, Co-operation Officer.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF CHEMICAL AND GENERAL WORKERS' UNIONS
Mr. Charles LEVINSON, Secretary-General.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF CHRISTIAN TRADE UNIONS
Mr. Auguste VANISTENDAEL, General Secretary.
Mr. Willem KREEFTMEIJER, Deputy General Secretary.
Mr. Georges EGERMANN, Permanent Representative in Geneva.
Miss S. MASSELANG, Secretary, International Council of Women Workers of I.F.C.T.U.
Miss J. LAOT, Member, International Council of Women Workers of I.F.C.T.U.
Mr. Ivan POPOVICH, General Secretary, F.T.C.R.E.
Mr. Necker DUBBABLES, Studies and Documentation Service.
Mr. René SALANNE, International Department of the C.F.D.T.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF CHRISTIAN TRADE UNIONS OF SALARIED EMPLOYEES, TECHNICIANS, MANAGERIAL STAFF AND COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS
Miss M. H. PIRARD.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF COMMERCIAL, CLERICAL AND TECHNICAL EMPLOYEES
Mr. Erich KISSEL, General Secretary.
Mr. Charles GREY, Assistant to the General Secretary.
Mr. F. SCHMID.
INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF PLANTATION, AGRICULTURAL AND ALLIED WORKERS
Mr. Tom S. BAVIN, Secretary-General.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN
Mrs. Connie JONES.
Mrs. WOLFF.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION
OF WOMEN IN THE LEGAL PROFESSION
Mrs. Yvonne TOLMAN-GUILLARD, Member of the Paris Bar; President.
Mrs. Jacqueline FISCHER, Member of the Council.

INTERNATIONAL METALWORKERS’ FEDERATION
Mr. Adolphe GRAEDEL.
Mr. Daniel BENEDICT.
Mr. Alfred DANNENBERG.

INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATION OF EMPLOYERS
Mr. Raphael LAGASSE, Secretary-General.
Mr. William DUDLEY-MARTIN.
Mr. Jean-Jacques OECHSLIN.
Mr. Federico GARCÍA MARTÍNEZ.
Miss Ethel GROFFIER.

INTERNATIONAL SOCIAL SECURITY ASSOCIATION
Mr. Renand BARDE, Association of Occupational Equalisation Funds.
Mr. W. DOBBERNACK.

INTERNATIONAL UNION
OF FAMILY ORGANISATIONS
Mrs. Jeanne LAURENT, President, Leagues of Christian Working Women, Belgium.
Miss Colette TAISNE, President, French Leagues.
Mr. Joseph REY, Chairman, Swiss Committee.

INTERNATIONAL UNION
OF FOOD
AND ALLIED WORKERS’ ASSOCIATIONS
Mr. Juul POULSEN, Secretary-General.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION
Mr. James DOUGLAS, Assistant Secretary-General.

MINERS’ INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION
Mr. Manfred SCHNEIDER.

OPEN DOOR INTERNATIONAL
Mrs. Ina MÖLLER, President.
Mrs. Gertrude BÆR, Vice-President; Permanent Representative in Geneva.
Mrs. Amy FLEMING, Vice-President.
Mrs. Anne ODEGAARD, Treasurer.
Mrs. Adèle HAUWEL, Secretary-General.
Miss Lilian THOMAS, Member of the Board.

ORGANISATION OF EMPLOYERS’ FEDERATIONS AND EMPLOYERS IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES
Mr. E. M. HYDE-CLARKE, C.B.E., Director.
Mr. H. E. DALTON, Assistant Director.
Mr. D. CORNOCK-TAYLOR (U.A.C.)
Mr. R. A. J. DAMRELL (C.D.C.).
Mr. J. LEE (Shell).
Mr. D. B. COLLETT (Dunlop).
Mr. D. J. FLUNDER (Dunlop).
Mr. J. H. G. STOCKLEY (Dunlop).
Mr. P. L. HEIN (Mauritius).
Mr. S. R. CHALONER.
Mr. A. ALTOUNIAN (I.P.C.).

PAN-AMERICAN CONFEDERATION OF COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS
Mr. Marcos ALMOZNY, President.
Mr. Benito R. BRUZZONE.

PUBLIC SERVICES INTERNATIONAL
Mrs. Margarete PECHACEK, Women’s Representative.
Mr. Cyril PLANT.

WOMEN’S INTERNATIONAL DEMOCRATIC FEDERATION
Miss Betty HARRISON.
Mr. Michel MARCO.

WOMEN’S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE
FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM
Mrs. Gertrude BÆR, International Representative to the United Nations, the I.L.O., and F.A.O. in Rome.

WORLD FEDERATION OF TRADE UNIONS
Mr. Louis SAILLANT, General Secretary.
Mrs. Stana DRAGOI, Secretary.
Mr. Gioacchino GIUSIO, General Secretary, Trade Unions International of Agricultural, Forestry And Plantation Workers (Trade Secretariat of W.F.T.U.).
Mr. Giuseppe BOGLIETTI, Permanent Represent­
tive.
Mr. Jan KABOUREK, Economic and Social Service.

WORLD O.R.T. UNION
Mr. Daniel MAYER, former Minister; Chairman of the Executive Committee.
Mr. Max A. BRAUDE, Director-General.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY FOR LABOUR LAW AND SOCIAL LEGISLATION
Mr. Alexandre BERENSTEIN, Secretary-General.

INTERNATIONAL UNION FOR CHILD WELFARE
Miss Colette JACOT.

WORLD ALLIANCE OF YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS
Mr. Maher DOSS.
Mr. John H. DUNDERDALE.

WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS
Mr. Gerhart M. RIEGNER, Director for Coordination.
Mr. André JABES.

Registered Observers of Non-Governmental Organisations

CATHOLIC INTERNATIONAL UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE
Miss Marie-Madeleine BRAZZOLA.
Mr. Carlos VELA MONSALVE, Professor.

COMMISSION OF THE CHURCHES ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS
Mr. Elfan REES, Representative in Europe.

CO-ORDINATING BOARD OF JEWISH ORGANISATIONS
Mr. G. WARBURG, United Nations Non-Governmental Organisation Representative in Geneva.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN
Miss Marie Th. C. van der ENT, Chairman, Employment Conditions Committee; First Vice-President, Dutch Federation.
Miss Andrée TRAVELLETTI.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN LAWYERS
Lady Gladys M. CHATTERJEE, O.B.E., Liaison Representative to the I.L.O.
Miss Evelyn E. WEST.

INTERNATIONAL SECRETARIAT OF CATHOLIC TECHNOLERTISTS, AGRICULTURALISTS AND ECONOMISTS
Mr. Thaddée SZMITKOWSKI, Secretary-General, Information Centre of O.I.C.
Mr. Louis LÈVEQUE, Graduate Engineer.

Secretariat of Delegations

CANADA
Secretariat to the Government Delegation
Mr. Félix QUINET, Labour-Management Division, Department of Labour; Administrative Secretary.
Miss A. O'TOOLE, Annuities Branch, Department of Labour; Assistant Secretary.

CHINA
Secretary to the Government Delegation
Mr. LEE Yen, Third Secretary, Permanent Mission of the Republic of China to the European Office of the United Nations and other international organisations.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA
Interpreter to the Delegation
Mrs. Galina HOLÍNKOVÁ.

DENMARK
Interpreter to the Workers' Delegation
Mr. Peer CARLSEN, International Adviser, National Confederation of Danish Trade Unions.

FRANCE
Secretariat to the Government Delegation
Mr. Guy GOMAS, Chief of Secretariat.
Miss Georgette SARLES, Secretary.

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY
Secretariat to the Delegation
Mrs. Ingo GRABMANN, Interpreter, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.
Mrs. Irene HEGENER, Interpreter, Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mrs. Hildegard KNOCKE, Secretary, German Confederation of Employers' Associations.

Mrs. Hannelore KOPPE, Certified Translator, German Confederation of Employers' Associations.

Mr. Harald SIMON, Interpreter, Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mrs. Elisbeth KIRSCHFINK, Secretary, Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mrs. Gerda OCHS, Secretary, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Mrs. Brigitte OBST, Secretary, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Mrs. Elisabeth KIBSCHFINK, Secretary, Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mrs. Elsbeth KIBSCHFINK, Secretary, Executive Board, German Confederation of Trade Unions (D.G.B.).

Mrs. Gerda OCHS, Secretary, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

Mrs. Brigitte OBST, Secretary, Federal Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs.

GREECE

Interpreter to the Workers' Delegation
Miss Helen PETRIDOU.

IRAN

Secretariat to the Workers' Delegation
Miss Nouchine A. ZANGANEH, Secretary.
Mr. Farrokh A. ZANGANEH, Interpreter.

IRELAND

Secretary to the Government Delegation
Mr. Brendan O'GORMAN, Higher Executive Officer, Department of Industry and Commerce.

ITALY

Secretariat to the Delegation
Mr. Piero ASLAN, Permanent Mission of Italy to the international organisations in Geneva.
Mr. Ruggiero SCIARETTA, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

JAPAN

Secretary to the Employers' Delegation
Mr. M. GOTO, Correspondent in Europe, Japan Federation of Employers' Associations.

Interpreters to the Workers' Delegation
Miss Ayako KOBAYASHI.
Mrs. Yuriko OGASAWARA.
Mr. Y. TAKAGI.

LIBYA

Secretary to the Government Delegation
Mr. Nasser BURUIN.

NIGERIA

Secretary to the Government Delegation
Mr. J. I. O. BOSEH, Senior Labour Officer, Federal Ministry of Labour.

PORTUGAL

Secretariat to the Delegation
Mr. Luis Nuno da VEIGA de MENESES CORDEIRO, Consul; Secretary to the Delegation.
Mr. Carlos ISIDRO.

SWEDEN

Secretary to the Government Delegation
Mrs. Karin WICKSTRÖM, Principal, Ministry of Health and Social Affairs.

Secretaries to the Employers' Delegation
Mr. Åke CARLHAMMAR, Swedish Employers' Confederation.
Mrs. Stina DALI, Swedhis Employers' Confederation.

Interpreter to the Workers' Delegation
Mr. Urs HAUSER, Secretary, Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions.

SWITZERLAND

Secretary to the Delegation
Mr. Charles SCHLUCHTER, Assistant, Federal Office of Industry, Arts and Crafts, and Labour.

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Secretary to the Government Delegation
Miss Cynthia BISHOP.

UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

Secretariat to the Government Delegation
Mrs. M. V. VOLYNKINA.
Mrs. V. E. TROFIMOVA.

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

Secretariat to the Delegation
Miss Winifred Evelyn COOMBES, Executive Officer, Ministry of Labour; Secretary to the Delegation.
Miss F. A. ANDREWS.
Miss A. M. MATTHEWS.

Secretary to the Employers' Delegation
Miss P. I. VINALL.

Secretary to the Workers' Delegation
Mr. H. A. DUNNING.

UNITED STATES

Secretary to the Delegation
Mr. Theodore SELLIN, Office of International Conferences, Department of State.

YUGOSLAVIA

Interpreter to the Delegation
Miss Lijana TAMBAČA.
Officers of the Conference

President
Mr. S. Hashim RAZA, Government delegate (Pakistan).

Vice-Presidents
Mr. Anatolii Emelyanovich GURINOVICE, Government delegate (Byelorussia).
Mr. Daniel ANDRIANTSITOHAINA, Employers' delegate (Malagasy Republic).
Mr. Alfonso SÁNCHEZ MADARIAGA, Workers' delegate (Mexico).

Secretary-General
Mr. David A. MORSE, Director-General of the International Labour Office.

Officers of the Groups

Government Group
Chairman: Mr. ØKSNES (Norway).
Vice-Chairmen: Mr. KEKE (Chad), Mr. MEKIS (Hungary).
Secretary: Mr. UDOMPONG (Thailand).

Employers' Group
Chairman: Mr. WALINE (France).
Vice-Chairmen: Mr. GHAYOUR (Iran), Mr. MARTÍNEZ-ESPÍNO O. (Venezuela), Mr. RIFAAT (United Arab Republic), Mr. WAGNER (United States).
Secretary: Mr. LAGASSE (International Organisation of Employers).

Workers' Group
Chairman: Mr. MÖRÉ (Switzerland).
Vice-Chairmen: Mr. HERNANDEZ (Philippines), Mr. SISSOKO (Mali).

Members of the Bureau:
Mr. ABID ALI (India), Mr. BEERMAN (Federal Republic of Germany), Mr. BORHA (Nigeria), Mr. BOULADOUX (France), Lord COLLISON (United Kingdom), Mr. ben EZZEDDINE (Tunisia), Mr. FAUPI (United States), Mr. KAPLANSKY (Canada).
Secretary: Mr. HEYER (International Confederation of Free Trade Unions).

Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office
Mr. George V. HAYTHORNE, Deputy Minister of Labour; Representative of the Government of Canada on the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

Secretariat of the Conference

Secretary-General:
Mr. David A. MORSE.

Personal Assistant to the Secretary-General:
Miss G. G. MEIER.

Assistants to the Secretary-General:
Mr. W. FURTH, Mr. C. BARBEAU, Mr. C. A. L. von KNORRING, Mr. P. T. COX.

Secretaries:
Mrs. M. von HOLZEN, Mrs. E. MULLHAUPT, Mrs. F. ARRIGHI.

Principal Deputy Secretary-General:
Mr. Jef RENS.

Assistants to the Principal Deputy Secretary-General:
Mr. J. BUSTAMANTE, Mr. D. BUTTOLPH.

Secretaries:
Miss M. CHUARD, Miss M. J. MÉTRAL.

Deputy Secretaries-General:
Mr. C. W. JENKS.

Secretaries:
Mrs. H. GIDDY, Miss E. CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. Abbas AMMAR.

Secretaries:
Miss R. DUTOIT, Miss J. McLACHLAN.

Technical Advisers:
Mr. A. FLORES, Mr. A. GUIGUI, Mr. R. M. LYMAN.

Assistant Secretaries-General:
Mr. W. YALDEN-THOMSON.

Secretary:
Miss M. ADAMSON.

Mr. F. BLANCHARD.

Secretary:
Miss Y. VERCHÈRE.

Technical Adviser:
Mr. T. K. DJANGO.

Secretary:
Miss P. PAGE.

Mrs. A. FIGUEROA.

Secretary:
Mrs. M. MARTENOT.

Mr. E. J. RICHES.

Secretary:
Mrs. N. LUBRANO DI SCAMPAMORTE.

Mr. H. MAJID.

Secretary:
Miss M. STAAL.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Legal Adviser:
Mr. F. WOLF.

Secretary:
Mrs. C. ROULET.

Special Advisers to the Secretary-General:
Mr. P. D. ORLOV.

Secretaries:
Mrs. I. SERBINOFF.
Mrs. T. KROUDYMCHIEF.
Mr. A. ZELENKA.

Secretary:
Miss O. E. BOWEN.

Assistant to the President of the Conference:
Mr. M. B. ALI KHAN.

Secretary:
Miss J. R. ALDRIDGE.

Chief of the Secretariat Services:
Mr. E. GAVIN.

Deputy Chief of the Secretariat Services:
Mr. P. BOULAS.

Assisted by:
Mr. H. R. HAMMOND.
Mr. R. A. CUNIN.

Secretariat:
Mrs. O. GONNET.
Mrs. J. HEER.
Miss M. McQUEEN.
Mr. E. POLLÁN.

Protocol Officer:
Mr. A. LAGNADO.

Secretary:
Miss M. C. SÉGURET.

Clerk of the Conference:
Mr. C. J. HISLAIER.

Assistant Clerks:
Mr. E. COSTA.
Miss S. BENAZERAF.

Secretary:
Miss I. MIRAGAYA.

Translators:
Mr. J. VICHNIAC.
Mr. E. KHIJNYI.
Mr. D. NEKIPELOV.
Mr. F. PLAVEO.

Public Information Service:
Chief of Service:
Mr. S. HERRICK.

Mr. M. CARRICHE.
Mr. A. LANG.
Mr. P. G. DAVID.
Mr. Y. ALI.
Mr. D. EGLI.
Mr. C. N. FERNANU.
Mr. C. de HOYOS.
Mr. P. SUTCLIFFE.

Secretariat:
Mrs. C. PASSET.
Mr. G. ZOCHER.
Mr. S. BALMER.
Mrs. J. SUMMERSET.
Miss I. SCHMIDT.
Miss N. J. FORMOSA.
Mr. R. ESCUDERO.
Mrs. S. BARDET.
Mr. J. P. CALAME.
Mrs. M. MATHEZ.
Mr. A. DJOKITCH.
Mr. H. BANCROFT.
Mr. D. BLOCH.

Liaison with Delegations:
Chief of Service:
Mr. R. A. METALL.

Mr. J. AYUSAWA.
Mr. C. BOKONGA.
Mr. M. CHÁVEZ-SOSA.
Mr. L. N. EZEWUZIE.
Miss A. FIDLER.
Father J. M. JOBLIN.
Mr. M. O'CALLAGHAN.
Mr. M. PARANHOS da SILVA.
Mr. A. SALAH-BEY.
Mr. G. BANAIVOARIVONY.

Secretary:
Mrs. M. SEMANAZ.

Liaison with International Organisations:
Mr. A. CRESPO.

Liaison with Non-Governmental Organisations:
Mr. J. BRODIER.
Father J. M. JOBLIN.

Secretaries:
Mrs. J. URBERN.
Miss W. A. MITCHELL.

Relations with Workers' Delegates:
Chief of Service:
Mr. E. BELL.

Mr. T. J. GRINEVALD.
Mr. J. ESPINOSA.
Mr. A. C. GHATAK.
Mr. B. KOMBA KONO.

Secretaries:
Mrs. J. BROGGINI.
Mrs. B. PEART.

Relations with Employers' Delegates:
Chief of Service:
Mr. C. von STE DingK.

Mr. T. ANDO.
Mr. J. B. FIGUEIREDO.

Secretaries:
Miss E. BODE.
Mrs. J. BUTSCHI.

Conventions Information Unit:
Mr. E. LANDY.
Mr. M. NASHAT.

Secretary:
Mrs. O. SAYOUR.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Turin Centre Information Unit:
- Mr. P. Bacon
- Mr. H. de Bivort

Secretary:
- Miss E. Cabossel

International Institute for Labour Studies:
- Mr. R. W. Cox
- Mr. A. Ali

Workers’ Education Unit:
- Mr. P. Chu
- Mr. J. J. Pavée

Representatives of the Secretary-General and Secretariat of Committees

Selection Committee:
- Representative of the Secretary-General: Mr. C. W. Jenks
- Assisted by: Mr. C. Matthews

Secretaries:
- Mr. C. Hennis
- Mr. G. Cotté
- Mr. D. R. Salomón de la Jara

Clerk:
- Mrs. J. C. Ryan

Credentials Committee:
- Representative of the Secretary-General: Mr. P. Wolf

Secretaries:
- Mr. B. Knapp
- Mr. A. Gladstone
- Mr. A. Venturelli
- Mr. C. A. L. von Knorrning

Clerk:
- Mrs. M. Daubau

Drafting Committee of the Conference:
- Representative of the Secretary-General: Mr. C. W. Jenks

Secretaries:
- Miss F. Morgenstern
- Mr. P. Correa
- Mr. V. Ayissi

Clerk:
- Mrs. A. Ayusawa

Resolutions Committee:
- Representative of the Secretary-General: Mr. C. W. Jenks

Assisted by:
- Mr. P. P. Fano

Secretaries:
- Mr. J. Lemoine
- Mr. A. Losada
- Mr. H. C. Carnegie
- Mr. R. Caldwell
- Mr. F. Ballesteros
- Miss N. Saad
- Mr. B. P. Shvetsov

Clerks:
- Mr. H. Leuba
- Miss P. Clarke

Finance Committee of Government Representatives:
- Representative of the Secretary-General: Mr. E. J. Riches

Assisted by:
- Mr. P. M. C. Denby

Secretaries:
- Mr. J. Strawson
- Mr. J. Pallud
- Mr. J. Herrera

Clerk:
- Miss J. Pearson

Committee on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations:
- Representative of the Secretary-General: Mr. N. Valticos

Assisted by:
- Mr. E. Landy

Expert:
- Mr. K. Samson

Secretaries:
- Mr. M. Araoz
- Mr. J. Bowen
- Mr. D. Rykov
- Mrs. I. Costa
- Mrs. A. Gorski
- Mr. C. Rossillion
- Mr. J. Rud
- Mr. A. Torres-Abreu
- Mrs. M. Vardopoulos
- Mr. W. H. Winchester

Clerks:
- Mrs. F. Linard
- Mrs. R. Donat
- Mr. J. P. Gentet

Committee on Employment of Young Miners:
- Representative of the Secretary-General: Mr. A. A. Evans

Assisted by:
- Dr. A. Annoni

Secretaries:
- Miss M. Jaccard
- Mr. E. Esteve
- Mr. H. N. Schwarz

Reserve team:
- Miss M. Russell
- Mr. M. Basly
- Mr. J. Fernández Buján
- Miss Favrod

Clerk:
- Miss B. Peck

Committee on Women Workers:
- Representative of the Secretary-General: Mrs. E. Johnstone

Assisted by:
- Mrs. A. Béguin

Secretaries:
- Mr. A. Watson
- Mrs. M. Janjic
- Mr. E. Delgado Solís
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Reserve team:
- Mr. S. RABEVARIELO
- Mr. T. M. BARINAGA

Clerk:
- Mrs. P. LÓPEZ-WALDEIS

Committee on Agrarian Reform:
Representative of the Secretary-General:
- Mr. D. L. W. ANKER
Assisted by:
- Mr. J. H. FAUCHON
Secretaries:
- Mr. R. POUPART
- Mr. L. J. YOUNG
- Mr. L. de la PLAZA
- Mr. J. NEZADOROV

Reserve team:
- Mr. L. RICHTER
- Mr. A. RAHAL
- Mr. J. FERNÁNDEZ-BUJÁN

Clerk:
- Mrs. J. BERGER

Committee on Co-operatives:
Representative of the Secretary-General:
- Mr. J. ORIZET
Assisted by:
- Mr. V. RATNAVALE
Secretaries:
- Mr. J. LESCOUFLAIE
- Mrs. E. J. MENZEL
- Mr. T. SOREL
- Mr. H. SHABANOVA

Reserve team:
- Mr. H. WATZLAWICK
- Mr. P. GUIQUEMDE
- Mr. J. ALCOCER-MUÑOZ

Clerk:
- Mrs. F. DESBIOLLES

Additional Reserve Committee Secretaries:
English:
- Mr. V. CHULITSKY

French:
- Miss J. O. GRANDJEAN

Spanish:
- Mr. J. M. VILLANUEVA

Reserve Committee Clerk:
- Miss M. LLOYD

INTERPRETATION SERVICE

Chief of Service:
- Mrs. L. KERR

English:
- Miss M. BANERJI
- Miss E. B. BEDNAIREK
- Miss P. BUCKLEY
- Mrs. B. COHEN
- Mrs. N. DARGEL
- Mrs. I. DHAMI
- Mr. F. J. DITTRICH
- Miss M. GIRL
- Mr. N. de GRE
- Mrs. E. HEATHCOTE
- Miss R. JOHNSON
- Miss E. KATZ-SUCHY
- Mrs. I. LANA
- Mr. R. McLEOD
- Mr. J. MOWAT
- Mr. R. W. ROOME
- Miss I. SAKOV
- Mrs. C. TOLNAY
- Mr. G. VASSILIOHKO
- Mr. D. WALTERS
- Mr. N. WITTER

French:
- Mr. C. AMAKIER
- Mrs. J. BERGER
- Mrs. A. CHAVES
- Miss M. J. COMTAT
- Mr. G. DUNAND
- Miss C. ERBISCHOF
- Mrs. M. FERRARIO
- Miss G. GAUDENZ
- Miss F. GLOBA
- Miss M. GRAVELAINE
- Mrs. H. de GRE
- Miss Z. HOFF
- Mr. B. de KELLER
- Miss A. M. KOCH
- Mr. L. KOUIN
- Miss I. LUSTENIK
- Mrs. E. MEISTER
- Mr. G. PUYSÉGUR
- Mrs. L. ROULET
- Mrs. G. TALL
- Mrs. F. TOUBKICE

Spanish:
- Mr. E. AGUIRE
- Mrs. D. BUNESCO
- Miss A. M. CARNER
- Mr. S. CHAVES
- Mr. J. COCO-FERRARIS
- Mr. C. DELPIERRE
- Miss A. M. FERNÁNDEZ-GER
- Mr. E. FORCADA
- Mrs. M. GARGALLO
- Mrs. A. KUBALA
- Miss C. LIQU
- Mr. L. de LOS COBOS
- Mrs. J. LUBSTER
- Mr. J. A. OTERO
- Mrs. A. M. PATTEET
- Miss M. PINTO
- Miss L. BEBEAUD
- Mrs. M. de REYHER
- Mr. A. SIFRE
- Mr. C. VALENZUELA
- Miss E. WOLFOWICZ

German:
- Miss A. M. AEBI
- Miss C. ALDER
- Mr. H. BAIER
- Miss H. BEHLEN
- Miss K. BENCHELT
- Mr. G. BERGER
- Mr. N. BERGER
- Miss B. BILGERI
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Position</th>
<th>Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. E. EBERLEIN-WILLETT</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. H. EBERSTARK</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. R. HEIZENBERG</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miss G. G. HOHENEMSER</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. I. E. KUBALA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. W. LONGERICH</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. E. W. LONGET</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. A. MARKESIS</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. N. NEHERM</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. E. NEUENSCHWANDER</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. A. SPIEG</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miss I. STRUDEMAH</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. W. WEBER</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Russian:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. A. ANDREYEV</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. I. ASTROW</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. N. BALLY</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. N. BEVD</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. N. HEMHEN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. M. IRMAN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. I. KOBSAKOFF</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miss K. LEIBOVITCH</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. N. MAGLIETTA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miss N. MARSHAN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. A. MELLER</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. E. NUROK</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. R. de REYHER</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miss M. SAFYURTLU</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. M. SAMARINE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miss E. SHAFFIRO</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. A. STARK-POOL</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miss T. STRACHINSKA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. N. SVILATOPOLIC-MIRSKY</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. A. TADEVOSSIAN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miss M. VORONINE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Secretariat:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ms. M. N. TAVELLI</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrs. J. BROOKE-ROSE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Conference Record and Publications Services

Representative of the Secretary-General:
Mr. P. D. ORLOV.

Chief of the Services:
Mr. M. M. CHAPMAN.

Assisted by: Mr. J. OŠUINA.

Administrative Assistant:
Miss R. MIRAGAYA.

Secretaries:
Miss G. KLEIN.
Miss T. SCHWYZGUÉBEL.
Mr. J. M. EREBINA.

English Edition:
Mr. C. F. FAHY.
Miss I. HOLMES.
Mr. H. S. JONES.
Mrs. M. NORSKY.

French Edition:
Mr. B. SPY.
Mrs. J. GLÈMET.
Mr. G. KARCHER.
Mr. F. MORET.

Spanish Edition:
Mr. L. MONTANYA ANGELETT.
Mr. L. ONTIVEROS.
Mr. H. RODRÍGUEZ.
Miss M. R. RODRÍGUEZ-SAUS.

Printing Service:
Mr. F. RICHARDSON.

Assisted by:
Mr. A. VEITCH.
Mr. J. BACHELET.
Mr. F. LORENZO.
Mr. M. MATEO PÉREZ.
Mr. S. A. NORRIS.
Mr. S. ORIZA.
Mr. S. G. THOMPSON.
Mr. R. WANNAZ.

Publications Service:
Mr. J. SCHUL.

Clerk:
Miss S. CRAGGS.

Sales Service:
Miss E. RUDICS.
Mr. M. SULMONI.

Personnel Services

Chief of the Services:
Mr. G. KOULISCHER.

Assisted by:
Mr. L. G. V. HYDE.

Financial Services

Chief of the Services:
Mr. P. M. C. DENBY.
Mr. R. FUSS.

Assisted by:
Mr. P. DEBRAY.
Mr. R. FRIEDRIC.

Administrative Services

Chief of the Services:
Mr. P. OBEZ.

Information and Reception Desk

Chief of the Services:
Mrs. R. BINGGELI.

Assisted by:
Miss B. LEWIS.
Miss V. DAVIES.
Mrs. N. COSSY.
Mr. R. G. GUYE.
Miss C. HAAS.
Miss C. LOSADA.
Miss M. L. OŠUINA.
Mr. G. PAPAZAFIPOULOS.
Mr. R. PÉRAY.

Distribution Service

Chief of the Service:
Mr. M. LAVERRIÈRE.

Assisted by:
Mr. C. BERNHARD.
Mr. A. MOTTIER.
Mr. A. ZAHND.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Internal Administration:
Mr. A. COHEN.
Assisted by:
Mr. R. BARTOLO.
Secretary:
Mrs. G. POUGNIER.

Messenger and Doorkeeper Service:
Mr. G. FAURE.
Assisted by:
Mr. P. BURNIER.
Mr. G. COUPY.

Director-General's Office:
Mr. R. ARMFIELD.
Mr. A. GUY.

Stationery:
Mr. R. FRITZ.

Stenographic Service:
Chief of the Service:
Miss E. DALY.
Secretaries:
Miss M. von BODENHAUSEN.
Miss E. HANNEMANN.
Clerk:
Mr. P. AESCHMANN.

Supervisors:
Mrs. A. LAVAL.
Miss J. PALACIOS.
Mr. A. SEUM.

Verbatim Reporters:
English:
Miss A. FRASER.
Miss E. FRASER.
Mrs. S. ITALICI.
Mrs. M. THOMPSON.
Miss E. TYNAN.
Mrs. I. E. VIDEAN.

French:
Miss L. BOULAZ.
Miss M. CREIN.
Miss Y. DECHAVANNE.
Miss A. GILLOT.
Mrs. D. LAPALME.
Miss S. PANNE.
Miss M. PESTEL.
Miss H. SONGEON.

Spanish:
Mr. G. BOLADO.
Miss B. CARRANZA.
Mr. F. J. DíAZ NÚÑEZ.
Mr. F. LANGA.
Mr. V. LASTANAO.
Mr. E. MARTIN.
Mr. B. MAYOR.
Mr. J. M. RAMOS.
Assisted by:
Miss O. CACHELIN.

Duplicating Service:
Chief of the Service:
Mrs. D. BAUMGARTNER.

Assisted by:
Mrs. I. HIRIGOYEN.
Mr. J. NER.
Mr. G. PAPANASTASSIOU.
Mrs. E. VASSEUR.

Selection Committee

Government Members

Algeria: Mr. BOUCHOUK.
Australia: Mr. COOK; substitute: Mr. HILL.
Brazil: Mr. CARVALHO COELHO; substitute: Mr. TENÓRIO MACHADO.
Bulgaria: Mr. TZANKOV; substitute: Mr. COHEN.
Canada: Mr. HAYTHORNE.
China: Mr. LIU; substitutes: Mr. COHEN, Mr. HUANG.
Ecuador: Mr. JARAMILLO PÉREZ; substitutes: Mr. PONCE y CARBO, Mr. POVEDA.
France: Mr. PARODI; substitute: Mr. HAUCK.
Gabon: Mr. ADESSOLO; substitute: Mr. REKANGALT.
Federal Republic of Germany: Mr. CLAUSSEN; substitutes: Mr. ERNST, Mr. THOMAS.
India: Mr. MENON; substitute: Mr. PURUSHOTTAM.
Italy: Mr. AGO; substitutes: Mr. PURPUR

EMPLOYERS' MEMBERS

Mr. BERGENSTRÖM (Sweden).
Mr. ERDMANN (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mr. GHAYOUR (Iran).
Mr. GHALI (Tunisia).
Mr. GONZALEZ BLANCO (Brazil).
Mr. MARTÍNEZ-ESPINO (Venezuela).
Mr. MISHIRO (Japan).
Sir George POLLOCK (United Kingdom).
Mr. RIFAAT (United Arab Republic).
Mr. WAGNER (United States).
Mr. WAJID ALI (Pakistan).
Mr. WALINE (France).
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Deputy Members
Mr. CAMPANELLA (Italy).
Mr. CHINAI (India).
Mr. DONAYEE BAEEIOS (Peru).
Mr. FENNEMA (Netherlands).
Mr. GEOEGET (Niger).
Mr. GIBSON (Australia).
Mr. HALLSWOETH (Canada).
Mr. KOCATOPÇU (Turkey).
Mr. EECALDE (Argentina).
Mr. EICHMOND (Kenya).
Mr. VEESCHUEEN (Belgium).
Mr. WALKEB (Uganda).

WORKERS' MEMBERS
Mr. ABID ALI (India).
Mr. BEEMANN (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mr. BOEHA (Nigeria).
Mr. BOULADOUX (France).
Lord COLLISON (United Kingdom).
Mr. ben EZZEDINE (Tunisia).
Mr. FAUPL (United States).
Mr. HEENANDEZ (Philippines).
Mr. KAPLANSKY (Canada).
Mr. MÖEI (Switzerland).
Mr. SÁNCHEZ MADAEIAGA (Mexico).
Mr. SISSOKO (Mali).

Deputy Members
Mr. COOL (Belgium).
Mr. GONZÁLEZ NAVARRO (Venezuela).
Mr. JONES (United Kingdom).
Mr. KANE (Mauritania).
Mrs. WEBEE (Austria).

CHAIRMAN
Mr. MENON.

VICE-CHAIRMEN
Mr. BERGENSTRÖM.
Lord COLLISON.

Credentials Committee

GOVERNMENT MEMBER
Mr. ZANETTI (Switzerland).

EMPLOYERS' MEMBER
Mr. POULSEN (Denmark).

WORKERS' MEMBER
Mr. BOLIN (Sweden).

CHAIRMAN
Mr. ZANETTI.

Resolutions Committee

GOVERNMENT MEMBERS
Afghanistan : Mr. ZAKARYA.
Algeria : Mr. BOUCHOUK; substitute : Mr. LARBI.
Argentia : Mr. FERNÁNDEZ PASTOR.
Australia : Mr. COOK; substitute : Mr. HILL.
Belgium : Mr. SCHYNs; substitute : Mr. HOULLEZ.
Brazil : Mr. PIMENTEL.
Bulgaria : Mr. POPOV.
Byelorussia : Mr. GURINOVICH; substitute : Mr. SHELDOV.
Cameroon : Mr. FOKAM KAMGA.
Canada : Mr. MAINWARING; substitutes : Mr. RAE, Mr. MARSHALL.
Central African Republic : Mr. WALLOT.
Chad : Mr. KEKE.
China : Mr. LIU.
Colombia : Mr. ARANGO.
Cuba : Mr. CALCINES GORDILLO; substitute : Mr. CAMEJO ARGUDÍN.
Czechooslovakia : Mr. PISCA.
Denmark : Mr. COLN.
France : Mr. PARODI; substitutes : Mr. HAUCK, Mr. DELAMOTTE.
Gabon : Mr. ABESSOLO.
Federal Republic of Germany : Mr. ERNST.
Ghana : Mr. AKWEI.
Hungary : Mr. SOMOS; substitute : Mr. DÉNYI.
India : Mr. MENON; substitute : Mr. PURUSHOTTAM.
Iran : Mr. AZIMI.
Iraq : Mr. HANI.
Israel : Mr. RAYAD.
Italy : Mr. AGO; substitutes : Mr. PURPURA, Mr. PERAZZO, Mr. AUTIS.
Ivory Coast :
Japan : Mr. KUDO; substitute : Mr. HIRONAGA.
Kuwait : Mr. MADKOUR.
Liberia : Mr. WILSON.
Libya : Mr. EL MARIAMI; substitute : Mr. DERBI.
Malaysia : Mr. KUMAR.
Mali : Mr. O. B. DIARRA.
Mexico : Mr. BRAVO CARO.
Morocco : Mr. BENNIS; substitute : Mr. GOUERJA.
New Zealand : Mr. THORP.
Niger : Mr. KONE.
Nigeria : Mr. TOKUNBOH.
Norway : Mr. HELDAL.
Pakistan : Mr. LATIF KHAN.
Panama : Mr. PAREDES.
Peru : Mr. LETTS SÁNCHEZ.
Poland : Mr. CHAJN; substitute : Mr. TURBANSKI.
Portugal : Mr. FERNANDES; substitute : Mr. CORTEZ PINTO.
Rumania : Mr. COVACI.
Somalia : Mr. SIMON.
Spain : Mr. GIMÉNEZ-ARNAU y GRAN; substitutes : Mr. CEBRAZOLA ASENJO, Mr. CÁRDENAS RODRÍGUEZ, Mr. ESTERAN VARGAS, Mr. MARAVALL CASESNOVES.
Sudan : Mr. SIGHAIROUN.
Sweden : Mr. LAGERGREEN.
Switzerland : Mr. SAXER.
Syrian Arab Republic : Mr. CHAHOUN.
Tanzania : Mr. MPOJNI.
Trinidad and Tobago :
Tunisia : Mr. ETTRI.
Turkey : Mr. ALAÇAM.
Ukraine: Mr. MAKHINYA; substitute: Mr. BATYUK.

U.S.S.R.: Mr. SHKUNAEV; substitute: Mr. POZHARSKY.

United Arab Republic: Mr. KAMEL; substitute: Mr. AYOTIB.

United Kingdom: Mr. HERON; substitute: Mr. SCOTT.

United States: Mr. DELANEY; substitute: Mr. PEESONS.

Uruguay: Mrs. BIDART de LÓPEZ.

Venezuela: Mr. TAEAE MUEZI; substitute: Mr. HEBNÁNDEZ.

Yemen: Mr. TAECICI.

Yugoslavia: Mr. POPOVIC; substitute: Mr. ILCIĆ.

Zambia: Mr. KALANGA.

Deputy Members

Costa Bica: Mr. BANNEEMAN-MENSON; substitute: Mr. BOATENG (Ghana).

Ethiopia: Mr. CHENG; substitute: Mr. NASE (Lebanon).

Lebanon: Mr. ABID ALI (India).

Togo: Mr. ALBEDA (Netherlands).
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Delegation Leader</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Afghanistan</td>
<td>Mr. BOUDJAKDIJI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Algeria</td>
<td>Mr. BOUTEAN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Argentina</td>
<td>Mr. CÁMPOEA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Australia</td>
<td>Mr. HILL</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austria</td>
<td>Mr. KRENN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belgium</td>
<td>Mr. SCHYNES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazil</td>
<td>Mr. SILVEIRA da MOTA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bulgaria</td>
<td>Mr. TZANKOV</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burma</td>
<td>Byelorussia : Mr. BORSCHCHEVSKY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cameroon</td>
<td>Mr. NZO-EKHAH-NHAKY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canada</td>
<td>Mr. MARSHALL</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Central African Republic</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ceylon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chad</td>
<td>Mr. KEKE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chile</td>
<td>Mr. CONTRERAS TAPIA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>China</td>
<td>Mr. LEE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colombia</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congo (Brazzaville)</td>
<td>Mr. BETOU</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congo (Leopoldville)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Costa Rica</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cuba</td>
<td>Mr. MULET DEL VALLE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cyprus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Czechoslovakia</td>
<td>Mr. PLEVA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dahomey</td>
<td>Mr. SAKA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Denmark</td>
<td>Mr. JUHL-CHRISTENSEN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ecuador</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ethiopia</td>
<td>Mr. TESEMMA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Finland</td>
<td>Mr. RINNE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>Mr. HAUCK</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gabon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Federal Republic of Germany</td>
<td>Mr. THOMAS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ghana</td>
<td>Mr. AYEH, Mr. AKWEI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greece</td>
<td>Mr. ZARRAS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guatemala</td>
<td>Mr. DUPONT-WILLEMIN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guinea</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Honduras</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hungary</td>
<td>Mr. BÉNYI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>India</td>
<td>Mr. PURUSHOTTAM</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iran</td>
<td>Mr. AZIMI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iraq</td>
<td>Mr. AL-QARAGHOULI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ireland</td>
<td>Mr. O'GORMAN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Israel</td>
<td>Mr. MESSER</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Italy</td>
<td>Mr. PERAZZO</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chairman and Reporter
Mr. AGUILAR MAWDSLEY.

Vice-Chairmen
Mr. VERSCHUEREN,
Mr. KAPLANSKY.

Finance Committee of Government Representatives

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Delegation Leader</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Afghanistan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Algeria</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Argentina</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Australia</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austria</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belgium</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazil</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bulgaria</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burma</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Byelorussia</td>
<td>Mr. BORSCHCHEVSKY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cameroon</td>
<td>Mr. NZO-EKHAH-NHAKY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canada</td>
<td>Mr. MARSHALL</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Central African Republic</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chile</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>China</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colombia</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congo (Brazzaville)</td>
<td>Mr. BETOU</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congo (Leopoldville)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Costa Rica</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cuba</td>
<td>Mr. MULET DEL VALLE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cyprus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Czechoslovakia</td>
<td>Mr. PLEVA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dahomey</td>
<td>Mr. SAKA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Denmark</td>
<td>Mr. JUHL-CHRISTENSEN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ecuador</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ethiopia</td>
<td>Mr. TESEMMA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Finland</td>
<td>Mr. RINNE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>Mr. HAUCK</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gabon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Federal Republic of Germany</td>
<td>Mr. THOMAS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ghana</td>
<td>Mr. AYEH, Mr. AKWEI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greece</td>
<td>Mr. ZARRAS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guatemala</td>
<td>Mr. DUPONT-WILLEMIN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guinea</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Honduras</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hungary</td>
<td>Mr. BÉNYI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>India</td>
<td>Mr. PURUSHOTTAM</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iran</td>
<td>Mr. AZIMI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iraq</td>
<td>Mr. AL-QARAGHOULI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ireland</td>
<td>Mr. O'GORMAN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Israel</td>
<td>Mr. MESSER</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Italy</td>
<td>Mr. PERAZZO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ivory Coast</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jamaica</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Japan</td>
<td>Mr. TAKASHIMA, Mr. HIRONAGA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jordan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kenya</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kuwait</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lebanon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liberia</td>
<td>Mr. WILSON</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Libya</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luxembourg</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malagasy Republic</td>
<td>Mr. RANJEVA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malawi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malaysia</td>
<td>Mr. WONG</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mali</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maldives</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mauritania</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mexico</td>
<td>Mr. BRAVO CARO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morocco</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Netherlands</td>
<td>Mr. PELLENOHOF, Miss LUN-SINGH MEIJER</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New Zealand</td>
<td>Mr. PARSONAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicaragua</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Niger</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nigeria</td>
<td>Mr. OBIOGUN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Norway</td>
<td>Mr. OKSNEES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pakistan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panama</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peru</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippines</td>
<td>Miss REYES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poland</td>
<td>Mr. TURBAŃSKI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Portugal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rumania</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rwanda</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>El Salvador</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Senegal</td>
<td>Mr. SIDIBÉ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sierra Leone</td>
<td>Mr. DAVIES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Somalia</td>
<td>Mr. SIMON</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spain</td>
<td>Mr. VILLEGAS y URZÁIZ, Mr. FERNÁNDEZ de CORDOVA y MORENO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sudan</td>
<td>Mr. AHMED</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sweden</td>
<td>Mr. BENGTSSON</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Switzerland</td>
<td>Mr. SAXER</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Syrian Arab Republic</td>
<td>Mr. CHAHoud</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tanzania</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thailand</td>
<td>Mr. ASHAKUL</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Togo</td>
<td>Mr. TOGBE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trinidad and Tobago</td>
<td>Mr. WALLACE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tunisia</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uganda</td>
<td>Mr. OWOR</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ukraine</td>
<td>Mr. KHLCHEVSKY, Mr. BUTOVSKY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U.S.S.R.</td>
<td>Mr. POZHARSKY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Arab Republic</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Kingdom</td>
<td>Mr. HERON, Mr. SLINGER</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States</td>
<td>Mr. PERSONS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Upper Volta</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uruguay</td>
<td>Mr. MAGARIÑOS de MELLO, Mrs. BIDART de LÓPEZ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Venezuela</td>
<td>Mr. SOSA RODRÍGUEZ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Viet-Nam</td>
<td>Mr. NGUYÊN-Thoai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yemen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yugoslavia</td>
<td>Mr. ILLIC, Mr. VIDAS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zambia</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chairman and Reporter
Mr. TESEMMA.

Vice-Chairman
Mr. HILL.
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Government Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Representative</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Algeria</td>
<td>Mr. BOUHARA</td>
<td>Mr. AÏT AMAR</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Australia</td>
<td>Mr. DESMOND</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belgium</td>
<td>Mr. DENYS</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazil</td>
<td>Mr. PIMENTEL</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bulgaria</td>
<td>Mr. COHEN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Byelorussia</td>
<td>Mr. PESHKOV</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cameroon</td>
<td>Mr. CONNIÈRE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canada</td>
<td>Miss WOOLNER</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congo (Brazzaville)</td>
<td>Mr. NOTE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congo (Leopoldville)</td>
<td>Mr. MWALU</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cuba</td>
<td>Mr. MULET DEL VALLE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Czechoslovakia</td>
<td>Mr. DOSTÁL</td>
<td>Mr. PECHÁČEK</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ethiopia</td>
<td>Mr. BEKELE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Finland</td>
<td>Mr. LAPPALAINEN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>Mr. RAMOND</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gabon</td>
<td>Mr. REKANGALT</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Federal Republic of Germany</td>
<td>Mr. THOMAS</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ghana</td>
<td>Mr. AYEH</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greece</td>
<td>Mr. FLOKOS</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hungary</td>
<td>Mr. WELTNER</td>
<td>Mrs. KONRÁD, Mr. SOMOS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iran</td>
<td>Mr. KARY</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iraq</td>
<td>Mr. AL-DAFFAI</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Israel</td>
<td>Mr. HARNIV</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Italy</td>
<td>Mr. PERAZZO</td>
<td>Mr. FORLENZA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jamaica</td>
<td>Mr. GRELL</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kenya</td>
<td>Mr. OBIMBO</td>
<td>Mr. NDISI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liberia</td>
<td>Mr. NELSON</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mali</td>
<td>Mr. M. DIARRA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malta</td>
<td>Mr. ROSSIGNAUD</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mauritania</td>
<td>Mr. SOUSSEIHAMED</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mexico</td>
<td>Mr. BLANCO MELO</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morocco</td>
<td>Mr. GOURJA</td>
<td>Mr. BENNIS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nigeria</td>
<td>Mr. MAIBE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panama</td>
<td>Mr. AMADO BURGOS</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippines</td>
<td>Mr. ALBANO PACIS</td>
<td>Miss REYES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poland</td>
<td>Mr. LICKI</td>
<td>Mr. TURBAŃSKI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Portugal</td>
<td>Mr. RIBEIRO da CUNHA</td>
<td>Mr. COSTA MORAIS, Mr. CÁMARA de CARVALHO DAUN e LORENA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romania</td>
<td>Mr. ALEXE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rwanda</td>
<td>Mr. NTAWIHA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Senegal</td>
<td>Mr. DIOPF</td>
<td>Mr. BA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sierra Leone</td>
<td>Mr. DAVIES</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spain</td>
<td>Mr. de CÁRDENAS RODRÍGUEZ</td>
<td>Mr. MARAVALL CASENOVES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sudan</td>
<td>Mr. EL-SAWAHLI</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sweden</td>
<td>Mr. LINDBERG</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Switzerland</td>
<td>Mr. SCHLUCHTER</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Syrian Arab Republic</td>
<td>Mr. CHAHOUS</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trinidad and Tobago</td>
<td>Mr. RAMCHAND</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uganda</td>
<td>Mr. NYAGAHIMA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ukraine</td>
<td>Mr. BATYUK</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>U.S.S.R.</td>
<td>Mr. IVANOV</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Arab Republic</td>
<td>Mr. KAMEL</td>
<td>Mr. AYOUB</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Employers' Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Representative</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Central African Republic</td>
<td>Mr. W. WALLOT</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chile</td>
<td>Mr. T. THAYER</td>
<td>Mr. BUSQUET IRIBARRA, Mr. CONTRERAS TAPIA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dahomey</td>
<td>Mr. SAKA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guinea</td>
<td>Mr. FOUAD</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ivory Coast</td>
<td>Mr. KOFFI KOUASSI</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Japan</td>
<td>Mr. NAKAMURA</td>
<td>Mr. KITO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kuwait</td>
<td>Mr. AL-BIKAI</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luxembourg</td>
<td>Mr. EWEN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malaysia</td>
<td>Mr. NADESAN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicaragua</td>
<td>Mr. TIJERINO MEDRANO</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Niger</td>
<td>Mr. KONE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peru</td>
<td>Mr. SAMAMÉ PACHECO</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td>Mr. ÜNAL</td>
<td>Mr. SARI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zambia</td>
<td>Mr. KALANGA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Observers

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Representative</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>British Guiana</td>
<td>Mr. MERRIMAN</td>
<td>Mr. TAHARALLY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mauritius</td>
<td>Mr. RAMASAWMY</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Deputy Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Representative</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United Kingdom</td>
<td>Mr. W. WAKE</td>
<td>Miss SOLESBY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States</td>
<td>Mr. L. LIPPE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Upper Volta</td>
<td>Mr. B. BALMA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Venezuela</td>
<td>Mr. PÉREZ CHIRIBOGA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yugoslavia</td>
<td>Mrs. RADIČANIN</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Employers' Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Representative</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mr. BERGENSTRÖM</td>
<td>Mr. FORSTADIUS, Mr. SANDELL, Mr. GERHARDSSON (Sweden)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. CAMPANELLA</td>
<td>Mr. CHERCONI, Mr. BOCARDI, Mr. TOSTI (Italy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. CANNING-COKE</td>
<td>Mr. BUSTORFF SILVA (Portugal)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. ERMANN</td>
<td>Mr. SCHLOTFELDT, Mr. LÖW (Federal Republic of Germany)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. GHAYOUR</td>
<td>Mr. ARFAZANGANEH, Mr. FARSHI, Mr. FARBÖOD (Iran)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. KUNTSCHEN</td>
<td>Mr. DUC, Mr. MÜLLER (Switzerland)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. MORALES</td>
<td>Mr. BUSTORFF SILVA (Portugal)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. PLECHÁČ (Czechoslovakia)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. POLYAKOV</td>
<td>Mr. PLETNEV (U.S.S.R.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. RICHMOND</td>
<td>Mr. OFSTAD (Norway)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. TUCKER</td>
<td>Mr. LUXFORD (New Zealand)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. WAGNER</td>
<td>Mr. FOGARTY (United States)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Deputy Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Representative</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mr. DONAYRE BARRIOS</td>
<td>Mr. GALDOS TANGUIS (Peru)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. GEORGET</td>
<td>Mr. LOVINA</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. RECALDE</td>
<td>Mr. BARTOMEO (Argentina)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. SAUVENIER</td>
<td>Mr. SEPUŁEDA LATAPIAT (Chile)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. WALLIE</td>
<td>Mr. SANTIGNY, Mr. MERMILLO, Mr. LEBLANC (France)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Workers' Members</td>
<td>Employers' Members</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. AL-DABBAS (Iraq)</td>
<td>Mr. ABBE; substitute: Mr. KEYLOCK (Nigeria)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. ADBERS (Netherlands)</td>
<td>Mr. BERGENSTRÖM; substitutes: Mr. GERSHWICH, Mr. SANDELL, Mr. STRÅNGH, Mr. FORSTAD (Sweden)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. ANGELEI (Argentina)</td>
<td>Mr. CAMPANELLA; substitutes: Mr. GIOVE, Mr. MISSERVILLE, Mr. CHERICONI (Italy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. ARAYA BERNAL (Panama)</td>
<td>Mr. GANNING-COOLE; substitute: Mr. RAY PHIRI (Zambia)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. BOESIGER (Switzerland)</td>
<td>Mr. KAPARTIS; substitute: Mr. PIERIDES (Cyprus)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. BOOKA (Congo (Leopoldville))</td>
<td>Mr. ERDMANN; substitutes: Mr. GOEBEL, Mr. HAMEPE (Federal Republic of Germany)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. COOL (Belgium)</td>
<td>Mr. FENNEMA; substitute: Mr. GROUENS (Netherlands)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. CRUZADO ZAVA (Peru)</td>
<td>Mr. GHAYOUR; substitutes: Mr. FARSHI, Mr. ARFAZANGAN (Iran)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. FREITES (Venezuela)</td>
<td>Mr. GIBSON; substitute: Mr. PRYKE (Australia)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. HALDEN (Norway)</td>
<td>Mr. HALLIWORTH; substitute: Mr. DESPRÉS (Canada)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. HEISE (Federal Republic of Germany)</td>
<td>Mr. KAZANTSEV (Belorussia)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. HICKAY (United States)</td>
<td>Mr. LOVINA; substitute: Mr. MACARANAS (Philippines)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. KEEEN-ZVI (Israel)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. LIUKKONEN (Finland)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. LOUTE (France)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. MENDOZA (Philippines)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. MIMOUNI (Algeria)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. O'HAGAN (United Kingdom)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. O'HAGAN (United Kingdom)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. O'HAGAN (United Kingdom)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. PALMER (Sierra Leone)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. SCHS (Austria)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. TANDAU (Tanzania)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. WAGNER (Brazil)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. WAGNER (Brazil)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. ZAIDI (Malaysia)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Deputy Members</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. BARADHI (Lebanon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. DARIAN (Lebanon)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. HERNÁNDEZ (Venezuela)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. KELLY (Jamaica)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. MARTUCCI (Italy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. MAZBI (Algeria)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. MAZULA (Portugal)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. PEDROSO DE LIMA (Portugal)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. ROCCHI (Italy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. SCHOCKEL (Luxembourg)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. VITOBIS (Greece)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. ZAIDI (Malaysia)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chairman</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. ALBANO PACIS</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. RICHMOND</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. COOL</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reporter</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. LAPPALAINEN</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Committee on Employment of Young Miners

Government Members

Afghanistan: Mr. RAIZAY.
Algeria: Mr. AIT AMAR.
Australia: Mr. ALLEN JONES.
Austria: Mr. PELZI; Mr. SCHLENBACHER.
Belgium: Mr. UYTDEHNHEOF; Mr. VAN MALDER.
Brazil: Mr. REGO MONTEIRO.
Cameroon: Mr. BOWEN.

Canada: Mr. SANDS.
Central African Republic:
France: Mr. DAMIAN.
Federal Republic of Germany: Mr. JUNG; substitute: Mr. SCHNASE.
Ghana: Mr. VANDERPIEY.
India: Mr. DUARA.
Iran: Mr. FARZANEH.
Italy: Mr. BESERO.
Japan: Mr. ADACHI.
Jordan: Mr. ABDUL-AZIZ.
Kuwait: Mr. IDRIS.
Luxembourg: Mr. SCHUSTER.
Netherlands: Mr. WESTEN; substitute: Mr. MARTENS.
New Zealand: Mr. MACAN.
Nigeria: Mr. TOKUNBOH; substitute: Mr. ONUOHA.
Norway: Mr. OTNAESS; substitute: Mr. UL-SAKER.
Poland: Mr. FRONCZAK.
Romania: Mr. ALEXE.
Sierra Leone:
Spain: Mr. ESTEBAN VARGAS.
Sweden: Mr. STARLAND.
Syrian Arab Republic:
Turkey: Mr. SARI.
U.S.S.R.: Mr. BORDADIN; substitute: Mrs. PILOVCHUK.
United Arab Republic: Mr. AYOB.
United Kingdom: Mr. DRAVER.
United States: Mr. GRANT.
Venezuela: Mr. SEQUERA YÉPEZ.

Deputy Members

Burma: Mr. KYI.
Chile: Mr. CONTRERAS TAPIA.
Congo (Leopoldville):
Hungary:
Iraq:
Morocco: Mr. GHOMARI.
Peru: Mr. PALMA COURREJOLLES.
Philippines:
Portugal: Mr. LUNA da COSTA LEAO.

Employers' Members

Mr. ABBE; substitute: Mr. KEYLOCK (Nigeria)
Mr. BERGENSTRÖM; substitutes: Mr. GERSHWICH, Mr. SANDELL, Mr. STRÅNGH, Mr. FORSTAD (Sweden)
Mr. CAMPANELLA; substitutes: Mr. GIOVE, Mr. MISSERVILLE, Mr. CHERICONI (Italy)
Mr. GANNING-COOLE; substitute: Mr. RAY PHIRI (Zambia)
Mr. KAPARTIS; substitute: Mr. PIERIDES (Cyprus)
Mr. ERDMANN; substitutes: Mr. GOEBEL, Mr. HAMEPE (Federal Republic of Germany)
Mr. FENNEMA; substitute: Mr. GROUENS (Netherlands)
Mr. GHAYOUR; substitutes: Mr. FARSHI, Mr. ARFAZANGAN (Iran)
Mr. GIBSON; substitute: Mr. PRYKE (Australia)
Mr. HALLIWORTH; substitute: Mr. DESPRÉS (Canada)
Mr. KAZANTSEV (Belorussia)
Mr. LOVINA; substitute: Mr. MACARANAS (Philippines)
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Member</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Austria</td>
<td>Mr. MAUTNER-MARKHOEFT</td>
<td>Mr. UZNER</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Japan</td>
<td>Mr. MISHIRO; substitute: Mr. UTNEB</td>
<td>Mr. TAWARA, Mr. KONDO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Japan</td>
<td>Mr. PADMORE; substitute: Mr. BENSON</td>
<td>Mr. OLTANU (Romania)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liberia</td>
<td>Mr. CARLTON</td>
<td>Mr. SELLAM-MESLEM (United Kingdom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berbe</td>
<td>Mr. VERSCHUEREN; substitutes: Mr. GILBERT, Mr. SLADDEN (Belgium)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>Mr. WALING; substitute: Mr. NEGRE (France)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iraq</td>
<td>Mr. AL-DABBAGH; substitutes: Mr. AL-FADHLI, Mr. AL-JUMAILI (Iraq)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luxembourg</td>
<td>Mr. HATOT; substitutes: Mr. BEISSEL, Mr. EOLINGEB (Luxembourg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gabon</td>
<td>Mr. KIEFFER (Gabon)</td>
<td>Mr. KEEFFER-BAH (Gabon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td>Mr. RECALDE; substitutes: Mr. TARTARA (Argentina)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States</td>
<td>Mr. WAGNER; substitute: Mr. DOHERTY (United States)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Deputy Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Member</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Iraq</td>
<td>Mr. AL-DABBAGH; substitutes: Mr. AL-FADHLI, Mr. AL-JUMAILI (Iraq)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luxembourg</td>
<td>Mr. HATOT; substitutes: Mr. BEISSEL, Mr. EOLINGEB (Luxembourg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gabon</td>
<td>Mr. KIEFFER (Gabon)</td>
<td>Mr. KEEFFER-BAH (Gabon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td>Mr. RECALDE; substitutes: Mr. TARTARA (Argentina)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States</td>
<td>Mr. WAGNER; substitute: Mr. DOHERTY (United States)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Workers' Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Member</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Iran</td>
<td>Mr. AKHAVANKALDAI (Iraq)</td>
<td>Mr. AL-ABDULLI, Mr. AL-FADLI (Iraq)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ghana</td>
<td>Mr. ATTITU (Ghana)</td>
<td>Mr. BOLDEIRA (United Arab Republic)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cuba</td>
<td>Mr. CARBONELL HORNITNER (Cuba)</td>
<td>Mr. CHUYEV (U.S.S.R.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greece</td>
<td>Mr. DESSEV (Bulgaria)</td>
<td>Mr. PASSBENDNER TEIXEIRA (Brazil)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Japan</td>
<td>Mr. HARAUCHI (Japan)</td>
<td>Mr. HERNÁNDEZ (Venezuela)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Kingdom</td>
<td>Mr. JONES; substitutes: Mr. LAATUNEN, Mr. VIHMA (Finland)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States</td>
<td>Mr. MCCARTIN; substitute: Mr. TARTARA (Argentina)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nigeria</td>
<td>Mr. OKEI-ACHAMBA (Nigeria)</td>
<td>Mr. POIDA (Ukraine)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippines</td>
<td>Mr. POLICARPIO (Philippines)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belgium</td>
<td>Mr. SAUVAGE (Belgium)</td>
<td>Mr. SENAN (Lebanon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Norway</td>
<td>Mr. STRAND (Norway)</td>
<td>Mr. WEISS (Luxembourg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canada</td>
<td>Mr. WALTER (Canada)</td>
<td>Mr. WEISE (Federal Republic of Germany)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Czechoslovakia</td>
<td>Mr. ZIKA (Czechoslovakia)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Deputy Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Member</th>
<th>Substitute</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lebanon</td>
<td>Mr. HOUMANI (Lebanon)</td>
<td>Mr. JUREK (Poland)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hungary</td>
<td>Mr. LAZÁR (Hungary)</td>
<td>Mr. LOTFIPOUR (Iran)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lebanon</td>
<td>Mr. MATAR (Lebanon)</td>
<td>Mr. del PINO (Venezuela)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>India</td>
<td>Mr. SINHA (India)</td>
<td>Mr. TEN (China)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tunisia</td>
<td>Mr. TILLI (Tunisia)</td>
<td>Mr. TUBOWSKI (Federal Republic of Germany)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chairman

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Member</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>Mr. TOKUNBOH</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vice-Chairmen

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Member</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>Mr. DESPRÉS.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>Mr. JONES.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Federal Republic of Germany</td>
<td>Mr. HELTZ.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Committee on Women Workers

Government Members

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Member</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Afghanistan</td>
<td>Mr. ZAKARYA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Algeria</td>
<td>Mrs. GHANI-GHARBI; substitute: Mrs. SELIAM-MESLEM</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Australia</td>
<td>Miss STEPHEN.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Austria</td>
<td>Mr. LENEBT.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belgium</td>
<td>Mr. VERHENNE; substitute: Mrs. COPÉE-GERBINET</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cameroon</td>
<td>Mrs. BOULOU; substitute: Mrs. GWANULA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canada</td>
<td>Miss ROYCE.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Central African Republic</td>
<td>Mrs. FRANCK.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chad</td>
<td>Mr. YAMSALA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>China</td>
<td>Mr. HU.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colombia</td>
<td>Mr. MUNGA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congo</td>
<td>Mr. MUNGA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cyprus</td>
<td>Mr. SPARIS.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Czechoslovakia</td>
<td>Mrs. BUCKOVÁ.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Denmark</td>
<td>Mrs. ANDERSEN.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ecuador</td>
<td>Mr. PENNANT.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Finland</td>
<td>Mrs. SUVIRANTA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>Miss PIGUET.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gabon</td>
<td>Mr. DENDÉ.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Federal Republic of Germany</td>
<td>Mrs. MORAWE.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ghana</td>
<td>Miss WOOD.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greece</td>
<td>Mr. CLADAS.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hungary</td>
<td>Mrs. KONRÁD.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iran</td>
<td>Mrs. KAZIMI.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iraq</td>
<td>Mrs. AFNAN.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ireland</td>
<td>Mr. TOBIN.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Italy</td>
<td>Mrs. GATTI CAPORASO.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Japan</td>
<td>Mrs. OBA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jordan</td>
<td>Mr. DIAB.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kenya</td>
<td>Mrs. MZERA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kuwait</td>
<td>Mr. AL-BIKAL.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lebanon</td>
<td>Mr. ABI RAAD.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Libya</td>
<td>Mrs. EL SADAMI.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luxembourg</td>
<td>Miss KOERER.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malaysia</td>
<td>Mr. NADESAN.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mali</td>
<td>Mauritania: Mr. SIDI MOHAMED DIAGANA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Netherlands</td>
<td>Miss WOLF.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New Zealand</td>
<td>Miss RICHES.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nigeria</td>
<td>Mrs. NELSON-COLE; substitute: Mrs. AGWUEGBORO.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Norway</td>
<td>Mrs. SEWERIN.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Panama</td>
<td>Mr. MARAVALL CASENOVES; substitute: Mrs. SAÉZ DE PARGA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poland</td>
<td>Mr. JAKUBOWICZ.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sierra Leone</td>
<td>Mr. WILLIAMS.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Somalia</td>
<td>Mr. GIAMA AHMED.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spain</td>
<td>Mr. MARAVALL CASENOVES; substitute: Mrs. SAÉZ DE PARGA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country</td>
<td>Representative</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------------------------</td>
<td>--------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sudan</td>
<td>Mrs. EL-BEDAWI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sweden</td>
<td>Mrs. JÖNSSON</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Switzerland</td>
<td>Miss ZIMMERMANN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Syrian Arab Republic</td>
<td>Mr. ZEIFFA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trinidad and Tobago</td>
<td>Mr. WALLACE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tunisia</td>
<td>Miss JEDIDI</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Arab Republic</td>
<td>Mrs. SMIRNOVA ; substitute : Mrs. IVANOVA.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Kingdom</td>
<td>Miss GREEN ; substitute : Mr. SLINGER.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States</td>
<td>Mrs. KEYSERLING</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uruguay</td>
<td>Mrs. BIDART de LÓPEZ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Venezuela</td>
<td>Mrs. NOUEL GÓMEZ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yugoslavia</td>
<td>Mrs. RADIČANIN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zambia</td>
<td>Mr. NYIRONGO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazil</td>
<td>Mr. NEMBRI de BRITO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congo (Brazzaville)</td>
<td>Cantante</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Costa Rica</td>
<td>Mr. DUARA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morocco</td>
<td>Mr. BOUMOUCH</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peru</td>
<td>Mr. AL-DABBAGH ; substitutes : Mr. AL-DHAHI, Mr. ISMAIL (Iraq).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippines</td>
<td>Mr. BUGAYONG</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Portugal</td>
<td>Miss FONSECA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rucanda</td>
<td>Tanzania</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thailand</td>
<td>Mr. ASPOUR ; substitute : Mr. SOUSSAH (Jordan).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uganda</td>
<td>Mr. BEKOMBO ; substitute : Mr. AGRABIWA (Cameroon).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Viet-Nam</td>
<td>Mr. RAJASURIYA (Ceylon).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. RECALDE ; substitute : Mr. ARAYA (Argentina).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. RIFAA ; substitute : Mr. ORPHY (United Arab Republic).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. WAGNER ; substitute : Mr. ANTON (United States).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. WALINE ; substitutes : Mr. MONSEMPES, Mr. SAINTIGNY (France).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazil</td>
<td>Mr. ABEBE ; substitute : Mrs. ASUNI (Nigeria).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. AL-DABBAGH ; substitutes : Mr. AL-DHAHI, Mr. ISMAIL (Iraq).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. ASPOUR ; substitute : Mr. SOUSSAH (Jordan).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. BEKOMBO ; substitute : Mr. AGRABIWI (Cameroon).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. BOGACKI (Poland).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. CAMANELLA ; substitutes : Mr. BORECARDO, Mr. TOSTI (Italy).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. CHARABAT (Syrian Arab Republic).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. CHEONG ; substitute : Mr. LIU (China).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. DIOP ; substitute : Mr. ANTOINE (Senegal).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. ERDMANN ; substitute : Mr. KELLER (Federal Republic of Germany).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. FENEMA ; substitute : Mr. SWAETTOUW (Netherlands).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. GHAYOUR ; substitutes : Mr. FARBOOD, Mr. SHAHEED-SALESS, Mr. FARSHI (Iran).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. GIBSON ; substitute : Mr. ANDERSON (Australia).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. GRABERTHS ; substitute : Mr. McCARTHY (Ireland).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. KUNTSCHE ; substitutes : Mr. MÜLLER, Mr. DUC (Switzerland).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. LUND ; substitute : Mr. TARP (Denmark).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MARQUES ANDRADE ; substitute : Mr. NOUGUEIRA MARTINS (Brazil).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MAUTNER-MARKHOF ; substitute : Mr. TUTSKHA (Austria).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MILIHI ; substitutes : Mr. LAATUNEN, Mr. RELANDER, Mr. VIHMA (Finland).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MISHIRO ; substitutes : Mr. OGAWA, Mr. KÔDO (Japan).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. NGUYEN-VAN-LAN ; substitutes : Mr. BÜKHAC-CHIEN, Mrs. NGUYEN-Thi-HAI (Viet-Nam).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mrs. PEEVA (Bulgaria).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. RAJASURIYA (Ceylon).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. RECALDE ; substitute : Mr. ARAYA (Argentina).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. RIFAA ; substitute : Mr. ORPHY (United Arab Republic).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. WAGNER ; substitute : Mr. ANTON (United States).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. WALINE ; substitutes : Mr. MONSEMPES, Mr. SAINTIGNY (France).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazil</td>
<td>Mr. ARIBARG (Thailand).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Miss CARLETTA (Panama).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. BERGENSTROM ; substitutes : Mr. SANDELL, Mr. STRANGH, Mr. GERSHADSON, Mr. FÖRDSTADIG (Sweden).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. GHALI ; substitute : Mr. SFAR (Tunisia).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. HALLSWORTH ; substitute : Mr. SCHMIDT (Canada).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. HAUSMAN (Israel).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. HAYOT ; substitutes : Mr. MULLER, Mr. PAULY (Luxembourg).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. KIEFFER (Gabon).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. LOTSU (Dahomey).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. LOVINT ; substitute : Mr. IMPERIAL (Philippines).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MARTÍNEZ-ESPINO ; substitutes : Mr. OYAHZABAL, MR. VIVAS BERTHER, MR. VILLALOBOS (Venezuela).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MORÁ SUAREZ (Costa Rica).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. NASR ; substitute : Mr. HABIB (Lebanon).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. George POLLOCK ; substitute : Miss MASTERSON (United Kingdom).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. SAMAROU (Togo).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. SELVIG ; substitutes : Mr. AARVIG, Mr. OFSTAD (Norway).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. TALABI COKER (Sierra Leone).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. TERRA ILARRAZ (Uruguay).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. VERSCHUREN ; substitutes : Mr. DE BRUYN, Mr. BERNARDET (Belgium).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazil</td>
<td>Mr. CALLUS (Malta).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. CÁLCHIO (Venezuela).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Miss CLARKE (Ghana).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mrs. DE FILLIPPI MORENO (Chile).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. DELANNE (Niger).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mrs. EKENDAH (Sweden).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Miss EL-DEMIRDAH MOHAMMED (United Arab Republic).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. FAYED (Lebanon).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. FLOREA (Romania).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. HAYES (Australia).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. HILL (New Zealand).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. HYPPOHNEN (Finland).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mrs. LAZAREVA (U.S.S.R.).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. LY (Senegal).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MACGOGAN (Ireland).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MARINHO (Brazil).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MARTUCCI (Italy).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MATTENJE (Malawi).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mrs. M'BEMBA (Congo (Brazzaville)).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. MERTENS (Belgium).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. NIELSEN (Denmark).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. NWOMI EBO (Nigeria).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Miss PLAMONDON (Canada).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mrs. PLANOJEVIC (Yugoslavia).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. REISER (United States).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mrs. RESTANO CASTRO (Cuba).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mr. SALAM (Togo).</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
List of Members of Delegations, etc.

Mr. SAEHAN (Iraq).
Mrs. SEDEÑO PUENTES (Spain).
Mr. SHIOJI (Japan).
Mrs. SIMHONI (Israel).
Mrs. SMIENOVA (Byelorussia).
Mr. STYLIANOU (Cyprus).
Miss TEGELAAE (Netherlands).
Mr. THEISEN (Luxembourg).
Mrs. TROISGKOS (France).
Miss VEITCH (United Kingdom).
Mrs. M. WEBER (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mrs. B. WEBEE (Austria).
Mrs. ZAUGG-ALT (Switzerland).

Deputy Members

Mr. AIMOTO (Japan).
Mr. BOULIN (Sweden).
Mr. BOUDALI (Tunisia).
Mrs. BYSTEDT (Sweden).
Mr. COPPIE fluori (Italy).
Miss DUPEYEON (France).
Miss EDWAED (Tanzania).
Mr. LOPES EIBEIEO (Portugal).
Mrs. B. WEBEE (Austria).
Miss LACHAINE (Canada).
Mr. LIUKKONEN (Finland).
Mr. LOH (China).
Mr. LOPES RIBEIRO (Portugal).
Mrs. MEYER-RIEKENBERG (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mr. NGOM (Cameroon).
Mr. OCA (Philippines).
Mrs. PEUVRIER (France).
Mr. RAHMAN (Liberia).
Mr. RAVEROSON (Madagascar).
Mr. SISSOKO (Mali).
Mr. SULTAN (Lebanon).
Mr. THONDAMAN (Ceylon).

CHAIRMAN

Mrs. GATTI CAPORASO.

VICE-CHAIRMEN

Mr. ANDERSON.
Mrs. R. WEBER.

REPORTER

Miss JEDIDI.

Committee on Agrarian Reform

GOVERNMENT MEMBERS

Algeria : Mr. BENAMARA.
Argentina : Mr. AIMENDARES.
Australia : Mr. FLEAY ; substitute : Mr. TO-BUNRUN.
Austria : Mr. ARTHOLD.
Belgium : Mr. DE SUTTER.
Brazil : Mr. PIMENTEL.
Bulgaria : Mr. KIREV.
Byelorussia : Mr. SHELDOV ; substitute : Mr. PESHKOV.
Cameroon : Mr. MAKIA.

Canada : Mr. ADAMS.
Central African Republic : Mr. WIRASINGHE.
Chile : Mr. BUSQUET IRIBARRA.
China : Mr. LEE.
Colombia : Mr. RANGANATHAN.
Costa Rica : Mr. GONZALEZ QUIROS.
Cuba : Mr. GONZALEZ NORIEGA.
Cyprus : Mr. PROTOPAPAS.
Czechoslovakia : Mr. EREMIAŠ.
Denmark : Mr. JUHL-CHRISTENSEN ; substitute : Mr. PEDERSEN.
Ecuador : Mr. JARAMILLO PÉREZ ; substitute : Mr. POVEDA.
Ethiopia : Mr. SELASSIE.
France : Mr. SERRAIN.
Federal Republic of Germany : Mr. ECHTE-HÜLTE.
Ghana : Mr. BROBBEY.
India : Mr. BHEEKHABHAI ; substitute : Mr. RANGANATHAN.
Iran : Mr. FAIKHONDEHPEY.
Iraq : Mr. ALSOUZ.
Ireland : Mr. O’GORMAN.
Italy : Mr. FILONZI ; substitute : Mr. FORLENZA.
Jamaica : Mr. GRELL.
Japan : Mr. OTSUBO ; substitute : Mr. HIROSE.
Kenya : Mr. OBIMBO.
Libya : Mr. MAHJUB.
Malagasy Republic : Mr. RANJEVA.
Malaysia : Mr. ABDUL RAHMAN.
Mexico : Mr. KUHNE.
Morocco : Mr. GHOMARI.
New Zealand : Mr. PARSONAGE.
Nigeria : Mr. FALODE.
Pakistan : Mr. MONTEZA.
Peru : Mr. CARRILLO SALINAS.
Philippines : Mr. TABIGNE.
Poland : Mr. CHAJN ; substitutes : Mr. SZABELEWSKI, Mr. FRONCZAR.
Portugal : Mr. CORTEZ PINTO ; substitute : Mr. ÁLVARES DUARTE MATIAS FERREIRA.
Romania : Mr. SANISLAV.
Senegal : Mr. BA.
Sierra Leone : Mr. DAVIES.
Somalia : Mr. HARGUI DEY SALMONTE ; substitute : Mr. ESTEBAN VARGAS.
Sudan : Mr. EL-ARAB YOUSIF.
Sweden : Mr. WALDAU ; substitute : Mr. LARS-SON.
Switzerland : Mr. POPP.
Syrian Arab Republic : Mr. PHARAON.
Trinidad and Tobago : Mr. ALEXANDER ; substitute : Mr. RANCHAND.
Turkey : Mr. HARGUI DEY SALMONTE ; substitute : Mr. ESTEBAN VARGAS.
Ukraine : Mr. POLYANICHKO.
U.S.S.R. : Mr. CHEBEMUSHKIN.
United Arab Republic : Mr. AYOUN.
United Kingdom : Mr. FOGGON ; substitute : Miss SWAN.
United States : Mr. HILL.
Venezuela : Mr. BRUNI CELLI.
Yugoslavia : Mr. STIPETIĆ.
Deputy Members

Chad : Mr. YAMSALA.
Congo (Leopoldville) : Mr. MAKWAMBALA.
Guatemala : Mr. HERNÁNDEZ CARDONA.
Israel : Mr. BAVLY.
Jordan : Mr. DIAB.
Kuwait : Mr. YASSIN.
Lebanon : Mr. NELSON.
Mauritania : Mr. SOUEIDAHMED.
Nigeria : Mrs. SEWEBIIN.
Norway : Mr. PENNEMA.
Rwanda : Mr. TAHAEALLY.
Thailand : Mr. ASHAKUL.
Togo : Mr. CHAMBEES.
Uganda : Mr. CHINAI.
Uruguay : Mr. DONAYEE BAEEIOS.
Zambia : Mr. MAUTNEE-MABKHOF.

Observer

British Guiana : Mr. TAHAEALLY.

Employers' Members

Mr. AL-DABBACH ; substitute: Mr. NAZHAT (Iraq).
Mr. BARÓN LUPLAC (Honduras).
Mr. CAMPANELLA ; substitutes: Mr. MISSEERVILLE, Mr. MOCHI-ONOEI, Mr. GIOVE (Italy)
Mr. CHAMBERS (Jamaica).
Mr. CHINAI (India).
Mr. DEMBELE (Mali).
Mr. DONAYEE BARRIOS ; substitute: Mr. GALDÓS TANGÜIS (Peru).
Mr. ERDMANN ; substitute: Mr. SCHNIEDERS (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mr. FENNEMA ; substitute: Mr. VAANDRAGER (Netherlands).
Mr. GALDÓS GARCÍA ; substitute: Mr. LOZANO BERGUA (Spain).
Mr. GHALI ; substitute: Mr. LEATAIF (Tunisia).
Mr. HALLSWORTH ; substitute: Mr. LACH (Canada).
Mr. JONCKHEERE ; substitute: Mr. MASANGU (Congo (Leopoldville)).
Mr. KONIAN KODJO ; substitute: Mr. BASTID (Ivory Coast).
Mr. LOVINA ; substitute: Mr. GLORIA (Philippines).
Mr. MARTÍNEZ-ESPINO ; substitutes: Mr. VIVAS y BERTHIER, Mr. VILLÁLABOS, Mr. OYARZÁBAL (Spain).
Mr. MAUTNER-MARKHOF ; substitute: Mr. SCHUBERTH (Austria).
Mr. MORA LA CARRILLO (Costa Rica).
Mr. NELMS (Malawi).
Mr. NGUYÊN-Van-Lân ; substitute: Mr. BÛI-Khâc-Chiên, Mrs. NGUYÊN-Thi-Hai (Viet-Nam).
Mr. POLYAKOV ; substitute: Mr. USIKOV (U.S.S.R.).
Mr. RECALDE ; substitute: Mr. GELBARD (Argentina).
Mr. SEPLÍVE DA LATAPIAT (Chile).
Mr. UBAIDULLA ; substitute: Mr. THIO (Malaysia).
Mr. VERSCHUEREN ; substitutes: Mr. HIEMELEERS, Mr. SLADDEN (Belgium).
Mr. WAGNER ; substitute: Mr. NORRIS (United States).

Workers' Members

Mr. ALI (Pakistan).
Mr. BALOGUN (Ghana).
Mr. BEARD (United Kingdom).
Mr. BOUDAIF (Tunisia).
Mr. BRÉKI (Algeria).
Mr. COLEMAN (Australia).
Mr. COPPO (Italy).
Mr. CURVÁS (Colombia).
Mr. ĐEFREMENKO (Ukraine).
Mr. FUGARDO SÁNCHEZ (Spain).
Mr. GONZÁLEZ NAVARRO (Venezuela).
Mr. GOODLUCK (Nigeria).
Mr. GORALLAH (Chad).
Mr. HAIDEN (Austria).
Mr. IVANOV (Bulgaria).
Mr. KENFAOUI (Morocco).
Mr. KRUGLY (U.S.S.R.).
Mr. LAPPAS (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mr. LÓPEZ CHICHILLA (Costa Rica).
Mr. MACIELSEN (Belgium).
Mr. MACÍN (Mexico).
Mr. MOHERSON (Jamaica).
Mr. MONTEIRO MAURY (Portugal).
Mr. MUGALA (Zambia).
Mr. MUKHERJEE (India).
Mr. NILSSON (Finland).
Mr. POSPIESZYNSKI (Poland).
Mr. PRINCIPÉ (Brazil).
Mr. QUYÊN-Trân-Hûu (Viet-Nam).
Mr. RACCHINI (Argentina).
Mr. RAMOS ALVARADO (Honduras).
Mr. SENS (Netherlands).
Mr. SOLLÁ REAÑO (Perú).
Mr. SUTTON (Trinidad and Tobago).
Mr. TAN (Philippines).
Mr. TEKIE (Ethiopia).

Mr. ÁLVAREZ AVELLÁN (Spain).
Mr. AOUN (Lebanon).
Mr. BERKACHE (Algeria).
Mr. CARBONELL HORRUITNER (Cuba).
Lord COLLISON (United Kingdom).
Mr. DAYEH (Lebanon).
Mr. DESSEV (Bulgaria).
Mr. DUCHAMEL (France).
Mr. FEEBE ANGUIZOLA (Panama).
Mr. KOL JONEN (Finland).
Mr. ODHNEB (Sweden).
Mr. PAPAIOANNOU (Greece).
Mr. PIMENOV (U.S.S.R.).
Mr. PLOEG (Netherlands).
Mr. POIDA (Ukraine).
Mr. BOCCHI (Italy).
Mr. ben SEDDIK (Morocco).
Mr. VASILJEVIC (Yugoslavia).
Mr. ZIVANAS (Cyprus).
Mr. ZOSEL (United States).
Observer
Mr. WALCOTT (Barbados).
CHAIRMAN
Mr. ARMENDARES.
VICE-CHAIRMEN
Mr. SEPÚLVEDA LATAPIAT.
Mr. GONZÁLEZ NAVARRO.
REPORTER
Mr. PEDERSEN.

Committee on Co-operatives

GOVERNMENT MEMBERS

Algeria : Mr. LARBI ; substitute : Mr. BOUBDELLAH.
Argentina : Mr. BRAVO.
Australia : Mr. FLEAY ; substitute : Mr. TOBUNBUN.
Austria : Mr. SCHellenBACHER ; substitute : Mrs. CARMINE.
Belgium : Mr. DE WINTER.
Bulgaria : Mr. KIEF ; substitute : Mr. COHEN.
Byelorussia : Mr. BORSHECHEVSKY.
Cameroon : Mr. OBAM MFOOOU.
Canada : Mr. ARNASON.
Central African Republic : Ceylon : Mr. GUNASEKERA ; substitute : Mr. BELLIGAMANA.
Chad : Mr. NODJITIEL.
Chile : Mr. HUDORBO ; substitute : Mr. STEIN.
China : Mr. HUANG.
Costa Rica : Miss ODIO BENITO.
Cuba : Mr. ANTELO VILLANUEVA.
Cyprus : Mr. AZINAS ; substitute : Mr. PAPAIOANNOU.
Czechoslovakia : Mr. CAPEK.
Dahomey : Mr. LOTSU.
Denmark : Mr. PEDERSEN.
Ecuador : Mr. PONCE y CARBÓ.
Ethiopia : Mr. AMDEDE ; substitute : Mr. BEKELE.
Finland : Mr. LAAKKONEN.
France : Mr. ROSENTHAL ; substitutes : Mr. SERRAIN, Mr. MARCHEAL.
Gabon : Mr. MINTSA.
Federal Republic of Germany : Mr. ECHTERHÖLTZER.
Ghana : Mrs. GREEN STREET.
Greece : Mr. POLYCHRONIS.
Honduras : Mr. CRUZ TORRES.
India : Mr. RANGANATHAN.
Iran : Mr. ACHETI.
Iraq : Mr. AL WAKIL ; substitute : Mr. ALSOUZ.
Ireland : Mr. McCarthy ; substitute : Mr. O’GORMAN.
Israel : Mr. HARNIV ; substitute : Mr. BAVLY.
Italy : Mr. AGRO.
Japan : Mr. TAKIZAWA.
Kenya : Mr. AYUGI.
Kuwait : Mr. YASSIN.
Lebanon : Mr. WAHID ; substitute : Mr. LEGENISEL.
Liberia : Mr. FREEMAN.
Libya : Mr. MEIR.
Malagasy Republic : Mr. RAOLISON.
Malawi : Mr. MTHEGA.
Mali : Mr. BONNICI.
Morocco : Mr. BOUHMOUCH.
Netherlands : Mr. FRIETEMA.
Nigeria : Mr. EKUMANKAMA.
Norway : Mr. ULSAKER ; substitute : Miss BJORDAL.
Panama : Mr. MONTEZA ; substitute : Mr. PARDEED.
Peru : Mr. CUSIANOVICH VALDERRAMA ; substitutes : Mr. RODRIGUEZ VILDOSOLA, Mr. CARRILLO SALINAS.
Portugal : Mr. SERVULO CORREIA.
Romania : Mr. TABACARU ; substitute : Mr. COVACI.
Rwanda : Mr. UZAMUGURA.
Senegal : Mr. SIDDIBB.
Sierra Leone : Miss MOMOH ; substitute : Mr. WILLIAMS.
Somalia : Mr. GIAMA AHMED.
Spain : Mr. CERRAZOLA ASENJO ; substitute : Mr. NANG ONDO.
Sudan : Mr. AHMED.
Sweden : Mr. MATTHSSON.
Switzerland : Mr. BOSON.
Syrian Arab Republic : Mr. PHARAON.
Tanzania : Mr. MWANJIISI.
Thailand : Mr. UDOMPONG.
Togo : Mr. TOGBE.
Uganda : Mr. GODDA.
U.S.S.R. : Mr. KHORIN ; substitute : Mr. SMIRNOV.
United Arab Republic : Mr. NOUR.
United Kingdom : Mr. SURRIDGE.
United States : Mr. GOSS.
Upper Volta : Mr. THIOMBIANO.
Venezuela : Mr. MÁRQUEZ PÉREZ ; substitute : Mr. BRUNI CELLI.
Yugoslavia : Mr. PEROVIĆ ; substitute : Mr. STIPETIC.

Deputy Members

Burma : Mr. TIN.
Congo (Leopoldville) : Mr. HODY.
Jordan : Mr. ABDUL AZIZ.
Malaysia : Mr. WONG.
Philippines : Mr. BARRERA.
Turkey : Mr. SARI.
Uruguay : Mr. MAGARIÑOS de MELLO.
Zambia : Mr. NYIRONGO.

Observers
British Guiana : Mr. MERRIMAN.
Mauritius : Mr. JOMADAR.

EMPLOYERS' MEMBERS

Mr. AL-DABBAGH (Iraq).
Mr. ANGUELIS (Upper Volta).
Mr. ASFOUR; substitute: Mr. SOUSSAH (Jordan).
Mr. BANNERMAN-MENSON; substitute: Mr. BOATENG (Ghana).
Mr. BEKOMBO; substitute: Mr. AGBABIAKA (Cameroon).
Mr. BESONG; substitute: Mr. TGEMA (Cameroon).
Mr. BIERZANEK (Poland).
Mr. CHUA (Malaysia).
Mr. FIANDROLO (Malawi).
Mr. HACKSHAW (Trinidad and Tobago).
Mr. HARRADINE (Australia).
Mr. HILBERGER (Austria).
Mr. KOIKE (Tokyo).
Mr. MACHER (Switzerland).
Mr. MELERI (Italy).
Mr. MILLER (Canada).
Mr. MOODY (Malaysia).
Mr. PEREIRA MAGALDI (Brazil).
Mr. POULSEN (Netherlands).
Mr. SCHREIBER (Germany).
Mr. SHAGHATI (Iraq).
Mr. SINHA (India).

Mr. AL-TUWAINE (Kuwait).
Mr. BARDAS (Greece).
Mr. CAMPANELLA; substitutes: Mr. MALFET-TANI, Mr. MOCHI-ONORI (Italy).
Mr. CHENG; substitute: Mr. LIU (China).
Mr. DEMBELE (Mali).
Mr. FENNEMA; substitute: Mr. VAANDRAGER (Netherlands).
Mr. HAN (Burma).
Mr. HETZEL (Guinea).
Mr. KONTIAN KODJO; substitute: Mr. BASTID (Ivory Coast).
Mr. KUCHEROV (Ukraine).
Mr. LUND; substitute: Mr. TARP (Denmark).
Mr. MAAMARI; substitutes: Mr. BERNARDO (Portugal), Mr. MORA (Cuba).
Mr. NGUYEN VAN LAN; substitutes: Mr. BUI-Khanh-Chinh, Mrs. NGUYEN Thi Hai (Vietnam).
Mr. POLYAKOV; substitute: Mr. LOZA (U.S.S.R.).
Mr. RECALDE; substitute: Mr. BARTOMEO (Argentina).
Mr. ROJAS ROJAS (Venezuela).

Mr. ABEBE; substitute: Mr. OFURUM (Nigeria).
Mr. AL-TUWAINE (Kuwait).
Mr. BARDE (Ireland).
Mr. CAMPANELLA; substitutes: Mr. MALFET-TANI, Mr. MOCHI-ONORI (Italy).
Mr. CHENG; substitute: Mr. LIU (China).
Mr. DEMBELE (Mali).
Mr. FENNEMA; substitute: Mr. VAANDRAGER (Netherlands).
Mr. HAN (Burma).
Mr. HETZEL (Guinea).
Mr. KONTIAN KODJO; substitute: Mr. BASTID (Ivory Coast).
Mr. KUCHEROV (Ukraine).
Mr. LUND; substitute: Mr. TARP (Denmark).
Mr. MAAMARI; substitutes: Mr. BERNARDO (Portugal), Mr. MORA (Cuba).
Mr. NGUYEN VAN LAN; substitutes: Mr. BUI-Khanh-Chinh, Mrs. NGUYEN Thi Hai (Vietnam).
Mr. POLYAKOV; substitute: Mr. LOZA (U.S.S.R.).
Mr. RECALDE; substitute: Mr. BARTOMEO (Argentina).
Mr. ROJAS ROJAS (Venezuela).

Mr. ABEBE; substitute: Mr. OFURUM (Nigeria).
Mr. AL-TUWAINE (Kuwait).
Mr. BARDAS (Greece).
Mr. CAMPANELLA; substitutes: Mr. MALFET-TANI, Mr. MOCHI-ONORI (Italy).
Mr. CHENG; substitute: Mr. LIU (China).
Mr. DEMBELE (Mali).
Mr. FENNEMA; substitute: Mr. VAANDRAGER (Netherlands).
Mr. HAN (Burma).
Mr. HETZEL (Guinea).
Mr. KONTIAN KODJO; substitute: Mr. BASTID (Ivory Coast).
Mr. KUCHEROV (Ukraine).
Mr. LUND; substitute: Mr. TARP (Denmark).
Mr. MAAMARI; substitutes: Mr. BERNARDO (Portugal), Mr. MORA (Cuba).
Mr. NGUYEN VAN LAN; substitutes: Mr. BUI-Khanh-Chinh, Mrs. NGUYEN Thi Hai (Vietnam).
Mr. POLYAKOV; substitute: Mr. LOZA (U.S.S.R.).
Mr. RECALDE; substitute: Mr. BARTOMEO (Argentina).
Mr. ROJAS ROJAS (Venezuela).

Mr. ABEBE; substitute: Mr. OFURUM (Nigeria).
Mr. AL-TUWAINE (Kuwait).
Mr. BARDAS (Greece).
Mr. CAMPANELLA; substitutes: Mr. MALFET-TANI, Mr. MOCHI-ONORI (Italy).
Mr. CHENG; substitute: Mr. LIU (China).
Mr. DEMBELE (Mali).
Mr. FENNEMA; substitute: Mr. VAANDRAGER (Netherlands).
Mr. HAN (Burma).
Mr. HETZEL (Guinea).
Mr. KONTIAN KODJO; substitute: Mr. BASTID (Ivory Coast).
Mr. KUCHEROV (Ukraine).
Mr. LUND; substitute: Mr. TARP (Denmark).
Mr. MAAMARI; substitutes: Mr. BERNARDO (Portugal), Mr. MORA (Cuba).
Mr. NGUYEN VAN LAN; substitutes: Mr. BUI-Khanh-Chinh, Mrs. NGUYEN Thi Hai (Vietnam).
Mr. POLYAKOV; substitute: Mr. LOZA (U.S.S.R.).
Mr. RECALDE; substitute: Mr. BARTOMEO (Argentina).
Mr. ROJAS ROJAS (Venezuela).

Mr. ABEBE; substitute: Mr. OFURUM (Nigeria).
Mr. AL-TUWAINE (Kuwait).
Mr. BARDAS (Greece).
Mr. CAMPANELLA; substitutes: Mr. MALFET-TANI, Mr. MOCHI-ONORI (Italy).
Mr. CHENG; substitute: Mr. LIU (China).
Mr. DEMBELE (Mali).
Mr. FENNEMA; substitute: Mr. VAANDRAGER (Netherlands).
Mr. HAN (Burma).
Mr. HETZEL (Guinea).
Mr. KONTIAN KODJO; substitute: Mr. BASTID (Ivory Coast).
Mr. KUCHEROV (Ukraine).
Mr. LUND; substitute: Mr. TARP (Denmark).
Mr. MAAMARI; substitutes: Mr. BERNARDO (Portugal), Mr. MORA (Cuba).
Mr. NGUYEN VAN LAN; substitutes: Mr. BUI-Khanh-Chinh, Mrs. NGUYEN Thi Hai (Vietnam).
Mr. POLYAKOV; substitute: Mr. LOZA (U.S.S.R.).
Mr. RECALDE; substitute: Mr. BARTOMEO (Argentina).
Mr. ROJAS ROJAS (Venezuela).
Mr. SISSOKO (Mali).
Mr. SOLOMON (Ethiopia).
Mr. SOW (Senegal).
Mr. STANLEY (United States).
Mr. TABSHISH (Israel).
Mr. TLILI (Tunisia).
Mr. VASILEV (Yugoslavia).
Mr. ZAINATI (Lebanon).
Mr. ZIARTIDES (Cyprus).

Deputy Members
Mr. AMLON (Dahomey).
Mr. BEIKI (Algeria).
Mr. CAMACHO (Venezuela).
Mr. DESSEV (Bulgaria).
Mr. FAHEEM (United Arab Republic).
Mr. FIGUEIRAS (Uruguay).
Mr. GHODRATY (Iran).
Mr. GILBOA (Israel).
Mr. HTEIN (Burma).
Mr. IVANOV (Bulgaria).
Mr. KASSY (Ivory Coast).
Mr. KOUTOY (Lebanon).
Mrs. NORDHOLM (Norway).
Mr. PEDROSO de LIMA (Portugal).
Mr. PETER (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mr. RAFFO (Italy).

Mr. RAVEROSO (Malagasy Republic).
Mr. RAVIWONGSE (Thailand).
Mrs. RESTANO CASTRO (Cuba).
Mr. SHIOJI (Japan).
Mr. SUMBWE (Zambia).

Observers
Mr. POLLYDOR (British Guiana).
Mr. WACOTT (Barbados).

Chairman
Mr. WAHID.

Vice-Chairmen
Mr. RIFAAT.
Mr. KANE.

Drafting Committee
Mr. RAJA, President of the Conference.
Mr. MORSE, Secretary-General of the Conference.
Mr. JENKS, Deputy Secretary-General of the Conference.
Mr. WOLF, Legal Adviser of the Conference.
Mr. VALTICOS, Chief of the International Labour Standards Department of the International Labour Office.
SECOND PART
VERBATIM REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS
OPENING OF THE SESSION

Mr. HAYTHORNE (Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office)—It is with much pleasure that I declare open the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.

I should like to extend a warm welcome to the Ministers who are able to be with us and to all members of delegations. I should also like to welcome those who have come to participate in the opening of our Conference, in particular the representatives of the Swiss Confederation, the Canton and City of Geneva, the United Nations and the specialised agencies, as well as those who are here from other international organisations representing governments, employers, workers and others especially interested in labour and social problems.

May I express the hope that those of you who have attended earlier Conferences, as well as those of you who are here for the first time, will find your participation in this world assembly a stimulating and valuable experience.

Since we last met in this hall, four more States have joined the International Labour Organisation: Zambia, Malta, Malawi and Yemen. I should like to bid a special welcome to the delegations of these, our new Members. Your entry into the I.L.O. family brings our number of member countries to 114.

During the past year, as Chairman of the Governing Body, it has been my good fortune to come to know the I.L.O. more intimately than in the past. I have learned more of its problems, its working methods and its achievements. Although the problems facing our Organisation in today's world are very real, my conviction has been strengthened, over the year, of the great capacity and potential for constructive action that resides in the I.L.O. The work carried forward since it was created 46 years ago is a matter of record. But the past accomplishments of the I.L.O. are as nothing compared with what we can hope to achieve in the years to come, if we use wisely and the opportunities our Organisation effectively offers.

The world of 1965, with its far-reaching scientific and technical advancements and the surge of economic and social development accompanying the emergence of vigorous new national States, is a vastly different place from the world of 1919, when the International Labour Organisation was created.

Today the I.L.O. has a new role to play. It must seek to aid its many new, as well as its older, member countries in speeding up the process of economic growth. Some may say that this new direction of I.L.O. activity is in conflict with its long-developed work in promoting improved working and living standards. But in fact the I.L.O., through its tripartite structure, can bring to its task of helping in economic development, the experience it has gathered in the past half-century in improving working standards. Thus it can ensure that economic growth and full regard for the necessity of sharing in the fruits of such growth go hand-in-hand.

In other words, the I.L.O. in stressing the need for economic development does so because of the human consequences of such development, including the rights of workers, their protection, their welfare, and their fair rewards, as well as because of the key importance of the human contribution to such growth in the first place.

This new role for the I.L.O. is larger and more profound than anything our founding fathers dreamed of, and it means that the role of the I.L.O. needs to be redefined with greater precision—in relation to other international organisations concerned with economic and social development, in relation to regional bodies, in relation to bilateral programmes, and in relation to the needs and wishes of workers, employers and governments. We are still seeking the proper balance between the I.L.O.'s traditional activities and its new endeavours. Studies, research, pilot projects and evaluation are determining the types of operational programmes that can be most effective.

Two years ago, we in this Conference received a valuable and significant report from the Director-General of our International Labour Office which set forth the new challenges with which the I.L.O. is faced, and suggested ways of meeting these challenges. We then began our discussion on the I.L.O. programme and structure. We continued this discussion last year. A resolution was adopted asking the Governing Body to analyse the suggestions made in the debate, and to press forward with appropriate action.

During the past year this work has indeed moved forward. A Governing Body Working Party on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. has produced a first report, which will be before you for consideration during the discussion in the plenary session on the Director-General's Report. This first report seeks to clarify the programmes the I.L.O. should follow in the field of human resources. The Conference, I know, is deeply interested in this examination, as are the Governing Body and the Director-General, and I hope to have the opportunity to say more on this first report of the Working Party later in the week. A subsequent report will be devoted to other major I.L.O. programme areas. One of these is concerned with labour relations and social institutions. Another covers the more traditional I.L.O. field of conditions of work. Here it is necessary to evaluate past I.L.O. activities and generate more vigorous means of achieving such goals as shorter hours, safer working conditions and adequate social security.

Finally, the Working Party must consider the type of I.L.O. structure that will be most conducive to attaining the objectives of these major programmes.

An important event during the past year was the holding of the Second African Regional Conference in Addis Ababa, beginning on 30 November 1964. That Conference, which was well attended by governments, workers and employers from African countries, represented a serious attack on basic problems of economic and social development in Africa. In the discussions there was a strong emphasis on a united approach among the countries of this continent as it moves ahead vigorously with its economic and social development. His Imperial Majesty, Haile Sellassie I, set the tone of the Conference in a moving address. The I.L.O., he said, "can teach us that reason and responsibility are essential, and that irresponsible and arbitrary actions which ignore the legitimate interests of others are to be shunned".

In this same vein, we must surely continue to keep our focus on the basic human problems concerning mankind in the development of our economies and our world society. It is not our task here to air political considerations, no matter how important they may appear to each of us.

Those of you who were not privileged to be at the Conference in Addis Ababa may have learned that we did in fact manage to concentrate there on practical problems of immediate concern to our own Organisation and to the countries directly affected. I am sure this contributed greatly to the success of the Conference.

Members of this Conference will be pleased to learn that His Excellency, Getahun Tesemma, Minister of National Community Development of Ethiopia, who served with much ability and friendliness as President of our regional conference, is to be here at this Conference.

There has been a steady increase over the year in the number of ratifications of Conventions. The fact that many ratifications have been of Conventions dealing with discrimination and human rights will be particularly encouraging to members of the Conference.

Yet another step of potential importance during the past year is the decision taken as recently as last Saturday at our Governing Body to authorise the Director-General, just as soon as the Italian Government has ratified the proposal, to commence the new International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin. This could well become a milestone in the life of the International Labour Organisation. It is the hope of the Governing Body and, I am sure, of the Conference that the Centre will help in a practical way to meet the need faced in all countries in the world today for increased technical competence in our working force. Many governments, employers' and workers' groups, and other bodies, have already responded to the request for voluntary contributions to the support of this unique international centre, where much-needed instructor training will be carried out in those fields of training where the shortages are greatest. This assistance, and particularly that of the Government of Italy, is greatly appreciated. It is to be hoped that further voluntary contributions may be made to this imaginative new venture. They will not only provide tangible support to Mr. Paul Bacon, the Director, and to the members of his staff, but will also help to ensure that the Centre will make its maximum contribution in this highly important field of technical training.

At this present session of the International Labour Conference we have before us a number of specific tasks. First, we have the Director-General's Report. Part II of this Report outlines the work of the Organisation during the past year, while Part I sets forth for our consideration a further analysis of major I.L.O. programme areas. Your observations on Part I of the Report will be of particular interest and value to the Working Party on programme and structure to which I have already referred. Another report which the Director-General has laid before us is a study on apartheid as requested by last year's Conference.

We shall be considering the budget for the I.L.O. for 1966. For the first time this budget exceeds $20 million—a sum which, when coupled with the money the I.L.O. will have at its disposal from other United Nations sources and elsewhere, will bring its total annual expenditures to over $35 million.

We shall continue the work, begun last year, of drafting suitable international instruments on young workers in mining. We shall be reviewing again the way in which I.L.O. instruments are being applied by member countries. We shall expect to complete the discussion begun last year on the increasingly important role of women workers in a changing world.

At this session of the Conference we shall also be discussing two other subjects of wide interest to member countries: agrarian reform, viewed particularly from the standpoint of its employment and other social aspects; and the role of co-operatives, especially in developing countries. Both those subjects are important in economic development and hold out much promise for strengthening democratic institutions and principles.

Once again we shall be discussing resolutions which have been submitted to the Conference,
Although the number of these is considerably smaller than in recent years. Finally, I should like to say that one of the encouraging signs today as we begin another Conference is the new vitality that is emerging in our Organisation. The tremendous needs of working men and women in the world have long been recognised. We now have a growing sense of confidence that our Organisation can make a real and vital contribution in helping to meet these needs. We also have a growing confidence that it is possible for mankind to develop institutions that can cope in a positive and constructive manner with the vast economic and social problems facing our world. We can be profoundly grateful that this recognition is emerging, and that there is a steadily increasing will to take effective action.

The I.L.O. is in a particularly strategic position, as a tripartite body with universal membership, to give practical expression both to the determination of the needs of men and women throughout the world and to the establishment of sound policies and programmes designed to meet them. This is a solemn responsibility which demands the best efforts of all of us in the days and years ahead.

ADDRESS BY MR. TARCICI, GOVERNMENT DELEGATE, YEMEN

Mr. HAYTHONE (Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office).
—I now call upon Mr. Tarcici, Ambassador of Yemen, to address the Conference.

Interpretation from French: Mr. TARCICI (Government delegate, Yemen)—On behalf of the people of the Arab Republic of Yemen and on behalf of the Yemeni Government, employers and workers, I should like to thank you for the very friendly reception you have just given my country on the occasion of its joining this great international Organisation. The very favourable attitude of this Organisation to my country was evident even before we actually joined the Organisation. In point of fact, I.L.O. assistance to Yemen has already been given for some time in the framework of United Nations technical assistance programmes.

As you know, a progressive régime was set up in Yemen just over two years ago; our new régime is constitutional and democratic and has as its aim the public welfare of our people so that our country may find its true place in the international community. Since the inauguration of this new era the Arab Republic of Yemen has no longer held aloof from this world community. On the contrary, now that the people have awakened, they want us to make up for lost time. We are becoming more and more aware of our mission as a Member of the International Labour Organisation. By joining this great Organisation, Yemen is not merely manifesting its desire for membership; it intends to participate actively in the implementation of the I.L.O.'s programmes and in the application of its fundamental principles. We shall adhere to the Conventions and Recommendations of a constructive nature which have been worked out at the various International Labour Conferences with a view to promoting the welfare of all.

Yemen will also do everything in its power in favour of the workers so that they may enjoy in dignity and freedom the material and spiritual benefits to which they are entitled. We are convinced that without the workers' help nothing constructive can be achieved. Without total respect for the rights of workers there can be no social justice, no balanced and harmonious development, for a country with modern and progressive aspirations such as Yemen always will be, and must be, dedicated to the steady increase of its Gross National Product. This is unfortunately true that my country is something of a latecomer in benefiting from the experience of this Organisation and the results of its debates. Nevertheless, we feel that there are great avenues yet to be explored. Our caravan will have many halts to make before we attain the principles of full social justice that are set forth in the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation. In building up new institutions in our country we have undertaken to base these on social justice and equity for all our citizens in order to ensure the same economic opportunities for everybody. I need not remind you that in our democratic Constitution freedom to work and freedom of speech hold pride of place.

We are not blind to what is being done in various parts of the world against the sacred rights of workers as stated in the Constitution of the I.L.O. and the Declaration of Philadelphia. We in Yemen will do what we can to redress the balance and to reduce the injustices that are being perpetrated against the working class in different parts of the world. Our country will support the measures taken by the I.L.O. to put an end to all forms of discrimination in the field of labour. Any kind of forced labour is, of course, an insult to our society and to the principles of our Organisation. We shall endeavour to eliminate all such injustice from our modern world and Yemen will endorse any measures adopted by the I.L.O. to this end.

In closing my first speech thanking you for your welcome, I feel it incumbent upon me to recall that in the southern part of my country, which is still occupied by the imperialists and still under the imperialist yoke in the tradition of the last century, the workers are being oppressed. For carrying out their legitimate duties against colonialism, which has lasted too long in Aden and the occupied southern part of our country, the workers and trade union leaders are having to undergo the most inhuman treatment, treatment which is contrary to the principles of the I.L.O. The resolutions of the General Assembly of the United Nations are being ignored and the missions that were decided upon by the Committee on Decolonisation have not been able to penetrate into the occupied zones. These anti-social and anti-labour manifestations greatly hinder the full implementation of the principles of our Organisation, and I think this Conference should devote particular attention to this problem. For this reason I believe that this very alarming situation deserves more than a passing reference in this brief speech of thanks which I am making in response to your kind words of welcome.
ELECTION OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. HAYTHORNE (Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office)—We shall now turn to the first item on our agenda—the election of the President of the Conference.

Mr. BELIGAMMANA (Government delegate, Ceylon)—I have great pleasure in proposing the candidature of Mr. Hashim Raza, Government delegate, Philippines, for the Presidency of this Conference.

The Asian members of the Government group have agreed by a majority vote to support his candidature. This decision was taken mainly on the principle that every country within a region should have an opportunity to serve in this high office. I have every confidence that our candidate would serve this Conference as President in a manner acceptable to all, for Mr. Pacis has had considerable experience of the working of the I.L.O.

Mr. SALAMA (Minister of Labour, United Arab Republic)—It gives me great honour and pleasure to nominate Mr. Hashim Raza, Secretary, Ministry of Health, Labour and Social Welfare of Pakistan, to be the President of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. Mr. Raza is very well known to all of us and to the I.L.O.

Before his present post he has served his country in the last few years as Chief Secretary of the Government of East Pakistan, Acting Governor of East Pakistan, Secretary of the Ministry of Rehabilitation and Works, and Secretary of the Ministry of Information and National Reconstruction. In the I.L.O. Mr. Raza was the leader of the Pakistan delegation to the 46th Session of the International Labour Conference held in June 1962 and Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Conference, and was also Vice-Chairman of the Fifth Asian Regional Conference of the I.L.O. held in Melbourne, Australia, in 1962. He is at present the representative of his country on the Governing Body of the I.L.O. and Chairman of the Committee on Standing Orders and the Application of Conventions and Recommendations.

It is because of this long and esteemed history and experience in his country and in the I.L.O. that I have the pleasure of nominating Mr. Raza to preside over this session of the Conference. I am confident that this nomination will meet with the unanimous approval of the Conference.

Mr. CHENG (Employers’ delegate, China)—As an Employers’ delegate from the Republic of China I fully second the delegate from Ceylon in his nomination of Mr. Pacis, Government delegate, Philippines, as the President of this Conference. I am sure he is most capable and that, with his capability, our Conference will be successful.

Interpretation from French: Mr. LARAQUI (Government delegate, Morocco)—It is for me, as delegate of the Kingdom of Morocco, a great honour to speak before this august assembly which once again will consider the problems of labour and the retraining of manpower in a world where science and technology are taking giant strides forward, thus lending correspondingly high purpose to our work and our tasks.

It is therefore a great pleasure for me to propose the candidature of Mr. Raza. I will not go into the biographical details, which are well known to you all. Mr. Raza is a specialist in labour questions. He has a keen social conscience, and, above all, a great love for the working man, the mainspring of progress and technology in the world. It is for this reason that I call on you to support his candidature.

Mr. HAYTHORNE (Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office)—Two nominations have been duly moved and seconded for the Presidency of our Conference.

Mr. NASR (Employers’ delegate, Lebanon)—I am sorry I have to take a few minutes more of your time, and I am sure all of you will feel with me that it is a very unpleasant task to speak on this occasion where two candidates, honourable, capable delegates from two Asian countries, are competing for this honourable task of serving as the President of the present session of the International Labour Conference.

If I were to speak, as did those who had the opportunity before me of introducing them, on the qualities of both, on the importance and esteem of their respective countries, I would take too much time, and I think you know most of it so I do not need to repeat it. However, I am faced with a dilemma, and it is the one which we were faced with last year on a similar occasion. I think that dilemma last year was solved through some basic qualities that were shown by Mr. Hashim Raza, the honourable delegate from Pakistan. I would suggest that it was through his self-restraint, his unfailing effort to ease our work, his sense of sacrifice for the good of many, his co-operation and his fairness in his attitude that last year we had a chance to get out of a similar difficulty. I personally feel committed from last year to vote for Mr. Raza for the Presidency this year; but it is not only because of that commitment that I call upon my friends and fellow delegates to elect him, but because I think he has those qualities that, as far as I am concerned, are the qualities necessary for the successful running of this Conference.

Mr. HERNANDEZ (Workers’ delegate, Philippines)—As Workers’ delegate of the Philippines, I stand here today to second the nomination of a countryman of mine with legitimate aspirations to election to the Presidency of this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. I refer to the candidature of Ambassador Vicente Albano Pacis, the Philippines Envoy and Plenipotentiary and the Permanent Representative of the Philippines to the United Nations and the other international organisations in Geneva. I can say without hesitation and without fear of contradiction that the trade union movement of the Philippines, along with the rest of the workers who are still unorganised in our country, is solidly behind the candidature of Mr. Pacis for the Presidency of the International Labour Conference.

Mr. Pacis rose from humble beginnings to a position of honour and prestige in my country, the Philippines, because of his dedication to duty, his efficiency and his undying obsession with amity and understanding among individuals and nations. Throughout his public career he has exhibited the hallmark of a fair and just leader of men. He had his baptism in the public service as a journalist and professor. In both fields he acquitted himself creditably. As a journalist he rose from being a mere reporter to become the editor and publisher of one of the Philippines' most prestigious dailies. As a teacher and professor he started as an instructor in one of our universities, to become the Vice-President of the University of the East, one of the most respected institutions of higher learning in my country.

It is in recognition of his success in both these fields that our Government drafted him into our foreign service.

As a journalist and as an educator Mr. Pacis was known far and wide in our country as one of our leading thinkers and administrators. He attained such an enviable reputation because of the fine traits which he has carried with him as an envoy to Geneva. In thought as well as in his relations with capital, industry and labour, he has applied the principles of fairness and justice. Having been reared and bred in a highly democratic society, he adheres to the tenets that the least governments exist with the consent of the governed; that government is the best government; that governments exist with the consent of the governed; and that therefore it is the task of governments to provide for the well-being, the happiness and the progress of their people.

I could go on reciting here reasons which make us feel that Ambassador Pacis is fully qualified for the position of President of the International Labour Conference. Just to cite to you a few of his qualifications as an educator, Ambassador Pacis was professor of journalism at the University of Santo Tomas, one of the oldest universities in my country; he was professor of political science of the University of the East from 1950 to 1958; he was Vice-President of the University of the East—the second largest university in the Philippines with an enrolment of 50,000—from 1960 to 1963; he received his Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of Illinois and his Master of Arts degree from the University of Wisconsin.

Mr. Pacis was correspondent of the Associated Press in Washington, D.C., from 1927 to 1932; he has been city editor of the Manila Tribune; he was evening editor of the Graphis, now a leading weekly news magazine; he was also the editor of the Philippines Herald; and he was executive editor and general manager of the Ramon publication.

In the field of international service Mr. Pacis was Director of Public Information in the South-East Asia Treaty Organisation in Bangkok from 1958 to 1960.

In Government service he was a foreign affairs officer in 1948 and was press secretary to the President of the Philippines from 1948 to 1950. He was appointed Minister in 1961 and became Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary in 1963. In his present position he has been, since early 1964, the Philippines Permanent Representative, accredited with full powers, to the European Office of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organisation, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organisation and the Universal Postal Union.

I therefore strongly urge and appeal to you to support the candidature of Ambassador Vicente Albano Pacis for the Presidency of the International Labour Conference, and to consider electing him to this prestigious office through which the Philippines will contribute something substantial to the success of this Conference.

Mr. HAYTHORNE (Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office)—In the circumstances it is necessary now to proceed to a vote. This will take the form of a secret ballot. There may be others who would like to speak but I would like to suggest that we proceed with our business as quickly as we are able to and, in the circumstances, I would suggest that we proceed now to the vote.

I would like to ask Mr. Aguilar, Government delegate of Venezuela, and Mr. Parodi, Government delegate of France, both of whom have formerly served as Presidents of our Conference, to come to the rostrum to serve as returning officers.

I would just like to describe briefly how we shall proceed with the vote. A ballot paper, on which the names of the two candidates are written, is now being distributed to each delegate. When the delegate's name is called he will kindly come to the rostrum and drop his ballot paper into the ballot box after he has crossed out the name of the candidate for whom he does not wish to vote, leaving only the name of the candidate for whom he wishes to vote.

If there are no queries I shall ask the Clerk of the Conference to proceed to call the roll.

(Mr. Aguilar and Mr. Parodi take their seats on the platform.)

(A vote is taken by secret ballot.)

Mr. HAYTHORNE (Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office)—The result of the ballot is as follows: 272 votes for Mr. Raza; 84 votes for Mr. Albano Pacis; two spoiled ballots. I therefore declare that Mr. Hashim Raza is elected President of the Conference and would ask him to please come to the rostrum.

I would like to thank Mr. Aguilar and Mr. Parodi, on your behalf, for acting as returning officers.

(Mr. Raza, Government delegate, Pakistan, is elected President and takes the Chair.)

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

The PRESIDENT—Mr. Chairman of the Governing Body, Mr. Director-General, fellow delegates, ladies and gentlemen, may I express at the very outset my gratitude for your kindness in bestowing upon me the great honour of the Presidency of this august Conference. I am particularly grateful to Mr. Anwar Salama, Minister of Labour of the United Arab Republic, for putting my name forward and to Dr. Abdelkader Lariqui, Ambassador, Government delegate, Morocco, and to Mr. Marwan Nasr, Employers' delegate, Lebanon, for seconding the proposal. The kind words that have been spoken about me by my friends have touched me greatly, and I assure you that I shall endeavor to prove myself worthy of the confidence that has been reposed in me. I earnestly hope that I shall enjoy the fullest cooperation of my fellow delegates, including my friends from the Philippines, in the discharge of the heavy task that has been put on my shoulders.

I consider my election as a tribute to my country, Pakistan, which has, since its founding in August 1947, been making sincere contributions towards world peace and achieving the great objectives of the I.L.O.

I warmly welcome to this session of the Conference the members of various delegations, particularly those of Zambia, Malta, Malawi and Yemen, which have joined this Organisation since our last session and whose entry has brought the number of the States Members of the I.L.O. up to 114. During the past two decades, the membership of this veteran international organisation has increased twofold and every year new member States are joining this great family with fervour and with hope. There is still a large section of the world population which is not represented in this forum but I hold a firm belief that in the not-too-distant future all the peoples of the world will be represented in this Organisation.

I should like to avail myself of this opportunity to appeal to the Government of Indonesia to reconsider its decision to withdraw from the I.L.O. and to rejoin it.

We are meeting here at a time when the political atmosphere of the world is not serene. There is much tension in some regions, which threatens world peace. It is, however, very gratifying to note that in a world torn by conflict and on edge with fear and suspicion, the I.L.O. is marching on against the real enemies of mankind—poverty, hunger and social inequality. The extent of its success in this crusade no doubt depends upon the support of the member countries for the ideals and objectives of the I.L.O. As for my own country, the social policies, programmes and activities of Field-Marshal Ayub Khan and his party are entirely in conformity with the aims and objectives of the I.L.O., and these policies and programmes are being pursued as vigorously as our resources permit. His Government has already declared that its policy in the field of labour will be based on I.L.O. Conventions and Recommendations ratified by Pakistan. I may mention that since her independence in 1947 Pakistan has ratified as many as 13 Conventions besides accepting the obligations under another 15 Conventions ratified by the Government of India before independence.

My country's labour policy aims at minimizing the chances of friction between the workers and the employers. It encourages the parties to get together as often as possible to iron out their differences before these assume alarming proportions. The Government has reiterated in its declared labour policy its faith in the principle of collective bargaining through representative and responsible trade unions. During the period from 1959 to 1962 the pace of labour legislation in Pakistan has been unprecedented. While the Industrial Disputes Act, the Trade Unions Act and the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act were amended, new legislation, namely the Working Journalists (Conditions of Service) Ordinance, the Road Transport Workers Ordinance, the Minimum Wages Ordinance, the Plantations Labour Ordinance, the Apprenticeship Ordinance, the Coal Mines (Fixation of Rates of Wages) Ordinance and the Employees' Social Insurance Ordinance, were enacted.

This month marks the successful completion of our Second Five-Year Plan. It is a major turning point in my country's history because during these five years our faltering economy has been transformed into a flourishing one. I am glad to say that almost all the important targets have been either achieved or exceeded. During this period we have been able to break the population barrier for the first time and our income per head of population has increased by about 3 per cent. per annum. The average annual growth rate of the gross national product for this period is about 5 per cent., which is twice the growth rate of the population. In agriculture, the planned targets were achieved two years in advance.

An important feature of our planning is that the structure of our economy is gradually transforming itself from an agricultural to a semi-industrial pattern; I suppose that is true of all the developing countries of the world. Industry, which was virtually non-existent in Pakistan at the time of independence, speedily found a place of its own in our national economy. It is expected that the contribution of industry to the gross national product will increase from 7 per cent. in 1949-50 to 13 per cent. in 1964-65, whereas that of agriculture will decline from about 60 per cent. to 48 per cent. during the same period. Our economy is thus becoming progressively industrial and its preponderant dependence on agriculture is diminishing. As a result of the growth in industry the country is also becoming progressively urbanised. During the last 15 years the population of urban areas has more than doubled, and now about 15 per cent. of our people live in cities as against 10 per cent. in 1950. The progressive industrialisation of the economy is also reflected in the employment pattern. The increase in jobs in the non-agricultural sector is proceeding at a rate much faster than in the agricultural sector.

Whatever we have been able to achieve is the result not only of our own efforts but also of the generous help and assistance given by the developed nations of the world and the international organisations like the United Nations and particularly the I.L.O. This is true of all developing countries which are endeavouring to improve the lot of their people, yet we are still far away from the desired goal. The problem of poverty changes its pattern in every generation, and constant and ceaseless efforts are required to meet its challenge. The gaps between the haves and the have-nots are still apparent. To bridge this gulf is a gigantic task which calls for the collective efforts of the developed, the developing and the underdeveloped countries. The I.L.O. has a very creditable record of service in this field, hence the expectation that it will surpass its own record as the years roll by.

It is heartening to see that the I.L.O. has increased its operational activities in Afro-Asian and Latin American countries, which are in great need of international assistance.

We also appreciate this stress on the decentralisation of the work of the I.L.O. in order to tackle regional problems more effectively.

The Conference has been discussing at the last two sessions the question of the programme and structure of the I.L.O. and, as pointed out by the Director-General in his very able Report, there was a broad consensus of opinion in respect of some questions, especially those relating to the major objectives and programmes of the I.L.O., and rather sharp differences of opinion in respect of others. You must have noticed with satisfaction that there was a substantial measure of agreement on the choice and content of those major I.L.O. programme areas such as human resources development, labour relations, trade union development, the growth of sound social institutions, and conditions of life and work. It has been rightly stated by the Director-General that "these are three facets of its activity where the I.L.O. has accumulated considerable experience." These points on which there was wide agreement during the debate at the last two sessions of the Conference have now been placed before the Conference for confirmation. This year the Conference will adopt international standards on the questions of employment of young persons in underground work in mines of all kinds, and employment of women with family responsibilities. It will also discuss important questions like agrarian reform and the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries. The Office has prepared valuable documents on all these questions, which will enable the delegates to consider these matters in their right perspective. I am sure that the discussions in the Conference will bring fruitful results.

Distinguished delegates, my friends, I once again thank you all for the honour you have done me and my country; and I pray to God for the success of this Conference.

(The Conference adjourned at 12.30 p.m.)
SECOND SITTING

Wednesday, 2 June 1965, 5.45 p.m.

President: Mr. Raza

ELECTION OF THE VICE-PRESIDENTS

The PRESIDENT—The first item of business for this afternoon is the election of the Vice-Presidents of the Conference and I call upon the Clerk of the Conference to read the nominations put forward by the groups.

The CLERK OF THE CONFERENCE—

The nominations for the Vice-Presidents of the Conference are as follows:

Government group: Mr. Gurinovich (Byelorussia).
Employers' group: Mr. Andriantsitohaina (Malagasy Republic).
Workers' group: Mr. Sánchez Madariaga (Mexico).

The PRESIDENT—If there are no objections, I declare the proposals adopted.
(The proposals are adopted.)

APPOINTMENT AND COMPOSITION OF THE SELECTION COMMITTEE

The PRESIDENT—The second item on the agenda is the appointment and composition of the Selection Committee. The Clerk of the Conference will read the proposals communicated by the groups.

The CLERK OF THE CONFERENCE—

The proposals for membership of the Selection Committee are as follows:

Government members:
Algeria.
Australia.
Brasil.
Bulgaria.
Canada.
China.
Ecuador.
France.
Federal Republic of Germany.
Gabon.
India.
Italy.
Japan.
Lebanon.
Liberia.
Mali.
Mexico.

Pakistan.
Peru.
Poland.
Tanzania.
U.S.S.R.
United Kingdom.
United States.

Employers' members:
Mr. Bergenström (Sweden).
Mr. Erdmann (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mr. Ghayour (Iran).
Mr. Ghali (Tunisia).
Mr. Gonzales Blanco (Brasil).
Mr. Martínez-Espino (Venezuela).
Mr. Mishiro (Japan).
Sir George Pollock (United Kingdom).
Mr. Rifaat (United Arab Republic).
Mr. Wagner (United States).
Mr. Wajid Ali (Pakistan).
Mr. Waline (France).

Deputy members:
Mr. Campanella (Italy).
Mr. Chinai (India).
Mr. Donayre Barrios (Peru).
Mr. Fennema (Netherlands).
Mr. Georget (Niger).
Mr. Gibson (Australia).
Mr. Hallsworth (Canada).
Mr. Kocatopçu (Turkey).
Mr. Recalde (Argentina).
Mr. Richmond (Kenya).
Mr. Verschueren (Belgium).
Mr. Walker (Uganda).

Workers' members:
Mr. Abid Ali (India).
Mr. Boermann (Federal Republic of Germany).
Mr. Borha (Nigeria).
Mr. Bouladoux (France).
Lord Collison (United Kingdom).
Mr. ben Ezzedine (Tunisia).
Mr. Faupl (United States).
Mr. Hernandez (Philippines).
Mr. Kaplansky (Canada).
Mr. Möri (Switzerland).
Mr. Sánchez Madariaga (Mexico).
Mr. Sissoko (Mali).

The PRESIDENT—If there are no objections, I declare these proposals adopted.
(The proposals are adopted.)
NOMINATION OF THE OFFICERS OF THE GROUPS

The PRESIDENT—The third item is the nomination of the Officers of the groups. The Clerk of the Conference will read the names of the persons who have been elected Officers of the various groups.

The CLERK OF THE CONFERENCE—
The groups have elected their Officers as follows:

Government group:
- Chairman: Mr. Øksnes (Norway).

Employers' group:
- Chairman: Mr. Waline (France).
  - Vice-Chairmen: Mr. Ghayour (Iran), Mr. Martinez-Espino (Venezuela), Mr. Rifaat (United Arab Republic), Mr. Wagner (United States).
- Secretary: Mr. Lagasse (International Organization of Employers).

Workers' group:
- Chairman: Mr. Möri (Switzerland).
- Vice-Chairmen: Mr. Hernandez (Philippines), Mr. Sissoko (Mali).
- Members of the Bureau: Mr. Abid Ali (India), Mr. Beermann (Federal Republic of Germany), Mr. Bora (Nigeria), Mr. Bouladoux (France), Lord Colison (United Kingdom), Mr. ben Ezzedine (Tunisia), Mr. Faupl (United States), Mr. Kaplansky (Canada), Mr. Heyer (International Confederation of Free Trade Unions).
- Secretary: Mr. Heyer (International Confederation of Free Trade Unions).

The PRESIDENT—The Conference takes note of these appointments.

(The Conference adjourned at 6 p.m.)
THIRD SITTING

Thursday, 3 June 1965, 4.15 p.m.

President : Mr. Raza

FIRST REPORT OF THE SELECTION COMMITTEE ¹: SUBMISSION AND ADOPTION

The President—Our agenda comprises consideration of the first and second reports of the Selection Committee. I call upon Mr. Menon, Chairman of the Selection Committee, to present the first report.

Mr. MENON (Government delegate, India; Chairman of the Selection Committee)—I have the honour to submit to the Conference the first report of the Selection Committee, the text of which was distributed this morning to the delegates.

This report covers the election of the Officers of the Selection Committee and contains proposals concerning the setting-up of Conference committees, the discussion of the Director-General’s Report, a suggested arrangement for more negotiation, and suggestions regarding the Conference quorum.

I may be permitted to draw the special attention of the Conference to the proposals concerning the quorum, the purpose of which is to ensure that the Conference quorum is realistically determined at all times on the basis of the number of delegates actually present at the Conference. The Selection Committee unanimously recommends the Conference to put the proposals into practice on a provisional basis. I may be permitted to submit that they call for some discipline on the part of all the delegates, both in registering promptly and claiming their admission cards from the Information Desk, and also in notifying the Clerk of the Conference in writing of their departure if they have to leave before the close of the session.

The report also contains a recommendation to invite three international workers’ organisations to be represented at the Conference by observers, and recommendations concerning the participation of these and other non-governmental organisations in the work of certain committees of the Conference, the appointment of the Drafting Committee of the Conference, and the appointment of two members to the Appeals Board panel. The Employers’ members of the Selection Committee took no part in the decision on the last-mentioned subject.

¹ See Appendix I, p. 473.

I commend the first report of the Selection Committee for the consideration and approval of the Conference.

The President—The report is now open for discussion. If there are no comments, I take it that the Conference adopts the report.

(The report is adopted.)

SECOND REPORT OF THE SELECTION COMMITTEE: SUBMISSION AND ADOPTION

The President—I now request Mr. Menon, Chairman of the Selection Committee, to submit the second report orally.

Mr. MENON (Government delegate, India; Chairman of the Selection Committee)—I have the honour to submit, orally, to the Conference the second report of the Selection Committee.

The Selection Committee met this afternoon to consider the composition of the committees which the Conference has just decided to set up by the adoption of the proposals in the first report.

The Selection Committee proposes that the membership of the committees should be as follows:

- Resolutions Committee: 123 members: 66 Government members, 24 Employers’ members and 33 Workers’ members.
- Committee on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations: 96 members: 56 Government members, 12 Employers’ members and 28 Workers’ members.
- Committee on Employment of Young Miners: 78 members: 35 Government members, 18 Employers’ members and 25 Workers’ members.
- Committee on Women Workers: 125 members: 60 Government members, 25 Employers’ members and 40 Workers’ members.
- Committee on Agrarian Reform: 127 members: 66 Government members, 25 Employers’ members and 36 Workers’ members.
- Committee on Co-operatives: 153 members: 72 Government members, 33 Employers’ members and 48 Workers’ members.
In accordance with normal practice, a system of weighted votes will be applied in respect of all these committees in order to maintain equality of voting strength between the groups.

The Finance Committee of Government Representatives will be composed of one Government representative for each State Member represented at the Conference.

The names of the members of each of these committees will be published in an appendix to the second report of the Selection Committee.1

I ask the Conference to approve these proposals in order that the committees may make an early start with their business.

The Selection Committee further proposes to the Conference that the Credentials Committee should be composed of three members, as provided in the Standing Orders of the Conference, as follows:

Government member: Mr. Zanetti (Switzerland).
Employers’ member: Mr. Poulsen (Denmark).
Workers’ member: Mr. Bolin (Sweden).

I also commend these proposals for the approval of the Conference.

1 See Appendix I, p. 476.

The President—The report is now open for discussion. Since there does not appear to be any objection, I declare the report adopted.

(The report is adopted.)

Nomination of the Officers of the Groups

The President—I now call upon the Clerk of the Conference to make an announcement concerning the nomination of the Officers of the Government group.

The Clerk of the Conference—At its meeting held this morning the Government group completed the selection of its Officers as follows:

Government group:

Vice-Chairmen: Mr. Ali Keke (Chad).
                 Mr. Mekis (Hungary).
Secretary:      Mr. Udompong (Thailand).

The President—The Conference takes note of these appointments.

(The Conference adjourned at 4.30 p.m.)
APPEALS CONCERNING COMPOSITION OF COMMITTEES

The President—Before passing on to the business on today's agenda, I should like to inform the Conference that I have received a number of appeals concerning the composition of committees and that, in accordance with the procedure established by the Conference on 8 June 1959, I have forwarded these appeals to the Chairman of the Appeals Board.1

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR GENERAL: DISCUSSION

The President—We now come to our business for this morning, the opening of the discussion of the Report of the Director-General. I call upon Mr. Haythorne, Chairman of the Governing Body of the I.L.O. and Chairman of the Working Party of the International Labour Office on the Programme and Structure of the I.L.O., to introduce the first report of the Working Party on the Programme and Structure of the I.L.O. to the Conference, to which delegates may wish to refer when speaking on the Director-General's Report.

Mr. Haythorne (Government delegate, Canada; Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office; Chairman of the Working Party of the International Labour Office on the Programme and Structure of the I.L.O.)—The first report of the Working Party of the Governing Body on the Programme and Structure of the I.L.O., to which I referred at the opening of the Conference on Wednesday morning, has already been distributed to delegates.2

As Chairman of this Working Party, I have been asked by the Governing Body to introduce the report to the Conference and to make a few general observations on our work to date.

It was anticipated at our Governing Body meeting last week, just before the beginning of the Conference, that Mr. Bergenström and Mr. Kaplansky, as the spokesmen for the Employers' and Workers' groups respectively, might also add some observations on the report. After consultations among us they have asked me, in order to save the time of the Conference, to present the report to you on behalf of the Working Party as a whole. In doing so, I want to thank them for this trust they have placed in me and also to express my sincere appreciation to them both for the excellent contributions they have made to our Working Party.

On behalf, then, of our Working Party and of the Governing Body as a whole, I should like to say first that we regard the task on which we have embarked as both a timely and important one for our Organisation. Rapidly changing world developments make an examination of the I.L.O.'s basic purposes, programmes and methods particularly urgent at this time.

There is, I think, little doubt or uncertainty about the broad aims and objectives of the I.L.O. They can be broadly stated as the improvement of employment and working and living conditions throughout the world. What have not been so clearly stated, or as well understood, are the ways in which those objectives may be expressed through programmes relevant to contemporary national and international needs.

Programmes for the I.L.O. must be determined in relation to the over-all tasks which face mankind. In our Committee we are conscious that in developing the I.L.O.'s part of these total world tasks we must have a co-ordinated approach, otherwise there is a tendency for specialised international, just as for national, agencies to regard their own particular interest as valid with little or no reference to the broader context in which we must all work.

The Working Party is thus seeking to avoid any such isolated, unco-ordinated and wasteful effort. Rather are we seeking to be positive and constructive in our approach and to work with other bodies in the international field. That is one of the principal reasons we decided early in our work, when we first met in February, that we must define first the major I.L.O. programme areas in this wider context of the total problems facing mankind today before we turned our attention to the appropriate structure needed to implement effective action in each field.

We also felt that, by determining first the broad programme areas and then turning to the instrumentalities required to give practical expression to them, there was less danger of perpetuating outworn methods than if the emphasis had been placed first on particular techniques. The latter approach could easily have resulted, we feel, either in maintaining the status quo for its own sake or in developing new types of machinery before we had really reached agreement on what are the essential tasks of the I.L.O. in today's increasingly complex world.

1 See Appendix X, p. 687.

As you will have noted from the first page of the report before you, our Committee consists of eight Government members, six Employers' members and six Workers' members, selected by each of our three groups in a manner which has given representation to different regions of the world, different stages in economic development and different forms of social organisation.

As a background for our work, the Committee not only had the excellent reports presented by the Director-General to the last two sessions of the Conference but also a summary and a detailed listing and analysis of the proposals presented by delegates on those two occasions.

We also had a summary of the communications received from governments and employers' and workers' organisations concerning those proposals, which were submitted to all member States following our Governing Body meeting last November.

As you will have observed, the summaries of these more recent communications relating to the proposals on human resources as a major programme area are presented as an annex to the first report of the Working Party. I should perhaps add that, in addition to the replies from the countries which are mentioned specifically on these pages, some more general replies have been received from other countries.

As you can see, the documentation before the Working Party was comprehensive, and we are very grateful to the Office for the extensive work it did in sorting out and analysing all the ideas that last year's session of the Conference had asked the Governing Body to study, and which the Governing Body in turn assigned to our Working Party.

The Committee began its substantive work with an examination in depth of the development and utilisation of human resources as a major programme area.

The need for such a programme was first reviewed. In this regard I would call your attention to paragraph 18 of the report where it is recognised in the final sentence: "... that the development and utilisation of 'human resources' are decisive factors in economic expansion and, in consequence, in social progress." In the same paragraph you will notice that it is realised that, if people do not have the skills needed to use natural resources, and the capital and equipment which must accompany them—if they are not productively employed, if they do not participate actively, freely and in a responsible manner in the tasks of development—it will be very difficult to achieve economic and social progress. That is true of all countries but, as the report notes, it applies particularly in the case of those with developing economies.

I should also like to quote paragraph 19 in this regard. "19. The role which human beings can play in the process of development will be enhanced if living and working conditions are improved, if standards of living are made more satisfactory and if a greater degree of social justice is attained. This is necessary to stress the other fundamental aspect of human resources policy, namely that the ultimate objective of development is human fulfilment. A policy for the development and utilisation of human resources therefore implies recognition of the right of each person to obtain employment, to enjoy the fruits of the production to which he has contributed, and to develop his faculties to the fullest extent." I am sure you will all agree that this means that adequate attention must be paid to leisure as well as to working hours.

The Committee then turned to a consideration of objectives in the human resources field. You will note that in addition to those which the I.L.O. proposed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, as appropriate for the United Nations Development Decade, the Committee examined in detail the specific I.L.O. objectives in the development and utilisation of human resources. These are set forth particularly in paragraphs 23 to 27 of the report.

This led the Working Party logically to an examination of the scope and content of human resources as a major programme area. Four important programmes within the major programme area are set forth. The aims and scope of these four programmes, you will note, are each discussed in turn beginning at paragraph 34. I shall not dwell on them but I should like to call them to your attention as important tasks closely related to points that are presented in the Director-General's Report to the Conference.

The Working Party then examined the whole range of methods of action at the disposal of the I.L.O. for the implementation of these programmes. This involves among other things the active participation of employers' and workers' organisations in formulating and implementing programmes on human resources at both the national and the international level. This part of our discussion, as delegates to the Conference will appreciate, brought us inevitably to a consideration of practical procedures which have been, or need to be, developed. It also touched on some of the more general questions of structure which the Working Party will be going into more thoroughly at a later stage in its work.

As will be noted, the Working Party had an initial discussion on priorities. This is a matter which is recognised as highly important and it is one to which we shall be returning. As you will note, the Working Party will continue its discussion of major programme areas at future sessions. We shall then turn to the second part of our work—namely the examination of the structure of the International Labour Organisation.

You will be pleased to know that the general spirit in the Working Party is excellent. This is true not only within each of the three groups but also among the groups. Our discussions have proved to be both stimulating and constructive. All members are aware of the difficulty and importance of this assignment. This has undoubtedly contributed to the liveliness and thoroughness of our discussions. There has also been outstanding cooperation on the part of the Director-General and other members of the Secretariat and this has helped us greatly in our work.

1 See Appendix X, p. 685.

In a world of rapid change the I.L.O. cannot and must not allow itself to be out of step or left behind in the march of history. Rather must our Organisation be out in front grappling with the difficult and complex problems of our day in the labour and social fields. The Working Party is determined to help in this task to the best of its ability and, I assure you, will welcome with much interest any observations any of you make concerning our work.

The President—I am sure you would like me to convey your thanks to Mr. Haythorne, Mr. Bergensström, Mr. Kaplansky and all their colleagues on the Working Party for this thorough and thought-provoking report. This report has been introduced at the very beginning so that delegates, as I said before, may take into account the points made in the Working Party's report when they are commenting on the Director-General's Report.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. Silva Torres (Minister of Labour, Venezuela)—First of all, if I may, Mr. President, I should like to congratulate you personally in my own name as the former holder of the portfolio which is now my own on your brilliant election to the presidency of the Conference.

The Government of Venezuela, sharing as it does its people's desire for international solidarity, comes to this as to all preceding sessions, not only in order to meet its commitments as a Member of the I.L.O. but also to take this opportunity of participating in the fruitful dialogue between those who have the honourable but arduous task of directing the destinies of their nations and those who, as managers or workers, constantly assist in increasing the national income and maintaining the atmosphere of peace and concord which alone can permit mankind and civilisation to survive.

None can deny that the traditional approach to social problems is no longer appropriate to the events of today—events which are both powerful and dangerous because of their irresistible force and their surprising multiplicity. Accordingly, no one can deny the utility of the I.L.O. as an invaluable instrument for the construction of a future world which will transcend the many difficulties still hampering complete social justice and international peace.

The presence in this Organisation of our three great sectors which contribute to the production of goods and services, the gradual diminution of the importance of frontiers, races and ill-feeling from the past, the facility with which new ideas can spread today, the social sensitivity which now accompanies any examination of the complex field of human relations and, lastly, the I.L.O.'s capacity for renewal and adjustment to the new requirements which more than ever characterise its future—all this makes the Organisation not only an ever-open forum in the search for understanding but also the most powerful and the most suitable means of attaining a new life without the birth pangs becoming terrible convulsions which can endanger the very existence of civilisation.

As far as my country is concerned, I can say quite sincerely that we are doing all we can to meet our obligations, since we know that nothing can be achieved at the international level to improve the position of the working man and to reach the goals fixed by the I.L.O. unless each member State makes its exceptional effort to give the I.L.O., solid and effective moral, material and spiritual support.

In our case this is being done with the urgency which reflects full awareness of our requirements, our resources and our capacity to advance and progress. Venezuela today has not only a people which struggles for balanced growth, to reach higher levels of living, to find formulas which will enable it to progress without the twin dangers of complacency and violence; it also has a Government of democratic origin, of democratic feeling, as its achievements show, and of democratic understanding because it knows that it must offer the people the possibility of achieving freedom from several centuries of poverty, backwardness and colonialism while still respecting human rights and freedom without which it cannot fulfil its historic destiny.

To carry out the task entrusted to it by popular vote, the Government of Venezuela has been obliged to struggle against forces which are sometimes imponderable. Inveterate vices, vested interests, the lack of vision of some social groups, the lack of discipline in others, and above all the aggressive attitude of the extreme right and the extreme left, which although not numerically large evidently aim at subverting public order and at liquidating our democratic institutions and replacing them by the traditional common dictatorship, which Venezuela and its people will never tolerate—these all make up a negative background which unfortunately delays the achievement of our programmes and the attainment of the goals which the Government has set in the economic and social field.

Nevertheless we must be optimistic, not only because of the results we have already achieved but also, and mainly, because of the support which the working people and the responsible community are giving and will continue to give to the President of Dr. Raúl Leoni (the former holder of the portfolio which is now my own), within which three great democratic parties and a valuable group of independent politicians have assumed responsibility.

We are not unaware that a very important principle is that of facing problems and not trying to evade them, although it would be easier to adopt the attitude of a politician who always promises everything but never fulfils his promises. All the same we prefer the rocky road of realities because we consider it is the only one that will make it possible for us to act constructively. Thus, we acknowledge that in our country unemployment and underemployment are very serious problems. We know that while the right to work is embodied in the National Constitution, it is very often not a practical reality for the head of a family who may justly aspire to that right. We are also aware, however, that the process of industrialisation and the reform of the productive agricultural structure of our country have met with a constantly growing success, thereby making for a growing increase in the labour market and a gradual decrease in unemployment at a rate which makes it possible for us not only to cover the natural growth of the labour force, but to decrease the rate and the cumulative backlog of underemployment and unemployment.

In this field we should call attention to the effort recently made in Venezuela to find a solution to the various secondary problems which face unemployed youth. This was recently demonstrated in a concrete manner by the holding of a study seminar where particular stress was laid on certain measures, which will be short-term and medium-term measures, to offer and adequate solutions to these very serious problems.

The problem of unemployment in Venezuela, as in all developing countries, is to cope with the very serious factor constituted by lack of skilled manpower. A large number of workers are unskilled and therefore unable to take advantage of the real opportunities of employment. This hinders the process of economic development whenever new manpower needs in a growing industry cannot be properly satisfied. Therefore we are making every effort to increase the existing services provided by the National Employment Training Institute, with a view to preparing the workers adequately within the framework of true manpower planning services which we hope eventually to achieve thanks to the very valuable contribution of the technical experts of the I.L.O.

We should like to make reference now to the efforts our Government is making to set up from January next year an employment service as envisaged in the Employment Service Convention, 1948, which was ratified by Venezuela last year. To this end, and with the support and technical collaboration of the I.L.O., we are proceeding to modify the limited manpower service which the Ministry of Labour has been maintaining up to the present in order to make way for a modern structure which will make it possible for us in the near future not only to offer the workers direct information as to existing employment opportunities but to carry out the corresponding research, and to make provision for vocational training, re-adaptation and retraining of workers for new activities, and, finally, provide plans for economic development on an adequate basis of information and statistics on available manpower and the degree of skill of such manpower, and indicating the future possibilities of this labour force, in the light of the new requirements which are constantly emerging.

In the field of social security I should like to inform this assembly that during the course of this year the National Congress of my country will approve a Social Security Act which will place it on the same level as the more advanced countries. In response to the principle of the extension of the system of trade union plurality, the new Act will apply to the whole of the national territory, to all the workers, and will cover a larger number of risks or needs, including invalidity, old age, death, family responsibilities, and, subsequently, involuntary unemployment, when we have the employment service in full operation. The legislation has been worked out in accordance with the standards set by the I.L.O., and in this planning we have had the benefit of the extraordinarily valuable contribution of an I.L.O. technical official, one of the most outstanding figures in this difficult and complex field.

We continue to believe that the workers should have access to management bodies within undertakings where public capital predominates, and that they should be given effective means of accumulating savings. To this end the National Congress is discussing proposed legislation which will make this representation available to the workers, and another Bill will be presented by the Government with a view to setting up a workers' bank. Here again we have had very valuable assistance from the technical staff of the I.L.O. We also believe it is now necessary in Venezuela to introduce a radical revision of the present Labour Act with a view to incorporating some of the invaluable contributions made through the system of collective bargaining, which in Venezuela has yielded most fertile and valuable results, thereby leading to a gradual improvement of conditions of employment and the achievement of objectives particularly dear to the hearts of all who love social justice. In this new law we shall also include the agricultural workers of Venezuela, thus putting a final stop to former discrimination, which continues even today because of regulations which no longer correspond to the importance which this sector has taken on in the general pattern of national production. When this new Labour Act comes into force we may be in a position to ratify the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 and at the same time overcome the obstacles to effective application of the Right of Association (Agriculture) Convention, 1921, which Venezuela ratified in 1944.

In the democratic spirit which presides over Venezuelan public life, the free play of labour relations has greatly prospered, with particular reference to the trade union movement and to the employers' associations which have always enjoyed the enthusiastic collaboration of the Government. No political prejudice, no reservation of an ideological character, hamper the legal recognition and full operation of the employers' and workers' organisations, since activities increase every day and give shape to a dynamic flexible social democracy which is the pride of our country. You should know that in Venezuela we apply and encourage the system of trade union plurality and therefore have many trade unions, federations, and confederations. In these organisations employed persons of all political beliefs operate without any interference by the authorities which might be interpreted as a restriction of freedom of association. Last year alone 884 new collective agreements came into operation, and together with those in existence there are more than a million-and-a-half workers. This shows the vigorous nature of our labour relations and the impulse which the Government gives to direct negotiation between the parties under the guidance of our new social legislation.

To achieve all our goals, some of which I have mentioned already, and to avoid hesitating or failing in our policy of linking economic development with social progress, to maintain a balance which will ensure stability in our national life, my Government has been obliged to initiate a process of gradual change in the structure of our national labour authorities so as to make the Ministry of Labour a suitable dynamic tool in the service of a government policy commensurate with the high degree of progress of our country.

We are glad to see on the agenda of the Conference the question of the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries. We have in each case referred to the assistance received by Venezuela from the I.L.O. In such important fields as the employment service, manpower training, and social security the I.L.O. experts have made a very thorough and basic contribution which we acknowledge and for which we are very grateful. But we believe that this assistance must be increased with the same priority and at the same rate as the programme of development in our country.

Since the Government of my country is very anxious to cover a great deal of ground very quickly and to achieve the objectives, both short-term and medium-term, to which I and many other people have referred, particularly in the fields where official action has received support and collaboration both from the private sector and, particularly, from the workers themselves, we are sure that we will continue to receive the permanent stimulus which we get from each generous contribution from the I.L.O., from each word of advice from its efficient technical staff, and from each word of encouragement from its Directorate. Today more than ever before we are convinced that the I.L.O. is the base from which Archimedes would have been able to move the world.

We are extremely anxious to break new ground, and new channels now will make opportunities available to the little man, to the underprivileged, so that he will no longer be the object of exploitation by the powerful. We wish to create an atmosphere of peace where freedom will make a man realise that his presence in the world is not an expression of a circumstance created by natural forces alone, but is rather a matter of destiny which God has allotted to him, having made him in his image and in his likeness.

Mr. AMOA-AWUAH (Minister of Labour, Ghana)—It gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity of addressing the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. I wish, first of all, to convey to the delegates and the officials of this Conference the sincerest greetings and felicitations of Osagyefo Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, President of the Republic of Ghana. I wish also to congratulate you, Mr. President, on behalf of my delegation and the Government and people of Ghana on your election to the presidency of this august Assembly. I am confident that under your guidance this Conference will attain success.

I should like also to extend a hand of welcome to the Republic of Zambia on joining this family of nations dedicated to the promotion of peace and social justice throughout this troubled world of our time.

A year ago the Declaration concerning the policy of apartheid was adopted by acclamation at the 48th Session, calling upon the Government of South Africa to recognise and fulfil its undertakings to respect the freedom and dignity of all human beings, irrespective of their colour, and making a pressing appeal to all to apply in concert all appropriate measures to lead the Government of South Africa to renounce its inhuman policies. The special report of the Director-General gives a clear indication that the Government of South Africa has no intention of responding to the call of humanity. It has not even replied to communications addressed to it by the Director-General on this burning question.

What, then, are the reasons for this arrogant and intransigent attitude of the Government of South Africa? Have all member States of this Organisation who gave their solemn pledge to the Declaration honoured that pledge?

Member States are fully aware that no amount of diplomacy, no amount of persuasion has so far moved Verwoerd and his henchmen from the course they are pursuing. Apartheid represents the gravest threat to peace since Hitler and Mussolini sought to impose their racial doctrines upon the human race. In condemning it, therefore, we should take note of the fact that the time has come when we should take all positive measures to eliminate its existence from the earth. In the name of humanity, in the name of the suffering millions of Africans, I call on this Conference to insist that all member States implement the Declaration concerning the Policy of Apartheid of the Republic of South Africa adopted by the last session of the Conference.

Let us now turn to Portuguese colonialism in Africa. The brutalities and injustices of Portuguese administration in Angola, Mozambique, and the so-called Portuguese Guinea are flagrant violations of all human values, and are an anachronism. The rights and opportunities which the Portuguese settlers arrogate to themselves and enjoy in these territories are denied to the indigenous Africans. The plight of the Africans represents a story of woe, misery, hardship and slavery because they want social justice and the right to pursue both their material well-being and cultural development in conditions of freedom and dignity, of economic security and equal opportunity. If there is no place for South Africa in this Organisation how can we allow Portugal to continue its membership of this Organisation, which is the symbol of social justice throughout the world? The atrocities of Portuguese administration in Africa cry aloud for redress. Portugal stands in the way of African freedom, and I call upon this Conference to take strong measures and action within this organisation to ostracise Portugal from this Organisation, to compel it to change its obnoxious policies in Africa and to give the people of its colonies the opportunities necessary for self-determination.

Among other matters, the Director-General has indicated to the Conference that the cooperation of the International Labour Organisation in regional activities within the United Nations system, and mainly with the regional economic commissions, had been supplemented by continued practical cooperation with regional organisations in the Americas, Europe, Africa and Asia. While this is laudable, it is the view of my Government that, at this time when Africa is on the threshold of a continental union government, the International Labour Organisation should extend its cooperation to the Organisation of African Unity and especially its Economic and Social Commission. In this connection, my delegation notes with satisfaction the exchanges between this Organisation and the Organisation of African Unity. It is my fervent hope that the administrative structure will be completed in due course for the type of relations desired. An awakened Africa in this era of the Organisation of African Nations system, and mainly with the regional activities, necessity, entail the total mobilisation and responsibility to do the best in her power to fight for the free development and happiness of her population, and remains unshakeable in her conviction of the need for international cooperation free of all interference and free from the evils of colonialism and neo-colonialism.

In supporting the views of the Director-General on the problem of the utilisation of human resources, I should like to say that, like many progressive nations, it is the declared objective and primary concern of my Government to raise the standard of living of Ghanaians through the promotion of economic and social development projects, which will, of necessity, entail the total mobilisation and effective utilisation of all natural and productive capacities and resources, including both man-and-woman-power and the development of the potentialities of youth in national reconstruction, which is of strategic importance. Ghanaian women are therefore accorded every opportunity to participate fully as workers, wives, mothers and citizens in the economic, social and political life of the country in their own right and on an equal basis with men.

In the field of social security, quite apart from the provisions of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, which provides for the payment of appropriate compensation to workmen for injuries suffered in the course of their employment, the Government of Ghana has quite recently enacted legislation establishing a Social Security Fund to provide for payment of superannuation, invalidity, survivors’ and other benefits. For the first few years, the scheme will work as a compulsory, contributory provident fund, and later be transformed into a pension scheme.

At this stage I must say that the Government and people of Ghana acknowledge gratefully the assistance received from the I.L.O., first for the advice of the chief of the Social Security Branch, and later for having made available to them the services of an expert to advise not only on the establishment of the scheme and the preparation of the necessary legislation, but also on training Ghanaian officers to administer the scheme.

Two years ago my Government gave an assurance to the Governing Body at its 154th Session that the Government of Ghana would, at the appropriate time, and, in the light of trade union development, ratify the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). As the industrial climate of the country has now become stable and both the employers’ and workers’ organisations have fully grasped their responsibilities and appreciate their role in building the country, my Government has seen its way clear to remove those restrictions and controls which it considered necessary to impose to regulate labour-management relations. I am therefore happy to announce that my Government has now ratified Convention No. 87 and taken appropriate action to make its provisions effective. I am sure that those international trade union bodies which are using the non-ratification of this Convention by Ghana as a weapon to disparage the good name of Ghana will now understand and appreciate that there is a way of doing things and that the due procedure and machinery of government is such that time and negotiation with the parties concerned yield the best results to the satisfaction of all.

Allow me to touch upon the African labour movement and its representation at this Conference. Is it not an anomaly that, in this Conference, some African workers should be represented by interests of non-African origin? Surely you will agree that the most appropriate labour organisation which must represent and speak for all African workers is the All-African Trade Union Federation, dedicated to African unity and committed to work within the framework of the Organisation of African Unity, a representative body of all the independent States of Africa. This is the view of my Government, because African workers can no longer accept the situation where other international trade union bodies are their mouthpiece. Africa today wants to assert her own personality in her own right and express her own being. Africa is on the march and has reached the age of political maturity and can no longer accept the patronage of any country or organisation in any field. Furthermore, she refuses to accept the imposition of incompetent and neo-colonialist agents as leaders of her labour movement. The I.L.O. should, therefore, follow the course of history and bow to the “wind of change” by according category “A” consultative status to the All-African Trade Union Federation instead of observer status, as we find here today. There is every justification for this request, since the A.A.T.U.F., unlike the African Trade Union Confederation (A.T.U.C.) and other African labour organisations, is neither affiliated to nor indirectly represented here by other labour internationals.

At the 45th and subsequent sessions of this Conference, my Government pointed out the need for the reorganisation of the I.L.O. in the light of modern developments in the world, particularly in Africa, and the beginning has been made in this direction but it is the view of my Government that the appointment of Africans to higher posts at the headquarters in Geneva and the Field Offices in Africa should be accelerated to reflect the true picture of Africa in the Organisation.
Furthermore, my Government would be pleased to see the African Advisory Committee accorded the status of an autonomous regional organisation with sufficient power to direct I.L.O. affairs in Africa and to control the Field Offices. The remote control exercised from Geneva has outlived its usefulness and does not satisfy present needs. The I.L.O. should therefore adapt itself to modern requirements.

Again, it is the view of my Government that in the light of the rapid social, economic and political changes taking place in the world, particularly in the developing countries, the structure, organisation and functions of the I.L.O. need some fundamental changes in order to bring it abreast of the times. To justify its existence and its relationship with its Members, I suggest that this Conference authorise serious study and research by a committee of experts into this matter to determine the role and scope of the functions of the I.L.O., with particular reference to the developing countries.

The realisation of the political, social and economic aspirations of every nation depends on the conscious participation in efforts being made towards this end by all groups or individuals in that nation in an atmosphere of absolute freedom, peace and happiness. On the international scene, this further creates the basis for international understanding and cooperation which is a prerequisite for peaceful coexistence and the promotion of global ideals of the progress and well-being of humanity for which this Organisation stands. Our adherence and strict observance of the fundamental principles of the Declaration of Philadelphia and the ideals of this Organisation as the only institution capable of promoting the equality and dignity of man will generate our confidence in it. It is my hope therefore that this Organisation will develop with a great sense of vision, mission and goodwill towards all its Members, determined to achieve a world without conflicts and tensions. Let us therefore build this Organisation into a strong instrument of service, peace and progress of humanity irrespective of colour, race and creed.

I would conclude with an expression of the wish of my President and the Government and people of Ghana for the success of this Conference.

Interpretation from French: Mr. SAFI (Minister of Labour, Algeria)—It is with all the warmth born of friendship and esteem that I would first of all like to address to you, Mr. President, sincerest congratulations on the occasion of your election to the highest functions at this Conference.

May I also, in the name of the Government of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria and on behalf of the people of Algeria, convey the warmest greetings to the delegates to this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.

The Report of the Director-General has been studied by us with particular attention. It is a comprehensive Report. The various subjects that are suggested for study open up unlimited prospects as far as the activities of the International Labour Organisation are concerned. The gap between us and our objectives seems to have been strikingly reduced and I would like to address to the Director-General our most sincere thanks on that account.

There would be no point in my elaborating at length on the work of the I.L.O. during 1964-65; nevertheless, I would like to draw attention to some of its multiple, varied and positive activities. First of all, I would mention the amendments to the Constitution of the Organisation, which represent a valuable step forward towards the objectives which the I.L.O. has set itself. Then I must mention the efforts made in the field of technical co-operation and workers' education, which for Algeria, as a developing country, are a vital factor in our policy of economic progress and full employment.

Nevertheless, while the efforts made in these fields are commendable and appreciable, the I.L.O. should increase still further its aid and should focus its attention on ways and means of achieving its programmes. Among other things, it should provide for an increase in the volume of credits allocated and should consider new methods of recruiting experts with a view to adapting the practices followed up to now to the realities of our time.

I should like to stress how much we welcome the setting-up of the Working Party intended to assist the Director-General in his difficult but exciting task of studying the problem of revising the programmes and structure of the Organisation, and to state that we have great hopes for the success of its activities.

The Algerian Government, which I have the honour of representing, believes that the International Labour Organisation's major concern should be the preparation of a programme which would take due account of the rapid evolution of the developing countries, of their new needs, and of their determination to speed up the process of economic and social emancipation. Algeria is an example of this new dynamism. It would be to the advantage of the developing countries to profit as quickly as possible from the experience acquired by the I.L.O. in the fields of production, vocational training and the social advancement of workers. We believe that a more flexible approach would be conducive to the effective achievement of all these aims.

It is also our wish to see in the Governing Body a faithful reflection of the Conference, bearing in mind the changes which have occurred in the international situation. The I.L.O. is like that of the United Nations, is growing steadily; it is approaching that universality which we desire with all our hearts. In this connection, I should like to state how much we welcome the accession to membership of Zambia, Malawi, Malta and Yemen. This increase in the membership of the Organisation further emphasises the urgent need for certain readjustments which would ensure a fairer representation of the various regions of the world both on the executive bodies and throughout the whole structure of the Organisation.

In the same line of thought, the International Labour Organisation would benefit from strengthening its action by developing its relations with the regional political bodies, such as the Organisation of African Unity. Closer ties would permit better co-ordination and would pave the way to a new approach, particularly as regards the question of experts. Since the conditions of development are peculiar to each region it would be desirable to encourage the development of experts and the organisation of more numerous and more frequent seminars and courses in the countries concerned. Such improvements appear to us to be highly desirable.

I have permitted myself to go into these matters because I have noticed with pleasure the Director-General’s constant concern with gearing the activities of the Organisation to the changes that have occurred in the world situation and to the increasing importance of economic and employment problems in the developing countries.

For its part, Algeria, as a Member of the Organisation, is determined to work for the success of any new policy that would lead to social justice and to peace.

My country, which in a few weeks’ time will be celebrating the third anniversary of its independence, can claim to have contributed, albeit modestly, to the strengthening of our Organisation by inaugurating a policy that is in line with the ideals to which we have subscribed. This policy is illustrated by the establishment of a self-management system, which respects the dignity of the worker by placing him in the position of both producer and manager at the same time. We may state that we have achieved unquestionable progress in all fields. I would mention, among others, workers’ education, the improvement of the status of women—which is so essential to the progress and development of every society—occupational safety and health. This last-mentioned question has been given our special attention, and a national week on occupational safety and health was organised recently throughout Algeria with a view to making all workers aware of the hazards involved in their work and to changing their mental attitude in this respect.

We have started a policy of workers’ education with a view to improving the knowledge of the workers and at the same time enhancing their sense of dignity as men, as producers and as managers.

