Occupational safety and health

Afghanistan

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes the brief information provided by the Government concerning the new Labour Code, and notes with satisfaction that sections 10 (general requirement to provide a safe and healthy working environment) and 107 (requirement to use safety equipment to prevent occupational diseases) provide a basis for further regulation of the issues covered by this Convention. It also notes the reference to section 107, paragraphs 1 and 2, which provides that lists of occupational diseases and arrangements for the payment of damages for disabilities and health injuries are to be drawn up. While recognizing the continued challenges and difficulties the new authorities are faced with, the Committee is encouraged by the efforts made by the Government to progress towards the assumption of full responsibility in regard to the Convention and taking the necessary action to bring national laws and regulations into conformity with the occupational safety and health standards contained, inter alia, in the present Convention. The Committee draws the Government's particular attention to the need for setting up a system for determining carcinogenic substances and agents used at workplaces in the country and which may require the introduction of prohibitions or be made subject to national authorization or control, in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress achieved in this respect as well as regards further efforts made to give effect to this Convention, including any regulations adopted under sections 10 and 107 of the new Labour Code.

Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not include a response to the observations submitted by the All Afghanistan Federation of Trade Unions (AAFTU), which the Committee referred to in its 2006 and 2007 comments on the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the points raised in the abovementioned observations.

Algeria

Article 14 of the Convention. Suitable seats for workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that labour legislation is currently being reviewed, and that the obligation to provide suitable and sufficient seats for workers has been taken into consideration in the provisions of the future Labour Code. The Committee once again requests the Government to adopt, as soon as possible, appropriate measures in law and practice to ensure that all workers covered by the Convention have sufficient and suitable seats, and the possibility of using them, and to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Article 18. Protection against noise and vibrations. The Committee notes the reference by the Government to sections 15 and 16 of Executive Decree No. 91/05 of 19 January 1991 which states the obligations of employers to reduce the impact of noise on workers' health, and where this is not possible, to provide such workers with personal protective equipment. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government adopt, as soon as possible, appropriate measures in law and practice to give effect to the provisions of this Article with regards to vibrations, and to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information on this matter. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, for example by supplying extracts from inspection reports and, where such information exists, the number of workers covered by the legislation; the number and nature of the contraventions reported; and the number, nature and cause of accidents reported.

Belize

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1983)

Article 3, paragraph 1, and Article 6, paragraph 2, of the Convention. Maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiation. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's response indicating that, on 13 March 2009, the Labour Advisory Board was re-activated and that its main duty is the revision of national labour legislation. The Committee notes that the Ministry is currently in the process of identifying a consultant that will work with the Labour Advisory Board to conduct the revision of the legislation, and that comments made by the Committee will be submitted to the Board. The Committee hopes that in the course of the ongoing revision of national labour legislation due account will be taken to the exposure limits adopted by the International Commission on Radiological Protection in its 1990 Recommendations, to which the Committee referred in its 1992 general observation under the Convention, in order to ensure the effective protection of workers exposed to ionizing radiation in the course of their work.

Article 14. Alternative employment or other measures offered for maintaining income where continued assignment to work involving exposure is medically inadvisable. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that there is no provision in the Labour Act for the transfer of pregnant women from work involving exposure to ionizing radiation to another job. The Committee notes, however, the Government's statement that the National Occupational Safety and Health Policy, adopted by the Cabinet on 9 November 2004, can provide a suitable framework for drafting legislation that could make provision for such transfer and that legislation is drafted in consultation with the Labour Advisory Board. The Committee hopes that in the course of the ongoing revision of the national labour legislation, due account will be taken to the need to ensure that suitable alternative employment opportunities, not involving exposure to ionizing radiations, be provided for workers having accumulated an effective dose beyond which detriment to their health considered unacceptable is to arise, as well as for pregnant women, who otherwise may be faced with the dilemma that protecting their health means losing their employment.

Occupational exposure during an emergency. The Committee notes that there is currently no provision in the Labour Act laying out the circumstances in which exceptional exposure is authorized. With reference to paragraphs 16 to 27 and 35(c) of its 1992 general observation under the Convention, and paragraphs V.27 and V.30 of the International Basic Safety Standards issued in 1994, the Committee requests the Government, in the course of the ongoing revision of the national labour legislation, to take due account of the need to determine circumstances in which exceptional exposure is authorized, and to make protection as effective as possible against accidents and during emergency operations, in particular with regard to the design and protective features of the workplace and the equipment, and the development of emergency intervention techniques, the use of which in emergency situations would enable the exposure of individuals to ionizing radiations to be avoided.

Bolivia

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the adoption of Supreme Decree No. 26171 of 4 May 2001, supplementing the Environmental Regulations for the hydrocarbon sector issued by Supreme Decree No. 24335 of 19 July 1996. The Committee notes that the new Decree covers activities and factors liable to affect the environment in general, that is to contaminate the air, water in all its states, soil and subsoil, in excess of the permissible limits established, but that it does not contain measures respecting the protection of workers against risks of poisoning deriving from their exposure to benzene. The Committee notes that this report does not contain sufficient information in reply to its previous comments, and recalls that from its first comments in the 1980s the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the necessity to adopt measures to give effect to many substantive provisions of the Convention, in accordance with Article 14 of the Convention. The Committee notes that such measures have not been adopted and urges the Government to ensure that they are adopted in the near future by the competent authorities, including the government body referred to above, in relation to the following provisions of the Convention: Article 1(b) (adoption of protective measures in relation to products the benzene content of which exceeds 1 per cent by volume); Article 2 (use of harmless or less harmful substitute products); Article 4, paragraphs 1 and 2 (prohibition of the use of benzene and products containing benzene as a solvent or diluent in certain work processes, except where the process is carried out in an enclosed system or where there are other equally safe methods of work); Article 6, paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 (measures taken to prevent the exposure of workers to benzene; to ensure that, in any case, workers are not exposed to a concentration of benzene in the air exceeding a ceiling value of 25 parts per million; and to issue directions on carrying out the measurement of the concentration of benzene in the air of places of work); Article 7, paragraph 1 (the carrying out of work processes involving the use of benzene or of products containing benzene in an enclosed system); and Article 11, paragraphs 1 and 2 (prohibition to employ pregnant women, nursing mothers and young persons under 18 years of age in work processes involving exposure to benzene or products containing benzene).

Article 9. Pre-employment and subsequent medical examinations. The Committee refers to its previous comments concerning draft regulations respecting medical services covering, among other matters, the need to perform medical examinations prior to employment and during and after employment. As its latest report does not contain information in this respect, the Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report whether, in the meantime, the above regulations respecting medical services have been adopted and, if so, it requests the Government to indicate whether the provisions contained in the draft regulations have been established in such a manner as to ensure that medical examinations are carried out taking into account this Article of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the above text.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Brazil

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1966)

Legislation. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption by the National Committee on Nuclear Energy (CNEN) of standard NN 3.01/2005 which, inter alia, establishes exposure limits which are in line with those recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) for workers who are directly engaged in radiation work, pregnant workers and in emergency situations to which the Committee referred in its 1992 general observation on the Convention in relation to Articles 3(1), and 6(2), of the Convention.

Article 1. Competent authority. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee understands that Decree No. 2210/97 continues to be fundamental with regard to the distribution of competencies in relation to the Convention. This Decree creates the Protection System for the Brazilian Nuclear Programme (SIPRON) which establishes the functions and relationship of the CNEN, the Coordinating Committee for Protection concerning the Brazilian Nuclear Programme (COPRON), the Ministry of Labour and the Jorge Duprat Figueiredo Foundation of Occupational Safety and Medicine (FUNDACENTRO) in the drafting of standards on radiation protection. In this regard, the Government indicates that the body responsible in Brazil for standards on radiation protection is the CNEN, which is linked to the Ministry of Science and Technology, and that the Ministry of Labour plays a complementary role. The Committee requests the Government to provide: (a) information on the manner in which the competent authority consults representatives of employers and workers when drafting such standards in accordance with this Article of the Convention, and (b) information on the consultations held during the period covered by the next report.

Articles 3(1) and 6(2). Pregnant workers. The Committee notes that according to paragraph 5.4.2.2 of the standard mentioned, workers exposed to radiation in the course of their work must undergo monitoring from the declaration, and for the remaining duration, of their pregnancy, to the extent necessary to ensure that the foetus does not receive an effective dose superior to 1 mSv. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that all pregnancies are declared without delay, as indicated in its 1992 general observation on the Convention, and on any protection measures taken with regard to women of child-bearing age.

Article 14. Alternative employment or other measures offered for maintaining income where continued assignment to work involving exposure is medically inadvisable. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the steps taken or envisaged, with a view to ensuring effective protection of workers, to provide alternative employment to workers who have accumulated exposure beyond which an unacceptable risk of detriment could occur. The Committee notes that the activities of the Department of Safety and Health relate to the prevention of occupational accidents and health hazards but also notes that these activities do not include matters such as offering alternative employment to workers exposed to radiation or other harmful agents beyond the authorized limits. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that the indication that the Department of Safety and Health is not competent to deal with alternative employment is irrelevant since the obligations assumed when ratifying the Convention are obligations of the Government and not of a particular ministry or department. Recalling paragraphs 28–34 and 35(d) of its 1992 general observation on the Convention and the Basic Safety Standards for Radiation Protection, which recommend establishing the possibility of alternative employment or social security measures for all workers who have accumulated an effective dose beyond which detriment considered unacceptable may occur, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to that end.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes that the Government provides very little of the information requested by the Committee on the application of the Convention in practice and that it indicates that it is unable to provide such information since it is beyond the remit of the Ministry of Labour. The Committee considers that there is a series of standards and institutions in Brazil which meet the requirements of the Convention but that it is not possible to obtain a comprehensive picture concerning the application of the Convention if it does not have information on its application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the protection measures to ensure that the exposure limits established in standard NN 3.01/2005 are not exceeded in practice. Furthermore, it requests the Government to make an effort to obtain from the relevant institutions the information requested by the Committee in the last paragraph of its previous observation and to provide it together with any information available on the application of the Convention in practice, including, for example, a copy of the radiological protection plans under standard NN 3.01/2005, as well as information on their application in practice. Furthermore, referring to its comment on the application of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), in particular concerning the difficulties encountered by the labour inspectorate in enforcing the legislation in certain companies, the need for a coherent policy and the coordination between the various authorities, the Committee requests the Government to take these aspects into account with regard to Convention No. 115 and to provide information on this matter.

The Committee notes the Government's report, received on 31 October 2008, with its reply to the comments made by the Workers' Union of the Road Transport of Liquids and Gases, Oil Derivatives and Chemical Products of the State of Rio Grande do Sul (SINDILÍQUIDA/RS), with the attachments referred to in the Committee's comments under the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155).

The Committee notes that SINDILÍQUIDA/RS's allegations concern the application of the Convention more specifically in the petrochemical sector. These allegations relate to the application of the following Articles of the Convention:

- Article 5 of the Convention. Effective protection of workers exposed to benzene in the petrochemical sector. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS indicates that since 2003 and up to the present time, the enterprises Petrobras Distribuidora SA, Shell Brazil and Distribuidora de Produtos de Petróleo IPIRANGA S/A have not adopted appropriate measures to ensure the effective protection of workers exposed to benzene, despite the instructions of the Ministry of Labour and a conviction of Petrobras in the labour courts. It affirms that in the present case there is a deliberate intention not to comply with clear legal provisions and the orders of the labour delegation and the courts. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS states that certain products handled by workers in the sector contain over 3 per cent of benzene and that the workers are exposed to serious risks, with particular reference to “driver-operators”, in view of the absence of prevention and protection measures in the sector. In general, these driver-operators are not employees of the enterprises concerned, as their services are engaged under different forms, and they perform the tasks of loading and unloading without protection or supervision of any type by the approved employees of these enterprises.

- Article 6. Measures taken to prevent the escape of benzene vapour into the air of places of employment. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS indicates that multinational enterprises in the sector do not take the technical measures for the implementation of the Article and adopt a confrontational attitude in relation to the labour inspectorate and the courts. According to the report of the labour inspectorate attached to the communication, Petrobras is not taking the measures required under this Article in relation to driver-operators, and Shell has reached the point of denying any responsibility in relation to these workers. The report adds that the Shell enterprise depends almost solely on appropriate human behaviour for the prevention of accidents in inflammable environments, in contradiction with international trends in this respect.
- Article 8. Adequate means of personal protection against the risk of absorbing benzene through the skin and the risk of inhaling benzene vapour. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS indicates that enterprises in the sector do not give effect to this Article and, according to the report of the labour inspectorate, driver-operators do not even use respiratory masks and, in certain enterprises, they do not even know what that means. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS states that the administration has not adopted measures for the rapid imposition of penalties in such cases, and that the respective procedures can drag on indefinitely without any solution being found.
- Article 9. Regular medical examinations and exemptions. According to the communication referred to above, medical examinations are not undertaken of workers exposed to benzene, particularly in the case of driver-operators. The union organization refers to the conclusions of the labour inspection report referred to previously.
- Article 14(c). Labour inspection. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS indicates that despite the existence of an appropriate inspection system to supervise the application of the provisions of the Convention, the notifications and orders that it issues, and the penalties imposed, have not resolved the major problems that arise, certain of which constitute serious and imminent risks to health. The trade union considers that the existence of supervision that is no more than “a legal fiction” amounts to a failure to give effect to Article 14.

The Committee notes that the reports of the labour delegation submitted by SINDILÍQUIDA/RS confirm that enterprises in the sector do not give effect in practice to the legislation implementing the Convention. With regard to Petrobras, the report of the regional labour delegation indicates that no effect has been given to the requirement to formulate and implement the various prevention and monitoring programmes for occupational exposure to chemicals that are envisaged in the legislation, and that driver-operators do not use protective equipment, even though it is recognized that they are in contact with carcinogenic substances. The report of the labour delegation concludes that no effect has been given to the court ruling of 2003, and that the situation has deteriorated. The Committee considers that the conclusions of the report on Shell are a cause for even greater concern, as they indicate that the enterprise is persevering with their policy of excluding driver-operators from the process of the management and control of risks by transferring these responsibilities to third parties. The Committee further observes that, in its reply, the Government indicates that SINDILÍQUIDA/RS represents workers who are engaged in the road transport of liquids or gases that are hazardous and inflammable, including benzene, and participates in the Benzene Commission of Rio Grande do Sul. It refers to the various inspections carried out in areas where these workers operate, and principally in terminals of the petrochemical industry and refineries, which have resulted in various reports being drawn up indicating repeated violations. Some of these reports have been sent to the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Labour Matters and have provided the basis for public civil actions in the courts that are still ongoing. However, certain inspection activities carried out by the Ministry of Labour have been interrupted by court injunctions suspending them as a preliminary measure. The Government adds that, despite these circumstances, it has continued its efforts and it should be noted that all the supervisory measures taken have been intended to achieve compliance with the provisions of the Convention. The Government affirms that the labour inspectorate will continue to supervise the application of the Convention in the sector. The Committee observes that the Government does not deny the failure to give effect to the above Articles of the Convention in the present case. It also notes that the labour delegation of Rio Grande do Sul appears to have followed the situation carefully. Violations have been reported, civil action taken against the enterprises and reports drawn up on the effect given to the recommendations made by the courts. The follow-up reports conclude however that none of the recommendations have been implemented and that the situation has deteriorated. The Committee therefore requests the Government to:

- examine the causes of this situation and to undertake an assessment of the reasons why, in this case, its efforts have not resulted in an improvement in the situations described in practice;

- work with the social partners to seek solutions with a view to drawing up proposals for action to find a way out of this impasse, which has occurred despite the efforts of the labour inspectorate;
- take this situation into account when formulating the national policy envisaged by Convention No. 155, in consultation with the social partners;
- make efforts to ensure that effect is given in practice to Articles 5, 6, 8 and 9 of the Convention in the present case and in all sectors engaged in activities resulting in the exposure of workers to benzene; and
- provide detailed information on the measures adopted and the results obtained in practice. In particular, the Committee requests it to provide detailed information of developments in the situation in practice of driver-operators in the Rio Grande do Sul region.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the Government's report of 31 October 2008, containing a reply to the comments made by the Committee and those made by the Workers' Union of the Road Transport of Liquids and Gases, Oil Derivatives and Chemical Products of Rio Grande do Sul (SINDILÍQUIDA/RS), including the attachments referred to in the Committee's comments under the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155).

Article 1 of the Convention. Carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited or made subject to authorization or control. The Committee notes that Decree No. 6042/07 contains a list of substances which causes diseases and occupational risk factors in which a series of substances are recognized as being carcinogenic. According to the report, by means of this Decree the Ministry of Social Security established a new mechanism to determine the link between health impairments and the work performed, and whether or not the enterprise has provided notification of the incident. The existence of links is recognized at three sequential and hierarchical stages: (1) the link is established between a substance and a health impairment when it is included in the list annexed to Decree No. 6042/07 and is known as a technical-occupational or work-related link; (2) the link is established when the worker suffers a health impairment related to the economic activities mentioned in the Decree, except when an expert from the Ministry issues a reasoned opinion setting aside the existence of the link, which is known as a technical-epidemiological prospective link; and (3) the link is established by an expert from the Social Security Department following an examination, even where the economic activity is not listed in the Decree, which is known as a technical individual link. The Government also refers to a series of recent developments regarding legislative and technical standards, such as the adoption of Act No. 12684 of the State of São Paulo prohibiting chrysotile asbestos and the discussion in the Standing Joint Tripartite Commission concerning Regulatory Standard No. 15 on ionizing radiations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effect given in practice to this mechanism for the establishment of occupational links envisaged in Decree No. 6042/07. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the list of carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited or made subject to authorization or control is periodically updated, and to keep it informed of any further developments in this respect.

Articles 4 and 5. Information on carcinogenic substances and agents and on the measures to be taken, to ensure that workers benefit from medical examinations and supervision of their state of health. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS refers to the situation of workers in the petroleum sector in Rio Grande do Sul, and particularly to driver-operators. It affirms that in practice effect is not given to these provisions of the Convention, as information is not provided on the hazards of carcinogenic products, such as benzene. It adds that in innumerable cases appropriate medical examinations are not carried out to assess the exposure and state of health of workers in relation to occupational risks. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS affirms that it is not possible to document all the cases in Brazil where there is a breach of these rules, but that through the report of the labour delegation of Rio Grande do Sul evidence is provided on a few specific cases such as violations by Petrobras, Shell and other enterprises in the sector. It concludes that such situations occur throughout the country and that action is not taken to bring an end to these abuses involving serious and often irreversible exposure. In its reply, the Government indicates that in Brazil the relevant Standards are NR-01, NR-07 establishing the Occupational Health Medical Programme and NR-09 on the Environmental Risks Programme. The Committee observes that the matter at issue is the effect given in practice to these provisions. The Committee, on the one hand, welcomes the quality and exhaustive nature of the reports of the labour delegation and, on the other, observes that these efforts have not yet succeeded in securing effective compliance with the legislation in practice. Nevertheless, these reports provide a useful assessment of the situation in practice. The Committee urges the Government to increase its efforts to take all necessary measures to give full effect to these provisions of the Convention and requests it to provide detailed information on measures taken and results achieved in practice, particularly in relation to the workers and sectors referred to above.

Article 6(c), and Part IV of the report form. Labour inspection services. The Government indicates that when enterprises are found to be systematically failing to comply with the legislation, the Ministry of Labour and the Office of the Public Prosecutor for Labour Matters can take civil action, in addition to increasing supervision carried out by the labour inspection services. Bearing in mind the communication of SINDILÍQUIDA/RS, which indicates that neither the actions of the labour inspectorate nor the civil actions taken have succeeded in ensuring that the enterprises at issue comply with the legislation giving effect to the Convention, the Committee invites the Government to take all relevant measures to achieve progress in practice in such serious matters as exposure to carcinogenic substances.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes the Government's report of 31 October 2008, containing replies to certain points of the Committee's previous comments and the observations by the Workers' Union of the Road Transport of Liquids and Gases, Oil Derivatives and Chemical Products of the State of Rio Grande do Sul (SINDILÍQUIDA/RS), including the attachments referred to in the Committee's comments under the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155).

Article 5, paragraph 4, of the Convention. Right of workers' representatives to accompany labour inspectors on their supervisory visits. With reference to its previous comments in which it noted a communication made by various organizations of public employees (SERGIPE), alleging that the regional delegate of the Ministry of Labour was prohibiting inspectors from being accompanied by workers' representatives, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, this situation has now been resolved. The Committee notes the allegation by SINDILÍQUIDA/RS that, in violation of this provision of the Convention, there is an attitude of non-collaboration and flagrant disrespect of workers and their representative organizations in most enterprises. SINDILÍQUIDA/RS affirms that its current President-elect, who signed the communication, is not able to accompany inspectors in their work. It further notes that, according to the Government, under the terms of section 1.7 of Regulatory Standard NR-01 of Order No. 3214/78, as amended by Order No. 03 of 7 February 1988, employers are required to allow workers' representatives to accompany them in supervision of occupational safety and health laws and regulations. The Government adds that it has no knowledge of any cases of obstructions of this right related to inspection in the workplace. The Committee considers that the Government does not respond to the issues raised in this respect. The Committee therefore invites the Government to take the necessary measures to give full effect in practice to this Article of the Convention, including measures to ensure that representatives of SINDILÍQUIDA/RS can accompany labour inspectors in their supervisory visits.

Article 6, paragraphs 1 and 2. Required collaboration where several employers undertake activities simultaneously. The Committee notes that, according to SINDILÍQUIDA/RS, many employers, encouraged by the failure of the authorities to take action, do not feel responsible for the application of the Convention. The union adds that employers consider themselves exempt from the need to adopt measures to give effect to the Convention on the pretext of the contracting out of their activities, or in other words the transfer of the responsibility to other employers. It adds that, in practice, when there is more than one employer, instead of collaborating with a view to the application of the Convention, nobody takes on responsibility for anything, which is prejudicial to the workers. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, contracting out or subcontracting is a very topical and significant issue in industrial relations and in the increasing precariousness of conditions of employment. The Government adds that the privatization processes of major enterprises, which were formally public, have been responsible, especially over the past ten to 15 years, for major changes in the relations between enterprises, which have begun to be reflected in the legislation. However, various issues related to health and safety, such as medical examinations and the supervision of environmental risks, are under the responsibility of the Internal Commission for Accident Prevention (CIPA) and the Specialized Occupational Engineering, Safety and Medicine Services (SESMT), among other institutions. The Committee notes that various regulatory standards refer to this issue (NRs 04, specialized services – as amended by NR 17 –; 05, accidents; 07, medical examinations; 09, environment-related hazards; 18, construction; 22, mining; and 24, workplaces). It adds that section 4.5.3 of NR 04, as amended by NR 17, provides for the possibility of establishing joint SESMTs, although this is optional and subject to certain conditions, which would appear to indicate that the establishment of SESMTs in the presence of several employers is not compulsory. The Committee notes the union's reference to the situation of driver-operators for Petrobras, Shell and other enterprises in the refining sector of Rio Grande do Sul in respect of whom, according to the union, none of the employers take responsibility for the application of the Convention. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that this Article establishes the requirement that whenever several employers undertake activities simultaneously at one workplace, they shall have the duty to collaborate in order to comply with the prescribed measures and that "in appropriate circumstances, the competent authority shall prescribe general procedures for this collaboration". Accordingly, collaboration between employers is not optional, but a requirement. The Committee therefore requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to give full effect to this Article in practice, and in particular to re-examine the provisions requiring collaboration between the various employers involved in undertaking activities, including in refineries, with a view to securing compliance with the requirement of collaboration in practice, and to provide information on this matter. The Committee also requests the Government to provide specific information on the application of this Article in the case of the driver-operators to which SINDILÍQUIDA/RS refers.

With regard to its previous comments on the working conditions in the various branches of the telecommunications company TELEMAR, the Government indicates that the adoption of Regulatory Standard NR 17, of 1 August 2007, amended the wording of NR 04. Noting that the latter NR includes section 4.5.3 respecting the apparently optional establishment of SESMTs, the Committee reiterates its comments made in the previous paragraph. The Committee also once again requests information on the application in practice of the measures adopted to address the deterioration of safety and health conditions in the telecommunications industry, including information on the establishment of SESMTs, the measures adopted to secure in practice the collaboration envisaged in Article 6 of the Convention, and the results achieved in the telecommunications sector.

*Articles 10, 13 and 16. Personal protective equipment, the requirement to provide information, appropriate penalties and appropriate inspection. SINDILQUIDA/RS alleges that in various cases personal protective equipment is not supplied, workers are not provided with information on occupational hazards and that, even though the labour inspectorate provides guidance, issues notifications and reports situations, this does not imply a change of attitude. The Committee refers to its comments under Convention No. 155 and hopes that, in collaboration with the social partners, the Government will develop an effective strategy, including the provision of appropriate penalties, to ensure that the measures adopted by the labour inspectorate are given effect in practice and it requests the Government to provide information on this matter.

*Article 12. Notification to the competent authority of the use of processes, substances, machinery and equipment which involve the exposure of workers to occupational hazards in the working environment due to air pollution. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the occupational exposure limit values adopted by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists (ACGIH) are applied, or those established by collective bargaining where they are more rigorous, and it notes the standards for their implementation annexed to the report. The Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the effect given in law and practice to the obligation of notification as set out in this Article.

The Committee notes the Government's report of 31 October 2008, the observations of the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) of 28 August 2008, the observations of the Union of Forensic Experts of the State of São Paulo (SINPCRESP) of 19 September 2008 and the Government's reply to these observations. The Committee also notes that the elements provided by the Government in relation to the observations made by the Workers' Union of the Road Transport of Liquids and Gases, Oil Derivatives and Chemical Products of the State of Rio Grande do Sul (SINDILQUIDA/RS), which were forwarded to the Government on 8 November 2007, do not address the specific concerns raised in the observations. The latter comments were accompanied by the following attachments: a report of the regional labour delegation of Rio Grande do Sul, dated 31 July 2007, on the implementation of the orders issued in Ruling No. 00075-2003-024-04-00-0 of the 24th labour jurisdiction of Porto Alegre; two reports on similar issues relating to the enterprise Shell Brazil from 2004 and 2005; and newspaper articles on the increase in accidents affecting the road transporters of liquids and gases. In addition, the Committee notes that observations by the Federal District Teachers' Union (SINPRO-DF) on the application of some of the articles of the Convention were received by the Office on 1 December 2009. The Committee invites the Government to submit any comments it deems relevant in response to these observations with its next regular report, due in 2010.

*Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Application of the Convention to all branches of economic activity and to all the workers in the branches concerned. The CUT indicates that informal work is a persistent problem, that a large number of workers are not declared and that, accordingly, policies are not adapted to the real number of workers who should normally be covered by them. According to the CUT, in the metropolitan areas of Recife/PE, Salvador/BA, Belo Horizonte/MG, Rio de Janeiro/RJ, São Paulo/SP and Porto Alegre/RS, the active population amounts to 23,576,000 persons, of whom 21,668,000 are considered to be in work, of whom only 9,494,000 possess a card giving entitlement to employment injury insurance (SAT). The CUT indicates that undeclared work prevents the formulation of policies for the prevention of accidents which take into the account the real number of workers concerned. The Committee notes that in its report the Government does respond fully to the Committee's request for information made in 2007 concerning the progress achieved by the Government to increase occupational safety and health protection for all Brazilian workers. The Government indicates, however, that the labour inspectorate plays an important role in the fight against undeclared work. For example in 2008, 668,857 employment relationships were regularized after intervention by the labour inspectorate. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures adopted, in consultation with the social partners, to extend protection in relation to occupational safety and health to all Brazilian workers, taking due account of the CUT's observations.

Articles 4 and 8. Formulation of a coherent national policy and consultation with the representative organizations of employers and workers for the formulation, implementation and periodical review of the national policy on occupational safety and health. The Committee notes that, according to the conclusions of the report of the regional labour delegation of Rio Grande do Sul, dated 31 July 2007, concerning Petrobras, none of the six following requirements established by the court have been given effect by the enterprise: (1) the obligation to ensure that drivers of service-providing enterprises do not undertake loading and unloading; (2) the obligation to prepare and implement audio prevention and protection programmes; (3) the obligation to prepare and implement a prevention and supervision programme for occupational exposure to chemicals, including respiratory protection programmes; (4) the obligation to implement numerous measures for the prevention of employment accidents, including vocational training; (5) the obligation to prepare and apply a system of integrated occupational risk management based on the programmes envisaged in the Safety and Health Regulatory Standards of the Ministry of Labour, including in service-providing enterprises; and (6) the obligation to carry out biological tests of drivers, particularly where there is a risk of developing work-related diseases. An opinion issued by the labour delegation referring to the Shell enterprise reaches similar conclusions. The Committee notes that the Government confines itself to recalling the existing Regulatory Standards, but it recalls that Article 4 establishes, among other requirements, the obligation to implement the policy. Furthermore, under the terms of Article 8, governments are under the obligation to take such steps as may be necessary to give effect to Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee further notes that the new information provided by the Government in its latest report is confined to indicating that the proposed national policy has been submitted for public consultation and should be re-examined by the Tripartite Inter-Ministerial Occupational Safety and Health Commission (CTSST), established by Inter-Ministerial Order No. 152 of 13 May 2008. In its 2008 observations, the CUT emphasizes that, following the public consultation on the paper “National Occupational Safety and Health Policy (PNSST)” little progress has been made in the adoption of the policy. In this context, the Committee draws the Government’s attention to the 2009 General Survey on occupational safety and health (the General Survey), with particular reference to its paragraphs 53–89. The Committee invites the Government to take measures as rapidly as possible to finalize the process of the adoption, implementation and review of a coherent national policy on occupational safety and health, as required by Article 4 of the Convention, and to provide detailed information in its next report on the progress achieved. It also requests it to take the necessary measures for the implementation of the national policy, in accordance with Articles 4 and 8 of the Convention, and to provide detailed information on this subject, including on the petrochemicals sector in Rio Grande do Sul.

Article 9, paragraph 1. An adequate and appropriate system of labour inspection to secure the enforcement of laws and regulations concerning occupational safety and health. Comments made by SINDILQUIDA/RS. The petrochemical industry. The Committee notes that the Government has not fully replied to the comments made by SINDILQUIDA/RS. According to SINDILQUIDA/RS, the labour inspectorate has been unable to enforce, despite the efforts made, the following Articles of the Convention: Article 16(3): The union indicates that driver-loaders have no protective equipment; Article 17: The union indicates that, in practice, simultaneous operations by several employers result in none of them taking responsibility for the application of safety and health standards to driver-loaders; Article 18: Measures to deal with emergencies and first-aid arrangements; Article 19(d): Training of workers and their representatives; and Article 20: Cooperation between management and workers. The Committee notes with particular attention the opinion of the regional labour delegation of Rio Grande do Sul dated 31 July 2007, in which it appears that Petrobras, despite the orders issued by the labour inspectorate, the penalties and even the conviction in a court of law, has not taken the necessary measures to improve the safety and health situation. A similar opinion was issued with regard to the Shell enterprise. The Committee notes that, despite the vigilance of the labour inspection services of Rio Grande do Sul to enforce the relevant legislation, enterprises persist in failing to give effect to the laws and requirements relating to occupational safety and health and that this raises a doubt as to whether the inspection system is appropriate and sufficient. The Committee requests the Government to provide its assessment of the effectiveness of the means that exist to address these issues, invites it to continue making efforts to ensure that the enterprises concerned give effect to safety and health standards and requests it to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged. It once again requests the Government to provide its comments in reply to the communication from SINDILQUIDA/RS.

Article 11(c). Occupational accidents and diseases – Notification procedures and annual statistics. The CUT indicates that undeclared work not only hampers the formulation of accident prevention policies that take into account the real number of workers, but that this situation also has an impact on employment accident statistics, as undeclared workers do not appear in the records. In this respect, the CUT provides information supplied by, inter alia, the Wood Industry Workers’ Confederation (CONTICOM), which demonstrates that all occupational accidents and diseases are not properly notified. With reference to subcontracting, the Committee notes the information communicated by the CUT from the Union of Oil Workers of Minas Gerais (SINDIPETR/MG), according to which it is common practice for the number of accidents officially recorded to be significantly lower than the number that actually occur, and the Union of Oil Workers of Ceará (SINDIPETRO/CE), according to which workers covered by subcontracting arrangements are the most vulnerable. The CUT indicates that this problem affects the whole petroleum sector, including Petrobras. It also indicates the problem of inadequate criteria for notification and gives the example of the enterprise Arcelor-Mittal, with the indication that the deaths of six metallurgical workers in Espírito Santo were not registered. In Minas Gerais, only deaths occurring at the workplace are declared, while those that occur in ambulances or in hospitals are not taken into account. The CUT concludes that, despite the praiseworthy attempt by the Government to adopt and endeavour to implement a safety and health policy, the measures taken have not proven to be effective and these difficulties should incite the Government to take adequate measures for the effective implementation of the Convention. The CUT considers that technical assistance from the Office is essential for this purpose. In reply, the Government indicates that the labour inspectorate has prepared a plan making the investigation of occupational accidents the priority for 2009 and including, among other action, a review of the procedures for the identification of critical sectors. The Government adds that, among the measures adopted to address this problem, the Ministry of Labour has promoted the use of more effective techniques for the analysis of accidents through the publication of a paper on approaches to the analysis of occupational accidents, which is available on the web site of the Ministry of Labour. In this context, the Committee also draws the Government’s attention to the General Survey referred to above, and particularly its paragraphs 135 to 137 and to 296, as well as paragraph 209(b) and (i) of the conclusions adopted following the discussion of the General Survey at the Conference. The Committee welcomes the Government's decision to make the analysis of employment accidents a priority for 2009. It invites the Government to take into account the problems indicated by the CUT and to provide detailed information on the measures adopted or envisaged to address the problems in this area, including the construction, petrochemicals and metallurgy sectors. The Committee reminds the Government that it may request the technical assistance from the Office, if it considers it necessary.

Article 15. Coordination between the various authorities. Communication of the SINPCRESP. The Committee notes that the observations by the SINPCRESP refer to the occupational safety and health conditions of criminology experts of the State of São Paulo. The latter are auxiliaries in the criminal justice system, with highly specialized technical knowledge. The SINPCRESP describes in detail their conditions of work and alleges that they work in premises that are not suitable, without protective equipment, even though they use hazardous products and work on average 13 hours a day. It adds that the safety and health conditions are deplorable and that preventative action is not taken. As employees of the State of São Paulo, they are covered by general legislation and that of the State of São Paulo, but are not covered by the relevant regulations of the Ministry of Labour. According to an information note of the Ministry of Labour entitled "Information/SRT No. 96/2008" of 30 June 2008, the federal Government cannot intervene in the above case due to the autonomy of the federal states by virtue of which they formulate their own policies with respect to their relations with their public officials. Nevertheless, according to the same note, the Ministry of Labour can propose measures to reinforce the social partners and request a technical opinion from the Office of the Regional Superintendent of Labour of São Paulo on the safety and health conditions of criminology experts. This technical opinion would provide a basis for the Ministry of Labour to request the competent authorities in São Paulo to improve the working conditions of the experts. The Committee also notes that, under the terms of section 5 of Decree No. 5.961 of 2006, agreements may be concluded with, among other parties, the States of the Union for the implementation of the activities entrusted to the Integrated Occupational Health System for Federal Employees (SISOSP). The Committee considers that, in addition to the specific safety and health situation of criminology experts in the State of São Paulo, this communication raises an issue of a general nature relating to the application of the Convention in the various States and public administrations. The Committee recalls that it examined a similar issue in its 2007 observation following a communication from the Federal Union of Public Service Workers of the State of Goiás (SINDSEP-GO), according to which initiatives to improve occupational safety and health in the public sector have only had a limited impact due, among other factors, to the division of responsibilities between the Federal Government and local government. These cases appear to bear witness to a problem in the application of the Convention in the public sector in the various states of Brazil. Although aware of the difficulties that the application of the Convention can raise in federal states, the Committee emphasizes that the Government is under the obligation to adopt appropriate measures to ensure the application of ratified Conventions throughout its territory. It recalls in particular that, under the terms of Article 15 of the Convention, with a view to ensuring the coherence of the national policy referred to in Article 4 and of measures for its application, each Member shall make arrangements to ensure the necessary coordination between various authorities and bodies called upon to give effect to Parts II and III of the Convention. The Committee notes that the measures envisaged in Information Note SRT No. 96/2008 and the agreements envisaged in section 5 of Decree No. 5.961 of 2006 could contribute to this. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) make appropriate arrangements to ensure the necessary coordination, as provided for in Article 15, to secure the application of the Convention, including to employees in the various public administrations; (ii) give effect to the measures set out in Article 7 of the Convention in relation to the criminology experts of the State of São Paulo; and (iii) provide detailed information on the measures adopted and their impact in its next report.

Articles 4, 8 and 15. Coordination and coherence of the national policy. The Committee notes the information on the efforts made by the various ministries, specialized institutions such as FUNDACENTRO, and the operation of: (a) several tripartite commissions specializing in various aspects of safety and health, the reports of which can be consulted on the web site of the Ministry of Labour (http://www.mte.gov.br/seg_sau/comissoes.asp); and (b) tripartite groups formulating technical standards in the field of occupational safety and health. In this respect, the Committee recognizes the efforts made by the Government to achieve progress in the formulation and implementation of occupational safety and health standards. However, noting the communications reporting numerous problems of application in practice, the Committee considers that these efforts should be accompanied by an appropriate methodology with a view to ensuring the coherence of the national policy required by the Convention, and the necessary coordination between the various authorities and institutions responsible for giving effect to Parts II and III of the Convention, with a view to its effective application. The Committee therefore invites the Government to take these fundamental aspects into account and to provide its comments on this subject.

Article 17. Collaboration between enterprises engaged in activities simultaneously at one workplace. With reference to its comments under Article 9 of the present Convention and Article 6 of the Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148), the Committee requests the Government to take measures to secure the effective application of this Article in practice, and to provide detailed information on the measures adopted and their impact in its next report.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the difficulties in the application of the Convention raised in the observations examined above. These problems appear largely to relate to insufficient coordination between federal and local bodies in relation to OSH in the public sector and to problems related to enforcement encountered by the labour inspectorate, for example in the petrochemical sector. These problems appear to be compounded by the extent of subcontracting in the sector and the difficulties involved in ensuring the application of the Convention as regards these vulnerable workers. Another problematic area relates to shortcomings in the recording and notification of occupational accidents and diseases which implies that the possibilities are hampered for the authorities to have a proper appreciation of the actual situation in the country as regards occupational safety and health and the impact of the actions taken. Against this background, the Committee notes with interest that Inter-Ministerial Order No. 152, of 13 May 2008, establishes the Tripartite Committee on Occupational Safety and Health (CTSST), with the objective, inter alia, of evaluating and proposing measures for the implementation of the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187). The Committee considers that an effective implementation of the systematic methodology reflected in Convention No. 187 – which constitutes a more express regulation of the strategy underlying Convention No. 155 – could contribute to addressing the problems referred to above. The Committee also invites the Government to consider whether a ratification of the Protocol of 2002 to Convention No. 155 would be helpful as a means to ensure that the Government would dispose of the tools to be able to assess its progress in this area as reflected in statistics. With reference to the task entrusted by Order No. 152 to the CTSST in relation to the national policy, the Committee requests the Government to adopt every measure necessary to address the issues raised above in this context, and to ensure that all public employees at the federal, State and local levels participate in the development and are covered by the national policy, as required by the present Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of all relevant progress in this respect.

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes the communication of 28 August 2008 sent by the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) and the Government's reply of 3 March 2009. The CUT states that with the growth in the economy, civil construction has expanded significantly but has not been matched by investment in developing the labour force, so the amount of skilled labour has not kept pace with the expansion in the sector, adding to the weaknesses that already existed. The CUT lists the weaknesses as follows: (a) policies and measures for the sector overlook the informal economy and are therefore unrealistic; (b) registration of occupational accidents does not take account of undeclared workers, so accident figures in official registers do not reflect reality; and (c) very few occupational accidents are investigated, for example in 2006, of 31,429 accidents recorded only 330 were investigated. On the matter of suitable policies, the Government states that it has published a series of occupational accident indicators by sector of activity and federal unit allowing measurement of workers' exposure to the risk levels involved by economic activity and also allowing suitable policies to be drawn up. With regard to the registration of accidents, this is done by the National Social Security Institute (INSS), which collects the relevant data by means of a special form known as an "occupational accident communication" (CAT). As to the investigations of accidents, the Government states that it is not possible to analyse all cases because the Ministry of Labour in charge of occupational safety and medicine has few inspectors. The Government further indicates that labour inspectorate provides an important stimulus for the formalization and improvement of working conditions and that in 2009, thanks to the inspectorate's work, formal employment relationships were secured for 668,857 workers. On the matter of training, the Government states that training is provided through the Workers' Protection Fund. The Committee has also studied these comments in examining the application of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). With regard to the present Convention, it will deal with the observations at greater length at its next session, when it examines the Government's first report, which has already been received. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide information on the total number of workers in the construction sector, indicating to the extent possible the number of workers who have a formal employment relationship and the estimated number of those who do not. With regard to the latter, please indicate how they are taken into account for the purpose of: (a) preparing policies for the sector; (b) registering occupational accidents; and (c) training. Referring to the Government's decision to treat the investigation of occupational accidents as a priority for 2009, noted by the Committee in its comments on the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), the Committee asks the Government to provide details of the activities undertaken and the results obtained in the construction sector.

Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes with interest the Government's detailed report of 31 October 2008 containing full particulars (including attachments) on the relevant legislation and the work of the labour inspectorate.

The Committee notes the full particulars supplied by the Government in reply to its previous comments in which it requested information on the manner in which the legislation gives effect to Articles 2, 4, 5, 8(1), 8(3), 9, 10, 12, 18 and 19 of the Convention. In particular, it welcomes the information on the manner in which Article 4 is implemented, and on the work done by FUNDACENTRO and the National Commission on Chemical Safety (CONASQ). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the practical effect given to Article 4 of the Convention, including particulars of how it periodically reviews its policy on safety in the use of chemicals at work.

Petrochemical sector. SINDILQUIDA/RS. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to observations sent by the Workers' Union of the Road Transport of Liquids and Gases, Oil Derivatives and Chemical Products of the State of Rio Grande do Sul (SINDILQUIDA/RS), which were received together with the attachments mentioned in the Committee's comments under the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). The Committee notes that the Government has not provided the information requested on this matter. It refers the Government to its comments on the application of Convention No. 155, the Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136), and the Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139). The Committee reiterates its request for information on the Union's assertion that in the case indicated in its observation, the Government breached the following Articles of the Convention: Article 12 (exposure to chemicals and assessment of the exposure); Article 13 (assessment of risks arising from the use of chemicals at work, limiting exposure and arrangements to deal with emergencies); and Article 15 (information and training for workers). The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the union's assertion that PETROBRAS DISTRIBUIDORA failed to prepare or implement a programme for the prevention and monitoring of occupational exposure to chemicals, failed to take measures to prevent occupational accidents and prepare for emergencies, including relevant training for the workers, and also failed to carry out biological monitoring of workers. It further alleges that the situation is the same in other enterprises in the sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to ensure that effect is given to the provisions of the Convention in PETROBRAS and in the petrochemical sector in general, and particularly to Articles 12, 13 and 15, referred to by SINDILQUIDA/RS, and the practical results obtained.

Articles 6 and 7. Criteria for the classification of chemicals and assessing the hazardous properties of mixtures. Article 16. Cooperation between employers and workers with respect to safety in the use of chemicals. Article 17. Requirement for workers to cooperate with their employers in the latter's discharge of their responsibilities. Article 18, paragraph 3. Rights of workers and their representatives. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government on the legislation pertaining to these Articles and requests it to send full particulars on the effect given to them in practice in the petrochemical sector with special reference to the situations referred to by SINDILQUIDA/RS.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the number of workers exposed to chemicals and on the trends in the nature of the infringements of the Convention that have been observed.

Chile

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the Government's first two reports and the comments made by the Government concerning the observations submitted by the Latin American Confederation of Workers (CLAT) and the World Confederation of Labour (WCL), to which it referred briefly in its previous observation.

Article 5, paragraphs (a), (b) and (f), of the Convention. Occupational health services which ensure that the functions set out in this Article are adequate and appropriate to the occupational risks of the undertaking. The observations allege a failure to comply with the above provisions in relation to the Chilean National Copper Corporation (Codelco), Andina Division, in which there was allegedly a silicosis epidemic caused by a dust and silica concentration which exceeded the maximum permitted. It is indicated that the company threatened workers, denied the existing epidemic and failed to assume responsibility. According to the observation between 2000 and 2003, following the assessment of occupational diseases carried out by the Preventive Medicine and Disability Committee (COMPIN), Aconcagua Health Service, 171 cases of silicosis were detected. The trade unions state that, taking into account that there was a total of 600 employees, the figure of 171 cases of silicosis indicates that 28 per cent of the company's workers were affected. The trade unions state that the real situation could be even more serious given that the tests were limited to only a group and not to all workers in the company. Only 271 workers were examined using computerized axial tomography (CAT), which revealed 171 cases of silicosis. In other words, 60 per cent of the workers who underwent the examination were found to have silicosis. According to the communication, this indicates that the workers were exposed to physical agents which exceeded the permissible limits. The trade unions indicate that, as a result of this, the company prohibited the use of CAT and doctors were limited in the future to using only conventional X-ray systems, which, according to the trade unions, are clearly not sufficient for diagnosing silicosis. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, during the period mentioned in the observation, the authority of the Aconcagua Health Service declared 115 workers to be disabled. The Government indicates that 50 per cent of these declarations were subsequently overturned by the health authority on the basis of various technical arguments put forward in the respective appeal processes initiated in accordance with the law. The Government indicates that approximately half of the cases in which partial disability was originally declared as a result of silicosis were rejected on appeal on the basis of false positives and incorrect diagnosis using the CAT technique, which is not suitable for diagnosing this disease. The Government also indicates that, in November 2003, the country's 28 COMPINs met together and concluded that CAT scans of the chest would not be used to assess silicosis. Instead, X-rays would be carried out every six months. With regard to exposure levels, the Government indicates that levels of exposure to silica decreased between 1999 and 2004, including exposure thereto by staff. In the working areas of the underground mine and crushing plant plans were implemented to mitigate and reduce dust contamination. The Committee recalls that under Article 5 of the Convention, occupational health services shall ensure that the functions set out in paragraphs (a), (b) and (f) of that Article (identification and assessment of risks, surveillance of factors in the working environment and surveillance of workers' health) are adequate and appropriate to the occupational risks of the undertaking. The Committee cannot fail to note that the use of a methodology determined by a COMPIN and subsequently declared unsuitable by the same institutions once serious diagnoses have been established, as well as the uncertainty thereby created among the workers initially diagnosed with silicosis, raises doubts as to whether these functions have been carried out in an adequate and appropriate manner. With regard to paragraphs (a) and (b) of this Article, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which occupational risks are identified and how factors in the working environment are subject to surveillance, including information on prevention and exposure levels in the copper industry and in particular in the company concerned, and to include documentation on this matter, such as reports of the company's joint health and safety committees. With regard to paragraph (f) of this Article, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which surveillance of workers' health is carried out in the copper industry and, in particular, in the company in question, indicating, in particular, the type and frequency of examinations carried out by the medical services to prevent and detect silicosis. It also requests information on the current state of health of the 171 workers whose initial diagnosis of silicosis was reversed by subsequent X-ray examinations.

Article 5(h). Vocational rehabilitation. According to the observation, the company has not transferred the workers, in accordance with section 71 of Act No. 16744, to other workplaces where they would not be exposed to the agent which caused the disease and the Aconcagua Health Service expressly indicates that it has not been established that the workplaces to which workers were transferred were free of the agent which caused the disease. In this regard, the Government indicates that, on 1 January 2005, the Andina Division had already transferred all workers for whom a valid decision had been issued declaring incapacity due to silicosis to other jobs in which they were not exposed to dust. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on this matter, including on the measures taken in respect of the workers who have lodged appeals against the invalidation of their initial diagnosis.

Article 10. Full professional independence of health services personnel. According to the observation, Codelco, the Andina Division, has the delegated administrative authority provided for in Act No. 16744, but it adds that this authority is not appropriate given that section 72 of the Act concerned requires an enterprise to have at least 2,000 employees before it can act as a delegated administrator and the company in question only has 600 employees. It indicates that by having delegated administration, Codelco, the Andina Division, controls the entire system of health and management of risk prevention plans and operates as a closed system in which workers are unable to resort to an external system. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, Codelco, the Andina Division, is authorized to act as a delegated social insurance administrator in accordance with section 71 of the above Act and section 23 of the Ministry of Labour Supreme Decree No. 101 of 1968. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which it ensures the professional independence of the personnel providing occupational health services in relation to the functions listed in Article 5 of the Convention as required under Article 10 of the Convention, in the case of delegated administrators, including Codelco, the Andina Division.

Part IV of the report form. Judicial and administrative decisions. The Committee notes that, according to the observation, among the 171 workers diagnosed by COMPIN as having silicosis and a disability causing them a loss of earning of between 27.5 and 80 per cent, 41 had been relieved of their functions and, at the time of the submission of the observation, another 23 were in the process of being relieved. It indicates that, at the end of 2003, a group of 23 active workers who were sick took legal action against the company, claiming compensation for damages, while, 17 of the workers relieved of their functions filed a criminal complaint alleging responsibility on the part of the company for what they referred to as an epidemic of silicosis. They referred to the defencelessness and helplessness of the workers, who were to receive $10,000 due to having contracted silicosis. They indicated that the company denied everything, and even questioned the validity of the examinations requested by the company itself at the Clínica Santa María and the Clínica las Condes, calling into question these institutions and the responsibility of health services, in particular of COMPIN, for certifying disability. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that there have been no dismissals but that workers who requested it were able to take advantage of voluntary retirement plans which included special compensation. It also indicates that the Social Security Supervisory Authority reported that eight workers had taken legal action against the company attributed delegated administration and that the Supervisory Authority had received a series of appeals from workers from the Andina Division of Codelco-Chile which have not yet been resolved and are awaiting a judicial decision. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on any developments relating to the cases which are being dealt with through judicial and/or administrative channels with regard to the situation being examined.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

China

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2007)

The Committee notes with interest the comprehensive first report submitted by the Government including copies of relevant national legislation. The Committee also notes the observations submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the application of the Convention in China transmitted to the Government on 1 October 2009 to which the Government has not yet responded. The Committee will examine this report, including the observations by the ITUC as well as any comments the Government may deem relevant to make thereon, at its next session in 2010.

Croatia

The Committee notes the observations submitted by the Croatian Association of Unions (HUS) submitted on 18 September 2009 and transmitted to the Government on 2 October 2009 for comments. The Committee notes that the HUS alleges that there has been no change in solving the workers status, that the workers have still not been compensated and that they still have major problems in defining their working status as the ex-owner still controls the bankruptcy process. The Committee also notes the information submitted by the HUS that around ten workers decided to start a hunger strike in September 2009 in order to call attention to an urgent solution to their problems. The Committee refers to its previous observation, in which it requested the Government to report in detail in 2010 and the Committee requested the Government, to take, inter alia, action as follows:

... [The Committee] urges the Government to adopt all relevant implementing legislation, take all relevant measures to ensure that the legislative measures taken are effectively implemented and to pursue its efforts to raise awareness among all workers occupationally exposed to asbestos regarding the possibilities to seek redress and to facilitate the procedures for those who wish to do so by filing claims for compensation. ...

... [The Committee] urges the Government to take all measures necessary to minimize the delays incurred for those entitled to compensation and to old age pension, to ensure that all claims and requests are handled as expeditiously as possible. ...

In the light of the foregoing, and in the context of the detailed report requested for 2010 on the follow-up to its 2008 comment, the Committee requests the Government to respond in detail to the abovementioned observations submitted by the HUS and yet again urges the Government to take all necessary action to ensure a complete and timely follow-up to the conclusions of the High-level Direct Contacts Mission in 2007, to the Committee's 2008 comments and to ensure full application of the Convention in the country.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

*Article 2, paragraphs 2–4, of the Convention. Prohibition against the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of unguarded machinery. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government according to which a draft law has been prepared concerning the guarding of machinery and other mechanical devices and prohibiting the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of machinery not provided with appropriate protection of their dangerous parts. It notes that this law is to be submitted for examination during the next session of the Labour Council. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that the draft legislation gives effect to the Convention and requests it to transmit a copy thereof as soon as it has been adopted.

*Article 3. Exemptions to the obligation to provide guards. Article 4. Responsibility for ensuring compliance. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide an answer to the questions raised by the Committee. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to give effect, in law and in practice, to Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention.

*Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government yet again to provide a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country, including, for instance, extracts from official reports, such as labour inspection reports, and information on any practical difficulties in the application of the Convention, the number and nature of work accidents reported, as well as any other information allowing the Committee to assess more accurately how the Convention is applied in practice in the country.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Djibouti

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes with regret that, since 2000, the Government has submitted the same report which does not provide any new information in reply to its previous comments. The Committee understands, however, that a new Labour Code has recently been adopted (Act No. 133/AN/05 of 28 January 2006) and notes with interest that it contains provisions concerning occupational safety and health that constitute a general framework for the protection of workers against risks related to work. According to previously submitted information, the relevant legislation would also include Order No. 1010/SG/CG of 3 July 1968 concerning the protection of workers against ionizing radiation in hospitals and health-care institutions, or in Order No. 72/60/SG/CG of 12 January 1972 on occupational medicine. With reference to article 125(a) of the newly adopted law providing for the adoption of implementing legislation to regulate measures for the protection of safety and health in all establishments and companies covered by the Labour Code, on a series of different issues including radiation protection, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the abovementioned Orders remain in force, and, as appropriate, to transmit to it copies of any revised or complementing legislation once it has been adopted.

The Committee also notes the observations submitted by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) on 23 August 2007 raising concerns regarding insufficient protection against ionizing radiation for employees at health-care centres. These observations were transmitted to the Government for comment on 21 September 2007, but no comments have been received to date.

Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Effective protection of workers against ionizing radiations. Article 6, paragraph 2. Maximum permissible doses. Article 9, paragraph 2. Instruction of the workers assigned to work under radiations. With reference to the foregoing and its previous comments, the Committee recalls that all appropriate steps shall be taken to ensure effective protection of workers against ionizing radiations and to review maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiations in the light of current knowledge. In this context, the Committee notes that the UGTD indicates that, in practice, industrial undertakings using procedures involving ionizing radiation do not seem to apply uniform rules for the protection of workers against exposure thereto and that the workers engaged in, for example, health-care centres, are not sufficiently informed of the dangers related to their activity and are not protected in an adequate way. The Committee again draws the Government's attention to the revised dose limits for exposure to ionizing radiation established on the basis of new physiological findings by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) in its 1990 recommendations. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the observations made by the UGTD and urges the Government to take all appropriate measures, in the very near future, and with due account taken of the 1990 recommendations of the ICRP, to give full effect, in law and in practice, to these provisions of the Convention.

Article 7, paragraphs 1(b) and 2. Exposure limits for young persons between 16 and 18 years of age. Prohibition against employing young persons under 16 in work involving exposure to radiation. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that there were no provisions in relevant legislation prohibiting the employment of children under 16 years of age in radiation work and fixing maximum permissible doses for persons between 16 and 18 who are directly engaged in radiation work, as called for by these provisions of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take all appropriate measures to ensure the application of these provisions of the Convention in the near future.

Occupational exposure during an emergency. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee again draws the Government's attention to paragraphs 16 and 17 of its 1992 general observation under this Convention which concern occupational exposure during and after an emergency. The Government is requested to indicate whether, in emergency situations, exceptions are permitted to the normally tolerated dose limits for exposure to ionizing radiation and, if so, to indicate the exceptional levels of exposure allowed in these circumstances and to specify the manner in which these circumstances are defined.

With reference to the advances that hopefully will be made through the Decent Work Country Programme 2008–12, including, inter alia, further cooperation with the social partners, the Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes with regret that, since 2000, the Government has submitted the same report, which does not provide any new information in reply to its previous comments. The Committee understands, however, that a new Labour Code has recently been adopted (Act No. 133/AN/05 of 28 January 2006) and notes with interest that it contains provisions concerning occupational safety and health that constitute a general framework for the protection of workers against risks related to work. The Committee nevertheless requests the Government to provide additional information concerning the following points.

Articles 10, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 18 of the Convention. With reference to the comments that it has formulated for several years, the Committee notes that article 125(a) of the Labour Code provides for the adoption of implementing legislation to regulate measures for the protection of safety and health in all establishments and companies covered by the Labour Code, in particular, with regard to lighting, ventilation or aeration, drinking water, sanitary facilities, evacuation of dust and fumes, precautions to be taken against fire, installation of emergency exits, radiation, noise and vibrations. The Committee trusts that the Government will adopt the abovementioned legislation in the very near future and that it will give full effect to Articles 10, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 18 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of this legislation as soon as it has been adopted.

With reference to the advances that hopefully will be made through the Decent Work Country Programme 2008–12, including, inter alia, further cooperation with the social partners, the Committee urges the Government to make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Ecuador

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1978)

Legislation. The Committee notes the Andean Community Decision No. 584, the “Andean Occupational Safety and Health Instrument”, replacing Decision No. 547, and Resolution No. 957 issuing regulations for the Andean Occupational Safety and Health Instrument. The Committee observes that these instruments appear to pave the way for a ratification of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) and its Protocol, and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), and draws the Governments attention to paragraphs 295 and 296 of its 2009 General Survey on Convention No. 155. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee notes Ministerial Agreements Nos 219 and 220 of 2005, the first of which refers to a register of occupational safety and health professionals and the second to the adoption of internal safety and health regulations. The Committee requests the Government to provide copies of the internal safety and health regulations in the sectors covered by the Convention and to continue to provide information on all legislation relating to the Convention.