We should like all social progress to be complete; in other words, it should extend to all workers—those in the towns and those in the countryside—in every aspect of their individual and family life, and especially at the site of their activities. This policy of social advancement could be planned and implemented only in an independent country.

It is difficult to envisage such a policy within the framework of a colonial system based on the exploitation of man by man, on racialism and racial discrimination. In this connection we should like to congratulate the Director-General on his special report concerning the policy of apartheid. We should increase still further our vigilance and find more radical means of bringing our struggle to a successful conclusion and of suppressing, once and for all, those retrograde forces which are a denial of the most elementary principles of human rights.

How great would have been our joy if our brothers from Angola, from Mozambique, from so-called Portuguese Guinea and from Southern Rhodesia had been here with us.

It is our responsibility to study seriously the situation of these countries and of others which are still under the yoke of imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism, such as Palestine, whose people are still the victims of intolerable injustice.

I could hardly end my remarks without assuring you of Algeria’s determination to contribute to the success of the work of this session, because we know, as do all who are here, that underdevelopment, just as much as political conflict and military intervention, represents a threat to peace and to justice, in other words, to freedom itself.

Mr. MUNDIR (Minister of Labour and Social Development, Zambia)—President Kaunda and the people of the new Republic of Zambia send their good wishes to this august Conference on joining as a new nation.

I am privileged to lead this first tripartite delegation to represent the Republic of Zambia as an independent member State of the International Labour Organisation, and it is with honour and a pleasure to participate in this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.

It is also my privilege to congratulate you, Mr. President, on your election to the presidency of this session of the Conference, and to pay tribute to the qualities which you possess and which are admirably suited to this high office.

I wish at the outset to reaffirm the adherence of my Government to the noble principles of the International Labour Organisation, as set out in the Declaration of Philadelphia. My Government is committed to a policy for the rapid elimination of poverty, ignorance and disease, the creation of conditions conducive to balanced economic advancement, and the introduction of measures to stimulate employment, particularly in the rural areas, all of which are necessary to realise our basic aim of social progress for all our people, with special reference to those in the lower income groups, be they wage earners or subsistence farmers.

I look forward with great expectations to the fulfilment of these policies to secure the advancement of all the people of Zambia, and I am fortified in the knowledge that, now that my country has been welcomed into the great I.L.O. family of nations, there is a vast reservoir of good will and experience which we can rely upon.

The Report of the Director-General which is before this year’s session of the Conference is, I feel, of vital significance to all of us but especially to developing countries in that it marks, in many ways, the initiation of new ideas, new methods and new projects which will enable the Organisation to meet the challenge of changing conditions. These signs of adaptation to the many “winds of change” augur well for the future, particularly as they have been proposed and, in some cases, already implemented against a background of critical reappraisal of the Organisation’s structure and programme during the past two years. In a world which contains so many divergent political, social and economic structures, it is indeed an achievement to have already obtained a certain broad measure of agreement on the action to be undertaken in the major programme areas.

Bearing in mind the resolution adopted by last year’s Conference concerning programmes of technical assistance and other activities of the I.L.O. in Africa and other developing regions, with particular reference to the future role and function of regional advisory committees and regional conferences, the special problems associated with the implementation of international labour Conventions and Recommendations in African countries, the need to adapt future I.L.O. programmes to the special needs of developing countries, and the desirability of a greater degree of decentralisation of the activities of the I.L.O., it is gratifying to note that the new Field Department has been established with a sufficiently flexible structure to permit future decentralisation and is being strengthened to ensure closer collaboration with the specialised needs of developing countries such as my own. In addition, the setting up of a regional liaison office in Addis Ababa will undoubtedly strengthen the operational structure of the I.L.O. in Africa, without detracting from other universal, as opposed to regional, activities. There is, I think, a strong feeling of agreement that the basic aim of the International Labour Organisation—the improvement of working and living conditions of all the peoples of the world—remains intrinsically unassailable, but the manner in which this aim can best be achieved requires re-examination from time to time. The present appraisal of the programme is a praiseworthy attempt to ensure that a new impetus is given to the major activities which are likely to prove the best investment, but the problem of allocating priorities where limited resources are called upon to supply ever-increasing demands is indeed a difficult one.

In common with many others, my Government subscribes to the choice of the three major I.L.O. programme areas as set out in the Director-General’s Report. In the areas of activity included in “human resources development” my Government has laid plans, both long-term and short-term, which have certain fundamental objectives in this field. These objectives are to increase production from the country’s own natural resources so that the standard of living of the whole population may be raised; to diversify production, so that the copper-mining industry, while continuing to expand its production, will come to occupy a less dominant position in the over-all economy, and to provide Zambians with the education and the training that will enable them to play the leading role in all the processes of production and in all the spheres of economic activity. It follows that, initially, emphasis must be placed on expansion of the agricultural industry to create opportunities in the rural areas, particularly when one is aware that roughly three-quarters of the population of Zambia are still winning what livelihood they can from the land. There must also be a supreme effort to raise the people of the country to higher levels of education, skill and knowledge in the shortest possible time.

I am conscious of the difference between the formulation of development plans and the practical achievement of their objectives, but my Government is confident that, despite the formidable economic difficulties which have to be overcome, these objectives can be attained. We feel confident that our tasks in national development are made easier by the support given to our efforts by all sectors of the community and we are encouraged to look to the future with confident expectation, in the knowledge that the accumulated experience and expert knowledge in these identical fields of activity may be made available to us through the International Labour Organisation.

In the second division of activity, that of the development of social institutions, I must admit to being a protagonist of the “new” concept, in developing countries, of organisations which represent sectional interests identifying themselves with the national effort of economic development and thus, in my view, serving in the long run the best interests of their members. My Government is particularly anxious to see in Zambia the formation of properly organised trade unions under progressive and enlightened leadership, playing their proper role in the development of sound labour relations. I am hopeful that in this particular field some practical assistance may be forthcoming from the I.L.O. in the establishment of a labour college which, it is hoped, will make available certain courses of training for trade union members. I am of the opinion that trade unions in developing countries in Africa must not, of necessity, slavishly copy the structure and concepts of their counterparts in the more developed regions of the world. Let us by all means take advantage of the experience gained in other countries but, at the same time, let us develop and create the institutions which are best suited to the peculiar needs and problems of our African countries. To this end, my Government has introduced legislation which is aimed at the establishment of a strong, independent labour movement, free from external influence and thus able to serve the best interests of the workers of Zambia. In my view, it is of vital importance that workers throughout the continent of Africa should be afforded protection of this nature so that they do not become the pawns of international politics, with the inevitable sublimation of their interests in the ideological struggle which is being waged in Africa today.

Turning to the subject of the status and conditions of workers, the vital importance of this sector of I.L.O. responsibility cannot be overemphasised, and it is fitting that under the internal reorganisation of the International Labour Office the Conditions of Work and Life Department should be charged with the formulation of programmes designed to promote and improve the conditions of life and work of workers everywhere. In considering this task, there immediately springs to mind the intolerable travesty of justice existing within the boundaries of the Republic of South Africa in this sphere where, by their abhorrent policy of apartheid and their projected programme whereby "Bantustans" may be created, the Government of that country makes a mockery of all the principles which this Organisation is designed to defend. The special report of the Director-General indicates that, far from there being any relaxation in the apartheid policy, new legislative action has tightened its hold. I would appeal therefore to this Conference to marshal every force at its disposal which may assist in any way to reinforce the sanction of public opinion against the hateful oppression of the workers in the Republic of South Africa. The Government of the Republic of South Africa takes no part in this Conference, and indeed has no place in this Organisation, the principles and treaties of which it consistently chooses to disregard. Bearing in mind the instruments for the amendment of the Constitution adopted by the Conference at its 48th Session, my Government is anxious to learn when ratification of those instruments by member States will permit the Conference to expel the Republic of South Africa from membership, and urges the Organisation to consider this step as a matter of great urgency.

The Government of Zambia also formally requests the International Labour Organisation to expel Portugal from this Conference as a sign of disapproval of Portugal's repressive legislation and oppressive treatment of African workers in her African colonies.

It is the hope of my Government also that the British Government will do all it can to give workers in Rhodesia independence during this year so that they will be represented at this Conference next year as an independent State.

With regard to the status and conditions of workers in Zambia, my Government is deeply conscious of its heavy responsibility and has recently prescribed improved minimum rates of pay and better conditions of service for many workers in rural areas who hitherto enjoyed no statutory protection. New legislation is to be introduced soon in Zambia which will provide improved conditions relating to leave and contracts of employment and which will replace the existing outmoded legislation.

The introduction of a national social security scheme is being examined, and recent amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance make provision for the inclusion of a larger number of employees within the state scheme of insurance and provide for the payment of benefits in certain cases. A manpower survey is in progress which will be of enormous assistance in assessing accurately the skills required for the many tasks which lie ahead. We are also mindful of the need to protect workers in the fields of occupational safety and health, and the vast complex of our copper-mining industry, in co-operation with the Government, has earned a high international reputation in these important aspects of management.

I am pleased to see that the Working Party of the Governing Body will consider the most effective way in which the Industrial Committee system can make its maximum contribution within the over-all long-term programme of the Organisation. I feel that a developing country can well benefit from the accumulated experience of such committees, provided the problems and special circumstances of the developing country are realistically assessed and evaluated.

The future role of the Organisation in the field of standard-setting must inevitably be adjusted to changing conditions, and the coordinated solution proposed by the Director-General can, I feel, be implemented without the relegation of this basic task of the Organisation and without any sacrifice of fundamental principles. The plea for flexibility in new international labour standards was made by a number of speakers at last year's session of the Conference and I would only repeat the importance of appreciating this vital need in the rapidly changing circumstances in which the Organisation functions.

In conclusion, I would reiterate my country's desire to play its full part within the framework of the I.L.O. and to make whatever contribution it can towards the achievement of the fundamental principles of the Organisation. Not a year has yet passed since we achieved our independence, but already we have ratified 17 Conventions, which is not merely a very encouraging example but, rather, a challenge to old Members. of the International Labour Office so that its action programme may faithfully reflect the requirements and priorities of each country. This involves reorganisation of the regional services in Africa, Asia, and Latin America, unity of purpose and the participation of experts from the regions concerned.

In the case of my country, the policy of imitation and standardisation which formerly prevailed led to the illusion that the grave social problems stemming from underdevelopment could be solved by over-complex labour legislation not based on the analysis of the real needs of the country; the approach failed. Therefore we are now consolidating our labour legislation in a code which is in course of elaboration by a committee composed of representatives of the executive, the legislature, employers and workers. The urgency of the problems facing us compels us to ask for the immediate decentralisation of the International Labour Office. This decentralisation must be all-inclusive—that is, it must apply to its organisation, its programme and its expert personnel—so that the I.L.O.'s contribution may be more effective, immediate and realistic.

The International Labour Office is committed to assist us and must make the maximum use of the economic resources available to it by means of fruitful investment. Hence the urgency of eliminating waste due to the non-integration of programmes, excessively long voyages by experts, proliferation of conferences and meetings, improvisation of missions, for many of these do not give satisfactory results owing to lack of knowledge of the language and mentality of the peoples directly concerned.

In our own case, we require a definition of fundamental objectives based on an order of priority corresponding to the needs of our continent and our country. We desire to have a body of high-level Latin American experts involved in our problems and aware of our idiosyncrasies. We aspire, lastly, to authentic programming of the contribution which the I.L.O. must make in Latin America.

I agree with what the Director-General says in his Report regarding the delimitation of the main programme areas of the I.L.O., development and utilisation of human resources, labour relations, social institutions, conditions of life and work, because they are just the fields in which, as Minister of Labour, am seeking to promote action by reorienting the Ministry of Labour towards wider fields, breaking with the narrow view that labour relations mainly concern disputes.

I feel that the ministries of labour of the developing countries are and must be the basic instruments in the whole process of economic and social development in which we are involved—bodies concerned with the human being in his dual role of creator and beneficiary of the progress which we must achieve. As can be appreciated from the written report which I have submitted to this Conference, the objectives pursued by the Ministry of Labour of Peru are: the organisation and creation of sources of productive activity in relation to the existing unemployment and under-employment and to make available productive and freely chosen jobs for the whole of the population and assistance, with special emphasis on housing and agricultural and consumers' co-operatives.

Finally, I should like to say that Peru has fulfilled its commitment to report to the I.L.O. on the application of the Conventions which it has ratified as well as its commitment to pay its contribution as a Member of this Organisation.

I hope that in the course of the discussions which we are beginning in these first days of the Conference there will prevail a practical spirit which will make it possible for us to reach conclusions which will truly facilitate the task to which we have all set our hands—that is, to provide a solid illustration and example of the great aspirations for peace, progress and social justice and the conviction that very little will be achieved in the way of laying foundations for the realisation of these aspirations if we do not intensify the action of the International Labour Office as regards aid to the developing countries through concrete social projects which must receive the technical aid and the economic assistance which are indispensable to their implementation and which will reflect a clear understanding of the legitimate aspirations of our peoples.

Mr. BECKER (Workers' delegate Israel)—Mr. President, first of all may I take this opportunity to congratulate you on having been elected to the most honoured post in this 49th Session of the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation.

The Report presented by the Director-General is this year a comprehensive summary of a year of fruitful I.L.O. activity and a source of inspired guidance for the future—it is also a profound review of the complex of basic problems with which our world is wrestling in the social and economic fields.

This year of 1965 has been declared, as we all know, International Co-operation Year, and thus we find as one of the main issues to be discussed at our Conference the "role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries". And this is no mere coincidence, for there is a connection between the designation of the year and the title of this item on our agenda.

Just as co-operation within the national framework creates a sound basis for the development and prosperity of the State, so international co-operation is a primary condition for the progress of mankind as a whole. Just as the co-operative serves as an efficient instrument for the advancement of backward groups at the national level, so international co-operation should serve as a means for narrowing the gap between affluent nations and impoverished ones. Just as co-operation is a means for the sensible utilisation of natural resources, and for a more just distribution of their fruits, so international co-operation serves to draw the utmost advantage from the constantly increasing power of science and technology in the service of all the people of this world in their battle against the sworn enemies of the entire human race—hunger, disease, want and ignorance.

We live in a period of great changes caused by scientific and technological development which reflect on the human way of life and work. The I.L.O., founded at the end of the First World War with the aim of furthering the cause of peace by bringing progress to the masses, must adapt itself in this decade to the social and economic changes which determine the progress of human society and the preservation of world peace.

This is perhaps the only international organisation which cannot ignore the possibility of daily occurring structural changes when planning for any given period of time.

I would dare to say that the real challenge for the I.L.O. is therefore its ability to cope with these constant changes, which affect elements which by their very nature should retain their stability.

Economic interdependence between the nations of the world is ever intensifying and becoming a permanent fact in our life in every part of the globe. The economic realities at the national level within each State are interwoven with the economic realities of all of them together at the international level. The test of the I.L.O. will be its ability to come to grips with these problems, utilising its capacity for large-scale international action.

I support the view expressed by the Working Party on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. that the Organisation should continue to define principles of universal application, but adapt its programmes and techniques to the specific conditions and stage of development of every individual country.

This interdependence is of special significance against the background of the widening gap between the developed countries of this world, on the one hand, and the developing countries on the other hand, notwithstanding the flow of aid from the former to the latter, and despite their vast efforts in favour of development.

Experience has shown that economic efforts alone do not suffice to extricate human masses from their state of want. The obstacles to their progress and enrichment lie in numerous interconnected spheres—customs, tradition, mentality, social order—and in order to overcome these, comprehensive and profound attention must be devoted to all of them. The great majority of the needy are concentrated in rural areas, and do not keep pace with progress. The increase of agricultural productivity is a necessity and special attention must be given to projects of agrarian reform as one of the most vital conditions for rural development. The citizens of the highly developed countries must show a deeper understanding of the needs of their fellow-men in the developing countries, the background to their lives, their attitudes and aspirations.

As was rightly mentioned in the Report of the Director-General, the abundance of natural and human resources and the supply of capital and equipment do not alone ensure national development. Only an ever-increasing number of skilled workers and, no less important, the free and active participation of an organised labour movement in the tasks of development, will bring social and economic progress to their country.

The aid-giving countries must accustom themselves to regarding development problems not from their own angle but from that of the countries receiving the aid. Only then will their assistance achieve its proper aim.

And furthermore, let us desist from dividing the world into the recipients of aid and those who grant it. The truth is that he who receives is able, in various stages and different ways, to give as well, and, what is most important, whoever gives is also in need of aid and assistance in certain fields and thus also becomes a recipient.

Of great importance is that section of the Report dealing with the tasks that must be carried out by the trade unions and the employers' associations in economy-development processes, through co-operation in social and economic planning at the national level, and its translation into reality. In my country this principle is going to be adopted, and we are at this very time engaged in working out plans for the establishment of a special institution in which the Government, the General Federation of Labour (Histadruth) and the employers will participate with a view to coordinating their economic and social activities. So that even here, as in all the other fields to which we direct ourselves, we encounter the magic formula of co-operation.

Only last month a seminar on "The Role of Co-operation in Economic and Social Development" was held in the Histadruth's Afro-Asian Institute for Labour Studies and Co-operation, under the joint auspices of the I.L.O. and the Institute for Trade Unionists and was attended by Government officials and employers' representatives from 21 countries who had just completed ten weeks of studies at the I.L.O.'s International Institute for Labour Studies here in Geneva. Our Afro-Asian Institute itself serves as a centre for instruction and training of people, especially from the young States and developing countries, in the fields of constructive trade unionism and co-operation.

I come from an area that is considered underdeveloped, and which is second to none in its need for the operation of this formula. Half a century ago our country was in a pitiful state, industry was simply non-existent. We had no mineral or any other natural resources.

Facing these basic disadvantages, we soon found out that co-operation is one of the most useful ways of recruiting and utilising to the utmost our limited material assets and manpower. When one tours our country, one comes across co-operative forms in all branches; co-operation has become one of the main assets of today's economy.

Co-operation between the peoples of the Middle East—all of them without exception—is a question of life itself for our area. Such co-operation, by putting an end once and for all to the sterile political conflicts which upset the lives of its inhabitants, will open a new era, one of united struggle for the conquest of nature and the vanquishing of its blights for the benefit of all those who live there.

I strongly believe that the strength of the Middle East does not belong only to its great past, when it served as the cradle of civilisation: it is my firm conviction that the countries of the Middle East can make an important contribution towards the progress in the world when they live in peace with each other.

Mr. LOVINA (Employers' delegate, Philippines)—Mr. President, I wish to repeat on behalf of the Employers' group, the congratulations on your election as President of the Conference.

Once again we are gathered here to review our activities for the past years and to discuss new measures for the improvement of labour. In going over the Report of the Director-General, we feel a great pride in being Member of the I.L.O. because it has shown once again its adaptability to the needs of the developing countries.

The complete reappraisal of the programme and structure of the I.L.O. with a view to adapting them to meet adequately the growing needs of a changing world as reported by our Director-General is a move in the right direction, for which we of the developing countries are most appreciative. I am sure this move will keep the I.L.O. in step with and even ahead of major economic developments of far-reaching consequences to the standards of living of many people around the world.

I point in particular to the co-operation and assistance extended by the I.L.O. to the recent United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. I cannot overemphasise the significance of that Conference to developing countries, but by now all of us must know its implications. For in that Conference a most encouraging and happy event occurred. The industrialised countries were made to realise the needs of developing countries in the field of international trade through the united appeal of developing countries for the stabilisation of the world prices of their primary products, and the need of increasing imports of manufactured products from the developing countries without the industrialised countries demanding trade concessions in return.

It is our high hope that the measures explored will be implemented and we trust that the I.L.O. will continue to give its assistance and support in the implementation of those recommendations adopted by the Conference on Trade and Development that call for I.L.O. action.

I wish also to commend the efforts of the I.L.O. on the industrial development and productivity projects of the developing countries. We certainly appreciate the I.L.O.'s realisation of the contribution industrialisation makes to the improvement of the standards of living of the working population of developing countries and of its impact on their social and working conditions. We further hope that the I.L.O. will continue, as its main concern, its present activities in the field of vocational training, management development and small-scale or cottage industries, which the developing countries are now building up to accelerate their economic progress.

Two items on our agenda at this session also refer directly to economic development, namely: "Agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects" and "The role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries".
In this connection permit me to say that only last year my country adopted a Land Reform Law abolishing tenancy and providing for the purchase of landed estates in excess of 75 hectares for distribution to the tillers of our land. This is a bold programme, calculated to solve once and for all our tenancy problems. This measure adopted by my country is a milestone that has broken the chain of tenancy servitude which has shackled our land tillers for many centuries. We have a Land Authority that will see to the transfer of ownership to the tillers of the land, production and marketing of more abundant crops and the availability of credit for farm equipment, materials and fertilizers. Under the Land Reform Law, a Land Bank is also created, which will finance the acquisition of landed estates for division or resale to small landholders. This should be one more proof of our concern for labour and our strong advocacy of the principles of the I.L.O.

In order to spread the co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries, my country has 223 consumers' co-operatives, 42 industrial co-operatives, 865 credit unions, a co-operative society, two co-operative federations, 32 service co-operatives and 546 agricultural co-operatives. To serve these co-operative organisations we have the distinction of having a co-operative bank, in the real concept of co-operatives, called the Philippine National Co-operative Bank. This must be a first in co-operative history; correct me if I am wrong.

It is our pride that whenever the I.L.O. scans the world horizon for any progressive labour measures and institutions, my country, the Philippines, however small it may be, can always be counted among I.L.O. Members who are actually implementing such measures and supporting the goals and aims of I.L.O.

Today, the Philippines also has outstanding laws on minimum wages, an Industrial Peace Act, known as our Magna Carta of Labor, a Workmen's Compensation Act, Women's and Child Labour Laws, and others.

As we go over the agenda of this session, we read a study on the role of women and another on young workers and that our Government will continue its concern for the working masses. I am pleased to state that my country has also provided ample safeguards and protection for our women and young workers and that our Government will continue its concern for the welfare of labour in the Philippines. The present Administration is definitely committed to the improvement of labour conditions in my country and I can safely say this because I belong to the Administration, which is run by the same party that supported me as Secretary of Labor from 1948 to 1950 when my country saw the enactment of the progressive labour measures designed to improve the lot of our working masses. I apologise for casting modesty aside, but in referring to my party and myself my sole intention is to show our efforts in adherence to the principles of the I.L.O. and our concern in its activities, which we view more than ever with interest and continuing support.

I have commended in particular the I.L.O.'s concern with the economic development of the developing countries and I would like its major activities to be focused there because of the interaction of economic forces on the standards of living of the working masses and of all the people.

Allow me to cite a very recent instance in my country which should prove the need to focus I.L.O. activities on economic development problems and to muster all the forces of labour towards these problems.

The Filipino worker, like his counterparts in the highly industrialised countries, now enjoys a guaranteed minimum wage, shorter hours of work, overtime pay, job security, maternity privileges, vacation and sick leaves, insurance, housing and salary loans, medical attention and hospital benefits, retirement pay and gratuities, profit sharing, better working conditions and other fringe benefits. But even with all these privileges and benefits, our working masses are still experiencing difficult times.

This is the result of rising prices and a tight money situation brought about by the continuous experiments of some economic and financial liberalism in my country. My government had to alleviate the hardships caused by such economic problems by increasing very recently the minimum wage laid down in our laws by as much as 50 per cent. (I repeat, 50 per cent.) and yet this is not enough. Because of the immediate impact of this increase in the minimum wage, many of our business and industrial firms will either have to lay off some of their workers or face collapse. Because of the tight money situation, corresponding measures will have to be undertaken by my Government to relax credit in order to assist and enable commercial and industrial firms to adjust to the new costs and increases, otherwise the new increase in the minimum wage will boomerang against labour in the form of more unemployment. This is going to raise prices still more, which means our workers will need more wages to keep up with the rising prices, and I hope it will not become a vicious circle that knows no end, to the destruction of our economy. Here, therefore, is a clear example of economic and labour interaction which must not be overlooked in I.L.O. activities.

I strongly urge and recommend, therefore, that we continue to direct the activities of the I.L.O. towards the economic problems of the developing countries.

After all, the solution of unemployment problems and the raising of the low standards of living of the workers, especially of the less developed or underdeveloped countries, lies in the economic development of these countries.

Moreover, concentration on economic problems will provide a great opportunity for labour and management to work together for what is good not only for themselves but for all people everywhere. There is no better occasion for representatives of government, employers and workers to sit together for the discussion of a common problem than in the I.L.O.

I submit that this session of the Conference can, as did all other sessions in the past, make an important contribution to the discussion of these and other challenges to expanding trade, investments and economic growth in the developing countries.

The discussions and activities of the I.L.O. thus concentrated on economic problems will once again demonstrate that the mutual interests of labour and management outweigh their differences and that mutual understanding must guide joint action. Certainly we will find in our discussions of these areas many frontiers for common action.

In so doing, it will not be said that labour is oblivious and does not accept its responsibilities in the problems of the economy. It is time for labour to come forward and have its views more formally co-operated with and effectively considered in economic planning and development, both at the national and the international level. I.L.O. conferences can provide the forum for candid opinion for the crystallisation of fruitful suggestions.

This recommendation does not, of course, presuppose that we should lose sight of continuing labour-management problems and the protection of workers' rights and benefits. Certainly, we can work out an agenda for both. I also very much regret that continuing labour-management problems in the structure of the I.L.O. aimed at maximising efforts in a wide variety of situations and at mobilising more fully and effectively its resources to cope with the immense problems which confront it in the fulfilment of its mission. Its regional approach coincides with the trends in various parts of the world towards regional economic co-operation.

This points to the great assistance and wonderful co-operation of the I.L.O. in our problems in the developing countries, for which we wish to express our deepest appreciation to the Officers, the Director-General and technical staff of the I.L.O. To them, we say: Congratulations—and may they keep up the good work.

Interpretation from Nyanja: Mr. CHIWANDA (Minister of Labour, Malawi)—Mr. President, first I should like to add, to those who have greeted me on your election as President and to thank you for your kind words of welcome to the delegation from my country.

During the 1964 Session of the Conference a delegate drew attention to the fact that Malawi had achieved its independence on 6 July and expressed the hope that Malawi's representatives would take part in the deliberations of this year's session of the Conference. I am sure that you and my fellow delegates here will understand how very proud I am to have the honour of addressing you today as the representative of the State of Malawi, which next month celebrates its first anniversary as an independent country.

In all, we plan the expenditure of some £44 million—a tiny amount as compared with that spent every day elsewhere in the world on human follies which benefit none and achieve nothing in terms of human progress.

Entirely novel projects in Malawi include the expansion of pulpwood plantations in the northern region, the setting up of a pulp mill and the expansion of Turkish tobacco production. Agricultural education and training is being given emphasis by the construction of an agricultural training centre; an existing farm institute is being expanded and another started. Their principal aims will be the improvement of crop production, home management, standards of nutrition and the encouragement of youth activities in support of agricultural development.

We have another important national asset which I have not so far mentioned, the renowned beauty of our country and its lakeside areas. Tourists are welcome to Malawi and to make their visits more enjoyable we have continued the development of the national parks and the Chongu Game Reserve. Tourists also need good hotels and easy and efficient communications, and the extent to which these needs are being met is under expert examination.

In spite of signs of increasing industrialisation, Malawi is likely to remain very largely an agricultural country; it is therefore upon the production of its hundreds of thousands of farmers that the economy and indeed the whole production of its Government depends. I am glad to say, however, that the general pattern of trade is showing greater activity than formerly, and industrial development is reflected in the new project for sugar production, which will provide employment for over a thousand people and lead to a saving of £500,000 per annum in foreign exchange because of the high transport element in the present import cost. This is the largest single enterprise yet embarked upon in Malawi and the area of rich and productive soil in the Lower River, known to be the most suitable for sugar production in Central Africa, was never developed in this fashion until our country obtained control of its own affairs under the leadership of our Prime Minister.

One further project which I should like to mention offers further promise for extensive agricultural development. This envisages the development of the Lower Shire Valley; it is hoped that the very helpful report prepared by a United Nations team of experts on this project will result in the allocation of provision from the United Nations Special Fund for a large pre-investment survey of the whole Shire Valley. There is great hope that the successful completion of this project will provide the catalyst needed to break up old-fashioned ideas of subsistence farming and land tenure, and replace them by an enthusiasm for modern, intensive methods of cash-crop cultivation, and for well-ordered land settlement on economically sized plots, served where necessary by irrigation. It is hoped that a pilot scheme may be started even while the survey is still under way, and that in due course the beneficial effects of the project may spread their influence throughout all agricultural areas of the country. Road improvements are already well under way; classroom capacity in schools throughout the country increased by 600 in secondary schools in 1964; by late 1965 the University of Malawi will have received its first students and the construction of the new Polytechnic Institute will be complete.

I have mentioned the importance to us of the land. The present system of land tenure is an essential prerequisite to agricultural development, in itself a dynamic, all-embracing and vital process in our economy and the life-blood of our existence, as a progressive nation, if we are to provide maximum long-term social and economic benefits for our people. Since experience in developing countries which are dependent upon their agricultural economy confirms that farming based upon economic units of land is the only sound basis for national survival and prosperity, it follows that the correct use of the land in the best interests of the people is essential. My Government has therefore introduced legislation to ensure this, enabling it to develop schemes designed to improve and intensify the rate of agricultural production by modern means of irrigation, the development of hydro-electric power, and so to produce and diversify the number of crops for export.

In accepting the obligations entailed in membership of this Organisation, my Government is fully conscious of the high ideals which motivate the I.L.O.'s awareness of the need for international co-operation; namely the achievement of social justice and a peaceful and harmonious universe. The means by which the I.L.O. can best pursue these ideals in meeting the growing needs of a changing world has been the subject of wide discussion at the last two sessions, and the Director-General's Report admirably focuses attention on the priority areas of future I.L.O. activity agreed by the previous session of the Conference: namely the development of human resources; labour relations and the growth of social institutions; and living and working conditions. I have tried to demonstrate that my Government is conscious of the need for national planning; it also warmly welcomes the I.L.O.'s awareness of the need for international planning designed to assist the progress of the underdeveloped countries. In order to ensure that assistance reaches the International Organisations and other countries by way of financial or technical aid is used to the best advantage, my Government has established at ministerial level a National Development Council, with the responsibility for ensuring that our five-year Development Programme ending in 1969 is fully co-ordinated and implemented.

My Government wishes to pay tribute to the generous help it is receiving to finance this programme of development. We are grateful also for the help which we are receiving in other directions, notably in the provision of medical staff for our health services, and in the expansion of our educational facilities. With such help, existing educational, cultural and social institutions are being maintained and enabled to extend their influence. For the same reason we are likewise grateful to those international trade union organisations who are providing financial support in education and advice toward the development of sound and responsible trade unions in Malawi and the growth of effective industrial relations procedures in the industrial and commercial spheres. It has been encouraging to me as Minister of Labour to receive recently from a representative of such an organisation an expression of gratitude for the position and assistance it received from my Government in fostering the development of the trade union movement. The trade union move-negotiated agreements with employers based on voluntary collective bargaining procedures. In recent years, therefore, the Government has had to rely on statutory wage-fixing machinery to protect persons working in the industrial and commercial sector of the economy. A wages board and six wages councils are at present responsible for the continuous review of wages and other conditions of employment throughout the country. The main aim of this machinery is to intensify crop production through better-controlled farm units, and to conserve the land for the best forms of agricultural usage, together with the needs of a growing population and a larger number of persons with secondary education, will in the future increase the demand for industrial and commercial employment. Certain areas of the country, particularly in the southern region, are already densely populated and the incidence of the population in and under employment is already growing. A far greater number of our people have in the past sought employment in the more highly industrialised neighbouring territories where they have acquired a high reputation for their industry, skills and behaviour. These territories may not continue for very long to provide opportunities for employment to the same extent as in the past and every effort must therefore be made to diversify and open up fields of employment for the many thousands who will be relying on a cash wage for their subsistence. This in itself poses problems which have not yet been fully assessed. A census of population which will be carried out in the second half of 1966 will provide a clearer indication of the extent of the population increase both in terms of the natural increase and the numbers who may by then have returned from other territories, and of the numbers who form the industrial, commercial and administrative labour force in the country. Like all underdeveloped territories, Malawi has an inadequate supply of persons with professional, technical or industrial skills; however, with continuing assistance from other countries in the provision of scholarships and bursaries for overseas study in subjects which cannot in the immediate future be provided within Malawi; with the commencement of training at sub-professional and technical levels at the Polytechnic Institute later this year; and with the introduction of well-organised schemes of apprenticeship in various industries, we can say that our problems in this field have been faced, if not yet overcome, though many of these projects are already at an advanced stage of planning or execution.

I have attempted to give a brief description of the problems with which our comparatively small but intensely vital country is preoccupied at this moment in time. We welcome, as explained in the Director-General's Report, the establishment of the new Field Department and regional organisation, since this should improve the I.L.O.'s knowledge of regional and even national problems. It should also accelerate the orientation of technical operations if the criteria adopted by the Director-General in planning the organisation of the Field Department are followed, in particular that "the total programme of the I.L.O. should truly reflect the needs of the people in each country". We in Malawi are already indebted to the I.L.O. for the assistance of a statistical expert in preparing a programme for a scheme to measure changes in the cost of living and its effect on minimum wage standards and for the opportunity to participate, and indeed to act as hosts, in Malawi, to one of the regional courses in labour administration organised last year in East and Central Africa for the training of labour officers.

My Government wishes me to convey to the Organisation its gratitude for this past assistance and to reaffirm that, though small in geographical area and in population, and relatively modest in economic achievement, it is concerned to take part in the furtherance of the principal aims of this Organisation. One of these, the achievement of social justice for all men, recognised as a fundamental right for all human beings, is of supreme importance to peoples in the underdeveloped areas of this ever-changing universe. The present disparity between the socio-economic levels of the highly developed countries and those that are now described as underdeveloped is such that only emphatic and sustained effort by the I.L.O. and similar organisations, and the necessary resolutions from this Conference to ensure that countries most greatly in need are accorded priority in programmes of research and assistance, will have the desired effect of reducing the gap.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. SOLÁ (Minister of Labour and Social Security, Argentina)—First of all, Mr. President, I should like to express my congratulations to you on your election to the presidency of this Conference. A year ago I had the honour of attending this representative assembly of the world of labour and had the honour of expressing the opinion of my Government and my country with respect to its adherence to the basic principles which make up the very raison d'être of the international organisations, that is the will of the nations to live together in peace and solidarity, and the aspiration of peoples to achieve a better world. I should like to endorse again the profound conviction of my Government that the International Labour Organisation is one of the most suitable instruments of the community of nations to achieve these high objectives; that is why the Government of the Argentine Republic wanted its Minister of Labour to be present at the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.

Today, as then, we should like to repeat our approval of the efforts which the Organisation has been making to contribute to helping the peoples of the world to receive the benefits of a civilisation which is constantly accelerating in its progress. These efforts are shown by permanent and fruitful labour in various fields, as is well indicated by the Report which the Director-General has submitted to this Conference.

Nevertheless, in spite of the work which has been achieved, there is still a long and hard road to be travelled. The conditions of injustice, poverty and privation which so distressed the illustrious statesmen who founded the Organisation still exist with varied intensity in widespread regions of the world. Even more than this, we must realise that new burning problems constantly arise in a world which is in permanent and accelerated evolution. It is logical, therefore, that concern be devoted to speeding up the task and redoubling the efforts which we make towards achievements which will be constantly more and more positive, in our universal desire to achieve higher levels of economic development and social well-being.

The Report of the Director-General has interpreted these desires and summed up the areas of agreement in the points of view expressed in the last two sessions of the Conference, and has centred its attention on the analysis of those three sectors of the activity of the Organisation which deserve our main consideration: that is, development of human resources, development of social institutions, and living and working conditions. We should like to praise the work, the new orientations which have been proposed, and the new structuring of the Office, aimed at enhancing its ability to carry out this widespread programme for which it is responsible.

With reference to this last aspect, we applaud the establishment of the Field Department and its decentralisation in the three regional services for Africa, Asia and the Middle East, and Latin America. We agree on the need for a further decentralisation of the activities of the International Labour Organisation in this field, as we also agree on the need for intensifying the co-ordination of programmes, the general control of policies to be followed and the necessary technical reorientation. At the preceding session of the Conference we expressed one concern, a concern which we repeat today: the International Labour Organisation must not wait until the governments, workers and employers bring their problems here to the Conference, but rather the Organisation must go to find the problems right in the countries, in the regions where they arise and find them, and propose solutions dictated by the circumstances peculiar to the case.

This restructuring of the Office so as to devote adequate attention to regional problems is a logical consequence of the decentralisation of its services. A matter which, we consider, must be pointed out with particular stress, and which, in our opinion, is the real purpose of the regionalisation which is being promoted, is that it corresponds to a concrete reality which the Office recognises.

The bureaucratic dispersion of its services is secondary; the essential point is that the new material reflects the reality which leads us to alter the structure of the services.

The regional communities have a great number of very clear-cut fields and very clear-cut personalities, and their development and evolution make up the synthesis which results from meeting common problems and instituting adequate procedures for solutions to these problems.

These communities make a distinct and definite picture in the general panorama of the world and show the failure of plans of a universal tendency when they have to meet the concrete realities of the various regions.

This reality not only requires special investigation of the problems particular to each regional community but also the formulation of common solutions based on a sociological analysis of the facts.

Therefore, international action must be guided by such requirements on a realistic economic, social, political and cultural plane as will permit the achievement of positive results and the affirmation of an international system to meet regional needs. For my Government, that is the true philosophy which must inspire this process of regionalisation.

In common with all countries, and especially those which, like our own, are in course of development, we are concerned and interested in human resources. In this field no one denies that development is not only a problem for economists for, in the last instance, it depends fundamentally on the quality and quantity of the manpower as well as on the extent to which the various sectors of the population understand, participate in and support the achievement of development policies. Thus my Government gives firm support to the development programme as an integral, all-inclusive system, including the economic as well as the social aspects. On this point we should like to declare emphatically that just as it is evident that there can be no improvement in social well-being without economic development, just to the same extent there can be no economic development of a continuous nature without a parallel rise in the levels of social well-being.

Since economic and social development is a common task, its success depends basically on the active and fair collaboration of the various sectors concerned, which must be based—and on this point we fully support the opinion of the Director-General—"on a frank dialogue between the State and different organised social groups, a dialogue inspired by mutual understanding, by mutual respect for each others' autonomy and freedom of action, and by a determination to reach agreement".

The Director-General pointed out that in his opinion, it is governments, in view of the preponderant part which they play in the whole process of economic and social programming, which are in the best position to stimulate the development of social organisations and make them participate efficiently in the work of general construction. That is so, and it means also that the various social groups must understand the purpose of the regionalisation and the higher interests of the community the impatient claims of one sector, the uncontrolled desire to obtain advantages or maintain special privileges to the detriment of the legitimate aspirations of the rest of the country. It is a basic principle that you cannot do without an honest desire to make a proper contribution to the task of all. There is no question but that the process of successfully carrying out democratic planning of development involves responsibilities, to a greater or lesser extent, for all sectors of a country. Above and beyond the logical discrepancies of interests and points of view there exists for all the duty of finding points of agreement regarding a common task of planning and carrying out the development of the nation.

In this undertaking the workers and their organisations have a leading part to play. Hence it is necessary to have strong, responsible and representative trade unions which express the free will of the workers and are independent of any governmental, political or other kind of control. This idea reflects my Government's approach to the problem of institutionalising the workers' movement in my country. The statutory schemes which have been in force for 20 years, with the exception of only two, provides for privileges to be given to the most representative unions which practically make them the only effective unions, and it constructs trade union life as a pyramid at the top of which there can be only one organisation representing all the workers at the national level. This system which the present Government has inherited, and of which we do not approve, doctrinally speaking, is nevertheless the reality of the moment. We therefore maintain the system and apply and will apply it honestly until an improved arrangement can be found after thorough discussion. However, this does not mean that the present trade union structure, enjoying as it does powers conferred on it by the law for social reasons, is to be converted into an instrument for action or agitation at the service of political or ideological groups. We are aware that this view may not be shared by those who live under a system of trade union diversity with equality of rights. Our case is different. One should not forget that the most representative union is converted by statute into the only representative of the whole occupational group. Nor should it be forgotten that the law tolerates only one trade union confederation with full power to speak for all the workers of the country.

This being the case, to enable party politics to enter the trade union structure would be to accept the absurdity that in a representative democracy, where the political opinions of citizens can be broadly disseminated through the parties, workers who are also citizens but who differ from the political approach of their own leaders have no other recourse than to permit the organisation which they have joined, and to which they contribute, openly or secretly to follow political currents which they themselves reject or oppose.

It is a different thing to prevent the trade union movement, seeking as it does the economic and social progress of the workers within the existing statutory and institutional framework, from seeking in the great national, political objectives. To do this, however, it is necessary that the unions should maintain their independence and should not engage in imprudent action which can compromise their unity, their continuity of action and the effectiveness of the high social functions which the modern community confers upon them.

Similarly we believe that it is necessary to combine the efforts of employers and workers on the basis of a social pact under which each side should agree on its powers and duties. This would prevent sterile tension and friction and enable national problems of interest to both sides to be solved in a spirit of peace and tolerance.

My Government considers that such an agreement is essential if a national economic and social council is to be established and to serve efficiently as a channel by which all groups in the community can participate in development planning and execution.

The practice of tripartite co-operation at the national level has been started in Argentina with the establishment of the National Minimum Wage Adjustment Board. This body, which has legislative functions, since its decisions on wage matters are binding throughout the country, has been in regular operation for a year and represents a significant step and a valuable experiment for future arrangements in this field.

We said a year ago from this platform that economic and social planning will be democratic only if it has the assent of the majority, and we added that this assent cannot be achieved if the working man does not feel that his aspirations are understood, his rights protected and his minimum needs satisfied, and unless he is convinced that he has a fair share in the product of the common effort. These ideas are still the conviction of my Government and are essential elements in our social policy.

My country, like all those which have not yet reached full development, is faced with economic and financial difficulties of a complex character which are hard to overcome. All the Government's energies are concentrated in an effort to solve these problems and find fundamental solutions which will enable the future to be faced with confidence.

In this task results are being obtained which mean a positive improvement in our workers' conditions of life. Indeed, although we have for 20 years been suffering from inflation which affects the cost of living, we can say with satisfaction that last year real wages reversed the trend of the previous two years and increased by over 6.8 per cent. At the same time the rate of unemployment fell by 35.2 per cent. in the chief industrial zone of Argentina. In the rural sector the extension of minimum wage arrangements and family allowances practically doubled the income of farm workers. These achievements strengthened the economic recovery now in course in Argentina; employment rates are rising and the gross national product has increased by 8 per cent. Recently we established a family allowances fund for dockworkers which will be administered by the persons directly concerned and this will extend the family wage system to a significant degree.

In this field results are being obtained which mean a positive improvement in our workers' conditions of life. Indeed, although we have for 20 years been suffering from inflation which affects the cost of living, we can say with satisfaction that last year real wages reversed the trend of the previous two years and increased by over 6.8 per cent. At the same time the rate of unemployment fell by 35.2 per cent. in the chief industrial zone of Argentina. In the rural sector the extension of minimum wage arrangements and family allowances practically doubled the income of farm workers. These achievements strengthened the economic recovery now in course in Argentina; employment rates are rising and the gross national product has increased by 8 per cent. Recently we established a family allowances fund for dockworkers which will be administered by the persons directly concerned and this will extend the family wage system to a significant degree. This means that practically the whole of the working class now has the sliding-scale minimum living wage and the family wage, which is also on a sliding scale:
it extends to commercial, industrial and agricultural workers, public employees, teachers, and many others.

In this way I have endeavoured to inform the Conference of the work done in our country in the past year in putting into practice the principles which have guided our social policy, thus contributing, together with the efforts of the other countries, to laying the foundation for improved social welfare in a free, peaceful and democratic world where there will no longer be any fear, ignorance or privation.

Interpretation from French: Mr. MWALU (Government delegate, Congo (Leopoldville))—First of all, Mr. President, I should like to extend to you the warmest congratulations of the delegation of the Democratic Republic of the Congo on the occasion of your election to the presidency of this Conference, and my best wishes for your success in this task.

It is with deep emotion that I thank the International Labour Organisation for giving me the opportunity to describe the concerns and achievements in the social field of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which I have the honour to represent on behalf of our Prime Minister and Minister of Labour who, otherwise engaged, greatly regrets not being able to attend this Conference.

Since my country achieved independence, very close ties and frank co-operation have developed between the I.L.O. and the Congo, and we welcome this. Two years ago the Organisation was faced with the need to reorganise its structure and programmes in order to adapt itself to the extraordinary evolution of the modern world and to the ever-more complex tasks it had to undertake on behalf of the developing countries. The resolution on the programme and structure of the Organisation adopted by the Conference on 9 July 1964 reflected our directives in this regard.

I should like to express to the Director-General of the International Labour Office my Government's satisfaction with the Report which he has presented to us this year. Our warm congratulations and thanks go also to the staff of the Office who have helped to provide us with comprehensive and very good documentation.

The Second African Regional Conference in Addis Ababa enabled us to formulate, in regard to the African Continent, views that reflect the needs peculiar to us. We are happy to benefit from the fund of knowledge accumulated by the I.L.O. in all the vast fields that relate to the problems of labour, but, in order to be fruitful, this experience must be adapted to our practical problems, which require to be defined within the framework of the realities and prospects of the African Continent. It is not necessary to say that the methods and means to be applied must be carefully studied.

We also appreciated during the Conference in Addis Ababa the statements of the African representatives, who, by providing information respecting their countries, contributed greatly to the success of the work of the Conference.

The African contribution within the Governing Body is not small either, and I am sure that it will grow further in years to come. I note with satisfaction the importance attached by the Director-General in his Report to greater representation of Africa not only within the Governing Body itself but also in the administration and personnel of the Office. I should like to welcome the appointment of Mr. Abbas Ammar to the post of Deputy Director-General and of Mr. Tevoedjre to the post of regional co-ordinator. We are convinced that the decision to fill responsible posts on the basis of equitable geographical representation of the member States of our Organisation will emphasise its universal character and thus lead to the more effective application of our various principles on a world scale.

In addition, the wish expressed by the Director-General, aware as he is of the extent of the tasks entrusted to the Office, to decentralise its programmes and policies, is a sign of the speeding-up of the assistance of the Office in resolving our problems. It seems to me to be indispensable to give regional conferences and regional advisory committees more opportunity to establish—with the assistance of and in agreement with Office experts—the order of priorities at the regional level, or even at a national level, in the light of our needs and social problems and of the results of technical co-operation programmes. Moreover, it would seem proper that at each session of the regional conferences and the regional advisory committees there should be an item on the agenda permitting a general discussion on the scope and results of the principal technical co-operation programmes carried out in the region concerned. The adoption of such procedures would permit the drawing up of concrete programmes better adapted to the needs of each area and would make the activities of the I.L.O. more realistic in our regions.

The preparation and implementation of these regional programmes should, however, be co-ordinated at the highest level in order to ensure the unity of the aims our Organisation pursues.

Furthermore, it is indispensable in practice that our Organisation and Office find fresh formulas for co-operation and co-ordination of their activities with those of the other specialised agencies of the United Nations. We know that a real effort has been and is continuing to be made in this regard, but we cannot help regretting that sometimes the specialised agencies of the United Nations waste part of their energies in useless and unproductive competition instead of finding from the outset a friendly formula for co-operation and collaboration, to the greater advantage of the nations they are helping.

The problem of the development of human resources in connection with economic development has received our special attention. We are convinced of the need to integrate ever more closely policies and programmes for the development of human resources with plans for economic development. Such integration can only be achieved through close co-operation between governments, trade unions and employers' organisations.

The Democratic Republic of the Congo (Leopoldville), conscious of the importance of this collaboration and the excellence of the aims pursued, has provided, in its Constitution dated 1 August 1964, for the setting up, along­side the central and provincial authorities, of economic and social councils composed of rep­resentatives of the principal economic and social sectors of activity. These councils have the task of studying the main problems in this field. They must be consulted by the legis­lature, and they give their views on every plan, every programme and all draft legislation of an economic or social nature.

Any legislation adopted without consulta­tion of these councils is null and void except in urgent cases specifically provided for. In addition the councils may, on their own initia­tive, call the attention of the Government to reforms which they think might promote the economic and social development of the coun­try. They may assign one of their members to state before the legislature their views on any draft legislation submitted to them.

These constitutional measures have been taken in response to the Office’s desire to pro­ mote the development of social institutions. They are aimed at extending and strengthening the role of truly representative employers’ and workers’ organisations, which will thus be able to play an active and constructive part in the development of the community and in improving the conditions of the worker both in the undertaking and in the community. The im­plementation of this programme and the achievement of its objectives imply the need for additional training for those persons who, at all levels, are directly concerned with labour­management relations, so that they may be better equipped to assume their responsibilities, the complexity of which is ever-increasing.

Within the framework of its policy of the free development of trade unions, the Demo­cratic Republic of the Congo (Leopoldville) has organised free elections within the various undertakings so as to enable the workers to choose their union representatives. About a dozen unions were competing for the votes of the workers. To complement the Government’s action, we would welcome the active participa­tion of the Office in helping our unions to train their personnel. An expert of the Office came recently to study this problem on the spot. We hope it will soon be possible to draft a pro­gramme of action and that the execution of this programme will be not long deferred. Soon a law will guarantee trade union freedoms and will replace the requirement of prior approval, which was the rule in the colonial era, by a simple declaration.

If I stress the need for training union per­sonnel, it is because I wish to emphasise the importance of training and preparation of the workers in general. I think that inadequate occupational training is a major cause of under­development. In this field we are faced with a crushing burden.

I congratulate the Office on the occasion of the coming inauguration of the Turin Centre, which will be a major contribution to the whole problem of vocational training. We would like to thank the member States which have made a financial contribution to this fine undertak­ing. I hope I may be able next year to increase the modest contribution of my country to the Centre.

In the Congo the I.L.O. has already provided us with dynamic assistance in organising voca­tional training centres for office workers and automobile mechanics. The success of these centres and the appreciation expressed by em­ployers show that this formula is a good one and that this initiative should be broadened. Act No. 206 of 29 June 1964 set up the National Vocational Training Institute to co-ordinate all activities in this field. We would like to appeal to the I.L.O. and specialised agencies of the United Nations and the Special Fund so that means may be provided to speed up this whole action. The programme undertaken is highly productive and fits very harmoniously into the over-all development plan that has been sug­gested for our country by an international com­mittee of experts of the European Economic Community within the framework of the assistance given by the European Develop­ment Fund.

We would like to implement a genuine strategy for the development of human re­sources, for we believe that economic expansion must serve the achievement of social aims. Through constitutional measures we have affirmed our determination in this field and we believe that thereby we are implementing the policy recommended by our Conference. The labour inspectorates will shortly be re­formed under special legislation, and a national employment service and labour tribunals will be set up. However, it would be useful if experts from this Office could draw up a coherent programme with a view to co­ordinating these various activities. This would lead to a true programme for development of social institutions.

This brings me to international labour standards. I am fully aware of the great value of these standards, which are the best guarantee that our action will be effective, but we must recognise that several of these standards, conceived by and for highly indus­trialised countries, are poorly adapted to the present situation in developing countries. This prevents us from ratifying certain Conventions and applying certain Recommendations, which inhibits the promotion of our social institutions. It would be highly desirable if the proposals of the Working Party set up within the Governing Body could shortly be given practical effect.

Before ending, I would like, on behalf of my Government, to thank the Office for the enlightened and dynamic assistance of its experts who have helped us to perfect our social legislation and to speed up our develop­ment. Thanks to their help we have this year proclaimed a new law on hire of services, and regulations to implement it will shortly be issued. Further Bills have been signed regarding collective agreement and the settlement of labour disputes. Furthermore, as I have already said, studies and Bills have been prepared which will lead shortly to the establish­ment of a national employment service with placement offices at the national and provincial levels and a seamen’s placement office, and to the organisation of labour courts. The statutory provisions concerning the powers of the labour inspectorate have been amended and a former administrative law inspectorate will be specially established by ordinance under the general civil service regulations. Finally, the laws on hours of work have been amended, and a Bill concerning representation of personnel in state or semi-state enterprises and of teachers is before the Government. This constitutes an important addition to our Labour Code. Experts from the Office have since 1960 been organising advanced training courses for labour supervisors and inspectors. A vast programme of rural integration and promotion within the co-operative movement is being carried out in various regions of the Congo. These activities of I.L.O. experts are of very great importance to us for we know that all our development efforts depend on the successful participation of the rural masses.

Finally, I would like to make a pressing appeal to all the countries represented here to support the efforts of the Government of the Congo with a view to establishing order, the rule of law and of peace. The workers of my country have been the innocent victims of too many political disputes imported and aggravated from abroad. It is thanks to the efforts of all the peoples of goodwill that we will be able to put an end to the sufferings of our people and improve their lot, which is the primary ideal we have been pursuing since we attained independence. I hope the countries still suffering under the burden of colonialism and apartheid will soon attain independence and be able to join our Organisation and sit in our midst.

(The Conference adjourned at 1 p.m.)
FIFTH SITTING

Friday, 4 June 1965, 3 p.m.

President : Mr. Rosy

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from Arabic: Mr. ISMAIL (Minister of Information and Labour, Sudan)—Mr. President, allow me to congratulate you on behalf of the Sudanese delegation on the confidence bestowed upon you by your election to the presidency of this Conference.

It gives me great pleasure and honour to convey to you, in the name of the revolution of October the 21st, which has changed the course of history in my country, the greetings of the people and Government of the Sudan. The Sudan has been subjected, during a considerable period of time, to a military dictatorship that confiscated liberties and distorted the true image of the Sudanese people, who are known to be truly democratic and basically socialistic. Forces of evil and imperialism conspired to maintain the military régime for a period of six years of corruption, economic deterioration and denial of social justice to the Sudanese people.

This was the situation until the “miraculous” October Revolution took place. People have since differed in explaining the phenomena of this unique revolution. The question has been posed as to how an unarmed people, deprived of the freedom of organisation and combination, could do away with a military dictatorship disposing of all kinds of armament and supported by imperialistic countries.

The answer to the question, it appears to me, is inherent in the nature of the people who brought about this miraculous revolution, a characteristic shared by all people affected by the historic awakening to the “wind of change” that swept over all nations after the Second World War.

The correct explanation of the phenomenon of the October Revolution is, in short, the total rejection by the people of any form of oppression or compulsion and their determination to safeguard the dignity and freedom of man. It is my belief that this explanation is true for most of the people’s revolutions that took place in the period following the Second World War.

History has proved, and the experience of nations has shown, that any government that does not place the dignity and freedom of its people first and foremost is doomed to failure and oblivion. The spirit of the October Revolution had for a long time been engendered in the hearts and minds of my countrymen, in individuals and groups, until the 21st of October, when the first spark that kindled the conflagration started from the campus of Khartoum University. Unanimous and immediate response from all categories of the nation was evident. The political strike declared in Khartoum was promptly carried out throughout the country.

The ingenious weapon of political strike devised by the Sudanese people has succeeded in defeating the weapons of destruction and oppression.

The six years of harassing experience of compulsion and oppression undergone by my people compels me to address all nations from this rostrum and request them to consider carefully and ponder deeply before recognising any military coup designed by adventurers to do away with democratic parliamentary rule. I am keen and anxious that other nations should be spared the bitter experience imposed upon us by the force of arms. I am also anxious that the benefits of true democracy which have been regained by the Sudanese nation should not be denied to any other nation. My country is now enjoying the benefits of democracy and freedom; the elections of our Constituent Assembly are almost complete; the Assembly is to convene during the second week of this month to elect a parliamentary government and to lay down a democratic Constitution for the country.

Having given this quick survey of the Sudanese revolution I would like to mention briefly the charter of this revolution, which was drawn up as a true representation of the people’s demands and has been put into effect by the transitional Government of which I have the honour to be a member.

The national charter in question contains the following nine principles:

1. To put an end to military rule.
2. To bestow liberty and freedom on all people, e.g. freedom of the press, and the right of free expression of opinion and free association and combination.
3. To end the state of emergency and to abolish all laws which hinder the practice of freedom in all parts of the country where there is no danger to the disturbance of the peace.

4. To secure independence of the judiciary.

5. To ensure the independence of the University.

6. To set free all political detainees and prisoners, both civil and military.

7. To commit the transitional Government to support a foreign policy resisting colonialism and military pacts.

8. To establish a High Court of Appeal of not less than five judges to take over the judicial and administrative duties of the Chief Justice.

9. To set up a committee to draft new laws which are relevant to our traditions and customs.

Thru you observe that these principles of our charter are identical in their content and implore with the principles and rules of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation, which centres around the maintenance of human dignity, peace, and the freedom of man. It was, therefore, a major duty of the Revolutionary Government to maintain freedom of association and organisation as laid down by your eminent Organisation. In its endeavours to maintain social justice the Revolutionary Government has taken steps to combat unemployment by the immediate execution of productive schemes, thus providing welcome opportunities for employment. This is in addition to extending agrarian reform to the private sector, by applying the principle of equal partnership which is practised in the schemes in the public sector. The public sector, I would mention, owns all the major utility service units, and over 95 per cent. of the irrigated and cultivated land. The Government is anxious that all people engaged in agriculture, who represent more than 80 per cent. of the economically active population, should receive the same treatment as those engaged in government schemes, i.e. 50 per cent. of the produce of the land should go to the cultivator and the other 50 per cent. to the owner of the land who also provides irrigation. This is a time-honoured tradition among the people living along the Nile Valley.

Our great Gezira scheme of over 1 million acres for cotton is run on this basis of equal sharing; the additional crops of durra and wheat grown in the Gezira are a bonus to the tenant. In all other government schemes—an aggregate of another 2 million acres—this principle of equal sharing is observed.

Work is now diligently progressing on the clearance of the area around the Roseries Dam, which is to be completed early next year. The area to be cleared and irrigated by this dam is 1,800,000 acres. In this area it is planned to grow crops other than cotton, for the sake of diversification, and so as not to depend on cotton as the sole cash crop.

There are extensive opportunities and lucrative possibilities in the Sudan, but, as in the case of other developing countries, we need technical assistance, particularly from the International Labour Organisation, to enable us initially, and primarily, to develop our economic and human resources. I am therefore pleased to find in the Director-General's Report an enormous stress on the development of human resources, through training in different aspects aiming at the acceleration of the economic development of the countries concerned.

I also observe with relief the great concern of the Director-General regarding the workers' conditions of service in the different fields of economic activity, which proves the enthusiasm of the Organisation in the implementation of its Constitution in which it is stated that lasting international peace cannot be achieved unless social justice is secured and humane conditions of service are adhered to throughout the world.

I sincerely believe that these principles will be given the careful discussion they merit by the respective committees of this Conference. I only wish to point out strongly and repeatedly that the mission of this Organisation and the work that it performs, here in Geneva, will never reach the deprived countries which need these services unless the Organisation endeavours enthusiastically to implement the resolution it adopted on decentralisation; that is by the establishment of some of its permanent offices in other continents and in underdeveloped areas. Frequent regional conferences should be held to investigate the problems of each area in the area itself, so as to achieve practical solutions to the producers' problems and to make an honest endeavour to implement the principles of social justice embodied in the Constitution of the Organisation.

You may have observed that I have tried to stress in my speech our absolute belief in the dignity of the human being and his unquestionable rights, as a foundation for international peace and an insurance for the realisation of social justice in general. You may also have observed that this principle constitutes the deep theme of our revolution in the Sudan, as well as of the peoples' revolutions the world over.

On this understanding I condemn any challenge to, or degradation of, human dignity; and on the same understanding I request this Conference to condemn the policy of apartheid, forced labour and the violation of human rights, which is practised by the Republic of South Africa, Portugal in its colonies, and by the British in the occupied Southern Arabian regions.

Therefore, this Organisation should have the right to deprive any Member from participating in this Conference if it has been proved that his Government practises racial discrimination or forced labour or endangers human dignity in any form.

Interpretation from French : Mr. PANA (Government delegate, Togo)—Before speaking on the Report of the Director-General, which deals this year with the main sectors of the programmes of the I.L.O. and of international labour standards, both on behalf of my Government and personally I should like to congratulate the President most warmly on his election to the highest office of this Conference.
With regard to the first point in the Report, I have noticed with considerable satisfaction that the Director-General highlights the need for a closer association of human and economic progress and economic expansion must advance together and that universal effort is required in order to achieve such harmony.

Only a few days ago at the opening of a trade union seminar in my country I said that employers are often a little too inclined to see only the financial aspects of problems, whilst the workers are inclined to consider only the social aspects. At that time my country is starting its first economic and social five-year plan we believe that it is essential that all human resources be fully used. I therefore completely approve of the Director-General's statement that in the developing countries it is necessary to explore the best policies of employment, to improve manpower and to "concentrate on the training of certain key sections of the population who can make the biggest contribution to economic development". However, to perfect the knowledge of manpower will hardly help if such skilled manpower can find no market for its services. There are certain States where the differences in the various educational and vocational systems might lead to a situation where some countries could temporarily lend teachers or doctors; others could provide building or engineering technicians; and others could provide non-skilled labour. This would depend on bilateral agreements between these States and would call for prior study of a joint programme of economic and social development.

But I also think that the I.L.O. should study the problems of complementary manpower on a regional level, bearing in mind the complementary nature of economies, especially when adjacent countries are not grouped within a single regional organisation.

Therefore, in order effectively to gear human resources to economic expansion, the International Labour Organisation should study the manpower needs of each State, at all levels from the engineer to the labourer, in the light of the geographical situation of countries—especially when they have common frontiers—and, even more, the resemblance or the diversity of their economic activities.

The I.L.O. must of course be able to rely on our co-operation; indeed, it can do nothing if the countries which a few years ago were called underdeveloped and which are now called developing countries do not desire economic and social expansion. I should like to address myself to the problems of human resources and economic development specifically. I think it would be harmful, indeed dangerous, for the young developing countries to speak of competition from the point of view of production, but it would be desirable to agree on the complementary aspects of our national economies. My Government has understood this. We have set up a joint study committee with our neighbour Dahomey, which will tackle problems with a view to finding joint solutions both economically and socially. I think that on the national level we should not ask for the assistance of the I.L.O. with regard to the training of personnel and the organisation of co-operatives, etc., in other words for the solution of our economic and social problems, until we have reached agreement on the programme suggested by the I.L.O. at regional level. Then, knowing what we are and bearing in mind our output possibilities, also knowing what each of us needs in terms of technicians—skilled or unskilled manpower to meet our needs—we might present coherent programmes to the I.L.O. so that it may help us to coordinate our human and material resources.

If we are firmly decided to follow the path that we assigned to ourselves on joining the United Nations, we cannot manage economic and social problems from a solely national angle. We must help one another, rich countries and poor countries; the harmonisation of international relationships depends on the solution of these economic problems and, above all, the human problems. That is why I attach so much importance to the question of racial non-discrimination.

Togo engages in no discrimination as regards either wages or social security benefits; that is why we condemn the policy of forced labour, as practised in certain countries like the African territories administered by Portugal, and we make a personal appeal to the authorities in those countries to give up these inhuman policies. We would ask the International Labour Organisation, through the Director-General, to do everything in its power to put an end to such practices, which represent a deliberate violation of the Constitution of our Organisation.

With regard to social institutions and the role they should play in the development of the resources of a country, I quite agree with the Director-General when he says that the task of economic and social development should be carried out with the active participation of all interested parties and that this participation should be based on a frank dialogue between the State and different organised social groups, a dialogue inspired by mutual understanding, by mutual respect for one another's autonomy and freedom of action and by a determination to reach agreement.

That is why it would be most desirable if we could organise joint seminars which would be attended by workers and employers, for both are in need of appropriate training.

I thought that it might be useful to insist on this point, which I regard as most important, because there is no doubt that the participation of the employers and workers in the planning of a national economy can hardly be effective unless both groups have become aware of their responsibilities, that is to say unless they put the common benefit before their private advantage.

I think that it would be desirable for the I.L.O. to pay attention to the problem of the joint education of the employer and the worker in the developing countries with a view to improving labour-management relations.

Concerning the I.L.O.'s programme as regards conditions of life and work, I think that no part of it should in any way be reduced. I do not think that one can, in my opinion, give the assistance of the I.L.O. in this regard as a secondary question—and this seems to be so implied in the Report—" the adaptation of working conditions and the working environment to local conditions and to the living habits and qualifications of the labour force.

Further research and discussion in this field would be of great use to the countries of the so-called uncommitted countries, because the solutions which will be found will greatly affect economic expansion and social progress.

As regards the second point of the programme, I think, together with the Director-General and most member States, that it is necessary to set up a permanent committee to review obsolete Conventions and Recommendations, it being recognised that this committee could in no case amend the standards and fundamental rights that are laid down in the Conventions and Recommendations.

Mr. MAGEZI (Minister of Housing and Labour, Uganda).—Before I avail myself of this opportunity you have accorded me to address this world forum I wish to congratulate you, Mr. Chairman, on your election to the presidency of the Conference. Your election demonstrates the confidence the delegates have in your esteemed person and I trust that your wide experience will guide the deliberations of the Conference to a successful conclusion. This is a great tribute to your personal qualities and an honour to your country.

It is a pleasure to me to convey to you and the distinguished delegates warm greetings from the Government and people of Uganda, and their wishes for a successful Conference.

I wish also to congratulate, on behalf of my Government and the people of Uganda, our sister countries Zambia, Malta, Gambia and the Republic of Yemen on attaining independence and becoming full Members of this Organisation. It is my conviction that the bigger this Organisation becomes the more it gathers momentum to spread its influence into national laws and practices throughout the world in the cause of social justice.

Once again we are assembled here in a tripartite Conference to strengthen and promote the deliberations of this august international body whose objectives are designed to promote lasting world peace based on social justice. I trust that my colleagues will agree with me that we are as brothers and sisters in a family to solve those problems which are common to us all. With this objective we shall rise in solidarity to fight ignorance, disease and poverty, wherever they exist; create confidence among men of all nations; struggle unreservedly for complete extermination of the inhuman policy of apartheid in the Republic of South Africa; and eradicate colonialism in Angola and the Portuguese territories of Mozambique and Guinea, where a reign of terror prevails. When I say this I really mean it. I noticed this morning the delegation from Portugal laughing whenever African delegates spoke here about Portuguese policies in Africa. I insist that this is a matter which should not be treated with laughter. It is our duty to assist in liberating our brothers who are being subjected to white minority rule in Southern Rhodesia. In this connection I wish to make a special appeal to all delegates at this Conference to use their utmost influence with the Rhodesian Government to abandon its threat of unilateral seizure of independence and to expel half-a-million citizens of Malawi and Zambia working in that territory if Britain applies economic sanctions. Such action of seizing independence is unconstitutional and in this Organisation we cannot regard it as a light matter. In this sense, this Organisation should resolve in no uncertain terms to impress upon the British Government that Britain has an inescapable responsibility to ensure that the liberty of over 4 million indigenous Africans is not sold in the interests of preserving the human ties of kith and kin in Rhodesia.

We have before us important items on the agenda for discussion: the Special Report of the Director-General on the Application of the Declaration concerning the Policy of Apartheid of the Republic of South Africa; the Director-General's Report, Parts I and II; the employment of young persons in mines of all kinds; the employment of women with family responsibilities; agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects; and the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries. Some of these items have been discussed in this hall.

As regards the policy of apartheid in the Republic of South Africa, I publicly declare that this régime is deplored by Uganda and is regarded as a threat to world peace. It calls for attention and action by those countries which sincerely advocate humanitarian policies so as to save the lives of millions of people who are subjected to the yoke of tyranny and brutality. This problem is not new to this Organisation's deliberations. In 1963 the proceedings and success of the 47th Session of the International Labour Conference were marred by controversial issues over the attendance of delegates from South Africa at this Conference. Uganda, in agreement with other peace-loving nations, was forced to withdraw from the Conference. The Republic of South Africa, instead of abandoning this abhorrent policy of apartheid, decided to withdraw from this Organisation. Probably she thought that the move was a wise one and that it would put an end to the matter. In 1964 this matter was discussed, and as a result a declaration concerning the policy of apartheid of the Republic of South Africa, and Instruments Nos. 2 and 3 of 1964 for the amendment of the Constitution, were adopted by this Conference. I am glad to announce that the two instruments have been ratified by Uganda.

As a result of the Declaration adopted last year we now have before us the Special Report of the Director-General on the application of the Declaration. The report is illustrative and instructive. It highlights the past and present evils of the policy of apartheid, and I should like to congratulate the Director-General on this excellent report, despite the practical problems, such as the absence of reports or replies from the authorities of the Republic of South Africa. However, the report fails in one aspect, namely that it appears to be theoretical in so far as it proposes that the solution to the problem is the establishment in South Africa of a society which respects the freedom and dignity of all human beings, irrespective of
It is the wish of the Uganda Government to implement development programmes. It should be made clear that no authority on this earth can enslave the minds of people indefinitely. It is therefore for this Conference and the Governments of States Members to consider political, economic and military measures to supplement the Director-General’s proposals. I do not consider it will serve any useful purpose to refer this matter again to the Governing Body for further analysis as this would only turn this Organisation into a debating society.

I now turn to Part II of the Director-General’s Report where, in the Introduction, he points out that during the past two years the I.L.O. has been engaged in a complete reappraisal of its programme and structure with a view to adapting them to meet adequately the growing needs of a changing world and in order to adjust its methods of approach to the requirements of a wide variety of situations. It will be recalled that many speakers at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General has informed States Members of the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments in which the various activities of the International Labour Office have been regrouped under sufficiently broad and yet precise categories, and mention has also been made of the creation of three administrative units embodying the above categories. We have also been informed of the regionalisation and decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and programmes in the various regions. I am glad to note that the Director-General has seriously considered and taken steps to implement the resolutions of the African Labour Ministers’ Conference held in Cairo in December 1963 and subsequently reiterated at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General has informed States Members of the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments in which the various activities of the International Labour Office have been regrouped under sufficiently broad and yet precise categories, and mention has also been made of the creation of three administrative units embodying the above categories. We have also been informed of the regionalisation and decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and programmes in the various regions. I am glad to note that the Director-General has seriously considered and taken steps to implement the resolutions of the African Labour Ministers’ Conference held in Cairo in December 1963 and subsequently reiterated at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General has informed States Members of the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments in which the various activities of the International Labour Office have been regrouped under sufficiently broad and yet precise categories, and mention has also been made of the creation of three administrative units embodying the above categories. We have also been informed of the regionalisation and decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and programmes in the various regions. I am glad to note that the Director-General has seriously considered and taken steps to implement the resolutions of the African Labour Ministers’ Conference held in Cairo in December 1963 and subsequently reiterated at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General has informed States Members of the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments in which the various activities of the International Labour Office have been regrouped under sufficiently broad and yet precise categories, and mention has also been made of the creation of three administrative units embodying the above categories. We have also been informed of the regionalisation and decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and programmes in the various regions. I am glad to note that the Director-General has seriously considered and taken steps to implement the resolutions of the African Labour Ministers’ Conference held in Cairo in December 1963 and subsequently reiterated at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General has informed States Members of the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments in which the various activities of the International Labour Office have been regrouped under sufficiently broad and yet precise categories, and mention has also been made of the creation of three administrative units embodying the above categories. We have also been informed of the regionalisation and decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and programmes in the various regions. I am glad to note that the Director-General has seriously considered and taken steps to implement the resolutions of the African Labour Ministers’ Conference held in Cairo in December 1963 and subsequently reiterated at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General has informed States Members of the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments in which the various activities of the International Labour Office have been regrouped under sufficiently broad and yet precise categories, and mention has also been made of the creation of three administrative units embodying the above categories. We have also been informed of the regionalisation and decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and programmes in the various regions. I am glad to note that the Director-General has seriously considered and taken steps to implement the resolutions of the African Labour Ministers’ Conference held in Cairo in December 1963 and subsequently reiterated at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General has informed States Members of the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments in which the various activities of the International Labour Office have been regrouped under sufficiently broad and yet precise categories, and mention has also been made of the creation of three administrative units embodying the above categories. We have also been informed of the regionalisation and decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and programmes in the various regions. I am glad to note that the Director-General has seriously considered and taken steps to implement the resolutions of the African Labour Ministers’ Conference held in Cairo in December 1963 and subsequently reiterated at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General has informed States Members of the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments in which the various activities of the International Labour Office have been regrouped under sufficiently broad and yet precise categories, and mention has also been made of the creation of three administrative units embodying the above categories. We have also been informed of the regionalisation and decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and programmes in the various regions. I am glad to note that the Director-General has seriously considered and taken steps to implement the resolutions of the African Labour Ministers’ Conference held in Cairo in December 1963 and subsequently reiterated at the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference indicated that there was need for this reappraisal of the programme and structure of the Organisation to meet these needs necessitated by the growth of the Organisation and development programmes in the developing countries.
gone a long way towards improving relations between employees and employers. An Industrial Court has been established to supplement the existing arbitration machinery. A Trade Union Act was passed in the Uganda National Assembly a few days before my departure for this Conference. This aims at improving the administration of the trade unions, and establishes the right of registered trade unions to recognition, thereby giving protection to the workers as provided under the relevant Conventions, and provides for the operation of the check-off system.

Finally, on behalf of the Government and people of Uganda I wish to assure you once more of our confidence in this Organisation and the United Nations and to pledge our support for the principles for which they stand. Again, I wish your deliberations every success.

Mr. HERNANDEZ (Workers' delegate, Philippines)—Allow me at the outset, in my capacity as Workers' delegate from the Philippines, to extend to you the heartiest felicitations and warmest greetings from the Philippine Trades Union Council in particular and Filipino workers in general. The workers of the Philippines are watching with breathless anticipation the things we do here, what measures we deliberate upon and what programmes and policies are evolved. To the workers of the Philippines the resolutions and Recommendations that will be approved during this annual Conference of the I.L.O. will go a long way towards improving their lot in the face of the problems that confront them in the pursuit of higher standards of living, better working conditions and the attainment of peace.

I am happy to say, after looking over the Report of the Director-General, that the Filipino workers will not be disappointed. The Report of the Director-General is a comprehensive document; it is very enlightening; it specifies in detail the problems that face us and the solutions that might be applied thereto. I am particularly struck by that portion of the Director-General's Report which pertains to living and working conditions because I am quite impressed by the manner and the style in which the matter is presented. I quote from the Report: "As a result of increased concern with urgent problems of economic and social development, the Members of the Organisation have stressed the needs of developing countries in respect of human resources development and the strengthening of basic social institutions. This does not mean, however, that the wide range of questions I have raised in my Reports to the last two sessions of the Conference concerning the status and conditions of the worker should be neglected. What is important is that in all activities of the I.L.O. careful attention should be given to assisting developing countries in laying the foundations upon which rapid economic growth and social progress can develop in a balanced way."

I have gone to the length of quoting this portion of the Director-General's Report because what he said therein is of vital concern to the Philippines. I believe it is applicable not only to the workers of emerging countries in Asia and elsewhere. Our workers are beset by multifarious problems—problems which at other times and in other areas would have been enough to drive workers to dejection and desperation.

As a result of an underdeveloped economy, which is a carry-over from the past colonial status of our country, opportunities for employment have been quite low; naturally, wages likewise are low, for the worker, from a desire to hang on to something which enables him to support his brood, will accept starvation wages. Because of the imbalance of trade, commerce and industry have been quite timid, notwithstanding the vast quantities of raw materials available to us.

This year the wage floor has been raised by legislation from 4 to 6 pesos a day, which is equivalent to a 50 per cent. wage increase. At first sight this appears to be a great boon to the workers but after the enactment of this law many managements started policies of retrenchment. This amendment to our new minimum wage law has been seized upon by anti-labour employers as a convenient excuse to carry on their war of attrition against the trade movement. Notwithstanding this, the trade union movement in the Philippines has been holding the fort valiantly against anti-union machinations. But sometimes this valorous action has been frustrated by the lack of full consciousness on the part of many workers as regards unionism. Many of the workers find it convenient, at the prodding of anti-labour bosses, to be fence-sitters. The task of organisation, therefore, has occupied many labour organisations in my country—a project which, in addition to other factors, accounts for the low state of union finances.

It can be seen from the foregoing that there is soundness and validity in the observation of the Director-General that in the emerging countries such as the Philippines there is a supreme need for strengthening the basic social structure as a precondition of the laying of "foundations upon which rapid economic growth and social progress can develop in a balanced way."

It is a basic truth that we live today in precarious times. Everywhere there is the unsettling clash of ideologies, overt and covert. Everywhere there is the competition of the drive for power among individuals and among nations or groups of nations. Everywhere there is the awesome threat to means of livelihood posed impersonally by population explosions. And it must be recognised that because of the unprecedented advances in the scientific and technological fields we all live under the horrifying shadow of mass annihilation.

All these frightening conditions of our time should impel us to reappraise our positions. In the context of our struggle based on ideologies that call for social emancipation, the direction of change has to be towards social justice for the masses of the poor in many lands and especially in emerging nations. We have to enlist in our cause the vast dormant strength of the millions of poor if we are to have more dependable reserves than the rival ideologies can command. And we can only awaken the millions to a sense of their identity and drive the masses by giving them concrete and substantial stakes in the social and economic order of peace and plenty that we are trying to build. Once the important subjects which my country finds hopes of seeing universal labour problems of an atmosphere of peace and tranquillity in that I should now like to take up some of
It is thus with confidence and with satisfaction signs of evolution and continuous progress which have to be examined and solved by this Organisation, taking into account the constant provides an excellent analysis of the problems
a remarkable breadth and depth of view, pro-recognised in the report on the activities of the Turkish workers' associations have been done this successfully. I feel that it is my duty able to make use of the rights they have ac-and the Turkish workers' associations have been tion adopted by the Grand National Assembly state a lockout are fully applied. The legislament has really taken concrete form; the the political and social fields, which in turn depends on a healthy and stable economy.

If, in any given country, the relationships between capital and labour are not established in accordance with the principles of social justice, if the interests of an individual—such as those of a simple worker—are not safeguarded with the same respect as the major interests of society, then efforts towards establishing within that country political and social peace are doomed to failure.
We are convinced that stable governments or independent trade unions.
I am happy to be able to state here with satisfaction and pride that the Turkish worker and the Turkish workers' associations have been able to make use of the rights they have acquired, not as dangerous weapons but as a means of constructive sanctions, and they have doing this successfully. I feel that it is my duty to stress here the positive role and the understanding attitude of the employers' associations, which have made it possible to achieve this happy result.

If I have brought up this aspect of the problem it is in order to make clear that the fact that our labour has acquired much more liberal rights has not given rise in Turkey to internal complications or disturbances; it has not had an unfaavourable effect on our rate of growth, and has not even slowed it down; on the contrary, it has led to fruitful results in many unions.

We can distinguish clearly from this Report
the signs of evolution and continuous progress successfully shown by our Organisation from one year to the next. This strengthens our hopes of seeing universal labour problems
solved in a satisfactory way in the near future.
It is thus with confidence and with satisfaction
that I should now like to take up some of the important subjects which my country finds particular interest to it.

For more than a century the people of Turkey have been endeavouring to develop democratic institutions. To this end, the proper functioning of any democratic system depends on a very large extent on the existence of an atmosphere of peace and tranquillity in

Interpretation from French: Mr. CAGLAY-ANGIL (Minister of Labour, Turkey)—First of all, Mr. President, I should like to address to you my most sincere congratulations on your election to the presidency of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.
There is for me great satisfaction in seeing a distinguished representative of a friendly sister country in this high post. I wish this session of the Conference all possible success under your enlightened leadership.
The Report of the Director-General, which has been prepared with great clarity, and with a remarkable breadth and depth of view, provides an excellent analysis of the problems which have to be examined and solved by this Organisation, taking into account the constant changes in the world situation.
We can distinguish clearly from this Report
the signs of evolution and continuous progress
successfully shown by our Organisation from one year to the next. This strengthens our hopes of seeing universal labour problems
solved in a satisfactory way in the near future.
It is thus with confidence and with satisfaction
that I should now like to take up some of the important subjects which my country finds of particular interest to it.

For more than a century the people of Turkey have been endeavouring to develop democratic institutions. To this end, the proper functioning of any democratic system
depends on a very large extent on the existence of an atmosphere of peace and tranquillity in and rules in this connection do not mean the levelling of all obstacles which lie in the path of attaining the objective we have set ourselves. If a social order finds a field of application contrary to its spirit and philosophy—that is, if the persons directly interested in, or responsible for, the application of the new order choose the wrong method of application and start off on the wrong foot by creating bad traditions—the new order can never achieve the objectives which it has set itself. Consequently, during this transitional period our most careful attention is turned towards preventing the creation of any method of application or the formation of any tradition such as would lead to unfortunate consequences in the future.

We are, of course, searching for new possibilities in this field. Thus certain measures, although they may be very modest, have already been adopted in Turkey to ensure harmony in the field of labour. I could cite, for example, the periodical meetings organised for the discussion of certain well-defined social and economic problems, in which the ministers concerned participate together with representatives of workers and employers. Moreover, a tripartite body at the national level has been provided for, to harmonise the relationships existing between workers and employers in line with the interests of the country. We also intend to set up machinery to adjust wages in the light of growing productivity.

Another subject touched on by the Director-General in his Report concerns the participation of the workers in the management of undertakings. An experiment in this field is being made in Turkey. A law, which has recently come into force, provides for the participation of workers in the management of state-controlled undertakings as well as in the various workplaces which depend on these undertakings. The necessary preparatory work is under way for the implementation of these provisions, and we hope that the results of this experience will provide us with very valuable information for their application to private undertakings.

I think it would be very helpful at this stage of our discussion to say a few words with regard to effective methods of collaboration and the provision of technical assistance, as referred to in the Report of the Director-General. This new social order which we are endeavouring to establish in Turkey has already been practised for many years in the many countries which are so well represented at this Conference, and for them this social order constitutes the basis of a solid and stable régime. These countries have not achieved the level of development at which they now find themselves without having experienced difficulties or even upheavals. They have thus acquired very considerable experience. One cannot improvise experience; it is the fruit of time and of events. That is why the States Members here present put all their hope in the International Labour Organisation to help the young States which have only recently undertaken their economic and social development. The developing countries, which like Turkey must achieve rapid development, must set their development plans to a given perspective, while stabilising the life of the working population in the new circumstances, must attach great importance to co-ordination and technical assistance for the achievement of good relationships between workers and employers in harmonious equilibrium.

We are coming into an era when all the States, and first and foremost the I.L.O., must become conscious of their solidarity and their responsibility for observance of the rights of workers, which have become a universal concern, rather than dealing with this question as if it were a matter for private concern. It seems to us that the I.L.O., as well as all the countries which take part in its meetings, must give close attention to all the questions discussed during the Conference, and think of them from this point of view and with this attitude.

Before concluding I should like to say a word or two concerning agrarian reform. We are fully aware of the importance to all the developing countries of rational programmes of agrarian reform. The discussions which have taken place, and which will be the subject of the conclusions which we will reach, will be a very valuable guide to all these countries including my own. Therefore, I should like to congratulate the I.L.O. most warmly on its decision to place this question on the agenda of this Conference.

Mr. LUBEMBE (Workers' delegate, Kenya)

—I wish, Mr. President, on behalf of the workers of Kenya and on my own behalf, to congratulate you on having been elected to the high office of President of this important Conference. I have no doubt that you will discharge your duties with honour and distinction, as you have done in many other activities.

Up to now the workers of Kenya have not accepted that South Africa has resigned from the I.L.O. I must at the outset express my gratitude at the decision of the I.L.O. to expel South Africa from membership of this Organisation. The decision was timely and it is my hope that similar decisions will be taken by all United Nations specialised agencies and by the United Nations itself. South Africa, which pursues policies which deny the majority of citizens of that country full fundamental rights, has no right, and does not deserve, to take its place in the comity of nations. So long as it pursues its race-hate policy of apartheid it deserves to be treated as an international delinquent.

The Report of the Director-General of the International Labour Office indicates clearly that the policy of apartheid is increasingly assuming despicable and abominable forms. We owe it to our conscience as human beings to fight against this disastrous policy of apartheid, and it is my hope that more energetic steps will be taken, if not to make the South African Government change its policy, then to bring it to heel.

I now wish to take this opportunity to deal with the trade union role in Africa vis-à-vis the economic realities of our continent. In the process of rehabilitating and reconstructing our economies we have come face to face with the reality that trade unions in Africa must do more than merely improve workers' conditions of service and wages. The trade union... task in Africa, for a long time to come, will have to be to work in close contact with our governments, which are busily erecting new, viable political structures and socio-economic patterns which are relevant to our present stage of over-all national reconstruction. But while we acknowledge this role as being of singular importance we are conscious that such an involvement should not entail the loss of the workers' right to organise, to bargain collectively and engage in all such other activities aimed at bettering their lot. This aspect of trade union work is vital for the reason that it can provide an outlet for the feelings and aspirations of the workers. It is an old adage that workers with an unheeded grievance do not make good producers or good citizens, and the national economic reconstruction tends to stagnate instead of moving faster. It is because of this dual role that trade unions in Africa are called upon to shoulder that, at times apparent, contradiction which tends to puzzle our well-wishers elsewhere, who may not have had to shoulder such a role because their economy and political machinery were already at an advanced stage when they began to organise trade unions in their own countries.

The question may be asked whether this duality leads African trade unions not to identify themselves with similar organisations in other continents; whether the situation as it exists in Africa has no parallel elsewhere from which workers in Africa can draw a lesson. In our eagerness to harness our resources and to use them for ourselves, certain fallacies have become apparent. For instance, it is assumed in some quarters in Africa that workers' international solidarity and brotherhood are inconsistent with the tasks I have just outlined; that these unions ought to exist in isolation from good international organisations such as the I.L.O. and other such democratically based organisations. This is an attractive fallacy, but a fallacy none the less. Workers in Africa, as indeed in other continents, have in the past acknowledged the essential need for international solidarity and brotherhood which are traditional to workers' organisations. It is realistic to mention that the understanding could never be applicable were the workers of Africa to remain in isolation.

Africa is rich in minerals, agricultural prospects are more than bright and water resources are in abundance. We have space, we have manpower. We need a bigger and a good population. It is our aim to tap further our resources so as to make Africa play her proper role in the world in this respect.

The richness of Africa cannot be challenged by anybody. It has all the resources mentioned above. I challenge anybody to deny this. Were it not for her wealth, foreigners would not have to shoulder such a role because their economy and political machinery were already at an advanced stage when they began to organise trade unions in their own countries.

The Report of the Director-General has revealed many serious problems facing our women workers with family responsibilities, and the role of co-operatives. Women workers, mostly in developing nations, need great help. There are laws that were enacted before and who their friends are. We are not children; we are mature men and we know who our friends are and who are our enemies. The time has come for the developed nations to realise that the developing nations are not over-interested in their display of military might. Developing nations need economic growth and expansion to build themselves and to create jobs for their peoples. The developed nations will be serving the best interests of humanity if they employ for economic expansion projects in the developing countries the fantastic amounts of money they are now using for atomic and hydrogen bombs. The greatest enemies facing the human race are hunger, poverty and want and it is against them that the resources of developed countries should be employed, not for stockpiling weapons of mass destruction in the world. The developed nations should now realise fully that what the workers of Africa detest is to be told by foreigners who their enemies and who their friends are. We are not children; we are mature men and we know who our friends are and who are our enemies. The time has come for the developed nations to realise that the developing nations are not over-interested in their display of military might. Developing nations need economic growth and expansion to build themselves and to create jobs for their peoples. The developed nations will be serving the best interests of humanity if they employ for economic expansion projects in the developing countries the fantastic amounts of money they are now using for atomic and hydrogen bombs. The greatest enemies facing the human race are hunger, poverty and want and it is against them that the resources of developed countries should be employed, not for stockpiling weapons of mass destruction in the world.

The Report of the Director-General has revealed many serious problems facing our women workers with family responsibilities, the problems connected with agrarian reform, and the role of co-operatives. Women workers, mostly in developing nations, need great help. There are laws that were enacted before and these laws have become very poisonous to our women. I know of a law in a certain country which says that a woman must earn less than a man, but if a white woman is employed together with an African black man, the white woman gets more and the black man gets less. This is happening in Portugal, South Africa and other places. What this amounts to is this: because the law says a woman gets less and a man gets more, that white woman has become a man and the black man has become a woman. We use this law and we fight against it. In the economic and social progress of developing countries, the employment of young persons in mining is another big problem.
Of singular importance to us in Africa are the three facets in this report which pertain to the development of human resources; labour relations; trade union development, to which I have already made reference; the growth of sound social institutions and conditions of life and work. It is my ardent hope that the various committees which will deal with these problems will do so with a burning sense of urgency and purpose. These are not academic problems; they are problems which we are experiencing in Africa and in Asia and to which we need solutions immediately.

Lastly, I wish once again to call upon the President and my fellow delegates not to rest in the struggle to liberate our fellow workers who still live in bondage in South Africa, and in many other places. What is happening in Mozambique is really a burning issue that must live in the minds of all. Let us cry with one voice and declare that there can never be peace and security in the world as long as some of the world’s inhabitants are held in bondage, in slavery and are denied the fundamental human rights of which this Organisation is a living symbol.

Having said that, I hope that this Conference will find successful and complete solutions to these problems which I have mentioned.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. PACHO CARRILLO (Government delegate, Mexico)—The Mexican delegation, which I have the honour to lead, has been interested, pleased and impressed by the Report placed before the Conference this year in which the Director-General, fulfilling the promise he made at the close of the 48th Session, discusses the programme and structure of the International Labour Organisation. We congratulate the Director-General most warmly on the directness with which my country attends this Conference. The safeguards for the workers which have been the basis of all social legislation embrace the maximum working day, minimum wages, freedom of association and the right to strike, job security, social security and profit-sharing for the workers. My words have no other purpose than to indicate the goodwill, faith and enthusiasm with which my country attends this Conference. After all, if the I.L.O. aims immediately at improving the lot of the workers, there can be no doubt that its long-term objectives are justice, peace and brotherhood among all men and women who love freedom and democracy. Therefore, the Mexican delegation sincerely wishes that the I.L.O., having undergone this phase of reorganisation and procedural review, the necessity and importance of which we accept, will move on to full achievement of the high objectives which must ever inspire its future.

(The Conference adjourned at 4.45 p.m.)
THIRD REPORT OF THE SELECTION COMMITTEE:
SUBMISSION AND ADOPTION

The PRESIDENT—The first item on our agenda is the third report of the Selection Committee. I call upon Mr. Menon, Chairman of the Selection Committee, to present the report.

Mr. MENON (Government delegate, India; Chairman of the Selection Committee)—I have the honour to submit to the Conference the third report of the Selection Committee, the text of which has been distributed to delegates. This report relates to the participation of certain non-governmental organisations in the work of some of the Committees and to some changes in the composition of Committees. I commend the report to the Conference for adoption.

The PRESIDENT—The report is now open for discussion. If there are no comments, I take it that the Conference adopts the report.

(The report is adopted.)

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL:
DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—The next item on our agenda is the continuation of the discussion of the Director-General's Report.

Mr. ADEDOYIN (Federal Minister of Labour, Nigeria)—Before I proceed to make my contribution to the discussion of the Director-General's Report I should like, on behalf of the Government and people of Nigeria, to congratulate you on your election as President of this Conference.

Since I took office as my country's Minister of Labour this is the first time I have attended this Conference. I am therefore happy and proud to have the opportunity of making my maiden speech at a time when the Organisation is undergoing a critical self-analysis in order to reorientate its programmes in the light of contemporary needs. Nigeria's loyalty to the I.L.O. and the principles for which it stands is well known and I can assure you of my country's continued support of this Organisation and its aims, objectives and aspirations for the promotion of social justice for all mankind and the upholding of the freedom and dignity of humanity.

This year's Report of the Director-General has crystallised many useful proposals of past years; it is an action report on matters concerning the programme and to some extent the structure of the Organisation. The Director-General has been able to redeem the promise which he made last year that he would formulate fresh and concrete proposals and ideas on these issues based upon the discussions during the past few years. My delegation is particularly happy to note that the Organisation has at last accepted the need for changes not only in its structure but also in its attitude to present-day problems. A world organisation of the unique character of the I.L.O. should give the lead in the field of social reforms, and there is therefore no doubt that the proposals to which the Director-General made reference in his Report will have a considerable impact on the social and economic development of many countries.

The needs of African countries present a challenge to this Organisation. There is, first, the desire of emergent African countries to eradicate race tension, which constitutes a potential danger to their peace and prosperity. We hold that this Organisation has a duty to see established in the area of every member State conditions in which social justice can be maintained in an atmosphere of freedom and human dignity; it has a responsibility, as well, to take the necessary action to promote conditions which will sustain this ideal. The I.L.O. owes it to all its Members to end colonial domination and exploitation in the political, economic and social fields.

My country, and indeed all independent African countries, is determined to see to it that countries which continue to keep Africans in thraldom and which pursue the inhuman policy of apartheid and similar discriminatory policies should have no place in this honourable Organisation. It was in the light of this principle that my country spearheaded the expulsion of South Africa from this Organisation. We feel that Portugal, which has been condemned by both the United Nations and the Organisation of African Unity for violating the basic tenets of human rights, should not continue to take shelter under this Organisation. That is why my delegation welcomes the two amendments to the Constitution of the I.L.O. adopted by this Conference last year, which together empower the Conference to suspend from participation in the Conference any Member which has been found by the United Nations to be flagrantly and persistently pursuing a declared policy of discrimination which is apart from or to expel or suspend from membership any Member which has been expelled or suspended from membership of the United Nations.

1 See Appendix I, p. 485.

Although these amendments, as the Director-General himself has pointed out, are by no means the end of effective I.L.O. action in this regard, it is necessary that the I.L.O. should continue with its efforts in this direction. A delay in following up the amendments with fresh measures can cause regrettable harm to the progress already made. The evils of social injustice and man's inhumanity to man should be fought in a relentless manner by this Organisation. It is a crusade and a jihad which demands sacrifice, determination and faith. I can assure you of my country's support at all times in this noble struggle to establish on our continent peace and prosperity through social justice and human dignity.

Another issue which is a disturbing factor to African development is the widening gap between the rich and poor countries of the world, between the industrialised and developing countries, between those which possess skills, knowledge and technology, and those which do not. This issue constitutes an actual and, in fact, a potential threat to world peace and a challenge to our Organisation. A realistic programme of action should deal with this phenomenon of our age if the technical and other development activities of this Organisation are to succeed. There are millions of men and women in Africa who need and desire the means to conquer starvation, disease and ignorance. Their lives portray Africa's lack of skills and equipment, and its poverty. Although many African countries have established industries, subsistence agriculture is still the chief occupation and the chief source of income of the majority of its inhabitants. We recognise the necessity for rapid economic development. We recognise that for real progress to be achieved agriculture and industry must develop and complement each other. We recognise as well that all this cannot be done without trained personnel, finance and technical knowledge. These are the areas in which Africa must look to the industrialised countries for help. It is the sphere in which the I.L.O. could make positive contributions.

In the past decade Nigeria has experienced a remarkable transformation in the economic, social and political fields. The leisurely pace of pre-war economy has accelerated, living standards generally have improved, educational facilities have expanded and every child is now assured of free primary education. In recent years, technical training and instruction in crafts have been introduced into the educational system. There is now an encouraging appreciation of technical and professional competence; a great deal of effort is being made to train and produce young people to cope with the requirements of our development. In spite of the five universities in my country, we are as yet unable to meet these needs.

In the field of human resources development, Nigeria has made significant progress. Because Nigeria's economic plans aim at more than just increasing productivity, because her concept of the goal of economic and social development is the freedom and uplift of the individual, our overseas costs on social services have occasionally to slow down the rate at which we increase our output of goods and services. As a result of this, we have at times been unable to satisfy all the conventional wants of our people. In order to maintain the tempo of progress Nigeria, like many other developing countries of the world, has expressed the need for outside investment, and the readiness to welcome it on favourable terms consistent with national sovereignty.

It is in this field that my delegation believes the I.L.O. can make a significant contribution and impact. The question may be raised how the I.L.O. can provide the capital needed when it is not a financial institution. Its practical and realistic action in such fields as the World Food Programme, vocational training, rural employment promotion, small-scale and handicraft industries and vocational rehabilitation provides a guideline to practical issues of development. There are many areas in Africa where these projects, if undertaken in a concerted manner, will create the infrastructure and favourable climate for investment. The experience and knowledge which the I.L.O. has acquired, for example in the field of small-scale industries and rural employment development, are such that could be used in a planned and directed manner in many African countries. An umbrella factory is not only to be provided for the handicapped but could be one of a series of small enterprises that will generate further capital development. One advantage of this approach is the opportunity it provides for the acquisition of skills so badly needed for economic development.

It is against this background that I would like to congratulate the Director-General for the bold step he has taken to create the new Field Department mentioned in his Report. My delegation is happy with this new development and believes that the Department can become an important organ for achieving in a more concrete form the objectives of the I.L.O. in regional areas.

We are glad that I.L.O. action in the field of development of human resources is principally directed at the problems currently facing developing countries. My delegation fully supports the general proposals made in the three major areas to which I.L.O. future action will be directed. It is significant to observe that on the agenda of this Conference there are two important technical matters which have direct bearing on employment promotion in rural areas, namely the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries and the subject of agrarian reform. At the risk of digressing slightly from the Director-General's Report, I would say that these items are of particular interest to my country for obvious reasons: we think that full support should be given to the co-operative movement as a vehicle for economic development, for it is a form of economic organisation fully compatible with Nigerian tradition and social sentiment. We believe that through the co-operative movement the types of land ownership associated with the village clan and tribal system can be adapted to plantation-type agriculture. In this way Nigeria can combine the benefits of private African initiative and individual effort with the technological advantages of large-scale plantation farming.

The I.L.O. is at present undertaking in Nigeria a pilot project in the field of rural employment promotion. The objective is to tackle in a small rural area the multiple problems of rural employment in an integrated and multilateral fashion. This will involve simultaneous and co-ordinated action in several different fields for the best possible use of underemployed rural labour with a minimum contribution of scarce capital resources and a maximum reliance on the efforts of the local population. This project, which is the first of its kind in our area of the world, will provide us not only with the rural employment data essential for planning but also with the data-collecting methods needed. My Government hopes to use the methods and results of this pilot project as a basis for formulating rural employment policy on as wide a basis as possible.

My Government attaches great importance to this scheme because its economy is largely agricultural. I take this opportunity to thank the I.L.O. for the interest which it has shown and continues to show in this project which will provide a most useful guideline for the great benefit of member States in our region of the world.

While on this point, I should like to deal with another relevant issue which my delegation raised at the African Regional Conference in Addis Ababa last year. The problem of development committees, particularly in Africa, is of such a complex character, requiring for its effective handling a pooling of ideas, experiences and resources. Let me take an example, to which I made reference earlier, from the development of small-scale industrial projects. Here experiences in various parts of the world differ and there are many experts with different ideas and knowledge in this field. In grappling with this problem in an area of I.L.O. action, it would be of great benefit if at the planning stage there were a pooling of ideas by experts representing the member States. What we have in mind here is a body of experts representing the many and varied experiences in a particular project field to plan and determine the best way of initiating the project. This approach ensures more practical and reliable planning that can remove the usual initial difficulties arising from an under-estimation of initial obstacles. This is a co-operative and concerted approach to development which the I.L.O. is in a position to adopt, because of its unique character and the ideals for which it stands. It follows the pattern of Industrial Committees, which have played a significant role in the field of economic development.

Returning to the Director-General's Report, it is the view of my delegation that the I.L.O. programme of action for the development of social institutions has no inherent disadvantage. The only risk which may be involved in such a coherent and fully co-ordinated programme is that of sustaining a proper balance between the demands of the various services involved. However, the risk is of little effect when compared with the immense advantage which may be derived by closer integration of policies and the fuller utilisation of experienced personnel in the various services.

On the whole, the Report raises no issues of a controversial nature; this is confined to areas in which a large measure of agreement has been achieved during the past few years. The programmes of action are, to my mind, like a fine tool made by an able craftsman, which deserves to be put in the hands of a competent workman. The I.L.O. should therefore pay adequate attention to its staff recruitment policy, which must take account of the international character of the Organisation. It is most essential that the Secretariat should have an adequate number of Africans, confirmed in their membership, particularly in policy-making positions and in posts where they can help in the initiation, formulation and direction of policies, particularly on matters concerning African affairs. While this is consistent with the proposed policy of decentralisation of I.L.O. activities on a regional basis to meet the particular needs of member States, the centre of direction and policy should adequately reflect the aspirations of the various regions.

My delegation has always pointed out that a situation in which the policy-making hierarchy of the Organisation is dominated by a few States will not contribute to a relationship that creates a feeling and spirit of belonging. It is, in fact, capable of generating frustration. We realise and understand the historical development of the staff position which now exists, but we believe that a much more determined drive should be made to identify Africans with the Organisation. It does no credit to our Organisation, which is the oldest international body, to say that only two African States have only one each of their nationals in what may be treated as top posts. We wish to emphasise that, if recruitment is undertaken without political and other extraneous considerations but purely on the basis of skill and experience, there are many Africans of high calibre and repute who will do credit to this Organisation.

I am particularly happy at the opportunity which you have given me to make a humble contribution on behalf of Nigeria to the consideration of the Director-General's Report. I have found the exercise exciting and challenging. Nigeria's belief in, and acceptance of, the ideals and objectives of the I.L.O. are a matter of strong and religious conviction. We shall not cease to proclaim this conviction by words, deeds and action, in the hope that social justice and human dignity shall prevail in a world where there are still many who do not believe in the brotherhood of man.

Mr. President, may I in conclusion congratulate you once again on your election?

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. ROMEO GORRIA (Minister of Labour, Spain)—Once again I have the honour of commenting from this rostrum on the Director-General's Report.
I cannot conceal the fact that in so doing I feel a deep sense of responsibility which stems from two sources: first, the history of the I.L.O.; and, second, and above all, the vitality and high hopes for the future which it derives from the youthful vigour of new peoples who are now participating in international endeavour, and whose presence here, as well as on all fronts where the battle is being waged for a better future for all, my people happily welcomes.

To speak from this rostrum implies an obligation not only to feel and, indeed, to be in favour of coexistence among all peoples, but also to be fully convinced that there can be no real coexistence unless it be based on true solidarity, firmly rooted in the strict principles of social justice. In today's world words mean very little. The only admissible dialectic is that of actions. The words spoken here, and those with which the results of this gathering will be summarised, will carry little weight unless they reflect a firm determination to achieve positive action.

The desire for economic development, which is today a world-wide phenomenon in which hundreds of millions of men have placed their hopes, cannot be met unless social progress is at the same time pursued firmly and single-mindedly. The new frontiers of development are neither the result of a mere technical operation nor the product of government action alone. They can be conquered only with the co-operation of all the people. There can be no possible development unless the people are the principal and major protagonist, and unless all members of the community feel that they are participating in its achievement.

In our time it is no longer possible to speak of dormant peoples or of peoples who have not come of age. The peoples of the world are now fully awake to freedom, hope and the imperative need for social justice. They resent privileges, national or international, and they aspire to well-being through joint effort and a fair distribution of the advantages and gains achieved.

I believe that these general ideas, which I have expressed in the name of my people, are a necessary and integral element of our government policy. I shall try to illustrate them with reference to my own country, and in terms of the three major subject areas of the Director-General's Report.

In 1930 Spain had 23,844,000 inhabitants of whom 37 per cent. constituted the labour force, with 45 per cent. in agriculture. By comparison with these figures the following data, which refer to 31 December 1964, illustrate the change which has occurred in the structure of Spanish society: a population of 31,659,000, of whom 38.3 per cent. make up the labour force, which implies the creation of nearly 3.5 million new jobs. The numbers engaged in agriculture fell to 37 per cent. while the illiteracy rate dropped to 7.6 per cent. In 1964 the net increase in jobs amounted to 135,400 in industry and 112,000 in service occupations. In addition the numbers of workers in these two sectors received 176,000 workers formerly engaged in agriculture and the proportion of unemployed during the same year came to only 1.47 per cent. This brief description, I believe, is an eloquent commentary on the development of human resources in my country, particularly if one considers that these results have been built upon a principle which we regard as sacred—freedom of labour.

A good proof of our respect for freedom of labour—and I have no hesitation in affirming it—is that the frontiers of Spain are completely open not only for the 16 million tourists whom we hope to receive this year, but also for all Spaniards who wish to find better jobs in other countries and who can leave without any difficulty whatsoever. They too, by seeking new opportunities outside the country, contribute by their efforts, their brains and indeed by their sacrifices to the well-being of Europe.

In the field of social promotion, my country is now making an extraordinary effort. In addition to the 142,000 pupils registered in 1964 in the regular vocational training courses and centres, a sum of 500 million pesetas has been invested in the intensive vocational training of 40,000 adult workers in 161 different trades.

But in addition the kind of manpower planning advocated in the Report finds unique practical expression in my country through the Workers' Occupational Promotion Programme, which is now fully operative in 12 provinces and which will be extended to nearly all of the others in 1965. The aim of the Workers' Occupational Promotion Programme is to do away with peonage in Spain through the creation of 800,000 teaching jobs and the subsequent upgrading of skilled manpower to higher levels. We have refrained from investing in buildings and have confined ourselves to investing strictly in men, through a system of mobile teams who carry the teaching to the location of the men who are to be trained.

I need hardly say how proud I am of these achievements which are taking place in my country and to which the International Labour Office, which knows them well, has borne unique testimony, as have experts and distinguished visitors from other countries who have seen them at close range. More recently I have had the pleasure of receiving support and encouragement from the colleges and institutions of the Ibero-American community of peoples, who are particularly aware of vocational training problems since the demands which they face are much the same as those which concern us in Spain. I must proclaim that among our countries and in this field there is a determined desire to co-operate, to exchange experience, and to act jointly. In our view there can be no frontiers to sincere and open collaboration, and we have accordingly offered to countries within our community our full experience and our full resources to carry out any aid programmes. Our common destiny commands us not to advance separately but to plough our furrow together and pursue jointly, so far as possible, our common future.

Having given free rein to these fraternal feelings, I can do no less than draw the attention of delegates to the extremely important role which devolves upon the International Labour Organisation in providing for those member States which need its extensive assistance in any field, but more particularly in
The second topic dealt with in the Report is that of development of social institutions—a problem whose extraordinary complexity has surely not escaped my fellow delegates. In truth, the development of social institutions cannot be approached in today's world—and above all having regard to the expectations of society tomorrow, in whose structure we must adjust our thinking—to a spirit of punctilious respect for traditional patterns. We must show the boldness, the courage and open-mindedness to face squarely the demands of the future, even if this means at times renouncing formulas or ideas to which we were particularly attached.

I consider that development and social institutions are fundamentally rooted in the concept and structure of the undertaking, viewed as a community of interests. That is the major objective of our times. We are striving to solve, although there is no doubt that we are still a long way from a satisfactory definition on which to base the ideal social order, which constitutes humanity's highest aspiration. Spain follows with fair-minded attention all efforts by all countries—all without exception—to achieve that goal, in no case—all without exception—to achieve that goal, but we must confess that so far the solutions developed can hardly be regarded as more than transitory and that in no case—I stress this, in no case—can we claim to have found a formula worthy of general adoption.

In Spain we are pressing forward with passion and conviction. Within the area of social promotion, which is one of the most important sectors of the activities of the Ministry of Labour, the access of workers to ownership is a major objective. In this respect we have achieved highly promising results in agriculture, industry and service activities through the establishment of co-operative enterprises. However, at the same time, we are in the process of establishing an atmosphere of harmony and co-participation through collective agreements in which stress is increasingly laid, apart from regulation of wage levels, on schemes designed to give the worker a greater share of responsibility for the way in which the undertaking is run. In 1964, 911 collective agreements covering 214,000 undertakings and 1.1 million workers were concluded. At present it may be estimated that 4.5 million employed persons, representing about 67 per cent. of the total (and the percentage would be much higher in the case of industry alone) are governed, so far as their conditions of employment are concerned, by collective agreements concluded between representatives of employers' and workers' organisations.

There can be no economic and social development—and my country is in the midst of the development process—without occasional conflict in the labour field. Here again, my country has striven to improve the legal machinery for the solution of such conflicts. A decisive step was taken with the Decree of 20 September 1962 concerning the arbitration of such conflicts, under which all labour disputes which have since arisen have been dealt with. Most recently, and with a similar purpose, a Bill has been submitted to the Cortes with a view to amending section 222 of the Penal Code. Under this new provision, economic and occupational strikes would no longer be deemed penal offences, and the law would thus be adjusted to what is in fact current practice.

Moreover, both workers and employers have participated extensively in the study and preparation of the Economic and Social Development Plan, through strong representation on the competent bodies. This type of institutional improvement advocated in the Director-General's Report is also exemplified in other steps which have been taken in my country. Our basic Social Security Act places the administration of the scheme for practical purposes in the hands of the elected representatives of workers and employers. In other words, we have gone a long way towards "mutualising" social security.

The third topic in the Director-General's Report is concerned with living and working conditions for men and women. In this important field, even more so perhaps than in the others, realism must prevail over idealistic pronouncements. Here the principle of international solidarity, provided it is applied with maximum efficiency and pure generosity, has an exceptionally valuable part to play.

My country is making every effort to progress along these lines and I sincerely believe that the recommendation contained in the Director-General's Report has been implemented satisfactorily. The new social security system in Spain has definitely given up the formula of isolated insurance to cover all risks under one heading for any cause whatsoever where the worker has lost his income.

In three years we have doubled the number of beds in sanatoria under the social security system, which number 45 and are supplemented by 450 dispensaries and clinics. We are setting up first-aid centres throughout the country. We have taken decisive steps in the field of the rehabilitation of disabled workers. We are going to try to solve the difficult health problem of mental patients. We are acting with decision in order to satisfy the concept that total security is a constitutional principle.

Figures can prove the rate of progress: in 1963, 447 million pesetas was invested for hospital facilities; in 1964, 1,046 million pesetas was invested; in 1965, 42 million items of care were provided in clinics and in 1964 the figure was 45 million. In one year the number of patient-days in these centres has increased from 2,912,000 to 13,952,000 and the number of persons protected has increased by 2.25 per cent.

Finally, and as a result of all this effort, in my country the participation of labour in the gross national income has increased by 12.45 per cent. from 1961 to 1964. The rate of growth in participation by the workers has been proportionately higher than the increase in the gross national income. This is the result of a true policy of redistribution and shows the effect of our social policy.

In the light of the Director-General's Report, I have endeavoured to present the balance sheet of Spain's activities in this field. The aspirations and the hope of my people and my Government have been done much but I must say that we are not fully satisfied. The dynamics of social policy do not permit us to be satisfied because we have achieved so far a foundation from which to strive forward in the struggle for greater realisation; social achievement is only important to the extent that it opens up new roads for progress in the future. The ambition to reach new social frontiers inspires my people who, although they have a brilliant past, look less to the past than to the future. In Spain our people are very united and this is the most powerful tool that we have, this is the people themselves but whom experience has taught to become vitally interested—rather than to isolate themselves—in all those people who, like the Spaniards, are searching for improvement in their development and who are greatly ambitious for social justice. The Spanish people have never in their history known discrimination, and have always sought liberty and struggled for it; they are proud of the brotherhood they enjoy with 21 independent countries.

We have been at the crossroads of civilisation. We live on a hard, dry peninsula; we are the end of Europe and the beginning of Africa. We look towards America. We are a people who owe nothing to anyone. We have set up our own position on the basis of our own efforts and we welcome the new countries which are entering on the world scene in the search for new destinies. We do so in the conviction that this is the way it should be, because these people, with deep national emotion, are aware of the fact their strength lies not in the assistance which they can get but rather on their mismeasurable desire to obtain a better future, to ensure social justice; thanks to the brotherhood of man, they will fight together with all those countries who wish to build a society whose prestige will not be based on a given standard of living but rather on a just distribution of wealth and a full participation of the people in the determination of the historic destiny which corresponds to it. For those reasons, we speak with faith, hope and in the full conviction of social brotherhood between men. We can never forget that oligarchies of any kind can only be supported by opulent societies and even then we do not know for how long.

Mr. GJAEREVOLL (Minister of Social Affairs, Norway)—The Report which the Director-General has placed before the Conference this year is an important contribution to the reorientation of the work programme, structure and working methods of the Organisation. Together with the Governing Body report on the I.L.O. programme in the field of human resources development, it forms a good basis for our discussion.

Since the 1964 Session of the Conference, government and employers' and workers' representatives in Norway have discussed the I.L.O. programme and structure in their national I.L.O. committee. Following this exchange of views the central national organisations of workers and employers in my country submitted comments which, together with a statement from the Government, are now included in the annex to the report of the Working Party of the Governing Body on the programme and structure of the I.L.O.

Last year's session of the Conference took an important step forward by agreeing to regroup all I.L.O. activities in three major programme areas. I shall deal briefly with all these three areas: human resources development, development of social institutions, and conditions of life and work.

For the individual member States it is, in our view, essential that over-all national economic planning should be based on the fullest possible knowledge of the human resources of the country. The development of a country's employment services and education and vocational training should be suitably integrated in general economic planning. In Norway we have placed great emphasis on the development of long-range education and vocational training, as well as on education and training of medium and short-term duration in order to eliminate or avoid unemployment and underemployment and to achieve more productive employment.

Even if Norway is among the industrially more developed countries, it has its problems of economic structural change. A number of these problems, appearing in areas lagging behind in economic development, have important social and employment aspects. I therefore agree with the Director-General that the I.L.O. should follow carefully developments in the more industrialised countries in relation to an active employment policy. In this way the Office may be able to give guidance and support to these countries and to obtain information on the latest techniques. Such information might be used or adapted for use in developing countries.

In countries at all stages of development there seems to be a need for greater efforts to develop the human resources represented by the female half of the population. Thus women should be given greater opportunities to take part in national development. From the Part of the Director-General's Report devoted to I.L.O. activities during the past year, it is evident that greater emphasis is now being placed on the contribution made by women to the social and economic development of their countries. I fully endorse his view that their role and status in the world of work should be redefined in realistic relation to the changing pattern of employment opportunities for all workers.

One item on the Conference agenda deals with the employment of women with family responsibilities. In our view it is important to elaborate an instrument which sets out the objectives of national policy in this field and which points out the roads that may be followed.

In the field of human resources development, it is essential that the I.L.O. should keep its arrangements for co-operation with regional organisations like the O.E.C.D. and U.N.E.S.C.O. under constant review. A high degree of co-ordination is necessary, both at the national and the international level, if we are to succeed in our efforts.

---

1 See Appendix X, p. 685.
As regards the second major programme area, social institutions development, my Government welcomes all efforts by the I.L.O. to stimulate the development and growth of the co-operative movement and of free and effective organisations of workers and employers. We believe that such organisations should be associated with the formulation and implementation of national development plans, and that workers should be associated with the management of their undertakings. We therefore welcome the suggestion by the Director-General that the I.L.O. should follow closely developments in this field in the various countries. When speaking of the workers' role in the undertaking, in his organisations and in the affairs of the community at large, we feel that workers' education should be accorded a central place in I.L.O. activities. The same applies to its employer counterpart, management development.

I now turn to the third major programme area, conditions of life and work. Although the Organisation has done a great deal in this traditional field of activity there are still a number of old and new tasks which should not be pushed aside. It is important that questions connected with the status and conditions of the workers should not be neglected in the struggle for economic development. There is still a need for vigorous I.L.O. efforts for the effective application of human rights, a subject which we have dealt with more specifically in our statement on programme and structure.

The debate at last year's session of the Conference was concerned with the relative merits of bilateral and multilateral assistance. In this spirit we have always felt that the different institutions in the United Nations family ought to play a central role in the field of development assistance. The Norwegian Government has always been based on strong support for the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin.

My Government welcome the efforts made by the I.L.O. for a fuller co-ordination of the various aspects of its work with national, regional and other international endeavours for social and economic development.

When surveying the whole field of activities for social and economic development carried out by the different members of the United Nations family of organisations, we are clearly aware of the increasing need for co-ordination. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Director-General on the progress the I.L.O. has already made in this field as indicated in the Report we have before us.

Co-ordination and co-operation in the field of technical assistance is necessary not only to avoid duplication and increase effectiveness but also in order to make the fullest use of the experience gained by the various agencies.

It is, however, not only a question of co-ordinating the policies pursued by the different members of the United Nations family. The major flow of capital and technical assistance to less developed countries is based on bilateral agreements. I am not going to discuss here the relative merits of bilateral and multilateral assistance. The position of the Norwegian Government has always been based on strong support for the multilateral assistance programmes. I should however like to add that, as long as bilateral assistance is such an important part of the over-all situation, co-ordination and co-operation between the agencies providing bilateral and multilateral assistance is very necessary.

We therefore endorse the Governing Body's suggestion that the I.L.O. should encourage the co-ordination of all such efforts undertaken in a particular country, including those under bilateral schemes.

The objectives and viewpoints of the I.L.O. ought to be strongly represented in all programmes for economic growth and the relative importance of the I.L.O. within the United Nations family should not be reduced. We believe that the I.L.O. should be given the financial means for a reasonable and necessary expansion of activities. Some governments have maintained in the Governing Body that the I.L.O. budget expansion should never be greater than the rise in national budgets and in national income. I fail to see the relevance of this comparison, and believe that if we feel there is a need for strengthening international co-operation in this important field we should not let the planned growth of the Organisation be restricted by considerations of this nature.

We believe that the I.L.O. has a special role to play in the efforts for social and economic development, as this Organisation is concerned not only with economic growth but with the way in which this growth is brought about and distributed. In our opinion questions of distribution of income should be considered as an integral part of economic policy. This is one of the reasons which call for increased I.L.O. efforts in co-operation with developing countries. Another reason is the concern which our Organisation has for development which includes the participation of free and effective military intervention, which aims at the reis the real cause of both indirect and direct Mozambique and so-called Portuguese Guinea, the Dominican Republic and in the Congo, the struggle for freedom and independence of these countries, and, in addition, they jeopardise the peace of the whole world and threaten to bring about a world-wide conflict the catastrophic consequences of which can hardly be foreseen.

I need not repeat here the well-known position of my country with regard to these questions. I should only add that we, together with a number of non-aligned nations, have taken determined action concerning the situation in South-East Asia. We feel that the intensification and the spreading of the war in that region cannot but produce an extremely dangerous threat to world peace.

A further threat results from the policy of racial discrimination, and particularly apartheid, which is being pursued with unabated intensity in the Republic of South Africa and which represents only a specific brutal form of racial discrimination.

It is generally recognised that relations between the developed and developing countries today constitute one of the basic problems of contemporary international relations, particularly in the economic field. New independent States are making greater efforts to establish more equitable social relationships, to eliminate, in the shortest possible time, their inherited backwardness; and to achieve a satisfactory level of economic, cultural, and scientific development. In order that their efforts may be crowned with success, the international community ought to extend aid to them, and to try to understand better the problems of their internal development.

The decisions and conclusions of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as well as the creation of the necessary machinery for their implementation, constitute a significant step forward in this direction.

Notwithstanding the pressure for reaching agreement on disarmament, the arms race continues and presents an acute problem. It is for this reason that my delegation supports the idea of convening a world disarmament conference which should, with the participation of all countries, initiate the solution of this important problem.

We believe that the I.L.O. should take an active part in the achievement of disarmament, and for this purpose it should co-operate with the United Nations Economic and Social Council in the study of the economic and social consequences of disarmament. In order to find the solution to the question of employment, it should help in the elaboration of the best methods for the reconversion of economies.

In this situation the crisis of the United Nations cannot but cause grave concern to all member States. It is for this reason that we feel it necessary to do our utmost to remove the causes which have paralysed the work of this highest international forum.

It goes without saying that the I.L.O., as a member of the United Nations family and in pursuit of its own aims, cannot stand aside from these events. It should contribute to the settlement of the political problems of the contemporary world, in particular on the question of international tension and in fostering confidence among nations. It should extend its active support to all action that aims at safeguarding and strengthening world peace, at promoting the policy of active and peaceful coexistence and at the co-operation of all countries on the basis of equal rights. It should condemn resolutely every act of aggression and every application of the policy of force in international relations, as well as all forms of interference in the internal affairs of other countries, no matter who the protagonist of such a policy may be.

For all the reasons outlined we believe that the basic activities of the I.L.O. should be directed towards the achievement of these aims and adjusted, both as regards their content and form, to present conditions.

The activity of the I.L.O. should be adjusted in such a way as to meet the requirements of contemporary developments and processes.
Programmes of activities should take account of the economic conditions prevailing in countries and regions receiving assistance, and should be drawn up on a long-term basis. When these program­mes are being formulated, the benefiting coun­tries should also take part in their elaboration.
It is necessary to develop to a greater extent national and regional institutions for the im­plementation of such programmes. Further­more, it is desirable to engage qualified person­nel from all member States for the actual execution of programmes, while the manage­ment of, and the responsibility for, the im­plementation of programmes should be in­creasingly entrusted to the member States themselves.

The assistance granted for the realisation of programmes should be free from any conditions which might, in one way or another, endanger the independence of the recipient country. In this connection, I should like to emphasise that international assistance so far rendered mainly on a bilateral basis has achieved good results.
Nevertheless, financial aid should, in our opi­nion, be increasingly provided by international public funds, in the first place through the United Nations and its agencies.

We also feel that, to achieve a better use of human resources in developing countries, it is of particular importance that the I.L.O. should perform research and provide expert assistance in the elaboration and the application of suitable methods of planning, as well as extend assistance in the setting up of regional and national institutions for vocational training.

I think that our Organisation should make a new and bolder approach to the problems concerning incomes policy, where its activity has so far been more or less confined to the narrow limits of collective bargaining and of setting minimum wages. In the field of income levels and income distribution we think it essential for the I.L.O. to encourage and ensure a broader exchange of experience and more systematic research. Particular attention should be paid to the problem of the influence of incomes policies on the growth of labour productivity, employment and the standard of living. Of course, this ought to be done keeping in mind that the different levels of socio­ economic development impose the necessity of adequate solutions. We believe that, in view of its great importance to the economic and social development of all countries, the problem of incomes policies should be made a separate item on the agenda of one of the forthcoming sessions.

In conformity with its character and aims,
the I.L.O. should be particularly concerned with the questions of how to advance the direct participation of workers in the management of economic enterprises as well as with the role of workers in planning and the implementation of plans, distribution of income, allocation of resources, etc.

Once again I should like to stress our opinion that, in particular, the I.L.O. should ensure the broader exchange of opinions and wide dissemination of experience, which ought to be supported by corresponding research work and relevant studies; it should render assistance in the economic education of workers in suitable forms, and provide advice concerning the most efficient application of management rights; it should assist States in the organisation of social services, especially in the fields of labour supply and in the elaboration of various draft texts concerning labour relations. Of course, its assistance should be in harmony with existing national conditions.

In our replies to the Director-General we express our views concerning the role, place and structure of our Organisation in contemporary situations. In view of the considerable changes that have taken place not only in the membership of our Organisation but also in its programmes and tasks we think it necessary that the I.L.O. should adapt its structure more closely to new conditions.
The proposed targets and tasks in the new I.L.O.
programmes now under discussion must be accompanied by an appropriate and simultaneous change in the methods and structure of the Organisation, so as to ensure the following: the right of all member States and governments, workers’ and employers’ organisations to participate in the formulation of I.L.O.
policy and programmes for its activities;
therefore, it is necessary that the Conference should play the principal role in dealing with these matters; the establishment of new but more adequate relations among individual organs; an equitable representation of all regions and economic systems in the organs of the I.L.O.; the achievement of full democra­ isation of methods of work so as to rule out domination by any group; the I.L.O. should be an open forum for the free exchange of opinions where arguments are weighed according to their merits.
It is equally necessary to make appropriate changes in the statutory documents of the Organisation so as to ensure unhindered and proper application of these principles.

We must say openly that we are worried at the fact that the solution of these questions is being postponed from year to year. That has been the case even though discussion about it has been going on for years, and even though a number of constructive proposals have been submitted by many delegates. On the other hand, some solutions adopted so far have been rather insignificant and mainly of a technical nature. With due respect for the efforts made by the working party which has studied these problems, we wish to point out that we are far from being satisfied with the results. We consider it is necessary to make new efforts to elaborate concrete proposals without delay. We also feel that a larger number of countries should be invited to participate in this work so as to ensure more efficient implementation of this task.
Our endeavours to enable our Organisation to fulfil its numerous and constructive tasks will remain fruitless unless we urgently solve these fundamental organisational problems, for which all conditions have already become ripe.

I should like to stress that my delegation is ready to take an active part in this work and to support every constructive effort which would enable the finding of adequate solutions to be speeded up.

Before concluding, allow me to say a few words on the resolution concerning the protection of the rights of Spanish workers submitted by the representative of the Yugoslav workers. The adoption of this resolution would provide further support for the efforts that our Organisation is making to achieve full observance of the right of association and freedom for the social activities of workers. It would also mean a further contribution in the struggle against all kinds of repression imposed upon those who claim better living conditions, freedom of the press and other fundamental freedoms.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. PIMENOV (Workers' delegate, U.S.S.R.)—For the third year the International Labour Organisation is discussing the question of the adaptation of its programmes, structure and methods of work to a changed world, and yet not a single practical decision has been taken as yet with regard to changing the existing situation in the I.L.O. During that period the workers of a number of countries have scored many new successes in their struggle to improve conditions of work and life and to promote their national social progress. New countries have gained their independence. The peoples of the world are successfully struggling for their liberation, casting off the shackles of colonial bondage. At the same time the I.L.O. is not showing due interest in these new conditions. The I.L.O. cannot side-step events that are of such concern to the workers and peoples of the whole world.

The I.L.O. faces the alternative of becoming a genuinely universal organisation which would react rapidly to events that occur throughout the world, struggling for peace and social progress and upholding the interests of the workers, or of continuing to lag behind events. The representatives of millions of workers of the socialist and recently emancipated countries have scored many new successes in their struggle to improve conditions of work and life and to promote their national social progress. New countries have gained their independence. The peoples of the world are successfully struggling for their liberation, casting off the shackles of colonial bondage. At the same time the I.L.O. is not showing due interest in these new conditions. The I.L.O. cannot side-step events that are of such concern to the workers and peoples of the whole world.

The time has come to put an end to the situation where the Workers' group in the Governing Body contains no representatives of the workers of the socialist countries. In the existing composition there is a preponderant representation of Western European and United States trade unions affiliated to the I.C.F.T.U., which has a membership of less than 60 million. There are no representatives of any trade union organisation which is a member of the W.F.T.U., which has a membership of more than 120 million of the 220 million organised workers in all parts of the world. Neither is there a due representation of the workers of the capitalist countries of Africa or the Arab countries. Thus, the workers' representatives in the Governing Body today do not represent the majority of the workers. Such a situation cannot be considered normal and it must be changed next year when the new Governing Body is elected. There should prevail in the elections to the Governing Body, and specifically to the Workers' group, a democratic system that will ensure just representation of all geographical areas of the world, all the various social systems and all trends in the world trade union movement.

On the international level it is incumbent upon the I.L.O. to defend the right of association and trade union rights, and the workers look to the I.L.O. to adopt effective measures. But the Committee on Freedom of Association in no way answers these requirements. It serves as an example of the improper and one-sided composition of the principal I.L.O. bodies. At present, among the nine members of the Committee there is not a single representative of the socialist countries and in the working party of the Committee there is no representative of any trade union organisation belonging to the W.F.T.U. How, in such a situation, can there be an objective approach to all the problems that arise? It is necessary to democratise the Committee and to broaden its membership. The Committee must be based on fair geographical representation and must incorporate all trends in the international trade union movement.

At the two last sessions of our Conference the Workers' representatives of the U.S.S.R. made a number of proposals as regards I.L.O. programmes the adoption of which we believe could contribute significantly to increasing the effectiveness of the I.L.O.'s activities and its role in the struggle for the rights and interests of the workers. For some unknown reason some of those proposals have not been included in the list drawn up by the International Labour Office.

The Workers' representatives of the U.S.S.R. suggested specifically: that a proper and consistent programme of activities for the I.L.O. in the field of safeguarding and protecting the rights of the unions should be worked out, due account being taken of the demands and wishes of unions of various trends; that the reasons leading to social injustice, unemployment, hunger and the persecution of trade unions should be studied and ways to eliminate these evils indicated; that such urgent problems as the improvement of conditions of work, the effect of automation on the status of workers, the problem of employment, and so on, should be studied.
The adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples the colonial régime should continue in certain countries where fundamental human rights are being violated in contradiction to the principles of the Constitution of the I.L.O. The International Labour Organisation must demand the urgent implementation of that declaration and must take steps to uphold the rights of the workers in the countries that remain in colonial dependence. The I.L.O. must devote more attention to action to deal with the social and economic aftermath of colonialism, to assistance to developing countries in creating and strengthening their national economies, training their manpower and raising the standard of living of the workers. This aid must be concrete and effective and must be free of any strings that might restrict the sovereignty of the nation to which it is being granted.

Another question of acute concern to all the workers of the world is that of peace. Like the workers of other countries, the workers of the Soviet Union are struggling for peace; they consistently uphold the principles of co-existence between countries with differing social and political systems. Our country is engaged in peaceful constructive work. We are building factories, houses, schools, hospitals, kindergartens and nurseries. The Soviet people is carrying out a vast programme of development of the national economy, and the trade unions of our country, which have a membership of 70 million workers and enjoy extensive rights and opportunities for their activities, are playing a vital role in this connection. As a result of the implementation of this programme our country has cut the working day, without affecting wages, to six to seven hours. During the past two or three years, and especially during the past year, there have been considerable increases in wages and salaries. A uniform pension system has been introduced for collective farm workers, and prices are being systematically reduced. All this is being done to improve the conditions of work and life of the Soviet people.

The peoples of the world are concerned about peace. In accordance with its Constitution, the I.L.O. must contribute to the strengthening of peace and take steps to prevent any attempts to unleash war. But it is still insufficiently active in this field. As we all know, aggressive action is taking place in various parts of the world today; war has been started against Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic and the economic blockade of Cuba continues. Violating agreements that were signed here in Geneva, the American imperialists are not only engaged in a dirty war against the people of South Viet-Nam but are carrying out barbaric air-raids against the peaceful towns and villages of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam. Jet bombers are drenching villages with napalm, dropping bombs and swamping entire areas in a deluge of fire. The aggressors have reverted to a weapon that has caused indignation throughout the world, namely poison gas—and are even talking about the use of thermonuclear weapons. As a result of these raids . . .

The President—I give the floor to Mr. Weaver, Government delegate, United States, on a point of order.

Mr. Weaver (Government delegate, United States)—It is with regret that I feel forced to intervene at this point in the discussion on the Director-General's Report. Up to this point the discussion has been devoted to I.L.O. programmes and policies, and I feel it is regrettable that there is now an attempt to direct the discussion to political matters outside the competence of the International Labour Conference. I would appeal to you that it is a well-known policy of the I.L.O. that, when political matters and particularly matters that have been taken up by the United Nations and other specialised agencies of the United Nations with competence in that area, have been introduced, such debate, which would tie up our Conference, has been declared inappropriate and out of order, thus reserving to the United Nations the competence which is rightly its own. We must serve notice that if this continues we demand the right of immediate reply.

The President—I appeal to Mr. Pimenov to confine himself to I.L.O. activities in the remainder of his speech.

Translation from Russian: Mr. Pimenov—As a result of these marauding attacks by the American forces, thousands and thousands of peaceful citizens of Viet-Nam, women, children, old men, have been killed, injured, rendered homeless and deprived of their means of existence. Vast material wealth created by the hands of the workers has been destroyed. The I.L.O. must not ignore the misdeeds of the aggressors and their South Viet-Nam puppets who do not represent their own people. It is incompatible with the standards of the I.L.O. to accept the credentials of these so-called delegates of South Viet-Nam.

The Soviet workers and trade unions fully approve the struggle of the Vietnamese people who are with such self-sacrifice defending the independence and freedom of their country. They brand these acts of piracy against the people of Viet-Nam. An international trade union conference of the Committee of Solidarity with the Workers and People of Viet-Nam, called at the initiative of the W.F.T.U., is at present meeting at Hanoi. The representatives of workers of 60 countries who have met there demand an end to this dirty war against Viet-Nam.

We urgently appeal to this Conference to make the maximum efforts to satisfy the just demands of the workers and unions of all countries of the world for an immediate end to the aggressive war in South Viet-Nam, the withdrawal of American troops, and an end to provocative and aggressive action against the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, in order to make it possible for the people of South Viet-Nam to determine their own future and decide the problem of peaceful reunification of their country. We call upon delegates to this Conference to help to put an end to aggressive action and to maintain peace throughout the world.
Mr. WEAVER (Government delegate, United States)—On a point of order, in conformity with the principle practised in the Standing Orders of this Conference, I seek the right of immediate reply. As I indicated at the outset, it is with regret that I find it necessary to burden this Conference with a discussion on the right of immediate reply. I do think it is regrettable that these matters should be injected into our deliberations, so taking away from the time and efforts that should be devoted to the matters on the agenda which we are here to discuss, and which are within the competence of this Organisation.

The previous speaker, in his distorted and slanderous description of the situation in Viet-Nam, I repeat, was completely out of order, because it falls outside the competence of the Director-General's Report and the purpose of our discussion which, up to this point, has taken place within the framework of that Report.

I do not believe we are here to discuss the situation in Viet-Nam, but we are prepared to do so. The situation in Viet-Nam, the fate of the people of Cuba, the Hungarian revolution, or the conditions in the Baltic States or any other area of the world can be discussed if that be the desire of this Conference. If it is the desire of this Conference to have political matters of this description injected, we are prepared to discuss them, but I do think, since the issue of Viet-Nam has been injected into the discussion, it is our responsibility to have the record set straight. The United States is in the Republic of Viet-Nam at the invitation of the Vietnamese authorities; the main goal is the preservation of that country's independence and territorial integrity, free from outside attack.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. CHAJN (Government delegate, Poland)—On a point of order, Mr. Weaver has just taken the floor in order to explain to us the aims of American policies in Viet-Nam. I think, however, that we are now at a different point of this Conference; we are discussing the Report of the Director-General. Mr. Weaver and his colleagues will be able to reply to Mr. Weaver's remarks when they themselves take the floor on the Report of the Director General. I submit Mr. Weaver has no right to take up the time of the Conference in order to describe to delegates the policies of the Americans in Viet-Nam. That is why, Mr. President, I would appeal to you that we immediately proceed with the discussion of the Director-General's Report.

The PRESIDENT—I have looked up the Constitution, and I do not find anything specific about this in the Constitution. I would therefore allow Mr. Weaver to carry on, but would suggest to him that the answer should be given in the speech which is going to be delivered by him as the delegate of the Government of the United States, and that he be as brief as possible now, and merely meet the points made by the previous speaker.

Mr. WEAVER (Government delegate, United States)—It is not the intention of the delegation of the United States to inject these political matters into their regular speech before the Conference. We will seek to confine our remarks to the Director-General's Report, which is the item on the agenda, but I do not think that the record of this sitting should be allowed to pass without it being made clear why the free countries—and I emphasise free countries—are assisting South Viet-Nam in its struggle. It is to allow them and to help them to retain their territorial independence and integrity. They have not attacked North Viet-Nam, but have been seeking to defend themselves against the attacks launched from North Viet-Nam. I would ask that this Conference be conducted in a manner to be expected and desired, and that these political matters be eliminated from the debate, but we will abide by the Chair's ruling in this regard.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. EFREMENKO (Workers' delegate, Ukraine)—I rise to a point of order and will be brief; I would like to support what has just been said by Mr. Chajn. In my opinion, this rostrum cannot be used for the purpose of imposing upon us points such as have just been made by the United States delegate, with a view to intimidating us and preventing us from raising matters allegedly outside the scope of the discussion. We cannot be intimidated—we do not frighten easily.

As regards the remarks of Mr. Pimenov, I do not think there was any misunderstanding. He represents 60 or 70 million workers in his country, who have instructed him to put forward their views here; this is fully in the interests of the work of the I.L.O. The workers of the socialist countries want to believe that the International Labour Organisation will react to the events which are taking place in the world. I appeal to you, Sir, to allow those who wish to speak to do so, in accordance with democratic principles, especially the workers' representatives, who are always being told to be silent when they wish to express their opinion on matters of concern to them. I therefore appeal to you to allow all the delegates to speak, in a spirit of democracy, if they wish to do so.

Mr. DELANEY (Government delegate, United States)—On a point of order, may I reply to the statement made by the Workers' delegate of the U.S.S.R., who made some very serious and false accusations and mentioned the Americans by name? Under article 62 of the Standing Orders, you are authorised, Mr. President, to take action. I should have thought, in the light of the necessity to create a climate conducive to getting on with the technical work of this Conference, that it would have been more useful if the representative of the workers in the U.S.S.R. had talked to us in terms of improving the social and economic conditions of workers throughout the world. Article 62 gives you, Mr. President, authority to take action and I urge you to take that authority in your hands, so that this Conference can eliminate matters in which it has no competence.
The President—I would draw the attention of the speaker to the fact that article 62 refers to the right to address the Committees. We can now resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from Arabic: Mr. SALAMA (Minister of Labour, United Arab Republic)—I have pleasure in congratulating you, Mr. President, and in congratulating the Conference, on your election. I feel sure that your wise leadership will help the Conference to achieve all the success for which we hope.

I seize this opportunity of welcoming sister countries which joined the Organisation last year, after achieving their independence, for which they struggled and made sacrifices for several years. The constant increase in membership of the Organisation is of great importance to all of us, since it emphasises more and more the principle of universality of the Organisation, which is very much our concern. This principle of universality of the Organisation, coupled with the tripartite representation system, are the two main foundations of this Organisation. At the same time, they help the Organisation to achieve one of its most important objectives; namely the improving of working and living conditions in all nations. It also reaffirms the belief of all nations, big or small, that universal and lasting peace can be established only if based on social justice, and that the failure of any nation to adopt humane conditions of labour is an obstacle in the way of other nations which desire to improve conditions in their own countries.

Last year was, indeed, a decisive year in the economic and social development of the United Arab Republic. The closing of the financial year 1964-65 at the end of June this year will witness the completion of the First Five-Year Plan (1960-65), the final results of which are indeed very satisfactory. This is clearly evidenced by the results achieved during the first four years of the Plan. In the base year (1959-60) the total value of our production was £2,548 million; it amounted to £3,292 million at the end of June last year, at constant prices. Our national income was £1,285.2 million in the base year. It was raised to £1,647.8 million at the end of the fourth year, with prices always constant. In the base year there were 6,006,000 persons working in the different sectors of the economy. The figure is 7,085,000 at the end of the fourth year. The total wages bill was £493.5 million in the base year, and reached £770.3 million at the end of the fourth year. These figures clearly illustrate the extent of progress achieved by the United Arab Republic in its endeavours for development and for sufficiency and justice.

During the last year the United Arab Republic continued its endeavours to improve working and living conditions and to establish sound industrial relations. To achieve this objective, the State expanded the scope of committees established to consider the dismissal of workers; these committees include a representative of both the employer and the workers—before a final decision is made by the employing company. The State also established a board for the amicable settlement of labour disputes which the local relations offices fail to settle amicably, and this board also includes representatives of employers and workers.

In the sphere of social insurance, and in accordance with the established policy of accomplishing the various stages of insurance, the State started applying the Health Insurance System in the Governorate of Alexandria in October 1964. This system will be expanded gradually so as to cover by October 1967 all industrial, commercial and service workers of the government, public and private sectors in the United Arab Republic. Insurance against unemployment has also been started to cover industrial, commercial and service workers.

It is expected that the scope of social insurance will expand during the coming few months, so as to cover agricultural workers using mechanical devices, workers employed in companies or societies engaged in agricultural activities, and workers employed in projects or undertakings to be specified by the board of the social insurance scheme, according to the size of the projects and undertakings. Some 150,000 agricultural workers will benefit from this expansion. It may be mentioned that the State's efforts in the field of insurance have no limit, since our target is to have social insurance cover for all workers engaged in all economic sectors. To this end, we have started carrying out studies whereby insurance could cover all workers engaged in all sorts of agricultural activities, and all self-employed persons in industrial, commercial and service institutions.

Believing that co-operation in the field of labour can contribute to the development of the Arab States on a solid and sound basis, and in line with the objectives of the Charter of the League of Arab States, the United Arab Republic, together with its Arab sister countries, is co-operating fully in the labour field. The Arab States give particular attention to maintaining co-ordination between Arab government departments concerned with labour questions. They also aim at reaching similar standards in labour legislation, social insurance and, where possible, the unification of working conditions. They are also planning for vocational training to meet their requirements, taking into consideration the objectives of economic and social development of the Arab States.

This is the third year that we have been discussing the programmes and structure of the I.L.O. It seemed clear that there was a consensus of agreement among member States regarding the Organisation's programmes and their order of priority, especially in respect of development and conditions of work. This agreement is reflected in the Director-General's Report this year. The Report tackles the points that were agreed upon and translates them into practical programmes capable of being applied. The Director-General has linked the implementation of these programmes to the new set-up of the Organisation which was put into effect at the beginning of this year.

I do not want to refer to the proposals put forward by the Director-General in regard to the Organisation's programmes, since these have already been agreed to by all of us. But I wish to emphasise once more the need to devote more attention to vocational training as well as vocational education, since they represent the basic foundation for the development of human resources.

In his Report the Director-General referred to the procedure to be followed in revising some of the Conventions and Recommendations previously adopted by the Conference. He also referred to the simplified manner for the revision of some Conventions that do not concern basic human rights.

While I have no objection to the principle of simplification in the revision of some Conventions, nevertheless I wish to add that it might be appropriate that the Final Articles of Conventions should include provisions governing the procedures to be followed when the Conference considers introducing any amendments to some Parts or Articles of such Conventions. This can be done by amending the Final Articles of the Conventions, as was done in 1946 and 1962.

While we are talking about the revision of Conventions and Recommendations, I would refer to the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). Please allow me to give here our point of view, which we have already explained at the Second African Regional Conference held in Addis Ababa late last year.

In the past no States used to recognise the labour movements. They even used to fight these movements and victimise their leaders in order to get rid of any labour unity and of the problems arising from this unity. Even the few countries that used to recognise trade unionism always welcomed the disbandment and dispersion of trade unions.

The key role played by the labour movement in the struggle for liberation and independence and in the fight against imperialism, forced them, on top of their political, social and economic work, to play a role in achieving national unity after independence, by eradicating all traces of imperialism and exploitation, by establishing national sovereignty, by strengthening the national independence by means of a free and sound economic independence, and by furthering social progress.

Since this national unity necessitates, without the slightest doubt, unity of the working forces which, since they pioneer all the forces of the nation, are in effect a basic foundation for economic development, it becomes therefore a natural and logical matter that a free country should create strong trade unions even if that be through legislation, legislation being the normal expression of the free will of the country. Freedom of thought, discussion and work will always remain intact within the unified framework of unionism that is dictated by prevailing national economic and social circumstances.

State recognition of the national labour movements within the country, the encouragement which the State gives these movements in promoting unity and solidarity on the basis that they represent the prime foundation of over-all national unity, should never be cited as an act of aggression against trade unionism, for it is in fact a means of strengthening the labour movement.

Developing countries cannot afford to wait for decades of slow progress and experiments —like other countries—in order finally to achieve the imperative unity of trade unionism. We believe that the dispersion of labour movements in any developing country struggling to strengthen its independence and economy is a national crime. We also believe that failure to exert the efforts necessary to unite and strengthen these movements, including the use of legislation, is even more of a crime.

The measures and standards included in Conventions Nos. 87 and 98 are no longer sufficient to meet the special circumstances and desperate needs of developing countries. I therefore urge that these two Conventions be revised so that they meet the present requirements of developing countries. Conventions Nos. 87 and 98, which I now ask should be revised, deal with basic human rights, and in view of the importance of the subjects they cover I consider that the normal procedure should be followed and not the simplified procedure to which the Director-General referred in his Report.

It is a matter of pleasure that the Director-General should reply to many suggestions raised during the past two sessions of the International Labour Conference. In his Report this year he mentioned that in the new organisation of the International Labour Office special attention has been given to the regional structure of the Organisation and particular attention paid to regional offices in different countries.

The African Continent is impatiently waiting to enjoy the fruits of this new structure. Huge problems are facing this continent, and it hopes that the International Labour Organisation will help to solve them. The continent cherishes great aspirations which it hopes the International Labour Organisation will help realise. The African Continent, as a unit of similar economic and social circumstances, will endeavour to unify labour legislation, to co-operate in the sphere of labour culture and to carry out different studies in the field of labour.

I do hope that the new organisation of regional and branch offices will help to achieve the hopes that have been laid in them and will assist member States in raising the standards of the working class. I also hope to see the fulfilment of what was mentioned in the Director-General’s Report in connection with the appointment of nationals from countries in which these offices operate.

The Director-General’s Report this year was confined to the programmes and organisation of the International Labour Office. The Report did not mention the structure of the International Labour Organisation and the relationship which exists between the three main bodies.

In the last two sessions of the Conference I referred to the need for giving the Conference all its rights as the supreme authority of the Organisation. I also said that the Governing Body must not exceed its authority as an executive body which receives its instructions from the higher authority, which is the Conference.

I also reiterated our point of view in regard to the present system of membership of the Governing Body, which provides for permanent seats for a number of countries. This does not help to ensure a balance between the various bodies of the Organisation, in addition to being a system that has no equal in any of the specialised agencies of the United Nations. It is not in line with the circumstances at present prevailing in the world; it is not in accordance with the principles of equality among member States of the Organisation and it even represents a flagrant discrimination in membership. I therefore urge that the Constitution of the Organisation be so amended as to ensure that the permanent seats are filled by election, without distinction on the grounds of the industrial importance of the country thus represented.

Since its inception the International Labour Organisation has fought for the eradication of racial discrimination and forced labour of all sorts and endeavours to establish humane working conditions for the working class everywhere. The Organisation succeeded in exerting pressure on South Africa and finally compelled the Government of that country to withdraw from the Organisation.

The Organisation also adopted two constitutional amendments whereby it is impossible for South Africa to rejoin the Organisation before it gives up completely its vile policy of racial discrimination.

I am sorry to state that there is still a member State of this Organisation, Portugal, which uses forced labour in an exceedingly vile manner in Mozambique, Angola and in so-called Portuguese Guinea. This Organisation must take firm steps to see that Portugal desists from this vile policy and stops imposing forced labour on African workers in Mozambique. Portugal not only imposes forced labour but also exports those workers to South Africa, a practice which was condemned by this Organisation on the grounds of racial discrimination. This must be brought to an end.

I should like to wish this Conference every success.

Mr. TESEMMA (Government delegate, Ethiopia)—May I be allowed to associate myself with the previous speakers in congratulating the President on his election. I am confident that a man of his calibre and experience is an asset to the Conference. I am also positive that his prestige and vast experience will help us greatly in arriving at decisions which will reflect the long line of tradition and accumulated experience of the I.L.O.

I have read with great interest and enthusiasm the Director-General's commendable Report. It is extensive in scope and analytical in approach. I therefore seize this opportunity to make my observations on some of the most important items which have captured my imagination and which also correspond with the vast problems which my country faces. These crucial matters which are elaborated in the Report at length and with eloquence—namely human resources development, living and working conditions, development of social institutions and international labour standards—are the cornerstone of a balanced socio-economic development. In developing countries where the majority of the people work as small farmers (as in the case of my country) the yield of farms is very low because of an agrarian structure, a lack of modern techniques and education, and other allied forces which stunt economic development. These forces are the major bottlenecks which hamper rural development in emerging countries. Therefore, top priority must be accorded to educating and mobilising manpower resources for the construction of a nation. My Government is aware of its vast manpower resources, and, being convinced of the truth that human resources will have on economic development and political stability, has given priority in its development plan to those projects which employ human resources economically. It has in particular made a modest attempt in the development and conservation of its human resources through community development and co-operatives.

Although there has been a significant recognition of the importance of the utilisation of human resources as a key factor in economic development, it is unfortunate that in most emerging countries, including my own, policies and programmes for the utilisation of human resources are far from adequate. This shortcoming is reflected in too low a priority being given to investment in human capital, and in the absence of co-ordination between manpower planning and national planning. It is therefore of paramount importance, as the Director-General stated in his Report, that policies and programmes concerning the development of human resources should be integrated with economic planning, having regard to the availability of trained personnel, the high level of productive employment, and the need for improving living and working conditions without hampering the requirements of rapid economic development.

My Government has noted with satisfaction the fact that the I.L.O.'s objectives are in line with desirable policies on human resources development. The I.L.O.'s interest in adopting international instruments on the development and utilisation of human resources shows the growing recognition of the seriousness and urgency of the problem. It is my conviction that such international instruments lay the foundation for investment in human resources in over-all development.

In order to deal in a more effective manner with the various problems which arise in promoting higher levels of employment and in improving the quality of labour, human resources development must be based on concrete objectives. These have been fully realised and given shape in the Director-General's Report. I fully subscribe to the objectives suggested in the Report for a strategy in the field of human resources, and I add one more objective to these, namely the choice of technique which forms an integral part of such strategy.

The immense problems of developing countries—unused manpower and the low level of national income, and the correspondingly low level of capital accumulation—can be properly tackled if appropriate techniques are employed, and this will invariably ensure growth of national production on the one hand and rapid...
The Director-General has dealt in a very practical and skilled fashion with the advantages and disadvantages of capital-intensive and labour-intensive modes of investment. I am in complete agreement with him that capital—and labour-intensive methods are productive if employed within the bounds of reason and if the realities of the various stages of economic development are taken into consideration. These two approaches can be complementary if due consideration is given to the emphasis to be placed on the approach that properly accommodates the circumstances of the day. Therefore, I assert with all earnestness that capital- and labour-intensive approaches are complementary rather than contradictory. A balanced combination of the two will, beyond doubt, provide a large volume of employment and ensure a high productivity and growth of national income.

The Director-General in his Report has drawn our attention to the prevailing problems of developing countries. At this particular juncture I feel it necessary to refer to these problems and in doing so I shall beg the indulgence of the President. The problems on which our attention should be focused are unemployment and underemployment, particularly in rural areas, shortages of trained personnel at different levels, low productivity in most forms of activity, illiteracy, an inadequate educational system which does not meet the needs of the time, and traditions and habits which are not favourable to economic and social development.

I fully agree that these are some of the serious problems of the emerging nations and, I also feel that, although the industrialised countries have overcome these basic problems, they do nevertheless have more intricate social and economic problems which have come about as a result of the application of ill-devised solutions to these problems. I would say that the emerging nations are very fortunate because they can learn from the mistakes of those countries and thereby reach a high level of social and economic development in a relatively short time. I therefore humbly request the Secretariat to make intensive studies of a selected group of the industrialised countries and make the findings available for the use of the emerging nations.

Of all the heavy problems which have confronted the emerging nations, unemployment is the worst of all. I do not think I need go into the reasons because the social, psychological and economic repercussions of unemployment have become part and parcel of our daily life. It is my feeling as it is of all of you that the problem of unemployment in its various forms has become a scourge and threat to mankind. Therefore, we need to integrate our efforts to stamp out this threat. This can be achieved if we strengthen our international solidarity in seeking solutions to employment problems.

The I.L.O. has already taken a useful step towards this goal by adopting in 1964 a Convention and Recommendation on employment policy. This can no doubt act as a basis upon which, in the words of the Director-General, we can build further in our efforts to promote the objective of full employment. To achieve this objective, the need for practical research in order to determine which of the possible approaches can best solve the problems of unemployment becomes inevitable. It is also quite obvious that studies of problems connected with employment need as a prerequisite reliable statistics. It is interesting to recall, at this particular juncture, that the Second African Regional Conference, held in my country, emphasised this need and urged in its resolutions increased help from the I.L.O. to African countries for research on economic and social development. It is therefore of great importance to emphasise the need for improving the quality of the labour force through education and vocational training. It is in this line that the I.L.O. needs our undivided support in making vocational training one of the major activities in its programme of human resources development.

I hope you will bear with me if I devote a few words to the development of social institutions, and at the same time state my Government's position on this issue in the light of the Director-General's Report.

My Government is convinced of the need to associate all sectors of the economy in the formulation of sound economic and social policies. If the interests of all sectors of the economy are not accommodated, then economic development not only becomes a futile attempt but also yields negative results. Hence a consolidated approach to national planning makes the growth and development of workers' and employers' organisations imperative. Once these organisations come into being and are recognised as independent representatives of workers and employers they have to participate actively in the national effort for economic and social development.

It is also my conviction that, as the Director-General pointed out in his Report, the complexity of workers' and employers' organisations demands an efficient administrative machinery within the government to be able to deal with the problems that arise from labour-management conflicts. In addition, education and training for people who are involved in labour-relations matters is essential. This will create an atmosphere of understanding among workers, employers and government. The means of carrying out these objectives, however, lie in both economic co-operation and technical assistance.

In conclusion, I would like to bring to the notice of the Conference that my Government has fully realised the advantages of translating international labour standards into action. We have given priority to those international instruments which deal with human rights. We abhor all forms of discrimination which infringe basic human rights. Though the I.L.O., in its endeavour to eliminate the policy of apartheid, as explained in the Report, has worked for the principle of equal opportunity, for freedom and dignity of all human beings irrespective of race and colour, my Government still hopes that this Conference will bring an end to the remnants of apartheid.

Finally, I shall be failing in my duty if I do not congratulate the Director-General for his learned Report, and I would like also to express the satisfaction of my Government with the reorganisation of the I.L.O. on the basis of the problems facing it. An organisation whose approach and structure are based on the problems to be overcome is in a very good posture to meet the needs of its Members.

Interpretation from Arabic: Mr. SARAWI (Government delegate, Kuwait)—The most significant development described in the Director-General's Report this year is the substantial implementation of his proposals relating to the structure and programme of the I.L.O. which were so fully debated in the last two sessions. The developments, I am pleased to note, have been effected in such a way as to meet the needs of the many newly independent countries. Problems facing the emerging States obviously require a broadening of the sphere of the international organisations which are helping to create a better world by finding solutions to current problems and by working to eliminate social and economic discrepancies between member States.

Yet, despite the strenuous efforts of these international organisations (amongst which the I.L.O. is one of the most active) in promoting human progress and capacities by means of technical assistance and the exchange of services, we are of the opinion that the gap between the developed and developing countries continues to widen.

The Director-General has placed before us fruitful proposals and has described action which has been taken in order to strengthen the I.L.O. in its sphere of servicing developing countries through greater decentralisation of its work and the establishment of more technical departments. The aim is to carry out its heavy task in the social and economic fields in order to achieve the prosperity and welfare of the peoples of the world and to contribute to world security and peace in a genuine and effective way, that is, through human sources development, industrial relations development, and improvements in working and living conditions.

We welcome this opportunity to contribute some comments on the Organisation, its structure and programme.

Regarding the structure of the I.L.O., we note that the Director-General has mentioned in his Report and budget recommendations proposals which aim at improving and expanding the Organisation's regional offices and activities. However, there are matters which still need our consideration concerning the structure and the procedures of the I.L.O. Our suggestions in this regard are mainly aimed at keeping up with changes in modern world conditions, so as both to secure fair geographical distribution and to safeguard the principles of democracy among the member States in their representation in the various activities of the I.L.O.

We therefore suggest the following in order to achieve a better and smoother running of the I.L.O.—

1. The existing Industrial Committees of the International Labour Organisation should be reviewed in order to secure representation of States whose industries are of special importance. Meanwhile, we should take into account, as far as possible, the representation of the developing countries and concentrate on their special needs with a view to these matters being placed on the agendas of the relevant Committees. We believe that the periods between the meetings of these Committees should be shortened and their Standing Orders modified in such a way as to ensure that their resolutions become more effective. We are also of the opinion that the setting-up of Industrial Committees should be on a regional basis in order to study the industrial problems in the various regions.

It need not be added that in this way the I.L.O.'s growing interest in the decentralisation of its activities will achieve practical results.

2. The periods between the regional conferences should be shortened. Such meetings, we believe, should be held once every two years instead of every four years, as is current practice. Attempts should be made to increase the competence and effectiveness of regional conferences. The advisory committees should meet annually instead of every two years as at present. Concerning these regional conferences, we vigorously urge the use of the language of the region where the conference is held, in addition to the two official languages, English and French.

3. The competence of the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation needs to be widened, as it is the source of all international labour standards set up by the Organisation.

4. The permanent seats on the Governing Body limited to States of chief industrial importance should be cancelled, as there is no justification now for such a privilege to be continued. Members of the Governing Body should be elected in the same manner as that followed by the other specialised agencies in order to maintain the principle of democracy among the member States of the Organisation.

As to the Organisation's programme, we favour and support the steps taken regarding the reorganisation of the International Labour Office and its regional branches in the course of the past year. In this sphere the Office consists of three large administrative units with areas of competence corresponding to the following broad programme categories: (1) the formulation and implementation of the I.L.O.'s programme; (2) major programme areas covering human resources development, social institutions and conditions of life and work; (3) the setting of international labour standards and procedures for their revision.

We also support the establishment of 11 technical and servicing departments which are concerned with technical, economic and social matters. In addition, these departments are responsible for all headquarters and regional machinery. Thus, their functions cover the whole range of I.L.O. activities.

But, in order that the services of the Organisation should be fully and equally available to all member States, particularly at a regional level, and on questions of human resources development, we believe that attention should be concentrated on the following points: (1) expansion of the aid offered through the technical assistance programmes; (2) broadening of the field of research and dissemination of information concerning the many different peoples of the member States of the I.L.O. and in particular those of the developing countries; (3) recruitment of a large number of qualified persons and experts from developing countries at the headquarters and in the regional offices of the I.L.O.

As regards technical assistance, it is obvious that more benefit can be obtained by using the language of the country where a training project is set up.

In the sphere of the Arab world, we are of the opinion that the Organisation should cooperate with the Arab League in order to strengthen the I.L.O.'s translation section. The same can be said about training centres and the translation of research work and studies into the Arabic language.

Widening the scope of research, and the dissemination of information about status and conditions of developing countries, require appropriate measures for the expansion of human resources development programmes and services offered by the technical assistance programmes to these countries.

As an example, we may take a country like Kuwait where the exploitation of oil has resulted in the expansion of many towns and villages. Most of them are dependent upon supplying the daily consumption needs of employees working in the neighbouring oil areas and in supplying transport services. We feel that a special study to prepare a programme to develop handicrafts and small industries adapted to the needs of these towns and villages is necessary.

With regard to the efforts which should be exerted to recruit specialists and experts from developing countries for the I.L.O., we believe that to do so would help achieve the objectives and implement the programmes aimed at expanding the I.L.O.'s activities at the regional level.

In conclusion, we would strongly emphasise that in any revision of international labour standards our main principles should be based on fundamental human rights as set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. After all, it was on this basis that many member States joined the United Nations.

Accordingly, the same principles should govern the Conference, the Governing Body and the International Labour Office when we adopt Conventions, follow up their ratification and study the application of their provisions.

Finally, I will conclude by commending the progressive steps taken by the Director-General in achieving an important part of the objectives which were set by our colleagues with the aim of strengthening the structure of the I.L.O. and expanding its activities in order to meet the conditions at present prevailing in the modern world.

I should like to take this opportunity to express my genuine appreciation of the Director-General's Report and his personal efforts. Meanwhile I would like, Sir, to convey on my behalf and in the name of my country my congratulations on your election as President of this Conference.

Mr. KAPABTIS (Employers' delegate, Cyprus)—I feel greatly honoured to address, for the first time from this rostrum, this distinguished audience. In my turn, I wish, Mr. President, warmly to congratulate you and, through you, your most able Vice- President, in your most able Vice-Presidents which you are holding. I should like also to express, on my own behalf and on behalf of the organisation which I represent, our great appreciation for the excellent Report which the Director-General has presented again this year.

It would be almost impossible for an individual speaker to touch upon all the points raised in the work of this Conference. I shall endeavour to unfold my thoughts on a number of them, and particularly on the development of social institutions.

The scheme for greater decentralisation of the work of the I.L.O. is a most welcome development, because this will meet the ever-increasing trend towards regional co-operation and will facilitate the growth of still better relations and common action in the achievement of the standards set by the I.L.O. Of particular importance to my country is the proposed establishment of a regional branch for the Middle East. In this connection I should like to repeat the suggestion made at one of the previous debates on the subject that Cyprus, because of its geographical position, would seem an excellent choice for the location of this branch. The present political anomaly in the island will, I am sure, not adversely affect the decision on the matter, as both the Greek and Turkish Cypriots have come to realise that it is only through peaceful coexistence that their best interests and aspirations are served.

The better utilisation of the labour force and the improvement of its quality so as to become more productive will, I believe, provide the key to increased national income and increased benefits to the workers. All endeavours in this direction should be geared towards the needs of our changing world, having regard to technological improvements and social changes and also to plans of national development.

In this era of automation and electronics we are faced with an acute problem of flexibility and adaptation: flexibility in our plans and policies, and adaptation to the new skills which are required. Mechanisation, automation, technological and structural changes do not result in the displacement and obsolescence of the human factor as a necessary tool of production: rather they result in the obsolescence of skills and techniques, because automation and technology destroy jobs but at the same time they create new ones requiring a different kind of skill and ability. This is, in my opinion, the crucial problem with which we are confronted: to adapt ourselves and our skills to the needs of the new era in which we live. We can achieve it only through systematic training and retraining at all levels.

Coming from a predominantly rural country, I cannot but subscribe to the suggestion that priority should be given to the planning and organisation of manpower in rural areas. This will facilitate the industrialisation process of
As the Director-General points out in his Report, however, it is imperative that, in carrying out the human resources programme, due importance should be given to the strengthening of research. The I.L.O. should not only encourage but also provide the means to developing countries and otherwise assist in the implementation of that aspect of the programme.

Turning to the question of the development of social institutions, there can be no doubt that occupational organisations are now called upon to perform functions over and above their traditional tasks of defending their members' interests. The participation of such organisations in the development of the society as a whole, through their shoulders new responsibilities calling for particular attention. It is an axiom that the economic and social development of a country should be the joint effort of all its citizens. The representative organised social groups should be given the chance to actively participate in the development of their country and should be fully consulted prior to the formulation of policies by the competent authority of the Government. The Director-General very correctly points out: "It is only with the collective support and enthusiasm of all sections of the population that such programmes can have an adequate and effective impact on the problems of underdevelopment." This form of consultation will not only stimulate the new role which our social institutions are called upon to play but it will also help in harmonising the relations among the three parties—government, employers, and workers.

However, we express caution lest this new role of social institutions be construed as reducing a government's role to govern. In my opinion, at least, nothing should impede a government from exercising its function of formulating and administering its country's socio-economic plans. This fundamental function should not be eliminated or diminished but, with the country's destiny and prosperity, should be stimulated by the association of social institutions in the initial phases of consultation prior to the formulation of policies.

In the field of labour relations much progress can be made through the development of administrative machinery to deal with problems pertaining to this field. I am proud to say that in Cyprus our "Basic Agreement" was signed in November 1962; the text was reproduced in toto in the International Labour Review of March 1963. The excellent results that the Basic Agreement has yielded to Cyprus industry prompts me to express the wish that other developing countries could work out similar procedures.

Perhaps the most crucial point raised under the broad subject of development of social institutions is that of association of workers in the management of undertakings. I must declare from the outset that both I myself and the association which I represent believe that the workers can make an important and constructive contribution both to the economy of the country and to the efficient running of an undertaking. However, their association in the management of undertakings should be viewed, with extreme caution. If this is taken to mean that the workers are called upon to share management's role of managing our answer is "No". We object to this idea for more than one reason. Primarily, our firm belief in maximum efficiency through co-operation presupposes the survival and growth not just of one but of both of the parties, management and labour. Such survival and growth can be secured through the strengthening and not through the restriction of each side's fundamental functions. Each party has an important role to play. Management's primary role is to manage, i.e. to plan, control, direct, coordinate and motivate. These are not only its rights but also its obligations. Rights carry obligations but obligations must also carry rights. Management has the sole responsibility for the success of this role. It should, therefore, have the sole right, which it cannot share with anybody else. Arrangements in the field of industrial relations must leave unimpaired management prerogatives and freedoms, without which it cannot meet its responsibilities.

Moreover, workers are ill-prepared to undertake or share the managerial responsibilities and functions of formulating policies and taking decisions. But even leaving this obstacle aside, the association of workers in the management of undertakings would deprive them of their essential role of acting as a brake against unilateral decisions by management. The purpose of co-operation would be defeated by the resulting oxymoron and industrial strife would prevail.

If, however, the association of workers in the management of undertakings, or, to put it otherwise, the participation of the workers in the formulation of some management decisions, is interpreted to mean a form of consultation between management and employees in a genuine desire not only to keep employees fully informed on all matters affecting employee-employer relationships but also to enable them to air their views and constructively contribute to the effective management of the enterprise, then of course the whole question can be viewed from an entirely different angle.

Provided the workers possess the necessary experience and maturity in industrial relations, their participation in consultative machinery can be welcomed as long as it is clearly understood that the purpose is not to hinder the management of an undertaking in the exercise of its regular and customary functions. The aim of such machinery should be the effective utilisation of the labour force so that the attainment of the purposes of the organisation results to the benefit of the labour force, of the company as a profit-making organisation and, what is of even greater importance, of the society to which they both belong.

I should like now to comment briefly on that part of the Report which deals with living and working conditions. In the world of progress we live in, it would be futile to resist the betterment of living standards even if, speaking theoretically, such was the intention of a particular class of the population. My association's philosophy in this connection is guided not by the impossibility of such a negative attitude of resistance but by a genuine desire to join in the common effort of raising the nation's welfare and, through that, in the promotion of the workers' living and working conditions. We fully realise that it is only by working in complete harmony with the trade unions that the economy of our island can be considerably improved. Such harmony is both the cause and result of greater productivity and efficiency, and it is through increased productivity and efficiency that the pursuit and achievement of higher living standards for the workers can materialise. As the Conference pointed out last year, the need is for raising minimum standards of living in relation to economic growth.

I am sure that my colleagues will explore more fully the various points raised in the Report. It only remains for me to express once more my association's high appreciation for the excellent Report produced by the Director-General and his team of assistants.

(The Conference adjourned at 12.45 p.m.)
SEVENTH SITTING

Monday, 7 June 1965, 3 p.m.

President : Mr. Rasa

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL : DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from Spanish : Mr. RECALDE (Employers' delegate, Argentina)—I should like first of all to congratulate you, Sir, on the recognition which your election implies of your high personal qualities and wide experience of the work of the International Labour Organisation. Next, I bring to the Government, Workers' and Employers' delegates of all participating countries the cordial greetings of the Argentine employers whom I have the honour to represent at this session. We come here convinced of the increasing need for a harmonious settlement of the many problems which arise daily in the economic and social fields in this complex age.

Among the gravest difficulties which face private enterprise in the developing countries in general, and particularly in Latin America, is the political, economic and social instability which keeps us in constant insecurity. Institutional instability varies in degree, ranging from continual ministerial changes to the overthrow of government by force. It not only breaks the continuity of economic policies but also causes the reduction, modification or abolition of plans and, consequently, of concrete activities to provide an infrastructure which will permit of national economic development.

Private undertakings, which should usually develop in economic systems and circumstances appropriate to their character, are obliged by institutional changes to face consequences which they are unable to foresee. This prevents undertakings which are linked one way or another to government plans from carrying out their long-term projects because they are deprived of the indispensable security. Consequently, entrepreneurs tend to engage in speculative activities with the object of protecting themselves against unexpected changes and choices. In these circumstances the national effort cannot, of course, be duly utilised for the development of the country.

These repeated crises stem from a vicious circle, since institutional instability results from economic and financial weakness, and institutional and economic instability in its turn prevents economic development policies from being implemented. As economic conditions are reflected in the social field, there is created an atmosphere conducive to even greater institutional instability and to more radical and violent changes in the political and economic structure. Latin America has already had experience of the lengths to which this disintegrating process can go if it is not rapidly and entirely stopped.

I have referred to the grave effect which such events have on balanced national development, and therefore one of the main objectives which the Latin American entrepreneurs must set themselves is to bring about the rapid stabilisation of political structures so as to facilitate national and commercial development. To this necessity is added the weight of the social disquiet of today, which reflects a desire for a higher standard of living in the great Latin American community, where over 50 per cent. of the inhabitants have an income of no more than $120 a year. This deep-rooted social disquiet cannot be overcome in terms of the present economic conditions in Latin America. Any improvement depends absolutely on profound changes, and these can be brought about if our countries are motivated by an energetic development policy such as that contemplated in the Punta del Este Charter.

This picture includes one encouraging sign in the world of business. Many entrepreneurs in our country understand that they have a responsibility in the present situation which obliges them to persevere so as to increase their influence on political decisions and thus to contribute to institutional stability, social peace and economic development.

I have just referred to the social disquiet which again and again has caused explosive conflicts in Latin America. Of course, such events have a direct effect for the worse on political institutions and also on economic structures. Any solution must attack these problems at the root, otherwise they will persist and will even be aggravated. Therefore the reform must be as thorough and effective as the Director-General says in his Report should be the case. Measures which have not these characteristics will be useless.

I may remind you that the last F.A.O. report, discussed at the recent conference at Viña del Mar, when considering the problem of agriculture with which the I.L.O. so rightly deals, that only by action agreed between employers and workers, aimed at objectives which are essential to our economy, can we move forward along the difficult path ahead. We see economic programming as an instrument which must be shared and handled with direct cooperation by employers and workers, for we do not believe in the success of plans imposed by the State or indeed of any plan not accepted in advance and supported by those for whom it is intended: namely the employers and workers.

We therefore recommend, as an organ reflecting this social co-operation, the establishment of an economic and social council on which employers, workers and professional men and women would be represented and would give effect to their responsibility for sharing in the economic and social direction of our country. After years of struggle a start has been made with this scheme in some of the provinces, and the resulting spirit of regional solidarity has been encouraging. We hope that the present parliament will finally face the problem and establish such a council at the national level, thus testing the degree of understanding which employers and workers have of their responsibility in the conduct of the nation's economic and social affairs.

We think all these factors show that the essential objectives which brought the I.L.O. into existence are acquiring a wider acceptance with the passage of time, and that this enhances their depth and scope. It is a great satisfaction to us employers to state publicly our recognition of the historic and social understanding with which the I.L.O. is facing the problem of reforming its own programme and structure.

It is thus reacting to the mighty changes which have occurred in the world since the Second World War, and we hope that other international technical and financial organisations will do the same.

I had to say this because we consider that popular support for national development activities, and the participation of broad social groups therein, is as important as or more important than the formulation of national and international objectives. This was recognised at the last session of the International Labour Conference. We are glad to note that this view, to which we attach particular importance, is emphasised also by the Director-General as fundamental to the work of the I.L.O. itself.

In closing I should like to wish the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference every possible success. May its spirit of solidarity and understanding carry us beyond the national borders, particularly those of the developing countries. May the efforts of all groups—Governments, Employers and Workers—be reflected in a permanent improvement of the living and working conditions of the people through lasting expansion of the economic capacity of their countries.

Mr. BHEEKHABHAI (Government delegate, India)—Allow me, Mr. President, first of all to congratulate you on your election to the high office of President of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.
The Director-General has given us a purposeful Report this year. For the last two years the focus of discussion in the Conference has been on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. The many proposals made by delegates from different countries are being sorted out by the Governing Body and its Working Party. Meanwhile, the Director-General has prepared the major programme proposals based on the consensus that has emerged. I am glad that he has already taken action in reorganising the Office and has formulated proposals on major programme areas on which agreement exists.

The crucial question for the majority of our I.L.O. membership is development, and they want the I.L.O.'s activities to be development-oriented. Development is the need of the hour, the cry of the developing countries. The promotion of social justice to which the I.L.O. is wedded can be a reality only if the gap between the rich nations and the poor ones is progressively narrowed by a more rapid improvement of the economies of the less developed countries. Thus, though the Organisation's old moorings and basic aims must necessarily remain, the technique of promoting these aims has to undergo a change. It is no longer a question of setting labour standards which the developing countries can hardly hope to realise or maintain; it is more a question of rendering direct assistance in development, so that developing countries are in a position to apply the advanced standards.

One of the hopeful features of our times is that there is a growing realisation in the developed countries that, so far as underdeveloped countries are concerned priority must be given to the development needs of the world's poorer regions that I welcome the programme priorities suggested by the Director-General. There is no doubt that so far as underdeveloped countries are concerned priority must be given to the development of human resources. In fact this is the one resource which they possess in plenty. Hitherto it has been stated—and I am glad to come to it will continue to operate—rather as a burden and a drag on their economies. The task is to transform it into an economic asset. One way of doing so is to undertake programmes of skill development. The I.L.O. has already done considerable work in this field and the Director-General's Report envisages further programmes. May I suggest that, apart from study, research and expert assistance, it would be worth while for the I.L.O. to take a direct hand in skill promotion in the underdeveloped regions. Why should it not be possible for the I.L.O. to open training institutions in different regions or to provide direct assistance to such institutions where they exist? That seems to me the surest way in which the I.L.O. can make a direct contribution to economic growth in these regions.

The allied problem of employment promotion on an adequate scale has been a baffling one even for our advanced countries that have travelled a good distance in development. We in India have completed two five-year plans and are nearing the end of a third. It has been one of our aims to make our plan projects employment-oriented. But in spite of the new employment opportunities created over the last decade or so, the economy is still burdened with a backlog of unemployment of very large dimensions. During the fourth plan period our expectation in respect of employment promotion can at best be to hold the line on unemployment, that is to say, to be able to absorb the net growth in the labour force during the plan period. I think the situation in other developing countries may be similar. The I.L.O. may not be in a position to assist directly in increasing the tempo of economic growth so that unemployed labour is more rapidly absorbed. But through its study of it has operated and perhaps it can perhaps suggest measures which will maximise employment opportunities within the resources available for promoting economic growth.

The Director-General has in his Report referred to the Working Party of the Governing Body on programme and structure, which has been entrusted with the task of formulating a widely acceptable body of conclusions for the development of the I.L.O.'s programme and structure. I think it should be one of the tasks of the I.L.O., through its research and information programme, to dispel such doubts and misgivings, and convince those who entertain them that their ultimate good is bound up with the rapid development of the underdeveloped regions of the world.

It is true that there is a growing understanding of this historical nexus between the two groups of countries, but meanwhile the gap between them also seems to grow wider. The I.L.O., with its tripartite lines of communication, must play its role in breaking down the mental barriers that inhibit the process of international co-operation. It is in this context of the development needs of the world's poorer regions that I welcome the programme priorities suggested by the Director-General. There is no doubt that so far as underdeveloped countries are concerned priority must be given to the development of human resources. In fact this is the one resource which they possess in plenty. Hitherto it has been stated—and I am glad to come to it will continue to operate—rather as a burden and a drag on their economies. The task is to transform it into an economic asset. One way of doing so is to undertake programmes of skill development. The I.L.O. has already done considerable work in this field and the Director-General's Report envisages further programmes. May I suggest that, apart from study, research and expert assistance, it would be worth while for the I.L.O. to take a direct hand in skill promotion in the underdeveloped regions. Why should it not be possible for the I.L.O. to open training institutions in different regions or to provide direct assistance to such institutions where they exist? That seems to me the surest way in which the I.L.O. can make a direct contribution to economic growth in these regions.

The allied problem of employment promotion on an adequate scale has been a baffling one even for our advanced countries that have travelled a good distance in development. We in India have completed two five-year plans and are nearing the end of a third. It has been one of our aims to make our plan projects employment-oriented. But in spite of the new employment opportunities created over the last decade or so, the economy is still burdened with a backlog of unemployment of very large dimensions. During the fourth plan period our expectation in respect of employment promotion can at best be to hold the line on unemployment, that is to say, to be able to absorb the net growth in the labour force during the plan period. I think the situation in other developing countries may be similar. The I.L.O. may not be in a position to assist directly in increasing the tempo of economic growth so that unemployed labour is more rapidly absorbed. But through its study of it has operated and perhaps it can perhaps suggest measures which will maximise employment opportunities within the resources available for promoting economic growth.

The Director-General has in his Report referred to the Working Party of the Governing Body on programme and structure, which has been entrusted with the task of formulating a widely acceptable body of conclusions for the development of the I.L.O.'s programme and structure. I think it should be one of the tasks of the I.L.O., through its research and information programme, to dispel such doubts and misgivings, and convince those who entertain them that their ultimate good is bound up with the rapid development of the underdeveloped regions of the world.

It is true that there is a growing understanding of this historical nexus between the two groups of countries, but meanwhile the gap between them also seems to grow wider. The I.L.O., with its tripartite lines of communication, must play its role in breaking down the mental barriers that inhibit the process of is in conformity with the views expressed at the previous sessions of the Conference and enve-lops a concept that is universally accepted today and which this Conference, I am sure, would wholeheartedly endorse. I have noted with great pleasure that the Working Party has recognised the need for promotion of small industries to accelerate rural development and I hope that the I.L.O. will in the very near future begin to play a significant role, indeed industries to accelerate rural development and
I hope that the I.L.O. will in the very near future begin to play a significant role, indeed with great pleasure that the Working Party has wholeheartedly endorsed. I have noted today and which this Conference, I am sure, develops a concept that is universally accepted with its plans of development without caring for the well-being of the workers and the working class who alone can make such a plan success. Labour, with its free voice, is bound to have its claims met. The assistance afforded in this by the standards set up by the I.L.O. can at best be marginal. The main urge for maintaining high labour standards has to come, and does come, from within democratic society itself. That is why my plea would be for greater emphasis on development activities rather than on standard-setting. I am not for a moment suggesting that standard-setting is not important, but the point is to promote such conditions as are most attainable. And considering the wide disparities in development, it is extremely difficult to formulate international standards which will be well within the reach of developing countries and at the same time provide a progressive impetus to those countries which are more fully developed. Perhaps the Conference could do with devoting a little more time to those developmental aspects of the Organisation's work which are of immediate concern to the majority of its Members.

In this context I should like to make one point about the Director-General's Report that. I expect the Report will continue to be purposeful and full of concrete proposals. As Part II of his Report contains an account of the activities of the Organisation, Part I may contain concrete programme proposals. It might be a worthwhile innovation if the Director-General's Report were considered not only in a general discussion but in greater detail, through the committee procedure, so that its proposals could be processed through the close scrutiny of a Committee of Before I conclude, I should like to refer to one other matter which dominated the deliberations of the Conference during the last two years. I refer to the question of apartheid in the Republic of South Africa. The Conference adopted a constitutional amendment on the subject last year. It also adopted a Declaration concerning apartheid and a programme of action for its elimination in labour matters.
In terms of the Declaration the Director-General has prepared a special report on the present situation in South Africa. The report reveals a very depressing picture. The situation in South Africa seems to have worsened since the Declaration was adopted. As the practice of apartheid constitutes a challenge to the basic principles of this Organisation, we cannot afford to sit by and watch the situation going from bad to worse. In the solemn Declaration adopted last year, the Conference made "a pressing appeal to the governments, employers and workers of all States Members of the International Labour Organisation to combine their efforts and put into application all appropriate measures to lead the Republic of South Africa to heed the call of humanity and renounce its shameful policy of apartheid ".

I should like to stress that, apart from the governments, the employers and workers represented in this Conference also have their duty to do in this matter. We must all honour the obligation willingly undertaken in this tripartite forum. I hope it will be possible for the Director-General to be present in the next report full information on what action has been taken by the governments, employers and workers in the member States to make the Declaration as effective as possible.
It is an honour for me to return to the International Labour Conference and to bring a cordial, friendly and respectful greeting from the Venezuelan Confederation of Workers. Once more, it is our duty at this session to discuss the vital problems of our peoples in the rapidly changing world of today. Again, as always, my Confederation wishes to take part in the unrelenting search for a just society in which human rights, political freedom, fair distribution of wealth, equal rights among nations and an universal peace will be fully ensured.

Those are and have always been the objectives of the Venezuelan trade union organisation, which re-elected me as its President last November at the Fifth Workers’ Congress of our country. I can therefore reiterate our support for the views and actions of the Director-General and welcome his Report as a positive contribution to our work. Its essence is well expressed when it says in Part II that “the I.L.O. is entering upon 1965... fully prepared to play its part in the attainment of the objectives which have been set for the Year—co-operation between all nations in the maintenance of peace and in the promotion of economic and social advancement for all people, and the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms.”

One cannot but recognise in the spirit and emphasis of that sentence the intention to serve mankind in a vigorous and constructive manner and in full conformity with the principles which this Organisation exists to implement.

Increasingly, therefore, the I.L.O. may perhaps be called the purest expression of a universal society in which democratic governments and the employers and workers of the world, freely represented, co-ordinate their action to provide the communities of the world with a common condition of harmony and justice, peace and brotherhood, equity and mutual respect.

All this becomes the more necessary when, as is the case today, blind, negative forces are apparently being released, when here and there about the world international violence is promoted, national sovereignty disregarded, popular self-determination violated by armed action and established order overthrown. An orderly background is indispensable to the proper conduct of the production process and respect for the rights and dignity of the workers.

This year, 1965, has been called the International Co-operation Year but let us beware lest, with bitter irony, by endless tension, absurd interventions, dictatorship and discrimination, a period so happily styled may be converted into a “year of international non-co-operation”. For our part, we are bent on continuing our positive action to ensure the safe destiny of our generation, which is the urgent imperative, and that of future generations, which is the enormous responsibility of the men and women of today. Here, in this world-wide social laboratory, we are faced with definite, immediate tasks, with immensely important repercussions. In the committees of the Conference, we are already working and must continue to work so that the various items may be rapidly handled and so that the appropriate targets may be set as fundamental requirements of a world order better suited to the qualities of mankind, the original destiny of man, the history of the working class—that long struggle to find the dawn of a better world.

In this very short synthesis of the essence of the Report, where certain principles are clearly reaffirmed and certain appeals are made, I shall not go into detail concerning the particular items on the agenda of the present session. However, I should like, in general terms, to state the position of the Venezuelan Workers’ delegation on the most important business now before us.

We condemn most clearly and absolutely the policy of racial discrimination which disregards the rights of the workers and the peoples. Accordingly, we are in favour of the strongest action in the flagrant and recurrent case of the Republic of South Africa, whose practice of apartheid and whose obstinacy, despite the exhortations of the I.L.O., are an insolent defiance of civilisation and moral law.

Regarding the employment of young persons and the employment of women with family responsibilities in accordance with the principles approved at the 48th Session of the Conference: its provisions are essentially identical with the statutory position already existing in Venezuela as regards the employment of women.

In the same social and humanitarian spirit, we support the Proposed Conclusions on the employment of women with family responsibilities in accordance with the principles approved at the 48th Session of the Conference: its provisions are essentially identical with the statutory position already existing in Venezuela as regards the employment of women.

I can say the same regarding agrarian reform and co-operatives, those appropriate and powerful instruments for the emancipation of the workers, which my country is using vigorously in its general economic development. I therefore urge the Conference that the time has come to give all developing countries the efficient tools they need to speed up economic development and reach a condition of genuine welfare.

The Venezuelan Workers’ delegation comes to this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference with its usual vocation for service and determination to help in the general effort towards improving the social structure of the world and enhancing the great democratic values of our time.

Let me state once more our belief that only in a just society, where the dignity of the workers and the security of their homes are ensured shall we be able to speak of a world prepared to witness the great adventure of man on earth, and only then can we have full faith in the destiny of the international organisations at a time when that faith may appear to be diminishing.

In conclusion, let me reassert the doctrine of the Venezuelan Confederation of Workers, which is, in brief, the search for a better world, where man may live free from poverty, ignorance, sickness and tyranny.

Last of all, I am happy to congratulate the Director-General on his efficient efforts, directed as they are towards the fundamental objectives of the I.L.O., and to express the warmest wishes for the success of the present session, which will, I am sure, make an important contribution to the preservation of peace between men and between nations.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. CUEVAS (Workers' delegate, Colombia)—It is of special significance that at this time, as at previous times, the three groups which are most involved with the problems of labour are represented: these groups are Government, Employers and Workers. From true understanding between them must of necessity result those solutions which can guarantee the rights of all within the framework of just laws which permit democratic government.

A short while ago in my country we carried out an experiment along these lines, when, for the first time, we set up a committee to analyse national problems from an economic, fiscal, social, labour, administrative and legal standpoint; this committee issued important recommendations which are at present being studied by the Parliament and by the Government. On this committee were represented: the Government, by the Ministers concerned with these questions; employers, by representatives of the most important sectors of production; and workers, by delegates from the two major workers' movements having legal personality in Colombia—U.T.C. and C.T.C.—as well as those political parties which under our constitutional system are responsible for the government of Colombia.

This high-level meeting was extremely valuable, because it was possible for each of the sectors concerned with the social and economic problems of the country to engage in a friendly and cordial dialogue on an equal footing. From this we shall derive fruitful experience of great importance for the future.

We workers have gradually been acquiring a leading position in the discussion of public matters, going beyond the marginal activity represented by the simple struggle for wages, housing, education and health. Inspired by higher concepts as to what the right to work means, we are acquiring the right to participate in all matters relating to the choice of objectives, development plans, and general legislative action on social problems, in order to direct them along fairer lines.

A democracy must not be just a political system which permits the free choice by the governed of those who govern them, but must also give the right to participate in a permanent and constant manner in the establishment of the framework from which the economic organisation and the social structure of the country derive. In the legislative bodies, in the Government, and in the management of industry and trade measures are daily taken which affect the situation of the workers. I could, for instance, mention the tax structure, monetary policy and prices. It is obvious that, having representation in all those places where measures are taken which reflect social and economic phenomena, we shall be able to ensure that better consideration is given to the interests of the workers. In the so-called underdeveloped countries, it is particularly necessary to make a greater drive for solidarity and understanding of the common problems. It is in those countries that there is still a high level of underemployment, the worst conditions of work and, what is more serious, the lowest degree of governmental stability. Latin America today is undergoing a process of great change and of permanent cultural modifications which place us, the workers, in the position of having to take up a challenge. We cannot, therefore, be satisfied merely with bearing witness to the decisions and the measures taken by governments; we must construct the destinies of our countries.

It is not enough to aspire, as is recognised in all assemblies of labour, be they national or international, to a just society offering great possibilities in the fields of housing, standards of living, labour, education and vocational training, and leisure, thus exalting human dignity. We must also implement those measures which will permit us to achieve this. Up to now we have, through direct discussion, been able to attain an ever-increasing recognition of our rights, and these are now the cornerstones of democratic organisations, but we must still seek to employ those means which will enable workers to exercise greater influence on the over-all organisation of the State, particularly in those fields relating to economic and social aspects. An example is the right to profit-sharing in order to obtain a higher level of responsibility among the workers, using this economic improvement to solve those problems which wages or public assistance cannot satisfy. The workers must also have a sufficient voice in legislative bodies in order to ensure that laws correspond to social realities.

The adequate representation of workers on governmental bodies entrusted with the implementation of standards on economic and social matters should also be sought.

Hitherto, many countries, among them Colombia, have failed to ratify many inter-national labour Conventions. This problem has not been solved because the persons or the bodies responsible for the handling of these instruments do not exercise sufficient pressure since they are not directly concerned, and not enough attention is paid to the workers' appeals in order to ensure the attainment of what is required on an international level. We must recognise the fact that not all agreements approved by governments are fully implemented. The workers must have a greater influence in the affairs of the State if we wish to ensure that the aspirations based on Recommendations and Conventions adopted in our Conference are fully implemented.

We meet here annually in order to adopt new Conventions and Recommendations. In the past, many have not been fully implemented. Doubtless, if all such agreements had been fully implemented we could today, in 1965, be dealing with more up-to-date or more complex problems. It is obvious that the items on the agenda of this Conference must be stressed as matters of prime importance. The role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of countries, the employment of young miners, the employment of women with family responsibilities and agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects, assume great importance in considering the situation of workers. At this session we are going to reach conclusions based on viewpoints which countries have set forth, and take advantage of the experience of those who here reflect the concern of the regions which they represent. We are all committed to the common cause of solving both great and small problems.

It would be of fundamental importance, in the light of the Director-General’s Report, to look to the destiny of labour organisations in the free world. We are facing very complex demands. We recognise the fact that each day the workers’ task of extending the social order becomes more complex, and it is much more difficult to solve the problems involved. Our means of solving the problems are increasing, and we must consider the interaction of all groups and to real participation in the plans set based on viewpoints which countries have set forth. We must consider the interaction of all groups and to real participation in the plans set up for the administration of States, the administration of undertakings, and in general all bodies which take measures which can directly affect workers.

We workers accept the fact that economic and social progress should be essentially nourished by personal initiative, be it individual or collective, but we also believe that public powers must direct, promote and develop production as a function of social progress to the benefit of everyone. In this way the State can act to avoid the exploitation of the weak by the strong and to ensure that government and law will most fully guarantee freedom and equality.

We believe that international labour organisations must find means of ensuring that each country will have the constant understanding required between government, employers and labour, not only as a means of discussion but rather as a means of interaction and interrelation, permitting them all to participate in the establishment of such organisations. Only in this manner can we ensure that which we here daily express here and what we resolutely decide here will be reflected by reality and by progress.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ÜNAL (Government delegate, Turkey)—Mr. President, may I first of all address to you my sincere congratulations on your election to the presidency of this important Conference. May I also thank the Director-General for his excellent Report which takes account of the observations and suggestions made by delegates at previous sessions of the Conference.

As you know, in his statement at the end of the Conference last year, the Director-General stated that the three main fields of action—firstly, the utilisation of human resources; secondly, labour-management relations and the growth of social institutions; thirdly, working and living conditions—were of particular importance in establishing the future I.L.O. programme. We are glad to see the Director-General pay so much attention to those three sectors in his Report this year and we hope that participants in the Conference will support the proposals and suggestions made in the Report. We hope, too, that this year’s general debate will confirm that the Conference approves the general trend of I.L.O. programmes in those three main sectors, in which priority has been given to the question of the utilisation of human resources, i.e. the planning of the utilisation of manpower, the creation of employment possibilities and vocational training. Indeed, economic and social development is impossible without the rational development and utilisation of human resources. This problem, with which the developing countries are familiar, also arises in industrialised countries as a result of technical progress. Manpower planning is an urgent necessity for raising the level of skills and especially for the training of technicians and supervisory personnel, particularly in certain developing countries where the employment situation is becoming increasingly serious because of the rapid growth of the population. Manpower planning a very difficult economic and social problem will arise as a result of underemployment, unemployment and the rural exodus.
The International Labour Conference adopted at its 45th Session a Convention and a Recommendation concerning employment policy. In 1962 it also adopted a Convention and a Recommendation concerning vocational training. These texts include the principal measures to be taken for a programme for the rational utilisation of human resources. In my view it is essential for each member State to draw up an appropriate active policy in this connection and to continue to concentrate their efforts on improving the environment and conditions of work.

The second sector that has been highlighted in the Report is that of labour-management relations, the promotion of trade unions and the development of social institutions. Here the aim is to give a new direction to the activities of the I.L.O. so as to enable it to make a positive contribution to the development of labour-management relations adapted to the requirements of a world in a state of full evolution. By its very nature, this is the sector which relates most closely to the fundamental concept of the I.L.O., for cooperation between the competent authorities and the employers' and workers' organisations in the economic and social field is becoming increasingly general. Thus solutions to the problems arising must be acceptable and fair. The systems to be established should provide for productivity. With this end in view, it is important not to lose sight of the essential point, namely that social groups must be encouraged to organise themselves and to train themselves. I think that I.L.O. action in the field of labour-management relations and the development of the institutions which determine and harmonise these relations should be inspired by the principle of co-operation between the interested parties so as to achieve positive results at the national level and so that the employers' and workers' organisations may act with a new sense of responsibility in accomplishing their more traditional task of protecting the interests of their members.

The third point relates to living and working conditions. For the I.L.O. this is a traditional field, but much has still to be done to improve the situation of the worker from the point of view of occupational safety and health, guaranteeing his means of existence and other conditions in the restricted sense of satisfying material needs. Whatever the nature of his work, man can also find happiness in living. He can found a family, feed it, house it, clothe it, educate his children, climb in the social hierarchy and not remain cut off from a cultural existence.

The I.L.O. should not confine itself to asserting and defending certain fundamental rights, but it should engage in far broader activities than hitherto. The means by which the I.L.O. can ensure an improvement in living conditions are varied but I think that action undertaken by it with a view to the better utilisation of human resources and the establishment of a good system of labour-management relations would be effective.

These are the few comments I should like to offer in connection with the new activities of the I.L.O. However, I should like to stress the importance of another question, namely co-ordination. It is not a question which arises solely within the I.L.O.; it extends also to its relations with other international organisations.

In Part I of his Report the Director-General proposes the establishment of several departments. Under this proposal the Human Resources Department would deal with all sectors of manpower and with all technical questions arising from the utilisation of human resources in various fields—manpower planning and organisation; employment; training and advanced training of supervisory personnel; vocational training; vocational guidance; classification of occupations and vocational retraining. The I.L.O. has acquired considerable experience in this field since the war and it can and should proceed with firmness. It should also take the initiative in ensuring that the other international organisations take account of the I.L.O.'s functions and abstain from duplicating them. The competence of the I.L.O. in this field as well as in the other sectors dealt with in the Report is undeniable. The recruitment of experts and consultants by the various international organisations for identical work must be avoided. Likewise, duplication and overlapping must be eliminated.

On the other hand, I should like to stress the need to expand technical assistance still further. In other words, the role which technical assistance has played up to date in I.L.O. activities should become even greater, especially as regards the developing countries.

Before concluding I should like to dwell for a few minutes on the question of agrarian reform, which is also on the agenda of this Conference.

The expression "agrarian reform" as used in the report on this subject encompasses a broad programme which includes multiple elements, one of these essential elements being agrarian reform proper. Indeed, agrarian reform is understood to mean a group of measures designed to improve existing land structures including modification of the basic system—that is, reforms which, within the framework of an extensive programme, aim at giving the land to those who work it in order to improve the position of farmers, sharecroppers and farm labourers.

Agrarian reform has become an important element in the development of many countries but the problem is a delicate one and requires particularly careful attention. Social justice and productivity must underlie all measures taken in this field. Social justice and productivity are the two essential elements which must not be forgotten. The fair distribution of land is not sufficient in order to attain the objective. It must also be ensured that productivity is not reduced as a result of the sale of newly distributed land or the indifference and lack of experience of those who have just acquired the property.

In addition, the legislation applicable to rural manpower must be an integral part of these programmes. Regulations aiming at improving the working conditions of agricultural labourers and their inclusion in the social security system are a necessity which is becoming ever more clear.
However, many countries, particularly those in course of development, are encountering serious difficulties in this respect. The legislation must take account of the different categories of rural manpower, such as sharecroppers, farmers, those who are paid in cash and those paid in kind, as well as permanent and temporary workers. There is also the problem of absenteeism. The agricultural employer may often be absent from the workplace if he lives elsewhere, and illiteracy in the agricultural sector is a factor which makes the situation worse. Therefore countries must have at their disposal sufficient inspectors to guarantee the application of the legislation, even in the regions which are not connected to urban centres by the road network.

Nevertheless, we must have, once and for all, the courage necessary to put into effect appropriate legislation, at least as regards agricultural workers paid in kind, taking into account the special features of each region with a view to the eventual extension, step by step, of the scope of the legislation.

Interpretation from Portuguese: Mr. MARQUES ANDRADE (Employers' delegate, Brazil)—We had pleasure in examining that part of the Director-General's Report which related to the group of experts instructed by the I.L.O. to study the various aspects of agrarian reform which were to be discussed at the present session.

Having been prepared in February and March 1964 this study could not refer to the new Brazilian law on the subject. I would therefore like to explain here the reasons why Brazil, the biggest country in Latin America and the one with the greatest area of cultivated land, had not at the time taken a measure of that kind. It will therefore be appropriate if I summarise the essentials of the Brazilian agrarian reform.

The agrarian structure of the Latin American countries mentioned in Report VI has always differed and still differs very much from that of Brazil. Perhaps Mexico and to a less extent Colombia may have some common features. Since the days of our colonisation Brazil has been a country of great estates. The early division into hereditary counties, then the large-scale allocation of public land and subsequently slavery, which permitted the great estates to be maintained, were the reasons why our agriculture developed on the basis of large estates in the hands of a small group of owners.

The whole economic structure of Brazil was based exclusively on agriculture, which, in turn, was aimed almost exclusively at exports. After the first attempts at industrialisation no urgent need to modify the agricultural economy was felt. Then industry began to grow, industrialisation became rapid and there was consequently disequilibrium between agriculture and the more dynamic industrial sector. This was not only because agriculture lacked the legal protection given to industry but also because it had lost much of its manpower—for the second time, for this had already happened with the sudden liberation of the slaves.

Even so there is no shortage of land in our country for those who really want to farm it. But we do have lack of protection for the land worker. He lacks not only satisfactory health, social, cultural and technical conditions for working as a labourer, squatter or tenant farmer but there is little opportunity to become an owner by distribution or redistribution of land.

The Brazilian employers have always been interested in the economic and social problems of the country and so we could not fail to be interested in this burning and indeed disturbing problem of the moment. Therefore as a businessman I am giving you a brief analysis of Brazil's position on adopting a new agrarian policy. Other Latin American countries, including Mexico in 1915, have had the opportunity to put agrarian reforms into practice; but they have not thereby succeeded in piercing the barrier of underdevelopment. We in Brazil are meeting a good deal of resistance from our own historical past. Moreover the great geo-economic and social differences within our enormous country oblige us to give this problem the most careful study. It has indeed been considered and studied with a good deal of interest in recent years, but we could not wish this to occur under any kind of pressure. We have had to take the supreme interests of the nation into account, including the Christian traditions which have always guided our people. If we are behind other Latin American countries in the adoption of agrarian reform we certainly have our reasons for this.

Today Brazil is starting a definite experiment in the shape of Act No. 4504/64, the "Land Statute" which I will now summarise for you. The chief objectives of the Act are better distribution of the land and establishment of relations between men and rural property, and the use of land compatible with social justice and conducive to greater productivity, thus ensuring the progress and welfare of the rural worker, the development of the country and the gradual abolition of the excessively large and excessively small estates.

With a view to reaching these objectives the Act provides as follows. The agricultural policy consists of promoting the protection of rural property if it is in the interest of the rural economy and of crop and stock farming, either with a view to ensuring its full employment or in order to bring it into harmony with the country's industrialisation.

The means to be used by the public authorities in order to implement the agrarian reform and to promote an agricultural policy which will apply the above principles are as follows:

Firstly, taxation, including a graded land tax, a tax on the yield of crop and stock farms and agricultural industries, and an improvements tax as defined in the law and its regulations.

Secondly, assistance and protection of a social, technical, promotional and educational character for the rural economy.

Thirdly, expropriation for social reasons or for public necessity or utility within the provisions of the Constitution, or of laws and regulations.

Fourthly, official and individual land settlement as laid down in the Statute and its regulations.

Finally, the other measures laid down by law include co-ordination of inter-state, state, municipal and private funds with a view to stimulating the rational use of land provided natural resources are conserved, as well as discouragement of those who use their rights as landowners in disregard of the social and economic function of the land.

The organs for promotion of the agricultural policy, to be co-ordinated by the Ministry of Agriculture and general directives approved by the Ministry of Planning, are as follows:

Firstly, the National Agrarian Development Institute, which will mainly promote action related to land settlement, rural extension, the co-operative movement, community development, marketing and infrastructural works including rural electrification and other services.

Secondly, the Brazilian Agrarian Reform Institute, which will act in the light of the objectives of the agricultural policy as mentioned later.

Thirdly, the other organs of the Ministry of Agriculture concerned with inspection, promotion and health precautions for crops and livestock.

Fourthly, the National Bank for Co-operative Credit, the land settlement and agricultural and industrial credit branches of the Bank of Brazil, the National Economic Development
Bank, the National Authority for Co-ordination of Rural Credit, the National Agricultural Insurance Company, etc.

The organ which will plan and co-ordinate the execution of agrarian reform is the Brazilian Agrarian Reform Institute, which will act at various levels.

As regards zoning, land registration and taxation, it will (a) arrange for research and operate the zoning of the country into regions which are homogeneous as regards socio-economic conditions and agrarian structure; (b) organise and keep up to date a register of rural property throughout the country; (c) arrange for research and determine general rules for the introduction of the land tax and other taxes in so far as these powers may be conferred upon it; (d) arrange research with a view to determining indices or tables on taxation and rules for its collection; (e) arrange for research on determination of critical regions and of tax areas; (f) lay down minimum conditions for their determination and for elaborating agrarian reform plans.

As regards distribution of land in priority areas, the Institute will (a) promote access to rural ownership by distribution and redistribu­ tion of land; (b) undertake the expropriations which may be necessary for reasons of public or social utility; (c) arrange the purchase and sale of rural property to give effect to the reform plans; (d) give its views on any expropriation of public land; (e) purchase any property it may require in order to perform its duties;

(f) arrange for determination of federal land occupied by squatters and regularise the situation of such persons or return the land to the Union.

As regards land settlement and establishment of associations in priority areas, it will
(a) undertake and promote settlements, determining the methods to be used under the supervision of the National Agrarian Development Institute; (b) examine, give an opinion on method, and register schemes for land settlement and division of rural property for town construction, including recreation facilities;
(c) directly or in association with other bodies,
promote rural co-operatives and trade unions;
(d) carry out work connected with education and training by means of pilot farms, training centres and fundamental education; (e) encourage the establishment and extension of rural undertakings aimed at the rational use of the land for mining, crop or stock farming or agricultural industries with a particular view to their transformation into bodies having a democratic capital structure; (f) promote the extension of the co-operative movement, particularly by the establishment of agrarian reform co-operatives; (g) approve the rules of cooperatives and other societies established and lay down minimum conditions for their democratic character, etc.

As regards agricultural promotion, the Institute together with other bodies will (a) engage in rural extension work and various forms of social, technical and agronomic assistance to crop and stock farms, whether individually or in co-operatives, particularly with a view to marketing, the production of seed, new varities, fertilisers, and soil correctives and the breeding and sale of stock sires, artificial insemination, etc.; (b) encourage industrialisation and the processing of agricultural products through co-operatives; (c) promote rural electrification and other infrastructural works.

As regards financial assistance in priority areas, the Institute—either directly with the resources of the National Agrarian Reform Fund or with loans contracted in the country or abroad, or in co-operation with the Bank of Brazil, the National Economic Development
Bank or the National Bank for Co-operative Credit—will (a) promote the expansion of rural credit with technical advice by making loans to farmers and squatters; (b) promote the sale of national agrarian debt bonds and arrange for appropriate use of the funds with a view to guaranteeing repayment; (c) promote the financing of sales by instalment; (d) arrange for the financing of heirs and legatees who wish to farm the land they have inherited.

These are the initial measures being taken or to be taken which will enable the solution of this important problem to be approached peacefully and by degrees.

(The Conference adjourned at 4.45 p.m.)
COMMUNICATION OF THE REPORT OF THE APPEALS BOARD

The PRESIDENT—Before coming to the first item of business, I would draw the attention of the Conference to the report of the Appeals Board. The text of this report has been circulated this morning. The Conference now has before it the report of the Appeals Board concerning the appeals transmitted to it on 4 June 1965. By virtue of the decisions taken by the Conference on 8 June 1959, decisions of the Board concerning these appeals are final and shall be put into effect by the Conference immediately, without debate. The Conference, therefore, will kindly note the decisions, which are not open to debate.

(The report is noted.)

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

Mr. ABID ALI (Workers' delegate, India)—This year’s Report of the Director-General gives an account of the actions taken by him in pursuance of the consensus of opinion which emerged at the end of the discussions on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. The Report also contains some fresh proposals and ideas on the points which require further examination. It is pleasing to note that the discussions of the past two years have brought home the fact that major thrusts are still necessary and possible in the three important areas chosen for the I.L.O. programme—that is, human resources development; labour relations, trade union development and the growth of sound social institutions; and conditions of life and work.

These three have been traditional areas of I.L.O. activity, and there is no doubt that the future work programme of the Organisation will be carried out on these lines. But it should be emphasised that activities in these areas must bear a relation to and must be carried out in the perspective of the broader and urgent problems facing the world today. It is imperative that this session, which is being held in the International Co-operation Year, should give serious thought to these problems and suggest how the I.L.O.’s work programme can be adjusted and reoriented so as to enable the Organisation to make its contribution to their solution, since upon it depends the future of humanity, and along with it that of the I.L.O.

Speaking of these problems, I have in mind first of all the problem of the widening gap between the rich and the poor nations of the world, the need for universal acceptance of the fact that poverty anywhere is a threat to prosperity everywhere, and the resolve of the international community to make a concerted attack on this problem.

Secondly, we cannot but feel greatly disturbed at the lack of any progress in the field of disarmament. It is now universally realised that the resources likely to be released by progress towards disarmament would greatly alleviate the problems of the developing countries. The situation today is much worse than a mere standstill in the progress towards disarmament. A further threat to peace has been posed by the proliferation of nuclear weapons, the latest example of which was the explosion of the second nuclear bomb only a few weeks ago by the Government of the Peoples' Republic of China. It did not sign the limited test-ban treaty, which is an indication of its warlike intentions. We in India have been planning our industry and economy for peace based on friendship with all, particularly with neighbouring countries. In spite of shocks and threats to our sovereignty and national existence, we are determined not to swerve from the path of peace. This is reflected in our determination not to manufacture atomic weapons even though we are in a position to do so.

Thirdly, in this International Co-operation Year the world community is still faced with the shameful defiance by the Government of South Africa of world public opinion which has unreservedly condemned the policy of apartheid. Everyone is aware of the resistance organised by our great leader and humanitarian, Mahatma Gandhi, in South Africa, against apartheid 50 years ago. We Indians will always be in the forefront of those struggling for the freedom, equality and dignity of man. Finally, we have still to put up with the anachronism of colonialism in certain parts of the world. I would like to remind the delegates that the I.L.O. cannot feel secure unless solutions are found to these problems.

1 See Appendix X, p. 688.
Eighth Sitting

The I.L.O. has entered the International Co-operation Year with a proud record of performance conducive to international co-operation. At the end of the 48th Session the I.L.O. became the first international organisation within the United Nations family which passed a unanimous Declaration condemning the policy of apartheid and urging the Government of South Africa to end it while they still had time to do so in a peaceful and civilised way. The two amendments to the Constitution relating to the expulsion and suspension of member States passed at the last session reflect the further earnest wish of the I.L.O. member States to take action against States violating the fundamental principle of human rights. The resolution on minimum living standards passed at the last session expressed the resolve of member States to secure the minimum needs for, and raise the status of, the low-income groups who constitute the bulk of the human population.

As regards the problem of world poverty, the past year witnessed the first attempt made by the international community, in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to discuss the problem of the trade and development of developing countries in all its perspectives. I am glad to note that the I.L.O. made a useful contribution to the work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development by presenting two extremely valuable papers and later by taking prompt action in analysing the Final Act to find out areas where the I.L.O. could fruitfully cooperate with the new institutions being set up under the Conference's recommendations.

The Governing Body, at its 160th Session, rightly emphasised the point that the implementation of those recommendations made it essential to secure the understanding and support of workers and employers. It also welcomed the emphasis placed by that Conference on the importance of intensified and effective action for industrialisation as an essential element in the economic growth of developing countries. Finally, the Governing Body decided to convey to the General Assembly the willingness of the I.L.O. to contribute, within its areas of competence, to a broad co-operative programme for industrial development under the leadership of any expanded or new body with central responsibility in this field.

It is my considered opinion that the I.L.O. should lose no time in taking suitable action in this field while waiting for the establishment of any expanded or new institution in the field of industrialisation. The I.L.O. can and should forthwith start making its contribution within its own institutional framework. If I may make a suggestion, the starting point will be to carry out further research and hold discussions in a tripartite forum for finding out the ways and means of bringing about the required structural changes in the economies of the industrialised countries in order to permit increased imports of manufactured and semi-manufactured goods from the developing countries. Practically all the industrialised countries recognise the need for such a change and also admit that the cost would be only a fraction of that involved through the need to carry out changes on account of technological revolution. But the usual plea is the resistance of organised labour against carrying out the necessary structural adjustments.

Last year I emphasised how its tripartite nature made the I.L.O. an ideal forum for creating the understanding necessary for facilitating action in this field. As a practical step, I would suggest that the terms of reference of the Industrial Committees Branch and the Research and Planning Department should be extended to cover this subject. Under the respective Industrial Committees, tripartite discussions can be organised and stress can be laid on the way in which workers may be affected by structural changes in the industries concerned.

Commenting on labour relations and trade union development, the Director-General has referred to the "new responsibilities" of labour organisations and has suggested that such responsibilities should not conflict with their traditional functions of defending the interests of their members. The "new responsibilities" arise in the context of gigantic efforts being made by the developing countries to raise the standard of living of their peoples. In this effort the workers have to participate in decision making and action at all levels. To my mind there is absolutely no conflict between the "new responsibilities" and the traditional functions of labour organisations. On the contrary, on the extent to which labour organisations can discharge their traditional functions, i.e. can defend the interests of their members, will depend the extent to which they can effectively discharge their "new responsibilities." If this historic battle against poverty and stagnation is lost, there will remain no interests to be defended.

I welcome the move made by the Office in establishing the Field Department and in decentralising a number of administrative activities at present being carried out from Headquarters. This is in line with the general trend of decentralisation of the activities of international organisations. If the I.L.O. does not make the necessary adjustment to keep pace with the general trend it will be left behind. In the economic field, regional economic commissions have considerably increased their activities by assuming expanded functions. It is now increasingly realised that global targets and projections are too abstract to serve as guides for action on a regional or country basis. Therefore, most of the important and useful research work has to be conducted in the field. The I.L.O. will now be required to co-operate on an increasing scale, within the areas of its competence, with the regional economic commissions, the role and function of which have acquired a new dimension after the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

At the 48th Session the Governing Body in the context of a caution that the proposed Technical and Service Department should not replace the Industrial Committees. I am glad that the functions of the Industrial Committees remain intact. There is no doubt that experts can render valuable service, but they cannot replace the representatives of governments, workers and employers who alone can indicate policy directions.
Expert committees should confine their role to giving expert advice; in all other matters the Industrial Committees should enjoy unfettered freedom.

The Director-General has rightly pointed out in his Report that employment which does not contribute to economic growth does not bring the realisation of social objectives nearer. But this should not lead to the conclusion that the goal of full employment should lose the top priority that it must have in any economic planning. If the net result of employment without economic growth is stagnation, the net result of unemployment would be worse than stagnation—a dangerous backward movement. The I.L.O. cannot afford to close its eyes to realities existing in developing countries in respect of employment opportunities, the level of earnings of the workers, and, in particular, working conditions. The question of improving living and working conditions and setting up new international standards to this end would arise only if full employment were ensured. The I.L.O.'s efforts in the field of improving living and working conditions have appeared unrealistic to the representatives of the developing countries mainly because of this attempt to put the cart before the horse.

Almost all the developing countries have now recognised the need for manpower planning. I am of the firm opinion that the I.L.O. has the experience and expertise to help the developing countries in manpower utilisation. Therefore, I would emphasise once again that the I.L.O. should take greater interest in this field. It appears to me that the regional and branch offices of the I.L.O. could be called upon to analyse manpower problems and carry out necessary research for the benefit of the countries of the region. The Human Resources Department can guide and direct the regional and branch offices in this work.

In my statement I have tried to see the activities of the I.L.O. in the wider perspective of significant developments taking place in our present-day world. I have tried to divert attention from, if I may use the term, the domestic and traditional field, on which we have had enough discussion during the past two years, to the wider field of peace and prosperity and international efforts to provide a firm and lasting basis to peace and prosperity. I would once again urge the Conference to give serious thought to the changed role of the I.L.O. in this context.

I should now like to congratulate you, Mr. President, on having been elevated to the august office of President of the Conference. Until a few years ago we were citizens of the same country. What has transpired in the recent past has not been in the interests of both our countries. My earnest hope for which I pray, and which, I am sure, will be the prayer of people in both countries, is that complete peace be restored on the borders of both countries, and that we become happy neighbours, secure in every respect. Our relations should be happy like those on the 3,000-mile border between Canada and the United States of America, where there is not one incident and not one gun. My wish and prayer is that such a position should also prevail between our respective countries, for ever.

The PRESIDENT—I join you in your prayer.

Interpretation from Arabic: Mr. TALJABINI (Minister of Social Affairs and Labour, Syrian Arab Republic)—Mr. President, may I extend to you my warmest congratulations on the trust which has been shown in you by your election to the presidency of this session. I hope wholeheartedly that, thanks to you and to the co-operation of all the members, this Conference will yield fruitful results, in line with the fundamental objectives of the International Labour Organisation.

At the past two sessions delegates have participated in the discussion of an important—indeed, essential—matter: namely, the review of the programme and structure of the Organisation, in order to adapt them to the recent changes in the world and to the imperious needs which are becoming apparent everywhere, especially in the developing countries. We are glad to note that the Director-General, taking account of the opinions expressed and proposals made during the past discussions, has already planned the major policies which should be followed and has outlined the main fields in which the Organisation should undertake action.

However, we would like to stress the need to give more attention to certain points which we regard as essential, both from the point of view of implementing the programme suggested by the Director-General, and from the point of view of the drafting of new programmes by the Governing Body or by the Conference itself.

These points are as follows. First of all, we should have as our target the attainment of peace among all men, and this should be in the programmes of all the various organs. The vast funds spent on armaments and weapons of destruction could then be far more usefully used on development programmes aimed at feeding the hungry, and in the struggle against illiteracy and disease—in other words, to secure the well-being of men through the improvement of their conditions of life, material and moral. Secondly, we should eliminate the exploitation of man by man, both on the national and the international level, so that each individual may benefit from his own labour and each State may develop its own resources and economic potential, in accordance with its national aspirations and for the benefit of its people.

Thirdly, we should stress decentralisation of the activities of the Organisation and, at the regional level, call upon the experts available in the developing countries. Such persons are better able to appreciate national or regional needs and are in a better position to tackle local problems. This includes the need to train senior personnel in countries which still do not have them, to increase the number of regional conferences, set up advisory committees which would participate in the study and solution of problems which arise on a regional level.
Fourthly, account should be taken, in the various international texts that come from the Organisation, of the economic and social conditions peculiar to each member State or each group of States, especially the developing countries, so that the latter may not be overburdened with charges which would slow down the process of economic and social development. In other words, in this connection one should make a distinction between developed countries and developing countries.

Fifthly, the developing countries should be provided with the scientific and technical means that will enable them to assess and to mobilise their human resources and raise the level of production, thanks to adequate procedures of recruitment and training. It goes without saying that this requires, apart from available resources, on-the-spot assistance from various international organisations.

It must be recognised that the Report of the Director-General raises a large number of questions which would have to be dealt with in the various fields of its activities; for instance, there are the questions relating to the drafting and implementation of operational activities, to methods of evaluation of human resources, to planning required for all economic and social development, and finally to international legislation in this field. We consider, however, that it is extremely important that the International Labour Organisation seek to provide the necessary means for the practical implementation of these programmes and to supply technical assistance to member States, especially to the developing countries, for if the various plans that are blueprinted are not carried out, the best hopes of the Director-General will remain a dead letter and therefore of no consequence for member States.

It should be noted that it is up to the more advanced countries which have more powerful material means available to them to provide the greater part of the additional funds that are needed for the intensification of the work of the Organisation and the broadening of its regional activities. They would thereby provide an example of the solidarity which should prevail within the Organisation and enable the developing countries to take advantage of their contributions to economic and social development.

I am glad to note that the foundations for the economic and social development plan adopted in my country under its present régime, which is founded on the belief of our people in socialism and on their determination to combat all imperialist and capitalist systems, are very close to the views that have been expressed by the Director-General in his Report to this session; and in this connection I would like briefly to describe the foundations of our system.

Our development plan gives priority to productive projects that can increase the national income and help to find the resources that will provide social services to citizens, especially to workers and farmers.

Secondly, every category of the population is entitled to participate in the drafting and execution of the plan. The workers’ organisations are represented on the management of all industrial enterprises and at various levels of planning bodies.

Thirdly, the awareness of the need for a healthy trade union movement in industry, trade and agriculture has led to the drafting of regulations that will permit the building up of powerful workers’ and farmers’ unions which will be able to assume their responsibilities at the national, occupational and production levels.

I have the honour of being the first trade union representative representing the workers of our country as Minister for Social Affairs and Labour in our Government. I am glad to say also that the workers and farmers will have representatives in the Legislative Assembly which will soon be constituted, and that these representatives will be selected from among those who were chosen in the trade union elections which have recently been held throughout the country.

Fourthly, particular attention is devoted to rural problems with a view to providing social services, thanks to community development projects. To this can be added the distribution of land to the farmers and the institution of new relationships between owners and workers.

In conclusion, I would like to hope that this Conference will take firm decisions as regards racial discrimination wherever it exists—in Mozambique, Portuguese Angola—and carry out the decisions that have already been taken in this connection as regards the authorities of South Africa; I also hope that the Conference will take all necessary steps with a view to granting self-determination and freedom to the peoples who are still languishing under the burden of colonialism, and specifically the peoples of Aden, Southern Arabia and Oman, and to condemning the aggression against the Vietnamese people who are struggling for freedom and dignity.

I am convinced that the Organisation, in dealing with these questions within the framework of its competence, will effectively contribute to the realisation of the objectives we all aim at.
legitimate delegates who would be only those delegates from the People's Republic of China. While expressing the hope that this inequitable situation may very soon be put right, we should also like to express the desire that very soon the peoples who are still today victims of colonialism will be able to express their will and their desire to gain freedom. We believe that the requirements for their freedom may soon become incorporated in this Organisation. We should like to take this opportunity to extend to them our message of encouragement and friendship.

In his Report the Director-General calls attention to the material impossibility of including in his comments in the Report the problems which affect the structure and procedure within the I.L.O. He deals in full with the objectives in the programme of activities to be carried out, taking into account the rich experience acquired by the I.L.O. through more than 40 years of existence. Our position, which we have expressed on more than one occasion in the past, is that the I.L.O. should transform itself organically and adapt itself to the realities of the present-day world. It should also pay greater attention to the acts of aggression and the conflicts which affect the workers in the various regions of the world, so that at meetings like this we may deal with these questions and find solutions which will satisfy the aspirations and the rights of those oppressed workers.

In his Report the Director-General refers to the three main fields of activity of the Organisation; apparently, there is complete agreement on those points. The first is the development of human resources. This activity is of tremendous importance to all the underdeveloped countries and even more so to the countries suffering under colonialism, neo-colonialism and dependence. How can human resources be developed whilst illiteracy, lack of education, backwardness in science and technology and feudal relationships in production prevail in many of these countries? How can it be hoped to develop human resources unless effective measures are first adopted to eliminate unemployment, poverty and exploitation from which the great masses of the workers are suffering? How can human resources be developed whilst there are still countries which maintain terrible oppression and discrimination, as is the case in the Republic of South Africa, which applies the hateful policy of apartheid? Only when countries have the status of independent and sovereign nations can their peoples advance towards full development of all their resources.

Once the Cuban revolution had achieved political, economic and social independence for the people of Cuba, it then created the necessary conditions for the rapid use of human resources. It did away with illiteracy, which was inherited from the past and which affected about a million of the citizens of Cuba, and it is advancing rapidly towards the objective that all the workers of the country should achieve the higher level of primary education as a minimum. At the same time Cuba is carrying out extensive plans for secondary, technical and university education through full scholarships which are given to more than 100,000 students.

Thus we are encouraging and promoting the cultural and technical bases which are necessary for the fuller utilisation of the productive forces of the country. In fact, the struggle for their freedom may soon become incorporated in this Organisation. We should like to take this opportunity to extend to them our message of encouragement and friendship.

We see no other way of giving impetus to the development of human resources than by attacking and destroying the basic elements that hold them back. A social and economic structure based on exploitation of the working and peasant masses of the population and the pillaging of colonial, semi-colonial and dependent peoples prevent the development of human resources and constitute an insuperable obstacle for the workers, preventing them from becoming incorporated creatively in the field of science and technical advancement.

In his Report the Director-General refers to the necessity to improve the conditions of work and the living conditions of the peoples of the world as an objective of the Organisation. In this connection, one of the regions of the world which presents the most tragic characteristics is Latin America. While the population is growing at an annual rate of 3.1 per cent., these people as a whole have no more food than in 1939, the production of food, and hunger affect more than 110 million Latin Americans. This explains why the struggle for national liberation in these countries is becoming more and more vigorous and intense as time goes by.

Another matter of interest to our continent which is being discussed at this Conference is that of agrarian reform. Subject to further and more detailed comments in the proper committee, I should like to say that the conditions in Latin America require the liquidation of large land holdings, single-crop cultivation, deficits in the production of food, and hunger affect more than 110 million Latin Americans. This explains why the struggle for national liberation in these countries is becoming more and more vigorous and intense as time goes by.

In the countries suffering under colonialism and dependence, a social and economic structure based on exploitation of the working and peasant masses of the population and the pillaging of colonial, semi-colonial and dependent peoples prevent the development of human resources and constitute an insuperable obstacle for the workers, preventing them from becoming incorporated creatively in the field of science and technical advancement.

We see no other way of giving impetus to the development of human resources than by attacking and destroying the basic elements that hold them back. A social and economic structure based on exploitation of the working and peasant masses of the population and the pillaging of colonial, semi-colonial and dependent peoples prevent the development of human resources and constitute an insuperable obstacle for the workers, preventing them from becoming incorporated creatively in the field of science and technical advancement.

In his Report the Director-General refers to the necessity to improve the conditions of work and the living conditions of the peoples of the world as an objective of the Organisation. In this connection, one of the regions of the world which presents the most tragic characteristics is Latin America. While the population is growing at an annual rate of 3.1 per cent., these people as a whole have no more food than in 1939, the production of food, and hunger affect more than 110 million Latin Americans. This explains why the struggle for national liberation in these countries is becoming more and more vigorous and intense as time goes by.

Another matter of interest to our continent which is being discussed at this Conference is that of agrarian reform. Subject to further and more detailed comments in the proper committee, I should like to say that the conditions in Latin America require the liquidation of large land holdings, single-crop cultivation, deficits in the production of food, and hunger affect more than 110 million Latin Americans. This explains why the struggle for national liberation in these countries is becoming more and more vigorous and intense as time goes by.
and yesterday our population celebrated the triumph of having produced 6 million tons of sugar.

These noteworthy advances have been achieved not only in sugar production but also in other branches of the economy. The population, with its fruitful and constructive labour, has been destroying one after another the stumbling blocks deliberately placed in our path by the imperialists, and these successes have been achieved despite the economic blockade and the acts of aggression of all types of which we are the object.

In closing, we should like to refer to that part of the Report of the Director-General where he brings out the importance of the development and strengthening of solid social institutions for the welfare of the population of the world. We fully share this point of view, which is quite correct, but at the same time we consider that this can be achieved only if the development of these institutions can be fully guaranteed in every country. This demands complete respect for the independence and sovereignty of each country; there must be an end to the policy of intervention, aggression and military occupation of which some people are victims in various regions of the world such as the Congo, South Viet-Nam, North Viet-Nam, Laos and others. In Latin America there is the case of the Dominican Republic, which has been a victim of the most brutal armed intervention by the great imperialist power of the continent.

The delegation of the Revolutionary Government of Cuba considers itself in duty bound to point out that this session of the Conference is being held at a time when acts are being committed which represent sources of deep concern and serious responsibilities for all the peoples and the governments of the world. What happened in the Dominican Republic to make it a victim of intervention, occupation and military aggression by a foreign power?

There was a constitutional movement which proposed to return to the country a president who had been overthrown by a military coup d'état and who had been elected in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the so-called representative democracy, about which so much is preached in our continent, although it is discredited. At the outset, the pretext given by the imperialists for intervening in the civil conflict by landing more than 40,000 Marines was to protect the lives of the North American citizens residing in Santo Domingo.

We cannot accept this pretext. To accept it would mean to endorse the flagrant violation of international law and the principles laid down by the Charter of the United Nations. It would mean also to accept a situation where the imperialists have the right to intervene in any country of the world by alleging presumed dangers to the lives of their citizens. When they found that they deceived no one with this pretext, they tried to justify their open military aggression in Santo Domingo—according to their official spokesmen—to prevent the triumph of a revolution like the one that took place in Cuba. Now the second pretext has no basis either. It is not true that in Santo Domingo a revolution was being prepared like the one in Cuba, and, even if it were, as our Prime Minister, Commander Fidel Castro, said in his speech on 1 May: "What right have the imperialists to prevent the peoples from carrying out revolutions if they wish? This is a sovereign right, an historic right of any people: to dress within its own frontiers, to create the type of society it thinks fit, that the people want, and to create it in the way they prefer, by legal methods if they wish, or by revolutionary methods like those adopted in our country.

"No country," continued Fidel Castro, "and no group of countries has the right to prevent any people from carrying out the type of revolution it considers desirable. If they wish to have democratic bourgeois revolutions, let them have democratic bourgeois revolutions. If they want to have socialist revolutions, let them have socialist revolutions, and if they want Christian Democratic reforms, let them have Christian Democratic reforms.

"Let everyone do within his own frontiers what he thinks is the best and the most desirable for his own happiness and for his own future."

The delegation of the Revolutionary Government of Cuba considers that it is a duty of this Conference to condemn the intervention and military aggression of the United States in Santo Domingo, and to demand the immediate withdrawal from Santo Domingo of the North American troops and those of all other countries, thereby leaving the Dominican people free to solve their own problems.

Faced with the imperialist aggressions against the movements of liberation and sovereignty of nations which are taking place in Latin America, Asia and Africa, there is only one thing to do: condemn them and reject them firmly.

Cuba, a small country in the Caribbean area, only 90 miles from the powerful Yankee empire, has performed its duty, and will continue to perform it, with dignity and integrity.

Fatherland or death! We shall conquer!

The PRESIDENT—I give the floor to Mr. Weaver, Government delegate, United States, on a point of order.

Mr. WEaver (Government delegate, United States)—I rise on a point of order under article 14, paragraph 5, of the Standing Orders. I renew, Sir, the appeal that you made to the speaker yesterday to confine himself to I.L.O. activities during the discussion of the Director-General's Report. I would renew the request that our debate on the Report does not degenerate into a political debate, as seems well on the way to happening.

I would therefore appeal again, as a point of order under article 14, paragraph 4, of the Standing Orders, which, I think, provides the opportunity to maintain our discussion on the Director-General's Report within the confines of this Report.

The PRESIDENT—A point of order has been raised drawing my attention to article 14, paragraphs 4 and 5, of the Standing Orders. Paragraph 5 reads: "A delegate may at any time rise to a point of order, which shall be decided forthwith by the President."
Paragraph 4 reads: “The President may require a speaker to resume his seat if his remarks are not relevant to the subject under discussion.”

Delegates will recall that when the first report of the Selection Committee was presented, the Selection Committee, bearing in mind the suggestion to this effect made by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office at its 130th Session, proposed that the Conference should appeal to speakers to concentrate their remarks, during the discussion of the Director-General’s Report, as far as possible on the Report and the activities of the International Labour Organisation.

Then delegates will recall the suggestions concerning facilities for more negotiations. The Selection Committee of the 44th Session transmitted the suggestion to the Conference, and the President of the Conference then took the initiative of convening a meeting of the Chairmen of Committees at which attention was drawn to the contribution which regular consultation among the officers of each committee could make in securing the widest possible agreement in the committees.

My ruling on this point of order is that the President has the discretion to require a speaker to resume his seat if his remarks are not relevant to the subject under discussion. There are subjects which can be squarely placed in a particular compartment, either political, economic or social: there are other subjects which are on the borderline; and there are certain subjects which comprise two or three aspects. Therefore, it is not very easy to be precise and exact and say that a speaker is digressing from the objectives.

Therefore, I propose to appeal again to speakers to confine themselves to the subjects which we are discussing; but if there are speakers who choose to digress, I propose to exercise my discretion, as referred to in paragraph 4 of article 14, of the Standing Orders, only if I feel that they are using unparliamentary or abusive language. Apart from that, I do not propose to exercise the discretion merely if I do not agree with them or think that what they are saying is beyond the scope of this Conference.

Mr. MORRIS (Workers’ delegate, Canada)—The debate on the two Parts of the Report submitted by the Director-General to the annual session of the International Labour Conference has become a component part and important feature of this world assembly dedicated to social and labour problems. The discussion this year should prove particularly interesting because it is held during the International Co-operation Year (I.C.Y.) and in the shadow of a serious crisis in the United Nations.

Undoubtedly, in the words of the Report, the International Co-operation Year should represent for the nations of the world an opportunity “to seek and to emphasise that which unites rather than that which divides them”. The challenge, too, is clear and is in the best traditions of the I.L.O., namely “to embark on a mission of international solidarity to combat the common enemies of all mankind”.

We hope that the declared resolve of the I.L.O., as expressed in the resolution concerning the International Co-operation Year and the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations, adopted by the Conference at its 48th Session, and in the subsequent decisions of the Governing Body to participate in this important commemoration year, will not be restricted to formal declarations of continued support of the principles and objectives of the United Nations and its family of organisations, important as these are. The member States should take serious cognisance of the appeal issued by the Governing Body to ratify during this year the international labour Conventions dealing with human rights and especially the Conventions which are aimed at the abolition of forced labour, discrimination in employment and the obstacles to the free exercise of freedom of association and the right to organise.

Neither is it too much to hope that the industrial countries, the nations which have achieved a greater degree of well-being and development, will make during this year greater efforts for overseas assistance and co-operation and will devote a large share of their national income to further and enhance the economic development of those parts in the world where hunger and want are still prevalent.

We should also remember during this debate the serious political and financial crisis in the United Nations itself. Regardless of what we may think of the constitutional relationship governing the United Nations, the I.L.O. and the other agencies, it is quite clear that the undermining of the prestige and authority of the United Nations is bringing strong and lasting effect on the whole United Nations family of organisations, including the International Labour Organisation.

The continuing crisis in the United Nations, which came to a head at the 19th General Assembly, is, of course, not only a reflection of the inherent conflicts amongst member States, but more particularly stems from the inability of that organisation to solve long-standing disagreements over its competence, structure, programme and finances—problems which are not unfamiliar to those of us who have followed the discussions of the last two sessions of the Conference on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. When the United Nations cannot agree on the relative competence and jurisdiction of the Security Council and the General Assembly, when it fails to resolve the issue of the cost of peace-keeping operations, when it is unable to develop the proper machinery for the resolution of other areas of conflict, it is not because of lack of administrative efficiency or the failure of its own officials, but because of the inability of the member States to solve some of the essential and most outstanding problems of our time.

It is important, therefore, more than ever at this time, because of the crisis in the international community, to safeguard the future of the International Labour Organisation so that it too does not become a victim of misguided policies and intergovernmental rivalries. There is too much at stake, for the millions of workers throughout the world, in the continuing existence and growth of this Organisation, for them to remain indifferent to the dangers with which it is faced.

We in the Canadian trade union movement are therefore in full agreement with the Director-General that the I.L.O. should concentrate on the elements of its responsibilities which are central to its mandate and should avoid dispersion of energy in peripheral activities. It is obvious that none of the I.L.O. objectives can be fully realised in a world of tension and international conflict; their full implementation depends on peace and disarmament, on freedom for all people. These are objectives to which all United Nations organisations subscribe. In the context, however, of the activities of the United Nations family there must be an orderly and clear division of labour for the achievement of the great goals of mankind. This complex of United Nations organisations is so constituted that each one of its members, while devoted to the great ideals which are common to all of them, has developed a sphere of competence, a mandate of responsibility and a field of action which is, and should be, strictly its own.

In this third year of debate on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. it may still be important to stress the need for the I.L.O. to have a clear definition of its own field of competency, to avoid undertaking actions no matter how worthy which, while which is clearly the function of another organisation, to leave the main burden for the great unresolved problems of peace, disarmament, disputes between power blocs and other important weighty political issues to the existing organisations, composed in the main of representatives of the same member States as the I.L.O., which have been charged with these specific responsibilities.

Turning to the new administrative structure introduced by the Director-General, it should be given a chance to prove itself in practice. We would like, none the less, to see more adequate machinery established for dealing with workers' and employers' organisations, not only in the conferences and the Governing Body, but in the field as well. Because the I.L.O. is the only tripartite intergovernmental organisation, it is essential that it makes full use of this unique arrangement—something which may not have been fully exploited in the past. This structure is undoubtedly a source of added administrative difficulty to the Director-General, but it could also become a tower of great strength in enhancing the authority and prestige of the Organisation, in obtaining support and understanding for larger financial contributions, and in developing a pool of readily available technical experts. This is not a matter of simply dividing the existing I.L.O. structure and giving it "underdeveloped" or "developing". A unit co-ordinating I.L.O. activities in the industrial countries would thus complete the regional set-up of the Organisation.

We hope that, in the desirable process of augmenting meaningful and necessary regional activities, the I.L.O. would not start on the slippery road to regional Conventions and Recommendations, or give up its basic authority and jurisdiction to other inter-governmental regional organisations. Any step in that direction could have very serious implications for the future.

The chapter dealing with the development of social institutions should be analysed carefully because, in the words of the Director-General, it "touches on some of the most fundamental objectives of the Organisation; and it is a question on which the I.L.O. cannot compromise". It is our hope that the word "reality" which is so often used in discussions of this subject will not become synonymous with "unprincipled accommodation". I am convinced as much as the Director-General that "true cooperation" between these "new" responsibilities of organisations representing broad interest groups and their more "traditional" functions of defending the interests of their members. On the contrary, I believe that in the present circumstances the interests of their members can best be served by their full participation in the task of development, which will in turn ensure an equitable distribution of the fruits of development.

One can readily understand the feeling of frustration which arises in many countries, faced with the need to develop their resources and to industrialise, as a result of the lack of necessary capital for investment and economic growth. To help meet this need the trade union movement in industrialised countries has carried on a consistent campaign for greater financial and economic aid to the new nations and for liberalised trading arrangements. We cannot, however, accept the notion that national wealth can only be accumulated as a result of the exploitation of those who work. Neither can we agree with those who claim that only the industrialised countries can afford freedom of association, the right to organise and to form free trade unions, the orderly process of settling the inevitable disputes between workers and their managers. This view is not only morally reprehensible, but also economically wrong. It would run counter to all basic human considerations that only the rich nations can afford human rights while the poor and dispossessed are denied dignity and freedom. I fully agree with the Director-General when he says, that "The goal of economic growth will not be attained or brought any nearer by the elimination of the very notion of conflict, but rather by attempting to prevent conflicts from arising or, when they do, by applying methods of conciliation, negotiation or arbitration in order to bring out and emphasise the elements in the situation on which a more fruitful co-operation might be built."

I was rather disappointed that in the chapter which deals with major programme areas hardly any mention was made of the need for an intensified programme in the field of co-operatives. The I.L.O. has made an unparalleled contribution to the world co-operative movement, and it is largely due to its initiative and efforts from the earliest days, when the first I.L.O. Director, Albert Thomas, was a member of the Central Committee of the International Co-operative Alliance, that the social significance of the special economic role of co-operatives has been recognised on a world scale.

It is the opinion of our people in Canada that the performance of the I.L.O. in this field has declined in the past several years. We should aim to specialise in the types of co-operatives that are especially valuable for trade union members and urban workers generally: the organisations for consumer goods, housing, consumer credit, insurance and small industries. This should remain the sole responsibility of the I.L.O. In the field of rural co-operative development it should work in close liaison with such agencies as the Food and Agriculture Organisation. It is essential to augment and strengthen I.L.O. staff which deals with co-operatives, to enhance its international standing, to bring together more often the Panel of Consultants on Co-operatives and above all to recapture the dominant place it once held. The I.L.O. should try to retain its reputation of reliability and high standards of performance, so that co-operators throughout the world would look towards the Organisation for leadership and guidance as they did in the early days. Time does not permit me to deal adequately with many of the proposals advanced by the Director-General and especially with his excellent Report on the I.L.O. activities during the year 1964. However, I would not want to conclude my remarks without emphasising that the I.L.O. must continue in its historic task of developing new international labour standards and of modernising the existing ones. In this connection the time is now ripe for the Organisation to begin paying more serious attention to the protection of the rights of civil servants and government employees. An ever-growing section of the labour force in all countries now works for governments—be they national, state, provincial, or municipal. Still, no meaningful code of behaviour, no recognised national standards to guide relations between employers and employees in this field, have yet been developed by this Organisation. Surely this is a task to which the I.L.O. must apply itself with diligence and expedition. We are convinced, too, that many problems, many areas of friction which exist today between government authorities and their workers could be discussed in a fruitful and constructive manner, and perhaps resolved, if the I.L.O. added to its ten Industrial and analogous Committees a new unit specifically devoted to the problems of the civil service.

In conclusion, I would like to reiterate once more the devotion of the workers of Canada to the International Labour Organisation. Our movement prides itself on an unbroken association with this Organisation since its founding in 1919. You can rest assured that we stand ready today, as we did during all the trying and turbulent years, to work for the continuous and healthy growth of this Organisation, which has made for close for a half-century a fundamental and meaningful contribution to the welfare of workers everywhere.
are closely connected with the strengthening and preservation of peace. The I.L.O. is a member of the great family of the United Nations. Any departure from the basic principles of the United Nations Charter, such as referred to recently by the Secretary-General, U Thant, or the collapse—as he expressed it—of the hopes that the United Nations might become an effective instrument of peace may jeopardise the successful implementation of the basic purpose of the I.L.O., which is peace based on social justice, and social justice based on peace. The shameful aggression against the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and the flagrant violation of the sovereignty of the Dominican Republic have deeply shocked world public opinion and are a brutal reminder of what I have referred to.

The programme of this Organisation cannot be drawn up without taking account of the need to solve one of the principal problems of our time—the final liquidation of colonialism and its nefarious consequences on the economic, social and cultural position of workers in the developing countries—and without taking into account the fact that the democratisation of the Organisation is closely connected with its effectiveness.

The many appeals by member States of the I.L.O. on these questions have not been recorded in the Report of the Director-General and are not even reflected in it. And these basic shortcomings which are not without their consequences are, of course, reflected in the other reports that have been put before this Conference.

One undeniable improvement is that for the first time in the history of this Organisation the questions of land reform and co-operatives in the developing countries have been placed on the agenda of the International Labour Conference. Thus the Conference, which is the supreme organ of the I.L.O., is given the possibility of going into these matters in full detail. This can become a useful factor in I.L.O. assistance in speeding up the economic and social development of the countries in course of development which are seeking to overcome stagnation and prejudice—so long as it is done with the same efficiency and thoroughness as the question of the structure of the I.L.O. delimitation of the principal posts in the I.L.O. while also reflecting the principle of rotation. Certain events in this building have led to gross violation of the right of the delegate of the socialist countries to equal participation in the management of this Conference, so that, as a result of the attempts to reduce their role in the Organisation, not one of the representatives of the socialist countries has been included among the officers of its various committees. This type of conflict must be ended by the establishment of an automatic, fair system of allocating posts as indicated in the Polish and Ukrainian resolution, to which I am convinced delegates will give full support.

The Polish Government delegation also supports with great sympathy the draft resolution on the defence of the rights of the Spanish workers which has been moved by Mr. Tabor, the Yugoslav Workers' delegate.

I take this opportunity, on behalf of the Polish Government and people, of extending to the workers and Government of Yugoslavia our heartfelt condolences on the occasion of the disaster which took place yesterday in a mine in Kakanj, Bosnia.

Before concluding my remarks, I should like to dwell on yet another problem—this is the periodic and compulsory convening of regional conferences and the powers of those conferences. We are in favour of granting such conferences wide powers so that they can deal with questions affecting their areas. In the area which is closest to us, Europe, we wish to make up for lost time. Ten years have elapsed since the first—and so far the last—European Regional Conference of the I.L.O. The wars that still smoulder in other parts of the world and the vast shifts in the distribution of forces in the world should not blind us to the key role of the European region in achieving peace and social justice throughout the world. The second European regional conference of the I.L.O. should make a serious contribution to the liquidation of the division of Europe in order to promote the dialogue between East and West and to ensure the co-operation of the various socio-economic systems and the broadening of international safeguards of human and social rights.

The Polish Government believes that despite political and ideological differences co-operation between the countries of Western Europe and the socialist countries is possible and could yield fruitful results within the framework of a broader solution to the over-all problems being sought by the countries of the continent of Europe themselves. The reconciliation of the countries of Europe, the strengthening of peaceful co-operation within Europe as a whole, joint efforts to find the best possible means to satisfy the social and economic needs of the workers, the co-ordination of workers' activities in order to escape the vicious circle of economic weakness and the reduction and elimination of expenditure on the various forms of armaments must lead also to stronger ties and contacts and must constitute an important factor in the development of a constructive, business-like and creative dialogue which can strengthen peace and social justice in Europe.

The PRESIDENT—Mr. Chajn mentioned the tragic accident which has occurred in a coal mine in Yugoslavia and in which over 100 miners lost their lives. On behalf of all the delegates, I would like to express our condolences to the Government of Yugoslavia and to the families of the victims.

Mr. MPONJI (Government delegate, Tanzania)—At the outset I should like to join with other speakers who have congratulated you, Mr. President, on your decision to preside over this distinguished assembly. I would also like to extend a warm welcome to new Members which have joined the Organisation during the past year and, in particular, to our sister African States of Zambia and Malawi, which are attending the Conference for the first time.

I must first express my Government's satisfaction at the adoption, at the 45th Session, of the Instruments of Amendment to the I.L.O. Constitution concerning the policy of apartheid. The Government of Tanzania has already notified its formal acceptance of these amendments to the Constitution, and I urge all member States to accept or ratify these Instruments at the earliest opportunity. The Government and people of Tanzania are greatly heartened by the firm stand taken by the I.L.O. to oppose the racial policies of the Government of South Africa.

We therefore welcome the first Special Report of the Director-General on the Application of the Declaration concerning the Policy of Apartheid of the Republic of South Africa. It is clear from the report that "separate development", as practised in the Republic of South Africa, means anything but equal development. The Bantu Laws Amendment Act, passed in 1964, is entirely discriminatory in its effects and indicates a tightening of the legislative and administrative framework of apartheid. The true nature of this pernicious doctrine is clearly revealed in the statement made by the South African Deputy Minister of Bantu Administration, quoted in the report, to the effect that the entire basis of the presence of the Bantu in the white area rests on the labour he performs. While the report indicates a number of positive and practical measures necessary to ensure the elimination of apartheid in the Republic of South Africa, it also indicates, as I have already mentioned, the hardening of the policy of the South African Government in this direction. I earnestly appeal, therefore, to all member governments present at this Conference to follow the example set by my own and other African countries to end all trade relations with the Republic of South Africa.

In the search for positive action this is a potent weapon which is readily available in the struggle to force the South African Government to bow before world opinion. At the same time I call on governments which continue to supply arms to the Republic of South Africa to put an end, once and for all, to these practices which directly support the continuation of its repugnant policies.

In other parts of the African Continent repressive policies are still being enforced by the colonialist governments of Portugal and Southern Rhodesia. I should like to quote the words of the President of Zambia, Dr. Kaunda, in his recent opening address to the United Nations Committee on Colonialism: in describing the evils of colonialism he emphasised that "we must all stop talking and start acting". Before it is too late and before the possibility of a peaceful solution becomes submerged in violence, I urgently appeal to the Portuguese and Southern Rhodesian Governments to grant the African peoples in the territories concerned the right to self-determination.

Turning to the Director-General's Report, I strongly endorse the proposal to strengthen the field operations of the I.L.O. and to integrate them more effectively with the regional activities of other United Nations agencies. In particular, my Government supports the resolution, put forward by the Government delegate of the United Arab Republic and adopted at the 45th Session, concerning programmes of technical assistance and other I.L.O. activities in other African countries. In this respect we consider it most important that the authority of the African Advisory Committee should be increased, and that it should be given responsibility for formulating an I.L.O. programme in Africa.

In the broad field of human resources development we fully support the objectives outlined in the Director-General's Report. In my own country of Tanzania the development and utilisation of labour resources are a key factor in our Five-Year Development Plan, the long-term objectives of which were outlined by our Minister of Labour at last year's session of the Conference. Indeed, it is our view that any comprehensive strategy for human resources development is likely to be effective only if it is part of a wider scheme for planned economic and social advancement.

The Report underlines the importance of productivity improvement, which is particularly vital in a developing country such as our own. The Government of Tanzania is most appreciative of the assistance being given by the Special Fund and the I.L.O. to establish an institute of productivity in Tanzania, which, it is anticipated, will become operational later this year.

May I, at this juncture, mention the valuable work which the International Institute for Labour Studies is performing in the field of education and research by the organisation of study courses and conferences, and request the Director-General to convey to Mr. Marquand, the former Director of the Institute who has now resigned to take up new duties in the United Kingdom, our warm appreciation for his efforts in launching the Institute so successfully. At the same time, may I wish every success to the newly appointed Director of the Institute.

Following the discussion of methods and principles of wage regulation at the Second African Regional Conference, my Government strongly supports the proposal that the I.L.O. should increase its efforts in the field of wages and salaries, and that a series of studies relative to the formulation of wages and incomes in African countries should be undertaken as speedily as possible.

With regard to recent developments in labour matters in Tanzania, I am pleased to tell the Conference that our attempts to strengthen the workers' movement by the establishment of the National Union of Tanganyika Workers (N.U.T.A.), in 1964 have proved an outstanding success. This year the First Annual Congress of the National Union of Tanganyika Workers was held in Dar-es-Salaam, and was attended by delegates and distinguished visitors from many foreign countries. The Congress provided an opportunity for these visitors to see for themselves, at first hand, the broad basis of, and the support for, our workers' movement, and to form an appreciation of the very great benefits which N.U.T.A. has obtained for the workers of Tanzania. Even though some of our visitors may have arrived with doubts or scepticism about the achievements of N.U.T.A., there was no doubt whatsoever that, on their departure, they were fully convinced of the justification for, and wisdom of, the establishment of a unified workers' movement in the circumstances prevailing in Tanzania. By means of the check-off system the workers' movement is now assured of an adequate income and, through such methods as the Workers' Development Corporation, a greater part of this revenue will be devoted to enabling the workers to participate in economic enterprises, to enjoy a higher standard of living and to foster the principles of African socialism.

In the field of labour legislation we are justly proud of our Security of Employment Act, which became law at the end of 1964 and which came into operation on 1 May of this year. Under the provisions of the Act, workers' committees are now established in every place of employment where ten or more union members are employed. This is a major step forward for the workers in Tanzania. Under the procedures established by the Act, an employer will no longer be able to decide arbitrarily when a worker should be dismissed or subjected to some lesser disciplinary penalty. He will be required to consult the workers' committee or, where no committee is functioning, the local N.U.T.A. representative before imposing dismissal or some other penalty prescribed by our new Disciplinary Code, which lists all offences which a worker can commit and specifies an appropriate punishment for each one. The codification of labour offences and the application of the Code by an employer in consultation with his workers' committee is expected, not least, to result in improved standards of discipline and, hence, of output and performance. What an employer cannot do himself, he can attain with the active and loyal support of elected workers' representatives, trained in their duties and responsibilities by our trade union movement and by officials of the Ministry of Labour. The question of discipline is, in fact, not the only one with which the workers' committees will have to deal. The committees will be expected to discuss with employers methods of improving production and workers' efficiency, means of providing greater safety measures and other general improvements at the place of work. The establishment of workers' committees will give the workers of Tanzania greater opportunities for leadership than ever before. They will now have, in the industrial sense, the opportunity they have politically as free citizens of a newly independent country. The Security of Employment Act is, therefore, a challenge to members of the workers' movement to accept the responsibilities of leadership. Those responsibilities will demand wisdom, tolerance, courage and devotion to duty, which alone will enable the workers to combine effectively with employers and with government in the many and varied tasks of nation building. As I mentioned earlier, we are justly proud of this Act and, in this connection, consider that we are in advance of many other countries which have not so far tackled these problems, and indeed in advance of the Conference, which is due to discuss the question of grievances and communications within the undertaking at its next session.

In conclusion, may I wish the Conference every success in its deliberations.

Mr. SKINNER (Workers' delegate, New Zealand)—First of all, Mr. President, may I offer you our congratulations on your election to the presidency of this august assembly.

I should like to deal with Chapter II—Major Programme Areas—in the Director-General's Report. With the exception of the years of global war, the state of the world, politically and economically, has probably never been more dangerous than it is at present. It is frightening enough for any thinking person to review the tensions, the small wars, the threats of another major conflagration and the crushing burden of poverty in some countries but it is even worse to see the indifference of the majority of the world's population to these threats of war and to the distress which is so common in some economically backward countries. The fact that people can live in this sort of world and can ignore what goes on as long as it happens to people other than themselves is evidence that the world's population has come to accept as a normal thing a continuing shadow of the threat of war and the existence of suffering and death from poverty in a large part of the world.
Apart from political divisions the nations of the world fall into two groups. There are the developed nations and the underdeveloped nations. The developed nations are prosperous even at the worst of times by comparison with the underdeveloped nations, their trade is buoyant, the very great majority of their people are well fed, well clothed, well housed and healthy. Consumer goods are plentiful and people can afford to buy them. Hunger is rare and people tend to die from over-eating, not from starvation.

In the underdeveloped countries starvation is a constant threat, unemployment is the inevitable lot of many, underemployment keeps workers at starvation level and poverty by our standards is the rule rather than the exception. Half of the world's population lives in areas which are generally underdeveloped and is crying out for aid from the rest of the world to allow it to be fed and clothed and permitted to live and work and support families fit for human beings.

The developed nations have contributed money and given assistance in other forms to the underdeveloped countries but this has not been done to the extent which will provide what is needed. The problem of the development of these countries to standards which will allow them to live in equality with the present developed countries is the most urgent of our time. If it is not faced and dealt with adequately, we will continue to live under the constant threat of war, under continuing tensions concerning world trade and with the knowledge that these underdeveloped and underprivileged populations may be driven to taking by force the things which they have not been able to attain in any other way.

The responsibility to assist them rests with all the nations and all the peoples of the world. It calls for world planning and for an all-out effort throughout the rest of the world. The task of setting these nations on their feet and on the road to economic independence is a tremendous one in its scope, but no matter what price is necessary to achieve this result the cost will not be too high if we can succeed. It is tragic that these countries should be in such a position in the present era of plenty and that our efforts have not had the desired results nor appear likely to do so on their present scale. The real tragedy, however, if we face it, is not that we are losing this fight, but that we are not really trying hard enough to win it. The whole of the rest of the world has a responsibility to do its utmost and it would be encouraging if the delegations to this Conference from the more fortunate countries would agree to recommend to their various governments that a nominal percentage of their gross national income be contributed to a fund for the building up of the underdeveloped countries, such a fund to be administered by the United Nations agencies.

The United Nations has worked through the Food and Agriculture Organisation and through the Economic and Social Council as well as through other agencies, and the Colombo Plan to the relief of problems of development, but these efforts are not on a large enough scale. The means to do what is necessary are available in the world if they can be diverted from other less essential purposes, but before we start diverting money from other useful purposes we should look at the tremendous cost to the world of armaments in anticipation of war, in the fighting of wars, large or small, and we should ask why man must look to other parts of the universe before he has set the earth in order for its own people. What will be gained if we conquer the moon and allow the earth to be destroyed?

Nations have made gifts of money to the underdeveloped nations and have assisted them in technological progress but they are unwilling to open their markets to raw materials produced by the underdeveloped countries or to meet them in other economic difficulties. They have sent medical assistance which has fought successfully against diseases which raged in these countries but after the people have been given life they have been given nothing to live for. It is not sufficient to check the toll of disease and to give assistance which will permit these people to survive; they need immediate and adequate help to make their countries economically self-supporting, to provide decent standards of living for their population and to open the way to continued growth and rising prosperity in the future.

There is a wide responsibility on peoples, and on responsible organisations, to make any contribution within their capacity towards the relief of the problems of the underdeveloped nations. The greatest need lies in Asia, and the assistance now being given is not sufficient to cope with the problems of the moment, let alone to deal with the future. The Asian nations themselves are banded together in an economic alliance within the United Nations, by means of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East. Other nations are supplying different forms of aid and helping to build the trading potential of the underdeveloped countries. This progress is good, but it does not go far enough and does not have the impact which it should have on the internal economy of the countries themselves.

The nations of the free world know of the contribution which is made by trade unions within their own borders and of the activities of these trade unions in the international sphere. It would not be too much to say that a modern economy, such as is known in the free world, could not operate unless it contained strong, free trade unions. Such unions not only represent the immediate interests of their own members but are also concerned with the welfare of the community as a whole, of which they form a part.

One of the greatest benefits which could be conferred on the underdeveloped countries is the formation in them of trade unions of a calibre similar to those found in the free world. By setting up such unions the countries concerned would be given a gathering point for the working population, from which the workers could state their collective needs and desires, and could achieve these with the minimum disruption and waste of effort. This would not be a one-sided matter, for the employers and the country as a whole would benefit from the orderly solution of many problems which at present may appear insurmountable.
The first step towards this goal would be the setting up of trade union organisations and their introduction to the workers of the countries concerned. The International Labour Organisation is already working along these lines but a greater impetus seems necessary in the form of co-operation and understanding by governments as well as by workers and employers. In the Western world, trade unions had to fight for a right to existence and to attain their present respected position in the community, but the emerging nations should not be put to this agony and wasteful conflict.

Trade unions must, at all times, be independent of government and of employers' organisations if they are to perform their true function in the community. This in itself, however, is not a reason why governments and employers should oppose the initial formation of unions and of nation-wide trade union movements within the countries themselves. It is very much in their own interests that there should be a responsible organisation to represent employees and to co-operate in improvements in skills, in education, and in measures to raise living standards.

The responsibility, of course, does not begin and end with government or with employers. It also rests with trade unions in those countries where the unions are firmly established and work in accordance with established industrial codes. The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions has appealed to the nations of the world to contribute 1 per cent, of national income towards relief of the underdeveloped countries and aid of this kind can provide the foundation on which to build stable economies and provide decent standards of living. This is very good, but it is not enough to provide money or other material things and expect these countries to do for themselves in a few years the things which it has taken centuries for the developed countries to achieve. What is needed is an extension of the assistance which is being given through the I.L.O. by finding more people who are prepared to go to these countries and assist personally in the day-to-day problems of finding their place in the world of today. Many of these countries, through no fault of their own, have been held back by their own outdated social structure or by their subjection as colonies of other Powers. They now have freedom to advance, but little else. Half of the world's population lies in this area and it is at present the danger spot as far as world tensions and possible warfare are concerned. By helping the people of these countries the rest of the world will be helping themselves and laying a foundation for peace in the future.

The best way to approach any such attempt is from the bottom rather than from the top. International dealings have mostly been concentrated on intergovernmental discussions and treaties, but the basis of world peace and understanding remains, as it has always been, a matter of giving the mass of the people the opportunity to live useful and reasonably comfortable lives. The working people are the mass of the people and the obvious approach to their problems is through trade unions. Where effective and independent trade union organisations exist, there is more general contentment and less possibility of war.

The formation of such organisations should be very high on the list of priorities for assistance to the underdeveloped countries and peace throughout the world.

A continuation of the drift of world affairs in recent years would lead to continual guerrilla warfare over wide areas, engaging most of the countries of the world and it is impossible to predict where this would end. It is just as impossible to predict whether it can and will erupt into major war in the foreseeable future. A tremendous amount of the earth's resources and a vast store of human energy are being devoted to the prosecution of war, to the development of weapons and to the exploration of outer space, primarily for military reasons. If we could bring ourselves to devote the same attention to world peace and to raising living standards in needly countries we would achieve the greatest progress ever known.

The time for resolutions, no matter how well intended, has long passed. The I.L.O., consisting as it does of Government representatives and representatives of workers' and employers' organisations from all corners of the earth has a major responsibility—a responsibility which is ours collectively. It is my hope that before this session of the Conference concludes, we will have firmly resolved to take some immediate action to fight hunger with food, disease with health, and ignorance with learning, so that we may live in peace with our neighbours. If we fail, the free world with all these accomplishments cannot survive, nor, indeed, does it deserve to survive.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ALI KEKE (Government delegate, Chad)—It is a pleasure and a duty for me, Mr. President, to add my voice to those of previous speakers in congratulating you most warmly on your election to the presidency of this Conference. I wish also in the name of my Government to welcome the States which are represented at the Conference today for the first time.

The 47th and 48th Sessions have already provided an opportunity for a summary discussion of the important problems which the Director-General asks us to reconsider today. More than once my delegation has stated from this platform the determination of our State to neglect no effort in improving conditions of life. Our intentions on this subject have been clearly expressed but it is logical for us to point out also the difficulties inherent in our geographical position and inadequate infrastructure.

Nowadays we are interested more than previously in human resources and their utilisation, for we see in them an essential factor of economic and social progress and an element which our country has in relative abundance. One of the great problems of Chad as regards the utilisation of human resources is the phenomenon of underemployment, particularly in the primary sector where it is general. The causes of this grave problem are well known and have been discussed at length. It might be a good thing to do as we are invited and consider how administrative approach might help us gradually to solve it. We have already undertaken to profit by the experiences and knowledge of the developed countries which were once in the situation which we are experiencing today.

Agriculture alone can raise the standard of life of our population and bring prosperity. But we are aware that we must take greater advantage of it. We must also set up industries for it and apply and fully utilise modern technology.

The Director-General has submitted to the Conference an objective and coherent list of the major programme areas of the Organisation. He has highlighted the problems encountered by the developing countries in using their human resources to better effect. We have been obliged by various development factors, and the urgency of starting our development projects despite evident shortage of skilled workers, to have recourse to a system of accelerated vocational training. However, one must be clear that this kind of training, appropriate though it may be to the problems of the time, must be followed by high-level training so that technical development can be taken into account.

I was speaking of underemployment. A recent inquiry has shown that in Chad the number of our own nationals decreases in a striking manner as the higher occupational grades are reached.

In co-operation with the employers and workers, my Government has, since our independence, undertaken a policy of vocational and advanced training. With this object, apprenticeship centres, technical schools and a centre for rapid vocational training have been established and are operating full time. Another centre is to be established in July 1965 for the training of office staff.

In this field the I.L.O. can play an important part; its assistance and advice in all forms are necessary to us. Working closely together, our planning department and our Ministry of Labour have started preparing, with a view to the first five-year plan, the planning and organisation of manpower and the projection of employment and training needs.

With regard to the Ministry of Labour, it is true that the skilled personnel at our disposal is small in comparison to our needs; however, our labour officers are acquiring experience in Europe; they will be back soon and to some extent they will make up our shortage of staff. The assistance of the I.L.O. will be very valuable here.

The employers' and workers' organisations participate in all advisory bodies which help to work out economic and social programmes. The co-operatives, young though they are, show also by their dedication and unselfishness the interest they take in seeking solutions to the grave problem of development with which the whole nation has to deal.

Problems of vital importance are bound up with the growing role of women in the life of the African countries. At this time of struggle for economic and social development, no active force can be neglected; thus, the women of Africa are being called upon increasingly to take up productive jobs. The intention of my Government is to stimulate the presence of women in offices, in shops, in teaching, in health services and even in the National Assembly. This effort is not the result of chance; it expresses the determination of the Government to use all its human potential in a policy of rapid development and its intention to restore to Chad women their personality and sense of individuality, which they were losing.

As regards the occupational organisations, our country recognises the considerable part which organised workers must play in the development of the active forces of the nation, on condition that they are strong and are fully acquainted with the economic and social problems which are of concern to the whole country.

We are in favour of the development of a unified trade union movement, which would give complete support to the policy of national construction. The importance my Government attaches to the rise of a strong, healthy and democratic trade union movement is embodied in the Constitution, but the unions which we favour must be really national, loyal and effective, aware of the national interest and conscious of their responsibilities towards the workers.

We have about 42,000 employed persons in a population of about 4 million inhabitants. We deprecate any undue increase in the number of trade unions, which is often aggravated by political interference fomented by international organisations or more powerful countries. It is evident that to acquire a strong position for negotiation, the unions must join together. It is not in accordance with our ideas to take restrictive action with regard to trade unions. However, we have repeatedly drawn the attention of the workers to the danger which trade union plurality might entail both for the other classes and for the workers themselves.

Trade union plurality is a grave defect which hampers the efficacy of the trade union movement and must be eliminated by African occupational organisations. The existence of several unions, which is explicable in highly industrialised countries by class and political rivalries, has no place in a country like ours, because it is inappropriate to our economic and social conditions. In our country the multitude of trade unions and their sterile struggle prevent the satisfaction of legitimate claims of the workers and also prevent satisfactory work, whereas the development of the country requires social stability and productivity.

The Director-General explained brilliantly at Addis Ababa that the trade union movement must act within the framework of action by the people and must seek solutions not only to satisfy their own claims but also to promote the welfare of all classes of the nation.

The proposed new National Labour Code now being studied by the authorities ensures freedom of association, the protection of the workers' income and shortens and improves procedures for the settlement of collective disputes.

Our main objective in this field is to combine rapid economic and social progress with the maintenance of the unions' right to defend their interests. Each African leader asks himself how the trade unions, mobilised to give effect to development plans side by side with government, can play their classical role without hindrance.

I should like now to speak of another problem appearing in the Report and of importance to us; I mean the regionalisation of certain I.L.O. activities. The history, the economic and social situation, the political and administrative organisation of our countries require the structure and activities of the I.L.O. to be reconsidered. It is materially impossible to do this by bilateral negotiation, but it is fairly easy to do so at a wider level, that of the region.

The Director-General asked African delegates, in his Report to the Second African Regional Conference, to give the I.L.O. the directives which will enable it to play its part better in Africa, more practically and more realistically. We have given our views, which make up a long list of needs. The needs are very numerous, but in all circumstances we want to meet the most urgent requirements of our population; economic development is at the basis of the welfare of all nations and the I.L.O. should take more interest in obtaining capital and in using it in a rational manner. Rationalisation will be important only to the extent that regionalisation is effective.

Most of the African countries have not sufficient statistical data to enable the I.L.O. to give sufficient consideration to African problems regarding conditions of work and employment, in order to direct its activities better in our region. Therefore, the African Advisory Committee, the regional conferences, should be really African; they should enjoy real decision-making powers and should meet at shorter intervals to enable delegates better to indicate their objectives. Field Offices, of which there are two in Africa at present, should be increased in the coming years.

All this will guide the I.L.O.'s programme in the rather difficult task of determining the needs in this field and in allotting priorities to them. The I.L.O. programme must reflect the real conditions in our countries but the I.L.O. should keep to its own fundamental objectives and should continue to defend the principles which are the reasons for its existence.

We are glad to see that the I.L.O. is seeking more and more to adapt certain aspects of its methods to the particular situation of the African countries.

The procedure set up in 1919 for the revision of Conventions and Recommendations is no longer suited to the present situation. It is necessary to reflect on this question in a constructive and coherent atmosphere, with all the precautions which such an operation requires. As several speakers have suggested, we in Chad recommend that a special tripartite committee be set up which would have to revise systematically but to a limited extent the existing standards.

International standards are an essential part of the I.L.O.'s work and I must state here that these instruments provide immeasurable assistance to the developing countries in framing their own legislation. For this reason, the Conference should recommend to the Governing Body that this important work should be continued, side by side with its operational activities.

Since I have mentioned the Governing Body, I would like to say a few words about it. Permanent seats were allotted to certain countries for economic reasons—namely the big industrial Powers. This policy, which may have been suited to the wishes of a previous age, is no longer appropriate. The I.L.O. consists of one great family, and it is no longer aimed at serving only the aspirations of certain favoured countries. The direct consequence of the present policy is that the seats in the Governing Body are inequitably distributed, and of course it is the new States Members who have to bear the brunt. Therefore, a solution should be sought with a view to the just distribution of seats between regions.

The Director-General referred in his Report to the main lines of I.L.O. activity in 1964 and asked the Conference to discuss this matter. I have already referred to many points in Part II of the Report. However, I think I should say a few words on one of the principal points which is of importance to us—I mean racial policy, a question which the Director-General deals with in a special report.

All those who have known sad times of slavery, domination and life without relief, react particularly sharply to the situation in the territories under Portuguese administration, where labour discrimination is constant, and to the important Declaration on the shameful policy of apartheid which is still practised in South Africa. The civilised world of today should mobilise all its forces to condemn this degrading, criminal, inhuman policy of the Government of Portugal and of the self-styled Republic of South Africa.

The Declaration of Philadelphia invites not only Africans but the whole world to take part in this battle. Evidently, to all those present here the action to be taken must not be limited to out-of-date slogans and publications. Practical action in the form of political and economic pressure should be envisaged by the United Nations and the specialised agencies and the I.L.O. can make a great contribution in this struggle.

The epoch of foreign domination, which some retrograde spirits would like to retain, is now finished. Aware of the right to develop, all Africans and all the advanced countries conscious of the need for decolonisation in the interests of world peace, must mobilise their efforts to rescue our brothers in Angola from their miserable condition. We say "No" to all forms of colonialism.

The I.L.O. can do a great deal in this struggle for the conquest of the rights of man set out in the Declaration of Philadelphia and embodied in Constitutions of all countries where democracy is the fundamental basis of the régime.

Interpretation from French: Mr. GRANDVAL (Minister of Labour, France)—Since the Report of the Director-General has expressly invited the member States to submit their observations on the programme and structure of the I.L.O., I think we should go as far as we can in this critical but constructive examination of conscience which we are invited to make. I have by no means the intention of submitting to the Conference any concrete proposals aimed at; my specific reference to my intention is rather to voice the thoughts which are inspired in us by a theme so vast as this, in the hope that their echo may contribute to further inspire this crucial discussion.

For the near half-century that the I.L.O. has been in existence and, especially since the Second World War, the world which it represents has undergone many profound transformations which could not fail to have repercussions on its activities and even on its purpose. In the economic field the problems of labour, i.e. the individual and collective protection of workers, have evolved with the progress of the communities within which these problems arise. In particular, they have extended to the field of employment and income, which in turn are closely related to the field of growth. In the political field, the spread of the Organisation over the globe has been marked not only by an increase in the number of its Members, but also by the diversity among them, which demands, or rather ought to demand, that its action take new forms: diversity in size, weight, internal régimes, levels of development. While the international activity, governed by the old I.L.O. was relatively homogeneous, that in which it attempts to apply its decisions or offer its advice today is basically heterogeneous.

Inevitably, as they took place these changes did have some effect on the orientation of the Organisation, but without its having as yet drawn all the necessary conclusions. The result has been a proliferation of programmes and structures, and the increasingly lively budget discussions which take place every year betray the confusion which sometimes characterises them. We must take the development of the Organisation in hand; it is time to pause for thought—for profound thought—to try to get a clearer concept of what the objectives and conditions of operation of the Organisation must be in the new international context during the last third of the century. Such reflection should, I think, lead in any case to a concentration of the I.L.O.'s activities on more limited, but more concrete and specific, objectives, which would come within the traditional field of competence of the International Labour Organisation. This concentration, moreover, would make it possible to improve in a more coherent and logical way the harmonious collaboration which must develop between the I.L.O. and the other organisations which make up what we call "the United Nations family".

While it is true, as the Director-General has remarked, that almost all the member States today still consider international standards to be the keystone of the Organisation, and feel that the preparation of such standards should continue to occupy a major part of the Organisation's activities, the problem nevertheless arises whether this imposing edifice, which seems to be almost completed, really meets the needs of all its users.

The texts in question, which in most cases are adopted at the instigation of the highly industrialised countries and reflect their own national legislations, do not take sufficient account of the situation of the less developed countries, which, however, make up an important majority of the I.L.O. and the other organisations which make up what we call "the United Nations family". The growing interdependence of social and economic factors, moreover, tends to broaden the field of application of these standards to domains closely connected with national policies, while at the same time rapid technical progress requires that they be adapted to national policies by ever more specialised provisions. This dual tendency stresses the need for differentiating among these standards according to the degree of evolution and the type of organisation of the countries to which they are to be applied, because the value of a law is not only its content but its effectiveness. If such differentiation is not made, the legislator exposes himself to a double risk: that of adopting, out of prudence, only those texts which can do nothing to improve the lot of some of those to whom they apply, but which remain nothing more than a pious hope for the rest.

While there is no question—for France even less than for anyone else—of abandoning the universal character of this standard-setting activity, we can at least for a moment see between, on the one hand, the basic principles from which there could in no case be any derogation and, on the other hand, the specific means of application of these principles to one or another group of nations. The former would be the subject of general Conventions of worldwide scope drafted in the same way as the present Conventions. The second would be developed by regional conferences—the idea of " region " would have to be reviewed in this connection—and could adopt a system of successive thresholds; since the goals set would be more accessible, this would be a greater stimulus to progress.

Observations of the same nature could be made in connection with another sector of Office activity, the importance of which is constantly growing, that is technical cooperation. First of all, let us observe that technical co-operation in the broadest sense benefits all member States, not only in the form of direct aid to the developing countries but also in the form of studies and research. I think this comment justifies a first suggestion. It would appear desirable to limit both forms of I.L.O. activities in this connection to fields where the I.L.O. has sole competence and where its intention can most effectively stimulate real progress. Otherwise the proliferation of most praiseworthy initiatives, only too often duplicated by the activities of other international organisations, would lead to confusion which, in the last analysis, would be sterile and, even worse, discouraging.

Is it really necessary to recall that a more strict respect for its specific nature would protect the Organisation from being turned aside from its own tasks by problems of a political nature, which are not only outside its competence but in which its intervention could have no practical effect?

A closer control over these two types of cooperation should, moreover, help to shed light on the specific role of assistance which is given by the I.L.O. to what we have agreed to call "the non-aligned countries". This would be even more useful in that the constantly growing multiplicity of requests for help from all sides requires here, more than elsewhere, a strong effort to outline a strict and coherent plan of action with a view to avoiding duplication, or even competition, between multilateral and bilateral aid.

The principle of sharing tasks between multilateral and bilateral aid might be said to lie in the idea that multilateral aid, as in the case of studies and research, should preferably, by the very fact of its international origin, help the receiving countries to define their policies in a given field (this is a right inherent in the exercise of their sovereignty and would help them to preserve their independence); bilateral aid, on the other hand, would ensure their applying this policy. Such a division of tasks would contribute to the dispersal of money and manpower in a field where the shortage of resources available in relation to the needs makes any wastage particularly regrettable. An efficient way of increasing the number of experts could be to call further on the private sector, on the employers as well as on the workers.

In the light of these various observations, reflection on the structure and operation of the Office should lead us to revise not so much its principles as its method of work, with the double objective of economising means and ensuring greater efficiency.

In view of the diversity of régimes which are now represented in the Organisation, its tripartite nature will have to be adapted and will have to meet different realities depending on the country. The specific nature of the functions assumed in different countries by each of the three social partners is in no way, however, affected fundamentally. Perhaps the comparison of their roles in the light of the various régimes may even help each of them to understand better their own independence and their own mutual interdependence. Thus France is profoundly and resolutely attached to the spirit of the Constitution which governs the Organisation. Long experience has already shown, particularly in certain critical circumstances, how solid—and at the same time how flexible—this Constitution is.

The organisation of activities according to the various methods suggested just now should also permit a very considerable lightening of the workload. Thus, in particular, restricting the General Conference to one session every two years would guarantee a better preparation of the sessions of the Conference, and would facilitate top-level supervision of the regional activities, which would in their turn have to be further developed. It would represent, at the same time, a considerable saving in money and, chiefly, in time. Also, to lighten the workload of the Conference, it might be possible to substitute for a long theoretical discussion of the Director-General's Report in plenary session the examination of this Report by a committee which, at the end of the session, would submit its conclusions to the Conference. It would also seem desirable to re-examine the role of the Industrial Committees which, because of the enormous amount of work which each of them has achieved in the last 20 years, could have their meetings at longer intervals. More generally, the desire to control the development of the I.L.O., while protecting it from the temptations inherent in any administrative body, even an international one, should find concrete expression in a very strict budgetary policy.

I have sketched out, in as few words as the occasion allows, some of the ideas which come to mind in this kind of examination of conscience. My ideas in no way envisage reducing the scope of action of the Organisation. On the contrary, my idea is to prune away the dead wood which sometimes hinders it, to make it possible to work more directly and in a more thoroughgoing way. In any case, that was the intention of the French Government in presenting these comments, hoping they will contribute towards the effort at renovation which the I.L.O. must now make. I reminded you a moment ago that the Working Committee of the I.L.O. will celebrate its Golden Jubilee. This fiftieth anniversary will have to be a renaissance. France, tomorrow as yesterday, will be happy to help in bringing it about.

Mr. TABOR (Workers' delegate, Yugoslavia) --In the name of the workers of my country, I would like to express our deepest gratitude to you, Sir, and your fellow delegates for the sympathy expressed to us on the occasion of the terrible accident in our coal mine in Bosnia. We shall transmit your sympathies to the working people of Yugoslavia.

The Federation of Yugoslav Trade Unions greatly appreciates the efforts of the Director-General who, in his Report, formulated the tasks of the International Labour Organisation. We also support the proposed programme of the I.L.O. in the field of human resources and economic development, development of social institutions, and living and working conditions.

The working class, whose role in solving socio-economic problems is constantly growing in importance, is becoming a decisive force in determining the course of economic and social development. Along with this, the role of trade unions is also becoming more important. Moreover, the development of human society has made obsolete the classical concept of the purely protective role of trade unions. Of course, the ways and methods used by trade unions differ from country to country depending on the prevailing conditions, but the fundamental aims and principles are the same everywhere. The variety of methods and forms only proves their ability to adapt themselves to reality. This is particularly important for the developing countries which are trying to accelerate their economic growth by industrialisation and diversification of their economies.

The identity of interests of workers and their trade unions all over the world, irrespective of ideologies and organisational affiliation, has already resulted in constructive co-operation and the exchange of experience on a series of questions set forth in the Director-General's Report, namely problems of planning, socio-economic development, distribution of the national income, participation of the workers in management, rapid integrational processes, the problems of the increasing gap between the advanced and the less developed countries, the problems of employment, transfer and retraining of manpower, the education of workers, and many other social questions.

The Yugoslav trade unions consider that all these questions ought to find their place in the programme of activities of the I.L.O. Thus the scope of the I.L.O.'s activities would become wider and would meet present needs. For instance, the I.L.O. could carry out studies on questions of common interest to workers in both the industrialised and the developing countries, which could be a starting point for co-operation among trade union organisations. This would enhance joint action by trade unions with a view to eliminating disproportion in the world economy and to harmonising economic and social development, thus securing a higher standard of living for all. The workers of the industrialised countries are interested in the accelerated development of economically less developed countries because this would secure full employment, which is now threatened by rapid technological and scientific progress. This could be the I.L.O.'s contribution to filling the gap which now divides national economies in the world, and its contribution towards equal economic relations among nations based on international division of labour in the spirit of the principles adopted at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

The development of co-operation in this field, in our opinion, would contribute also to an exchange of experience and a larger participation of workers in economic management. In some countries remarkable results have already been achieved in the field of workers' management. We feel that the task of finding adequate forms of workers' participation in management should be included in the research programmes of the I.L.O. and entrusted to I.L.O. staff. We would also suggest that occasional discussions should be organised within the Workers' group or among trade union representatives of individual regions, as well as seminars, dissemination of information and the like. The results of this research work would serve as a basis for the preparation of standards in this field, the need of which is increasingly felt.

Moreover, the possibility could be examined of amending the Workers' Education Programme by adding these new elements to it and by giving a more prominent place to the economic education of workers and to an exchange of experience among different social systems. It has been proved in practice that such an exchange is particularly important for the developing countries whose trade unions tend at an early stage to take part in the programming of national economies and the management of enterprises. In our opinion it would be very useful to organise, not later than next year, under the auspices of the I.L.O., an international seminar on education and preparation of workers for participation in the management of enterprises.

The Yugoslav trade unions are ready to make their contribution to research work in this field and to lend full support to I.L.O. undertakings in this direction. Owing to the results achieved so far in my country in the sphere of worker-management we were able to provide material for the I.L.O. publication issued last year concerning Yugoslav achievements in this field. I would add that the experience of other trade unions would be very welcome to us and would greatly help the study of problems of workers' management in general.

Another question mentioned in the Director-General's Report which deserves equal attention and research within the I.L.O. is that of the distribution of income. This research should cover, inter alia, the distribution of gross income. It would help trade union organisations in choosing the proper line of action and in finding their place and role in the distribution of national income. This question becomes particularly important in conditions of accelerated economic development postulating a higher standard of living for workers.

I should like to acquaint this forum with the extensive activities of the Yugoslav trade unions in the further elaboration of legislation in the field of work and labour relations, occupational safety and social insurance. A large number of our workers participated actively in formulating proposals for new legislative acts which mark a very important step forward in the strengthening of the direct role of workers in the solving of these questions.

Of particular importance for the workers is the new law on labour relations. The law defines the rights of economic organisations to administer their income autonomously and to fix the personal income fund and the investment fund of the enterprise, to establish autonomously the standards relating to the employment and dismissal of workers, the distribution of posts, the duration of holidays with pay, etc.

The law explicitly defines the very important role of trade unions. The management bodies of the enterprises are obliged by this law to take into consideration the opinions and the position of trade unions and to rely on them when adopting their decisions.

I should now like to turn to another question and express our opinion that attainment of the aims of the I.L.O. will be possible only if we adjust its structure to contemporary needs and to the changes that have occurred in the world since the setting up of this Organisation. We think that the individual relationships and international trade union organisations should be equally and proportionally represented in all I.L.O. organs. Adequate representation will be particularly important for the work of the Workers' group at this Conference. The existing monopoly of some regions and organisations within the Workers' group makes it impossible for a great number of trade union organisations to make their contribution to the efforts exerted in this direction by our Organisation.

Any further delay in the solving of these urgent institutional questions would prevent the I.L.O. from achieving such results as are rightly expected by the majority of its Members, and particularly by the national trade union organisations. Therefore, it is imperative to solve in a consistent and democratic manner the question of the structural adjustment of the I.L.O.

In becoming Members of the I.L.O., all countries undertook the obligation to respect the principles and accept the standards on which our Organisation is based, namely the Declaration of Philadelphia, the Constitution of the I.L.O., as well as its numerous Conventions, and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

As we all know, there are countries today in which elementary trade union freedoms are denied and thus the working class is prevented from performing its important role. A striking example of such suppression of freedoms is to be found in our continent, in Spain. We feel that it is our duty and moral obligation to do our best to help Spanish workers in their 20-year long struggle for their rights. I should like to draw the attention of the Conference to the draft resolution submitted by the Yugoslav trade unions to this session of the Conference which demands that the Spanish Government guarantees fundamental democratic freedoms for the working people of Spain. The democratic world rightly expects delegates at this Conference to give wholehearted support to this resolution, all the more so since international trade union organisations and regional as well as many national organisations have addressed complaints and appeals to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and to the I.L.O. expressing therein their opinion with regard to the situation of the Spanish workers and the violation of their basic rights.

In addressing this august assembly on behalf of the working people of Yugoslavia, I feel it necessary to express our deep anxiety concerning the existing situation in world affairs. Contrary to the expectations of mankind, the world is again threatened with a universal war which, in this age of nuclear weapons, could destroy all that was ever made by man.

The war and intervention in Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic, the situation in the Congo and some countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America show the tendency to legalise the use of force in international relations. In addition, the still existing colonial oppression, the policy of racial discrimination in the Republic of South Africa and some other countries and the ever wider gap between the industrialised and the less developed countries also constitute a serious threat to world peace and the progress of mankind.

We therefore consider it the duty of our Organisation, as an important member of the United Nations family, to oppose all attempts which are contrary to the spirit and principles of the United Nations Charter, attempts at domination of other nations, attempts to re-establish colonial relations and discrimination of any kind.

In this connection, I should like to mention that the Yugoslav trade unions fully support the resolution submitted by the Government delegate of the United Arab Republic condemning the Government of Portugal on the ground of forced labour practised in territories under its administration. These conditions, which are undoubtedly a disgrace to our age, still exist in Angola, Mozambique and so-called Portuguese Guinea. The International Labour Conference must condemn such practices and give full support to the solution of these problems, thus ensuring its support for the struggle of the oppressed people of Portugal.

The I.L.O. should play an important part in the preservation of world peace. We feel that it should also devote its full attention to the problem of disarmament and should endeavour to contribute more than hitherto to the cause of general disarmament. It is a well-known fact that the expenditure on armaments in the world today amounts to $120,000 million a year, which is about 8 per cent of the total world annual income or nearly the total income of the developing countries. If the resources allocated for armaments were used for economic development and the improvement of living conditions this would not only facilitate development and improve employment possibilities in the less developed countries but would also increase employment possibilities in the developed industrial countries. The attempts to intimidate the working class by false allegations that disarmament would bring unemployment to the workers cannot shake them in their determination to stop the unjustified waste of enormous resources on the production of means of destruction instead of being utilised for general well-being and progress.

The working people of Yugoslavia, organised in their trade unions, will continue to give full support to the International Labour Organisation in its endeavours and activities aimed at the preservation of world peace. They will continue to struggle relentlessly for the policy of active and peaceful co-existence among nations, firm in their belief that only the observance of these principles can save the world from war and create the conditions indispensable for social progress.

Mr. DŽUNOV (Federal Secretary for Labour, Yugoslavia)—On behalf of my country and the Government of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia it is my duty to thank you, Sir, and my fellow delegates for the kind words and condolences addressed to the people of Yugoslavia on the occasion of the accident in the coal mine at Kakanj in which more than 100 workers lost their lives. You can understand how painful this accident is for me, as Minister of Labour, and what a terrible shock it must have been for the families and comrades of the miners concerned. Your words and understanding at this grave moment ease our pain, and we are most grateful to all of you. Thank you once again.

Mr. NDISI (Government delegate, Kenya)—On behalf of the Republic of Kenya, may I associate myself with the previous speakers in congratulating you, Sir, on your election as President of this session of the Conference. It is well known that the responsibility placed upon you is great but your experience and long association with this Organisation will equip you to fulfil this important task. With your guidance we shall, I am sure, reach the satisfactory conclusions we all hope for.

I consider it a great honour to have this opportunity of addressing the Conference as a representative of my country. Although this is the second occasion on which Kenya has directly participated in the work of the International Labour Conference it is the first session which my country has attended as a sovereign independent republic. Through my participation in the last session and my continuous attention to the activities of the International Labour Organisation I can vouch for the extent of its work and influence over a wide field.
I should also like to take this opportunity of welcoming to this Organisation our friends from Gambia and Yemen and, in particular, our near neighbours from Malawi and Zambia who have recently regained their birthright and are taking their rightful place here for the first time. We look forward to their valuable assistance in the attainment of the constructive objectives for which our Organisation exists and operates.

We in Kenya are aware that some of our brethren in Africa are still under colonial and foreign minority domination. The Republic of Kenya has from time to time expressed itself strongly on the situation in Mozambique, Angola and Portuguese Guinea. We have also made our position on Southern Rhodesia quite clear. We are totally committed to cooperating with other African States through the Organisation of African Unity to secure the complete liberation of Africa. Therefore we cannot consider ourselves fully free until the whole of Africa is free from colonialism and foreign minority domination.

The Republic of Kenya feels very strongly about Portuguese policies in Africa. This is indeed a denial of human rights.

I would also mention that a democratic government in Southern Rhodesia based on one man, one vote, must be recognised. The United Kingdom can rest assured of our full support in whatever action it may wish to take in order to ensure that no unilateral declaration of independence by the white minority in Southern Rhodesia takes place.

The Special Report of the Director-General on the Application of the Declaration concerning the Policy of "Apartheid" of the Republic of South Africa contains plenty of food for thought. I should like to express here our full appreciation of the work put into this. The Report is the result of an instrument adopted at the 48th Session of this Conference. Its contents are precise and I congratulate the Director-General on producing this excellent document.

It is a matter of deep concern that the Republic of South Africa should still continue with its apartheid policy. In view of the fact that the Republic of South Africa refused to reply to the Director-General's requests, thus confirming that no useful purpose would be served by referring this matter to the Governing Body for further analysis, it is for this Conference and the member States of this Organisation to consider what action would be understood by South Africa in connection with our effort to supplement the Director-General's proposals.

The Director-General's Report contains a number of important proposals concerning the measures to be taken to promote progress in a variety of fields; these include human resources and economic development, the development of social institutions and living and working conditions.

Obviously, there is a close relationship between economic development and social progress. It is by means of planning that our Government, after it attained independence, immediately drafted and produced a Six-Year Development Plan for the period 1964-70. Our President, His Excellency the Hon. Mzee Jomo Kenyatta had this to say: "We plan in order to attain our goal, to establish new economic institutions and modify old ones, freely choosing our models from the successful economies of the world, adapting them to suit Kenya's conditions and, in the process, developing new concepts of economic organisation."

By pursuing this policy much has already been done in this field, but a lot remains to be done if we are to achieve our declared goals.

The distinctive character of co-operative societies is the democratic control exercised over their affairs by the members. However, the biggest drawback to the movement at the moment has been the lack of co-operative education among members and it is felt that if the performance of the co-operative societies in the economic field is to show marked improvement over the past, great stress will need to be laid on co-operative education. The Republic of Kenya is aware of this, and is anxious to get I.L.O. experts to advise not only on co-operative education but on various co-operative activities such as wholesale and consumer co-operatives, credit societies, banking and insurance, transport, housing, fishing and co-operative farms and ranching societies.

The employment problems faced by a number of countries vary according to the level of wage-earning employment, the density of population and, more particularly, the position of wage earners within the economically active population. The Kenya Government is making every effort not only to increase the volume of employment but also to absorb more of the population in the economic activities of the country. In doing so we are, of course, learning from experience in other countries, and we look to the I.L.O. for practical assistance in this connection.

Particularly in developing countries, it is necessary to have regard to the rapid growth in population. The exploitation of agricultural and mineral resources in any country cannot improve conditions of life unless growth in production outstrips the population increase. We are aware of the need to stem this population increase.

Through our development programmes our Government proposes to take immediate steps towards family-planning education, because we believe that the present high rate of population makes extensive and intensive provision of social services impracticable, the employment problem more intractable, and saving for development harder than need be, thus lowering the rate of economic growth. Here again the I.L.O. can be of assistance.

A major preoccupation of any country which seeks to raise its standard of life is the intensive and rational exploitation of its mineral resources and its agricultural resources which are still insufficiently developed. Kenya's Six-Year Development Plan gives a great place to the solution of these problems, particularly with regard to agriculture which is still the main industry and the chief source of wealth of our country.

In our Development Plan about £9 million is earmarked for land settlement schemes. Through these settlement schemes the Government has already introduced many more Africans into the agricultural economy of our country. By a vastly expanded programme of agricultural education the Government is providing the African farmer with the knowledge to enable him to compete effectively in the modern world.

We have three enemies facing us: these are disease, poverty, and the lack of education. We deliberately call the disease commonly known as ignorance lack of education, because we believe that, given educational opportunity, ignorance disappears. We therefore consider that it is through hard work and intensive economic development that we can overcome these problems.

We consider that the promotion of employment in the rural areas is essential to the improvement of living conditions and of the prospects of the inhabitants of those areas. Particular emphasis is therefore placed on the development of rural areas and the expansion of rural institutions. It is evident that the people have, more than ever before, become involved in the democratic process of planning and working to solve their problems, thus enabling them to play their part in the socioeconomic progress of the country. The I.L.O.'s co-operation in this field can be of great significance.

In its efforts to eliminate unemployment the Government has established the National Youth Service which, when in full operation, will have an annual intake of 7,000 members. Its object is to provide useful employment for young men aged between 16 and 30 years who have been unable to obtain paid employment but who are keen to contribute to the task of nation-building. The Service will enable them to play their part in the social and economic affairs of the country, and will train them in useful skills and in citizenship.

We are aware that the only possibility of improving living standards is by a more rapid rate of economic development, and we know also that this is only possible if we achieve a higher rate of investment. Investment and savings are essential conditions of economic development. Therefore, in order to reach satisfactory results, the population must make sacrifices now and await the effects of economic development later. We consider that the principal aim of African socialism as applied to planning in Kenya is to improve the welfare and living standards of the people of this and succeeding generations.

The Republic of Kenya is already aware of the problems facing women, and, in recognition of their potential contribution to the economy of the country, we are pledged to do everything possible within our means to overcome those problems which are associated with women in employment.

The absence or shortage of skilled personnel in occupations requiring long-term training is one of the main obstacles to the economic expansion of the developing countries, and the co-operation of the I.L.O. and other specialised agencies of the United Nations will be very useful in establishing and operating training and education programmes.

International action by the United Nations Special Fund in agreeing to support our Government in the establishment of the Kenya Industrial Training and Productivity Centre is greatly appreciated. This is a good example of international co-operation, and this kind of assistance could be intensified in other developing countries. It is hoped that when the Centre is established we will be in a position to widen our training programmes locally.

Greater interest is now being shown in adult education than ever before. There is an increase in the number of people attending literacy classes, and the statistics available at present show that there are at least 40,000 students attending 1,400 classes. This number is most likely to rise. The I.L.O. can again be of great help by providing material and other assistance that might be needed in this field.

Having regard to the importance of vocational and technical training as a factor in raising productivity and wage levels, the I.L.O.'s activities in this field are most welcome. The establishment of the Turin Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training marks a significant new advance in the I.L.O.'s training activities; in addition to this Centre, the I.L.O. should also assist developing countries in their training programmes organised locally to meet local demands.

We envisage setting up new farm training centres in a number of areas in Kenya, and the existing ones will be expanded and improved. A training centre to give industrial training to African industrialists to enable them to compete effectively has been set up.

We believe that the trade union organisations have an important part to play in the harmonious development of young nations. They can help the governments achieve their development objectives by organising manpower, by instructing and educating the workers in their responsibilities and the part they have to play in the general development effort to improve their skills and increase their output. The skills and the structure of the labour force should, therefore, be studied carefully in co-operation with the I.L.O.

We welcome the I.L.O.'s proposed action in the field of labour relations. In Kenya there is a very close relationship between the Government and employers' and workers' organisations - not only by direct consultation but also through the medium of the Labour Advisory Board. During the past few years I.L.O. regional courses in labour administration have been held in our country, and representatives of employers' and workers' organisations have been associated with these courses.

It is our intention to assist trade unions to become involved in economic activities such as co-operatives, housing schemes, workers' discipline and co-operation, training schemes and, in general, to accept their social responsibility. In order to avoid abuses of trade union power and to enable the country to concentrate on economic development, legislation has been introduced providing machinery for the settlement of issues not resolved through the regular bargaining process, together with any other issues that may be needed to avoid strikes.

The Government of the Republic of Kenya, like other governments of developing countries, is aware that there is a growing sector of the population which is divorced from the tribe or clan and from the traditional security which they provided. In this connection, I have to report that our Government has now taken a further step towards the provision of a comprehensive social security system. A National Provident Fund Scheme is being established and will come into operation towards the end of this year. The Fund, which will be a contributory one with equal payments from employers and workers, will ultimately cover all employed persons but it will be introduced in stages.

These are some of the steps which we are taking in Kenya to deal with the problem so ably outlined in the Director-General's Report.

As I have said, we, as a developing country, cannot hope to overcome our difficulties alone, and we hope that we will continue to have the assistance of the International Labour Organisation and other organisations interested, and without any strings.

Lastly, may I congratulate the Director-General once again on the production of a very constructive Report, and wish this tripartite organisation success in its efforts to promote understanding between men and nations.

(The Conference adjourned at 1 p.m.)
NINTH SITTING

Tuesday, 8 June 1965, 3 p.m.

President : Mr. Raza

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now continue the discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Mr. THONDAMAN (Workers' delegate, Ceylon)—Let me offer you, Mr. President, my warmest congratulations on your election to your high office. It is in the tradition of the I.L.O. to elect as President such an eminent person as you are.

This year's Report of the Director-General is a very comprehensive formulation of the programme and structure of the I.L.O., showing how I.L.O. programmes can move forward in areas where there has been a consensus of agreement. It also provides fresh proposals and fresh ideas on those matters which require further examination.

Undoubtedly, as the task of the Organisation is one of unprecedented importance, it becomes imperative for all member States to make a comprehensive and objective study of the proposals submitted for consideration at the Conference. The report and the analysis should engage the active attention of all member States and of employers' and workers' organisations as a new signpost in the activities of the I.L.O. The three major programme areas—human resources development; labour relations, trade union development and the growth of sound social institutions; and conditions of life and work—embrace those matters which are uppermost today in the minds of all member delegates.

As the delegate of the workers of my country I welcome the reorganisation of the internal structure of the Organisation. It is, I feel, a step in the right direction. The three large administrative units created thereby correspond to the programme categories contemplated. I do hope that the new departmental structure will facilitate the process of formulating and adjusting programmes to the needs of member countries. It is very necessary to move from general formulation to the elaboration of precise programmes based on systematic reviews of the principal needs of each programme area if the attainment of priority objectives is to be efficiently accomplished. Concentration on essential activities should not hamper the integration and appraisal of current programmes. Rather should we develop a more refined system capable of the evaluation of alternative proposals in response to the continuing assessment of needs.

The establishment of the Field Department should in my opinion galvanise regional activities. The review by regional conferences of the implementation by member States of international labour Conventions and Recommendations in developing countries is very essential. Future action should always be oriented in the light of policies pursued by member governments, and the best assessor of such policies should be the I.L.O. regional organs. I welcome the structure of the Field Department, especially the establishment of three regional branches for the newly developing countries. It is to be hoped that the new structure will facilitate closer contacts with governmental and non-governmental organisations in the countries concerned and will provide assistance by improving the over-all quality of the regional offices' field exports.

The widespread interest in the development and utilisation of human resources has been eagerly shared in my country. The new Government of Ceylon has restated, in the recent Speech from the Throne, that it will be fair to all, irrespective of race, community or religion, and that it will protect human rights at all times. Throughout the programme of policies outlined by the National Government of Ceylon emphasis has been placed on investment in human resources in over-all development planning. Popular support for the tasks of national development and the participation of broad social groups in them have been enlisted by the Government of my country by declaring that the advancement of the interests of employees of all grades in the public and private sectors will be guaranteed. Better utilisation of the labour force through the creation of higher levels of productive employment is now being studied by the Government.

Unemployment has acquired massive proportions in my country and the Government proposes to take resolute steps by integrating human resources policies with economic development planning. The educational system, which is insufficiently geared to economic realities, will be corrected. Employer-employee relationships will be rendered more cordial by ensuring employee participation in management and profits. It is here that Ceylon lacks specialists with wide experience of manpower questions and an understanding of planning techniques. It is to the I.L.O. that my country looks to furnish the programmes and structure for vocational training, educational planning, employment promotion policies, worker training and management training. In Ceylon we have to create employment that is fully productive and raise productivity in labour-intensive sectors. The contribution of the rural sector to the national income is by no means insignificant. The plantation workers have a predominant role in the solution of such problems, monetary and financial stability. We realise that active participation by different organised social groups, inspired by mutual understanding for each other's autonomy, is necessary for the growth of workers' and employers' organisations which are genuinely representative and independent.

In pursuance of the third objective of the I.L.O. as stated in the Report, Ceylon requires administrative machinery to deal with the complex problems existing in the field of labour relations. Realising the immense contribution that maintenance of industrial peace would make to the achievement of the goal of economic growth, the Government of my country has established the necessary machinery for the examination and solution of differences that arise between employers and employees. Industrial courts and labour tribunals play an increasingly predominant role in the solution of such differences; the Department of Labour has also contributed in no small measure by applying methods of conciliation, negotiation or arbitration as provided for in the Industrial Disputes Act, a statute which the workers in my country have recognised as the bulwark of their rights against intransigent and uncompromising employers.

All member States will no doubt welcome and appreciate their active support to the proposals of the I.L.O. to enhance the status of the worker and to improve his living and working conditions. It is an indisputable fact that the I.L.O. has done much useful work on many aspects of workers' education in different regions of the world. It is most gratifying that the I.L.O. should have decided to focus its attention on strengthening and improving national institutions for the training of personnel managers. In my country the institution of personnel management, though introduced in recent times, has gained considerable ground and has come to be recognised as a very necessary prerequisite for good employer-employee relations, and it is quite fitting that the I.L.O. should anticipate the adoption in the very near future of an instrument on this question. That the I.L.O. has set the training of personnel managers as one of its objectives has been manifestly proved by the recent seminar held in Ceylon on personnel management for Asian countries.

It is indeed very encouraging and heartening to the teeming millions of workers in all the member States that the I.L.O. had set as its fourth objective the enhancement of the status of the worker, both within the undertaking and in society as a whole. In this connection, as the leader of the largest trade union in my country, I am particularly grateful to state here at this Conference that the Government of Ceylon has given an assurance concerning the participation of employees in management and profits. With this assurance a new era seems to be dawning in the lives of the workers of my country. However, I am alive to the fact that it will be no easy task for the Government to translate these intentions into realities by converting the present system of a wage contract to a partnership contract, with the workers sharing in the profits and management of an industry.

Under the wage contract system, the worker is a sort of stranger and alien to the business; he has nothing to do with the direction of the business or with the profits thereof. Under a partnership contract system, on the contrary, the employers and employees are considered as participating in a joint task of distribution or production for the common good. They both have a part to play in the business enterprise, although this part differs according to their functions.

Profit-sharing normally involves the dividing of a portion of net profits among the workers in accordance with a previously developed formula. This is in addition to a fair wage determined by normal collective bargaining. Such a procedure, it is said, emphasises the common interests of workers and employers, gives labour an incentive to co-operate with management, and tends to increase the workers' loyalty to the employer. On the other hand, it is also a fact that the incentive method of profit-sharing has often caused suspicion and even hostility on the part of organised labour. Nevertheless, it cannot be denied that there are untapped reserves in the working force which can be utilised only through co-operation. Workers often have suggestions for new methods of production, for devices to increase quality and eliminate waste, etc., which have proved most useful for industries. Furthermore, psychologically speaking, it may even happen that they can work faster without undue fatigue if the proper stimulus is applied. Accordingly, it seems that profit-sharing can be successful provided that it is accompanied by complete trust in the management's integrity and competence. The idea of management-sharing is fraught with more difficulties than profit-sharing.

In the economic domain, management and labour are linked in a community of action and interests. To disregard this mutual bond, to strive to break it, can only betray a pretension to blind and preposterous despotism. Employers and workers are not implacable adversaries. They are co-operators in a common task. Both parties are interested in seeing to it that the costs of national production are in proportion to the output. But since they have common interests why should not a just share of the responsibility in the establishment and development of the national economy be assigned to the workers, especially today, when scarcity of capital and the problem of international exchange are paralysing the free flow of expenditure on national production? I am confident that, with a reorientation of the attitudes of employers in my country, the hopes of the Government in this regard and those of the workers will not be belied.

Interpretation from French : Mr. NZO-EKHAH-NGHAKY (Government delegate, Cameroon)—Mr. President, may I, in the name of my Government, first of all congratulate you most sincerely on your election to the presidency of this important session of the International Labour Conference. As you said yourself, this election is an honour not only to you as an individual but also to your beautiful country, Pakistan, one of our friends in the Afro-Asian group. Cameroon is proud of this victory, but prouder still of your efficiency, which you have already shown in carrying out the new responsibilities of this high post.

After having read with very close attention indeed the Report of the Director-General to the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference, I should like to thank the author for the clarity, the lucidity and the timeliness of everything that he has said in his Report referring to the future of the International Labour Office itself and, through the International Labour Office, the future of the developing countries in their own. I may add that the delegates at the preceding session of the Conference were very wise in deciding that the general programme of action of the I.L.O. should be geared to deal successively, in the following order of priority, with the development of human resources, trade union activity and the development of social institutions, and conditions of life and work.

We should like to stress in passing the keen sense of timeliness with which the International Labour Office, one of the oldest specialised agencies in the world, has adapted itself to the new tasks and new situations which result from phenomena which have recently affected the political life of a number of States throughout the world and, more particularly, in Africa south of the Sahara. We can only endorse and subscribe to these reforms in structure, the intent of which is to decentralise effectively the action of the I.L.O. and hence to adapt it better to the conditions arising, in particular, out of the accession of a number of States to independence.

We quite appreciate and understand the scope of the reforms made at the Headquarters of the I.L.O., in particular the creation of departments, large administrative units bringing together in flexible and efficient groups all the sectors of the activity of this Organisation. But what was most welcome to us was the constantly increasing share which is being set aside for the study and discussion of regional problems. We feel, in fact, that our African problems will require studies made on the spot, field studies which will enable the solutions to the problems will be adapted to the conditions peculiar to each country. To achieve this result it was obviously necessary to decentralise the activities of the I.L.O. We therefore applaud the creation of the regional services, one of which will be particularly concerned with Africa. Thus the technical competence of the I.L.O. will be effectively and harmoniously synthesised with the desiderata expressed by the Africans within the very framework of their basic concerns. The Director-General's desire to establish the general programme of the I.L.O. taking into consideration the priorities of the real needs of the countries concerned was expressed with the same sense of flexibility and effectiveness and deserves our wholehearted approval.

That is why we are particularly happy to have been able to welcome at Yaoundé the establishment of the Training Centre for Labour Administration, which was organised by the I.L.O. with the assistance of the French Government. This is a regional operation which is perfectly adapted to the immediate needs of the French-speaking African States.

We fully support the proposals with respect to the development of human resources available to our countries. We are in fact convinced that the economic expansion which our countries are seeking is closely and categorically dependent on the development of human resources which constitute our real wealth. Thus we are in full agreement as to the immediate need to establish progressive and concerted plans on the understanding that, at the same time, the vocational training of our workers is actively promoted. Vocational training should unquestionably be promoted in different forms, but all of these forms should lead to the improvement of the productivity of our manpower, and thus to the progressive paying off of the mortgage represented by the compulsory recourse to „imported” manpower. We are also convinced that efforts should be made so that co-operation among the various services responsible for the development of human resources and those services which are concerned with economic planning should be more complete and more fully developed than it is today.

Now, it is quite true that the I.L.O. can play a very effective role in the finding of solutions which can lead to such a result, and we hope that it will make its services available to us in this connection. Such action, however, will have to be complete, that is to say, that it will take responsibility for the various sectors of activity, in particular with a view to the rural development which is the key to our economic development, but also at all levels and particularly that of the higher echelons. It must also take responsibility for the further training of workers who have already received some kind of hasty or superficial training and who seem likely to be able to advance in their occupation. We should like to thank the I.L.O. in this connection for agreeing to set up in Yaoundé a centre for further training of office staff which will begin to operate next October. Such concrete achievements should be multiplied in all branches where the research provided for in the general programme of action of the I.L.O. will show the possibility and the desirability of such training. Only in this way will the I.L.O. continue to help us in the field of the co-operative movement, which we have irrevocably chosen as the means of emancipating our producers and consumers. Such aid could be particularly valuable to us if education experts were sent to our National Centre for the Training of Co-operators. This Centre was established recently and is open to our African neighbours as well as to our own nationals.
Finally, it would be desirable to prepare those who will train others and who can pass on all the grounding that they will have received in such courses.

As regards the part of the programme dealing with the subject of social institutions, we feel that this is a field where one has to walk very warily because of the political overtones which may be involved. We already have in Cameroon legislation which provides for direct, free and confident co-operation between organisations of employers and workers, so it is not the principle to which we have any objection. We have also, and very recently, decided to include representatives of these organisations in the active phase of working out, and perhaps later in the application, of our second five-year plan. We are making every effort, in the same connection, to extend even further the collaboration among the three groups—government, employers and workers—to the social and economic development of our country.

But we feel that the mass of the workers of our country, who are as yet somewhat backward, must be protected against attempts made by certain dishonest persons, operating under the fictitious cloak of workers' movements, to introduce subversion into our country and sabotage its institutions. The recent history of the trade union movement in Cameroon has made us particularly sensitive to this possible action.

As far as concerns the improvement of working conditions, we consider that this is an objective of very great importance. But we want to avoid converting the wage earners into a sort of privileged caste in the country who would be an object of constant attention by the State, whereas the great mass of non-wage-earning workers, in the agricultural sector in particular, could expect an improvement in their lot only through a rise in world market prices for their products. We consider such a distortion would be dangerous and therefore should be avoided.

We are inclined, in view of the present situation of our general economy, to grant wage earners new social advantages only to the extent that they themselves produce higher quality work than they have done so far, particularly as regards conscientiousness and output, it being understood that any adjustments made necessary by the rise in the cost of living would not be affected because of these considerations.

Studies which have been made on these problems bring out that any improvement in the quality of work is closely connected with the vocational training and further training of manpower, and therefore is conditioned by the efforts already made, or to be made, in this field.

We also feel that efforts of the same nature must be undertaken in the case of workers who are members of unions, and particularly shop stewards, so as to complete their training and make it possible for them to take a more active part in the life of the undertakings themselves as well as to carry out objectives which are part of our plan of development. In this field the report of the L.I.O. can be decisive, and we are confident that when we come to ask for help it will not be denied.

However, such activity is a delicate matter, and it seems difficult to decide how exactly it could be included successfully in a programme of development of social institutions common to a group of States. The needs in this field are very different from one country to another, as are the existing structures, and it would seem very difficult to contemplate any action, even if it were not imposed by authority, with a view to modifying these conditions in a harmonious and effective way.

I feel the desired results could be more easily obtained by constantly tightening up the application of international labour standards, through the instruments already worked out by the International Labour Conference.

In this connection we can only endorse the action undertaken with a view to modifying instruments no longer applicable to the political and social conditions of most countries. We consider this operation, which was very correctly termed "the pruning away of dead wood", to be highly salutary. We also think it should be accompanied by a thoughtful search for new standards, which would make it possible to adapt to the requirements of modern life the standards which are already in force. Here it is also desirable that improved adaptation of the rules already established should be carried out parallel with the continuance of efforts towards the application of these rules. Therefore, we fully approve the comments made by the Director-General in the section of his Report concerned with new international labour standards, and we consider that the proposals made are absolutely acceptable and should be adopted.

This is a modest but frank and open contribution which we thought we could make to the Director-General in his search for ways and means of adapting the action of this Organisation to the needs of a changing world.

Interpretation from Russian : Mr. EFRE-MENKO (Workers' delegate, Ukraine)—I have studied very carefully the Director-General's Report to the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference, and I have come once again to the conclusion that the activities and structure of the I.L.O. do not correspond with the rapidly changing requirements of the world. A large number of delegates to the Conference have already expressed the conviction that the Organisation should democratise itself, do away with discrimination, analyse more objectively the economic and social position of the workers in the various countries of the world, and plan its programmes on the basis of such an analysis.

In this connection, the Workers' delegation of the Ukraine has noted with interest the Director-General's proposals regarding the formation imposed by the present world situation.

There can be no doubt that the problems of manpower and human resources development remain highly relevant to the future activities of the I.L.O. The Director-General correctly points out that the activities of the I.L.O. in the field of manpower resources should be based on manpower planning. If the the I.L.O. had followed genuine democratic procedures and done away with discrimination, bas ing its studies impartially on the careful comparison of experience gained in various countries, including the socialist countries, it would have been able to plan an effective policy in the field of manpower resources and would have greatly contributed to the whole problem of economic and social development in most countries, especially the developing countries.

We have no doubt that activities in the field of labour relations, the promotion of trade unions and the promotion of social institutions governing such relations are in line with the aims of the I.L.O. and can offer a broad field of activities for this Organisation over the coming years. However, we cannot agree with the conclusions in the Report to the effect that the I.L.O. should, in its activities, seek to apply methods of conciliation and arbitration with a view to overcoming the conflicts that might arise between workers and employers, in order to achieve more fruitful co-operation.

In order to approach the whole problem of labour relations correctly one should clearly define the concept of co-operation and possible conflicts between workers and employers that may arise in various countries, about which the Director-General speaks. One cannot conceal the fact that in capitalist countries, where private enterprise prevails and where the owner of capital dictates his conditions to the worker in order to boost his own profits, conflict between the workers and the owners of capital, between employers' organisations upholding the interests of the capitalists on the one hand and the trade union organisations upholding the interests of the workers on the other hand has always existed and will always exist so long as the whole system of exploitation of man by man is not eliminated, and so long as a fair distribution of the fruits of man's labour is not achieved. Such conflict simply varies in intensity at different times.

As far as the International Labour Organisation is concerned, in many of the committees of the Conference, in the Governing Body and elsewhere, it has wisely separated the Workers from the Employers by means of the Government benches. It would be wrong and absurd for the I.L.O. to profess and seek to impose this sort of idyllic policy of "co-operation" between the workers and the capitalists. At a time when the cost of living is rising in many countries, when consumer prices and rents are rising, when the monopolies are attacking the rights of the working class, tens of millions of workers are engaged in strike campaigns. The violent class struggles in the capitalist countries testify eloquently to the fact that the workers have the greatest difficulty in achieving, at the price of considerable sacrifices, the smallest concessions from the employers. Therefore, any approach founded on the basic aims of the I.L.O.
in this field should be extremely realistic, earnest and based on an assessment of the facts. The form in which the Report approaches the subject would cause considerable damage to the workers and to the whole international labour movement.

The workers can support with great satisfaction the I.L.O. 's aim of contributing to the expansion of representative and independent organisations so as to enable all sectors of the population to participate in economic development and to enjoy its benefits with a view to associating such associations in the planning and carrying out of economic and social development plans. A pressing aim of the I.L.O. in this field should be to strive for legislative safeguards for the right of workers' organisations to participate actively in the planning of economic and social development.

Another great victory for the I.L.O. would be to secure for trade unions statutory power to settle a number of labour problems. This relates especially to the promotion of the status of workers both in the undertaking and and in the community as a whole, which is mentioned in the Report. As the Director-General has pointed out, this question is linked to that of measures to satisfy the workers' desire for the application of policies and procedures at undertakings that would establish the workers' opportunity to enjoy the attention they deserve as human beings.

We should like to believe that these very important principles will not remain on paper but that they will be put into effect by the International Labour Organisation. For this it is necessary, of course, that they be accompanied by the appropriate structural changes, which connection we believe that great importance attaches to the proposals contained in the draft resolution submitted by the Government delegates of Poland and the Ukraine regarding equitable geographical representation in the Governing Body and also at the Conference. The implementation of these proposals will give the representatives of Africa, Asia and Latin America and of the socialist countries the places that are rightfully theirs. Thereby new forces will be able to propel the I.L.O. along the lines of its new programme.

There is also a need for other structural changes. A large number of delegates at the Conference, the representatives of the largest organisations of workers affiliated to the W.F.T.U., have often pointed out the anomalties that exist in the I.L.O. as between the Conference, as the supreme body of the Organ-sation, and the Governing Body, with particular reference to the unrepresentative character of the Governing Body, especially as regards its Workers' group, whose members represent only one-fourth of all organised workers. We can no longer accept outdated provisions of the Constitution which are exploited by certain circles in the Organisation against the interests of the working class and the peoples of many countries of the world.

I should like to cite a very typical example.
In the debate on the Director-General's Report,
as you know, the Minister of Labour of Ghana,
Mr. Amoa-Awuah, the Minister of Labour and Social Development of Zambia, Mr. Mundia, and many other representatives of liberated Africa have called upon member States to hasten ratification of the amendments to the Constitution of the I.L.O. stating that the policy of apartheid and racial discrimination is incompatible with membership of the I.L.O.
They also called for the expulsion from the
I.L.O. of the Portuguese colonialists. In con-

Ninth Sitting 103
I have had the privilege of attending sessions of the International Labour Conference on a number of occasions. The first one I attended was in San Francisco in 1948, the year that the present Director-General was appointed, and on every occasion since then when I have taken part in the debates of the Conference I have felt the need to comment specially on the excellence of the Director-General's Report. This year, in Part I of the Report, he has put us on a thin ration of only 35 pages, but the qualities of clear and constructive thinking, directness of presentation and positive leadership are unchanged. Again, I congratulate him on his Report.

Looking back over these annual Reports of the Director-General to the Conference one cannot but be impressed by the leadership which the I.L.O. has had, through them, over the years. Year by year these Reports have not only reviewed the previous year's activities — and I think that that is still their first function — but have assessed the nature and speed of change and probed into the approaching requirements of communities and countries in the face of change. They have steadily kept the Organisation face to face with tasks ahead. I recall, for instance, the 1953 Report with its emphasis on productivity, the 1955 Report pointing up the need for good labour-management relations in industrial development, the 1957 Report focusing attention on automation and the 1960 Report with its special attention to youth and work. To look back over these Reports for past years is a good exercise for anyone who has any doubts about the way in which the I.L.O. has kept abreast of the problems of the day; it is useful medicine for those who feel despondent about our ability to make progress in overcoming these problems. In fact it is amazing to see just how fast the I.L.O. has adapted itself to a changing world and how far it has come in the 18 years of my own association with it.

It is, in fact, this speed of growth and change in emphasis in the I.L.O.'s activities which have made a wholesale review of the Organisation necessary. By the 1960s we were beginning to find difficulties in its having assessed the nature and speed of change and probed into the approaching requirements of communities and countries in the face of change. They have steadily kept the Organisation face to face with tasks ahead. I recall, for instance, the 1953 Report with its emphasis on productivity, the 1955 Report pointing up the need for good labour-management relations in industrial development, the 1957 Report focusing attention on automation and the 1960 Report with its special attention to youth and work. To look back over these Reports for past years is a good exercise for anyone who has any doubts about the way in which the I.L.O. has kept abreast of the problems of the day; it is useful medicine for those who feel despondent about our ability to make progress in overcoming these problems. In fact it is amazing to see just how fast the I.L.O. has adapted itself to a changing world and how far it has come in the 18 years of my own association with it.

I have had the privilege of attending sessions of the International Labour Conference on a number of occasions. The first one I attended was in San Francisco in 1948, the year that the present Director-General was appointed, and on every occasion since then when I have taken part in the debates of the Conference I have felt the need to comment specially on the excellence of the Director-General's Report. This year, in Part I of the Report, he has put us on a thin ration of only 35 pages, but the qualities of clear and constructive thinking, directness of presentation and positive leadership are unchanged. Again, I congratulate him on his Report.

Looking back over these annual Reports of the Director-General to the Conference one cannot but be impressed by the leadership which the I.L.O. has had, through them, over the years. Year by year these Reports have not only reviewed the previous year's activities — and I think that that is still their first function — but have assessed the nature and speed of change and probed into the approaching requirements of communities and countries in the face of change. They have steadily kept the Organisation face to face with tasks ahead. I recall, for instance, the 1953 Report with its emphasis on productivity, the 1955 Report pointing up the need for good labour-management relations in industrial development, the 1957 Report focusing attention on automation and the 1960 Report with its special attention to youth and work. To look back over these Reports for past years is a good exercise for anyone who has any doubts about the way in which the I.L.O. has kept abreast of the problems of the day; it is useful medicine for those who feel despondent about our ability to make progress in overcoming these problems. In fact it is amazing to see just how fast the I.L.O. has adapted itself to a changing world and how far it has come in the 18 years of my own association with it.

It is, in fact, this speed of growth and change in emphasis in the I.L.O.'s activities which have made a wholesale review of the Organisation necessary. By the 1960s we were beginning to find difficulties in its having assessed the nature and speed of change and probed into the approaching requirements of communities and countries in the face of change. They have steadily kept the Organisation face to face with tasks ahead. I recall, for instance, the 1953 Report with its emphasis on productivity, the 1955 Report pointing up the need for good labour-management relations in industrial development, the 1957 Report focusing attention on automation and the 1960 Report with its special attention to youth and work. To look back over these Reports for past years is a good exercise for anyone who has any doubts about the way in which the I.L.O. has kept abreast of the problems of the day; it is useful medicine for those who feel despondent about our ability to make progress in overcoming these problems. In fact it is amazing to see just how fast the I.L.O. has adapted itself to a changing world and how far it has come in the 18 years of my own association with it.

It is, in fact, this speed of growth and change in emphasis in the I.L.O.'s activities which have made a wholesale review of the Organisation necessary. By the 1960s we were beginning to find difficulties in its having assessed the nature and speed of change and probed into the approaching requirements of communities and countries in the face of change. They have steadily kept the Organisation face to face with tasks ahead. I recall, for instance, the 1953 Report with its emphasis on productivity, the 1955 Report pointing up the need for good labour-management relations in industrial development, the 1957 Report focusing attention on automation and the 1960 Report with its special attention to youth and work. To look back over these Reports for past years is a good exercise for anyone who has any doubts about the way in which the I.L.O. has kept abreast of the problems of the day; it is useful medicine for those who feel despondent about our ability to make progress in overcoming these problems. In fact it is amazing to see just how fast the I.L.O. has adapted itself to a changing world and how far it has come in the 18 years of my own association with it.

It is, in fact, this speed of growth and change in emphasis in the I.L.O.'s activities which have made a wholesale review of the Organisation necessary. By the 1960s we were beginning to find difficulties in its having assessed the nature and speed of change and probed into the approaching requirements of communities and countries in the face of change. They have steadily kept the Organisation face to face with tasks ahead. I recall, for instance, the 1953 Report with its emphasis on productivity, the 1955 Report pointing up the need for good labour-management relations in industrial development, the 1957 Report focusing attention on automation and the 1960 Report with its special attention to youth and work. To look back over these Reports for past years is a good exercise for anyone who has any doubts about the way in which the I.L.O. has kept abreast of the problems of the day; it is useful medicine for those who feel despondent about our ability to make progress in overcoming these problems. In fact it is amazing to see just how fast the I.L.O. has adapted itself to a changing world and how far it has come in the 18 years of my own association with it.

It is, in fact, this speed of growth and change in emphasis in the I.L.O.'s activities which have made a wholesale review of the Organisation necessary. By the 1960s we were beginning to find difficulties in its having assessed the nature and speed of change and probed into the approaching requirements of communities and countries in the face of change. They have steadily kept the Organisation face to face with tasks ahead. I recall, for instance, the 1953 Report with its emphasis on productivity, the 1955 Report pointing up the need for good labour-management relations in industrial development, the 1957 Report focusing attention on automation and the 1960 Report with its special attention to youth and work. To look back over these Reports for past years is a good exercise for anyone who has any doubts about the way in which the I.L.O. has kept abreast of the problems of the day; it is useful medicine for those who feel despondent about our ability to make progress in overcoming these problems. In fact it is amazing to see just how fast the I.L.O. has adapted itself to a changing world and how far it has come in the 18 years of my own association with it.

It is, in fact, this speed of growth and change in emphasis in the I.L.O.'s activities which have made a wholesale review of the Organisation necessary. By the 1960s we were beginning to find difficulties in its having assessed the nature and speed of change and probed into the approaching requirements of communities and countries in the face of change. They have steadily kept the Organisation face to face with tasks ahead. I recall, for instance, the 1953 Report with its emphasis on productivity, the 1955 Report pointing up the need for good labour-management relations in industrial development, the 1957 Report focusing attention on automation and the 1960 Report with its special attention to youth and work. To look back over these Reports for past years is a good exercise for anyone who has any doubts about the way in which the I.L.O. has kept abreast of the problems of the day; it is useful medicine for those who feel despondent about our ability to make progress in overcoming these problems. In fact it is amazing to see just how fast the I.L.O. has adapted itself to a changing world and how far it has come in the 18 years of my own association with it.
The Director-General's reorganisation of programme services into departments named for the major programme areas certainly has the merit of logic; we hope that it will also give impetus to the concentration of programmes which he himself commends as his aim but which, as has been mentioned in previous years, is extremely difficult to realise amidst the conflicting pressures of international organisations. The same observation applies to the new Field Department; the aims stated for it are impeccable, but we wonder whether, as a working unit, it might not run into trouble between the realignment of technical and servicing departments on the one hand, and, on the other, the hope expressed in the Report that it will be the platform for a "composite endeavour covering all our major areas of concern". In an organisation as large as the I.L.O. the difficulties of co-ordination are real.

The Director-General feels that, on the basis of views expressed at past sessions, he is justified in assuming a "clear mandate" to organise the I.L.O.'s programme for human resources development along the lines set down in his Reports to the 47th and 48th Sessions. Since our support for this section has already been expressed, I shall make only one or two remarks at this stage. Firstly, that we are pleased to see the emphasis given by the Director-General in this and in other sections to the problems of developing countries and the need for practical assistance in solving them.