Article 4. Measures for the prevention and control of occupational hazards due to air pollution, noise and vibration; Article 5. Cooperation between employers and workers; and Article 11. Periodical medical examinations. For several years the Committee has been discussing with the Government on the safety and health status of workers in the telephone sector, with reference to observations from trade union organizations citing serious repercussions on the health of workers in this sector from prolonged exposure to risk factors and the extended working day, which was fixed at four and a half hours, to reduce the risk of exposure until 1999, when it was modified by collective agreement. The Government states that the technology has been changed and is now safer, so these problems no longer exist. In its last observation the Committee sought information on the repercussions on the sector of the extension of the working hours. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided this information. It points out to the Government that the examination of this issue was triggered by serious allegations from workers’ organizations regarding the telephone sector, referring among other things to deaths, ruptured cerebral aneurisms, pulmonary oedema, and loss of visual and hearing capacity. The Committee therefore needs detailed information about the present situation in the sector so that it can ascertain whether or not these issues have been resolved. The Committee invites the Government to consult with the employers and workers as provided in Article 5 of the Convention on the measures for prevention and protection referred to in Article 4, which apply in the telephone sector, and to provide information on such consultations as well as on measures taken or envisaged. The Committee also asks the Government to provide particulars of the medical examinations conducted for workers in the sector, indicating their frequency and providing information on their results.

Article 6, paragraph 2. Requirement for employers to cooperate in applying prescribed measures. The Committee notes that the Government merely refers to its previous report without answering the question raised by the Committee. It reminds the Government that under this Article, whenever two or more employers undertake activities simultaneously at one workplace, they shall have the duty to collaborate in order to comply with the prescribed measures and that, in appropriate circumstances, the competent authorities shall prescribe general procedures for this collaboration. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the manner in which it ensures compliance in law and in practice with the duty to collaborate laid down in this Article and, if necessary, to prescribe the procedures for such collaboration.

Article 8, paragraphs 1 and 3. Air pollution and vibration. For several years the Committee has been asking the Government provide information on the establishment, by the Inter-institutional Committee on Occupational Safety and Health, of exposure limits for corrosive, irritating and toxic substances, by adopting the standards established for such substances by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists. The Committee notes that according the Government, Ecuador has regulated maximum permissible limits of exposure only for asbestos and for all other cases, they apply international standards. The Committee requests the Government to indicate which international standards it applies, and submit a copy of the legal provisions providing for the application of these standards. Please also provide documentation on the criteria currently used to define the risks of exposure to air pollution and vibration in the workplace, and the exposure limits, as well as on the manner in which these criteria and limits are supplemented and revised in practice, together with relevant documentation.

Article 10. Exceeding exposure limits and protective equipment. The Committee once again notes that the Government has not sent the information requested. It invites the Government to indicate the methods prescribed for determining whether the limits specified in pursuance of Article 8 are exceeded and to specify the guidelines or instructions on the type of personal protective equipment to be provided to the workers exposed should these limits be exceeded.

Article 11. Medical examinations (pre-assignment and periodical). Please provide information on measures taken, in law and in practice, to regulate how these examinations are carried out and that periodicity.

Article 12. Notification to the competent authority of processes, substances, machinery and equipment which involve exposure. The Committee repeats its request to the Government for information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the use of processes, substances, machinery and equipment involving exposure to air pollution, noise or vibration are notified to the competent authorities.

Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. Please provide general information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, together with extracts from inspection reports with an indication of the number and nature of infringements detected in connection with the Convention, including in the telephone sector. Please also provide reports prepared pursuant to the Andean Occupational Safety and Health Instrument that may be relevant, to enable the Committee to ascertain more fully the extent to which the Convention is applied.

In general, the Committee notes that although it has asked the Government to reply in detail to its comments of 2006, the information sent by the Government is summary and general in nature. The Committee also notes that the type of reply sent by the Government does now allow it to resolve the application of the issues that it has been raising for several years. The Committee requests the Government to reply in detail to the present comments attaching copies of the legislative provisions, and to provide examples that illustrate the assertions it makes in its report. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that it may seek technical assistance from the Office should it deem this necessary.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Ghana

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's reports received in 2006, 2007 and 2008 do not contain any new information nor any reply to its previous comments and that the Government's report for 2009 has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 17 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee reminds the Government that, for more than 30 years, the Committee has drawn the Government's attention to the need to extend the legislation giving effect to the Convention to agriculture, forestry, road and rail transport and shipping. In its 1986 report, the Government indicated that it was due to submit the Committee's observations to the tripartite National Advisory Committee on Labour so that it could examine them and take the necessary steps to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee trusts that, in the context of the revision of the labour legislation launched with the adoption of the Labour Code in 2003, the Government will focus on the need to revise the legislation in the field of occupational safety and health, especially in order to give effect to the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps in the very near future to ensure the guarding of machinery in all sectors of economic activity, particularly agriculture, forestry, road and rail transport and shipping, and invites the Government to request assistance from the ILO in due course in order to ensure the effective application of the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2010.]

Guinea

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government indicates, in its last report, that a draft Order respecting air pollution, noise and vibration, cesspools, drinking water and protection against radiations had been prepared, but was subsequently separated into several draft Orders to make them more easily applicable. These draft Orders should have been adopted some time ago. However, the Advisory Commission on Labour and Social Legislation, as a tripartite commission, is composed of various members with very different concerns and sometimes constraints at the national level, which prevented it from completing its usual session. Furthermore, the Government states that the State of Guinea has priorities, even with regard to the adoption of laws and regulations. The Committee states that the Government has been expressing the intention for many years of adopting regulations to protect workers against ionizing radiations, without however in practice taking the necessary measures to this effect. It notes with regret that the Government's attitude disregards the urgency of taking the necessary legislative action for the adoption of regulations respecting protection against ionizing radiations. In this respect, the Committee recalls that this Convention was ratified by Guinea in 1966 and that since then the Committee has had to comment on various points concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee recalls that, when the Government takes the sovereign decision to ratify a Convention, it undertakes to adopt all the necessary measures to give effect to the provisions of the Convention in question. The Committee also considers that, while the Government may cite the existence of other matters which must take priority in the adoption of laws and regulations, it would be appropriate after the number of years that have elapsed for it to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Orders relating to the application of the provisions of this Convention are adopted as soon as possible. The Committee therefore once again hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to report on the adoption of provisions covering all activities involving the exposure of workers to ionizing radiations in the course of their work and in conformity with the dose limits referred to in its general observation of 1992, in the light of current knowledge, such as that contained in the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) and in the Basic Safety Standards for Protection Against Ionising Radiation and for the Safety of Radiation Sources of 1994.

Articles 2, 3, paragraph 1, 6 and 7 of the Convention In its previous comment, the Committee noted the Government's statement that the current dose limits correspond to an equivalent of an annual dose of 50 mSv for persons exposed to ionizing radiations. The Committee had recalled the maximum dose limits for ionizing radiations established in the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection and in the 1994 Basic International Safety Standards for Radiation Protection. For workers directly engaged in work exposed to radiation, this limit is 20 mSv per year averaged over five years (100 mSv over five years), and the actual dose must not exceed 50 mSv in any year. The Committee also draws attention to the dose limits envisaged for apprentices aged from 16 to 18 years, set out in Annex II, paragraph II-6, of the 1994 Basic International Safety Standards for Radiation Protection. The Committee once again hopes that the maximum doses and quantities to be included in the Government's draft Order will be in conformity with the maximum permitted doses and quantities, and that the Government does indeed envisage adopting the above draft Order.

Situations of occupational exposure in emergencies and provision of alternative employment. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures which have been taken or are envisaged in relation to the points raised in paragraph 35(c) and (d) of the conclusions of its 1992 general observation under this Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 11 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reply to its previous comments indicating that it has taken due note that section 170 of the Labour Code seems to permit employers to authorize or to order workers to remove safety devices, contrary to Article 11 of the Convention. It also notes the Government's statement that such authorization is only based on prior measures taken by the employer to avoid all exposure to occupational risks, and that in any event it is the responsibility of the employer to promote best safety conditions at workplaces periodically visited by the labour inspectorate. The Committee would nonetheless request the Government to consider including in the draft Labour Code implementing regulations that are in preparation, a specific provision prohibiting such authorization or order to remove safety devices, as required by this Article of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government does not presently intend to amend Order No. 2265/MT of 9 April 1982, but envisages formulating, in consultation with the social partners, technical guidelines on harmful, hazardous and carcinogenic products, particularly benzene. The Committee also notes that the guidelines envisaged will be made available to all users. It hopes that the guidelines will be formulated and adopted without delay and requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this matter.

Article 4, paragraph 2, of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's information on processes which use methods of work that are as safe as those carried out in an enclosed system. It notes in particular that the increase in labour and health inspections in enterprises and the involvement of Workers' Committees for Health, Safety and Working Conditions (CHSCT) ensure that the processes are carried out under the safest possible conditions. The Committee requests the Government to provide an indication of the frequency of the inspections carried out in enterprises that use benzene. It also requests the Government to provide copies of the statistics collected during inspections, to enable the Committee to assess the extent to which this provision of the Convention is applied in practice.

Article 6, paragraphs 2 and 3. With regard to the concentration of benzene vapour in the air of workplaces, the Committee notes that a draft Order concerning data files on the safety of chemical substances establishes a level not exceeding 10 ppm or 32 mg/m³ over an eight-hour time-weighted average. The Committee accordingly concludes that the ceiling established in the draft Order is lower than the one established in the Convention when it was adopted in 1971. It nevertheless wishes to point out to the Government that the threshold limit value recommended by the American Conference of Government Industrial Hygienists (ACGIH) is 0.5 ppm over an eight-hour time-weighted average. It therefore invites the Government to take measures to bring the ceiling value established by the draft Order into line with the value recommended by the ACGIH. The Committee also requests the Government to specify the guidelines issued by the competent authority on the procedure for determining the concentration of benzene in places of employment. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the abovementioned Order as soon as it is adopted.

Article 8, paragraph 2. With regard to limiting the duration of exposure of workers who, for special reasons, may be exposed to concentrations of benzene in the air of places of employment which exceed the maximum established, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, a study is under way on this matter. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide relevant extracts of the inspection reports and the statistics available on the number of employees covered by the legislation as well as the number and nature of violations reported, as requested under Part IV of the report form.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's statement that a draft Order on occupational cancer giving full effect to the provisions of the Convention had been formulated with ILO technical assistance. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this Order is still under consideration for enactment.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention. The Committee notes that the draft conditions of service of the public service, which is being discussed within the Government, should contain the necessary measures to give full effect to the provisions of this Article of the Convention through their application in practice in all branches of economic activity. The Committee requests the Government to keep the International Labour Office informed of developments relating to these conditions of service and to provide a copy of them when they have been adopted.

Articles 4, 8 and 10. The Committee notes the information concerning a draft Order, prepared by the Government, which was due to be examined by the Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation. This draft text would cover cesspits, drinking water, noise, vibration, air pollution, etc. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this text is issued under section 171(1) of the Labour Code. It reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 4, the provisions adopted must prescribe the specific measures to be taken both for the prevention of occupational hazards due to air pollution, noise and vibration, and to control and protect workers against these hazards. The Committee also reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 8 of the Convention, the above draft text should provide for the establishment of criteria for determining the hazards of exposure to air pollution, noise and vibration and should specify exposure limits. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not indicate whether the above draft text provides, as required by Article 10, for the provision of personal protective equipment where the measures taken to eliminate hazards do not bring air pollution, noise and vibration within the limits specified by the competent authority. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the adoption of this draft text, to provide a copy when it has been adopted and to inform it of any other specific measures taken for the application of the provisions of Articles 4, 8 and 10 of the Convention.

Article 9. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the technical measures and supplementary work organizational measures intended to eliminate the above hazards.

Article 14. The Committee notes that the National Occupational Medicine Service is equipped with a laboratory which is inadequately provided with appropriate instruments for its needs, but that the Government plans within a relatively short period to provide the above Service with modern and appropriate equipment. It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the progress made in equipping the National Occupational Medicine Service and to inform it of any other measures taken to promote such research.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Kazakhstan

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide further information on the 1998 observations by the Air Crew Trade Union of Alma Ata regarding the situation of the 80 Kazakh civil aviation staff members that allegedly suffered occupational illness, and became disabled, as a result of excessive exposure to noise and vibration in their work. The Committee urges the Government to respond to the Committee's longstanding request for information and, with reference to paragraph 4 of Article 11 of the Convention, to also provide information on measures undertaken or envisaged to ensure that the rights of workers under social security or social insurance legislation are not adversely affected by the implementation of this Convention.

Kuwait

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1974)

Article 6, paragraph 3, of the Convention. Measurement of the concentration of benzene. Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes that it has, on several occasions in previous comments, requested the Government to provide concrete information on how the Order No. 210 of 2 October 2001 on executive regulations of Act No. 21/1995 is applied in practice and how compliance with the required limit for exposure to benzene of 0.5 mg/l is maintained in practice. The Committee notes that the Government, in its most recent report, yet again refers to the activities of the labour inspection services, without any supporting information on actual labour inspections carried out. Recalling that Article 6, paragraph 3, of the Convention requires the competent authority to issue directions on carrying out the measurement of the concentration of benzene in the workplace, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice including extracts from the reports of inspection services, information on the number of employed persons covered by the measures adopted to give effect to the Convention, and on the number and nature of the contraventions reported.

Kyrgyzstan

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 5, paragraph 3, of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of collective and other agreements containing mutual obligations designed to ensure safe and healthy working conditions.

Article 6, paragraph 2. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the general procedures prescribed for the collaboration of employers where two or more of them undertake activities simultaneously at one workplace. It also asks the Government to provide a copy of the Standards and Regulations for Health and Safety in Construction Work (No. III-4-80) and of the Order of the Ministry of Industry and Energy governing work done jointly by several enterprises at the same workplace in coalmining.

Article 12. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the Regulations on state medical supervision referred to in its report.

Article 14. The Committee asks the Government to describe the measures taken to promote research, in accordance with this Article.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Lao People's Democratic Republic

The Committee notes the Government's latest report and the information supplied in response to its previous comments. The Committee notes the amended Law on Labour, No. 06/NY, dated 27 December 2006, and the agreement by the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare on the establishment of a National Committee on Occupational Safety and Health, composed of ten representative agencies, meeting regularly to review and plan occupational safety and health activities. However, the Committee notes that no information has been provided regarding its previous comment requesting information on the manner in which the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare cooperates with the Ministry of Industry and Handicraft in matters related to occupational safety and health. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to explain the roles of the abovementioned ministries, and how they cooperate with each other in the application of occupational safety and health.

The Committee notes the Government's response in its previous reports indicating the intention to draw up a safety and health decree which would include regulations concerning the use of white lead. The Committee reiterates its firm hope that the safety and health decree will be drafted in the very near future and that it will contain such provisions to ensure that effect is given to the following provisions of the Convention: Article 1 (prohibition of the use of white lead and sulphate of lead in the internal painting of buildings); Article 2 (regulation of the use of white lead in artistic painting); Article 3 (prohibition of the employment of young persons under 18 years of age and all females in any painting work involving the use of white lead); Article 5 (regulation of the use of white lead in painting operations for which its use is not prohibited); and Article 7 (establishment of statistics of morbidity and mortality due to lead poisoning).

Latvia

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its latest report, and the attached documentation, indicating recent legislative amendments, which give further effect to the provisions of the Convention, including changes to the 1998 Law on Technical Supervision of Dangerous Equipment prescribing that the implementation of control in the field of technical supervision of dangerous equipment shall be performed by the State Construction Inspectorate, rather than the State Labour Inspectorate. With reference to observations made previously by the Free Trade Union Federation of Latvia regarding the use of obsolete machines and the high risk of accidents, which employees are exposed to in using such machines, the Committee notes the response provided by the Government indicating that safety requirements apply to both new and used machinery. The Committee also notes the responses provided regarding effect given to Articles 2, 4 and 11 of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on legislative measures undertaken with regards to the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government concerning the number of suspended equipment and machinery; the number of accidents and occupational diseases reported concerning operators of equipment and machinery; and the number of penalties and violations. The Committee also notes that there has been an increase in the number of reported accidents and occupational diseases since 2004. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures undertaken or envisaged to address this increase; and to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice.

Lithuania

Maximum Weight Convention, 1967 (No. 127) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the Government's latest detailed report indicating recent legislative changes giving further effect to the Convention, including Health and Safety at Work Regulations for Manual Handling of Loads (Official Gazette, 2006, No. 116-4417) and Methodological Guidance on the Investigation of Ergonomic Risks (Official Gazette, 2005, No. 95-3536).

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the Government's response to its previous comment concerning observations of the Federation of Workers of Lithuania (LDF) received in September 2004, regarding the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that, according to information available to the State Labour Inspectorate, there were five accidents related to the manual lifting of loads in 2005, increasing to 26 accidents in 2008, and that, according to the information collected in the Public Register of Occupational Diseases, there were 103 cases of occupational diseases caused by load lifting and carrying in 2005 again, increasing to 164 cases in 2008. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the causes for this increase and, as appropriate, on measures undertaken or envisaged to reduce the number of cases of workplace accidents related to manual lifting of loads and the number of cases of occupational diseases caused by load lifting and to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice.

Madagascar

The Committee notes the brief information in the Government's latest report, indicating the adoption of a new Labour Code Law (No. 2003-044), which includes provisions requiring systems, equipment and construction materials to be subjected to compulsory safety standards, including monitoring, maintenance and systematic checks. The Committee further notes the Government's intention to revise the safety and health provisions of Order No. 889 of 20 May 1960 to take into account the new Labour Code. The Committee reiterates, as it has done on previous occasions, its sincere hope that the Government will finally adopt the implementing texts which have been announced for a number of years in order to give effect to the provisions of Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. It hopes that these legislative texts will contain provisions giving effect to Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention, which prohibit the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner or exhibition of machinery of which the dangerous parts specified in Article 2, paragraphs 3 and 4, are without appropriate guards, the obligation to ensure compliance with these prohibitions resting on the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner, or the exhibitor or manufacturer who sells, lets out on hire, transfers in any other manner, or exhibits machinery.

The Committee notes the brief information in the Government's latest report, indicating that the revision of current law has been suspended due to the political instability in the country. The Committee requests the Government to indicate when the review of the draft Decree establishing "general prescriptions for occupational health, hygiene and safety and the working environment", referred to by the Government in its previous report, will be resumed in the Consultative Technical Committee and to indicate progress made in this respect. In view of the time that has elapsed since it drew the Government's attention to the need to adopt legislation giving effect to the provisions of the Convention, particularly those of Articles 14 and 18, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will do its utmost to see that such legislation is adopted in the near future.

The Committee also asks the Government to indicate whether the Digest regarding matters of principle pertaining to the application of the Convention, referred to in a previous report, is still to be published, and reiterates its request that the Government provide a copy of it as soon as it is published.

Maximum Weight Convention, 1967 (No. 127) (ratification: 1971)

Article 3 of the Convention. Establishment of maximum weight for manual transport. The Committee notes with interest the information in the Government's latest report, indicating the unanimous decision by the relevant ministries to set the maximum weight for the manual transport of any load by a single male adult worker at 50 kg. The Committee hopes that the inter-ministerial order giving full effect to the provisions of the Convention, including its Article 3, will come into effect without any further delay.

Mexico

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption on 23 December 2008 of Mexican Official Standard NOM-032-STPS-2008 concerning safety in underground coalmines. Noting that, according to the Government, this standard reflects provisions laid down in the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), the Committee hopes that this would pave the way for a ratification of that Convention. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on any developments in these respects.

Follow-up of measures taken pursuant to the recommendations adopted by the Governing Body in document GB.304/14/8. Representation concerning an accident in the Pasta de Conchos Mine in 2006. The Committee notes that in March 2009 the Governing Body adopted a report on a representation alleging non-observance by the Government of certain Articles of this Convention, of the Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150), and of the Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170). It notes that in paragraph 99 of the abovementioned report, the Governing Body made recommendations and entrusted the Committee with the task of following up the issues raised in the report. The Committee notes the report sent by the Government containing information on the measures taken to follow up on these recommendations, which is examined below.

I. Measures to be adopted in consultation with the social partners

Articles 4 and 7 of the Convention. National policy and reviews, either overall or in respect of particular areas. The Committee notes that in paragraph 99(b) of its report, the Governing Body invited the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to continue to take the necessary measures in order to:

- (i) ensure full compliance with Convention No. 155, and, in particular, to review and periodically examine the situation as regards the safety and health of workers, in the manner provided for in Articles 4 and 7 of Convention No. 155, with particular attention given to hazardous work activities such as coalmining. The Committee notes that according to the Government's report, the National Advisory Committee on Occupational Safety and Health (COCONASHT) and the 32 state advisory committees on occupational safety and health (COCOESHT) have held many meetings since 2007. From the web site of the advisory committees (COCOSHT), referred to by the Government, the Committee notes the 2009 work programme, which includes legislative and training activities to be carried out. It notes that the programme provides for activities in the following areas: (1) establishment of a national OSH system; (2) modernization of the regulatory framework for OSH; (3) enhancing the OSH self-management system; (4) development of the national system of information on occupational accidents and diseases; (5) strengthening the machinery for consultation and risk prevention; (6) promoting specialized technical training on OSH; and (7) promoting a review of compliance with safety and health obligations. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on any developments concerning the review and periodical examination of the situation as regards the safety and health of workers as provided in Articles 4 and 7 of the Convention, with particular attention given to hazardous work activities such as coalmining.
- (ii) Concluding and adopting a new regulatory framework for OSH in the coalmining industry, taking into account the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), and the ILO code of practice on safety and health in underground coalmines, 2006. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the newly adopted NOM-032-STPS-2008 lays down limits and specifications that are even stricter than some of the existing regulations governing the mining industry in other countries and that it was drafted with ILO cooperation. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on how NOM-032-STPS-2008 is applied in practice.

Article 9. An adequate and appropriate system of inspection. The Committee notes paragraph 99(b)(iii) and (iv), and (d) of the Governing Body's report in which the Government is invited, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary measures in order to:

- (iii) ensure, by all necessary means, the effective monitoring of the application in practice of laws and regulations on occupational safety and health and the working environment, through an adequate and appropriate system of labour inspection, in compliance of Article 9 of Convention No. 155, in order to reduce the risk that accidents such as the accident in Pasta de Conchos occur in the future;
- (iv) monitor closely the organization and effective operation of its system of labour inspection taking due account of the Labour Administration Recommendation, 1978 (No. 158), including its Paragraph 26(1).
- (d) review the potential that the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), provides to support the measures the Government is taking in order to strengthen the application of its laws and regulations in the area of occupational safety and health in mines.

The Committee notes that according to the Government, the Federal Labour Inspectorate has carried out special labour inspection operations, and in January 2007 a programme was devised and a total of 52 inspections were conducted in 26 workplaces showing a rate of compliance with standards of safety and health and general conditions of work of 86.08 per cent. It also notes that since the entry into force of NOM-032-STPS-2008 on 23 March 2009, a special operation has been started up for underground coalmines and by 30 June 2009, 11 such mines had been inspected and 1,113 safety and health measures had been ordered. In order to improve the functioning of the labour inspectorates, a training course was held and inspectors have been provided with personal protection equipment. The Government also indicates that in line with the provisions of the Labour Administration Recommendation, 1978, (No. 158), the General Directorate of Federal Labour Inspection carried out visits to every one of the federal delegations in order to ascertain that inspection policies, guidelines and criteria are being properly applied. The Committee points out that the Governing Body's recommendations on the labour inspection system stem from the findings in paragraphs 75–85 of the Governing Body's report on the accident in the Pasta de Conchos mine which cost 65 miners their lives, where the Governing Body found that the labour inspectorate had failed to satisfy itself that the defects noted had been set right (lighting, dusting, risk plans, etc.). The Committee notes that paragraph 99(b)(iii) and (iv), the application of which it is examining, and 99(d), refers to measures the Government should adopt in consultation with the social partners, and observes that the Government's report contains no indication of any such consultation. It accordingly asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken – in consultation with the social partners – pursuant to paragraph 99(b)(iii), (iv) and (d) of the abovementioned recommendations, and also on the following matters, likewise in consultation with the social partners:

- its strategy for ensuring that the labour inspectorate improves the monitoring of effective compliance with the recommendations it makes where defects are noted, particularly in the coalmining industry;
- statistical information showing the extent to which the labour inspectorate's recommendations are observed;
- main areas in which NOM-032-STPS-2008 improves on the former standard (NOM-023-STPS-2003) in terms of monitoring and verification with a view to ensuring greater safety for mineworkers;
- extent to which the conformity assessment procedure set forth in paragraph 18 of NOM-032-STPS-2008 is applied, and details of its application in practice;
- an appreciation of the real impact of the measures indicated in terms of improving the situation in the coalmining industry.

Furthermore, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken in application of the recommendation formulated in paragraph 99(b)(iv) of the Governing Body's report on labour inspection in its next report on the application of the Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150), to be examined at the Committee's next session.

II. Other measures

Compensation. The Committee notes that in paragraph 99(c) of its report, the Governing Body invited the Government to:

- (c) ensure, considering the time that has lapsed since the accident, that adequate and effective compensation is paid without further delay, to all the 65 families concerned and that adequate sanctions are imposed on those responsible for this accident.

The Committee notes that the information supplied by the Government is largely a repetition of the information it sent in reply to the assertions made in the representation which is set out in paragraph 51 of the Governing Body's report. The Committee also refers to the report's conclusions, paragraph 93, according to which:

Concerning the assistance and compensation due and paid to the families of the deceased miners, the Committee notes that there appears to be a significant discrepancy between the compensation allegedly offered by IMMSA immediately after the accident (750,000 pesos per family) and the compensation agreed upon between IMMSA and the STPS. The Government stated that a total amount of 5,250,000 pesos, corresponding to the benefits due, was deposited by IMMSA with the JFCA on 18 February 2008 to be distributed among the beneficiaries according to their individual entitlement and that PROFEDET would make the necessary arrangements for the corresponding payments to be made immediately. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, 51 families of the dead miners were to receive a total compensation of 5,250,000 pesos without prejudice to their pursuit of legal action. This amount was extended to include all 65 families. The Government did not, however, provide specific information concerning the basis for, or the elements taken into account in, arriving at that sum. The Committee requests further information to be provided by the Government to the Committee of Experts on the Application of Standards on the modalities for determining the compensation provided to the 65 families of the deceased miners and expects the Government to ensure that all the 65 families receive adequate and effective compensation in accordance with national law.

The Committee accordingly asks the Government to provide detailed information on:

(1) Compensation to be paid by the Industrial Minera Mexico SA (IMMSA):

- the manner in which compensation was determined (for example whether wage supplements were counted and, if so, which);
- the criteria for changing the amount between IMMSA's first offer, which was equivalent to 10 years' pay according to paragraph 26 of the report, and the later sum, which was lower;

- the manner in which compensation was provided for the 14 families concerning which the Government provides no information and the status of the claims under way regarding compensation to the 65 families.
- (2) State support and assistance. Information on any support and assistance by the State for the 65 families of the miners who lost their lives, such as that referred to in paragraph 26 of the report (accommodation, grants for education up to degree level for children and monthly allowance).

Mongolia

The Committee notes the observations by the Confederation of Mongolian Trade Unions (CMTU), received by the ILO on 5 November 2008 and transmitted to the Government on 12 December 2008, which raise problems with regard to the application of Convention No. 155. The Committee notes that the CMTU considers that several railroad accidents, resulting in injured workers, have occurred due to a number of shortcomings regarding the application of the provisions of the Convention, including inadequate training of workers; lack of enforcement of safety measures in relation to chemical hazards; failure to notify the competent authority in cases of occupational accidents; and omitting to take into account the importance of mental elements affecting health, which is directly related to safety and health at work. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the observations made by the CMTU in its next report.

Montenegro

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in its first report, and the observations received by the Union of Free Trade Unions of Montenegro (UFTUM) concerning tripartite representation in the social council and the supervision of national legislation giving effect to the Convention. The Committee notes with interest the information indicating the development of regulations to further develop and determine the tasks related to occupational health services. The Committee asks the Government to keep it informed of any progress in laws and regulations to give full effect to the provisions of this Convention.