We underline the word practical as a lead in to our second point, which, although we run the risk of harping on a worn string, concerns research. We have in the past expressed doubts about the amount of studies and research that are inscribed in the I.L.O. programme. There are no doubt areas where insufficient research has been done for the Office to draw coherent and valid conclusions; we would not want to suggest that these areas be skirted round or ignored, but we do feel that over the years during which the Office has been doing this body of work the amount that should have been accumulated, and it now is time the emphasis was changed from the gathering of information to the translation of it into practical advice and training. Concentration of resources on a smaller number of projects and careful co-ordination with other members of the United Nations family becomes even more important here, if only because of the acute shortage of qualified people in the field of economic planning. There is far too little expertise available to developing countries for the I.L.O. to attempt to step, of its own accord, into solo programmes which involve forward planning on human resources. The Director-General has himself emphasised the need for practical action and also for co-ordination with regional organisations. We strongly support these points.

There are still, of course, many aspects of organisation under review, and I would like to mention one of these more particularly. For many years the Industrial Committees played a very important part in the I.L.O. While the I.L.O.'s membership consisted mainly of industrialised countries and its administration was highly centralised, the Industrial Committees were particularly useful. Today, however, in an I.L.O. where levels of industrialisation vary tremendously, where problems are local and regional rather than industry-wide, and where the complexities of development require specialist and expert attention rather than broad and more generalised discussion, the relative importance of the Industrial Committees has changed. They are no longer the most suitable bodies for dealing with a large part of the problems facing the I.L.O. The matters they deal with are no longer the urgent problems and the first priorities. Consequently we feel that, while there is continuing work for Industrial Committees to do, the time has been reached when they should be gradually reduced as to their size, frequency of meetings and cost. We feel that the I.L.O. funds hitherto devoted to Industrial Committees should gradually, over a period of years, be diverted to the support of regional and field organisation and ad hoc meetings of experts.

We are in full agreement with the Director-General's view that security of employment and income is an important and legitimate matter for the I.L.O. to pursue. In many communities, of course, the primary consideration is still the promotion of employment to overcome unemployment, but it is important that, as employment policies develop, provisions to stabilise employment and incomes should be grafted on to them. The matter of priorities has to be considered here as in everything else. It is not a question of whether the I.L.O. should devote attention to security of employment and income but rather a question of how much attention and when, having due regard to other and perhaps more immediate needs.

We have previously mentioned our belief that conditions of life and work might now take a lower priority in the Organisation's work. We agree with the Director-General that the I.L.O.'s programme in this field should be concerted with that of other organisations dealing with social protection and welfare, and that the impetus to the concentration of programmes in this field should be shared by other Members, and to have been taken into account by the Director-General. We have no particular views about the size of the proposed revision committee, but would like to see it kept reasonably small and compact.

We consider that the Organisation, in fixing its future programme, should concentrate on the consolidation of existing standards, on operational activities designed to help in their application rather than on the continuous drafting of new standards. Others may not agree with this view, but it seems sensible that the I.L.O. should reduce its new standard-setting activities to some degree if it is faithfully to apply a priority for technical assistance.
As this is the last session of the International Labour Conference that I shall be attending, may I have the privilege of expressing the hope that the I.L.O. will continue to make progress towards the achievement of its objective of ensuring social justice for all.

Interpretation from French : Mr. GORALLAH (Workers' delegate, Chad)—I should not like to break the tradition which calls on me first of all to address you, Mr. President, my warmest and most sincere congratulations on your brilliant election to the presidency of our Conference.

I also take this opportunity of greeting, in the name of the workers of Chad, the delegates of all our sister countries, particularly those who have come here for the first time.

One of the most important phenomena of our time is that the problems of the world of labour—that driving force of world economy—are discussed on this platform every year. It is also an important event to see how this Conference delegates from the young States of Africa, but yesterday neglected and ignored, today an essential element in the group of non-aligned countries, the development and orientation of which conditions the future of the globe.

Many, not to say all, the problems of trade unionism have to be solved by our own countries, including first of all those of training, workers’ education, and occupational advancement. In my view, the essential task of African trade unionism, above the differences of political and social structure which mark present-day Africa, is to seek the basis and principles of a common attitude of all trade unionists in the face of the great problems of Africa.

In the particular case of my country, Chad, the essential task of trade unionism is to stand shoulder-to-shoulder with the Government for close co-operation in national construction and the battle for economic development. To repeat a phrase used by the Head of State, “All newly sovereign States have measured the need for an effort to develop their economies.” Chad is no exception, and it, too, appeals to each of you for an effort to promote the well-being of all. The effort required is immense by reason of our geographical, economic and social background. Indeed one of the main characteristics of the economy of Chad, and in this it is not alone in Africa, is a very low standard of living.

Our problems, I have already said, are many, but behind them all lies the existence of a very large traditional economy side by side with the modern developing sector. This juxtaposition of two non-integrated or ill-integrated sectors sets up an imbalance, as a result of which there is still no national economy in the full sense of the term. The disappearance of this structural duality, and it is slowly diminishing, is one of the chief indices of our economic development. Of course, as the traditional economy progressively turns towards the condition of a modern economy, and as the foreign-owned sector identifies itself more and more with the local economy, so our national economy will become more and more integrated and will develop more easily.

Two other problems are acute, that of training and that of underemployment. Indeed, we are faced with the paradoxical combination of a shortage of skilled labor and an abundance of manpower in general. This lack of skills is acute not only at the level of manpower but also at that of organisation and management. Another weak point in our economy is the lack of leadership, both for public undertakings and undertakings in the private sector.

This shows the complexity of our present economic situation and the wide scale of the remedies required. The action to be taken is logical and can suffer no delay. I think the measures that are required can be divided into three sectors—national, regional and inter-African.

At the national level it seems absolutely essential to reform present economic structures in order progressively to eliminate the duality from which they suffer and integrate the traditional sector with the modern economy. In Africa in general, and Chad in particular, agriculture remains the key sector, and the first reform measures must thus necessarily relate to agriculture. The peasant masses must be stabilised, underemployment vanquished, and the national market extended so as to stimulate industrialisation. Industrialisation, in which my Government is at present interested, is necessary to enhance the value of primary production, to improve the basis of trade with industrial countries, to diversify production and increase the national income.

Agrarian reform and industrialisation, which require a wide extension of education and training for the utilisation of material resources, require at the same time—or, indeed, beforehand—the development of our human resources. Development, which is the essential objective of our Government, must have as its main aim the total advancement of man. In this field an immense role belongs to the trade union movement. It must mobilise the masses, arouse constructive enthusiasm, improve productivity, and participate by all means in fighting the battle of development.

As for the regional sector, it is not possible for the African countries to develop in separate watertight compartments. It is a necessary part of our time to seek to harmonise the national development policies on a wider level; that is to say, on a regional level. Such harmonisation could facilitate inter-State planning, which should relate at the first stage to transport, technical education and the rudiments of heavy industry. It should in the end make our African economies within a given region more and more complementary and less and less mutually competitive.

Lastly, at the continental level, it is necessary to intensify exchanges of information, of persons and of missions. It seems equally necessary to develop commercial exchanges between the countries of the continent, by setting up a system of African tariff and commercial preference. As regards finance, the African countries should co-ordinate their efforts with the object of increasing income from the export of their basic products, acting in concert on the great international markets. Such are, in my opinion, the urgent measures which must be taken to bring Africa out of its state of underdevelopment. In this task of economic, social and cultural renewal trade unionism must play a major role. Chad does not intend to remain behind. In all fields the Government continues its policy of promotion and progress. I have already told you of the great difficulties which we have to face. The advice and assistance of the I.L.O. might be very precious to us in a number of fields.

Regarding trade unionism, Chad follows a policy of unification, with the object of avoiding a waste of skill and effort which would be prejudicial to harmonious co-operation between the trade union movement and the State. In the present period of change and construction in Chad, the trade union movement has an essential role to play provided that it unites. In the purely Chad background, since the Government party is a party of the masses, it seems inconceivable that there can be opposition between it and the trade union forces, since government policy is essentially a policy of economic advancement of the masses.

I should like now to deal with certain problems relating particularly to the I.L.O., as the Director-General already outlined the main tasks which we think the Organisation ought to perform, but these are so many that I shall merely summarise them briefly. The I.L.O., which has to face new problems every day, has managed, one must admit, to appreciate quite accurately the special problems of the African Continent. Our Organisation should therefore facilitate the co-ordination of a common policy in the economic and social fields, and to achieve this object it must multiply and facilitate contacts between African trade union leaders and work for technical and cultural co-operation between our countries and the rest of the continent. The Minister of Labour of Chad has already this morning described to you the technical aspects of our work with the I.L.O., and I shall not refer to them again.

However, I should not like to close my speech without stating our solidarity with all peoples still under foreign domination. Africa, like all the countries of the world, needs friends; it does not need masters. Man is universal and unique. To attack his dignity is the most dire of errors; worse still, it is a crime. All men worthy of the name should unite without distinction to fight the plague of racialism—that hideous thing unworthy of mankind. The nations which are guilty of it should be banned from world society. That is the affair of all. Here, even more than elsewhere, working-class solidarity should come into play.

The I.L.O. has its word to say in securing respect for the various declarations dealing with the battle against racialism and colonialism. Not words, but deeds, are required. We must act, because as long as a single man is ill-treated anywhere no man is truly free.

Mr. TETTEGAH (Representative of the All-African Trade Union Federation)—I come before this august assembly in the name of the All-African Trade Union Federation, representing 38 African trade union organisations on the continent of Africa, some of which are from countries which have freed themselves by their own efforts and are today in the vanguard of Africa’s continuing struggle to break the bonds of brutality and colonialism.

I speak, too, for those still voiceless, the working masses still enchained in imperialism’s few remaining strongholds on our beloved continent—Angola, Mozambique, South West Africa, Swaziland, French Somaliland, Bechuanaland, so-called Portuguese Guinea, Cape Verde Islands, Canary Islands, Mauritius, South Africa, Zimbabwe (which the West still calls by the dubious name of Southern Rhodesia), and all other dependencies which in this twentieth century, despite United Nations resolutions and United Nations opposition to the conscience of all mankind, are still in the thraldom of oppression.

Mr. President, before continuing, may I join the other delegates in congratulating you on your election to the high office of the presidency of this Conference. You will excuse the frankness of my language. I come from the heart and conscience of the African revolution. We are not here to plead. It is a matter of right that the All-African Trade Union Federation, which is independent of all international organisations and whose national centres are also independent, should be recognised as the only African consultative body which is qualified to speak for revolutionary African trade unionism.

Beneath the niceties of international conventions, diplomacy in the final analysis only recognises realities. Whatever may be the dubious nature of the representation being granted Africa today in this council, reality will come to prevail.

Africa’s population is overwhelmingly one which works for its living. That is why her organised trade union movement likewise voices the thoughts and feelings of some 240 millions of African working peasants. The rising industrial working class, which so often returns to the land between jobs, is developing into a new force in the African revolution. All of us are dedicated to the complete liberation of our homeland from the indignities of economic and political bondage and for the political unification of the African Continent.

As I address this august Conference today, there echo in our ears the crash and thunder of the guns and bombs of international imperialism, the screams of Vietnamese women and children intermingling with the roar of battle, victims of torture by napalm bomb, phosphorus bombs, itching gas, sneezing gas, and other allegedly “non-lethal” chemicals which nevertheless poison, kill and maim the innocent and are being used against the national liberation movements. Other shrieks arise from a holocaust on the streets of Santo Domingo in the tiny Dominican Republic which offended the Colossus by seeking its own solutions. Ominous rumblings are audible in La Paz, Bolivia, while the zooming of American planes drowns out the green silence of the Congo countryside outside Leopoldville, where nationalists, against all odds, bloodily contend for social justice and national independence.

How many more people are going to be slaughtered in this great contest between the national forces and imperialism? Is the dream of freedom before social justice is achieved? In all the areas of conflict in the world today, the overriding issue of our time is that of freedom or... slavery, on which in turn rests the choice of peace or war. We of the A.A.T.U.F. are irrevocably committed to the side of freedom and peace. Such is the atmosphere in which we meet this week that the All-African Trade Union Federation cannot close its eyes to these events and gloss over matters by making nice speeches in the Conference of the I.L.O.

According to the Director-General's Report 12 new African States have become affiliated to this worldwide body since 1960. Equally significant is the effort to link the work of the I.L.O. in Africa to that of the Organisation of African Unity. Here we have a nice Director-General with a most efficient administrative staff, but how can their labours bear fruit when we are unable to reconstruct the Governing Body to reflect present-day realities?

Since the Second Regional Conference of the I.L.O. in Addis Ababa in December 1964, the Executive Bureau of the A.A.T.U.F. has met and has again reaffirmed our unconditional support for the Organisation of African Unity as long as it pursues the objectives of the African revolution, the logical conclusion of which is the formation of a continental union government. Today, in our ranks, trade union organisations in Africa are becoming increasingly mobilised and are expressing their keen consciousness of African unity, which to us is not at variance with the lofty aims of achieving world equilibrium and social justice for mankind.

The A.A.T.U.F., which speaks either for or with the overwhelming majority of mankind, the majority which constitutes the sole guarantee of the goal inscribed on I.L.O. banners—social justice and peace—is dedicated to the struggle under the proposition that as long as a single human being is enslaved by foreign monopolies which support for their own profit alone outdated oppressors like Verwoerd, Ian Smith and others of their ilk on other continents, so long will the slogan "social justice", remain an empty one. Social justice which twists the past to fit outmoded goals is no social justice at all. In Africa we call it neo-colonialism. Therefore, one of the major burning issues which confronts us at this gathering is that of the structure of the I.L.O. It is our considered opinion that only a forthright reorganisation to reflect present-day realities can render the I.L.O. immune to the charge of being an instrument of neo-colonialism however much it may call itself an organisation working for social justice.

The PRESIDENT—Would you please make sure that you do not attack the I.L.O. in your speech.

Mr. TETTEGAH—We cannot, indeed we should not, blink the unfortunate fact that our meeting is even a bit incongruous in view of the state of health of the United Nations. And this fact, we feel, merits your momentary attention because it forms an essential background for any changes in the I.L.O. structure. The United Nations is confronted with a serious crisis, I believe nobody here—at least nobody in his right mind—could or would deny. To put it more frankly, the present crisis derives from the patent unwillingness of the United States to surrender one jot of its manipulatory ascendancy in the United Nations which has turned a potential international forum and parliament into the neo-colonialist instrument of a single imperialist power. A body intended by its Charter to enforce peace is, instead, bringing war—in the name of peace. This happens because its structure no longer reflects the composition of its membership.

Without taking up your time to back these charges with the infinite variety of factual evidence which exists and of which you cannot be unaware, I prefer to ask the charges themselves to ask one question. Can the same things be said of the I.L.O.?

Must the I.L.O. reflect so many of the obvious and unfair shortcomings of the United Nations, or can it, as reality demands, advance beyond the failings of the United Nations? Must the I.L.O. forever talk of "China" when it means only one of China's provinces, Taiwan, while the real China is cited in I.L.O. publications only because the I.L.O. is forced to turn to China's dynamic example in various fields with which this Organisation deals, like cooperatives, agrarian reform and so on? Can the I.L.O. talk of "social justice" and fail to condemn the flagrant destruction of international agreements by the United States in Viet-Nam, a course which not only flies in the face of international law but places the very lives of us all in jeopardy?

Designed as a tripartite body under United Nations auspices to bring to all countries of the world social justice in the specific fields of labour and social affairs, the I.L.O. has evolved, as has the United Nations, under the influence of world events. Furthermore, the I.L.O. has received a rapid influx of African members in keeping with the swift pace of African liberation. The I.L.O. in turn has begun necessarily to pay increasing attention to Africa.

But how does the I.L.O. come to Africa? Speaking for the peoples of Africa through the instrument of their organised workers, I must reveal my mind frankly. The I.L.O. does not yet reflect in its structure these recent changes in Africa.

What of the I.L.O.'s Governing Body? Does it not reflect preponderantly those countries with vested interests in stopping new nations short of political independence? Do they not have a material interest in preventing economic and cultural independence, because therein lies an end to their monopolistic super-profits squeezed for so long out of our colonised peoples, by those so-called "metropolitan" Powers? As long ago as 12 June 1962 Africa called for the appointment of more Africans to higher executive posts in the International Labour Office to reflect the growing membership of African States.

Do not most of the I.L.O. experts and advisers come from the same anti-liberation countries and their self-avowed appendages? At its 46th to 48th Sessions the Conference adopted a number of resolutions. One of these concerned the programme of technical assistance and other activities of the International Labour Organisation in Africa and other developing regions.
Adopting a resolution at its 48th Session in 1964, the Conference asked the Governing Body—that same Governing Body still peopled in major part by colonial or neo-colonial Powers—and here I quote: “to consider, in the context of its regional activities generally, the need to assist African and other developing countries in the field of development at all levels and in the furtherance of workers’ education and vocational and technical training schemes to qualify skilled workers of Africa and other developing regions in sufficient numbers to accelerate the implementation of development projects.”

But reports which list the destinations of I.L.O. projects have thus far been few, in our eyes, far too little done in Africa.

In the light of these facts, I ask you in the name of justice: How can the I.L.O., as it is presently constituted, undertake the task of assisting Africa in development at all levels? Does this currently unrepresentative Governing Body of the I.L.O. feel competent to speak for and about Africa, in total disregard of principles evolved by the African peoples themselves? Does it intend to take upon itself the burden of deciding what is “best” for Africa? If so, how does that differ from our treatment under colonialism?

What pretext does the I.L.O. have to relegate to “regional consultative status” the main representative of united African labour?

The resolution concerning relations between the Organisation of African Unity and the International Labour Organisation is, of course, all to the good if implemented. But, concretely, it is still in the future.

In any case, even in that future we again wonder how the I.L.O. will work with the O.A.U. Will the I.L.O. accept the O.A.U. criteria for action inside Africa or will it insist on imposing its own?

Africa’s members in I.L.O. are mostly “new.” Naturally they must acquire certain new experience as they already are doing. Nevertheless, no outside body with non-African experience, whatever its intentions, can speak for us or even to us without taking into account our old and existing experience and our opinions about our own welfare which spring out of that experience. This is a simple historical fact which cannot be ignored. By ignoring this fact the United Nations is already in the process of destroying itself. This can also bring down the I.L.O.

This is the middle of 1965, an epoch far different from those of the past. Whole new areas of the globe are burning with the fires of liberation. Innumerable peoples have set out determinedly, even grimly, to build their own lives, free from outside economic, political and military interference. Too many such peoples are still forced to do such building with guns blazing in one hand in order firmly to establish their right to independence. And those of us who have set up our own governments and have begun constructing our own economies intend without fail to say how we do whatever we do. We will brook no interference, in whatever name it comes.

But if there is to be effective collaboration between our two bodies in the name of social justice, international consultative status for the A.A.T.U.F. is essential. The Governing Body must cease to represent predominantly the past in the shape of imperialist Powers opposed to our genuine independence and in possession of means to thwart it by using such instruments, supposedly dedicated to the advance of all mankind, as the United Nations and this I.L.O. Greater democracy must be introduced into the entire conduct of I.L.O. business. It must cease once and for all to allow itself to be used as an instrument of neo-colonialism. It must stop playing with historical fiction and admit to membership the genuine representatives of the peoples in the areas where puppets now sit: the People’s Republic of China must be admitted here, regardless of what the United Nations does.

Above all, when aid is directed to our part of the world there must be, at the very least, a beginning made to utilise the growing body of competent technicians which Africa is producing.

The future is in the hands of the labouring peoples of the colonial and ex-colonial countries who form the overwhelming majority of mankind, in alliance with the socialist world. The I.L.O. claims that it wants social justice. Is it prepared to conform to its lofty goal? Is it ready to pay the price?

In our opinion, its attitude towards ourselves and towards our Continent in general will be the acid test which will illuminate its answer to that question.

Africa is no longer a “submerged continent,” content to let others speak and act for it. Africa will be heard. Africa is now being heard. And the All-African Trade Union Federation is part and parcel of the genuine African voice on the international scene. Let justice prevail. Let the future be recognised.

Interpretation from French: Mr. FERRERO (Representative of the International Confederation of Executive Staffs)—In the name of the International Confederation of Executive Staffs I should like first of all to thank the President and the other Officers of the Conference most sincerely for having authorised us to make some observations on the Director-General’s Report.

We also wish to congratulate the Director-General on his excellent Report on the formulation and implementation of the I.L.O. programme.

Before dealing with the points which are of particular interest to us, I should like to remind delegates that the International Confederation of Executive Staffs, which belongs to the Workers’ group, is deeply attached to the Declaration of Philadelphia of May 1944.

As regards the agenda of this session, my Organisation is particularly interested in the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh items relating respectively to the employment of young persons in underground work in mines of all kinds, the employment of women with family responsibilities, agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects, and the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries.

My Confederation is in entire agreement with the three main programme areas set out in Part I of the Report, namely: (1) human... resources development; (2) labour relations, trade union development and the growth of sound social institutions; and (3) conditions of life and work.

We also understand that, with a view to studying and taking action on these important matters, it was necessary to provide for some decentralisation, for the establishment of larger units (departments) in the Office and for an improvement in planning and supervision. However, we fear that some particular problems may be relatively neglected in excessively large units, particularly if several departments are concerned with them. We therefore approve of the establishment of the Programme Committee and are glad to learn that three co-ordinators will deal with problems overlapping the scope of the departments which have been created.

However, my Confederation would like consideration to be given to the setting up of a co-ordinating unit for all problems affecting executive personnel, particularly those which are the concern of several different departments. We believe that the Non-Manual Unit is just the body to act as such a co-ordinating unit for all problems of executive staffs throughout the I.L.O. If that should be impossible, then we would ask that an ad hoc co-ordinating unit be established.

The International Confederation of Executive Staffs would urge that a meeting of experts on problems affecting graduate engineers and senior graduate technicians be convened in 1966 to study the replies to document PITA/1964/1, which is a review of the specific problems affecting these and assimilated groups of personnel. Having regard to the importance of these problems, my Confederation would be glad if one of the experts could be chosen from among our specialists. We have already asked for authorisation to send at least a delegation of observers to the meeting, which we hope will be convened in the near future.

We also hope that the Working Party appointed by the Governing Body will have due regard to the wishes we have expressed. We take a great deal of interest in the advanced training of executive staffs, as may be seen from the fact that our Confederation organised at Rome, in October 1964, a European conference on the subject, which was studied very thoroughly as regards both industrial and developing countries. A report on the Rome conference will be published very soon.

Although we agree that the advanced training of managerial personnel is important, we feel that executive staffs should not be forgotten where advanced training is concerned, for the reasons mentioned in our speech at the Conference last year. It goes without saying that technological progress and economic advance depend on the development of research.

As regards social institutions, we should like to express our agreement with the five main objectives—and particularly the fourth and fifth—mentioned in Part I of the Report, where the Director-General stresses the urgent necessity of doing everything to establish harmonious and confident relations between employers and workers.

We should also like to urge strongly that freedom of association for executives and supervisors should not only be recognised in theory but put into practice everywhere.

We are very glad to note that the revision of the Conventions concerning old-age, invalidity and survivors' pensions (Nos. 35-40) is to be undertaken at the 50th Session of the Conference next year. At that time we shall call attention to the important problem of elderly non-manual workers.

In the Conference committee on the fifth item of the agenda we shall refer to the importance of part-time jobs for women with family responsibilities.

We are, of course, still interested in the International Institute for Labour Studies and the Turin International Institute for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training, with which we have very good relations, particularly through our Italian organisation.

At a time when executives and supervisors are becoming more and more important throughout the world, in both industrial and developing countries, the International Confederation of Executive Staffs, having a universal scope, wishes to obtain the consultative status which would enable it to secure its rightful position and to play fully the part to which it is entitled. Being of an essentially occupational and universal character, my Confederation would like the I.L.O., pending the grant of general consultative status, to consider providing for a special occupational consultative status. With this object we have asked the Director-General to transmit to the Governing Body our request that the establishment of such a special status be considered. We believe that a status of this kind might directly interest all international organisations with universal scope and occupational objectives. We therefore wish to call the attention of the Conference to this necessity at a time when executives and supervisors are becoming increasingly important in the world.

Lastly, I should like to inform the Conference of two preoccupations which are particularly important for executive staffs, namely the maintenance of Industrial Committees as tripartite bodies and the maintenance and strengthening of the tripartite Advisory Committee on Salaried Employees and Professional Workers.

If I may sum up, we should very much like the following ideas to be considered: first, establishment of a special occupational consultative status; second, establishment of a co-ordinating unit for all problems affecting executive staffs which overlap the scope of the I.L.O.; third, maintenance of the Industrial Committees; fourth, maintenance and strengthening of the Advisory Committee on Salaried Employees and Professional Workers; and, fifth, revocation as soon as possible of a committee of experts on problems affecting graduate engineers and senior graduate technicians.

I wish to ask the Conference, in the name of my Confederation, to take the above suggestions into account. Having done so, it only remains for me to thank you for your kind attention.

(The Conference adjourned at 4.45 p.m.)
TENTH SITTING

Wednesday, 9 June 1965, 10 a.m.

President : Mr. Raza

FOURTH REPORT
OF THE SELECTION COMMITTEE1:
SUBMISSION AND ADOPTION

The PRESIDENT—The first item on the agenda is the fourth report of the Selection Committee. I call on Mr. Menon, Chairman of the Selection Committee, to present the report.

Mr. MENON (Government delegate, India; Chairman of the Selection Committee)—I have the honour to present to the Conference the fourth report of the Selection Committee, the text of which has been distributed to delegates. This report relates to changes in the composition of certain Committees. I commend the report to the Conference for adoption.

The PRESIDENT—The report is now open for discussion. If there are no objections, I take it that the Conference adopts the report.

(The report is adopted.)

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now resume discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from French : Mr. BACATSELOS (Minister of Labour, Greece)—It is with pleasure, Mr. President, that I associate myself with preceding speakers who have warmly congratulated you on your election to the presidency of this Conference. I should also like to convey the greetings of my Government to the Conference and all the distinguished persons who are attending it.

Twice already the Conference has had the opportunity of examining carefully the programme and structure of the International Labour Organisation. Thanks to the excellent Reports of the Director-General and the discussion which took place last year, I believe that this year the Conference will more easily reach a consensus on the three main programme areas of the Organisation, namely human resources development, development of social institutions, and the improvement of the conditions of life and work, and that it will be able to put forward definite proposals in respect of them.

I consider that by adapting the methods and means of action of the I.L.O. in revising its strategy, the Conference may effectively help the countries which are meeting with difficulties in their efforts to make economic and social progress. During the United Nations Development Decade, developing countries such as Greece must advance at a greater rate than that set for the Decade since otherwise they will not be able to reduce the gap between themselves and the highly industrialised countries. The policy of economic development is, moreover, only one means of reaching the social objectives which the Conference, by an agreement of principle, has decided to include in the I.L.O. programme. The utilisation and development of human resources are extremely comprehensive objectives. They call above all for manpower planning and the expansion of vocational and technical training. I.L.O. help to the developing countries in this field will no doubt favour their economic development. It is therefore desirable for the Organisation to continue this useful work. The Greek Government has already benefited from effective I.L.O. assistance in the field of accelerated training, and it is grateful to the Governing Body and the Director-General for the experts whom they were good enough to make available to it.

This direct aid by the I.L.O. to the countries which need it, supplemented by the coming action of the Turin International Centre, creates favourable conditions for the development of human resources.

The strategy of the I.L.O. in the field of labour-management relations and the development of the trade union movement should be guided by a desire to assist the trade unions of the developing countries as long as they cannot achieve a solid organisation based on the principles of the I.L.O. Such useful aid may be given directly by the Organisation.

As regards the third sector of the I.L.O. programme, I agree with the Director-General that, in pursuing their economic and social development, countries should not lose sight of the need for lasting improvements in conditions of life and work. Plans for occupational safety and health, conditions of work, social security and housing should not be neglected.

My Government, under the leadership of Mr. Georges Papandreou, a statesman who is firmly attached to the principles of social democracy, has actively dealt with all these problems since it took office at the beginning of last year. As part of its economic and social development programme, the Government has spared no effort to raise the standard of living of the workers by a more equitable distribution of the national income.

1 See Appendix I, p. 486.

In my capacity as Minister of Labour I have tabled in Parliament a whole series of Bills, already adopted, relating to important sectors of the social policy of my Government. I shall mention here only the most important of these achievements. Thus, one of our first concerns has been to draft a Labour Code corresponding to the new conception of labour legislation. The preliminary draft for this Code has already been elaborated and distributed to all the employers' and workers' organisations for their opinion. A group of specialised legal experts has started drafting the final text to which all of the international labour Conventions ratified by Greece will be appended. I hope that the Labour Code can be tabled in Parliament before the end of this year. Considering that the experience of the I.L.O. in this field would be most useful, I have asked the Director-General to be good enough to give us the Office's advice through experts, so that the final text may be even more fully in line with international standards.

In the field of remuneration we have created conditions which have enabled wages to be improved by from 10 to 15 per cent., either by collective bargaining or by arbitration awards. Furthermore, we have given the workers, in the form of a holiday allowance, additional remuneration equal to the wages which they would have earned during their holidays. This allowance is now payable to all workers. In addition, family allowances, which had been payable in respect of only two children in each worker's family, have now been extended to all children under the age of 15 years.

As regards housing, a big programme of modern workers' housing, under which houses are provided to workers on extremely favourable terms, is being carried out.

The achievements in the field of social security have been particularly important as may be seen from the following facts. The retirement age of persons employed in arduous and unhealthy work has been reduced by five years from 65 to 60 for men, and from 60 to 55 for women. The pensions of all handicraftsmen, extended to all pensioners. Supplementary insurance has been introduced for all those who may be seen from the following facts. The retirement age of persons employed in arduous and unhealthy work has been reduced by five years from 65 to 60 for men, and from 60 to 55 for women. The pensions of all handicraftsmen, extended to all pensioners. Supplementary insurance has been introduced for all those who may be seen from the following facts. The retirement age of persons employed in arduous and unhealthy work has been reduced by five years from 65 to 60 for men, and from 60 to 55 for women. The pensions of all handicraftsmen, extended to all pensioners. Supplementary insurance has been introduced for all those who may be seen from the following facts. The retirement age of persons employed in arduous and unhealthy work has been reduced by five years from 65 to 60 for men, and from 60 to 55 for women. The pensions of all handicraftsmen, extended to all pensioners. Supplementary insurance has been introduced for all those who...
In closing I should like to congratulate the Director-General for having so brilliantly summarised the main conceptions which should govern the action of the International Labour Organisation in the coming years. In the name of the Government of Greece I wish the Conference every success and feel certain that under your guidance, Mr. President, it will successfully discharge its heavy task.

Mr. CHINAI (Employers' delegate, India)—The Director-General deserves our compliments and thanks for the labour and judgment with which he has prepared the Report to the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. In his Report the Director-General has admirably summed up the discussions on the structure and programme of the I.L.O. at the previous two sessions of the Conference in 1963 and 1964. He has identified the different proposals in their many aggregations and has broken them down into major categories which come under two broad heads, those that are controversial and those that reveal a general consensus.

This is the third year in succession that the General Conference has been called upon to concern itself with the future work of the I.L.O. It is appropriate that this important matter is being thoroughly discussed in the sixties, which have been designated as the Development Decade by the United Nations. It is also most appropriate that in this year 1965, which has been designated as International Co-operation Year, we should come to definite conclusions on the subject that has engaged our attention for two years now. The Director-General's Report has summed up three areas for the development of the I.L.O. programme. They are: (1) Human resources development; (2) Labour relations, trade union development and the growth of social institutions; (3) Conditions of life and work.

While there is no disagreement that these three categories of programmes should form the focus of I.L.O. interest, there is room for considerable difference of opinion on the specific problems in each of these categories that deserve attention, as also the priority to be accorded to them. In this matter, it is inevitable that the viewpoint of developing countries is likely to be different from that of the industrialised countries. For obvious reasons, the conditions and needs vary substantially. For example, the developing countries are primarily concerned with problems of eradicating acute underemployment, with rising population, lack of technical skills, low wage and productivity levels and inadequate organisation of workers and employers. On the other hand, industrially advanced countries are faced with the opposite problems, such as shortage of labour, wage-price inflation, trade union tyranny, restrictive trade union practices, automation, although from time to time they are also faced with acute pockets of unemployment in certain areas.

It is, of course, not true to say that the problems of the underdeveloped world and the advanced countries are mutually exclusive, because every country has to face these problems, though not on the same scale and in the same measure. Despite the fact that the I.L.O. is a universal organisation, and should serve the world as a whole, emphasis should be placed by the I.L.O. in its activity on such programmes as will favourably influence the destinies of the developing countries. In a spirit of big-heartedness, the advanced countries will have to become reconciled to the need of the less privileged countries to narrow the gap of disparity in economic development.

Of all the international bodies the I.L.O. is perhaps one of the oldest and it is also unique by virtue of its tripartite character. It was in 1919 that the I.L.O. was established. The Contracting Parties, moved by sentiments of justice and humanity adopted a Preamble, which sets out as its objective universal and lasting peace based on social justice. Indeed, time has, I think, reinforced rather than diminished, the truth of the central principles the Preamble has laid down. This reinforcement has assumed a new dimension with the gaining of political independence by a large number of countries. It is axiomatic today that, as between individuals, serious economic inequalities should be reduced; and there is hardly any country which has not taken measures in some fashion or other to protect weaker sections in the community. We have reached a stage when this may now need to be extended to apply to the economic relationships between countries. And the events of the last decade provide explicit confirmation of this. Are not the disparities between nations, large as they already are, growing in a period, practically speaking, of continuous economic expansion in advanced countries with only some temporary and minor slowing of their annual economic growth? Let us cast a glance at the membership list of the I.L.O. In 1919 the membership was 44. During the last year the strength was over 110. How many new countries are poor and underdeveloped?

It is only right that the I.L.O., which has continually sought to offset the disequilibrium in the working conditions of labour in different countries, should devote thought and energy to offsetting the imbalances among nations as a whole. No doubt, there are other international bodies the I.L.O. is specifically interested in monetary stability, trade balances and the economic problems of developing countries. Even so, the I.L.O., which is primarily concerned with social justice, should take a direct interest in economic growth. I believe that the I.L.O. should energetically offer its services to this new objective in the conviction that the more difficult the task and the higher the ideal, the more lofty will be the performance. The welfare of labour and economic growth are closely interlinked. The problem of improving living conditions can only be solved by meeting the larger problems of economic development. More preoccupation with standard-setting will take no one anywhere. Each nation must be strong enough economically to provide the wherewithal to improve working conditions. It is in the course of development, and only through development, that injustices are eliminated.

So, in my view, the I.L.O. should give a rest to its old work of standard-setting on a universal basis and enter the field of economic development. There are many problems currently facing developing countries—lack of capital, paucity of foreign exchange, inflationary pressures, runaway birth rate, acute shortage of trained personnel at all levels, low agricultural yields and the like. All of them, individually and collectively, bedevil the present efforts and future hopes of the developing countries. I submit that the I.L.O. can well choose its own special area, that is the development of the human personality through the acquiring of wider and deeper knowledge of different kinds of skills. The I.L.O. will better serve its own objectives by improving the quality of the labour force and also by improving the tools available to it. I am aware that the I.L.O.'s expenditure on technical assistance programmes has been growing. With a modest budget of $353,100 in 1966, it increased to $1,454,000 in 1965. The budget for 1966, however, is only $1,925,000 towards technical assistance. The increase is far too meagre. On the other hand, the general budget of the I.L.O. is increasing by leaps and bounds. As against $16 million in 1964, the outlay in 1966 is proposed at more than $20 million.

It would be far better from the point of view of developing countries if the general budget were severely pruned so that greater sums may be earmarked for technical assistance. I, for one, would even suggest that the General Conference need not meet every year, but once in two or three years. Such biennial or triennial sessions should suffice once standard-setting is evolved on a regional basis.

The instruments should be gone into in the light of the problems existing in each region, and should permit each country to make marginal changes with a view to giving effect to the instruments. The universal aim which has hitherto been attached to standard-setting should be shifted to the sphere of economic development on a balanced basis.

When the I.L.O. was set up, it represented a new perception in the thinking of mankind. The acceptance of a principle to improve the quality of life of humanity in general cannot but be viewed as an important landmark in the long history of human thought. However, it would be wrong to assume that any organisation will continue to function effectively, merely, as it were, on the basis of its preamble or inaugural clause. Self-analysis and self-criticism are the real instruments. The universal aim which has been attached to standard-setting will continue to function effectively, merely, as it were, on the basis of its preamble or inaugural clause. Self-analysis and self-criticism are the real instruments against the dangers of remaining static. Every individual and every organisation has continually to face new challenges and evolve appropriate measures based on experience. The challenge today is the economic growth of nations which for historical reasons have remained underdeveloped. The I.L.O., more than any other international organisation, can help the barrier of poverty to be crossed in a spirit of goodwill, with a sense of determination and on a co-operative basis.

One last word, addressed to the members of the Secretariat of the I.L.O. I would ask that each one of them approach his tasks as a person, working and doing things for people the world over, and not as mere functionaries of an impersonal institution, where delegates and advisors gather in hundreds to argue in a distracted or portentous manner.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. THAYER (Government delegate, Chile)—First of all, I should like to read to you a letter of greetings to this session of the Conference which I have the honour to transmit to you from His Excellency the President of the Republic of Chile, Mr. Eduardo Frei.

"Mr. Director-General, I should like to convey my cordial greetings through you to the Government, Employers' and Workers' delegates of the whole world attending this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.

"In its efforts to improve the living conditions of the workers of Chile my Government is determined to base itself on the standards adopted by the International Labour Conference and contained in the International Labour Code. My Government is also determined to fulfil completely and faithfully all the obligations arising out of various international labour Conventions which Chile has ratified. In fact, proposed legislation has already been sent to the National Congress which will make possible the unrestricted application of the Right of Association (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 11), and the ratification of Conventions Nos. 87 and 98 on freedom of association and collective bargaining. Other similar measures will follow to bring the labour legislation of Chile, in its daily application, into conformity with the standards adopted by the International Labour Conference.

“Recent months have shown that the population of Chile is firmly determined to rouse the country from its economic and social stagnation. It is prepared to make all the efforts and sacrifices necessary but it wishes to make them democratically. This resolution in freedom includes action against inflation, true agrarian reform, tax reform and many other fundamental changes. It also involves the absolute necessity to make up the arrears which we have incurred in such fields as education and housing, having in view the ever closer economic and social integration of the Latin American Continent.

“In this enormous and complicated task my Government knows that it can count on the support of the United Nations and the specialised agencies. In the field of labour the standards adopted by the International Labour Organisation and its programmes of technical co-operation constitute a positive factor of which we firmly intend to take full advantage.

“May I express my most sincere wishes for the success of the work of the International Labour Conference.

(Signed) EDUARDO FREI,
President of the Republic of Chile.”

First of all, I should like to express, in the name of Chile, the satisfaction of my delegation, Sir, at your election to the presidency of this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. I am sure that your outstanding personal qualities, your experience and your wisdom led the delegates to elect you to this honourable and highly deserved office, so as to ensure beforehand the success of the work of the Conference.

The President of Chile, whose message to this Conference you have just heard, arranged for me, as Minister of Labour and Social Welfare, to attend this session to bear witness, from the very beginning of its term of office, to the deep interest of my Government in the activities of this Organisation and because it is convinced that many of the achievements of its programme are based on the principles of the I.L.O.

I am attending this Conference with the feelings inevitable in the representative of a Government which has just come into power and which has drawn up a programme of complete transformation aimed at thoroughly changing the social structure of the country.

The people of Chile, from the miner in the North to the cattle-herd in the southern plains, have brought us, by a majority of votes never seen in the unsullied history of our electoral system, from opposition to power, because they have chosen our programme of revolution in freedom.

We have come to power to carry out the programme which we offered to the people. We have made a commitment which is a point of honour, and we are determined to carry it out at any price in order to provide each Chilean with the education and training which he expects from us and which is called for in the world of today.

We have already started our task, from the very first day, and with enthusiasm, knowing that we can count on the support of a nation which has placed in us its confidence and its faith.

Therefore it is with deep feeling that I am participating in the work of this Conference. Each item to be dealt with by the Conference concerns very important matters affecting the social progress of the people of Chile, and the action envisaged in the Director-General’s Report coincides with the proposals of the Government of Chile in the social field.

I wish to refer to the main points of the Director-General’s Report in relation to the various tasks which we are going to undertake.

The Director-General, this time, has put his finger unerringly on the all-important problem of human resources in economic development. Already, in his previous Report, he had indicated the three main objectives to be pursued as being, first, better utilisation of the labour force by creating higher levels of productive employment; second, improving the quality of the labour force by vocational education and training; and, third, enlisting popular support for the tasks of national development and the participation of broad social groups in them.

It would be difficult to put into more concise and meaningful language the great task which has to be undertaken in the labour field by the developing countries and which at present is engaging the main efforts of the country which I have the honour to represent. It is, of course, an unquestionable fact that there has been an enormous delay in social planning as compared with planning for economic development in most of the Latin American countries. For example in Chile, after a great deal of work a ten-year economic development plan for the period 1961 to 1970 was worked out and put into operation. Unfortunately, that plan, while it represents an important step forward, is hampered by the fact that the studies in the field of human resources required for its fulfilment have fallen behind.

The Development and Production Corporation, along with INSORA and other institutions, have published surveys relating to projected demographic growth; the number of students registered at universities, and probable future demand for university graduates; civil servants and public employees; projections relating to matriculation candidates and education on different levels; classification of occupations and of the public sector as a common basis for studies relating to the demand for manpower in various economic sectors; and, recently, a pamphlet on the training of manpower in Chile. However, all this only illustrated my worry that I had expressed about our having fallen behind in the study and development of human resources in relation to plans for economic development.

This is not the first time that the human element has yielded pride of place to the economic element. No institution can bear witness more dramatically or with more experience than the I.L.O. to the history of the efforts of so many countries to make economic progress by giving due consideration to human factors and to human beings involved in the task of progress.

The third point stressed by the Director-General—the support and participation of the people in development activities—sums up very wisely the importance of restoring to the worker his dignity and his role of main protagonist in economic and social development.

In this connection, I feel bound to state that the concern in this respect expressed by the Director-General in his Report constitutes the very core, the most substantial part, the irreplaceable foundation, of the whole social programme of the Government of Mr. Frei, of whom I am the unworthy spokesman at this assembly.

In order to fulfil the promises made publicly and repeatedly during the presidential campaign, my Government sent to the National Congress on 19 February of this year a Bill aimed at the revision of the Labour Code. It provides for an entirely new Part III dealing with trade union organisations and the text was carefully revised by an expert kindly sent to us by the I.L.O., Mr. Geraldo von Potobsky. This new text gives general recognition, without discrimination, to the right to organise, covering urban and rural workers in both the private and public sectors. The Bill, which we are endeavouring soon to have approved by Parliament, involves not only strict and complete application of the Freedom of Association (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 11), which has been ratified by Chile, but also would make possible the ratification of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

The Labour and Social Legislation Committee of the Chamber of Deputies is currently studying this Bill, and it will be followed by others on collective bargaining and collective agreements which will make it possible for us to ratify the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), which is complementary to the above-mentioned Convention No. 87. Moreover, as a result of the proposed legislation we shall be able to stop arbitrary dismissals and to adjust our practices to Recommendation No. 119 adopted at the 47th Session of this Conference concerning termination of employment at the initiative of the employer. I think that I should stress at this point that, simultaneously with the adoption of Act 16250 of 21 April 1965, we made temporary provision for suspending the rules on dismissal while working out a law based on the Recommendation to which I have just referred. Moreover, with my agreement, the Chamber of Deputies recently extended the above-mentioned stability of Employment Act pending the entry into force of the new legislation.

I should not like to conclude without stating before this assembly that the committees which are studying the complete reform of our Labour Code, the reform of our undertakings and the reform of our social security system (in which latter task they are being assisted by Mr. Alfredo Mallet, through the generosity of the I.L.O.) are basing themselves on the view which has been expressed publicly so many times by President Frei and confirmed in his letter which I read to you that our social policy should be guided by the principles of the International Labour Code and should be carried out with the support and assistance of the International Labour Organisation. This is no more than a natural and logical conclusion of a premise which is the essential basis of a true democracy, namely that the economy and progress exist and are justified only so long as they serve man and human dignity. Therefore, there can be no economic development without the advancement of man, nor can there be any representative democracy without the participation of the people. Therefore also, in the name of the Government of my country, I am happy to state before you that the lofty principles enunciated by the Director-General are such as to ensure the co-operation of Chile in the future action of the International Labour Organisation.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. MISHEV (Chairman, Labour and Work Remuneration Committee, Council of Ministers, Bulgaria)—The Bulgarian Government delegation welcomes the efforts of the General Conference which, during the past three sessions, has been exploring and working out measures with a view to bringing the programmes, structures and methods of work of the I.L.O. into accord with the social changes which occurred in the world during the past decades.

The Director-General's Report gives us a chance to make proposals and to engage in useful debate. In the course of the discussion, most countries which are interested in turning the I.L.O. into an instrument for the promotion of peaceful co-operation and the improvement of working and living conditions for the workers have made a number of useful proposals designed to help draft these new programmes and to improve the structure of the Organisation.

Whilst greatly appreciating the quality of the work of these past sessions, the Government delegation of Bulgaria has also made certain comments and proposals during the past two sessions, and following that we commented in writing in a memorandum to the Governing Body. As far as we know, the same has been done by most member States of the Organisation.

During the final debate at the 48th Session, the General Conference adopted a resolution in which the Director-General was requested to prepare a complete and objective analysis of the proposals that had been received and to submit a report on the programme and structure of the Organisation. The resolution stressed the great importance of this most important task. The Director-General’s Report describes three basic programme areas—development of human resources; labour relations and social institutions; and living and working conditions. We do not propose to dwell on these in detail, even though we have a number of comments to make on the various points raised by the Director-General.

From the Director-General’s Report and also from the proposals of the Working Party which has been studying this question, we can judge the unsatisfactory nature of the implementation of the Conference’s decisions. Without wishing to underrate the subjects relating to labour and social questions, which are, of course, entitled to a central place in all future programmes of the I.L.O., we think it would be pointless to revert to matters on which the Conference has already reached complete unanimity.

The main concern expressed by almost all Government delegates who spoke in the debate was the need to strengthen the national income and its distribution. The growth of national income depends basically on two factors: on the one hand, a steady expansion in manpower resources in material production and national income depends basically on two factors. Without wishing to underrate the subjects relating to labour and social questions, which are, of course, entitled to a central place in all future programmes of the I.L.O., we think it would be pointless to revert to matters on which the Conference has already reached complete unanimity.

The main concern expressed by almost all Government delegates who spoke in the debate was the need to strengthen the national income and its distribution. The growth of national income depends basically on two factors: on the one hand, a steady expansion in manpower resources in material production and their qualifications, and, on the other hand, increased productivity. Those are the essential factors in the growth of national income and, provided that there is also fair distribution of wealth, they determine the standard of living of the workers. As I have already said, we do not in any way underrate the economic and social problems which should perhaps be covered in two central sections of the programme—I am speaking of that part of the I.L.O. programme which will deal with scientific and research work on these problems.

However, I should like to dwell briefly on a number of other programme areas which were mentioned in the debate but which are not reflected in the Director-General’s Report. At a time when the aims and nature of the I.L.O.’s future policy and purpose are being formulated it would be wrong to ignore such vital problems in which millions of workers throughout the world are involved. This matter has been more fully expounded in our memorandum to the Governing Body. What are the problems which, in our opinion, are so important and which were omitted in the Director-General’s Report but which should, nevertheless, be reflected in the I.L.O.’s programme? Our Government delegation considers that the I.L.O. should focus its attention on three fields: first of all, maintaining and strengthening peace as the basic condition for improving the living and working conditions of the workers. Questions relating to the preservation of peace and disarmament are matters of international politics, some speakers at this Conference have said. However, they seem to forget that these problems affect the workers of the world economically and socially also. Of course, the I.L.O. is a specialised body, but within its terms of reference we find both social and economic problems and yet one cannot single out these problems and separate them off as isolated political questions. How can one discuss the problem of improving the standard of living of the workers when a vast part of the national income and the product of human labour is being expended on armaments and supporting vast armies? One hundred and twenty thousand million dollars a year are spent on such purposes and 20 million workers are lost to military service. How can one deal with problems of public health and other social problems if peaceful cities and villages continue to be bombed and innocent women, children and old people are killed? How can the I.L.O. remain a passive bystander with regard to the key problems of war and peace in our time?

The second field which should be included in the programme of activities of the I.L.O. is the final liquidation of colonialism and its aftermath, the elimination of discrimination against workers and economic and social change in the developing countries.

A third field is that connected with the development and utilisation of human resources, labour relations, living and working conditions and the question of trade union development. The matters which the Director-General reflects in his Report. Here we should find all the legislative, operative, standard-setting and scientific and research work of the I.L.O.

Another group of questions which was not duly reflected in the Director-General’s Report was discussed at length at the last General Conference, namely the question of democratisation of the structure and methods of work of the I.L.O. We have already submitted written proposals to the Governing Body on these subjects and therefore I will merely list them here. First of all, we have suggested that the General Conference should be made the supreme body of the I.L.O. It is composed of all member States of the I.L.O. represented and it should be the sole organ empowered to decide the policies, programmes and activities of the Organisa­tion, to take decisions that are equally binding on all bodies of the I.L.O. and to appoint the Director-General. We have further suggested a clearer definition of the rights and functions of the Governing Body as the most important executive body although having no right to assume the functions of the General Conference. We have suggested that all member States be given equal opportunity to partici­pate in the work of the leading bodies of the I.L.O. In this connection we fully share the views expressed in the joint Polish-Ukrainian resolution. We have proposed that all countries be given fair representation in all the organs of the I.L.O.; the Workers’ and Employers’ representatives of all countries should be given equal opportunities to participate in all the organs of the I.L.O. We have proposed that the principle of equality between the various countries should be respected whatever their size, political system or level of economic development. This is an immutable rule of international law to which the I.L.O. is subject, and all countries should therefore be given equal opportunity to participate in its activities.

A number of delegates have expressed their concern from this rostrum about the situation in Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic. On behalf of the Polish delegation I wish to express our feelings of profound indignation at the military aggression in Viet­Nam and the Dominican Republic. We call upon all participants in this General Conference to condemn this military intervention, which represents a serious threat to world peace.

Interpretation from Arabic: Mr. LENHII (Minister of Labour and Social Affairs, Libya) — Mr. President, allow me first of all to associate myself with other speakers in offering to you sincere congratulations on your election to preside over this distinguished assembly. May I also take this opportunity of extending warm and fraternal greetings to the new member States of Zambia, Malawi, Malta and Yemen represented at this Conference.

It gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity of participating in this session, acting on behalf of the Kingdom of Libya which believes strongly in the noble message of the International Labour Organisation. I have had this honour a number of times at previous sessions and have found these meetings inspiring and have seen for myself their valuable and positive results, which gives me great confidence in the outcome of the present session. I sincerely hope that our deliberations at this session will be as successful as in the past and that God will help us to reach unanimous and wise conclusions in all matters which we have been called upon to consider.

The Director-General’s Report this year gives us, as usual, full details of the duties and responsibilities of our Organisation based on the achievements of the past. It shows clearly how the responsibilities of this Organisation have constantly increased following the latest changes in its Constitution and Governing Body. We share the Director-General’s opinion on many points raised in his comprehensive Report and suggest that such points should be carefully considered. We also share his view that the development of human resources through education and training and the development of administrative organs in the field of labour relations are of the utmost importance and must be given full consideration and support.

In this field Libya has already taken the necessary steps to establish new rules for such organs to enable them to perform their duties in an efficient manner. Similarly, conciliation committees have been formed within the different organisations, companies and factories for the settlement of labour disputes arising therein. These committees have proved successful in settling the greater part of the labour disputes which arise, and thus the Government’s burden in this field has been lightened. We also consider labour statistics to be of vital importance in the field of economic development and believe that no development plan designed to increase national income will be successful unless based on sound statistics. That is why our Government is now conducting a statistical survey in both the industrial and the agricultural field as well as in the labour sector with a view to determining the availability of resources as compared with our future needs. Through this survey we shall obtain valuable data and information regarding the development plan and the future economy of our country.

In connection with the Director-General’s reference to the structure of this Organisation and the rules and regulations of the General Conference, the Governing Body and the Industrial Committees, we wish to reiterate that a special conference should be held to consider these matters. We share the opinion of the Director-General that the rules and regulations to be approved during our deliberations should be supple, flexible and adjustable to the needs of a rapidly changing world.

Our Organisation bears a great responsibility towards the peoples of the world and it is able to carry out its noble role most successfully. The valuable technical assistance this Organisation offers to the developing countries is an example of its achievements in the field of international co-operation for the progress and welfare of humanity. Among its many other successes is the common attitude of reprobation of the racial discrimination policy practised by the Government of South Africa which resulted in the expulsion of this Government from this Organisation and also in the amendment of the Constitution of the I.L.O. so as to give power to the General Conference to expel or suspend from membership any member State practising racial discrimination. There is no doubt that the Constitution of this Organisation in its new amended form will increase the efficiency and strength of the I.L.O. in facing its responsibilities and taking the necessary action against any member State deviating from the principles and objectives of the Organisation. My country welcomes and appreciates these amendments and declares its firm adherence to the principles approved by the International Labour Organisation. At the same time, it condemns the various torments to which the legitimate peoples of Mozambique, South Arabia, Palestine, Southern Rhodesia and Angola are being subjected. We therefore ask this Conference to use all its powers to take severe action against any member State that practises such a policy of discrimination. We also urge those member States which have not yet ratified the latest amendments to the Constitution of this Organisation to do so as soon as possible.

Following the changes effected in the general structure of the I.L.O., the amendments to its Constitution and the changes in the Governing Body, we feel that it is now time for the Organisation to adopt a new plan of action compatible with such changes. There is also another subject which, in our opinion, needs discussion by the Conference—namely the unnecessary privilege granted to certain member States as stipulated in article 7 of the Constitution whereby ten of the Government members shall be appointed from member States of chief industrial importance. In our opinion such a provision is not compatible with the principle of equity which is the basis of international relations, and we suggest that it be amended.

The economic prosperity which Libya has now attained has paved the way for the achievement of the noblest of the people, once only a daydream far from hope of realisation. Oil has played the most important role in the changing of the Libyan economy and constitutes the main source of our national income.
We are endeavouring to utilise this income in the development of the country by promoting all public services and utilities for the achievement of a fair distribution of wealth among the people of the country.

The Libyan Government has already approved the first Five-Year Development Plan, which covers many economic and social projects, for which some £L.169 million have been provided, and a high council for national planning has been set up to supervise the execution of the plan.

A sum of more than £L.10 million, as compared with less than half a million in 1953, has been allotted in this year's budget for medical treatment, which is free to all the people. As for education, some £L.29 million have been allocated in the same budget compared with £L.600,000 in 1953, and the number of students in Libya rose from 7,000 before independence to about a quarter of a million nowadays. Education is free at all stages from primary schools to universities.

We have already embarked on the largest housing programme ever known in Libya. Our scope is to enable everybody with limited income to have a suitable house within the shortest possible period at a nominal price. The construction of houses under this scheme is at the rate of 10,000 houses a year.

On the other hand, we are not depending upon oil alone. We have taken all necessary steps for the promotion of agriculture, which is one of the main sources of our national income, and have allotted the necessary funds within the framework of the Five-Year Plan for its development. We have also established the Agricultural Settlement Institution, which is assisting farmers technically and financially and providing satisfactory agricultural lands with a view to reducing migration of the people from rural areas to petroleum regions where employment is abundant and the wage is higher. Another purpose of this Institution is to help agricultural workers to become the real owners of the land they till.

Taking into consideration the importance of agriculture in our national economy, we hope that the Conference will be able to draw up practices, proposals and recommendations relevant to the improvement of the situation of agricultural labour. Our Government is at present carrying out preliminary studies aimed at organising the conditions and terms of employment in agriculture and at bringing them closer to those prevailing in industry.

My Government's main object is to establish full social justice by improving conditions of work and co-ordinating the Libyan labour legislation in such a way as to guarantee the protection of legal rights of the working class and to prevent any form of exploitation to which the workers might be subjected in their lifetime, also to establish better conditions of employment in a proper atmosphere of equality and justice. However, our main concern, whilst containing all forms and elements of underdevelopment, is the great shortage of skilled manpower, a fact which has obliged us to make use of a large number of expatriate skilled workers and technicians for technical jobs. We do hope, however, that our efforts in the field of vocational training will enable us, in the near future, to have well-trained national workers to meet the country's requirements.

A special institution for vocational training will start operating around the beginning of 1966 in co-operation with the United Nations Special Fund and with the assistance of the International Labour Organisation. In addition to this we have the existing training programme in the industrial sector.

My Government believes that no community can really prosper and achieve good progress without the participation of all its members. Thus we encourage women's organisations and assist them morally and financially to enable them to carry out their activities in the most favourable circumstances. Libyan women play an important part in the direction of social policy and have entered the fields of education, nursing and public services. Under our national Social Insurance Law the Government gives medical and maternity care to working women. Our Labour Law has laid down the principle of equality in wages between men and women in case of equality of jobs.

Finally, I sincerely hope that the work of this Conference will be most successful and that all of us will be able to find satisfactory solutions for the many difficulties confronting us in our efforts for the prosperity and progress of humanity.
organisation on a regional basis. This organisation corresponds to the need for decentralisation, but also to a desire for strengthening the more and more numerous practical activities of the Organisation.

As for the I.L.O. programmes, the Director-General's Report seems to stress three essential priorities to which I.L.O. activities will mainly relate in future years, namely human resources development, labour relations and the development of sound social institutions, and conditions of life and work.

My delegation has already spoken on these priorities at the last two sessions. I can only reaffirm our point of view by stressing particularly the need for developing human resources.

We are aware of the importance of the rational and judicious use of human resources in economic development.

In Tunisia human advancement in economic development is one of our essential objectives. In the chapters which make up the plan document an important place is given to the development of human resources and the training of skilled labour. Still more important in the choice of economic objectives is the need for developing employment and improving its quality. We cannot therefore be insensible to the efforts of the I.L.O. in this field, and particularly to the study and research which it proposes to undertake in order to utilise the best experience in the field of human resources utilisation.

We agree with the Report that particular interest should attach to the development of employment in rural areas. It is true that the problems of unemployment and underemployment in the developing countries stem from inefficient farming.

Nevertheless, while believing in the possibility of improving the level of employment in the primary sector, we do not think that agriculture alone can resolve the problem of underemployment and unemployment.

The agrarian reform of which the consequences will be studied at the present session and the use of more rational and productive methods in agriculture should aim above all at guaranteeing better incomes for peasants and farmers, insomuch as it is inexpedient without a big reduction in the mass of agricultural labour. In other words, it is above all the quality of employment which must be improved in rural areas, and in our opinion the excess manpower can only be reabsorbed by the fundamental reconversion of agriculture hand in hand with progressive industrialisation. In any case, that is what we decided in Tunisia, and we expect that in the next six years the percentage of the active population engaged in agriculture will drop from 58 to 37 per cent., while the average number of days worked by an agricultural worker in the year will increase from 150 to 250. It is therefore problems of adjustment of agricultural labour to an industrial and urban background that we would particularly like to bring to the notice of the I.L.O.

Similarly, the industrialisation of the developing countries, the modernisation of agriculture and the raising of the level of employment in general raise the problem of training. In this regard we cannot but welcome the interest which the I.L.O. is constantly taking in this problem. This interest is reflected particularly in the increasing volume of its technical assistance and practical work. Nevertheless, study and research in this field should be intensified so that the developing countries can meet their need for skilled labour. Stress should be placed on the need for giving the best possible training as quickly and as cheaply as possible. These are, we believe, the proper objectives for the training programmes of countries like ours which have a big need for skilled labour, and it is towards these objectives that we would like to see the action of the I.L.O. directed.

While stressing the need to give a particularly important place to the utilisation of human resources in the programmes of the I.L.O., I should not like to minimise the importance of the other two major programme areas of the Organisation. I think that the development of healthy labour-management relations in undertakings will greatly facilitate lasting social peace and increase productivity. The existence of occupational organisations which are aware of their role in the economic and social advancement of the population greatly facilitates the establishment of a climate of understanding and co-operation without which any effort must fail. It is therefore right that the I.L.O.—the only institution which has a tripartite composition—should have a particular interest in this problem. As for the development of social institutions, we believe with the Director-General that this can only be done to the extent that the need for such institutions is felt and understood by all the parties concerned.

Lastly, since the objective of economic and social development is to improve the moral and material conditions of the population, my delegation can only support any step or I.L.O. programme which may have a positive influence in this field. Such are the few observations which I thought I should make regarding the I.L.O. programmes.

As regards structure, and particularly as regards the views expressed by the Director-General regarding the decentralisation of the I.L.O. and the increase in the role of the regional advisory committees and the regional conferences, my delegation cannot fail to express its satisfaction. However, there is one point which has not been mentioned in the last Report—namely the desirability of equilirium within the various organs of the I.L.O. and particularly between the Governing Body and the Conference. If we take it that the Governing Body is an emanation of the Conference. Evidently, therefore, it must be able to interpret the general policy of the Organisation worked out in the Conference, put it into operation and supervise its application through the Office. However, some of the rules regarding the composition of the Governing Body do not appear to correspond to our conception of the role of each of the organs of the I.L.O.

Indeed, as we know, the members of the Governing Body are not all elected by the Conference. Some States are permanent members of the Governing Body for reasons which may have been valid 20 years ago, but which nowadays seem rather out of date. Without wishing to minimise the important role of the industrialised countries in operating I.L.O. programmes and applying international labour standards, we think that the time has come to reconsider the representation of the States on the Governing Body, with a view to bringing it more into line with present realities and with the legitimate aspirations of peoples and States towards equality and democracy. Although this suggestion may appear audacious, I am sure that it will benefit our institution, which has always proved itself to be in advance of world events; indeed, that is the secret of its success.

My Government has followed with much interest the efforts made by the Organisation over the last three years to adjust its structures and programmes to the requirements of our time and to the needs of the States Members. We are greatly gratified that our initiative in this field has been followed by other international agencies. Therefore, we can only support any effort which tends to strengthen the work of the I.L.O. and other agencies at the international level, for we are sure that by forging within these agencies friendship and co-operation between States and peoples, we will strengthen the international solidarity in which we believe. If we stress this it is because my Government has always believed in the principles of the universality of international agencies and co-operation between peoples and States. It has never hesitated, at the risk of disturbing valued friendships, to take up attitudes in relation to international problems which are dictated by reason. It has an aversion to demagogy and has gained experience in the bitter struggle of its people to recover independence, to build a sound State and to move forward on the path of progress and prosperity. If sometimes, unfortunately, we momentarily disturb some people, at least these attitudes have the merit of safeguarding the future, preserving human friendship and preserving the friendship of peoples.

In closing, may I warmly welcome the new Members of the Organisation—Yemen, Zambia, Malawi and Malta.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. PITHART (Government delegate, Czechoslovakia)—May I first of all congratulate you, Mr. President, on the occasion of your election to your responsible post? I hope that under your leadership the Conference will proceed in a spirit of mutual understanding and co-operation, and that it will lead to good results.

We have come to this Conference in order to apply our efforts towards adapting the Organisation and its programmes, structures and methods of work to those changes which have occurred in the world and, also, to those new tasks the complexity of which exceeds that of all preceding activities of the Organisation. During the past two sessions of the Conference, in the course of a very useful debate which was then continued in the form of written monoranda, a number of proposals were made and positions were ascertained, so that now our Organisation can forthwith start to adopt the first necessary measures.

However, compared to the past two sessions, we meet today in an atmosphere of heightened international tension as a result of the military aggression against the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, the intervention in the domestic affairs of South Viet-Nam, and the totally unjustified military intervention in the Dominican Republic. This evidence of a recrudescence of imperialist policy based on a position of strength, which realities from an attempt to paralyse the normal activities of the United Nations General Assembly, represents a genuine threat to world peace and consequently to the successful future work of our Organisation. Such a development is also dangerous to the future of certain positive developments which have occurred on the international scene during the past few years as a result mainly of the constructive peaceful efforts by the socialist and developing countries and which have also had a positive effect on our Organisation.

On the other hand, the continuation of aggression, intervention and the preparation of war could disrupt the work of this Organisation too, since the preservation of peace is a basic premise for social progress throughout the world. Peace and social progress are inseparable, and that is why the International Labour Organisation, which is a member of the United Nations family, and has as one of its basic aims, as stated in the Preamble to the Constitution, the establishment of lasting peace throughout the world, cannot remain inactive in the face of such a situation. Indeed it must make every effort to serve the cause of peace. Reality convinces us that an effort to do away with the danger of a new thermonuclear war and to preserve and strengthen peace must be one of the permanent, crucial tasks of the International Labour Organisation. It is essential for the Organisation to proclaim this far and wide and to contribute through all its activities to those measures that may lead to a slackening of international tension, liquidate the causes of war and bring about a policy of peaceful coexistence between all States whatever their constitutional or other differences. The International Labour Organisation must contribute to the noble cause of securing a general and lasting peace throughout the world, especially within its own orbit of activities and structures.

Among the more important questions that face us is the urgent liquidation of colonialism and the struggle against neo-colonialism, whatever its forms or manifestations, liquidation of the adverse consequences of colonialism in the social field, especially as regards the working and living conditions of the workers in those countries that have freed themselves from the colonial yoke, as well as active support of rapid economic and social progress in those countries. As far as the I.L.O.'s participation in studying the question of the social and economic consequences of disarmament is concerned, this Organisation must take steps to speed up practical and useful research. In addition the I.L.O. must contribute to securing the other basic rights of man that have been solemnly proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and fight against every type of discrimination on grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other con-victims, national or social origin, in whatever sector of life or work these symptoms of discrimination may appear. The Organisation should also make a more effective contribution so that human rights be secured in the field of labour, working conditions, wages, leisure, social security, etc. The same should apply to the recognition and extension of the rights of trade unions and the struggle against violation of trade union rights.

In this connection I would like to stress the importance of the resolution presented by the Yugoslav Workers’ delegate which demands freedom of association in Spain. This demand is quite legitimate and the Czechoslovak delegation will support the Yugoslav resolution.

Equally important is the support of such forms of collective economic organisation which would make it possible to ensure a rapid, planned rise in the economic level of countries and a just distribution of the fruits of economic development; other measures to be advocated include a fair international distribution of labour and promotion of international trade and economic ties between all countries generally. In the belief of the Czechoslovak Government, as stated in our remarks on the document concerning the programme and structure of the Organisation, the basis for the functioning of the Organisation should be reflected in a basic programme document. This programme would provide a useful stimulus for expanding the new, creative activities of the I.L.O. in accordance with the requirements of our time. The Czechoslovak delegation has moved a draft of such a document which, together with a number of similar proposals, could serve as a basis for the discussion of a new programme document. I suggest that we all realise the need to revise the programme of our Organisation, as was stressed in the resolution on the subject adopted by the Conference at its last session. It is regrettable that so few concrete results have been achieved to date. I deem it highly desirable that we speed up the discussion of these questions without in any way neglecting the need for thoroughness in examining the various proposals and comments.

But of course, what concerns us is not only the programme. It should be clearly recognised that in order to heighten the effectiveness of this Organisation one should also carry out changes in its structure and working methods, for it is upon that that the successful implementation of the programme depends. So that the Organisation may act correctly and work successfully it is necessary to secure full equality of rights for all Members of the Organisation also as regards their representation in the various bodies—the Governing Body and its Committees, the bureaux of these bodies, the Industrial Committees, the expert groups, the various organs of the Conference, and the International Labour Office. There should also be strict respect for the democratic principles regulating the relationships between the various bodies of the Organisation, especially the Conference and the Governing Body. Here much remains to be put right, as many delegates have pointed out during past sessions of the Conference. We should particularly condemn the discrimination to which the socialist group of countries is subjected inside the Organisation. This discrimination has gone on for many years on the part of certain groups in the West, especially in the Employers’ and Workers’ groups, where the Employers and the representatives of the trade unions of the socialist countries, which represent more than one-third of the population of these countries and also a similar share of world industrial output, are being denied their rights. This can be seen from the membership of the various organs of the Organisation, including the Governing Body and the Office, especially in the leading posts, as well as in the membership of the Committees of the Conference and the distribution of functions at the Conference. For instance, among the former Presidents of the General Conference we see no delegate from a socialist country. Typical examples were seen in the elections to the Industrial Committees and to the responsible posts at this Conference last week. We are talking about discrimination based on strictly political considerations, which is in gross disaccord with the basic principles governing the structure and methods of work of international organisations and is also contrary to the Constitution, aims and interests of our Organisation. Whilst the interests of this Organisation and the main tasks it faces, necessitate a revision of the efforts of all Members, as well as of those countries which—without the slightest justification—have been refused admission to this Organisation, the partisans of discrimination establish within it a state of tension and distrust as a result of which much energy and time are wasted. This discrimination is also a potential threat to the very existence and unity of our Organisation. The tasks facing it demand an urgent and conclusive solution to this problem. The first decisive step in this direction should be taken by the present session of the Conference, by endorsing the principle of equitable geographical distribution with regard to offices in all the organs of the I.L.O. The adoption and application of this principle of equal rights for all member States could not fail to be reflected in the atmosphere of trust and co-operation which would enable this Organisation the more rapidly and better to perform its tasks.

At last year’s session of the Conference there was a Polish-Ukrainian resolution on the subject which, however, was not considered. As a result of the situation which I have attempted to describe, the Czechoslovak delegation considers that at this session we should give priority to this resolution. The adoption and implementation of the resolution therein, which have been recognised and are being applied in all other international agencies, would be a great step forward for this Organisation. It would introduce fairness and order in representation on the various organs and would do away with unnecessary friction and discontent which is totally superfluous and is harmful.

I am convinced that if this Conference and the whole Organisation show the desire and make the effort to do so, it should be possible to complete the implementation of essential changes in the programme, structure and methods in time for the next session of the Conference, which would not only be a fitting celebration of the 50th Session of the Conference but would also be extremely useful for its whole future development.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. PAREDES (Government delegate, Panama)—We should first like to congratulate the President on his election to his high office by the plenary session of the Conference and we extend our congratulations to the other Officers of the Conference. We should also like to extend fraternal greetings on behalf of our Government to the new Members of this Organisation. May we express our hope that their activities may be crowned with success.

The item on the agenda relating to the discussion of the Director-General's Report offers a magnificent opportunity to make a complete critical analysis of this very important document. However, because of the requirements contained in the Standing Orders of the Conference, we shall have to refer exclusively to those points which we consider to be of the greatest importance amongst all those subjects dealt with in the Report of the Director-General.

The International Labour Organisation is an institution which lives and moves in a modern world in full evolution; it has for some time past needed a structural reorganisation which would make it possible for it to keep up with the changes and adjust itself to the development and progress of science so as to enable it at all times to pursue its aims. Therefore, we are very glad indeed to see that certain steps have been taken to keep the Organisation in line with the needs of today. Amongst the structural changes which have been mentioned our attention is particularly drawn to the creation of the Field Department, which is designed to contribute to the development of regional activities and their more effective and rational co-ordination.

On this subject, we feel that in order to secure the actual benefits which we expect and hope for from this decentralisation, it is essential that it be accompanied by a decentralisation of the administrative and policy-making power which is maintained in Geneva. It is all very well to decentralise activities and this can be done, but such physical or geographical decentralisation must be accompanied by the administrative and policy-making authority which will enable it to develop in a truly practical, functional and effective way. In other words, we feel that there is room for independent co-operation at the regional level, quite separate from the more general type of co-operation which is exercised through the I.L.O. at the world-wide level.

In so far as concerns the sectors of activity of the I.L.O. programme, the vital importance of human resources for economic development is acknowledged. In a period when technology has become the deciding factor between stagnation and development, when one can no longer speak solely of the traditional factors in production but must add to those factors new ones in the form of technology and entrepreneurial capability and when one realises that these last two factors mean no more or less than educated and skilled manpower, one has to agree then that the key to total modern economic development is the harmonious training and full utilisation of human resources.

We share the legitimate concern of the Director-General on this subject. We are happy to inform the Conference that, as a result of the action taken by President Robles this year, the National Assembly of Panama set up the Institute for Training and Utilisation of Human Resources. This is an autonomous and independent body, one of the first of its kind in Latin America, and it is responsible for carrying out the delicate, difficult and vital task of channelling the human resources necessary for the development of the country. In this way the Government of Panama has taken a tremendous step forward which will have incalculable future repercussions in the field of labour and its dynamic role in production.

With respect to the development of social institutions, the Director-General indicates that, as he sees it, the Conference wants the I.L.O. to try to achieve the growth of representative and independent organisations which will enable all sections of the population to participate in and benefit from economic development; the association of these organisations in the formulation and implementation of national development plans; the development of adequate labour administration machinery within government services; the strengthening of machinery for negotiation and co-operation between employers and workers at all levels; and the education and training of those who are involved in labour relations questions—in short, almost the whole scale of activities relating to social institutions which the Director-General himself then proposes should be covered by a single programme of action which will be coherent and co-ordinated. He stresses his desire to obtain the opinion of the delegates on this point.

These ideas are absolutely elementary and basic, as far as we see it, and the programme, which would be called the "programme for the development of social institutions", is interesting and represents, in our opinion, an ideal objective in this field. But, this ideal, like all ideals, tends to be good and acceptable, and if we do not want to risk disillusionment I think it would be wise to stop and think a little before rushing ahead full speed. Are we prepared, in most of the member States, to receive and to put into effect this programme? What institutions are indispensable for the suitable development of this type of programme in our countries? We think, to take one example only, that it is indispensable to have a Ministry of Labour which will act as such. We cite this case because no one is unaware, I am sure, that you have to have other complementary institutions in operation in order that the Ministry of Labour can operate properly. In Panama we have made efforts to establish a Ministry of Labour which would really carry out the functions and objectives required by the most elementary needs of the world today, but unfortunately we have not as yet been able to achieve this objective.

We do not want to discourage the I.L.O. in its good intentions, but we think that it is wise to call a halt and to stop and reflect on this subject, since it might well be more appropriate at this time to stress activities which prepare the ground for future action rather than to rush headlong into an adventure entailing the possibility of complete and total failure.

Conditions of life and work, on the other hand, can never be forgotten or laid aside by the I.L.O. or by the national governments represented at this Conference. While we understand that action in this field, even though possibly yielding no immediate fruits, is connected with economic development, on the other hand we are not unaware that an unlimited or unbalanced eagerness for production and economic benefits may slow up and may even reverse the advance which we have already achieved in this field. Therefore, we should like to say with all the emphasis at our command that our attention should be fixed permanently on the improvement of the living and working conditions of the workers. Thus, the I.L.O., Panama and the whole world should organise to achieve complete economic development, that is development where the distribution of wealth will be made with justice, and in a democratic and equitable way; where the employer and the worker will freely enjoy the economic and spiritual benefits arising from the fruits of their labours; development which will make it possible for man to express his feelings and achieve the most complete spiritual development; in short, the type of development which will make it possible for every worker to come back every morning to his job with renewed enthusiasm and courage.

In this connection, President Robles has personally taken far-reaching and extremely encouraging measures. The Panamanian workers see in the new Government prospects of dealing with worker-employer relationships and the problems of living and working conditions in a spirit of justice, understanding and progress.

So far we have referred to the International Labour Organisation and to a few of its activities, taking as a basis for our statement the Report of the Director-General, following the custom and system which has been established for a long time. Our analysis has been sincere and objective, considering the I.L.O. and the Conference as realities to which we cannot shut our eyes. But, having fulfilled this formal and routine commitment, we can hardly continue without at the same time fulfilling an obligation which we feel in all conscience bound to carry out. Thus with all respect to the I.L.O. and with the permission of delegates, we should like to take the liberty of raising some wide-ranging questions which concretely express the doubts and concern which we feel in connection with the I.L.O., its appropriateness, its achievements, and even its very existence.

To what point and to what extent has the I.L.O. carried out its tasks and achieved its objectives? Does the I.L.O. contribute positively and effectively to the economic and social progress of the peoples of the world? Has the I.L.O. realized that, in fact, today economic development is a sine qua non for the achievement of the aspirations of the workers? Has the Conference perhaps become a pretext and an opportunity made use of by certain governments to send delegates on a nice trip without really having a genuine and sincere interest in the activities of the Conference? What concrete benefits are obtained from the Conference apart from the personal contacts which may be made?

Has the Conference perhaps become an arena where, instead of dealing with matters of great importance, political problems are threshed out in the most barefaced unmannerliness, and empty and repellent demagogic speeches are made? These questions are being raised, and while they are being raised—and we are not the first nor shall we be the last to raise them—and while the I.L.O. continues to engage in discussion as it has been doing for years and years, far away in the countries of Asia, America and Africa, and also right here in Europe, hunger is increasing, unemployment is rife and the difference between the developed countries and the developing countries is growing to fearful proportions.

Today, when satellites and manned spaceships whizz through space, here on earth the peoples who are anxious to live decently and who have discovered that men are not equal are growing ever more restive in their desires. Science in its extraordinary progress has surprised many countries in a state of stagnation and backwardness. But science itself has a duty which cannot be passed on of contributing to the material, cultural and spiritual improvement of the peoples.

On reading the Report of the Director-General and some other documents, one sees the great concern that exists within the I.L.O. in connection with the need for accelerated economic development which will put a stop to all these plagues on humanity. It is even proposed that the workers' organisations should take part in the economic planning bodies at a national level. Perhaps this is the path the I.L.O. should follow at the international level.

Integral and total economic development—the very foundation of a better life of peace and harmony for all—can be achieved only when there is a common force, well balanced and harmonious, which is capable of unifying co-ordinated productive forces. This is the scientific way in which we must look at the problem. Making a dispassionate analysis of the situation, we might reach the conclusion that a scientific solution to the crisis through which the Organisation is passing would be to incorporate it into an international body for economic development.

Naturally, this would not mean doing away with the essence of the I.L.O. It would cease to operate as an independent body, but its functions and basic objectives would continue in force except that they would be given a new focus and more dynamic dimensions in keeping with the realities of the world today. If we... were not to incorporate the I.L.O. into another body already in existence, one might think of creating a new international body for total economic development which would combine, like the I.L.O., other spheres of activity which represent various basic factors of production. We repeat that we are in no way suggesting doing away with the functions and objectives of the I.L.O., but rather wish to give these functions and objectives the vitality which they lack today because the Organisation is separated from those organisations dealing with economic development, and because it lacks the necessary impact on national governments to give its Conventions true force. Moreover, with a solution such as the one we have proposed, the strength and experience of the I.L.O. would reinforce the new body so that it would be in a position to achieve, in the field of economic development and in the field of labour, goals which had never even been thought of earlier. We understand that this question is perhaps only marginal to the sphere of competence of the I.L.O., but it is of such basic importance and is so closely related to the activities of the I.L.O. that we feel it is our duty to mention it clearly.

We have thus put before you our points of view on certain aspects of the Director-General's Report in particular, and of the I.L.O. and the Conference in general. It is our hope that we may have thus stirred up the spirit of the staff of the I.L.O. and of the delegates to the Conference. If we are right, we hope that the necessary measures will be taken soon to find a solution to the crisis. If we are wrong, we will be glad to know it, in order to correct our attitude, but if we are wrong we are anxious to have our error shown to us specifically.

In any case we can assure you that our Government will continue to have every faith that the I.L.O. will reorient itself bearing in mind the enormous changes which the world of today is undergoing.

Interpretation from French: Mr. LEDOT (Government delegate, Central African Republic) —It is with pleasure for me to speak for the first time from this rostrum where, for years, eminent men and women of various origin have been speaking in defence of the interests of workers and to promote effective labour legislation.

I should like first of all to congratulate you, Mr. President, in the name of His Excellency, President David Dacko, and his people, on your brilliant election.

I have no doubt that your experience and your wide knowledge of the problems of labour relations will enable the present session to reach fruitful conclusions. This is also an opportunity for me to add my congratulations to those already expressed to the Director-General for his remarkable work, and to the Office which he so ably leads amidst the convulsions of the modern world. This year the Director-General deals with new and interesting problems. The desire to analyse this objective, serene and far-seeing Report is a real temptation to us. However, each speaker is obliged to refer only to those of its many aspects which are of particular interest to him, all the more so because the document itself invites us so to act that the discussion of it can lead to decisions which will, I am sure, make it possible to determine the main lines of I.L.O. action on the basis of the guidelines laid down by the Director-General. Therefore, one should not spend too much time on tributes, and I will pass to the observations of the Government of the Central African Republic.

One cannot doubt what the main objectives of the I.L.O. must be. In general, they consist of improving conditions of work and employment throughout the world.

However, the way in which they should be incorporated in the programmes drawn up in the light of the needs of member countries must be precisely and realistically indicated. The I.L.O. should pay particular attention to the formulation of programmes which would have regard to the rapid development of the member countries, and especially the developing States, to their new needs and to their determination to accelerate the process of economic and social decolonisation along the lines which each prefers.

The studies made by the Director-General and the changes introduced with the approval of the Governing Body have the entire support of my Government. However, we believe that the procedure of the Conference and the Constitution need to be reviewed so as to take into account the situation created by the admission of new Members to the Organisation.

The extension of the powers of the General Conference would certainly contribute towards an improvement of the work of the Organisation by democratising it in such a way that it would become, in fact as well as in name, the highest organ determining the work of the Organisation and controlling its activity.

The composition of the I.L.O. is only fully reflected in the composition of the General Conference, which has very limited powers. The composition of the Governing Body, the other organs, and particularly of the Office itself, by no means gives full effect to the principle of equality of rights and obligations of States Members and the need for equitable representation of all systems.

It is rightly pointed out in the Report that most of the developing countries are now going through a crisis of underemployment and unemployment. However, we have given these questions particular attention, with the result that, in the pure sense, there is no unemployment in our country. Nevertheless, my Government, at its National Congress last year, elaborated an economic development programme based on voluntary labour in order to enable us to reabsorb part of our unskilled manpower. This measure is in no way based on compulsion. It amounts to the organisation of the masses, making it possible to regroup the living forces of the country. They are trained and their efforts are directed towards development programmes which are expected to become economically viable. Rural resources are thus developed and their effect on economic policy is most important.

Moreover, the Government of the Central African Republic attaches particular importance to the international labour Conventions and Recommendations, for the workers in our country are one of our fundamental forces. It is therefore indispensable that labour standards should be conceived in a manner which permits balanced and harmonious development. My Government has accordingly ratified 35 Conventions and applied three Recommendations, thereby committing itself to formulate legislation which will be in conformity with the fundamental principles of the Declaration of Philadelphia. However, in this field also, the I.L.O. must have regard to the great diversity of national conditions and must take into consideration that countries follow different paths to reach the economic objectives which it sets them.

In the Central African Republic economic development has been defined as a priority objective and the whole population has been mobilised to bring it about, including the employers', workers', young persons' and women's organisations. These groups actively participate in all advisory bodies. Moreover, the trade union organisations understood the need for co-operation to such an extent that they freely amalgamated so as to form one dynamic union which can fight poverty side by side with the Government.

The studies which have been made by the I.L.O. on the problems of women are in line with the preoccupations of my Government. Recently His Excellency David Dacko said that the policy of the Central African Republic did not exclude the advancement of women, who represent a genuine potential in which we wish them to be properly organised and to have leaders who can play their due part in the I.L.O. on the problems of women are in line with the preoccupations of my Government. Recently His Excellency David Dacko said that the policy of the Central African Republic did not exclude the advancement of women, who represent a genuine potential in which we place much hope in connection with rational manpower planning to meet the needs of our rapid economic and social transformation.

The Government of our Republic is particularly aware of the role of the trade unions, but it wishes them to be properly organised and to have leaders who can play their due part instead of closely following the big foreign central organisations which build up ambitious theoretical programmes which they have not been able to put into effect in their own countries.

We feel, therefore, that the I.L.O. can help us in this particular field to set up schools which will enable us to educate leaders in respect of the freedoms inherent in this discipline.

I would be failing in my duty if I did not mention the burning, dramatic problem of South Africa and the Portuguese colonies. It is quite clear that Portugal has no intention of responding to the appeal of mankind. This uncompromising and arrogant attitude is a threat to peace and, particularly, an open rebuff to the I.L.O., which is the symbol of social justice.

We believe that we should not close our eyes to what is going on for it is a breach of the sacred rights laid down in the Constitution of our Organisation.

The I.L.O. should intensify its work so that these humiliating, degrading conditions of work, this discrimination, may be stopped and peace and social justice introduced instead.

Mr. ABEBE (Employers' delegate, Nigeria)— Permit me to associate myself with all those who have expressed profound joy at the election of Mr. Raza to the high office of President of this august assembly. I wish you, Sir, God's guidance in the discharge of your great task. To all the new member States I extend a hearty welcome and congratulations.

The last two sessions of the Conference rightly devoted a good deal of time to considering the programmes and structure of the International Labour Organisation. The Director-General is to be congratulated on the manner in which he has set out in this year's Report the practical steps he intends to take in giving effect to those proposals upon which the last two sessions reached some measure of agreement.

The changes through which the world has passed since the programmes and structure of the I.L.O. were first designed justify the attention which this review is now receiving. Any programme by an international organisation which hopes to attain its purpose must recognise the special needs and circumstances of the area it seeks to serve. This is why those of us from the developing countries must welcome the increasing attention which the I.L.O. has paid to our problems in recent times. The rapidly changing pattern of the social and economic conditions in the new member States makes it essential that reappraisal of the programmes and structure of the I.L.O.—an organisation to which they look for so much—should be a continuing process.

The I.L.O. is now a very much larger body than it was 20 years ago and the emphasis appears, and quite rightly so, to be shifting to the many newly independent countries which have gained admission into the Organisation during the last two decades. These new Members look to the I.L.O. for help, advice and guidance but their problems are not always the same as those of the older Members. Whereas the older Members have met many of our major problems as they arose over the course of many years, we have had to face serious problems which demand urgent and immediate solution in circumstances which are unique to each individual country concerned. The development of these countries would depend very much on their ability to mobilise their human and natural resources.

For many years and until very recently the items which have featured on the agenda of the I.L.O. have been generally divorced from reality as we know it in Nigeria. It is therefore a matter for rejoicing that attention is now being focused on matters which are of direct concern to developing countries. I believe the I.L.O. has produced enough international instruments to last any average developing country for many more years to come. If the extension of operational programmes and technical assistance to countries that need them is pursued with the same vigour and enthusiasm as have been given to the adoption of the multitude of international instruments, the pace of social and economic development in the less advanced countries will be greatly accelerated.

In the belief that they will together provide the necessary essential services and technical aid to developing countries, I welcome the formation of the three arms of the I.L.O.—the Human Resources Department, the Social Institutions Development Department and the Conditions of Work and Life Department. Their effectiveness must not be marred by lack of co-ordination, duplication of effort or conflict in their fields of operation. I hope they will justify their existence by addressing themselves immediately to the tasks for which they have been created, thus making their presence felt in our respective countries, but only after consultation with the local people, by which I mean employers and workers as well as governments.

Our countries are faced with a multitude of problems, the solution of which calls for both human and material resources which have been created, thus making their presence in our problems complex and challenging. Time and resources are limited. The technological expertise and the wealth of experience acquired by the I.L.O. over the years should be placed at our disposal as a matter of utmost urgency. In my country the education of workers involves hundreds of thousands of people, hence only a crash programme can produce the desired results. We want experts who, against the background of our local problems, can train experts to teach others. Only by this snowball effect can the ground be covered quickly enough. To start with, training in the techniques of teaching must be given only to those who will utilise it in the best possible way and who will spend all their time passing on their knowledge to others. The good work which other international bodies are doing in order to tackle this problem in Nigeria is appreciated. But however well-meaning they may be, their good work can suffer from insufficient knowledge of the real needs and background of the people, and it is for this reason that I plead that all such assistance should be channelled solely through the government of the country.

The plans outlined in the Director-General’s Report for improving the quality of the labour force can only provide a nucleus of the trained personnel urgently needed in countries where the vast majority of the working population is still illiterate. While there may be good reason for tackling the problem on a short- and medium-term basis now, the speed with which progress and technological changes occur suggests that long-term planning is in the final analysis the hope for a lasting solution. The research programme which the I.L.O. proposes to mount should provide useful information about the size and scope of the problem as well as the areas to which greater effort is to be directed.

The Director-General’s anxiety to examine how the workers’ concern with security can be met in the different member States under study and the immediate need for consideration of yet more international instruments, be they Conventions, Recommendations or resolutions, let us consolidate our position and ensure that all countries fully appreciate the implications of, and can and do follow those already established. I have already said that from my humble opinion the I.L.O. has produced enough instruments to last any developing country for many years, and I might add that in spite of the progress made in the last few years there is barely enough technical assistance to last a year. Many countries are finding from experience that new legislation is required in the fields of trade unions and labour relations. Such countries need the help of experts from other countries who have had the history of industrial relations have met similar problems and found a solution for them.

Coming as I do from a country rich in untapped natural resources, I ask your indulgence if I touch on a matter very close to my heart. Too much reliance and hope are often placed in the belief that industrial development is the guarantee of stable and rapid economic growth, but in most developing countries the vast majority of the people are connected with the soil. In my country the economic growth and rapid development of the country can be assured. Technical assistance to develop our land and modernise our agriculture, together with experts to train local teachers, constitutes one of the most urgent forms of assistance needed by the country. The aim should be to take urgent steps to give agriculture its rightful place and show to all its importance and the recognition that farming is a skilled and honourable profession. By this means, school and university leavers may be encouraged to go into agricultural enterprises and the alarming drift to the towns may be reduced.

The Director-General’s plans for the structure of the Organisation’s field operations call for a brief comment. If decentralisation can be carried out without dissipating essential resources the proposal will be welcome as it will bring expertise nearer to us. We must, however, move with caution, at least initially, for we do not know the above coat according to our cloth, because to decentralise to the degree that the available expertise is dissipated would be unwise. It is essential that regional offices be adequately manned by experts who must work through the tripartite organisations of government, employers and workers of the country. Natives of the regions in which the offices are located should be encouraged and trained to join the staff of the regional offices so that the offices can be seen to identify themselves more intimately with the problems and aspirations of the people. If the available instruments and resources are limited and I.L.O. programmes should truly reflect the priorities and actual needs of each country. If the new structure facilitates closer and more frequent contacts with the tripartite organisations in the countries concerned, these priorities should easily be settled. We know that the problems grow greater and more complex every day. Let us therefore stop dividing our attention and dissipating our energies on political issues which are better left to political organisations and not contemplate including among its government programmes a constantly growing improvement of the standards of living to which the so-called economically weaker classes are entitled, which must be provided by the State and by the economically stronger sectors, with the contribution of the worker himself, as part and parcel of the factors of production. Only thus can one conceive of true social peace, which is a basis and foundation for political stability of a State and a living expression of the principle of human fraternity. But, among the items referred to in the Report, I should like to refer more particularly, as far as my country is concerned, to the new agrarian reform act which has been distributed in our underpopulated Atlantic region. This land will be given to Nicaraguan peasants resident in the country, and also to immigrants who have been in possession acting as owners for more than a year. In some places agricultural cooperatives have been set up, particularly for cotton, which today is one of the greatest sources of income in the country, and other crops and other types of agricultural products.

By this Agrarian Reform Act all kinds of technical assistance are provided, as well as agricultural implements, economic assistance, and so forth; in the agricultural settlements healthy and comfortable housing is being built through the National Housing Institute. This year 300,000 hectares of land will be distributed in our underpopulated Atlantic region. This land will be given to Nicaraguan peasants resident in the country, and also to our nationals who would like to come back to their country. For these reasons many living outside our frontiers—and also to immigrants who will be contributing their knowledge in the field of services. In addition to being constituted by developing countries, Central America is carrying out a true economic integration. It is achieving a Central American common market with positive results. It is achieving a true union in the economic and commercial field, which is being used as an example for the South American countries and which has been praised by international bodies and experts in this field.

But to carry out successfully and more rapidly this social and economic integration of the six countries of the isthmus, including Panama, we need the technical assistance of the I.L.O. in various aspects of particular interest to the Central American region. We feel this technical assistance will have to be kept separate even from other areas of the American region. This assistance will have to include training and manpower, development of human resources, ways of increasing productivity and so on, but it must be provided through skilled experts who are familiar with our habits, our customs and our idiosyncrasies.

At the first meeting of the Ministers of Labour of Central America held in Salvador in April 1964 under the auspices of the Organisation of Central American States, one of the resolutions adopted urged this greater and increased technical assistance from the I.L.O. for the Central American region. This resolution must have reached the I.L.O. in due time. We would also express our appreciation of the recommendations made by the I.L.O. when we consulted it in connection with a proposed revision of our Labour Code, which will shortly be submitted to the National Congress for approval.

Two important points will be discussed at this Conference; the first, agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects, and the second, the role of cooperatives in the economic and social progress of developing countries.

With respect to the first of these points, I should like to say that on 3 April 1963 my country adopted an Agrarian Reform Act which is being put into effect with encouraging results. It is operating under the direction of the Nicaraguan Agrarian Institute which has been distributing land among peasants in various sections of the country, and to those who have been in possession acting as owners for more than a year. In some places agricultural cooperatives have been set up, particularly for cotton, which today is one of the greatest sources of income in the country, and also other crops and other types of agricultural products.

By this Agrarian Reform Act all kinds of technical assistance are provided, as well as agricultural implements, economic assistance, and so forth; in the agricultural settlements healthy and comfortable housing is being built through the National Housing Institute. This year 300,000 hectares of land will be distributed in our underpopulated Atlantic region. This land will be given to Nicaraguan peasants resident in the country, and also to our nationals who would like to come back to their country. For these reasons many living outside our frontiers—and also to immigrants who will be contributing their knowledge in the field of services. In addition to being constituted by developing countries, Central America is carrying out a true economic integration. It is achieving a Central American common market with positive results. It is achieving a true union in the economic and commercial field, which is being used as an example for the South American countries and which has been praised by international bodies and experts in this field.

But to carry out successfully and more rapidly this social and economic integration of the six countries of the isthmus, including Panama, we need the technical assistance of the I.L.O. in various aspects of particular interest to the Central American region. We feel this technical assistance will have to be kept separate even from other areas of the American region. This assistance will have to include training and manpower, development of human resources, ways of increasing productivity and so on, but it must be provided through skilled experts who are familiar with our habits, our customs and our idiosyncrasies.

At the first meeting of the Ministers of Labour of Central America held in Salvador in April 1964 under the auspices of the Organisation of Central American States, one of the resolutions adopted urged this greater and increased technical assistance from the I.L.O. for the Central American region. This resolution must have reached the I.L.O. in due time. We would also express our appreciation of the recommendations made by the I.L.O. when we consulted it in connection with a proposed revision of our Labour Code, which will shortly be submitted to the National Congress for approval.

Two important points will be discussed at this Conference; the first, agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects, and the second, the role of cooperatives in the economic and social progress of developing countries.

With respect to the first of these points, I should like to say that on 3 April 1963 my country adopted an Agrarian Reform Act which is being put into effect with encouraging results. It is operating under the direction of the Nicaraguan Agrarian Institute which has been distributing land among peasants in various sections of the country, and to those who have been in possession acting as owners for more than a year. In some places agricultural cooperatives have been set up, particularly for cotton, which today is one of the greatest sources of income in the country, and also other crops and other types of agricultural products.

By this Agrarian Reform Act all kinds of technical assistance are provided, as well as agricultural implements, economic assistance, and so forth; in the agricultural settlements healthy and comfortable housing is being built through the National Housing Institute. This year 300,000 hectares of land will be distributed in our underpopulated Atlantic region. This land will be given to Nicaraguan peasants resident in the country, and also to our nationals who would like to come back to their country. For these reasons many living outside our frontiers—and also to immigrants who will be contributing their knowledge in the field of services. In addition to being constituted by developing countries, Central America is carrying out a true economic integration. It is achieving a Central American common market with positive results. It is achieving a true union in the economic and commercial field, which is being used as an example for the South American countries and which has been praised by international bodies and experts in this field.

But to carry out successfully and more rapidly this social and economic integration of the six countries of the isthmus, including Panama, we need the technical assistance of the I.L.O. in various aspects of particular interest to the Central American region. We feel this technical assistance will have to be kept separate even from other areas of the American region. This assistance will have to include training and manpower, development of human resources, ways of increasing productivity and so on, but it must be provided through skilled experts who are familiar with our habits, our customs and our idiosyncrasies.

At the first meeting of the Ministers of Labour of Central America held in Salvador in April 1964 under the auspices of the Organisation of Central American States, one of the resolutions adopted urged this greater and increased technical assistance from the I.L.O. for the Central American region. This resolution must have reached the I.L.O. in due time. We would also express our appreciation of the recommendations made by the I.L.O. when we consulted it in connection with a proposed revision of our Labour Code, which will shortly be submitted to the National Congress for approval.

Two important points will be discussed at this Conference; the first, agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects, and the second, the role of cooperatives in the economic and social progress of developing countries.

With respect to the first of these points, I should like to say that on 3 April 1963 my country adopted an Agrarian Reform Act which is being put into effect with encouraging results. It is operating under the direction of the Nicaraguan Agrarian Institute which has been distributing land among peasants in various sections of the country, and to those who have been in possession acting as owners for more than a year. In some places agricultural cooperatives have been set up, particularly for cotton, which today is one of the greatest sources of income in the country, and also other crops and other types of agricultural products.

By this Agrarian Reform Act all kinds of technical assistance are provided, as well as agricultural implements, economic assistance, and so forth; in the agricultural settlements healthy and comfortable housing is being built through the National Housing Institute. This year 300,000 hectares of land will be distributed in our underpopulated Atlantic region. This land will be given to Nicaraguan peasants resident in the country, and also to our nationals who would like to come back to their country. For these reasons many living outside our frontiers—and also to immigrants who will be contributing their knowledge in the field of services. In addition to being constituted by developing countries, Central America is carrying out a true economic integration. It is achieving a Central American common market with positive results. It is achieving a true union in the economic and commercial field, which is being used as an example for the South American countries and which has been praised by international bodies and experts in this field. agriculture. This region will be endowed with all that is necessary for the success of these settlements, since it is the slogan, and not only the slogan but also the conviction of the President of the Republic, Dr. Schick Gutiérrez, "that in Nicaragua there should be no land without men, nor should there be men without land."

To come to the second subject, co-operatives, I should like to say that the National Planning Office will be introducing a project for co-operatives, which will bring together all the provisions on co-operatives now embodied in different enactments, such as the Commercial Code, the Labour Code, and the Agrarian Reform Act.

With your permission, Mr. President, I should like to express to this assembly the concern my Government feels for the welfare of the workers of my country, and in this connection I should like to say that the present President of the Republic is formally committed to establish next year, before his presidential term comes to a close, a workers' bank which will be financed by a contribution of 1 million córdobas from the State, 1 million dollars loaned by the American Institute for Development of a Free Trade Union Movement, with headquarters in Washington, and economic assistance from the trade unions and other workers' organisations. For the study and preparation of the groundwork for this bank, as far as technical aspects are concerned, in April this year I signed, as representative of my Government, a Convention with the United States Agency for International Development, and the A.I.D. will be sending experts in this coming month of July.

In conclusion I should like to extend to you, Mr. President, and to the other Officers, my congratulations on your well-deserved election. I most earnestly and sincerely hope and desire that you will continue to preside over our discussions with the skill and ability which you have shown so far.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. OBUKHOVICH (Workers' delegate, Byelorussia)—At its preceding sessions the General Conference has discussed questions concerning the I.L.O.'s programme and structure which were overdue for consideration. Analysis of the proposals made shows the concern of delegates with the need further to improve the activities of the Organisation, with a view to bringing its methods and the content of its work into line with its growing tasks and the realities of our world. Unfortunately, these proposals are not being put into effect. The views expressed by most delegates to the effect that the I.L.O. must actively participate in taking steps to help to secure peace throughout the world and to promote broad co-operation between peoples led us to hope that in 1965—this International Co-operation Year—concrete steps would be taken by the Organisation and a clear programme would be mapped out to this end.

However, in the Director-General's Report there are no concrete plans even being drawn up to provide assistance to the countries concerned. This slowness shows that insufficient attention is being paid to the wish of the Conference, as expressed in that resolution.

An important factor in the development of the contemporary world is the economic and social development of the countries of the socialist community. A typical example of the character and extent of the changes occurring in these countries is provided by Byelorussia. The yearly rate of growth of our gross industrial production during 18 post-war years has averaged some 21 per cent. Having overcome the aftermath of wartime destruction our people have achieved high rates of economic development and are now engaged in selfless effort to carry out even more ambitious plans. The proportion of the national income devoted to popular welfare funds is steadily increasing. Last year in Byelorussia we raised the wages of medical personnel and teachers by an average of 21 per cent. We are increasing a large number of workers engaged in non-productive areas of the economy. Last year grants and subsidies in terms of pensions, and finding solutions having a direct bearing on consolidation of peace. This is all the more necessary, since this year there have occurred events which have violated peace and normal relations between peoples, and which have directly affected the lives of workers in a number of areas of the world. I am referring to the bombardments of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, and to the armed aggression in Southern Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic. Evidence of the workers' anxiety can be found in the protests by trade unions in many countries against the provocations and aggressions of the imperialistic forces. The Byelorussian Council of Trade Unions, on behalf of more than 2 million organised workers in Byelorussia, adopted at its plenary session a resolution of protest and indignation against the policy of aggression of the United States in Viet-Nam. How can one not help feeling horrified at the mass extermination of peaceful people, the use of poison gas and napalm against women, children and old people, and the systematic destruction of the means of livelihood of a whole people?

We believe that the I.L.O. cannot remain indifferent to this. It is our duty to condemn these aggressive actions which can lead to catastrophic consequences for all mankind. I also think that the representatives of the South Vietnamese régime have no place here, and I support the proposal by the Workers' delegate of the U.S.S.R. that their credentials should not be accepted.

In our day, the problems of economic and social development in each country are not only of national but also of international significance. In this connection we should stress the need for more energetic action on the part of our Organisation in implementing the resolution of 1962 regarding activities of the I.L.O. to contribute to the eradication of the consequences of colonialism in the fields of the conditions of work and standards of living of the workers. The information in the annex to Part II of the Director-General's Report leads us to conclude that during the past three years no concrete plans have even been drawn up to provide assistance to the countries concerned. This shows that insufficient attention is being paid to the wish of the Conference, as expressed in that resolution.
rapid economic and social progress of Byelorussia is being carried out on a massive scale. During the past year more than 300,000 workers moved into new homes or improved housing. Among the factors which have secured the rapid economic and social progress of Byelorussia, we should note the successful promotion of manpower resources and labour relations.

The following example is typical. Economists have calculated that some 25 per cent. of our national income in 1962 represented the fruits of increased investment in education and, as a result, improvement in the cultural level and occupational skills of manpower. Since there are no exploiting classes, and since the means of production are publicly owned, labour relations in our country are characterised by the sincere personal concern of each employee to ensure maximum effectiveness in his work. This is expressed in the participation of the workers in the management of their plants. Through the adoption of new technological improvements suggested by our workers, we were last year able to save 34.5 million roubles. The trade unions of Byelorussia are also making a major contribution to ensuring the most satisfactory labour relations.

In labour relations the I.L.O. can play a useful part only if it helps to promote the trade union movement. These activities on the part of the I.L.O. will be useful only if the sovereignty of the trade union movement is not violated, for only the workers themselves can set up their trade unions, and only through active promotion of the rights and interests of the workers is it possible to train experienced and authoritative trade union personnel. This is of particular importance for the developing countries. Therefore, it would be useful to study the actual situation of the trade unions in the colonies and dependent territories. For this the Director-General should present to the Conference a special report on the rights and development of the trade union movement in the dependent countries and outline the measures that might secure the implementation in those territories of I.L.O. Conventions concerning freedom of association.

We agree on the urgency of the problems connected with development of manpower resources, labour relations, social institutions, and working and living conditions, as described in the Report of the Director-General. However, progress in solving economic and social problems is dependent upon respect for fundamental human rights and freedoms and upon the liquidation of colonialism and its consequences. That is why, in order to achieve the high purposes formulated in its Constitution, the I.L.O. must pay increased attention to these problems. This is all the more necessary since the appeal made by the Conference Committee on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations at the 48th Session with a view to persuading member States not yet bound by the human rights Conventions to ratify those Conventions has not been heeded by many countries, even highly industrialised countries. More persistence is needed in securing the ratification by every member State of the Conventions on freedom of association and human rights, which follow directly from the obligations contained in the Constitution and the Declaration of Philadelphia.

The Organisation cannot ignore such flagrant violation of human rights, such persecution and such terror as are practised through the policy of apartheid. Apartheid is a shameful system of oppression, racial discrimination and exploitation and it continues to affect a large part of mankind, especially persons of African origin. Yet a number of countries, ignoring the decisions of the United Nations and the I.L.O., maintain diplomatic relations with the Republic of South Africa and are even expanding their trade by sending capital and armaments to countries practising a policy of apartheid. The fascist régimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia could not exist without the support of international monopolies. The General Conference must receive systematic information regarding the measures that are being taken by governments of all countries in accordance with the Declaration concerning the policy of apartheid adopted at the 48th Session of the International Labour Conference.

In conclusion, I would like to stress that the new and complex tasks which face the International Labour Organisation will require more radical measures in improving the structure, methods and activities of the I.L.O. than those which have been outlined by the Director-General. The drafting and implementation of such measures require that the General Conference should play a greater and a more responsible role, and that its procedures and methods of work be democratised; the solution of this problem is impossible without securing equitable geographical representation in all organs of the I.L.O. and in the election of the various Officers according to the various social and economic systems and geographic areas of the world.

The trade unions of Byelorussia are prepared to give every support to the I.L.O. with a view to effective promotion of the social progress of mankind.

The Conference adjourned at 1 p.m.)
ELEVENTH SITTING

Wednesday, 9 June 1965, 3 p.m.

President : Mr. Raza

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL:
DISCUSSION (cont.)

The President: We now continue the discussion on the Report of the Director-General.

Mr. MERRIMAN (Minister of Labour and Social Security, British Guiana)—May I tender to the President sincere congratulations on behalf of my Government, my people and my delegation on his election?

My Government, elected six months ago, appreciates the honour conferred on our not yet independent country in being represented as observers at this 49th Session of the Conference. I can assure delegates that we are anxiously looking forward to our attendance again next year under full International Labour Organisation membership as an independent country, to make our contribution to the tripartite objectives of the International Labour Conference. I can also assure delegates that my people are not unaware of the heavy responsibility borne by this Organisation, and that we are eager to associate ourselves in the common work when the time comes for us to share full membership. My Government feels that only when we can shoulder our fair share of the burden of world responsibility can we assume and deserve the dignity of a people working for universal and lasting peace based on social justice for all peoples.

The birth of the trade union movement in South America took place in our country before the appearance of the International Labour Office on the world scene. But how can my Government be proud of this fact when we have not yet been able to play our part as an independent country? However, we are eagerly looking forward in the very near future, and as envisaged in a recent statement by our beloved Prime Minister, Mr. L. F. S. Burnham, not later than 1 February 1966, to sharing this burden.

Nevertheless, I can assure delegates that the objectives of this Organisation are continually before our trade union and employers' organisations; and its principles and objectives have been a source of inspiration and guidance to my Government. Our country unfortunately has not been favoured with short-cuts to national wealth, but we have other resources and no doubt the greatest of all resources, that of a free, resourceful and determined people. In looking back, my Government views with deep regret the fact that there was bitter disharmony between the former Government, on the one hand, and our free trade union and employers' organisations on the other. This was evident at the 48th Session of the General Conference. The position has since changed, and our people are looking forward to independence next year, which democracy and social justice will bring to a free and united people.

My country perhaps differs from emerging and other nations of the old world, in that the majority of our people are not indigenous to our territory. It differs also from the greater number of other countries in the world in that our people are integrated and work together. Our problems are many and our progress may have been relatively slow; and because of our peculiar problems of integration, our way of living together must of necessity be different to the way of life in countries with homogeneous or with unintegrated populations. Our development has involved us in a search for a design under which several component groups uprooted from the old world, with all their long traditions, can live and work together. Perhaps our way of life, perhaps the development of our way of living together, may have been hampered by the superimposition of a culture foreign to our original traditions. Perhaps our way of living together may have been unduly interfered with by power blocs, seeking strategic advantages over other power blocs.

We are anxious to promote the development and proper utilisation of human resources as outlined in the Report of the Director-General, but they tell us that things must be perfect and balanced in Guiana before we are allowed to go on our own. This is a unique criterion. This standard was not applied to any of the countries that have become independent since the war. Is this fair to us? The British cannot solve our problems; only we can rescue our country from the worst. Now that there is a Government supported by a majority on the basis of adult suffrage there is no other condition to fulfill. Give us the freedom to manage our affairs like all the nations present here.

Nevertheless, through the years, our design for living and working together under pressures from within and without has taken shape; and although punctuated by compromises with traditions, and modifications and adaptations, our emergence way of life cannot be described in terms of those of any other people or culture. Our way of life is a vibrant, dynamic and positive approach towards integration and working together, and reflects a maturity new to the older and established nations. It has its own standards—a compound of the good and bad of all races mingled in the melting pot of a plural population, and tempered in the fires of trial and error. This challenge we willingly and enthusiastically accept.

The workers of British Guiana are regarded as the special friends of my Government. We have already taken steps to increase the basic minimum wage of workers in the public sector by 28 per cent. and have requested technical assistance from the I.L.O. in the setting up of a national pension scheme. My Government believes that for the success of any national development programme the support of the free trade unions and employers’ organisations is necessary. In the implementation of this belief we have decided to set up a labour advisory board on a tripartite basis. The board will deal with all matters affecting employer-employee relations and this will include the ratification and implementation of international labour Conventions and Recommendations.

My Government believes in joint consultation, collective bargaining and consultative democracy, not only at the national level but at all levels of employer-employee relations necessary to promote and maintain industrial peace and harmony, an essential ingredient in a developing country pressing on for independence and economic sufficiency. My Government believes these are the basic essentials for nation building.

My Government believes that the attention of our people should at all times be focused on the interdependence of employer-employee cooperation, on the role our human resources at all levels will play in national development, and on workers’ emancipation, as important contributors to the economy of our country and as partners actively participating in the growth of our nation. We also believe in the right of employers and employees, organised to participate responsibly in protecting and promoting their mutual interests, to remain free in an independent country. We recognise the role of our human resources in building our national economic strength, and believe in a fair distribution of the fruits of economic development.

My Government is proud that our people have not only been the initiators of militant trade unionism and employer organisations, independent of political parties and government, and have accepted the tripartite ideals of the International Labour Office for living together. Our people are aware that the success of free trade unionism depends on economic growth to offset the erosion of morale through poverty, illiteracy and disease and to afford higher standards of living.

My delegation has studied the Report of the Director-General. We have observed the policy review to adapt the I.L.O.’s programme and structure to the needs of underdeveloped countries. We have noted the planned design for the unification of the total effort of the I.L.O., and the creation of a Field Department to determine the priorities of the actual needs of each country. My delegation is happy to note that consideration will be given to human resources policies and programmes, in relation to integration and gearing with economic planning; and it also notes the interest in the problems of improving living and working conditions compatible with the requirements of rapid economic development.

My delegation notes the accentuated interest on the development of social institutions, to relieve acute unemployment and underemployment, and will welcome assistance in gearing our people for the economic realities and psychological problems of adaptation to a new working milieu and the discipline of a liberation government. My delegation agrees that the creation of full employment, while an imperative need, is not an end in itself, and that activities in the field of human resources should aim at employment that is productive of national and economic growth in the long term. My delegation observes the high ideals of the International Labour Organisation, that the goal of economic growth will not be attained or brought any nearer by eliminating the very notion of conflict and we look forward to learning of improved concepts in consultation, negotiation and arbitration procedures designed to bring about and emphasise the elements of fruitful cooperation in the interest of all sectors of the economy.

My delegation believes in undertakings, policies and procedures through which our people will receive the consideration due to them as human beings, and we look forward to learning of progressive methods of negotiation and cooperation between management and labour organisations. We are particularly interested in the problems of grievance procedure and communications within undertakings, not only at the national level but at all levels of employer-employee relations. We are also interested in methods to enable all sections of our population to participate intelligently in and benefit fairly from economic development.

My delegation desires to congratulate the Director-General on the presentation of such an excellent Report. We, in British Guiana are moving forward. We have already ratified and implemented approximately 40 international labour Conventions. We hope, Mr. President and fellow delegates, that with your goodwill and assistance we shall soon take our place among you not as observers but as the representatives of a free and independent nation.

Mr. LATIF KHAN (Government delegate, Pakistan)—I deem it a great honour to have the opportunity of addressing the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. Allow me, Sir, first of all, to congratulate you on your election to the highest office of the Conference. Your election is not only a tribute to your personal qualities of head and heart, but it also signifies the esteem in which the country which you represent is held, and the role that it has played in the International Labour Organisation. With all sincerity and humility I wish to thank all fellow delegates for their overwhelming support and for the confidence that they have reposed in you.

In 1963 we, in this Conference, received an extremely thought-provoking and comprehensive Report from the Director-General, which provided an excellent analysis of the problems that required to be examined and solved in the light of the changing circumstances and the world situation. It set forth a new theme for discussion which was pursued with keen interest at the 47th and 48th Sessions. Since the Conference had a very heavy agenda and the General Body could not itself scrutinise the report, the Government delegate from Pakistan suggested in 1963 that the new Governing Body be entrusted with this onerous task. It is gratifying to note that the Working Party of the Governing Body has accomplished the task in a praiseworthy manner and has produced its first report, which indicates how I.L.O. programmes can move forward in areas where there is a substantial measure of agreement.

No one can deny that (1) human resources development, (2) labour relations, trade union development and the growth of social institutions, and (3) conditions of work and life are the three most important programme areas, and the Working Party has, very realistically, assigned priorities. But in order to achieve results expeditiously it is thought appropriate that the Working Party, in its future deliberations, be strengthened and streamlined, and entrusted with the work of implementation. It is hoped that the Working Party, in its future deliberations, will give due consideration to this suggestion because remote control from Geneva may not yield satisfactory results and adequately cater to the needs of developing countries, particularly of Latin America, Asia and Africa. It will be appreciated that these regions need greater attention and due representation, not only in the Secretariat but also in the Governing Body, which needs to be reorganised now on the basis of geographical considerations and population. With the passage of time the principles of nomination and permanent membership of the Governing Body appear to have become outmoded. It will be in the fitness of things if all seats are now filled by election.

In common with countries which are not yet fully developed, my Government subscribes to the above-mentioned three major I.L.O. programme areas selected by the Working Party, and it has accordingly already prepared plans which have set objectives and definite goals. Only two weeks ago a third Five-Year Plan was approved and announced. We shall be embarking on a reasonably ambitious programme of development in July 1965. Having been encouraged by the achievements in the Second Plan period, and the co-operation from the international aid-giving agencies like the I.L.O., the scope of the new Plan has been considerably enlarged.

Four major areas can be identified in which the Plan either strikes out for the first time or which it greatly stresses compared with previous plans.

In the first place, the new Plan is the first to draw up within the context of a long-term plan with an explicit set of national goals. This gives it a more definite focus as compared with previous plans. Secondly, it is more consciously concerned with policies, especially those pertaining to considerations of economic justice and distribution. Thirdly, it greatly emphasises the investment in human capital, and fourthly, it takes the first definite step towards tackling what is perhaps our biggest single problem—the unchecked growth of population; the Plan makes the first determined onslaught on this uninhibited growth.

The main objectives of the Third Plan are:

(1) to attain a rapid growth of the national economy with a view to ensuring a breakthrough to self-sustained growth in the shortest possible time; (2) to reduce the degree of disparity in incomes; (3) to provide at least 5.5 million new job opportunities to absorb the entire increase in the labour force during the next five years, as well as reducing the existing level of unemployment by at least 20 per cent.

An important feature is that the Plan takes the view that the point has been reached where the ground must be prepared for a society in which economic dynamism and social justice can both be secured. To this end a number of concrete proposals have been made for dispersing the ownership of industrial capital, for encouraging newcomers into fresh industrial ventures, for preventing the formation of cadres and monopolies, for developing a rational wage policy which gives to the worker a share in the benefit of his increased productivity; and for reviewing the role of the public sector in future economic development.

Investment in human capital is emphasised by greatly increasing the allocations for education, training and improvement of skills in the manpower sector. This corresponds to and coincides with the I.L.O. programmes in which we have been receiving guidance and assistance.

It has been observed, in paragraph 29 of the report of the Working Party, that the active and free participation of the population in the tasks of development was essential, that the whole population should be fully associated through the medium of representative organisations, and that if these requirements are not met such development programmes may prove ineffective. It is exactly in conformity with this philosophy that the Government of Pakistan has decided to implement all its development programmes through the representative institutions at all levels. The system of basic democracies introduced by the President of Pakistan ensures that the entire population is involved in the benefit of his increased productivity; and this was the main secret of the success of the second Five-Year Plan. The Government intends continuing this policy of involving the people more and more in its development programmes.

We are also glad to see on the agenda of the Conference two items which are of great significance to countries such as ours that are primarily agricultural. These are the role of co-operatives in economic and social development, and agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects.
As far as the co-operative movement is concerned, in the last ten years it has received a great impetus. In a country like Pakistan, where 90 per cent. of the people are of limited means and knowledge, the co-operatives can provide a third sector as distinct from the public and the private sectors. The Government has realised that the co-operative organisation is one of the most effective instruments in raising the tempo of economic growth and a major means of promoting social justice. For an efficient and uniform programme for the co-operative movement, a planning and advisory body has already been set up. Numerous co-operative banks, credit societies, marketing societies, etc., have been registered and, along with the basic democracies, the co-operatives have been organised at the lowest level, that is, the union council level. The Third Plan provides for a considerable expansion in the size and scope of the co-operative programme and its institutional framework. We recognise that the co-operative movement can play a large part in the acceleration of economic development and promotion of social justice. It can indeed play a very vital role as the third sector in preventing undue concentration of wealth and means of production and distribution in the hands of a few.

The question of agrarian reform has been under consideration by the Government since the very foundation of Pakistan. Agrarian reform and agricultural development have found a very prominent place in all three development plans. The Government has fixed a ceiling on land ownership; peasants have been given proprietary rights; security of tenure has been ensured; land consolidation has been undertaken; credit and marketing facilities are being extended through co-operatives; and many other incentives have been provided. Great emphasis on investment in agriculture to utilise surplus manpower and increase average yield per unit has been made. The development of agriculture, agrarian reform and the co-operative movement are very closely interrelated matters, and we are, therefore, greatly interested in the deliberations of these two committees, and will endeavour to achieve maximum co-ordination and co-operation with the I.L.O. in this respect.

Last, but not least, a word about apartheid, which weighs very heavily on the conscience of humanity at large. The Government of Pakistan believes and reaffirms its faith in the equality and the universal brotherhood of mankind. It considers discrimination in any land on a communal basis or on the basis of religion, colour, creed or caste as barbaric, and condemns it emphatically.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ben EZZEDINE (Workers' adviser, Tunisia)—As representative of the Tunisian working class I should like first of all to join my voice to those of others who have already congratulated you, Mr. President, on your election to your high office, and, further, to express the pleasure and satisfaction which I feel in participating in the discussions of this Organisation, to which we are particularly attached and have belonged since our country became independent in 1956. After 45 years of existence, the I.L.O. may be justly proud of its fruitful activities and of the very useful services which it has rendered to workers throughout the world in its vigorous endeavour to promote true social justice everywhere. The efforts made by the Organisation to encourage a sincere exchange of ideas and technical knowledge and to reinforce mutual aid between States Members have clearly constituted a great contribution to co-operation for social progress.

The international programmes which the I.L.O. has long been carrying out now affect the lives of tens of millions of men and women, including the great mass of African workers, who seek to secure a worthy and prosperous life in a balanced society free for ever from oppression.

The agenda of our Conference includes a series of questions which very closely concern the future of many countries in which increasing economic prosperity is tending to improve the conditions of life of their populations. We find that action undertaken in the last few years is being amplified and diversified in order to help the developing countries to co-ordinate their programmes for social progress.

The reorganisation of the internal structure of the International Labour Office should be an important step towards more effective action in the various fields. It will, undoubtedly, facilitate concentration of the mighty efforts made by member States to determine priorities within the framework of the tasks to be undertaken.

The expansion of the regional activities of the I.L.O. and the establishment of new field machinery will ensure improved results by making it possible to supervise more vigorously the work done in areas where the shortage of technicians threatens to hamper all serious efforts, despite the good will of those who work for economic progress.

The establishment of regional field offices encourages the belief that the work of the I.L.O. will be more homogeneous and more flexible wherever programmes require to be adjusted to the needs of particular countries.

Returning to I.L.O. programmes, we think that the development of human resources cannot otherwise be dissociated from economic development. The interdependence of these two factors has induced the public authorities and the occupational organisations to pay attention first of all to the development of human resources. To neglect the problem of human resources would be to deny the requirements of rational economic development. My country has followed a co-ordinated policy in formulating programmes in this respect and has thus paved the way for the implementation of its economic development plans. Our second such plan, the four-year plan, allocates about a fifth of our investments, i.e. 21.48 per cent., to the problems of human advancement, including education, supervisory training, raising the level of productive employment and vocational training.

Several apprenticeship and vocational training centres have been set up in various parts of the country. A national productivity centre has been set up and is operating under the supervision of I.L.O. experts; the results obtained are encouraging.
Being entirely convinced of the leading part which the working class must play in economic and social advancement in Tunisia, the Tunisian General Labour Union has not been content merely to support the action of the Government but, better than this, while calling on the working class to improve its output and increase productivity in all sectors, it has also effectively participated in the fight against underdevelopment by popularising the establishment and promotion of worker's co-operatives in all fields—production, consumption, transport, handling, printing, housing, etc. There is no doubt of the expansion now taking place in this regard, thanks to the workers' efforts.

Positive results have also been registered with regard to employment creation, and the improvement in the standard of living of the co-operators is indisputable. We hope to draw further benefits by setting up welfare establishments such as rest homes, sanatoria, holiday settlements and old persons' homes, etc.

To achieve the objective of better utilisation and a quantitative and qualitative improvement of manpower in connection with economic development tasks. This policy is carried out thanks to the general understanding which we have been able to inculcate in the working class as part of the national effort.

In another field, but again on the initiative of my organisation, the Tunisian Government has issued an Act setting up works committees. This has enabled human relations in the larger undertakings to be improved. Ever since, there has been more loyal and fruitful co-operation between employers and workers wherever works committees have been set up and developed. Some difficulties inherent in the early stages of any new institution have still to be overcome. However, it should be noted that the experiment has produced in some undertakings a new spirit which will lead to greater co-operation and convince the parties that their interests are interdependent and indissolubly linked with the prosperity of the industry and an improvement in the conditions of life of the workers.

The development of I.L.O. activities as regards conditions of life and work is a matter of major importance for the underdeveloped countries. Action in this field seems to mark a decisive turning point when one looks back at the path followed for some years which has taken the form not of constant reaffirmation of the fundamental principles laid down in the Conventions and Recommendations but of organised initiatives which have been more and more directed towards action aimed systematically at a specific end—the scientific evaluation of manpower requirements by means of surveys and analyses based on statistical data. This action should be supported by research into the possibility of adapting the underdeveloped countries to the conditions of a balanced society.

We believe that the new structure of the International Labour Organisation will facilitate the study of these different problems which confront the underdeveloped countries and contribute to solving each of them, or at least point the way towards understanding and action by those directly concerned.

As for the procedure for the revision of Conventions and Recommendations, we think that it is not opportune to envisage systematic revision but we do support the idea of initiating a simplified procedure for the revision of some provisions in order to bring them into harmony with the internal developments in technology and social organisation. Such developments may induce us also to clear the ground for the preparation of new international standards.

Ideas regarding the role of the I.L.O. are thus being modified with the emergence of new nations whose problems differ from the outset from those of the highly industrialised countries but must be integrated into the over-all action to be undertaken for better social equilibrium.

The way is now clear and one may state that the I.L.O., with its internal structure renewed, will be able to act more effectively in all the fields of social life, with the constant aid of the States Members and the occupational organisations, in the struggle for social justice and welfare wherever these are lacking.

May I add that, with the internal changes in the Office, the time has perhaps come to discuss seriously other amendments to the Constitution or Standing Orders in order to make our Organisation a coherent machine able to do its job with a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of suspicion.

I am persuaded that discussion of these various points by the Conference would be really useful to us and would strengthen our resolution to pursue our search for means of reaching the ideals of progress and justice which are so dear to the working class.

Thus, thanks to constructive debates, our Organisation would be able to pursue its role of architect of progress in the world and to point the way towards better co-ordination of the tasks of all while fixing for each of us the ultimate objective of social justice.

But how can one speak of social justice, progress, universal principles and freedom without thinking of those who suffer and struggle for their dignity, such as our brothers in Angola, Mozambique, South Africa and Palestine who have been expropriated by armed force? And there are others too. Therefore I would like to express the hope that the principles of peace for which animate us and are the essence of our Organisation may be applied effectively in all corners of the world. So may we have the joy of contributing to the triumph of human values in a world which aspires to freedom, dignity and progress.

Interpretation from Polish: Mr. BOGACKI (Employers' delegate, Poland)—In addressing the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation, I should like first of all to stress the validity of many of the points contained in the Report of the Director-General of the I.L.O. and in particular the references to full employment and manpower resources.
I attach particular importance to the following statement: "That there should have been such widespread interest in the development and utilisation of human resources bears witness to an increased recognition of their importance as a key factor in economic growth, which is dependent upon an accumulation of knowledge and skills, on fuller and more effective deployment and utilisation of manpower, at all levels and in all sectors..."

I may say with great satisfaction that in the past 20 years these principles have been fully applied in the economic policy of my country. They have in fact produced positive results in the form of the complete elimination of unemployment and the maintenance of full employment for people capable of working, whether men or women.

As director of one of the most important textile consortiums in Poland I am particularly happy that the question of the employment of women workers is on the agenda of this Conference. It has always been a matter of priority for Polish employers to ensure healthy and safe conditions of employment for women. In my country women with family responsibilities are the subject of special protection. They are treated on a footing of equality with men from every point of view and without any discrimination. They can obtain training in all fields and occupy responsible posts. In the textile industry, which I have the honour to represent, 4,500 women occupy managerial posts. The work problems of women and their conditions of life have always taken an important place in the activities of Polish employers and particularly in the textile industry, about 70 per cent. of whose employees are women.

Aside from the successes which we have achieved, we have also encountered some difficulties. It is true that in the textile industry, which has always been considered the domain of women, we provide for increased supplies of skilled manpower thanks to the vocational training schools in the production establishments. In other branches of Polish industry, however—for instance, in the electronics, precision tool and metallurgical industries—there are much greater difficulties. It is sometimes difficult to persuade young women to take the opportunity to follow courses which enable them to follow careers traditionally considered to be reserved for men. In order to attract as many women as possible to apprenticeship, we are trying, as employers, to create the best possible conditions for them so that they may acquire new qualifications both in their work and in their lives as mothers of families.

In his Report the Director-General gives particular importance to improvement of workers' skills, which is undoubtedly one of the essential elements in the rapid economic development of any country. I believe that the improvement of vocational training and conditions of work for women, in our country as well as in all the other countries of the world, will only be possible if the countries can develop fully from the economic point of view that is, if productive forces increase and the cost of production decreases. In my opinion this objective can be attained through broader international collaboration in the economic and commercial fields, among other things.

It has been agreed for a long time that the development of economic and commercial co-operation among all the countries of the world, and particularly between the East and the West, can and must be the lever to set in motion economic and social progress.

Many facts have shown us that, in spite of some difficulties which have been encountered, the process of rapprochement and broadening of the basis of this co-operation between the East and the West is becoming more and more intense.

In this process Poland is not only a partner but also often an initiator. Thus we have signed an agreement for economic co-operation with Belgium, and we are now negotiating the development of trade with the European Economic Community. In Paris Franco-Polish negotiations are under way with a view to conclusion of a commercial agreement for a five-year period starting in 1965.

The Polish proposals in the context of the "Kennedy Round" are familiar; these proposals look towards an increase in business with the countries associated with the G.A.T.T. Trade between Poland and the United Kingdom is solidly established. I can cite as proof the bilateral agreement with the United Kingdom which we signed in 1964. Year by year our trade with the United States grows. During the years 1961-64 trade with the United States increased by 45 per cent.

We may say without fear of exaggeration that if the commercial relationships between East and West continue to develop at the same rate, the outlook for economic expansion for underdeveloped countries will become better and better.

The deterioration of terms of trade of the developing countries results from falling prices of primary products and agricultural products which are the traditional goods of those countries. At the same time the prices of manufactured products, exported by the industrialised countries to their former colonies, constantly increase. Instead of markets in industrialised countries of the capitalist world, it is those in Poland and other socialist countries which are opening their doors to goods from the developing countries.

In spite of a threefold increase in the value of goods exported from developing countries to the socialist countries in the period between 1950 and 1962, these socialist countries receive only some 10 per cent. of the exports from the developing countries. To increase the share of the socialist countries in the importation of goods from the developing countries is indispensable to the economic development of those countries. Such imports are paid for by the socialist countries mainly through the export of capital goods.

Poland has always been favourable to the idea of "aid through trade". Putting this idea into practice, we increased our imports from the developing countries in the period between 1962 and 1964 by more than 40 per cent.

The new world organisation for trade and development will have to reconcile contradictory interests, break down barriers, and smooth out difficulties which are still lying in the path of normal development of international trade. Close collaboration in this field is indispensable between the authorities of that Organisation and the new organs of the I.L.O.

The possibilities of development of economic co-operation between East and West are certainly very great. In many sectors this co-operation can be still further broadened. Particular attention, I think, should be given to direct collaboration with a view to laying the basis for international distribution of functions in production, in marketing and in the solution of certain technical problems which are connected with these matters.

The advantages of such collaboration, if it is based on sound economic principles, would result in better use of means of production already in existence, the possibility of solving problems of shortages and surpluses, reduction of production costs, and acceleration of technical progress, in short, a better and more complete use of manpower, and an improvement in the standard of living in countries collaborating in this action.

The I.L.O., which since its inception has worked to improve the working and living conditions of workers in all the countries of the world, should in future also give its active support to all initiatives looking towards the development of international trade. The International Labour Organisation can play a major role in the solution of the social problems which may arise.

Speaking for the first time in the discussions of the International Labour Organisation, I should like to make one point in conclusion. I was very much surprised when I saw the attempt at discrimination by certain Employers towards the representatives of the Employers of the socialist countries, preventing them from taking part in the work of the committees, trying to limit their right to vote, and so on. I am all the more surprised because, in the course of my very long direct contacts with representatives of economic circles of the capitalist countries of Europe and of the United States, I have generally encountered full understanding of the need to maintain good relationships in an atmosphere of growing collaboration. I must stress most emphatically that there is no room in the International Labour Organisation for such practices as I have mentioned. Only a sincere and constructive collaboration, based on equal rights in all the committees of the Conference and all other organs of the I.L.O., can ensure the peace and welfare of all the countries in the world.

Mr. ALEXANDER (Representative of the International Co-operative Alliance)—Thank you, Mr. President, for this opportunity to address the Conference. I wish to refer very briefly to the Director-General's Report, in particular the section on "Co-operative Institutions" in Part II.

The decision of the 157th Session of the Governing Body in November 1963, to place the question of the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries on the agenda of this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference, was immediately welcomed by the International Co-operative Alliance and the International Federation of Agricultural Producers, and I should like to take this opportunity, on behalf of both these organisations, to thank the I.L.O. for the priority which has been allocated to this important subject when the pressure of other vital matters on the short time at your disposal is so great.

Various meetings which have been held by our organisations, including the South-East Asian Co-operative Ministers' Conference held in Tokyo in April 1964, for which the theme was exactly the same as the wording of item VII on the agenda of this session of the Conference, have revealed a very considerable degree of unanimity on most of the issues involved and the discussions at these meetings have tended to increase the extent of such agreement, both between representatives of different nationalities and between government representatives and the representatives of national co-operative movements.

Since November 1963 we have been encouraging our affiliated organisations to keep in close touch with their national governments, and we have received information of the effective preparations which have been made in many countries. Governments, trade unions and employers have in some cases agreed to include in the membership of their delegation to this session of the Conference a leading member of their co-operative movement, and in other cases designated members of government delegations have consulted with their national co-operative movements to ensure adequate understanding of the opinions held by them and recorded, in most cases, in written reports. Many co-operative movements have reported their views to the International Co-operative Alliance as well as to their governments. Thus it would seem that adequate consultation has taken place during the preparatory period for item VII and should enable this Conference to reach useful and constructive conclusions.

Some points which we have felt to be worthy of particular emphasis at this stage have been recorded in a written paper which we have submitted to the Conference. This paper deliberately refers to all different types of co-operative organisations, although it is realised fully that co-operatives which serve the agricultural community are those which must play a most vital role in the immediate future in most newly developing countries. We have also mentioned some limitations on government action to assist co-operatives, but we have been both reassured and pleased to note the nature of government replies to our questionnaire, which indicate a clear sense of responsibility for government action to sponsor and back co-operatives through legislation, education, and vocational training, and a realisation that co-operatives must be allowed to play a full part in the process of economic planning for development. The growing collaboration between government and co-operatives in the industrialised and the newly developing countries for the giving and receiving of co-operative technical assistance will, we are confident, lead to a really significant improvement in the long-term effect of future technical assistance for co-operatives. We wish to express the appreciation of our organisations for these types of government support and hope that they may continue to increase.

Finally, the International Federation of Agricultural Producers and the International Co-operative Alliance look forward to a period of increasing collaboration with the I.L.O. in the field of co-operative technical assistance, especially in respect of education and training. The proper supervision of co-operative technical assistance projects is vital to their success and yet we note that the co-operative staff of the Co-operative, Rural and Related Institutions Branch has increased by only one since 1948, since which year the I.L.O. membership has doubled and the number of experts employed on co-operative projects has increased from only one to two to about 40. We hope that delegations will continue to give their support to the Co-operative, Rural and Related Institutions Branch, and will allocate to that Branch the highest possible priority when it comes to the approval of its budget.

Mr. PLANT (Representative of the Public Services International) — The Director-General states that he is anxious to have the views of the Conference on the need for formulating a coherent and fully co-ordinated programme of action. He calls it a " programme for the development of social institutions ". There can hardly be a single participant in this Conference who would deny the desirability of a complete and well-balanced design that ensures the perfect interplay of social institutions. However, great things are being achieved most of the time without an all-embracing plan. Forceful men or groups of men take action with valid ideas as their only guide, in response to needs felt in more or less narrow fields. They do not wait because they cannot wait and that is all to the good.

In matters of industrial relations the I.L.O. has formulated and disseminated sound ideas for many years together with a vast amount of relevant knowledge.

The Report of the Director-General to the present session of the Conference is a further contribution to the pool of ideas and knowledge. Among the ideas the following deserves to be thrown into relief: "Governments must also aim at establishing the necessary machinery for the examination and solution of differences which might arise between workers and employers, taking into account the interests of the nation as a whole. The goal of economic growth will not be attained or brought any nearer by the elimination of the very notion of conflict, but rather by attempting to prevent conflicts from arising or, when they do, by applying methods of conciliation, negotiation or arbitration in order to bring out and emphasise the elements in the situation on which a more fruitful co-operation might be built."

Amongst the activities related in Part II of the Report, I noted with particular interest the following: "A significant trend in developing countries is the increase in the number and size of state-owned undertakings. In view of the importance of these undertakings for the national economy, the development of good labour-management relations in the public sector has assumed critical importance, and the government has to set an example in its own undertakings in the private sector. As a result, governments need assistance both in developing a policy for the improvement of these relations and in establishing appropriate personnel departments in these undertakings."

Whilst I acknowledge and appreciate the valuable work done by the I.L.O. in this field, I must also voice discontent in the ranks of the membership of the Public Services International, that is, I.L.O. and their distinguished co-workers, that with the matter are of the opinion that there is no problem here. From time to time even in highly developed countries there comes unrest in one group or another of the large body of public servants. Strikes in the public service and even in government offices do occur and prove the need for creating and perfecting procedures and institutions by which public servants can obtain justice without being driven to inflicting hardship on the public. Technical innovations have the same consequences in the public service as in industry, trade and finance, namely they create difficult transitional problems of a social nature. Whilst it is I.L.O. doctrine that workers' organisations should have their say in economic matters, no such plea is made for the organisations of public servants. They are left out of consideration although the economic issues which arise in highly developed countries just as acutely as in developing countries affect them just as much as they affect wage and salary earners in trade and industry. In the public service there is room for co-operation as well as occasion for conflict in matters of productivity, and the I.L.O. can render society a service in fostering co-operation between public employers and public employees.

Therefore, where there is talk of development of social institutions there should also be an explicit statement of the need to develop the institutions through which government and public authorities in their role of employers, and public servants in their role of workers, deal with each other, conclude their agreements, settle their disputes, join hands in efforts to improve the public service, and share the benefits of economic and technological advance. Two years ago I advocated here the creation of an I.L.O. institution that could make a worthwhile contribution to the development of national institutions concerned with industrial relations in the public service. After referring to the very first step taken in the post-war era to deal with public servants' affairs, namely the decision to convene a group of 15 experts, I said: "We are grateful for the decision to convene this one meeting, but we should be more grateful still if we could have from time to time, at intervals of, say, three to five years, a conference at which we met face to face with our employers and at which we could argue with our employers and hammer out with them a set of agreed principles to be recommended to all public employers and to all public employees' organisations."
In a report to the Governing Body my statement was summarised as "a suggestion that meetings of experts on the conditions of public servants should be held regularly (as had been the case before the war), possibly at intervals of some three to five years". In I.L.O. parlance the term "meeting of experts" has a special significance. I feel it necessary to point out that the words I used should have conveyed the idea of a bipartite body. Meanwhile three international trade union bodies, which are defenders of the public servants' interests, have applied jointly for the creation of an international joint committee for the public service.

The question that preoccupies us now is: When will the I.L.O. act?

The Director-General refers us to the budget for 1966 which reflects next year's plan of action. In that budget there is no provision for any I.L.O. action to follow up the recommendations of the experts on conditions of public servants, or upon the application to set up an international joint committee for the public service, or upon the application to convene a bipartite meeting to deal with the hospital and health services, a branch of the public service in which there are urgent problems to be solved. The study of the 1966 budget has brought home to me a most untoward trend.

Meetings of committees in which employers and workers engaged in the same industry or field of endeavour met face to face in the presence of governments were the new great feature of the post-war I.L.O., introduced at the initiative of Ernest Bevin. They were the logical outcome of the progress and growth achieved by the I.L.O. between the two wars, for after having marked out the main lines of social progress for the benefit of all the people working for wages, it was logical to specialise and to deal with the problems arising in individual sectors of employment. A brief perusal of the ten budgets 1957 to 1966 shows that the share of the I.L.O.'s financial resources devoted to this kind of activity is diminishing constantly. In the budget for 1957 the sum set aside for meetings of Industrial Committees and kindred bodies was 5.1 per cent. of the total expenditure. The percentages for the following years are: 1958—4.4 per cent.; 1959—4.2 per cent.; 1960—4.5 per cent.; 1961—3.8 per cent.; 1962—4.1 per cent.; 1963—2.8 per cent.; 1964—2.6 per cent.; 1965—2.2 per cent.; 1966—2.8 per cent.

This is an illogical development. One essential function of the I.L.O. is to supply a forum where people who have to solve identical or similar problems, who also have to take care of identical or similar social interests, can meet, hammer out common policies designed to improve conditions of life and work and further the cause of justice. Much of this forum activity must of necessity be specialised. That is for a large part the raison d'être of the Office with its staff of over 1,100 people and its budget of over $20 million. It is illogical to provide this vast Secretariat, research institute and publishing house and then to prevent the holding of meetings which the machine is designed to serve.

I understand that further discussions on programme and structure will take place and that the applications concerning public servants are still to be considered. I trust that those who hold the purse strings by which the I.L.O. lives and works will realise that cheeseparing is unconvincing as a way of proving attachment to the institution. Those who hold the strings of the purse can make the I.L.O. useless. Those who wish to ensure that the I.L.O. shall be useful should look closely at the case of the Public Services International, the Postal, Telephone and Telegraph International, and the International Federation of Free Teachers' Unions. These three international bodies of public servants seek to make the I.L.O. serve the interests not only of their members but of the whole of society.

(The Conference adjourned at 4.15 p.m.)
TWELFTH SITTING

Thursday, 10 June 1965, 10 a.m.

President: Mr. Gurinovich

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL:
DISCUSSION (cont.)

Interpretation from Russian: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Gurinovich)—We now continue the discussion of the Director-General's Report.

Mr. CHAMBERS (Employers' delegate, Jamaica)—My first very pleasant task is to offer, Sir, through you, to Mr. Raza, warmest congratulations on his election to the eminent office of President of this Conference, and to wish him and his country every good fortune in the year ahead.

In his present Report the Director-General has wisely, after his full and much-discussed Reports of 1963 and 1964, dealt with only a limited number of general questions bearing on the I.L.O. programme and structure, about which, he feels, there already appears to be a clear consensus in the Conference. The opportunity is now given of confirming, as the Report suggests, this apparent consensus on any of the specified matters and, what is much more important, of pointing out the great desirability for appropriate emphases and orders of priorities of I.L.O. programmes in these fields.

The suggestion that action in the field of better utilisation of the labour force, improving the quality of that force and of enlisting popular support for tasks of national development ought best to be directed principally at problems currently facing developing countries is most warmly welcomed. The rapid narrowing of the gap between current living standards in the developed and developing countries is essential for the very existence, as we know it, of world bodies like the I.L.O.

There must by this time be very few developing countries not able to express gratitude and appreciation for practical and highly skilled help given by the I.L.O. in varying fields of activity. It is in fields of technical assistance that this Organisation can make its greatest and most needed contribution to developing countries such as Jamaica. Very few, if any, of these countries are wanting in aspirations or plans for moving forward towards higher living standards, increased industrial development, fuller employment and a better industrial relations climate securely based on the understanding by employers and workers that each has a responsible part to play in national development. These plans and aspirations can only be helped along by an international labour Convention or Recommendation in a very limited sense. Indeed, instead of providing limited help, the setting by either such instrument of too high a standard can be a great embarrassment to some governments and a cause for a sense of frustration to many people.

Technical aid, which we have already gratefully acknowledged in Jamaica in our social security planning and productivity drives, could well be extended, where this has not yet been done, to training schemes at and for all levels of management and workers. There are the vocational training problems of new entrants to the labour market and of those who have to change jobs because of technological progress in existing industries. There is the need for efficiently organised industrial relations institutes for trade unionists, for personnel managers in government and the private sector, and for others participating in industrial relations discussions and problems. There is the need, too, for the co-ordination of training schemes, whether at an industrial relations institute or a productivity institute or elsewhere, to ensure a balanced approach to industrial relations, management and worker training.

The Director-General has considered it "imperative that the I.L.O. should have a full understanding of the situation in each country and in each region". This is vital and very welcome. Understanding will indeed make it possible for the I.L.O. to support appropriate measures for meeting critical needs in each country and to point out, as the necessity arises, the strength to be gained in all national development thrusts by tripartite consultation and discussion.

As regards standard-setting, to which I have already made brief reference, I do not dispute that international standards were the backbone of the I.L.O. I wished rather to imply that the size and composition of that backbone in the body of present circumstances should be reasonably appropriate. A number of vertebrae require surgery either for complete removal or for extensive manipulation to comply with present conceptions. But we are agreed on this course, and it only remains for the procedures to be laid down and the massive task put in hand.

My strong advocacy that maximum emphasis be placed by this Organisation on practical assistance and aid is advocacy in a very real sense for a type of standard-setting at the national level. An international instrument the terms of which are beyond our present capacity is of little help to us. An instrument to which we can readily agree takes us no further on our way. But the setting up of, for example, a social security scheme or an industrial relations institute with I.L.O.'s advice and assistance, based on the experience and standards of other countries ahead of us, capable of being improved upon but in accordance with our existing means, is a standard indeed for us and for all those countries who aspire to follow suit. These are the types of standard that we would like to adopt in developing Jamaica and, I have no doubt, in other developing countries.

Finally, I heartily endorse the move for giving "the regional conferences and regional advisory committees better and more frequent opportunities to assess the priorities for action within the regions through an evaluation of their social needs and problems". In conformity with the hopes of the Director-General and the wishes of the countries concerned, these regional activities are aimed at ensuring that the I.L.O.'s total programme truly reflects the priorities of actual needs of each country. There could not be a more laudable aim than this for the International Labour Office.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. ARAYA BERNAL (Workers' delegate, Panama)—First of all I should like to congratulate the President most warmly in the name of the Panamanian workers on the confidence shown in him by the Conference and to express our most sincere hope that we will conclude our work successfully under his enlightened guidance.

The Panamanian workers are living in an atmosphere in which there are many employers with a definitely mercenary attitude, which is sometimes carried to the point where they do not understand our problems at all and oppose the workers with violence; they are completely ignorant of the trials of the workers and peasants because, owing to their lack of feeling, they have never deemed to take the time to look seriously at the very grave problems in which our society may be involved.

There have been many cases of individuals who have no knowledge whatsoever of the atmosphere in which the workers exist, who know nothing of our way of thought and of our aspirations; in short, they are in complete ignorance of everything concerning those who have aided them to build up capital to become rich. But this is not all, there are even some who go so far as to consider that to be a worker or the son of a worker means to be incurred by theroughest work and that to be of humble origin means that one has no aspirations for one's own future or the future of one's children.

It is that type of element which constitutes a sector of the Panamanian oligarchy and which hinders any measures in favour of the workers because its own interests would be seriously affected. Their action includes attacking the trade unionists and the exertion of pressure on workers' leaders to prevent them from taking social measures which would improve the situation of the workers. Therefore, it is not to be wondered at that there have been abrupt dismissals of capable officials, who have been replaced by incapable ones. This was what happened to Mr. Rosario Oller de Sarasqueta, a lawyer, who up to about one year ago occupied the post of Inspector General of Labour in my country, simply because he acted against the interests of the United Fruit Company, a North American undertaking which has been established in my country and which is characterised by attacks on freedom of association, the integrity of the workers, and by continual violation of the collective agreements which are in force. This absurd measure was taken in complete violation of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81).

These de facto measures are taken in my country because in that way it is much easier to manipulate the parliamentary blocs so that they cut down, by means of Machiavellian manoeuvres, the share of the national budget earmarked for the government department responsible for everything concerning the I.L.O. and, therefore, for everything relating to the ratification of Conventions and the application of Recommendations, as well as the credits allocated to the departments responsible for advising the competent authorities in order to prevent them from sending reports and from complying with everything affecting our relationship with the I.L.O. This method of hindering the advancement of the workers benefits the selfish interests of bad employers and bad undertakings.

There are also undertakings such as the Hotel Continental, which threw out trade union leaders by physical force with no respect for labour court decisions. Finally, there is a case which occurred only three weeks ago, where a former Minister of State, Mr. Pablo Barés, shut down his shoe-leather factory because we had organised a trade union there. What I have mentioned so far relates to employers as individuals, but we have even more serious cases when the employers act as a group. Thus, recently, CONEP, the National Council of Private Undertakings, a kind of economic Mafia, succeeded through pressure, threats and well-organised publicity campaigns in forcing the resignation of the last two Directors of Revenue, because they were responsible for applying the Tax Reform Act. Because they were serious and responsible officials they had them dismissed. The same thing occurred in respect of the application of the Maternity Act and the Minimum Wage Act. This is just a very brief sketch of what is happening in our country; we feel we must come before this Conference and expose these matters because otherwise we would not be faithful to our trust. Panama has ratified only 11 Conventions, which one could call general types of Conventions, and it has not ratified any of the Conventions on seafarers. Some Conventions are not ratified for the reasons I have indicated above. Sometimes, as in the specific case of seafarers, non-ratification is due to the fact that there are very well entrenched interests which involve international problems at world levels and prevent them from taking social measures which would improve the situation of the workers.
duals who regularly break the law, wherever they may be. As conscientious and responsible workers, the Confederation of Workers of the Republic of Panama has begun to take the necessary steps to achieve its objectives.

The workers of Panama have come to this Conference, in line with the intentions of the Report of the Director-General, in a constructive spirit and not with a view to seeking out points of friction between the nations which make up this Organisation. Therefore, we urge that no mention should be made at this Conference of the Panama Canal Zone—a territory by right under our complete and exclusive sovereignty—as a non-metropolitan territory of the United States, since it would provoke an unforeseen situation at this great Conference and might even affect the future relations of our countries just at the moment when an agreement is being negotiated. I must say that these negotiations are moving along very slowly but Panama is not exactly responsible for this delay.

Finally, I should like to refer to the part of the Director-General's Report where he refers to the reorganisation of the activities of the Organisation under broader categories through the establishment of 11 departments. Although I am not fully acquainted with the staff recruitment policies and procedures of the I.L.O., I do know that very few staff come from what may be called the less powerful countries. This creates a situation unfavourable to our countries—some of our nationals should be employed by the Organisation, of which we are Members with the same rights as all the other Members. Thus, I would propose that, in the same way as considerable thought has been devoted to the programme of entertainments, a fairer recruitment programme should be laid down, not only for the Headquarters in Geneva but also for the future regional offices.

In conclusion, I would convey to you the belief of our Confederation of Workers of the Republic of Panama that all our work must be devoted to man in all his aspects, both spiritual and material—he must be the focus of all action in the social, cultural and economic fields until we finally achieve fulfilment of our aspirations based on the common good and true social justice.

Interpretation from French: Mr. LARAUQUI (Government delegate, Morocco)—I am happy to ask you, Mr. President, to transmit to our friend, Mr. Raza, warm congratulations on the confidence which the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference placed in him when it elected him to direct its proceedings. I am convinced that under his presidency and thanks to his competent assistants the results of the present session will further the economic and social progress of all countries, particularly the developing countries.

I should also like to congratulate the Director-General for the excellent Reports which he submits to the Conference.

The last two sessions of the General Conference have not resulted in a large measure of concordance of views on the very important questions of modifying the programmes and structure of the I.L.O., in order that it may meet as well as possible the needs of a developing world.

Nevertheless, some parts of the comprehensive programme put forward have been welcomed by a large majority, and others, following the resolution adopted last year by the Conference, are to be carefully studied by the Governing Body. We have before us the first report of the Working Party which the Governing Body set up in order to examine this question. This report, having indicated the objectives in the field of human resources development and utilisation, stresses the need for a large-scale programme in this field and the close co-operations which this programme must have with other important programmes, particularly regarding social institutions and conditions of life and work.

An administrative reorganisation was necessary to enable the I.L.O. to follow and co-ordinate all the questions relating to these three fields, and this reorganisation took the form of setting up 11 departments and three large administrative units corresponding to the sectors I have mentioned.

I hope that this new conception of the administrative structure of the I.L.O. will enable it to increase its efficiency in drawing up co-ordinated programmes adjusted to the essential needs of States Members.

But there is one aspect of the reorganisation of the I.L.O. on which I should like to congratulate the Director-General. I refer to the establishment of the Field Department, which was set up following the adoption, at the last session, of a resolution concerning the regional activities of the I.L.O., and following the discussions at the Second African Regional Conference.

The establishment of this department shows the intention of the I.L.O. to continue its efforts towards decentralisation and multiplication of field offices. The increase in the number of States Members requires an increase in the regional activities of the I.L.O.

However, as regards Africa, I think that there are still too few field offices. It would be a good thing, as I pointed out on a previous occasion, to set up a new office in North Africa as soon as possible, because the countries in that region are economically and socially homogeneous and have a sufficiently large population to justify special attention from the I.L.O. I am glad to note that the I.L.O. has created a post of regional co-ordinator for Africa who will co-ordinate the work of the field offices and experts with the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa. I congratulate the Director-General on appointing Mr. Albert Tevoedjet, an outstanding African, to undertake these functions.

This appointment shows clearly that the I.L.O. has had regard to the wishes expressed by the first two African Regional Conferences and has started recruiting more African officials, in accordance with the principle of geographical distribution of posts on the staff. Likewise, it would also be highly desirable, as requested in a resolution adopted at the Second African Regional Conference at Addis Ababa, that there should be close relations between the I.L.O. and the O.A.U., with a view to rationalising, harmonising and intensifying cooperation between these two organisations so as to improve working conditions and assist social progress in the African countries.

I should like now to indicate rapidly the reasons why my country endorses the principles set out in the Director-General's Report regarding the development and utilisation of human resources, harmonisation of labour-management relations, development of social institutions and the improvement of conditions of life and work.

Regarding the utilisation of human resources, it is by creating work for idle manpower and improving manpower in general that the developing countries can raise their standards of living.

These principles have already been applied in Morocco. In order to bring the inhabitants of our marginal zones into the economically active and productive sectors of the nation, we have established a so-called national promotion institute.

In order to mark the importance of this undertaking, which is directly linked to our economic and social development plan, our Constitution has associated it with the plan by means of a body known as the Higher Planning and Promotion Council. The King is the Chairman of the Council, which is composed of ministers, presidents of regional and provincial assemblies and representatives of employers' and workers' organisations.

At the provincial and local level, thanks to the active co-operation of the competent authorities and of the elected representatives of the people, it has been possible to put under-employed rural inhabitants to work on improving the soil and raising their standard of living.

National promotion is a continuous and developing task, aimed at using available resources on investments which will bring maximum advantage to the rural population. In the spirit of its promoter, national promotion is above all a task of human advancement. It corresponds to the philosophy of our Organisation both in its social and in its labour policy, the supreme object of which is the development of man in the world.

In the industrial sector, my country, since it recovered its independence, has been making efforts to improve its manpower. The three-year economic and social development plan, approved by the National Integration and Planning Council and adopted by Parliament, while stressing agriculture and tourism, gives priority to vocational training so that Morocco may have as soon as possible the skilled national workers whom it requires in all fields.

To this end, within our development plan, the number of vocational training centres will be increased and their instructors will be provided by the National Supervisor Training Institute extended and improved thanks to help from the United Nations Special Fund.

I should like to thank the United Nations and the I.L.O. very warmly for the precious aid their experts are bringing to Morocco in this regard.

As regards labour-management relations and social institutions, I should like to say that economic and social development in my country follows I.L.O. standards and has the co-operation of freely established employers' and workers' organisations.

The Moroccan Constitution recognises for all workers and employers the right to join the unions of their choice and guarantees the workers the right to strike.

Lastly, it is indispensable for the I.L.O. to continue to study possible improvements in the conditions of life and work of the workers.

New I.L.O. standards in this field would be of great interest for the developing countries.

My country, which already has social legislation comparable to that of the most developed countries, constantly seeks to improve the well-being of its workers to the extent to which its economic conditions permit.

Measures are now being studied to strengthen the protection of workers against certain occupational diseases, to render industrial medicine more effective, and to extend social security cover to new classes of workers.

In Part II of his Report the Director-General describes the work of the I.L.O. in 1964 and traces the main lines of its programme for 1965.

Examination of this balance sheet reveals that the share in programmes of technical cooperation accruing to Africa has increased from 30.2 per cent. in 1963 to 31.5 per cent. in 1964. This increase is only proper in view of the increased number of African member States since the 48th Session.

I take this opportunity of congratulating the new member States, Malawi, Malta, Yemen and Zambia, and I welcome their representatives to this session.

Among outstanding I.L.O. activities in 1964, I am glad to welcome the holding of the Second African Regional Conference at Addis Ababa in December last. The Conference, which brought together representatives of 35 African countries, shows that these countries make up a powerful group determined to play a role of increasing importance on the international scene.

The decentralisation of I.L.O. activities and the training of its regional organs will increase its efficiency, but the powers of the regional conferences should also be extended and their sessions should be held more frequently so that they may more closely follow the developments and needs and particular problems of our countries.

I should like now to stress certain questions included in the agenda of the present session. The questions of young workers engaged on underground work in mines and the employment of women with family responsibilities, which we examined last year in a first discussion, are now the subject of proposed Conventions or Recommendations. I hope there will now be a large majority in favour of adopting these instruments which will protect the health of the young worker and enable women with family responsibilities to combine their natural obligations with those arising from their employment.

The item on agrarian reform must receive particular attention from representatives of developing countries, which are seeking profitable methods and which will be glad to benefit from international experience in this clear-sighted guidance of His Imperial Majesty, the Shah, with the support of the whole nation.

Our agrarian reform has abolished the old system of land holding and has given to the mass of the peasantry complete independence in farming the land.

The emancipation of women, and their equality with men in so far as concerns social rights, was another goal of our peaceful revolution. Women today enjoy the right to elect and to be elected, they have taken social positions, even the very highest; and equal pay for equal work is a right of which they are assured.

The sharing of the workers in the profits of undertakings was another item in this reform. Thus the workers have had their real wages increased, and it is now possible for them to sign collective agreements with the employers on an equal footing.

Along the lines of the three objectives touched on in the Report concerning the strategy of human resources, and taking into consideration the very great need for strengthening the social situation in the villages, the surplus of persons eligible for national service are members of the new armies of education, of hygiene and rural development.

Members of the army of education—those holding diplomas of secondary or higher studies—work to abolish illiteracy among the peasants. They open up for the peasants doors to a better life by bringing instruction and basic education to the most isolated parts of the country. The results achieved have been so encouraging that our Shah has invited the leaders of all countries to come and see for themselves the success which has been attained and has urged them to collaborate in the organisation of the campaign against ignorance.

As a result of this great initiative, it was decided that a Conference on world illiteracy would be convened at Teheran in September next under the auspices of U.N.E.S.C.O.

With regard to manpower, very far-reaching activities have been carried out. The problems studied in the Report—such as the problem of evaluation of manpower needs, planning of manpower and organisation, employment, vocational training, training of supervisory staff—all these questions have been given appropriate consideration.

Since these social and human activities must receive concrete expression in material production and in services which will be useful to the population in order to finally achieve their welfare, maximum efforts have been made to increase production, both national and overseas, and to extend employment possibilities, and in these fields we have achieved satisfactory results.

However, the progress of developing countries is conditional upon international factors. I have already stressed here that the basic questions, part of which were examined by the international Conference on Trade and Development, still influence the system of production and employment in the developing countries. It is impossible to get an idea of the social progress of a country if account is not taken of the context in which it takes place. In their foreign relations, developing countries have to face problems arising out of organic antagonisms. If there is not an atmosphere favourable to their advancement at the world level they will not be able to overcome their difficulties by depending solely on the competence of experts.

As I have stated in the past from this rostrum, one of the characteristics of our era is that wealth and opulence in one part of the world give rise to poverty and misery in the other. A solution must be found to this antagonism between rich and poor countries.

The progress of technology and the world increase in productivity was the cause of the fact that the exports of the industrialised countries to the developing countries increased by 98 per cent.: from $10,650 million they rose to $21,000 million. During the same period the exports from the developing countries to the industrialised countries rose from $13,220 million to $20,660 million, which corresponds to a 56 per cent. increase.

However, one should not look at figures alone. The increase in income arising from the exports of developing countries has been obtained at the cost of a rapid increase in the rate of production to meet, on the one hand, the fall in the price of raw materials exported and, on the other hand, the rise in the price of the manufactured goods imported.

The external balance of payments of these countries thus shows a constantly growing deficit. I was not wrong when I said that the growth of the production of developing countries is truly a growth which leads to impoverishment.

I should like to know, therefore, to what extent and in what way the new structure of the Organisation will permit the implementation of the views expressed in the Report regarding the determination of priorities for measures for joint guidance in the future activities of these countries.

The essential object at which the Organisation must aim is to adjust its programmes to the requirements of the development by stages of the developing countries. However, the speed of annual increase in national income of 5 per cent. contemplated in the United Nations Development Decade does not seem sufficient, having regard to the need for growth which the developing countries face. Merely to repeat that the economic, social and political capacities of these countries do not permit more, unfortunately means that in face of the rapid progress of the industrially advanced countries the rate of expansion of the developing countries can only be slow. But then the present gap would only be extended and the relations stemming from the present situation will continue for a long time yet.

Achievement of the progressive national and international aspirations places new burdens on the I.L.O., which will not be able to meet the desire for peace of our peoples and their immense needs by the utilisation of ordinary methods alone. It must adjust its programme to its functions in order to have valid criteria for the evaluation of social progress.

In my opinion the policy of full employment would be one of these criteria, for it is particularly by full employment and the consequent economic development that the developing countries will be able to solve their present problems. We know that in order to reach the objective of full employment we must first of all increase the savings destined for investment and bring the private sector into line with the objective of maximum utilisation of human and productive resources. We must then work out a plan for directing national economy, controlling foreign trade and inducing the industrialised countries to take action in favour of the developing countries and to take any other action which will be useful in this regard.

By concentrating its resources and potential and taking full employment as its criterion, the I.L.O. can, in co-operation with the specialised institutions of the United Nations, evaluate the needs of the developing countries and bring precious aid to the acceleration of their progress and the attenuation of their difficulties. Furthermore, the effective application of the standards contained in the Conventions and Recommendations depends on the implementation of the basic principles which I have mentioned.

Although the Report is devoted to certain particular technical points, I had hoped that in the present international situation the Director-General would have made at least a brief allusion to the urgency of consolidating universal peace. I am sure that the Director-General has the same feelings as I do in this regard.

We must mobilise all our resources to lead to the comprehension which will banish poverty and put an end to the production of the means of collective destruction with a view to introducing instead peaceful competition on the path of progress and welfare.

We attach very great importance to this universal comprehension. To achieve it we must struggle methodically against racial discrimination and against colonialism in whatever form. It is with keen interest, therefore, that my Government has ratified the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958.

How happy it would be if mankind could soon recognise that we have learned from experiences which, if they were renewed, would destroy the heritage of our ancient civilisations. How consoling it would be to find that we had succeeded in peacefully eliminating the bases for potential war and for the antagonism between wealth and poverty. I hope that the distinguished representatives will examine these problems in a realistic spirit and will take this opportunity of strengthening friendship and solidarity between nations, in the common search for paths which will lead to peaceful coexistence and a prosperous life free from all destructive antagonisms, for this is precisely the object for which the I.L.O. was set up.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. GOROSH-KIN (Government delegate, U.S.S.R.)—At the outset I should like to welcome the representatives of the new member States—Zambia, Malta, Malawi and Yemen—which have joined the family of the International Labour Organisation.

At the last two sessions of the International Labour Conference, the 47th and 48th, we examined in detail questions connected with the programme of activities of the I.L.O., its structure and methods of work. In this respect, the 49th Session is really a continuation of the last two sessions. In his Report to the present session of the Conference the Director-General, basing himself on the exchanges of views that have taken place in the past, develops certain ideas and proposals to the effect that the activities of the I.L.O. should be directed in three basic programme areas—namely, the development of human resources, labour relations, and the improvement of living and working conditions. One must agree, of course, with the timeliness of these problems. Their solution would undoubtedly contribute to improving the social and economic position of the workers. But that is only part of the problem. I do not think anyone will deny that the International Labour Organisation can carry out its mission, its constitutional tasks, only if there is lasting peace in the world. That is the primary condition if the position of the workers is to be improved. Therefore delegates to this Conference are quite right to be concerned about the future of the world, and to be anxious that activities in support of peace should play a proper part in the I.L.O.'s programme.

We have heard from this rostrum expressions of alarm about the dangerous situation in many parts of the world where blood is flowing and people are being subjected to great suffering. How can the International Labour Organisation remain aloof from these dangerous happenings which are such a threat to peace? How can it deal calmly and unconcernedly with the routine problems of its programme, discussing conditions of life and work, when in the Indo-Chinese peninsula overt aggression is being carried out against a sovereign State, the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, whose territory is being subjected to systematic bombing? Here at this Conference we talk about the improvement of living and working conditions, yet in Viet-Nam human lives are being cut short, towns and villages are being devastated.

Of course, this is not the first time that peoples have been the victims of gunboat diplomacy and the policy of the big stick. History contains many sombre pages when the imperialist Powers have swamped national strivings for liberation in a sea of blood. But those times are past and can never return. The peoples of the world will not permit a situation in which, in order to salvage decaying régimes perched precariously on the points of alien bayonets, the elementary standards of international law are violated with impunity, the elementary standards of living and working conditions of the workers and the improvement of living and working conditions. Such a threat exists in Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic, and no one can be unaware that threat and bears the responsibility.

The Soviet people are ardent champions of peace. We know only too well what a war would mean today. The Soviet people suffered untold and innumerable losses in the last war. It cost us more than 20 million human lives, together with terrible destruction which the Fascist barbarians left in their wake in our towns and villages. Expressing the fundamental interests of the Soviet people, the Soviet Government devotes itself tirelessly to maintaining and consolidating peace. We consistently uphold the principle of peaceful co-existence between States with different social systems and endeavour to extend these principles to all States, large and small, seeking to ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial inviolability of every State. We are in favour of general and fruitful co-operation between countries, which includes the international organisations and this present session of the Conference, but we are opposed to this mockery of the very concept of co-operation. One cannot look at questions of co-operation through the bomb-sights of modern jet warplanes. We resolutely join our voice to the world-wide condemnation of American imperialist aggression in Indo-China and the Caribbean Sea.

Today more than ever before it is important to mobilise all forces in the struggle against the military threat in order to achieve lasting and stable peace in the world, without which progress is impossible, especially social and economic progress. The Soviet Union will give its full support to I.L.O. measures designed to strengthen peace and extend co-operation between all peoples in order to raise the standard of living of the workers and improve their working conditions. The Soviet Government delegation considers it its duty to call the attention of delegates to the Conference to the need to increase the I.L.O.'s activities designed to strengthen peace in the world and with a view to achieving general and complete disarmament. The I.L.O. must devote special attention to the economic and social consequences of disarmament and its effect on the workers' conditions, and it should undertake investigation on that subject.

We believe that the main emphasis in such investigation should be directed to problems of employment and unemployment, vocational training and retraining, the utilisation of the resources thus released for the implementation of social measures designed in the first place to raise the standard of living of the people and improve working conditions, as well as assistance to developing countries. The Soviet Government delegation considers it its duty to call the attention of delegates to the Conference to the need to increase the I.L.O.'s activities designed to strengthen peace in the world and with a view to achieving general and complete disarmament. The I.L.O. must devote special attention to the economic and social consequences of disarmament and its effect on the workers' conditions, and it should undertake investigation on that subject.

We fully support the resolution presented by the delegation of the Ukraine, which is directed towards these aims. We hope this resolution will receive the understanding and support of the delegates to this Conference.

In its activities the I.L.O. must also bear in mind and support the struggle for the independence of peoples still languishing under colonial domination and should take effective measures to uphold the rights of the workers in those countries. The South African rulers unashamedly ignore the decisions of the United Nations and the demands made in the Declaration adopted at the 48th Session of our Conference. They are strengthening discriminatory racist laws against the indigenous population, broadening the area of their application and intensifying the persecution of anyone opposing the policy of apartheid.

In a special Declaration the 48th Session of the Conference urgently called upon all governments, trade unions and employers to take every possible step to compel the South African Government to give up its shameful policy of apartheid. It is a matter for regret that the I.L.O. report ignores the question of the implementation by member States of the provisions of this Declaration. The Soviet dlegation considers it essential that future
Office reports concerning the implementation of this Declaration should contain proper information on the measures being taken by member States in response to the appeal by the Conference.

I must also draw the attention of the Conference to the need to put an end to the delays in preparing a specific and comprehensive programme of measures designed to combat the evil consequences of colonialism in the social and labour fields. Such a programme aimed at promoting the economic and social progress of the developing countries should concentrate on the paramount objective of the elimination of the vestiges of racial and other discrimination in labour relations, training of a national skilled labour force, drafting of progressive labour legislation, industrialisation of the economy, and progressive agrarian reform.

As regards extension of the democratic rights of the workers and their organisations, it is important and urgent to ensure that trade union rights and freedoms are safeguarded, that anti-trade union laws and practices are eliminated, and that the role of the workers and their unions in preparing and carrying out various measures of an economic and social nature is enhanced.

The time has come for action instead of words with regard to changing the structure of the Organisation, about which so much has been said at past sessions. We believe that the present structure and procedure of the I.L.O. require urgent and considerable change. We cannot, as some suggest, let the passage of time take care of this vital job. This would be to encourage the conservative forces in their striving to perpetuate obsolete practices in this Organisation. The I.L.O. must democratise its structure and methods of work and establish an atmosphere of genuine international co-operation inside the Organisation. It is only due to the absence of genuine democracy and the arbitrary rule of certain delegations that the representatives of the socialist countries are deprived of their chance to serve as officers on the various committees of this session of the Conference.

In accordance with a universally recognised principle of international law, all member States, irrespective of their size, population, political system or level of economic development, should be given equal opportunity to participate actively in the business of the Organisa­tion. There must be proper representation of all member States, of the various trade union trends, and of the various forms of management in all the bodies of the I.L.O.
and, first and foremost, in the Governing Body.
Of course, it is not enough to recognise this right in words only. The resolution submitted by the Polish and Ukrainian Government delugations to this session of the Conference is a sound basis for settling this problem. It respects the interests of all member States who are eager to strengthen the International Labour Organisation and enhance the effectiveness of its work. We support this resolution and call upon delegates to do likewise.

We also support the resolution submitted by Workers' delegates of Yugoslavia concerning the protection of the rights of Spanish workers.

May I conclude by expressing the conviction of the Soviet delegation that awareness of our responsibilities will move all delegations to adopt a constructive and businesslike approach in discussing the problems before this Conference with a view to strengthening cooperation between peoples and consolidating peace throughout the world.

Interpretation from Italian: Mr. DELLE
FAVE (Minister of Labour and Social Welfare, Italy)—Speaking at this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference I should like first of all to express our great appreciation to the Director-General for the complete and thorough way in which the questions on our agenda are handled in the Office's various reports. These are problems of great importance which bear witness to the fruitful character of I.L.O. action within the wider framework of its international activities. The Director-General has also prepared a Report tracing the main lines of the programme and structure of the
I.L.O. in the future.

In the name of the Italian Government I am glad to confirm here as Minister of Labour and Social Welfare our entire support for the general programme of future activity of the I.L.O. which the Director-General summarises so well in his Report. We agree that in order to elaborate a constructive social policy at the interna­tional level, it is necessary, in order to reach our objectives, to know the character of the various factors operating in all economic systems and to act effectively in the light of the limited resources available.

The new internal structure of the I.L.O., because of its flexibility, will be able to meet these requirements and certainly contribute to the achievement of the objectives indicated by the Director-General, that is to say to satisfy increasingly the social needs of man, both as individual and as member of a group of workers in a system of democracy and freedom. These objectives have always characterised the econo­ ic and social policy of my country, and these are the same objectives which my Government now pursues even though methods and means may have been radically changed.

This is the fundamental reason explaining the attachment of Italy to the I.L.O., an attachment of which the Italian Government has recently given new proof by making an offer regarding the establishment of the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training in Turin, which will begin to operate in a few months. I take this opportunity of thanking the other countries which have been so kind as to participate, or which will participate, financially in establishing and operating the Centre, and I wish it every success. May it contribute in a decisive manner to the development of vocational training, particularly in the developing countries.
My country also has for some time been going through a phase of rapid, indeed impetuous development. The many complex problems arising in similar situations in all countries are reflected in the financial, economic and social policy of Italy. There has been an unexpected upsurge in the activities of capital and labour quite outside any planned system of development, because lack of time prevented us from drawing up or imposing such a system.

It was necessary at a certain point to impose prudence and moderation on this unrestrained outburst, and we therefore had a period of recession, which extended throughout 1964. During this period it was not possible to avoid a reversal of the tendency towards ever-increasing employment; in consequence, both employment and the number of man-hours worked showed a decrease.

We have now managed to block this recession, thanks to the joint action of producers and workers and to the sacrifices made to overcome the many difficulties.

One must recognise the Government's merit in following, during this difficult period, a far-seeing and courageous policy in all fields, ranging from the financial to the economic and social sectors. In social affairs we have followed two trends. We have given the necessary support to alleviate the workers' lot by measures to raise the maximum assistance provided for unemployed and temporarily discharged workers. Secondly, we have sought to turn the situation itself to the advantage of the workers by using their services more rationally with a view to radical long-term reforms.

Among the first social measures taken last year and early in 1965 we must mention some which characterise the policy of the Government during the period of recession. The integration of industrial workers' wages, a system intended to ensure regularity in wages irrespective of fluctuations in the economy, has been, as in the past, a safety valve for the difficulties created by reduction or suspension of production. However, this principle was recently modified in order to adjust it to the new economic and social requirements, and to bring it closer also to the principle of the guaranteed wage by increasing the benefits provided for by the new Act.

This new method also concerns the building trades, where the allowance now reaches 80 per cent. of the wages not received.

A unique measure, even if somewhat imperfect and empirical, is that known as the social charges levy. The State takes over temporarily or permanently the task of contributing to the social charges borne by employers. In this way the Government has reduced the social burdens imposed on industry and has contributed to the reduction of labour costs. This has enabled it to reduce dismissals and avoid reductions in production.

The impact of this system goes, however, beyond the immediate economic objective. It can be seen, for example, in certain forms of insurance which are now borne by the community at large rather than by the individual, or in which private guarantees are replaced by state guarantees, or, again, in the situations in which this system serves to eliminate serious financial imbalance so as to facilitate reforms which in the near future will undoubtedly lead to a system of social security.

The effects can be seen in three different directions: in the administration of tuberculosis insurance, which is now totally at the expense of the State; in the abolition of the subsidy which was previously paid by industry to agriculture and which is now also paid by the State; and in the fact that a recent Bill deals with the necessary reform of compulsory invalidity and old-age insurance for wage earners and independent workers.

The Italian Government and Parliament, apart from this multilateral action, have been extremely active with a view to establishing more modern systems for the progress of the workers. A Bill respecting the protection of conditions of employment is now before Parliament. It modifies the regulations governing the employment of young persons with a view to ensuring for them a protection corresponding to the rapid and actual progress of recent years and to bringing Italian legislation into greater harmony with the international labour Conventions.

Regarding occupational safety and health, a constant study and re-examination of the provisions in force has been undertaken with a view to guaranteeing the best possible physical protection of the workers taking account of the accelerated technological development. We have also been active in vocational training with a view to intensifying and improving at all levels the organisation and training of young and older workers, employed or not. We intend subsequently to introduce legislation to reform this whole complex field, with a view to a permanent solution of the problem on the basis of a five-year plan.

Unlike some other fields where laws and regulations often mark fundamental stages of real progress, in labour relations developments must be marked more by the way and the action of the parties concerned than by legislation and regulation on the part of the authorities, and the Government must respect this freedom of action. The Italian Government, and particularly the Ministry of Labour, have followed and always will follow this principle which is fundamental to any democratic régime. Even if disadvantages result from this attitude, we nevertheless have cause for satisfaction, as the trade unions in industry, thanks to a big effort at mutual comprehension, have recently reached two agreements which will be important stages in the history of collective bargaining in my country. I refer to the interconfederal agreement of 29 April 1965 on individual dismissals, and the interconfederal agreement of 5 May 1965 on reduction of personnel.

The first agreement profoundly changes not only the previous collective bargaining situation but also the rules still in force in our positive law, which the Government will seek to modify in the near future by legislation, following the invitation extended no later than yesterday by the Constitutional Court to Parliament and to the Government.

However, this initiative cannot and must not modify the will of the parties. It must be aimed exclusively at modifying and ordering the regulations in force on the subject, in the light of international labour Recommendations, while safeguarding the conditions, procedures and rules for which provision is made in collective agreements and union agreements.

The second of the two interconfederal agreements, that governing reduction of personnel, is particularly important in the political and social life of our country, for it contains a joint declaration by the two contracting parties envisaging a new type of relationship between trade unions and public authorities in the delicate field of employment. These results have been possible mainly because the Italian Government aims, as I have said, at the permanent objectives of justice and freedom, to be attained by a thorough renewal of methods and means.

The formula of political co-operation, which for the first time in Italy has led the Socialists to co-operate with the Christian Democrats and other democratic parties, is a new factor. As regards action planned, the five-year plan for the Italian economy is also a new item. By regarding the economy as a whole, this plan aims at correcting the imbalance which still exists in some sectors and regions.

Of course, it is impossible for everything to be perfect, and there are still big difficulties to overcome. However, the many innovations in my country contribute objectively to the renewal of our laws and regulations in a democratic spirit and to the creation of new instruments, more modern instruments, aiming at integrating liberty with justice and illuminating justice by freedom in complete respect for our institutions and our international commitments.

I have been glad and honoured to be able to discuss at this world labour parliament some of the principal themes of Italy's social policy, and we shall follow with great interest the action taken and the progress achieved by other countries with a view to benefiting from these experiences ourselves. This process of intermingling which goes forward within the living realities of the world of labour which I referred to a moment ago, the Report gives an account of a meritorious and praiseworthy effort of adaptation to the diversity of economic and social situations. Thanks to this guarantee of realism in its desire for efficiency, the Director-General's Report has received the full attention and friendly interest of the Government of the Republic of Gabon.

In itself the reorganisation of the structure of the International Labour Office constitutes a programme to the extent that, according to the opinion of the Director-General, it will make it possible to get to the heart of the problem. In this connection, we have noted with satisfaction the reshaping of the Office in departments covering homogeneous entities which represent a basis for coherent programmes. The titles used—human resources, development and social situations. Thanks to this guarantee of human resources, development of social institutions, conditions of work and life, international labour standards, express in a dynamic way the responsibilities of the Office. The first of these titles is of particular importance in that it goes straight to the heart of our problem by implying, as a fundamental thesis, the development and utilisation of human resources which, in a world subscribing to modern legal concepts of labour relations, no longer exclusively subordinated to economic factors but rather define those factors. We give all the more hearty support to this idea because my country, Gabon, already possesses comprehensive labour legislation; the Gabonese workers for a number of years now, as far as social institutions are concerned, have enjoyed well-organised systems and schemes in the fields of family allowances, compensation for employment injury and occupational disease, as well as old-age insurance for wage earners. Thus we are led to feel that the law-making and standard-setting activity of the Organisation, no matter how important it may be, is no longer of first priority. We would like rather to give our main interest in the future to programmes of education and training in order to raise our human resources to the level of the standards already in existence, subsequently raising them even further in the light of new standards or, where necessary, revised standards, which we will work out together.

We believe in fact that the guiding principle of the Director-General’s Report points in this direction. In this connection, we were struck by the vigorous words referring to modification of the I.L.O.’s approach so that there will not be just negative protection but rather a positive policy for the improvement of the well-being, security and social conditions of the worker. This positive policy must be reflected in the worker’s promotion, in his adaptation to new techniques which, as they have already been introduced in my country, will be able to break the chains of under-development and give rise to the multiplying effects of economic expansion and social progress.

Thus it is along this road of vocational training that Gabon is determined to move in future in order to meet the needs of expansion of its sectors of activity, of which forestry, mining and commerce are the most important for us. To meet the increase in the need for skilled manpower, we must make all members of the active population able to participate more and more effectively in the economic activities of the country, both industrial and rural. In this connection, we are developing health and educational measures with a view to giving greater value to the human being as the main factor—the raison d’être—of all the programmes of development. Thus we may observe that if we were not moved by a spirit of humanism and social concern we would be forced to act by necessity and by a sense of realism. Thus, although our ideas are generous in their scope they are never utopian, and our social measures are always in line with our possibilities, to stimulate them and not to go beyond our scope. Thus, by doubling the rate of family allowances last year, by extending the scheme of maternity allowances to all mothers and by instituting guarantees to workers dismissed for economic reasons, by increasing by 21.2 per cent. the minimum wage for all workers, by linking that wage to the workers’ consumer price index, we have yielded to no pressure, but we have rather tried to meet freely and with all willingness the justified requirements of the workers within the spirit of our national community.

In this attempt to continue the improvement in the conditions of the worker, we are giving particular attention to the questions on the agenda of our Conference.

Mining is of very great importance in the economy of Gabon. Extraction of uranium ore, manganese, petroleum and—in the near future—iron augurs well for future development. With very modern equipment in these activities, particularly equipment for the protection of face workers, and with the very careful medical organisation, particularly by systematic check-ups, we have very advanced means of protection and standards. Whilst, in accordance with regulations, the workers in question are to be advised under the age of 18 even in open-cast mines, which covers manganese and uranium ore in present conditions, the Government of my country is nevertheless prepared to make use of all the directives given in this connection by the I.L.O., if the economic situation should some day lead it to modify the situation on conditions of recruitment for work in mineral activities.

In connection with the employment of women, a subject already studied very closely by the African Regional Conference at Addis Ababa, we do not deny that employment of women is a factor in social emancipation. However, the fundamental role of women in the cohesion of the family structure must not be affected by their admission to the ranks of workers. We must also see to it that our population growth does not suffer. Thus we have decided to pursue, with the assistance of the I.L.O., the policy undertaken already by my Government in setting up suitable social facilities, in particular maternity protection centres, children’s protection centres, crèches and kindergartens. My Government will give favourable attention to any recommendation which this Conference might make in connection with the employment of women who have family responsibilities.

Finally, the vast problems evoked by the study of agrarian reform and the role of co-operatives are at the forefront of the action to be taken in rural development, but are often very delicate matters from the economic and sociological viewpoint and are so very closely associated with the harmonious growth of our cities, our villages and our countryside. My country will give all the more attention to the information and aid, where appropriate, which the I.L.O. may give in this field, because it is concerned in promoting, along with industrial development, a rural policy closely linked with a programme for the regrouping of villages and the creation of settlements by persuasion, not by force or by laws. This programme has been worked out in accordance with the economic lines of communication, roads and subsequently railways, in order to balance urban and agricultural activities so that they may be mutually complementary and development may be fully effective in its economic and human aspects.

As regards the various social aspects of our development, we are counting more and more on the experience and effective help of the Office as a result of the decentralisation which the Director-General has called for.

We expect that such measures will favour in particular the taking into consideration of the achievements and experience in the regional framework, although perhaps the Office would not be the direct initiator of such action. It would also appear desirable that experts should be fully briefed on the conditions at the regional level in their field. Similarly any alterations and corrections recommended by the Office when the programmes are implemented should in all cases be submitted clearly to the national authorities who have to ratify these plans. These authorities, after all, bear the final responsibility for the execution of the programmes and are in no way relieved of that responsibility when they make use of foreign and outside technical experts.

In this connection, the creation of the Field Department seems to us to express a desire to adapt the Office’s activities in line with the hope expressed by the recent Second African Regional Conference.

However, whilst I endorse wholeheartedly the setting up of field offices having more extensive resources and wider responsibilities, I do not subscribe to the same extent to the creation of a department which will be competent only for the countries coming under the head of developing countries. We do not want to be a special, reserved field of action, a kind of pilot plot or experimental field of development which, under the pretext of specialisation, would be kept outside the society of States more technically advanced. If necessary, we would attack such a tendency as being contrary to our aspirations.

We therefore conceive regionalisation, first and foremost, as a means of action, not an end in itself. But this means of action, in order to be completely in accord with its objectives, implies a broader participation of Africans in the Office at Geneva and, even more, in the regional centres.

The observations which we have just made will lead, without doubt, to certain adjustments which will make us ever more appreciative of the activities of the Office. These activities, which are the activities of the Organisation itself, affect all of us and their diversity is an invitation to us to develop an understanding of the problems of others. But before we go forth, strengthened by a solemn condemnation of all forms of racial discrimination, particularly apartheid, this spirit of understanding must be based on a respect for human values. It is in this desire for fruitful co-operation that we proclaim as another basic need the respect for national sovereignty and the condemnation of any subversive moves aimed at dissection or conquest. We recognise the active concern which exists in the I.L.O. for those values, which are the very foundation of peace and social progress to which we pledge our full support.

Interpretation from Czech: Mr. PAŠEK (Workers' delegate, Czechoslovakia)—After the discussion at the last two sessions of the International Labour Conference in 1963 and 1964, an important task is now before us at this session; to consider to what extent the proposals submitted concerning the changes in the programme and structure of the I.L.O. correspond to the basic object of the whole discussion, that is, to adapt the activities of this Organisation to the requirements and needs of present development in the world.

The Czechoslovak trade unions submitted their views and proposals on the content of the matters discussed at the 160th Session of the Governing Body and distributed to Members of the Organisation their proposals dealing with the programme and structure of the I.L.O. At the last session of the General Conference two resolutions were adopted with the aim of contributing to further progress in this field.

The Director-General informs us in Part I of his Report of the progress in implementing both these resolutions and deals with three major areas: the I.L.O. programme. The programme and structure of the I.L.O. are very closely connected. In my opinion the programme and its application depend on the way in which the organs and bodies of the I.L.O. are composed, and on whether a just and proportional representation without any discrimination is guaranteed.

I cannot therefore agree with the fact that this year's Report of the Director-General is devoted only to questions concerning the programme, and does not even deal with the programme as a whole, but only with those questions on which, according to the Report, unanimity or general agreement were achieved and which are less controversial. Nor can I agree with a situation in which the solution of problems of great importance is being repeatedly postponed to a later date. This is done in spite of the fact that a large majority at the last session of the General Conference agreed on the necessity of solving important questions relating to the structure of the I.L.O. In my opinion the absence in the Report of any proposal concerning changes in the structure of the I.L.O. is a shortcoming.

On the other hand, however, the Report does contain some positive proposals in relation to those programme areas which it covers. I have in mind, namely, the proposals concerning the activities of the I.L.O. in the sphere of protection of the status of workers by legislation or collective bargaining, both within the undertaking and in society as a whole: security of employment; development and extension of social security; status of rural workers, etc.

Yet I think that, despite the number of proposals submitted and the sincere efforts of many delegates, no significant progress has been made as regards the question of adapting the structure and the programmes of the I.L.O. to the needs of the present world.

A number of problems relating to the programmes are not mentioned at all or are mentioned only very briefly in the Report of the Director-General. In this connection I should like to draw your attention mainly to the questions of the legal status of the workers, the rights of workers and trade unions in undertakings, and the protection of the workers' representatives. The I.L.O. cannot remain passive as far as these questions are concerned. The international standards of the I.L.O. have an important part to play in these fields. It is necessary, in view of present developments, to lay down in the I.L.O. corresponding standards on working conditions, and on the status and the rights of workers.

Therefore, existing Conventions should be revised as soon as possible by the I.L.O. and new Conventions should be worked out in which the following principles should be embodied: the right to work; the right to strike; the rights of trade unions to negotiate on working conditions with the management of undertakings; the guarantee of trade union rights for all workers; free administration of trade union funds without any supervision by governments and employers; the right of trade unions to participate freely in international activities and solidarity campaigns. The inclusion of these important rights of the workers and trade unions in I.L.O. standards would help to protect effectively the rights and just demands of the workers.

In connection with these questions I should like to stress the ever-growing need to revise the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948, (No. 87), and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). These Conventions do not contain any provisions for protecting workers against attacks and manoeuvres on the part of the capitalist employers. They should cover all the basic demands which I mentioned above.

I shall not enumerate here in detail all the trade union rights which should be laid down in these Conventions, since our trade union organisation has already quoted them in the suggestions on Governing Body document G.B.160/5/15. Apart from that—and I should like to draw the attention of all delegates to this fact—these questions were included in the memorandum submitted by the Secretariat of the World Federation of Trade Unions to the Director-General on 6 November 1964, containing detailed and concrete proposals for the revision of Conventions Nos. 57 and 98.

As I have already mentioned, I do not agree with the past actions and problems connected with changes in the structure of the I.L.O. have not been submitted for discussion at this session. I consider this to be a serious shortcoming which should be rectified.

I should like to mention once again at least two questions, the speedy solution of which I, as a Workers' delegate, consider to be specially necessary and important.

So far, no concrete effective measures have been taken against the discrimination to which trade union organisations affiliated with the W.F.T.U. in the Workers' group of the Governing Body are subjected. The elimination of this state of affairs—namely that none of these organisations is represented in the Governing Body—has not so far been obtained either by increasing the number of members of the Governing Body or by any other means, although some useful proposals were submitted in this direction.

I have in mind the draft resolution on changes in the regulations governing the election of members of the Workers' group of the Governing Body, submitted by the Workers' delegate from Poland at the 48th Session of the Conference.

It is regrettable that this resolution was not discussed at all, since it contained positive proposals for putting an end to this unjustifiable and abnormal situation and to the strong discrimination in the Workers' group of the Governing Body against the organisations affiliated to the W.F.T.U. Therefore I propose and recommend that this question of just representation in the Governing Body be discussed and solved at this session of the Conference, with a view to the fact that new elections to the Governing Body will be taking place next year.

The second serious question concerns the necessity of strengthening the position of the Conference as the supreme and most representative body of this Organisation. Up to now it has never been stated how it is proposed that this problem, which was raised in a democratic manner by a majority of the delegates, be solved. In my opinion, with the questions concerning the structure of the I.L.O., the just representation of the socialist countries and their trade union organisations in other bodies of the I.L.O. has also to be solved.

I should like to remind you, in the first place, of the results of the 161st Session of the Governing Body this year, when the members of the Industrial Committees were elected. The fact that Czechoslovakia was elected to only one Industrial Committee—the Iron and Steel Committee—although it had applied for membership in six committees, and, finally, the fact that it was not re-elected to the Metal Trades Committee, in which it had worked for years, prove that it is time to put an end to the discriminatory tendencies of certain circles against the socialist countries and their trade union organisations.

In concluding my statement, I should like to draw attention once again to the urgency of a quick and effective solution of all the problems connected with the adaptation of the I.L.O. to present developments in the world.

When speaking about the need to adapt our Organisation to the needs of our times, I have in mind the reinforcing of its ability to attain its goals.

It is obvious, of course, that the process of social progress in the world calls for not only these conditions which I would call internal, but also conditions which I would call external. The Conference would certainly agree with me that peace is one of the most basic conditions, since the attainment of the goals of this Organisation requires both wide co-operation in the international field as well as normal conditions of peace inside every country.

Therefore, in my opinion, our Organisation must reject and condemn most severely any behaviour which endangers the existence of such a favourable atmosphere, and, all the more so, behaviour which threatens the very existence of mankind.

I have in mind the extremely dangerous manoeuvres of the United States interventionists in Viet-Nam, where they have not stopped at employing means of mass extermination, including the use of chemical weapons, against the people of South Viet-Nam. But through the barbarian and unprecedented bombing of the territory of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, which forms a part of their plan of escalation of the war, they threaten the very foundations of world peace.

I have in mind also United States intervention in the Dominican Republic, which represents a reckless attempt to intimidate the peoples of Latin America as far as free choice of their own government is concerned.

I deemed it necessary to say a few words on these two burning international problems since I feel there is a direct connection between them and our present deliberations—a direct connection in the sense that while the welfare of the workers of the whole world is the ultimate goal of our deliberations, the aggressive acts of the imperialists result in the direct opposite.

The International Labour Organisation must contribute to the preservation of lasting peace, to general and complete disarmament, to the reduction of international tension, and to the establishment of relations based on co-operation among all countries of the world. That is why, in my opinion, it cannot remain indifferent to the above-mentioned questions.

Interpretation from French : Mr. SAKA (Government delegate, Dahomey)—In the name of the delegation of Dahomey I have pleasure in congratulating Mr. Raza on his election to the presidency of the Conference.

The Director-General's Report has held our attention particularly because of the way in which he faces the various problems of the moment and the way in which he shows the importance of these problems for the survival of the Organisation, its adjustment to new tasks in general and to the needs of the developing countries in particular. The present debates should lead to definitive conclusions on the problems of the programme and structure of the I.L.O. I thank the Director-General for having sketched such a noble programme for the I.L.O. which determines its attitude towards the economic and social problems of the world today, and for having analysed the procedures and methods of the I.L.O. so as to enable this Organisation to fully secure its imperatives, but thanks to our common determination to open new perspectives and to seek wide horizons, we have managed to adjust our Organisation to the requirements of the hour.

The Director-General thus shows his determination to open new perspectives and to seek new means of action with a view to implementing the general programme of the I.L.O., particularly by reorganising the Office and establishing a Field Department in order better to coordinate the I.L.O.'s regional activities. I think this is a very good thing, for the reorganisation will enable the I.L.O. to recognise better the priorities of our countries in the light of their needs, and will facilitate more frequent contacts with the various organisations of the countries concerned. The intensification of regional activities will particularly relate to the utilisation of human resources, and therefore also to the agricultural and industrial development of our countries.

In his Report the Director-General, having reviewed the principal programme areas of the I.L.O., has devoted a chapter to international labour standards. This is an extremely important subject, in my opinion, for the standard-setting work of the I.L.O. is one of its main tasks, and I believe that the I.L.O. should continue along this path with a view to seeking to secure observance of certain universal principles. We can only state that none of these principles is an empty word as far as we are concerned. We have made efforts to ratify most of the Conventions placed before us. In our concern to defend democratic principles, and at the same time in the light of our love for efficiency, we have sought to establish a balance between the two groups, employers and workers, who participate in the economic advancement of our country. It is by this means that we seek to consolidate our independence and work for the eradication of our underdevelopment.

In addition to this national effort it seems clear that the I.L.O.'s technical assistance is indispensable. We have already received this, but we hope that it will be further increased because we are determined to overcome the many obstacles raised in the path of our development.

One of the ways of overcoming these obstacles—and one to which we have devoted considerable effort—is the establishment of co-operatives, a subject which is included in the agenda before us. The developing countries are particularly suited to the co-operative movement, since in most of these countries there was already an old-fashioned form of cooperation stemming from the strong community spirit prevailing there. All the sectors of the population, employed persons as well as self-employed, are likely to be interested in co-operative movements.

In Dahomey we have been helped in co-operative management, the technical tasks of particular co-operatives, and the spread of co-operative ideas, by I.L.O. experts and advisers from countries like Switzerland which have been kind enough to supply them. I can tell you that in our country the co-operative movement has very great prospects before it.

In closing this short speech I should like to renew my country's sense of gratitude to the I.L.O., which has always been keenly concerned with our problems. The I.L.O. has reached a critical point in its existence in regard to the present economic and social imperatives, but thanks to our common determination to accelerate the development of the peoples and our determination to attenuate international tensions we shall, I am sure, manage to adjust our Organisation to the needs of the hour.

Interpretation from Arabic : Mr. EDDEAN (Minister of Social Affairs and Labour, Jordan)—The Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan has paid me the great honour of making me its representative at this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. On this occasion I should like to convey His Majesty King Hussein's greetings as well as his best wishes for satisfactory results for this Conference which will help to strengthen peace and increase prosperity and enlightenment.

Allow me to express my deepest and sincerest congratulations and my warmest wishes to the President on his election. These congratulations and wishes go also to the Government delegate of Pakistan. It is undeniable that his election by the great majority of delegations from all over the world is owed partly to the complete confidence in his reliability among his colleagues and partly to the great sacrifices he has gone through in the past in order to improve the efficiency of this Organisation. I pray God that under his presidency this Conference will be completely successful.

I should also like to stress the great effort carried out by the Director-General to prepare the important annual Report in which full details can be found of what has been achieved by the Organisation during the past year and of its plans and possible activities for next year.

In this world where the conflicting forces of good and evil are in constant opposition, such international conferences are extremely necessary. Pakistan is convinced that the I.L.O. is one of the most essential branches of the United Nations and permits of a closer understanding of the various points of view, helping to overcome the forces of evil. All this is bound to lead to a good constructive effort on behalf of mankind.

That is why, instead of wasting the energy of mankind by inventing destructive weapons, we should direct mankind to work for increased productivity and an improvement in quality which will promote social justice and reduce differences of classes and eventually lead to peaceful coexistence among us all. All this compels us here and in the United Nations to work seriously and sincerely with an eye to the future consolidation of world peace and to doing away with racist policies, forced labour, restriction of trade union freedom and the oppression of workers in all parts of the world.

It is my firm conviction that without an effort to secure social justice among all classes in the world there will not be any world peace and the forces of good and evil will continue to be in permanent and constant opposition. Therefore, I pray this Conference to adopt instruments and decisions—which Members will have to apply—to organise better relations between workers and employers. This would guarantee the worker's rights and would oblige him to respect his duties towards his work and country. This would also increase the national revenue of each country and, consequently, world revenue as a whole.

I was also very happy that in his Report the Director-General pointed out the necessity of reducing the economic gap between the less developed and the fully developed countries, as well as the obligation for wealthier countries to offer unconditional economic aid to the less developed countries. I should like to add that the Organisation should do its best to encourage disarmament and to direct the funds now spent on armaments towards development projects for the welfare of the world as well as for the prosperity of mankind.

The Director-General's Report sets out what has been done by the Organisation to improve manpower. This effort deserves our gratitude and consideration. However, I think it is the duty of the Organisation to redouble its efforts in this field because an improvement in the human resources of any country, by means of occupational training or of the efficient use of manpower, is the most important aspect of its work in aiding these countries towards progress and economic development. My Government supports what is said in the Director-General's Report concerning the increase in aid to be given to the trade unions and the improvement of their status, because trade unions can be considered as the backbone of man-power.

Being confident in this policy despite the limited economic possibilities of my Government, we have reserved a reasonable proportion of our state budget this year to helping the trade union movement in Jordan.

As to the establishment of social security programmes in all countries, in our opinion this is the artery that nourishes all employees. It is for this reason that I suggest that the Organisation should send experts into the field in every country every time it is possible to do so.

With regard to that part of the Director-General's Report concerning international labour Conventions and Recommendations, my Government believes that the earlier Conventions which have not been put in force should be modified and the more complicated ones should be simplified by the appropriate committee. When adopting a Convention the Organisation must take into account the various ways in which it can be applied and must make it more flexible so that it can be put into practice in other member countries.

As regards certain fields, I think that the Organisation should increase the effort it is making in this field, particularly in the developing countries, because workers' education has a beneficial effect on economic development and on the improvement of relations between workers and employers.

Regarding the form of the Conference as discussed in the Report, my Government is in favour of maintaining the Conference in its present tripartite form and maintaining it as the supreme organ of the I.L.O. It is also in favour of keeping the Governing Body as it is at present constituted.

After these few remarks on the Director-General's Report, I should like to talk about the achievements of the workers' movement in Jordan during the past year: the payment of a weekly holiday for all workers in ordinary undertakings; the fixing of working hours at a maximum of eight hours in all undertakings; the right of the family to an allowance in relation to the worker's length of service with the firm when the worker dies as a result of an accident sustained outside work; the establishment of the principle of instituting contingency funds in all firms.

In its desire to favour and safeguard the interests of the trade union movement in our country, the Government has contributed to the building of premises for the General Federation of Trade Unions. This has enabled the number of registered trade unions to be increased, thus allowing all the industrial sectors of Jordan to be included.

On the basis of the constructive democratic policy pursued by His Majesty's Government, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour has prepared a Social Security Bill which is shortly to come into force.

Relations between Jordan and the I.L.O. reflect the Government of Jordan's conviction of the sacred importance of this Organisation. Moreover, Jordan has ratified most I.L.O. Conventions and applies most of the Recommendations.

Although the workers' movement in Jordan has made enormous progress in a short space of time, we feel a great need for the aid of the Organisation in certain fields, especially since the economic, technical and material resources of Jordan are limited. These are: to send experts to carry out workers' training in Jordan and to send trade union leaders abroad, as well as organising relations between workers and employers; to send every year a certain number of Jordanian workers to the Turin Centre, at the expense of the Organisation, and the holding of seminars in Arabic so that Arab workers can profit fully from them; to increase the number of specialised missions in Jordan for the training of the largest possible number of civil servants in the Labour Department for management, legislation and the workers' movement; to send to Jordan an expert in labour problems. In fact, my Government intends to create an employment office in order to organise work and do away with unemployment.

In conclusion, I should like to wish the Conference success under Mr. Raza’s presidency. In the name of Jordan, I should also like to greet my colleagues in the delegations taking part in this Conference and to pray that God may guide us for the good of mankind.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. FIGUEIRAS (Workers’ delegate, Uruguay)—The Trade Union Confederation of Uruguay, which is a member of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Inter-American Regional Organisation of Workers of the I.C.F.T.U., speaking in the name of the free and democratic workers of Uruguay, brings its greetings to this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference and expresses its most sincere wishes for the most complete success of its discussions and the resolutions it will adopt.

It is with great satisfaction that we note the inclusion, inter alia, of two items of maximum importance to the community—agrarian reform and the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries. Although the former is scheduled only for general discussion, for a long time now we workers have set for ourselves very definite objectives towards which we must work: to set up as a minimum the necessary measures to stabilise the position of the peasants in their own surroundings where they can develop their own land, making available to them the means of production which will enable them to achieve a suitable and adequate standard of life in the light of the progress of science and modern technology so that they may become integrated into the economy of their respective countries as a social and economic factor of the first importance which will be fundamental to the progress of all developing countries.

When in 1962 we sent to the Office, through Mrs. Ana Figueroa, our plan for contribution to the economic and social development of Uruguay asking for technical advice on the subject, we said: “Our country, like the rest of Latin America, in this exceptional period of its history has no alternative other than to work towards a profound and far-reaching revolutionary evolution which will lead to a transformation of the very economic structure of the country, so that it will be able to meet fully the most urgent needs of the people. The other alternative is irremediable chaos and revolution with bloodshed as a prelude to attempts which it will be difficult to suppress to set up totalitarian régimes of the extreme right or the extreme left.”

If such evil prophecies have not as yet come true in my country it is simply because the people have repudiated such action and have been able to defend their republican institutions, but it is nevertheless just as true as ever that the failure of a lack of planning and measures which could lead to a solution of our problems—which have been considerably aggravated in recent days—and unless a future of progress and economic independence is held out to them which will restore public confidence to its normal level, the threat of such a fate hangs over our heads still.

Therefore we offer and pledge our unflagging support in the working out of standards which will lead at our next session to the adoption of a Convention on agrarian reform. Although our Parliament may be involved in the study of legislation which envisages the adoption of coherent measures to find solutions to the agrarian problem, nevertheless, we repeat, we give our full support to the adoption of such an instrument by the I.L.O.

As regards the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries, Uruguay has wide experience of the establishment of co-operatives, their development and their vitality. In our country we have mainly consumers’ co-operatives because it is they that provide rapid and direct solutions for the workers as regards the supply of food. Since the food industry is subject to speculation and thecornering of markets, the entire consumer population has been forced to ever-more pronounced and frequent abstention owing to the soaring prices of the vital necessities of life.

Of course, no matter how significant may be the degree of protection provided to our economy by consumers’ co-operatives they cannot do the whole job of a complete co-operative movement unless they are also in possession of the means of production and distribution. Thus the production co-operatives in Uruguay are mainly agricultural co-operatives which are fighting hard to achieve adequate prices for agricultural products, sparing no effort to eliminate the middleman—that parasite who works against our interests in the economic process of production.

In the field of industry we have, inter alia, the most outstanding example of what the force of the workers can do if it is directed towards a co-operative goal—the production co-operative in the meat industry, constituted entirely of capital contributed by workers and directed and administered by workers. I am referring to the Establecimientos Frigoríficos del Cerro, which is the factory in the meat sector which produces the greatest amount of foreign exchange for my country and which is undoubtedly the most striking example of what the co-operative movement is capable of in Latin America.

The sugar workers, in a common effort with agricultural and industrial workers, are seeking authorisation from the executive to set up in Paso Valdés, San José, a liquor factory which will solve the problem of insufficient production in the country. This effort is being made with joint participation, which is a variant of co-operative action.

However, we feel that this Conference should work in such a way that at the next session we can adopt a Convention which will lay down minimum standards for the legislation of each State Member of the I.L.O. as a token of respect and homage to the creators of the co-operative movement.

In order to protect and defend what we have already achieved, we must denounce here a situation which we have observed in the refrigeration industry and on which a very well documented exposé has been submitted. This is a flagrant violation of the standards laid down in the Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928, to the prejudice of the workers in the interior of the country, who do not enjoy the same conditions as workers in the capital as far as wages and social benefits are concerned. As my country has ratified this Convention, we feel it is a matter of basic importance to call attention to this matter before the competent authority. We are urging the Secretary-General to give the closest attention to this problem and, should it seem suitable, to refer the question to the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations.

In conclusion, we should like to say that we observed with a certain amount of surprise when we came to this Conference that we were included in a list of sponsors submitting a resolution on the protection of the rights of Spanish workers. We must say very clearly that at no time has our Confederation accepted or sponsored this proposed resolution. I do not know where it came from. As far as its content is concerned, we have no instruction as to the position we should adopt. Moreover, our world organisation, the I.C.F.T.U., has already expressed its opinion in this connection.

(The Conference adjourned at 12.30 p.m.)
President: Mr. Gurinovich

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL:
DISCUSSION (cont.)

Interpretation from Russian: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Gurinovich)—We now resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Mr. ZAIDI (Workers' delegate, Malaysia)—When I spoke at the 48th Session of this Conference I referred to the great merger which united the peoples of the Malayan, Singapore, Sabah and Sarawak states into one single State of Malaysia. This freely expressed verdict of 11 million peoples, recognised by the United Nations and accepted and acknowledged by all the free and democratic nations of the world has, however, been challenged by our nearest neighbour, the Indonesian Government.

Being not content merely to accept reality, the Indonesian Government launched its so-called confrontation policy against Malaysia. As a result, regular incidents including bomb explosions and landings of Indonesian infiltrators and saboteurs on Malaysian shores have become the order of the day. But such is the degree of dedication and determination of the peoples of Malaysia to defend their liberty and freedom that 11 million of them have gladly and courageously accepted this challenge from a nation of 100 millions. And, needless to say, the workers of Malaysia have been foremost in this display of loyalty and devotion to their country. Forever on guard to protect their liberty and democracy, they have risen as one body to fight for their rights. And they would do no less, no matter from which quarter they were threatened.

Indeed it is a great pity and most unfortunate that the Malaysian Government, no doubt in its preoccupation with facing the Indonesian threat, has overlooked this factor and taken certain steps to deprive the Malaysian workers of their clear basic rights, in defence of which they have always stood.

The Asian Regional Organisation of the I.C.F.T.U., which sent a special mission to investigate the position earlier this month, referred to the measures which were enforced by the Government by a decree effective from 14 May 1965 as being of an extreme nature, and also described them as being in conflict and at variance with the principles of freedom of association as laid down by the international labour Conventions.

Before I refer to the Report of the Director-General I would also like to take this opportunity of touching upon the existing system and procedure for the selection of the Workers' delegate and advisers. The way the rules are at present, the Government has absolute power not only to select a delegate of its own liking, but also to delay the depositing of the credentials even of such a delegate to such an extent as to make it impossible for him to participate effectively in the International Labour Conference. To my mind, the selection procedure requires thorough examination. The workers should have complete freedom to select their own representatives. Puppets and false representatives of the workers can make no useful contribution to the work of the I.L.O., and it is my hope that the Director-General will find this point worthy of his necessary consideration. New rules should similarly be framed making it obligatory on the governments of member States to make provision for the same number of advisers to the Workers' delegate as for their own delegation.

Now, turning to the Director-General's Report, I find it most stimulating. It poses many problems and suggests various ways and means to overcome them. The Director-General must be complimented for preparing such a fine Report, and if I am critical of some of the points contained in his Report, it is not due to lack of appreciation on my part for his excellent work. It is perhaps owing to my own limited and narrow thinking and vision that I have been unable to see and appreciate them from a wider point of view.

For example, while we welcome the regionalisation of I.L.O. activities, and indeed I said as much during my speech last year, it is considered that three regional branches as proposed by the Director-General will not be sufficient. In Asia alone there is need to establish at least one more regional branch in the Far East. In this respect the I.L.O. must differentiate between the developed and developing countries and adjust and spread its work accordingly.

Last year trade unions all over the world expressed their satisfaction when the Director-General declared that the I.L.O. should carefully consider the opportunity of giving more direct assistance to trade unions. However, the year under review saw little or no evidence of any such direct assistance. In fact, so far as Malaysia is concerned, despite our specific request for an I.L.O. seminar on trade union education, no definite progress has been made to date. Perhaps there is need further to consider the extent to which I.L.O. direct assistance to unions can be made available.

The Director-General's Report on human resources and economic development is of particular interest to us. We are happy to note the stronger emphasis he lays on improving living and working conditions to the extent compatible with the requirements of rapid economic development. We completely share his views. It is equally true to say that utilisation of human resources is a key factor in economic growth, which is dependent upon an accumulation of knowledge and skills, on fuller and more effective deployment and utilisation of manpower at all costs and in all sectors. It is unfortunate that, whereas everywhere greater emphasis is placed on investment in human resources in over-all development planning, the governments of certain countries are still doing little or nothing in this respect. They still do not appreciate the value of labour and the part it plays in all their development plans. Although spending huge sums on material and machinery, they refuse to invest even a tiny amount in the human resources available to them. Nor do they appreciate the need of enlisting popular support for the tasks of national development and the participation of broad social groups in them, as suggested by the Director-General in his Report. Without any consultations with labour in regard to economic planning and without labour's co-operation and ideas as to how best human resources can be utilised, the prospects for the successful completion of a country's development plans cannot be regarded as very bright. We would welcome it if the Director-General placed further emphasis on this point in his dealings with the respective governments.

To this end, we would wish that the I.L.O. should not merely act as a guide. It should occasionally adopt the role of a mentor. When member States, after having been provided with all the help and information they need, still refuse to act, the I.L.O. must be bold enough to criticise them openly, and the Director-General, in making his yearly Report, should make special mention of such countries. We believe that it is only by exposing the countries which persistently ignore and flout the I.L.O.'s principles to international ridicule that there can be any hope of them ever coming alive to their sense of responsibilities and obligations towards labour.

The Director-General's proposals for improving the quality of the labour force are really praiseworthy. His plans for and emphasis on short- and medium-term vocational training are going to be very useful so far as we in Malaysia are concerned. However, in order to make full use of such training it is essential that the workers should be permitted to attend courses without any loss of wages or seniority. The I.L.O. must recommend that special facilities in this respect should be provided for the workers and that they should be encouraged to participate in such projects. Their selection should be made in consultation with their national trade union centre. In fact, so far, Malaysia is concerned, despite our specific request for an I.L.O. seminar on trade union education, no definite progress has been made to date. Perhaps there is need further to consider the extent to which I.L.O. direct assistance to unions can be made available.

With regard to the development of social institutions, we are happy to note the clear statement in this respect made by the Director-General in his Report.

Very often governments overlook the basic principle that efforts for economic and social development must be undertaken with the active participation of the interested parties, and deny the workers' organisations this legitimate right and freedom. We therefore warmly welcome the five major objectives of I.L.O. action in this field. We particularly acclaim the I.L.O.'s desire for the growth of workers' organisations on a solid basis so that they are capable of playing an active part in the national effort for economic and social development. In some countries the trade union rules and by-laws are so harsh and restrictive that they make it impossible for an organisation of workers to exist. We believe that it is only with the collective support and enthusiasm of all sections of the population that such programmes can have an adequate and effective impact on the problems of underdevelopment.

The proposal to assist governments in developing administrative machinery for the examination and solution of differences which often arise between workers and employers is also welcomed. However, the Director-General's comment about taking into account the interests of the nation as a whole might well be abused by certain governments. Such governments would do well to take note of the Director-General's further comment, namely that "the goal of economic growth will not be attained or brought any nearer by the elimination of the very notion of conflict, but rather by attempting to prevent conflicts from arising or, when they do, by applying methods of conciliation, negotiation or arbitration in order to bring out and emphasise the elements in the situation on which a more fruitful cooperation might be built".

As regards the fourth objective proposed by the Director-General—to enhance the status of workers—we would press for urgent action by him to examine how the workers' legitimate concern with security of employment can be met. The adoption of the Recommendation concerning the termination of employment at the initiative of the employer by the Conference during 1963 has so far had no impact, at least not in my country where thousands of workers still remain in a state of constant fear, uncertainty and insecurity with regard to their employment. It is felt that urgent and specific action by the I.L.O. in this respect will perhaps bring about desired changes.
Apart from the question of security of employment, much remains to be done to improve the living and working conditions of the workers, particularly in the developing countries like Malaysia. We are therefore pleased to note from the Director-General's Report that the I.L.O. remains committed to ensuring that sufficient attention is paid to the improvement of conditions of life and work. To us the I.L.O.'s work in this area remains of paramount importance and, notwithstanding the views of certain spokesmen, this should not be given major priority, we feel that the I.L.O. should tackle this problem as expeditiously as possible. In this connection, I would like to quote the case of teachers, who, despite the I.L.O. expert committee's recommendations, still do not enjoy, in most cases, such basic facilities as housing, leave and sick benefits.

Whilst it may be true to say that the I.L.O.'s work in some countries has changed from protection in a negative sense to a more positive policy of promotion of measures for the workers' welfare, security and status, so far as most of the workers, particularly in the developing countries, are concerned, they still need and, I am afraid, will continue to need, the I.L.O.'s basic approach in such matters for some time to come. For there are thousands and thousands of workers still struggling hard to attain the barest minimum standards of living; there are still unbelievably wide gaps between the "have nots" and the "haves" all over the world. To such workers the terms such as "status", "security" and "welfare" remain only nebulous forms of wishful thinking. In this respect the I.L.O. has therefore an urgent task and, as the Director-General states in his Report, this being the keynote of the I.L.O.'s activities, the States concerned should be advised, as a matter of priority, on the means by which the worker's status can be enhanced, his living and working conditions improved, and his health safeguarded.

With regard to social security, the I.L.O. must not merely concern itself with carrying out surveys. In countries where such surveys have already been concluded and recommendations made by the governments concerned, it should develop a system to ensure that the labour and efforts spent on such surveys are not wasted and that the recommendations are put into practice as speedily as possible. For example, in Malaysia, where an I.L.O. expert made his recommendations on many social security measures and schemes some years ago, nothing has so far been done to implement them, in spite of constant pressure by the National Trade Union Centre.

As regards the need for I.L.O. action on new standards on matters of current importance, although I fully appreciate and support the Director-General's view that, international instruments being the backbone of the Organisation, their elaboration should continue to play an essential part in the I.L.O.'s work, I still feel that this task should not be accomodated to the detriment of efforts to apply the existing standards. And, whilst the remarks of the Director-General in this respect are reassuring, there are still grave doubts in many minds that the I.L.O. is truly doing all it can in this direction. There are many States which, despite their quick public pronouncements as adherents of the concept of democracy, have failed to guarantee even the minimum standards of basic rights as contained in some of the international labour Conventions to the workers in their countries. The I.L.O. should exert greater influence on such States, which continue to flout the principles by which the I.L.O. firmly stands. These States should be exposed and put to shame at this world forum. The I.L.O. should send its experts to such countries to make an on-the-spot study of the conditions prevailing therein. Once there the officers of the I.L.O. should not allow themselves merely to be conducted around by the representatives of the governments of such countries. They should also take the time and trouble to meet the representatives of workers and to have free and frank exchanges of views with them.

Within this context, I feel that the I.L.O. should consider the advisability of sending a mission to Malaysia to determine to what extent the basic rights of the workers are respected or denied. And if the mission were to make a true report on its return, I am sure it would have many revealing comments to make. For instance it would find that, whilst the Government of Malaysia has yet to ratify the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), it has by a recent decree withdrawn the most essential instrument from the hands of a large number of trade unions in the public sector and at the same time arbitrarily imposed compulsory arbitration in the private sector, without providing the usual safeguards essential for the success of such a system.

It is a matter of great regret to me to have to make for the first time, on behalf of the Malaysian workers, these rather unpleasant remarks about my country, but I do so to bring these matters to the notice of this august body, which is the greatest watchdog over workers' freedom throughout the world. I appeal to this body to be vigilant and ever more vigilant, to prevent the steady erosion of workers' basic and fundamental rights in many newly emerging countries under one pretext or another.

We still feel that if energetic efforts are made by the authorities concerned and urgent steps are taken to set up a joint special committee with a view to examining and recommending suitable measures which will respect workers' rights as well as the Government's problems, there may yet be found a solution of the problem which has caused serious discontent and frustration amongst the Malaysian workers.

Therefore, I leave this rostrum in the hope that wise counsel will prevail and that the good name of Malaysia as an outstanding example of parliamentary democracy, which she is beyond any doubt, will continue to be sustained.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. JARAIMILLO PÉREZ (Government delegate, Ecuador)—The delegation of Ecuador wishes to express its concern regarding various aspects of the Director-General's Report. First of all, however, we wish to express our satisfaction at the efforts made by the I.L.O. Directorate in its plans for proposed action.

We all feel the need for adjusting the structure, programme and methods of work of the Organisation to the new conditions that have arisen in the world. Differences arise regarding the choice of the means to be employed and the extent to which the real adjustment is to go. If we are only to scratch the surface of the problem, then ordinary current measures will be sufficient. But if it is desired to go to the deep roots of the present maladjustment, particularly that which has arisen during the last ten years, then extraordinary measures will evidently have to be taken and very bold resolutions put into effect. The Director-General's interesting Report has not on this occasion, as it wished, provided "some fresh proposals and fresh ideas on those points which deserved some further examination". For obvious reasons, which we fully appreciate, it has dealt—and I am quoting again—"only with general questions of programme and structure". In other words, it has dealt only with some aspects of the surface of the problem. The Report goes on to say that it does not this year "seek to reopen a debate on more controversial matters"; consequently, it will not succeed in touching the real root of the maladjustment.

My delegation wishes to state its profound conviction that it will not be possible by superficial means alone to bring back to life some of the fundamental ideas on which the Organisation is built. We think that the readjustment must be both sufficiently extensive and sufficiently thorough; therefore, we also think that the general measures now proposed must be followed as soon as possible by the study and adoption of the specific action which must be taken with a view to the total readjustment of the Organisation.

Moreover, one should never lose sight of the fact that both superficial and general measures are the means and not the ends. They must lead on to the objective of reorientating the Organisation to make it a permanent organ for the improvement of the conditions of the workers. However, we believe that this improvement, in accordance with the Declaration of Philadelphia, must not be confined merely to material well-being, but extend also to spiritual well-being in conditions of freedom and dignity. This is why my delegation wishes to reaffirm its profound conviction that the I.L.O. should never forget or postpone the adoption of the specific action which must be taken with a view to the total readjustment of the Organisation.

An asset to the I.L.O. is its tripartite structure which is an appropriate instrument for the defence and promotion of freedom, but it would lose its efficiency if it were converted into no more than an external façade by manoeuvres which would not be accepted even as an extrapolation of the principle of universality.

I should now like to discuss briefly some aspects of the operational programme. The objectives set in the Report will certainly extend the scope of the I.L.O.'s work and carry it into new fields. This requires the Office to establish the machinery which will enable it to deal with the development of human resources, social institutions and conditions of life and work.

My Government would like to establish, for its part, a national office for contacts with this new kind of I.L.O. activity. It therefore asks the Organisation to provide the main lines and the advice which will be necessary to put this scheme into effect.

We consider it a wise step to seek to decentralise the work of the I.L.O. by establishing regional offices to study actual conditions in groups of similar countries which require particular solutions.

We are also glad that the opportunity has been offered to discuss the problems of agrarian reform with special regard to the social and employment aspects, because the greatest part of the population of developing countries is engaged in agriculture. These workers deserve special attention from the I.L.O., and therefore we believe that it is necessary to encourage the countries which have included agrarian reform in their development plans, because they regard an effective change in agrarian structures as a basic condition for the improvement of agriculture and of the country as a whole.

This matter is closely linked with another sensible passage in the Report regarding the development of independent representative organisations which will enable all sectors of the population to help in promoting economic progress and to share in its benefits. Having regard to the I.L.O.'s experience in co-operative development, we believe that it should not only provide advice on the subject but should also bring together the general principles and practices which will enable the developing countries to make the fullest and most satisfactory and effective use of their manpower.

My country and its Government have in the last two years moved forward in the execution of our general development plan, and we consider it necessary to promote a change in social structures, particularly as regards the system of land tenure. We have started important schemes aimed at improving the social position of the agricultural workers, and the measures worked out in this regard have already been put into effect and proved their value.

However, the important thing for developing countries, whose economy is based on agriculture and in many cases, on a single crop, is to remember Section IV of the Declaration of Philadelphia, which relates to greater stability in world prices of primary products.

When one studies the labour situation of a country, one cannot be content with merely knowing its labour code or comparable source of law; one must also have regard to the whole body of legislation which affects the labour field; nor should one restrict oneself to law alone, but examine the complex social structure of the particular people.

It would be desirable for the I.L.O. to establish permanent teams of workers to study the legal and social situation in this field and give any advice on the subject for which they might be asked. This would stimulate the work done or in course of performance by special bodies or individuals.

Although the Conventions and Recommendations lay down basic requirements, regarding labour relations there is a lack of rules to give effect to these instruments which should have regard to the social and economic peculiarities of each country. The advice and guidance of the I.L.O. would be very valuable in this work.

The need for surveys and investigations, particularly in countries which lack full records and statistics, leads one to realise the need for the education and training of the persons who will have to fill that gap. Once this has been done, the I.L.O. will be able to act adequately and effectively in the performance of its duties.

In the field of social law, and particularly in connection with the agenda of the present session, my Government is putting forward a body of legislative reforms, the text of which has been sent to the I.L.O. with a view to distribution in the Conference. I should like to mention the following recent achievements of my country in this field: (a) the Agrarian and Land Settlement Reform Acts of 23 July and 28 September 1964, which open the way to improving the position of peasants, who form the majority of the population of Ecuador; (b) the 1964 reform of the compulsory Social Insurance Scheme, which extends insurance to fresh classes such as unemployed handicraftsmen, to domestic employees and professional workers, and also to risks which were not previously covered; (c) as regards the protection of women, the Act of 19 January 1965 protects the mother when pregnancy commences and gives her the right to appeal to the children's courts for financial assistance during pregnancy; (d) the reforming legislation of 29 October and 18 December 1964 sets up a body of safeguards for the workers, with particular regard to employment stability and remuneration; (e) the reforms of 25 March and 5 May 1965 improve the safeguards laid down in the Labour Code of 1938. They provide for appropriate administrative machinery and an improvement in labour dispute procedures with a view to improvements in these two fields in the light of the experience obtained in the 27 years since the Code was first introduced; (f) the Social Insurance Scheme was also reformed in 1964 with a view, inter alia, to unifying the various funds.

Not only have the workers and employers taken part in the formulation and adoption of the above labour laws, but we have also had advice and suggestions from the competent I.L.O. bodies, and are extremely grateful for this invaluable assistance.

I should like in closing to congratulate the President on the honour conferred upon him and to express the determination of my country and Government to continue along the path of freedom and progress for the benefit of the workers, since unemployment and under-employment are a matter of deep concern to us.

Interpretation from Hungarian: Mr. MEKIS (Government delegate, Hungary)—May I first of all congratulate the President on his election. Thanks to his eminent abilities, I am sure this session will proceed most fruitfully.
Over and above the creation of an appropriate political atmosphere, and the abolition of discrimination, the existence of which has been proved by experience, it is necessary also to reform the structure of the I.L.O. as soon as possible. It is not sufficient to change the composition of the Office; we must also revise the whole structure and the procedures of the Organisation. Universalism must prevail throughout the organs and institutions of the Organisation, as must democratic practices. If certain States are excluded from the business of the Organisation and if all interested parties do not participate, for instance, in the Employers' or Workers' groups, then democracy cannot take root in the Organisation's procedures and resolutions cannot be adopted with the support of all parties concerned. This hampers and will continue to hamper the Organisation's activities.

It is impossible to sidestep the fact that it is the States themselves which have established the Organisation, and they not only demand to do their duty but also to have their rights respected.

The Hungarian Government believes that the I.L.O.'s programme requires reform, and that this reform should be in accordance with the needs of our time. We agree with the targets mentioned in Part I of the Director-General's Report. There is no doubt that the full utilisation of manpower resources, the development of social institutions and the improvement of living and working conditions are all matters of great significance, and these problems have certain aspects to which I would like to devote further time. I do not think anyone would deny the close relationship which exists between economic expansion and manpower resources, and the need for adequate utilisation of these resources cannot be denied.

The implementation of more comprehensive and adequate development plans depends largely on the adequate utilisation of manpower resources; planning this is a highly complex matter, and a number of factors need to be taken into consideration such as the demographic situation, the composition of existing manpower by occupation, age and sex, the evolution of occupational structures over a period of time, and ways of effecting such a solution for long-term development planning. Our country and other socialist countries have gained experience in this field over a period of many years. Our medium-term (five-year) plans and our long-term plans with regard to manpower policy take into account the requirements of economic development and the evolution of the manpower situation, and envisage measures to ensure perfect harmony between these two factors. We should be glad if the Organisation were to devote more effort to the organisation of conferences and seminars, and also in the field of scholarships and publications. In this regard also we are prepared to offer every assistance to the International Labour Office.

Another problem closely connected with economic development, which many might rightly term the problem of our time, is that technical development is far more rapid than the evolution of institutions and of the content of vocational training. I do not think that any country has been unaffected by this problem and its solution. Hungary has done a lot in this field and has already obtained results. A similar situation exists in a number of other countries, and we are convinced that if they concentrated their isolated efforts they could obtain better results. In close co-operation with U.N.E.S.C.O., perhaps, the I.L.O. might do a useful job.

Finally, there is a world-wide trend, namely the disappearance of the major differences between the town and the countryside. In some countries, such as ours, this trend is already considerably advanced; in other countries it has barely begun. There is no doubt, however, that this trend will increase in those countries too, and this raises a number of questions, including the establishment of communal institutions, the development of vocational training, and the provision of social security. It is the opinion of my Government that the Organisation should attach great importance to this thorough study. This relates particularly to international labour standards; a few decades ago, discrimination against agricultural workers was, if not justified, nevertheless capable of being explained, but nowadays the preservation of the situation would present a cruel injustice. It would be useful to formulate an effective strategy in this connection.

As regards the Organisation's activities in the field of technical co-operation, the Hungarian Government endorses the ideas expressed in the Director-General's Report, in so far as they can be carried out without any discrimination. This activity is of increasing importance for the developing countries. Justice demands that the countries which for centuries enjoyed the profits of colonialism and whose domination led to so many difficulties for the dependent countries should bear the brunt of giving technical assistance through the United Nations and specialised agencies to overcome this backwardness. We of the socialist countries have never owned any colonies and we are following with anxious interest the attempts of neo-colonialism to gain a foothold. We are therefore fully aware of the need to assist in this task. The reports published by the Office concerning its own activities are the best possible proof of the political discrimination which is being practised by the I.L.O.

The Hungarian Government is positively in favour of study trips and international seminars under the auspices of the I.L.O. The experience of the study trip and seminar organised in Hungary shows that they lead to a widening of co-operation, and to the exchange and utilisation of experience in the solution of a number of problems.

The 48th Session of the Conference adopted resolutions of great importance on the question of apartheid. We endorse the Conference's Declaration on apartheid as well as the efforts the Organisation has made to eliminate this practice. Our country, which is a member of the special United Nations committee to study the question of apartheid, has always condemned this shameful and dangerous attitude. We also endorse any programme that would secure the rights of peoples subjected to oppression.

The Organisation has vast tasks to carry out, and that is why we approve all that the Director-General wishes to do in co-ordinating the I.L.O.'s activities with other international organisations—the United Nations Economic and Social Council, U.N.E.S.C.O., and the F.A.O. We attach great importance to co-operation with the Committee set up by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and we think that our Organisation can fulfil a number of important tasks in this field too. Better use should be made of available resources, and administrative costs should be cut down, thereby limiting the excessive increase in each year's budget.

So that all these tasks may be successfully carried out, it is necessary first of all to preserve peace, promote better understanding and extend co-operation. In this regard the I.L.O. must make further efforts. It must protest energetically against any action which may provoke war, hot or cold, in any part of the world, or impede the development of co-operation. There are certain circles that are always prepared to reactivate the cold war and who claim that a limited conflict does not endanger world peace. These dangerous views are now being translated into action, as seen in the present events in Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic. I do not think there is any need to stress further that the conflict in Viet-Nam constitutes a serious threat to the whole world, and I do not need to point out the harmful effects of American aggression on international co-operation.

The task of promoting the well-being of humanity requires immense material means. However much we increase the budget of the Organisation it will be insufficient to resolve the various problems that the developing countries have to face, and that is why it is urgent to stress the importance of disarmament, which would release vast material resources permitting the achievement of these tasks. At the same time the available resources must be used in the most economical manner so that the largest possible portion may directly serve those to whom the Organisation wishes to give real support. It is necessary to mobilise all available forces to carry out these tasks and this requires the principle of universality to be enforced within this Organisation.

In the opinion of the Hungarian Government, those are the decisive fields in which the Organisation should concentrate its activities, besides its concrete programmes and other activities, for these are the guarantees that the principal programmes of the Organisation will be put into effect. We are convinced—and that is the spirit in which we make these remarks—that the Organisation, if this reform is carried out in accordance with the requirements of the present day, will be able to fulfil the noble aims set out in the Constitution and will certainly succeed in so doing.

Mr. KIBUKA (Workers' delegate, Uganda)—I should like fully to associate myself with the remarks that have been made to the President and other participants at this Conference, and, in the name of the Uganda workers, organised under the banner of the Federation of Uganda Trade Unions, an affiliate of the A.A.T.U.P., congratulate him most warmly. His election is a tribute not only to his capabilities but also to his country. I wish also to convey the fraternal greetings of the Uganda workers and their good wishes for the success of the Conference, which brings together in unity men and women of different nationalities, tongues, political and religious beliefs, races, ideologies and social classes—but having only one aim, namely to pool their ideas and aims in order to improve the well-being of mankind. I am grateful for this opportunity to address this august Conference in order to state the views of the Uganda workers on the Director-General's Report.

We are particularly interested in the section dealing with Africa which sets out a group of objectives calculated to enable the I.L.O. to play a role benefiting the newly emerging countries which have only recently appeared on the international scene. However, we come with our demands, the greatest of which is the much needed reform of the I.L.O. itself. In our opinion the I.L.O. appears to have lost touch with the realities of the contemporary world. We believe that the I.L.O. cannot remain outside the great changes that are taking place in the world today. The colonial era is past and gone. The I.L.O. should keep away from all traces of imperialism. Therefore, we demand the deletion of article 35 of the Constitution which provides that the right of a colonial Power to ratify international labour Conventions without being bound to apply them in its colonies, together with the deletion of other sections of the Constitution which are applied in order to deprive the African working peoples of a voice in the Organisation.

We believe further that the I.L.O. can only be effective if it begins to function as an organically universal body. We in Uganda wish the I.L.O. to continue to play a positive role and that is why we have sought to bring into the open a few of its shortcomings.

The Director-General's report on South Africa is rather interesting. It should have shown more clearly, however, that where capitalist exploitation and racial oppression prevail, freedom of employment, trade union rights and the aspirations of the workers for a better life do not exist. It is also regrettable that the report fails far short of the spirit of the Declaration which authorised the Governing Body to request the Director-General to prepare it. In our opinion, the report ignores the true causes of the situation in South Africa and is most hesitant about putting forward proposals, as requested in the Declaration. We therefore demand—and I repeat that we demand—that this Conference take positive steps for the right of a colonial Power to ratify international labour Conventions without being bound to apply them in its colonies, together with the deletion of other sections of the Constitution which are applied in order to deprive the African working peoples of a voice in the Organisation.

I should now like to touch on that section which deals with workers' education. The need for this, particularly in Africa, is only too evident. With economic development, the importance and dynamism of the African trade union movement has to some extent been demonstrated in the Conference and especially in the Workers' group.

We request the setting up of new workers' training centres by the other participating countries by the other participants at this Conference, and, in the name of the Uganda workers, organised under the banner of the Federation of Uganda Trade Unions, an affiliate of the A.A.T.U.P., must reflect the pattern of economic development in that continent and possibly take account of the indigenous environment. That is why we demand that this education programme for the African worker should not necessarily be a copy of any other from abroad. We cannot copy from abroad patterns that may not suit our needs and conditions.

We are not unmindful of the assistance the I.L.O. has rendered in the carrying out of this task, in which some contribution must be attributed to employers' representatives, and so on. We want to see more of these workers' colleges established in co-operation with the genuine representatives of the African workers. The Uganda workers are also aware that most governments have apprenticeship schemes for the training of artisans. It is open to speculation, however, whether the rate of technical education is fast enough in relation to our rapid economic development. That is why the Uganda workers feel that the I.L.O. must expand and intensify its activities, or else it will be too late. We believe that the workers have a very important and positive role to play in the realisation of our economic development, since it is our opinion that rapid industrialisation is the only solution for Africa's problems—namely poverty, disease, ignorance and the exploitation of its resources by foreigners.

It is well known that there is no general scheme of social security in Africa today. An African worker is perhaps in an inferior position in this regard vis-à-vis his counterpart in European countries. I hesitate to digress from my main theme, but I believe that the problem of social security looms large in most of the developing countries and all over the world. I am only too pleased to inform this Conference that my Government has already embarked upon this important project and its report is now out. It is being studied by both employers' and workers' organisations. Both the workers' and the employers' organisations are looking forward to the day when this report will be implemented.

A further source of satisfaction is the fact that all African member States of this Organisation and independent, and at this juncture I wish to welcome the new member States—Zambia, Malawi, Malta and Yemen. I only hope that they too will participate fully in and enjoy the benefit of their membership of this Organisation.

Many of these countries have just acquired their independence—not only the supreme objective in the political sphere but also an essential phase in the just struggle for social justice and progress and for the urgently needed improvement in economic welfare. It is but natural that we expect that the peoples on African soil who are still under colonial domination and still struggling very hard, and often with the greatest human sacrifice for that lofty goal, will become free to determine and shape the history of their countries. My speech would be incomplete if I did not mention some of those countries, such as Angola, Mozambique, South Africa, so-called Portuguese Guinea and Southern Rhodesia.

I have always noted with a great deal of sympathy the Director-General's request that we should avoid political issues at the Conference but I must confess that my sympathy is divided between the Director-General and those who believe that labour problems are so closely related to politics that it would be unrealistic to try to separate them. For instance, on the African Continent the principles of the International Labour Organisation regarding freedom of association, freedom of choice of employment, and so on, should be interpreted on the basis of local conditions.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ALLOT ABOUT (Government delegate, Ivory Coast)—On coming to this rostrum I should like in my turn, and in the name of my delegation, to extend to the President my sincere congratulations on his election, which is an honour to him individually and to the country which he represents at this Conference.

I read the remarkable Report of the Director-General with growing interest and appreciation. It would be sufficient to read the Director-General's Report attentively for the most doubtful to be convinced by the fervour, the impassioned enthusiasm and the seething of myriad ideas and projects which follow from the contact of all people with the problems of economic development and social progress. This Report has been very useful in enabling us to sum up and co-ordinate all our ideas on our achievements and future projects.

The satisfaction we gained from reading it is increased when we see how well the work carried out by our States has been assessed, as regards both the most acute problems and the more delicate nuances, by the directorate of an Organisation of which the least that can be said is that it has contributed to a very large extent to the growing awareness of the aims and means of social progress.

My country is experiencing at this time the worries and the hopes inherent in the implementation of any policy of economic development and social progress. The problems evoked in the general Report which is before us are our problems. They are numerous and all of them are urgent and pressing, barely giving our leaders time to appreciate the results achieved by the direction taken and the effectiveness of the measures adopted.

In effect, the industrial and agricultural expansion of my country is experiencing an unprecedented boom. The income of the people is increasing regularly and appreciably. But at the same time it is necessary to remedy the shortage of skilled manpower, to put into effect a policy of vocational training capable of reaching the objectives set by our development plans, and in order also to reduce the unemployment due to the influx into the urban centres of people from the interior of the country and to maintain conditions of harmonious development through well-balanced action carried out over the whole of our national territory.

We must face the problems of population growth, the education of the rising generations and the elimination of illiteracy. We must strengthen the administration and supervision of working conditions by a policy of personnel training, along with the preparation of effective legislation and regulations.
In order to meet the problems which arise, the authorities of the Ivory Coast are working unceasingly to establish priorities, to create the various bodies and institutions necessary in order that they may follow the path they have set themselves for economic development and social progress.

But while development has as its foundations generalised social welfare, nevertheless there are very grave concerns and problems to be met, and not only in the case of those who have to work out the rules and implement the plans. The growing population is affected in the very heart of its most traditional habits by being suddenly thrown into this whirlpool of a world in progress.

While, in general, development is expressed by economic expansion, vocational training, trade union activities, the extension of educational arrangements, it involves the individual in a whole series of problems in daily life which have to be solved by a policy of social progress.

By this I mean the necessary adaptation of social structures, particularly the family unit, and the protection of individuals and families in the difficulties arising out of life in an urban milieu, through housing policy, a policy of social welfare and an increase in financial means which will enable them to meet their increased needs.

The Ivory Coast has become aware of the need to carry out economic development and social progress in parallel.

In 1964 two instruments were adopted which indicate this objective it has set itself: the Civil Code and the Labour Code.

The Civil Code gives to the citizen of the Ivory Coast the basis of a family organisation, on which he can increase his participation in economic and social development. The family unit is restored as a centre of interest and as the future of the people.

The Labour Code regulates conditions under which such participation will take place. On the personal level, it defines conditions under which work should be carried out. On the general level, it defines the level within which trade union action should take place and how labour conflicts should be regulated.

In the near future there will be a Social Welfare Code which will consolidate the guarantees afforded to the workers against social risks, until there is progressively implemented a scheme of social security which will make it possible for the worker to throw himself heart and soul into the battle for the development of his country, without fearing that he will fall victim to any of the risks which might interrupt his work.

While the Civil Code is a new instrument, the Labour Code merely transfers to the new setting of an independent country a great deal of the legislation which existed in the past as a result of the standards laid down by the International Labour Office. We are particularly concerned with creating, and at the same time consolidating and extending, what has already met the test of experience, but we are still very much interested in other people's experience and what it may teach us. Therefore we are particularly interested in the desire to adapt itself which the I.L.O. has shown both as concerns the new organisation of the Office into departments and the planned decentralisation into regional services.

We hope this adaptation will make it possible for the Organisation to achieve in the future an even better adaptation of its work to meet the needs of each. This decentralisation, certainly, will first take effect in operational activities in conjunction with governments or national organisations.

However, it would be desirable if this closer knowledge of the context in which the development of our countries is taking place could lead to decentralisation of the standard-setting activity through the preparation of regional instruments.

These instruments would, of course, safeguard human rights and the dignity of the individual, but in so far as concerns the ways and means by which these goals are to be achieved regional instruments would reflect the stages of our struggles and our efforts without appearing too ambitious and too foreign to us.

I do not doubt that the constant efforts which the leaders of this Organisation have made, and the desire of all the Members, will help to point out the ways by which human progress can best be achieved.

*Interpretation from Portuguese: Mr. LOPES de OLIVEIRA (Workers' delegate, Brazil)—The Brazilian Workers' delegation wishes to express its admiration for the Director-General whose excellent Report we are now discussing. It is the pleasant duty of paying that compliment which brings me to the rostrum, where I feel a duly modest sense of my own deficiencies in the presence of so many illustrious officials and experts in labour law. In addition to valuable juridical and technical considerations, the Report states conclusions which entirely correspond to the views and claims set forward by the workers in my country. Furthermore, this fine essay shows that the I.L.O. gives due weight to the humanitarian spirit which must inform both the sources and the embodiments of all law affecting the working class. Such is indeed the policy followed in the labour and social security legislation of Brazil. My delegation notes with great satisfaction that the Report remains in complete conformity with the objective principles on which the I.L.O. is based. It brings out the extreme importance of human resources, and recognises the urgent need to stimulate the development of labour law by means of research and surveys leading up to specific relevant action. The urgent advisability of reforming and energising the methods of action of the I.L.O. is recognised by our delegation. We fully endorse the opinion of the Director-General that the purpose of the I.L.O. for the individual does not end with the affirmation and protection of his fundamental rights, but must extend also to “the means by which the worker’s status can be enhanced, his living and working conditions improved, his health safeguarded”. Similar views are held by the present Brazilian trade union movement, since we are fighting for the review of our social legislation, particularly the Labour Code and the main Social Security Act. We demand that legal pronouncements shall not remain on paper, but that the principles expressed in statutory instruments shall be translated into effective rights for the workers without restrictions imposed by subsequent regulations.

It is only fair that we should recognise the interest taken by the Brazilian Government in correcting and eliminating social injustice in the rural areas where the greater part of the population of Brazil lives in very poor conditions. Although most of the workers are not covered by social security, we still lack the regulations which will give full and final effect to the Statute of Rural Workers. This will soon regulate the relations between them and their employers. After enormous efforts in which the Government, experts and representatives of the classes concerned took part, the Land Statute has been adopted by Parliament.
It will do much to correct the past situation and ensure that the land fulfills its social function.

Although we can be optimistic one must agree that much depends on the employers, for many of these lack the understanding which is essential for true and effective social justice on the land. We hope that all countries, whether developed or not, will take a positive attitude towards this question, so that no land remains without a worker and no worker without land.

The observations made in the Report regarding the close relationship which there must be between national economic development pro-grames and the parallel improvement of the living and social conditions of the workers are also in striking agreement with the views of our trade union organisations which are quite independent of political interests and free from demagogic doctrinal influences, which are indeed increasingly repudiated by the Brazilian workers who are inspired by religious and democratic sentiments.

The present Report will provide important elements to reinforce the firm, wise and lawful action of the working class organisations of my country, since it analyses social phenomena closely related to the fight against inflation, the problems of unemployment, the shortage of skilled labour, the social situation of the rural workers and the relations between public authorities and occupational organisations. The views of the Director-General on the importance to be attached, when public authorities are planning the general development of a country, to investments which will develop human resources are particularly strongly endorsed by my delegation since his conclusions correspond closely to the spirit underlying claims which we ourselves make to the Brazilian authorities.
These claims are formulated with the high intention of reconciling workers' aspirations for better and fairer social conditions with government programmes aimed at the immediate and intensive economic and financial recovery of our country.

The prospects of learning a valuable lesson from the above doctrines seem good to the Workers' delegation of Brazil, since our Government is implementing the intention which it had already expressed of maintaining a sincere dialogue between the State and the various social groups. Its plan in this regard includes the enactment of a new Collective Agreement

Act, the reform of the basic Social Security Act and the payment of 13 months' wages every year. In so doing the Government will be acting in accordance with the recommendation in the Report that the authorities responsible for labour matters might well take a new line under which the organisations representing the various social groups would share in the traditional functions of the public authorities, including research, regulation and supervision of conditions of work and defence of the rights of the working people.

We also attach exceptional interest, because of its wisdom and timeliness, to the Director-General's exemplary warning that governments and public authorities should not seek to eliminate the very notion of social conflict, but must urgently aim at preventing such conflicts from breaking out or at least at finding a solution for them. Encouraged by these considerations and others of unanswerable logic which are to be found in the Report, our trade union organisations will intensify their research and action in the defence of those they represent, and with a view to a wider and more effective application of the obligations laid down in Conventions and Recommendations.
The Brazilian Workers' delegation is confident that Brazilian workers, associated as they are in free and democratic organisations, will develop the best of their abilities to objectively prove the entire correctness of the statements made in the Report, for we have no doubt that the Brazilian Government also agrees with another of the Director-General's valuable statements: "It is, I submit, the governments themselves, in view of their key role in the whole process of economic and social planning and programming, which are best placed to encourage the development of social organisations and to associate them effectively with the task of national construction."

In concluding these modest remarks in the name of the Brazilian Workers' delegation, I would express my firm conviction that the just and humane principles set out in the Report will be endorsed by the distinguished delegates to this great Conference, and that they will proclaim similar intentions inspired by the very first of the reasons for the existence of the International Labour Organisation: "... universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice ..."

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. HERN-ÁNDEZ CARDONA (Government delegate, Guatemala)—I have been charged by the Government delegations of Costa Rica,
Honduras and Guatemala, which are members of the Council of Labour and Social Welfare of the Organisation of Central American States
(O.D.E.C.A.), to comment on the Director-
General's Report.

You may wonder why the Government delegations which I represent have acted in this way. The reply is very simple. The five Central American countries, by common accord, are spending not only national, but also regional, and social integration of the region, an effort which is the result of the historic, geographic, political, social and economic bonds which unite them.
No country in the world is, I think, unaware of the interest which the five republics of Central America are showing in regional progress, given the revolutionary revolution and which has meant that they have assumed a formal commitment for the development of their countries in concrete terms. This involves the restructuring of the whole area on solid, well-disciplined and closely co-ordinated bases, in a forward-looking manner and with faith in the future, through a policy of harmonious coexistence, and with a real effort to achieve the objectives.

The final goal is to meet the aspirations of the population for progress. To this end, efforts are being made to create modern conditions and opportunities which will ensure a greater economic potential and greater social opportunities so as to meet with dignity the desire of the people for work and land, housing, food, clothes, health, education, culture, security, sound labour relations, freedom of movement and association, which will promote a dynamic institutional system based on proper programming for social and economic development in a peaceful and well-balanced atmosphere.

It would take too long to go into a detailed description of everything which has been achieved in this connection by the Central American countries. However, we think that we should lay special stress on the social objectives and the programmes which are being implemented to discharge the heavy responsibility which the five countries of Central America have assumed.

In order to examine the social situation of the five Central American countries which are members of the General Agreement of Economic Integration, the General Secretariat of the Organisation of Central American States (O.D.E.O.A.) convened the first meeting of the Ministers of Labour of Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala in San Salvador in April and May 1964.

At this conference they decided on the creation of the Central American Council of Labour and Social Welfare as a subsidiary body of the Organisation of Central American States. The Council will adopt resolutions aimed at the unification of the structures of the Ministries of Labour and the social security institutions as a first goal in the formulation of legislation common to the five countries and in accordance with the advances of modern technology and social development, using as a basis the I.L.O. instruments.

The Ministers of Labour also decided to set up two regional technical commissions, one on labour questions and the other on social security, consisting of experts from the Ministries of Labour and the social security institutions of the five countries, with the specific purpose of carrying out all the preliminary studies necessary and submitting to the Central American Council of Labour and Social Welfare the texts of resolutions to be adopted with a view to the improvement of institutional structures and to the formulation of common labour legislation appropriate to the social conditions in Central America.

These technical regional commissions have held two meetings in which they examined labour administration programmes and aspects of social security resulting in the formulation of a Central American Convention which will be submitted to the next meeting of the Ministers of Labour which will take place in Guatemala City in August this year.

It was with great pleasure that the government delegates of the five Central American countries, when they examined the Report of the Director-General, observed that some of the aspirations which are already included in the Central American programmes had been outlined in the Report.

We can say that we give full support to the statement of the Director-General that "The interdependence of economic and social development is obvious. Without the first, a better and fuller life is not possible; without the second, economic growth would lack the necessary impetus and its crowning purpose—the full realisation of human potentialities ".

We are in favour of integrated economic and social development, where both aspects would be studied jointly, as the Director-General suggests.

We are very happy to find that the I.L.O. has included among its projects the following: administrative decentralisation which will make it possible to deal more effectively with regional economic and social problems; human resources programmes, to be developed in close relationship with economic development plans, with the main objective of providing for the implementation of those plans the necessary skilled manpower; raising the level of productive employment and improving conditions of work and life; vocational training programmes aimed at improving manpower skills in accordance with the essential needs and requirements of States Members at varying stages of development.

In spite of the importance which the Director-General has given to these programmes, the Central American delegations which I represent would like to express their future aspirations in concrete form.

First of all, in connection with the decentralisation of the I.L.O., we would hope that due account will be taken of all the regional needs, and in this respect we would urge that in this process an I.L.O. field office be set up for Central America. This would enable us to find an immediate solution to the innumerable and complex problems which arise every day, thanks to the agreements on economic integration which I referred to above. Similarly, we would urge that for the operation of this office the possibility be considered of recruiting officials coming from the region who, because they are in closer contact with the needs of the population and because they are quite aware of all their problems, are the best persons to collaborate towards a solution of these problems. In this way the I.L.O. would be carrying out fully the tasks which the Constitution and the International Labour Conference have set it.

Similarly, we feel it essential that the experts who come to Latin American countries on technical assistance missions should come from the region for the very simple reason that since they would speak the same language and know the problems of Latin America, their advice could be put to fuller use and they would not have to waste time learning what the problems are and learning the language.

Secondly, we would like to urge the International Labour Office to promote technical assistance for programmes of planning of human resources, vocational training, labour statistics, labour administration and social security, all of these programmes being due very shortly for implementation at the regional level in the Central American countries.

We should like to express our thanks to the Director-General for the stress he has laid on the future programmes of the I.L.O. and the way in which Kosovac is promoting their development, which is very encouraging to developing countries because we realise that an energetic attack is being made on the very vital points of the complex problems arising in economic and social development.

Moreover, we should like to pay tribute to the very valuable collaboration which the International Institute for Labour Studies has given us, which has made it possible for officials of the governments and representatives of the workers and employers to have better knowledge of the characteristics of economic and social development which will mean that, through such a common denominator, the three sectors will have a better understanding of each other and will thus be better enabled to solve the social problems which they have to face. This work of the Institute deserves our full support.

We should also like to express our gratitude for the collaboration which the experts who have been sent on mission to the Central American countries have given to the technical commissions.

In the name of the countries which I represent I should like to congratulate the President on his election to the responsible function he discharges.

Mr. ZIARTIDES (Workers' delegate, Cyprus) —I have pleasure in congratulating the President of this Conference on his election.

In the President's address he referred to the question of the programme and structure of the I.L.O. and to this year's Report of the Director-General, which he praised and described as a very able Report. I fully agree with him that the Report of the Director-General is an important document. It really constitutes one of the most important contributions to the collective effort of the Members of this Organisation to seek new programme areas, new methods of work, even new principles, corresponding to the new conditions and to the changes that have taken place in the world. But as the President and fellow delegates will recall, during the discussions in 1963 and 1964, the structure of the I.L.O. and a number of its established practices have been called into question. During those discussions a considerable number of proposals were made. All those proposals are listed and analysed in the document prepared by the Office, as decided at the 48th Session of the Conference. I went through that document and I have seen that the discussion of such important questions as the membership of the Organisation, the representative character of its organs etc., is omitted from this year's Report. I fully understand the reason for this. The discussions in 1963 and 1964 revealed no measure of agreement on those questions and the Director-General thought that they required some further examination. I do not think that we would be justified if we refused to allow the Director-General and the Working Party appointed for this purpose by the Governing Body the time required by them to consider these questions. But I think that it is the duty of all those who would like to see the I.L.O. achieving new progress to stress the necessity for the very valuable collaboration which the I.L.O. is deplorable.

Let me also mention the question of the nomination of non-governmental representatives to the Conference. It is no secret that a number of governments infringe the Constitution of the I.L.O. when appointing Workers' delegates. The Credentials Committee has not been able to prevent the infringement of the Constitution.

During the discussions in 1963 and 1964 a great number of delegates spoke about the tripartite character of the I.L.O. They suggested that there should be no change in the tripartite basis of the Organisation and that tripartism should be strengthened in the I.L.O. The Pancyprian Federation of Labour which I represent fully agrees that tripartism should be strengthened in the I.L.O., but if we allow or tolerate the infringement of paragraph 5 of article 3 of the Constitution, the consequence will be that we shall have a falsified representation of the international working class. This will lead not to the strengthening but to the weakening of tripartism in the I.L.O.

There is another harmful practice which we believe leads to the weakening of tripartism in the I.L.O. This is the monopoly established inside the Workers' and Employers' groups by certain international organisations. This again is no secret.

These practices should be eliminated. Those who really want to see genuine tripartism in the I.L.O. strengthened should envisage a detailed reconsideration of all the provisions of the Constitution, of the Standing Orders of the Conference and of the rules governing the various organs and bodies of the I.L.O. with a view to securing proportional representation of all trade union tendencies in the various bodies of the Organisation.

Having made those few remarks on the question of the structure of the I.L.O. and its procedures, I intend to say a few words on that
This question. I would like to say that the so-called association of the workers in the number of delegates referred to the question of international organisations of the United Nations principles and Charter. Cyprus is an example. We attained our independence in 1960. It was a restricted and conditional independence. In spite of the difficulties and problems involved, our Government and our people embarked on an intensive effort to expand the economy of the country and advance towards social progress. The efforts of our Government and our people are well known to the I.L.O. and to all the other international organisations of the United Nations family. The efforts of our people have been interrupted by the riots and the rebellion of a minority which has been inspired, organised and aided from abroad. Our efforts for economic expansion and progress are prevented by the threat of aggression and by the intervention of imperialistic Powers who would like to use Cyprus as a military base for their aggressive plans in the area of the Middle East. Because of these threats of military aggression and foreign intervention, and for the purpose of defending its freedom, Cyprus, a small country of a population of 600,000, has created and maintains an army of 20,000 men. These are human resources which, in conditions of peace, could be developed and utilised for the economic expansion of our country.

For these reasons we believe that the I.L.O., in a continuous and thorough manner, should seek ways and means of easing international tension and assisting activities which aim at the establishment of a lasting peace.

During the discussions in 1963 and 1964 a number of delegates referred to the question of the so-called association of the workers in the management of undertakings. In the Report of the Director-General it is stated that "there was some difference of opinion" on this question. I would like to say that the workers and the trade union movement which I represent have no illusions regarding this question. There can be no real participation of the workers in the management of undertakings as long as the production relationships are those existing today. Real participation of the workers in the management of undertakings can only be achieved under conditions of social ownership of the means of production.

What is important for the workers is not participation in the management of undertakings which are privately owned, but the effective protection of their freedom of association, their right to bargain collectively and their right to strike. We believe that the existing I.L.O. procedures for the examination and consideration of reported violations of trade union rights are inadequate and that much improvement is required. I am making these remarks not because these rights are violated in Cyprus. On the contrary, we are proud of the progress we have achieved in this field. I am making these remarks because we know that in many countries trade union freedom is non-existent.

In concluding, I repeat that I consider the Report of the Director-General as an important document, which contributes to the collective effort of the Members of this Organisation to seek new avenues corresponding to the historic changes that have taken and are taking place in the world.

Interpretation from Russian: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Gurinovich)—I give the floor to Sr. Alaçam, Government adviser, Turkey, on a point of order.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ALAÇAM (Government adviser, Turkey)—Thank you, Mr. President. The preceding speaker made allegations of a quite erroneous character regarding the attitude of the Turkish community in Cyprus and alluded to the policy of my Government on the Cyprus problem. My delegation cannot leave these allegations without a reply, and therefore I would ask you to permit me to exercise my right to reply in order that I may refute the false assertions of the preceding speaker.

Interpretation from Russian: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Gurinovich)—You will have this opportunity when you speak in the general debate on the Director-General's Report. You might wish to take advantage of that occasion, because if I permit you to speak now, in the exercise of a right of reply, I will have to do the same for all other delegations that might wish to reply to you.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ALAÇAM—I understand your concern, but the Turkish Government delegation has already spoken in the general discussion on the Director-General's Report.

Interpretation from Russian: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Gurinovich)—Very well, then, I will allow you three minutes.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ALAÇAM—First of all, I must state that it is with regret that in a conference of a technical organisation like the I.L.O. I should have to speak of a political problem, the solution of which cannot be sought in this Organisation. However, my delegation cannot leave such accusations unanswered.

In reply to the statement which has been made, I should like to explain briefly the true reason for the events in Cyprus.

The Greek Cypriot Administration, to which the speaker belongs, seeks deliberately to present to world public opinion the legitimate defence of the Turkish Cypriots as a rebellion and a minority uprising against the State. This is quite false. It is the Greek Cypriots who have attacked their Turkish fellow-citizens in order to attain their well-known political objectives and oblige them to quit the island. This attitude of the Greek Cypriot Administration is best expressed in a speech delivered by Archbishop Makarios in 1962 in the village of Panaia. I quote: "Until this small Turkish Cypriot community—a part of the Turkish race which was the terrible enemy of Hellenism—is entirely expelled, the work of E.O.K.A. [a terrorist organisation] can never be regarded as completed." That is the real explanation of the events of Christmas 1963.

As for the present miseries of the Turkish population and the tribulations it has suffered, these have been described in detail in various reports by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. One of these, dated 10 September 1964, states that nearly 3,000 houses were partially or totally destroyed and many others pillaged; that commerce was completely disrupted; that the number of persons dependent on Turkish aid was 56,000 including 25,000 refugees; that 23,500 persons were without work; and that 7,500 persons were missing.

Thus, half the Turkish population of the island have been deprived of all their means of subsistence and lost all their property. The rest of the population continues to live in pockets, surrounded by armed Greek Cypriots, and subjected to all forms of pressure and abuse. The Greek Cypriots are maintaining a rigid economic blockade aimed at reducing the Turkish Cypriot population to famine and despair.

On the basis of these facts, the Secretary-General says in his report that the economic restrictions on the Turkish community were so severe that they were equivalent to a veritable siege, and indicated the intention of the Greek Cypriots to impose a solution by economic pressure rather than by military action.

The explanations which I have given show clearly how the tragic events in Cyprus are the result of a policy of intimidation and terrorism by the Greek Cypriot leaders against their Turkish fellow-citizens.

Interpretation from Russian: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Gurinovich)—I doubt that this statement really represents a reply since the delegate of Cyprus is not even present in the hall. I did not notice this, and therefore I thought that you might reply to him. If he were present, and had wished to reply to you, I would certainly also have allowed him three minutes to do so.

(The Conference adjourned at 5 p.m.)
RATIFICATION OF CONVENTIONS BY GHANA, ISRAEL AND THE SYRIAN ARAB REPUBLIC

The President—I have pleasure in informing the Conference that the Director-General of the International Labour Office has registered, on the dates indicated, the ratification of the following international labour Conventions:

By Ghana (2 June 1965):

By Israel (9 June 1965):
Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951;

By the Syrian Arab Republic (10 June 1965):
Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963;
Hygiene (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1964.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

The President—I would first like to thank Mr. Gurinovich, Government delegate, Byelorussia, for lightening my burden for a whole day yesterday and conducting the proceedings of this Conference.

I have received a representation from the leader of the delegation of Portugal to the I.L.O. Conference in which he protests against the remarks made by the representative of the All-African Trade Union Federation concerning Dr. Salazar. I uphold his protest and direct that the above-mentioned reference shall be expunged from the records of the Conference.

A reference was also made in the same strain by the same speaker to General Franco, Head of State of Spain. That reference will also be expunged from the records.

I should like to take this opportunity of reminding delegates that there is a certain protocol to be observed in our discussions. Heads of State shall not be attacked in any manner and, if a delegate resorts to such remarks in future, I shall, in accordance with article 14 of the Standing Orders of the Conference, be constrained to request him to resume his seat.

I must add that my position will be the same should any delegate refer to any theatre of war in any part of the world, as this is a purely political matter, is a subject which falls within the competence of the United Nations and the Security Council and is, in any case, not relevant to the subjects under discussion here.

We will now resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from French: Mr. Messer (Government delegate, Israel)—I am pleased to be able to transmit to you, Mr. President, the congratulations of the Israeli delegation on your election to the presidency of this important Conference. Your qualities leave no doubt as to your ability to carry out this task.

This session of the Conference is the third in succession to be devoted to a discussion of the Director-General's Report dealing with the structure and administration of the International Labour Organisation. At the two previous sessions we already expressed our appreciation of this initiative by the Director-General in making these matters a principal subject of discussion of the Conference. We agree with him entirely that the changes and developments in the various areas with which the I.L.O. deals must involve an adjustment of structures and replanning in the various fields of I.L.O. action.

We also welcome the Director-General's Report on the same subject to the present session, which differs from the preceding Reports in the concrete nature of his proposals, particularly in relation to the details of the internal reorganisation of the I.L.O. and on the initial implementation of the ideas submitted at the previous sessions. We have already expressed our support for the decentralisation of the activities of the I.L.O. and for the expansion of the regional activities; the programme of reorganisation now submitted seems to us to be satisfactory.

However, we should like to sound a note of warning against excessive decentralisation and independence of the regional branches, which might promote the emergence of divergent and perhaps contradictory tendencies within the Organisation regarding certain particular activities.
In our opinion, the Director-General was right in suggesting the geographical breakdown of the various continents for the purpose of the regional machinery. It seems to us that the sole criterion to be followed should be a geographical one.

I should like to repeat and to stress that in our opinion that which brings the peoples together is far stronger than that which disunites them. In international relations there is no place for intolerance towards the ideas of others, as long as the desire for peace, justice and respect for men and women, and the determination to keep on a good footing with all peoples, are maintained. The State of Israel wishes to co-operate and to have friendly relations with all the independent peoples of the world, including those of our own region, as well as with those who are approaching independence.

With regard to the chapter of the Director-General's Report which deals with the main activities of the I.L.O., I should like to stress that in Israel we are aware of the close links between economic development and the development of human resources. A few years ago our Ministry of Labour set up a Manpower Planning Office which has been receiving effective aid from I.L.O. experts. This office has already prepared estimates on the supply of and demand for manpower for the years 1965-70, and also studies on the needs for human resources in the developing areas of Israel, as well as on the question of women's work and other matters.

We support the Director-General's proposal that the I.L.O. manpower development activities should be devoted mainly to the problems which are characteristic of developing countries, in order to help them to solve the problem of unemployment on the one hand and the shortage of skilled labour on the other hand. Of course, these matters are directly related to the improvement of education and the mobilisation of financial resources, which in their turn require close collaboration with the international organisations responsible in those fields.

We believe that the I.L.O. still has a wide field of action regarding the improvement of the conditions of work and living, above all in the fields of health, safety and social security. There is still a great deal to be done in these respects, not only in the developing countries but also in those which are already developed. Of course, the I.L.O. cannot undertake this immense task alone; bilateral assistance and direct co-operation between countries have an important role to play.

I should now like to say a few words on two of the agenda items at this session, namely agrarian reform, with particular reference to economic and social aspects, and the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries.

In our view there is a close link between these two subjects. Nowadays, effective and satisfactory agrarian reform without a co-operative movement is inconceivable. Technical development and intensive mechanisation have taken place and are still going forward in all branches of agriculture, including ploughing, pest elimination, fruit picking, harvesting in a wider sense, transport and marketing. The isolated farmer or the small proprietor cannot alone make profitable use of all these technical means. If we do not wish to promote the concentration of great estates in the hands of a minority who would batten on the wealth of the country and exploit employed labour, estates which would really be merely mechanised latifundia, we shall have to move towards the distribution of land between farmers and the organisation of work and sales on a co-operative basis. Without co-operative organisations the farmer will remain deprived of modern means of production, the standard of living of the peasants will diminish or else the prices to the public will increase to an exorbitant extent.

A few months ago we organised in Israel an international congress on the role of the co-operative movement in village development. Twenty-three experts of the co-operative movement from 16 countries in Asia, Africa, Europe and the Americas took part in this congress, as well as delegates from the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations.

This congress discussed various economic, sociological and juridical aspects of agricultural co-operation. The various existing kinds of villages of a communal or co-operative kind, such as kolkhoz, sovkhoz, panchios, Mochav, Ovdim, Moshav Shitufi and the kibbutz were mentioned. At the end of this congress a decision was taken to establish an international scientific centre for research on rural co-operation. The Israeli Co-operative Research Centre is to administer this international body. Members of the Conference will also remember that an I.L.O. seminar on rural development was recently held in Israel. The two international meetings I have mentioned both discussed not only agricultural and economic questions, but also the sociological aspects of co-operation.

We take a special interest in the latter aspect because we consider the ideological and social aspects of co-operative organisation as extremely important means of inculcating practical equality and mutual help. We therefore consider that co-operative organisation is not merely a juridical framework for the existence of associations with an entirely economic objective but an ideological movement having an educative value with a view to social progress as well as its economic advantages.

The co-operative movement in Israel, including co-operatives of producers and consumers, credit and housing societies, co-operation in public services such as urban and inter-urban transport, is one of the bases of our economy, and about 90 per cent. of our farm production comes from co-operatives.

We think we have reached satisfactory results, and we have been able to share our experience in the co-operative field with many developing countries. We are prepared to continue to share this experience with all countries.

Before closing, I should like to speak for a moment on the Special Report on the Application of the Declaration concerning the Policy of Apartheid of the Republic of South Africa.
We wish to express our regret and our protest at the discrimination policy of that country, which, on certain points, has even been accentuated recently. We have approved and will approve the action taken by the United Nations, the I.L.O. and other United Nations agencies to liquidate this apartheid policy in South Africa, and any other form of discrimination in any part of the world whatever.

In conclusion, I should like to congratulate the countries which are taking part for the first time in this Conference of the oldest international organisation and the one with the largest number of Members.

It only remains for me to express the hope that soon we shall have among us the delegates of the countries which have not yet attained their national independence.

Mr. CACHIA-ZAMMIT (Minister of Labour and Social Welfare, Malta)—I am gratified that I have the opportunity to address this august gathering once more. When I spoke from this rostrum two years ago my country was still a colonial territory, subject to the limitations and frustrations that that term implies, but I did say then that we were moving rapidly towards independence. It is now common knowledge that negotiations between the United Kingdom Government and my Government were successfully concluded since then and independence in my country was happily achieved last September. The days of colonialism are over and Malta is proud to be an independent member of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

Since last September Malta has taken her rightful place in the United Nations and in the many agencies which emanate from that Organisation. One of these, and I must say one to which we attach a great deal of importance, is the International Labour Organisation, to which Malta was admitted on 4 January this year. It is with a sense of pride, therefore, that I am here on this historic occasion with the members of the Maltese delegation to the Conference, who will be taking an active part as full members and not as mere observers as heretofore. I am confident that Malta's association in the International Labour Organisation will prove of mutual benefit.

The Government of Malta has recognised that it will continue to be bound by the obligations entered into on behalf of the territory of Malta by the United Kingdom Government in respect of no less than 25 Conventions, as a footnote to the Report of the Director-General rightly indicates, and ratification of these Conventions has been duly registered. Besides, my Government has undertaken to continue to apply the non-metropolitan Conventions which the United Kingdom had applied hitherto until it is possible to ratify the corresponding "metropolitan" Conventions.

I can assure you that my Government has joined the International Labour Organisation with a will to take an active part in its work and to make its humble contribution towards the continued success of the Organisation.

It has been my task, both before and after the publication of the Director-General's Report to the Conference covering the activities of the International Labour Organisation during the last year and giving some indication of future action was studied. Particularly encouraging is the Director-General's reference to newly independent countries stressing the possibility of assisting them in harnessing forces for the exploitation of their natural resources, the building of their basic social institutions and systems, and the development of their manpower towards a rapid improvement of the social and economic conditions of the peoples concerned.

Malta is a small country where natural resources are lacking. That notwithstanding, over the years, and in particular during the last ten years, Malta has made great strides in introducing and gradually improving social laws and systems which perhaps are still lacking in larger and much richer countries. It is the development of our manpower that needs particular attention. In fact, the wealth of the nation consists in its manpower, which can be forged into a dynamic productive force as good and efficient as anywhere in the world.

With the reduction in expenditure by the United Kingdom defence departments on the island, Malta has embarked on a planned economic development programme. The dockyard, formerly belonging to Her Majesty's Government and catering almost exclusively for the British fleet, is now firmly established as a commercial concern where ships and tankers of all nationalities can be repaired and trimmed. Industrialisation is going apace, and foreign investors are welcomed to our island and aided financially and in many other ways to set up factories on the island.

We are quite aware that the road ahead of us is hard, but if everyone continues to cooperate with the Government, in particular workers' and employers' organisations, there is no reason why Malta should not be able to overcome the many testing problems all newly independent territories must face. My country stands in the forefront in its desire for rapid industrialisation as a means to its overall economic and social development. I am therefore glad to note in the Director-General's Report that industrial development, particularly in respect of requirements for planned managerial and manpower development, the promotion of sound industrial relations, increasing productivity and the improvement of conditions of work, has been a major concern of the International Labour Organisation.

Mindful of these essential requirements, my Government has requested and obtained technical assistance from the International Labour Organisation in the form of fellowships in training within industry, factory safety, industrial training, with particular emphasis on apprenticeship and vocational guidance, and on industrial relations. My Government is grateful to the International Labour Organisation for the services of an expert sent to Malta to train supervisory staff both in the private and in the public sectors of employment; his work is now continued by a local officer trained in the United Kingdom under the auspices of the International Labour Organisation. It is also grateful to the International Labour Organisation for the expert reports on manpower development and apprenticeship and vocational training who are expected to start work in Malta shortly, this being very useful follow-up work in connection with fellowships which I have already mentioned. All the above activities in the field of technical co-operation provided by the International Labour Organisation form part of our development plan and fit in with the Government's long-term social and economic policy.

No real advance can be made unless living and working conditions are improved, and in this respect I am glad to be able to report that minimum conditions of work in the various industries in Malta are continually revised to meet the needs of the moment. Existing wage-fixing machinery comprising both sides of industry serves its purpose wonderfully well. Trade unions, which are very virile and active, take care of the organised labour force, bargaining and negotiating collective agreements on their behalf.

Improvements in the social security field were effected as recently as last February when insurance was extended to cover self-employed persons. Further amendments are contemplated this financial year, including the reorienting of the National Assistance Act which will be increased. I am glad to report that the relevant legislation has already been passed by Parliament.

All these improvements in social security recently implemented, or which are being introduced now, will put an extra strain on our resources, but my Government is pledged to improve social standards even if this should be done at some sacrifice.

In setting international labour standards the International Labour Organisation is providing the nations of the world with a pattern on which labour and social laws can be modelled for their peoples. In defending human rights, the International Labour Organisation is rendering an invaluable service to humanity. In providing the nations of the world with a pattern on which labour and social laws can be modelled, the work of the labour administration and working conditions are improved, and in this respect I am glad to be able to report that the relevant legislation has already been passed by Parliament.

Before I conclude, Mr. President, you will find in this frank discussion the kind of reciprocal respect of rights and a full knowledge of duties produced a proper equilibrium of functions which can be found only in the government of a new kind which has now almost taken on the force of law in my country. There has been a breach in the great wall which was raised on the one hand by indifference and on the other hand by lack of knowledge, so that on a common ground of realities the parties may meet and discuss.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. DONAYRE BARRIOS (Employers' delegate, Peru)—First of all I should like to express my congratulations to the President on his election to the high office of President of this session of the Conference.

I must say that the Report of the Director-General inspires both confidence and admiration. It shows us the enormous effort which has been undertaken towards reorienting the I.L.O. programme so as to concentrate on developing human resources and labour relations, promoting the trade union movement and sound social institutions, as well as improving living and working conditions.

I.L.O. activities coincide to a great extent with what is being done in my country under the increasingly capable direction of the Ministry of Labour. Breaking with the old—in fact I might even say archaic—patterns, the work of the labour administration authorities in Peru is being directed towards high objectives, not necessarily meaning that disputes are settled at the highest level of the administrative hierarchy, but rather encouraging that solutions be reached by direct negotiation between the parties concerned, so that they may themselves solve their own problems.

With such progress, a new trend has emerged in employer circles in Peru, encouraging and aiding in the technical training of workers and providing all kinds of assistance towards better training of trade union leadership in Peru.

I have the pleasure and satisfaction of being a labour lawyer and taking part in tripartite organisations such as the National Labour Council and the National Minimum Wage Commission, which are made up of workers, employers and officials of the Ministry of Labour. Extremely constructive work is carried out in these bodies, and the results, which are even now apparent, are very promising for the future.

The activity of the employers in Peru has been directed not only towards promoting technical training of our very capable workers, by their substantial contribution to the National Apprenticeship and Industrial Work Service, but also promoting training in training-workshops in the plants themselves, such as we have in some work centres, particularly in some of the big undertakings, for example in the sugar plantations on the Peruvian coast where skilled workers are trained.

Intensive education and training in the field of industrial safety have produced very encouraging results, and the industrial safety index has definitely risen.

In the field of labour relations, in the last few months we have had two industrial relations round tables, where open discussion has led to the formulation of agreements and recommendations, and to constructive solutions to which the three parties concerned—the State, capital and labour—have contributed, one side or another often sacrificing positions which they erroneously held to be privileged ones.

A healthy democracy of a new kind has found in this frank discussion the kind of agreement which has now almost taken on the force of law in my country. There has been a breach in the great wall which was raised on the one hand by indifference and on the other hand by lack of knowledge, so that on a common ground of realities the parties may meet and discuss.

Reciprocal respect of rights and a full knowledge of duties produces a proper equilibrium of functions which can be found only... in a well-exercised democracy where, without detracting from human personality, such work can be performed. With authority but without authoritarianism, well-trained administration and skilled trade union activity have produced the desired result of true social peace without a compromise on ideals, without anxiety, and with social justice.

Conflicts are disappearing to a large extent thanks to the unflagging desire manifested by all parties concerned, and to the vigilant preventive action which is being taken by the labour authorities who are technically equipped to provide up-to-date mediation and conciliation services.

Peru still has the problem of a bristling mass of labour legislation, enacted over the past 30 years, under which, without any technical planning but with a lot of social emotion, in disorder and without system, legal regulations have been accumulating—a characteristic of countries struggling to emerge from their underdeveloped state. In our country, social legislation is applied generally to all activities, and throughout the country. Hence, you can see how dangerous it is to legislate without taking into account different zones and different activities.

Faced with the new trends in social insurance, thanks to the help which the technical experts of the I.L.O. have given us, it has been possible, with our own technicians, to establish—this has been in operation for some time now—wage earners' social insurance, while a social insurance scheme covering salaried employees as well as workers' retirement pensions was instituted more recently. At the same time there has been in existence a whole series of compensations and indemnities which, along with indirect benefits under collective bargaining and agreements, has raised the cost of social charges to such an extent that operating costs—industrial, agricultural and commercial—have considerably reduced the margin for wages, particularly in old undertakings, since newly created firms can provide better conditions and wages because, due to their recent creation, they do not have this heavy burden of charges which represent a very great obstacle to entrepreneurial activities in Peru.

Social legislation are necessary, even more so when they are adopted and applied in accordance with what the economy of the country can bear. I have always believed, from a nationalist viewpoint, that Peruvian problems must find Peruvian solutions, adapting from the experience gained in the highly developed countries what is most suitable to Peru. When Peru joined the I.L.O., it recognised its high quality of its technical teams. Now that we are talking about decentralising the Office, by setting up regional offices, I think it is only right to say that I think this is a wise measure.

Just the same I think that every country needs its own technicians, formed in the crucible of the I.L.O., but with the impress of the country and speaking its language, so that these experts can deal with the workers more easily and in a more convincing way.

The report of agrarian reform, the document which is used as a basis for the general discussion, I think lacks one element, that is, it does not take into account the Agrarian Reform Act of 21 May 1964, No. 15037, which is the inspired fruit of our various political opinions in Peru and which merited the accolade of the International Commission of Jurists.

The work would have been better, I am sure, had it taken into consideration our own situation in Peru and had the group of experts included some Latin American experts who know the actual conditions in our countries. You cannot speak of a universal employer in law, nor can you overlook the possibilities of the contributions of each country with its different geography and different capabilities.

To speak about a given country you do not only have to know it very well but you have to evaluate the human factor and the soil factor in studying this disturbing problem of agrarian reform. We have overcome the legal problems in our country and we have launched an agrarian reform in a peaceful and democratic way, which is only proper for a country that has a long tradition of legal training.

To get away from this problem of a multitude of laws the Congress of my country has empowered the President of the Republic to promulgate a Labour Code which a National Commission, made up of two representatives of the Senate, two of the Chamber of Deputies, two technical experts from the Ministry of Labour, a representative from the Workers' Confederation and one from the Central Employers' Union, and two representatives of private undertakings in Peru (of whom I had the honour of being one), has prepared.

The new Peruvian Labour Code could be called the backbone of active labour in our country and its influence will be decisive on the working classes, the producing classes and the State itself.

The marked population explosion in our country, as in all America, creates the problem of future occupational training. Therefore we consider it is a great responsibility to stimulate and encourage new industries and to create other sources of employment so that the progress of our country may be a source of wealth to those who work in it—and those who provide employment because we consider that, if we continue along the path of social security, work will always be a guarantee of social peace.

The employers of Peru, whom I have the honour to represent, would like here to extend their cordial and friendly greetings to the new States Members and at the same time to all members of this great assembly. We express our best wishes for the success of this 49th Session and for the growth and constant development of the International Labour Office.

Interpretation from Arabic : Mr. FAHEEM (Workers' delegate, United Arab Republic)—It gives me great pleasure to extend to you, Mr. President, and to the Vice-Presidents of the Conference at this session, my congratulations on your election. I wish you every success in your work.

Workers everywhere today are interested in the International Labour Conference, hoping for improved working conditions in a world of prosperity and peace based on justice.
The workers of the United Arab Republic have always been in the vanguard of national movements in every respect. Therefore, it is not surprising that their social revolution was sustained by and dedicated to serve the working classes. It hastened to free the productive forces and release all the potentials for productive work.

The false notion of treating labour as a commodity is no longer tenable. The labour force, as our national charter asserts, has become the master of the production process. It also shares in the management and profits, receives fair wages and has reasonable working hours.

The rights acquired through our social revolution have resulted in provision for minimum wages, positive participation in management as well as a share in profits—all under working conditions which ensure the dignity of the worker.

Our workers feel that they are participating fully in the national development and that they will prove that they are able, through their work, to share in this development.

Recently we successfully carried out a pioneer experiment, sponsored by our workers, to prove their faith in and their awareness of the role they have to play in the battle for progress. This experiment—the month of production—evoked an unprecedented response from all workers and was a wonderful test of our potential. Our people are determined to refashion their life in their country in freedom, justice, productivity, toil, love and peace.

Because of similar geographical, historical, social, economic and political circumstances, the responsibilities facing our workers extend to our brothers in Arab, African, Asian and other developing countries. This enhances our concern with the questions of racial discrimination and forced labour—questions falling squarely within the competence of the International Labour Organisation, which pioneered to deal with them in relation to the principles of human rights and the requirements of our times.

We emphatically declare here that African workers, supported by their brothers all over the world, will carry on a remorseless struggle in the cause of the welfare of the African man and his dignity. This struggle will not cease until these ugly crimes are eradicated in Africa.

For this reason, and in conformity with the historical Charter adopted in Addis Ababa in May 1963, African workers are well aware of the importance of their unity. A unified African labour movement is the only means of discharging the heavy responsibilities which the Charter has assumed towards African workers and the African peoples. Obviously the attainment of a strong, unified African movement at the continent level must be based first and foremost on a unified national movement in each country, since the heavy burden on any African State aspiring to achieve progress and development requires the concerted efforts of all popular forces and, in particular, that of the labour force. It has been proved in all advanced countries, no matter what political, social or economic system they pursue, that a unified labour movement is a prerequisite for the attainment of better labour standards. It is also the practical solution to the problem of financing unions which suffer from a small and unstable membership. The unity of the unions at both the national and the continental level will contribute to establishing a popular foundation for the attainment of the aspirations of the African peoples—that is, African unity. It is the only means of meeting the challenges which African workers face.

The All-African Trade Union Federation was privileged to be the pioneer of the unity of the workers of Africa in an African setting and to defend their cause in terms of human dignity. Since its inception this Federation has pursued a policy of non-alignment and therefore upholds the principle of independence of all international trade union organisations, whatever their objectives. This attitude does not preclude cordial and brotherly relations with labour unions outside Africa; nor does it preclude co-operation with them aimed at exchanging views on the basis of equality and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

Freedom is the most precious gift which God has given to man; it is the light of our life; it is the incentive for the redoubling of human power. It is natural, therefore, that basic human rights find their proper place in the Charter of the United Nations, the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation, the Declaration of Philadelphia and the international labour Conventions.

The African workers and peoples are determined to defend the liberty of the subject and of the unions, which we have won only with great difficulty, however much this may cost us. We look forward with great impatience to the day when our brothers in some parts of the African Continent—in South Africa, Southern Rhodesia, Angola, Mozambique and the so-called Portuguese Guinea—will attain their full freedom and join their fellow Africans. We also look forward to seeing our brothers in occupied Palestine, having attained their independence and freedom, join us in the struggle for the improvement of standards of living.

It is clear from the discussion on the Report of the Director-General during the last two sessions of the Conference that great importance is attached to the development of human resources. The developing nations in particular are faced with the problem of providing employment opportunities for their ever-increasing labour force. Doubtless the efforts of the I.L.O. in this respect will help them to solve this problem. The Convention concerning employment policy adopted by the Conference this year will be a guide for member States and the I.L.O. in framing their programmes and policies concerning the development of human resources.

I thank you all and wish you every success.

Interpretation from French: Mr. VELOX-KAMP (Government delegate, Netherlands)—I would like to begin by congratulating you on your election and thanking the Director-General most warmly for his excellent Report. The Director-General and the Governing Body have carried out very precisely the terms of the resolution adopted at the 1964 Session of the Conference concerning the proposals and suggestions made in 1963 and 1964 as regards the programme and structure of the I.L.O. I am pleased that these proposals have now been circulated in a clear and concise form to the governments of member States, and to employers' and workers' organisations, for comment, even though it is to be expected that in their replies the same differences of opinion will appear as were expressed during the 1963 and 1964 Sessions of the Conference. I am thinking, among other things, of the varied and contradictory proposals concerning the role and functioning of the International Labour Conference, the relations between the Conference and the Governing Body, the composition of the Governing Body, and so on. That is why I want to express the hope that a more detailed discussion may lead to substantial progress.

It seems to me that the Director-General has done well to devote his Report to this session of the Conference to matters on which more or less general agreement has been reached. I am thinking in particular of the activities connected with the programme of the I.L.O., pending further proposals concerning the structure and methods of work of the Organisation. For we cannot and must not wait for those proposals before it is the duty of the Director-General to tackle the problems of our time and of the world of today and tomorrow with the greatest energy. The reforms applied in regard to productive activities should facilitate these initiatives, whilst the main points on which the activities of the I.L.O. should be concentrated have been described by the Director-General convincingly and with discernment.

If I may be permitted to make a few brief comments on the contents of the Report, I should like to do so in the light of the essential aim of the International Labour Organisation itself. This essential aim is to contribute, by means of international collaboration, to giving to the man who takes part in the production process the freedom he needs for the harmonious development of his personality. Whatever the activity of the I.L.O. and in whatever juridical instrument of the Organisation it is embodied, it all leads directly or indirectly to the freedom of the worker. In this connection one can speak of exogenous and endogenous factors which have a certain importance as regards this freedom. One could call exogenous the restrictions encountered in the work process by reason of race, colour, sex, religion and political opinions ; I describe as endogenous those restrictions stemming from the organisation of the process of production, social relations and the organisation of the State.

In relation to these two kinds of restrictions many things have changed in the world today as compared with a few decades ago. One can say that thanks to the dynamic influence of the International Labour Organisation the subjection of the worker has greatly diminished although this is not the case in every respect and everywhere. This does not mean that, particularly as regards the organisation of work and social relations, there does not remain a great deal to be desired in many respects. One can rejoice that the evolution of social policies in many countries has resulted in labour relations securing a justified legal basis ; that working conditions are making it more and more possible for man to carry out his work in conditions of optimum protection ; that by means of an adequate employment policy there is work for all who are able and want to work even in circumstances in which the economy cannot provide sufficient growth ; that a broad scheme of social security ensures an income, even in circumstances which make a man incapable of working or in cases in which a worker receives additional allowances.

But this does not belittle the fact that for real liberation in work one needs more. I am thinking in terms of three problems : firstly, the creation of a heritage for the workers ; secondly, a structure of the undertaking which would ensure a democratic approach to the utilisation of manpower ; and thirdly, the association of workers in the formulation of measures in the economical and social field both at the national and international levels. I would like to speak on these three points.

First of all, I have the impression that for the liberation of the worker it is of the greatest importance that those who work should not depend entirely on their wages, but should be enabled to save, thereby enjoying greater economic independence. It is for that reason that in the Netherlands we have started a policy that promotes the formation of savings. On the one hand, this policy creates a situation favourable to saving, for instance by eliminating legislative restrictions. On the other hand, it institutes concrete measures to encourage savings. I am thinking of fiscal facilities and bonuses that the authorities might establish to promote savings. Also an important task must be played by industry. In the Netherlands profit-sharing is evolving favourably, thanks to the measures I have quoted. In recent years there has even been talk of workers' participation not only in the distribution of profits but also in the growth of reserve funds ; in other words, the workers would participate in expansion of the undertaking's capital. In this connection the Netherlands trade unions have drawn up a report in which they stress the usefulness of such measures.

The Government has requested the views of the Economic and Social Council. In this the Government has made known its own approval of the idea, but it explained at the same time that it wonders whether the authorities should encourage such participation.

Secondly, I would like to stress the question of the co-determination of policies in undertakings and industrial branches. For some time now there has been legislation relating respectively to works councils and to organisation of the economy. The first of these grants the workers' rights of co-determination especially in the social sector of the enterprise. The second gives the workers the right of co-determination in whole industrial branches. I do not wish to go into further details, but I would like to point out that over and above that, proposals have been made to give the workers a greater say in directing the economic sector of the undertaking and to reorganise the whole structure of undertakings. A government commission has published a report on the subject that contains a number of important suggestions. In this connection, too, the Government has requested the views of the Economic and Social Council.

Finally, I would like to stress the usefulness of co-determination at the national and international level. Within the International Labour Organisation it goes without saying that the employers' and workers' organisations are participating in an equal manner in the activities of the Organisation on an equal footing with member States, but at the national level this question has not always been solved in this manner. The same goes for a number of other international institutions. As regards the Netherlands, for many years there has been an Economic and Social Council acting as the central organ of Netherlands industry, in which the employers, workers and representatives of public authorities co-operate to advise the Government on all matters relating to social and economic policies.

There is another Economic and Social Council which works within the European Economic Community. The question is whether this is sufficient. Just as in the Netherlands there are discussions on a national level with the employers' and workers' organisations, we wonder whether such deliberations should not also take place within the E.E.C., at least as far as relates to the social aspects of policies. To this end, the Netherlands Government has pleaded in favour of consultations with employers' and workers' organisations, and a first step has been taken by providing for such consultation when a request is made.

I am convinced that in the near future we shall need a more intensive institutional approach in order to promote the emancipation and liberation of the worker specifically in the field I have mentioned. I realise, and the Director-General says in his Report, that the time may not be ripe for the establishment of international legislation or standards in this field. Nevertheless, I would like to ask the I.L.O. to apply itself to this goal and to take this matter well in hand from the outset. I am convinced this will not be useless work because it will contribute largely to the further realisation of the aims of the International Labour Organisation.

Interpretation from French: Mr. LEVI SANDRI (Representative of the European Economic Community) — May I first of all, Sir, congratulate you, in the name of the Commission of the European Economic Community on your election to the presidency of this session of the Conference.

The International Labour Conference each year enables the Commission of E.E.C. to compare its own programmes and achievements in the social field with the guidelines and directives of this world labour parliament which are so well described in the Director-General's Report. In the same way, this year's Report enables us once more to tell you of the identity of aims and views of our two organisations, those of the I.L.O. at the world level, those of E.E.C. at the smaller level of six member States with a population of 180 million persons, mostly in highly developed areas, although there are some which still need an appropriate development policy.

Like the I.L.O., E.E.C. is on the eve of big changes, particularly structural ones, which will lead next year to the establishment of a single Executive Commission for the three communities, E.E.C., the European Coal and Steel Community, and Euratom, and which will lead subsequently to the unification of the three communities — at present governed by separate treaties—into a single community governed by one treaty. At the end of this year, E.E.C. will see the second stage of its transition period concluded, and we shall move towards the full establishment of the Common Market.

If the proposals of the Commission are adopted, the Customs Union will be effective towards the middle of 1967, i.e. two-and-a-half years before originally intended. Of course, much has still to be done to complete the application of the Treaty, particularly regarding fiscal and commercial policy, and social policy which interests you particularly. It is principally on this point of social policy that I shall briefly speak again this year.

Even if I speak only of social matters proper, one should not forget the social repercussions of the economic measures which the integration process entails, both at the level of our six countries and at world level. Who could underestimate the social effect, for instance, of world agreements on basic products inspired by the proposals already made by the E.E.C. Commission for a world wheat agreement? This is an instance of the close interdependence of economic and social factors, and I am convinced, like the Director-General, of the necessity for closer integration of human resources policies and programmes with economic development plans.

Among the proposals made in the Director-General's Report regarding the utilisation of human resources, this Conference may be interested to hear of the initiative of E.E.C. in establishing a middle-term economic policy. This programme, which will cover the years 1966-70, will outline the economic policy of the member States of the community and its institutions during that period, and will aim at ensuring their co-ordination. The work is being undertaken by expert committees, but representatives of the producers will take part particularly through the Economic and Social Committee of the Community, while at the purely political level the European Parliament will also be consulted.

No doubt it is premature to make forecasts of what this first programme will be, but the studies being undertaken foresee two main problems for most of the Community countries during the next five years. The first is a foreseeable slowing down in the increase of the active population. This may well cause persistent tension in the field of employment, in relation to other problems flowing from the future structural changes in the various economic sectors and a need for an improvement in the quality of manpower; hence, also, the need for an appropriate policy to stimulate the development of a productive apparatus which can better meet the demand. The development of vocational training will also play an important role in this connection.

It is in this spirit that the Commission of the E.E.C. recently approved two action programmes: one relating to vocational training in agriculture, and the other to the industrial and commercial sectors. In this regard, I should like to remind you of the action which the European Social Fund will be called upon to undertake to a growing degree on the basis of a recently proposed reform.

The Social Fund, as I have pointed out in previous years, is a body to equilibrate the charges borne by States in promoting geographical and vocational mobility of workers by resettlement and re-education of unemployed or under-employed workers. At the end of 1964 the Fund had enabled 350,000 European workers to find new jobs.

In future, however, the Fund will have to meet a different situation from that in 1958 when the Rome Treaty came into force. Unemployment has largely disappeared except in some regions, particularly southern Italy, and the Fund is now facing new problems—the shortage of skilled labour, the struggle against under-employment, and the transfer of excessive manpower from agriculture to industry.

Therefore, it is proposed that the Fund help in the vocational retraining of employed workers who are without skills or whose employment is threatened by technological progress. Furthermore, as regional disequilibrium subsists, proposals have been elaborated with a view to particular action, such as the contribution of the Fund to the construction of vocational retraining schools in underdeveloped regions. I should add that the policy of regional development is one of the activities to which the European Commission is paying particular attention.

The other big problem, to which I alluded just now and which will arise in the next few years, and of which our short-term policy must take account, is the considerable effort which must be continued regarding investment, and particularly public investment. This effort follows from the need to increase productivity and to develop what has been called "collective needs", namely the infrastructure in respect of transport, health, teaching and town planning. It poses problems of selection, for needs are likely to exceed resources, and so we must also study the promotion and appropriate use of savings.

I should like to say, also, that within the programme of medium-term economic policy, particular importance will probably also be attached to incomes policy. Work is at the initial stage in this regard but I think it is true to say that an incomes policy must be global; that is to say, one cannot merely have regard to wage policy; the policy must include all income, including profits, pensions and dividends. There must also be complete independence for the employers' and workers' organisations as regards wages policy. We must greatly intensify, in the most appropriate manner, the relations between these organisations and the public authorities so as to agree, through a full and free exchange of views, on action in conformity with the general economic policy in the field of wage negotiations.

The Director-General's Report has some very important things to say in regard to the development of social institutions, the second I.L.O. major programme area. I would like to remind you that the E.E.C. Commission has also associated representatives of employers and workers with its own work in the social field. Proof of this is in the many tripartite or bipartite committees which are in existence. This co-operation is made possible by the constitution of European secretariats and European liaison offices of various national trade unions. These organs should form the initial nucleus of genuine European confederations which will carry out at Community level the function proper to national trade unions.

I think the moment has come for this development—from secretariats or liaison offices to proper organisations—to take place in such a way that the structure of social institutions does not lag behind the development of economic integration in Europe. In other words, the national organisations must face the problem of the transfer of certain tasks which have to be handled at the European level to bodies constituted at this level. I am thinking of the conclusion of European agreements for the settlement of certain aspects of employment relations which require co-ordination, and also the co-ordination of employment policies, which is increasingly necessary. Indeed, even action regarding the free movement of workers cannot be considered in isolation, but must be part of a balanced policy of economic development having as its corollary an employment policy co-ordinated at Community level.

I now come to conditions of life and work. I should like to say that the E.E.C. Commission is convinced of the need for study, research and statistical inquiry and for wide diffusion of the information so collected. There is an article in the Rome Treaty which requires the Commission to promote studies of this kind. Although I cannot speak at length on this work, I can say that it is not an end in itself but is the basis for subsequent action by the Commission which will adopt recommendations on the subject. To mention only more recent action, I shall tell you of three projects to be adopted to supplement I.L.O. instruments on certain points, namely protection of young workers, maternity protection, and health supervision of workers exposed to certain risks.

I cannot conclude without referring to the Community's attitude towards the non-aligned countries and particularly to States associated with the Community. As regards developing countries, I must stress that, besides action undertaken through the United Nations or bilaterally, the States Members of the Community have acted on their own to the advantage of the African States and the Malagasy Republic which are associated. This action is not only economic but also social.

With the coming into force of the Yaoundé Convention we have established facilities to permit the marketing at competitive prices of certain tropical products and action has also been taken in favour of agricultural products which are similar to and competing with those of the Community.
Apart from these economic measures, the effect of which on the agrarian structure and the social situation is evident, there are other direct measures of cooperation regarding training and study: the fellowship programme has been doubled for the year 1964-65 (1,400). The increased number of candidates shows the interest taken by associated States.

The European Development Fund is also constructing and equipping many general education or technical and vocational training establishments, and we have short-term courses for these purposes.

Among medical equipment schemes we have the Mogadiscio hospital which opened in January 1965.

The Community's aid is by no means given in a closed circuit, but tends to supplement the bilateral aid of member and non-member States, and we are also aiming at joint financing. On 29 March 1965 in Washington the Commission signed with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Development Association the first two agreements for co-financing two important projects.

An agreement concerning exchange of information in this sector has been concluded between the I.L.O. and the Commission, and the latter will participate in the I.L.O.'s meritorious work at the Turin Centre.

If time had permitted, I could have spoken on other aspects of the work of the E.E.C. Commission which are of interest to the I.L.O., particularly in the fields—and I am thinking particularly of the social security of migrant workers—where cordial co-operation between our two organisations has already long been established.

However, I must conclude; I should like to express once more the thanks of the E.E.C. Commission to your Organisation not only for the cordial co-operation to which I have alluded, but also for the role of precursor of social progress which the I.L.O. has always played and which we are convinced it will continue to play, while adjusting its structures and action to the new requirements of a developing world.

Sir George POLLOCK (Employers' delegate, United Kingdom)—May I first say how much pleasure it gives me to see the Presidential chair at this Conference occupied by the distinguished delegate from Pakistan, a nation which we, in our country, hold in the deepest affection and regard.

Secondly, may I congratulate the Director-General on his stimulating and thought-provoking Report. It appears to me that the fundamental idea motivating the whole of that carefully reasoned document is that, in assisting in the formulation of national policy, we should never lose sight of our main objectives, namely the preservation of the freedom and dignity of mankind and the raising of the living standards of all the peoples of the world. In many countries the raising of living standards must be dependent on the development of natural resources, of power, minerals and, particularly, agriculture. Many nations all over the world are showing great vision in the development of their potential mineral and agricultural wealth and it is on the economic progress which they make that their future social progress must be based.

Many years ago the wealth of Britain depended on her exports of wool—a fact which seems strange today. Later our prosperity was due in great measure to our exports of coal, but sooner or later every country must come to realise, as we have done, that its real wealth lies in the industry, skill and enterprise of its people. Without this skill and enterprise even the richest of natural resources can never be developed. With it, a country like my own—now comparatively poor in mineral resources, can nevertheless maintain a high standard of living for its people and at the same time preserve their individual liberty. In developing skills and aptitudes among people all over the world, the I.L.O. has a great contribution to make. In some industrialised countries—again, such as my own—over-full employment has created serious inflationary tendencies, but over the greater part of the world the problem is not one of finding men to fill jobs but of finding profitable jobs for men to fill. Unemployment is not only a social tragedy, it is also an economic disaster and the greatest handicap to real social progress. This great problem of unemployment and underemployment may be a topic for the expression of the highest sentiments, but we must turn our attention increasingly to the problem of translating those sentiments into action. This, I am sure, must take place at the national or local level and must be such as suits the needs of the particular community concerned.

I think, therefore, we ought to look in a spirit of constructive criticism at the statement, in Part I of the Director-General's Report, that international instruments were (and I note that he uses the past tense) the backbone of this Organisation and that their elaboration would continue to play an essential part in our work. That, apart from the point of international instruments by the I.L.O. in the past has made an important contribution to social advancement but the day when these were the backbone of the Organisation is, in my view, now over. As Mr. Abebe said on Wednesday, the I.L.O. has already produced sufficient international instruments to last a developing country like Nigeria for many years. For the future I think we should turn to action which relates to the wider issues I have referred to. There is too much diversity in the structure and economy of different nations to make it possible for international instruments, except on strictly limited subjects, to be of general useful application throughout the greatly increased membership of the I.L.O. as it is today. An international instrument tends to be framed either in compromise terms, when it is of little value, or it tends to be unrealistic in its application either, on the one hand, to a highly industrialised country or, on the other hand, to an emerging agricultural economy.

I feel, therefore, that in considering the future work of the I.L.O. we should aim less at universal standard-setting than at a greater decentralisation of activity—more conferences of a regional nature related to the problems of the countries in course of development, and more detailed consideration of the particular problems of particular developing areas. By such a measure of decentralisation we would gain in flexibility and thus in strength and this would enable us to make a further positive contribution to raising living standards throughout the world.

We must all have been impressed by the suggestions made to this effect by a number of distinguished speakers from some of the newer sovereign countries during the course of this Conference. I suggest that we look at our problems this way. How can jobs be created in countries where unemployment is high? What are the industries which can be developed in these countries? What are their real needs in management know-how and industrial training which will enable them to achieve fuller utilisation of their natural physical wealth and their great reserves of manpower? This, I feel, will be a more profitable line to pursue than that of concentrating on standard-setting, which this is not enough and that those who have been trained to develop those skills which have created the prosperity of the industrialised countries where free enterprise flourishes.

My appeal, therefore, to all nations on the subject of planning is: do not be too doctrinaire, because I believe that the flexibility which the free competitive system engenders is essential to the success of any industrial economy and is the best way of leading us to the prosperity which we seek for all the nations of the world.

Mr. ALBANO PACIS (Government delegate, Philippines)—As the candidate for the presidency of the International Labour Conference who won the election in the Asian region, but lost the big one in plenary, I wish to offer you Mr. President my sincere congratulations. I felicitate you on your victory and on the virtue which you seem to have inherited from the British past of your great country, of losing the battles but winning the war. I know that with your long experience in the political life of the Philippines as their candidate.

The Philippines offered its candidature and became Asia's candidate on the assumption that the principle of inter-regional and intra-regional rotation in the election to the offices of the international organisations, including the I.L.O., would be observed and preserved. My Government believes and continues to believe that this principle is of the utmost importance as a means of minimising political scheming and manoeuvring in the international organisations, and thus also of enabling them all the better to achieve their objective of world harmony and peace.

May I take this occasion to convey my thanks and those of my delegation and my Government to the countries of Asia for choosing the Philippines as their candidate. I earnestly hope—and I believe I also express the hope of Asia—that there will soon be sober second thoughts that will restore the principle of rotation to its former place in the I.L.O. If this should happen, my country, and Asia as well, will have the consolation of having lost the 1965 election but of having helped to defend and preserve a useful and wise policy. In this event, the circumstances of this year's election will warrant the belief that the year 1966 will be Asia's belated but legitimate turn to serve in the presidency of the Conference.

May I also take this opportunity to express the sincere appreciation of my delegation and my Government for the support of many non-Asian delegations, even if in doing so they voted for the losing side. I like to think that they did so in a courageous if vain attempt to uphold an established policy which the then Prime Minister of India's Government, Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru, had espoused and for which India's election to the presidency of the United Nations General Assembly in 1950 had been the signaliser of the arrival on the international scene of the emerging nations of Asia and Africa.

I now turn to the Report of the Director-General. Its most encouraging feature, I think, is its revelation of the heroic attempt of the International Labour Organisation to cope with the unprecedented situation of a world in a state of uneasy flux, characterised on the one hand by rapid scientific and technical developments and progress and, on the other hand, by the advent of many emerging nations, emphasising the fact, if nothing else, that some three-fourths of the world population do not yet enjoy to a tolerable degree the blessings of social justice. One is impressed by the thoughtful reorganisation of the Office in the face of this situation and amazed at the accomplishments of the Director-General. They are, of course, considered against the Organisation's limited budget. Having said this, one also suffers a feeling of frustration from the vastness and enormity of the human problem as against the sad inadequacy of the I.L.O.'s finances, talent and machinery. One can only conclude that there is so much to do and so little done.

A ray of hope is, however, worthy of note. The developing nations are earnestly and even heroically trying to help themselves, stimulated by the standard-setting work of the I.L.O. and in many cases actually aided by educational, technical and financial assistance from the I.L.O. Many of them are gradually, and in some cases dramatically, spreading the blessings of economic and social well-being to their own peoples. If I may do so without appearing immodest, I would now like to say a few words on the efforts of my own country along this line. When, as its final preparation for independence, the Philippines framed its present Constitution in 1935, it wrote into this supreme law, as one of the five cardinal objectives of the new nation, the following declaration: "The promotion of social justice to insure the well-being and economic security of all the people should be the concern of the State." With this constitutional mandate as a springboard, my Government since then has enacted and implemented a body of legislation that has transformed my country from a mere colony to a nation whose people not only enjoy freedom in its civilised maximum, but who also are fast acquiring their share of economic, social and political well-being.

The Philippine minimum wage has just been raised by legislation from 4 to 6 pesos a day, but the average industrial wage is 8 pesos a day. Today 3 million people, out of a total population of 30 million, are covered by the social security system of our country. There are about 2,000 labour unions with a total membership of nearly 2 million workers, and they enjoy broad freedom not only of association, subject to the laws against subversion, but also of bargaining, which they fully know how to utilise to their advantage. The Philippines has ratified and implemented the principal international labour Conventions, notably the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), and the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111).

Indicative of the preferential status afforded to labour in my country is the existence of a school, the Asian Labor Education Center, as part of the government university, the University of the Philippines, for the training of labour leaders and labour statesmen, not only Filipinos but other Asians as well.

The pace of expanding social justice in my country has been stimulated to a great extent by the efforts of the I.L.O. I think it can be truthfully said, however, that the Philippines as a developing nation, while accepting gratefully the assistance of the I.L.O. and other international organisations, is truly helping itself towards an increasing fulfilment of its constitutional goal of social justice.

The International Labour Organisation, by proclaiming in the preamble of its Constitution that "universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice", and by reinforcing this lapidary pronouncement with the Philadelphia Declaration of 1944, has pronounced itself, willy-nilly, as the foundation stone, the over-all base, of all the international bodies engaged in the improvement of human life on earth. And, indeed, it can perhaps be said that the face of humanity has already assumed a happier expression due to a large measure to the effective efforts of the I.L.O. to bolster man's dignity, enlarge his freedom and improve his welfare.

Yet, in my delegation's humble opinion, the I.L.O. has so far virtually overlooked at least two other fronts of human improvement and advancement which could be its concern, either solely or concurrently with other international organisations. One such front is disarmament as a means of diverting vast human and material resources to channels of human improvement and peace. The other is the control of the population explosion which, perhaps far more than ignorance and tyranny, and all other causes combined, is the most immediate, the greatest and the root-cause of this century's well-nigh universal human poverty, misery and degradation.

It is true that the United Nations has its Disarmament Commission and there is in Geneva an on-and-on Disarmament Conference. It is also true that efforts by these bodies have already produced the Partial Nuclear Test Ban Treaty which, it is earnestly hoped, will prove a good start towards complete control and abolition of nuclear armaments. But the process is slow and discouraging and may, before being completed, reach the point where further progress is impossible. This is to be feared because the atomic proliferation currently symbolised by Red China's second explosion of a nuclear bomb may catch up with all the present disarmament efforts before they have accomplished their objective.
It is possible, however, that the tripartite nature of representation in the International Labour Conference, with its range of constituents being perhaps even broader and deeper than that of governments and of other international organisations, might be the key to a world-wide movement in favour of disarmament. One must realise, of course, that disarmament cannot be unilateral; all the nations producing and owning great armaments must disarm at the same time and in the same or proportional measure. Yet, if the I.L.O., whose influence and beneficial action reach out to the greatest mass of labour and management and to all the governments in all of its member States, were to talk and keep talking and advocate disarmament all the year around, and from year to year, this might generate a world-wide groundswell of public opinion that could eventually proclaim and condemn excessive and dangerous armaments as a most scandalous form of human folly. For if the billions upon billions of dollars and roubles and man-hours now annually wasted in arms production, which could be channelled towards human, material and spiritual improvement, the aims of the I.L.O.—its solemn commitment to uplift humanity, particularly at its lower levels—would speedily approach realisation.

An entirely different, and in a way opposite, human problem is the control of the increase of population. As of today, fully two-thirds of the over 3 billion human beings that inhabit the earth exist in poverty and squalor—undernourished, poorly sheltered, scantily clothed, ignorant and degraded. Yet, at the present rate of increase, the world population could double in a few decades. If today production to meet human needs and the means of educating and gainfully employing human beings are already sadly inadequate, it is impossible to imagine how aggravated will then be the inadequacies and how much worse will be the condition of human suffering.

It may be that the problem poses side issues that will be difficult to cope with, problems arising from religious and other scruples. It may also be that the nature of the problem makes it the prime concern of other international organisations such as the World Health Organisation. But it cannot be gainsaid that the population is squarely at the bottom of the problems that the I.L.O. is presently engaged in trying to solve, and that no solution of them can be complete and lasting unless this basic fact of life in the twentieth century is also faced and taken by the horns. The I.L.O., as the world's premier promoter and guardian of social justice, should also be the prime watcher and regulator of the world's population.

Admittedly, disarmament and population control are not matters that can be discussed, much less solved, in a single session of the International Labour Conference. But precisely because they require long-range and sustained effort, the start, if they are deemed proper areas for I.L.O. action, should be as early as possible.

The International Labour Organisation is playing a massive role in the alleviation of human misery and degradation. Within its limited means but inspired by its battlecry of social justice, it is slowly and painfully fighting the enemies—human ignorance, intolerance, destitution, demoralisation and shame. It should do more, and its States Members should enable it to do more. It should be enabled to vanquish these enemies, no less. For in the totality of the immeasurable existing human degradation there is much to do, and the I.L.O., because of its existing machinery, personnel and experience, is the best qualified to perform the groundwork and take the vanguard of the crusade to conquer these evils. May the I.L.O., then, be vouchsafed the means to expand the front and improve the effectiveness of its endeavours, so that the triumph of social justice everywhere may be witnessed by this generation. The quality of leadership and statesmanship so far demonstrated by the Director-General and his staff constitutes an earnest that this objective is not impossible of attainment.

May I now close, Mr. President, by reiterating the congratulations of my delegation for your election, by pledging once more our support and co-operation, and by wishing you and the national delegations gathered here, whose efforts you now guide with efficiency, wisdom and tact, a most fruitful Conference.

Interpretation from French: Mr. CAMPA- NELLA (Employers' delegate, Italy)—The Report which the Director-General has submitted to us this year has one unusual merit in particular: its brevity is without precedent. In fact, it concentrates on a few basic points of the programme of our Organisation in the modern era in which we live.

Without reverting to what I said in 1963 and 1964, I should like to confirm my attitude with regard to the possible reforms in the structure of the International Labour Organisation. Since it is to a certain extent connected with the questions discussed by the Conference, I should like to say something about the application within the Secretariat of the recommendations made by the advisers from McKinsey and Company, in particular, there being the most responsible for relationships between employers and workers should be given special consideration in view of the tripartite nature of our Organisation; further, that the necessary relationships should be established between the activities of the Governing Body and those of the Programme Committee of the I.L.O. Finally, in connection with the regional decentralisation of the Office's activities, an effort must be made to avoid aggravating any possible divisions which may exist amongst the member States, and on the contrary an effort must be made towards cohesion with a view to promoting peace and social progress.

The first of these subjects, as the Director-General says, has been the subject of widespread agreement reached within the Conference, and it concerns particularly the development of human resources. In particular we are entering here the field of advanced training in general and vocational training of workers in particular, which is the keystone of economic and social progress. I think that it is unnecessary for me to repeat my full and entire support of all efforts made along these lines.

There is also an economic policy to be followed, and I wish to stress only how necessary it is that this policy should be realistic and developed to the service of the citizens, avoiding unrealistic and impracticable programmes.

However, to limit myself to what is called today "active manpower policy", I should like to remind you that we have stressed on other occasions that vocational training is also an essential instrument. It is necessary to avoid any crystallisation of the activities of the workers which may result from principles which are based on the responsibility of employment's sake rather than stressing the value of having a vast choice of possibilities for progress, which is the only method which can really ensure economic and social progress in any country.

The basic needs of the developing countries are the same as for other countries: progress and a spirit of initiative, improvement of education in general and, in particular, vocational training and the investment of the necessary capital, which will depend, of course, on the atmosphere of stability which can be created by the respective governments. I should also like to encourage these countries to optimism by pointing out to them that a good deal of natural wealth has been discovered and still more is to be discovered in their territories, which are generally much more extensive than those of the highly developed countries. I should like to remind you only that the average density of the population in Western Europe, in the countries of the "Six" and "Seven", is 115-116 inhabitants per square kilometre whereas in the countries in the group of 75 there are 30-40 inhabitants per square kilometre. We have every reason to believe that the agricultural, forestry, mining and power potential is more considerable, as well as the latent resources of ingenuity and individuality of their populations. These countries can very well reach a standard of living comparable to that of the more advanced countries.

The Director-General, anxious to safeguard freedom of employment in the developing countries, says there is little to be gained by programmes. What the Director-General again refers to participation of the workers in the management of undertakings, and he says, quite rightly, that this subject is really—and I stress "really"—applied both in countries with a free and decentralised economy and in those where the economy is directed and centralised, and with what results.

The fourth objective of the I.L.O., to enhance the status of the worker in industry and in society, depends in part on improvement of his education. As far as the other aspects of the question are concerned, the role of the I.L.O. should be that of disseminating information on legal and contractual protection of the workers of the world and of ensuring the application of the existing international instruments which already cover all aspects of the problem. In this field initiative on the part of those directly concerned would lead to the best results because it is most likely to take account of reality and least inclined to indulge in unwise theories. We had a recent example of this in Italy with the signing of two new joint agreements on individual dismissal which replaced agreements signed 15 years ago. This was done at the very time when a new law had already been submitted to Parliament to be put to the will of the parties.

With respect to the fourth objective, the Director-General again refers to participation of workers in the management of undertakings and he says, quite rightly, that this subject does not lend itself to international regulation. He proposes that the I.L.O. should continue its studies on the subject. In fact, it might be interesting to see whether a system of this kind is really—and I stress "really"—applied both in countries with a free and decentralised economy and in those where the economy is directed and centralised, and with what results.

The fifth objective set for the I.L.O. by the Director-General, that is, to provide training for the persons directly involved in labour relations, seems to me very timely.

As to the problem of incomes, I think that the studies requested by last year's resolution concerning minimum living standards and their adjustment to the level of economic growth should be carried out and should include a study of the situation of all countries which have reached the highest average income levels, as well as an examination of the economic and social policy which has led to these results. In general, I think we can say that, as far as these and other aspects of living and working conditions are concerned, a policy of information is certainly more useful than a policy tending to adopt too uniform an approach to the conditions in widely differing countries.

As regards the desirability of adopting further instruments, the Director-General has reminded us that only a limited number of delegates have expressed reservations. It does not appear to me, in view of the fact that this limited number refers to the majority for Employers' delegates and several Government delegates, that this number is really so limited, particularly since many delegates have also spoken in the name of their colleagues. It is certainly logical that we should try to broaden the scope of the real application of existing instruments before establishing others.

The tasks of the I.L.O. remain fundamentally what they always were, and what is needed is to extend which we have become more necessary today. No one can disagree that first priority should be given to the underdeveloped countries, in order to improve their living and working conditions in accordance with the economic progress which we must help them to achieve through qualitative and quantitative improvement of human resources.

As regards Part II of the Report, which gives such a wide and exact picture of the I.L.O.'s activities, it cannot as a member of the Board of the Centre pass over in silence the chapter concerning the new International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training which will soon be opened in Turin, particularly in view of the importance of the technical assistance which our Organisation can provide.

I hope that the new countries, in their action to promote their economic and social progress, will always be able to profit by the experience, whether positive or negative. In this connection I would remind you that several years ago, at the time when the economic development of my country had reached its peak, I described to you the freedom which existed in the past had ensured that the magnanimity which you showed last year in yielding ground in order to maintain the smooth relationship so desirable for the running of our Conference has been amply rewarded by the abundant evidence that by displaying the expected wisdom and sagacity you have already justified the confidence shown in you.

The numerical strength of our Organisation has been increased by the addition of four States—Malta, Yemen, Malawi and Zambia. My Government congratulates them on joining hands with us in our efforts to uphold the principles of this Organisation and it looks forward to the opportunity of contributing towards the solution of the many problems with which we are faced. To you all and to all the governments represented here my Government, ever desirous of the peaceful coexistence of all men, extends the hand of brotherhood and sends its best wishes.

On a number of important points my Government can only reiterate the views expressed last year at the tenth sitting of the 48th Session as recorded on pages 125-127 of the Record of Proceedings. We consider, however, that we should comment not only on the new issues raised in the Director-General's Report but also on the two new items which are set out in the agenda of this session of the Conference.

It is gratifying to note that the I.L.O. has intensified its effort towards fuller co-ordination of its various goals in institutional development and technical co-operation. Such efforts and objectives are necessary and urgent, the more so when the current needs of both the developed and the developing countries. All one can now wish is that, since we have been able to make an evaluation of the needs for the proper development of our human, natural, agricultural and industrial resources for the achievement of progress, there will be constant reappraisal of our programme of priorities in the light of changing conditions.

In the development and utilisation of human resources the need for effective manpower planning, for all-embracing economic and social development, is obvious. My Government made the point last year that in view of the new automatic processes, which will undoubtedly have their effect on the needs and possibilities of such training in developing countries, cognizance will have to be taken of the necessity to adapt our manpower plans to our short- and long-term needs and of the possibilities of retraining in skills and the desirability of I.L.O. help and direction in the establishment of more secondary and small-scale industries which will help those incapable of performing highly skilled jobs and who for some reason or other cannot work the land or embark on certain occupations involving simple manual processes. In this connection appreciation must be expressed for the help

Mr. DEMBY (Minister of Lands, Mines and Labour, Sierra Leone)—Before making any comments on the salient points raised in the Director-General's Report I must not miss the opportunity of congratulating you, Mr. President, on the honour conferred on you by this assembly in electing you to your high office. It gives my Government particular pleasure to observe that the magnanimity which you showed last year in yielding ground in order to maintain the smooth relationship so desirable for the running of our Conference has been amply rewarded by the abundant evidence that by displaying the expected wisdom and sagacity you have already justified the confidence shown in you.

The numerical strength of our Organisation has been increased by the addition of four States—Malta, Yemen, Malawi and Zambia. My Government congratulates them on joining hands with us in our efforts to uphold the principles of this Organisation and it looks forward to the opportunity of contributing towards the solution of the many problems with which we are faced. To you all and to all the governments represented here my Government, ever desirous of the peaceful coexistence of all men, extends the hand of brotherhood and sends its best wishes.

On a number of important points my Government can only reiterate the views expressed last year at the tenth sitting of the 48th Session as recorded on pages 125-127 of the Record of Proceedings. We consider, however, that we should comment not only on the new issues raised in the Director-General's Report but also on the two new items which are set out in the agenda of this session of the Conference.

It is gratifying to note that the I.L.O. has intensified its effort towards fuller co-ordination of its various goals in institutional development and technical co-operation. Such efforts and objectives are necessary and urgent, the more so when the current needs of both the developed and the developing countries. All one can now wish is that, since we have been able to make an evaluation of the needs for the proper development of our human, natural, agricultural and industrial resources for the achievement of progress, there will be constant reappraisal of our programme of priorities in the light of changing conditions.

In the development and utilisation of human resources the need for effective manpower planning, for all-embracing economic and social development, is obvious. My Government made the point last year that in view of the new automatic processes, which will undoubtedly have their effect on the needs and possibilities of such training in developing countries, cognizance will have to be taken of the necessity to adapt our manpower plans to our short- and long-term needs and of the possibilities of retraining in skills and the desirability of I.L.O. help and direction in the establishment of more secondary and small-scale industries which will help those incapable of performing highly skilled jobs and who for some reason or other cannot work the land or embark on certain occupations involving simple manual processes. In this connection appreciation must be expressed for the help which the I.L.O. is at present giving to my Government by the provision of an expert for the proper training of our people in the acquisition of the skills necessary for the establishment of secondary industries.

My Government is gratified that two very important measures of particular interest to a developing country such as Sierra Leone should have been included in the agenda for the present Conference. I refer to agrarian reform and co-operatives. Any discussion of agrarian reform is inevitably linked up with the system of land tenure. My Government has for some time now been engaged in a reappraisal of the prevailing system of land tenure in Sierra Leone, as it is becoming increasingly clear that conditions of land tenure inherited from a past colonial régime warrant such reappraisal and overdue reform. Under the auspices of the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations an examination of the system of land tenure in Sierra Leone has recently been undertaken by an expert from that Organisation and my Government is currently studying the expert's report and recommendations. It has already become clear that one of the reforms overdue is that relating to registration of title to land, as land ownership in Sierra Leone has not hitherto followed a consistent pattern. It is too early yet to commit my Government to an international Convention concerning agrarian reform, but I am in a position to pledge my Government's support for an equitable distribution of land ownership and for the provision of an adequate institutional structure which should promote agricultural stability and intensified rural development.

My Government places great importance on the work of co-operatives, particularly in the rural areas of Sierra Leone, and regards them as the primary and most efficient instrument devised for the economic and social development of its rural population. Co-operative methods of development are capable of results of such immense value that any national or general development plan which failed to take them into account would be failing to utilise one of the best instruments available to it. Full regard should therefore be paid to the integration of co-operative development with general development. The degree of association may perforce be small, but certainly in Sierra Leone the enthusiasm which can be generated by even such small associations can greatly assist in the development of new co-operative techniques.

The degree to which co-operative methods are applied is naturally something for each developing country to decide in the light of local needs and resources. During the past 27 years since the first co-operative legislation was introduced in Sierra Leone we have found from experience that promotion of co-operative development can only bring an immediate response from the people but also provide the best way of utilising often inadequate resources.

One request which I should wish to put forward would be for the reprinting and circulation of the excellent I.L.O. publication _An Introduction to Co-operative Practice_, which has long been used in Sierra Leone as a textbook for adults, but which, we understand, is now out of print and unobtainable. The I.L.O. can also assist in one form or another with the establishment of special colleges and schools for basic co-operative training, which can be expanded in any direction according to specific needs at any time.

Last year attention was directed to the need for revising certain instruments. While my Government considers (and, indeed, this is embodied in our Constitution) that every individual is free to join an organisation of his own choice, yet the implementation of the Freedom of Association Convention has not only resulted in a plethora of unions in Africa but resulted in a split in the trade union movement to the detriment, not only of the badly needed harmonious evolution of Africa, but of the co-operation so much needed by governments of new developing States for both the implementation of their development programmes and their economic stability. Such difficulties mainly arise from ideological conflicts and affiliations with extra-territorial organisations which seek to introduce certain principles inconsistent with the policy of non-alignment of certain governments. Therefore it seems imperative that there should be a re-examination of certain I.L.O. instruments in the light of the conditions existing in developing countries so as to pave the way for the fuller realisation of the legitimate goals and aspirations of such countries.

Appreciation must be shown to the I.L.O. for the priority which is now given to workers' education. However, in the promotion of the various aspects of this subject there appears to be a need for adaptation and co-ordination consistent with the needs and plans of African countries. It is suggested that in the formulation of plans for workers' education consideration should be given to the vital role that workers themselves, or their representatives, can play. Bipartite committees of both the government and the trade union movement can well produce the desired understanding and harmonious relationship in furthering the educational and social programmes of a developing country.