Article 1, subparagraphs (a) and (b), and Article 5, subparagraph (g), of the Convention. Role of occupational health services to advise on the adaptation of work to the capabilities of workers; and the definition of workers' representatives. The Committee notes the information indicating that under section 36 of the Law on Safety at Work, the professional services, or professional person for performing safety at work tasks, are responsible for advising employers on such matters. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information specifying whether the role of the occupational health services is to also advise workers and their representatives on safety and health at work; and whether they are required to provide advice on the adaptation of work to the capabilities of workers. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate how effect is given to Article 1(b).

Articles 2 and 4. Formulate, implement and periodically review a national policy. The Committee notes the UFTUM's statement that it, having not been included in the social council, is deprived of the possibility to follow and influence the national policy regarding occupational health services. The Committee recalls that it has raised the issue of tripartite representation in the social council under its comments on the application by Montenegro on the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). The Committee hopes that the Government will ensure that the formulation, implementation and periodical review of its national policy on occupational health services will be developed in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers.

Article 3, paragraph 1. Progressive development of occupational health services for all workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that according to section 34 of the Law on Safety at Work, the employer may engage a professional service, or professional person, to organize and perform professional tasks on safety at work, depending on the organization, nature and scope of work processes, the number of employees who participate in the work process, the number of shifts, assessed risks and the number of units separated in terms of their locations. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the progressive development of occupational health services for all workers.

Article 5. Functions of the occupational health services. The Committee notes the UFTUM's indication that many employers have not carried out the risk assessments called for in section 51 of the Law on Safety at Work, which came into effect three years ago. The UFTUM observes that this is a result of the absence of appropriate supervision with regard to implementation of the national legislation. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures taken to address the issues identified above by UFTUM.

Articles 8 and 9. Organization and conditions of operation for occupational health services. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that, according to section 39(13) of the Law on Safety at Work, accredited health-care institutions must directly cooperate and coordinate safety at work matters with the professional person responsible for safety at work. The Committee asks the Government to provide specific measures to address the requirements under Article 8 and Article 9 of the Convention, with particular reference to the cooperation between occupational health services and the employers, workers, and their representatives, and other services in the undertaking.

Article 12. Surveillance of workers' health shall take place as far as possible during working hours. The Committee notes the information that, according to section 4 of the Law on Safety at Work, the measures that relate to safety at work may not result in any costs to the workers. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures to ensure that surveillance of workers' health takes place as far as possible during working hours.

Articles 14 and 15. Occupational health services to be informed of any known factors which may affect the workers' health; and of ill health among workers and absence from work for health reasons. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that laws and regulations to give effect to these Articles are currently being developed. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the development of these laws and regulations, and hopes that they will ensure that occupational health services are informed by the employer and workers of any known factors, and any suspected factors, in the working environment which may affect the workers' health; and of ill health among workers and absence from work for health reasons.

Part VI of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to give a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country, attaching extracts from inspection reports and, where such statistics exist, information on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of the contraventions reported, etc.

Netherlands

Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62) (ratification: 1950)

The Committee notes the observations submitted by the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) on the Government's brief report. These observations were transmitted to the Government on 16 September 2009.

Article 1 of the Convention. Update on new legislation and administrative regulations. The Committee notes the observations by the FNV that the Government's latest report does not have content apart from remarking that there are no new developments. The FNV has indicated that this content is insufficient considering that, during the reporting period, occupational safety and health legislation in the Netherlands has changed dramatically. These changes imply a possibility for the social partners to develop so-called "Health and Safety catalogues" at the level of sectors and branches, with the aim of establishing the means by which the goals of the Working Conditions Act can be reached. The FNV notes that, in the building sector, such catalogues have been developed. The Committee asks the Government to include, in its next report, information on any further legislative measures adopted in respect of the Convention and to update the Committee on the success of the "Health and Safety catalogues".

Article 4 and Part V of the report form. Maintain an adequate system of inspection to ensure the effective enforcement of its laws and regulations relating to safety precautions in the building industry. The Committee notes that the Government included comprehensive information on the application of the Convention in practice in their report for the period 1 June 1996 to 1 June 2001, but that no such information was provided in this year's report. The Committee notes the observations by the FNV which indicate that during the reporting period there were several incidents in the building sector with regard to chemical substances, illegal work, the risk of falling from heights and several other dangerous aspects that have been indicated in reports made by the labour inspectorate, and that this information is not included in the Government's latest report. The Committee asks the Government to include information in its next report on the application of the Convention in practice, including data on the number of enterprises involved in the building sector, the number of work accidents and the number of inspections undertaken and any measures taken to reduce the number of accidents in this sector.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), which revises this Convention and which may be better suited to the current situation in the building industry. It reminds the Government that the ILO Governing Body invited States parties to this Convention to examine the possibility of ratifying the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), the ratification of which implies ipso jure immediate denunciation of Convention No. 62 (document GB.268/8/2). The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any developments in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's latest report indicating recent legislative amendments to the Working Conditions Act, which introduce a new distinction of responsibility between the Government and the social partners. The Committee also notes the observations, attached to the Government's report, from the National Federation of Christian

Trade Unions (CNV) and the Confederation of Netherlands Industry and Employers (VNO–NCW), and observations received from the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV), transmitted to the Government on 16 September 2009. The Committee notes the attached summary of the National Centre of Occupational Diseases' annual report which provides an interesting insight into occupational diseases, including trends and dissemination of information within branches and occupations. The evidence of fewer health problems as a result of the smoking ban in bars and restaurants is particularly interesting.

Article 5, subparagraph (d), and Article 11, subparagraph (e), of the Convention. Communication and cooperation at the levels of the working group and the undertaking, and the publication of information. The Committee notes the observations by the FNV indicating that workers do not have a legislated right to request documents on risk assessment and measures taken in the enterprise to address these risks. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the legislative measures in place that give effect to Article 5(d) and Article 11(e) with regard to workers' access to information on risk assessment and measures taken in the enterprise to address these risks.

Article 9, paragraph 1. Labour inspectorate. The Committee notes the information provided indicating that of the approximately 350,000 enterprises in the Netherlands with at least one employee, the labour inspectorate proactively inspects 20,000 enterprises every year. With regard to the observations by the FNV stating that complaints from workers regarding non-compliance with the laws are not always investigated, the Committee notes that the Government has indicated that all complaints are investigated, and that the anonymity of the complainant is always kept. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has not transmitted a copy of the relevant internal instruction of 17 June 2008 of the labour inspectorate, as requested. The Committee also notes that in response to observations made by the FNV, the Government has indicated that it is standard procedure and part of the training and instruction of inspectors to allow the works council the opportunity to accompany the inspector and to discuss problems privately, and that after an inspection the works council is entitled to a copy of the letter(s) sent to the employer. The Committee requests the Government to transmit a copy of the internal instruction of 17 June 2008 of the labour inspectorate, which protects anonymity of complainants.

Article 10. Safety and health covenants. The Committee notes that the final evaluation report on the use of covenants has shown that enterprises in non-covenant sectors showed fewer improvements on OSH risks. The Committee hopes that the new measures undertaken by the Government, with regard to the rearrangement of employer, worker and government responsibilities in the private and public domain, will contribute to increased compliance with legal obligations across enterprises. The Committee asks the Government to keep it informed in this respect.

Article 11, subparagraph (c). Notification of occupational diseases. The Committee notes the observations by the FNV with regard to under-reporting of occupational diseases. The Committee notes the Government's response on measures taken to improve the reporting of occupational diseases in the national registration system of the National Committee on Occupational Diseases, including improved communication and rapport with the experts responsible for submitting the reports by providing tailor-made information to these experts, offering feedback and refresher courses, as well as developing guidelines to empower experts to report occupational diseases. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information, in its next report, on the impact of these measures.

Article 17. Two or more undertakings engaged in activities simultaneously at one workplace. The Committee notes the observations by the VNO–NCW, with reference to this Article, indicating that while the responsibilities of cooperating employers at one worksite is regulated clearly in the Working Conditions Act and the Working Conditions Decree, in practice there are many obstacles to the implementation of the legal obligations in the distribution of responsibilities. The VNO–NCW also states that compliance in this area is not always duly examined during inspections. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of Article 17.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes with interest the recent revision to the Working Conditions Act which affects the distribution of responsibilities between the Government and social partners in terms of the development of regulations on occupational safety and health. It notes the Government's statement that within the so-called "public domain" the prime responsibility of the Government is still to lay down general rules and targets to be met as far as the level of protection of workers is concerned and formulated, but that the so-called "private domain" is now to be the prime responsibility of the social partners, whereby they are to agree on ways and methods of working in order to achieve and implement those targets. The Committee notes that such agreements between employers and workers can be formulated in so-called "OSH catalogues" ("Arbocatalogues"), which can be submitted to the labour inspectorate for approval. After approval these measures will be considered as legally binding and inspectors will take them into account during their inspections. The Committee notes that the FNV has indicated that these "OSH catalogues" can only be approved at the branch or sectoral level, as opposed to the company level. The Committee also notes the observations by the FNV on the lack of clear prescribed targets and exposure limits in legislation; a lack of follow-up on a number of projects undertaken by the Government to promote a better culture of occupational safety and health in enterprises; and the availability and independence of company doctors or experts. The Committee also notes the information regarding the establishment of a "support group on risk assessment" which aims to actively promote the development and application of risk assessments, especially in small and medium-sized enterprises. Finally, the Committee notes the information regarding the uneven but overall downward trend related to fatal accidents and that the Government has indicated it is currently developing an action plan specifically to address fatal accidents. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, including information on the progress related to the “OSH catalogues”; the development and impact of measures taken to address fatalities; and measures undertaken or envisaged to ensure there is appropriate follow-up on the completion of projects aimed at promoting occupational safety and health in enterprises.

The Committee notes the response provided by the Government in its latest report, including information on the effect given to Article 2(b)–(e), Article 3(2), Article 4, Article 12(1), and Article 22(1), of the Convention. The Committee also notes the information indicating that the total ban against asbestos of 1993 remains in force without exceptions and that recent amendments to legislation reflect the provisions in the European Community Regulation on chemicals and their safe use (EC 1907/2006), which does not allow for derogations from the prohibition of the use of asbestos.

Article 21, paragraph 4. Compensation for workers suffering from asbestos-related diseases. The Committee notes the observations by the Federation of Netherlands Trade Unions (FNV), received on 25 November 2004 and transmitted to the Government on 6 December 2004. In its observations, the FNV particularly refers to possible entitlements to compensation of workers who suffer from asbestos-related occupational diseases, and to the issue currently under investigation as to whether or not the employer must pay a further amount in addition to the standard amount of compensation. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on entitlements to compensation and compensation effectively paid to workers suffering from asbestos-related diseases.

Article 22, paragraph 1. Dissemination of information with regard to hazards due to exposure to asbestos. With reference to its previous comments on the observations by the Trade Union of Middle Categories and Senior Staff Unions, the Committee notes the information that the National Institute for Asbestos Victims is involved in the dissemination of information on the actual use of asbestos at workplaces. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the work of the National Institute for Asbestos Victims and how they are associated in the work related to the dissemination of information with regard to hazards due to exposure to asbestos.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report, including information on the records of all victims of mesothelioma, as records on occurrences caused only by work-related factors are not available. The Committee notes the observations by the FNV, submitted on 28 August 2009 and transmitted to the Government on 16 September 2009, indicating that, in their view, it should be possible to specify the number of victims of mesothelioma attributed to work-related factors, with reference, inter alia, to information made available by the National Institute for Asbestos Victims. The FNV further indicates that it has asked the Government to take action and set up a national asbestos register. The Committee also notes the observations by the FNV indicating that they concluded in 2007, that in the field of removing asbestos from building sites and other places, the situation in the Netherlands is poor and a lot of demolition work is done in a way where workers are not well protected. The Committee requests the Government to respond to these comments; to provide further information on the recording and notification procedures regarding victims of asbestos-related diseases; to provide relevant statistical information; and to indicate measures taken to ensure that workers involved in demolition are adequately protected from hazards related to exposure to asbestos.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

New Zealand

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2007)

The Committee notes with interest the comprehensive and detailed information provided by the Government in its first report, and notes that the Health and Safety in Employment Act 1992 (HSE Act), and its accompanying regulations, the Hazardous Substances and New Organisms Act 1996, and the Employment Relations Act 2000, ensure legislative conformity with a majority of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also notes the observations by the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) and Business New Zealand, and the responses provided thereto by the Government.

Article 1, paragraph 3; and Article 2, paragraph 3, of the Convention. Scope and definitions. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the New Zealand Defence Forces are excluded from the HSE Act's provisions relating to accident investigation and inspection of high defence areas; and that occupiers of a home do not have duties to people who perform residential work. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the reasons for such exclusions and the measures taken to give adequate protection to workers in excluded branches and towards a wider application of the Convention.

Articles 5 and 11. Main spheres of action under the national policy and functions progressive to give effect to the national policy. The Committee notes the NZCTU's comment indicating that the National Occupational Health and Safety Advisory Committee (NOHSAC), established to provide independent advice directly to the Minister of Labour on major occupational health and safety issues, identified significant gaps in guidance materials intended to encourage compliance with the performance-based framework of the HSE Act; a lack of resources; and a need for more support for the occupational safety and health (OSH) regulatory framework. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that increased resource was provided in 2007 for a range of health and safety initiatives including proactive support for businesses through standard setting and specialist support; and that a project has been established to review all standard and guidance material either produced or endorsed by the Government since 1992, with a view to developing a framework to inform the development of future material. The NZCTU further states that NOSHAC was disestablished in June 2009 due to funding cuts, and that its roles have not been taken up by another government agency. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the decision to disestablish NOSHAC was made in order to redirect resources to address the issues identified by NOSHAC, and that the Government will continue to have the ability to commission research and academic input to help identify and address emerging workplace health and safety issues on an "as needed" basis. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the outcome of measures undertaken to address the issues identified by NOSHAC, and information on the research and academic input undertaken to identify and address emerging workplace health and safety issues.

Articles 7 and 9. Enforcement of laws and regulations. The Committee notes the NZCTU's statement indicating that while one of the roles of the health and safety inspectorate is to provide training and information for employers and employees, there must also be a strong focus on monitoring and enforcement, which requires continued recruiting and employing of an appropriate number and range of skilled field staff to carry out proactive and reactive site inspections across all industry groups. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that the tripartite Workplace Health and Safety Council has raised issues at meetings on monitoring and enforcement issues and will continue to do so, and that while the enforcement role of the inspectorate is primarily aimed at promoting excellent health and safety practices in the workplace, monitoring, investigation, and enforcement of health and safety legislation are key components of the Government's response to any failures of compliance with the HSE Act, especially where non-compliance is of a serious nature. The Committee further refers to its 2007 comments to the Government on the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), asking the Government to ensure that the prevention and advising activities performed by labour inspectors, and directed at workers and employers, particularly in the field of occupational safety and health, are supplemented, in all cases where this is necessary in order to obtain compliance with the applicable legal provisions and the measures ordered by the labour inspector, by the imposition of penalties or the institution of legal proceedings. The Committee hopes that the Government takes all appropriate measures to ensure a proper balance between preventive and advisory functions on the one hand, and enforcement functions on the other, of the labour inspectorate as discussed in paragraphs 96–102 of the 2009 General Survey concerning occupational safety and health.

Article 12, subparagraph (c). Responsibilities of those who design, manufacture, import, provide or transfer machinery, equipment and substances for occupational use. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the Department of Labour undertakes research to keep abreast of scientific and technical knowledge, and is required to provide policy research and advice to the Government on issues of OSH. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures taken with a view to ensuring that those who design, manufacture, import, provide or transfer machinery, equipment and substances for occupational use undertake studies and research or otherwise keep abreast of the scientific and technical knowledge necessary to comply with subparagraphs (a) and (b) of Article 12.

Article 13. Protection of workers from undue consequences. The Committee notes that the NZCTU is aware that workers in some industries are discouraged by their employers from reporting accidents and incidents relating to occupational harm, and that there are instances where workers are pressured to continue working even where safety guards and other protections are missing. The NZCTU states that while the Government prosecutes severe incidents where accidents have occurred resulting in loss of life or severe impairment, it seldom takes proactive steps to inspect for safety breaches, and that the NZCTU has made submissions regarding the need to lower the threshold of serious harm in health and safety legislation. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that the inspectorate's approach toward small and medium enterprises is focused on increased provision of information and sector engagement, together with stronger enforcement actions, where required, enabling more effective compliance overall; and that revision of the definition of serious harm is under active consideration by the Government. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures taken to address the abovementioned issues identified by the NZCTU, and on changes to the definition of serious harm.

Article 14. Measures to promote the inclusion of occupational safety and health at all levels of education and training. The Committee notes the NZCTU's statement that the 2009 government budget reduced funding for a number of areas of tertiary education, including regulatory compliance and health and safety qualifications, and that there have also been substantial cuts in training of workplace health and safety representatives. The Committee notes the Government's indication that conformity with this Convention is not affected, as the rights and obligations of employers and workers remain unaffected by these shifts, and that the Government will look at future options for the resourcing of health and safety representative training. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the effect reduced funding has had on the promotion of OSH at all levels of education and training, and to indicate measures taken to continue to give effect to Article 14.

Article 17. Two or more undertakings engaged in activities simultaneously at one workplace. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that, being a performance-based piece of legislation, the HSE Act addresses coordination and collaboration on health and safety in workplaces with two or more undertakings through a combination of duties on various parties, as well as the express requirement for employers to take all practicable steps to ensure the safety of employees at work. The Committee also notes with interest the information indicating that the Government is in the process of amending legislation to create a specific duty to collaborate where business undertakings share a workplace at the same time. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the amended legislation once it has been adopted.

Article 19. Arrangements at the level of the undertaking. The Committee notes the NZCTU's statement that there is no specific provision for health and safety representatives to have adequate work time or resources to carry out their duties under the HSE Act, and that in practice many representatives carry out their health and safety duties in addition to their regular work duties and in their own time. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that paid leave for adequate health and safety training is provided for under section 19E of the HSE Act, and that implicit in the employer's duty is that health and safety representatives should be provided with reasonable opportunities to carry out their health and safety responsibilities. The Committee asks the Government to indicate measures taken to address the issues identified above by the NZCTU, and to provide further information on the application in practice of section 19E of the HSE Act.

Article 20. Cooperation between management and workers. The Committee notes Business New Zealand's concern that the HSE Act's requirement to have a health and safety representative, or committee, constitutes a disincentive for workers in general to involve themselves in health and safety matters. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that Part 2A of the HSE Act creates a duty for employers to provide reasonable opportunities for workers to participate effectively in ongoing processes for the improvement of health and safety in their place of work. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the application of this Article in practice, with reference to Business New Zealand's concerns regarding the cooperation between management and workers.

Article 21. Expenditure for workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that under section 10(2)(b) of the HSE Act, employers are required to take all practical steps to provide, make accessible to, and ensure the use by the workers, of suitable clothing and equipment to protect them from any harm that may be caused by, or may arise out of, the hazard. The Committee also notes that the NZCTU is aware that many contracted workers are not provided with protective clothing or equipment, and if they supply such items, they are expected to pay for them. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that the duty under section 10(2)(b) does not apply to a principal in relation to contracted workers, and that while a principal is still responsible for the safety of contracted workers, this does not include the provision of such clothing and equipment. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the cost-free nature of all occupational safety and health measures, not just protective clothing and equipment; and to provide further information on the application of this Article in practice, with particular reference to contracted workers.

Part III and Part V of the report form. Decisions of courts of law; and application in practice. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on these Parts of the report form. The Committee asks the Government to include information on whether courts of law, or other tribunals, have given decisions involving questions of principle relating to the application of the Convention; to give a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country; and to attach extracts from inspection reports and, where such exists, information on the number of workers covered by the legislation; the number and nature of the contraventions reported; and the number, nature and cause of accidents reported.

Nicaragua

Article 13. Protection against accidents and in emergencies. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain the information requested in its 2004 direct request. In that direct request, the Committee noted the Government's indication that under section 166, relating to the preparation of emergency plans, of the 1998 Regulations respecting technical protection against ionizing radiations, the recommendations used are those contained in the October 2003 document "Method for developing arrangements for response to a nuclear or radiological emergency: Emergency preparedness and response". It noted that the definition of "emergency" contained in this document justifies the exceptional exposure of workers in the event of occurrences which require, inter alia, interventions to reduce the adverse effects on property. The Committee observed that this definition appears incompatible with section 189 of the 1998 Regulations respecting technical protection against ionizing radiations, which provides that workers participating in an intervention may undergo exposure resulting in the maximum permissible dose for occupational exposure in a single year being exceeded solely for the purpose of saving lives or preventing serious injury, avoiding a high collective dose or preventing the development of catastrophic situations. In this respect, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the information contained in paragraphs V.27 to V.32 of the 1994 Basic Standards of Radiation Protection and paragraph 35(c)(iii) of its 1992 general observation under the Convention, namely that exceptional exposure of workers is not justified for the purpose of rescuing "items of high material value". Consequently, the Committee invited the Government to take the necessary measures to correct the apparent contradictions between the legislation and the recommendations of the October 2003 document entitled “Method for developing arrangements for response to a nuclear or radiological emergency: Emergency preparedness and response”, with a view to limiting the exposure of workers to what is strictly necessary for the purpose of limiting acute danger to life and health. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the manner in which it is ensured that the workers participating in an intervention cannot be exposed to such an extent that the maximum permissible dose for occupational exposure in a single year is exceeded for the purpose of rescuing items of high material value, but only in order to save lives or prevent serious injury, avoid a high collective dose or prevent the development of catastrophic situations.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that, under section 206 of the 1998 Regulations respecting technical protection against ionizing radiations, all inspections and audits are documented and, emphasizing that inspectors’ reports constitute an important component in assessing the application of the Convention, it requested the Government to provide extracts from the reports drawn by the Directorate-General for Occupational Safety and Health, which is the competent authority to monitor the application of the provisions of the Convention. Noting that the Government has not provided the requested information, the Committee once again requests it to provide this information and to indicate the number of workers engaged in activities involving exposure to ionizing radiations and who are accordingly covered by the Convention.

Legislation. The Committee notes with interest Act No. 618, the General Occupational Safety and Health Act, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, No. 133, of 13 July 2007, and Decree No. 96-2007 issued under the Act. It welcomes the fact that section 5 of the Act provides that “the standards, decisions, and instructions prepared and published by the Ministry of Labour shall comply with the principles of preventive policies set out in the present Act, and in the international Conventions of the International Labour Organization (ILO) and the Labour Code”. Observing that these instruments appear to facilitate the ratification of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), its Protocol of 2002, and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), the Committee draws the Government’s attention to paragraphs 295 and 296 of its General Survey on Convention No. 155. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. Prohibition of the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of machinery of which the dangerous parts are without appropriate guards. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government refers to the Ministerial Standard on minimum health and safety provisions for equipment used at work, published on 9 April 1996, section 3(a)(2) of which provides that the equipment used for work that is placed at the disposal of workers shall comply with the safety requirements established by the competent administrative authority for work equipment to be freely commercially available. The Committee notes that this provision refers to “the safety requirements established by the competent administrative authority”, but that the Government’s report does not indicate these requirements. As a result, the Committee is not able to ascertain whether the safety requirements established by the competent authority give effect to Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide copies of any provisions that specify the “safety requirements” mentioned by the Government in its report and information on the competent authorities which monitor their application. The committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to give effect to each paragraph under Article 2 of the Convention and Article 4, including information regarding the obligations of the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner, or the exhibitor; and the prohibition contained in Article 2(1) of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the application of Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention in practice.

Articles 6, 7 and 11. Use of machinery any dangerous part of which is without appropriate guards. Prohibition of the use of machinery without guards. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that Annex 1 to the Ministerial Standard referred to above, in paragraphs 6–11 respecting “Protection measures and safety guards on equipment used for work” and Annex 2 of the Ministerial Standard set out in law these Articles of the Convention.

Article 15, paragraph 1. Measures of application and penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the effective application of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government refers to sections 322 and 326 of the General Occupational Safety and Health Act and observes that these provisions refer to the obligations of the employer, as subsection 1 refers to the obligations and penalties deriving from the provisions of the Convention. The Committee wishes to point out that certain provisions of the Convention, such as Articles 2 and 4, establish obligations for other persons, such as the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner, the exhibitor and their respective agents. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the application of Article 15, paragraph 1, of the Convention, particularly in conjunction with Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention.

Article 15, paragraph 2. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the labour inspection services in relation to Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention.

Norway

Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee takes note of the last report received from the Government referring to the observations made by the Confederation of Norwegian Business and Industry (NHO). It would draw the Government's attention to the following points.

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Consultation with employers' and workers' organizations on national policy related to chemicals. With regard to the comments of the NHO on the current development of a strategic legislation on chemicals in the EU, the Government acknowledges that the competent authorities are not always able to monitor the development of the new European chemicals rules "REACH" (Registration, Evaluation and Authorization of Chemicals) in detail as would be desirable due to lack of resources. The Committee requests the Government to explain the implications the above-indicated lack of monitoring it has with regard to consultations to be held with the most representative organizations of employers and workers with a view to the formulation, implementation and periodical review of a coherent national policy designed to give effect to the provisions of this Convention.

Article 5. Prohibition and restriction of hazardous chemicals. As concerns the competent authority having the power to prohibit or restrict the use of certain hazardous chemicals, the Government indicates that the Norwegian Pollution Control Authority governs the implementation of the European Restrictions Directive (76/769/EEC) through the Regulations on restrictions in the use of health – and environmentally – hazardous chemicals and other products. The Committee however notes that the provisions of the above Norwegian Regulation do not include provisions regarding the prohibition or restriction of certain hazardous chemicals. It therefore requests the Government to indicate the legal provision or text, which enables the Norwegian Pollution Control Authority to prohibit or restrict the use of certain hazardous chemicals.

Article 6. Classification system of chemicals. With regard to systems and specific criteria appropriate for the classification of chemicals according to their type and degree of their inherent health and physical hazards and for assessing the relevance of information required to determine whether a chemical is hazardous, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, following the comments of the NHO Regulation No. 1139 of 2002 on classification, labelling, etc., of dangerous chemicals, adopted to implement the European Directives on dangerous substances and preparations, have not been revised since. Hence, Regulation No. 1139 of 2002 still contains certain exceptions from the corresponding European Directives as regards the requirements set for the classification and labelling of 12 individual substances containing organic solvents. However, these exceptions will apply until 1 July 2005. Hence, given the deadline of 1 July 2005, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether it intends to adopt regulations which do not provide for any exceptions regarding the classification requirements of dangerous chemicals, in order to give full effect to Article 6 of the Convention. As to the competent authority responsible for the classification of chemicals as hazardous, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, following changes of names, the bodies competent for supervising compliance with Regulation No. 1139 of 2002, on classification, labelling, etc., of dangerous chemicals are the Norwegian Control Authority, the Directorate of Labour Inspection, the Directorate for Civil Protection and Emergency Planning and the Petroleum Safety Authority. The Committee requests the Government to explain whether the above authorities may act independently or whether they have to coordinate their activities.

Part III of the report form. Tribunal decisions and investigations on cases involving questions related to the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the compilation of cases which are under investigation or where fines have been imposed. It notes that the fines have been mostly imposed for violations of provisions of the Working Environment Act. The Committee further notes that in some cases the fines have not been accepted. It therefore requests the Government to indicate the legal consequences to be faced by enterprises which do not accept the fine imposed on them due to the violation of legislation. As to the cases which are still under investigation, the Committee asks the Government to keep it informed about their results. With regard to the case against "Jotun", the Committee notes the Government's indication that this case first was not pursued further in 2000 and that the National Authority for Investigation and Prosecution of Economic and Environmental Crime, after having considered reopening the case, had decided in December 2001 not to do so. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the subject of this case and to specify the grounds for not having reopened the case.

Part V of the report form. Practical application. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no systematic study has been made regarding the effects of the Convention on employment and occupation. However, the Labour Inspection Authority has taken steps to enhance the scope and quality of its supervision related to chemical health hazards. To this effect, the inspection officers have been trained and the Labour Inspection Authority is currently conducting a major campaign in four different industries, the objective of which is to raise the knowledge on chemical health hazards and to reduce the probability that workers develop solvent-related disorders as well as skin and respiratory diseases. A further result of this campaign will be a better implementation of this Convention in enterprises. The Committee requests the Government to supply, with its next report, information on the outcome of this campaign. With regard to statistics showing the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country, the Government indicates that, while no statistics are available on the number of violations of the chemicals legislation, statistics on the number of sanctions applied are available for the years 2002 and 2003. The Committee, while noting the statistical data on the number of sanctions applied, invites the Government to proceed to the establishment of statistics containing both the number of violations recorded and the number of sanctions imposed. The Committee would draw the Government's attention to the fact that information on the number of sanctions imposed could only serve as indicator for the application of a Convention in practice, if it is linked with information on the number of violations recorded.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Paraguay

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report. It takes note of a CD, which, according to the report, is the first digital publication of the labour legislation and includes the Occupational Safety, Health and Medicine Technical Regulations, as well as the Recommendation to the Convention. The CD was produced with support from the ILO HIV/AIDS Programme in Paraguay. The report indicates that to have further ILO support in this area would be most important since it has become clear that workers are not familiar with the labour legislation, particularly the parts relating to the prevention of occupational accidents and diseases.