My Government expresses its satisfaction at the adoption, at the 48th (1964) Session of the International Labour Conference, of a resolution concerning minimum living standards and their adjustment to the level of economic growth. Last year my Government laid emphasis on the necessity of evolving, with the assistance of I.L.O. experts, a wage and incomes policy for developing States which will, in the main, ensure a fair distribution of national incomes. It now appears that this is not the only desideratum in this field of activity. The constant and saddening experience of prices chasing incomes reduces the benefits that a worker derives from any wage award, and we must consider the further task of devising the best methods of relating prices to incomes and evolving policies which will eradicate the ever-present vicious circle with which some nations are now faced.

It is gratifying to note in the Director-General's Report the steps which have been taken to give effect to the amendments to the I.L.O. Constitution regarding the expulsion or suspension of member States who act in direct contravention of I.L.O. principles by flagrantly and persistently pursuing a policy of racial discrimination. The Declaration concerning the Policy of Apartheid in the Republic of South Africa is enough to give a warning to others that this body will not cease to castigate that Government, and even to urge the expulsion from the I.L.O. of any government which refuses to respect the freedom and dignity of human beings.

At various international conferences, and in the Organisation of African Unity, the voice of Sierra Leone has always been heard in its unflagging denunciation of the policies of South Africa and Portugal in this connection. Sierra Leone will continue to co-operate with the I.L.O. and all other agencies in the struggle to regain the stature of man in the African Continent. I have previously informed this august body of the political and economic sanctions which Sierra Leone has imposed against the Republic of South Africa and against Portugal. I make no apologies for mentioning the subject again, particularly as the Director-General has appropriately enough circulated a special report on the subject which is of continuous interest to us. Action which my Government has taken has not been confined to political and economic sanctions. Sierra Leone has offered political asylum, as well as educational scholarships, to nationals of South Africa and South West Africa. It has made practical contributions to the African Liberation Committee. It has also contributed towards the cost of litigation against the Republic of South Africa before the International Court of Justice consequent upon the Republic’s persistent refusal to acknowledge the authority of the Trusteeship Council as guardian of the mandate over the territory of South West Africa. It is a matter for regret that there are constituent member nations of our great International Labour Organisation which, instead of uniting against the Republic of South Africa before the International Court of Justice consequent upon the Republic’s persistent refusal to acknowledge the authority of the Trusteeship Council as guardian of the mandate over the territory of South West Africa. It is a matter for regret that there are constituent member nations of our great International Labour Organisation which, instead of uniting with other member nations in the task of African liberation, come here, year after year, full of winding phrases and ceremonial gestures, and stifle their consciences for no other reason than that of financial investments in South Africa and Portugal and the prospects of material gain. But, although the task of liberation of Africa, politically, economically and in the proper sphere of labour relations, is fraught with difficulty, there can be no doubt about a successful outcome. It is a task which demands our unremitting toil and our utmost effort.

Interpretation from Russian: Mrs. PEEVA (Employers' delegate, Bulgaria)—Policy in the field of human resources is one of the main areas of I.L.O. activity. It encompasses a broad range of important problems, such as increased productive employment and productivity, vocational training and education, and the liquidation of discrimination in employment. That is why the Report of the Director-General and the report of the Working Party correctly point out the great interest which all countries show in the development and utilisation of manpower resources.

However, in order to elaborate and carry out a programme that would represent an important contribution to the economic and social development of the world, as the Report says, the I.L.O. must scrutinise objectively the employment situation in all countries, and seek actively and consistently to settle the problems that arise in practice.

We agree that employment problems apply primarily to the developing countries, and that the I.L.O. must concentrate its activity on those countries. It is clear that the problem of employment affects the developing countries. There is unemployment and underemployment, especially in agriculture; there is a lack of skilled personnel in all fields; productivity is still extremely low, which prevents expansion. The reason is well known; for centuries whole peoples were subjected to colonial slavery. The only concern of the colonialists was to pump out the life-blood of the enslaved people, to export raw materials and the wealth of the colonies without concern for the general progress of the local population. Many countries have already freed themselves or are freeing themselves from colonialism. They must pursue the proper course to liquidate unemployment and backwardness.

However, it would be wrong to think that the question of unemployment has been finally solved in many of the more developed Western countries. Unemployment also results from the accelerated development of mechanisation and automation, affecting unskilled workers in particular.

There is still racial discrimination in the field of employment. Even in the most highly developed countries women do not have equal access with men to work and education and they are not paid equal wages. The I.L.O. cannot confine itself to intensive study of the problems or to defining which of the theories for the elimination of unemployment can provide the best results. The time has come to point to realistic paths and in this connection it would be wise to take advantage of experience gained in all countries.

In my country important social and economic changes have taken place during the past two decades and have had a decisive effect on the development and composition of our manpower. The establishment of production cooperatives and the expansion of agricultural activities have made it possible to intensify agricultural output and to increase productivity. This has led to the release of a large part of our manpower for employment in other fields. At the same time industry has grown extremely rapidly. Capital investment in our country between 1939 and 1964 increased by more than 14 times. Industrial output rose by more than 17 times. Thus the economic development of the country primarily affected the quantitative aspect of manpower. It demands and continues to demand on a planned basis the supply of further manpower in industry, construction, transportation and non-industrial branches.

At the same time the rapid economic development of the country and the introduction of technological innovations lead to a qualitative change in manpower, with improvement in the cultural and technical level of the workers and their education level. In order to use and to create new technology we need experts and trained manpower. During the 20 years of the people's régime in Bulgaria there has been a genuine cultural revolution, which involves improvement of the standard of education of the population and transformation of the whole system of education, in order to bring it closer to real requirements. Thus from a general education we have gone over to an expanded vocational education. Now most workers are being trained in vocational technical schools or in secondary vocational schools, while the number of workers has risen from 47,000 in 1945 to 260,000 in 1964. I should also like to mention that we have trained or are training man power and technicians with a secondary school tuition there is absolutely no discrimination against girls, who represent more than 35 per cent. of all students in vocational schools.
Highly developed industry and intensive agriculture require able and experienced management personnel. Thus the number of students in the advanced educational establishments has increased by eight times. In Bulgaria out of every 1,000 inhabitants there are 98 students which places our country in the very first ranks among the countries of the world as regards numbers studying. Of those who complete advanced studies, 50 per cent. go into production branches as engineers, agronomists and economists, 15 per cent. become physicians and 20 per cent. work in educational and cultural activities. The rate of training of engineers and agricultural experts exceeds all other fields, in line with the rapid and planned economic development of the country. Here, again, women enjoy every opportunity offered by our new society. In our advanced educational establishments 43 per cent. of the students are women. Thus the problem of manpower resources may be regarded as solved in our country owing to planning of manpower training in line with the over-all economic development plan in our country.
All organisations are eager to see that our industry and agriculture are managed by trained experts. Socialist employers, who are in charge of our various national undertakings, must be business people having the necessary qualifications to manage the plants entrusted to them with skill and foresight. The difficult task of our managers is eased by the fact that their interests coincide entirely with the interest of the workers. Their common task is to build up the material and technological base of our country, and thus consistently to raise the standards of living of the workers. The socialist manager acts on his own responsibility, but this is conditioned by democratic principles of organisation, combined with proper participation by the masses in the management of production.
In his daily work the manager is able to rely on the support of outstanding workers, experts and public organisations. The demands on socialist managers are becoming ever greater because of the increased independence of our industrial enterprises, and that is why we are constantly organising special schools, courses and seminars in order to perfect the advanced training of management personnel.
In quoting the example of my country in manpower planning and training in all branches of economic life, including management functions, I have wanted to stress the vast role which can be played by the International Labour Organisation. Instead of supporting the antiquated position of the Employers' group and contesting the right of the socialist Employers to participate on an equal footing in the activities of the Organisation, it would be far wiser to ask them to share their experience which is particularly useful for the developing countries. As regards the development of manpower resources, the Director-General rightly points to the training of persons on whom the development of industry depends, namely managers, instructors, inspectors, maintenance technicians, etc. Measures are also proposed with a view to improved management methods. May this not remain a pious wish, but instead become an active policy which will benefit all countries irrespective of their social and economic system.
Unfortunately, the practice of discrimination against the socialist Employers in the I.L.O. is continuing. This year in the Employers' conference there was again this situation, when a woman—despite the legitimate claim of the employers of Bulgaria—was denied the right to participate as a regular member in the Committee discussing the employment of women with family responsibilities. It is true that the situation was corrected by the Appeals Board, which I should like to thank, but this erroneous attitude towards the socialist Employers is in flagrant contradiction to the principles of democracy, universality and fair geographical distribution which are fundamental principles of every international organisation.
Discrimination by a certain group of Employers' delegates reflects on the whole activities of the Organisation and lowers its prestige. I consider that the Conference should, first of all, prove that concept of employer applies to every manager of an undertaking who is a party to an employment agreement, irrespective of whether he owns the undertaking or not, and irrespective of the social and economic system or the geographical location of the undertaking which he happens to manage.
Last year we already raised the question of the strict observance of the principle of equitable geographical distribution of leading posts in the Conference and in the organs of the I.L.O., and specifically of Employer posts. In this connection I fully support the resolution submitted by the Government delegates of Poland and the Ukraine. The time has surely come to examine these matters in the Conference as well as in other organs of the I.L.O.
and to solve them in accordance with the principles of universality and equitable geo-ographical distribution. This should apply not only to the Government groups but also to the Employers' and Workers' groups.
Many delegates here expressed their concern over tension in the world. The Bulgarian employers share this concern. It seems to us that we cannot remain indifferent when bombs are falling on the peaceful cities of Viet-Nam, when intervention is going on in the Dominican Republic and workers are perishing. The I.L.O. must condemn all aggressive action and undertake decisive steps to strengthen the peace, and achieve complete disarmament and the liquidation of colonialism.
The PRESIDENT—I stated that references to theatres of war will be considered out of order in this meeting, and I therefore request the speaker not to continue in that strain about what I consider to be theatres of war.

Interpretation from Russian: Mrs. PEEVA—I have finished, Sir. In my belief the I.L.O. should condemn all aggressive action and take decisive steps to strengthen peace, to ensure complete disarmament and to put an end to colonialism. Thus, the Organisation that is called upon to work for the well-being of all workers will make a major contribution to the strengthening of international cooperation and will be able to carry out the humanitarian tasks for which it exists.

Mr. HACKSHAW (Workers’ delegate, Trinidad and Tobago)—Coming from a country like Trinidad and Tobago with a cosmopolitan population representing nearly every nation on earth, I wish to associate myself with the sentiments expressed by previous speakers in congratulating you on your election. Although this is the first time I am attending this Conference, I do so not merely at home participating, because of the very composition and structure of this august body, and in particular under your chairmanship, Sir, more especially because of the fact that descendants from your country and India provide my country with about 37 per cent. of its present population. It is also with much jubilation I welcome the four independent nations—Zambia, Malta, Morocco and Yemen—which were admitted into full membership of the I.L.O. family, and on behalf of the workers of Trinidad and Tobago I extend to these countries goodwill and solidarity on their attainment of freedom and independence. My country looks forward to the day in the not-too-distant future when the remaining areas still under colonial rule, especially our brothers in the Caribbean, will attain their freedom and independence, thereby becoming equal partners in this great international brotherhood.

Speaking on the Report of the Director-General, I do not think that there is need for me to say much except to express appreciation to the Director-General for a job well done in the preparation of a valuable document in the concise manner in which it has been prepared. I only wish to endorse his views as expressed on the scope of I.L.O. activities in each of the three broad programme areas—namely human resources development, the development of social institutions, and conditions of work and life—as outlined in his Report, and to express approval of the fields included in these broad programme areas, also the ways recommended in which the different facets of each programme should be drawn together to form one coherent and mutually supporting set of activities.” Permit me, however, to make some general observations on the structure of the I.L.O. as it affects the area within which my country falls.

The Caribbean region, although falling within Latin America, is by tradition and culture different from the other portions of Latin America itself, in that the majority of the islands are inhabited by English-speaking people. The development of the area needs special consideration if the fullest results are to be achieved from the proposed regional activities of the I.L.O. in the area. Its future lies in the rapid development of a Caribbean economic community, and the area has been neglected by the former metropolitan powers. My country has been for years the chief centre of attraction of the other English-speaking islands in terms of economic and social advancement of the people of those islands, and today the pressures, strains and stresses are now felt much more as a result of such hospitality. Assistance in the field of economic planning and economic development is urgent for the area, as it is confronted with many urgent economic and social problems—the most serious of which is unemployment. Speaking of Trinidad and Tobago, with about 14 per cent. unemployment even with all the commendable efforts of the Government to create additional job opportunities with the introduction of its second Five-Year Development Programme (1964-68), the country will not be nearer to solving the problem. On the contrary, it is anticipated that unemployment will increase by some 4,100 persons by the end of the period of the Development Programme in 1968. With Trinidad and Tobago taking care of its own population, it can to some extent solve its unemployment problem within the limits of its own resources but, having to bear the burdens of others, it is faced with a situation of having immigrants from two Caribbean islands, the alone accounting for over 70,000 inhabitants, which is about 10,000 more than the total number of the unemployed in the country. It is in this setting that I speak, advocating that the Caribbean be given special attention by the I.L.O. in its reorganisation of the structure. With the Caribbean as an area separate and independent from Latin America, the I.L.O. programme and activities in the area can be much more easily administered, co-ordinated, and the Caribbean labour movement, on whose behalf I speak, anticipates support of its other brothers in this.

Dealing with Chapter II of the Report of the Director-General—Major Programme Areas—on the question of human resources and economic development, the Director-General expressed confidence in the fact that “with the continued guidance and support of the Conference, the I.L.O. will be able to develop and implement a programme for human resources which will prove to be its most important single contribution to economic and social development.” I feel that I should comment upon this in the context of the Trinidad and Tobago situation.

Like all developing countries, Trinidad and Tobago is faced with grave economic problems in its drive towards economic development, and has experienced problems resulting from rapid economic growth. Having financed its first Five-Year Development Programme almost completely from its own resources (90 per cent.), the country rates among the most economically advanced of the developing countries of the world. Such a rate of progress today stands out as a black mark against its claim for economic aid competing with other developing countries of Asia and Africa. What arises out of this situation is the question of whether developing countries would be penalised for endeavouring to develop with their own resources? Although Trinidad and Tobago records a high economic growth over the decade, the fact of the matter is that the country is still confronted with many grave economic and social problems; as already mentioned, the major question is one of unemployment. The labour movement of Trinidad and Tobago is gravely concerned about this failure to provide adequate job opportunities, which poses a major social problem. Even with the current second Five-Year Development Programme of the Government being now executed, the fact is that the number of new jobs likely to be created during the development period will fall short of the demands of the rapidly growing population and will make no impact on the growing labour force in the country. The I.L.O. must give attention to developing countries which are penalised for advancing their economic development largely by their own efforts.

We of the labour movement of Trinidad and Tobago do accept the fact that the road towards economic development of developing countries imposes new responsibilities on the labour movement of these countries; however, the fact must not be lost sight of that the primary purpose and function of the labour movement must remain constant in its protection of the rights of the workers, protection from exploitation, in seeking a just share of the national product resulting from such development and in guarding against intrusion on their rights and freedoms. The labour movement of my country maintains that in any plan for economic development the active participation of the workers is a "must" at all levels and stages of the planning and execution of such a programme. It must be appreciated that, before any measure considered to be in the interest of the country during its process of economic development is introduced, such measure must first, and quite rightly, have the support of the workers' organisations before being imposed on the populace. This brings me to a very important consideration: to what extent governments in developing countries in their concern for economic development recognise their obligations to the I.L.O. and the principles of freedom of association and the right of bargaining collectively. Should the workers' rights in developing countries be seriously tampered with in the interest of economic development? These questions need to be answered as they seem to be areas of conflict between governments of developing countries and the labour movement. Although recognising its responsibilities to the country, I cannot see the labour movement in developing countries sacrificing fundamental principles upon which industrial relations rest, and I trust that the I.L.O. will indicate some guidelines upon which these issues could be tackled when determining future policies and objectives of the labour movement vis-à-vis the economic policies of developing countries.

There is a matter over which the labour movement in my country is very disturbed. Our people have historical and cultural ties with the peoples of Africa and the East, and the labour movement is perplexed by what is taking place in Africa. It is our considered view that if positive results are not forthcoming in the solution of the South African situation a very dangerous world problem will develop. The nationals of my country would be anxious to join with all the other oppressed nations to assist in bringing these discriminatory actions on the part of the white South African Government to an end. There is always colossal danger that if a peaceful solution to such a problem cannot be found, a violent one would be attempted, and if one side in a dispute continues to ignore reason it is not surprising when the other adopts an unreasonable approach. The labour movement of Trinidad and Tobago sincerely hopes that satisfactory progress, bearing in mind the rights of all concerned, will be made in order to head off the serious clash that appears to be looming regarding this problem.

(The Conference adjourned at 1 p.m.)
FIFTEENTH SITTING

Friday, 11 June 1965, 3 p.m.

President: Mr. Raza

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL:
DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from French: Mr. KOKEY (Workers' delegate, Central African Republic)—It is a great privilege and pleasure for me, as it is also for the General Union of Central African Workers, which I represent here, to associate myself with all those who have congratulated you, Sir, on your election to the high post of President of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. It is also very agreeable to me to pay tribute to the Director-General and to his co-workers for the very valuable reports which they have submitted to us.

May I turn now to the new countries which have just joined our Organisation and extend to them the cordial welcome of the people of the Central African Republic, and in particular of the workers of that country?

I have very little to add to the discussion of the Director-General's Report, which provides the basis for our study of the programme and structure of the I.L.O.

Today the I.L.O. has a new part to play. It must endeavour to aid the new States Members to accelerate the process of their development through the improvement of their working conditions. In other words, it must lay stress on the need for balanced economic development, because of the repercussions which this growth will have at the human level, i.e. on the rights of the workers, their welfare and their wages, and also because the Organisation must take into account the decisive importance of human effort. Studies, research and analyses must therefore be made to determine the methods and programmes which will be most effective.

Turning to the subject of co-operatives, I must admit that they are only just beginning in my country, but, very fortunately, they are being encouraged by the public authorities, who are sparing no effort to ensure their success.

The Government, within the framework of its policy of raising the standard of living of the mass of the population, the overwhelming majority of which is still drawing its scanty income from agriculture, is supporting the co-operative organisations which will assist it in its struggle against our greatest enemies, namely poverty, hunger, disease and ignorance. I do not think it would be out of place if I were to indicate certain objectives which we expect from such organisations.

Firstly, co-operatives are democratising associations and undertakings, and their principle of distribution of income is based on social justice. In addition, co-operatives are equipped to improve production and marketing, so as to ensure that their members receive proper incomes by doing away with middle-men. Henceforth, members of co-operatives will be able to obtain a substantial income from the sale of their products. Moreover, thanks to the co-operatives already set up in my country we shall be able to ensure full employment, as well as to settle the population on the land by stopping the rural exodus and properly to exploit the land, which is our greatest hope of prosperity.

Henceforth my organisation has an essential duty, namely to aid the government authorities in their economic and agricultural campaigns; this will mean going among the rural and working masses with a view to arousing in them a greater sense of national conscience in the field of labour, production and development, since this is a sine qua non for welfare in a country such as my own, belonging to the so-called developing nations.

With respect to the development of social institutions, we should like to give our full support to the objectives referred to in the Director-General's Report, stressing the absolute necessity for making every effort to establish harmonious and trustworthy relations between employers and workers.

The Government of my country has just introduced the system of a continuous working day, which means that work starts at 6.30 a.m. and finishes at 1.30 p.m., with a 15-minute break at 10 o'clock. The economies achieved by this measure are considerable, because hours of work are reduced. It also means that women workers are freed from their paid employment and may turn to their domestic tasks; for others, it means leisure time which may be used to acquire further training and to participate voluntarily in civic activities. In the field of living and working conditions the Central African worker has certain guarantees provided by the legislation in force; but periodic checks should be undertaken within undertakings by the competent services to see that the legislation is strictly enforced.

Finally, the revision of the Labour Code, which is now being studied, will mean that we shall have an instrument adapted to present-day realities.

Thus I fully associate myself, as well as my union, with the view expressed by the Working Party on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. that the I.L.O. must continue to lay down principles of universal application, while adapting its programmes and techniques to the state of development of each country. It is undeniable that our workers' movement can draw considerable benefit from participation in the meetings of this Organisation.

To come to the burning problem of the African trade union movement, I think that it is important to determine its aspects along the lines of present-day trends, aimed at harmonious development. The main task of the present trade union movement is, therefore, to work out principles for concerted action in spite of the ideological differences which may divide Africans and of different choices of economic methods to solve the problems which arise.

Accordingly, on 24 November 1964, we freely decided to set up a General Union of Workers to work closely with the Government. This co-operation does not mean that we are subservient to the Government as certain suspicious souls may have thought. The union has been created to avoid a dispersion of energy and effort harmful to our ideal of national construction, and, in particular, to protect the interests of the worker. Hence, we think the I.L.O. should give full attention to the problems of training our union leaders. In this connection, I should like here to pay tribute to the International Labour Office for having finally carried out its experimental project on workers' education. This aspect of the I.L.O.'s activities is, I feel, very important. However, I should like to suggest that it should be adapted to national aspirations, for the matter which is of concern to workers throughout the world is certainly peace based on social justice.

Before concluding, I should like to remind delegates that, if the I.L.O. is to establish social peace in the interests of the whole world, it must intensify its action to find a solution to the dramatic problem of the Portuguese colonies, where the Government of Lisbon persists in neglecting the natural rights of the workers concerned and it must not forget those who are being stifled by the odious policy of apartheid.

*Interpretation from Polish: Mr. BURSKI (President, Labour and Wages Committee, Poland)—I am glad to be able to talk from this respected rostrum about certain problems relating to the programme of the I.L.O. I will not raise questions relating to the structure and methods of work of the I.L.O. since the Polish Government has already repeatedly stated its position on this subject.

On the other hand, I wish to refer to Chapter II of the Director-General's Report, in which he rightly stresses the importance of human resources as a factor for stimulating economic and social progress. The solution of this problem demands the harmonisation of programmes and policies relating to manpower with economic development plans.

The experience we have gained in this field in the past 20 years is particularly significant being based on the nationalisation of our means of production, and the central co-ordination of economic processes in close collaboration with local authorities, that is to say through a system linked in a complex manner with the development plans of the whole national economy, in the preparation of which the workers in the towns and villages participate closely. This is a perfect example of the harmonisation of economic development plans with manpower policies and programmes. Thus we have been able rapidly and completely to eliminate the unemployment which was current before the war, to ensure the rapid progress of industrialisation in our country, and to increase the number of persons employed in the national economy outside agriculture from less than 3 million before the war to more than 8.5 million in 1964.

The labour force was increased by approximately 2.8 million persons who completed studies at secondary and vocational schools and 350,000 specialists from the higher educational establishments, which represents almost one-half of the total manpower increase during that period.

During the last 20 years we have become an industrialised country. According to the 1960 census, 62 per cent. of the population was supported by work other than in agriculture, whereas in 1931 this percentage was 40. In the five years from 1966 to 1970, which will be a period of high demographic increase in our country, we are setting ourselves ambitious and difficult tasks in economic development. During that period more than 3 million young people will have reached employment age. Therefore, we must provide about 1.5 million new jobs in order to ensure full employment. This will not be an easy task when one takes into consideration the cost of creating new jobs and the necessity to adapt economic development plans to the demographic situation, which varies according to the different regions of the country.

Nevertheless, in a nationalised economy new and numerous resources of manpower, well prepared for both social and occupational work and fully employed, are an element in the increase in national income and in consumption, thus representing a new potential wealth for our country. We have prepared for many years for this demographic rise and have developed general and occupational education. Thanks to this, more than half the young people who will be joining the labour force in the years 1966 to 1970 will possess high occupational qualifications. Among them there will be more than 100,000 graduates from advanced schools, 400,000 from technical schools and more than 1 million who have finished studies at vocational schools.

Approximately 80 per cent. of the new posts will be distributed in the field of material production. We attach particular importance to creating the largest possible number of new jobs through better utilisation of productive forces and through an increase in the turnover and better organisation of work. We shall create a considerable number of new posts by developing the service industries, especially those directly benefiting the population, and in particular the rural population. The development of handicraft industries will also play an important role.

With a view to creating 1.5 million new posts we will continue to develop technical progress. The policy of full employment will be linked to the continued increase of labour productivity, modernisation and improvement in the quality of products, and to the lowering of costs of production. This will lead to an increase in the volume of work in production and therefore an increase in the number of highly skilled personnel.

At present and in the next few years we face a difficult task as far as occupational training is concerned, especially for women. Above all, this relates to certain new occupations where very real opportunities of productive employment exist for women.

At the present time women constitute 36 per cent. of the total labour force in the national economy outside agriculture. The continuous increase in women's employment is dictated both by the interests of the women themselves and the needs of the economy in general. On the national level there is a constant lack of male labour, which is even more serious in the industrialised areas. That is why we shall continue to increase our efforts in these areas to replace men by women wherever possible. In other areas we will continue to increase the number of women employed in small-scale industries, services, handicrafts and home work.

Another important problem with a view to full employment of new workers is the appropriate distribution of undertakings throughout the country. The location of investment must correspond to the manpower reserves in the various regions so as to avoid as much as possible the cost of transferring manpower within the country. That is the reason why, in deciding the location of investments, we take account, above all, of the availability of manpower.

In order to avoid tension and difficulty in the utilisation of manpower, we are undertaking the active decentralisation of industry by building new enterprises in the less industrialised regions, by handing over orders to the enterprises in the regions already possessing reserve manpower and even by moving certain enterprises from those regions where there is a chronic lack of manpower, in accordance with economic requirements.

Thus, in seeking the best possible solutions to the problems due to expansion of population, we are concentrating on economic and social measures in order to ensure employment for all citizens in their own country.

The immense tasks which I have just briefly outlined and which will be of concern in my country in the next few years show the particular attention which my Government attaches to the problems of human resources and the need to ensure continuous work for its people in accordance with their skills and inclinations while at the same time raising the material and cultural level of the whole population.

These are difficult tasks which require large investment and great organisational effort.

The positive results obtained up to the present in the economic development of our country generate the accomplishment of our future tasks, which will no doubt displease certain foreign economists and journalists who have claimed that the economic stabilisation of Poland is threatened and that unemployment threatens.

This year we are celebrating the twentieth anniversary of the defeat of Fascist Germany and the end of the Second World War. This anniversary reminds us once more that lasting peace is an essential condition for progress and for the well-being of all the peoples of the world and to ensure that the developing countries can emerge from their backward situation. Lasting peace will permit the constructive use of resources that are today being wasted in an arms race without precedent, in the cold war, in political interference in the domestic affairs of other countries and in brutal armed aggression.

Together with the other socialist countries, Poland has always opposed and will oppose the armaments race by advocating a programme of general and complete disarmament, just as it opposes the cold war by promoting a policy of relaxation and consolidation of world peace, a policy of peaceful coexistence and competition among the different economic systems with a view to raising the standard of living of all peoples of the world.

In this struggle for reduction of tension and for the consolidation of world peace, we expect energetic and increasing participation by the I.L.O. since its tasks and principal aims are in the field of social progress—raising the standard of living of the working masses of the world—which can be successfully fulfilled only in conditions of peaceful co-operation based on respect for the sovereignty and interests of each nation. The participation of the I.L.O. in this struggle is all the more important because the brutal interventions and armed aggressions designed to suppress national liberation movements are increasing, arousing profound misgivings and energetic protests throughout the world, as do the interventions designed to regain by force lost political and economic positions, to recover influence in developing countries, and to consolidate such positions through some form of neo-colonialism by means contrary to the elementary principles of international coexistence and all feelings of humanity.

The peoples of the world know very well what to think of the brutal imperialist aggression in Viet-Nam, the audacious intervention in the Dominican Republic undertaken in violation of the United Nations Charter and infringing the authority of that Organisation, which is an important instrument in safeguarding peace...

The PRESIDENT—I appeal to the speaker to concentrate on peace and not on war.

Interpretation from Polish: Mr. BURSKI—I am at the end of this part of my statement.
They know what to think of the particular missions of States which try to play the part of policemen in the world. But life has already brushed aside more than one unscrupulous doctrine. The peoples of the world have forced more than one politician to abandon his unprincipled and irresponsible plans.

Peace based on social justice can only be consolidated by defending the principle of non-interference in internal affairs and by working actively for the progressive realisation of a world without arms and without armaments. In this sphere we want our aims to coincide with the actions of the I.L.O., not only in the form of abstract declarations but also in the form of positive action on its part, particularly in the field of studies showing the economic and social benefits resulting from the cessation and reduction of armaments for the improvement of the conditions of life of mankind and, in particular, the peoples of the developing countries.

The future authority and role of the I.L.O. will depend on the activities which this Organisation undertakes in this field. That will strengthen the confidence of all States in its recommendations and decisions, and particularly of those which need effective aid in order to overcome the results of colonial exploitation and their backwardness in all spheres of economic and social life.

I am happy to welcome among us the representatives of Zambia, Malawi, Malta, and Yemen who are taking part in the work of our Organisation for the first time as representatives of free people, thus augmenting the ranks of countries that have freed themselves from colonialism. I must stress the fact that the process of universalisation of the I.L.O. makes it essential that the legal representatives of the great Chinese people—that is, the representatives of the Government of the People's Republic of China—as well as the representatives of the German Democratic Republic, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea and the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, who are still wrongfully kept outside the I.L.O., should take their rightful place in our Organisation.

I should like to express my conviction that the I.L.O. will find sufficient strength to trace more effectively the path towards closer international collaboration in the vast fields of action offered by the great social objectives of our time—the safeguarding of peace, the cessation and reduction of armaments, the attainment of social justice in conditions free from all forms of exploitation and oppression and the guarantee of well-being for all mankind.

I can assure you that Poland will always support the just initiatives of the I.L.O., initiatives which will lead to the realisation of that great objective—the safeguarding and consolidation of peace based on social justice and equality of rights for all the peoples of the world.

Mr. RAJASURIYA (Employers' delegate, Ceylon)—I should like first of all to congratulate you on your election to the high office of President of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.

Next I wish to congratulate the Director-General on his Report and the admirable survey of the activities of the I.L.O. during 1964.

It must be conceded that the task of the Director-General in preparing his Report has been a difficult one in that the comments of member States and employers' and workers' organisations on the proposals submitted during the debate on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. at the 47th and 48th Sessions had not been received in sufficient numbers in time to be reflected in the Report. The Director-General was left with the next alternative of dealing with general questions of programme and structure on which he could see a clear consensus in order that the Conference might have an opportunity of confirming its agreement on those questions. Incidentally, this position lends support to the view expressed by some in regard to the periodicity of the Conference that it should be held biennially in order to permit sufficient time for adequate study of the various subjects and for preparation.

It is only appropriate that a dynamic organisation such as the I.L.O. should periodically review its programme and structure and adjust its course to suit changing conditions for the better realisation of the objectives for which it stands. The internal structure of the Office has been reorganised to fit the new context. The establishment of the new Field Department is particularly welcome as an indication of the new emphasis on regional activities with greater decentralisation of work, including the move to give better and more frequent opportunities for regional conferences and regional advisory committees to consider and orientate future action in the regions. The maintenance of closer and more frequent contact by the agencies of the I.L.O. with governmental and non-governmental organisations is most essential; in particular, contacts with the latter have been slow to develop in the past.

The measures proposed for the development and implementation of a programme of human resources for the developing countries, among which my country could be included, are in the right direction. In this connection I should like to dwell on some aspects of the problem facing my country.

The Director-General has mentioned population growth, illiteracy, educational systems insufficiently geared to economic realities, physiological problems of adaptation to a new working milieu and discipline, and inadequate resources, as aggravating factors in the solution of the problems facing developing countries.

As an example of the educational system being insufficiently geared to economic realities I might mention my country, which has been implementing a policy of providing free education for nearly two decades now. This system has produced tens of thousands of youths who have completed an academic course at the secondary or senior secondary school level and are vainly searching for white-collar jobs, which are hard to come by for even a fraction of them. The result of this educational system has been a reluctance on the part of those concerned to follow traditional occupations, thereby creating serious problems of labour supply. On the other hand, the development needs of the country demand adequately trained personnel at all levels, which the system is not geared to produce. This is a situation in the correction of which the I.L.O. can be of much assistance.

My country depends for the resources for its development on the sale of its primary products—particularly tea, rubber and coconuts, which play a dominant role in the economy of the country, accounting for 91 per cent. of the exports in 1964. A large proportion of our food requirements as well as raw materials are imported. But, owing to our dwindling foreign exchange reserves, drastic restrictions and even prohibitions have been imposed on the importation of many items of goods which are by no means luxury goods, but include essential raw materials, for want of which some of our new-born industries have had to lie idle in recent years.

The irony of it all is that this situation does not result from a lack of effort on the part of my country to increase production. In fact, tea production, for instance, has increased 26 per cent. in the last decade and there have also been substantial increases in the production of rubber and coconuts. The increase in production of tea, has, unfortunately, been offset by the decline in prices over the last decade. Although tea production has gone up by more than 100 million pounds in the last ten years, or 26 per cent., tea prices have fallen from Rs. 3.50 a pound (f.o.b.) in 1955 to Rs. 2.51 a pound (f.o.b.) in 1954, or a fall of 25 per cent. Consequently the total foreign exchange earnings on tea have remained more or less static for the last ten years.

The position is even more serious when we take into account the inflation in world prices of our imports which imposes a further reduction in the quantum of goods that we are able to purchase for our foreign exchange earnings on tea. This serious alteration in the terms of trade adversely affecting developing countries should be a matter for international concern. The recent conference in Geneva on this problem shows that these difficulties are widely appreciated and it is to be hoped that the organisation of remedial measures will be pursed.

The outlook for the future is not any brighter, however. Tea, in particular, faces the prospect of world over-production owing to increased productivity in established tea-producing countries such as Ceylon and the progressive entry into the market of new tea-producing countries, particularly the newly emerging countries of Africa. Rubber has to meet an ever-increasing pressure from synthetics, while coconuts has to contend with both synthetic substitutes and domestic price support policies in some countries.

One possible remedy is to promote, at international level, price stability from the point of view of the primary producing countries by means of international commodity agreements or other arrangements for the stabilisation of the prices of particular primary commodities. I would like to urge that the I.L.O. should make all possible contributions to this end. The stabilisation of the prices of primary commodities would enable developing countries with mainly agricultural economies to embark with confidence on ambitious development programmes which alone could solve the twin problems of acute unemployment—including underemployment—and low living standards in these countries.

Practical research to determine the measures likely to have the maximum impact on the solution of the problems of underdevelopment and unemployment is one field within the direct competence of the I.L.O. in which the Organisation could make a direct and most useful contribution, as is also the programme for improving the quality of the labour force, in particular the training of managers, trainers, supervisors, maintenance personnel and certain highly skilled workers.

The development of genuinely representative and independent workers' organisations has been handicapped in some countries by the organisations becoming mere appendages of political parties and being used as tools in the game of party politics. There is thus a multiplicity of trade unions from the level of the workplace to the national level rendering collaboration and co-operation difficult in view of the unhealthy rivalry among them to outbid one another with political advantage as the principal objective. This is another field in which the I.L.O. could usefully engage itself to help the growth of genuinely representative and independent workers' organisations which will also be responsible organisations capable of playing a constructive role in economic and social development. Otherwise the creation of even the best machinery by the State for the resolution of differences which might arise between workers and employers would not be of much help. Workers' organisations should be prepared to appraise problems taking into account the interests of the country as a whole.

I think general support will also be available for the idea that the I.L.O.'s operational activities should contribute to strengthening and improving national institutions for the training of personnel management.

In conclusion, I would like to state that research and dissemination of information on the various subjects and the publication of appropriate guides by the I.L.O. would be of practical help to developing countries in their endeavours towards economic and social development.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. CRUZADO ZAVALA (Workers' delegate, Peru)—I should like to offer my congratulations, in the name of the workers of Peru, on your election as President of the Conference, and congratulate the sister nations of Zambia, Malta, Yemen, and Gambia, for having achieved independence and become Members of this Organisation which is so keenly concerned in the development of human resources, better labour relations, promotion of the trade union movement, better conditions of life and work, to name the aspects of I.L.O. activity to which Mr. Morse gives particular attention both in his Report and in the activities which he directs.

Perhaps it is premature to refer to the reorganisation of the Office, which was only started at the beginning of 1965. We hope that, in addition to its objectives, it will better enable the Office to give advice, to defend freedom of association, and to provide technical assistance. In a changing world the understanding of immediate priorities must be accompanied by action to implement them. The needs of the developing countries almost always require rapid attention.

There is an increasing desire for the decentralisation of I.L.O. activities, not only as a result of the striking increase in its operational activities, and its tendency towards more regional co-operation, but also as a consequence of the more and more pressing needs of the underdeveloped areas, where people feel increasing disappointment when they find in some respects the gap between their own extreme poverty and the wealth of the more developed areas is growing wider.

Wise decentralisation should lead us to real tripartite regional conferences on the lines of the General Conference, in which governments, employers and workers have collaborated in the past in an adventure which should serve as a lesson in the present.

At no time should standard-setting, labour relations, research, technical assistance and information be handled in separate compartments, nor should urgent practical objectives affect the reaching of the Organisation's universal goals.

Between the I.L.O.'s high social policy at the world level, pointing the way to a new and more equitable system of law, and the return to narrow old objectives, whether national or regional, there can be no hesitation. But it will depend on the I.L.O. itself whether the changes now proposed in response to a widespread demand, lead to greater justice, efficiency and creative power.

The Workers' Confederation of Peru, the authentic national trade union centre of our country, sincerely echoes the aspirations expressed in the Report, for since its establishment it has unceasingly striven so that democracy and human freedom may be the rule. It hopes that the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948, which Peru has ratified but which has long been obstructed by administrative arrangements, will soon be put into effect. We hope also soon to be able to show a number of ratifications that not only the workers but others are living in peace among the States Members of the I.L.O.

We have supported in every way the constructive work undertaken by the Organisation, and therefore we believe that labour in Peru merits attention and support from it, particularly as we have been neglected to some extent under current systems of rotation. This neglect is particularly striking in the case of our textile industry, which has been in existence for 4,000 years and which can be proud of its dyes, designs and artistic techniques.

I shall not take up your time by describing the increased importance of land, river and lake transport in Peru, but I must say that it has caused much surprise that for reasons not yet duly explained my country should have lost its place on the Inland Transport Committee.

We hope that the regional offices of the I.L.O., will, in practical and other matters affecting our development, be directed by competent experts. The more these offices are independent of non-tripartite influences—emmy Confederation has already stated, labour relations become more human when both parties have the right to speak. Our national centre, as the Employers' representatives at this Conference will agree, has proposed giving these relations a more realistic form by setting up joint committees at various levels. This recognition and institutionalisation will permit direct negotiation, and we can thus move forward by seeking solutions jointly for our common problems. We consider this system should be fruitful above all because it does not require either of the parties to renounce their rights.

Our Government, also, has called for an atmosphere of co-operation in order to have a labour code drafted with tripartite assistance. We believe that this well-intentioned step will give good results. The I.L.O. experts on labour law understand the character of our American legal systems, some of which are advanced and others backward, but almost all embody vestiges of feudalism and thus the idea of legalising the so-called right not to join a union.

As regards trade union rights, my Confederation made a complaint to the Committee on Freedom of Association regarding Presidential Decree No. 009, which we consider to be in open contradiction with the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948, and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949. We welcomed the decision of the Committee in March 1963, and the matter was settled in June of the same year at the 155th Session of the Governing Body, when the Peruvian Government representative confirmed that the ratification of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948, abrogated all contrary legislation. The Peruvian workers have made a big effort to co-operate in moving forward towards social progress along new paths, which will lead to agreement instead of raising difficulties that would encourage agitation by demagogues.

The reference to migration in the Report reminds me of the internal migration to which agricultural conditions have led in all the developing countries of the Americas. The neglected masses flock to the coast and fill our hills and beaches with their miserable temporary hovels. The results are infamous slums, congestion in housing, transport, food supplies, etc., and the remedy for such overcrowding is agrarian reform. Convinced of this, we shall resist the false reform which some feudal lords seek to introduce under the pretext of "urban reform"—the only true objective of which is to exclude large areas from agrarian reform. The experience of Mexico and Bolivia is so encouraging that we can reject any misrepresentation of the only way to progress in which the responsible majority in Peru has any confidence.

As regards the co-operative movement, on which we already have legislation aimed at benefiting the low-income groups, I should like to mention an event which sets an example throughout the Americas, namely the establishment of the Trade Union Co-operative Alliance (ASLNCOOP), which is a workers' housing construction bank. This credit and savings agency has been established by my Confederation, the Peruvian Private Employees' Organisation, the Institute for Free Trade Unionism, the Co-operative Housing Federation (FECOVIPE) and our brothers of the American Federation of Labor—Congress of Industrial Organizations. At present savings are exceeding a million soles a month. They go to sustain over 65 housing co-operatives. There are 150 officially recognised housing co-operatives in Peru and 50 others in course of establishment. All belong to the Co-operative Housing Federation organised by the Workers' Confederation of Peru.

We wish the principles of trade union freedom, organisation and collective bargaining to be strengthened in Peru. These aims can only be reached by constant exercise of representative democracy and by fighting against all forms of totalitarianism and colonialism.

Whatever the I.L.O. can do to strengthen democracy in our country and in Latin America will contribute to its own renown in the historic fight for a just world order. Every country is entitled to choose its own rulers by democratic election and to enjoy full self-determination free from any intervention external to the system of interdependence which has been established for defence against totalitarianism and colonialist interference. If our regional system breaks down the first victims will be the workers. We therefore need a strong I.L.O. to defend the workers' rights in a world of justice, peace and liberty.

Interpretation from Arabic: Mr. ISMAIL (Representative of the League of Arab States)—I have pleasure in greeting you, on behalf of the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, and in congratulating the President for the great trust that has been shown in him by his election to his high post.

I would also like to thank the Director-General for the invitation he addressed to the Secretariat of the League of Arab States to attend this 49th Session of the Conference.

Following the efforts that have been made by the League in accordance with the wishes of the I.L.O., I am glad to see that all Arab States are joining the International Labour Organisation, to welcome warmly the accession of the Arab Republic of Yemen and to express to it my best wishes for progress. I hope that this Organisation will soon include the other independent Arab States or those which will shortly be achieving their independence.

I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate Zambia, Malta and Malawi on having joined the Organisation.

The identity of purpose which the League of Arab States seeks to achieve with the principles for which the International Labour Organisation was created establishes a close link between the activities of the two organisations and has led to close co-operation between them. This co-operation was, moreover, defined in the provisions of the agreement concluded between them in 1958, provisions which relate to reciprocal representation at meetings where matters of common interest are discussed, to the exchange of technical experience, information and statistics, and to consultation in fields of mutual concern.
Fifteenth Sitting

Bearing in mind the fact that the Arab language is the language of approximately 100 million persons belonging to the Arab States, the League, within the framework of its collaboration with the Office has published a complete translation of the two volumes of the International Labour Code. This certainly contributed to raising to 234 the number of international labour Conventions adopted by the Arab States by 1 January of this year. Furthermore, the League has translated the Constitution of the I.L.O. and the Standing Orders of the Conference into Arabic, as well as certain technical reports published by the I.L.O. dealing with questions of particular importance for the Arab States, such as the Labour Survey of North Africa, Employment and Economic Growth, Why Labour Leaves the Land, etc. Finally, the General Secretariat of the League prepares yearly studies in Arabic bearing on the items on the agenda of the sessions of the International Labour Conference.

You are certainly aware that the Arab countries form, when taken as a whole, a single nation with all the characteristics of unity. This unity is based not only on historical reasons but also on geographic, economic, cultural and social considerations. The Arab nation has strongly resisted all the circumstances of diversity that have led to its being split up into several political entities and it continues to resist the plots that are directed against it.

In order to achieve the fundamental wish of the Arab peoples for unity; being convinced that the regroupment of the labour forces within a single Arab nation represents one of the cornerstones of Arab recognition and that collaboration in the labour field will advance Arab society; with a view to social justice; with a view to guaranteeing the Arab's right to a better life and in response to the requirements of economic and social development; basing itself on the Charter of the League of Arab States and in accordance with the principles and rules laid down by the I.L.O., the Council of the League of Arab States approved, at its 43rd Session in March 1965, the recommendations of the first Conference of Arab Ministers of Labour which met in Baghdad in January 1965. These recommendations included a plan for the adoption of an Arab Labour Charter and at the creation of an Arab Labour Organisation, which would be a specialised agency of the League of Arab States.

This action bears witness to the sincere interest which the Arab States have in labour matters. It is also a guarantee of the right of the labouring masses in the Arab nations to better conditions—a right which the Organisation aims at safeguarding and of the establishment of an educational system corresponding to the needs of the Arab States as regards human resources and their economic development; joint studies in the field of planning and of full employment, as well as in the field of labour relations.

Certain Arab States have already filed with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States instruments of ratification of the Labour Charter and the Constitution of the Arab Labour Organisation. We hope that other Arab countries will ratify these two documents so that the Arab Labour Organisation may assume its responsibilities and thus become the second specialised Arab institution following the establishment of the Arab Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organisation.

It may be noted that among the recommendations of the first Conference of Arab Ministers of Labour was one for the establishment of unified Arab labour legislation, as well as one for the creation of an Arab institute for vocational and technical training.

The Secretariat has formed a technical commission to draft such legislation and the statutes of the institute, whose activities, we hope, will complement the work of the Turin Centre.

We hope also that fruitful co-operation between the two bodies will help to safeguard the rights of the labouring Arab masses to be trained with a view to raising the productive capacity of the Arab nation.

The activities of the Secretariat of the League of Arab States are not confined to co-operation with Arab governments; they also include co-operation with Arab employers' and workers' organisations, which takes the form, for example, of participation in meetings organised by employers' and workers' organisations, with a view to securing the best possible information on the viewpoints of all the parties concerned. Furthermore, the Secretariat co-operates with these organisations in the technical and material fields.

May I, in reviewing the agenda of this session, express my appreciation for the efforts which the I.L.O. is making as regards the revision of its General Programme and for the resolution in which the I.L.O. is facing the ever greater requirements of this changing world, adapting its means to the most varied situations.

I realise the importance of the responsibilities which must be assumed by the Organisation, whose membership has grown by about one-third during the past six years. I hope, however, that the developing States—and they include the co-operative Arab nations—will give a greater share of that technical co-operation of which they are in such great need. Thus the Organisation will really have served the cause of world peace and of social justice.

I am glad also to express satisfaction at the happy choice of subjects for consideration at this session, especially the items on agrarian reform and women workers with family responsibilities. Indeed, the study of the first subject will help to eliminate unemployment in its various forms, to increase national income and production levels, and to raise the standard of living of the agricultural worker—all problems which particularly affect developing countries.
With regard to women workers, they certainly deserve the assurance that they will be able to carry out their work without prejudicing their family responsibilities.

I should also like to stress the honourable attitude taken by the Conference with regard to the question of apartheid in the Republic of South Africa; I hope that it will take energetic measures to eliminate apartheid wherever it obtains.

The success of the Conference in condemning the States which practise this inhuman policy leads me to hope that the Conference will also condemn the crimes of slavery that are being perpetrated against our brothers in Angola and in Mozambique; conscience dictates that this should be done.

I wish this Conference every success.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. Galdós García (Employers’ delegate, Spain)—In the name of the employers of Spain, I am very happy to be able to congratulate Mr. Raza on his well-deserved election to the post of President of this Conference.

The Report submitted by the Director-General which we are discussing here describes the work of the Office along the lines set out at earlier meetings for the future action of the I.L.O. The subjects are limited to those where, during the discussions, a considerable degree of conformity was reached and although the length of experience has not been very long to enable one to draw precise conclusions, it would appear that the action of the Office has intensified and that there is cause to hope that in the next stage positive results will ensue. The Director-General has said that perhaps in the near future proposals will be made in connection with certain items which are open to discussion.

With reference to international labour standards, he says that the opinions more or less coincide and that this fact strengthens the need for establishing new rules; hence he deduces that it is superfluous to continue the discussion on this subject. I hope Mr. Morse will permit me to express my disagreement with such a sweeping conclusion. The Employers' group has maintained a very clear position in this connection, which is open to no misinterpretation. We feel that the international labour standards in force cover the needs of the time. They have not all as yet been applied everywhere, and we feel that the emphasis should be on application rather than have a profusion of instruments which might be quite unsuitable.

We fully approve of the proposal urging an improvement in conditions of employment, the participation of the workers' representatives and employers in public planning and the inclusion in such public plans of provisions relating to the world of labour, particularly that of employment.

We also feel that it is very desirable to decentralise activities both for reasons of functional efficiency and because it makes it possible to focus on problems from a rational point of view more satisfactorily than can be done by highly concentrated bodies. Thus the I.L.O. can better meet the requirement, which the Director-General considers to be imperative, that it should have a full understanding of the situation in each country and in each region. This spirit is reiterated when the Director-General brings out the need for the study and solution of labour disputes, bearing in mind the interests of the national community.

Taking these paragraphs as examples of many more outstanding expressions of the Director-General’s intentions, I should like to say that what he says certainly does not imply any compromise with the principles on which the very essence and existence of the I.L.O. depend.

We have observed, however, that our institution has started along rather dangerous paths which may result in deplorable consequences if the action of the I.L.O. does not flow through orthodox channels. At my speech at the 47th Conference I said that the I.L.O. must not continue to convert itself into a platform for the discussion of matters which might be very interesting, but which should be handled by other and more appropriate organisations.

If all countries had exactly the same political, economic and social régimes, and if the power of the country were exercised always in exactly the same way, there would be no need to have an International Labour Organisation. Its existence is justified precisely because of the very diversity which arises out of the circumstances and the realities deep-rooted in each region. The universality of the Office should make expression of each and every point of view possible, and the most convincing arguments should be adopted. For our part, we do not like intervention or nationalisation. These are the extreme recourses which we think should be practised only when there are no other feasible solutions. Therefore, we do not approve of a system which takes restrictive action against the promotion of private initiative. But that does not mean that we refuse to listen, provided others listen to us and that both sides are sincere. No one can claim to possess all the truth, but it is valuable to appreciate the stand taken by those who differ in opinion without having recourse to violence. Here we are trying to persuade the world to adopt those standards which, because of their universal nature and their justice, could be established in all countries. To reach this objective, the I.L.O. is characterised by its tripartite nature where a proper balance is maintained between Governments, Employers and Workers. Anything which might destroy this balance would be an attack on the basic principle of the I.L.O.

Consequently, we consider any formula to be unacceptable which would make it possible to impose on any of the three groups—on the Employers in particular—persons who were not elected within the group itself. It is only natural, of course, to permit appeals against irregularities, but let us not shelter irregularities by imposing persons on the group who do not have the qualifications to represent those persons they are supposed to represent. The person concerned must really be an employer; one cannot just simply attach a label to a person and call him an employer when he is a government agent.

We do not know if any new procedure will be possible, but no solution would be acceptable if it were to distort the basic rules essential to the very existence of this Organisation.

We are very much concerned to see certain political manoeuvres which reflect so much passionate ill-will that they lead their authors to make false accusations and to raise questions that are quite out of place in the I.L.O., using language which is unacceptable and inadmissible in institutions where good manners are basic. There are some who think that the use of this kind of language gives greater force to the argument. That is not only untrue but exposes far more clearly an unreasoning attitude and a lack of decorum such as are never shown by those who, in good faith, firmly believe in their arguments. This is clear evidence of an attempt to introduce politics, which is not in line with the objectives of the I.L.O. and may lead to the beginning of its end. Perhaps this is what certain persons have in mind when they make use of these methods. It would be of no use to have a new structure of the I.L.O., whether more or less effective in certain fields, if at the same time the foundations of the Organisation were undermined by forces which finally destroyed it.

In this connection, I think anything that the Office can do should be done to avoid fostering any illegitimate aims based on motives which cannot be own to others and which are perhaps designed to prevent examination of the behaviour of those practising these methods, who attempt by means of false accusations to divert attention towards those of us who fortunately have a higher concept of our fellow men.

There are many countries, but unfortunately not all, whose frontiers are open and whose territories can be visited quite freely. Great numbers of private citizens are the best judge of the degree of freedom of every country. The world knows who it is that sets back time by fostering conflicts and maintaining humanity in a state of constant uncertainty instead of trying to solve urgent problems.

Men and peoples of goodwill are collaborating in constructive work. We are ready to accept advice and information from those who try to convince us with a philosophical analysis of the systems that they practise. But those who attack us, imputing to us improper practices which they themselves pursue are wasting their time.

Let the luke-warm and the apathetic take heed. Diverg nces can be harmful and an evil which is not nipped in the bud can grow into a real danger for those who naively believe that certain attitudes merely represent a private quarrel.

The projects are ample and well thought out, and you can see how they require all of us in our interventions to take up considerable time in expressing what is happening, at least as food for thought. I do not wish to omit to point out what my country is doing in the field of wise evolution, maintaining principles which have been proved by time and experience. It has just set up provincial and national councils of employers and workers respectively. All posts, without exception—I wish to stress this, without exception—including those of chairmen, are filled by completely free elections. All persons concerned take part without discrimination, regardless of religion, race, political beliefs, sex or background. They elect representatives, including those who come to the I.L.O., and their action corresponds to principles of freedom which we prove by our unequivocal attitude. I can provide full proof of my statements with regard to the employers who make up the councils, and I can give you their names and activities. No falsification is possible here. The years of service of representatives and those they represent in undertakings well-known inside Spain as well as outside are incontrovertible evidence.

My country has now drafted legislation connected with the right to strike, which will convert a de facto right into a de jure one. There are some countries which have recognised it in their legislation but in practice do not allow its application.

For us the time has come to put our law into conformity with practice and thus prove that there is no intention to evade the issue. Many have understood the situation and recognise the truth. This can be proved to anyone who with open-minded sincerity wants to know what is the actual situation.

I hasten to say that we do not expect as a consequence of our very free statements here that there will be a stop to the attacks on Spain made by those for whom no reason is sufficiently valid to cease behaviour which is based on motives which have nothing to do with what their arguments affirm.

It is quite clear that everything we do is a consequence of our free decision, not due to weakness, fear, or any desire just to please anybody. It is significant that every time we take a new step forward the attacks increase.

The spirit of all Spaniards is in its very essence free, and we maintain a high and uncompromising concept of sovereignty, which is so often invoked from this rostrum. In our constant progress we are rapidly attaining a situation which many who make it their business to plot and foment trouble would be only too glad to have for themselves.

Whereas, for example, there is no military jurisdiction in my country to judge or intervene in specific cases, the contrary is stated, and it is deplorable that there are still people who in good faith believe that this is true without taking the trouble to see what the actual situation is.

I conclude by pledging our honest collaboration in working towards a better world illuminated by freedom and justice. It was this desire that moved Spain to become a Member of the I.L.O. from the very inception of this international body.

Mr. PALMER (Workers' delegate, Sierra Leone)—On behalf of the workers of Sierra Leone, I wish to congratulate you, Mr. President, and to associate myself with the remarks made by the other speakers on your elevation to your high office and wish you all success in steering our deliberations. Much has been said about your nice qualities by various speakers, and I do not wish to expound on them.

 Permit me to inform this Conference of my organisation in brief. On 18 June 1964 history was created in the Sierra Leone labour movement, when the then Sierra Leone Council of Labour and Trades Union Congress met, resolved their differences and agreed on the birth of a new organisation known as the Sierra Leone Federation of Labour.

My organisation has a non-alignment policy which coincides with that of my Government. It is the policy of my organisation to work in close concert with other African labour movements in particular and with other international organisations in general.

Although this is my first opportunity of attending the International Labour Conference, I have found the Director-General's Report very concise, educative, straightforward and stimulating. May I say that my organisation wholeheartedly supports and endorses the remarks made by the Director-General in his Report under the heading "Living and Working Conditions" and prays fervently that the International Labour Organisation will be able in the near future to tackle this important problem, in keeping with the principles of the I.L.O. The Director-General has been able to cover in his Report a wide range of industrial problems facing young developing nations so as to bring about happiness and stability in the nations. On behalf of my organisation, I have to thank the Director-General for the excellent Report which he has presented to us and I wish him continued success.

Regarding the policy of apartheid being practised by the Verwoerd régime in South Africa, the workers of Sierra Leone stand firmly behind the I.L.O. in any positive action to be taken, and this I think has the support of the Government of Sierra Leone. Today, we are in a changing world and one should not be pragmatic over the past, but should be optimistic so as to move with the times.

The relationship between my organisation and the Government is cordial. My organisation is free from government interference and therefore enjoys the right of freedom of movement and to organise. My organisation is autonomous and keeps within the principles of the I.L.O.

I wish to inform you that some unions in Sierra Leone have signed collective agreements with various employers providing the workers with improved wages and fringe benefits (apart from the statutory awards made by various wages boards and joint industrial councils), as an impetus to increased productivity and to create security for workers in their employment. I am very happy that the Government of Sierra Leone has ratified the Governing Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119), and I hope that it will speed up legislation which will also embody the provisions of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1963 (No. 119).

There is no social security scheme provided for the workers by the State. However, the Government has for some time been considering the inclusion of a provision for a provident fund whereby each employer will have to contribute a certain percentage of workers' salaries. It is the aim of my organisation to discuss the improvement of the Workmen's Compensation Act with the Government in order to bring it into line with present-day needs.

It is the intention of my organisation to appeal to the Government to look very seriously and urgently into the wage pattern in the country so as to obviate the disparity in incomes, which is considered at present to be too wide. When this is done, there is sure to be happiness among the workers and the creation of new jobs.

Regarding the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of Sierra Leone, it is evident that a clear and practical policy conceived by the I.L.O. will be most beneficial to our country, taking into account our natural resources. If our resources are pooled, there will be (a) more employment, (b) more circulation of currency (boosting the country's economy), and (c) stability in the nation. My organisation is actively contemplating the running of its own co-operative for the benefit of its members and their families.

Permit me to appeal to the African workers' representatives present here to be more united and co-operative so that the Organisation of African Unity can at least achieve its objectives. It is quite certain that no government can plan its economy without including the labour movement. And as such, the labour movement should be prepared to co-operate with the government of the day when it comes to matters affecting the projection of the African image. While we are convinced that we should go all out to ensure the improvement of the workers' lot our international policies should not be diametrically opposed to those of our governments. Although some labour movements are free from government control, yet, in important matters of both national and international import, there should be a degree of unity in our action in order to bring about fruitful results. It is indeed a shame for me to say that the African governments within the Organisation of African Unity are more united than the African workers. May I appeal once again to my African comrades to think in the interest of Africa as a whole so that we can pool our resources in order to build up Africa as a great unit in the very near future.

Once again I wish to congratulate you on behalf of the workers of Sierra Leone on your election to preside over this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. The good qualities you have shown so far convince us that, with the co-operation of the I.L.O. staff, this will undoubtedly be one of our most successful conferences.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mrs. DEFILLIPPI MORENO (Workers' delegate, Chile)—It is a privilege for me to speak at this Conference—a privilege which seems all the greater when I remember that I am the first woman to have been elected to represent the workers of my country at this tripartite meeting. I have observed with real interest and pleasure that the agenda of this session of the Conference includes specific points of international importance to women workers: the employment of women with family responsibilities, and the application of the maternity protection instruments, particularly the Maternity Protection Convention, 1919 (No. 3), the Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103), and the Maternity Protection Recommendation, 1952 (No. 95).

In the name of the workers, and particularly of the working women of Chile, representing 300,000 organised workers, I should like to assure you of our sincere desire to co-operate with the Governing Body of the I.L.O., in view of the magnificent and well-documented work which the Organisation is doing to lay down general labour standards at the international level. These international instruments are of vital importance for the workers, and particularly for the working women, because in my country, as in many others, they have not been recognised as having the equal rights to which they are entitled as human beings; nor, what is more, has there been recognition of the increasing role which working women play in the life of the country.

The workers of my country regard the standing-setting work of the I.L.O. as extremely important, and they strongly desire that this work not only continue but be intensified and extended until it reaches the farthest corners of the world.

There is another point which I would like to stress here, namely that the I.L.O., using all the means at its disposal, should give greater publicity to these standards, particularly those which refer to women, because the great majority of women have no exact knowledge of their rights, and, without such knowledge, they are discriminated against and exploited without knowing that they have legal recourse against these situations.

I should like to make a cordial appeal to all delegations to this Conference to support unanimously the proposed Recommendation being drawn up by the Committee on Women's Work so that there may be finally a unanimous vote in favour of the proposed Recommendation concerning the employment of women with family responsibilities.

I should now like to refer to that part of the Director-General's Report which relates to women workers, and to congratulate the Office very warmly on the work it has done and is doing in this field.

We women consider that the time has come for greater regard to be paid to the undeniable fact that women make up a third of the economically active population of the world, and that consequently, at the level of the I.L.O. and within each of our countries, priority should be given to the following problems.

Firstly, young women workers should, without distinction of sex, be given sound vocational training as a basis for their future working career, and the public authorities and employers should be reminded at all sectors and levels that this kind of training is as necessary for women as it is for men.

Secondly there is another field in which the co-operation of the I.L.O. can be of great benefit to women workers. I refer to technical assistance in the educational work which the trade unions are carrying out. By means of its aid and technical assistance, the I.L.O. could contribute to equipping women who have leadership qualities with the knowledge and training which they need to carry out responsibly their difficult task of securing not only a higher standard of living but also an improvement in conditions of work for their comrades.

I sincerely thank you, Mr. President, for having enabled me to express my modest but frank ideas in defence of the particular interests and rights of working women.

(The Conference adjourned at 4.45 p.m.)
ADDRESS BY MR. DACKO, PRESIDENT OF THE CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

The PRESIDENT—It is one of my most pleasant duties in this session to welcome His Excellency the President of the Central African Republic, Mr. David Dacko, to this Conference. It is an honour of which we are fully conscious. He has, in spite of his multifarious duties and cares of office, found time to come here; this shows the esteem in which this Organisation is held everywhere in the world.

I have great pleasure in calling upon him to address the Conference.

Interpretation from French: Mr. DACKO (President of the Central African Republic)—Mr. President, Your Excellencies, ladies and gentlemen, the Central African Republic greets you through me, and, through all the delegations, greets also the nations represented here, which are tirelessly exploring every avenue in their efforts to ensure peace in the world.

I also greet the new member States on their entry to the Organisation which has just been welcomed by you.

I should like personally to thank the President of the Conference, His Excellency Hashim Raza, for permitting me to associate myself with your work, and I should like also to thank those who have attended this special sitting arranged on my behalf.

I should like to pay tribute to the International Labour Organisation for the valuable services which it is rendering to society, and for the lofty aims which inspire its special bodies. The Central African Republic is resolutely committed to support the I.L.O. and to apply its decisions for the greater good of our people, whose present standard of living is the subject of our constant concern.

In our Republic we believe that politics or political tendencies should not be the main interest of the national organisations in the new African States or the international organisations to which they belong. Neither the speeches nor the ideologies of the colonial Powers which colonised or exploited Africa, nor, again, the ideologies of the new Powers wishing to make use of Africa, will remedy the evils from which some African States, such as the Central African Republic, suffer, namely underdevelopment in the midst of as yet unsurveyed natural wealth.

Colonialism is only a memory for us; and we cannot speak of neo-colonialism in a country which is still making its way in the community of nations.

Communism, which seems to provide a pretext for some Powers to commit crimes against humanity, should carry no weight in the discussions in the I.L.O., one of the preoccupations of which, within its special field, must be to seek to establish social equilibrium between the favoured and the less favoured countries such as the Central African Republic, where the annual income of our citizens is less than $40. Therefore our Republic has set itself as its immediate objective the raising of the standard of living of the population. This explains my presence among you today, and the voyage of information I am now making through Europe. I shall go to other continents afterwards and in each country which I visit I hope to draw practical lessons from its economic organisation and consider the possibility of applying that experience in our country. I shall also call on these countries for assistance, but without impairing the independence of the Central African Republic.

Of course, all co-operation implies mutual comprehension and tolerance between the State providing the assistance and the one receiving it. Multi-national assistance by reason of its very anonymity is probably more effective than bilateral aid. The United Nations and its specialised agencies must strive to understand the problems, which we, as so-called underdeveloped countries, are experiencing and must do everything they can to help us to solve them. Otherwise, we shall be left perpetually at the mercy of external interference, which will be a constant threat to peace throughout the world.

May I draw your attention to the particular case of our continent. In the Central African Republic we consider that some organisations of a political nature, while having the merit of promoting friendly relations between African States or their leaders, cannot, however, contribute to the economic and social development of our countries. Only regional groups forming an economic entity—either because of their natural resources or because of their geographical position, such as the Central African Economic and Customs Union and the countries bordering the Sahara and Lake Chad—can play a decisive role in the unity of Africa.
which we seek, because such groups seem more stable, and we should like the international organisations such as the I.L.O. to support them.

I hope that the efforts which you make to this end during your discussions here will be successful and lead to the establishment of social justice among the peoples. I am convinced that you will be able to define the tasks of the I.L.O. without falling into the confusion sometimes inherent in international organisations.

Thank you for your kind attention.

The PRESIDENT—Your Excellency, fellow delegates, it is my very pleasant duty to express our grateful thanks to His Excellency who has given us this thought-provoking address this morning. Everyone in the world wants peace, and this great Organisation cannot discharge its functions without peaceful conditions all over the world. We in the I.L.O. need peace to pursue our work. Africa is on the march and is showing the dynamism of youth, and we all feel happy and pray for the solidarity and prosperity of the States which have emerged as independent in the last decade.

Thank you, Your Excellency, once more.

FIFTH REPORT OF THE SELECTION COMMITTEE 1: SUBMISSION AND ADOPTION

The PRESIDENT—The next item on the agenda is the fifth report of the Selection Committee. I call on Mr. Menon, Chairman of the Selection Committee, to present the report.

Mr. MENON (Government delegate, India; Chairman of the Selection Committee)—I have the honour to present to the Conference the fifth report of the Selection Committee, the text of which has been distributed to delegates. This report relates to the participation of non-governmental international organisations in the work of certain Committees and to changes in the composition of certain Committees. I commend the report to the Conference for adoption.

The PRESIDENT—The report is now open for discussion. If there are no objections, I take it that the Conference adopts the report.

(Report is adopted.)

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now resume discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from French: Mr. O. B. DIARRA (Government delegate, Mali)—Since the end of the Second World War the International Labour Organisation has been constantly and successfully adjusting itself to the new needs of the modern world. We must be glad of the positive results that it has obtained in this way, which make it today the organisation that inspires the most confidence among the African States and the workers of the world.

Each year the Director-General and his team set the tone and point the way with faith, determination and clear-mindedness in reports placed before the sessions of the Conference. The work is done with objectivity and understanding, that it is difficult to avoid paraphrasing what is so well presented in the documents. You will therefore forgive me if instead I explain the point of view of my Government on the main subjects for discussion at the present session.

Our attention has been particularly drawn to the following: the problem of the programme and structure of the I.L.O., the settlement of which is decisive for the future of the Organisation; the role of the occupational organisations in economic development, particularly in the developing countries; and conditions of work, freedom and human dignity.

Many exchanges of views have taken place on problems of programme and structure in the last three years, for the world today is very different from what it was ten years ago. The advent of a technical and mechanical civilisation, the atomic revolution, science fiction becoming a reality with interplanetary flight, and the appearance on the international scene of the young nations, all confront our generation with acute problems for the solution of which a world at peace is required. Progress must be placed at the service of all; all must profit fairly from the enrichment of the more favoured; the interdependence of nations resulting from modern telecommunications and the elimination of distance must be translated into close co-operation between them. The coexistence of highly industrialised countries and countries which have hardly left the stage of handicrafts and subsistence economy is a source of trouble in itself if the former do not in due time take action to reduce the gap.

For all these reasons we approve the new orientation of the I.L.O.’s programme towards the search for better ways and means of satisfying the needs of the developing countries through appropriate economic expansion. The utilisation of human resources, together with equitable conditions of work and life will enable results to be achieved rapidly. The whole problem, in fact, is one of means and methods.

How are human resources to be utilised? How are the manpower needs of the developing countries to be met? How are we to increase production and productivity for the well-being of the people? Part II of the Report deals at length with vocational training at all levels. We entirely approve the projects for initial and advanced training on the spot, reserving training abroad for instructors and supervisors. In this sphere the Turin Centre leads to high hopes and we believe that it can effectively meet the training needs of the developing countries. We have to thank the Italian Government and the City of Turin, the Director of the Centre, Mr. Bacon, and all the governments which have helped in starting the Centre. We would also appeal to all governments to support it so that it may become a real international centre, both through its work and through the human contacts and understanding which it will make possible when it opens.

The I.L.O. should aim at having supervisor training for our countries imparted on the spot and at making use of our own technicians. International aid must not be transformed into a racket in which the underdeveloped countries are nothing but “stand-ins” who receive nothing but long reports on subjects with which they are already familiar. Nor should we content with approximate and purely empty training which produces people with high-sounding titles and much pretension but little real capability. The time has come to put an end to a certain kind of accelerated training without any real content or efficiency. An engineer, an inspector, or a planner must be the real thing and not merely a cheap substitute specially prepared for underdeveloped countries. The evident result of that would be to make technical assistance indispensable for an indefinite period; as some of our countries are beginning to discover, technical assistance has in some ways serious disadvantages and can be merely an expensive substitute for both giver and receiver if it is not appropriate and lacks continuity.

My country gives close attention to these problems, and our educational reform, now in its fourth year, has fixed precise objectives whose achievement will enable us to meet the needs of our population at all levels. We have given back to our technical and agricultural education the dignity which the colonial régime would not accord it. The number of schools and the number of pupils have increased more than fivefold. We have a technical secondary school with a practical curriculum. We have schools of engineers for industry and agriculture at all levels. We have a special school for secondary-school teachers and we have a national school of administration for our magistrates, economists, administrators, labour inspectors and diplomats. Following the conclusive experience gained with the secondary school of health for the training of nurses, midwives and welfare workers, a school of medicine is soon to be opened. In all these establishments international co-operation, bilateral as well as multilateral, has enabled us to obtain very encouraging results. We have to create continuously and, though we do not pretend to compare our schools with those in Europe or elsewhere, we are convinced that this is the only path to take, that the reputation of our establishments must be created by ourselves and that this can only be done by faith, determination and daring.

Perhaps, because of the size of our States, regroupings will be necessary sooner or later. It is certain that training abroad means loss of roots, loss of adjustment, and sometimes, alas, ideological indoctrination and all that that involves.

It is not sufficient to train supervisors; they must also play a full part in economic development. They must feel themselves protected by fair legislation so that they can produce more.

On these two levels my country has done everything possible for the workers. We have state undertakings and companies in all sectors of the economy. The Report of the Director-General rightly stresses this new phenomenon, the importance of which for our national life and for the interests of the working masses has been recognised by us since our independence. State undertakings and companies are covered by general rules of which the preamble states that they are “a decisive achievement of the workers of the Republic of Mali”. They are the property of the people and can never return to private ownership. The activity of the national undertakings must be grafted towards the development and consolidation of the peoples’ property in the interests of the whole people.

They must put men and women first and therefore must constantly improve industrial health and safety through social and cultural institutions for the workers; they must be a training school for supervisors for the whole nation. Better still, the trade union organisations are associated at all levels in economic development within the Cultural and Social Committee, which is the planning and control body for social matters, and in the Economic and Planning Committee, which is the highest economic planning and control body. At a lower level in the state undertakings a management committee composed of representatives of workers in the undertaking participates in annual planning with the management. It also supervises implementation of the plan and proposes all necessary measures in this regard. This committee automatically examines all questions concerning work organisation, the improvement of productivity, the system of remuneration, and engagement and dismissal. Lastly, it proposes the best workers for bonuses and other distinctions.

You will see that my country approves and applies entirely the recommendation made by the Director-General, who asks the I.L.O. to give social organisations the possibility “of playing an active and constructive part in the development of the society to which they belong. In particular they can and should be associated in the formulation and implementation of . . . development programmes . . . .” As I have just said, these measures are fully applied in my country, and we are pleased with the social atmosphere that now exists, for we have never had any strikes and the workers have willingly made more sacrifices than any other workers in Africa, or indeed in the world. For the worker, in the form of a civic tax and a special contribution, gives his country 25 to 30 per cent. of his wage because he is convinced that his sacrifice will lead to the abundance which his faith and work will create. Thus my country relies on its own efforts above all and refuses any false prosperity for the benefit of certain social classes—a prosperity the price of which is loss of the independence and dignity for which our people have struggled. International co-operation and assistance are not and cannot be more than a supplement to the great effort which the people of Mali are making for themselves.

In this spirit we thank the I.L.O. in advance for the forthcoming opening of the training centre for office workers. We have been waiting for several years for an expert on manpower.
planning and training. We welcome the effort made by the I.L.O. in the form of workers' education courses, which have been going on in Mali since 1964. Thanks to the faith, the objectivity and the competence of the I.L.O. experts, these courses are an exemplary success. Today six regional centres work under the direction of supervisors trained at Bamako, and others will be opened within the next few weeks. Experts and observers have realised that our trump card is not only our faith and determination but also and above all the trade union unity which our workers have achieved to the since before our independence, and also the symbiosis of an entire people in a single party based on democratic centralism. Say what you will, the evidence is conclusive; the achievement of unity at all levels is a precondition for the development of our countries in which the State existed first and the nation still has to be created.

But this I.L.O. programme, in the present and in the future in Mali, does not blind us to the need for structural adjustment. We think that in order to play its full part the I.L.O. must fully respect its universal character at all levels. More than anywhere else, in the international organisations the interests of all men must be safeguarded and each must seek to participate fully in this work. We should beware of sectarianism and avoid the prejudices which lead to division and cold war. We must use to the full all values, all capacities, all aptitudes, without any other consideration than efficiency and the interest of mankind. The developed countries, with their past, their science, their technique and their ethics, should understand this and should not take into account secondary considerations of prestige or vanity. The Asian, Latin American and African countries are today full members of the world community. We enter it without a sense of revenge or hatred, with only the determination to save the world from the evils of the past which have seen peoples dominating one another, embarking on fratricidal wars, dividing themselves into civilised colonisers and colonised savages without human dignity. We enter the international community with the determination to make our contribution to its improvement and to respect the principles of justice, equality, dignity and freedom for all mankind.

We believe that an ever greater place should be given to the non-aligned countries, and particularly to Africa, in the I.L.O. We should be permitted to carry out our apprenticeship, we should be given responsibilities greater than those of underlings or office boys. It is not our fault if we do not have university degrees but it is a fact that we have many men and women in our country who could teach university people a lot. Believe me, the school of life is the place where one learns most, quickest and best —better than in a university or anything of that sort. We urge the I.L.O. to try to use some of these valuable people who have only a primary education but whose real training may enrich our country's wealth by the product and the fruit, good will and experience.

As regards the regional offices and field offices, it is time to leave the fringe and to enter the heart of this continent which has been so often emptied of its men and resources by offices on the coast. We believe that the regional groupings should not be linguistic but should correspond to economic and geographical realities. This is the affair of the Africans also. We have confidence that the I.L.O., in consultation with all interested parties, will take the necessary effective measures.

However, we are convinced that one of the most embarrassing obstacles to the work of the I.L.O. is the violation by some countries of the principles on which our Organisation is based, that Organisation which aims to be the conscience of the world.

It is true that last July we saw the unanimous adoption by acclamation of the moving Declaration concerning apartheid. It is also true that we voted the amendments to the Constitution making possible the suspension or exclusion of States Members practising apartheid. But a great deal remains to be done so that these texts may be translated into reality. We must continue to resist the South African Government, which insults the conscience of mankind.

We must think also of Portugal, which persists in the same course with more refined, more subtle, methods. The I.L.O. should not be the accomplice in any action to whitewash Portugal. There is something Machiavellian about the way in which legal points are handled in connection with the Portuguese case. The authorities of that country are wrong if they think time is on their side. It is a sign of the times that not a single African dares to face the opinion of Africa on this question. We adjure the I.L.O. here as in the case of South Africa to follow the course of history.

We are convinced that the Director-General, with his objectivity and habitual honesty, will propose the necessary action against Portugal and thus increase the prestige of the I.L.O. even further. The Director-General knows that he can count on the unanimity not only of the African countries and the other uncommitted countries but also of the great majority of the States Members of the Organisation, because of their passionate love for justice and freedom.

The world has its eyes upon us. We are sure that under your direction the I.L.O. will never disappoint it. The families of those who die in Angola, in Mozambique, in the Isles of Cape Verde, in Bissau Guinea, are looking to you for something more than a skilfully emasculated resolution. I am convinced, knowing the men and women of this Conference, knowing the authorities which watch over the destinies of our Organisation, that Portugal, as yesterday South Africa, will have no friends here, because all will unanimously condemn the abject policy of human degradation and of racialism. This is the sacred duty of the I.L.O., the moral conscience of humanity. It is the duty of us all; and for you, my African brothers, this is to respect the oath of our Heads of State at Addis Ababa at the birth of the Organisation of African Unity. None will fail, and the enemies of Africa or the imperialists and their lackeys will fail if they remain blind to the maturity of this continent which cannot be suppressed.

In closing, may I congratulate you, Mr. President, on your election. We are also glad that the uncommitted countries have been honoured in your persons. It is a success for you personally, but also for all the Asian countries, and all those that are still underdeveloped. Your first days of office presage a successful and rewarding session of the Conference. I would like to congratulate also the three Vice-Presidents whose election shows the possibilities of international comprehension.

May I also congratulate all the staff of the I.L.O., who, day and night behind the scenes, provide us with the documents we need so much, the interpreters who permit our dialogue to continue, and all those who are the real artisans of the I.L.O.'s so carefully constructed machine, which has done so much for men in the past, and can do so much more if we accept and believe in it.

Mr. POSPIESZYŃSKI (Workers' delegate, Poland)—Having read very carefully the Report of the Director-General, I should like to present to the Conference the views of the Polish trade union movement, and which were not included in the Report and concerning basic activities of the International Labour Organisation.

These proposals result from a broad discussion which took place at the two last sessions of the Conference regarding the adjustment of the programme and structure of the I.L.O. to present needs and wants, to events and changes which are taking place in the world.

I fully appreciate the steps which are being taken by the Director-General and by the Governing Body—measures tending towards ensuring the implementation of the programme. I have, however, doubts regarding the timing of the measures which are aimed at solving problems linked with the programme and structure of the I.L.O.

We all know that proposals and suggestions made by the delegates during the discussion on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. were submitted to a special Working Party composed of members of the Governing Body and that this Working Party submitted its first report to this session of the Conference.

It is clear from this document that the Working Party deferred ad calendas gregas consideration of proposals concerning structural changes of the I.L.O.

We believe that not only is this decision unjustified, but it is also contrary to the opinion expressed by many delegates who pointed out the need to find solutions to a series of problems regarding the programme and structure of the Organisation.

Above all others, there is a need to find a solution to the problem of structural changes and thus create conditions suitable for the implementation of the programme. Every programme, even the very best one, may be implemented only if there is an adequate organisational and structural basis and if account is taken of a number of factors which contribute to the complexity of the International Labour Organisation and of its executive organ, the International Labour Office.

It may also be recalled that the Working Party called upon to consider the proposals and prepare conclusions is not sufficiently representative. As shown by the composition of the Working Party, set up by the Governing Body, a number of tendencies existing in the world trade union movement, and which were not represented in the Governing Body, have had no opportunity of contributing to the discussion and conclusions concerning the programme of activities and structure of the International Labour Organisation.

If I raise this matter, it is because I have had to conclude that for many years the position has not changed and that nothing has been done in practice to ensure a democratic and broad representation of all tendencies which exist in the world trade union movement. It would be difficult to hold against us the fact that we have doubts and that we take a critical stand in respect of the implementation of the programme of activities of the I.L.O. if such a programme is not based on an appropriate democratic structure of the Organisation, if, in the main organs of the Organisation and consequently in the Workers' group of the Governing Body, the main tendencies of the world trade union movement are not represented.

The still prevailing system of majority election is among the causes of this state of affairs, which is not normal.

We consider that the principle of proportional representation in the Workers' group of the Governing Body should be admitted. Under those conditions a truly democratic contribution could be made by all concerned, a creative discussion held, and the contribution, so essential, of the trade union movement as a whole brought to the revision of the programme and structure of the I.L.O.

The Polish trade unions will co-operate in the solution of the main problems outlined in the Report of the Director-General whilst, however, continuing their efforts towards democratisation within the I.L.O.

The Polish trade unions, all working men and women of my country, are fully supporting the noble objectives of the I.L.O.—peace, freedom from want, and social justice.

The ensuring of world peace is a basic condition for a proper use of human resources, for social progress, and for continual improvement in the living and cultural conditions and standards of working men and women.

We are confronted with a serious contradiction. At the same time as we are discussing here in this hall vital problems affecting all nations, there are regions where guns are talking, where towns and villages are being bombed and where armed aggression and intervention are taking place.

As a citizen of a country which, in the course of the Second World War, suffered untold losses, I have not only the right, but the duty, to speak of peace.

Aggression in Viet-Nam and in the Dominican Republic is perturbing the world situation and threatening peace. Billions of dollars which are wanting when requests for assistance to the developing countries are made turn into napalm bombs which are killing Vietnamese men and women and destroying their poor possessions.

The PRESIDENT—I think you will have seen or read the ruling which I gave yesterday about not referring to theatres of war, and I would therefore request you not to continue in that strain and to omit references to theatres of war, for the sake of the proper conduct of the proceedings in this Conference.

Mr. POSPIESZYŃSKI — Such behaviour, which is aimed mainly at using military force to slow down the irreversible process of social change, is in open contradiction with the United Nations appeal that 1965 be the International Co-operation Year. All these facts have a serious adverse effect on international collaboration and render difficult and far less effective the work of international organisations.

Also, we cannot remain silent when, in spite decolonisation and the introduction of Civil Rights Bills, people whose only fault is that they have skin of a different colour are subject to discrimination, such discrimination being practised in various territories and not only those which still have a colonial status.

Dictatorships in Spain and Portugal, in spite of the pressure of world public opinion, refuse the workers of those countries basic rights and liberties.

We support fully the resolutions concerning the existing situation in Spain and Portugal and we hope that they will be adopted by the Conference.

On many an occasion the Polish Workers’ delegation has emphasised the importance and role of the world trade union movement, which can and should contribute towards the solution of the burning economic and social problems.

I regret to say that the trade union movement has not always been able to influence fully the events that take place in the world. The main reason for this state of affairs is the lack of unity in the trade union movement, whose objective, regardless of political systems and tendencies, is to defend the interests of all working men and women.

We appreciate that, over the years, many difficulties have arisen among the representatives of the various tendencies in the trade union movement and that consequently these difficulties have been reflected within the I.L.O.

But the present situation requires and demands from all of us that we should eliminate gradually the obstacles piling up on the road leading to unity of action and thus enable the international trade union movement to play its full part in the shaping of both the present and the future.

I cannot understand those who refuse to admit that the present world is different from the world which existed several decades ago, and even only a few years ago, and who refuse to reject, regardless of outdated opinions and ideas.

The I.L.O. is today the only place where the trade union representatives of practically the whole world can meet. It seems, therefore, that within the context of its programme of activities and the implementation of such a programme the I.L.O. should increase its efforts to bring closer all tendencies in the trade union movement, thus enabling the movement to take a greater part in the realisation of the
I.L.O. programme of activities.

You may ask how the I.L.O. could contribute to bringing closer the trade unions of different tendencies when it comes to considering concrete problems concerning living and working conditions.

I will give you just one example—namely the last session of the Coal Mines Committee which took place recently.

It seems to me that, in the light of this example and of other examples which could be taken from outside the I.L.O., a round-table meeting of representatives of the different trade union organisations would be justified.
This meeting would be concerned with an exchange of views on the participation in the international labour movement as a whole in ensuring peace, the implementation of the programme of the I.L.O., and the solution of many complex problems which are facing both working men and women and the nations.

The I.L.O., which is a tripartite organisation, can and should work towards creating the best conditions for closer collaboration between all trade unions in respect of realisation of the objectives and aims which are the very foundation of this Organisation.

The Polish trade unions will continue to do their best to bring about closer co-operation within the international labour movement as a whole because such co-operation is an essential condition of social progress and peace.
Thank you.

Interpretation from French: Mr. NGOM (Workers' delegate, Cameroon)—This is the third time I have had the honour of speaking from this rostrum in the name of the workers of Cameroon. I should like first of all to associate myself with the many speakers who have preceded me in extending the most sincere congratulations to the honourable delegate of Pakistan, Mr. Bazu, on his well-deserved election to the presidency of this Conference.

The Federation of Trade Unions of Cameroon, the F.S.C., which I represent here, is the unified national trade union which represents the great majority of the workers of my country. It came into existence in January 1963 as a result of the fusion of the trade union organisations which existed at that time in Eastern Cameroon, except for a minority of the Union of Believing Workers. This is the autonomous independent national union which is affiliated to no international union and which bases its actions on the principle of non-alignment. The objectives of the F.S.C., which is organically independent of political parties or governments, are to achieve total trade union unity at the national level, to educate the labouring masses of the people, to contribute to the work of the economic and social development of the country, to defend constantly the rights and interests of the workers, to fight against colonialism and neo-colonialism, to contribute towards trade union unity throughout Africa and to struggle for peace and international co-operation.

The organic independence of the F.S.C. is no obstacle to relations with the national political parties, the Government, or trade union organisations at the national or international level, whenever such relationships have as their objective the achievement of one of the goals to which our Federation has set itself. Thus we took part in a trade union seminar organised in the Federal Republic of Germany in 1963, in the world conference on education at Algiers, and in the international conference of transport workers at Sofia, and so on. We have just sent four delegates to a trade union seminar in Canada and we are preparing to participate in the next study cycle of the social and economic study centre at Bobo Dioulasso in Upper Volta.

I should also like to extend a fraternal welcome to the great family of the I.L.O. from the delegates from Zambia, Malawi, Malta and Yemen. It is high time that we should see sitting beside us in this place delegates from our brother peoples of Angola, Mozambique and Bissau Guinea, who at present are struggling to free themselves from Portuguese colonialism, together with delegates from all the African territories which are still under foreign domination. We congratulate the I.L.O. on having expelled South Africa, the Government of which has been pursuing the ignoble policy of apartheid which has been categorically condemned by the United Nations and by public opinion at a world-wide level. It is high time to apply the same measures to the Government of Portugal which refuses to recognise the desire for national independence openly expressed by the African peoples to which I referred a moment ago and pursues in those countries a policy of racial discrimination and social injustice which is contrary to the principles of the Constitution of the I.L.O. By supporting the struggle for independence of the colonialised peoples, the I.L.O. strengthens its own prestige and broadens its scope of action. The proof of this is that from 1960, which was the great year of African independence openly expressed by the African peoples to which I referred a moment ago and pursues in those countries a policy of racial discrimination and social injustice which is contrary to the principles of the Constitution of the I.L.O. By supporting the struggle for independence of the colonialised peoples, the I.L.O. strengthens its own prestige and broadens its scope of action. The proof of this is that from 1960, which was the great year of African independence, the number of Members of the I.L.O. rose from 79—that was the number in 1959—to 112 at the beginning of this year. This number is increased even further with the addition of new independent countries which have just shaken off the colonial yoke and which I welcomed a moment ago.

When we read the Director-General's Report our attention is caught by several points. Four years ago, at this same rostrum, a certain number of delegates—and I was one of them—declared that the I.L.O. would have to be attuned to the changes which had taken place in Africa and other parts of the world if it wanted really to play its proper part in the enormous work of economic development and social progress in the developing countries. The hour has come: the hour of the final disappearance of the colonial régime, the hour of the return to life, freedom and equality of rights for hundreds of millions of men previously enslaved by colonialism.

In Cameroon we have a man who said that in the end truth always triumphs. That man is President Ahmadou Ahidjo. The historic truth which has just triumphed in this second half of the twentieth century is that 300 years of colonialism did not succeed in crushing the man of Africa in spite of all that had been done to remove from him all vestiges of human dignity and to reduce him to slavery. Today an independent Africa has recovered the place that was stolen from it so long ago in the international world. No one, I think, can deny this fact.

It is for that reason that when we look objectively at the balance-sheet drawn up in the Report of the Director-General we observe that an effort has been made but this effort is nevertheless insufficient so far as concerns the democratisation of the leading organs of the I.L.O. Much as we approve the decentralisation of the International Labour Office into 11 departments as a measure which will permit efficient functioning of the executive machinery of the Organisation, we also urge and demand that high African officials be called upon to work in each of these departments.

So far as the Governing Body is concerned, we say that the I.L.O., as the advocate of social justice, owes it to itself to set an example by re-evaluating the composition of the Governing Body and in particular by giving to Africa the number of seats which corresponds to the importance and the role which this great continent plays in the work of the I.L.O. in 1965.

The programme of regionalisation of the I.L.O.'s activities is an objective arrangement because it will make it possible to know local realities and to orientate efforts to undertake action in a better way. But there again we urge that in each region concerned, and particularly in Africa, officials should be recruited from the countries concerned. We insist also that geographical distribution of regional centres of the I.L.O. be established on equitable principles.

Having made these few comments, I should like to indicate our approval of the orientation which has been outlined in the Director-General's Report in so far as concerns the development of human resources, labour relations, trade union promotion and the development of social institutions, and living and working conditions.

In Cameroon in these various fields the workers have already made a start. We are strengthening the Federation of Trade Unions of Cameroon and its activities in all fields. In the recent elections of staff representatives we obtained 2,200 seats compared to 1,717 in 1963 and we expect to increase this representation in the near future.

On 1 May of this year workers' demonstrations of a size never seen in the past took place in a number of cities and centres of the country. At Yaoundé more than 3,000 workers paraded with banners, to the sound of popular music, through the main streets of the capital. The Prime Minister and many members of the Government and the diplomatic corps attended the great trade union meeting which was the culminating act of this parade.

The F.S.C. is also sharing in the preparation of the second five-year plan in Cameroon in the various bodies set up by the Government, and we are prepared to give our full support to carrying out the objectives of this plan. But the most urgent need which is at present of concern to our federation is the training of supervisory staff. In this connection we urge the I.L.O. to put into effect the project of organising a trade union seminar in Cameroon which was recommended by our federation in 1963.

As far as working and living conditions are concerned, the regulations arising out of the labour code cover a whole series of provisions made in this connection, although there is still a great deal yet to be done. As the industrialisation of the country develops and the cost of living rises, it will naturally be necessary to re-adjust the structure of the existing bodies and to re-evaluate the distribution of the national income. In this field my Federation is carrying out permanent action in defence of the interests of the workers while contributing to the awakening of their pride in their work. In 1964 and at the beginning of this year we obtained wage increases of between 15 and 23 per cent. for the administrative staff covered by the labour code, for employees in commerce, banks, navigation, the automobile industry and manufacturing industries. We are making the same efforts now to include workers in the agricultural and forestry sectors.

The problems of employment raised in the Director-General's Report are problems which we are familiar with today in Cameroon. Unemployment in the big cities, particularly Douala and Yaoundé, unemployment in the rural areas, insufficiency of statistics, shortage of skilled manpower at all levels to attain the objectives of the plan, are questions with which we are having to cope. The efforts made by the Government, with the assistance of the I.L.O. and other international bodies, for the training of supervisory staff, must be given vigorous support. The beginning of work on the trans-Cameroon railway and other industrial activities, as well as the development of the rural economy, give cause for hope that a good deal of this unemployment and under-employment will be overcome.

In this connection, co-operatives of all categories and agrarian reform, subjects before this session of the Conference, may play a very great role in the work of economic and social development. Thus my Federation supports the development of co-operatives and has included in its own programme of action the creation of co-operatives and mutual benefit societies.

Without being unduly optimistic, we think we can say that in Cameroon we are working along the right road. We are aware that, in order to build up our country and to build up the new Africa, all efforts must be co-ordinated. It is for that reason that we place the question of unity in the forefront of our objectives: national unity, trade union unity, unity in the work of development.

By creating the Organisation of African Unity and its Economic and Social Council, the African countries laid solid foundations for their future. The unity of the Organisation of African Unity must be safeguarded. The I.L.O. must co-operate closely with the Economic and Social Council of the O.A.U. to carry out its programme in Africa. In this connection we should like to stress one point with which we are particularly concerned. The Economic and Social Council of the Organisation of African Unity, meeting at Cairo, adopted a resolution on 22 January 1965 in which it recommends the achievement of trade union unity through the creation of a central African trade union organisation, independent of all other international trade union organisations. At present all progress on this question has come to a standstill.

In its resolution on African trade union unity the extraordinary congress of my Federation, which was held last October in Yaoundé, proclaimed that our trade union organisation was ready to act as an intermediary between the All-African Trade Union Federation and the African Trade Union Confederation, working towards any solution which could achieve trade union unity in our continent.

I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to make a new appeal to all African trade union organisations to make further efforts along these same lines, working towards this goal of trade union unity. Within the framework of its co-operation with the O.A.U. the I.L.O. can and must make its contribution to this great undertaking. Conflicts and struggles for influence, questions of personalities and dreams of hegemony will be to the detriment of Africa.

We are all emerging from the night of colonialism. We have all great need of light and life. Let us help to achieve unity and Africa will be saved, because as the resolution of the O.A.U.—to which I have referred above—proclaims, we are convinced that only a unified African trade union movement which is independent can assume the heavy responsibilities of the workers in the harmonious development of the continent and the strengthening of African unity, while safeguarding the interests of the workers.

Mr. POULSEN (Representative of the International Union of Food and Allied Workers' Associations) — Last year I had the opportunity to participate in the discussion on the structure and the future activities of the I.L.O. It seems to me to be appropriate, at this year, to assess the state of some of the problems that were discussed on that occasion, in the light of the Report of the Director-General which is now before us.

In a general way we regard the Report as marking a positive step in the policy of the Organisation, and we are satisfied that it incorporates several of the suggestions made by the Workers' side last year. The reorganisation of the I.L.O. and the establishment of the 11 technical and service departments, regrouped in three large administrative units, is a step which the labour movement can support. What matters now is the emphasis that is going to be placed on the different aspects of the work of each department.

We hope that the new structure of the Office will not only facilitate the process of formulating and adjusting programmes to major needs in member States' but above all will adjust the activities of the Office to the major needs of workers in member States, since we regard the major aim of the Office as that which was assigned to it when it was first established, namely to protect the rights of workers by promoting a policy of social justice.

We should like to see the department responsible for promoting the development of human resources give particular attention to vocational training and vocational guidance, for which there is a very widespread demand, particularly in the developing countries, although no country can claim an excess of skilled labour. We should also like to see an increase in I.L.O. activities in the field of labour legislation, which, in our opinion, has not received as much attention as it deserves.

The concept of labour legislation should not be interpreted in a narrow and formal way, but should be broadened to include voluntary agreements, such as collective contracts, the effects of which may frequently be assimilated in legislation. Systematic analysis of collective agreements and of their role would supply much-needed information and standards of comparison. This would help convey to the public a more accurate picture of social conditions as reflected in the various kinds of legal instruments.

Last year we expressed concern about the decreasing importance of I.L.O. industrial activities, a concern which is connected to the labour movement as a whole. This year a draft resolution on the industrial activities of the I.L.O. has been submitted to the Resolutions Committee of the Conference. A resolution on this matter was adopted last November by the International Trade Secretariat General Conference and was submitted to the Governing Body Committee on Industrial Committees and to the Working Party on the programme and structure of the I.L.O.

We regard the Industrial Committees as one of the most effective instruments through which the tasks of the I.L.O. can be accomplished. We particularly value the role of the Committees as an international forum for consultation and collective bargaining, a role to which they are well suited by their specialization. This role will assume increasing importance as the trend towards concentration of economic organisation arising today is controlled in about ten years' time by no more than 600 or 700 companies.

In this context we find that the new forms of economic organisation arising today are worthwhile fields for I.L.O. investigation, particularly the increase in international and multi-national companies, which are often in a position to decide the fate of workers in several countries, and the budgets of which often exceed those of governments of even medium-sized States.

In dealing with the I.L.O.'s industrial activities we have also stressed the need not only for more meetings, but for continuous research, information and follow-up activities. This need remains, and it is one that could be met by the Conditions of Work and Life Department. We cannot agree with the suggestion that living and working conditions should not receive priority in the activities of the I.L.O. On the contrary, we find that more information should be made available on subjects such as workers' earnings, duration of working time, holidays and vacations, job security, ways in which redundancies are handled, unemployment, consumers' prices, industrial conditions, development of productivity, health and welfare problems, social security and the like.

I should add that a mere accumulation of statistical material is not the type of information we have in mind; what is called for are more comparative analyses, of such a sufficiently detailed and specific nature as to provide a picture of the prevailing trends in working conditions in different countries. The I.L.O., which has already rendered very valuable services as an international clearing-house of information, should build up this aspect of its activities, activities which it alone is in a position to perform.

We have noted with great interest the commitment to promote employment in rural areas expressed in the Director-General's Report, in order to raise the contribution of the rural sector to the national income, and to improve the living conditions and the prospects of the inhabitants of rural areas. We should like to recall here the proposal by the Workers' group at the Tripartite Technical Meeting for the Food Products and Drink Industries, held in Geneva in 1963, of a world plan for the development of food-processing industries, with an inventory of needs and desirable priorities. In a resolution on world food problems and technical assistance to developing countries in the food products and drink industries, adopted unanimously, the Meeting stressed that the development of food-processing industries can considerably assist in improving standards of living and nutrition, in stabilising or developing agricultural production in the countries in which they are set up, by providing new employment possibilities.

We believe that the policies outlined in this resolution are very relevant to the concern for developing employment in rural areas expressed by the Director-General. We are heartened by the fact that the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations is at present considering action on precisely the same lines, and we would welcome an equal concern with this issue on the part of the I.L.O.

Finally, we emphatically agree with the reaffirmation of the principle that efforts for economic and social development must be undertaken with the active participation of all interested parties, which includes, in the first place, the working population of the countries where such efforts are made; and that the participation of employers and workers in economic planning at the national level needs to be paralleled at the plant level by measures enabling the workers to participate in the formulation of management decisions.

The great progressive trend of our time is the affirmation of a deeper and wider concept of democracy, a concept which implies the participation of ordinary people in the making of all decisions affecting their lives and the management of society. There is every reason why economic life should participate in this trend; not only reasons of efficiency, which are powerful enough, but also wider social reasons. A society cannot survive as a democracy when its economy is organised along military lines and the worker is treated like a foot-soldier on the battlefield of industry. A person who agrees to submit his authority to a boss in his working life, which is the better part of his existence, will remain a passive subject of authority outside of production as well, and will be unprepared to take his place as a free citizen in a democracy. Whoever lives in fear of the foreman, the supervisor or place as a free citizen in a democracy. Whoever tion as well, and will be unprepared to take his tion in decision-making at all levels of those tion in a free society. We are gratified that the tion of authoritarian social patterns, as it too often tion of the undertaking.

It is with very keen interest that we studied

The Conditions of Work and Life Department would thus be able to make a constant concrete effort to bring together documentation which would be extremely useful, in our opinion, to the employers' and workers' repre-

Interpretation from French: Mr. GRAEDEL

The interpretation from French reads:

It is with very keen interest that we studied

We should like to stress that, in our opinion, in its general effort of adjustment to the new conditions preceding from technical development throughout the world, the I.L.O. should not only, as the Report says, aim at "formulating and adjusting programmes to major needs in member States". It should above all adapt its programmes to the needs of the workers in those States. After all, the main objective of the I.L.O. organisation should remain that assigned to them when the Organisation was set up. It is the social content of economic policies which should be the first preoccupation of the I.L.O. It cannot, with its limited financial means, make an essential contribution to the rapid increase of industrial and general production throughout the world. It can, however, contribute to improving production in the light of the workers' interests and, above all, can develop employment possibilities.

On the other hand, we are unreservedly pleased at the programme drawn up by the Office for a better utilisation of human resources. Economic expansion today depends to a very large extent on accumulating knowledge and skill and on the popular support for economic development policies.

This brings us to the important problem of vocational guidance and training and, in some countries, the equally important problem of vocational re-adjustment. It is good that the I.L.O. should devote an important part of its resources to technical aid for the training of skilled manpower at all levels. However, it is equally important that the trade union movement should be more closely associated in this new activity. The workers' organisations consider that the tripartite principle should be applied in this field, for trade unionists believe they have precise ideas on methods of vocational training and the administration of the institutions set up under the auspices or with the aid of the I.L.O.

I should remind you in this connection that several Industrial Committees have adopted resolutions on this point which, unfortunately, have not yet been put into effect. They should be reviewed and duly implemented.

Speaking of the work of the Industrial Committees, I should also like to recall that the international occupational organisations very much hope that the role of these Committees will not be diminished in the future, and that they will not be weakened, for instance by a large transfer of their competence to groups of experts. This does not mean that we are against the establishment of groups of experts or Working Parties, but one should remember that the best results are achieved in the social field by direct negotiations between representatives of employers' and workers' organisations. It is these representatives who should determine the role of the experts who will define certain means of applying the employer-worker agreements.

As for popular support for economic development, in our opinion this can be obtained only by the direct participation of representative organisations such as trade unions. Here also the I.L.O. could play an important part. Technological development and concentration of economic power in the hands of States or big corporations, which are often international, raises the problem of the participation of the workers in economic decisions at all levels. This participation at the level of the factory or of the industry at the national and at the international level is becoming necessary. Democracy cannot be restricted to the political field. The I.L.O. gives an example in its own tripartite structure of active participation by the workers and employers in the formulation of rules and directives of a social character. For the future it would be desirable if other international agencies followed this example of direct participation by social groups. In our opinion the participation of employers and workers in the determination of economic policy and in programming cannot be limited to the national level. It is in the workplace that the lot of the workers is most of all affected by economic decisions and production planning. The worker passes the greatest part of his life at the workplace. It is therefore natural that he should have a word to say at that level, and it is only by consultation and direct participation of the workers in forms which may vary from one country to another that effective direction of industrial and economic activity will be possible in the future. We think also that the I.L.O. should pay more attention to the new forms of economic organisation, and particularly to the internationalisation of production and its financing by big international companies which often decide the lot and the material condition of the workers across national frontiers, and which have budgets often exceeding at the international level the budgets of the small and medium-sized countries.

However, to ensure that the workers actually can and do share in the economic and industrial programming to which I have referred, the legal and contractual protection of workers in their jobs must be developed. Workers attach particular importance to the protection of their shop stewards against the threat of arbitrary dismissal. It is only natural that workers' representatives cling to the idea of job security and the protection of their rights in carrying out their functions as representatives of their occupational organisations. It is only on the basis of this material and moral security that you can develop the dignity of labour, which is the aspiration of all workers.

With reference to the Conditions of Work and Life Department, let us say straight away that we give its activity a very high priority, and we hope this activity will increase even further. We have already indicated that the I.L.O., in our opinion, should be the best source of information on the subject of living and working conditions. The I.L.O. should have the most complete information at the world-wide and national levels, as well as at the level of the various branches of occupation. We want complete information and precise descriptions concerning the methods of generation, employment, unemployment, real wages, consumers' prices, labour conflicts, the evolution of productivity, and so on. The I.L.O. could also complete its action in the field of safety and health through the work of preparing and adopting codes and manuals for the various sectors of economic activity and for social security. The Director-General's Report refers to these problems, and we hope that the excellent intentions which are stated there will not remain for too long at the stage of mere projects, but that they will become a living reality which will contribute to a great extent to I.L.O.'s prestige throughout the world of labour.

In conclusion, may I stress once again the importance which the trade union movement attaches to the action of the Industrial Committees and to the results of their work. A resolution on this subject was submitted by Mr. Abid Ali, Mr. Mör and Mr. Faupl. Moreover, last November the General Conference of International Trade Secretariats adopted a resolution on the Industrial Committees. This resolution was communicated to the I.L.O., to the Committee on Industrial Committees of the Governing Body, and to the Working Party on the Programme and Structure of the Organisation, and sets forth very clearly the goals of the International Trade Secretariats. These organisations consider that the Industrial Committees are one of the most appropriate tools by which the I.L.O. may effectively and efficiently carry out its programme. They attach very great importance to the continuity in action of the Industrial Committees, which serve the interests of both the industrialised countries and the developing countries. The Industrial Committees were set up in the post-war period to become the forum of consultation and industrial negotiations at the international level. In this connection our hopes have been realised to a large extent. However, the Industrial Committees should direct their attention to this very delicate and difficult task if they want to take into account the present economic evolution which, according to estimates we have heard from employers' circles, will be such that in about ten years' time some 600 or 700 large companies will dominate three-quarters of the world's industrial production. I should like to quote a relevant passage of the resolution adopted by the General Conference of International Trade Secretariats regarding the Industrial Committees. It reads as follows: "The Conference of International Trade Secretariats is convinced of the need of maintaining and broadening the scope of the industrial activities of the I.L.O., in particular: by holding more frequent meetings of Industrial Committees and similar bodies of the I.L.O., including those for industries and public services which have not as yet been covered, and also by following closely and analysing systematically the evolution of the situation in these industries in the inter-session periods and by publishing the results of such studies; by mobilising the traditional means of action of the I.L.O. in the form of investigation, research, evaluation, publicity and recommendations, through the study of problems of immediate and general interest to all workers as, for example, the composition of workers' income, the modalities of wage claims, comparison of the evolution of direct and indirect wages in the various countries and in different industries, estimation of real wages, operation of the various systems of labour relations, analysis of social conflicts and the examination of the working and living conditions of the workers."

The resolution goes on: "The resources of the I.L.O. must be used so as to promote the aspirations of industrial democracy which, in different forms and to different extents, are common to workers of all countries and to all types of society, which may be defined as follows: (a) an effective participation of the workers in decisions concerning the economic and social life of their countries and their regions; (b) the development of all forms of co-determination and the sharing of all workers in the management of industry compatible with the conditions which prevail in the various States Members of the International Labour Organisation."

Those are the desires and hopes of the International Trade Secretariats in connection with the future operation of the Industrial Committees, which we consider of very great importance.

(The Conference adjourned at 11.30 a.m.)
RATIFICATION OF CONVENTIONS BY SWEDEN

The PRESIDENT—I have pleasure in informing the Conference that the Director-General of the International Labour Office has registered, on 11 June 1965, the ratification by Sweden of the Hygiene (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1964, and of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964.

FIRST REPORT
OF THE CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE:
SUBMISSION AND NOTING

The PRESIDENT—The first item on our agenda for this morning is the first report of the Credentials Committee. I call on Mr. Zanetti, Chairman of the Credentials Committee, to present the report.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ZANETTI (Government adviser, Switzerland; Chairman of the Credentials Committee) —I have the honour to submit to the Conference the first report of the Credentials Committee, the text of which has been circulated to delegates. The report contains a section on the composition of the Conference as at 7 June 1965, a section on the quorum, and one dealing with incomplete delegations. The Conference is asked to take note of the report.

The PRESIDENT—This report was also unanimously adopted by the Credentials Committee, and the Conference is therefore merely required to take note of it.

(The report is noted.)

SECOND REPORT
OF THE CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE:
SUBMISSION AND NOTING

The PRESIDENT—The first report of the Credentials Committee was adopted unanimously by the Committee, and the Conference is therefore merely required to take note of it.

(The report is noted.)

THIRD REPORT
OF THE CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE:
SUBMISSION AND NOTING

The PRESIDENT—The next item on our agenda is the third report of the Credentials Committee. I call on Mr. Zanetti, Chairman of the Credentials Committee, to present the report.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ZANETTI (Government adviser, Switzerland; Chairman of the Credentials Committee) —I now have the honour to submit the second report of the Credentials Committee, which has been circulated to delegates. This contains decisions of the Committee regarding protests against the nomination of the Chinese delegation and of the Workers' delegate of Israel. There is also a section regarding a communication received concerning the nomination of the Workers' delegate of France. These decisions were taken unanimously, and the Conference is therefore merely required to take note of the report.

The PRESIDENT—This report was adopted unanimously by the Credentials Committee, and the Conference is therefore merely required to take note of it.

(The report is noted.)

1 See Appendix II, p. 491.
2 See Appendix II, p. 493.
FOURTH REPORT OF THE CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE 1: SUBMISSION AND NOTING

The PRESIDENT—The next item on our agenda is the fourth report of the Credentials Committee. I call on Mr. Zanetti, Chairman of the Committee, to present the report.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ZANETTI (Government adviser, Switzerland; Chairman of the Credentials Committee)—I now submit the fourth report of the Credentials Committee, which has been circulated to delegates. This relates to the representation of the Dominican Republic. The report was drawn up unanimously by the Committee and consequently calls for no action.

The PRESIDENT—The report was unanimously adopted by the Credentials Committee and, as the Committee itself indicates, does not call for any further action.

(The report is noted.)

FIFTH REPORT OF THE CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE 2: SUBMISSION AND NOTING

The PRESIDENT—We now come to the fifth report of the Credentials Committee. I now call upon Mr. Zanetti, Chairman of the Credentials Committee, to submit the report.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ZANETTI (Government adviser, Switzerland; Chairman of the Credentials Committee)—I now submit the fifth report of the Credentials Committee, the text of which has been circulated to delegates. This contains a decision of the Committee regarding objections to the nomination of the Workers’ delegate of Somalia. There is also a section on a communication received regarding the appointment of the Workers’ delegate of Panama. These decisions were taken unanimously by the Committee, and therefore I would ask the Conference merely to take note of the report.

The PRESIDENT—This report also was adopted unanimously by the Credentials Committee, and the Conference is merely required to take note of it.

(The report is noted.)

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now resume the discussion of the Director-General’s Report.

Interpretation from French: Mr. DUMI-TRESCU (Government delegate, Rumania)—In the name of the Rumanian delegation, may I express to the representative of Pakistan, Mr. Raza, most sincere congratulations on his election to the presidency of the 49th Session of the General Conference of the I.L.O. The Rumanian delegation would also like to extend its warmest congratulations and best wishes for a satisfactory start in the activities of our Organisation to the representatives of Malawi, Malta, Zambia and Yemen.

If I may, I should like at this time to say a few words to you about the basic problems appearing on the agenda of this session of the Conference with respect to the adaptation of the programme and structure of the Organisation—and of course its activities—to the changes which have taken place in the world. The Report of the Director-General reflects the concern felt about the achievement of this objective, with regard to which, it may be recalled, a general consensus appeared to have been reached at the 47th Session of the Conference. Some of the solutions presented in the Report and in the conclusions of the Working Party show that no efforts have been spared to work out, on the basis of the suggestions and reservations expressed by member States, those regarded as worthy of being taken into consideration. This is encouraging, even though there are still a great many constructive proposals and critical comments which it would be particularly useful to examine.

Some of them relate to the structure and activities of the I.L.O. and fall exclusively within the I.L.O.’s competence. Others arise out of the responsibilities shared among all the organisations belonging to the United Nations family.

The international organisations in the United Nations system obviously have characteristics peculiar to their specific fields of activity, but what is common to all of them is their duty to contribute to the strengthening of peace through the promotion of multilateral cooperation based on a strict respect for the independence and sovereignty of each State, and on the inviolable right of the peoples to decide their own destiny. These are basic principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

This is why we consider that the International Labour Organisation, in turn, has the duty of opposing resolutely any violation of these principles, wherever it may occur. It would be an intolerable if the I.L.O. considered itself exempt from this duty. It is not through isolation in the face of the major problems of international life that the I.L.O. will deserve and enjoy the prestige which it has gained thanks to its activity in the great family of the United Nations as well as in the various member States.

At the present Conference, you, Mr. President, in your opening address, just as much as other speakers, quite rightly expressed your concern at the existence of centres of fear and tension in various regions of the world which constitute sources of danger and threats to peace. At present there are flagrant violations of the generally recognised principles of international law.

The Rumanian delegation is firmly convinced that the interests of peace and international security demand that a stop be put straight away to the aggressive action directed against the people of Viet-Nam, as well as to the interference in the internal affairs of the Dominican Republic and in other regions of the world.

1 See Appendix II, p. 494.
2 See Appendix II, p. 495.
The PRESIDENT—I would request the speaker to bear in mind the attitude which I have adopted. I have suggested that discussions about theatres of war should be omitted in this Conference, because we have our own agenda to which we should confine ourselves. That is why I have requested that we concentrate on matters coming within our competence.

Interpretation from French: Mr. DUMITRESCU—Such action represents serious violations of the sacred right of every people—whether of large or small nations—to decide their own destiny in the light of their own aspirations, and our Conference cannot remain unmoved in the face of it. The maintenance of colonial domination in various parts of the world, and particularly in Africa, and the practice of racial discrimination, seriously affect the activities of our Organisation. The unanimous adoption at the 48th Session of a Declaration condemning apartheid requires our Organisation to concentrate on the abolition of all the consequences of colonialism and racial discrimination.

The Report of the Director-General contains certain interesting ideas and proposals with regard to determining for the future the priorities to be given to the tasks of our Organisation. I refer to those proposals concerning human resources and economic development, living and working conditions and the development of social institutions, as well as to the proposals which affect the adoption of new international instruments. It should be stressed that this is the first time that we have taken up seriously major problems which are of particular interest to the developing countries, such as agrarian reform and co-operatives.

Our delegation also appreciates the way in which the Report handles questions relating to the use of human resources. Without going into detail on the problems of training supervisory staff at the national level, it is obvious that no country can develop rapidly a harmonious and well-balanced economy. This has been proved by the experience of all countries, including my own.

At present Rumania is a country in full development where industry is going through a process of constant improvement and adaptation to the requirements of contemporary technical progress, and agriculture is making more and more use of its great reserves. Therefore, every year we see an improvement in the welfare of the people. The volume of industrial production this year is 9.5 times more than it was in 1938. During the last six years the annual rate of growth of industry was 14.4 per cent. Recently published projections concerning the problem of the universality of the I.L.O., particularly from the point of view of the tripartite system of representation which is peculiar to this Organisation.

As far as concerns the achievement of programmes and objectives common to the various sectors of economic, social and cultural development, it is only natural that the I.L.O. should extend considerably its co-operation with the other specialised agencies of the United Nations, as, moreover, is envisaged in the Director-General's Report.

We reaffirm our conviction that the I.L.O. will not be in a position to mobilise all the resources available to it for the achievement of its fundamental objectives unless it proceeds resolutely to the elimination of the obstacles caused by its present structure.

Therefore we support the opinion expressed by you, Mr. President, and other speakers who have preceded me at this rostrum, that in the near future all the peoples of the world should be represented in our Organisation.

Many statements have been made here concerning the problem of the universality of the I.L.O., particularly from the point of view of the tripartite system of representation which is peculiar to this Organisation.

As we have already pointed out, one cannot speak of the existence of true universality so long as we fail to have represented in our Organisation hundreds of millions of workers and their trade unions. I am thinking of the People's Republic of China, the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, the Democratic Republic of Korea and the German Democratic Republic, countries which are kept artificially outside our Organisation.

It is also time to put an end to the anachronistic practices followed in respect of the delegates who are heads of undertakings, and towards workers, in the socialist countries, who are prevented from exercising their full rights of participation in the I.L.O.'s activities.

Along the same lines, our delegation would like to state once again that it is essential to apply very strictly, without exception, the principle of equitable geographical representation in all the I.L.O. bodies to which members can be elected, as well as in the recruitment of staff for the International Labour Office.

We should also like to express our conviction that, through the growth of the role of the General Conference as the supreme forum of the Organisation, the prestige and the efficiency of the I.L.O. will be increased.

The Director-General’s Report refers in detail to the measures adopted for the decentralisation of the services of the I.L.O. with a view to increasing efficiency by better co-ordination of the I.L.O.’s work and by avoiding duplication in the activities of its various departments. Although these measures represent a step forward compared with the situation existing at present, they do not eliminate, in our opinion, the main deficiencies of the Organisation, to which reference has been made several times at this Conference.

During this session some draft resolutions have been submitted which reflect our preoccupations. I am thinking of the draft resolutions submitted by Poland, the Ukraine, Yugoslavia, the United Arab Republic and other countries. Adoption of them, in our opinion, would represent an important step forward in the growth of efficiency of the I.L.O.

In conclusion, I should like to express the desire of the Rumanian delegation to see the work of this Conference truly contribute to the finding of solutions and methods which may make it possible for the Organisation to make an even more substantial contribution to the strengthening of international co-operation.

Interpretation from French: Mr. CAMARA
(Government delegate, Guinea)—In the name of my delegation and of the Government of Guinea, I am glad to pay some compliments and to address some good wishes; first, our good wishes go to all the delegates and to the working people they represent, particularly those of the brave territories of Zambia, Malawi, Yemen, Gambia and Malta, which have obtained their independence and whose first titular delegations we welcome with friendship and encouragement.

We congratulate also the newly elected President and other Officers. They have deserved this honour by reason of their personal qualities and their high technical qualifications to direct and inspire the work of the session. We are convinced that the choice of our President, which honours the individual and his country, will prove entirely justified.

We learned a few days ago with great sorrow of the catastrophe at Kakanj in Bosnia. The working people of Yugoslavia have thus once more been stricken by the loss of a hundred miners. This is a sad repetition of history for those who died, leaving hundreds of orphans, were themselves the sons or grandsons of the terrible fire that exploded in the same mine in 1934, which cost the lives of an even greater number of miners.

I would ask your permission, Mr. President, to suggest to the Conference that it may wish to lay the foundation for co-operation between the Yugoslav people and the bereaved families.

(The Conference observes a minute’s silence.)

Interpretation from French: Mr. CAMARA
Mr. David Morse has done a very fine job in submitting to us a Report so full of information and so well-documented and the scientific quality of which is fresh evidence of the indefatigable constructive work of the Director-General.

But how can one be completely happy and still have a quiet conscience? How can one speak of the maintenance and defence of peace, the safeguarding of our peoples’ liberties, the social policy of our countries, the planning of manpower or vocational training or even automation in the present world context? Indeed, can we even think of economic development, of social welfare, when, white or black, our brothers are dying in Angola, Mozambique, Bissau Guinea, in the Spanish Sahara, in the island of Fernando Po, the island of Annobon and elsewhere, the Trust Territory of South-West Africa, in Southern Rhodesia—countries which we hope will attain national independence in the best possible conditions and as soon as possible?

Our feelings and reason continue to be revolted by inadmissible genocide in martyred Angola and by the growing despair in the Union of South Africa. These matters directly concern the I.L.O.

One-third of the 11 million Africans have already lost the right to choose their place of residence. By the mere decision of some civil servants over 100,000 persons have been forced to leave their homes and settle in distant regions where there is no work. Five hundred thousand inhabitants are about to be deported and when the Bantustans have been established over 5 million people will have been uprooted. Nothing like this has been seen since Hitler—the implementation of a co-ordinated programme for the forcible transfer of whole populations with the sole aim of serving the interests of an oligarchy.

My delegation addresses a solemn and urgent appeal to the governments which on flimsy pretexts still provide arms for the present de facto authorities in Johannesburg and continue to invest in South Africa for their own greedy purposes and those of an unworthy minority. My delegation is prepared unreservedly, in the name of our Government, to co-operate in the carrying out of any solution, any effective means, for the final elimination from our Conference of representatives of South Africa, Portugal or other similar countries.

The importance of the Director-General’s Report cannot be denied. In order to grasp its full meaning one must think of the historical development and meaning of the right to work, which has been influenced to a large extent by the rules of international competition; one must take into consideration the continuity of the stages through which this right has passed in its advance to maturity.

My delegation thinks—as do the other African delegations and those of all developing countries—that a new stage started for the I.L.O. with the entry, during the past ten years, of some 30 new African countries and almost as many newly independent countries of Asia and other continents. Our task is no longer only to eliminate international competition between capitalist countries or merely to lay the foundation for co-operation between socialist and capitalist countries in the I.L.O.; we have to deal with the necessity for profound and rapid change in all the structures of the I.L.O. in order to respect the most elementary democratic need to permit the new countries to have full and equal rights, by suppressing in all bodies, including the Governing Body and the Secretariat, the many legal and material forms of discrimination, which have become intolerable.

The universality for which we call, and which will benefit the development of the I.L.O., must induce the Organisation to promote the establishment of regional organs which can co-operate more effectively in each geographical area with the most representative political and trade union organisations. As far as Africa is concerned, that means the Organisation of African Unity (O.A.U.)—the political organisation bringing together all the independent countries of the continent—and the All-African Trade Union Federation (A.A.T.U.F.), which is independent and is not affiliated to any international organisation and is therefore entitled to consultative status with the I.L.O.

We welcome the objectives of the Organisation as regards human resources, which envisage the very necessary association of human and economic potential.

Delegates are aware of the close and unbreakable links between social and economic questions. The I.L.O. cannot neglect the economic consequences of social reforms or remain indifferent to the social repercussions of economic programmes. Economic organisation means also political organisation, for the development of production affects employment, unemployment and recession.

Therefore there is certainly mutual interdependence of political, economic and social questions, and all affect the position of each social class. That is why we must all agree and recognise that the competence of the I.L.O. extends to everything which concerns the improvement of the lot of the workers. Our international Organisation, as its Constitution envisages, must defend world peace by all possible means but it is obvious that there can be no real peace without social justice, without happiness for the peoples and justice for man. As long as there is anywhere poverty and privation due to domination and arbitrary action, peace and harmony will always be threatened.

My delegation therefore expresses its active support for the resolutions put forward by the United Arab Republic condemning Portugal because of its forced labour policy in African territories. For the same reasons, the delegation of Guinea will contribute as much as it can to the discussion of the resolution concerning the protection of the rights of the Spanish workers put forward by the Yugoslav Workers' delegation.

The Government of the Republic of Guinea has, for the past seven years, given many proofs of its political and international vitality, which have enabled it to make a worthy contribution to the United Nations and the specialised agencies, such as the I.L.O.

But our Government quickly realised that, after centuries of darkness and nearly three-quarters of a century of colonisation, the country and people of Guinea required happiness, progress, social justice, and necessary and urgent readjustment in order to create in all social classes the justice and equality which all the African peoples desire because they have been deprived of them for so long.

The Constitution of our Republic is eloquent on these matters. It speaks of the "fundamental rights and duties of the citizens"; it deals with the liberties of the people, racial, religious and ethical discrimination, freedom to work and trade union rights, in particular in paragraphs 1 and 2 of article 44. Since independence, the I.L.O. has, in less than seven years, has done more for the workers than was done during 60 years of colonisation. National trade union officers take part in formulating and carrying out social legislation, and indeed prepare the projects themselves. This holds good for the Labour Code of Guinea issued in 1960. I should like to mention some of its chapters on trade unions, work contracts, wages, conditions of work, health, safety, medical service, protection of workers and machinery in order to give you some idea of the scope of this fundamental instrument, issued only two years after our independence and five years before this present session.

The Government of Guinea has financed the construction of a labour exchange without equal in Africa and better equipped than some of our ministries. It has all the material equipment and special services required to act as a clearing house between the various branches of the economy and also to promote relations with progressive trade unions all over the world.

In Guinea trade union officers have been being trained for the last few years. Apart from the labour exchange at Conakry, the National Confederation of Workers of Guinea opened, in 1960, an African Trade Union University, which has now been moved to the capital of our country. Six hundred trainees have attended this Institute and at least 300 of them have come from other African countries.

Furthermore the Social Security Act gives workers, their families, pregnant women, children, persons injured in accidents and those with occupational diseases, other invalids, older workers, and survivors, substantial allowances at the expense of the employer alone, and also medical and social care of all kinds through the National Social Security Fund.

The State has also sought to improve the Guinean civil service and particularly the lot of the majority class, the peasants, who constitute 85 per cent. or 90 per cent. of the population, in order to enable them to face their great national responsibilities.

As regards women and young persons, the Government is, of course, deeply concerned with the lot of those who were the base and formed the vanguard of the revolutionary combat, and who are now at the forefront of national construction.

The Government's comprehension for trade unionism is easy to explain. Trade union members were the indispensable instrument of progress, development and freedom in Africa, and did contribute as much as they can to the success of democratisation and peace, towards which the active forces of Africa and the world tend.

It is in this way, of course, that the African trade union movement stands out, for it is not only committed but actively participating and is a decisive force in our revolution, which is extending to the limits of the continent. Our labour world is also an active part of our racial universe, entirely mobilised for the construction of a new phase of African history.

Facing a labour movement entirely mobilised behind the policy of the nation, the employers are better able to appreciate the sense, nature and quality of the development in which they are themselves also necessarily engaged. The concerted action of political forces and the working population leaves little scope for particular vested interests. Voluntarily or not, the employers now, in the context of the national interest, make, with conviction, a cooperative contribution to the over-all development and progress of our people.

The modification of structures, means, methods and objectives requires constant adjustment and reconversion and the employers must necessarily associate themselves with such a trend.

As already stated by our President Sékou Touré: "The economic revolution will be achieved thanks to the mobilisation of all the forces of the country and their deliberate action. This action will be due to the professional conscience, political conscience, and national conscience of the whole working population. This population must understand that, at the worksite, in the offices, with the hammer, or the pen, or the book, or the syringe, the world of labour, which creates and produces, is in the service of the nation, in the service of a cause which is aimed at the rehabilitation of Africa and at meeting the legitimate hopes of all the populations of Africa who all wish to build an African fatherland in independence, dignity, honour and progress."

To return to some of our concerns regarding the structure and activity of the Organisation, I should like rapidly to recall that the Conventions voted by the Conference do not receive many ratifications. Moreover, some of these ratifications are conditional, while others are registered by States which have no interest whatsoever in the application of the particular Convention. Sometimes the ratifying State already has more advanced legislation. Other Conventions are of pure principle, without any practical effect. This is true, a fortiori, of the Recommendations.

The problem of the level of international standards remains to be solved. Should it be in line with national legislation? Or should it be a minimum? Should it aim at uniformity or provide for various stages of advancement? The unification of labour law is far from being achieved; it will no doubt never be achieved, so great is the disparity in the economic development of the nations and their conception of the welfare of man and of peoples.

The Organisation must develop new forms of activity in regard to assistance on the spot and technical aid in the training of national skilled labour, as well as in regard to the dispatch of advisory missions on unemployment, migration, manpower, industrial relations, labour inspection, industrial health and the establishment of vocational training centres.

It must be noted with regret that the Organisation is concentrating too exclusively on the industrial countries of Europe whereas regional decentralisation would benefit all geographical areas and all States Members of the I.L.O.

We must state with the same disquiet that one does not know what to think of the reports submitted each year by I.L.O. organs evaluating the programmes and projects of the Organisation. It seems to be a fact that the discussions and decisions of the Conference, the supreme organ of the I.L.O., do not lead to practical results. The preoccupations stated in the Reports of the Director-General, the analyses made by delegations are forgotten as soon as the session is over, although concrete, interesting proposals may have been made. The composition of the Governing Body is questionable, with the disproportionate privileges that are granted to some States in violation of genuine democracy, and with the total disregard for the geographical realities of the world today that exists in it. The Governing Body, therefore, cannot have powers symbolising genuine delegation of the powers of the Conference between sessions.

However, my delegation is convinced of the efficiency of the I.L.O., and the need for it to continue its task. But it must adjust its structures, it must readjust daily to the requirements of a constantly changing world.

In conclusion, I hope that these two imperatives will always be the essential preoccupation of all the delegations so as to promote the achievements awaited by the those who suffer, die and hope.

Mr. Issa (Minister of Health and Labour, Somalia)—It gives me great pleasure to have this opportunity of addressing this session of the International Labour Conference.

On behalf of my delegation and on my own behalf, I offer to you, Mr. President, our warmest congratulations on your election. We have no doubt that under your able direction and guidance this session of the Conference will be a complete success.

My delegation wishes to welcome the Republic of Yemen as a new member of our Organisation. The Somali delegation also welcomes the admission to the International Labour Organisation of the Republic of Malawi, Malta and Zambia and congratulates them on achieving their independence.

The Somali Republic earnestly hopes that the remaining territories under colonial rule in Africa and elsewhere will soon achieve their independence and take their seats in the United Nations and the specialised agencies as free and independent nations. In particular, we hope that the French Government will be wise enough to grant independence as quickly as possible to the territory of French Somaliland which, I may say, is the only remaining French colony in the whole continent of Africa.

Many African ministers who preceded me on this rostrum have raised again this year the question of apartheid and racial discrimination still pursued by the Nazi-like régime in South Africa, under the leadership of racist and fanatic elements. The African ministers also accused the Portuguese authorities who continue practising openly and widely the system of forced labour in the African territories under their colonial rule, namely: Angola, Mozambique and Guinea. This brutal and inhuman system practically represents a form of semi-slavery aimed exclusively at the exploitation of the African peoples inhabiting their own homeland.

My Government strongly supports the proposals made by some African ministers that both South Africa and Portugal be expelled immediately from the International Labour Organisation. It is indeed disgraceful that racist fanatics in the Union of South Africa firmly committed to enforce their diabolic doctrine of "absolute white supremacy" and the leaders of the fascist régime in Portugal still continue to hold Members of the United Nations, the I.L.O. and other specialised agencies.

A number of African ministers also raised the critical situation in Southern Rhodesia, where a minority of European extremists are seeking to perpetuate their colonial rule over that unhappy African territory. African leaders throughout the continent are today faced with the threat from these extremists of what they call the "Unilateral Declaration of Independence", or "U.D.I.". This means, in reality, the perpetuation of colonial domination over and the subjugation of 4.5 millions of Africans in Southern Rhodesia.

Without the consent and connivance of the United Kingdom Government these racist elements cannot succeed in realising their dreams of establishing another "South Africa" in the heart of the continent. The Somali delegation strongly recommends that the present Labour Government in the United Kingdom be urged not to consent to a plan aimed at enslaving permanently the entire African population in Southern Rhodesia. The British Government should be reminded that the future destinies and the hopes of these Africans lie in their own hands.

Since the Labour Party is a Socialist movement which claims to represent the interests of the workers, I think it would be most appropriate if the representatives of the trade unions gathered in this hall were to address an urgent telegram to the Labour Party and to the British Government appealing to them to prevent the implementation of such an evil plan. The leaders of the British Trades Union Congress, a labour movement representing well over 8.5 million workers throughout Britain, can and must contribute positively to prevent Southern Rhodesia being turned into another "South Africa".

While on this subject, I wish to recall the grave injustices perpetrated by a previous Labour régime against the indigenous inhabitants of that same area in Central Africa. I am referring to the post-war Labour Government of Lord Attlee, which was responsible for imposing on the African populations of Southern Rhodesia, the Republic of Malawi and Zambia, the now dissolved Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland. It took over a decade of struggle and sufferings before the people of the African States of Malawi and Zambia finally succeeded in overthrowing a federation controlled by a group of European extremists. Let us hope that the present Labour Government in the United Kingdom will not repeat the same serious error in Southern Rhodesia.

With regard to the technical aspect of this Conference, I wish to say that we are very much alive to the importance of labour problems in Somalia. There is a full-fledged Department of Labour and our Labour Code is one of the advanced and liberal pieces of labour legislations. We are trying to improve it further to suit the changed conditions following our independence. There is complete freedom of association for trade unions and we have confederations of labour affiliated to the various international labour movements. Our Labour Code provides also for the freedom of organised strikes by workers. There is a set procedure for the settlement of labour disputes and contractual obligations. Hours of work and working conditions are well regulated. The Code provides for a Central Labour Commission which would be tripartite in its composition and would deal with all labour policy matters. There is a well-established system of registration of unemployed persons and their placement in jobs through the offices of the district labour inspectors.

We have a social security system which provides for employment-injury insurance for workers. Besides the cash payments, this insurance scheme provides also for medical treatment of the injured.

We have read with great interest the Report of the Director-General and the memorandum on the activities of the International Labour Organisation during 1964. We have noted with satisfaction the reorganisation of the internal structure of the I.L.O., which will enable it to handle more efficiently the important tasks assigned to it. We have every hope that, in staffing this structure, attempts will not be spared to ensure that nationals of developing countries in Africa and elsewhere are given due opportunities to participate and contribute their mite to the working of the Office. The problems of the developing countries can only be well appreciated and appropriate measures of assistance and beget executed when nationals from such countries are given the opportunity of associating themselves with the work of the reorganised structure of the I.L.O.

We agree that in the changed context of economic development the three major I.L.O. programme areas should be: (1) human resources development; (2) labour relations, trade union development and the growth of sound social institutions; and (3) conditions of life and work.

Of these three we attach more importance to human resources development, as, without this, economic and social development is either not possible or cannot be sustained, particularly in countries which are just making a start and where the shortage of professional and technical persons is the greatest bottleneck in achieving speedy development.

We in Somalia are fully aware of the importance of manpower assessment and planning. Our first Five-Year Plan attached vital importance to a manpower survey of the existing supplies of technical personnel, the existing shortages and surpluses and the future requirements of the various categories of manpower. We, therefore, are active in the I.L.O. with the services of an expert to undertake the survey and advise us on manpower planning measures. Considerable work has been done by this expert and we will profit immensely by his conclusions and recommendations. Realising that planning and manpower assessment are to be considered as an integral part of general planning for our country's economic and social development, we hope that the I.L.O. will continue assisting us in this respect.

For our part, we have established a Manpower Section in the Planning Directorate to maintain constant liaison with the planning authorities so that the manpower aspect is given full consideration in evolving policy measures. An Employment Section has also been set up in the Labour Department to collect and compile data and analyse the manpower information programme. We are thus trying to ensure that our plans should make the necessary allowances for investment in human resources policies and that programmes are geared to the need for speeding up economic and social development.

In view of the vital importance of human resources planning, we fully support the proposal of the Director-General that the I.L.O. should undertake extensive research into questions of employment promotion, with a view to establishing a body of practical techniques of employment planning. The fruits of this research should be made available to developing countries in Africa and elsewhere, which are conscious of manpower planning and are committed to accelerated economic and social development.

But while human resources planning is essential, the basic question in developing countries is the improvement of the knowledge and skill of the human resources. Like many developing countries, the most crucial problem in Somalia for the time being is the acute shortage of skilled manpower. The training of existing manpower and the provision of educational and training facilities for producing the required type of persons in future are some of our most urgent needs. We, as perhaps many newly independent countries, are in a stringent financial situation; we are not, therefore, in a position to provide on our own the training and educational facilities to the extent required. It is in this sphere that the most useful assistance to the developing countries can be given by the I.L.O.

Despite our efforts to establish a training centre to train the craftsmen we urgently need, we have not yet been able to meet the various requirements for starting such an institution. We should be grateful for any assistance in this respect by the I.L.O. Not only in our case but, I venture to say, in the case of all developing countries is the improvement of the knowledge and skill of the human resources. Like many countries is the improvement of the knowledge and skill of the human resources.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to thank you again for giving me the opportunity of addressing this session of the International Labour Conference. I wish the Conference every success in its deliberations.

Mr. JOMADAR (Minister of Labour, Observer, Mauritius)—As leader of the first Mauritius delegation to attend an International Labour Conference it is my proud privilege to congratulate the President on his election to this august assembly. Although the delegation is here with Observer status, it is tripartite in its composition and all its members are fully alive to the contributions which the I.L.O. has been and is making towards ensuring peace, economic development and social progress in all parts of the world irrespective of the size and importance of the countries. We cherish the hope that in the very near future Mauritius will attain independence and its representatives will be able to attend future conferences with full Member status.

Before proceeding further I should like to avail myself of this opportunity to express the gratitude of my Government to the Governing Body of the I.L.O. for the invitation extended to my country which has enabled our delegation to be present here today and also has provided me with the opportunity of addressing delegates from this imposing rostrum.

With few exceptions, little is known of my country in the international field because of its size and remoteness from the centre of activities. To some it might have come to notice as the land of the dodo—a bird species now extinct in the world; to others interested in stamp collecting through the high value and importance attached to one of its early stamps; in stamp collecting through the high value and importance attached to one of its early stamps; but Mauritius has always been and remains a sugar-producing country.

I believe it would serve some purpose if I were to give briefly some background information. Mauritius is a small island in the Indian Ocean some 500 miles east of Madagascar. It has an area of about 720 square miles with an heterogeneous population of over 730,000. Following the eradication of malaria in the immediate post-war period which accounted for a substantial reduction in infantile mortality, the birth rate, which is among the highest in the world today, has resulted in a problem of overpopulation for the island, accentuated by the smallness of its size and the limitations of its natural resources.

With a density of population which at the present time is over 1,000 to the square mile and is likely to increase in future years, Mauritius is confronted with what appear to be insurmountable problems in respect of unemployment, underemployment and other social evils which such phenomena bring in their train. I need not mention the consequent effects which these problems bear on economic growth and social progress.

The sugar industry dominates the economy of the country to the extent of over 95 per cent. It follows, that the prosperity of the country depends almost entirely on the vagaries of a one-crop economy, added to which are, unfortunately, the frequent visits of cyclones to the region. An agricultural economy in itself poses manifold problems for any country, but in the case of Mauritius these problems are enhanced by difficulties of diversification in the absence of mineral and other natural resources. None the less, my Government is doing all in its power to face the problems effectively and to endeavour to bring about all possible improvements in the status and standard of living of the people. There is not the least doubt that we need outside help in the least impasse.

My Government believes that the answers to the present problems of the country reside in family planning, emigration, diversification of the economy and intensification of our agricultural industry. With these aims in view, family planning measures have been initiated; legislation has been introduced to provide import duty concessions (and in some cases complete exemption) in respect of machinery, plant and raw materials for manufacturing processes, and there is also a system of tax relief for new industries. It is unfortunate that we have not so far been able to negotiate an emigration plan with any country to help check the increasing number of persons coming on to the employment market each year. At the moment this figure stands at 6,000 a year; for a country of the size of Mauritius this constitutes a major problem which calls for rapid action, but the situation appears more tense when one realises that the solution must come from outside. It is our fervent hope that one of the countries with manpower shortage will soon come to our rescue and that the I.L.O. will assist by providing facilities for vocational training if the situation so demands.

Speaking of the establishment of new industries in Mauritius, being now in Switzerland, I cannot refrain from mentioning a proposal to construct in Mauritius a factory where imported synthetic gems will be drilled and re-exported for subsequent use in this country in the assembly of watch bearings. The setting up of such an industry is not only of immense value to Mauritius, but reflects at the same time the esteem which the Swiss principals have for the reliability and skills of Mauritian artisans. It is my earnest hope that some other countries will be able to meet their requirements by using the trained and skilled labour in Mauritius.

In the field of social services, although there is still much ground to be covered to bring them into line with modern concepts and standards of industrially developed countries, Mauritius is not too far down the list of developing countries. There are on the island over 200 government and government-assisted primary schools providing free tuition to some 130,000 pupils between the ages of 5 and 12 years. Education is not compulsory, yet 98 per cent. of children of this age-group attend schools. Some 25,000 pupils are in secondary schools. Up to quite recently, almost exclusively of the grammar-school type, run on the English pattern and leading to university courses. A government secondary school with a technical and commercial syllabus was opened in January this year. Secondary education is not free, but the Government provides for the award of 120 scholarships annually on the results of a competitive examination at the end of the primary school career of the pupils which entitle the winners to free tuition, travelling and a money grant for secondary education. In addition the Government grants annually six scholarships (four boys and two girls) to those who top the lists of candidates at the Cambridge Higher School Certificate examination. The scholarships entitle the holders to a four- to six-years' university course in the United Kingdom or other approved countries at the expense of the Government. Each project is under study for the opening of a university college in Mauritius.

The health services are fairly adequé in spite of the fact that enlargement and renovation of existing hospitals and dispensaries are having to be effected, and the establishment of a new hospital is contemplated to meet the increasing requirements. There is also provision in the labour legislation for certain employers to maintain a hospital or dispensary on their estate. Except for a few private wards, treatment at hospitals is given free to all inpatients and out-patients.

In addition there are 11 infirmaries, 11 orphanages which are run by various religious denominations, and 25 maternity and child welfare centres.

Cash benefits are paid under the Public Assistance Ordinance to the needy and the poor. A system of non-contributory old-age pensions also exists for all persons on attaining the age of 60 years, which includes provision for the payment of the pension to blind persons after the age of 40.

A family allowance scheme is also in force, providing a monthly sum for a family with three children under 14 years of age, free of income tax.

There is also a system of compensation for industrial injuries and diseases which is governed by a Workmen's Compensation Ordinance, for the enforcement of which the Government is responsible. In general it provides for weekly payments in case of temporary incapacity and lump-sum payments in case of permanent disablement or death.

Turning now to the co-operative movement, which has special significance because it is one of the items on the agenda of this Conference, I feel proud to say that Mauritius celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its co-operative movement in 1963. In fact the foundations of the Mauritius co-operative movement were laid in 1913 with the enactment of the Co-operative Credit Societies Ordinance of 1913 and the registration of a few societies in the same year. In its early stage the movement was merely confined to credit societies for small planters in the sugar industry, but by 1945 the scope of co-operative activities was widened to include all types of co-operative societies.

The co-operative movement in Mauritius is supported by the following agencies: a government department together with a secondary society—the Mauritius Co-operative Union Ltd.—provides the necessary guidance; financial support is provided by the Mauritius Co-operative Central Bank Ltd. and the interests of agricultural and distributive societies are looked after by the Mauritius Co-operative Agricultural Federation Ltd. and the Mauritius Co-operative Wholesale Society Ltd. respectively.

The co-operative movement in Mauritius consists of four secondary societies with some 317 co-operative credit societies which include consumers' stores societies, societies for savings facilities, transport societies, housing societies, a printing society and a farming society. It is gratifying to mention that a group of large planters has recently formed a co-operative society to lease and manage a tea factory which was operated previously by the Government.

In the conditions of Mauritius, with its population problem and its extensive dependence on a one-crop system, the co-operative movement has a special contribution to make, which is to provide the necessary impetus to economic growth. In a plural society, such as that of Mauritius, the economic role of the co-operative movement becomes more important to the welfare of the country by fostering improved human relations. For at least these reasons, if not for others, we are grateful to the I.L.O. for having placed this particular item on the agenda of the present session of the Conference.

Although Mauritius is still a colonial territory of the United Kingdom, it has been possible to apply without modification 30 international labour Conventions and two others with certain modifications.

I have read with the utmost interest the Director-General's comprehensive Report which is illuminating in many respects. It is our belief that the reorientation of the activities of the I.L.O. by decentralisation and setting up of regional offices as well as the creation of new departments within the head office in Geneva will ensure that each developing country, whatever be its size, is given the necessary help and assistance to promote the economic growth and social progress consistent with the aspirations of the people.

In matters of labour relations, Mauritius is privileged that the Mauritian Employers' Federation, formed only a few years ago, is now able to speak on behalf of the great majority of employers. On the other side, an attempt to bring about a merger of all the workers' organisations failed in 1960, but a year ago the Mauritius Labour Congress was formed and the rate at which it has gathered strength would indicate, if progress continues at the same tempo, that it will become a fully representative organisation of workers. What is needed in respect of labour relations at this stage is the introduction of modern techniques for which the I.L.O.'s assistance is imperative.

The consumer price indices operating at present in Mauritius are the result of a family budget inquiry undertaken by an I.L.O. expert in 1961-62 and the advice tendered subsequently.

In the field of rural development the I.L.O. has provided the services of an expert for a period of three years (1962-65) for the promotion of small-scale industries. The Government of India has now sent us a manager and a few instructors to take the extension work of small-scale industries a stage further. We are very grateful to the Government of India for this kind assistance.

While admitting that international standard-setting has greatly contributed to social change and progress throughout the world, I would like to mention the changes effected by the I.L.O. with the aim of giving great importance to technical co-operation and assistance. I believe that it is in this field that the Organisation can provide more assistance to developing countries, in particular to those with restricted means.

May I close by expressing the wish that the present session of the Conference will help to bring about the desired changes in the policies of the I.L.O. for the benefit of one and all.

Mr. LIU (Government delegate, China)—As a delegate and as a fellow Asian, I wish to extend to you, Sir, my sincere congratulations on your election to the high office of the presidency of this Conference. Your many high qualities have impressed us all, and I wish you complete success in conducting the proceedings of this august body.

I intend to confine myself to certain brief but specific comments on our main theme at this Conference, which I believe is still the question of the reorientation of the I.L.O.'s major activities for the years ahead.

First of all, I should express the appreciation of my delegation to the Director-General and to the Working Party of the Governing Body for the successful, though none the less very lucidly presented and thought-provoking reports which they have laid before us as a basis for our discussion. I can see clearly reflected in these reports the sincere sense of dedication with which the Director-General and the Working Party approached the tasks entrusted to them. Nevertheless, I should say out of candour that my delegation—and I believe many others—would be much happier if those reports had gone somewhat further in their scope and presented to us some more definite proposals. The need of the developing countries for I.L.O. assistance in their development is of such an urgent nature that the I.L.O. should treat its own reorientation as a project of top priority and proceed at a faster pace. A piecemeal approach will not only retard the process of effective reorientation, but will also have the unsalutary effect of making it more difficult for the delegations to the General Conference to assess the several proposals against the whole picture and in their true perspective. I hope that at the next session of the Conference we shall have before us a complete set of concrete proposals so that the Conference may lend them its final authority and put them into effect at an early date.

Secondly, my delegation is in substantial agreement with the proposals of the Director-General regarding the scope and content of the three major areas of the I.L.O. programme, namely human resources development and utilisation in relation to economic development, labour and social institutions, and living and working methods of the I.L.O. regional organisations of the United Nations family. Perhaps some more thought could be given to decentralisation along the lines which have long been established. Take my own country as an example. In the opinion of my Government the field of I.L.O. activity which occupies a central position in the current endeavours of the developing countries to achieve balanced development, which holds the most appeal for these countries, and which should be assigned particular prominence in the substantive work of the I.L.O. for the next few years, is the field of human resources development and utilisation. Overall manpower planning, employment policy and the promotion of productive employment in all sectors, vocational training and retraining, and allied activities—all these, taken together, can best answer the crying needs of the developing countries at the present stage, and represent the area in which the I.L.O. can be of the greatest help with equally great prospects of timely success. Furthermore, these problems are not peculiar just to the new nations; they are common, though in different ways, to almost all countries, whatever the size of their population, the stage of their development or their socio-economic structure.

Take my own country as an example. In spite of the considerable progress made in our economic development during recent years, we now find ourselves faced with tremendous problems of a basic nature in this sphere, all full of social implications and consequences; and we are grappling with them as a matter of very high priority in our short- and long-term plans of national development.

Therefore we are convinced that it is only through the timely and accelerated implementation of a well-integrated and co-ordinated programme for human resources utilisation that the I.L.O. can most effectively answer the urgent needs of the times and best contribute to the objectives of the United Nations Development Decade.

Thirdly, with this reorientation of I.L.O. programmes, decentralisation along regional lines is but a logical and unavoidable conclusion. It is indeed hard to see how, under the régime of central control from Geneva, which has been the I.L.O. practice until now, the operational activity of the Organisation could take its deserved place and become truly effective.

In this connection my Government wishes to welcome the establishment of the Field Department in the International Labour Office as a move in the right direction. We also support, in principle, the idea of appointing regional and area representatives to co-ordinate operational activities in the field.

However, any scheme of decentralisation, in order really to work, cannot be achieved through half measures or partial fulfilment. It should go right to the appropriate point in the given circumstances. Therefore, I think we should study and take fully into account the experiences in decentralisation—including both the happy and the sad ones—of the other organisations of the United Nations family. Perhaps some more thought could be given to the desirability and feasibility of patterning decentralisation along the lines which have long been established in the World Health Organisation. In saying this, I have in mind, among other things, the role, status, terms of reference and working methods of the I.L.O. regional conferences and regional advisory committees, as well as those of the newly created posts of regional co-ordinators.

Fourthly, as regards the proposal of the Director-General to appoint a regional co-ordinator for Asia and the Middle East, my Fifthly, with regard to the standard-setting activities of the I.L.O., I am sure we are all very proud of the glorious record of achievements of our work in this field. If social justice is the soul of the I.L.O. and the tripartite system the body, then the 244 international labour Conventions and Recommendations should represent—at least up to now—the backbone of this great Organisation. However, I think that the I.L.O. can afford to have more than one backbone, and one of the backbones might perhaps be left relatively inactive for a while so as not to become over-exhausted. My delegation shares the view that our endeavours in the field of international labour legislation should now go through a period of relative pause, so that the time thus released might be devoted to taking an inventory of our books, keeping them up to date, pruning away the obsolete instruments and—most important of all—consolidating and improving the application of the remaining instruments. For one thing, the new member States of the I.L.O. will need time to catch up in the application of these instruments, and may also need some assistance from the I.L.O. in translating these documents into realities. For another, the more developed countries may also require a little more time to digest, process and put into practice some of the existing instruments. Therefore, my delegation warmly supports the suggestion to go slow on the formulation of new standards until, perhaps, about the time of the golden jubilee of the I.L.O., which is anyhow but a few short years away.

In our present deliberations we are in fact addressing ourselves to new thrusts towards vast new frontiers. We are all inspired by a new-born spirit of dynamic realism and a deep sense of humility and brotherhood. We are bracing ourselves to make the requisite adjustments—adjustments not only in the established patterns of our tangible efforts, but also in our old ways of thinking. This presents a great challenge to every one of us in the International Labour Organisation, and I wish to give an assurance that the Government and people of the Republic of China intend to join all of you in taking up this challenge and following it through with all courage and full force.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. KABAKAS (Workers' delegate, Hungary)—The Director-General's Report to this year's Conference contains a number of quite important and interesting thoughts. The World Federation of Trade Unions and its member organisations, and also the progressive workers' organisations and governments, have in years gone by expressed the desire for beneficial results of decentralisation. I hope that the Director-General will kindly take a second look at this proposal, while reappraising the responsibilities and authority to be vested in that office.

The demand that the structure and activities of the I.L.O. should be adjusted to the new state of affairs in the world is evidenced also by such a positive factor as the twofold increase in the membership of our Organisation over the past few years. Most of the new Member States have only recently acquired independence, and the majority of them are also developing countries. Therefore, this increase in membership not only ensures new opportunities for the I.L.O., but confronts it with new tasks. As the Director-General says, development is not only of political importance, since the Organisation has been enabled to assist newly formed or recently emancipated countries. The Hungarian Workers' delegation appreciates the reorganisation of the I.L.O., but also wishes to point out that this internal reorganisation does not mean the solution of those urgent problems which have arisen during the past few years. This reorganisation has not put an end to the harmful discrimination against the W.F.T.U. and its member organisations and against representatives of other progressive organisations, a discrimination that has often been justly denounced. This situation is intolerable when, because of various machinations, the representatives of the W.F.T.U. and its member organisations are deprived of the opportunity to take their place in the leadership of the Workers' group at the Conference and the Workers' group of the Governing Body. The existing election system discriminates against various trade union movements and prevents their proper representation on the Governing Body. These contradictions are growing more serious and can be overcome only through the introduction of an election system based on proportional representation. Only thus will the Governing Body reflect the real state of affairs in today's world trade union movement.

It is of particular importance for the problem of discrimination has arisen in recent years to be overcome. Governments should respect the I.L.O. Constitution and appoint Workers' delegates from among the most authoritative trade unions in their country. The I.L.O. can and should do a great deal in this connection.

The Hungarian trade unions—even though with some reservations—approve the programme in the Director-General's Report by and large. However, the basic problem in the programme is not emphasised sufficiently. The I.L.O. should work more effectively against unemployment, which places such a heavy burden on millions of workers, with a view to ensuring normal living and working conditions and proper social security facilities.

The Hungarian trade unions supervise the aims that are being followed by the I.L.O. in giving assistance in the setting-up of representative workers' organisations which would play an active role in the economic and social development of their countries. We also welcome the aim of enabling trade unions to cooperate in the planning and carrying out of economic and social development programmes. The trade unions of the socialist countries, including the Hungarian trade unions, refer to their own long experience to affirm that the solution of this problem is one of the principal functions of trade unions in upholding the interests of the workers. I am referring to a task which, despite the divergence of interest, the social order, vitally affects the lives and work of the whole community. We would be glad to share the experience which our own trade unions have acquired both in fulfilling the traditional functions of upholding the interests of the workers as well as in participating in economic and social planning.

That is one of the fields in which the International Labour Organisation can usefully collaborate with the trade unions of the socialist countries. Another field in which such co-operation is possible is the organisation of international seminars and training courses. As evidence I would mention the international seminar on occupational safety which was organised last year in Budapest at the request of the I.L.O. by the Hungarian trade unions. I believe that this I.L.O. and the participants acquired a great deal of useful knowledge through this seminar.

The successful implementation of the programme proposed by the Director-General would be facilitated by closer co-operation between trade unions with different ideologies. We consider that every opportunity is available for this both at the annual Conference and on other occasions also. However, a precondition for this should be the dissipation of an atmosphere of cold war in the I.L.O.'s work.

The Hungarian trade unions are convinced that the International Labour Organisation has a particularly heavy responsibility in the struggle for peace, particularly in the specific field of the study of the economic effects of disarmament and its social consequences. As on previous occasions we again urge that one of the basic tasks of the I.L.O. is to assist in establishing and consolidating peaceful relations between nations.

Only 20 years ago a devastating war was brought to an end—a war that caused untold damage and suffering to mankind and especially to the workers. Now, once again, hundreds of millions of dollars are being spent on armaments and the burden of this rests once again on the shoulders of the workers, thus delaying the satisfaction of their economic and social needs. If general disarmament were achieved, vast material resources would be released which could be devoted to far more noble purposes and specifically to implementing the I.L.O.'s programmes and helping the newly independent countries. Events in the capitalist countries have long shown the fallacy of the idea that it is possible to overcome unemployment by means of armaments. We should like to emphasise once again that the I.L.O. should take a positive stand on this issue if it wishes to fulfil its vocation.

The Director-General's Report stresses the fact that this is a year of co-operation. We are glad that the I.L.O. is willing to participate in the achievement of such aims as co-operation between all peoples in maintaining peace, promotion of social and economic progress and consolidation of freedom. It is particularly urgent at a time when the I.L.O. should struggle for the achievement of these aims. In the existing international circumstances, when the United States aggression in Viet-Nam, the Dominican Republic and other countries is once again threatening the peace of mankind, the International Labour Organisation should use all its prestige and influence . . .

The PRESIDENT—I would remind the speaker of my earlier ruling about theatres of war. I do not want references to the question of war because we do not want to bring the cold war into this assembly. Everybody wants peace, but there are other organisations looking after that.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. KARAKAS—The International Labour Organisation should use its prestige and authority to help avoid the danger that threatens mankind. The Hungarian trade unions are always prepared to help the I.L.O. in this respect.

Mr. RANSELEY (Employers' delegate, Malta)—First of all I wish to add my own congratulations to those you have already received on your election as President of this 49th Session of the General Conference of the I.L.O. and to express my grateful thanks to you, to the Chairman of the Governing Body of the I.L.O. and to my fellow delegates for welcoming our delegation and our country as a Member of this Organisation.

This year is an extremely important one for the employers of Malta as it is the first year in our long history and tradition in which we are able to speak from this rostrum as representatives of a Member of this great social organisation which was conceived in the minds of those wise men so many years ago and brought into being by that most outstanding and enthusiastic reformer and believer in human dignity, Albert Thomas. The seeds of social progress so well planted by him gave rise to vigorous growth which has withstood the test of time, war and depression and which has developed into the vital living body that it is today. I pay homage to that great man and wish he were here to see the fruits of his labour; I am sure he would not be disappointed. The objectives which were before him are the aims of the present Director-General of the I.L.O., David A. Morse, and I believe Albert Thomas would be pleased to know that the guiding hand at the wheel of the Organisation is as courageous as his own.

This courage is evidenced by the Director-General's Reports to the 47th and 48th Sessions of the Conference and to this one. The social and economic pattern over the past 20 years has thrown up new, challenging and ever-changing situations and problems which are being met with forthrightness and fortitude. This Organisation has not been allowed to settle in the dust of time as so many other well-intentioned organisations, resting on their laurels, have done. The extent of the reorganisation proposed by the Director-General may be looked upon as a measure of the strength of the I.L.O.; it is certainly a recognition that, unless we gear ourselves to the years in which we live and look forward into the future with anticipation of the new patterns which are likely to emerge, the Organisation will be unable to meet its obligations.
Last year, when I spoke from this rostrum as an observer, I drew attention very briefly and lightly to the dangers inherent in any reorganisation. This year I am able to speak more freely since in the meantime Malta has achieved its independence and early this year became a member of the I.L.O. Therefore I am able now to join in the discussions on an equal footing with other delegates. It gives me great pleasure to place on record my appreciation and thanks that our situation has changed from the observer status last year.

I mentioned last year the importance of placing the right man in the right job. Reorganisation enables this to be done with facility. Organisation and reorganisation are perhaps more of an employer's function, particularly as the result of the employer's work in this connection determines in no small measure whether the employer is to sink or swim. Labour unrest during and following such changes is a danger that is foremost in the employer's mind; it is perhaps not considered by governments and international organisations to the same degree, although it is also an important question.

As in the economic field also, the changes which inevitably have to be made must be dictated by the particular developments and objectives. The reappraisal of new functions and the implementation of new methods is a costly exercise which has instantaneous effects upon the operation of the organisation. Woolly thinking and excessive zeal can be equally expensive, but I am sure that the Director-General has given all these points his deepest consideration.

Many countries, including my own, are being faced with similar decisions. Industry is continually undergoing change, expansion, reduction, improvement and absorption. In some cases the process is gradual, in others it is almost explosive; in all cases much—very much—depends upon the support that men give to the changes. In other words, the type of men selected to support them must be men with belief and courage; a forward look, a willingness to work and to devote themselves to the job in hand, are essential factors in the eventual success of the changes. In short, leadership is the key word.

In Malta we view our economic and social progress with these factors in mind. Our problems are not entirely different from those being faced by other countries, although we are unique in many respects. Expansion on all fronts must be made, more jobs must be created, better economic conditions must be achieved. The economy must be a lively one to encourage investment both at home and from abroad. The changes which have taken place in Malta over recent years have required a rethinking and reorientation towards the building up of a diversified economy. We will achieve this. The first steps have already been taken, and as the employers of Malta are ever-conscious of the needs of the workers, they are working together hand in hand with them and will continue to do so in facing the enormous tasks which lie ahead of both sections of the community.

The theme of the Director-General's Report, therefore, is a most fitting one for us. The development of human resources as a component of economic advance is, as the Director-General rightly points out, essential if progress is to be made. The supply of equipment and capital, as he indicates, is not enough. The training of the workers, especially the younger workers, is a vital aspect of economic development, as it is the young workers of today who are to be the backbone of the economy tomorrow. Although this matter is being attended to in a certain manner, I wish to ask to what degree the I.L.O. is helping those young persons who, because of reasons beyond their control, do not have the means to continue their education and training beyond the primary school period. Increasing and expanding primary school facilities mean that more and more young persons with a small amount of education, but without any training, will enter the ranks of the unemployed each year, and in this Malta is no exception. I looked closely at Part II of the Director-General's Report and I am led to the conclusion that, in so far as technical co-operation is concerned, while some assistance has been given in this sector its extent is not very great, and yet this is one of the most vital areas of need.

It is not necessary to create conditions for the support of the I.L.O.'s programme. The situation in which employment exists for the working population or in which it exists partly for some and partly for others obtains almost everywhere. In the former, we endeavour to improve conditions of work, skill and productivity, and in the latter we endeavour to train the unemployed and the underemployed for jobs that are available, and encourage the organisation of services to fit the man to the job. By the former, improved economic conditions are expected which, in turn, may be hoped to provide new jobs for more workers; but what happens in those areas where little or no technical assistance is being applied when it is so badly needed? Should this great Organisation not play a more active and important part in helping to improve these basic economic conditions? Is just being associated with the Economic Commissions of the United Nations enough? I maintain that this is not and cannot be enough. Let us not forget that the danger of starvation, actual and present, does not only in working in the situations I have mentioned previously, but also in working actively and painstakingly in other conditions and situations, helping to create the atmosphere for economic improvement so that from its source the dignity of man is upheld and raised to the highest peak. In practical terms, what does this mean? In my view it is desirable that there should be full co-operation with the United Nations in the preparation of economic development plans, and that the I.L.O. should be able to bring its influence to bear when loans and economic measures affecting employers and workers are being considered by, for instance, the World Bank and the International Development Association. It means that the I.L.O. should be placed in a better position to enable it to take a more practical role in economic and social development. I make this suggestion because of the obvious need to enhance and improve the co-ordination of all technical assistance, and what better international organisation than the I.L.O. exists to ensure this co-ordination?