Article 3 of the Convention. Cases where it is doubtful whether an establishment, institution, or administrative service is one to which the Convention applies. The Government states that problems have been detected in the case of subcontracting enterprises, which hire the services of outside personnel, and that the responsibility for workers' rights becomes blurred in the process. In this connection the Ministry of Justice and Labour signed an agreement in September 2008 with the Public Procurement Unit to make compliance with the labour legislation and occupational health and safety standards an express requirement, and to establish that the cost structure include social benefits and the purchase of individual protective equipment, and that contracts lay down penalties for non-compliance. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information in this regard and hopes that the Office can continue to provide the Government with the necessary technical assistance.

Article 6, paragraph 1, and Part IV of the report form. Appropriate measures taken by the inspectorate and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes with interest the Government's unflagging efforts to improve safety and health inspection and to provide information. The Government indicates that in the previous administration, for the period 2007–08, inspections were carried out in response to complaints and sometimes ex officio. The Government further indicates that in the period 2008–09, in view of the number of reports of corruption in the inspection process, the following measures have been taken: inspection forms have been produced in order to standardize and systematize the information obtained; procedures have been analysed in order to optimize deadlines; emphasis has been placed on dissemination of information; operations have been carried out under the programme "Decent work in rural areas, the construction sector, cattle raising and other establishments"; ex officio inspections have been carried out, there being too few inspectors to respond to complaints. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, on the work of the inspection service in this area and on its impact and its results.

Poland

The Committee notes with interest the comprehensive information provided in the Government's report, and the attached legislation, which give effect to virtually all provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes particularly the detailed statistical data and the analysis thereof submitted by the Government on the application of, in particular, Articles 10–15 of the Convention. This information enables the Committee to have a more detailed appreciation of how the Convention is applied in practice. The Committee invites the Government to pursue its efforts to collect and analyse relevant statistical data in this manner.

Article 6, paragraph 4 of the Convention. Progressive extension of classification systems and their application. The Committee notes that the Government's report did not contain any information on the application of this provision. The Committee asks the Government to indicate measures undertaken or envisaged to progressively extend the classification systems and their application.

Article 10, paragraph 4. Employers shall maintain a record of hazardous chemicals. The Committee notes the information on the application in practice of this Article, which indicates that the lack of valid safety data sheets for chemical substances and preparations at workplaces was identified more frequently in 2008 than in the previous year, with 49 per cent of inspected employers not possessing a valid register of hazardous substances used in the workplace. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures taken to address the lack of valid safety data sheets in workplaces.

Article 11. Transfer of chemicals. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that in more than half of the inspected workplaces, the process for transferring chemical substances and preparations into smaller containers did not allow for the identification of them and their associated hazards. The irregularities in this regard related to 18 per cent of containers and equipment in the workplace, which were inspected in 2008. Inappropriately labelled gas pipelines for transferring hazardous chemicals were found in 55 per cent of the inspected workplaces. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the measures taken to address the inconsistency in workplaces with regard to the transfer of chemicals into other containers or equipment.

Article 12. Exposure. The Committee notes the information indicating that in 2008, 34 per cent of inspected employers, whose workers were exposed to hazardous chemicals, and who measured these chemicals, did not possess the required documentation (a register and measurement sheets), whereas in 4 per cent of workplaces the threshold limit value was exceeded. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures taken to address the high number of employers who omit to identify hazardous agents present in workplaces, which require testing or measurement.

Article 13. Operational control. The Committee notes the information that in 2008, as in the previous year, a lack of documented risk assessment was found in every fifth inspected workplace using chemicals, and that in one third of inspected workplaces the employers did not provide workers with personal protective equipment in workstations where such protection is required. Furthermore, there was a significant rise in the cases of inspected employers not ensuring the washing of protective or work clothes soiled by chemicals. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures taken to address the abovementioned issues on employer obligations with regard to risk management on the use of chemicals at work.

Article 14. Disposal of waste. The Committee notes the information indicating that inspections carried out in 2007–08, in over 200 workplaces, revealed irregularities related to, among other things, the storage and disposal of waste containers after using hazardous chemical substances and preparations. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures taken to address the irregularities with regard to disposal of wastes of hazardous chemicals.

Article 15. Information and training. The Committee notes the information indicating that almost half of the controlled employers in 2008 did not provide workers with necessary information about the hazards associated with dangerous chemicals. In particular, people from outside the workplace, for example companies offering renovation and maintenance services at the workplace, suppliers, receivers, etc. were insufficiently informed about chemical hazards. Moreover, employees were not instructed on how to behave in emergency situations. The Committee notes the information by the Government indicating measures taken to eliminate the abovementioned irregularities, including the issuing, by labour inspectors, of appropriate decisions and recommendations, provided for in the legal provisions. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken to address the irregularities with regard to information and training on hazards associated with chemicals at the workplace.

Portugal

Legislation. The Committee notes with satisfaction that Legislative Decree No. 222/2008 of 17 November 2008 gives effect to Articles 7(1) and (2) and 8 of the Convention and which establishes the maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiations which are in conformity with the exposure limits recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) to which the Committee referred in its 1992 general observation on the Convention; that this Decree repeals section 31 of Regulatory Decree No. 9-90 as requested by the Committee for several years, and that Legislative Decree No. 227/2008 of 25 November 2008 regulates the training of future specialists in the protection against ionizing radiations. The Committee also notes that the Government has included observations by the General Workers' Union (UGT) which state that the abovementioned Decree No. 227/2008 is essential to fill gaps in training of specialists in the protection against ionizing radiations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Rwanda

Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 51/2001 of 30 December 2001 issuing the Labour Code. It notes in particular that section 198 of the Code repeals the orders implementing the Act of 28 February 1987 issuing the Labour Code. Ordinance No. 21/94 of 23 July 1953, referred to in the Government's report as the text regulating occupational safety in the building industry, has been repealed. The Centre of Workers' Unions of Rwanda (CESTRAR) likewise mentions in its comments that the abovementioned Ordinance appears to have been repealed, which leaves a legal void since it was the only text governing health and safety at work in the building industry. The Government states in this connection that the provisions that are not inconsistent with the 2001 Labour Code remain in force. It indicates, however, that it is in the process of drafting orders to implement section 135 of the new Labour Code. The Committee therefore hopes that in order to fill the legal vacuum and avoid any ambiguity, the Government will promptly take the necessary steps to draft and enact a regulatory text to apply the provisions of this Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of it as soon as it is adopted.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention, in conjunction with Part V of the report form. The Committee notes the labour inspectorate's report for 2003 on public buildings and works. It notes the information supplied by the Government, and confirmed by CESTRAR, that most workers in the building sector are day labourers and casual workers, but do not appear in the files of the labour inspectorate which contain the names only of permanent workers. This is because employers have no obligations to day labourers or casual workers other than a daily remuneration. The Committee therefore observes that the data in the report of the labour inspectorate do not reflect the real situation of the safety and health of workers employed in this sector. The Government indicates that in view of these circumstances inspection visits will be increased. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the activities of the inspectorate cover all workers employed in the building industry and that, as a result, inspection reports cover not only permanent workers, but also day labourers and casual workers, who appear to make up the majority of the workers in this sector. The Committee recalls in this connection that it can assess the manner in which practical effect is given to the Convention in Rwanda only on the basis of information that covers all workers, regardless of the type of contracts they hold. The Committee notes that according to CESTRAR, the labour inspectorate lacks the capacity and means to carry out its work effectively because in Rwanda there is currently a boom in building and the construction sector in general. The Government indicates that efforts are under way to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to provide details of the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

San Marino

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes with interest the detailed information provided by the Government in its report. It notes, in particular, the information regarding the adoption of a national “Social Plan of the Republic of San Marino 2006–2008” taking an innovative approach to occupational safety and health including closer collaboration with universities and research centres with the objective of participating in international research projects and increasing awareness among professionals and citizens. It also notes the information regarding the adoption of numerous pieces of legislation in the area of occupational safety and health including Decree No. 25 of 26 February 2006, amending Decrees No. 74 of 17 May 2005 and No. 139 of 30 October 2003, which prescribe collaboration between several employers at temporary or mobile work sites and give effect to Article 6(2) of the Convention. The Committee also notes the information regarding effect given to Articles 12–15.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Senegal

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 7 of the Convention. Statistical information. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information contained in the Government’s brief report to the effect that statistics on cases of morbidity and mortality due to lead poisoning among working painters are not available at the Social Security Office, the body responsible for dealing with occupational diseases. The Government indicates that this situation is due, firstly, to the fact that occupational diseases are not declared by the employers or workers concerned and, secondly, to the lack of studies in this very complex sector of activity, in which workers do not make the connection between their work and the disease, which, if necessary, may be declared several years after they have stopped working. However, the Government refers to just one case of work-related asthma developed by a working painter as a result of his employment recorded by the Social Security Office. The Committee would like to remind the Government once again that it has been asking it to supply statistical information since 1981. The Committee requests the Government to take all appropriate steps to develop a system for the collection of statistical information enabling, among other things, the identification of cases of morbidity and mortality due to lead poisoning among working painters in order to give full effect to Article 7 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Serbia

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the information provided in the Government’s reports, the attached documentation, and the observations submitted by the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia concerning the application of this Convention in practice. The Committee asks the Government to supply a copy of the Occupational Safety and Health Law (O.G. 101/05) with its next report.

Article 3 of the Convention. Definitions. The Committee notes the information indicating that the terms defined in the national legislation have the same meaning and definitions as those in the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide reference to specific provisions in national legislation which provide for the definitions of the terms listed in Article 3.

Article 4, paragraph 1, and Article 5, subparagraphs (a) to (f). National policy and main spheres of action. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the adoption of a national occupational safety and health policy. The Committee asks the Government to supply a copy of the National Occupational Safety and Health Policy; and to indicate the specific measures taken to address each of the main spheres of action under Article 5, subparagraphs (a) to (f).

Article 7. Review, at appropriate intervals, of the situation regarding occupational safety and health. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating the preparation, by the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy, of an annual report on the state of affairs and issues in the field of occupational safety and health in Serbia. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of this review process and how this review affects the development of the national policy in the country.

Article 11, subparagraphs (a) to (f). Functions to give progressive effect to the national policy. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy has, through its legislative activities, and inspection and monitoring, secured the implementation of the national policy. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the specific measures undertaken by the competent authority to ensure that the functions of the individual subsections of Article 11 are progressively carried out.

Article 12, subparagraphs (a) to (c). Responsibilities on those who design, manufacture, import, provide or transfer machinery, equipment and substances for occupational use. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating general product safety and criteria for assessing a product's conformity with general safety requirements. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures undertaken with regard to the assessment of safety, and the making available of information, by those who design, manufacture, import, provide or transfer substances for occupational use (subparagraphs (a) and (b)); and the undertaking of studies and research or otherwise keeping abreast of the scientific and technical knowledge (subparagraph (c)).

Article 13. Protection of workers from undue consequences. The Committee notes the information indicating that section 33 of the Occupational Safety and Health Law prescribes the right of workers to refuse to work where there is an immediate threat to their life or health. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures undertaken, in law and in practice, to ensure that workers who refuse to work under section 33, are protected from undue consequences.

Article 15, paragraph 1. Coordination between various authorities and bodies called upon to give effect to Parts II and III of the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that a permanent working body in charge of occupational safety and health issues has been set up. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the specific measures undertaken to ensure the coordination required under paragraph 1 of Article 15.

Article 19, subparagraph (e). Right of workers, or their representatives, to inquire into all aspects of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes the information indicating that under section 45 of the Occupational Safety and Health Law the employer is required to allow the workers' representative, namely the Board, to participate in the review of all issues related to implementation of safety and health at work. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on measures undertaken to allow workers, or their representatives, to inquire into all aspects of occupational safety and health, and whether for this purpose, technical advisers may, by mutual agreement, be brought in from outside the undertaking.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia's statement indicating that in practice there are considerable problems in connection with the application of provisions related to occupational safety and health, health care and working conditions, and that environmentally harmful incidents which have occurred recently in the chemical industry can be attributed, amongst other things, to inadequate measures related to safety and health at work. The Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia further observes that there are a high number of cases of occupational accidents in the construction sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on measures taken to address the issues identified above by the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia; and to attach extracts from inspection reports and, where such exist, information on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of the contraventions reported, and the number, nature and cause of accidents reported.

Sierra Leone

The Committee notes that the Government's summary report submitted in June 2004 indicated that the Government had no new developments to report and notes with regret that the Government's report for this year has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

For a number of years, the Committee has drawn the attention of the Government to the fact that the national legislation does not contain provisions to give effect to Part II of the Convention (prohibition of the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of unguarded machinery) and that it does not provide for the full application of Article 17 of the Convention (which applies to all sectors of economic activity), as it is not applicable to certain branches of activity, inter alia, sea, air or land transport and mining.

Since 1979, in reply to the Committee's comments, the Government has indicated in its reports that a Bill to revise the 1974 Factories Act was being drafted and would contain provisions consistent with those of the Convention, and would apply to all the branches of economic activity. In its latest report (received in 1986), the Government indicates that the draft Factories Bill, 1985, has been examined by the competent parliamentary committee and is to be submitted to Parliament for adoption.

With its report for the period ending 30 June 1991, the Government supplied a copy of extracts of the Factories Bill containing provisions which should give effect to Part II of the Convention. In this connection, the Government was requested to indicate the stage of the legislative procedure reached by the Bill and the body which was in the process of examination of the Bill. Since no information has been provided by the Government in this respect, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the abovementioned Bill will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to provide a copy of this text, once it has been adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Slovenia

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with satisfaction the information provided by the Government indicating the adoption of Rules on the protection of workers from risks related to exposure to vibration at work (No. 94/2005); recent legislative amendments to the Rules on the protection of workers from risks related to exposure to chemical substances at work (No. 53/2007), and the Rules on the protection of workers from risk related to exposure to noise at work (No. 18/2006) which indicate effect given to Article 3, Article 4, Article 8(1) and (3), Article 9, Article 12 and Article 15 of the Convention.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its latest report, and the observations received by the Confederation of New Trade Unions of Slovenia—"Neodvisnost". The Committee also notes recent amendments to the General Practitioner Services Act and the Health Services Act, and the responses provided by the Government indicating further effect given to Article 1(a); Article 3; Article 5(b); Article 6(a); and Article 10 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on relevant legislative and other measures taken to give effect to the Convention.

Article 8. Cooperation between employers, workers and their representatives in the undertaking, and the occupational health services. The Committee notes the Confederation of New Trade Unions of Slovenia "Neodvisnost"'s indication that workers' representatives in manufacturing companies are usually not familiar with risk assessments prepared by authorized medical practitioners, and their opinion is also not taken into consideration in the preparation of such assessments. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to address the abovementioned issue, and to indicate measures to ensure that there is cooperation between employers, workers, and their representatives, in an undertaking, and the occupational health services engaged to provide health services.

Article 15. Occupational health services shall be informed of ill health among workers and absence from work for health reasons. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that, according to section 13 of the rules concerning preventive medical examinations of workers, a medical practitioner shall obtain the worker's medical file prior to the medical examination, in order to assess the worker's compliance with specific health requirements for specific work. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide further information on the specific measures undertaken to ensure that occupational health services are informed of occurrences of ill health among workers, and absence from work for health reasons, particularly in situations where such information is not apparent in the workers' medical files.

Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating the high number of deficiencies regarding provision of preventive medical examinations, particularly in the construction sector, which has been identified during labour inspections. The Committee also notes the Confederation of New Trade Unions of Slovenia—"Neodvisnost"'s statement which indicates that a private medical practitioner allegedly carried out 70 preventive health examinations in one day; that employers order safety statements from the cheapest provider and keep them only to comply with regulations; that these statements are often of low quality; and are not revised or amended when new technological processes are introduced. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to address the issues identified above, both by the labour inspectorate and the Confederation of New Trade Unions of Slovenia—"Neodvisnost"; and to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice.

Sweden

The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report including reference to the 2009 amendments to the Work Environment Act, which give further effect to the Convention. The Committee notes with satisfaction that Chapter 3 of the Work Environment Act now requires a building environment coordinator for the conduct of building and civil engineering work to be specially appointed and tasked with coordinating the conduct of the work with regard to the work environment, including an added duty of supervising the work of subcontractors in compliance with Article 8 of the Convention, that this legislative amendment also applies to foreign self-employed workers, and that in the course of supervision, the provision of instructions in the foreign workers' own language, when needed, has been promoted. The Committee also notes the amendments to improve the safety and health requirements at temporary or mobile construction sites which also constitute compliance with European Directive No. 92/57/EEC on this subject. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on legislative measures taken with regard to the Convention.

Part VI of the report form. Application in practice. Based on statistical information provided by the Government, the Committee notes, as in its previous comments, that the number of accidents in the construction industry remains high. The Committee notes the information that the regular supervision within the construction sector is mainly aimed at reducing accidents, for example fall accidents, and that a number of prohibitions are directed towards companies conducting roof work with unsatisfactory safety devices. The Committee also notes that 159 injunctions or prohibitions were issued by the authority responsible for the provisions on building and civil engineering work. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, with particular reference to whether any special measures have been taken or are envisaged to bring down the number of accidents in the construction industry, and to provide information on the outcome of the aforementioned injunctions.

Syrian Arab Republic

The Committee notes with interest the information provided in the Government's latest report, including the adoption of the legislative Decree No. 64 of 2005, and the Prime Minister's Decree No. 134 of 2007 on Radiation Protection and Safety and Security of Radiation Sources in Syria, which appears to give further effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also notes the response provided regarding effect given to Article 3, paragraph 1, and Article 6 paragraph 2, of the Convention on the exposure limits for pregnant workers; and Article 7, paragraph 2, on the prohibition of work involving ionising radiations for workers under the age of 16. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on legislative measures undertaken with regards to the Convention, and to submit a copy of Decree No. 64 of 2005 and Decree No. 134 of 2007.

Article 8. Exposure limits for workers not directly engaged in radiation work. The Committee notes the information that section 59 of Decree No. 134 of 2007 stipulates that employers shall ensure, in the same manner as for the general public, the protection of workers who may be exposed to radiation sources which have no relation to their work. The Committee also notes the Government's response indicating that medical exposure, pursuant to section 1 of Decree No. 134 of 2007, is defined as the exposure of sick persons as part of their medical or dental diagnosis or treatment; exposures (other than occupational) incurred knowingly and willingly by individuals helping in the support and comfort of patients undergoing treatment; and exposure incurred by volunteers as part of medical research. The Committee notes the information that section 15 of the abovementioned Decree deals with dose limits for workers and the non-applicability of permissible dose limits in cases of authorized medical exposure, and that Annex II of the Decree specifies dose limits for persons accompanying patients and for volunteers in the field of medical research as 5 mSv during the diagnosis or treatment of any patient and less than 1 mSv for child visitors. The Committee asks the Government to indicate, in the light of paragraph 14 of its 1992 general observation on the Convention, the measures undertaken or envisaged to revise the dose limits currently in force for medical exposure concerning individuals helping in the support and comfort of patients undergoing treatment; and exposure incurred by medical research volunteers.

Occupational exposure limits during emergency situations. The Committee notes the Government's statement that a National Emergency Plan has been established by virtue of Decree No. 1427 of 2002 in order to respond to emergency cases, and that section 10 of Decree No. 64 of 2005 provides that the Atomic Energy Authority shall be responsible for building national capacity to respond to radioactive or nuclear emergencies. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the abovementioned National Emergency Plan and to indicate, with reference to paragraphs 16 to 27 and 35(c) of the Committee's 1992 general observation on the Convention, and paragraphs V.27 and V.30 of the Basic Safety Standards on Radiation Protection issued in 1994, the circumstances in which exceptional exposure of workers, exceeding the normally tolerated dose limit, is to be allowed for immediate and urgent remedial work.

Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the information that section 15 of Decree No. 64 of 2005 stipulates that the responsibility of the Atomic Energy Authority is to conduct inspections of facilities and sites in which radiation sources are used and to appoint inspectors to conduct these inspections, and that section 16 provides that the inspectors have the capacity of judicial police. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the application in practice of the Convention, including the number and nature of contraventions reported and the measures taken to remedy them.

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1979)

Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Periodic determination of the carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited. The Committee notes with satisfaction that Ministerial Order No. 504 of 1989 has been amended by Ministerial Order No. 1510 of 2005 for the purpose of amending the table of occupational diseases in accordance with scientific data and developments on the influence of carcinogenic substances or agents.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Tunisia

Article 6 of the Convention. Statistical information relating to the number and classification of accidents occurring to persons occupied on work within the scope of the Convention. The Committee notes with interest the detailed statistical information, covering the evolution of occupational accidents and diseases in the construction sector for the period 1995–2008, including the detailed analysis of the principal causes of accidents and diseases in this sector in 2008. The Committee notes the relative downward trend in the number of accidents recorded, but that the trend regarding occupational diseases is very irregular. The Committee also notes the detailed information regarding measures taken by the National Health Insurance Institution (CNAM) to address these problems, including the undertaking in 2007 of 1,234 technical assistance missions in affiliated enterprises and, in 2008, 1,307 such missions. The Committee notes with particular interest the information that the number of occupational accidents decreased by 10.8 per cent in 2007 and by 19.3 per cent in 2008 and that the CNAM would undertake similar technical assistance missions in 1,397 enterprises during 2009. The Committee also notes the financial incentives instituted by the Government including financial assistance for prevention programmes covering up to 70 per cent of the cost of the investment; a bonus/malus system concerning insurance fees including reduced premiums for enterprises willing to invest in preventive strategies and increased premiums for those refusing to do so; the imposition of increased insurance premiums as a sanction for breaches of occupational safety and health provisions; the conduct of 14 information seminars (including a seminar specifically concerning occupational safety and health in the construction sector) with the participation of technical specialists from CNAM. The Committee also notes that the Government has adopted a national programme for the management of occupational risks for the period 2009–11 with three main objectives: the promotion of health at work; the promotion of safety at work and a reduction of occupational accidents, in particular fatal and serious accidents. The Committee welcomes this information and invites the Government to continue to provide information on its continuing efforts to improve occupational safety and health conditions, in particular in the construction sector.

Revision of this Convention. The Committee would also like to draw the Government's attention to the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), which revises Convention No. 62 of 1937 and could well be better adapted to the current situation in the building sector. It again points out that the ILO Governing Body invited States parties to Convention No. 62 to envisage the ratification of Convention No. 167, which entails, ipso jure, immediate denunciation of Convention No. 62 (GB.268/8/2). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all possible developments in this respect.

Turkey

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received.

Article 17 of the Convention. Applicability of the Convention to all branches of economic activity. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that the scope of the acts and regulations that came into force in recent years is broader than that of the regulation on the guarding of machinery and that the criteria set forth in Law No. 4703 on reliable products are applicable not only to machinery used in the industrial and commercial sectors but also to machinery used in all sectors of the economy. The Committee also notes the observation by the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) submitted in 2004 alleging that, in their view, national legislation complies with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate, with reference to relevant legislative provisions, how effect is given to this Article.

Part V of the report form and Article 15. Application in practice and appropriate inspection services for the purpose of supervising the application of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes the information in the Government's latest report that the Board of Labour Inspection of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security carried out, in 2003 and 2004, a number of projects for the effective inspection of hazardous economic sectors in terms of occupational safety and health. It notes that inspections to ensure effective control of all the sectors of the economy, including the informal economy, will continue to be carried out in the coming years. Against this background, the Committee notes the observations by the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Turkey (DISK) alleging that Articles 2, 6 and 10 of the Convention are not applied in practice and that the inspection services required in Article 15 are “extremely sporadic and ineffective,” and that 8,771 of the 72,367 industrial accidents registered in 2001 (i.e. 12 per cent) were caused directly by machinery. The Turkish Confederation of Public Workers’ Associations (TÜRKİYE KAMU-SEN) also observed that workplace fatalities and accidents that occur are frequently related to machinery, but that TÜRKİYE KAMU-SEN did not dispose of any specific statistics. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the observations by the DISK and the TÜRKİYE KAMU-SEN regarding the application of the Convention, the availability of appropriate inspection services and to provide detailed information regarding the application of the Convention in practice including, for instance, extracts from official reports.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes the observations submitted on 2 September 2009 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on behalf of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) concerning the application of the Convention transmitted to the Government on 2 October 2009. The Committee hopes that the next report that will be supplied by the Government for examination by the Committee will contain a response to these observations.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes the observations submitted on 2 September 2009 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on behalf of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) concerning the application of Articles 5, 6, 8, 11, 12, 14 and 15 of the Convention, transmitted to the Government on 2 October 2009. The Committee hopes that the next report that will be supplied by the Government for examination by the Committee will contain any comments the Government may wish to provide to these observations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ukraine

Articles 2–4 of the Convention. Sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of power-driven machinery. The Committee notes that the information provided in the latest reports submitted by the Government does not include the requested information regarding national legislation prescribing the responsibilities related to the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of power-driven machinery detailed in these Articles. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take all relevant measures to ensure that effect is given, in law and in practice to Articles 2–4 of the Convention.

Articles 6–14. Prohibition against the use of power-driven machinery with unguarded hazardous parts. The Committee notes that the information provided in the latest reports submitted by the Government includes, inter alia, information regarding numerous technical occupational safety and health standards and rules adopted in 2007–08 which, according to the Government, require that machinery is fitted with guards. Based on this information, the Committee concludes that effect appears to be given to Articles 6 and 8 of the Convention and that use has not been made of Article 9, but that further information is required as regards the effect given to the remaining Articles in Part III of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information regarding specific legislative provisions which give effect to Articles 7 and 10–14 of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government’s two latest reports do not include any response to the observations made by the Federation of Trade Unions in Ukraine in 2002 regarding the application in practice of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to give a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country, including, for instance, extracts from official reports and information on any practical difficulties in the application of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

United Kingdom

Article 7, paragraph 2, of the Convention. Young workers under the age of 16. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government indicating that section 19 of the Management of the Health and Safety at Work Regulations, 1999, and the corresponding Management of the Health and Safety at Work Regulations (Northern Ireland), 2000, prohibit an employer from employing a young person (a person who has not attained the age of 18) for work involving harmful exposure to radiation, unless: it is necessary for that person's training; the young person is supervised by a competent person; and the risk is reduced to the lowest reasonably practicable level. The Committee further notes the Government's intention to review the need for a general prohibition to engage workers under the age of 16 in radiation work. The Committee, having on a number of previous occasions urged the Government to take appropriate action to ensure a full application of this Article, reiterates its hope that this will be undertaken in the very near future and requests the Government to provide precise information in this respect in its next report.

Article 13. Emergency work. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that "without delay" in respect of medical examinations and notification to the competent authority under regulation 14(1)(d) of the Radiation (Emergency Preparedness and Public Information) Regulations, 2001 (REPPPIR), is to be interpreted as meaning "as soon as it is reasonably practicable to do so". With regards to exposure in emergency situations, the Committee notes that according to regulation 11(b) of the Ionising Radiations Regulations, 1999, where an employer is able to demonstrate that the dose limit specified in paragraph 1 of Part I of Schedule 4 is impracticable having regard to the nature of the work undertaken, the employer may apply the dose limits set out in paragraphs 9 to 11 of that Schedule. The Committee further notes that where an emergency plan, prepared pursuant to the REPPPIR, provides for the possibility of any employee receiving an emergency exposure, an employer must notify to the Executive the dose levels which they have determined are appropriate to be applied in respect of such an employee; and that no employee will be exposed to a dose of radiation in excess of this dose level unless they agree, for the purpose of saving human life. The Committee asks the Government to confirm that the maximum dose limits in an emergency exposure situation, regulating exposure of individuals implementing the necessary rapid action to bring help to endangered individuals, prevent exposure of a large number of people or save a valuable installation or goods, are those specified in Part II of Schedule 4, and that these maximum dose limits can only be exceeded for the purpose of saving human life.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Anguilla

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148)

The Committee notes that in reply to its previous comments, the Government has again indicated that regulations have not yet been issued to ensure the protection of workers against hazards due to air pollution, but that pursuant to the Public Health Act, Chapter P 125, the Minister of Health is empowered to take all necessary action to remove and correct any nuisance that may be injurious to public health and that the environmental health officers have the power to enter into any workplace and make any inspection or examination as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of the Act, and that the Minister also has the power to make regulations for the protection of the health of persons exposed to conditions, substances or processes, which occur in any industry or occupation that may be injurious to health. It also notes that although no such regulations have yet been adopted, the Government indicates that it will give consideration to developing such regulations.