I would add that I agree most heartily with the Employers' delegate from Nigeria when he indicated on 9 June that there is too much emphasis being placed on standard-setting. The need for greater concentration of operational activities is more and more apparent, and therefore it becomes increasingly important that the momentum of the growth of technical assistance operations should be accelerated.

As with most countries, Malta too has its economic development plans, and its goals have been set. The initial action taken is resulting in a general expansion of the three sectors of the economy. Private investment in industry is increasing and covers a number of different types of enterprise and activity. Factory construction is proceeding at a fast pace, and in this connection the Government has been extremely helpful in that many of the newly constructed factories are let at subsidised rents; these factories we look upon as constituting a major contribution to the diversification of the economy.

The development of the tourist industry is gaining momentum, and the number of tourists visiting the island increased by some 20 per cent. last year. Improvements are being made to existing hotels, and a number of new ones are being constructed involving a private investment of some $17 million. The services allied to the industry are also receiving attention and we hope that, with all the improvements which are now being made, the number of visitors to Malta during the coming years will continue to increase as it has in the past year. All these developments, as well as those undertaken in the primary and public sectors, are providing more and better jobs, but there still remains the training of the workers for the support of expansion. Skills must be improved at all levels, in addition to the training required of the new entrants to the labour force.

Notwithstanding, there is still the overriding lack of sufficient labour outlets; highly qualified Maltese are not likely to remain in Malta unless their working conditions are improved. A large number of trained and skilled men leave the island annually and wastage of talent is therefore rather high. The Government, employers and workers must continue to work together and speed up the type of development that will satisfactorily use the human resources which our island possesses. I believe we are finally on the right track, but we are aware that the goals set in the economic development plan will not be achieved easily. However, with the right type of assistance at the time it is required, set up on an organised and co-ordinated basis, I feel confident that the struggles through which we are progressing will not have been in vain.

In conclusion, I wish only to say once more that in all these things, in all our dreams, there is a part to be played by every one of us, and that from the Maltese employers' viewpoint we have been thankful for the help and assistance which have been given to us in the past; we look forward to an era of working far more closely with the United Nations and its agencies, particularly with the I.L.O., than has been possible in the past. I hope this can be done, for our confidence and belief in the I.L.O. is very extensive.

Mr. NILSSON (Workers' delegate, Finland) —Mr. President, may I first of all associate myself with all those speakers who have so warmly congratulated you and this Conference on your election to the presidency. Perhaps still warmer congratulations should go to the Conference which has the pleasure of having you.

May I also congratulate the Director-General for his excellent summary of all the points in the discussions of the last two years on which a fair amount of agreement has been reached. I think this method of proceeding is right. The more progress we can make on the less controversial issues, the better will be the atmosphere for facing the controversial ones. But, of course, they will have to be faced, too. The I.L.O. can survive as a worthwhile instrument only by virtue of its universality, and, since this our universe is full of divergencies and controversies, these have to be faced with boldness and vision and skill and patience.

I am happy that the Working Party has given first priority to human resources and their harnessing. There is certainly no other social and economic issue which is more central; none which more underlines the interdependence of the nations, in spite of the very great difference between its various aspects in various countries.

As for my own country the burning problem of the day is the balance of payments. I feel justified in referring briefly to that problem and quoting my own country as an example, because the problem is well known in many lands—developed and undeveloped. We have embarked on a policy of fairly doctrinaire liberalisation, both domestically and in our foreign trade, without sufficiently analysing whether we were ready for it or not. The result is that for five consecutive years we have been building up ever-growing trade and payments deficits, and when at long last the Government wakes up to face realities it finds that it has deprived itself of most of the instruments by which it could redress the situation without running into international difficulties. It therefore has recourse to the classical instrument: curtailment of total demand, curtailment of production and employment by means of a tight monetary policy. We have, for instance, plenty of unemployed building workers, plenty of building materials of our own and an acute housing shortage. All material prerequisites for an expansion of building activities therefore exist in our own country, but there is no equilibrium between monetary policy and real resources on the other hand. To quote another example, we have an excess of dairy produce: last year we exported about one-third of it by means of subsidies, which were in most cases about 200 per cent. more than what we were getting for export prices. But we pursued a policy of cutting down total consumption, and that includes home consumption of foodstuffs, thus continuing with that ruinous export. And—perhaps worst of all—the restriction on credit also curtails such productive investment as might eventually improve our balance-of-payments position, and thus we are turning the process into a vicious circle, which unless it is fundamentally changed will force increasing numbers of unemployed, including a considerable proportion of skilled workers—and also taxpayers—to leave the country. The process is already well started. Maybe countries with big populations, such as Italy or others, can afford that but we cannot. If workers and taxpayers leave the country, the remaining basis of production becomes insufficient to finance that investment in infrastructure which is necessary for ever-continuing renewed growth. It is not therefore a case of stop and go, as it is sometimes described; it is a case of stop and decline, which threatens to become a case of a cumulatively depressed areas. Diethard liberalists say: let them go abroad to seek jobs; after all, it is just a case of mobility of labour. But many of those who would have to go do not find it at all easy to do so, and such an adaptation process has all the makings of a major social conflict.

Of course, as trade unionists, we cannot accept such a policy. We are then told that international financing institutions, including some which belong to the United Nations family, do not approve of any other than sound economic policy. It is maintained that we shall lose our credit-worthiness, that trade and financial reprisals would ensue if we tried to pursue a full employment policy for which we actually have a law.

We for our part cannot accept that the prestige of any United Nations body should be used to intimidate us into accepting unemployment. It is very much a balance-of-payments problem, and this is why I am grateful for having access to this international tripartite forum and assembly to voice, I hope with some vigour, a protest not only against the practice of abusing the names of international organisations but also against the discrepancies between material possibilities and monetary policy in so many market-economy countries, which are trying to beggar their neighbour by pushing their payments problems onto each other. Perhaps the question of international liquidity today is not as burning as it was a few years ago, but even today we have the serious position of different countries going begging their neighbours and trying to force them to take larger balances of payments.

In Finland we have accepted the principle of an active labour-market policy, and we have tried to pursue it. But even now we are having difficulties in finding, in the case of some groups of workers in redundant industries or infrastructural branches, for retraining. It is all very well to embark on training schemes and give new skills but we must also see that these workers who are trained for new jobs are assured that these jobs will be continued.

Under competitive market-economy conditions, provision of jobs depends, in the final analysis, on comparative basic resources in the widest sense of the word, which includes not only natural resources, geographic position, but also climate, soil, the mental endowments of a people, capital already accumulated, industries already developed, "know-how" and access to markets and so on. If we view the future possibilities of various nations from that viewpoint and if we correlate them to their possibilities of basic resources, we get a more complex division of nations than a mere division into developing and industrialised countries. We shall have underdeveloped, half-developed and three-quarters developed countries, some with good chances of rapid development and others with less good chances. We shall have, on the other side of the fence, a number of highly developed countries with poor resources, perhaps reorganized to regain the old general principles of capital accumulation continue under the so-called classical liberal economy as hitherto. We talk about neoliberalism and neo-capitalism, but I do not know what is so essentially new in the main features of the form of economic position compared with the past.

The point I wish to make is that sooner or later—and I associate myself with the last speaker, from Malta, on that point and with some other speakers—the I.L.O. must concern itself more with fundamental economic issues, unless some of the other United Nations organs themselves are reorganized on a tripartite basis too. We cannot, for instance, proceed very far in the matter of agrarian reform unless we have something to say about prices. I am not arguing that we in the I.L.O. should take unilateral action in fields within the competence of other international organs. But we should not, on the other hand, be so overawed by their prestige that we do not dare to talk about these things except in half-whispers. When questions of human resources, agrarian reform, etc., come up against insurmountable obstacles, we must have a right to pursue our viewpoints beyond those demarcation lines, to put our views to other bodies and jointly to seek solutions. After all, we do not know how long some of these fairly new bodies will exist. The I.L.O. has seniority in the United Nations family and it has a record of its own that is second to none, starting from the General Assembly and the Security Council and down the whole long list. Would it be that our shy-ness is partly due to the fact that we are "only" concerned with human dignity, freedom, justice and happiness, whereas the other bodies may have more economic and political power? I think we need to redefine our competency in economic matters with greater boldness and greater vision than hitherto.

I am pleased to note the efforts made to give the I.L.O. a more up-to-date working structure. But as an old Organisation man, I could not help making a few mental question-marks, perhaps because of my cautious nature.
Experience has often shown that a well-trained, co-operative staff, accustomed to the job, will be able to cope smoothly with many tasks, even beyond their formal terms of reference, whereas a more up-to-date and more streamlined set-up or organisation may bring about considerable transition difficulties—even if the new framework is much better on paper. I hope that the new set-up has been achieved after consultation at all levels and that none of these transitional difficulties will appear. I would not have had the audacity to refer to this had it not been for the fact that the first item of news I came across, on arriving in Geneva and reading the papers, reported personnel changes in the top team and attributed these changes to divergences concerning the reorganisation.

We do not know what is going to happen to this world. The United Nations may disappear and even worse may come. But our objective should be to have this, our I.L.O., so deeply embedded in the minds of men that if the worst should happen, the first international action of the remaining cavemen, when eventually they creep out of their lairs, will be to re-establish the I.L.O. To ensure that, the I.L.O. must never bow so deeply to economic and political power that it puts human rights second on its priority list of values.

(The Conference adjourned at 12.30 p.m.)
EIGHTEENTH SITTING

Monday, 14 June 1965, 3 p.m.

President: Mr. Raza

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. KUCHEROV (Employers' delegate, Ukraine)—At the last session the Director-General mentioned that the solution of many important problems must be preceded by agreement between the various principal groups of interest within the Organisation.

To establish and promote fruitful international co-operation in the I.L.O., there must be mutual understanding and, specifically, the anomalous situation within the Employers' group must be ended. Unfortunately, the Report of the Director-General does not touch on the problem of the internal structure of the I.L.O. However, I consider the structure of the I.L.O., specifically the question of the relationship between the representatives of private capitalist enterprises on the one hand and those of state enterprises on the other, to be a very important factor in the activities of this Organisation.

As the representative of the Employers of one of the socialist Members of the Organisation, I cannot remain silent when I see that not once in the history of the I.L.O. has a representative of the Employers of a socialist country been elected to the Governing Body. This is an anomalous situation and it should be radically corrected. Historically, the situation is that in the beginning the Employers in the I.L.O. were represented only by the private sector; however, the representatives of this private sector regarded a temporary situation as something permanent and unalterable. They refuse to accept the advance of history or to recognise any qualitative changes in the world.

The impact of this attitude of the Employers is so powerful that even certain governments which have nationalised large sections of their industries continue to send to international conferences only private employers in order to avoid conflict with the intractable majority of the employers. This constitutes the first link in the existing chain of anomalies. The next link is where the Employers' group, as it has been constituted, refuse to elect the employers of socialist industry to the committees of the Conference or to the Governing Body and so on. The socialist countries account for more than 37 per cent. of total world industrial output. If that is added to the products of state or public enterprises in a number of other countries, it is seen that approximately one-half of total industrial world output is not represented by the Employers on the Governing Body or other organs of the I.L.O. Thus we see reflected in these organs not the present-day structure of the world economy, but that of the beginning of the century.

The refusal of a certain group of Western employers to co-operate with the managers of the socialist enterprises is, of course, harmful to the interests of the International Labour Organisation, and the whole absurdity of this policy became apparent at the 161st Session of the Governing Body in March of this year.

During the elections to the Industrial Committees, the Employers attempted to apply their internal boycott policy to matters directly affecting the interests of member States. What happened then we all know. They were forced to acknowledge the fallacy of their own position and had to admit defeat.

The case of the elections to the Industrial Committees has shown us once again that the question of the membership of the Employers' group in the Governing Body represents a major part of the problem of adapting the I.L.O. to the present world.

The time has come for the International Labour Organisation to put an end to discrimination against the representatives of the nationalised industries. It is impossible to accept the policy that has turned the Governing Body into the tool of a narrow group of interests. It should be the representative body of the whole of the I.L.O., and that is why I support the resolution concerning universal observance of the principle of equitable geographical distribution in the organs of the I.L.O. that has been submitted by the Government delegates of Poland and the Ukraine. The adoption of this resolution would ensure equitable tripartite representation of all regions on the Governing Body.

Several comments should be made on the organisation of the Industrial and analogous Committees. We must, of course, agree with the Director-General's statement that there should be greater flexibility in the organisation, functions and procedure of Industrial Committees.

What should be revised, of course, in the first place is the procedure concerning composition of the Committees, in order to ensure equitable geographical distribution of seats. As you see, there are ways of solving this problem on the basis of a compromise, and this can and must be done forthwith. The fact that this problem has not been solved, the one-sided membership of the employers' group of the Governing Body, leads to one-sided activities of the I.L.O. as a whole.

To quote another example: in Part II of his Report the Director-General points out that a significant trend in developing countries is the increase in the number and size of state-owned undertakings which are of great importance for the national economy, so that the government has to set an example for employers in the private sector.

All this testifies to the increasing role of the managers of state-owned undertakings, and the decreasing role of the private entrepreneurs. It is quite incomprehensible, therefore, that the whole research sector in the activities of the I.L.O. should be concentrated around the entrepreneurs of the private sector. Why is not the experience of the socialist managers, and their participation in the planning of production, in solving social questions, in co-operating with trade unions in the management of socialist enterprises, etc., studied and disseminated?

Perhaps that is why, in drafting the section on the I.L.O. programmes, the Director-General omitted such an important sector as the social and health services in undertakings, which are so greatly developed in the socialist countries, and which private employers are so reluctant to introduce.

For the past two years the most capable minds in the Organisation have generously sown proposals upon the stony ground of the International Labour Organisation. Now we see that some of these proposals have taken root and are beginning to bear fruit. But the harvest is pretty meagre, for from the vast cloud of inevitable structural changes which appeared over the horizon of the I.L.O. only a few droplets of practical proposals have so far fallen. Unless the Director-General's programme is accompanied by appropriate structural changes, it will certainly not have the success upon which we can and should reckon.

The Ukrainian people has recently celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the liberation of the Ukraine from Fascist occupation and the defeat of Nazi Germany. During these past 20 years, we have witnessed vast constructive achievements in the Ukraine. From the burnt-out ruins have sprung up a large number of major industrial plants. Some 2,500 major up-to-date enterprises have been built, equipped with the latest technology: a vast basic structure in the form of power plant and general construction has been established, and many new sectors of industry have been developed; the transportation network has been rebuilt. In terms of industrial development, Ukraine is in the very front ranks of the countries of the world, and we can judge these achievements from the following few figures: for instance, in 1964, in Ukraine we produced 31.3 million tons of pig iron and 34.6 million tons of steel. More than 80.3 million tons of iron ore were mined. The gross industrial product of the Republic in 1963 was 4.7 times greater than the pre-war figure of 1940, and the increase in the metal trades was by 10.3 times. The production of electric and thermal power increased by 7.3 times, and the high rate of industrial development can be seen from the fact that during last year alone the increase in manpower amounted to 500,000 persons.

The vast changes in the economy of our country have provided a solid foundation for the steady improvement in the standard of living of the people, which is achieved by means of increased wages and the growth of the social welfare funds.

The Director-General points out that his Report deals only with those subjects on which a clear consensus existed among delegates to the General Conference. Unfortunately, not all these subjects have been duly reflected in the Report.

In discussion of the Director-General's Report at the preceding sessions, there was a considerable degree of agreement that the I.L.O. cannot stand aside from the fight for peace, for peaceful coexistence and for the development of friendly relations between all peoples. According to I.L.O. figures, 40 delegates at the last two sessions called upon the I.L.O. to contribute to the cause of peace. Nevertheless, the Report before us is silent on this crucial problem of our time. Yet today more than ever before the cause of peace must be the focus of attention of all international organisations, including the I.L.O. There is an old saying that when cannons roar laws are silent, and the I.L.O.'s activities and the effect of its Conventions are reduced to nothing when bombs are exploding, when alien forces armed to the teeth are engaged in aggressive wars against the people of Viet-Nam and the people of the Dominican Republic who are fighting for freedom and independence...

The PRESIDENT—I would refer you to my earlier ruling, when I requested speakers not to refer to theatres of war.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. KUCHEROV—You have called upon us to speak about peace. In supporting your ruling, that is precisely what I am doing—I am speaking against war in favour of peace.

Mr. McPHERSON (Workers' delegate, Jamaica)—Let me join others in congratulating you on your elevation to your high office in our Conference. I cannot forget the grace with which you averted a crisis last year when you stood down after being nominated to the high office you now occupy. Your remarkable qualities of tolerance, understanding of human problems and sense of fair play and justice are among the attributes that have piloted you to tremendous heights in the councils of men.

I observe with increasing interest and appreciation the realistic way in which the International Labour Organisation is applying itself to its task. The very excellent and masterly
Report of the Director-General encompasses the practical course which the Organisation must pursue if it is to continue to achieve worthwhile objectives in a world that is rapidly changing with the creation of new and diverse problems.

It is heartening, and speaks well for the future, that the I.L.O. recognises its new and added responsibilities which are consistent with the setting of standards for the general improvement of the life of the workers and the masses and for the conduct of labour relations. The 114 member States of this Body are at varying stages of development or under-development, and are pursuing various patterns of economic, social and cultural and political life. But we all have the same goal: that of a fuller and more prosperous life.

Between 60 and 65 per cent. of the world's people reside in areas the economies of which can only support a very low standard of living, and these economies will have to be helped to attain new and better goals in the process towards prosperity.

The gigantic job which challenges the I.L.O. is successfully to co-ordinate its efforts with all those organisations whose help it is important to obtain so as to bolster these economies and thus the whole world by which standards of living will be raised.

Among others, the following are a few things which give evidence to the fact that the I.L.O. is prepared to tackle its new tasks with determination and courage.

In Part II of the Director-General's Report attention is called to—(1) the active part played by the I.L.O. in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development last year, due to the general acceptance within the I.L.O. that greater stability in world prices of primary products and the promotion of a higher and steady volume of international trade is essential for securing the economic and social advancement of the less developed regions of the world; (2) the fact that the I.L.O. submitted to the Conference on Trade and Development a resolution urging that those responsible for the work of the new international machinery to be set up to deal with the question of foreign trade should take full account of, and seek to attain the employment objectives defined in, the I.L.O.'s Employment Policy Convention, 1964, with particular reference to action aimed at securing substantial improvement in living standards in the less developed areas; (3) the bold step forward by the I.L.O. in tackling the question of agrarian reform with particular reference to employment and social aspects—a matter which is being dealt with by this Conference.

In the same chapter the Director-General calls attention to the fact that in preparing a paper on the subject of agrarian reform the I.L.O. collaborated with a number of United Nations agencies, particularly the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations, as part of its new approach of involving sources which are capable of helping it to achieve the objectives which it seeks to attain.

Delivering the policy speech for the Government and people of Jamaica, I am pleased to note the contribution of my country to this new concept which the I.L.O. is evolving. In previous speeches I have made here, I have consistently called for this new approach as a means of effectively achieving benefits from the policies which the I.L.O. enunciates.

I am pleased to say that the objectives put before this Conference by the Governing Body of the I.L.O. for an international programme for agrarian reform have been the very basis for the present Agricultural Development Programme of Jamaica.

In order to give the fullest possible effect to the successful operation of Jamaica's Agricultural Development Programme, our Government is shortly to introduce legislation which will give it power to ensure that idle or grossly under-utilised lands in private ownership are brought into production. The proposed Land Utilisation Act will allow the landowner the opportunity to present a rational plan of development for lands declared idle or under-utilised according to minimum standards of usage, based on economic and agro-technical criteria such as soil capability, topography, rainfall, location, market possibilities, etc., and having regard to the social well-being of the workers.

If the landowner fails to submit an acceptable plan of development or fails to carry out the development agreed upon, the area of land in question will become subject to compulsory acquisition by the Government with adequate compensation. Certain safeguards within the terms of the Jamaica Constitution relating to the protection of the basic rights of property, including the right of appeal to a properly constituted land tribunal, are to be included in the Act.

Jamaica bids fair for a bright and prosperous future, and all efforts must be exerted to ensure against external forces blighting its prospects and those of the other less developed countries which are in a similar position.

My Government and country therefore welcome the new concept of approach by the I.L.O. to social and economic problems affecting working people and the masses, particularly as this new approach will affect agrarian reform in Jamaica. The I.L.O.'s approach to co-ordination with various United Nations agencies will certainly be of assistance to Jamaica to bolster its programme and to help it chart the way to effectiveness. The I.L.O. is indeed making valiant efforts to achieve for the less fortunate peoples of the world greater measures of improved living.

Without international co-operation there is absolutely no possibility of achieving the fullest programme of agrarian reform in the less developed areas of the world. We therefore rely heavily on the I.L.O. to press on in its admirable determination to collaborate with other world agencies which are capable of helping in the achievement of success in agrarian reform.

I now turn to something that has been occupying my mind for some time, that is the obvious efforts of the Conference to find and create new standards for social and economic application. Adorable as this is, the fact is that already there are a number of I.L.O. instruments which, if fully applied, would mean the universal emancipation of the workers.
The I.L.O. is approaching its fiftieth year of existence. I think it is of the utmost importance that the fiftieth anniversary serve to take stock of the extent to which the instruments and resolutions of the Organisation have been implemented, and with what effect. After carrying out the fullest evaluation possible, the Organisation can then move forward with the experience gained from this stocktaking.

I suggest the fiftieth anniversary for this purpose as it will give participating nations of the I.L.O. three clear years in which to make every effort to give effect to the instruments already adopted by the I.L.O.

I leave this proposal as a challenge to this international forum and for action upon it by the Governing Body.

Interpretation from French: Mr. SOW (Workers' delegate, Senegal)—It is in the name of the National Union of Senegalese Workers, which we call U.N.T.S., that I have today the honour and privilege of speaking, more to follow tradition than to contribute any new elements to the Director-General's Report. This complete and thorough work shows once more the great competence and high-mindedness of this master and his much love of the many problems raised by previous sessions of the Conference and arising out of the daily accomplishment of the I.L.O.'s difficult task in a developing world. My first duty therefore is to congratulate the Director-General and his staff for their constant and superhuman efforts to satisfy the aspirations of the peoples of member countries.

May I now, despite your modesty, add my sincere and warm congratulations to you, Sir, on your brilliant election to the presidency of this session?

The questions raised in the Report and the solutions recommended are worthy of interest not only because they are essential elements in the permanent work of the I.L.O. but also because of their urgent character at the present time, since they proceed from the new imperatives of a world in which events move so fast that no delay can be tolerated. This turning point in history, with its scientific and technical progress, economic fluctuations, accession of many countries to independence, suddenly has to face new and thorny problems of all kinds arising out of the vestiges of colonialism and the chronic malady of under-development, problems which call urgently for employment of the I.L.O.'s increasingly extensive means of action.

It is evident that the I.L.O. cannot effectively meet the obligations placed upon it by the emergence of new functions, for one thing because of the insufficiency of existing means and for another because its structures are out of date and this neutralises its operational efficiency in the vast field which now belongs to it. The U.N.T.S. therefore fully supports the proposed reorganisation of the central services of the Office and the additional recruitment of personnel from the countries in course of development. This practice, which has already been initiated, will have the double advantage of training and specialising personnel from our countries and using them as informed advisers on the problems of our own regions. The periodicity of the general and regional conferences and other committees should be revised with a view to reducing the number of speeches which often merely repeat the same eternal principles. This would make it possible to save money which could be better spent on our regions, on the efficient offices and on sufficient polyvalent technicians and other personnel. The States Members of the I.L.O. should make an effort, in the course of this reform, to increase the means available to the Organisation, for the expansion and success of its operational activities will depend on the increase of its human and financial resources.

In the developing countries and particularly in Africa the rational solution of the problems of human resources, development, social institutions and conditions of life and work can be found only within the framework of an integrated and harmonious economic and social development plan. The first two African Regional Conferences held respectively at Lagos in 1960 and Addis Ababa in 1964 clearly revealed the anachronism of economic liberalism and stressed the need for balanced economic and social planning which can alone liquidate barter and other economic feudalism, free men from sickness, poverty, ignorance, unemployment and underemployment and raise the standard of life so as to ensure true and complete dignity for all men and women.

We in Senegal soon understood this need because we enjoy the privilege of having President Senghor, a theorist and a man of action in these matters who, following the path of African socialism, rejects capitalism and communism and chooses the middle path of non-alignment aimed at safeguarding moral and human values. Hence our first Four-Year Plan which started in 1960 and took the human being as its means and its objective. We described the economy of this Plan at the Lagos Conference and at the 45th Session of the General Conference in 1961, when the burning problem of technical and economic and social planning of the African Trade Union Confederation, to which it belongs, and by the All-African Trade Union Federation.

Planning does not necessarily mean nationalisation, but it is important for all elements of the nation to co-ordinate their activity in a general plan which will determine the objectives to be reached and the means of reaching them. It would be senseless to reject capital in a country where there is hardly any private saving. Capital must be placed at the service of the nation for general prosperity and well-being. Accordingly, the Senegal investments code ensures the security and profitability of capital. The object is to rescue man from slavery to capital and to place the latter at the service of the former's well-being.
human capital is the basic factor in economic growth, we feel that training is a point which can never be over-stressed. The success of our plans depends on man’s intellectual capacity, knowledge and physical strength. Therefore the programme of health, education and training at all levels is the major preoccupation of our Government and of U.N.T.S.; four ministries—the Ministries of Education, Technical and Supervisor Training, of Youth and Sport, of Popular Education, and of Health—co-operate in the development of human resources in accordance with the objectives of the Plan.

It should also be pointed out that President Jomo Konyatta, to whose contribution should be paid for his courage and clear-sightedness, has recently accepted and adopted President Senegale's doctrine in a pamphlet on African socialism and its application to Kenya's Plan. Rejecting metaphysics and sterile dogmatism, he states the need to adjust principles to the economic, social and human realities of his country by means of a rational over-all plan.

Senegal's second Four-Year Plan, which has just been discussed by the Social and Economic Council, is to start on 1 July 1965. After participating in the formulation of economic and social policy and all related projects in the national and regional planning commissions, the workers are also to be associated in the execution of the programmes. In the Social and Economic Council the main machinery for discussion and agreement between the State and the various elements of the nation, the U.N.T.S. sits side by side with representatives of industry, traders, handicraftsmen, and farming, fishery and stockraising co-operatives, so that all classes of society may contribute and participate in considering draft legislation on economic, social and financial matters and in the research and surveys which are necessary in order to put forward suggestions which will promote economic and social development and human advancement. The U.N.T.S. also represented on the price control committee which prevents fluctuations which would diminish the purchasing power of the workers and of the people generally.

The Constitution of Senegal guarantees freedom of association and the exercise of trade union rights. The Labour Code governs labour-management relations. Over 35 collective agreements determine conditions of employment and wages in the various occupations. Good human relations are indispensable to the proper operation of undertakings, for the workers not only wish their demands to be met but also desire to be treated with due respect as human beings. It is only on the basis of mutual understanding and respect that employers and workers can co-operate smoothly with a view to the prosperity of undertakings and the general interest.

Accordingly the U.N.T.S. considers that economic and social development and social justice can be promoted by discussion, peace and social stability. The tripartism which is an essential feature of the I.L.O. thus retains all its value. The States proclaim it here in the Palais des Nations, which is a very good thing; but it would be better still if they all applied it at the national level to the realities of development and labour relations.

The revision of international standards or the creation of new ones is perhaps a necessary adjustment to these changes, but it is still more necessary to ask why States which have taken part in the preparation of the instruments and voted in favour not only do not ratify and apply them but deliberately violate all their provisions. To quote only one instance, the notion of freedom of association varies from one country to another according to national legislation and practice. Violations of all kinds occur and these increase the difficulties of the African trade union movement. Therefore the U.N.T.S., which now includes almost all the workers of Senegal, calls for the unity of the African working class. Sterile division and antagonism are factors of economic and social regression in countries which need to join forces against the common enemy, underdevelopment. We therefore wish for resumption of the discussions between the African Trade Union Confederation and the All-African Trade Union Federation, aimed at unity, which began in October 1962 at Dakar. In particular, we support the proposals by A.T.U.C. last December at Addis Ababa for a seminar for officers of the two organisations, under the auspices of the Organisation of African Unity and the I.L.O., to study and adopt bases for agreement and unity. We welcome in this connection the proposals adopted at the recent O.A.U. Conference at Nairobi, which endorse the point of the A.T.U.C. to the effect that discussion between the two parties is required. The false and the true revolutionaries—if there are both these groups—should meet and fight together for the construction of our young nations and of Africa.

The U.N.T.S. thanks the I.L.O. for the attention it has been giving to the training of trade union officers in Senegal. The Morin mission in 1952 and the Lambert mission in 1964 have given a new impetus to the training of our economic and social officers and the establishment of permanent courses at the national level and in the seven administrative regions.

Co-operatives and agrarian reform are the key to development in the developing countries, and particularly in Africa, where 80 per cent. of the economy is agricultural and pastoral. The socialisation and diversification of agriculture, the establishment and development of co-operatives, the reform and modernisation of commerce (through the establishment of the agricultural marketing office and credit machinery in the first plan in 1960) and the recent National Lands Act (adopted with the unanimous support of the landowners concerned) have enabled this fundamental problem to be finally settled in Senegal to the advantage of the peasants who were so long the victims of a barter economy and of middlemen.

It is therefore desirable that appropriate instruments be adopted to enable the neglected populations of the developing countries to move along the path of progress.

I must also stress the contribution made last year by the Conference on Trade and Development which pointed to the growing gap between the advanced countries and those which are less developed and called for more active solidarity in exchanges and for the fixing and protection of commodity prices.
which have a direct repercussion on the economic and social development of the young nation. As economic and social development are linked to freedom, peace and democracy, how can one build up the economy of countries still subject to colonial domination or to the dictatorship of minorities which monopolise all freedoms for themselves to the detriment of the local population? We must therefore constantly appeal to the United Nations and to the conscience of mankind to put an end to the wars in Angola and so-called Portuguese Guinea, where people groan under the burdens of poverty and exploitation and men and women are killed by bullets every day.

We also condemn the undemocratic attempts being made in Rhodesia to impose a minority dictatorship without previously consulting the people.

We appeal to the Eastern and Western blocs which, in their race for world and cosmic mastery, will soon occupy the moon and coexist with the Martians at the cost of enormous sums which would be better spent on more assistance to men and women who, in the underdeveloped countries, can hardly keep body and soul together under the pressure of ignorance, sickness and poverty. The I.L.O. should mobilise all its strength of conciliation and act to put an end to the cold war, which at present is growing hotter and brandishes the sword of world disaster over our heads. The I.L.O., established under the Treaty of Versailles in answer to the workers' demands and with their participation, is bound to save mankind from a recurrence of the horrors of war.

The I.L.O. whose name is already inscribed in letters of gold in the book of history, will once more respond to the call by ensuring peace through progress and social justice for the greater well-being of all men in unity and brotherhood.

Mr. MANICKAVASAGAM (Minister of Labour, Malaysia)—May I tender to you Mr. President my sincere congratulations on your election to your high office.

I also wish to extend a warm welcome to Malawi, Malta, Zambia and Yemen which have become fellow Members of the I.L.O.

For the third year in succession the Conference has before it the vital task of formulating I.L.O. programmes to meet the growing needs of changing world, and of adjusting the structure and working methods of the I.L.O. to implement such programmes. It has been a challenging task and though a number of issues still remain to be considered, it is satisfying that a clear consensus has been reached on the three major I.L.O. programme areas.

I would like to congratulate the Director-General for having taken the initiative in reorganising the internal structure of the International Labour Office itself. From the outline given of the duties and responsibilities of the various departments into which the Office has been reorganised, I feel confident that the Director-General and his staff will be able most efficiently to undertake their responsibilites in the implementation of I.L.O. programmes.

The structure of the new Field Department, which will include three regional branches with emphasis on the control and co-ordination of all field operations in each region by a regional co-ordinator will, I think, greatly enhance the effectiveness of I.L.O. field operations. There will be not only better co-ordination of effort within the I.L.O. itself but also closer co-operation with other technical assistance agencies of other members of the United Nations family in the region. The Office itself will also build up a greater knowledge and a better understanding of the conditions and problems of each country and region, which will be most valuable in the appraisal, planning and implementation of programmes.

I hope the Director-General will as far as possible do his best to accelerate the appointment to posts not only in Geneva but also in the regional offices, including senior posts, of suitably qualified persons from the regions concerned. It is true that there is a general shortage of qualified persons in most developing countries, and such qualified persons as are available are more urgently required for their national needs. This has often been cited as a reason for not offering more posts on the I.L.O. establishment to such countries. But in time this reason may no longer be valid. In Malaysia, for instance, an increasing number of our nationals graduate each year from universities and institutions of higher learning at home and abroad, and many are keen to enter the international civil service.

I would strongly urge the Governing Body to accept the proposals to give a bigger role than hitherto to the regional advisory committees and the regional conferences, which should have more frequent opportunities to meet and advise on the particular needs of the region so that I.L.O. activities can be better reviewed and co-ordinated to serve their needs.

I think the possibility should also be considered of holding meetings of some of the Industrial Committees in different regions by rotation, instead of in Geneva as always. This will be in keeping with the policy of greater regionalisation of activities and will also even out the disadvantage now suffered by countries in Asia and elsewhere in having always to pay the considerable expenses of sending delegates to Geneva.

It is universally agreed that the development and utilisation of human resources is a key factor in economic growth. I am glad that there has been general agreement by the Conference that the I.L.O.'s plan of action in the human resources area should be principally directed to the problems of developing countries, and that it should cover a comprehensive and co-ordinated field including manpower planning and organisation, promotion of employment, vocational training, vocational rehabilitation, management development and productivity.

In my country the development of human resources is a basic part of our National Development Plan, and includes, in addition to various programmes in which the I.L.O. is concerned, other programmes in education and social welfare. We have been receiving valuable technical assistance from the I.L.O. and we are happy that in future such assistance will continue to be available to developing countries, with a new impetus.

The I.L.O. should conduct more extensive practical research to discover ways and means of promoting and creating more productive employment, with particular reference to developing countries that are faced with problems of high population growth, unemployment and underemployment, and industrialisation.

I now turn to the proposals for I.L.O. action in the development of employers' and workers' organisations and other social institutions and labour relations. At the last two sessions of the Conference we stressed that each country should be free to develop its own forms of organisations and its own system of labour relations, best suited to the particular conditions of the country, provided that in the process there is no deviation from the basic principles and objectives of the I.L.O.

Political and constitutional advancement, as much as economic development and technological progress, has created new problems in labour relations, particularly in developing countries, which have a tradition far different from those of the industrialised countries. Some of these problems have not even been experienced by the industrialised countries, in which current concepts of trade union organisation and labour relations have evolved historically.

In the solution of differences arising between employers and workers, for example, it is the duty of the Government to ensure that adequate machinery and procedures are set up, which, by applying the principles of conciliation, negotiation, and arbitration, will help bring about an expeditious settlement, in the interests of the parties concerned as well as in the interests of the nation as a whole.

My country is faced with aggression from a neighbouring country and, since September last year, has been under a state of emergency. Despite the emergency we are determined that our National Development Plan must continue in order to maintain and further improve the standard of living of our people. My Government is faced with grave problems of external and internal security. With the object of maintaining the stability of the administrative machinery of government and of the economic life of the nation, it has recently been necessary to introduce certain measures, which are temporary and which affect only certain essential services and industries, providing for the orderly settlement of labour-management problems. These measures have caused anxiety to certain of our trade union leaders. But I wish to state that these measures do not in any way infringe the legitimate rights and freedoms of trade unions. They provide for the settlement of differences by negotiation, conciliations, and arbitration and, in the case of the civil service, also by impartial consideration of a Salaries Commission, to which civil service unions have in fact already submitted claims.

I would add that my Government has introduced those measures with great reluctance and only because certain action taken by some trade union leaders in recent months has brought about serious disruptions in the working of the normal machinery existing at various levels for the settlement of industrial disputes and thereby affecting the public interest.

I support I.L.O. action in the promotion of the growth and development of employers' and workers' organisations and other social institutions which are genuinely independent and representative of all sectors, including those as yet unorganised and also of rural inhabitants.

Promoting the participation of these representative organisations in the formulation and implementation of economic and social development plans is an aim that must be linked with the educational programmes of the I.L.O. to provide additional training for all persons who are directly involved in labour relations at various levels. It is only with such training that they may be better able to assume their responsibilities.

For many years employers' and workers' organisations have been represented on a great number of boards and bodies in my country, and they will, as far as possible, continue to be associated with such bodies as are connected with economic and planning activities.

I also endorse the other proposals for I.L.O. action as outlined by the Director-General regarding labour administration; the status of the worker and the research and dissemination of information on this subject, and personnel policy, including management training and the promotion of joint consultative machinery at the level of the undertakings.

We are in the middle of 1965, the International Co-operation Year, a year dedicated to co-operation between all nations in maintaining peace, and to the promotion of economic and social progress for all people and of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Unfortunately, this ideal is not being achieved in many areas of the world.

My country, despite our present difficulties, is determined to carry on with our National Development Plan. Here I wish to express my country's gratitude for all the generous assistance received from the I.L.O. and other United Nations agencies and from many friendly countries which, like ourselves, sincerely believe in peace and practise international co-operation as a means of achieving peace.

It is fitting that all members of the I.L.O., whatever political differences there may be, should rededicate themselves to the noble purpose of this Organisation to help people everywhere towards a better life.

Interpretation from French: Mr. Ilboudo (Workers' Delegate, Upper Volta)—In the name of the workers of Upper Volta, I should like to associate myself with all those who preceded me at this rostrum in congratulating you most warmly on your election to the presidency of our Conference at its present session.

The workers of Upper Volta have analysed very carefully the Director-General's Report.
This clear and well-documented text meets, in general, with their approval. At the 48th Session of the Conference our delegate expressed the sentiments of horror aroused in the workers of Upper Volta by the criminal system of apartheid. That is why, this year, I should like to thank the Director-General for the special report which he has submitted to us on apartheid. All nations in favour of peace must support the action taken by the I.L.O. and adopt energetic measures to destroy the inhuman régime imposed on the black Africans and on the other so-called coloured peoples of South Africa. Africans from now on are well able to distinguish their friends from their enemies, in spite of the ability of some people in trying to deceive them with fine words empty of meaning. They have no right to speak of liberty to those who look on, indifferent, at the injustices perpetrated in South Africa and at the barbaric treatment meted out by Portugal in Angola, Mozambique and Bissau-Guinea.

The Conference should invite all States to cease their deliveries of arms to South Africa and Portugal. We strongly request that the Conference be informed of the effective application by States of the Declaration on apartheid.

Since 1963 the I.L.O., under the guidance of the Director-General, has been endeavouring to adapt itself to the changing realities of our time. We therefore urge that the work and the posts within the International Labour Office be equitably distributed. We condemn all discrimination within our own Organisation. We must further Africanise the posts in the International Labour Office. It is possible to find now in Africa experts and officials who could do more effective work on the spot than experts coming from other continents.

We would also like regional conferences to be held frequently. They could be held every two years instead of every four years as is the case at present. The regional conferences, because of their practical nature and their composition, are extremely effective. I need only mention the Addis Ababa Conference, which was a magnificent success, as everyone has recognised.

We are concerned with problems of training trade union leaders because, without such training, it is impossible to obtain the benefits to be derived from participation of workers in various national bodies. The work to be done in this field in our country is enormous. That is why we are pressing with all the persuasion at our command for an intensification of the I.L.O. programme in this connection. There can be no economic and social development without the active and intelligent participation of the workers. Consequently, at a time when the workers of Africa, and in particular the workers of Upper Volta, are participating in the gigantic economic battle, it is urgent, very urgent, that there be an increase in the number of workers’ education courses. I should like to seize this opportunity to thank the Director-General of the I.L.O., on behalf of the workers of Upper Volta, for the assistance which has already been given to us in this field. But what has been done is truly insignificant in the light of what still has to be done. We are convinced that, by helping the workers, the I.L.O. is helping their countries to emerge from their state of economic underdevelopment.

Workers’ education seminars are extremely beneficial but unfortunately, they are limited to a small number of workers and shop stewards. We think that, in order to meet these difficulties, the I.L.O. experts should stay longer in the countries to which they are sent in order to come into contact with a greater number of workers.

African aspirations are for unity achieved through the Organisation of African Unity (O.A.U.). This is the true unity to which all the peoples of Africa aspire, namely unity for economic and social progress, unity against any new domination regardless of what form it may take, unity for peace in Africa and in the world, unity for the victory of the forces of progress. If the I.L.O. really wants to help Africa it must collaborate with the O.A.U., which is the standard-bearer of our hopes.

The International Labour Conference should avoid half measures. That is why I would urge that it be not satisfied with theoretical reports and platonic resolutions, but rather that it should act. We must condemn racism and discrimination, which are still practised by certain reactionary governments.

Before I leave this rostrum I should like to assure you of the confidence which the workers of Upper Volta have in the I.L.O. and to express to you their sincere good wishes for the success of this Conference, in which they place much hope.

Interpretation from Italian: Mr. MUDDDE ABDI (Workers’ adviser, Somalia)—When I come to speak at this rostrum, in the name of the workers of Somalia whom I represent at this Conference, I should like first to congratulate the President on his election to the presidency of this session of the Conference of the International Labour Organisation.

It is, moreover, a very pleasant duty for me to welcome to the Conference the delegations of Zambia, Malawi and Malta which, in addition to swelling the numbers of States Members of the Organisation, will, I am certain, make a real contribution to the success of the Conference.

The trade unions of my country have to face the grave difficulties inevitable in the case of new organisations which must secure their place in the political, economic and social life of their country. In the field of labour legislation, social security and social welfare problems, our trade unions have to deal with a situation which is becoming more and more difficult. I have only to indicate that, for example, the Labour Code of Somalia—and to be precise two lines in section 94 on social welfare and social assistance—solves the whole complex problem by simply referring to laws which do not exist. And this is in spite of the fact that the Government of Somalia has already ratified a good number of international labour Conventions. For this reason, we as trade unionists in Somalia cannot do more than give our full support to the position adopted by the Director-General in his Report where he states the obligation of all Members of the Organisation.
to apply and adapt their legislation governing social assistance and social welfare. We feel that our Government must give due attention to what the Director-General has said in his Report and the very valid conclusions which this Conference will adopt.

The workers of Somalia are well aware of the difficulties and obstacles which the Government has to face in pressing forward in this direction. They have already shown an understanding of these difficulties; moreover, they have made it more than obvious how determined they are to escape from the intolerable conditions in which they find themselves. Proof of this determination is to be found in the stipulations of collective agreements which regulate matters to a certain extent and provide for a certain measure of security and social welfare.

We have achieved this degree of success after struggles and sacrifices among so many others to which the workers of my country have contributed. It is obvious that where there is no legislation at all on the subject it is difficult to accomplish anything and it is extremely difficult to hold what ground we may have gained. The workers, despite the determination and the efforts of their trade union organisations, find themselves in a constant state of insecurity without any definite prospect or future.

The Government of my country is aware of the urgent need to change the situation. In fact we have noted with satisfaction the promise which has been given, upon the insistence of the trade unionists, that in the near future a labour code will be approved. We are sure that the Government will be supported in this fact we have noted with satisfaction the progressive attitude of the trade unionists and the workers, in their thirst for progress and emancipation.

We have achieved this degree of success after struggles and sacrifices among so many others to which the workers of my country have contributed. It is obvious that there is an urgent need to reorganise the trade union movement and leadership in order to provide the workers and the nation with a strong, solid, disciplined organisation.

The Government of my country has never considered it desirable to place obstacles in the path of the free and democratic development of trade union action, even the most energetic manifestations of such action. Therefore, we should like solemnly to pledge our support so that this new labour legislation may lay down a proper basis for the sure and rapid advance of the workers of Somalia toward improvement of their living conditions, their welfare, and general progress. In this way, we believe that we shall be making our full contribution to the cause which is common to all our brothers, the workers of Africa, and in particular our Somali brothers who are divided from their fatherland and all those who are still obliged to fight to win their freedom, independence and sovereignty—as is the case of the peoples of Angola, South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and Mozambique. We express our most determined and unflagging support for them in their difficult struggle.

Mr. TANDAU (Workers' delegate, Tanzania) —I have great pleasure, Mr. President, in associating myself with preceding speakers in warmly congratulating you on your election to the presidency of this distinguished Conference. I should like also to express the fraternal greetings of the workers in Tanzania to all those who are here to attend the Conference.

I have noted with great satisfaction that Zambia, Malawi, Malta and Yemen have now joined the ranks of the International Labour Organisation, and I want therefore to congratulate them warmly, and wish them a very fruitful time ahead.

The year 1964 saw the formation in Tanganyika of one centralised trade union movement, the National Union of Tanganyika Workers, aimed at improving the wages and conditions of work of its members more effectively. Many of the delegates know that prior to the creation of this organisation, workers in Tanzania were organised in a number of smaller, weaker trade unions, which spent members' resources on wasteful and often selfish enterprises, and had little regard for their role as national instruments for the uplifting of the standard of living of their members, and effectively helping the country to grow, socially, politically and economically. These individual unions were often unruly; they went about their business without paying heed to the advice or guidance given by the then Federation (that is, the Tanganyika Federation of Labour) and in effect contributed little or nothing towards the national economic growth.

It is not my intention to repeat what has already been said on various occasions and in various places regarding the defects and shortcomings of the previous trade union movement. Suffice it to say that many trade unionists and people concerned with the welfare of workers and national prosperity felt that there was an urgent need to reorganise the trade union movement and leadership in order to provide the workers and the nation with a strong, solid, disciplined organisation.

The National Union of Tanganyika is now nearly a year-and-a-half old, and I am proud to state before this Conference that its progress has been very remarkable. The confidence of the workers has been regained, and union membership has increased within that short period from roughly one-third to over one-half of the total wage-earning labour force of the country. In addition to being a formidable medium for the negotiation of wages and working conditions, and securing for the members a 40 per cent. wage rise between 1963 and 1964, the National Union of Tanganyika Workers has developed into a promising instrument for national economic and social growth. Union funds which in the past would have disappeared in various unaccountable ways, are now being used in development opportunities, and the creation of more capital for development. I am glad to tell delegates that the Union has already instituted canteens, dispensaries and shops for the workers; it has built new blocks of houses for office accommodation and residences and is running a dairy farm near the capital. These are undoubtedly humble achievements, but their significance lies in the fact that they have been possible under the new union structure and organisation, and within a short period only.

The workers of Tanzania hope that during the period of the current Five-Year Development Plan, not only will there be more low-rent houses, recreational and cultural facilities, shops and other amenities, but the workers' own money, through the Workers' Development Co-operation Section of the union, will be used to start factories under the management of workers themselves. The workers will therefore be direct participants in the production of natural wealth, and will attain a status which has always been denied them. This means that the wealth of the country will be spread out more, so as to conform to one of the main principles of socialism, in addition to obviating the danger which goes with the situation where the bulk of national wealth is concentrated in the hands of only a few people.

Another aspect of this development, which may not be very familiar to all of us, is the fact that, in owning and managing factories, the workers will be brought into contact with the problems which face employers or managers of such units of production. An understanding of these problems should lead to new attitudes amongst workers, and therefore contribute towards improved industrial relations. I would like now, to touch very briefly on the relationship which exists in Tanzania between the trade union movement and the Government. Many orthodox observers from outside Tanzania have failed to see the basis of this relationship. I am of the opinion that many of them will not, for some time to come, be able to view us in proper perspective.

National leaders from Tanzania have always explained that a major characteristic of Tanzania life is unity. The people were one body in the struggle against colonialism, and pledged their allegiance to the democratic political party which, as many of you know, is the Tanganyika African National Union. Together we became an independent nation, and together we continue to fight now against poverty, ignorance and disease. This trend of affairs is, in our circumstances, the only logical one. Hence, Tanzania now continues to express its unity through the ever-growing co-operative movement, the youth movement, the women's organisation, and several other national institutions.

Among the workers it has only been natural to band together with the Government, because the latter represents them and looks after their interests in the same way. Indeed membership of the political party and of the trade union movement is inseparable. The Government intends to raise people's standards of living, and so does the union. To stand together therefore in this great task is the thing to do, especially when we remember that unity in the struggle for political independence greatly facilitated our task.

While talking about working hand in hand with the Government, I would like to say that the workers of Tanzania are behind their Government in condemning Portugal's stubborness in granting independence to Angola, Mozambique and so-called Portuguese Guinea, and in condemning her racist policies: we condemn racial segregation in South Africa and Zimbabwe (so-called Rhodesia); and we call upon the British Government to ensure that Zimbabwe be granted independence under majority rule immediately or else Tanzania workers will hold it responsible for any bloodshed which may occur in the area. We strongly condemn American military intervention in Viet-Nam, Santo Domingo, and the Congo, and deplore the pain and sufferings caused to the citizens of these countries by their acts. We feel that world peace is only possible if individual countries are left to chart their own courses without fear of reactions by the imperialists.

Tanzania is committed to the policy of non-alignment, and to the unity of Mother Africa, and we, the workers, are in full agreement, and will always support our Government. We shall fight relentlessly until the day when all Africa is free from colonialism.

African unity, while expressed politically, will also have to be expressed in the form of a united trade union movement, free from world power pressure, and devoted to the achievement of social and economic justice for all workers in Africa. The formation of the All-Africa Trade Union Federation has been warmly welcomed by the trade union movement in Tanzania, and we hereby call upon all progressive national trade union centres in Africa to join it for the prosperity of Mother Africa and unity of African workers. Further we urge the I.L.O. Governing Body to recognise the All-Africa Trade Union Federation as an African trade union organisation representing African interests, and consult it on all matters concerning African workers.

Turning now to the Report of the Director-General, first of all, I would like, on behalf of the workers in Tanzania, to congratulate the Director-General for his thoughtful and masterly Report and to commend the great effort which has been put into its production.

The question of the programme and structure of the I.L.O. is one of great importance and on which a great deal has been said. That the I.L.O. should, like a living organism, adapt itself to changing surroundings is a matter on which there can be no argument; among the many considerations, I would like to single out the question of representation on the Governing-Body, and express the view held by workers in Tanzania that the Governing Body should reflect changes in membership of the I.L.O.

We tend to think that membership of that Body should reflect increasing diversity of thought and institutions, and should cover as wide a geographical area as possible.

The Director-General's Report mentions the question of human resources and their development, and I would like, at the outset, to state that this question is of vital importance to all countries of the world, particularly to developing countries. I am glad to say that the Government of Tanzania, fully realising the critical nature of this question in relation to national development, has devoted, under the current Five-Year Development Plan, considerable means for the purpose of developing human resources.
This question is a very broad one, and all I can do here is to touch on only a few of its aspects. The expansion of educational facilities has been given high priority in Tanzania, and is aimed at producing future manpower as diverse in training as there will be diverse requirements in the total national economy. Primary education has been raised to standard and intensified so as to provide, at least for those who will proceed no further, a basic and lasting degree of literacy. Secondary school education, in which I am glad to say, is now free, is being expanded to meet growing demands, and those who will go on to universities will have the opportunity to train in both the sciences and the liberal arts in such numbers that they will relieve the country's shortage of manpower at that level. There are plans also to offset the bias towards the arts subjects, which has resulted in very acute shortage of manpower in scientific fields.

Artisans and various other craftsmen will be trained so as to meet the growing needs of industry, while present-day manual workers, whose productivity is greatly hampered by lack of adequate education, are being given the opportunity of attending adult education classes.

On this question of education and technical training, I want to mention that many workers have taken advantage of the opportunities afforded by I.L.O. technical assistance, and I wish to express the appreciation of my union in this respect. Like many other developing countries, Tanzania faces the problem of lack of adequate employment opportunities in industry and commerce and many able-bodied people are therefore idle. On the other hand, the country is blessed with an abundance of natural resources, particularly agricultural land, and the solution to the question of unemployment appears, to a considerable extent, to lie in their utilisation. Under the Five-Year Development Plan, the Government has placed great emphasis on the opening up of land for cultivation and settlement, and the union has pledged itself to support all efforts in that direction. Agriculture will continue to provide a very large part of the national revenue, and commercial agriculture should give rise to increased employment opportunities.

As I said previously the topics of the Report of the Director-General have a very broad scope, and I cannot hope to deal with them at any reasonable length here. I would like now, therefore, to conclude my speech, by expressing the wishes and desire of the workers in Tanzania for a peaceful ending of this session of the Conference, under your leadership, Mr. President. The workers of Tanzania have pledged themselves to strengthen their Union, and the co-operation between them and the Government, and we would be ready to entertain any visitors from the I.L.O. who might wish to observe the development of our organisation there.

Mr. BAVIN (Representative of the International Federation of Plantation, Agricultural and Allied Workers)—As General Secretary of the International Federation of Plantation, Agricultural and Allied Workers, representing millions of plantation and agricultural workers, the majority of whom are in the developing countries, I wish first to express my appreciation of your courtesy in allowing me to address this important Conference.

Although each succeeding year this Conference has provided a forum for important tripartite discussions on matters of great concern to the workers of the world, few items have been of greater moment to them than two of those now being discussed. I refer to the item on agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects, and to the item on the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries. Both of these items are of vital concern to the plantation and agricultural workers throughout the world. We have also read with great interest and appreciation the Director-General's Report and the report on human resources development which was submitted by the Working Party on programme and structure.

The question of agrarian reform has perhaps been one of the most debated aspects of social development in recent years, and in many countries agrarian reform programmes have taken on various forms. Agrarian reform has also all too often become a catchword in political ideology, thus losing its full impact and meaning. One of the more welcome features of the extremely valuable report which the Office has produced is the recognition of the width of this problem, as well as the need for an over-all and co-ordinated approach by the United Nations agencies. In some countries there is an increasing tendency towards a greater contraction of land into single units; in others, there is a preoccupation with problems of redistribution. Any programme of agrarian reform, if it is to be successful, must be based upon social justice and the improvement and well-being of the rural population, as also upon the fullest possible utilisation of the land in the interest of all. The need for both of these factors is being increasingly recognised. There can be and is no excuse at this period of our history for the continuation of less than existence standards of life for the majority of humanity who are living in the rural areas and whose economic and social well-being remains dependent upon the progress which can be achieved there. The question of adequate utilisation of land is the more important in view of the rapid population increase, particularly in developing countries.

Population growth in Asia, Africa and Latin America over the past 20 years has been at the rate of 2.3, 2.4 and 3 per cent, respectively. When one realises that a 3 per cent. increase per year means a doubling of the population over the next 23 years, the term "population explosion" is no exaggeration. This means in conservative terms, provided this trend continues, that the population increase in these areas alone—exclusive of Communist China and Japan—can be expected to be 600 million over the next 20 years. I realise that to a world accustomed to statistics relating to space travel, figures of this nature tend to lose their meaning. What then does this increasing pressure signify in terms of food requirements, in opportunity for gainful employment and overall social development? In the major areas of Asia famine has long been a familiar spectre, and the shadow of want is increasingly spreading to parts of Africa and Latin America, where an almost static rate of food production coincides with constant population growth. In Asia grain production has remained almost constant at around 150 million tons since 1960, with a resultant per head fall in production from 16 to 15 ounces per day. In Latin America production of grain has remained almost static at around 42 million tons since 1958, resulting in a decline in the daily per head production from 21 to 18 ounces. With a small increase in production over the past seven years Africa has just been able to maintain a per head production of approximately 15 ounces.

But this is not the whole story. In many parts of Africa—as, indeed, in the majority of developing regions where agrarian reform is of primary importance—there has been a constant fall in wage-earning employment in recent years despite some increase in industrial production. The high degree of general under-employment and unemployment prevailing has undoubtedly increased the number of subsistence holdings. In such circumstances there would appear to be an urgent need for massive and widespread action, in the developing regions generally, aimed at full utilisation of land and labour resources, which, in my view, will call for large-scale action on the part of the I.L.O. in conjunction with other United Nations agencies.

Unfortunately, in far too many of the developing countries, the low rate of industrial development and continued dependence for export earnings upon cash crops (over the markets for which the producing countries have little or no control) make it almost impossible to finance the large-scale requirements for successful agrarian reform. In certain countries large areas of land are still controlled by absentee landlords or are in the hands of small peasant producers. While the former have generally demonstrated little interest in full land utilisation, leaving production to impoverished tenants or sharecroppers, small peasant producers, mostly living at semi-subsistence level, have practically no opportunity to increase and rationalise production and production methods. Also, many of the areas of potential future harvest are at present largely inaccessible due to the absence of communications, which must be provided. There is, furthermore, an urgent need for large-scale agrarian research and training facilities. Much of the land in certain of the developing countries requires special techniques and adequate provision of fertilisers if cultivation is to have any impact on the situation. Experts have estimated that the minimum financial outlay for the construction of an adequate number of fertiliser factories to provide enough fertiliser to meet increasing food needs alone by the year 1968 will amount to $5,000 million.

In such circumstances it is obvious that any successful action must depend upon an international approach and operation on an unprecedented scale. There is little possibility of countries which are struggling for economic viability, and whose economies continue to be dependent on factors over which they have no control, being capable of meeting this burden alone. It is for this reason that we of the free labour movement have consistently called for and supported all efforts made towards the provision of guaranteed markets for the primary products of the developing countries, and we especially welcome the setting up of the United Nations Trade and Development Board. We have also noted with great interest the construction of an initial co-operation between the I.L.O. and the United Nations trade and development venture, and express our firm hope that this will be continued and intensified. There is also, in our view, need for close co-operation between the I.L.O., the F.A.O. and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in an effort to provide international know-how and the necessary credits for the widespread action which is essential.

Unfortunately, we of the free labour movement are compelled to note with concern the recent crisis within the United Nations, which has expressed itself in an apparent increasing reluctance on the part of certain member countries to support that Organisation adequately. Perhaps it is wrong to assume a similar lack of enthusiasm on the part of certain governments in relation to action discussed by the United Nations Trade and Development Conference. We sincerely trust that the common interest, as served not only by the I.L.O. but also by all other interested agencies, including the United Nations itself, will take precedence over short-sighted national policies or political considerations of an international nature.

The free trade union movement will, in all circumstances, continue and accentuate its activities at all possible levels to ensure the social and economic development of the rural communities, particularly of the developing nations. Unfortunately, these activities have not always been fully understood, not only by employers but also by certain governments which, in their eagerness to achieve rapid economic growth, have failed to recognise the importance of the role which the free trade union movement could play as an ally in their struggle.

In certain instances the free trade unions have become an instrument of governments, while in other cases both employers and governments act without previous consultation with the workers' organisations. This is in clear contradiction to the established principles and standards of the I.L.O. We of the free trade union movement recognise the need for, and seek, close co-operation with governments in the fight against poverty, but I must emphasise that any form of coercion is a poor substitute for willing and voluntary co-operation on the part of the trade union movement. The free trade union movement offers a ready avenue for establishing the link between governments and the masses which is essential to ensure the concerted approach upon which any large-scale economic and social development depends for its success.

The trade union movement and the co-operative movement offer a twofold approach to the democratic concept with which the acceptance of responsibility is irretrievably linked. Both are social philosophies with an ethical-spiritual dimension which offer an alternative to orthodox liberalism as well as to recent varieties of corporativism and communism. Just as the trade union movement has given and is increasingly giving new meaning and dignity to the lives of its members, so the free co-operative development is an essential factor in securing the social and economic justice for the rural population upon which the ultimate success of any programme of agrarian reform depends. It is for this reason that we welcome the discussion on co-operative development at this Conference and express the hope that the deliberations on this item will provide the basis for an appropriate international instrument which the International Labour Conference might well adopt next year.

We also trust that the present discussion on agrarian reform, in which the International Federation of Plantation, Agricultural and Allied Workers has taken an active part, will be followed by appropriate action at the national and international levels under the aegis of the I.L.O.

(The Conference adjourned at 5 p.m.)
NINETEENTH SITTING

Tuesday, 15 June 1965, 10 a.m.

President: Mr. Raza

SIXTH REPORT OF THE SELECTION COMMITTEE \(^1\): SUBMISSION AND ADOPTION

The PRESIDENT—The first item on the agenda this morning is the sixth report of the Selection Committee. I call upon Mr. Menon, Chairman of the Selection Committee, to present the report.

Mr. MENON (Government delegate, India: Chairman of the Selection Committee)—I have the honour to present to the Conference the sixth report of the Selection Committee, the text of which has been distributed to delegates. This report relates only to changes in the composition of Committees. I put the report to the Conference for adoption.

The PRESIDENT—The report is open for discussion. As there are no objections I take it that the Conference adopts the report.

(The report is adopted.)

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now resume the discussion of the Director-General's Report.

Mr. WALLACE (Government delegate, Trinidad and Tobago)—As head of the Trinidad and Tobago Government delegation, I warmly congratulate you on your election to the important office of President of this session of the Conference. I also take this opportunity on behalf of my Government to welcome the new Members of our Organisation—Zambia, Malta, Malawi and Yemen.

I am happy again to have the opportunity of addressing the Conference and taking part in the discussion of the Director-General's Report. My country is very fortunate, and remarkably unique in these times of economic trials and open and disguised racial tribulations, to have at least a fully democratic multiracial society, as reflected to some extent by the composition of our delegation to the Conference, working together harmoniously and well for the common good of our small nation. We believe in the sanctity of the deliberative process in our approach to human problems, particularly in international forums where developing nations have, in theory, some measure of equal status with the fully industrialised and developed countries. We have neither the wealth to afford costly experiments in social and economic development nor the strength to support arbitrary international relations and actions. Our history has bequeathed us the basis for a genuine democracy, which we have made capital of, and our geography necessitates an objective approach in our international relationships, which we pursue steadfastly. And so the Government members, and, I hope, the rest of my country's delegation as well, look forward to another objective and fruitful session of the Conference.

During my speech I shall try to restrict myself to those matters in the Director-General's comprehensive and lucid Report which are of special concern to my country and those requiring special comment in respect of which my country has a point of view to express.

My Government has observed with dismay that South African legislation imposing discriminatory restrictions and inequality of status on persons of the African race has been further reinforced by the Bantu Laws Amendment Act, 1964. We recognise the complexity of the South African problem but would like to point out that the suffering which is being experienced by people of colour in so many parts of our world, in subtle forms of immigration prejudice or open displays of inexplicable hatred, could lead to a serious estrangement between several nations in the north and many in the south. We hope that the expected judgment of the International Court of Justice in the South-West Africa cases will have the anticipated notable impact on the entire question of apartheid. We also hope that satisfactory positive measures and policies will be determined by this Conference to complement the proposals drawn up previously and that, together with the action being pursued by the United Nations Security Council, more real progress will be made in solving the South African question.

My Government welcomes the reorganisation of the International Labour Office to permit the more effective co-ordination of its activities. The three principal objectives of strengthening field operations, grouping of Headquarters staff and improvement of programme-planning and control are likely to achieve the benefits and improvements in efficiency which are envisaged. Of special interest to Trinidad and Tobago, and the Caribbean as a whole, is the strengthening of the Field Department. As pointed out in the Director-General’s Report, the main criteria which have guided the Director-General are decentralisation, unity of purpose, and the consideration of actual needs of each country. They are in themselves very important and immediate sufficient to meet the pressing pleas at the 1963 and 1964 Sessions of the Conference regarding the Caribbean nations. The Director-General himself has indicated that the structure of the new department is flexible and provides a proper basis for further decentralisation. In this connection I would like to state, as I hinted before, that there exists the need at present for further decentralisation of the Latin American branch of the Field Department. We in the Caribbean, and in Trinidad and Tobago in particular, enjoy satisfactory relations with our sister nations in Central and South America, but we have different histories, languages, cultures, and, in many respects, social and economic problems. The proposed Latin American branch will not, in the view of my Government, achieve smooth and successful results in its Caribbean section. Perhaps a smaller but parallel organisation, with the same objective of composite endeavours covering all major areas of I.L.O. activities for the entire Caribbean or even the English-speaking countries in the Caribbean, would be better able to determine the needs of and service the area. The Labour Administration Seminar to be sponsored by the I.L.O. for English-speaking Caribbean labour officers in 1966 demonstrates the need for this special treatment of the Caribbean which I advocate. The permanency of the suggested services requires the selection and training of nationals for their successful operation. The need to appoint suitable persons from the regions concerned in I.L.O. activities has been recognised and acknowledged but, bearing in mind the disparity in educational development between the industrialised and developing countries, a protected method of recruitment, avoiding unfair competition and affording additional training where necessary, should be decided upon. It is not desirable to observe slavishly the principle of proportionate staffing in regional operations. Accordingly, this rigid provision should be waived.

\(^1\) See Appendix I, p. 487.

My Government deeply appreciates the tremendous work which has already been done by the International Labour Organisation on the question of human resources development. We are deeply interested in the present programmes which have been devised by the Director-General and also in the comprehensive analysis made and consideration given by the Working Party of the Governing Body of the International Labour Organisation on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. The Working Party, although so recently established, has nevertheless sought to grapple swiftly with the problems of underdevelopment, underemployment, insufficient development of skills, high population growth and low productivity, among others. The programme of the Director-General is commendable and the further action charted by the Working Party provides the basis for future progress which, at this stage, appears to hold much promise for developing countries. We in Trinidad and Tobago, with assistance from the International Labour Organisation and other specialised agencies, and through our own extensive domestic programmes regarding technical, vocational and secondary education, as described in our second Five-Year Development Programme (1964-68), have been making tremendous strides in promoting the widest measures for full employment and the expansion of employment opportunities. In this connection it was only last year that a rural mission was carried out in my country jointly by the United Nations and the F.A.O. under the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance. There was also a U.N.E.S.C.O. mission in education planning, and very shortly a productivity centre is to be established with the help of the I.L.O. We are, therefore, striving very hard and with all the necessary assistance from all the available sources to eradicate unemployment and underemployment. But it is well known that much needs to be done regarding economic advancement in all developing countries. It seems, therefore, that the massive practical research at the national, regional and international levels to determine what theories will have the maximum impact on the solution of the problems of underdevelopment and unemployment, as suggested by the Director-General, needs not only to be approved but also to be undertaken with dispatch. The other avenues of action suggested by the Working Party, in particular the suggested approach to the international bodies—U.N.E.S.C.O., the F.A.O., the W.H.O., the United Nations and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development—are worthy of immediate consideration and implementation.

Regarding the Director-General’s programme for the development of social institutions, I would like to place on record the appreciation of the Government of Trinidad and Tobago for the interest shown by the I.L.O. in training of personnel in industrial relations. We hope to be establishing shortly in Trinidad the workers’ education section of our Labour-Management College with the expected availability of a suitable expert from the I.L.O.; and in 1966 an I.L.O. Labour Administration Seminar for English-speaking Caribbean labour officers, which I referred to earlier, is expected to be held in Trinidad. We are very grateful for the assistance rendered by the I.L.O. in these projects.

Among the programme areas described by the Director-General in connection with the development of social institutions is the development of labour legislation. In Part I of his Report the Director-General has stated, _inter alia_, that “Governments must also aim at establishing the necessary machinery for the examination and solution of differences which might arise between workers and employers, taking into account the interests of the unemployed, underemployed, underemployment, insufficient development of skills, high population growth and low productivity, among others. The needs, has recently attempted to achieve this end by the enactment of an Industrial Stabilisation Act, 1965. The Act provides for the compulsory recognition of trade unions and industrial associations; the preservation of collective bargaining; the prohibition of victimisation on account of trade union activity; the provision in collective agreements of suitable machinery for the settlement of disputes, including conciliation and arbitration; the reference, if considered necessary, of unresolved disputes to an industrial court independent of administrative, executive or political control, whose membership consists of a judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature as president, a barrister or solicitor of at least ten years' standing, and experts in economics, labour relations and accountancy; the establishment of a fully independent economic and research unit under the direction of the Court for the dissemination of information to any interested person or organisation; the regulation of prices of certain essential commodities and the maintenance of prices at a level which will account the interest of the nation in certain cases, in which connection the Court and parties in collective negotiations are expected to guide themselves by the following considerations: (a) the necessity to maintain a high level of domestic capital accumulation with a view to increasing the rate of economic growth and to providing greater employment opportunities; (b) the necessity to maintain and expand the level of employment; (c) the necessity to ensure for workers a fair share of the benefits derived from increases in productivity in enterprises; (d) the necessity to prevent gains in the wages of workers from being affected adversely by unnecessary and unjustified price increases; (e) the necessity to preserve and promote the competitive position of products of Trinidad and Tobago in the domestic market as well as in overseas markets; (f) the necessity for the establishment and maintenance of reasonable differentials in rewards between different categories of skills; (g) the need to maintain for Trinidad and Tobago a favourable balance of trade and balance of payments; and (h) the need to ensure the continued ability of the Government of Trinidad and Tobago to finance development programmes in the public sector. The Act was well received by our country as a whole and has brought about a more serious and welcome approach to our labour relations, and we look forward to greater stability in the field of industrial relations.

There is one last point on which I would like to touch regarding the resolution concerning programmes of technical assistance and other activities of the I.L.O. in Africa and other developing regions. With the growing number of States achieving independence, it is becoming more and more apparent that the standards previously set by the I.L.O. are difficult to maintain or introduce because of the economic problems being experienced by developing countries. While the industrialised communities are finding solutions to problems of technological change and automation, thereby ensuring increased productivity and economic growth, developing countries have not been able to solve their basic problems of unemployment and underemployment. The disparity in development is further aggravated by growing trade barriers and declining markets and prices. While the new Constitution is an indication that active consideration is being given at the present time to the economic problems of developing countries, other immediate remedies seem necessary. For instance, if highly developed and industrialised countries would transfer their gains in progressive economic growth to developing countries by paying higher prices for the primary products of those countries or reducing protective tariffs against them, an important start would be made towards solving the problems so much discussed in international forums everywhere but so little acted upon anywhere. It would be a sacrifice, but unless some positive attention is paid to the declared and recognised truth that "poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere", the aims and purposes of the International Labour Organisation are less likely to be fully achieved.

I have tried to examine those aspects of the Director-General's Report which are of particular concern to my country. I now wish to make it clear that nothing which I have said must be construed as criticism of the work of the Director-General, the Office or the Organisation. In fact, my Government greatly appreciates the work which is being done by the International Labour Organisation and recognises it as a valuable and indispensable organ in the promotion of human dignity and social justice and is proud to be a Member of this august body.

Interpretation from French: Mr. ZAKARYA (Government delegate, Afghanistan)—May I first of all welcome the delegations of the countries which have recently joined this Organisation and congratulate them most sincerely in the name of the Royal Government of Afghanistan. It is with real pleasure that my delegation sees Malawi, Malta, Yemen and Zambia represented here. The accession of these countries to independence is a triumph not only for their peoples but also a victory for the other Members of our Organisation. We are most happy to see the number of Members increase so that the Organisation approaches the universality at which it aims. We are certain that the new Members will teach us much by explaining to us their experience in the social field.

I should also like to congratulate you, Mr. President, on your election to the presidency of this session of the Conference. During the last session the Government delegate of Afghanistan spoke on the impending political and social reforms and of a new Constitution which was being prepared. This Constitution was to be based on the principles of democracy stemming from the very spirit of our people and from their conviction of the respect which is due to the principles of equality, dignity and freedom of man and social justice.

At this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference I am glad to be able to say that the new Constitution has been adopted. It reflects the basic ideas of the Afghans in the light of the requirements of our time and of the general law of human society. The Consti-tion provides for justice and equality for all and establishes political, economic and social democracy. It ensures the freedom and welfare of the Afghan people and aims at the eventual evolution of a prosperous and progressive society careful to respect the dignity of man. It is based on democratic principles only; it is in conformity with the principles and the spirit of the United Nations Charter and the Constitution of the I.L.O.; and it respects the rights of man as set out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The new Constitution of Afghanistan bases our future economic system on solid foundations and creates an atmosphere which enables the individual to participate more fully in the national development effort.

I will now go on to the Director-General's Report. This document is devoted to the programme and structure of the I.L.O. and stresses the need for human resources utilisation, the development of social institutions and the improvement of conditions of life and work.

Although most of the Asian, African, Latin American and Near East countries have drawn up economic and social development plans, employment still raises serious problems for them. The fact that a large number of persons can find employment for only a few days a year or not at all leads to a certain degree of social instability—a matter which indeed has also affected developed countries in the past few years. The employment problem is rendered more delicate as a result of the growth in population following the progress of modern science which has to a large extent succeeded in mastering epidemics.

The fall in the death rate while the birth rate remains constant has caused a large increase in population, and an exodus towards the towns on the part of the workless rural population. As a representative of a developing country, I should like to ask the I.L.O. urgently to expand its operational activities programme. Afghanistan has appreciated the importance of achieving and maintaining full employment, which is one of the essential factors of economic stability. In our case economic development is planned through two five-year economic promotion programmes.

The first began in 1956 and ended in September 1961; the second began in September 1961 and will end in 1966. The major preoccupation of the authors of the first five-year plan in Afghanistan was to lay the basis for future development, particularly by improving the roads, building hydroelectric power stations, often combined with irrigation dams. The construction and improvement of several airports permitted air traffic to be intensified.

The main objects of the second five-year plan include expansion of agriculture and the development of arable land in order to produce not only food products but also the raw materials required for industry and the development of an export trade. Furthermore, the second five-year plan provides for the development of industries, construction of roads and telephone lines, progress in education, etc.

From the social point of view, the construction of low-cost housing for the workers, and of markets for the purchase of food and other consumer goods, is soon to be undertaken. The markets and housing estates will be near the workplaces. Furthermore, welfare and recreational centres are being established to encourage a better outlook among the workers, and to help them with their education and general cultural advance.

The standardisation of sickness and invalidity insurance schemes and the establishment of funds for retirement pensions are being continued and soon more ample developments will be given to this aspect of the protection of labour at the national level. At the same time, it will be possible to intensify our action in the field of industrial safety and health.

I have tried to summarise the efforts we are making to improve the employment situation, and the development of social institutions and conditions of life and work in our country. In undertaking such efforts we place our hopes to a large extent on the activities of the international agencies from which we expect valuable assistance.

I should like to conclude by expressing the hope that the work of this session of the Conference will be successful, and that our Organisation will contribute increasingly to the progress of mankind and to the establishment of a better world in which there will be peace and justice and happiness for all.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. TERRA ILARRAZ (Employers' delegate, Uruguay)—In the name of the employers of Uruguay I should like to associate myself with the congratulations expressed to you, Mr. President, on your well-deserved election to the presidency of this assembly.

We should also like to indicate our support for the new orientation of the I.L.O. envisaged by the Director-General in his Report. We welcome particularly the creation of the Field Department which will have responsibility for regional conferences and the co-ordination of regional activities.

The principles of the I.L.O. must be applied; the new system, which provides for a knowledge of regional difficulties, and of the best way for technical experts to solve them, will result in greater efficiency.

The headquarters of CINTERFOR (the Inter-American Vocational Training Research and Documentation Centre) will be in Montevideo, and we hope that it will contribute to development plans by training those responsible for promoting rural, industrial and handicrafts development, as well as technicians in the cooperative system.

Montevideo is also the seat of L.A.F.T.A. (the Latin American Free Trade Association). Any free trade association must aspire to full employment and improvement of the living conditions of the peoples which it represents. This is laid down in the statute of the L.A.F.T.A., and unquestionably the I.L.O. will be able to aid this institution very greatly.

We should like to congratulate the Director-General on one of the theses put forward in his Report which is valuable and fundamental, namely that of the democratisation of development plans.
Through education, starting with primary school, we have to train rural workers in the spirit of the co-operative system, i.e. a system in which one can, without losing one's free will, co-operate with one's neighbour in an organised way, working towards a higher level of social development.

We should like to quote from the writings of the famous Genevess, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, "It is not a question of teaching sciences to the child, but rather of giving him a taste for them, and of providing him with the methods through which he can come to know them." Education must start from childhood in school, with instruction provided by trained teachers, and then go on to secondary studies and university. Use should be made of modern audio-visual methods such as the cinema, radio, and television, so that a wide fund of knowledge may be acquired. Such knowledge may be of a technical nature, relating to modern methods of agriculture, or the use of fertilisers; this is an area in respect of which the F.A.O. is providing assistance. The I.L.O. must also contribute to the spread of knowledge.

Through consumers' and producers co-operatives, and with suitable credits, we can rapidly achieve agrarian reform. We have an example in the success which has been achieved in the Federal Republic of Germany and in Israel, where the land is given to those who farm it, if they are not already the owners, at a reasonable cost. But we would urge the United Nations Trade and Development Board to work for a fair price for agricultural products, not forgetting the fact that more than 60 per cent. of the workers engaged in agriculture have a standard of living which is inferior to that of the industrial workers.

Raising incomes means improving the social conditions of rural workers; it means more employment and higher production through the application of modern technology. But, in order to achieve satisfactory results, constant attention must be paid to improving the commercial value of products because, where food products are concerned, the future of humanity depends upon them.

In conclusion, we should like to express our best wishes for the success of this Conference in its highly important work.

Interpretation from Japanese: Mr. KO-DAIRA (Minister of Labour, Japan)—Mr. President, may I at the outset express my sincere congratulations on your election to the presidency of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.

It is a great pleasure to me to have the opportunity of participating in the general discussion at this Conference on behalf of the Government, as Minister of Labour of Japan. Firstly, I wish to inform you that the ratification of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), was approved by the National Diet on May 17, together with the Bills amending the domestic laws concerned. This has been a long-standing issue in my country. I must also state that this ratification of the Convention was deposited with Mr. Morse, Director-General of the I.L.O., yesterday.

Almost seven years have passed since the Committee on Freedom of Association took up the matter of the ratification of Convention No. 87 and labour-management relations in the public sector in Japan. This delay has been due to the fact that it became a major political issue since it directly concerns the public welfare of the people.

While this long-standing political issue was settled peacefully with the support of the people, I believe that at the same time this achievement owes much to the I.L.O. Governing Body, the Committee on Freedom of Association and the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission, which have handled the matter with fairness and in an appropriate manner. The Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission, in particular, examined the Japanese case in a very thorough and energetic manner, and at the final stage of its visit to Japan it took up the case directly with the Government. And I am confident that through this achievement mutual confidence between the I.L.O. and my country will deepen further and that our co-operation with the I.L.O. will be strengthened.

Now I shall turn to the central theme of the Director-General's Report. Two years ago the fundamental problem of the I.L.O., namely the problem of how to adapt the activities of this Organisation to the changing world situation, was taken up by the Director-General in his Report to the Conference. Since then, positive discussions have been carried on at the past two sessions of the General Conference. My colleagues have also had opportunities to participate in these discussions. As a result, we see from the Report of the Director-General to this session that it is now proposed to concentrate the major programme areas of the I.L.O. on three points, including the development of human resources.

These three major programme areas are important for both developed countries and developing countries. My country also takes a keen interest in these programme areas. I may point out that, with the recent rapid economic progress in my country, the employment situation and working conditions have been remarkably improved. However, as it is likely that Japan will face a real manpower shortage in the near future, new developments in labour policy which are adapted to the changes in social and economic structures are much needed. The aim of the labour policy of the Japanese Government is to provide such opportunities and conditions for workers as will enable them to bring their abilities into full play for the economic development of the country and thereby achieve a better life for themselves. With this aim, my Government is now taking positive measures towards harmonising economic and social policies, the results of which are gradually proving successful. It is my firm conviction that labour policies should be pursued on the basis of respect for human beings. When labour problems are being dealt with in my country a greater emphasis is placed upon the value of workers as responsible human beings than upon the value of workers as productive power.

In this respect the fact that the problem of human resources development is being considered as one of the major programme areas of the I.L.O., following the decisions arrived at in the Nineteenth Session of the Conference, merits our special attention. This fact has been of great significance to my country, and I believe that this is equally true of developed countries suffering from a shortage of labour, as well as of developing countries which are endeavouring to cope with the problem of human resources, the solution of which is fundamental to their economic and social development.

I readily hope that the priorities of the I.L.O. in this field will be fruitful. However, it must be pointed out that, apart from the question of the organisational structure of the I.L.O., the priorities established as regards staffing and budgetary appropriations. The activities which the I.L.O. is called upon to undertake will be numerous. In order to cope with these requests within the framework of its limited financial and human resources, care should be taken to concentrate the available resources of the I.L.O. on the major programmes of the Organisation in a realistic and resolute spirit, such as was shown in the selection of the three main programme areas of the I.L.O.

A new orientation of the I.L.O. seems to be emerging from the serious discussions which have been taking place on the programme and structure of the Organisation; the consensus on the views of member States as reached in these discussions, will enable the I.L.O. to adapt itself to changing world situations.

The Japanese Government has always shown great understanding towards this Organisation and co-operated with its constructive efforts. As an indication of this, I may refer to the fact that in 1960 when the International Institute for Labour Studies was established, the Japanese Government voluntarily made a contribution, and, similarly, in the case of the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training in Turin, to be opened this autumn, the Government also decided to make an appropriate financial contribution. I would like, at the same time, to reaffirm that the Japanese Government will continue to extend greater co-operation and support in furtherance of the constructive work of the I.L.O.

Finally I wish to conclude my statement by saying again that it is a great pleasure for me to be able to participate in the discussions on the further expansion of international co-operation in the field of labour, particularly at this time when there is an increasing need for international co-operation in attaining peace in the world political situation, which is far from being stable at this moment.

Mr. GUNTER (Minister of Labour, United Kingdom)—Mr. President, may I, in company with all the previous speakers, congratulate you very warmly upon your election as President of this session of the Conference. And, of course, it also gives me very great pleasure indeed, on behalf of my country, to welcome three member countries of our Commonwealth—Malawi, Malta and Zambia—who have recently attained independence and joined the International Labour Organisation.

I am glad to have this opportunity to contribute to the debate on the programme, and indeed on the structure, of the I.L.O. This is a matter of crucial importance to the Organisation and the member States. The I.L.O. must face the problems and meet the needs of a rapidly changing world. The Director-General has done us all a great service in stimulating by his present and earlier Reports the rethinking of the Organisation's role, its purpose and its priorities. This Report sets out in an imaginative way a major part of the objectives of the I.L.O.'s work in the broad areas of the development of human resources, labour relations, and conditions of life and work.

The I.L.O. has already done much in these fields. Over the past decade the Organisation has increased substantially its direct practical help to developing countries, but I am sure we would all agree that there is much more that remains to be done. My Government has recognised the importance of this. We have increased substantially our contribution to the United Nations Special Fund and to the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, which finance the bulk of the I.L.O.'s field work.

In 1965 my country is contributing to these two funds $11.75 million, which represents an increase of 17.5 per cent. over our contributions for 1964, despite the fact that we have to scrutinise with the greatest care our overseas expenditure. We are also supporting field activities through the I.L.O.'s regular budget. We are fully behind the I.L.O. in its efforts to enable the developing countries to improve the lot of their peoples.

But the resources available to the I.L.O. cannot be unlimited. This makes it doubly important to ensure that our resources are put to the best use. This requires, first, better organisation and methods of work; and second, an unfinishing reappraisal of activities which in the circumstances of today are less essential. I hope it will not be taken amiss if I say that the I.L.O., like most large organisations, finds it more difficult to cut down less essential activities than to recognise new needs. Both processes are clearly required. The improved arrangements for programme planning, coordination and appraisal, outlined in the Director-General's Report, clear our way to secure improved efficiency and greater responsiveness to changing priorities. I welcome this wholeheartedly. I also welcome the fact that the Governing Body is reviewing the Organisation's activities to help determine where those priorities should lie.

My own feeling is that the I.L.O. must beware of stretching the boundaries of its activities too widely. Many problems relating to economic growth, international trade and incomes policy are at present engaging the attention of national governments and indeed of other international agencies. The I.L.O. has a contribution to make to the labour and social aspects of these problems. Involvement beyond this point would not, in my opinion, be justified. Moreover, it would make demands on the resources of the Organisation which are needed for the practical work which it is uniquely qualified to do.

Concentration of the available resources on this practical work should, in my view, be the first priority. For this reason, less time and effort should perhaps be given to discussion of broad matters of principle by the Conference, by regional conferences and by Industrial Committees, and more resources given to meetings of experts devoted to specific practical problems, perhaps on a regional basis. Such meetings of experts could assist the Office to give more practical advice in relation to actual problems which they are facing at the present time. Through the dissemination of reports, and the analysis of the methods and experience of different countries, they could help to bridge the gap which exists between the now well-developed code of general standards set by the Conference and the difficult problems faced by developing countries—and the experts sent by the I.L.O. to assist them—in trying to put these general standards into practical application.

I do not make these points in any spirit of negative criticism. Change is inevitable. Adjustment to it is a necessary and indeed a difficult process.

This same problem—the need to change and the need to modernise—faces us in my own country. I should like to tell you in a few words a little about what we are doing in the United Kingdom to face the problems that arise with change. It is not without relevance to our broader discussion of the I.L.O.'s problem.

In the United Kingdom we believe that, if we are to improve the standard of living of our people and at the same time meet our responsibilities towards the developing countries, we must not only accept economic change as inevitable, we must promote it and we must work actively. We have thus set up a number of new departments, including departments with responsibilities for economic planning and technology. A new Ministry of Overseas Development has been set up to co-ordinate our activities in the field of aid, including financial as well as technical co-operation.

In my own department, the Ministry of Labour, we are concerned with the fundamental tasks of promoting the effective deployment and use of our manpower. This involves a whole complex of problems in the field of manpower research and manpower planning, industrial training, labour mobility and, of course, industrial relations.

In the United Kingdom we are faced with an over-all labour shortage in the next decade. This was highlighted last year in the first report of my department's Manpower Research Unit. This was a survey of total manpower resources at national level and their future distribution between broad groups of industries. It has been followed by a second report, which is a more detailed study of occupational trends in the metal-manufacturing and metal-using industries. Further studies are now being undertaken of the manpower requirements of different industries and of requirements at the different levels of skill. We need this kind of research and fact-finding as the basis of our manpower planning.

The work of the Manpower Research Unit has underlined the importance for the United Kingdom of making the best use of its limited manpower resources. In his Report the Director-General has rightly stressed the need for immediate action to improve the quality of the labour force. In my country this need is being met in part by direct government action through increased provision for short-term vocational training. The number of government training centres has been doubled over the past two years. Four more centres will be opened by the end of this year, and two more are planned for 1967.

To secure an improvement in the quality of training on a wider scale, we are looking to the implementation of the Industrial Training Act. This Act provides for the establishment of training boards for the various industries, charged with the responsibility of seeing that training is adequate in quantity and quality and that the cost is shared equitably by employers in the industry. Five industrial training boards have now been established. With others soon to be established, these will cover about 30 per cent. of all workers in civil employment. I expect to set up several more boards during the course of this year.

Economic and technological change will create new jobs for which training will be required, but it will also mean that old jobs will disappear. The fear of insecurity lies heavily on the people of my country. It means that their traditional place of work, maybe their hopes and the place into which they were born, will have to change. Of course none of us in our hearts really likes change which results in our own personal inconvenience. The United Kingdom Government has therefore introduced legislation to provide compensation based on earnings, age and length of service for those whose jobs disappear through no fault of their own. This Redundancy Payments Bill, which is now before Parliament, to me embodies a very important social principle. It recognises that a man has rights in his job, and that his rights gain in value with the passing of time.

This legislation is an important part of our plans to smooth the course of industrial change, by making change more acceptable to those most directly affected by it. We have also made geographical mobility easier by substantial improvements in the help given to men who have to take work away from home. Our employment services, which have a big part to play in the movement of workers between jobs, are being overhauled. Measures like these will increase the mobility of labour, which is essential for change and growth.

However, it is not only employers who have to face up to change. Institutions, if they are to retain their usefulness, must undergo conscious adaptation at the present time. The Director-General refers in his Report to the "new" responsibilities of organisations representing broad interest groups. The United Kingdom Government has this year set up a Royal Commission on Trade Unions and Employers' Associations to consider, against the background of a modern industrial society, the role of trade unions and employers' associations in promoting the interests of their members and in accelerating the social and economic advancement of the nation. I believe that this Royal Commission reviewing the scene will make a tremendously important contribution to re-establishing the proper role of employers' and workers' organisations in a modern society.

These are some of the ways in which the Government of my country has been seeking to adapt its programme to the imperative demands of economic change and development. The I.L.O. also, as I have sought to show earlier, is subject to the same compulsions. I welcome the active measures which are being taken within the Organisation to think out afresh its role and activities in terms of the needs of today. On both the national and international plane it is only by constant shaping and reshaping that we can hope to meet the needs of a changing world and to fulfil the aspirations of those whom we seek to serve.

Mr. BECU (Representative of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions)—I am grateful to the President and to the Officers of the Conference for permitting me to convey to them the views of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions on the most important aspects of the activities and programmes of the International Labour Organisation.

I congratulate the Director-General on his constructive Report, which in the circumstances has rightly been confined to general questions of programme and structure which have proved to be of a non-controversial character. I also commend the Governing Body's Working Party on the Programme and Structure of the Organisation for its comprehensive report which has likewise been submitted to the Conference.

Before commenting more specifically on these two reports, permit me to make some general remarks about the co-operation between the international free and democratic trade union movement and the I.L.O. The free and democratic trade union movement looks back on a long-standing and unswerving tradition of support for the I.L.O. is no coincidence to which free and democratic trade unions look back in support of the I.L.O. is no coincidence since both the I.C.F.T.U. and the I.L.O., although different in structure, are guided by the same fundamental principle that "poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere." Both organisations are world-wide in character and have the common objective of advancing on a world-wide basis economic democracy together with social justice as foundations for universal and lasting peace. In fact, the great progress which the I.L.O., especially through the International Labour Code, has achieved in contributing to the improvement of social conditions in its member States has in the final analysis primarily been due to the uninter support and co-operation which it was given by the free and democratic trade union movement, both within the International Labour Conferences when labour standards were formulated and at national levels where free and democratic trade unions were making particular efforts to get these standards ratified and adequately applied.

The I.C.F.T.U., aware of the new tasks which the I.L.O. faces in view of changing world patterns—particularly in view of its ever-increasing membership—has been supporting the view that the I.L.O. needs to adjust and adapt its activities in order to keep abreast of the growing need to accelerate social and economic progress in all parts of the world. The I.C.F.T.U. has welcomed the decision of the I.L.O. to expand—in addition to the standard-setting activities—its activities in the field of technical co-operation, and we have demanded in that connection that new emphasis be laid on educational activities.

We welcome in this connection the decision of the I.L.O.—after it had already taken a valuable initiative in establishing the International Institute for Labour Studies—to establish the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training in Turin. It can be sure of the support of the international free trade union movement for these two institutions.

We think, however, that the activities of the I.L.O. in the field of technical co-operation, which are of extreme importance to developing countries, should be linked much more closely to I.L.O. principles and standards. In other words, the fundamental principles of the I.L.O., its standards, should be used as a guiding light for its activities in the field of technical co-operation. With the introduction of technical co-operation, its activities and objectives have not changed. Standard-setting and technical co-operation are and must be mutually reinforcing. The standard-setting activities, as confirmed by the Director-General, must remain the backbone of the Organisation. Technical research and technical co-operation must be carried out as a function of the standard-setting activities. The I.L.O. membership is world-wide in character, and its standards and principles must be formulated for world-wide application.
This, of course, does not mean that the methods of an effective application of I.L.O. standards have to be the same in all member countries. The method of application of world-wide standards will clearly vary from country to country to the extent that governments, under the pressure of workers' organisations, are willing to enforce them, but also to the extent that the I.L.O. itself is in a position to streamline its activities in the field of technical cooperation and research and technical research to this end. In addition, the I.L.O. may tomorrow for the enforcement of Conventions and Recommendations be badly in need of improvement. The urgent appeals of the free and democratic trade unions, and in particular of the I.C.F.T.U., to make that machinery more effective, have obviously not been sufficient. An effective improvement can only be achieved with the constructive support of governments of member States and, last but not least, of the International Labour Office itself.

We have noted with great satisfaction the successful result of the work of the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission when this Commission was, for the first time, put into motion in order to deal with the case of Japan. We were deeply gratified when, shortly after the Commission had presented its recommendations, Convention No. 87 was ratified by Japan. The continuous and insistent fight of the Japanese trade unions, strongly supported by the international community of free and democratic trade unions, has thus borne fruit. On the other hand, there are a great number of member States which, despite the increasing concern of world-wide public opinion, continue to violate the fundamental principles of the I.L.O. Human and trade union rights are amongst the first to be suppressed in countries ruled by totalitarian regimes, whether of the fascist or communist type.

Only two years ago the I.L.O. was facing a serious crisis because some of its fundamental principles were consistently violated in a country which practises racial discrimination of the worst type against the large majority of its people. We believe that the whole work of the Organisation would be endangered if certain governments continued to violate consistently the fundamental principles of the Organisation. We therefore appeal to all those who believe in the I.L.O. Human and trade union rights are amongst the first to be suppressed in countries ruled by totalitarian regimes, whether of the fascist or communist type.

Having mentioned the co-operation between the I.C.F.T.U. and the I.L.O., which has been so fruitful in the past, I would like to dwell for a few moments on the nature of the relationship between these two organisations. The I.C.F.T.U. is a non-governmental organisation based on free workers' organisations in all parts of the world with voluntary membership. Our activities are solely financed by workers' money. Ours is a mass organisation which represents, defends and fights for the interests of the working population. The I.L.O. is an intergovernmental organisation of governments, and based on a tripartite structure according to which workers are represented in the governing and advisory organs of the I.L.O. by one-quarter or one-third in voting strength. The I.L.O. and the I.C.F.T.U. on the basis of their structures are thus not in conflict, since both have clear-cut functions to perform which are different in nature. As the I.C.F.T.U. could not assume any of the functions which the I.L.O. is carrying out, the I.L.O. in turn cannot assume the functions of the I.C.F.T.U. without violating one of its fundamental principles, that of trade union autonomy and independence from employers' and governmental control. We have welcomed, and I would like to endorse this once again, the statement made by the Director-General in his Report to the 48th Session of the International Labour Conference, according to which "the I.L.O., not being a trade union organisation, cannot itself create trade union structures, nor engage in union action. It cannot intervene in the internal life of trade unions and it should not become involved in the ideological controversies between unions."

In the context of the reorganisation of the International Labour Organisation we have noted with great satisfaction the trend towards decentralisation of its work. The introduction of the new structure for the field services, for example, constitutes a promising step in this direction. At the same time, however, we would like to see an expansion of the workers' relations service of the Office to the field services. This would ensure close co-operation in this field between the I.L.O.'s activities and the respective workers' organisations.

However, while we express ourselves strongly in favour of a decentralisation of the activities of the I.L.O., we would object to the establishment of regional standards by the I.L.O. Regional standards would mean a serious danger for the universal character of the International Labour Code.

We reiterate our strong support for the tripartite structure of the I.L.O., which provides for full autonomy of each group. We therefore contend that any proposal which might interfere with the principle of group autonomy should first be discussed and decided by the groups concerned.

I have already made some comments from this rostrum on the I.L.O.'s Workers' Education Programme. The I.C.F.T.U. position is well known in this respect. We fully support the conclusions of the Meeting of Experts on Workers' Education which was held in December 1964, and we express the hope that the future activities of the I.L.O. in this field will be guided by the conclusions of the Experts.

We express our full agreement with the proposals of the major programme areas as laid down in the Director-General's Report. As to the scope of these programmes, we fully agree with the Working Party on the Programme and Structure of the Organisation when it concluded in paragraph 32 of its report "that all member States of the Organisation could derive benefit from the technical contribution which the I.L.O. could make to the solution of the various problems facing them, according to the importance and urgency of their requirements and to the degree of development of their country."

The I.C.F.T.U. is confident that the I.L.O. will strike a proper balance in establishing programme priorities so as to attain the objectives of the major programme areas in all its member States.

In considering the items on the agenda of this Conference we recognise a certain balance. The problems discussed are of interest to workers in developing and developed countries. We have taken an active part in the work on each of the agenda items. Without denying the great importance of all these items, I will refer here only to two of them, those dealing with co-operative development and agrarian reform, both of them being essential instruments for economic and social progress.

Trade union development and co-operative development should go hand in hand in developing countries so as to ensure an equitable distribution of the burden and the benefits resulting from economic development to all sections of the population. Both trade unions and co-operatives can make an important contribution to the development efforts of their governments provided that they can function on a free and independent basis.

In many developing countries agrarian reform is a prerequisite both of economic development and of social betterment, and we welcome the contribution which, on the basis of the valuable report submitted to it, this Conference will certainly make to the social aspects of agrarian reform.

In conclusion, I should like to reiterate the fullest possible co-operation of the I.C.F.T.U. in assisting the I.L.O. in its efforts to implement its fundamental aims and principles in all its member States.

Interpretation from French: Mr. PHAN-Trong-Nhiem (Government delegate, Viet-Nam)

—Mr. President, it is a great pleasure for me to join those speakers who have congratulated you on your election as President of this session of the Conference. On behalf of my Government and delegation, I wish you every success in this high office.

I should also like to express the fraternal greetings of Viet-Nam to the delegations of Zambia, Malta, Malawi and Yemen who are attending this Conference for the first time.

We have read with interest the Director-General's Report, which deserves serious examination on the part of all those who have faith in the ideal of social justice and progress for the working masses.

For the past two years we have devoted ourselves to the question of the adaptation of the I.L.O. to the changing times, in the light of the political and social transformations that are taking place.

We are particularly glad to note that the Director-General is devoting his attention above all in each of the three major programme areas to the real needs of the developing countries, to which absolute priority should be given in the years to come. The I.L.O. must gear its activities towards assisting and supporting these countries in their efforts to do away with all the consequences of the delay in development from which they still suffer and from the poverty which prevails everywhere. The I.L.O. must and should play an important role in bringing together the "north" and the "south"; and in bringing about more effective co-operation with the industrialised countries so as to narrow the gap that separates them from the less developed countries.

We believe there should be an intensification of the regional activities of the I.L.O. The system of regional technical commissions and conferences, regional and interregional seminars, and missions of experts which can look into local problems, should definitely be encouraged. It is also desirable that the regional offices of the I.L.O. be increased in number and strengthened so that the developing countries may benefit more effectively from their experience.

As regards the drafting of Conventions, greater flexibility is needed to take into account the vast diversity in local conditions. Of course, it is difficult to set standards that can be accepted and applied by all States. However, bearing in mind the very different social levels in the member States, and in order to enable each to derive the greatest amount of benefit from the regional activities of the I.L.O., should we not increase the number of Recommendations rather than have a greater number of rigid Conventions? The latter could be confined to fundamental problems of direct interest to the majority of Members.

But even under these conditions it is necessary to adapt them, when the time comes, to the new demands of a fluctuating world. We therefore support the Director-General when he suggests pruning the International Labour Code in order to give greater vigour to the new shoots. The creation of a tripartite revision committee with terms of reference covering a systematic but partial revision of outmoded Conventions will no doubt open the way to progress in an atmosphere of social justice.

Some previous speakers have stressed that, in view of these prospects of progress, peace is an essential, and indeed indispensable, condition for the promotion of social justice—which is, as I said, the ideal of our Organisation. On this point, I am in agreement.

However, for the past quarter of a century in Viet-Nam we have not had this peace which is so ardently desired. Following the terrible years of the Second World War and our struggle for independence, for the past 11 years we have been suffering from an insidious form of war, a war of subversion, which obstructs progress and destroys all the achievements that had hitherto benefited our workers.

Those who try to become champions of the so-called liberation of the southern part of our country seek night and day to overthrow the social and humanitarian achievements of the Republic of Viet-Nam, such as schools, kindergartens, hospitals, leprosariums, cathedrals, pagodas. They do not hesitate to massacre the innocent and the defenceless.

An attempt was even made here during the past few weeks to inflame the minds of the people by abusing the memory of our heroic struggle of the previous days which friendly countries had given us, but they have been careful to avoid mentioning the atrocities which the Viet-Cong have been committing for more than a decade. Village leaders have been assassinated, hamlets have been burned to the ground, and 15-year-old boys have been kidnapped, enrolled by force in their ranks and thrown back into battle. Above all, from our point of view, numerous planted workers and trade union officials have been kidnapped and even beheaded for refusing to obey their orders.

I should like to quote the words of the Head of a non-aligned State who recently declared that "many countries choose to see only American planes in the air but not the subversion on the ground. The fact is that the legally constituted Government of South Viet-Nam requested American help because there happen to be people in Viet-Nam who do not wish communism to be established in this country." In fact, as a result of clever propaganda, world public opinion may be deluded. Our actions are blamed without seeking to find the real cause for them.

If today the destruction of strategic supply bases has been extended to the territory of North Viet-Nam, that is merely legitimate defence on our part. We cannot sit back any longer until the enemy comes and attacks us in our homes. We have flagrant proof of direct intervention by the regime in the north, which is supplying the Viet-Cong with massive reinforcements of political and military personnel, arms and ammunition. The special report of 2 June 1962 of the International Control Commission which was addressed to the Co-Presidents of the Geneva Conference of 1954, officially recognised this fact, which is incontrovertible evidence of the subordination of the Viet-Cong to communism in North Viet-Nam.

Those who, from near and far, wish to see us succumb under the yoke of communism, never cease to cry out to the world that the bombardments should stop and that the Americans should go, but they never speak of putting an end to the atrocities of the Viet-Cong in our towns and villages, they never ask the North to put an end to its aid and reinforcements to the Viet-Cong action, so as to leave Viet-Nam free to live in peace. On the contrary, it is they and their partners who are violating the Geneva Agreements of 1954 and who are daily bringing more assistance to the enemies of our people.

They wish to make the world believe that the legally constituted Government in South Viet-Nam does not represent our people. They even speak of the so-called Viet-Cong as the liberators of our country. They wish to imply, as if they have done elsewhere, that only the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel. Their argument is that the so-called Liberation Front of the South is the valid representative of the 14 million Vietnamese living below the 17th parallel.

I should like to pay tribute.

Now I come to Part II of the Report. My Government approves the general policies of the I.L.O. programmes and welcomes enthusiastically the priority given to the three major programme areas: utilisation of human resources, the development of social institutions, and living and working conditions.

Particularly as regards social institutions, Viet-Nam can be proud of the regime of trade union freedom which has taken solid root both among the urban working class and the rural population. Labour-management relations have started off on the right foot. The body of inspectors and labour supervisors is being gradually set up. Personnel undergo methodical training and a series of advanced training courses is in progress, with the assistance of an I.L.O. expert. The Ministry of Labour is assisting the trade unions to organise workers' education courses.

The system of collective agreements, first instituted for 55,000 rubber plantation workers, already covers other sectors of the economy such as the banks, the petroleum industry, and soon the electricity industry, as well as tea and coffee plantations.

On the other hand, despite the hostilities, we respect the right to strike, a right which certain countries deny their workers even in peacetime.

In December 1964 we welcomed a tripartite mission of I.L.O. experts in labour-management relations, to whose competence and ability I should like to pay tribute.

In the rural sector, the measures which the Report proposes, namely planning and organisation of manpower, agrarian reform and the development of a co-operative network, appear to us to be very realistic and answer the needs of Viet-Nam. Considerable efforts have already been made by my Government thanks to the financial assistance of friendly countries.

A bold agrarian reform scheme has been started, which is to put an end both to excessively large and excessively small landholdings. An area of 435,541 hectares of rice paddies have been expropriated and redistributed among 115,594 landless farming families. Agricultural credit and co-operatives, which are indispensable to agrarian reform, have played an effective part. Loans totalling some 4.5 million piastres had been advanced by the end of 1964, and a network of 333 co-operatives covers 130,154 members throughout the country.

At the same time rural settlement involving the resettlement of 280,835 people in 215 agricultural development centres and the opening up of 125,090 hectares of new land with an initial budget of 2,381 million piastres has been undertaken.

Nevertheless, I must admit that this whole undertaking has been largely sabotaged for more than a year by guerrilla action and systematic destruction by the Viet-Cong. The latter constantly set fire to the co-operative installations and the rural development centres, kidnapping the land-survey teams and the officials of the malaria-eradication service, murdering the farmers who have been so bold as to oppose their exactions.

Before closing I should like to support a suggestion made by a previous speaker who proposed that the Director-General's Report should in future be discussed in committee.
rather than in plenary sitting. The number of delegations attending the Conference continues to grow each year because of the continuous accession of territories to independence. In these circumstances, the statements made in plenary sitting are apt—and this is especially the case this year—to acquire more and more a political nature. Some delegates prefer to engage here in propaganda and political manoeuvres, thereby slowing down greatly the examination of technical questions to which we should devote the greater part of our attention. Be that as it may, my delegation preserves the hope that the reforms of structure and programme suggested by the Director-General will enable the I.L.O. to do useful work for the improvement of the status of workers throughout the world.

Interpretation from French : Mrs. DRAGOI (Representative of the World Federation of Trade Unions)—Our participation in this discussion which started in 1963 and will continue next year makes it possible for all of us to contribute to the moulding of the future activities of the I.L.O. In our opinion the programme should have been completed by proposals which, by adapting the structure of the International Labour Organisation and the International Labour Office to present-day realities, would make it possible to carry out the programme more effectively. To separate one thing from the other, as is being done at present, might lead to a tendency to leave things as they are.

The Working Party of the Governing Body will certainly give attention to all the proposals which have been made from this rostrum during the past two years, including those which concern the most burning, urgent and controversial questions.

The International Labour Organisation can hardly shut its eyes to the need for introducing proportional representation of the trade union organisations into the Workers' group of the Governing Body, nor can it fail to try to solve the problems of the most representative organisation at the Conference, making possible democratic discussion of resolutions by the Conference, and decentralising the powers of regional conferences. We feel that in this action the I.L.O. must look for support, within countries as well as at the international level, to those forces which can contribute without hidden motives to the implementation of the social policy enunciated, particularly in the field of developing social institutions and improving the living and working conditions of the workers.

In a number of countries the workers are already fighting for those rights which have been included by the I.L.O. in its new programme, particularly as regards the right to organise in the workplace. I should also like to call your attention to economic plans and programmes and the use of manpower. We consider that planning, whether of part of the national economy or of one particular sector or branch, cannot meet the needs of social progress as long as the working class does not participate as such in the political power. In our opinion it is extremely difficult, indeed almost impossible, to have proper democratic planning of one sector or another while leaving decisions on investment, the level of employment and foreign trade in the hands of big private corporations and international companies. Moreover, we continue to believe that full employment must be one of the main preoccupations of the I.L.O., and here again we consider that this important problem cannot be solved unless the workers and the trade unions participate effectively in the decisions.

That being said, neither the workers nor the trade unions, much less the World Federation of Trade Unions, can close their eyes to the present developments in society, the complexity of the struggle for democracy and hence for the transformation of society along socialist lines. It is extremely indicative of the power of progressive ideas that what was unmentionable only a few years ago in the international institutions has now become a field of profound study and analysis.

In many industrialised countries the workers and trade unions have to cope daily with the consequences of governmental plans and programmes concerted with the plans and programmes of the big private, capitalist corporations and companies. They have to face various so-called programmes of stabilisation, the object of which is to make possible wide margins of profit in order to guarantee the high profits which would increase the financiers.

Broad and profound discussions on this subject have taken place in recent years at the congresses, conferences and meetings of the trade union organisations. The Sixth World Trade Union Congress which will open in Warsaw on 8 October will also give great attention to the experience, successes and failures and the struggles of the workers and trade unions in this field.

During the past few years we have observed the qualitative growth in the struggles of the workers and the trade unions in the industrially developed capitalist countries and in the developing countries. The workers and the trade unions have fought with ever-growing strength against capitalist profits and to defend the collective interests of the nation. They demand the nationalisation of the key sectors of the economy, a democratic management of the nationalised concerns to ensure that they fulfill their mission of serving the nation.

In the present international situation, which is characterised by the growth and strengthening of trusts, cartels, corporations and private international companies in Western Europe and the Western hemisphere, by monopolistic contradictions and by the ruthless struggle which the monopolies are waging under the guise of efficiency and competition, the public sector of the economy has assumed an importance never before known. Never before have its development and its national function been so integrated into the action and struggle of the workers as they are today. The influence of this struggle goes beyond national frontiers and takes its part in the action for the defence of democracy and the representative institutions elected by the people.

We feel that the Report would have been more complete if it had referred to the need for research, studies and information in this field. We are well aware of the fact that this is a delicate and difficult sector in which to verify facts in view of the secrecy which surrounds all the operations and hidden balance-sheets of these corporations, trusts and companies.

How effective can be any control exercised by the workers and the trade unions without their effective participation in the management of the modern industrial society ? What form could the participation of workers and trade unions take in public control, in the process of democratic control of the modern industrial society ?

The Director-General, quite rightly and in its proper context, stresses the fact that the I.L.O. must carry on that struggle and action for the legal and contractual protection of the status of the worker, particularly within the enterprise. To a certain extent at least this meets the concern which we expressed last year from this rostrum. We understand the status of the worker to mean a complex of measures and international standards covering all the rights of the workers and the trade unions in the workplace and the protection of shop stewards—the persons elected by the workers. We must move from the mere recognition of the general right to organise which belongs to all citizens to the full realisation of trade union rights, the permanent and democratic consolidation of the relationship between the trade unions and the workers in the undertaking, in the workplaces, in the fields, on the surface and underground in mines.

The trade union must emerge beside the worker from the very moment of his engagement—even before, when placement action is taken. It is at that stage that the conditions of work inside and outside the undertaking are determined, as well as their future development.

We see here a very important role for the I.L.O. to play, and the proposals contained in the Report are the beginning, we feel, of a broader action in this basic field of emancipation of the workers.

We are living in a very interesting period in the life of trade unions at world-wide level. The broadening of trade union participation and the democratic struggle for the limitation of the power of monopolies are proof of the socialist methods of participation of workers in the management of the economy and in the control of measures adopted at the workplaces for the organisation of production.

New fields of activity are being added daily to those already making up the background and the unity of action of the working masses, and the workers in the plants and workplaces are labouring and fighting side by side, more and more aware of their mission. We are prepared and happy to undertake any direct dialogue, provided such dialogue takes place in an atmosphere of mutual respect, in a setting which might well be that of the I.L.O. itself.

The brief picture I have sketched out shows the importance of fraternal relations and the exchange of experiences between trade unions of different countries, developed and undeveloped, particularly the relations between trade unions and undertakings belonging to the same trust, the same cartel, in various countries.

The interest and value of these relationships is redoubled when we take up the question of aid and assistance which the trade unions of the developed countries must give to the trade unions and workers of the developing countries.

Finally, the I.L.O. knows very well how much importance the W.F.T.U., and trade unions in general, attach to the question of vocational training. We appreciate what has already been done, but we wonder if the Director-General could not submit to the Conference an overall statement which would cover the present and the projected initiatives of the Organisation and the Office, as well as proposals for coordination with the United Nations Technical Assistance Board and Special Fund. The operation of the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, and the needs arising out of the growth of the developing countries, are intimately connected with the problem of vocational training and, we feel, increase the responsibilities of the Conference and the International Labour Office.

The International Labour Organisation cannot shut its eyes to external events, to the sufferings of the population of Viet-Nam deprived of the right to self-determination.

This year was marked by the very imposing popular celebrations of the twentieth anniversary of the victory of the peoples of the United Nations over the barbarity of Nazis and Fascists, the victory of the working class over the most reactionary dictatorship of capitalism. But we must also be aware of the tireless struggle the peoples must continue to wage to free humanity for ever from war, from thermonuclear destruction, armed aggression, racialism, imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism.

May this twentieth anniversary, of the birth of the United Nations as well as that of the World Federation of Trade Unions, mark the start of a new era which will see the fruitation of the great work begun by the anti-Fascist resistance, by the trade unions of the world, by those who, regardless of the colour of their skin, are falling and still fall, to win international peace and freedom.

That is why we condemn the American aggression in South-East Asia and in the Caribbean.

Lord COLLISON (Workers' delegate, United Kingdom)—May I follow the example of the many delegates who have spoken before me, and offer my congratulations to you, Mr. President, on your election to the presidency of this great Conference.

It also gives me particular pleasure, as the Chairman of the Trades Union Congress, to express a sincere welcome to the delegations of the four countries which have assumed full membership of the I.L.O. since we last met. Malawi, Malta, Yemen and Zambia have followed the good example set by so many of the new nations in the last few years in losing no time in affirming their full support of the I.L.O. Their doing so is in effect a vote of confidence in the I.L.O. We welcome them, and we shall work with them in the furtherance of the objectives of the I.L.O. as formulated in the Declaration of Philadelphia.

The Report of the Director-General this year is well up to the standard we have come to expect. I would like to record my personal appreciation, in particular, for Part II of the Report, which does not appear so far to have received the attention it deserves. The annual report to the United Nations is always an interesting record of what the I.L.O. is doing; but this year the Director-General has, it seems to me, prepared an unusually full and useful Report which answers many of the questions which people ask about the I.L.O. Those of us who participate in the work of the Organisation at close range, especially those of us who have the honour to serve on the Governing Body, sometimes have difficulty in seeing the I.L.O. in true perspective. Some of us are too close to it. This Report of the Director-General is extremely useful in clearing our vision, and I hope that it will be widely circulated and read.

One of the useful reminders contained in Part II of the Report is that social legislation in almost every country of the world is continually changing under the influence of international labour Conventions and Recommendations. Ratifications are multiplying, and, as each new nation achieves a welcome independence, normally it confirms existing obligations resulting from the acceptance of Conventions by former parent countries. Yet, welcome as this is, I would like to voice a word of warning. I think that we could too easily become complacent and assume that the ratification of an instrument automatically leads to its proper application. I am afraid we still have a long way to go in this respect, and it is vitally necessary not only to see that governments are pressed to accept and ratify the instruments produced by the I.L.O., but we also have to be vigilant in seeing that these instruments are strictly observed.

For that reason I warmly welcome the steps taken by the Director-General to bring to the attention of trade unions all over the world their rights, and indeed their obligations, in this connection. I would like to suggest to the Director-General, if I may, that he might follow up the action taken so far by publishing a small booklet on Conventions, which could be widely distributed and which every trade union official could keep in his office desk, together with the other indispensable tools of his trade, the union rule book, the union diary, and the shop stewards' handbook.

With respect to new Conventions, I must confess I have been disturbed by a growing tendency at this Conference always to regard a Convention as being preferable to a Recommendation and a Recommendation as being preferable to a Resolution. I understand quite clearly why some of my fellow delegates take this view. A Convention looks, on the face of it, more substantial; it is imperative, not advisory; it seems to guarantee more surely the protection and the advancement of the worker, as indeed, where Conventions are realistically possible and are applied, they do.

Therefore, by all means let us have a Convention, for instance, on the entry of young people into mines. It is a specific subject, applicable to all countries and in every continent in all stages of development, and it can be expressed and enforced in law. But there are other matters which we can usefully discuss here—indeed which we ought to discuss here—which are too broad in their scope to lend themselves to the simplicity and the precision required for a Convention. If we were to insist upon Conventions in such cases, there would be little chance that governments could ratify them. So let us strive to find the right tool for the particular job; you cannot harvest a field of corn with a surgeon's knife.

I hope that all my fellow delegates will by now have had an opportunity of reading the first report of the Working Party, held by the Governing Body in the task of examining the results of our long and useful debates in 1963 and 1964 and of translating them into policies. I was among those who argued all along that this was the best method of procedure, that when the general debate was concluded a small body of people should then make an intensive study of the views expressed and formulate a programme for our future work. This first report, in my opinion, amply justifies that view. The Working Party—excuse me, I am a member of it, but I think it is true—has done a good job under the leadership of Mr. Haythorne, and I trust and believe—in fact, I know—that it will be equally effective when it comes to examine the two remaining programme areas on its agenda: social institutions and working conditions.

Furthermore, the idea of inviting governments, employers' associations and trade unions to submit their comments also seems to have borne fruit. In the Annex to the report of the Working Party there is a summary of the replies of 43 governments, 22 employers' organisations and 18 workers' organisations. I am just a little disappointed that there were not more, and perhaps on future occasions we ought to simplify the task of replying by formulating a questionnaire on the familiar lines of the questionnaires used in connection with the preparation of items on the agenda of the Conference. I firmly believe that you cannot have too much consultation, and I suggest we make this a regular practice.

Now this is just in passing, but it will be seen from paragraph 120 [10] of the Annex to the report that the British T.U.C. was among those which called for close association of employers' and workers' organisations with economic policy. I feel sure that, had more trade union centres been able to reply to the Director-General's letter within the time available, we would have seen that this is a widespread if not a universal trend. To translate this demand into fact is not an easy task, as will be indeed evident to all who have followed the course of economic policy in my own country in recent years. I do not intend to dwell on our domestic affairs, but what I think is significant is that my Government is making strenuous efforts to involve employers and trade unions in the making of policy and in the taking of important economic decisions. Such co-operation between governments, employers and workers is applying tripartism on a national basis and, of course, in a field of the utmost urgency at last recognition is being given to the fact that all sectors of the community have their part to play in developing the national product, that there is a joint interest in the total well-being of the community, and that everyone must accept his responsibilities whilst in no way sacrificing his just rights.

I believe that the fact that people are now able to think this way is encouraging, for by so doing the way is opened to economic and social progress against a background of social justice in societies where freedom and a sense of responsibility to the community can march hand in hand towards a glorious goal.

Since I believe that the I.L.O. has no more important task than the protection and extension of trade union rights, with great respect I am going to express disagreement with the comment of the Director-General in his Report where he says that the role of the I.L.O. in connection with freedom of labour is that of a guide, not of a judge. I would agree that this is maybe the proper role of the Director-General, but I hope that the I.L.O., as a tripartite organisation, will never adopt a neutral advisory position, and I hope that it will never be afraid to challenge and, where necessary, to rebuke any government which persistently violates the workers' freedom. In this connection, I noted with regret the information conveyed to us in the course of the present debate by the Workers' delegate of Malaysia. I support without hesitation his hope that wise counsel will prevail and that Malaysia will maintain her unblemished record — and it is a good record — of liberal trade union policy, despite her external difficulties at the present time. In this connection I was very pleased to note that Mr. Manickavasagam, having said that he understood that these measures had caused anxiety to certain trade union leaders, said "I wish to state that these measures do not in any way infringe the legitimate rights and freedoms of trade unions". I hope that this will be the case.

We have now subjected the I.L.O. to a most searching examination over the past two years. I think that fundamentally we found no fault with our programme and structure, but I think, however, that in the course of our studies we have reached a far better appreciation of the needs and aspirations of the workers.

We have assisted the Director-General in his task of reorganising the I.L.O. and concentrating our resources where they can lead to the most useful results.

If I may say so, in this connection, I fully agree with what my Minister said on this rostrum just a little while ago. It is clear that our task is far from complete, but I believe that we are on the right lines. The Working Party has a lot to do ahead of it, but it is evident from the reception so far accorded to our first report—it is evident to me—that the Conference appreciates the efforts which the Working Party is making, and that the Conference is confident that future reports will bring the whole process to a satisfactory conclusion.

Each delegate will have his own opinion of how much we have achieved as a result of this long debate. For myself, I am well satisfied, and indeed pleased, that the Workers' group of the Conference has stoutly defended the basic principles to which we adhere: tripartism, group autonomy, freedom of association and associated rights, and, in the field, the fullest possible contribution to economic development that the I.L.O. can make, so as to close the gap between the rich and the poor countries.

Let us now give our wholehearted support to the Director-General and to the Governing Body in their efforts to turn our words into facts. This is International Co-operation Year. So let us do whatever we can to contribute to the success of this Year in the spirit of, and as a tribute to, Pandit Nehru, to whom we are all indebted for proposing that 1965 should be so designated.

Mr. BELIGAMMANA (Government delegate, Ceylon) — Allow me in the first instance to congratulate you, Sir, on your election as President of this Conference.

I also wish to associate myself and my delegation with the remarks of praise given to the Director-General on the Report which is under discussion at this Conference.

I am glad to have this opportunity of addressing this Conference for more than one reason. My country has recently emerged from the threat of totalitarianism, after some period of tension and uncertainty, as a country which is prepared to uphold the ideals of peace and social justice for which the I.L.O. has always stood. The verdict of the people of my country, at the recent parliamentary elections, has proved that we will have no truck with policies which seek to deny the people their fundamental rights and to reduce a nullity the principles of freedom and justice so dear to the United Nations.

My people showed that they cherish the right to live in a free country, in a free society, as free people, by rejecting a party which paid mere lip service to the working classes and to the ideals of freedom and social justice to which the I.L.O. is pledged.

The Government which my countrymen have voted to power is pledged to promoting the economic development of the country on a sound basis of social justice, and we therefore look with confidence to the I.L.O. for every assistance and co-operation.

Let me say the very outset say that we have no doubt received through the I.L.O. and through other international agencies much aid from various foreign countries and we are certainly appreciative of all they have done and are still willing to do. I do, however, welcome the statement in Part II of the Report which says: "All member States of the I.L.O. accept the principle that greater stability in world prices of primary products and the promotion of a high and steady volume of international trade is essential for securing the economic and social advancement of the less developed regions of the world."

I would therefore urge that further international action be pursued by the I.L.O. to obtain steady and better prices for our primary products, such as tea, rubber, coconuts and areca-nuts so that we could be sure that thereby we would be able ourselves to finance to a greater extent and more speedily our own plans for economic development and thereby raise the standard of living of our people.

I now wish to turn my attention to some of the other points made in the Director-General's Report and to offer a few comments on them in so far as they concern my country and the policy of my Government. To begin with, my Government is quite appreciative of the active role that could be filled in the material effort for economic and social development by the growth of workers' and employers' organisations which are genuinely representative and independent. One of the first things my Minister did on assumption of office was to hold consultations with representatives of employers in the private sector as well as in the government-sponsored corporations on how best this economic and social development could be promoted.

I think the representatives of workers' organisations would themselves admit that the trade unions in my country are not yet organised on a solid basis. It is commonly accepted that the two besetting handicaps to the growth of a solid trade union movement in my country have been the multiplicity of trade unions and the dominant part played therein by "outsiders". The multiplicity of trade unions could be gauged from the fourfold increase in their number from 1956 to the present day, when there are over a thousand registered trade unions. Under the law any seven workers could apply for registration as a trade union, but prior to 1956 only trade unions of a certain representative character gained recognition from employers in the field of collective bargaining.

Prior to 1956 no trade union in the public sector was given such recognition unless it had a membership of at least 40 per cent. of those eligible to join it. This principle was generally adopted by employers in the private sector as well. But after 1956 the then Government, in order to build up for itself trade unions that would support its own political views and policies, abolished this requirement and let in the flood of trade unions. The Government was required to give recognition to any registered trade union irrespective of its representative character, and employers in the private sector too found it difficult to adhere to the earlier convention. The trade union movement, as a result, tended to be broken up into splinter groups competing with their parent unions and with other splinter groups. But, I am glad to say, some of the older and more responsible trade unions were not slow to realise what was happening and demanded, even under the previous Government, the reimposition of the 40 per cent. membership rule. The previous Government turned a deaf ear to those demands because they were not acceptable to it from the political angle; but I am glad to say that my Government, being really interested in the growth of a genuine trade union movement, is giving active consideration to restoring the 40 per cent. membership rule so as to assist in the growth of representative trade unions.

My Government is interested not only in the growth of the representative trade unions but also in the growth of their independence. For long the criticism has been that trade unions have been dominated by politicians and not by leaders chosen from the ranks of workers, and that as a result the interests of the workers have in times of crisis had to give place to the political objectives of their political leaders. But from the present context of the participation of trade unions in plans for economic and social development, the trade unions of workers must also emerge as independent and solid organisations equipped to play an active and useful part. For the first time in the history of organised labour in Ceylon my Government has announced that it will soon introduce a scheme to ensure worker participation in management and profits. At the same time we believe that workers should be ready to shoulder the wider responsibilities that will be cast on them, since trade unions will no longer be concerned merely with wages and conditions of employment as in the past, but will be increasingly called upon to offer suggestions on production methods, elimination of waste, etc.

Before trade unions can assist in these measures, my Government considers that they should be rid of political control. My Government considers that trade unions should be able to conduct their own affairs without depending on political parties in making decisions. On the positive side my Government will pursue very actively programmes of workers' education so that trade unions may be equipped not only to participate in the planning of social and economic development programmes but in their implementation as well. It is here that we would lean heavily on the I.L.O. for its cooperation.

We are thankful to the I.L.O. for its assistance in the past but I consider that this assistance should be intensified in the future. In this connection I wish to place on record that the recent Asian Seminar on Labour-Management Relations, organised by Mr. de Givry of the I.L.O. in collaboration with my Government and held in Peradeniya, Ceylon, in April 1965 proved a great success.

There are many urgent problems facing my country today in the field of labour and employment, and my Government expects the International Labour Organisation to assist it in its attempts to find solutions for them. In the field of human resources facing the problems of the trade unions of workers in my country are both urgent and grave. Unemployment in both the urban and rural sectors has reached unprecedented proportions. My Government is endeavouring to solve this problem in many ways by providing additional employment opportunities by an expansion of our economy. The other problem in the field of human resources facing my Government is the under-employment of our villagers which leads to migration into urban areas.

We have solved this problem also to a certain extent by ensuring guaranteed prices for our domestic agricultural crops, mainly paddy, and by adopting various measures such as the opening up of vast areas of uncultivated land under cultivation. My Government also recognises the right of workers in both urban and rural areas to better living conditions and proposes to embark on an intensified programme of low-cost house construction.

I would like to mention that to achieve these objectives we need more foreign exchange and it is in this context that we expect fair prices for for our tea, rubber, coconut and areca-nuts from developed countries.

Therefore, we have no doubt that the I.L.O., along with developed member countries, will assist us in our attempt to raise the standard of living of our people.

Mr. HALLSWORTH (Employers' delegate, Canada)—As the representative of Canadian employers, I appreciate this opportunity to participate in the discussion on the Director-General's Report to the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. Canadian employers recognise the importance of the role the International Labour Organisation has played in industrial society. We have in the past accepted the responsibility of making what we hope has been an effective and worthwhile contribution. I assure delegates it is our intention to continue our efforts in this regard in the future.

Many changes have occurred in our world since the I.L.O. was formed 46 years ago, and may I be forgiven my pride in mentioning the fact that Canada was among the founding nations in 1919. We now see greater emphasis placed on investment in human resources in the over-all formulation of development programmes. New concepts, philosophies, institutions and ideologies have emerged. Technological changes are confronting many of us today with difficult social and economic problems that have yet to be thoroughly identified or completely analysed.

In the light of these changes, then, we agree entirely with the I.L.O.'s decision to re-examine and reappraise its part in the scheme of our society to determine what must be done to ensure that it continues to occupy the role of a responsible agency.

For the past two years, and again at this present session, the Director-General in his Report has focused the attention of the Conference on the programme and structure of the I.L.O. for future years. New and fresh ideas have emerged as a result. There has been a consensus of approval from the Conference on many of the proposals that have been made, although there is some divergence of views on the relative importance and priority that certain aspects of future programming should have.

While the tripartite Working Party's first report represents only the beginning of a much larger job, it nevertheless defines some specific guidelines in very important areas. The Canadian Employers' delegation commend the members of the Working Party for their excellent report. In particular we commend them for their decision to focus attention first on the proposed major programmes relating to human resources. As stated in paragraph 18 of their first report: "National development does not depend only on the existence of natural resources and on an ample supply of capital and equipment. If people do not have the skills needed to exploit these resources fully, if they are not productively employed, if they do not participate actively, freely and in a responsible manner in the various tasks of development, it will be very difficult to achieve significant economic and social progress. This is particularly true of the developing countries in which human resources are abundant but where the skill potential of such resources is inadequately developed and the opportunities for productive employment are insufficient. In short, it is increasingly recognised in the theory and practice of development that the development and utilisation of human resources are decisive factors in economic expansion and, in consequence, in social progress."

We would do well as we approach the final stages of three years of debate on the work and structure of the I.L.O. to keep those words in mind. Clearly they indicate where the majority of time and resources of this Organisation should be devoted if the standards of living in the developing countries are to be raised to a tolerable level.

It is true that in recent years a growing proportion of the I.L.O.'s time and resources has been spent in the area of technical assistance. If this Conference does, as I hope it will, make it unmistakably clear to the Governing Body and to the Office that even greater efforts should be made in this direction, it is essential that the amount and kind of technical assistance meet the needs of the particular nations being aided. Research, including analyses of results, and the exchange of information are prerequisites if a programme of this kind is to be sound of structure and purpose.

Priority of this kind once again raises questions about the I.L.O.'s traditional standard-setting task. The Director-General declares in Part I of his Report that international instruments are the backbone of the Organisation. I suggest that they are not. However relevant they may have been in the past, conditions today have changed to such an extent that this aspect of the I.L.O.'s work requires the most careful scrutiny.

The great majority of delegates of the newer nations that have come into being during the past 10 or 15 years have told us that they are, by and large, nations with relatively undeveloped economies. They are essentially non-industrial, with a social and economic life quite different from that prevailing in the more highly industrialised countries. With this in mind, consideration should be given to the revision or elimination of many conventions. These should be broadly based and concerned with statements of principle on matters to which all member States can give expression appropriate to their circumstances. Future instruments should avoid substantive details, the implementation of which requires a level of economic development which a large number of member States have yet to attain. In the same vein, consideration should also be given to the revision or elimination of existing standards that are no longer meaningful or applicable.

The Director-General has outlined the organisation and changes which have been made in the Office to afford greater flexibility in I.L.O. programming. There has been considerable examination and debate on the relevance of certain features of the I.L.O. structure itself.

In our opinion there is no need for drastic change in the present relationship between the Conference, the Governing Body and the Office. Canadian employers believe that ways and means can be found within the existing framework to make these bodies more effective and more efficient. In particular, we believe that changes in the role of the Governing Body, as suggested by certain delegates, would be most unwise. We agree with the Director-General when he said that only a strong and effective Governing Body can show the Conference ways of overcoming disputes which otherwise might persistently divide it.

Paramount, of course, in the structure of the I.L.O., is its tripartite character. Tripartism is the attribute that gives the I.L.O. its unique status and power. It is imperative that this tripartite feature be preserved and not allowed to be weakened or undermined by those who do not accept that this is the very essence and foundation of the I.L.O.

The tripartite structure is an acknowledgment of the existence of mutual interests and its successful operation is positive proof that the aims of employers and workers are reconcilable. Tripartism loses all force and purpose if employers and workers are not absolutely free and unhampered in the selection of their representatives and in the degree of their participation in the affairs of the I.L.O. Sound industrial relations can only develop in a harmonious manner between responsible organisations which are independent of one another, and of their government. If we are to preserve this tripartism, it is essential that workers and employers constantly examine the role of governments in their affairs.

It is the custom of this Conference to seat Government representatives between Workers and Employers. We must be cautious that this resolution despite the fact that it stresses the need for this responsible task to be performed. The proposals made by national and international trade union organisations relating to such changes are unjustifiably ignored. These proposals, reflecting the wishes of millions of trade union members, are the clearest expression of the general situation of the workers in member States. By taking due account of such demands and proposals the I.L.O. can more successfully mobilise member countries in the task of improving the workers’ living conditions. It is essential to reconsider these proposals and include them in the programme of the I.L.O.

Among the many problems before the Conference, unemployment, underemployment, falling wage levels, reduction in wages when hours of work are cut, the absence of social security and of holidays with pay, and discrimination in employment and training are adversely affecting the living and working conditions of the workers. That is why the workers in many capitalist and colonial countries are on strike. The inclusion of these problems in the I.L.O. programme with priority of consideration is therefore a matter of vital concern to the workers.

The Bulgarian trade unions continue to support the proposals they already made at the 48th Session regarding the liquidation of colonialism and neo-colonialism and the elimination of their after-effects in the economic and social field. Nowadays, colonialism can no longer be tolerated. At this session many delegates have already spoken on this subject. I should like particularly to stress the remarks of the representative of the All-African Trade Union Federation, Mr. Tettegah.

As I have already pointed out, at the last session proposals were made regarding improvement of the structure and working methods of the Organisation. Many of these problems were not reflected in the Report to this session, although a lot of facts were quoted which confirm the inadequacy of existing structures and methods of work of the I.L.O. in the light of the existing state of affairs.

Here are a few of these facts. Elections of the representatives of the Workers’ group in the Governing Body are carried out according on the adaptation of the programme, structure and methods of the I.L.O. in accordance with the changes that have taken place in the economic and social fields throughout the world.

A number of Workers’ and other delegates, including those of Bulgaria, have made a number of constructive proposals so that the Organisation can become an effective international instrument for improving the conditions of the workers. These proposals should have been included in the I.L.O.’s programme.

At the 48th Session the Conference adopted a resolution which instructed the Director-General to examine all the proposals that were made and to submit to this session a report on changes in the programme and structure of the Organisation. A substantial proportion of these proposals is not reflected in the special I.L.O. document or in the Report of the Director-General to this session. It is clear that the Director-General is not carrying out this resolution despite the fact that it stresses the need for this responsible task to be performed. The proposals made by national and international trade union organisations relating to such changes are unjustifiably ignored. These proposals, reflecting the wishes of millions of trade union members, are the clearest expression of the general situation of the workers in member States. By taking due account of such demands and proposals the I.L.O. can more successfully mobilise member countries in the task of improving the workers’ living conditions. It is essential to reconsider these proposals and include them in the programme of the I.L.O.
to the majority system, and yet this system is anti-democratic because it does not give an opportunity of participation to the representatives of either national trade union associations, whatever their trend, or autonomous trade unions. This happens because those candidates who receive 50 per cent. of the votes plus one other vote take all the places in the group, so that there is no room for the others who even represent a larger membership. Thus the 70 million-strong Soviet trade unions are not represented in the Workers' group of the Governing Body. Nor is there any representation for a number of other trade union federations which are members of the W.F.T.U., and the same goes for a number of autonomous trade unions.

As a result of the violation of the Constitution of the I.L.O., the General Conference has for many years contained so-called Workers' delegates from many capitalist countries who have never been elected or who do not represent the major federation. The Workers' group of the Governing Body and the Committee on Freedom of Association, as well as the Workers' officers at the General Conference have never yet included any representative of the W.F.T.U. The Workers' sections of those bodies are composed primarily of representatives of national federations affiliated to the I.C.F.T.U. and the I.F.C.T.U., which reflect the views of only a small part of the world trade union movement. This is obviously a completely undemocratic situation. Elections to the Workers' group of the Governing Body should follow a democratic system providing for equitable geographical representation of trade unions of all tendencies as well as autonomous trade unions.

In order to avoid the situation whereby the wrong Workers' delegates from many capitalist countries attend this Conference, there should be on-the-spot investigation by the I.L.O. with the trade union federations concerned with a view to submission to the Governing Body of proposals for a just settlement of the question of the representation of the workers at the Conference. This has already been suggested in specific cases where the credentials of delegates have been contested at this session. The General Conference should draft and adapt the programme of the I.L.O., fix the agenda for its annual sessions and elect the Director-General, in order to ensure that the Conference becomes the supreme body of the I.L.O. All organs should adopt the principle of fair geographical distribution on the basis of the sovereign equality of all member States. In this connection, we support the proposals in the resolution submitted by the Government delegations of Poland and the Ukraine. We think this resolution should be examined and adopted at this Conference.

A number of delegates speaking from this high rostrum have rightly stressed that unless peace is preserved throughout the world the I.L.O. will not be able to carry out its task, as laid down by the Constitution, namely the improvement of the working and living conditions of the workers. This is crystal-clear and indisputable, even though a number of delegates have for more or less obvious reasons avoided the subject.

The Bulgarian people views with alarm the state of tension in the world, and we are taking steps to make our contribution towards preserving peace. The desire to consolidate peace has gripped the minds and hearts of millions throughout the world. This can be seen from the many demonstrations throughout society, whatever the nationality or religious or political convictions of the participants. A few weeks ago the traditional springtime peace march ended in Trafalgar Square, London. In Western Germany there were once again similar protests by the population against nuclear armaments, and feelings of solidarity was expressed by British M.P.s, French trade union leaders and groups from Sweden, Belgium, Denmark and elsewhere.

Certain countries are spending enormous sums on armaments. One of these countries has spent more than $800,000 million since the Second World War. In that same country persons in positions of responsibility stated recently that if need be its armed forces would not hesitate to use nuclear weapons. There is widespread concern about this, especially among the Asian peoples, since it was only two decades ago, for the sole purpose of demonstrating strength and without any military necessity, that atom bombs were dropped on the peaceful citizens of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Now, with the work of the Conference proceeding in a state of international tension, the question of the contribution of the I.L.O. to the cause of peace is becoming ever more urgent. The I.L.O. should express its support for convening an international conference on the prohibition of the use of atomic weapons as well as an international disarmament conference under United Nations auspices. The Conference should also adopt the Ukrainian Government delegation's resolution regarding study by the I.L.O. of the economic and social consequences of disarmament.

The International Labour Conference must condemn the aggressive actions designed to suppress national liberation movements, and insist that the United Nations and the Security Council take effective measures to put an end to these actions so that they may never recur. Such measures would undoubtedly be supported by world public opinion, including the masses in those countries which have originated these aggressive actions. The I.L.O. must condemn the aggressive action of the United States in Viet-Nam and in the Dominican Republic. If it does not do so, this alarming situation may spread throughout the world.

(The Conference adjourned at 12.45 p.m.)
TWENTIETH SITTING

Tuesday, 15 June 1965, 3 p.m.

President : Mr. Raza

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL : DISCUSSION (cont.)

The PRESIDENT—We now resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Interpretation from French : Mr. OLTEANU (Employers' delegate, Rumania)—Mr. President, may I join the distinguished delegates who have congratulated you on the occasion of your election to the presidency. At the same time I should like to take this opportunity of congratulating also the delegations of those States which have recently joined our Organisation.

The documents before the Conference relate to major problems of concern to the greater part of mankind. The Director-General's Report follows upon the detailed discussions held at previous sessions of the Conference and suggests to us certain concrete areas within which we should develop the programme of activities of the Organisation. The importance placed in the training of supervisory staff, in agrarian reform, in co-operation and in other matters shows our great and increasing interest in the developing countries.

As is clear from the present debate the process of economic and social development in which we are participating raises a number of complex issues at both the national and international levels. It is not easy to pass from a state of underdevelopment to that of contemporary progress with all its future prospects of well-being for those who produce all material goods. Not only must better use be made of the manpower and natural resources of each country but appropriate forms must be also found for organisation of production, the distribution of income, and also the organisation of incentives for the broad masses who, after all, determine the rate of economic and social development.

In this process the elimination of unemployment and underemployment, the shift of a large number of agricultural workers into other branches of the economy, and especially into industry, the organisation of general education, the training of all grades of supervisory staff, the establishment of institutions relating to the superstructure, social services, etc., represent only a few of the problems raised by development.

Our own experience enables us to appreciate that in this tortuous course towards development not only are the resources and sustained efforts of the whole people needed but also ability, patience, and a sense of balance in management with a view to overcoming all the inherent difficulties.

In Rumania, social and economic development has been very rapid. In this connection I should like to cite a few figures : investment in the economy increased during the period 1950-63 at an average annual rate of 15.9 per cent. During the first four years of the six-year plan, which ends in 1965, this rate was approximately 21 per cent.

Both younger and older personnel have contributed fully to this development, rapidly assimilating new techniques on the basis of their general education and vocational training. Thus the oil industry alone receives 700 new engineers and chemists and 6,000 skilled workers each year.

In the Brazi refinery, of which I am the manager, the replacement of old installations and the thirteen-fold increase in manufacturing capacity as compared with pre-war years have required a large number of additional personnel to be trained. Each year our refinery receives engineers and chemists from three institutes, supervisors from technical training schools giving three-year courses, as well as skilled manpower trained in vocational schools. In our plant we have training and retraining courses in view of the constant changes in work techniques.

At the level of the national economy we have stabilised the system of vocational training in the various occupations, levels and branches of activity, with training schools, technical schools for supervisors, and technical institutes for higher education. The introduction of an eight-year compulsory educational system has played an important part in the training of supervisory personnel for it means that industry receives personnel who already have a thorough educational basis thanks to the system of technical and vocational schools.

The increase in the industrial labour force by 1.3 million during the past six years has led to appropriate changes in the employment structure. In 1965 the proportion of agricultural workers to the total of employed persons is 57 per cent., as compared with 74 per cent. in 1950. Thanks to the training of personnel and the introduction of modern technology, productivity has increased during the past six years by about 63 per cent., at an average annual rate of 8.5 per cent.

All this has led to a corresponding improvement in the well-being of the workers. For example, in 1965 the average real wage was 35 per cent. above the figure for 1959.

At the moment the national economic plan for the period 1966-70 is being discussed by the Rumanian workers. Among the provisions of this plan I should like to mention expansion of total industrial production during the next five years by approximately 65 per cent. and of the national income by about 40 per cent, as compared with 1965, which shows that Rumania is in full course of development.

Our educational establishments will provide approximately 550,000 supervisors, skilled workers and graduates from intermediate and advanced courses who will be used in different branches of the national economy. Particular importance will be given to the training of personnel for research work and for the organisation and scientific management of undertakings. It has not been at all easy to lay the foundations and carry out the main stages of this development process.

I thought it well to give certain data concerning the situation in my country because I know that very similar difficulties exist as regards economic, social and cultural development in many countries at varying stages of development. The I.L.O., like all other international organisations, has the duty of supporting by its activities the efforts made by many countries with a view to their development.

We are particularly interested in that part of the Director-General's Report which relates to the need for judicious planning of human resources and integration with economic development plans in many countries at varying stages of development. The I.L.O., like all other international organisations, has the duty of supporting by its activities the efforts made by many countries with a view to their development.

The promotion of economic, technical and scientific relations between all States without any artificial restriction could undoubtedly contribute to economic development and full employment, particularly in the developing countries. In this connection there must first of all be a relaxation of tension together with greater international co-operation. So long as enormous material resources are used for military purposes and so long as theatres of war exist it will be impossible to create the necessary atmosphere for the concentration of the available resources of the whole world with a view to development. The cessation of aggressive activities—I am referring to the situation in Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic—observance of the independence and sovereignty of States, the liquidation of colonialism and general disarmament are indispensable conditions for facilitating the economic, social and cultural progress of all countries and all peoples... tained at the end of five years' independence are encouraging and fully justify the determinations of the workers to mobilize for the proper execution of our development plans so as to promote the rapid growth and consolidation of our national economy, as well as for the strengthening of our national sovereignty, without which an impulse cannot be given to a policy genuinely serving the interests of the masses.

To enable the workers to play their part better, bearing in mind the need for proper appreciation of the complete solidarity of their interests with those of the other working forces, which still seek to use political acquisitions for foreign domination, against imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism and their horrid exploitation, the National Union of Workers of Mali is actively undertaking workers' education and the training of trade union officers. Two years ago it set up a permanent school for trade union officers with six-week courses. By a government decision all workers taking part in these courses receive their full wages. The first course, also for six weeks, for the training of instructors for our trade union night schools throughout the Republic is now taking place. In this connection I should like to thank the I.L.O. for its six-day seminar last February, which usefully guided us in the organisation of our own instructors' seminar.

The National Union of Workers is a member of the All-African Trade Union Federation (A.A.T.U.F.), a unitary revolutionary movement which aims at strengthening the solidarity of the African workers and improving their education and their organisation so as to mobilise them in effective support of the struggle of the African countries to meet the profound aspirations of the masses and to achieve African unity. The A.A.T.U.F. is working objectively for the development of the African countries. This means that, in the search for solutions to the problems arising both in regard to the organisation of the economy and in regard to workers' action, the methods of the developed countries cannot simply be applied like a veneer. The A.A.T.U.F. is seeking to develop a political conscience among the African workers which will teach them the meaning of their role and their responsibilities in the light of the essential requirements for the construction of Africa, which has paid a heavy tribute to implaceable foreign domination in the form of pillage of its material resources and the boundless exploitation of its people. The A.A.T.U.F. aims at creating conditions for the improvement of the level of life of workers and peasants of all classes, and to this end it is fighting against all forms of foreign domination, against imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism and their horrid forces, which still seek to use political acquisition of the African States for the satisfaction of their own selfish interests.

In Africa, in Asia, and in Latin America the people who have just broken the shackles of slavery as they have become independent need, to meet their aspirations, to safeguard their countries against any kind of servitude, so that they can freely determine the ways and means which correspond best to their own interests. They must oppose all forms of colonialism and of neo-colonialism. African workers cannot, without betraying their mission as a progressive force, fail to take part in the imperative struggle of their peoples for the creation of conditions of prosperity without which they would have no chance of economic and social development.

We know that revolutionary trade unionism in Africa is condemned in certain circles because these circles would like to see the pillage of the wealth of Africa continued so that their dividends might be increased.

The experience of my organisation, which I have briefly described, permits me to say what I think about what is stated in the Director-General's Report with regard to the role of trade union organisations in economic and social development.

In the developing countries the workers are certainly the most advanced social class, the one best appreciating the meaning and scope of economic and social development plans. They can also ensure that the various educational systems are established on a wide basis and make them nationally effective, whereas otherwise they would be left at the experimental stage. It is important, therefore, to have the workers make a conscious contribution to the achievement of the following national aims: (1) the formulation of a clear policy of economic and social development genuinely in the service of the masses; (2) the acquisition, as one of the bases of this policy, of the support of the people and the workers; (3) ensuring that this policy relies at all times on the active participation of the workers.

The behaviour of the workers and the action of their trade union movements are closely linked to general conditions for economic organisation. The direct, active and wide-scale participation of workers in the development and establishment of national economic plans has a decisive effect on production. The distribution of incomes is a problem of today which arises in the developed as well as in the developing countries. The grabbing of national income by a minority, to the detriment of the workers, is certainly a factor which decreases the willingness of workers to contribute to the growth of such income.

In their traditional struggle to improve their standard of life the workers also oppose being given the role of a mere machine, as too often occurs in national life. If the workers are ground down by financial and feudal forces, bound hand and foot by governmental regulations, their organisations cannot play their proper constructive part.

The question of women workers can only be duly solved if the importance of the double function of women—that of worker and of mother—is understood. Although equality between men and women is regularly proclaimed in advanced societies, people are inclined to forget it where labour is concerned, when, faced with the idea of profit, they view a man merely as a machine and confine their interest in him to his productive capability, while a woman becomes the victim of her social function and is subject to various kinds of discrimination, the least of which is her employment at the lowest possible cost.

In the developing countries, which must move their national economies rapidly forward to prosperity and which therefore need a powerful and permanent mobilisation of all their forces, the women have as important a role to play as the men. It therefore becomes important to take whatever action may be necessary having regard to the family obligations of women, with a view to enabling them to be employed on satisfactory terms.

Education should be compulsory for girls just as for boys, and they should have vocational training. If one is interested only in the training of men then one diverts the productive forces of the nation by two and multiplies the difficulties by four, as a Mali politician recently said.

In addition to legislation to safeguard the employment of women, their occupational interests and their health, provision should also be made for kindergartens and nurseries.

The labour legislation of Mali, as is well known in the International Labour Office, guarantees to its women conditions of work which prevent any discrimination based on their family responsibilities. Kindergartens are increasing; mother and child protection centres increased from one in 1959 to 49 in 1964. The managing committees of our state enterprises, composed of workers, are now studying at the undertaking level the organisation of crèches, paid for out of the social funds of the undertakings. The reform of the educational system makes education compulsory for girls as well as for boys.

Co-operative organisation is certainly an important means of economic and social development. The co-operatives develop the sense of practical democracy, strengthening the idea of social co-operation by teaching all to work for each and each for all. They also develop the sense of common welfare and of individual responsibility within collective responsibility. They are a school of solidarity. The co-operative is an important factor of social stability and a highly important factor of higher standards of life, because it eliminates the parasitical middlemen who worsen the living conditions of the working people.

If the co-operative is a decisive factor in economic and social progress, it must be encouraged and defended and given a major place in the national economy. This protection is indispensable because the co-operative takes money out of the reach of usurers, profiteers, and undertakings which take shameful advantage of the workers.

Among the dangers which threaten the co-operatives are practices which devalue the sense of co-operation and divert co-operatives from their true objects with a view to making them an instrument for the profit of the few. In order to justify any special facilities granted to the co-operatives, their composition, administration and activities must be strictly supervised. Similar institutions in highly industrialised countries can give valuable aid to the co-operative movements of the developing countries through exchange of equipment, experience, etc., but this aid must have regard to the programme of development which to a large extent determines the activities of the co-operatives.

Co-operation in Mali is in full development. In the cities the inhabitants organise consumer co-operatives stimulated by state undertakings, particularly the import and export company that deals with manufactured products, and the agricultural produce office that deals with cereals. Workers' co-operatives are also organised in the building sector, and a study concerning the metal trades is being undertaken.

In the rural areas village groups are being organised which undertake the collection and marketing of agricultural products. These co-operatives, which are supported by the Government and derive their revenue from the sales of Mali, have provided the peasants with the best conditions for obtaining their requirements of standard agricultural equipment and for making the best use of their produce. Through their mutual rural development societies they obtain almost all the manufactured products which hitherto could only be had in the towns, including pharmaceutical products, which are now provided by a special state undertaking.

I shall now go on to consider questions of education: vocational training, supervisor training, co-operative education and trade union education. In the developing countries these are fundamental questions which will enable the development plans to be satisfactorily carried out. The transformation of the barter economies inherited by the developing countries from colonial domination into viable national economies which can strengthen the political independence of the countries is a hard task which cannot be accomplished merely by drafting a development plan. Men must be prepared for their new role in production: training of operatives, training of supervisors, education of co-operators, and training of officers for trade union work. Vocational training has two equally important aspects. First of all, young persons have to be trained at apprenticeship centres and technical establishments at various levels, and secondly further training has to be provided for those already employed, either by courses at schools or in combination with their employment.

The I.L.O., we think, must lay special stress on this second aspect. Several methods must be considered: to organise advanced training courses in some schools and also provide training at workplaces in connection with the person's employment. Ways and means, of course, will depend on the situation in the particular State. This problem is of great concern to the National Union of Workers of our country, which is about to organise a workers' university.

The grant of travelling and other fellowships is a precious contribution but can only be enjoyed by a small number of persons. The fellowship must be related to the real conditions in which the trainee will have to practise what he has learned.

My organisation supports the development of regional organisations of the I.L.O. in the light not only of linguistic considerations but also of economic zones. Thus the continuance of the action of the I.L.O., not only in industrialisation and vocational training but also in social work, will be easier.

In Africa we think that co-operation should be established between regional organs of the I.L.O. and the specialised organs of the Organisation of African Unity.
In closing, I should like to recall that, having regard to the principles stated in the Declaration of Philadelphia, the I.L.O. must adjust itself to the present needs of the working classes, particularly in the developing countries, whose emergence on the international scene is a fundamental factor. Faced with the burning problems of the present world, it would be inconceivable for the I.L.O. not to take any position on issues of war and peace, of disarmament, of colonialism and neo-colonialism, of apartheid, of relations between the industrial countries and the developing countries, of fruitful co-operation between all States, without discrimination, for rapid economic and social progress.

Therefore voices should be raised here against all manifestations of fascism throughout the world, against the brutal and stupid expression of racialism, which refuses to millions of men the right to decent human conditions because of their race, against the aggression and interference in the affairs of the peoples of Africa, Asia and Latin America. To ignore these burning questions, which are also essential causes of the tension which threatens peace and coexistence between the peoples, is also to ignore the living conditions of millions of workers, to neglect the development and emancipation of millions of men and women who are weighed down by colonialism, racialism and war.

The I.L.O. has reacted vigorously against the policy of apartheid of South Africa, which is considered incompatible with human dignity. This action by the I.L.O. was welcomed by the whole working class, African and international, and raised the highest hopes amongst the millions of workers prevented by regrettable circumstances from being represented here.

The I.L.O. must react with the same force against the behaviour of Portugal in Africa. In Bissâo Guinea, Angola and Mozambique, there is intolerable servitude and forced labour is rife. A journalist, Basil Davidson, has described the situation in words which need no comment but which challenge the conscience of the I.L.O. He writes that Angola has become a political and economic slum, in which the natives are starved, tortured and imprisoned and supervised by platoons of armed guards. He goes on to say that thousands of men and women are hired each month to work in private undertakings; there is a mass of five million human beings throughout the world proves that social justice and peace are as yet far from being reached. And let us not forget that the masses to whom we refer, whose welfare is so sorely neglected, who are unable to use their right to freedom, are the very ones for whom the I.L.O. was created.

There is no question but that the universality of the objectives of the Organisation requires an institutional instrument which will be universal, if you really want to achieve these goals.

On the other hand, however, the I.L.O. is a tripartite organisation. It is the only universal institution which is not purely governmental and where the interested parties can play a decisive role. The I.F.C.T.U.—and along with it all the truly representative workers' organisations—has been, and always will be, closely attached to this idea of tripartism which is a truly revolutionary conquest in international law. Tripartism, in our eyes, enshrines the whole principle of the freedom of association of workers, which is one of their basic human rights.

Throughout the years the composition of the I.L.O. has changed considerably, and it would appear that priority has been given to the universality of its nature rather than the tripartite aspect of its nature. The I.F.C.T.U. feels that a new practical concept of tripartism has become necessary in order to meet more efficiently the realities of the present day. In making this statement we refer to the basic concept of freedom, as enunciated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations and in the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of the I.F.C.T.U. This new concept has not yet come into existence; it has yet to be worked out. It would be useful and desirable for the I.L.O. to sound out opinions in this connection in order to orientate the development along the paths to handle all the questions arising out of the Report of the Director-General to this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. If therefore, as the spokesman of the International Federation of Christian Trade Unions, I take up only a few points, and very briefly and hastily at that, please do not think that the problems to which I have not referred are of no interest to my organisation. We reserve the right to come back to them more fully on other occasions.

The first problem which we think deserves our attention is that of the basic concept of the I.L.O., which some seem to be questioning, implying a conflict between two essential conditions for the very existence of the I.L.O.: that is the concept of universality and the concept of tripartism.

Let us not forget that the I.L.O. as an institution is not an end in itself but rather a means to attain certain transcendent human ends such as social justice and peace and everything connected with these objectives in the modern world. The universality of the goals of the I.L.O. is written not only in its Constitution but also endorsed in the Declaration of Philadelphia. The whole point of the legislative work of the I.L.O. is to apply in practice these basic objectives. The social situation of hundreds of millions of human beings throughout the world proves that social justice and peace are as yet far from being reached. And let us not forget that the masses to whom we refer, whose welfare is so sorely neglected, who are unable to use their right to freedom, are the very ones for whom the I.L.O. was created.

There is no question but that the universality of the objectives of the Organisation requires an institutional instrument which will be universal, if you really want to achieve these goals.
which would not give rise to any infidelity to the basic principles. For the I.F.C.T.U. the acceptance of a new study of the concept of tripartism implies at the same time the re-affirmation of the principles of freedom of association and consequently calls for a strengthening of all the existing instruments which guarantee the defence of that freedom. Moreover, the I.F.C.T.U., if possible with the other free trade union organisations, is determined to continue and to intensify the struggle to achieve true freedom of association for all workers in all countries. If necessary we will have the courage to fight alone as we have done often in the past. Finally, we consider that the texts of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948, and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949, might well constitute basic documents for the reflection and consultation we have suggested, working towards an adequate definition of the criteria of tripartism.

In view of the limited time at my disposal I shall touch only briefly on the three main chapters of the Director-General’s Report, that is, human resources and economic development, the development of social institutions, and living and working conditions. For us, economic development is meaningless if it is not carried out in the context of the needs of men, the achievement of more justice and freedom and consequently a more complete and more stable peace. In too many countries neither economic development nor education has been oriented towards the common good of the whole population, but rather towards the maintenance of the privileges of a certain few. The mobilisation and active concern with the common good will keep up a constant analysis of needs and procedures leading to the welfare and progress of all and ensuring for all participation in all action.

The I.F.C.T.U. considers that this constant and active concern with the common good will do away with measures of mobilisation of human resources for forced labour, either overt or covert. I think that it is essential to state once again the primacy of social and human requirements in any policy of development, without of course overlooking the economic or financial implications. I am all the more convinced of this in that I have the impression that the Director-General’s Report does not lay sufficient stress on this point.

In the pursuit of the task which has been outlined in the three chapters in the Director-General’s Report which I referred to just now, the I.L.O. at no time and in no way can afford to ignore the needs of all the member States and of their populations. That means, in plain language, that the I.L.O. must keep its eyes and ears open to progress in the developing countries as well as in the highly industrialised countries.

A proper and true balance must be maintained in the programmes which can be worked out more rationally, no doubt, if the I.L.O. keeps up a constant analysis of needs and resources. That is why the I.F.C.T.U. gives its full support to all the efforts made towards developing research in all fields within the competence of the I.L.O. We support the opinion expressed by the Working Party of the Governing Body of the I.L.O., on the initiative of the Workers’ members, according to which “In pursuance of specific I.L.O. objectives, it should continue to define principles of universal application and develop policies which are suited to the situation in countries at various stages of development”.

To come back to the programme concerning the development of social situations, we feel that research in this field should be continued, but that such research must necessarily take into account the prevailing situation as regards universality, regional adaptation and tripartite participation.

The I.L.O. should see to it that such research is carried out by teams made up of specialists from widely differing fields who would give all the necessary attention to sociological and psychological aspects.

With respect, in particular, to the evolution and development of the trade union movement in the world, consideration should be given to the fundamental and universal aspect arising out of the existence of social tension whenever capital and labour come face to face and whenever conflicting human and economic requirements have to be reconciled. The principles which the I.L.O. has already laid down in the field of freedom of association must be respected universally even if their application does take on different forms according to the economic and social conditions of each country concerned.

However, in view of the different philosophies which inspire the trade union movement of the world, and in view of the different political, economic, social and cultural systems, the I.L.O. must be careful not to substitute itself for the functions proper to the trade union movement. If the evolution of the movement is to reveal converging lines, these will have to be worked out in an atmosphere of freedom and democracy, and there should be no element of constraint emanating from the I.L.O.

To the I.L.O. it is not enough to be faithful to the principles which it has enunciated in the past, it can still, in the future, work out even further the elements which will strengthen social institutions while assisting the trade unions.

It should, inter alia, ensure the application of these principles in connection with workers’ education.

The I.F.C.T.U., on various occasions, has defined its position on this subject. It approves of the work of the I.L.O. in this field, but it would not tolerate the I.L.O.’s assuming the responsibilities of the trade unions.

Only fair and frank co-operation is possible, without interference of any kind.

However, the I.L.O. can and should contribute to the recognition of the trade union movement by governments, as well as by employers and heads of undertakings.

It must continue its research in the field of labour relations, taking into account the different conditions which exist in the various States Members and basing itself on its own fundamental principles.

This aspect of the development of social institutions must take into account the need to provide for social progress, which is evidence of the existence of social justice, through democratic planning with which trade unionism is associated from the project stage to the application stage, but without suppressing the individual and collective liberty of men and organisations within the framework of a planned economy.

So that it might be in a better position to carry out this work, the I.F.C.T.U. recommended that the principles relating to the freedom of association should be incorporated in the I.L.O.'s Constitution. This idea prevailed through the adoption of a resolution by the International Labour Conference at its 48th Session. It urges the I.L.O. to accelerate the technical study of this question so that appropriate measures may be taken quickly. This is very important. The relative paralysis of the Credentials Committee is proof of the urgency of this question. The inability of a Workers' delegate, duly elected and unquestionably a representative, to ensure his rights under the present system has once again been shown in the case of the Dominican Republic.

In concluding, I should like to make a few remarks regarding the structure of the Organisation. In the opinion of my organisation the General Conference might be held every two years in order to offer wider possibilities to the regional conferences. I should like to stress the need for advancing the regionalisation of the work of the I.L.O., which we have been urging since 1948. Unless the I.L.O. undertakes this regionalisation, it will lose sight of the realities and needs of all its member States, but the practical means of doing this will have to be studied thoroughly so that the legislative action of the Organisation will not be paralysed.

We have had an opportunity of showing the realism of this proposal, which is fully in line with the ideal of the universality of the Organisation.

This regionalisation should also be expressed in the Industrial Committees and in the meetings of experts; and it should have the proper administrative machinery.

It would be advisable to revise and adapt the structure of the Governing Body. The provision giving certain seats to the ten governments coming from the most highly industrialised countries could be replaced or perhaps complemented by provisions which would be applicable to all three groups and would also ensure a more equitable geographical and even occupational distribution. Titular seats could thus be distributed amongst the three groups.