The Committee recalls that the obligations under this Convention in respect of air pollution were accepted and made applicable to Anguilla by declaration without modification on 11 July 1980, and that the Committee has in several previous comments since 1991 drawn the attention of the Government to Article 4 of the Convention which provides that national laws or regulations shall prescribe that measures be taken for the prevention and control of, and protection against occupational hazards in the working environment due to air pollution and that provisions concerning the practical implementation of these measures may be adopted through technical standards, codes of practice or other appropriate methods. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures either by means of adopting regulations under section 20(1) of Labour Ordinance No. 8 of 1996 or by adopting other appropriate methods to ensure the protection of workers against hazards due to air pollution and invites the Government to report on progress in this respect.

Uruguay

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1980)

Legislation. The Committee notes with interest Decree No. 306/005 of 14 September 2005 concerning the chemical industry, which lays down compulsory minimum provisions for the management of risk prevention and protection against risks arising, or potentially arising, from productive activities in that industry. The Decree was drawn up with tripartite participation and establishes rights, principles and obligations for workers and employers, a tripartite national commission in the sector and participatory bodies at the enterprise level. The Committee also notes Ordinance No. 145/09 of 13 March 2009 establishing the basic regime covering various chemical and physical risk factors and determining medical controls for public and private industrial, commercial or service undertakings. The Committee also notes other standards for combating cancer in general terms, such as Decree No. 202/005 of 2005 establishing the National Programme to Combat Cancer (PRONACAN).

Article 1 of the Convention. Periodic determination of the carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited or made subject to authorization or control. The Committee notes the statement in the Government's report that there is specific legislation covering radiation and asbestos. The Committee will refer to that legislation in its examination of the application of the specific Conventions in these areas. In its previous comments the Committee urged the Government to take steps to give effect to this Article of the Convention by establishing a mechanism for determining the carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure should be prohibited or made subject to authorization or control. The Committee notes that the Government has not replied to this question. The Committee notes, however, that Decree No. 306/005 contains an appendix on safety and health measures relating to exposure to chemical risks which lists a series of substances which constitute a risk factor. Section 3 of the Decree states that the reference values for the list will be updated annually by the Directorate-General of Health, in line with the latest information published of the American Conference of Government Industrial Hygienists (ACGIH). Although the Committee welcomes the reference to the ACGIH, it is not clear whether the updating referred to in section 3 applies solely to the reference factors or also includes the listed carcinogenic substances and agents. The Committee reminds the Government that the key aspect of Article 1 of the Convention is to determine a list of carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited or made subject to authorization or control and to establish a mechanism for periodic revision. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the list of carcinogenic substances and agents covered by the provisions of Article 1(1) of the Convention is determined and periodically updated.

Article 3. Protective measures. The Committee notes the statement in the Government's report that efforts are made to have carcinogenic substances and agents replaced and, in cases where this is not possible, controls are carried out by the Environmental Health Division and protocols are drawn up with regard to the protection of workers. The Committee requests the Government to supply further information on the application of this Article in law and in practice.

Article 5. Medical examinations of workers during and after the period of employment. The Committee notes that Ordinance No. 145/09 referred to previously establishes a basic regime covering various chemical and physical risk factors, the respective medical tests and analyses which workers must undergo and the time at which such tests and analyses must be carried out. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee reminds the Government that, under the terms of this Article, these examinations must also be carried out after the period of employment. The Committee requests the Government to make provision in law and in practice for medical examinations following the period of employment and requests it to provide information in this respect.

Article 6, paragraph (c). Measures to ensure appropriate inspection. The Committee notes that, according to Decree No. 306/005, the General Labour and Social Security Inspectorate (IGTSS) will chair the tripartite sectoral commission (section 7), and the tripartite sectoral commission has been assigned other functions related to labour inspection (section 9). The Committee requests the Government once again to supply information on the organization, functions and powers of the inspection services responsible for enforcing the provisions of the Convention, indicating whether it has taken steps to ensure that inspections are carried out as a matter of routine and not only following complaints, and requests it to supply information on the activity of the tripartite sectoral commission aimed at improving the effectiveness of the IGTSS in relation to the Convention.

Part IV of the report form. The Committee requests the Government once again to provide statistical information on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of infringements reported, and the number of occupational diseases reported in relation to the Convention.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1988)

Article 8 of the Convention. Criteria for determining the hazards of exposure to air pollution, noise and vibration in the working environment and exposure limits. For several years the Committee has been asking the Government to take the necessary steps to give effect to this Article of the Convention. It notes from the report that no such measures have been taken. The Committee expresses its concern since this Article is fundamental to the application of the Convention. According to this provision, the competent authority must establish criteria for determining hazards of exposure to air pollution, noise and vibration in the workplace, and specify exposure limits on the basis of these criteria. The Committee urges the Government to adopt measures to establish such criteria and limits and to provide information in this regard. It asks the Government to indicate the criteria currently applied to determine the hazards of exposure referred to in the Convention.

Article 10. Suitable personal protective equipment. The Committee notes from the report that no measures have been taken to give effect to this Article. It points out to the Government that this provision is closely related to Article 8 of the Convention since it establishes that when the measures taken fail to bring air pollution, noise and vibration within the limits specified in pursuance of Article 8, the employer shall provide suitable personal protective equipment. In other words, application of this provision implies prior determination of the criteria and limits referred to in Article 8, and the measures indicated in Article 9. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to apply this Article of the Convention, both in law and in practice, and to provide information in this regard.

Article 11, paragraph 3. Alternative employment and other measures taken for the maintenance of workers' income; Article 12. Processes, substances, machinery and equipment the use of which must be notified to the competent authority and prohibition by the competent authority; Article 13. Information on hazards and adequate and suitable instructions for preventing and controlling them. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no relevant measures have been taken. It requests the Government to take all necessary measures to give effect in law and in practice to these Articles of the Convention and to provide detailed information in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Decree No. 291/2007 of 13 August 2007 issuing regulations to Act No. 15965 of 28 June 1988 adopting this Convention, and Decree No. 307/009 of 3 July 2009 laying down compulsory minimum standards for the protection of safety and health of workers against hazards arising out of chemical agents, which gives effect in law to Articles 5, 11, 19 and 21 of the Convention, referred to by the Committee in its previous comments. Noting that Decree No. 307/009 facilitates application of the Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170), the Committee invites the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying the latter, and to provide information in this regard.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Scope. The Committee welcomes the fact that section 1 of Decree No. 291/007 lays down compulsory minimum provisions for managing prevention of and protection against hazards that arise or may arise out of any activity, be it commercial, industrial, rural or a service, whether or not carried out for profit and whether in the public or the private sphere.

Article 4. Formulation, implementation and periodical review of a coherent national policy. Sectoral tripartite committees. The Committee notes that section 12 of Decree No. 291/2007 establishes that for the purpose of applying the Convention, in every sector or branch of activity a sectoral tripartite committee shall be established for the formulation, implementation, and periodical assessment of a national policy on occupational safety and health and the working environment and of the means by which it is applied. The sectoral tripartite committees shall be composed of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security through the General Labour Inspectorate, which shall chair it, and representatives of employers and workers. While taking note of this important step towards the formulation of a national policy, the Committee notes that the law does not provide for mechanisms and bodies with which the tripartite committees are to work in order to formulate, implement and periodically review a coherent national policy. The Committee notes that according to section 16 of Decree No. 291/2007, the sectoral tripartite committees have recourse to the National Council on Occupational Safety and Health; however it appears that this in itself is not sufficient to ensure that the sectoral tripartite committees cooperate in the formulation, implementation and periodical review of a comprehensive national policy as provided for by this Article of the Convention. The Committee refers the Government to paragraphs 54–63 of its General Survey of 2009 on the Convention. The Committee requests the Government: (1) to provide information on sectoral tripartite committees that have been set up and on their operation in practice; (2) to specify the existing bodies and mechanisms that allow these sectoral tripartite committees to coordinate their work in order to formulate, implement and periodically review a coherent national policy on occupational safety and occupational health and the working environment, as required by the Convention; and (3) to supply information on the process for formulating, implementing and reviewing the national policy, together with relevant documentation.

Article 20. Cooperation between management and workers at enterprise level. The Committee notes that section 5 of Decree No. 291/2007 establishes that in every enterprise, a body shall be set up for cooperation between employers and workers, and that whatever the form of cooperation agreed on, the body shall gear its work to planning prevention, promotion of ergonomic systems, evaluation of new hazards, promotion and cooperation for training, keeping a register of incidents, defects, occupational accidents and diseases, study and analysis of statistics and promotion of cooperation in occupational health, occupational safety and the working environment. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of this provision in practice. It also asks the Government to specify how the provision is applied in small and medium-sized enterprises.

Article 7. Periodical reviews. Article 11, paragraph (d). Inquiries into occupational accidents. Article 11, paragraph (e). Annual publication of reports. Article 13. Protection of workers from undue consequences. Article 17. Two or more undertakings engaged in activities simultaneously at one workplace. Article 18. Measures to deal with emergencies. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information in response to the issues raised in its previous direct request, but that many of these issues have been resolved by Decree No. 291/2007. The Committee nonetheless observes that this Decree, which forms the basis of the law on occupational safety and health since it regulates the application of the Convention for all branches of activity, does not seem to give full effect of the provisions referred to in the first part of this paragraph. The Committee accordingly once again asks the Government to indicate measures taken to give effect to Articles 7, 11(d) and (e), 13, 17 and 18, of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide general information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice including, for example, extracts of labour inspection reports and statistics of the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of contraventions reported, the number, nature and causes of accidents notified, etc.

Action taken on the recommendation set out in the report on a representation (document GB.270/15/6). The Committee notes that the Government has not sent the information requested by the Committee in its previous comments on the follow-up to the recommendations set forth in the Governing Body's report of November 1997 (GB.270/15/6), regarding a representation by the Latin American Central of Workers (CLAT). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any actions taken on the recommendations set out in paragraph 32 of the report on the abovementioned representation, specifying the points of the recommendations which it deems that it has complied with and the manner in which it has done so, and the points that have yet to be complied with and the measures envisaged to secure compliance.

Action taken on recommendations set out in the report on a representation (document GB.292/16/6). The Committee notes that in March 2005, the Governing Body adopted a report on a representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers – Workers' National Convention (PIT–CNT) alleging non-observance by Uruguay of the Convention (document GB.292/16/6). The gist of the PIT–CNT's representation was that no measures were taken to develop and implement the mechanisms provided for in the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that in paragraph 41(b) of its report, the Governing Body urged the Government of Uruguay:

- (i) to continue to strengthen occupational safety and health legislation and to regulate those areas where vacuums exist;
- (ii) to ensure compliance with current occupational safety and health legislation at both national and enterprise level;
- (iii) to examine periodically the situation as regards the safety and health of workers in both the public and the private sectors, in order to identify problems which exist and take effective measures to resolve them;
- (iv) to provide information on the health and safety problems which, according to the PIT–CNT, have arisen as a result of the reform of the state enterprises;
- (v) to continue to strengthen the inspection system at both national and enterprise level and increase, if appropriate, the number of labour inspectors, and to improve the imposition of the relevant sanctions;
- (vi) to provide official information both on occupational risks and accidents and on investigations carried out in this area, and to state whether the body responsible for publishing the relevant statistical information has failed to do so since 1997;
- (vii) to continue to increase training and qualification activities, especially at the enterprise level; and
- (viii) to continue to facilitate and to promote cooperation between employers and workers or their representatives at the enterprise level.

In (c) of the same paragraph, the Governing Body requested the Government to include in the reports it submits on the application of Convention No. 155, information on the application of any measures adopted in order to achieve effective compliance with the recommendations made, so that the Committee of Experts can examine progress in these matters. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information in this regard. It notes, however, that Decree No. 291/2007 facilitates the application of some of the recommendations set out in the Governing Body's report and paves the way for progress to be made in the formulation of the national policy at sector level and in the action taken at enterprise level. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the action taken, both in law and in practice, on the recommendations set forth in document GB.292/16/6.

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 2005)

Legislation. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 18362 of 6 October 2008, sections 356–363 of which establish the Register of Construction Works and their Traceability, which is to operate within the General Inspectorate of Labour and Social Security (IGTSS). This new provision requires public sector works to be entered in the Register, and the same will apply for the private sector on the same footing as regards occupational safety requirements. It empowers the labour inspectorate to close down works that have not been registered. The report indicates that one of the many obligations of the Register is the submission of an occupational safety plan of construction works, a description of the various stages and the cost of each stage. The Committee also notes Decree No. 108/007, to replace Decree No. 392/980, which provides for across-the-board updating of the labour-related documents that enterprises are required to keep. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, Decree No. 89/95 on safety and health in the construction industry is being revised. It hopes that the revised text will give effect to the provisions of this Convention and to the Safety and Health in Construction Recommendation, 1988 (No. 175), and asks the Government to provide detailed information, once the new text has been adopted, on the manner in which the amendments give effect in law to the provisions of the Convention.

Part VI of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes with interest the IGTSS annual management report of December 2008. It notes that, according to the report, 2008 was a very important year for the labour inspectorate, which promoted and strengthened the involvement of workers and employers in occupational safety and health. It cites as an example the creation of a Register of Works and their Traceability, which took effect from January 2009. The Register will be under the responsibility of the IGTSS and is to consist of a database which the Government considers to be of enormous importance to the construction industry and state bodies. According to the report, the Register will contain all information of importance in real time, concerning the various public and private sector construction processes and those operating them: general contractor, director of works, building company/companies, foremen, architect, prevention technicians, worker delegates, safety plans, etc. It will be a major source of the information needed to ascertain the relationship of the major players with accidents occurring in the work performed. The Committee also notes the training carried out for workers in the construction sector, including the training course for trainers organized by the Tripartite Committee on the Construction Industry under the auspices of the ILO. It further notes that, as at 28 November 2008, 96 investigations of industrial accidents were under way, 41 of which concerned the construction sector. The Committee notes that, according to the IGTSS report, of all the accidents investigated in the construction industry, 54 per cent are caused by falls from height, followed by collapses and cave-ins (15 per cent) and entrapment (12 per cent). Of the 41 accidents being investigated in the construction sector in 2008, 22 were due to falls from height. The Committee appreciates the efforts made by the IGTSS, thanks to which it is possible to supervise and identify promptly the main trends concerning the application of the legislation relating to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide copies of the IGTSS reports, which are an important source of information and, in addition, include an assessment of developments in occupational safety and health in the construction sector. Furthermore, bearing in mind that, according to the report, 54 per cent of the construction accidents investigated were caused by falls from height, the Government is asked to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged, in law and in practice, to prevent such situations.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Legislation. The Committee notes with interest the promulgation of the Basic Act on Prevention, Working Conditions and the Working Environment (LOPCYMAT), published in Official Journal No. 38236 of 26 July 2005, the Regulations to Implement in Part the Basic Act on Prevention, Working Conditions and the Working Environment, which entered into force 1 January 2007, the Technical Standard “Occupational Safety and Health Programme” (NT-01-2008) and the Technical Standard “Declaration of Occupational Diseases” (NT-02-2008).

Communication from the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV). The Committee takes note of a communication from the CTV, received on 31 August 2009 and sent to the Government on 16 September 2009. According to the CTV, LOPCYMAT is not fully enforced because the Social Security Fund has not as yet been created. The Committee will examine this communication together with any comments the Government may wish to make.

Article 4, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Measures for the implementation and review of a national policy on occupational safety and health. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government on the various occupational health programmes. It notes that according to the report, machinery exists for the framing of occupational safety and health programmes, in the form of the Technical Standard “Occupational Safety and Health Programme”, which was prepared jointly with employers and workers and subsequently reviewed by the National Institute for Occupational Prevention, Health and Safety (INPSASEL). The Committee notes that according to the report, the National Council for Prevention, Safety and Health at Work has not been established officially, but that, periodically, there are meetings of committees set up by sector and composed of employers, prevention representatives and state representatives, to agree on specific activities and programmes and to facilitate the assessment and development of technical standards. The Committee infers that these are sectoral committees with nationwide coverage. It requests the Government to indicate: (1) the economic sectors in which these sectoral committees operate nationwide; and (2) the bodies and machinery enabling these committees to coordinate their work in formulating, implementing and periodically reviewing a coherent national policy on occupational safety, occupational health and the working environment, as required by the Convention. Please also provide information on difficulties encountered in officially establishing the National Council on Prevention, Safety and Health at Work and the measures taken to overcome them.

The Committee notes that the Government has provided information on the other issues raised in its previous comments, except on the manner in which the competent authority ensures that every year information is published on the measures taken pursuant to the national policy on occupational safety, occupational health and the working environment (Article 11(e)). The Government is asked to send information on this matter in its next report.

Bearing in mind that since the last report, the Government has adopted a significant occupational safety and health legislation, noted in the first paragraph of this observation, the Committee considers that it is essential to gain an overall view of the impact of the legislation on the application of the Convention. Furthermore, in view of the fact that the new legislation has not as yet been fully implemented – as indicated by the Government's statement that the National Council on Prevention, Safety and Health at Work has not been officially established and the CTV's assertion that the Social Security Fund is not yet in operation – the Government needs to specify not only the changes in the legislation but also provisions that are actually reflected in practice as well as those as yet to be applied, and difficulties encountered and measures taken to overcome them. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to send a detailed report showing the changes introduced by the new legislation in respect of each Article of the Convention and containing information on the effect given to them in practice.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2011.]

Viet Nam

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes with satisfaction the information provided by the Government indicating numerous recent legislative changes, as well as the Directive of the Prime Minister to adopt the National Programme on Labour Protection, Occupational Safety and Health for 2006–10 (No. 233/2006/QD-TTg dated 18 October 2006) and its follow-up guiding documents on occupational safety and health; and the Directive of the Prime Minister on Strengthening Labour Protection and Work Safety (No. 10/2008/CT-TTg dated 14 March 2008), which give further effect to Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee also notes that the latter Directive defines the responsibility of the Ministry of Labour, Invalids and Social Affairs to take the lead and cooperate with relevant ministries and government agencies to review, amend and adopt legal documents on labour protection and work safety, and to propose the development of the Law on Occupational Safety and Health. The Committee further notes the establishment of the National Council on Occupational Safety and Health by Decision No. 40/2005/QD-TTg dated 25 February 2005, composed of members of 12 relevant ministries and government agencies, and representatives of workers' and employers' organizations; as well as the adoption of other laws giving further effect to the provisions of the Convention, including the Circular on procedures to diagnose and detect occupational diseases (No. 12/2006/TT-BYT dated 10 November 2006); Circular No. 04/2008/TT-BLDTBXH dated 27 February 2008; the Law on Chemicals, 2007; Decree No. 68/2005/ND-CP on Chemical Safety, 20 May 2005; and Circular No. 12/2006/TT-BCN guiding the implementation of Decree No. 68 on Chemical Safety.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zimbabwe

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 9, paragraph 2, of the Convention. Adequate penalties for violations of the laws and regulations. The Committee notes the observations by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) that the penalties and fines for non-compliance with the law on occupational health are too low, which is why most employers do not attribute sufficient importance to issues related to occupational safety and health and that the Government in its response thereto states that it has taken note of the recommendation to increase the penal sanctions for non-observance of the national law on occupational health. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken to follow up on the recommendation by the ZCTU and to give full effect to this Article of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the communication sent by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) and received on 21 September 2009. The Committee will examine this communication along with the comments that the Government would wish to provide. Noting also that the Government's report has not been received the Committee must repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 6, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Classification systems. With reference to its previous comments the Committee notes the observations submitted by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU) on behalf of the ZCTU in which concerns were raised regarding the absence of a chemicals register which should monitor the inflow of chemical substances into the country and, more generally, that the penalties for non-compliance with laws on occupational health are too low and ought to be such as to act as an effective deterrent against the violation of occupational safety and health laws. The Committee notes that, in a brief response received in 2006 to these observations, the Government indicates that the issue of a chemicals register is undertaken at enterprise level in line with the Hazardous Substances and Articles Act, 1971. The Committee notes that the legislation referred to contains provisions related to the declaration and regulation of hazardous substances and articles, but that it does not appear to prescribe systems and specific criteria for the classification of all chemicals according to the type and degree of their intrinsic health and physical hazards and for assessing the relevance of the information required to determine whether a chemical is hazardous. Against this background, and in addition to the request for information already transmitted to the Government in its comment in 2005, the Committee requests the Government to provide additional information on how effect is given to this Article of the Convention, in law and in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Antigua and Barbuda

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1983)

For a number of years the Committee has been pointing out the incompatibility of the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance, No. 24 of 1956, as amended, with certain provisions of the Convention. The Government states that the Committee's comments are under careful consideration with a view to giving full effect to all the provisions of the Convention and that technical assistance is being sought to draft a modern Workmen's Compensation Act. In addition, the Government reports that the National Labour Board is presently reviewing the Antigua and Barbuda Labour Code. The Committee would encourage the Government to approach the competent departments of the Office with the request for technical assistance in reviewing the national labour legislation and bringing it into conformity with international labour standards, including, in particular, the following provisions of the Convention:

- Article 5 of the Convention (Compensation in the form of a lump sum). Section 8 of the Ordinance should be amended so as to ensure that the compensation due in the event of accidents causing permanent incapacity shall be paid in the form of periodical payments, provided that it may be paid wholly or partially in a lump sum, if the competent authority is satisfied that it will be properly utilized.
- Article 7 (Additional compensation for assistance by a third person). Section 9 of the above Ordinance should be amended so as to grant additional compensation for victims of injuries who need the assistance of a third person in cases of permanent incapacity.
- Article 9 (Medical and pharmaceutical treatment). Section 6(3) of the Ordinance should be amended so as not to prescribe any limit to the expenses and costs of medical treatment undergone by a worker as a result of an occupational accident for which the employer is responsible and include an express provision for coverage of related surgical and pharmaceutical costs.
- Article 10 (Provision of surgical appliances and artificial limbs in general). Section 10 of the Ordinance should be amended to provide for surgical appliances and artificial limbs in all cases in which they are necessary, and not only with a view to improving the earning capacity of the person concerned.

Barbados

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1972)

Article 65, paragraph 10. Adjustment of survivors' benefits. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government states in its report that it has introduced in 2005 a new method of annual indexation of benefits and insurable earnings, the upper limit of the latter being increased in line with national average wage increases. Benefits are increased by the same percentage as the lesser of the three-year average of wage or price increases, subject to actuarial advice on the maximum which may be granted so as to maintain the target reserve ratio of five times, through to the year 2030. The 12th actuarial review of the national insurance scheme indicates in this respect that in 2005, year of introduction of indexation, pensions were increased by 4.76 per cent, while the insured earnings ceiling was increased by 2.9 per cent. The Committee notes with satisfaction the introduction of indexation of long-term benefits and invites the Government to supply with its next report the information requested by the report form under Title VI of Article 65.

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors' Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1972)

Article 29. Adjustment of invalidity and old-age benefits. In its previous reports, the Government had indicated that pensions were reviewed on an ad hoc basis, but that it was considering introducing a method of annual indexation as a means to increase periodical payments. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, as a result of the pension reform, indexation of long-term benefits has been introduced and invites the Government to supply with its next report the information requested by the report form under Article 29.

Bolivia

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1977)

Bolivia has accepted the Parts of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), concerning medical care, sickness benefit, old-age benefit and survivors' benefit. It has also ratified Conventions Nos 121, 128 and 130 which set higher objectives relating to social protection. Given that the problems relating to the application noted by the Committee are essentially the same for all these Conventions and are of a systemic nature, the Committee wished to make a number of general observations concerning all the international obligations arising from these instruments for Bolivia. It referred to the information provided by the Government and to the studies carried out by the ILO concerning the Bolivian social security system (Diagnóstico del Sistema de Seguridad Social, April 2009).

Recognition of the right to social security by the new Political Constitution of Bolivia

Since February 2009, a new Political Constitution has guaranteed the right of citizens to benefit free of charge from social security based on the principles of universality, comprehensiveness, equity, solidarity, standardized management, economy, opportunity, inter-cultural approach and efficiency (articles 35–45). Under the new Constitution, the State shall be responsible for administering the system under the supervision and with the participation of the social partners. The Constitution extends the right to medical care to the entire population and lays down the duty of the State to protect the right to health, in particular by promoting free access by the population to health services. The State has a duty to ensure access to universal health insurance and the irrevocable obligation to guarantee, financially support and ensure the right to health. The Constitution also expressly guarantees the right to a universal, solidarity-based and fair old-age pension, as well as the principle that public social security services will not be privatized or contracted out.

Under article 256 of the new Constitution, the rights recognized by the Constitution shall be interpreted in accordance with the provisions of the international Conventions ratified by Bolivia whenever those conventions contain more favourable standards. Article 410 of the new Constitution provides that the international treaties and agreements ratified by Bolivia form part of the constitutional provisions and take precedence over laws. The Government emphasizes in this regard that, contrary to the situation which prevailed under the former Constitution, international labour Conventions are therefore placed above national laws. For that reason, the Government envisages drafting new laws and regulations to give effect to the international labour Conventions ratified by Bolivia.

The Committee notes with the greatest interest the adoption of the new Constitution which establishes a series of basic principles with regard to social security and the provisions of which are among the most progressive in Latin America. It also notes that the recognition under the Constitution of the principle of the supremacy of international law over national law paves the way for the use by Bolivia of international social security standards as a regulatory framework and legal lever for putting the social security system on the road to sustainable development.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate whether it intends to examine the current social security legislation in the light of the provisions of the ILO Conventions ratified by Bolivia. It hopes that any future reforms of the social security system, such as the reform currently under way of the pension system, will be based on the principles of solidarity and collective financing enshrined in the country's new Political Constitution and aimed at the gradual extension of the benefit of social protection to the entire population of Bolivia.

Extension and restructuring of the social security scheme

The level of coverage of the social security scheme currently remains one of the lowest in the region. However, a number of recent measures have resulted in progress being made, with regard to health protection, through the introduction of universal insurance for mothers and children (SUMI) and free old-age medical insurance (SMVG). However, the health system remains very fragmented between the public assistance targeting the most vulnerable, the social security scheme directed at the employed population and their beneficiaries, and the private actors focusing on the higher income brackets. A rational restructuring would allow efforts to increase membership of the system to be coordinated, a series of basic health benefits to be defined giving effect in practice to the right to health protection for all and major economies of scale to be made with regard to both administrative management costs and the financing of care facilities.

Membership of the pension scheme also remains very low despite the introduction in 1997 of the new funded pension scheme which replaced the pay-as-you-go scheme based on solidarity. In order to remedy that situation, the Government recently established a universal non-contributory pension paid to all persons over 65 years of age, which has produced tangible results. A reform of the pension system is currently under way and a bill has already been approved by the Chamber of Deputies and is to be submitted to the Senate. The bill establishes a mixed pension scheme comprising a contributory and semi-contributory scheme and a non-contributory system. It also creates an invalidity and survivors' scheme for common and occupational risks, as well as a specific invalidity and survivors' insurance scheme for self-employed workers.

According to the 2009 ILO study, the weak coverage of the social security system with regard to health protection and pensions is largely due to the structure of the labour market and the fact that the social security scheme is essentially focused on covering the employed population benefiting from a relatively stable formal employment relationship and working essentially in large urban enterprises. However, given that this workforce accounts for only 25 per cent of the total workforce, the large majority of the economically active population, which comprises self-employed, domestic and rural workers, is excluded from the compulsory social security scheme, even though they represent more than two-thirds of the country's population. This situation is compounded by considerable evasion of contributions even within the formal economy. The combination of these two factors leads to a very low overall rate of health coverage of the economically active population (13.5 per cent in 2003). Access to health services in rural areas remains very limited with only 6 per cent of the rural population being covered. Furthermore, the high number of actors and the lack of coordination constitute yet more factors which contribute to keeping the coverage of the population at a very low level and perpetuating the lack of a comprehensive strategy in this regard. As regards old-age, invalidity and survivors' risks, the Government indicated in its report that only 38 per cent of employees of large enterprises employing over 20 persons are covered. The economically active persons affiliated to the old-age, invalidity and survivors' scheme represented only 5 per cent of the total number of residents. The problem of poor coverage is particularly pronounced with regard to self-employed workers and in agriculture, with only 4 per cent of Bolivian self-employed workers being affiliated to a pension fund administrator in 2007. In view of these factors, there is a need to adjust the Bolivian social security model in line with the economic and social reality of predominantly self-employed informal employment. The gradual compulsory membership of self-employed workers is a possible means of ensuring coverage of a large proportion of the population not yet benefiting from any social security coverage. State support in the form of social contribution subsidies would be an important component to ensure the success of such an initiative. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information in its next report on the solutions found to increase the rates of membership and coverage and indicate the progress made with regard to reforming both the pension scheme and the health scheme.

The separation, since 1987, of the management of the short-term benefits scheme and the basic long-term scheme has resulted in each of these schemes devoting a significant proportion of their resources to the performance of administrative and operational functions, particularly those relating to membership and the collection of social contributions. Studies show that the establishment of centralized management with regard to the collection of benefits and supervision of compliance with the obligation to join the social security scheme would allow significant results to be achieved in terms of coverage and would ensure better coordination, planning and linking of strategic activities regarded as priorities from the point of view of the entire system. The creation of an independent specialized body responsible solely for supervising and controlling the social security system, without participating in the management of the system's programmes, is another necessary component for the proper operation and viability of social security systems. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the structural measures taken or envisaged with a view to optimizing the structure of the social security system.

Creation of a national strategy for the development of social security

In 2001, the International Labour Conference (ILC) reaffirmed the central role of social security and reiterated that it was a challenge which all member States had to tackle as a matter of urgency. The resolution adopted by the ILC in 2001 recognizes that "the highest priority should be given to policies and initiatives that bring social security to those who are not covered by existing systems". To achieve that objective, the Conference urged every country to devise a national strategy closely linked to other social policies. States such as Bolivia which are party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR) are also required, according to the general observations made in 2007 by the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), to devise a national strategy for the comprehensive implementation of the right to social security and to allocate sufficient budgetary and other resources at the national level. The Committee considers that the need to devise a national strategy arises from the general responsibility of the State, established by Convention No. 102, to ensure the continuity and proper operation of the social security system. The launch of a national strategy designed to ensure the strengthening and sustainable development of the social security scheme, taking into account the above concerns, would allow the State to exploit to the full all the potential offered by international social security standards with a view to ensuring the proper administration of schemes and enabling the gradual extension of coverage to the entire population. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the possibility of making greater use of technical assistance from the ILO with a view to devising, together with the social partners, a national strategy for the sustainable development of social security.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1977)

Reform of the occupational incapacity and invalidity system. Noting that the forthcoming adoption of a new Pensions Act will result in the substantial reorganization of the occupational risks scheme, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of this text once adopted and to explain how it gives effect to each of the provisions of the Convention No. 121, taking due note of the application problems raised by the Committee in its observation made under Convention No. 102 as well as in its previous comments relating to Convention No. 121.

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors' Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1977)

Reform of the pension system. Noting the forthcoming adoption of a new Pensions Act, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate in its next report how the new legislation gives effect to Convention No. 128 taking due note of the application problems raised by the Committee in its observation under Convention No. 102 as well as in its previous comments under Convention No. 128.

Medical Care and Sickness Benefits Convention, 1969 (No. 130) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee asks the Government to refer to the comments made under the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102).

Brazil

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1969)

For more than 30 years the Committee has been pointing out the need to incorporate into the Brazilian legislation a provision guaranteeing the payment abroad of long-term social security benefits foreseen in Article 5 of the Convention. The Government's report of 2007 once again stated that there has been no change in the situation since 2001: section 312 of the Social Security Regulations, approved by Decree No. 3048 of 6 May 1999, continues to subject the payment of benefits abroad to the existence of the corresponding bilateral agreement with the country of residence of the beneficiary in question or, in the absence of such an agreement, to the adoption of the corresponding instructions by the Ministry of Insurance and Social Assistance (MPAS). However, benefits are not paid, even to countries with which Brazil has bilateral agreements (Argentina, Cape Verde, Chile, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg, Portugal, Spain and Uruguay), except to beneficiaries resident in some of these countries, namely in Spain, Greece and Portugal. According to the report, a tender process is in progress to contract a bank to pay benefits to beneficiaries resident in countries with which Brazil has bilateral agreements, subsequently it is foreseen to extend the same system of payment to beneficiaries resident in other countries.

Judging by the fact that the tender process mentioned in the report is "in progress" since 2000 without result and that, in the meantime, no instructions foreseen by section 312 of the Social Security Regulations have been issued by the MPAS, the Committee cannot but conclude that there is no political will to institute an effective system of the transfer of social security benefits abroad, not even within the framework of bilateral social security agreements specifically establishing such mechanisms. In this regrettable situation, it is the role of the supervisory system to alert the Government, as well as other States parties to the Convention, to the fact that Brazil is in breach of its international obligation under Article 5 of the Convention to guarantee the payment of benefits to Brazilian nationals and to the nationals of any other state which has accepted the obligations of the Convention for the same branch, as well as to refugees and stateless persons, in case of their residence abroad, irrespective of the country of residence and even in the absence of any bilateral social security agreements with the country of nationality or the country of residence of the beneficiary concerned. In doing so, the Committee strongly urges Brazil, while further developing its network of bilateral agreements, to take unilateral measures, for example by issuing the ministerial instructions envisaged by the abovementioned section 312 of the Social Security Regulations, to guarantee in law and in practice the provision of the benefits abroad whatever the place of residence of the beneficiary concerned.

Cape Verde

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report received in October 2005 and the communication of the Cape Verde Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CCSL) forwarded by the Office to the Government in November 2004. In this communication, the CCSL indicates important changes made in the social security system for dependent workers by the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 5/2004 of 16 February 2004, which was promulgated by the Government without prior consultation with the social partners. The Committee notes that the revision of the social security system undertaken by the Government seems to have no impact on Legislative Decree No. 84/78 of 22 September 1978 establishing the compulsory insurance scheme for industrial accidents which has since been the subject of comments by the Committee.

Branch (g) (benefits for industrial accidents and occupational disease). Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend explicitly section 3(3) of Legislative Decree No. 84/78 of 22 September 1978 establishing the system of compulsory insurance against industrial accidents, which subjects equality of treatment of foreign workers working in Cape Verde to a condition of reciprocity, whereas Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention provide for an automatic system of reciprocity for States that have ratified the instrument. In reply, the Government promises that these amendments will be the subject of consultations with the social partners and be included in the current general revision process of labour legislation with the adoption of the new Labour Code.

The Committee notes this commitment by the Government and requests it to specify to what extent the amendment of Legislative Decree No. 84/78 concerns the general revision of labour legislation, given that the Labour Code currently in force does not cover matters pertaining to insurance against industrial accidents nor the social security of workers in general. As for the Government's intention to consult the social partners, the Committee notes from the social partners' comments included in the Government's report that the National Union of Cape Verde Workers (UNTC-CS) and the Cape Verde Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CCSL) support the revision of section 3(3) of Legislative Decree No. 84/78 which is in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the employers' and workers' organizations which the Government intends to consult and in what time frame, given that it does not specify the employers' and workers' organizations to which it supplied copies of its report, in accordance with article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution. Finally, the Committee recalls that in 1999 the Government indicated that internal discussions had reached total consensus on the need to amend Legislative Decree No. 84/78, but that no amendment has been made. The Committee is therefore bound to ask the Government once again to take the measures necessary, as soon as possible, to bring section 3(3) of Legislative Decree No. 84/78 into full conformity with the Convention.

Article 5. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to incorporate in Legislative Decree No. 84/78 of 22 September 1978 a specific provision providing the granting of benefits for employment injuries when the persons concerned are resident abroad in order to give full effect to Article 5 (branch (g)) of the Convention. The Committee notes that according to section 7 of Legislative Decree No. 5/2004 of 16 February 2004, beneficiaries of compulsory social protection maintain their right to cash benefits when they transfer their residence abroad, subject to the provisions established by the law and the applicable international instruments. Since the compulsory social protection system does not include benefits for employment injury, which are covered by separate regulations (sections 17 and 18(3) of Legislative Decree No. 5/2004), the Committee trusts that the Government will not fail to apply the same principle of maintaining rights in the event of residence abroad also in regard to the granting of benefits for employment injury in law as well as in practice. With regard to the situation in law, the Committee considers that the application of article 11(4) of the Constitution of Cape Verde establishing the supremacy of international conventions over any national legislation requires that Legislative Decree No. 84/78 be brought specifically into conformity with Article 5 of the Convention in order to avoid any ambiguity in legislation and its practical application. Not having received from the Government the information requested on the internal regulations laying down procedures giving effect in practice to this constitutional principle in the light of Convention No. 118, the Committee also requests the Government to supply information showing the effective transfer by the National Social Security Institute or another relevant institute of the amounts of benefits for employment injury to beneficiaries residing abroad.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Chile

Sickness Insurance (Industry) Convention, 1927 (No. 24) (ratification: 1931)

For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the national legislation is not in compliance with a basic principle established by Convention No. 24 (Article 7, paragraph 1, of the Convention) and, in general, by international social security law, in accordance with which insured persons and their employers shall share in providing the financial resources of the sickness insurance scheme. In Chile, all social contributions, with the exception of those for the employment injury compensation scheme, have been payable by workers since the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 3501 of 1980.

In its report, the Government confines itself to reporting the adoption in 2005 of DFL No. 1, which is intended to codify the legal regime governing health protection by compiling the various applicable legislative texts. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not express any intention of complying with its obligation to give effect, in national laws and regulations, to the requirements of Article 7, paragraph 1, of the Convention, under the terms of which the financial resources of the sickness insurance system shall be constituted through joint contributions of employers and insured persons. The Committee wishes to emphasize that failure to comply with the principle of the collective financing of social security in the health insurance branch, as in the pensions branch, makes the system socially unjust for workers and therefore incompatible with the objectives of international labour standards in relation to social security. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to assess the consequences of this situation with the social partners and it requests it to keep the Committee duly informed of any measure adopted in this respect.

Sickness Insurance (Agriculture) Convention, 1927 (No. 25) (ratification: 1931)

The Committee asks the Government to refer to the comments made under the Sickness Insurance (Industry) Convention, 1927 (No. 24).

Old-Age Insurance (Industry, etc.) Convention, 1933 (No. 35) (ratification: 1935)

1. Follow-up to the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee set up to examine the representation made by Chilean unions of employees of pension fund administrators (AFPs) under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to reply to the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference and to provide a detailed report in 2009 on the implementation of the recommendations adopted by the Governing Body in March 2000 concerning the above representation (Governing Body, 277th Session, March 2000 (GB.277/17/5, March 2000)). The recommendations were as follows: (i) that the pension system established in 1980 by Legislative Decree No. 3.500, as amended, should be administered by non-profit-making organizations; (ii) that representatives of the insured should participate in the administration of the system under conditions determined by national law and practice; and (iii) that employers should contribute to the financing of the insurance system. The Committee notes that, following the discussion of the Chile case at the Conference in June 2009, the Conference Committee noted that the 2008 reform creating a pillar based on solidarity had not resulted in any major changes to the private pension system established by Legislative Decree No. 3.500 of 1980. Concerned at the gravity of the financial situation of the private system, the Conference Committee urged the Government to provide a detailed report on the measures taken to ensure the viability of the system, if necessary with technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is bound to deplore the fact that despite the promises made by the Government representative and the express request of the Conference, no information on these issues has been provided by the Government for examination. In effect, the Government considered it appropriate to reply only to the observations made by the College of Teachers of Chile AG concerning the “historic debt” of social security. The Committee expresses concern at the Government’s determination to ignore, since 2000, the recommendations made to it by the international community and the numerous calls for dialogue by the Committee and urges the Government to reconsider its position.

The Committee has decided to examine the national situation based on the information provided orally by the Government representative at the Conference and on Act No. 20.255 of 2008 on the reform of the pension system.

(i) Administration by institutions not conducted with a view to profit (Article 10, paragraph 1, of the Convention). According to the information provided by the Government representative at the Conference, the 2008 structural reform has supplemented the individual capital accumulation social insurance system, which was established in Chile in 1981, with a new universal social insurance scheme based on solidarity which supplements the benefits insured by AFPs where these are minimal. The new scheme is designed to protect those who do not qualify for a pension. The old-age protection system has therefore been transformed into a mixed system administered by the Institute for Labour Security (ISL), the Institute for Social Provision (IPS), pension fund administrators (AFPs) and unemployment fund administrators (AFCs). The ISL and IPS are public entities, while AFPs and AFCs are, according to the statement made by the Government representative, “private non-profit-making entities”. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would explain how AFPs, which are established under the legal form of limited liability companies allowing profit-making activities, have been converted into “private non-profit-making entities” considering that all its previous reports have always presented these entities as private companies which, by definition, are profit-making institutions. The Committee notes that the general logic of the Chilean mixed pension system remains focused on individual saving capacity, since persons in a position to save are obliged by law to join an AFP. In this regard, the reform has not only maintained AFPs as the principal mechanism of old-age protection, but has also strengthened their position given that if their private management generates derisory pensions they will be supplemented by a complimentary old-age pension (APS) financed by national solidarity and paid to persons whose pensions do not reach a minimum threshold. The Committee also notes that Act No. 20.255 assigns new functions to the Superintendence of Pensions (SUPEN), which was previously responsible for supervising AFPs (private companies) and is now also responsible for supervising the IPS, which is a public body administering the solidarity system. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would explain the reasons for making private profit-making institutions and public non-profit-making bodies subject to the supervision of the same body – SUPEN.

(ii) Participation of the insured persons in the administration of the system (Article 10, paragraph 4, of the Convention). With regard to the recommendation that the representatives of the insured persons should participate in the administration of the old-age protection system, the Committee notes the indication of the Government representative at the Conference that, since the reform of the social insurance system in 2008, users have participated in the evaluation of the system, the monitoring of its operation and the formulation of policy proposals aimed at strengthening its development. The new system includes a Board of Pension System Users responsible for evaluating the operation of the pension system and proposing strategies. However, although representatives of workers and retired workers are included on this Board, which constitutes notable progress in terms of social dialogue, the Board has only advisory functions and may not participate in the administration of the pension system. Act No. 20.255 also established a Technical Investments Council to study the investments made by AFPs for the purposes of enhanced profitability and security. Even though this Council exerts considerable influence with regard to the investment of pension funds administered by AFPs, the Committee notes that there is no participation of representatives of the insured persons. Moreover, the lack of control over investments by insured persons may lead to high-risk investments and therefore potential losses. According to the indications given by the Worker members, the financial crisis has resulted in losses of between 30 and 40 per cent of the total of individual accounts administered by AFPs, equivalent to 7–14 years’ contributions. This led the Conference to express fears concerning the viability and sustainability of the system. In these circumstances, the Committee is bound to observe that the exclusion of the representatives of the protected persons (active workers and retired workers) from participation in the administration of AFPs and the Technical Investments Council is contrary to the right of the insured persons to participate in the administration of insurance system financed by their contributions, in accordance with Article 10 of the Convention.

(iii) Contribution of employers to the financing of pensions (Article 9 of the Convention). Following the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 3.500 in 1980, payments made into individual capital accumulation accounts were payable in full by the insured persons. The 2008 reform has not altered the method of compulsory financing of old-age benefits administered by AFPs. The Committee notes, however, that this reform has authorized the establishment of “collective pension funds” allowing employers to make voluntary contributions equivalent to those paid by the insured persons, a measure the implementation of which is dependent on the existence of a high level of collective bargaining. According to the Government representative’s indication at the Conference, following the 2008 reform, employers now contribute to the social insurance system by financing contributions to fund the survivors’ insurance scheme set out in section 59 of Legislative Decree No. 3.500 of 1980. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any other initiative designed to ensure the financial participation of employers in the social insurance system.

2. Follow-up to the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee set up to examine the representation made by the College of Teachers of Chile AG under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes the information provided orally by the Government representative to the Conference Committee concerning the implementation of the recommendations adopted by the Governing Body in 2007 following the report of the Committee set up to examine the representation made by the College of Teachers of Chile AG under article 24 of the ILO Constitution (see document GB.298/15/6), alleging non-observance by Chile of Conventions Nos 35 and 37 in relation to the problem of the social security arrears arising from non-payment of the further training allowance. The Government representative indicated that the system for controlling public subsidies has been strengthened, both in terms of public municipal education and private education. Since March 2008, Chile has gradually been implementing a major reform of its labour tribunals which has significantly shortened the duration of cases and ensured access to free legal assistance. The General Inspectorate and the Labour Directorate also need to find appropriate solutions to determine the amounts of the arrears. In this regard, the Organic Municipal Act has been amended and now provides for heavier penalties including the removal from office of mayors not fulfilling their obligations, in particular the obligation to pay old-age contributions. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would explain in its next report, with the support of figures, how these measures have contributed to resolving the problem of contribution arrears in accordance with the 2007 recommendations of the Governing Body.

3. Historic debt. With regard to the issue of the “historic debt” of social security resulting from the failure to take into account part of the remuneration of nearly 80,000 teachers for the purposes of calculating the right to a pension, the Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative to the Conference Committee that this was a political demand without legal basis made by workers in the education sector for a special allowance that they had been granted on a non-taxable basis to be taken into account for the purposes of pension rights. This position has been confirmed by the Government in its reply of 5 November 2009 to the allegations made by the College of Teachers. Recognizing the efforts made by democratic Governments to improve the social security system and ensure old-age protection for the most vulnerable categories of society, the worker members indicated that they continued to hope that the Government would give effect to the recommendations made by the Governing Body to reform the structural problems in the administration of the private pension system, resolve the problem of arrears in the payment of social security contributions and solve the issue of “historic debt”. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee recalled that the problems relating to the application of the Convention date back several years without effective solutions being found by the Government. It therefore urged the Government to transmit legal and technical information to allow the Committee of Experts to examine together with the detailed report requested from the Government on the application of the Convention.

The Committee also notes the communications of the College of Teachers of Chile AG, received in July, September and October 2009, concerning the developments relating to the issue of “historic debt”. It notes, in particular, the unanimous adoption, in August 2009, by the Special Commission established to that end by the Chamber of Deputies of financial proposals designed to resolve the situation. In November 2009, the Government’s refusal to acknowledge the “historic debt” prompted a national strike by teachers and internal political conflict. The situation is complicated further by the fact that the report of the Parliamentary Committee considers not only the legal aspects of the problem, but also mentions the State’s moral obligation towards teachers. The Committee was informed that, on 9 November 2009, the College of Teachers of Chile AG submitted to the International Labour Office a representation under article 24 of the Constitution alleging non-observance by Chile of the obligations arising under Conventions Nos 35 and 37. In view of this situation, the Committee is bound to postpone consideration of this matter to its next session pending the examination of the representation concerned by the Governing Body.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2010.]

Colombia

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1933)

The Committee notes the Government’s report received in 2008 replying to its 2007 observation, as well as the Government’s report received in 2009 replying to its 2008 observation and to the comments made by the General Confederation of Labour (CGT).

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Coverage. The Government informs that in 2007, 5,945,653 workers were affiliated to the general employment injury scheme. The Committee recalls that in 1998 the number of affiliates was 6,185,191 and asks the Government to explain the reasons behind this decreasing number of affiliates.

Coverage in the construction sector. The CGT draws attention to the lack of protection against employment accidents in the construction sector and the practical difficulties concerning the compensation of industrial accidents affecting the high incidence of workers in that sector who do not have an employment contract. In reply, the Government reports that the National Committee of Occupational Health in the Construction Sector has undertaken activities to promote health and prevent occupational accidents and diseases in the construction sector. The Committee further notes the information supplied by the Government regarding the implementation of section 4(e) of Decree No. 1295, under which employers who do not affiliate their workers to the general system of employment injury shall be responsible for the benefits guaranteed by the Decree in cases of occupational accidents, noting in particular judgements Nos 14038 and 21496 of the Supreme Court which upheld this obligation. The Committee asks the Government to indicate how the abovementioned Decree is applied to informal workers in the construction sector.

Article 5. Measures to ensure that lump-sum compensation will be properly utilized. In Colombia a worker suffering a permanent decrease in his or her capacity for work of between 5 and 50 per cent is accorded a payment of compensation in the form of a lump sum and his or her employment is protected for the remaining working capacity. Recalling that lump-sum compensation in such cases may be payable only if the competent authority is satisfied that it will be properly utilized, the Committee again expresses the hope that the Government will be able to introduce appropriate procedures which will strengthen the protection of the victims of employment injury against misuse of lump-sum payments.

Article 11. Payment of compensation in the event of insolvency of the employer or insurer. Law No. 712 of 2001 reformed the Labour and Social Security Procedural Code and provides for injunctive measures to be taken by the labour judge in case of employer insolvency. In addition, Law No. 1149 of 2007 establishes a system of oral proceedings which allows for a fast and efficient adjudication in cases in which employers do not pay workers' compensation due to insolvency. The Committee notes this information with interest and would be grateful if the Government would keep it informed on the application in practice of these guarantees. Please specify how the Guarantee Fund for Financial Institutions (FOGAFIN) guarantees the provision of medical benefits to the victims of employment injuries in the event of insolvency of insurance companies authorized to operate in the employment injury insurance branch.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government had stated previously that it is not in a position to provide information that would enable the Committee to assess the application of Articles 13, 14 and 18 (in relation with Articles 19 and 20), as well as Articles 21, 23 and 24(2) of the Convention, in view of the difficult political and economic situation experienced by the country. With regard to the draft text to add to the schedule of occupational diseases, in accordance with Article 8 of the Convention, diseases caused by the toxic halogen derivatives of hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series and diseases caused by benzene or its toxic homologues, the Government had undertaken to transmit the extended schedule of occupational diseases as soon as it has been adopted by the National Labour Council. The Committee hopes that, despite the difficulties to which the Government is confronted, the extended schedule of occupational diseases will be adopted in the near future in order to give full effect to Article 8 of the Convention and that the Government will make every effort to provide information concerning the application of the other provisions of the Convention referred to above, as requested in its 1995 observation. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would indicate any progress achieved in the formulation and adoption of the new Social Security Code.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Egypt

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in 2007 in its reports on Conventions Nos 19 and 118, as well as the replies to the Committee's previous direct requests concerning these Conventions. It observes with regret that, since the ratification of Convention No. 118 by Egypt in 1993, there has been no change in the social security law and practice in Egypt as regards the application of this instrument, the main provisions of which continue not to be fulfilled.

Article 3 of the Convention. Equality of treatment. According to section 2(2) of the Social Insurance Act (No. 79 of 1979), the provisions of this Act apply to foreign nationals on condition that the duration of their contract is not less than one year, and that there is a reciprocity agreement between their country of origin and Egypt, subject to non violating the provisions of conventions ratified by Egypt. The Government states nevertheless that the nationals of countries which have ratified Convention No. 118, enjoy insurance benefits provided under the Social Insurance Act regardless of the duration of their contracts or the existence of the reciprocity agreement. The same statement is made by the Government in its report of 2007 on Convention No. 19. The Committee takes due note of these statements and understands that the Convention has a higher rank in the national legal system than the law. The Committee notes that the Government has not supplied any documentary evidence requested by the Committee proving that the above interpretation given by the Government is applied in practice by the social security institutions. The Committee also recalls that in its previous reports on the application of Conventions Nos 19 and 118 the Government has been consistently making the opposite statement that foreign nationals could enjoy social insurance benefits subject to the duration of their contract being not less than one year. In this situation and in order to dissipate any doubts as to the fact that the requirements of the Convention overrule the abovementioned limitations contained in the Social Insurance Act, the Committee would like the Government to instruct the responsible social security institutions in the country to disregard the duration of contract and reciprocity agreement requirements under section 2(2) of the Social Insurance Act with respect to the nationals of 37 countries which have also ratified Convention No. 118, and for the accident compensation benefits, with respect to the nationals of 120 countries which have also ratified Convention No. 19.

Article 5. Payment of benefits abroad. The Committee regrets to note that, since the ratification of the Convention, the Government has taken no measures to comply with its Article 5, which obliges Egypt to establish financial mechanisms for the transfer of invalidity, old-age, survivors' benefits and death grants, and employment injury pensions in case of residence of the beneficiary abroad. The Government repeats that there are no effective ways to transfer pensions outside of Egypt, if there is no reciprocity agreement, but has never mentioned the existence of any such agreement or its intention to conclude one. The Committee wishes to point out in this respect that Article 5 obliges the ratifying States to export benefits abroad even in the absence of any bilateral social security agreements with the country of nationality or the country of residence of the beneficiary concerned and to take unilateral measures to this effect.

The Government further repeats that the insured persons themselves may transfer their entitlements to any bank which has branches outside Egypt and which may therefore forward them to the country where the beneficiary resides. The Committee wishes to point out in this respect that by placing the obligation to transfer benefits abroad on the State, Article 5 of the Convention specifically intended to prevent situations where beneficiaries would have to make their own individual arrangements for the transfer of their entitlements abroad at their own expense. By ratifying the Convention, the Government has undertaken to ensure that the responsible social insurance institutions shall deliver the abovementioned benefits to the new place of residence of the beneficiary outside Egypt and shall bear the cost of such transfer. For this purpose appropriate banking arrangements shall be put in place with the help of the National Bank, if need be, and the administrative assistance of the countries concerned, which they have to afford to Egypt free of charge under Article 11 of the Convention.

Finally, the Government reiterates that the beneficiary residing abroad has to submit evidence as to his entitlement to a pension each year in January. The Committee would like the Government to explain how, in the absence of reciprocity agreements and administrative assistance between Egypt and other countries, the beneficiaries residing abroad can effectively submit evidence of their entitlement to the social security institution inside Egypt. Please also explain how the survivors' benefit and the death grant could be claimed by the dependants of the deceased insured person who are not nationals of Egypt, reside abroad and have never been to Egypt.

The Committee observes that the absence of the practical methods for pensions transfer outside of Egypt compels the beneficiaries leaving the country to abdicate their right to a pension by applying for a lump sum in its place, in accordance with sections 27 and 28 of the Social Insurance Act. The conversion of a pension or an annuity into a lump sum, even when this is done at the request of the beneficiary, and particularly under the threat of losing such pension in case of moving outside of Egypt, is contrary to the letter and the very purpose of the Convention. In such a regrettable situation, it is the role of the supervisory system to alert the Government, as well as other States parties to the Convention, to the fact that Egypt is in breach of its international obligation under Article 5 of the Convention to guarantee the payment of respective benefits to the nationals of States which have accepted the obligations of the Convention for the same branch, as well as to refugees and stateless persons, in case of their residence abroad, irrespective of the country of residence. In doing so, the Committee strongly urges the Government to demonstrate the political will to institute an effective system of the transfer of the Egyptian social security benefits abroad by taking appropriate measures either unilaterally or within the framework of bilateral and multilateral social security agreements, including schemes for the maintenance of the acquired rights and rights in course of acquisition mentioned in Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention.

Articles 7 and 8. The Committee observes that the information supplied by the Government in reply to the Committee's request has nothing to do with the content of these Articles of the Convention and the questions raised by the Committee. To clarify the meaning of the obligations laid down by these Articles, the Government may wish to seek technical assistance from the Office concerning existing international legal framework for the schemes for the maintenance of the acquired rights and rights in course of acquisition.

Article 10. Coverage of refugees and stateless persons. The Government states that the Social Insurance Act does not include any provision concerning refugees and stateless persons, as such a provision, as laid down in the Convention, does not include the condition of reciprocal treatment. The Committee wishes to refer the Government to its statement under Article 3 of the Convention, which declares that according to section 2(2) of the Social Insurance Act, precedence is given to the provisions of international Conventions ratified by Egypt. This provision overrules the condition of reciprocal treatment required by this same Act. The Committee would therefore like the Government to formally confirm in its next report that, by virtue of Article 10 of Convention No. 118 ratified by Egypt, refugees and stateless persons are granted equality of treatment with Egyptian nationals in all aspects of social security covered by the Convention.

Guinea

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 5 of the Convention. Payment of benefits in case of residence abroad. The Committee recalls that the Government, in its earlier reports, indicated that the new Social Security Code, when adopted, would give full effect to Article 5 of the Convention under which the provision of old-age benefits, survivors benefits and death grants, and employment injury pensions must be guaranteed in the case of residence abroad, irrespective of the country of residence and even in the absence of agreements with such country, both to nationals of Guinea and to nationals of any other State which has accepted the obligations of the Convention for the corresponding branch. However, in its last report, the Government indicates that the new Social Security Code does not entirely fulfil the requirements of the provisions of Article 5 of the Convention, in that it does not provide for maintenance of payment of the various benefits in case of change of residence, and that this restriction is a constant feature of the legislation governing the field in the States in the subregion. However, the Government hopes that further negotiation of bilateral agreements with other States will make good this weakness in the Social Security Code.

In this connection, the Committee notes that under section 91, paragraphs 1 and 2, of the new Code, benefits are cancelled when the beneficiary definitively leaves the territory of the Republic of Guinea, or are suspended while she or he is not resident on national territory. It notes however that, under the last paragraph of that section, these provisions "are not applicable in the case of nationals of countries which have subscribed to the obligations of the international Conventions of the International Labour Office regarding social security ratified by the Republic of Guinea, or where there are reciprocal agreements or multilateral or bilateral social security agreements on the provision of benefits abroad". Since, by virtue of this exception, the nationals of any State which has accepted the obligations of Convention No. 118 for the corresponding branch, may in principle now claim benefits in case of residence abroad, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this is in fact the case and, if so, whether a procedure for the transfer of benefits abroad has been established by the national social security fund, to meet the possible demands for such foreign transfer. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to state whether the exception provided in the last paragraph of section 91 is also applicable to Guinean nationals in the event of their transferring their residence abroad, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment established under Article 5 of the Convention as regards the payment of benefits abroad.