In so far as concerns the power of the Governing Body, we might consider a delegation of the powers of the Conference to manage the affairs of the Organisation and to ensure the application of decisions taken by the Conference and to make any suggestions necessary to the Conference which might be in the interests of the Organisation, in particular with regard to programmes.

In so far as Industrial Committees are concerned, we must again examine their extension, bearing in mind the modified composition of the I.L.O. and also the importance to many countries of the problems of agriculture and of non-manual workers.

In addition to the Committee on Plantations, we feel that there should be a permanent committee dealing with problems peculiar to agriculture. In their standard-setting activities, all these committees should follow the I.L.O. standards to facilitate their application to the industrial sector.

We are very glad of our consultative status and our satisfactory relations with the I.L.O. but we feel that something should be done to eliminate certain discrimination which will make a broadening of further consultation possible. We feel that only those organisations with a truly universal field of action and a general interest in I.L.O. matters should have this right of consultative and advisory status. We are very happy that consultative status has also been given to our regional organisations. We feel the time has come to bestow consultative and advisory status on the international trade secretariats. In this connection the Governing Body should, in consultation with the organisations concerned, co-ordinate the various consultative capacities which have been granted and try to find ways to improve them and to achieve the maximum of efficiency.
improper action incompatible with the authority of the I.L.O. and respect for its principles.

We share the opinion the Director-General expresses in his Report when he says that efforts for social and economic development must be based on a dialogue between the State and different organised social groups, a dialogue inspired by mutual understanding, by mutual respect for each other's autonomy and freedom of action, and by a determination to reach agreement” since these are “some of the most fundamental objectives of the Organisation... on which the I.L.O. cannot compromise.

I would now like to refer to the competence of the Governing Body. Some persons think that the functions of the Governing Body should be reduced, that its powers should be transferred to the Conference. I disagree strongly with this. It is obvious that the Conference, meeting annually—and some people think it should meet only once every two years—could not appropriately and effectively perform the administrative, financial and other duties which are incumbent on the Governing Body under the Constitution and the various Standing Orders. The Conference hardly has the time to consider the various items on its agenda, the resolutions and other matters placed before it which become more and more complex as a result of the social problems of our time. Only a Governing Body with full powers and the ability to act rapidly can give the Conference the help it requires in order to solve the critical problems which arise.

The Inter-American Advisory Committee set up by the Governing Body, the members of which were appointed for the first time last year, is to meet in September in Buenos Aires. The start of its work by this Committee will constitute a new stage in the intensification of the regional work of the I.L.O., within the universal nature of its objectives, on behalf of the American countries.

The Governing Body wants the Committee to help in preparing the agenda of the regional conference and we hope that when the Committee meets it will ask the Governing Body to consider including in the agenda of the next Conference of American States Members of the I.L.O. to be held in Canada in 1966 an item on the contribution of free enterprise in social development. The employers of Venezuela would offer the I.L.O. all their experience in this particular field for the preparation of the report on this matter.

We believe in modern free enterprise, creating wealth, employment and welfare, in freedom and fully aware of its enormous responsibility in social progress.

In Venezuela—and I would refer to my own country without disparaging the work done by entrepreneurs in other countries—the employers clearly show their sense of social responsibility by contributing to the establishment and operation of non-profit social institutions in less-favoured urban and rural areas.

A growing number of executives of private undertakings give their services and time free of charge on work of a civic character, through which they devote their capacity, their experience and their efficiency as private managers to the promotion and operation of social institutions and to running them on private-enterprise lines. In so doing they make use of their personal resources and of those of the undertakings for which they work.

This action by Venezuelan employers not only brings these useful instruments for social progress into existence, but is serving as a model which enables other Central and South American countries which wish to act in the same way to face their own huge social problems.

Promoted by the Venezuelan Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production and the Chambers of Commerce of Caracas and other private-enterprise organisations, we established early last year a civil association called the Voluntary Dividend for the Community. Its capital is made up of spontaneous contributions by undertakings, based on a percentage of their profits and quite separate from the profit-sharing required under law and collective agreements.

At the 48th Session of the Conference I had an opportunity to explain to delegates the doctrinal principles of this new institution, which is now spreading very much both in Venezuela and abroad. We believe it creates an atmosphere propitious for an understanding of social problems. The progress made may be estimated when I tell you that 58,500,000 bolivars (or $13 million) were spent in 1964 on social assistance to the most necessitous communities. Furthermore, this is not the only contribution which Venezuelan private enterprise makes with the same objects. The amount of its contribution on social purposes altogether has been several times as great. There are 130,000 industrial and commercial undertakings in Venezuela, which, in their turn, finance other large-scale collective social programmes either directly or in co-operation with the various private social institutions.

In concluding, I should like to refer to two items on the agenda of this 49th Session of the Conference: one related to the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries, and the other referring to agrarian reform, with particular reference to employment and social aspects. On both these subjects the Employers' delegation of Venezuela has made its position quite clear in the committees which are dealing with these questions. Nevertheless, I think it might be wise to sum up our points of view on these very important topics.

In Venezuela agrarian reform has been implemented by a special Act, which was approved by the most varied sectors of public opinion in 1960.

Agrarian reform, we feel, cannot be a simple change in land tenure and ownership. Of course, this is a factor of importance, but reform involves a whole group of complex measures, the primordial objective of which is to incorporate the rural sector in the whole process of production, improving the income of the peasants and their standard of living; educating and training them will make it possible for them to make the best possible use of the land for their own benefit, for that of their family and for the community to which they belong. All this process can and must be carried out without conflict, without friction or violence, under the law, which also protects the employer in agriculture who maintains his land— to the extent which is granted to him—in production as a social function.

Today in Venezuela—without interrupting the adjudication and awarding of lands—agrarian reform is directed towards helping the small landowners through infrastructure and through the various works required by agricultural unions, that is, production and consumption credits, education, technical assistance, agricultural extension, housing, and promoting the co-operative movement in communities. Various measures have been taken to solve the most serious problems which affect any agrarian economy in underdeveloped countries, i.e., those relating to remunerative prices for agricultural products and proper marketing.

There remains, however, a great deal to be done in order to achieve the best results from agrarian reform which can be a link in the whole chain of the general economic process, although it is subject, more than any other field, to the cyclic effects of economic growth because of the characteristics peculiar to it.

The co-operative movement is a very suitable method of contributing to the development of the economy of many countries, but we must not think of it as the only way, or that it should take the place of any other system.

The mission of co-operatives is to complement the other means of economic growth. They should be given preference in sectors of the economy which have been given insufficient attention, regardless of the reason.

Co-operatives need a stimulus and help for their operation, but it would be running counter to our interest for them to be put in a position of privilege as compared with other organisations.

The administration of co-operatives must be in the hands of bodies created for this—people who are directly connected with them and not outsiders such as delegates of the State. The survival of co-operatives and their progress depend on the degree of efficiency and the degree of propriety in their administration.

We consider, finally, that well-run co-operatives can make a valuable contribution to over-all development, that is human, economic, social and cultural development.

Mr. SPARISI (Government delegate, Cyprus)—Mr. President, on behalf of the Government of Cyprus I wish to congratulate you on your election to the presidency of this Conference and to assure you that the way in which you have conducted its business does credit to your country and more than justifies the faith that the Conference has shown in you.

The Conference has before it in particular two different, but equally important reports. The substance of the special report on apartheid is admirably condensed in the following extract: " . . . the process of evolution in the direction of separate development of different population groups is a process in which the gravest social problems arise and persist to a degree which has become the subject of world-wide criticism."

This conclusion is confirmed by experience. We deplore, therefore, the attempts of the Government of South Africa to enforce the practice of separate development of its different population groups, because we know by experience that such practice, regardless of any fancy epithet that may be given to it, is conducive to the disruption and destruction of the groups concerned, and to the disturbance of peace in the world.

The special report of the Director-General has done much to drive home this fundamental truth. In doing so it has rendered immense service to humanity in its determination to eliminate the practice of apartheid. My Government welcomes this type of I.L.O. activity, and hopes that it will be extended to cover member States which flout the basic principles of this Organisation and promote or engage in discriminatory practices, either internally against their own people, or externally against foreign people who become prey to their greed.

The place of our underprivileged fellow men in the society of which they are a part, is not, I believe, relatively to the developed countries, for a more responsible role in this Organisation. I hasten, therefore, to register my Government's gratification at the tendency to associate developing countries even more closely with the policy-making and executive organs of the I.L.O. We are firmly convinced that the new blood from the Afro-Asian and other developing countries can bring to the I.L.O. organs new vitality, new perspectives, and greater universality of purpose and scope.

My Government hopes that the new proposals concerning the activities and structure of the I.L.O. now being contemplated will answer the questions posed by the necessity for further democratisation and increasing efficiency of this Organisation.

Part I of the Director-General's Report brings to the foreground one of the most frustrating problems in the field of human resources development, namely the problem of unco-ordinated action.

Page break image

It has been our experience that education often takes little, if any, cognisance of economic realities. As a result, while industry cries for trained, skilled hands, our schools turn out scholars, for whom there is little demand, to swell our unemployment registers. This is to the detriment and frustration of national plans for economic development.

To solve this problem in Cyprus we have set up national tripartite bodies to advise the Government on ways and means to formulate and implement vocational training policies which are geared to the actual needs of industry, and to try to reorientate over-all educational policies. The change in emphasis and objectives in educational policies cannot be painless.

Disdent voices in Cyprus deplore the increasing tendency to deviate from the traditional Greek classical character of our schools in favour of a more practical education.

Our answer to the weeping Jeremiahs is simple. Whether we like it or not ours is a job economy. We cannot recite Plato on an empty stomach. We march with industrial progress, or we lag behind, to the economic as well as cultural disadvantage of our country vis-à-vis other developed and developing countries.

My Government believes that the I.L.O. can do much to break down the deep-rooted prejudices and time-worn traditions which hold thwarting command both over the individual and over society, and lie in the way of the development of human resources and economic development.

The onslaught against prejudice, ignorance and resistance to change should be massive, combined and co-ordinated if it is to be effective. Because of its very nature the challenge is extended to this Organisation. It is our view that the I.L.O., in cooperation with all United Nations agencies concerned, and after consultation with national governments of member countries, should work out an over-all and long-range programme for human resources development. The programme should be practical, realistic and comprehensible to those national governments which will be called upon to apply it. In its final form it should balance social, economic and cultural factors in such a way that education and training may meet the needs and aspirations of the people concerned.

One particular aspect of human resources development of interest to Cyprus is the establishment of national productivity centres. Our own productivity centre comprises specialised departments in management development, finance, industrial engineering, sales promotion, and management accounting. There is also a workshop for the upgrading of technical skills. The plan of operations of the centre provides for seminars, courses and in-plant surveys. It has been our experience that courses, seminars and in-plant surveys, though useful management tools, do not go far enough. Cyprus industry has been consistently and persistently requesting a productivity centre into a consultancy firm. My Government has withstood pressure to transform the productivity centre into a consultancy firm. However, we cannot altogether ignore requests for consultancy services, especially because such services are not to be obtained locally. In view of the total absence of private local specialised firms or individuals in consultancy, and having regard to the importance of successful productivity centres for national economics, my Government believes that productivity centres should undertake selectively, at least in the initial stages, to offer consultancy services to local industry.

My final observations concern the development of social institutions. The Government of Cyprus believes that free and independent social institutions are the cornerstone of true democracy; that they constitute the only countervailing power against authoritarian domination; and that they provide the best possible safeguard against all forms of exploitation within a society of co-operating but nevertheless competitive political, economic and social groups.

We have translated and materialised this belief in the establishment of tripartite bodies in all spheres of industry, and in the achievement of a true industrial democracy.

As a result, Cyprus, a hotbed of industrial unrest under trade union restrictions only a few years back, can now boast of near-perfect industrial peace under conditions of full trade union liberties; and economic and social policy is tackled from the viewpoint of over-all benefits to accrue to the people as a whole, and from the viewpoint of the balanced, integrated, and harmonious development of all racial, economic and social groups in the island. To judge from our own experience the development of social institutions is an imperative and profitable I.L.O. investment.

Mr. President, faithful to your suggestion to me a few days back, I have reserved my reply up to this moment—a reply to a very regrettable incident which occurred in this hall on 10 June at the expense of my country, and in the absence of the Cyprus delegation. At the end of the afternoon sitting, the Government adviser from Turkey insisted on taking the floor and, speaking to an emptying hall, proceeded to vilify the good name of Cyprus and to make personal attacks against my Head of State, Archbishop Makarios.

I have since been informed that as a matter of policy my Government have made similar accusations in the Security Council, the Council of Europe, the World Health Organisation, and now the I.L.O. The accusations were refuted and proved untrue by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Cyprus. The purpose of such attacks was to distort the picture in Cyprus by the technique of the big and oft-repeated myth, to present Greece and Turk in Cyprus as unable to coexist, and to further Turkey's aims for partitioning the island.

I shall not emulate the Government adviser of Turkey by engaging in counter-accusations, for no man of good will can fail to see that conflicts create both credit and debit balances for all contestants, and that the Turkish record in Cyprus to be presented to the world I assure you it could scarcely fall short of its historic past.

However, this issue is political, and I leave it to the United Nations where it belongs. There has been a United Nations peace-keeping force in Cyprus to assist the Government to pacify the island, and the United Nations mediator has been working on a solution which would enable the Greek Cypriots and the Turkish Cypriots to live together in freedom, fraternity and equality.

Those of us who love Cyprus can help the cause of peace by our temperance, our patience, and our goodwill, and not by barrages of accusations and counter-accusations.

And now, Mr. President, to enable the Conference to proceed with its work, I request you to close the matter by expunging from the records the statement made by the Government adviser of Turkey on the grounds that it is derogatory to the Head of the Republic of Cyprus, unfaithful to the truth, and irrelevant to the work of this Conference.

Trustful of your integrity and fair-mindedness, I am certain that you will extend to the President of the Republic of Cyprus the same courtesy you have extended to other Heads of States, States which are more populous than Cyprus but certainly no more dedicated than Cyprus to the principles of this Organisation.

The President—I give the floor to Mr. Alagum, Government adviser of Turkey, on a point of order.
The presence of our delegation in its tripartite composition this year at the 49th Session of the Conference is a proof of our unceasing efforts to resist interference by the great powers of adaptation seeking their way, Viet-Nam is always willing to try the system which will give it the proper structure to resist invasion regardless of whence it comes, and which will bring the internal peace it needs in order to apply constructive standards which can lead to social justice. Our weakness might be criticised, but can one be strong when every effort is being made to divide us, when East, West, North and South come together in armed conflict to try to gain supremacy?

Since our accession to organised independence in 1954, Viet-Nam has constantly been a victim of attacks by armed bands who, labelling themselves "liberators", terrorise the isolated rice field workers in order to exact tribute, applying to them the Mao-Tse-Tung tactics of the guerrilla movement: "live off the land."

Viet-Nam is still subject to the inclemencies of nature: a flood last September, which had the aspect of a deluge, reduced the centre of Viet-Nam to a sea of mud and made it necessary to emigrate to more habitable regions. Our thanks go to those friendly countries which do not cease to help us by means of the "Food for Peace" Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organisation, and others who are helping us to defend ourselves.

Where the geographical situation does not offer hiding places suitable for armed bandits, where the open country does not lend itself to emigration to more habitable regions. Our thanks go to those friendly countries which do not cease to help us by means of the "Food for Peace" Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organisation, and others who are helping us to defend ourselves.

I should like to express my gratitude to the Afro-Asian group which has always had deep sympathy for Viet-Nam in the loss of life we are suffering. Our country is at war. Our countryside, our plantations, our rice fields, our sea coast and our territorial waters are the theatre of treacherous and bloody operations where the youth of my country are the first victims.

Is it not criminal, and this in the name of a mystique of which only the instigators understand the sense, that the workers on the land should be forced to engage in tasks which run counter to human dignity? Is it not barbarous to drug them with ideologies and afterwards expose them, defenceless, to the crossfire of modern weapons?

Our country is reduced to its southern part by this line of demarcation which the Northern signatory to the treaty seems to ignore. Emerging from a period of dependence, my country does not wish to waste its time on "attempts" at social achievements: it wishes to incorporate I.L.O. principles in its life and to continue to do so.

The PRESIDENT—On the point made by Mr. Sparis, Government delegate of Cyprus, concerning the deletion of remarks which he considers derogatory to the Head of the Republic of Cyprus, he will appreciate that I was not in the Chair at the time. However, I will discuss the point with Mr. Gurinovich, the Vice-President who was in the Chair at the time, and give a reply on this point after consultation with him. As far as my own policy is concerned, it will be known that I do not allow any derogatory remarks to be made about any Head of State.

Mr. NGUYEN-Van-Lan—I cannot be a judge of the political situation of my country. Like any nation buffeted about by stabilising tendencies seeking their way, Viet-Nam is always willing to try the system which will give it the proper structure to resist invasion regardless of whence it comes, and which will bring the internal peace it needs in order to apply constructive standards which can lead to social justice. Our weakness might be criticised, but can one be strong when every effort is being made to divide us, when East, West, North and South come together in armed conflict to try to gain supremacy?

Since our accession to organised independence in 1954, Viet-Nam has constantly been a victim of attacks by armed bands who, labelling themselves "liberators", terrorise the isolated rice field workers in order to exact tribute, applying to them the Mao-Tse-Tung tactics of the guerrilla movement: "live off the land."

Viet-Nam is still subject to the inclemencies of nature: a flood last September, which had the aspect of a deluge, reduced the centre of Viet-Nam to a sea of mud and made it necessary for the inhabitants of three large provinces to emigrate to more habitable regions. Our thanks go to those friendly countries which do not cease to help us by means of the "Food for Peace" Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organisation, and others who are helping us to defend ourselves.

Where the geographical situation does not offer hiding places suitable for armed bandits, where the open country does not lend itself to emigration of women, children and nuns, where, in short, the humanitarian programme of the United Nations can be applied, there are always oases of peace, for life must go on and the Vietnamese have great powers of adaptation.

I should like to express my gratitude to the Afro-Asian group which has always had deep sympathy for Viet-Nam in the loss of life we are suffering. Our country is at war. Our countryside, our plantations, our rice fields, our sea coast and our territorial waters are the theatre of treacherous and bloody choose the proper object for their protective thoughts.

South Viet-Nam is almost the only place where the International Control Commission, which grew out of the Geneva Agreement, operates and is always welcome.

I should like to call the attention of the employers of the free world and of all the employers of good will to the fact that we have free enterprise in our country and that, while some nationalisation is necessary in order to carry through our five-year plans, this never constitutes an obstacle to investment by friendly governments and businessmen. Our economy is healthy and sound thanks to investments and gifts from such bodies as the U.S.O.M., credit insurance, and credit from the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and Taipèh. We have set up an export development centre which will soon have agencies in the main centres of the Far East and Africa. Peace, which will return soon, we hope, will find our balance of trade in a sounder condition than before and will enable us to engage in technical co-operation with our new friends in Africa in the spirit of human solidarity which inspired the Preamble to the Constitution of the I.L.O.

This is in broad terms the concrete reality which I have the duty and honour of putting before you. In conclusion, I should like to propose that the Conference consider, in addition to a programme of aid to countries in course of development, a special programme— and just as urgent a programme—of aid to countries in course of pacification. In Grand Guignol theatre where the policeman and the robber are always opposed it is sometimes amusing to see the policeman receive a drubbing, but it is always right on reflection—and just as urgent a programme—of aid to the U.S.O.M., credit insurance, and credit from the main centres of the Far East and Africa.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. ALONSO (Workers' delegate, Argentina)—After two years of absence from the Conference the voice of the workers of Argentina can now once more be heard through its genuine representative organisation, the C.G.T., or the General Confederation of Labour. I can therefore give you our views on the agenda of this session and restate the principles which guide the action of the C.G.T.

The Government delegate of Argentina, now Minister of Labour, made a speech a few days ago from this rostrum which followed a pattern he favours. Unable to justify his negative attitude or to explain the attacks made on the trade union movement and its institutions, and seeking to evade the accounts he will have to render to the workers, the people and the Congress, he counter-attacked. Therefore I shall have to leave my central theme for a moment and explain the facts and their causes in a few words.

We were absent from the 48th Session of the Conference because an examining magistrate, subsequent to the executive and at the Government's request, asked for proceedings to be taken and preventive imprisonment ordered in respect of all the presidents and general secretaries of the organisations belonging to the C.G.T., about 200 persons in all, as well as a great many shop stewards. Proceedings were taken against altogether about 5,000 of our comrades who were struggling against social injustice and the policy of starvation and unemployment.

What has been called the battle plan of our Confederation, of which the Congress and Government itself knew through our own statements and which was regarded by Members of Parliament, Ministers and the President of the Republic himself as a set of normal claims appropriate to labour relations, perfectly constitutional and pertaining to the right of petition—indeed it led to the introduction of Bills in Congress itself—was subsequently decreed and misrepresented by the Government when it understood that this was not a simple statement of objectives but that the workers were determined to prevent the country being paralyzed by official inertia and save it from gradual disintegration because of negative official policy.

With official machinery breaking down at all levels, the Ministry of Labour and the Government, unable to put a stop to the declining standard of living—there had been an elevenfold rise in the cost of living since 1956—with indebtedness and flight of capital rife at all levels, unemployment at an alarming level—500,000 unemployed and 500,000 underemployed, making a million comrades without a proper livelihood—with the currency losing its value (it is hardly quoted on the international exchanges and you have to pay 250 pesos for a dollar) all this obliged the C.G.T. to take organised trade union action so as to induce the Government to change its policy, to adjust to the pace of today's world and to abandon the methods of the tortoise, as our people have been saying.

Productivity and the gross national income have increased, yet the workers' share and their purchasing power is decreasing. Apparent wage adjustments through collective agreements or legislation, itself the fruit of the workers' efforts, did not bring about any improvement in the homes of the nation but were converted into social regression and economic loss. Although our wages can buy less than ten or even five years ago, we produce more per head, and yet the country is more indebted and short of capital than it was in those previous periods. When we do not resign ourselves to this state of affairs, because our country has a potential and our people work hard, the whole official machinery of the Ministry of Labour is used to interfere with trade union life and seek to break up the C.G.T.—unsuccessfully, of course.

In order to come here at all we had to get permission from a magistrate, Dr. Insaurralde, who gave us 30 days' leave, because we workers' leaders are being sued for conspiracy, subversion, etc. You see, in the eyes of our rulers, rights and guarantees exist and are valid only if they do not clash with their party policy or disturb the Government's peaceful slumber or affect the well-being of the 300 families who live on the work and the efforts of the Argentine people. And the Minister of Labour himself is the best representative of his policy, for his Ministry is merely a political committee of the governing party.

I did not want to speak in the plenary on the relations between the State and labour. We intended to complain to the Committee on Freedom of Association about the infringements we have suffered and explain to the world why we were absent last year, but the Minister has forced me to speak out here.

The Argentine Parliament has just asked for explanations from Dr. Solá, the Argentine Government delegate here, and anyway the workers of the C.G.T., three million in all, are quite prepared to put up and be heard. The political adventure, this attack on the trade unions, this suicidal policy by the Government team. Therefore I do not need to make a full and detailed accusation in this plenary but shall do that when asked to do so by the Committee on Freedom of Association.

I shall now speak on the Director-General’s Report, which contains points which I cannot refer to for lack of time; however I will do so in the text. I think the agenda contains two particularly interesting points for us—item VI and item VII. The others are also important in terms of human values and we are indeed glad to see attention given and action taken with regard to important labour problems. However, the two I mentioned first of all are the ones which mean for our country such things as transformation, development, growth, advancement, justice, structural change and future.

In November 1964 the C.G.T. called together the agricultural organisations, experts, authors of books on agrarian subjects and national and international organisations for what we called an “agrarian seminar”. Its conclusions were printed and have been widely distributed in the agrarian countries. Then, in May of the present year, in Santa Fe, we convened the First Argentine Congress for Agrarian Reform which was attended by political leaders, legislators, federations of settlers, farmers, co-operatives, engineers, technicians in agriculture and authors of books on this important subject. The I.L.O., the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Organisation of American States were represented by observers.

Thus, we did not come to this Conference to improvise.

I would say, first of all, that our country has an area of 175,142,497 hectares, of which only 2,769 estates hold 38,204,000 hectares. If we take as latifundios only those estates of over 5,000 hectares, and if we leave out the cases where one owner has several estates (and which worsens the situation), you reach a figure of one-half per cent. of the owners holding 28.8 per cent. of the area of the country.

As a simple graphical instance, in the provinces, except Buenos Aires, the large landowners hold an area five times as extensive as Luxembourg. In Chubut the big estates are three times as big as Switzerland. The big estates are bigger than Italy and about as big as France. These figures have been taken from official statistics and are reliable. If anything, they would be in favour of the big estate owners, but they show that our country is still in the colonial era. Every time we start a peaceful agrarian reform, the reaction of the oligarchy is to finance revolts and revolutions and ally themselves with all the evil forces to recover their privileges, despite the modernisation and relative development which industry has achieved in the last twenty years.

In 1947 we had 471,389 farms and following Act No. 13246 of 1948 the figure increased to 564,891. A wide system of credits for crop rotation and stock-raising covering up to 30 per cent. of the value of farms had shaken the monopolistic structure of the big estates and increased the area of production of crops and the volume of stock rearing.

In 1956 the Agrarian Reform came into force and by 1960 had reduced the number of farms to 471,756. This was reflected in agricultural production and, even in a country like ours which consumes and exports meat, we had to reduce our exports and ration meat on the home market.

In addition to the 100,000 farmers affected by this reduction of activities, another 200,000 families have been evicted recently, and instead of being able to work for the rest of their lives on their land they have been expelled from the land where they spent their efforts, their sweat and their tears, having to go to emergency towns in search of homes and employment.

The Agrarian Reform Congress at Santa Fe adopted a report which called for the suspension of the evictions and expulsions. Parliament will soon have to deal with this problem which is further evidence of the greed of the large landowners in a country which has only 25 million inhabitants.

In 1947 the big estates covered 62,475,000 hectares, that is 36.02 per cent. of the area of land, and the tenants only had 38,560,000 hectares or 22.23 per cent. of the land. By 1960 the reduction in activities had brought us to the following situation: the big owners had increased their estates and had 103,218,000 hectares or 58.93 per cent. of the land whereas the small settlers only had 22,679,000 hectares or 12.95 per cent.

There is another aspect to this important subject. The cultivated area increased in 1947, owing to the social policy, from 173 million hectares to 200 million. However, by 1960 the big estate owners had brought it down to 175 million.

What is the use of the efforts and sacrifice of rural people, and what has the Government gained from concentrating land in the hands of the profiteers?

I will not give you further details in order not to tire the Conference, but in the Committee on Agrarian Reform we shall give details, since the Argentine Government delegate, instead of giving information, spends his time attacking the Argentine trade union movement, perhaps to hide the true situation.

Our delegation seeks social justice in the rural areas and the rule of law so that the land and property may be administered in accordance with its social function with due regard to human labour.

To sum up, agrarian reform would be an institution of a juridical character with its own characteristics different from that of rural property in the old sense. It should seek to protect farmers' families, promote rational cultivation, and put an end to the situation where land is treated as merchandise. This will enable tenants to become owners, for we do not regard reform simply as a technical matter for increased output or redistribution but as a social advance.

Now to come to the question of the role of the co-operative movement in economic progress. As far as we are concerned we feel the heart of the co-operative movement is agriculture and the trade union movement. The co-operatives are filling a great social need and faithfully carrying out the mission entrusted to them. But they must combat pseudo-co-operatives and frequent lack of sympathy on the part of the authorities. Despite lack of protection against financial trusts there are, however, co-operatives engaged successfully in promoting the welfare of society. My Confederation will support all efforts made at the Conference to expand the role of co-operatives.

The I.L.O. must continue within its field of competence to promote free determination of peoples and mutual respect among Members, in order to ensure that assistance to those in need is not combined with humiliating conditions. In this way the enormous sums now devoted to armaments may be released for the benefit of justice and peace.

Interpretation from French: Mr. TUCAKOVIC (Employers' delegate, Yugoslavia)—As Employers' delegate of Yugoslavia, I would like to congratulate you, Mr. President, on your election to the presidency of this session of the Conference, and to wish you every success in your work.

Among the important economic and social problems raised in the Report of the Director-General, there are a number of questions which I would like to highlight because of their growing importance.

In the developing countries, and, to a growing extent, in the industrialised countries, there has been an increasing awareness in recent years of the need to bring about a change in international economic relations, to eliminate existing obstacles and discriminatory practices and to introduce changes in economic and financial policy so as to make it an effective instrument for speeding up economic development in the world.

This growing awareness of the need for change in international economic relations has obviously led to research into ways and means of achieving it. I think such research should be one of the primary tasks of the International Labour Organisation. We in Yugoslavia are convinced that it is today necessary to achieve the development of the broadest possible international economic co-operation, which would exclude all discriminatory practices and would result in new and fairer international relations. We believe, however, that the establishment of such relations in the world economy means finding, first of all, a radical solution for the problems facing the developing countries, and that, to this end, there should be appropriate and sincere international action in the field of trade, finance and technical co-operation. It is only through this type of action that the development process can be directed along lines which will be beneficial to the world economy as a whole and which will, at the same time, contribute to improved international relations and to the general progress of the world. Universal economic co-operation is a key element and a basic premise for active and peaceful coexistence, which is the fundamental aim of Yugoslav foreign policy. It follows in practice that one must commit oneself fully to the creation of the conditions necessary for the elimination of all barriers to exports from the developing countries.

I also think that the role of the I.L.O. in connection with the influence of science on contemporary economic and social development should not be neglected. Whenever this question is discussed, it is usually limited to an analysis of the development of technology or of methods of production in the light of technical progress. The influence of scientific progress on the organisation of production, the planning of economic processes, the application of scientific methods to the management of enterprises and the economy as a whole, the promotion of human relations in undertakings, the protection of labour and the use of leisure time are all aspects which are overlooked. The maximum effort should be made to ensure that these important questions are not neglected and that the importance of the international aspects is not lost sight of.

In Yugoslav undertakings the organisation of work and its analysis are the subject of increasing research and of the application of scientific methods. Industrial psychology and sociology furnish the necessary elements for improving human relations with a view to increased productivity. Co-management is spreading; it is taking on vital new forms and stimulating the development of research and a scientific approach to work. The Yugoslav worker is aware of the importance of scientific methods, and he is becoming more and more committed to the defence and support of ideas aimed at ensuring the application of new scientific achievements to the production process in the broadest possible sense. This accounts for a resolution relating to science and research, which has recently been adopted in Yugoslavia.

All that I have said confirms the fact that co-management has reached, in Yugoslavia, a high level of development, and often it is the management organs—i.e. the workers—which encourage the directors to explore new means of ensuring better organisation of work and higher productivity in the interests of the undertaking and the community as a whole. The introduction of a fair system of distribution of profits, which does away with all elements of exploitation by linking the personal income of each worker with the achievements of the undertaking as a whole and, of course, with the results of his own work and his personal participation, has been particularly effective in increasing the interest of the workers in research work, in the undertaking, and in the organisation of Yugoslav undertakings. Such a system, however, necessitates constant advanced training and the acquisition of new skills and techniques in matters of organisation and management.

The I.L.O. should pay more attention to the exchange of experience among all its Members in a field as vast as that of the application of science in all its forms. The question of income and of methods governing policies in this field, social security measures, direct participation in decisions relating to production and relations in this connection—all these occupational and technical questions could be the subject of useful exchanges of experience between the member States.

The best way of promoting action of this kind would, in our view, be through increasing the activity of the Industrial Committees and democratising their structure. Greater flexibility should be introduced in respect of the possibility of participating in their work, and these Committees should be made as effective as possible. In addition the I.L.O. should pay greater attention to the establishment of closer contacts between the scientific institutions already existing in a number of member States, as well as to increased aid to the developing countries, and to encouraging the exchange of experiences. In Yugoslavia there are almost 1,400 institutions of this kind ready to cooperate with similar institutions elsewhere in respect of a whole series of technical questions. It seems to us that it is not necessary to stress that the creation of as large a number as possible of intellectuals in the developing countries is of vital importance for the progress of these countries, and every effort should be made to stimulate the role of the I.L.O. in this field. The creation of suitable regional organisations, the foundation of new institutions and the use of existing institutions in the field of education, the analysis of new achievements in relation to economic development, and the exchange of experiences are all matters requiring attention.

The improvement of the entire information system of the I.L.O. is a necessary condition for an effective exchange of information between member States. The I.L.O. should become a clearing-house where information would converge and from which would stem valuable information to enable increased productivity and progress to be achieved throughout the world.

We are also interested in the question of human resources development. Assistance and co-operation in this field should be directed towards the establishment of national institutions workingcompetently and systematically to solve the problems that arise in this connection, and the I.L.O. could join in these efforts by promoting the exchange of experience.

Before concluding I would like once again to draw your attention to a problem often heard during earlier sessions, and which figures also in the Yugoslav delegation’s document concerning the discussion on the formulation of positions and principles on the future work of the I.L.O. within the framework of its programme of activity. This document was distributed among delegations last year. The tripartite structure of the I.L.O. can only be founded on objective consideration of the functions of occupational organisations and their representative nature. The maximum effort is needed in order that the new social events may be reflected in the tripartite structure, and so that adequate representation of the countries of all regions and the various social systems be secured.

It is clear that there must be full representation within the Employers’ group for managers of the nationalised enterprises in the Western countries, for the representatives of the developing countries and for representatives of state-owned undertakings in the socialist countries, as well as the Yugoslav undertakings where there is workers’ management. Only then will there be equality, which is the basis of the structure of the I.L.O.

We consider that the extension and adaptation of the activities of the I.L.O. in this direction would be an important contribution to a better understanding among all its Members, and would result in a strengthening of their mutual understanding, consolidation of peace throughout the world and the progress of mankind, all of which is certainly our joint intention.

(The Conference adjourned at 5 p.m.)
RATIFICATION OF A CONVENTION BY JAPAN

Interpretation from French: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Andriantsitohaina)—I have pleasure in informing the Conference that the Director-General of the International Labour Office has registered, on 14 June 1965, the ratification by Japan of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948.

CHANGE IN THE COMPOSITION OF THE GOVERNING BODY OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR OFFICE

The PRESIDENT (Mr. Andriantsitohaina)—The Clerk of the Conference will now announce the results of the meeting of the Workers' Electoral College.

The CLERK OF THE CONFERENCE—

I should like to inform members of the Conference that the Workers' Electoral College at this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference met yesterday, 15 June 1965, and, in accordance with article 54, paragraph 5, of the Standing Orders of the Conference, confirmed the appointment by the Workers' group of the Governing Body of Mr. Abid Ali (India) to fill the vacancy created by the death of Mr. Ambekar (India) as a regular Member of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office.

FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE OF GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVES

Interpretation from French: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Andriantsitohaina)—The first item on our agenda today is to consider the reports of the Finance Committee of Government Representatives.

The Committee's first report, which has been circulated to delegates, contains the Committee's recommendations for action by the Conference in respect of the items on the Committee's agenda, except the proposed expenditure and income budget for the year 1966. It also contains a summary of the discussion that took place in the Committee on the expenditure budget for 1966 and records in the last two paragraphs the Committee's adoption of the expenditure budget.

The Committee's second report, which has also been circulated to delegates, contains a summary of the Committee's discussion of the income budget for 1966 and records in paragraph 61 the Committee's adoption of the scale of assessments for 1966 as recommended by the Allocations Committee of the Governing Body. Paragraph 63 of this report contains the text of the resolution submitted by the Finance Committee to the Conference concerning the adoption of the expenditure and income budget for 1966.

I sincerely hope that the Conference will be able to adopt the expenditure and income budget for 1966 together with all the other recommendations of the Finance Committee.

Interpretation from French: The PRESIDENT (Mr. Andriantsitohaina)—The general discussion on these two reports is now open.

Mr. BERGENSTRÖM (Employers' delegate, Sweden)—It is a pleasure for me to inform this Conference that the great majority of the Employers will vote in favour of the proposed I.L.O. budget for 1966. As you have seen in the official budget document, the proposed 1966 expenditure of the I.L.O. was agreed unanimously by the Governing Body at its spring session. This decision of the Governing Body was reached after lengthy debate during which the Director-General's original budget proposals were profoundly amended. The process of hammering out the budget in the Governing Body so that it would be acceptable to all, involved, of course, many compromises on different items. Like all compromises, the present budget contains elements that are either fully acceptable or less appreciated by the groups. From the Employers' viewpoint the most positive feature of the proposed budget is the increased credit for technical assistance to developing countries. Indeed, it is our view that the main emphasis in the planning of I.L.O. activities should be laid in the future on the specific problems of our youngest member States. In so far as this standpoint is reflected in the proposed budget before you, the budget has our wholehearted support.

On the other hand, the Employers feel rather reluctant with regard to the proposed programme of meetings, many of which are costly and do not—at least, not directly—contribute to the betterment of the highly problematic situation of the developing countries. As you will see from the first report of the Finance Committee of Government Representatives, this view is not held exclusively by the Employers; it is shared as well by a number of Government delegates from both developing and industrialised countries. Speaking on the financial burden represented by the meetings, I think it is important to draw your attention to the suggestion made by some members of the Finance Committee according to which the Conference itself should be convened only every second year. Considerable resources could thus be saved in favour of increased activities for the benefit of the developing countries.

Such a device would make it necessary, of course, for the I.L.O. to establish its budget on a two-year basis. In our view such a procedure would not entail any major disadvantage; on the contrary, there is a marked need for better long-term planning of the activities of our Organisation. The expenditure budget of the I.L.O. has grown very fast in recent years. It amounted to less than $10 million in 1960; in 1964 the expenditure had risen to roughly $17.3 million and the proposed budget for 1966 provides for an outlay of more than $21 million. This rate of expansion can hardly be accepted for the future. We must see to it that our budget does not grow in a disproportionate way as compared with the increase in the gross national product of those countries which contribute most to the I.L.O. Long-term planning would make it easier to keep exaggerated budget expansion under control.

The Employers would also hope that the successive implementation of the recommendations of the external consultants who have examined the administrative structure of the Office would make it possible to reduce the demands for staff increases. The McKinsey exercise should not be expected, perhaps, to lead to staff reductions but should make it possible for the Office to cope with an increased workload without augmenting the personnel establishment.

Finally, I should like to say a few words about our budget techniques. The present budget is made up on a type of expenditure basis. Staff costs, general office expenses, travel on official business, etc. constitute important items in our budget. For some years past the Employers' members of the Governing Body have asked for a new budget presentation that would bring out more clearly the relationship between the overhead costs and the actual programmes of our Organisation. We have long favoured a budget founded on the activities instead of the present type of expenditure budget, arguing that such a new budget presentation would make it possible to assess the real costs of different I.L.O. activities—technical assistance, research, meetings, etc.—and to establish priorities between different fields of work, increasing credits in areas of high importance and reducing or eliminating deadwood.

The Employers are gratified that our claim for an improved budget presentation has to an ever increasing extent met with the acquiescence of numerous governments. It would also seem as if the Workers' spokesman had accepted our view on this point, and you will see from the first report of the Finance Committee that the Director-General himself has promised that, in the future, financial data will be associated with each programme proposed for implementation. Taking account of the reactions to our proposals in different quarters, we hope that the proposed budget for 1967 which the Director-General will present to the members of the Governing Body early in 1966 will be based on programmes and not on types of expenditure. With these observations on the part of the Employers, I take pleasure in recommending the Conference to adopt unanimously the proposed I.L.O. budget for 1966.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. LOPES SUSSEKIND (Government delegate, Brazil)—The reports of the Finance Committee of Government Representatives which we are now discussing contain a recommendation which I feel I should call to the attention of the Conference. I am referring to paragraph 58 of the second report where it is recommended that the Allocations Committee should meet in November 1965 to consider the studies and background work that would be required with a view to achieving early and substantial progress towards improving the I.L.O. scale of contributions and particularly towards bringing it into closer conformity with the United Nations scale.

As the delegates who followed the discussions on this matter in the Finance Committee will be aware, this text was the result of a compromise which, while it does not fully satisfy the Government of Brazil or various other representatives who, during the discussions in the Committee, put forward points of view similar to ours, nevertheless was accepted because we thought it does guarantee the carrying out of proper studies on the problem of conformity between the I.L.O. and United Nations scales. The I.L.O. scale does not in fact reflect the capacity to pay of all States Members of the Organisation. Various governments—in particular, governments of the developing countries—find themselves with an excessively high percentage of contributions. No less than 36 countries contribute at percentage rates which are higher in the I.L.O. than in the United Nations.

Bearing in mind the principle adopted by the Governing Body that the I.L.O. scale must be brought as close as possible to the United Nations scale, my Government feels that a serious effort must be made without delay to reallocate the amounts to be contributed by the States Members of the I.L.O., so that our income budget may be more realistic and equitable.

We hope that the studies and background work to be undertaken in November will contribute decisively to an improvement of the situation in the near future. If it lessens to some extent the legitimate concern felt by some member States with respect to the financial burdens they have to bear, these studies will greatly contribute to strengthening the International Labour Organisation.

Mainly for these considerations, the Government delegation of Brazil will have to abstain in the vote on the resolution concerning the budget for the financial year 1966 and the allocation of expenses among member States. During the discussions in the Committee we put on record that our Government is very much concerned at the rapid rate of increase of budgetary estimates. We feel furthermore, that it is not acceptable that the scale proposed for 1966 should not contain any considerable change in the distribution of the financial burden among the member States.

Last year the Brazilian Government delegation referred in the Finance Committee of Government Representatives to the need to have greater conformity between the I.L.O. scale of contributions and the United Nations scale. At the same time, we approved the scale proposed for 1965 in the hope that the scale for 1966 would correct, to a certain extent, this state of affairs. However, the scale which has been submitted to us now maintains a situation which we feel is neither just nor equitable; my delegation opposed the adoption of this scale in the Committee, and for the same reason will now abstain from voting on the resolution which includes this same scale.

I can assure you that during the 20 years since the end of the Second World War there has not been a single complaint against my Government concerning the application of any Convention ratified by us. My country has loyally fulfilled all the obligations deriving from the Constitution of the Organisation and all the decisions of the Organisation which have to be obeyed by all Members. My country has been paying every year over $250,000 as the contribution of the People's Republic of Poland to the budget of this Organisation.

The People's Republic of Poland had not only to make up for the backward economic and social conditions inherited from the classes that ruled over Poland before the war. It was also compelled to overcome the enormous destruction perpetrated by the Nazi occupation in Poland. The destruction was equivalent to 38 per cent. of the national patrimony, and, out of every 100 citizens, we lost 22 during the war. For such a country, over $250,000 is a very considerable contribution to the budget of the Organisation. Every year we receive letters from the Director-General in which he expresses his gratitude to the Polish Government for regularly paying our contribution at the proper time, in spite of currency difficulties in our country.

After speaking about our obligations, I would turn to the rights enjoyed by our Government in this Organisation. I wish to inform the Conference that during the score of years since the adoption of the Declaration of Philadelphia no representative of Poland has ever been elected Chairman of the Governing Body, President of this Conference, or chairman of any of the regular Conference committees, such as the Credentials Committee, the Resolutions Committee, the Committee on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, etc.

Such discrimination is not directed against my country alone. It is practised against the whole group of socialist countries of Eastern Europe. At the present Conference there are 48 elective posts; only two of these have been attributed to representatives of the socialist countries. Of these 48 elective posts, five are held by the USSR, six by Latin America, eight by Asia, together with Australia and New Zealand, four by the Arab countries, been a Member of the International Labour Organisation since 1919. It was a participant in the creation of the I.L.O., and has taken part in the work of the International Labour Organisation without interruption for 46 years.

My country has so far ratified 53 Conventions, and it now holds eleventh place as far as ratifications are concerned among the 114 States Members of this Organisation. My country has ratified the most important Conventions from the point of view of social conditions, including the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and others.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. CHAJOI (Government delegate, Poland)—I have come to this rostrum in order to express the point of view of the Polish Government concerning the draft budget for 1966. As you know, the general discussion of the budget gives an opportunity not only of discussing the various items and questions connected with the budget, but also of speaking about the substance of the work of the Organisation, since the budget reflects the whole of the inner life of the Organisation and its entire activity. In this broad context of discussion, I would like to express the opinion of my Government, the People's Republic of Poland, concerning the substance of our Organisation's activity.

In accordance with the principle inherent in international law that all States are equal, all member countries of an international organisation, independent of their size, political system, or level of economic development, are entitled within that organisation to equal opportunities of participating in its work and in guiding its policy. This covers preparation of the programme of the organisation itself and participation in its various projects. These equal rights must be accompanied by equal duties of all member States of international organisations. I would like to refer first to the obligations which my country has to discharge as a result of its membership of the I.L.O. Poland has eight by the African countries and 15 by Western European countries. I repeat, two for Eastern Europe and 15 for Western Europe. Not a single Workers' or Employers' representative from the socialist countries has been elected to any of these posts—and this has been happening for the last 20 years since the end of the war.

I would very much like the figures which I have just read out to be reproduced in the Conference record, so that these figures so frequently speak from this rostrum about democracy, about the principles of co-operation, about goodwill, may have these figures before them to show what the real situation is. During these past 20 years the office of President of the Conference has been held three times by representatives of North America, three times by Latin America, seven times by Asia, Australia or New Zealand, once by an Arab country, once by an African country, and nine times by Western European countries.

The corresponding figures for the Governing Body are even more eloquent. Not once has the representative of any Arab, African or Eastern European country been Chairman of the Governing Body.

What do these figures mean? This Organisation was set up by highly developed European countries, and for many years those highly developed countries governed the Organisation, where they represented not only themselves but others also. This practice still, unfortunately, persists, for the States which directed this Organisation then and represented not only themselves but also others continue to demand that they should direct this Organisation and represent others as well as themselves, in spite of the changes that have occurred in the Organisation since the adoption of the Declaration of Philadelphia. There is a large group of 11 socialist countries here, and also a large number of countries from Africa, Asia and other areas, which have but recently been liberated from the colonial system.

These radical changes that have taken place on the international scene have made it urgently necessary to ensure equitable representation of all existing social systems and geographical areas in all the organs of the I.L.O. The principles of equality, universality and tripartite representation in this Organisation will remain but empty words until such time as these demands that I have just mentioned have been satisfied.

Our Organisation must become a genuine forum for the exchange of economic and social experience. It must become a place where this experience is analysed so that it can be used by different countries in working out plans of social and economic development. It is not by chance that the constitutions of the various organisations lay down this principle. For instance, the Charter of U.N.E.S.C.O. stresses this principle and states that all the organs of U.N.E.S.C.O. should ensure equitable representation of different cultures. It is also embodied in the Constitution of the International Court of Justice, where it is said that the different civilisations and legal systems in the world should be represented. I could quote many more such examples from the life of various organisations. Unfortunately, in our Organisation these fundamental principles are not taken into account. On the contrary, they are being violated at every step.

That is why the time has finally come, in the opinion of my Government, to create equal opportunities and equal conditions for all Members in determining the programme and the social policy of this Organisation. Unfortunately, the representatives of the Polish Government are forced to note that the representatives of the Polish trade unions and the Polish employers have no opportunity of participating in drafting the programme of our Organisation and are deprived of any influence within it. Our possibilities as Government representatives are really modest and by no means equal to those of others.

Since the principle of democracy within the Organisation has to be reflected in all spheres of its activity, in the inner relations of the Organisation, in its methods of work, in its procedure, in its regulations and in all the mutual relations of its bodies, it is time to do away with this monopolistic situation enjoyed by certain countries in this Organisation. We should not intensify the feeling of certain peoples that they are being humiliated and neglected.

At the March session of the Governing Body my Government supported the draft budget for 1966, but I have to say that what happened at the beginning of this Conference, when once more there was a demonstration of discrimination against certain countries by reason of their social and economic structure, has forced my Government—and I have to say it with regret—to change its attitude towards the draft budget. That is why my Government cannot, to its great regret, support the draft budget for 1966.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. Goroshkin (Government delegate, U.S.S.R.)—For many years the Soviet representatives in the International Labour Organisation, both at the General Conference and in the Governing Body, have consistently stated that the annual increase in the budget should be confined to the essential minimum ensuring the normal work and development of the Organisation. Among the delegations of the various countries there is a growing opinion that the rate of growth of the I.L.O. budget and those of other international organisations should not exceed the rate of growth of the national income of member States. That point of view is fully justified and realistic.

The draft budget for 1966, which is before us today, provides for an increase of 9 per cent. as compared with the budget for 1965. In spite of a certain slowing down in the rate of growth as compared with previous years, we consider even this to be a high rate.

After several years of excessive increases in the expenditure of the Organisation, we were justified in expecting that its budget would be stabilised. It appears to us that the increases in expenditure for 1966 are not justified in the items referring to the staff of the I.L.O. and the expenses connected therewith.

In the Finance Committee the Soviet representative has already pointed out that for each dollar of additional credit for operational activities—and that is one of the most important items of expenditure—there are three additional dollars for administrative expenses. Such a tendency cannot fail to cause anxiety. It shows that there is a danger of excessive bureaucratic development in the Organisation.

On the proposal of the Director-General, and with the approval of the Governing Body, the methods of work of the Office were examined by a specialised firm, which cost quite a lot of money. We assumed that this analysis would make it possible to rationalise the work of the Office and to decrease its expenditure but, unfortunately that is not the case. The conclusions of this analysis formed part of the basis for the reorganisation that is now being concluded in the I.L.O. However, the fundamental defect of this reorganisation in the opinion of our delegation is that it has resulted in no tangible improvement—such as showing how greater efficiency could be obtained from the large number of the Office, or how resources could be shifted to more important factors. The appearance of new trends and areas connected with this reorganisation has as a rule created new units and posts, with the result that as a whole the reorganisation, instead of rationalising the machinery and making it more flexible, has made it even more cumbersome and expensive. That is something which we cannot accept.

In determining its attitude on budgetary questions, the Soviet delegation must take into account other important factors. Delegates have heard the representative of the People's Republic of Poland, Mr. Chajn, speak in a very detailed and convincing manner; he stated some very telling facts, and I fully support what he said. There can be no doubt that it is a duty of Members to participate in financing the activities of the I.L.O.; I do not dispute that fact, but the Members should also enjoy definite rights, and this is an important factor to which attention has repeatedly been drawn. It has already been mentioned at this session as well. Delegates have been reminded of the need for a rapid change in the structure of the Organisation, a democratisation of the methods of work. Yet what we see is the very opposite.

Owing to the absence of true democracy and to the arbitrary action of certain delegations, there are no representatives of socialist countries serving as officers on any of the committees of this Conference. The situation is especially bad in the case of the representatives of the socialist undertakings. Without any legal or other grounds, the representatives of private employers in the Western countries are attempting to monopolise the situation and to outlaw the heads of the socialist undertakings, by systematically neglecting their right to hold elective posts. It is no secret to anyone that the so-called meetings of the bureau of the Employers' group are in fact nothing but meetings of the whole of the Employers' group from which the socialists members are arbitrarily excluded. Representatives of employers from private undertakings in the I.L.O. resolutely close their eyes to the fact that the socialist system covers more than one-third of the world's population and even more in terms of production. It is utterly wrong to live in the past whilst welcoming in words the adaptation of the I.L.O. to the conditions of a changing world.

The situation is not much different in the Workers' group, where the representatives of a single trend in the trade union movement take advantage of their artificial voting majority in the I.L.O., which in no way corresponds to the numerical strength of the different trends in the world trade union movement.

The I.L.O., being a tripartite organisation, must also by its very vocation be universal. We say it must be because the principle of universality is being violated in this Organisation. Consistent pursuance of this principle of universality demands that we should honour not only in word but in deed the rights of the coexisting capitalist and socialist systems. The discriminatory situation which persists in this Organisation and which has even worsened at this Conference has a profound effect on our approach to the budget, because the budget underlies the whole activity of the Organisation.

In the light of everything that I have said above, the Soviet delegation does not consider it possible to support the budget of the I.L.O. for 1966 and when the budget is voted upon we shall abstain from voting.

Mr. PERSONS (Government adviser, United States)—The deliberations of the Finance Committee of Government Representatives this year were long and difficult and I wish to pay particular tribute to our Chairman, Mr. Tesemma, Government delegate of Ethiopia, for his skilful, calm and patient leadership that contributed so much to the successful conclusion of our Committee's work.

We have heard a number of speakers from Eastern Europe announce their intention to abstain on the vote concerning the 1966 I.L.O. budget. This has been the pattern over a great number of years. It is unfortunate that at budget approval time these countries, which during the rest of the year profess support for the important programmes of this Organisation, cannot ever seem quite able to support the financial measures necessary to carry out those activities.

For my part I am happy to inform this session of the Conference that the United States Government supports, and will vote for, the adoption of the I.L.O. budget, which will enable the Organisation to carry on its work in 1966.

The budget, of course, is the result of careful scrutiny and debate in the Financial and Administrative Committee of the Governing Body. It is a compromise that does not fully meet the desires of the Workers, the Employers and of all the Governments.

My Government would have preferred certain changes, and has expressed its concern over the recent growth-rate of the budget; but these views, and those of others, have been considered. The budget, which has received unanimous support of the Governing Body, is before us for adoption. It, and the work of this Organisation that it will finance, deserve our support. My Government intends to give it that support. It is a pity that once again this support is being withheld by the group of countries to which I referred earlier.
There has also been reference to the review of the scale of contributions, which was the subject of very long deliberation in the Financial and Administrative Committee and in the Allocations Committee of the Governing Body. A compromise text was approved in the Financial and Administrative Committee which dealt with this matter. The text provides that the Allocations Committee of the Governing Body will, in November of this year, begin to look into this matter by considering what studies and background work would be required for early and substantial progress towards improving the I.L.O. scale and particularly towards bringing it into closer conformity with the United Nations scale.

The views of my Government with respect to this text are included in paragraph 51 of the second report of the Finance Committee of Government Representatives, and I will therefore, at this point, not repeat them. I do, however, want to make a statement concerning the contributions of my Government to the work of this Organisation, so that they may be considered in perspective. The Director-General informed the Governing Body at its 161st (March 1965) Session that the total resources available to the I.L.O. in 1964 were estimated provisionally at approximately $28,700,000. About $17 million of this amount represented the net expenditure budget, towards which the United States contributed 25 per cent., or about $4,200,000. The balance, or about $11,700,000, was received from the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance and the Special Fund for programme and administrative costs in carrying out technical assistance and development projects. The United States contributed 40 per cent. of this amount, or about $4,700,000.

It is obvious from this that the United States contribution to the total financial resources of this Organisation is considerably above 25 per cent., and this is a situation that we are glad to carry forward.

I mention these facts to put the United States position in this matter in perspective and to indicate some of the factors that will have to be considered in the review of the I.L.O. scale.

Interpretation from French: Mr. MORI (Workers' delegate, Switzerland)—I should like to recommend the delegates of this Conference to vote in favour of the resolution upon which we have to take a decision. It was recalled just now that the whole of the Governing Body was in favour of this budget. I am thus very much surprised that, at this Conference, under various pretexts, several representatives of member States have put forward objections, and have declared that they would abstain, giving us a new lecture on political democracy—a lecture that tends to be repeated from session to session of the International Labour Conference.

As every one of us knows, the problem of representation of the various member States in the bodies of this Organisation is the subject of a resolution, and I think that that resolution will provide an opportunity to discuss the matter of elections of the representatives on the Governing Body, whether for the Government group, the Employers' group or the Workers' group. However, once more trouble is being sown here, and very questionable arguments are being put forward under the pretext of unequal treatment or excessive rate of growth of expenditure. Certain Government representatives said that they would abstain during the vote and would encourage some delegates at the Conference to do likewise.

May I be allowed to say that in this Organisation equality of treatment does exist, fully and entirely. All the member States are represented at the Conference, in the same manner and in accordance with the constitutional provisions. There are no exceptions to this. Freedom of expression exists fully and entirely, and when a previous speaker alluded to those who take the rostrum at the Conference he could well have asked a photographer to take his picture. I think that he and his colleagues of similar political outlook are on this rostrum more frequently than anybody else. I do not think that they have any possible complaint on that ground.

It is true that in the Bureau of the Workers' group in the International Labour Conference and even in the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, only one tendency is represented—or rather two. There is even a person there who does not belong to either of these two tendencies. I myself am in favour of elections in accordance with the proportional representation system used in my own country, but allow me to state categorically here that, as far as the International Labour Organisation is concerned, which is founded on two principles, universality and tripartism—that tripartism to which I am particularly attached—and as far as the Workers' group is concerned, I am in favour of the majority system in our elections. I ask you, where would election according to a proportional system lead to in the case of the Workers' group? There would be one from this tendency and another from that tendency, and it would be impossible for Workers' representatives of the Governing Body to defend a unanimous standpoint, in other words to represent and defend efficiently at the Governing Body the interests of all the workers of the world.

You will not get us to accept that, however many statements you may make or whatever methods you resort to in order to achieve your ends. We want to keep tripartism on a solid foundation. We want the representation of the workers on the directing bodies of the International Labour Office to be more effective, and this would be in the interests of workers all over the world. We may have another opportunity of speaking on this matter when the resolution submitted to the Conference eventually comes up for discussion.

In conclusion, I would not like to fail to draw your attention to the extraordinary anomaly whereby certain representatives of member States in which elections are indeed based on a majority—not to say absolutist—system, come before this International Labour Conference and give us lessons on right and democracy.

For all these reasons, I should like to recommend to you most warmly that you should vote in support of the resolution; in other words, that you should approve the budget which is absolutely essential to enable the International Labour Office to carry out its economic and social tasks. Increasing technical assistance to the developing countries cannot be achieved merely through speeches. We have to have money to do it, and it is the duty of this Conference to provide the International Labour Office with the financial means.

Interpretation from French: The PRESIDENT (Mr. ANDRIANTSITOHAINA)—There are no further speakers, so I will put these two reports to the Conference, excluding the resolutions concerning the adoption of the budget for the 49th financial period (1966), and the allocation of expenses among Member States for 1966. The latter resolution I have mentioned will be the subject of a record vote at 11 o'clock tomorrow. If there are no objections, I take it that the two reports are adopted.

(The reports are adopted.)

Interpretation from French: The PRESIDENT (Mr. ANDRIANTSITOHAINA)—I should like to thank Mr. Tesemma, Government delegate, Ethiopia and Chairman and Reporter of the Finance Committee of Government Representatives, as well as the members of the Committee, for the reports submitted to the Conference.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL: DISCUSSION (cont.)

Interpretation from French: The PRESIDENT (Mr. ANDRIANTSITOHAINA)—We now resume the discussion of the Director-General's Report.

Interpretation from French: Mr. VIGLIA-NESI (Workers' delegate, Italy)—The very hard period through which my country has recently passed, after unprecedented economic expansion within a few years, has dramatically revealed the structural evils which weigh down the Italian economy, and still more the social weaknesses and technical insufficiency which stem from these structural evils. In these circumstances the problems of labour protection, of a more equitable distribution of income, of protection of the purchasing power of wages, and of improving manpower skills, have obliged us to seek urgent solutions because cause and effect follow each other promptly.

It is probably due to the economic difficulties and the responsibilities which the ruling class of the country has to face that Italy has, in recent months, made an enormous " qualitative " change. After a century of united existence, my country is at last seeking to organise its economy and therefore its public and private expenditure and to formulate a detailed programme with precise dates for its implementation.

Italian public life, and the relations between the political forces and the unions and other occupational organisations, have been influenced by this turning point in economic and social policy which is generally known as the "policy plan". In connection with the application of this plan we are faced with the problems of unequal development which have, for a century, caused grave imbalances in structure both as regards areas of the country and as regards areas of industry. Commitments to reduce and modernise public expenditure are linked with the choice of types of investment and consequently of production development.

To have desired, supported and brought about such a policy means, for all the forces which have accepted it and approved of it, a parallel extension of the democratic guarantees in our country. Whereas the plan has been opposed by the reactionary and extremist groups, which only desire to overthrow democratic and republican institutions, all the democratic forces of the country are confident in it. The democratic trade unions and a number of modern and clear-sighted employers are beginning to realise the need for sound organisation and projections in connection with the economic development of the country.

This commitment stemming from Italy's position in the Common Market—with all the implications by economic union which this involves—will condition the conduct of all the Italian economic and productive forces. The unions which have understood the historical value of such a policy will now be committed, even in their independent bargaining activity, to co-ordinate the claims and struggles of the trade unions having regard to the limitations, objectives and possibilities of the programme which they have deliberately and fully accepted. Naturally such an approach is required also of government and employers, who must, on their side, accept their responsibilities and co-ordinate their attitudes within the limits and general lines of the plan.

For instance, it will be necessary to apply a vigorous price policy and to exercise vigilance in safeguarding the purchasing power of wages if it is desired that the trade unions, on their side, keep their wage demands within limits compatible with economic stability. An income policy can be conceived only if it applies to all sectors, i.e. not only to wages but also to capital gains.

At the same time some big structural reforms will be necessary to ensure the application of the plan: reform of the state bureaucracy, regional decentralisation, educational reform, the achievement of social security, fiscal reform, and agrarian reform making it possible to transform the Italian agricultural economy into a modern, competitive economy. Indeed, Italy's economic commitment amounts in many respects to a political commitment, which is inevitable because, when one attacks ancient privileges and establishes new relations between public and private action, economic facts must be in harmony with the political will and vice versa.

Within the framework of this economic and social outlook, education and vocational training will in the future become particularly important in Italy. The problem of manpower skills must be placed on a level with that of technological development and investments. In Europe, which will soon have full employment, the position of Italy, which has not yet solved the problem of unemployment, can be radically changed only by a more intense exchange of manpower within the European Economic Community and by raising the levels of skill with a view to promoting movement of capital and investment in the underdeveloped south of Italy and the other underdeveloped areas. Rational distribution of production based on what has been called “development axes”, aided by the necessary infrastructure—roads, ports, rational urban organisation, etc.—can alone overcome the traditional difficulties which harm Italy and also the European Economic Community in which Italy plays an important part.

These considerations are sufficient to justify the term which we have used to define our programming and the new policy linked with it, namely “qualitative”. We have used this term because, as of now, in my country problems are being discussed on the basis of precise social, economic and technological evaluations, and not of dialectical improvisations or demagogic declarations. We, the Government, the employers, the trade unions and the political forces are all obliged by this policy to be more precise, more direct in asking, giving and claiming. Only in this way can one progressively face the endemic problems of a country and solve them quickly. We must start with the most democratic problem, that of considering all citizens of a country as being on the same level as regards their rights and the possibility of becoming future rulers of the country. This can be done by a big educational reform which will make it possible to select the best amongst our population on the basis of their merits and not to seek them, as in the past, among the most powerful families. If we add to this democratic transformation of society the aim of equality of all citizens, freed from the fear of a hazardous old age or an unexpected family catastrophe by a social security system giving effect to universal principles of justice, we shall really be placing our Republic on a sound basis.

The organised forces of labour in Italy are aware of this great task and of their responsibilities. Therefore, the unions have not only accepted the policy plan but they have insisted, and are still insisting, on taking an active part in it, and on being a decisive element in the elaboration and implementation of projects at the national and regional levels. It is a willingness for responsibility which does honour to the Italian trade union movement, which might merely have continued to protest against social injustice but which, on the contrary, to play its part in the transformation of our society and in making it more democratic and progressive. The strengthening of the unions in Italy is therefore the greatest guarantee for the success of the policy plan, for speeding up the modernisation of our country, and for raising the standard of living of our people.

Interpretation from French: Mr. PLECHÁČ (Employers’ delegate, Czechoslovakia)—Belonging as I do to industrial management in Czechoslovakia, I have had occasion in recent years to attend several international technical conferences, visiting several industrialised countries and thus acquainting myself with problems similar to those on the agenda of this session of the International Labour Conference.

In my job I come up every day against most of the problems discussed at this Conference and that is why I should like to share some of my experiences in connection with the various subjects raised in the Director-General’s Report. In his Report the Director-General has suggested three major programme areas for the I.L.O.’s general programme. It is well known that these problems vary from one country to another as a result of differing historical evolution in the countries and that is why I am glad to see the Director-General stress the role of the I.L.O. in participating in an exchange of experiences between countries and also in helping the countries to develop and to provide work for their inhabitants through measures compatible with human dignity and social justice. The results of the I.L.O.’s activity make it clear that the Organisation can do a great deal for society. The I.L.O. must, of course, take advantage objectively of the experiences of all advanced countries irrespective of their economic and political system and take account of the concrete conditions in a given country.

I note also with satisfaction the Director-General’s statement that a growing number of countries are becoming convinced of the need to integrate more closely human resources programmes and policies with over-all economic development plans and thereby achieve improved conditions of work and life.

The activities of the I.L.O. in this connection—the preparation of economic development studies in several countries, pilot projects, fellowships, visits of experts in order to ensure the evolution of industry, agriculture and international commerce—correspond fully to the policy of our country. Our national industry, our schools and experts participate in the building of our national industry, in the expansion of trade, in the training of supervisory personnel and also in the establishment of cultural, health and social institutions.

As regards that section of the Director-General’s Report which concerns improvement of conditions of work and life, I should like to point out that we have done a great deal in recent years in the field of occupational safety and health and industrial medicine. We are concerned mainly with prevention, and the study of conditions of work, tools and machinery and their influence on the health and better development of the workers. Doctors and technicians are always present during the recruitment of workers by the undertakings to ensure that their assignments correspond to their abilities and the state of their health. During working hours the workers are supervised by these experts, who carry out research on the influence of the environment and work procedures on the health and the proper development of the human personality. Joint research is carried out on the subject of protection against noise, the layout of the workplace, the housing of the workers and other things. Everything is done to prolong human life and improve the health and vigour of the individual.
I should now like to tell you about the experiment we have carried out in our night clinic in order to permit our workers to undergo medical treatment without interruption of their work. There are certain diseases which cause considerable discomfort without making a person an invalid—respiratory diseases, diseases of the stomach, of the circulation, and so on. We have concentrated attention on a group of patients over 35 to 40 years of age, who represent the majority in the night clinic. It has been noticed that treatment in the clinic can contribute to improving the health, during the second half of the life span in particular, of workers in large industrial undertakings, to slowing down the process of aging and to making the workers more content and more active.

I should also like to express my gratitude to the I.L.O. for its activities in the field of the prevention of occupational hazards. I refer to the I.L.O.'s participation in the organisation of conferences and studies on the problems, which make possible exchanges of information and experience in the field of health protection and practical participation in the improvement of the work and life of mankind.

But despite these beneficial results of the I.L.O.'s work I must express my surprise that at this Conference I have encountered discrimination against the delegates of the socialist States. It is really a paradox in the case of the I.L.O. which has declared that it has the general task of fighting discrimination everywhere in the world. I must remind you that nowadays nationalised industry is not the domain of only the socialist States but exists also in capitalist States—in fact, at present nationalised industry produces nearly 40 per cent. of total world production. As I said at the beginning, we are the representatives of the supervisory personnel of nationalised industry and I feel that we have experience on many questions, such as the training of workers or young persons, the protection of women and children, and so on.

I think it is urgently necessary for the I.L.O. to put an end to such discriminatory methods. I will thus support the resolution submitted by the Government delegations of Poland and the Ukraine concerning equitable geographical representation of all States Members of the International Labour Organisation in its Governing Body as well as equitable geographical distribution of elective offices at sessions of the International Labour Conference and the Governing Body. I hope this is also the opinion of the majority of delegates to this Conference.

Mr. FAUPL (Workers' delegate, United States)—As I am privileged once again to take part in the discussion of the Director-General's Report I feel that I must in all conscience reply to the scurrilous attacks on my country made by a number of the communist so-called Workers' delegates to this Conference. I shall not take much time in doing so because the political matters they discussed are not the business of this Conference, and in my humble judgment they should not have been permitted to divert the Conference from the constructive work of this Organisation.

I am a trade unionist, a machinist by trade. I am neither a military nor a political expert, but I do know that in both South Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic the United States—the people of the United States, including especially our free trade union movement—has but one objective, and that is to restore peace and freedom to the people of those countries as quickly as possible. Our aim is to assure to the peoples of those countries the democratic right to select their own government and to secure their countries from aggression. Once we have obtained this elementary protection we intend to give them every possible assistance they may request to permit them to embark upon the path of social and economic progress. The American trade union movement is co-operating with the democratic trade union elements in both those countries so that they may achieve their objective.

This year the Director-General has presented us with what I consider to be a somewhat slim Report on generally non-controversial questions of programme and structure. I find it difficult to understand why the Director-General wanted, for the third consecutive year, a general soul-searching discussion. It would have been much better if we had had the opportunity to discuss a report such as the excellent ones the Director-General prepared in past years, ploughing new ground in an important area within the competence of the I.L.O.

Two possibly fruitful subjects which were included in resolutions adopted by the Conference last year might have been considered—minimum living standards and democratic decision-making. Still a third might have been the whole concept of universality in the field of human rights.

Following upon the reorganisation of the International Labour Office the activities of the Organisation have been divided into three major programme areas—human resources, social institutions, and living and working conditions. We should not, in my estimation, develop such a fixation on the neat patterns of organisation that important tasks are neglected only because they do not fit easily into the organisation chart.

The subject of automation and technological change is an example of what I have in mind. Originally listed as one of the major programme areas, it has now been dropped as a major classification. Is automation being downgraded because it is thus far a problem mainly in developed countries? If so, this is a most dangerous development. The ever greater concern of the I.L.O. with the problems and needs of the developing countries is certainly appropriate, but it would be highly inappropriate to ignore new and critical problems, as well as those old ones still crying out for solution, in the industrialised countries.

Moreover, technological change is not confined to the industrially advanced countries. It is increasingly spreading to the developing countries as well. Therefore, it should hold a prominent place in the I.L.O.'s total effort. Indeed, going beyond the question of automation itself, successful efforts to solve the social problems of the industrialised countries today will greatly help in meeting the needs of the developing countries tomorrow.
The Director-General's Report contains a very short chapter on international labour standards. I must regretfully state that I did not find his treatment of this very important subject too helpful, since he did not offer any suggestions as to how the I.L.O.'s standard-setting activities can be broadened and strengthened. The Director-General has not hesitated to make very specific and often far-reaching suggestions in other fields. Why is he so reticent in this all-important area of I.L.O. activities?

Furthermore, I am disappointed that the Director-General apparently finds it justifiable that improvement of conditions of life and work within the framework of balanced social and economic development “should not for the time being be a major priority area in our activities”. What is the fundamental purpose of our Organisation if it is not to improve conditions of life and work?

If the I.L.O. is to continue to pioneer in establishing and safeguarding standards of workers all over the world, universality must apply where it is needed most, that is, in assuring to workers all over the world fundamental human rights and ever better living and working conditions.

Let me state very candidly that this is another area which requires some accommodation between the industrialised and the developing countries.

We are ready to join in any objective examination of existing standards, even those dealing with fundamental human rights, to see if they really need to be revised. It is conceivable that in some ways they may not fully take account of particular conditions. I even think we should consider the possibility of inserting in some international instruments the legitimacy of progressive application of standards hand in hand with the country's economic and social development.

But I would ask my friends in developing countries, and especially those sitting on government benches, not to expect the free trade unions to give up standards urgently needed in many parts of the world because some countries, regardless of where they are, feel they are not yet ready to apply those standards. This would completely distort the purposes, principles, and objectives of the I.L.O.

I turn now to the question which I consider to be of paramount importance to the future of this Organisation. I refer to the principle of tripartism as practised within the I.L.O. itself and as encouraged by the I.L.O. in other countries. I do not want to be an alarmist, but I cannot conceal my very great apprehension regarding the future of tripartism as a living institution. This concern stems from the reluctance of some governments, and the outright refusal in others, to recognise both the need for and the value of division of authority and responsibility.

In his Report the Director-General says that the major objective of the I.L.O. should be “the growth of workers' and employers' organisations which are generally representative and independent”. The real problem has not been that workers have been unwilling to organise free and independent trade unions. Unfortunately, what we have seen in country after country is the suppression of free and independent trade union organisations by governments which have replaced them with docile organisations completely under government control and domination.

Let me make one thing clear. Sometimes it is charged that the free trade unions are opposed to trade union unity, or that we think the existence of a single trade union movement in a country is proof that there is no freedom of association. This is not true. In many countries, including my own, there is only a single national trade union centre, but trade union unity has been chosen by the trade unions and by their members. It has not been imposed by government and it is not required by law. Moreover, workers have the right to establish unions of their own choosing in or out of the national trade union centres.

The trade union organisations and not the government should decide on international affiliation. If governments force the trade unions of developing countries to break their fraternal relationship we would be weakened, and the industrialised countries, the workers in both the developing and the industrialised countries will be the innocent losers.

Finally, there is the question of tripartism within the I.L.O. I want to issue a solemn warning here to the delegates from the Communist countries and some delegates representing governments of other countries who, not satisfied with denying the right of workers to organise trade unions free and independent of governments in their own countries, now seek to destroy tripartism in the I.L.O. We in the free trade union movement will defend the time-honoured, tripartite principles and institutions of this Organisation with every fibre of our being. Indeed, we will leave no stone unturned to extend tripartism and strengthen it in every activity and every programme of this Organisation.

Some delegates from communist countries, smarting because the Workers' delegates to the Conference have seen fit to elect others to represent them in the Governing Body, are now calling for rigged elections in which they will be automatically assured of seats. The establishment of such a system would mean the end of democracy and group autonomy within the I.L.O. There is only one democratic system of choosing Workers' members of the Governing Body and that is free election by the Workers' delegates to the Conference. The Workers' delegates here in the I.L.O. adopt the worst features of the one-slate so-called elections in the communist countries.

The I.L.O. was founded nearly 50 years ago as a tripartite organisation. The I.L.O. is not just an organisation for the workers, it is an organisation of workers, and if the day ever comes when workers all over the world, organised in free and independent trade unions, can no longer take their rightful place in the I.L.O. through the representatives they have chosen, this Organisation will be no longer worth saving. It is the responsibility of all of us, workers, employers, and governments, to make sure that that evil day never comes.
It is a great honour for me to take part once again in the work of this Conference, which is so widely called the "World Parliament of Labour". I would like to sketch briefly the outline of the measures adopted in my country in connection with the items dealt with in the Director-General's Report. I was for many years the Workers' representative, and I am now a Member of Parliament representing the workers, and as such I am very happy to say that in Iran, as a result of the peaceful revolution of 23 January 1963 under the enlightened leadership of our wise and far-sighted sovereign, a favourable atmosphere has been created for the application of programmes of economic development and a better use of human resources.

Workers are becoming more and more aware of the fact that it is essential to give constantly growing importance to investment in human resources, so as to improve the social situation of the workers and so as to create new possibilities of employment for those subsequently entering the labour market. Moreover, I should like to stress that employment policy must not act as a brake on economic development but on the contrary must accelerate it.

Our Shah has given a realistic forecast that as a result of agrarian reform and the mechanisation of agriculture the present ratio between urban and rural populations will be inverted. Thus, to do away with underemployment and to increase productivity, the programme for the industrialisation of Iran must advance so as a result of agrarian reform and the mechanisation of agriculture we must not act as a brake on economic development programmes along the lines which I have just indicated.

We consider that the success of all our programmes will depend on the understanding and unity of action of governments, workers and employers. This is precisely what the Director-General has stressed and singled out as an objective of employment policy: the support by the population of the economic development programmes of their country and its active participation in their implementation.

In the new conditions in our country, the producing class has been guided by the fact that the consolidation of workers' organisations may, while safeguarding their interests, enable them to play an effective and important role in the general economic development of the country and to contribute towards the creation of a favourable atmosphere for the unity of action to which I have just referred.

On the basis of this idea, workers' organisations have been set up in the various industries and are constantly broadening their scope of activity and strengthening the basis of their power and their unity.

The application of the Act respecting the sharing of workers in the profits of the undertakings contributes to the increase of the real income of workers and the improvement of their standard of living, and at the same time supplies an excellent opportunity for the workers' organisations to negotiate and conclude collective agreements on a footing of equality. All of this, of course, adds to their experience in trade union activity and is one of the best examples and methods for creating mutual understanding between the trade union and management.

In so far as concerns the development of co-operatives, which can contribute directly to the enhancement of the purchasing power of the workers and constantly to a rise in their standard of living, as well as to the creation of the spirit of co-operation in workers' circles, I am very happy to be able to say that we have made very substantial progress with respect to setting up workers' co-operatives in the field of consumption, housing and credit, and as a result of an exchange of views between the trade unions and rural co-operatives I feel that we can hope for effective and fruitful collaboration in this field of activity.

We are particularly interested to observe that the question of co-operatives appears on the agenda of this session of the Conference, and I should like to express our hope that we will be able to benefit greatly from the exchange of the views of the Committee on Co-operatives for the development of the co-operative movement in our country.

In conclusion I should like to stress that all the economic and social progress in my country has been due to the far-sighted guidance of our sovereign who ceaselessly watches over the welfare of his people.

The Iranian nation, which enjoys social justice and total security, is advancing along the path of progress and is putting forth considerable efforts so that our country may reach a position among the most advanced countries of the world.

In wishing every success to the Conference may I express the hope that all peoples of the world may benefit from the advantages of a better life, thanks to peace and international security. It is only in this way that we can achieve the noble and humane objectives of the International Labour Organisation.

Interpretation from French: Mr. QUYÊN-Trân-Huu (Workers' delegate, Viet-Nam)—The 49th Session of the International Labour Conference, I am sure, can be proud of the high quality of the working documents submitted by the Director-General of the I.L.O. for our discussion and consideration. I should therefore like to thank the Director-General for his excellent Report which has given us most useful data on what has been achieved on the present situation and on what the I.L.O. should do in the near future.

First of all, the idea of decentralising the I.L.O.'s activity so as to make it more efficacious on the regional level, opens up new horizons which are most encouraging to all those who are concerned and anxious about the economic development of the uncommitted countries through the mobilisation and rational use of the human resources which are available.

The project for strengthening the regional offices should be thoroughly studied. In this connection, the issue should be made for a tripartite regional governing body having wide competence to decide on the action to be deployed in the respective geographical areas.
If this were done the central Governing Body would become more and more a body co-ordinating and supervising the various activities carried out in the different continents. We feel therefore that it is essential to have vigorous and active regional co-ordinators between the central body and the regional offices. Their role would be mainly that of liaison officers.

Moreover, there must be provision for increasing the staffing and material equipment of regional offices so that they may be able to face the technical problems which arise in all fields of vocational training, manpower, employment injuries, working conditions, social security and so on, without overlooking the training of trade union leaders and leaders of the co-operative movements. These should be given priority in all regional activity of the ILO.

Within the framework of this regionalisation of activity, the possibility of setting up a body of experts should be studied and approved—experts in the fields of manpower planning, vocational training and, first and foremost, in workers' education and in the education of workers in the co-operative movement. Here I should like to refer to the statement made by our friend, Mr. Trần-Quốc-Buu at the 161st Session of the Governing Body of the ILO last March. Thus, we believe that regionalisation should include: (a) the institution of regional governing bodies with a very broad field of competence; (b) the strengthening of the administrative equipment and machinery of the regional offices; (c) the creation of a regional co-ordinator for liaison with Headquarters; and (d) the creation of a body of experts for local action.

It is obvious that the multiplicity of national languages militates in favour of recruiting experts in each country concerned. This of course does not mean that the presence of international experts and their role would be pointless within the framework of regional organisation, but rather these international experts would have more technical work to do, that is, studies, training of instructors, statistics and planning.

As far as concerns Chapter II of Part I of the Report, we are very happy indeed to see the stress which the Director-General lays on the development of human resources, which conditions the economic expansion of any country and which requires competent and skilled men.

Our national trade union confederation, the Vietnamese Confederation of Labour has always given its attention to the training of workers because we feel that economic development requires competent men and that looked at in another way, this development, which must be at the service of man, has no other final goal than the complete and integral development of the personality of each individual and of each people through the use of the material and spiritual resources available in the national economy.

In the field of training we have carried out programmes of education, which are highly varied, for trade union leaders and co-operatives and social action by the people. Among the results of this activity we may mention the creation of 24 agricultural and handicraft co-operatives and agricultural resettlement centres in isolated regions which have remained uncultivated up to the present. This action favours agricultural development and at the same time the reduction of underemployment, training in handicrafts and the integration of indigenous populations into the economic life of the country. These centres last year, in spite of the dangers in the jungles which surround them, had the honour of being visited by a representative of the ILO.

Unfortunately, large-scale aggression by fanatical Communists supported by communist China and other foreign Powers against our peaceful population has been an obstacle, but has not stopped expansion of our activity which has already achieved considerable success. Defenceless trade union leaders have been kidnapped or cold-bloodedly massacred, their only crime being that they were instructors and trainers of men, leaders in the co-operative movement, the objective of which was the improvement of the moral and material living conditions of the population, desirous of living in peace on the product of their daily work.

We sincerely deplore that the systematic sabotage by the Viet-Cong is directed against the achievements of our own peasants and workers themselves who devoted so much hope and effort to their endeavours to improve their lot; this is in glaring contrast with Viet-Cong pretensions that they are the true defenders of the liberty of the workers.

Our trade union leaders, however, have not been discouraged. The Viet-Cong's destructive action simply further strengthens our unshaken determination to work towards the improvement of the conditions of the workers, with the enthusiastic support of the workers and the peasants.

May I now turn to agrarian reform. This is one of the outstanding problems in developing areas. We would like the ILO to allot a more important place to the rural population, within the framework of its activities, by considering a more complete range of measures to promote and accelerate rural development.

In the countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America the rural workers, who make up more than 80 per cent. of the total population, are still living in the most abject poverty, except for very few exceptions in some highly industrialised countries like Japan and Australia. The lot of this sub-proletariat has become even more wretched as a result of the fluctuations and uncertainties of the prices for raw materials produced in the region. It is therefore absolutely essential that the ILO adopt measures, jointly with the other specialised agencies of the United Nations, to achieve a rapid stabilisation of the market for these basic products. The ILO should lay heavier stress on an over-all policy of employment expansion. The increase in wealth and welfare must be harmonious, otherwise the gap between the income of the favoured urban wage earners in the industrial and administrative sectors and the income of the agricultural workers in general will become still deeper and broader. The action of the ILO will bring results and will be more humanitarian if it succeeds in doing away with this situation, which is due to a defective system of co-operation between capital and labour rather than to the operation of any so-called economic laws.

We are firmly convinced that the I.L.O. can intervene most effectively by giving its helpful and necessary collaboration in the income distribution policy of the developing countries, to the extent that technical assistance means the share that the I.L.O. will take in the preparation of government decisions through advice supplied by its technical experts. If the I.L.O. succeeds in determining the best ways of enabling workers' and employers' organisations to participate effectively in the preparation and implementation of plans, it will already have achieved excellent results.

We are expecting a great deal of the I.L.O. and we hope that it will find methods of enabling planning to be democratised, that is to say bringing workers' and employers' organisations more closely together in the planning and implementation of economic policy.

Finally, in this year of 1965, which has been proclaimed by the United Nations as International Co-operation Year, we are unfortunately having to deplore war in its most murderous and inhumane form and which the Viet-Cong have imposed on us for more than ten years. We deplore cowardly legal murders, which some have been so cynical as to praise in a tendentious manner, have not made, and will not make, us renounce our projects for the emancipation of man by the education of the working masses. That is why we are convinced that this 49th Session of the Conference will give the I.L.O., with a large measure of unanimity, the terms of reference which will make it possible to carry out the reforms of its regional structure, in order better to provide technical and moral assistance to all the organisations which, like ours, give first place to the training of human beings, the promotion of brotherhood and to social peace and social justice.

Interpretation from Russian: Mr. KAZANTS-SLEV (Employers' delegate, Byelorussia)—In connection with the issues raised in the Director-General's Report that relate to the I.L.O.'s programme of activities in the development of manpower resources and also in the field of working and living conditions, it should like to mention some of the basic achievements of Byelorussia in solving these problems.

Byelorussia's experience has eloquently shown the feasibility of overcoming centuries-old backwardness in setting up an advanced economy within the lifespan of a single generation. Socialism has released vast creative opportunities for the working people and secured unprecedented successes in developing industrialisation, raising the cultural level and in training a skilled labour force. Although the war started by the Nazi invaders threw back Byelorussia's industry almost to the level of that of 1913 and destroyed almost half its total national wealth, in 1963 gross industrial production exceeded the 1913 level by 46 times, and in 1964 production increased by a further 10 per cent. There has been a vast expansion in the petroleum, chemical, electrical and mechanical industries.

As a result of this rapid economic growth, there has also been a rapid growth in our national income: during the period 1959 to 1962, the average yearly increase rate was 7.4 per cent. All this was done by the Byelorussian people's own effort, together with fraternal assistance by all the peoples of the Soviet Union.

Our country knows no unemployment, that scourge which is so common even in many highly developed capitalist countries. I support the view expressed here by many delegates and confirmed in practice in our country: only through socialisation of the means of production, radical agrarian reform and broad expansion of industry is it possible to solve the problem of unemployment.

We can see the changes which have taken place in our economy and in culture from the fact that more than 2,300,000 people—that is to say almost one-third of the total population excluding children under school age—are engaged in some form of education. For every 10,000 persons there are 102 students at higher educational establishments and 111 students at special intermediate schools. Our people, therefore, view with understanding and sympathy the efforts of those countries which because of colonial dependence have been deprived of the opportunity to develop their economy, their culture and their science. Byelorussia does not only view with sympathy the efforts of the developing countries; it is also giving them practical assistance, by participating in the construction of many industrial projects and scientific and cultural centres, by supplying equipment and by sending its experts to the developing countries.

Unfortunately, as far as the I.L.O. programme of technical assistance is concerned, nothing has been done as yet in the way of using Byelorussian experts or in granting scholarships for training or practical experience in Byelorussian schools or undertakings.

Bearing in mind the economic problems facing the developing countries, we would stress the need for intensifying co-operation by the I.L.O. in training national supervisory personnel and skilled manpower. The technical assistance of the I.L.O. to developing countries should be geared to support the national programmes of economic and social development, and to overcome the consequences of colonialism.

In connection with this question of technical assistance to the developing countries, the research activities of the I.L.O. should be intensified. Studies on such matters as progressive agrarian reform and industrialisation should be based on experience that has been gained in this field by various countries, in particular by the socialist countries, as well as by a number of developing countries themselves.

It would be useful to draft a concrete and broad programme of activities that would take into account the successful solution of the employment problem in the socialist countries. This programme should also improve measures that might speed the elimination of colonialism and its consequences. It should ensure the establishment of mutually beneficial commercial and scientific co-operation between all countries of the world. It is of particular importance in this connection to study the
The International Labour Organisation has stated its solidarity with the United Nations in seeking to guarantee and achieve equal rights for the whole population of South Africa. However, strong economic ties persist between many monopolies in the Western countries and the South African authorities. There is no need to quote a long list of these monopolies; they can be found in all the reference books. Apparently, a number of so-called "free" entrepreneurs propose to continue to support the racist régime in South Africa, supplying it with weapons and capital.

The British journal, The Economist, of 6 March 1965, mentioned that Portugal and Spain do not propose to cease trading with the Republic of South Africa. It is the duty of the International Labour Organisation to make every effort in order to do away with apartheid, that shameful form of colonialism.

Development of international co-operation in the social and economic fields within the framework of the I.L.O. requires improvement of the forms and methods of work of the Organisation and of all its organs. As has been stressed by many delegates, the General Conference must play a more active role in working out and approving the programmes of the I.L.O. The principal organs must all be fully answerable to the General Conference.

Fair geographical distribution of elective posts in the Governing Body and of the functions of officers of the General Conference must be respected. The I.L.O. must be open to all States that wish to participate in its work. By ensuring the broad representation of all economic and social systems and geographical areas of the world it is possible to realise the principles of equality, universality and international co-operation, which are laid down in the Constitution of the I.L.O.

This year there was again an attempt on the part of the private Employers to deprive the representatives of managers from the socialist countries of the right to participate actively in the work of the Conference. Every delegate must have the opportunity to participate in the work of any committee at his choice. It is necessary to put an end to the one-sided representation in the Employers' group of the Governing Body, and to give the representatives of the socialist system of economic management their proper places.

If the I.L.O. wishes to remain true to the basic aims and purposes of its Constitution and of the Declaration of Philadelphia, it cannot stand aside in solving those basic problems which the world has now to face.

In the solution of social and economic problems a major concern is to transfer to peaceful production the resources which are being used on armaments. The I.L.O. could contribute to the progress of disarmament by studying its economic and social consequences. The resources thus released will, of course, be able to find broad application in various fields of social life. These resources could promote broader development of international economic co-operation.

In this connection, it is important that the 49th Session of our Conference should adopt the resolution submitted by the Government delegate of the Ukraine concerning the carrying out by the I.L.O. of studies of the social and economic consequences of disarmament.

The International Labour Organisation must undertake extensive action to promote the co-operation of all countries in the economic and social fields. It must apply every effort to prevent war and to maintain peace as the pre-condition for the activities of this Organisation. I.L.O. activities can only be meaningful if there is peace. Within the I.L.O. as elsewhere, rejection of the American policy of aggression is now one of the most urgent problems in the struggle for peace.

On behalf of the Byelorussian employers, I emphatically demand an end to the criminal attacks by American aircraft against the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, and to United States aggression against the peoples of South Viet-Nam and the Dominican Republic.

The speech of the representative of the United States, Mr. Faupl, was merely an attempt to divert the attention of world public opinion and of our Conference from the neo-colonialist and aggressive policies of the imperialist circles in the United States, about which I have just spoken. Mr. Faupl took the same stand as that taken by two persons yesterday and also by the last speaker, all three of whom are maintained in their positions by support from American bayonets. Mr. Faupl has shown here that he is not very much interested in the problems of peace; he is not interested in putting a stop to the slaughter of innocent women, children and old people or in the economic and social problems of the developing countries.

(The Conference adjourned at 12.30 p.m.)
TWENTY-SECOND SITTING

Wednesday, 16 June 1965, 3.15 p.m.

President: Mr. Andriantsitohaina

Report of the Director-General: Discussion (cont.)

Interpretation from French: The President (Mr. Andriantsitohaina)—We now resume our discussion of the Report of the Director-General.

Mr. MUGALA (Workers' delegate, Zambia)—I feel it a great privilege to represent the workers of Zambia at this session of the Conference. Zambia attends this 49th Session of the International Labour Conference as a full Member for the first time since the I.L.O.'s establishment in 1919 after the First World War. In the meantime my country was under Western colonial rule, and it was only eight months ago that we became an independent nation.

I should like first of all to associate myself with previous speakers in congratulating the President on his election to the presidency of this session of the Conference. I have no doubt that his vast experience and ability will enable him to carry out the tasks of this office admirably.

At this juncture I wish to reiterate my Government's pledge of support for, and the adherence of the workers and people of Zambia to, the noble principles of the International Labour Organisation. It is my profound conviction that our new nation will benefit from the experience and aid of the Organisation and we, for our part, are prepared to make whatever contribution lies within our power.

Permit me to thank the Director-General and his staff for his Report to this session of the Conference, which, in my opinion, is very comprehensive.

However, I should like to be allowed to make an observation on the distribution of seats on the Governing Body. The workers of Zambia consider that the structure and certain rules of the Constitution are out of date, and we call upon the Conference to recommend to the Governing Body that they should be amended in order to bring them more into line with the present stage of society. Seats on the Governing Body must be distributed in a manner that will ensure real representation of all regions of the world and not make the Governing Body appear to be only a tool serving the interests of Western imperialists, as seems to be the case at present. The interests of the peoples of the East, the West, Asia and Africa must be represented on the Governing Body, which, in my opinion, is the backbone of the I.L.O. Because of the revolutionary nature of the economic and social development now taking place in the developing countries, particularly in Africa, I fully agree that there is a need to expand regional activities and that regional conferences should be held regularly to allow more frequent examination of problems facing the countries in the various regions. Furthermore, the regional branch offices should be allowed some measure of autonomy in the application of certain plans which may become urgently necessary in member States. Of course, the application of such plans should be consistent with the instructions laid down by Headquarters.

The workers of Zambia—together with other workers of the world, as indicated in previous speeches—fully appreciate the work of the I.L.O. within the sphere of its major programme areas. The importance of its plans, research and expert advice in these fields cannot be questioned. In developing countries the development of manpower and its proper use form the fundamental nucleus of economic, social and cultural development, and therefore constitute a field of the utmost importance which, like the development of social institutions and living and working conditions, needs maximum emphasis in the I.L.O.

We contend that the workers' trade unions, which, in developing countries, are the only modern mass economic organisations, must be associated with the planning and application of government policy, including national economic plans in developing areas. In order to fulfil their task the trade unions, particularly in Africa, should be freed from foreign trade union interference. We fully support the concept of the international solidarity of the workers, but Africa cannot afford the destructive imperialist tendencies of, and the ideological warfare engaged in by, such organisations as the I.C.F.T.U. The only appropriate trade union organisation for Africa is the All-African Trade Union Federation, which we in Zambia fully support for its pan-African ideology.

I am happy to state that after eight months of independence my Government is doing all it can in all fields to develop the country. It has just completed a manpower survey intended to evaluate the existing manpower in order to draw up appropriate training schemes and ensure the maximum use of manpower in the appropriate categories. The Government is concerned with the forming of strong employers' and workers' organisations. The Five-Year Economic Plan for 1966-70 is a progressive one which, with the support of the population which it enjoys, will no doubt be successful. We feel encouraged by our Government's conviction that wages must rise in proportion to the realization of our objectives here and elsewhere to make the champions of human destruction, led by the United States, abandon their aggression in all areas of engagement in order that a peaceful situation conducive to the realisation of our objectives here and elsewhere may be created. We call for the complete expulsion of South Africa which deliberately continues to flout international law within this Organisation.

It is very shameful to note that one of the Members participating here—Portugal—continues its policy of forced labour, so incompatible with international labour Conventions. Portugal is not only perpetrating a system of slavery against our brothers and sisters in so-called Portuguese Guinea and the neighbouring territories of Angola and Mozambique but has also sanctioned economic war against Zambia by blockading some of our imports through Lobito in Angola and Beira in Mozambique. I fail to see how the I.L.O. can accommodate a Member which continuously and deliberately disregards the international labour Conventions. Portugal should be suspended from membership of the I.L.O.

The so-called Rhodesia, in collaboration with Portugal and South Africa, is threatening to declare economic war against the new peaceful State of Zambia. They intend to seize all the jointly owned common services, including the Kariba hydroelectric stations, the railways and the airways. I wish to point out that Zambia has contributed the larger part of the capital invested in these services and that to seize them would be tantamount to committing an international crime. The nation of Zambia continues to appeal to the British Government, which is responsible for Rhodesia, to intervene immediately and grant independence to the indigenous peoples of Zimbabwe who are in the majority.

Finally, I appeal to the Members of the I.L.O. and particularly to the elements which are opposed to socialist China, to change their way of thinking and admit that the German Democratic Republic and others to membership of the I.L.O. in order to make this Organisation truly representative of all nations.

Mr. [name—Workers' delegate, Pakistan]—Before I come to the Report of the Director-General which is under discussion, permit me to congratulate you in the name of the workers of Pakistan on being elected President of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. The workers of Pakistan really hold you in high esteem and are particularly happy to see you occupying the Chair at this world assembly of representatives of governments, employers and workers.

I am not a newcomer to the International Labour Conference. I have attended about a dozen sessions and also served the I.L.O. as a member of the Governing Body from the middle of 1948 to the middle of 1957. So I have taken part in the discussion of a good number of Reports of the Director-General and I can say quite candidly that this year's Report has interested me the most and has also raised fresh hopes in my mind for the future of the I.L.O.

I am particularly happy to find that the Office has been reorganised and that appropriate departments—such as the Human Resources Department, the Social Institutions Development Department, the Conditions of Work and Life Department, the International Labour Standards Department, the Research and Planning Department, the Economic Planning Department, etc.—have been created. Thus, in my view, the I.L.O. machinery has been fully geared to answer adequately the growing needs and requirements of the I.L.O. This is the type of task which must have taken a lot of thinking, time and labour, and I must offer my wholehearted sympathy and thanks to the Director-General. I am also equally happy to note that special attention will continue to be paid to the conditions of work and life of seafarers, fishermen, dockworkers and workers in inland water transport.

I also welcome the new policy of further decentralisation in the working of the I.L.O. in order to tackle and cope more effectively with regional activities, and the proposed setting up of the three regional branches—one for Africa, one for Asia and the Middle East and one for Latin America. I agree fully with the Director-General's contention that the intensification of the I.L.O.'s regional activities will not distract the I.L.O. from its universal aims and that the regional activities should be developed and conducted keeping in view the universal objectives of the I.L.O.

All the proposed major programme areas of the I.L.O., namely human resources development, labour relations and trade union development, and development of conditions of life and work are very important, but, for the time being at least, the subject of labour relations and development of trade unions interests me the most. Of course, in most of the developing countries the development of management is as necessary as the development of trade unions. In Pakistan we have a number of private companies operating big business which are nothing but family concerns, and I hope the Government of Pakistan will soon amend the Companies Law making it obligatory for these companies to use the word "private" so that they can be readily distinguished from the public companies. Labour relations are, however, improving but still far from satisfactory.

Before I come to the Report of the Director-General which is under discussion, permit me to congratulate you in the name of the workers of Pakistan on being elected President of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference.
The governments of most developing countries are now paying attention to the growth of the co-operative movement, but the insufficiency of funds seems to be the main hurdle. If the I.L.O. is to play a significant part in the development of the co-operative movement, it must also tackle the question of adequate credit facilities, particularly to those who are concerned in manufacturing industrial or consumer goods. In East Pakistan we have established a co-operative jute mill, but as far as I know financial difficulties are retarding its progress.

The problem of agrarian reform is a complex and far-reaching one. In fact the lot of the tillers of the soil. In East Pakistan we took away the landlords and giving ownership to the tillers of the soil. In East Pakistan we took away the landlord and vested the ownership in the tenants as far back as the year 1950 by passing the East Bengal Estate Acquisition and Tenancy Act, but has the lot of the jute-growers and other tillers improved much? They are still being exploited as they were exploited under the British and the landlords' rule. After every harvest the prices of raw jute still go down to cost level or even below at times, but no sooner does the jute go out of the hands of the growers than the prices shoot up. It is true that the Government has established a Jute Marketing Corporation, but it can be better termed as an apology to the jute-growers than anything else. It therefore goes without saying that the real answer to this problem is either a strong co-operative marketing organisation, or nationalisation of the entire raw jute trade. I personally stand for nationalisation, but till it is nationalised a co-operative marketing organisation could also help the producers a great deal provided adequate finances are placed at their disposal.

In West Pakistan, too, a great land reform has taken place. During the period of martial law, General Mohammad Ayub Khan (now Field Marshal and President of Pakistan) took courage and abolished the jagirdate (feudal landlords) and limited holdings to 500 and 1,000 acres of irrigated and non-irrigated land respectively. Many say that this reform could have never been accomplished by any parliametary government in West Pakistan. But the question again arises: has the lot of the cotton-growers and other tillers improved much? Again the answer is either a co-operative or nationalisation of the raw cotton trade, I would therefore strongly urge upon the I.L.O. to keep in view that the agrarian question cannot be solved adequately by passing a Recommendation or even a Convention. It can only be solved by arranging adequate finance and marketing facilities of agrarian produce.

Before I conclude let me extend to all of you the sincere greetings of the workers of Pakistan and their warm wishes for the success of this Conference.

Mr. CHENG (Employers’ delegate, China)—I feel privileged to be able to attend this General Conference of the I.L.O. and to participate in the discussion of the Director-General’s Report. Although this is only the first time that I have attended the Conference as the Chinese Employers’ delegate, the I.L.O. and its long years of social and humanitarian activities are by no means new to me. The same is true of the topic of the I.L.O. structure and programme which is now before the Conference for the third consecutive year.

The Director-General has presented once again his eloquent Report covering problems relating to the Organisation’s structure and programme in addition to the I.L.O.'s work during the past year. We employers in the Republic of China fully appreciate his desire and effort to streamline the structure and the working methods, with a view to adapting the Organisation to the changing needs of the world. As human resources are a decisive factor in economic development and social progress, our special attention has been focused on their development and utilisation in our country. Indeed, if people do not have the skills needed to use natural resources and the capital and equipment which must accompany them, if they are not productively employed, if they do not participate actively, freely and in a responsible manner in the tasks of development, it will be very difficult to achieve any economic and social progress; but, on the other hand, as pointed out by Mr. Haythorne, Chairman of the Governing Body and Chairman of the Working Party on the Programme and Structure of the I.L.O., the role which human beings can play in the process of development will be enhanced if living and working conditions are improved, the standards of living are made more satisfactory, and a greater degree of social justice is attained. It is therefore in this context that I would like to give this august assembly a brief account of what my country has recently been doing towards the realisation of these objectives.

As you probably know, since 1953 the Government of the Republic of China has launched a series of economic development plans. Thus, from 1952 to 1963 our gross national income increased by 212 per cent. and income per head by 140 per cent., with the annual average growth rate for the entire economy recorded at 7.4 per cent. China’s agricultural and industrial progress presents not only a spectacular achievement in our own country, but also an encouragement for the free world as a whole. But, if one were to trace the contributing factors, it cannot be denied that, in addition to many other elements, a right utilisation of our manpower resources has played a vital part. In the first place, despite the ever-increasing population on the island, our manpower has been mobilised to the fullest possible extent so as to turn the human resources into an active productive force.

At the same time, thanks to the expanding economy the surplus manpower and unemployment have been absorbed. Today even the discharged servicemen are being resettled as planned in agricultural and public works projects. Secondly, in order to improve the quality of our labour force, educational and vocational training have been in full swing since the Government has moved to Taiwan. During the past 11 years landmark movements have been noticed in the field of general education. At present more than 96 per cent. of the school-age children are in elementary schools, and some 56 per cent. are receiving a high-school education. As regards vocational training special measures, including apprenticeship schemes, are also on the increase to ensure an adequate supply of skilled human resources for the need of our over-all economic development.

While a developing economy provides a basic guarantee for the improved standards of living of the people, we have not lost sight of the different additional measures in the social field in the interests of the workers' welfare. For instance, a comprehensive labour insurance plan has been in effective operation since 1953 and, thanks to the assistance furnished by the I.L.O., its functioning has been found satisfactory. To help working men and women to obtain decent housing at low cost and on easy terms, large-scale construction projects are being developed all over the province. Besides, the Taiwan Employment Service Centre is expanding and its work of channelling agricultural labour into industry has been most helpful in the present-day manpower situation.

The foregoing, however brief it may be, gives a clear-cut picture of how our efforts are being directed to building up the nation on a sound economic and social basis. It is also designed to create the right climate so that human resources can play an increasingly important part in the process of development.

With regard to the other programme areas proposed by the Office, such as social institutions and labour relations, the Chinese employers find themselves in general agreement with the principles thereof. As regards the methods of action, we are of the opinion that, despite its past success, the tripartite structure of the I.L.O. should continue to be strengthened in the implementation of new programmes.

In the Republic of China we are at present engaged in an all-out human resources development plan, covering aspects of education, training, employment services, manpower distribution and the like, to promote the utilisation of human potential. Progress has also been made in recent years in the establishment of social institutions and improvement of labour relations. All these have been initiated by the Government in consultation with both employers' and workers' organisations.

I am particularly gratified to report that, in view of the huge tasks of economic construction facing both employers and workers, labour relations in Free China are more harmonious than ever. We decided to work hand-in-hand with the僮 promote the development of the economy in a joint effort to promote further our standards of living. Under our supreme policy of recovering the Chinese mainland so as to deliver our brethren from the communist tyranny, we unite and work together for the common good of the country. We believe that the communist régime now in the mainland will soon be toppled. When this happens the I.L.O. principles will see light in the whole of China in conditions of human freedom and dignity.

I am fully in favour of the Director-General's remarks regarding those I.L.O. instruments which no longer fulfil their original purposes and which should therefore be eliminated from the present code of Conventions and Recommendations. As time goes by it is inevitable that a certain number of instruments adopted in the earlier years have become obsolete, and in certain cases completely out of date; a streamlining of these instruments is thus very urgent.

Another matter we must endorse strongly relates to decentralised organisation so as to ensure utmost flexibility between countries and regions at different stages of development. Much has already been done in the past in this field, but more still remains to be achieved. By so doing, the I.L.O. would implement its principles and adapt its standards better to the needs and problems in local areas.

Finally, I would like to refer to the two questions raised in the speeches of the delegates from the communist bloc concerning the composition of the Governing Body of the I.L.O. and the revision of the procedures of the Conference. In view of the efficient functioning of the Governing Body in the past 47 years and its great achievements, I do not see any need or justification for altering the composition of the Governing Body. As regards the procedures of the Conference, we should all bear in mind that the unique characteristic of the I.L.O. is its tripartism, and that therefore group autonomy should be respected and strictly observed. We are strongly opposed to the idea of revising the Conference procedures for the sake of expediency or satisfying those countries in which the government's view is always the only view and the so-called Employers are in fact the government itself.

In closing may I wish the Conference great success.

Mr. ATTARD KINGSWELL (Workers' delegate, Malta)—I wish first of all to express my warmest congratulations to the President on his election to the presidency of this Conference. It is also my pleasure to convey the sincere greetings and esteem of the workers of my country to the many distinguished delegates and advisers attending this Conference.

It is not the first time that I have addressed this august body. For many years now, observer delegations from Malta have participated and played an active part in the work of this Conference. Today, however, I come here differently. It is the first time that my country is participating as a full Member of the International Labour Conference, after having joined the Organisation earlier this year. I consider it right and proper, on this first and unique opportunity, to restate publicly and declare that the workers of Malta fully support the noble aims and the activities of the I.L.O.

I wish to be brief, but cannot help expressing our workers' profound interest in the humanitarian work of the I.L.O. It would be superfluous for me to enumerate the many international instruments prepared by this Organisation that served to improve the way of life of all peoples, workers in particular. A quick reflection on this subject, however, also reveals that we are still a long way from the goals which the founders and leaders of the I.L.O. set themselves to achieve. This is a formidable challenge to us all, and it is mainly for this reason that the
I.L.O. has had to reorganise its structure and become better equipped to face the realities of the situation existing in the world today.

In my humble opinion, the reorganisation proposed by the Director-General in Part I of his Report is a step in the right direction, but it cannot by itself bring about the desired improvements in the social and economic conditions of member States. It needs the full co-operation of governments and the active support of the employers' and workers' organisations. Other international agencies of the United Nations should also be asked to extend their expert and financial assistance for the rapid development of newly emergent countries. All possible help and advice should be given to those countries which express willingness to establish the standards set out in I.L.O. instruments.

Speaking for the workers of my country, I wish to state that we have more than an outside interest in the useful work which is being done through I.L.O. technical assistance in Malta. Whilst we accept that experts come on the invitation of the Government, we may suggest that it will greatly facilitate their tasks if they could meet trade union representatives and ensure that the workers are not excluded from the preparation and activation of I.L.O. projects.

Another general observation which I dare to make is that our participation in the preparation of I.L.O. instruments should not end in Geneva. It remains our responsibility to see that the decisions taken in this Conference are later ratified and scrupulously followed in our respective countries. We cannot afford to spend three busy weeks preparing international instruments and then put them in cold storage or forget all about them. I strongly appeal to all Workers' delegates to ensure that the recommendations of I.L.O. Conventions become one of the slogans of their unions. Trade unions should make it their concern to urge and persistently press for the ratification of I.L.O. Conventions in their respective countries.

I was glad to hear the Honourable Minister of Labour and Social Welfare declare to this Conference a few days ago that the Government of Malta has accepted the obligations entered into on behalf of the territory of Malta by the United Kingdom Government in respect of no less than 25 Conventions. It was furthermore stated that the Government of Malta has undertaken to continue to apply the "non-metropolitan" Conventions which the United Kingdom had applied hitherto until it is possible to ratify the corresponding "metropolitan" Conventions. I wish to put it on record that we are glad to learn of our Government's intention on this matter, and the workers of Malta will certainly give every support and assistance which may be needed for the early ratification of these Conventions.

I said earlier that trade unions should be more militant in their endeavours to ensure the ratification of as many as possible of the I.L.O. Conventions. I would like to follow this proposal myself by inviting the Government of my country to set up a committee, with employers' and unions' representation, which will study and make recommendations on the possible ratification of more I.L.O. Conventions. We want to assist our Government in every possible way in pursuing a genuine desire to implement I.L.O. standards and policies. This will be of benefit not only to the workers but to the country as a whole.

The Director-General, in Part I of his Report, described in a very clear manner the appropriate machinery to run the three major I.L.O. programme areas. In my considered view, this is a very practical way of assisting the developing countries in generating the necessary forces that can improve the social and economic conditions. Malta has, over the years, developed its social institutions and has acquired reasonably good living and working conditions. This does not mean that technical assistance in these two fields is not welcome. We trade unionists will be the first to argue that there is still room for improvement. It is, however, in the field of human resources and economic development that we are in the greatest need of assistance.

Malta has no natural resources and its one-third of a million people live on an area of 120 square miles. In the past they earned their living selling their labour to the British defence establishments. Our national wealth has always been the ingenuity and skill of our labour force. The former employment areas are now closing down, and the Government of Malta has proved unable to create new job opportunities fast enough to maintain the existing labour force. At the same time, thousands of youngsters qualify from our schools and colleges only to find there are no jobs waiting for them. This makes the situation more difficult, as a consequence of which thousands of workers are leaving the island, without any significant effect on the unemployed, whose figures keep steadily rising.

It is therefore in this field of human resources that the I.L.O. is urgently desired to assist us. We must stop this waste of our national wealth which, I regret to say, is being somewhat encouraged by our Government in a hopeless task of keeping the unemployed figures from rising further. This short-sighted policy is aggravating the situation by creating a false sense of security when much greater determination of our people is needed to pull our country from the brink of economic disaster. Our unions are very conscious of the seriousness of the situation and have been asking the Government to set up a National Development Economic Council to advise and keep the problem under constant review. So far, and notwithstanding the gravity of the situation, the Government has taken a negative attitude towards any sign of wanting the employers and the unions to share with it the task of diversifying the economy of the island.

It may be pertinent to point out that the first Five-Year Development Plan, prepared by the former Crown Colony Administration, realised less than 50 per cent. of its objectives. Malta is now independent, and in the early stages of a second Five-Year Development Plan, but unless the Maltese Government's present attitude changes, and changes quickly, the Plan will likewise fall short of its very modest objectives. It is therefore in this direction that the I.L.O. can use its good influence and convince the Maltese Government of the usefulness of tripartite action in solving our economic problem. I am putting the suggestion because it appears from our distinguished Minister's address that I.L.O. technical assistance in this area is welcome. The I.L.O. may insist that no economic plan can succeed without the active participation of the employers' and trade union organisations.

In extending my congratulations to you, Mr. President, allow me to thank the I.L.O. and the many distinguished delegates for welcoming our country in the membership of this important Organisation.

Interpretation from French: Mr. TUDOR (Workers' delegate, Rumania)—May I take this opportunity to welcome the four new member States in our midst—Malawi, Malta, Zambia and the Yemen.

The questions raised in the Director-General's Report at this session of our Conference are important elements for the future activity of the Organisation which, together with the other specialised agencies of the United Nations and other international organisations, is called upon to contribute to an increasing extent to the permanent improvement of the economic and social conditions of the workers. The attention of the workers and of their trade union organisations is, no doubt, concentrated above all on the problem of the rational utilisation of human resources in all sectors of the economy, without which—as the Report points out—it is not possible to achieve co-ordinated economic and social development.

The importance of the rational utilisation of human resources is also illustrated by the fact that, out of 49 Special Fund technical assistance projects coming within the competence of the I.L.O., 31 are aimed at the training of supervisory personnel, particularly in the developing countries.

With a view to finding solutions on a broader scale, the I.L.O. should make a comparative study of methods of vocational training and employment, which would review national and regional experience and characteristics.

Rumania, which in the past was a backward country, is engaged in full-scale economic development, both on the industrial and agricultural levels. By mobilising the tremendous energy of the workers, by the permanent improvement of the means of production throughout the country, and through the better use of its national resources, our country is carrying out a policy of rapid socialist industrialisation, the results of which can be seen from the increase in over-all industrial production to 6.5 times the level in 1950. In the coming five years, over-all industrial production will increase by a further 65 per cent.

We attach particular importance in the national economy to modern technology and to the development of certain key industrial sectors such as the electrical trades, the chemical industry, the iron and steel industry and engineering.

The dynamic development of the national economy has given rise, naturally, to a whole lot of social and cultural problems. Amongst these should be mentioned the problem of the training and rational utilisation of supervisory personnel, the solution of which has been made possible by planning, training and full employment in accordance with over-all economic development plans. During the period 1950-65 the number of wage earners has doubled, the greatest increase occurring in the main industrial sectors.

The progress achieved in the national economy has made it possible to allocate considerable funds to social and cultural activities, which have developed sixfold over the past 15 years. Real wages have more than doubled during the same period.

Our trade unions have made a major contribution to the solution of all economic and social problems. They take an effective part in the preparation and implementation of economic plans, in the organisation and improvement of the production process, and in improving the technical and occupational skills of manual workers, technicians and engineers.

The trade unions also take part in settling those questions relating to the social and cultural needs of the workers, and in the formulation of legislation and decisions in this connection. They are in charge of social insurance systems, they organise and supervise working conditions and engage in activities in various sectors of the public services.

The programme and the tasks before the I.L.O., as can be seen from the Director-General's Report, are complex. Their solution in the spirit hoped for by the working masses will be made possible only by a change in the methods of work and structure of the Organisation. By the very nature of its work and structure, the I.L.O. should be a forum for international co-operation. In our view this can only be ensured by fair representation of all the regions of the world and of all political, economic and social systems, and through democratic methods of work.

How can one speak of the universality of the programmes of the I.L.O. when all its Members do not participate on equal terms in their elaboration? We consider the present situation to be an anachronism, where the workers' organisations of the People's Republic of China, the German Democratic Republic, the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, and the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, which comprise so many workers rich in experience of trade union activity, are deprived of their legitimate right to contribute to the work of the I.L.O.

Even though this question has often been debated, it continues, to our regret, to remain unsolved, and this prejudices the achievement of the I.L.O.'s objectives.

The I.L.O. should be a tribunal for the free exchange of views and experience on a footing of complete equality so that it may find unanimously acceptable solutions.

At the same time the strict observation of the principle of universality makes fair representation of all Members in all the organs of the I.L.O. indispensable.

As a rule only the representatives of certain workers' organisations are elected to these organs, while the World Federation of Trade Unions and its affiliated organisations, which represent more than 120 million workers, is not represented in the Workers' group of the Govering Body or among the officers of the Workers' group of the Conference.

We hope that appropriate measures will be taken as soon as possible to put an end to such a state of affairs. We believe that the adoption by the Conference of the resolution submitted by the Government delegations of the People's Republic of Poland and of the Ukrainian S.S.R. would be an encouraging step forward in this respect.

From the discussions at our Conference it is clear that most delegates believe that the implementation of the tasks and the programmes of the I.L.O. can only be assured in a climate of international peace and co-operation among all peoples, based on freedom, independence and national sovereignty.

It is the duty of the I.L.O. to contribute to respect of these principles and to oppose any action that may lead to their violation, wherever it may occur.

The workers and the trade unions of the People's Republic of Rumania, who are deeply interested in the maintenance and strengthening of peace in the world, express their misgivings about existing tension in certain parts of the world. They urgently demand an immediate cessation of the aggressive action against the people of Viet-Nam, and of the interference in the domestic affairs of the Dominican Republic.

International tension and the existence of theatres of war lead to the wastage of vast resources for military purposes at a time when economic backwardness, chronic malnutrition, illiteracy and unemployment continue in many parts of the world.

The maintenance of colonial domination, which has been so often condemned in this Conference, and the policy of racial discrimination that continues to exist, present sources of tension which affect the economic and social progress of the peoples as well as the activities of our Organisation.

The trade unions of our Republic express their complete solidarity with those peoples that are struggling or consolidating their national independence. It is the peoples of the world who must freely decide their own future without foreign interference. All peoples, great or small, are entitled to contribute actively to social advancement and to the safeguarding of peace throughout the world.

It is the duty of the I.L.O. to make a sustained effort to contribute to the abolition of all forms of colonial exploitation and to further trade union and democratic freedoms. We believe that the adoption of the resolution submitted by the Workers' delegate of Yugoslavia and of the resolution submitted by the Government delegate of the United Arab Republic will serve these purposes.

To conclude, I should like to assure you that the trade unions of the People's Republic of Rumania will continue to contribute to the solution of the problems facing the I.L.O. and will support every constructive effort that is made with a view to improving the economic and social conditions of the workers.

Mr. POLLYDORE (Workers' representative, British Guiana)—I wish to associate myself with other speakers in congratulating the President on his election as President of this Conference, and to assure him that I have been watching with great interest the dignified manner in which he is discharging the functions of his very high office.

I speak here as an observer on behalf of the workers of British Guiana, a country which, though in a remote corner of South America and with a small population of just under 600,000, has been figuring very prominently at international levels over the past 12 years. In recent history British Guiana first came into international prominence in 1953, when its Constitution was suspended by the United Kingdom Government.

In more recent years British Guiana figured prominently again at international levels on account of a number of major political and industrial events.

In 1962 there was a general strike when civil servants, for the first time in the country's history, participated in strike action. In 1963 there was another general strike, which lasted 80 days, involving nearly all government employees including civil servants and workers in the private sectors. In 1964 there was a strike in the sugar industry motivated politically, which was associated with violence and arson and resulted in a number of deaths. Despite these major events in the political and industrial affairs of the country, the trade union movement remained basically a united one except for a short period between 1953 and 1955 following the suspension of the country's Constitution.

This unity in the trade union movement was possible because, while the movement was always deeply interested in political objectives, its immediate objective has always been the achievement of economic and social advancement of the workers. However, the British Guiana Trade Union Council, which is the national trade union centre, recognised at the same time that the objective of social and economic progress is intimately tied to certain political considerations, and having regard to the political and industrial background—even though acknowledging that independence would not mean immediate transformation of the country's adverse economic position to one of economic prosperity—my Council made representations to the United Kingdom Government for British Guiana to be granted independence without delay under a radically changed political system which would ensure the following: that racism could not be successfully fostered as a means of achieving and maintaining political power; that economic possibilities are provided for all, regardless of race; that totalitarianism could not be imposed on the people through misuse of political power; that freedom of association, more especially trade union rights, in accordance with the fundamental principles of the United Nations Charter, will be upheld.

A change in the political system has been effected, and the present political climate is conducive to economic and social advancement.

I trust that within the next few months the present preoccupations of the Government and the people on this question of independence, which absorbs so much valuable time, will disappear with the attainment of independence, and that thereafter all energies in the country will be directed towards economic and social progress.

The Report of the Director-General, which covers a wide range of matters, sets out the achievements of the I.L.O. in a very modest way when account is taken of the fact that so much has been accomplished in so many directions and of the acknowledgements expressed at this Conference by many delegates of the progress made in their countries through the help and guidance of the I.L.O.

The proposal by the Director-General in Chapter II of Part I of his Report that a strategy in the field of human resources should concentrate on three main objectives is an excellent one, since these objectives involve some of the basic essentials for economic and social progress. The objectives mentioned by the Director-General are: better utilisation of the labour force by creating higher levels of productive employment; improving the quality of the labour force by vocational education and training; and enlisting popular support for the tasks of national development, and the participation of broad social groups in them.

With respect to the first objective—that is better utilisation of the labour force by creating higher levels of productive employment—I feel that the immediate need of British Guiana, as in the case of other countries with similar economic problems, is that the I.L.O. should advise on measures which could be taken to create new jobs for the substantial number of people who are unemployed. While recognising, as stated in the Director-General's Report, that "the creation of full employment is not an end in itself" and that "employment which does not contribute to economic growth does not bring the realisation of social objectives any nearer"; still, where it is possible in the long run to integrate various stages of development programmes designed to achieve economic growth, development programmes, both in the public and private sectors, should take into account the immediate objective of providing employment for those exposed to hunger. The assistance of the I.L.O. in determining such programmes would be most welcome to the workers of British Guiana, and I am aware that the British Guiana Government has already taken positive steps in this connection.

Briefly, may I say that the realisation of social objectives through economic growth is the only progressive approach today; but there are still many countries where, despite substantial economic growth, workers are not brought any nearer to the realisation of their social objectives except through extreme pressures including strikes forced on the trade union movement, where it is militant, by the type of employer whose only concern in human resources is its utilisation for the further enrichment and strengthening of capitalism.

Regarding the second objective—that is improving the quality of the labour force by vocational education and training—apart from improving the quality of labour in the particular categories in which the labour force is normally utilised, consideration might be given to providing facilities for those who respond to encouragement for training outside their normal occupation. For example, low-income-group working people who cannot afford to buy houses could be organised with greater enthusiasm and interest to build their own houses in a massive drive to meet the housing shortage if trained in simple modern techniques in low-cost housing construction.

My Council has just organised a housing cooperative in British Guiana and, with a loan of $2,500,000 made available by the trade union movement of the United States of America, 500 houses for workers will be built shortly as a first step. The present British Guiana Government has made substantial provision for aided self-help housing, but even taken together the total number of houses to be built by the cooperative and the Government would make no significant impact on the serious housing problem in British Guiana.

Regarding the third objective—that is enlisting popular support for the tasks of national development, and the participation of broad social groups in them—I believe labour relations to be the most important aspect of this objective. It is recognised that the pattern of labour relations would continue to vary from country to country, and even in the same country, according to the state of political, social, and economic development, and that no universal formula could be devised in this field for general adoption. Nevertheless, experiences and investigations have made it possible for broad guidelines to be set down, and there is evidence that some of these are being used with modification by individual countries to meet their particular needs.

As the Director-General said in Part I of his Report, "It is imperative that the I.L.O. should have a full understanding of the situation in each country and in each region. In this way, and only in this way, will it be possible to suggest measures which fully meet the most critical needs of the country or region concerned, and which will have the effect of strengthening and developing an adequate system of labour relations in that country or region, while at the same time ensuring respect for the principles and freedoms for which the I.L.O. stands, and which constitute the very reason for its existence."

I consider the Director-General's approach to the development of viable systems of labour relations to be a very good one which merits the co-operation of all member countries. I feel certain that, in the search for this understanding by which he hopes to suggest measures for strengthening and developing an adequate system of labour relations in individual countries or regions, account will be taken of the problems in labour relations in some countries arising from political and ideological pressures which sometimes obscure industrial issues: disparity in the educational levels between the employing class and the working class, and the urgency for improvement in the general educational levels of workers as distinct from trade union education; also manipulated economic pressures by employers aimed at compromising the Government and the trade union movement.

I am happy to see at this Conference the ready expression of support from the Employers for the development of co-operatives. Some employers believe that consumer co-operatives constitute an erosion of their commercial functions and deliberately set out to create economic obstacles to their development. I think such obstacles, if allowed to become widespread, could only provide reasonable ground ultimately for workers in developing countries to demand that governments should assume the responsibility for making basic consumer supplies available to consumer co-operatives and commerce alike.

My final congratulation to the Director-General is in respect to his statement in his Report that the first major objective of the I.L.O. is “the growth of workers' and employers' organisations which are genuinely representative and independent”. Independence of the trade union movement is essential and calls for working-class unity, and the workers' struggles for social and economic justice can be achieved only if working-class unity transcends national frontiers.

When, however, condemnatory statements are made against the functioning of the I.L.O., such as I have heard made at this Conference by some Workers' representatives and even a Government representative from one of my neighbouring countries in referring to British imperialism and American aggression, one wonders how international working-class unity could be brought any nearer when such utter disregard is being shown for the sentiments of workers in those countries against which those statements were made.

In order to demonstrate impartiality in dealing alike with workers in different countries, why did those who made those condemnatory statements not refer to persistent authentic reports that there is no independent trade union movement in Cuba, no right to strike, no negotiation of collective contracts, and no trade-union elections? Why has David Salvador, Secretary of the Cuban Confederation of Labour, with whom I have been associated personally in the free trade union movement, been forced out of the movement through imprisonment, despite his part in the revolution to bring democracy to Cuba? Why are there 15,000 political prisoners in Cuba today? These questions should be answered for all those who believe in a free and independent trade union movement which is the basis of working-class unity.

Instead of agitation and condemnation, constructive efforts should be directed towards the restoration and development of an independent trade union movement where this does not exist. Only when freedom and rights of workers have been assured can we hope for the development and strengthening of sound institutions for the welfare of the workers in the world and be free of aggression and intervention by the agents of totalitarianism. Thus, the road to universality in the I.L.O. should be constructed by free workers, free employers and free governments in a world that universally respects and adheres to the same basic principles of human liberty and independence of workers, employers, and governments.

Mr. SCEK MAO (Employers' delegate, Somalia)—First of all I wish to congratulate the President most warmly on his election to the highest office of this Conference. I am convinced that the Conference will benefit from his capable and precious guidance in fulfilling the task before it.

Also, I should like to express my congratulations to the Director-General for the clarity of and richness of ideas in his Report.

This Report, divided into two Parts, presents a complete image of the activities of the Organisation in the past year, and analyses with competence the main programmes and working methods. It was the general opinion that the I.L.O. should adapt itself to the constant changes in the international situation, and I am gratified to note in the Report that this procedure is being followed.

The regrouping of the I.L.O.'s activities in the three major programme areas, namely human resources, social institutions, and conditions of work and life, is consistent with the opinions expressed at the 48th Session.

I have noticed with satisfaction that priority has been given to the development of human resources, these resources being intimately linked with the other factors of production, namely capital and natural resources. Even in this era in which automation is at its peak, human resources continue to have their own importance. A most convincing illustration of this is the situation existing in the industrialised countries, where considerable importance is given to the vocational and technical education of manpower.

In order to attract foreign capital into developing countries one important condition is the availability of qualified and suitable manpower in those countries. It would therefore be of great assistance to them if the I.L.O. could institute its activities in the field of human resources.

The development of social institutions should also be put into effect in due time.

The present trade union movements in States which have recently obtained their independence are still in the infant stage. Therefore, assistance should be given to workers to enable them to overcome their initial difficulties more quickly.

In this difficult stage of reconstruction of their countries, both workers and employers should be conscious of the importance of their position and should collaborate in order to achieve their objective. On the other hand, it is obvious that the developing countries cannot afford to resort very often to drastic measures for the solution of any possible conflict which might become an obstacle to progress in industrial improvement and economic development. However, it is gratifying to note that some positive results in this respect have already been achieved to reduce such action to the minimum. No effort should be spared to create and maintain good relations between workers and employers.

The last point referred to in the programme, i.e., conditions of work and life, is one of the traditional activities of the I.L.O. We are grateful to this Organisation for its sound and substantial contributions in this field, in which it can boast of long and fruitful experience. The changing international situation and the legitimate aspirations of the inhabitants of every country for tangible well-being and economic and social welfare necessitate the intensification of research to achieve better living and working conditions.

In regard to the three major programme areas, I can assure you that they are in perfect harmony with the objectives of the Five-Year Plan for the economic and social development of my country. The objectives aimed at in this Plan are as follows: (1) the provision of more employment facilities by creating new job opportunities; (2) the provision of increased educational facilities to train the technical and professional personnel necessary for the achievement of the Plan; (3) the encouragement of expansion of the trade union movement according to fair criteria; (4) the development of standards for better understanding between workers and employers on a sound and healthy basis; (5) the improvement of the working and living conditions of the working classes; (6) an increase in the workers' productivity by the raising of the level of remuneration; and (7) the establishment of a broader system of social security.

Another item mentioned in the Director-General’s Report and for which our Five-Year Plan has made provision concerns the rural population. In this respect our Government is seeking ways and means of settling part of the nomadic population by the establishing of various rural communities.

Finally, I approve of the other matters covered in the Report, especially those dealing with the internal reorganisation, decentralisation and expansion of the I.L.O.’s activities. However, it is advisable that the new structure be established in such a way as to avoid any overlapping.

Within the context of its revised programme the I.L.O. must continue its fight against racial discrimination and other forms of social injustice. In my opinion it would be appropriate for the Organisation to adopt more severe measures against South African and Portuguese. In fact, I feel it is useless to persist further in the use of methods of passive persuasion in order to induce those two States to renounce their social importance and the maturity they have acquired by experience.

In concluding, I wish to express my fraternal welcome to the new member States and to join in the congratulations to the President and to the Director-General.

Interpretation from French: Mr. PULVEREL (Representative of the International Confederation of Senior Officials)—Mr. President, on behalf of the International Confederation of Senior Officials, may I first of all thank you and the other staff of the session for having authorised me to speak in this discussion.

The Director-General’s Report this year is in our eyes so important that I decided to come myself, as President of our Confederation, to explain the point of view of my Confederation to the Conference.

We appreciated the Report particularly this year because of its clarity and its comprehensive conception. Its precision of thought will certainly bear fruit because it will enable more people of all social, economic and political backgrounds to study it fully and closely. Indeed, successful pursuit of the I.L.O.’s objectives requires as many men as possible in public life to be familiar with the work of the Organisation, to follow it up and to appreciate its results. Moreover, as many ordinary men and women as possible everywhere should know what the I.L.O. is doing to lay down standards of living and to improve social relationships and to increase the general well-being. It is also necessary for an increasing number of the “citizens of the world” that we have become to appreciate the concern of the I.L.O. for the humblest and most unfortunate, thus removing an all too common prejudice against the international agencies.

The work of the I.L.O. should be better known so that it may have a higher prestige and thus be more effective. At present, circulation of the Report is still unduly restricted to a small number of specialists. As representative of an international organisation, the International Confederation of Senior Officials, I would wish a summary of the various activities of the I.L.O. to be prepared for world circulation and distributed with the aid of the powerful information media of today.

There are several points in the Director-General’s Report which have had the special attention of my Confederation. The first is the reorganisation of the I.L.O. into specialist departments which should enable the various activities to be prepared with greater precision and technical expertise. We applaud this step which will facilitate study of the various points in the Report by specialised commissions or working parties and so simplify their work. Similarly, by rationalising research, it will enable better advantage to be taken of the results.

As for the dialogue between the State and the various social groups, we agree with the Director-General that these groups should now take a new step forward. They should be given more power in the economic administration and development of the societies to which they belong. In particular we believe that trade union organisations should now move beyond the objectives previously allotted to them. To reach their targets more efficiently while serving the community they should enter fully into public life and assume new and greater responsibilities commensurate with their social importance and the maturity they have acquired by experience.

From this point of view, it seems that the problem of associating workers in the management of undertakings should already be the subject of a broad exchange of views aimed at defining the standards which might be set in the light of the social and economic realities of the various countries. We would also wish to have the I.L.O. deal with the problem of the advancement of all workers, not only collectively but also in accordance with standards of personal merit.

In a more special field we are glad to see the Report stress once more the need for employers' and workers' organisations to be independent of political bodies. In many countries there is a growing protectionist tendency to favour organisations allied or directly linked to the public authorities or political parties. This leads to monopoly representation and cannot but adulterate the freedom of the social and trade union organisations.

Lastly, I shall speak of the position of public officials since my organisation exists mainly to defend their interests. The Meeting of Experts of November 1963 raised high hopes among them. Formerly a privileged class, civil servants now feel that they are the poor relations of modern society. Indeed, doubts are often expressed whether I.L.O. standards are applicable to them. Benefiting by the admirable activities of the trade unions in the private sector, the industrial workers have achieved great advances, which we very much welcome, but although the importance of the role of public officials in modern economies is steadily increasing they do not enjoy social equality with other groups. Particularly as regards remuneration, there is nearly everywhere disparity between the rise in national incomes, and the insufficient upward adjustment of public officials' salaries. There is also a constant telescoping of grade differentials, which no longer reflect the responsibilities carried by public officials.

It is to make good these deficiencies and restore to public officials a status more in keeping with their functions that we ask the I.L.O. to continue its work on their behalf.

In particular, we would like to repeat our request that a public officials' department be established in the I.L.O. It would work together with joint bodies in which representatives of governments and of public officials' international organisations might prepare international standards.

We would also wish, for the sake of equity and efficiency, to have permanent consultative status granted to us. After all, our organisation has co-operated in the work of the I.L.O. for ten years thanks to the kindness and understanding of the Governing Body, which I wish, in passing, to thank very warmly. Furthermore, our organisation, despite its specialisation, has continued to be concerned, as is its duty, with the study of all the problems handled by the International Labour Organisation. The I.L.O. would thus be meeting what is in our opinion becoming an imperious necessity, deeply felt by civil servants and public service employees, who comprise at least one-sixth of all employed persons.

In this regard, I should like to remind you that we have not merely expressed wishes to the I.L.O. but have in recent years traced a path for it by doing very important work on behalf of public officials. We have formulated model regulations for supranational officials, made a comparative study of the legal status of public officials in the various countries of Western Europe, drawn up a survey on the position of public officials in the national economy, and made a study of their place in the Europe of tomorrow.

Moreover, we are now preparing two other comparative studies—one on remuneration and the other on pension schemes in the public services.

All these are expressions of our constructive spirit and our special technical expertise, which we place unreservedly at the disposal of the International Labour Organisation.

(The Conference adjourned at 4.45 p.m.)
TWENTY-THIRD SITTING

Thursday, 17 June 1965, 10.15 a.m.

President: Mr. Raza

Report of the Director-General:
Discussion (cont.)

The President—During the twentieth sitting last Tuesday afternoon the Government delegate of Cyprus requested the deletion of certain remarks which he considered to be derogatory to the Head of State of Cyprus. As I said in an earlier statement to this Conference, I will not allow any derogatory references to any Head of State. I have now had an opportunity of reading carefully the record of the remarks in question and I have found that they did not constitute an attack upon Archbishop Makarios but were put in the form of a quotation from a speech by Archbishop Makarios. I cannot regard a statement made by a Head of State as in any manner derogatory to himself.

On going through the record of the proceedings, I have noticed a recurrence in the use of certain language which goes beyond what is customary in such a forum as this. The use of the words, for example, "a few madmen", "treacherous and bloody", "is it not criminal?", and "is it not barbarous?", in my view, constitute unparliamentary language, and I would therefore again request speakers to refrain from using such language.

We now resume our discussion of the Director-General’s Report.

Interpretation from French: Mr. NTUTUME (Workers’ delegate, Gabon)—In the name of the workers of my country, I should like first of all to greet very warmly the President of this session of the Conference, Mr. Hashim Raza, and to congratulate him on his election to this office.

The importance of this session has not escaped our trade union organisations, because of the particularly significant character of the Director-General’s Report, which opens extensive prospects for the activity of the I.L.O. on behalf of the developing countries.

I do not wish to discuss all the items on the agenda of this session and I shall confine myself to certain problems which are of immediate concern to the workers of my country.

Before taking up the problem of co-operatives, to which I attach the most importance because nothing has been done in my country in this regard since its colonisation, you will permit me to recall briefly certain apprehensions regarding freedom of association already expressed at the 48th Session of the Conference by the Workers’ delegate, Mr. Auguste Walker Anguilet, National General Secretary of the African Confederation of Believing Workers.

Everyone knows of the ratification by my country of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). With regard to the new Ordinance of 17 April 1965 promulgated by the Republic of Gabon, I must say that freedom of association in my country is a reality today, but still the ordinance I have mentioned, which has the force of law and permits the dissolution of any trade union which may trouble public order, does give rise to some disquiet. However, we hope that our Government will use with due wisdom the weapon with which it has armed itself because of certain circumstances.

The word “trouble” is not clearly defined, but we are convinced that non-political strikes will not be considered as troublesome.

The I.L.O. must watch more closely than in the past over the application of ratified Conventions, particularly by the developing countries, to ensure that the relevant legislation adopted by them is in conformity with the spirit of the Conventions, and thus tends towards the achievement of the fundamental objective common to all the Conventions, namely the social progress of mankind.

The exclusion of South Africa from this institution caused satisfaction and relief, but one should not have the illusion that that is the only country where the dignity and fundamental freedoms of men are not respected.

Therefore, in order to enable the Conference to study and to discuss better in the future the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, it would be useful for the report to be more complete and detailed, particularly regarding Convention No. 87, for it is in the greatest interest of the I.L.O. itself to be vigilant in the application of that Convention.

The I.L.O. deserves the gratitude of the Gabonese workers for the inclusion in the agenda of this session of the Conference of the item on the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries.

As I said, my country has not any co-operatives at present; we had some, but they did not survive. It would be of great use to have technical assistance from the I.L.O. with a view to evaluating the fields in which co-operatives could be established advantageously and setting in motion an experiment which would prove the efficiency of the system, despite the former setbacks.

The refusal of the Conference Committee on Co-operatives to envisage the preparation of a Convention, although almost all the Workers' members of the Committee wanted this, is regrettable. However, I hope that the proposed Recommendation will achieve practical results.

The workers of Gabon are disturbed by the silence of the Government regarding the replies it was asked to give to the I.L.O. under article 39 of the Standing Orders of the Conference.

It is not too late, and I am convinced and I hope that the Government will not refuse to take this problem into consideration in the interests of the country.

Having said this, I shall not close without stressing that the workers of my country have appreciated very much the excellent work done by the I.L.O. in Report VII (2) to the Conference, and I would like particularly to quote from the Proposed Conclusions which state that "The instrument should invite the governments of developing countries to formulate and carry out a policy under which co-operatives receive aid and encouragement without losing their independence ".

The Government of Gabon has a good chance of succeeding in the application of such a policy, particularly among the peasants who, at the moment, are in the most unfavourable position of all. I think we may have high hopes in this regard.

As regards the decentralisation of the activities of the I.L.O., I have been glad to note the establishment of the Dar-es-Salaam Field Office, but I would like to express a wish that a third African centre be established and be placed in a French-speaking African country.

To conclude, I should like to express all my gratitude to the Director-General for the important Report which he has placed before us. It will, I am certain, help to enable us to adjust the standards of our Organisation to the realities of the changing world of today.

Interpretation from Spanish: Mr. DOMÍNGUEZ ACEJA (Employers' delegate, Cuba)—Mr. President, in the name of the socialist employers of my country and in my own name I should like to congratulate you on your election to the presidency of the 49th Session of the Conference. We also welcome as new Members of the International Labour Organisation the States of Yemen, Malta, Malawi and Zambia.

While these two facts fill us with satisfaction, on the contrary we deplore the absence of representatives of the German Democratic Republic, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, the heroic fighters of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, as well as the illegitimate occupancy of the seats that are properly those of the People's Republic of China. We do not wish to let this opportunity pass without expressing our deepest sympathy to the Governments and peoples of Yugoslavia and Japan on the recent mining disasters which were such a tragedy for the peoples of these two countries.

Before we refer to the Report of the Director-General, we have to raise before this assembly, as we have in previous years, the question of the discrimination practised against the socialist Employers by the Employers' group. Year after year the group of capitalist Employers have deployed various methods to try to prevent our participation in the Conference. They have not succeeded in doing this since the Appeals Board has not accepted their methods. This year the Employers of the capitalist countries tried an electoral manoeuvre aimed at taking the Appeals Board of the Conference by surprise. With the natural feeling of reserve of those who have been victims of discrimination in the past, we noted this manoeuvre, observing that as usual we were eliminated from membership of the various committees of the Conference.

We protested, and straight away the Appeals Board confirmed our status as representatives of the Employers of the socialist countries, rejecting the position of the capitalist Employers, which was basically a violation of the principles of agreements and decisions of previous years under which it is perfectly logical to recognise our position as Employers at this Conference.

This situation, which is systematically provoked year after year by the group of capitalist Employers in opposition to the decisions of the Appeals Board and the will of the Conference, must be stopped once and for all by the Organisation, since it constitutes a serious obstacle to the development of the Conference and in no way facilitates the exchange of ideas and experience, which might be advantageous to all those attending this Conference.

We would also like to call the attention of all the delegates, and particularly those who suffer under imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism, to the fact that in the years before the triumph of our socialist revolution the Employers' delegation which came in the name of the employers of Cuba was never discriminated against, but those were the days when the land did not belong to those who worked it and when our factories and undertakings belonged to North American monopolies, which laid waste our nation and usurped our representation; as our Prime Minister, Fidel Castro, has said, we were then a country with a flag, a national anthem and a coat of arms, but we had neither independence nor sovereignty.

Today the situation has changed. The Employers' delegate of socialist Cuba is the manager of an undertaking, representing the managers who in our country administer all the factories which the Revolution returned to their legitimate owners, the people of Cuba. It is in the name of the people that we administer these factories, and we are answerable to the people only. We are responsible as managers for many activities such as the employment of manpower, the cultural and vocational training of workers, the preparation of technical staff and the application of labour and social legislation modelled in many aspects on the principles of I.L.O. Conventions, of which our country has ratified 65.
This is the experience which we would like to communicate to this Conference and which certain people have endeavoured to ignore through this discrimination of which we have been the victim. This is a reality, and the Conference and the Organisation must decide once and for all on this question, so that we will not, year after year, be faced with a situation which is not in conformity with the most basic principles of the I.L.O., and which is only the idea of a small group of these employers who try to impose these ideas on the Conference and put obstacles in the path of progressive measures by the Organisation.

I should like to refer to the agenda item of the employment of women with family responsibilities. Our delegation has participated very actively in the work of the Committee in question, explaining the experience in our country as a result of the essential measures which were adopted by the Revolutionary Government in order to stimulate and facilitate the participation of women in industrial and agricultural production, and in the other activities of a political and social nature in the country.

At present women workers are trained in the same way as men, and 36 per cent. of students are women. We have 800,000 workers going through the highest primary class, and 35 per cent. of these are women. We have a wide network of nurseries and nursery schools, which not only facilitate the employment of women but also provide a high standard of child care, which is of concern to our Government. In order to simplify domestic work, we have many popular laundries and restaurants. Our former domestic servants work in other jobs and are trained and are studying in order to take on still more important jobs for the Revolution and the economy. They thus participate more and more actively in our national life, and an end has been put to the discrimination which our women formerly suffered.

As regards the conclusions of the Director-General, regarding the most important programme areas (development of human resources, social institutions, and living and working conditions), very little can be done if the rural masses are not freed from exploitation through appropriate programme measures. The I.L.O. is conscious of its obligation to deal thoroughly with questions affecting rural workers, who represent a large percentage of mankind, and has therefore determined to do its duty by placing the question of agrarian reform on the agenda for the Conference.

The character of the subject requires the adoption of energetic and thorough measures on the national and international levels. It is not possible to postpone the solution of the agrarian problem. In Latin America, for example, the situation is such that the average income of the Latin American rural population is so low as to approach the sub-human. This tragic situation requires profound changes in the agricultural structure of those countries that will affect the very basis of the existing economic, political and social systems.

We must struggle for agrarian reforms to eliminate the monopolies, to give the land to those who work it and to attack the roots of malnutrition, poverty, illiteracy and lack of culture of the rural masses.

A few foreign monopolists exploit the work of millions of peasants. The injustice is evident, and so agrarian reform cannot merely remain on paper. Agrarian reform must be the instrument which breaks up the colonial agrarian structure which has caused the evils affecting millions of Latin American peasants.

Agrarian reform on such lines is possible. When we proposed to put radical agrarian reform into effect, we met enormously powerful obstacles. There were the Yankee monopolies and our own Cuban estate owners. Then there were hunger, poverty, illiteracy, lack of culture and other evils stemming from the old agrarian structure of our country. Twenty-five per cent. of our best land was in the hands of North American companies; 13 big North American estates owned 1,173,015 hectares. It was not possible in Cuba to introduce real agrarian reform without affecting the interests of the imperialist companies, nor was it possible to fight against imperialist domination without affecting the enormous lands included in the Yankee estates. Nevertheless, despite armed aggression directed and financed by the Government of the United States, despite the economic blockade of imperialism, Cuba undertook its agrarian reform, put through its agrarian revolution, eliminating the large estates. It liquidated illiteracy and educational backwardness; it eliminated the chronic unemployment of more than 800,000 Cubans, and now such is the shortage of North American workers that more than 50,000 urban volunteers are mobilised to harvest more than 6 million tons of sugar. This is a mortal blow to the imperialists and their lackeys who prophesied the breakdown of our social economy. There is no question but that the shortage of manpower gives rise to the need to mechanise our agriculture. We are working along these lines and we can state, without fear of contradiction, that Cuba will mechanise successfully, in a short period of time, the harvesting of its sugar cane which is our main product.

We cannot conclude our statement before this assembly without condemning energetically the attitude of the Government of South Africa which maintains its inhuman policy of apartheid, to the shame of all the peoples of the world. We hope that the measures adopted by the United Nations will be put into practice so that this shameful régime will disappear, this régime which attacks the basic human rights of man. We should also like to state that it is very difficult to carry out the suggestions made by the Director-General in his Report, particularly in so far as concerns the development of human resources, when these human resources are crushed and destroyed by the aggressive and brutal conduct of North American imperialism which, in Viet-Nam, ignores the most elementary principles of international law and the universal concepts of what is right and moral, and invades, without any valid excuse, the territory of the Dominican Republic, trampling underfoot the sovereignty of its people. Under these conditions the tasks to be carried out in developing human resources . .
The PRESIDENT—I would like to remind the speaker that references to theatres of war are not allowed, and I would not like him to continue in this strain further.

Interpretation from Spanish : Mr. DOMÍNGUEZ OCEJA—The tasks to be carried out in the development of human resources will come up against the aggressive conduct of this common enemy of the peoples of the world, but we do not doubt that the peoples will conquer in the near future for the triumph of peace and prosperity for humanity.

Finally, we would like to refer to the national liberation of the peoples of Angola, Mozambique and so-called Portuguese Guinea. We express from this rostrum our solidarity with them in their fight, for their struggles and sufferings are our own.

Fatherland or death, we shall conquer!

Interpretation from Spanish : Mr. ARANGO (Government delegate, Colombia)—The Director-General's Report to this session of the Conference is a document of the greatest importance for the success of our work.

In Part II of the Report we find a summary of the activities of the I.L.O. in 1964 and some very wise reflections on the development and utilisation of human resources; on labour relations, social institutions and conditions of life and work, all of which make up a very extensive programme for the years to come.

The Director-General's Report always aims implicitly or explicitly at defending the fundamental principles on which our Organisation is based, namely that universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based on social justice, as the Preamble to the Constitution says; and the declaration regarding freedoms, rights and objectives of our Organisation set out in the Declaration of Philadelphia of 1944. I appreciate that the repetition of the same subjects from the rostrum may seem monotonous and contribute to the languid atmosphere which sometimes seems to envelop the plenary sitting, but I must run this risk because of the great importance of the principles laid down in the instruments I have mentioned.

In his 1964 Report the Director-General called attention to the danger of excessive attachment to the material aspects of development and forgetting human rights. It is a pity that this suggestion of the Director-General to set up an international network of compulsory legal provisions to protect human rights has remained on paper.

In Part II of the Report, speaking of priorities in the United Nations system and alluding to resolution 984 (XXXVI) of the Economic and Social Council, the Director-General sets out the following list: (a) development of international trade as a primary instrument of development; (b) industrial development; (c) development of human resources; (d) development of agricultural production; and (e) development of natural resources.

This enumeration is an excellent general rule, but the order in which it is to be applied may vary according to the particular situation. In my country, for instance, there is no priority between industry, agriculture and international trade. There is parallel development of them all. We export coffee only and are therefore keen to diversify our exports and to arrest the progressive worsening of the terms of trade. This important undertaking cannot be successful without real and vigorous international co-operation. This was proved at the Conference on Trade and Development held in Geneva last year.

If there is a priority, in a universal sense, it cannot be other for the developing countries than rapid advancement in the utilisation of human resources. The Director-General says that "if there is to be development, people must acquire the necessary skills, combined with fruitful social attitudes engendered through suitable institutions". This is indeed a truth rich in promises.

I agree with many observers of today when they say that the common denominator in all systems is the progress of science and technological achievements. If that is so, it is not possible to escape from the state of underdevelopment or to maintain a high level of industrialisation without the resources of science and technique. However, we have to be careful not to fall into the technocratic superstition that the scientific wand can be waved at any time by any people. Great difficulties arise when moving from one culture to another. The scientific spirit is nothing more than the initial phase of Western civilisation.

In my opinion, the developing countries are in a period of scientific and technological assimilation. This situation is shown by the growing demand for experts from the various international agencies.

The expert is a kind of a symbol of modern technique; therefore, our countries require them and they receive them with gratitude. But their advent is transitory and adventitious. If it is to effect lasting changes, the scientific spirit must sink its roots into the national soil and give forth the fruit which is characteristic of a certain society. "Technical colonialism" has been spoken of with reason in referring to the superficial condition of those countries which have reached a high grade of scientific development as compared to the countries which are at an initial stage in this regard.

Again in Part II of his Report, the Director-General says in this regard: "Integrated social and economic development, with rapid industrialisation as the central factor, is not possible without planned development and utilisation of human resources in all sectors of the economy." To this effect, the I.L.O. has developed manpower planning, an essential factor and one of great interest to the developing countries.

The last session of the Conference also approved a Convention and a Recommendation on employment policy, having due regard to regional requirements and in close co-ordination with the activities of the United Nations and other specialised agencies.

My Government has given particular attention to this question of the utilisation of human resources, because it is fundamental if we wish to emerge from the stage of underdevelopment.
The National Apprenticeship Service (S.E.N.A.) is a Colombian institution working towards the technical training of manpower. It is expanding vigorously, with the most encouraging results. At present we are preparing 40,000 workers a year in 56 different kinds of jobs. In this connection, my Government would like to thank the I.L.O., the Special Fund and the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration for their efficient help. In passing, I should like to pay tribute to the fact that this programme is adapted to the development of the Latin American countries by sponsoring and mobilising European migration of skilled manpower.

Since the phenomena to which I have referred are connected with the activities of many bodies, my delegation was pleased to see the steps the I.L.O. has taken to coordinate its efforts with other international bodies and thus to avoid, as far as possible, duplication, with its consequent disadvantages. We appreciate that this problem of co-ordination is one which is constantly growing, in so far as its importance and complexity are concerned, as the international organisations extend their range of action.

It is not possible in these few minutes to enumerate all the initiatives taken by the I.L.O., which appear in the Director-General’s Report and which of course receive the full support of our delegation. However, special attention should be given to the objectives set forth in the section “More effective co-ordination of the activities of the I.L.O.” in Chapter I of Part II of the Report which have been summarised as a greater degree of decentralisation, a grouping of Headquarters staff in larger departments and the perfecting and control of programmes. The decision to expand the Human Resources Department is a very wise move. I apologise to my distinguished listeners if I keep reverting to this question but it is because we consider it essential to the development of our countries. The plans for stimulating industrial trade, agricultural production, industrial development, the development of natural resources, financial aid and so on, will yield the hoped-for results only to the extent that the human resources in any given country will contribute effectively to the achievement of these programmes. Hence, all the developing countries have the great responsibility of tackling this very special problem in a determined and energetic manner.

Following the recommendations of this Organisation, that the population should participate more and more in governmental decisions, my Government has convened meetings of the employers’ and workers’ organisations to study together important measures of an economic and social nature. My Government not only accepts this policy, but promotes it actively and protects it, as I had the honour to state last year from this rostrum.

The question of agrarian reform is not one that can be expounded on in a few minutes. It is certain that my country is engaged in carrying out agrarian reform with unwavering determination. Our agrarian reform does not consist of a mere redistribution of the ownership of land, although this is also being done, but it implies the adoption of measures not only to increase production and to raise the standards of income and of employment. This last aspect is so urgent that it must be tackled at once, since the population pressure is now reaching maximum intensity in my country. One has only to look at the statistics. In 1800 Colombia had about two million inhabitants; in 1900 the population had risen to four million, that is, it took one hundred years to double the population. In 1938 the population approached nine million inhabitants, that is in 35 years the population had doubled; and in 1964 the population reached 17 million inhabitants, which means that it doubled itself in 26 years. I am not mistaken when I state that similar figures could be cited for other countries in Latin America, to refer to this geographical region alone.

The population explosion is a phenomenon of such magnitude that it is modifying basically all the plans for the future of governments and of international bodies.

I cannot leave this rostrum without expressing to His Excellency Haşim Raza, Secretary to the Minister of Health, Labour and Social Welfare of Pakistan, my most sincere congratulations on his election to the presidency of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. Our President’s personality and high qualification are so well known that I need not take the time now to list them for our consideration. I should also like to extend a warm greeting to the delegations of Yemen, Malta, Malawi and Zambia, countries which have recently become Members of our Organisation.

Interpretation from Arabic: Mr. HANI (Government delegate, Iraq)—It gives me great pleasure to convey to you, Mr. President, on behalf of the Government of Iraq, and on my own behalf, cordial congratulations on your election to the presidency of the 49th Session of the International Labour Conference. Our President’s personality and high qualification are so well known that I need not take the time now to list them for our consideration. I should also like to extend a warm greeting to the delegations of Yemen, Malta, Malawi and Zambia, countries which have recently become Members of our Organisation.

I am certain that, under your wise guidance and with the co-operation of all participants, this session of the Conference will be successful and achieve its objectives.

I take this opportunity to welcome in the name of Iraq the four friendly countries, namely Yemen, Zambia, Malta and Malawi, which have become Members of our Organisation with a full appreciation of its importance and with the desire to co-operate in the building of social justice by their support of the aims pursued by this Organisation.

We hope that, by the next session, the sun will have completely set on the empires which have for so long drained the wealth of other nations and exploited the efforts of other peoples, so that we shall be able to see in this half the free representatives of Angola, Mozambique, so-called Portuguese Guinea, Southern Rhodesia, Muscat, Oman, occupied Southern Yemen and Aden when the struggles of all these peoples will have put an end to the dreadful policy of oppression now exercised in their countries by colonialists. We shall then no longer hear about colonialism, with its forced labour and racial discrimination.

For the third year the Conference has been discussing the reorganisation of the I.L.O. and the effectiveness of its programmes, with a view to keeping pace with the quick progress which characterises the second half of the twentieth century.

The Report of the Director-General, in dealing with the programmes and the activities of this tripartite body, is clear and logical and expresses the concerns achieved during the last two years. There is no doubt that the adaptation of the I.L.O. programmes and their development in an integrated manner will lead to a greater and more effective influence of this Organisation on the economic and social conditions of the world than has been achieved up until now.

Nevertheless, it has been recognised by all those who intervened on these issues during the last two years that it is necessary to reconsider the structure of the Organisation and its offices, and that there is a need to increase its regional centres, with special care for the pattern of their distribution, giving them more authority to enable them to carry out their duties without hesitation. There is no doubt that the benefit obtained from such centres will be enhanced and their activity will be more effective if their staff members are recruited from among the peoples of the regions where they are situated, because this will enable them to create the drive and vitality to solve the problems with which they live and remedy the ills from which they have suffered. In this respect we would like to reiterate our belief that there should be a reconsideration of the distribution of the regional centres and of the arbitrary manner in which they have been composed, without taking into account geographical, linguistic, historical and cultural realities.

We are certain that the success of the regional centres will not be achieved unless the above-mentioned factors are taken into consideration in order to secure co-operation among the countries concerned themselves as well as between the countries and the centres.

I have pleasure in taking this opportunity to refer to the meeting of Arab Ministers of Labour held in Baghdad in January 1965 and to the Ministers' decision to establish a joint Arab labour office on a tripartite basis which will supplement the activities of the I.L.O., stand parallel to it in the Arab world, and secure the co-ordination and integration of workers and labour affairs in the Arab countries.

The decision to establish such an organisation will be an incentive for the I.L.O. to reconsider the distribution of its regional offices.

At several previous sessions of the Conference many delegations have requested a democratic composition of the membership of the Governing Body of the I.L.O., and of the membership of its committees, as well as democratic recruitment of the staff of the I.L.O.

We reiterate that the success of the Organisation, the effectiveness of its activities, and its continuity depend on following democratic principles, so that the Conference becomes the highest authority of the Organisation and the Governing Body composed according to the will of the Conference and not through procedures which are no longer in harmony with the progress and changed circumstances of the world.

In this connection I feel compelled to refer with regret to certain manoeuvres which took place during the first stage of the agrarian reforms laws and the membership of Industrial Committees. Attempts were made to keep out of these Committees countries whose economic strength and industrial contribution qualify them without any doubt for membership. These attempts were made for no valid reason but because certain countries did not like the political colour of certain others.

We refer to this question to illustrate the destructive discriminatory measures exercised by certain groups within the Organisation, measures far removed from the interests of the Organisation and the welfare of its Members and contrary to the proper conduct of its business. Such an attitude may weaken the Organisation and cause its destruction.

I have the honour to inform the Conference that since our last session my Government has enacted laws which provide for profit-sharing by workers in the industries in which they are employed. Twenty-five per cent. of the profit is allotted to the worker; a part of this profit is distributed in cash, while the rest is devoted to workers' housing and social and cultural schemes in the interests of the workers. The worker is now entitled to take part in the administration of the enterprise in which he is employed. Shortly before our arrival the workers elected their own representatives to management boards. A law now in force provides for the establishment of a workers' education institute. An I.L.O. expert now in Iraq assists and advises the Government on this scheme to ensure its success.

During the past year we opened two new vocational training centres, one for the training of technical workers in wireless and communications and the other for railways.

In the budget for the new five-year plan a sum has been allotted for the establishment, with the co-operation of the I.L.O., of an institute for vocational training. The Social Security Act passed in October 1964 provides retirement, old-age and invalidity benefits for workers, and protection for families which have lost their breadwinner.

The law thus ensures that the worker who has given his youth and energy to the building of his country will have the means of livelihood when he is unable to work.

This session of the Conference has on its agenda the question of agrarian reform. I have the pleasure of informing you that my country has been engaged in its policy of agrarian reform since 1958. The following figures will illustrate the background prior to the adoption of the agrarian reform law.

Of 8 million hectares, which constitutes the total cultivable area of Iraq, individual ownership comprised 5,850,000 hectares, of which 4 million hectares were owned by less than one-half per cent. of the population.
Five per cent. of this one-half per cent. owned 220,000 hectares of cultivable land while 164,928 persons owned the remaining area, which covered 1,850,000 hectares.

Following the introduction of agrarian reform, up to the end of March 1965, 1,850,000 hectares had been expropriated by the Government from 1,850 owners and were distributed to 248,305 families who are now working 1,750,000 hectares. During the same period an area of 520,000 hectares were distributed to 4,342 peasant families. The progress of expropriation and distribution of land will continue until the Government achieves justice in land ownership, the complete eradication of the feudal system and of the accompanying poverty and illiteracy.

Record Vote on the Resolution concerning the Adoption of the Budget for the 48th Financial Period (1966) and the Allocation of Expenses among Member States for 1966

The President—The next item on the agenda is a record vote on the resolution concerning the adoption of the budget for the 48th financial period (1966) and the allocation of expenses among member States for 1966. This resolution appears in paragraph 63 of the second report of the Finance Committee of Government Representatives.

(A record vote is taken.)

The President—The result of the record vote is as follows: 305 votes in favour, none against, with 43 abstentions. In view of this vote, the resolution concerning the adoption of the budget for the 48th financial period (1966) and the allocation of expenses among member States for 1966 is adopted.

Report of the Director-General: Discussion (cont.)

The President—We resume our discussion of the Director-General's Report.

Mr. Wagner (Employers' delegate, United States)—My compliments to you, Mr. President, and also to the Director-General. There are great opportunities for constructive action by this Conference. The Director-General's Report covers in very excellent form many areas of interest, the most important of these being: first, how to develop programmes of action to stimulate economic growth all over the world and particularly in the emerging and developing nations; second, the promotion of programmes of technical assistance to help develop skills, both managerial and labour, which must be adequate if economic growth is to be realised; and third, I would say, is the necessity for the improvement of the environment in which labour lives and works all over the world.

I had fully intended to spend the time allotted to me in a broad discussion of these matters in which all delegates should be interested. It has been my privilege for most of the past five years to conduct the operation of an enterprise which, with its own capital, has been engaged in creating and managing other successful enterprises.

These have added to the economic welfare of my country and have created thousands of job opportunities for labour and supervisory operating personnel. These enterprises include construction, shipping, manufacturing, the extractive industries, banking and many others. I do not mention these to boast but rather to indicate to you that, based upon these experiences and under proper conditions here, it might have been possible for me, over the past six years, to contribute more constructively to your deliberations.