Article 6. Payment of family allowances. With reference to the comments it has been formulating for many years regarding the provision of family allowances in respect of children residing abroad, the Committee notes that, under section 94, paragraph 2, of the new Code, to obtain the right to family allowances, dependent children "must reside in the Republic of Guinea, subject to the special provisions of the international Conventions on social security of the International Labour Office, reciprocal agreements or bilateral or multilateral agreements". With respect to reciprocal agreements or bilateral or multilateral agreements, the Committee recalls that to date Guinea has concluded no agreement of this sort for the payment of family allowances in respect of children residing abroad. Regarding the special provisions of the ILO Conventions, it recalls that under Article 6 of Convention No. 118 any State which has accepted the obligations of the Convention for branch (i) (family benefit) must guarantee payment of family allowances both to its own nationals and to the nationals of any other member which has accepted the obligations of this Convention for that branch, as well as for refugees and stateless persons, in respect of children who reside on the territory of any such State, under conditions and within limits to be agreed upon by the States concerned. In this connection, the Government states in its report that the payment of family benefits is guaranteed to families of whom the breadwinner has been regularly insured by the social security system, and is in order regarding the payment of his own contributions, and those of his successive employers. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will be able to confirm formally in its next report that the payment of family allowances will also be extended to cover insured persons up to date with their contributions, whether they are nationals, refugees, stateless persons or nationals of any other States which have accepted the obligations of the Convention for branch (i), whose children reside on the territory of one of these States and not in Guinea. The Committee would also like to know in these cases how the condition of residence is dispensed with for the application of section 99, paragraph 2, of the new Code, which only recognizes as dependent those children "that live with the insured person", and also for section 101, which makes payment of family allowances subject to an annual medical examination of the child, up to the age where she or he comes under the school medical service, and the regular medical care for beneficiaries of school age attending courses in educational or vocational training establishments.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 8 of the Convention. Occupational diseases. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the list of occupational diseases revised in 1992, indicating whether it is now in force.

Article 15, paragraph 1 Conversion of periodical payments into a lump sum. In accordance with the provisions of section 111 of the Social Security Code, periodical payments for employment injury are converted into a lump sum when the permanent incapacity is at most equal to 10 per cent. The Committee recalls, however, that its comments concerned the possibility of converting the benefit granted in the event of employment injury in the circumstances provided for in sections 114 (conversion after expiry of a five-year period) and 115 of the Social Security Code (conversion into a lump sum of part of the periodical payment at the request of the person concerned). The Committee again expresses the hope that the necessary measures will be taken to ensure that in all these cases periodical payments may be converted into a lump sum only in exceptional cases and with the consent of the victim where the competent authority has reason to believe that the lump sum will be utilized in a manner which is particularly advantageous for the injured person.

Articles 19 and 20. Amount of benefits. In the absence of the statistical information requested which the Committee needs so that it can determine whether the amount of benefits paid in the event of temporary incapacity, permanent incapacity and death of the breadwinner, reaches the level prescribed by the Convention, the Committee once again asks the Government to indicate whether it avails itself of Article 19 or of Article 20 of the Convention in establishing that the percentages required by Schedule II of this instrument have been reached, and to provide the statistical information required by the report form adopted by the Governing Body under Article 19 or 20, depending on the Government's choice.

Article 21. Review of employment injury benefit rates. In view of the importance it attaches to this provision of the Convention which establishes that the rates of employment injury benefits must be reviewed to take account of trends in the cost of living and the general level of earnings, the Committee hopes that the Government's next report will contain information on the amount of the increases already established and that it will not fail to provide all the statistics required by the report form under this Article of the Convention.

Article 22, paragraph 2. Payment of employment injury benefits to dependants. The Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will be able to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in all cases where employment injury benefits are suspended and particularly in the cases provided for in sections 121 and 129 of the Social Security Code, part of these benefits will be paid to the dependants of the person concerned in accordance with the provisions of this Article of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the provisions of the Conditions of Service of the Public Service give public servants and their families full satisfaction as regards social coverage. It once again asks the Government to provide the text of the provisions of the above Conditions of Service dealing with compensation for employment injury with its next report.

Lastly, the Committee asks the Government in its future reports to provide information on any progress made in the revision of the Social Security Code, to which the Government referred previously.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Guinea-Bissau

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government states in its last report that the National Social Insurance Institute, which has competence for workers' compensation for occupational accidents and diseases, is having difficulty in identifying occupational diseases. The situation therefore remains unchanged in that, having been unable to determine occupational diseases, the Ministry of Public Health has not been able to adopt a list of such diseases.

The Committee takes note of this information. It can only note once again with regret the lack of progress in amending the national legislation to include a list of occupational diseases. In view of the importance of this matter, the Committee again expresses the hope that the Government will take all necessary steps in the very near future to ensure the adoption of a list of occupational diseases including at least those set out in the Schedule to Article 2 of the Convention. The diseases in question can then be recognized as occupational where contracted in the conditions prescribed in the Schedule. The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance from the Office.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Equality of treatment. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to section 3(1) of Decree No. 4/80 of 1981, concerning compulsory insurance against industrial accidents and occupational diseases. It pointed out that the abovementioned provision is inconsistent with the Convention in that it lays down reciprocity as a requirement for equal treatment between foreign workers employed in Guinea-Bissau and Guinean workers. In response, the Government states that the matter is still receiving its attention but that, as yet, no text has been adopted regarding the reciprocity required by section 3(1) of the abovementioned Decree. The Committee recalls in this connection that the Convention lays down a system of automatic reciprocity between member States which have ratified it. In these circumstances, it hopes that the Government will very shortly take all necessary steps to bring the abovementioned provision of its legislation into line with Article 1(1), of the Convention by ensuring that all nationals of States which have ratified this Convention are automatically afforded the same treatment as nationals of Guinea-Bissau with regard to accident compensation.

Article 1, paragraph 2. Transfer of benefits abroad. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any compensation paid for injured persons or their dependants residing outside the country.

Article 2. Temporary or intermittent work. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 3(3) of Decree No. 4/80 which excludes from the scope of the Decree foreign workers temporarily employed in Guinea-Bissau by foreign undertakings or international bodies is not fully consistent with this provision of the Convention. Article 2 of the Convention allows the exclusion of workers employed temporarily or intermittently in the territory of one Member on behalf of an undertaking located in the territory of another Member only under a special agreement concluded between the Members concerned. The Government indicated that, in practice, such workers have labour contracts under which they are protected by the legislation of their country of origin or the country of the undertaking or international body. The Government further stated that a bill had been drafted to regulate the conditions of foreign workers employed temporarily in Guinea-Bissau on behalf of a foreign undertaking. The Committee notes that the Government's last report provides no information on the bill – to which the Government has been referring since 1987. It asks the Government to keep it informed of progress made in ensuring better application of this provision of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Guyana

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls that it has been drawing the Government's attention since 1971 to the need to amend the list of occupational diseases attached to Regulation No. 34 of 1969, implementing Act No. 15 of 1969 on national insurance and social security. It notes with regret, from the information communicated by the Government in its last report, that this list has still not been amended but that the competent authorities have been requested to accelerate the review procedure of the relevant regulation. It further notes that the Government no longer refers to the legislative reform regarding occupational safety and health. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to take the measures necessary as soon as possible to amend the list of occupational diseases to ensure full application of the Convention on the following points:

- (a) No. 1(x), (xi), (xii) and (xiv) on this list are to be replaced by a heading containing in general terms all halogen derivatives of hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series;
- (b) No. 7, which refers to certain disorders due to radiation should include all pathological manifestations due to radium and other radioactive substances or X-rays and the list of processes likely to induce these should be completed;
- (c) No. 1(i) and (v) relating to poisoning by lead and its compounds and mercury and its compounds should include lead alloys and mercury amalgams respectively;
- (d) No. 1(iii), which refers to poisoning by phosphorus and its compounds, should include the inorganic compounds of phosphorus;
- (e) No. 2 should include, among the processes likely to induce anthrax infection, all loading and unloading or transport of merchandise of any kind;
- (f) silicosis with or without pulmonary tuberculosis and the industries or processes involving the risk of this infection should also be added to the list.

The Committee wishes to remind the Government that it may request technical assistance from the ILO in this domain.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Hungary

Sickness Insurance (Industry) Convention, 1927 (No. 24) (ratification: 1928)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 6 of the Convention. Participation of representatives of the insured persons in the management of insurance institutions. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report as well as the comments on the application of the Convention put forward by the employees' representatives in the National ILO Council. The Committee recalls that the supervision and management of the National Health Insurance Fund was transferred to fall under the Government's competency by Act No. XXXIX of 1998 following a decision of the Constitutional Court. The Court concluded that, given the level of unionization, the employees' national representative organizations lack the democratic legitimacy required to be entrusted with representative functions of the insured. Subsequent to this ruling, the role of the social partners became limited to participation in the supervision of the health insurance fund within the tripartite Control Board of Health Insurance. In 2006, however, Act No. CXVI on the Supervision of Health replaced the above Control Board by the Health Insurance Supervisory Authority, the management of which is appointed by the Government. The social partners retained only the right to nominate two out of the seven independent members of the Surveillance Council appointed by the Government in their individual capacity to assist the Health Insurance Supervisory Authority.

According to the employees' representatives in the National ILO Council, the Act No. CXVI of 2006 on the Supervision of Health Insurance is not in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention in so far as it does not allow the participation of insured persons in the administration of the national health insurance institution. While the Health Insurance Supervisory Authority is assisted by the Surveillance Council, this body is not involved in the management, but in the control and monitoring of the health insurance institutions. There can be no reason to exclude national level social partners and the insured represented by them from the management of health insurance. All the parties concerned should therefore seek a method in line with Hungarian constitutional requirements which would allow the involvement of employers' and employees' organizations actually representing the insured in the management of the health insurance institutions, in compliance with the provisions of the Convention.

In its response, the Government states that the overall reorganization of the health insurance system has started with the submission of Bill T/4221 on the health insurance administration offices, which seeks to replace the National Health Insurance Fund (OEP) by funds that would give substantial decision rights to private investors, even though the State would still retain the majority participation. The Bill establishes the Tariff Committee and the Quota Committee which are responsible for submitting proposals regarding the modification of the content of the health insurance package and on the extent of the quota per person due. Each Committee will be composed of five members, three of which are appointed by the Government and two by the health insurance funds. To make recommendations to these Committees, the Government considers it essential to, after the adoption of the Bill, establish separate consultative bodies composed of persons delegated by all trade unions concerned. The Tariff and the Quota Committees might thus become major players in the field of health insurance, because they would have the right to make proposals affecting the operation of the health insurance system in consultation with the social partners.

While the reform of the national health insurance system is far from complete, the Committee observes that at present social partners have been moved away from the management of the insurance institutions and have no real role to play in representing the interests of the persons protected. No representation of the insured persons is foreseen in the management of the health insurance funds to be set up under Bill T/4221. The Committee warns that splitting the single National Health Insurance Fund administered by the public authority into a multitude of semi-privatized funds where private investors are given substantial decision rights, whereas the representatives of the insured are excluded from management, raises governance concerns for the health insurance system. In the current period of transformation of the national health insurance system, the Government states that it is unable to declare along which principles the new system will be elaborated and is now examining the roles that the employer and the employee sides could play in the operation of the new system. In this situation, the Committee would like to once again draw the Government's attention to those principles of the participatory management of sickness insurance, which were laid down in Article 6 of the Convention as early as 1927 and upheld since in many subsequent international and European social security instruments. These principles require the Government to conserve its overall primary responsibility for the proper administration and functioning of the institutions and services involved, to assign and promote a strong role for the social partners, to guarantee an effective representation of the insured persons as well as to ensure close supervision of private investors. In view of the importance of these principles for the good governance of social insurance, the Committee would like the Government to explain to what extent they are being followed in the current reform of the health insurance in Hungary.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Part IV of the Convention. Unemployment benefit. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of Decision No. 109 of 2006 (1374 H) on the establishment of an employment fund aimed at contributing to economic and social development through the provision of decent and productive job opportunities to specific categories of jobseekers. It also notes that section 15 of the Decision lays down the granting of a monetary benefit worth 60 dinars a month for jobseekers of specific categories. The Committee would like the Government to indicate whether these categories cover all persons protected, both from private and public sectors, who have lost employment involuntarily and who are unable to obtain suitable employment and are capable of, and available for, work. It would also like the Government to indicate the net and gross wage of the ordinary adult male labourer determined in accordance with Article 66 of the Convention, and to indicate whether the 60 dinars are net or gross benefit, its duration, the qualifying conditions (length of employment, etc.), if any. It would also like the Government to communicate the text of Decision No. 109.

The Committee wishes again to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the Convention is intended to afford effective protection against unemployment by means of a system of social security which makes it possible to finance unemployment benefit through collective contributions from all those concerned, thereby avoiding the situation in which they are payable directly by employers, which may become too burdensome if the level of unemployment in the country rises. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government would endeavour, with the help of the ILO, to adopt the necessary rules to permit the Social Security Fund to receive contributions and to pay unemployment benefit, thereby giving effect to Part IV of the Convention through a system of social security and taking into account more fully the principles of organization and financing set out in Articles 71 and 72.

Part VII. Family benefit. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 24 of Act No. 13 of 1980 only provided for the granting of family allowances to pensioners under the social security system, whereas Article 41 of the Convention covers other categories of employees or residents. In its report, the Government indicates that section 18 of the Order taken by the Council of Ministers, which relates to the regulations of employees with contracts, promulgated on 14 December 1971 specifies that the provisions of the Civil Service Act No. 55 of 1976 and the regulations issued thereof, shall apply to employees hired with contracts. The provisions of other laws and regulations also apply to them, in accordance with section 18 of the regulations on employees who have contracts as non-nationals, who become entitled to family benefits such as their national counterparts. The Committee notes this information. It would like the Government to communicate in its next report information on the application in practice of the above legislation, providing detailed statistics on the different categories of workers protected and the benefits provided, covering both the public and the private sectors, in accordance with Article 44 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Convention (in conjunction with Article 19). Equality of treatment. (a) The Committee noted in its previous observations that section 38(b) of Social Security Act, No. 13 of 1980, and Regulations 28-33 of the Pension Regulations of 1981 provide that non-Libyan residents receive only a lump sum in the event of premature termination of work, whereas nationals are guaranteed, under section 38(a) of the Act, the maintenance of their wages or remuneration. The Committee points out again the importance of abolishing the difference between Libyan workers and foreign workers in the event of premature termination of employment. It hopes that the Government will take all necessary steps to this end in the near future.

(b) In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that, according to the information sent by the Government and pursuant to the national legislation (sections 5(c) and 8(b) of the Social Security Act), foreign workers engaged in the public administration and non-Libyan self-employed workers may be affiliated only on a voluntary basis to the social security scheme unless, in the case of the latter, an agreement exists with their country of origin. The Committee reiterated its view that, where affiliation of nationals to the social security scheme is compulsory, as it is in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, to make affiliation voluntary for some categories of foreign workers is contrary to the principle of equal treatment laid down in the Convention (except where arrangements exist between the members concerned under Article 9). Foreigners are often unaware of their own rights and of the administrative steps that they need to take to be protected and therefore cannot benefit from the advantages mentioned by the Government. The Committee takes note of the draft regulation communicated during the mission carried out by the Office in July 2007. The draft regulation provides for compulsory affiliation of foreign self-employed workers, thus guaranteeing equal treatment with regard to nationals. It hopes that the draft will soon be adopted and requests the Government to keep the Committee informed on the progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the number of foreign workers employed in the public sector.

(c) In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that, under the terms of Regulation 16, paragraphs 2 and 3, and Regulation 95, paragraph 3, of the Pensions Regulations of 1981, and without prejudice to special social security agreements, non-nationals who have not completed a period of ten years' contributions to the social security scheme (years that may be supplemented, where appropriate, by years of contributions paid to the social insurance scheme) are entitled neither to an old-age pension nor to a pension for total incapacity due to an injury of non-occupational origin. Furthermore, Regulation 174, paragraph 2, of the above Regulations seems to imply a contrario that this qualifying period is also required for pensions and allowances due to survivors of the deceased person by virtue of Title IV of the Regulations, when death is due to a disease or an accident of non-occupational origin. Since such a qualifying period is not required for insured nationals, the Committee pointed out that the above provisions of the Pension Regulations of 1981 are incompatible with Article 3(1) of the Convention. The Committee noted the indication by the Government, according to which there is an amendment to the regulations by virtue of Decision No. 328 of 1986 that specifies the entitlement of non-nationals to old-age benefits, who spent 20 years in service for which they pay contributions. Section 29 of the Order sets down the condition of five years of minimum service and contributions of insured persons who are non-nationals for the payment of the overall allowance for them. It also notes that, according to the Government, Libyan citizens do not enjoy this advantage. The Committee takes note of the text of the above Order. It would like the Government to provide information on the measures taken to give full effect to this provision of the Convention as regards the other points mentioned above.

Article 5. Payment of benefits abroad. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that Regulation 161 of the Pension Regulations of 1981 provides that pensions or other cash benefits may be transferred to beneficiaries resident abroad subject, where appropriate, to the agreements to which the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya is a party. The Committee recalled that, in accordance with Article 5 of the Convention (read in conjunction with Article 10), each Member which has ratified the Convention must guarantee both to its own nationals and to the nationals of any other Member that has accepted the obligations of the Convention in respect of the branch in question, as well as to refugees and stateless persons, when they are resident abroad, the provision of invalidity benefits, old-age benefits, survivors' benefits, death grants and employment injury pensions. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, this matter will be examined when amending the Regulations, so as to bring them into conformity with the Convention. It hopes that the Government will adopt the necessary measures in the near future so as to give effect to this provision of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Medical Care and Sickness Benefits Convention, 1969 (No. 130) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to give full effect in law and practice to the provisions of the Convention mentioned in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Panama

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee noted previously that, according to the information provided by the Government in its last report, the necessary measures to bring the provisions of the national legislation fully into conformity with the Convention had not yet been adopted. The Government indicates in this respect that it has not been in a position to adopt the necessary amendments in view of the lack of consensus between the social partners concerning an amendment to the national legislation. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend certain provisions of the Labour Code and the social security legislation in relation to compensation for employment injury. When ratifying the Convention in 1958, the Government made a commitment to adopt all the necessary measures to give effect to its provisions. In these circumstances, the Committee deplors the lack of progress achieved in bringing the national legislation into conformity with the Convention and is bound to draw the Government's attention once again to the following points.

Article 5 of the Convention (in conjunction with Article 2, paragraph 1). Payment of compensation in the form of periodical payments without limit of time. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized the need to amend sections 306 and 311 of the Labour Code in order to provide for the payment of compensation in the form of periodical payments without limit of time in the event of an occupational accident resulting in permanent incapacity or death. Indeed, workers who are not covered by the compulsory social security scheme are governed by the provisions of the Labour Code respecting compensation for employment injury, which in such cases only guarantee them the provision of benefit for a period of 12 months at the expense of the employer.

Under the terms of Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention, all workers, employees and apprentices employed by any enterprise, undertaking or establishment of whatsoever nature, whether public or private, have to be guaranteed the protection afforded by the Convention, with the second paragraph of this Article enumerating limitatively the exceptions authorized by the Convention. Accordingly, workers covered by the Convention but who are not covered by the social security scheme also have to benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. The Committee notes from the statistical data provided by the Government that the number of workers paying contributions to the social security scheme was around 730,000 in 2005. However, the Government does not specify the total number of employees in the country, as it was requested to do, so that the Committee could compare the number of persons covered by the social security scheme with the total number of workers. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide this information with its next report and trusts that the Government will be in a position to align sections 306 and 311 of the Labour Code with the relevant provisions of the social security legislation respecting compensation for employment injury so as to guarantee the protection afforded by the Convention for all workers to whom it is applicable.

Article 7. Provision of additional compensation to workers suffering employment injury when their condition requires the constant help of another person. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that neither the Labour Code nor the social security legislation concerning compensation for employment injury (Decree No. 68 of 31 March 1970) provides for the granting of additional compensation to injured workers whose condition requires the constant help of another person. In its report, the Government refers to the adoption, during the period covered by the report, of Act No. 51 of 27 December 2005 reforming the Constituent Act of the Social Security Fund. However, this new text has not taken into account the Committee's comments with regard to the need to bring the national legislation into conformity with this provision of the Convention in view of the lack of consensus on the subject between the social partners and the economic difficulties faced by the country. While taking due note of this information, the Committee once again hopes that the Government will be able to re-examine this matter and take the necessary measures to give effect to this provision of the Convention, which is intended to guarantee the provision of additional compensation to injured workers whose condition requires the constant help of another person.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Peru

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1961)

Peru is bound by the obligations under the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), in respect of five of the nine branches of social security (medical care, sickness, old-age benefits, maternity and invalidity), as well as by a number of other social security Conventions (Nos 12, 19, 24, 25, 35 to 40 and 44). Given that the problems of application identified by the Committee in its many comments are essentially the same for all these Conventions, the Committee considers it appropriate to make a general comment for all social security Conventions ratified by Peru. For this purpose, the Committee had recourse to a 2009 ILO study on the social security system of Peru, and also to a 2009 International Monetary Fund (IMF) working paper on the effect of the financial crisis on pension insurance systems worldwide.

Non-compliance with the basic principles of the international social security Conventions

For many years, the Committee has highlighted the fact that the different components of the social security system in Peru do not give effect to certain principles common to the social security Conventions ratified by the country, namely: (i) the collective financing of benefits; (ii) the democratic and transparent management of social security institutions; (iii) providing benefits throughout the contingency; and (iv) ensuring a minimum level of benefits.

The principle of collective financing of social security laid down by the ILO instruments provides that the cost of benefits and the cost of administering these benefits must be borne collectively by way of contributions and taxes (Article 71(1) of the Convention) and that the total of the insurance contributions borne by the employees protected shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total of the financial resources allocated to the protection of the employees (Article 71(2)). However, both in the private and in the public pension system of Peru, except in the case of voluntary contributions which the law allows employers to pay optionally, the insured are the only ones to contribute to individual capitalization accounts and to the financing of contributions for invalidity and survivors' insurance. The contributions and administrative costs are also borne solely by workers affiliated to the administrators of private pension funds (AFP) and the Office of Standards for Welfare (ONP), which is contrary to the principle of joint financing of benefits established by the ILO Conventions. The Committee points out that by not respecting the principles of solidarity and collective financing, the individual capitalization accounts system is not compatible with Article 72(2) of Convention No. 102.

Convention No. 102 also requires that when the administration is not entrusted to an institution regulated by the public authorities or by a governmental department accountable to Parliament, representatives of persons protected shall participate in the administration or be associated and have advisory powers (Article 72(1)). This participation must be effective and allow the latter to influence the choices made in the investment and the management of the concerned bodies. In its latest reports, the Government agrees that the current national law does not enable affiliated members to participate in the management of the AFP. It nevertheless indicates that a discussion on this issue took place in Congress but that no conclusion was reached. The Government intends to examine the possibility of establishing a supervisory board, in which representatives of the insured would be able to participate and be empowered to collect information from the AFP on the administration of pension funds. With regard to health-care protection, while recognizing that the participation of insured persons in the administration of institutions of health providers (EPS) is not provided by law, the Government indicates that a public body – the Superintendencia de Entidades Prestadoras de Salud (SEPS) – supervises both the economic and financial activities, as well as the payment of benefits of the EPS.

The Committee notes the growing recognition by the Government of the need to strengthen the monitoring and surveillance activities as regards private social security entities. It requests the Government to provide in its next report information on the progress achieved with a view to supervising the activities of private operators by monitoring and surveillance bodies in which representatives of the insured participate. Along the same lines, given the low rate of affiliation to the social security system, the Committee requests the Government to ensure the participation of representatives of insured persons in the work of the national body responsible for collecting tax and social contributions – the Superintendencia de Administracion Nacional Tributaria (SUNAT) – and provide information in this regard.

Under the private system, old-age benefits are calculated on the basis of the capital that each insured person holds in his/her individual savings account (CIC). When the capital accumulated on this account is exhausted, entitlement to pension may disappear and the insured person who exceeds the average life expectancy could be without his/her only source of income. This is contrary to the principle of the international conventions according to which benefits must be provided throughout the contingency at the guaranteed minimum rate. It is therefore not possible to guarantee that the minimum rate set by the Convention is respected, because the level of pension paid under the private system cannot, for reasons inherent in this type of pension, be known until the time of retirement. The economic and financial crisis highlighted moreover the shortcomings of this system, as will be shown under item 3.

In addition, the Committee notes that in 2005 the Constitutional Tribunal of Peru recognized that the right to social security is a “fundamental right of legal configuration” which has an “essential core”, the violation of which by the legislature may be the subject of a constitutional complaint (Decision No. 1417-2005 PATC of 8 July 2005). The Committee nevertheless notes that while Peru has been a party to Convention No. 102 since 1961 and that the Constitution recognizes that international treaties on human rights are part of the “block of constitutionality” (norms having constitutional value), the Constitutional Tribunal does not seem to include the principles and the minima guaranteed by Convention No. 102 into the “essential core” of the right to social security. This decision, thus, while upholding the right to social security as such, seems to devoid it of the concrete contents contained in Convention No. 102. In view of the international obligations undertaken by Peru, the Committee believes that recognition of the basic principles guaranteed by the social security Conventions of the ILO would effectively contribute to the implementation of the Peruvian rule of law based on the solidarity, participatory governance and social minima.

Malfunctioning of the public pension system

The Committee notes that the public pension system managed by the ONP seems to suffer serious shortcomings as a result of which numerous delays occur in the determination of the right to pension, causing in turn considerable judicial litigation. According to a report of July 2008 of the Defensoria del Pueblo del Perú, which is the independent public institution established by the Constitution in order to ensure respect for fundamental rights and the proper functioning of the rule of law, about 100,000 applications for determining entitlements to pension were awaiting a decision and an equally large number of cases challenging the decisions of the ONP were being considered by the courts. As per this report, the ONP is the institution against which the greatest numbers of complaints have been lodged by the Defensoria. This number is of significant importance considering that approximately 500,000 pensions are managed by the ONP and it has as many active contributors in the public pension system. The report of the Defensoria further notes that no up to date record of the contributions by members exists, that the burden of proof as regards the contributory period is not placed on the ONP, but on the insured and that procedures for granting pensions are excessively complex. The report indicates a series of recommendations to both the executive and legislative powers in order to correct the serious deficiencies mentioned above. Given these allegations, the Committee asks the Government to demonstrate in its next report how the Peruvian State assumes the full and general responsibility concerning the provision of benefits and the proper administration of social security institutions, in accordance with Articles 71 and 72 of the Convention.

Effects of the economic and financial crisis on the social security system of Peru

The Committee notes that the Government has not responded to the 2008 general observation on the impact of the global economic and financial crisis on the social security system. It notes however that, according to 2009 statistics (IMF), the financial crisis has affected most severely the Peruvian private pension funds, which have lost an average of 32 per cent of their capitalization. The consequences are proving to be very significant, especially for insured people close to the age of retirement, because the value of the capitalization accounts has fallen sharply, driving down the level of pensions paid. The crisis has been more devastating in cases where financial investments of private pension schemes were not sufficiently regulated and where there was not a supplementary pay-as-you-go component based on the principle of solidarity providing defined benefits. The Committee considers that the Peruvian Government must be aware of the fragility inherent in the system of private management and should now consider the possibility of establishing financial mechanisms to protect funds accumulated for pension, such as insurances, funds to safeguard the amount of pensions, or the automatic transfer of individual accounts to funds where the investment risk is very low for insured persons near retirement.

The Committee notes that in order to overcome the deficiencies inherent in the private administration of the pension system, the Government established in March 2007 minimum pensions for those insured by private pension funds under certain conditions (Act No. 28991 on la libre desafiliación informada, pensión mínima y complementaria, y régimen especial de jubilación anticipada). Under this law, any person affiliated to the private pension system (SPP) who at the time of the creation of this system belonged to the public pension system (NPS), is entitled to a minimum benefit equal to that provided by the SNP or a supplementary pension if the pension from their private pension system is less than the minimum pension. The Committee notes, however, that the Act only guarantees a minimum pension for a limited number of insured persons who meet certain age requirements at the time of the introduction of the private pension system administered by the AFPs. The Committee considers that opening up the system of guaranteed minimum pensions to the entire population over a certain age would allow the Peruvian State to ensure a minimum old-age pension to all those whose level of pension risks being too low, in particular as a result of the current economic and financial crisis. The Committee invites the Government to further explore the advantages of extending the minimum pension to all residents with low incomes. The Government could, in this respect, wish to take advantage of the experiences of other countries in the region where a basic social pension of a non-contributory nature has been created, which benefits all citizens aged 65 and over who have never contributed or whose contributions are not sufficient for establishing the right to a pension.

The Committee also notes that in response to its previous comments regarding the need to reintroduce a reduced pension for all insured persons who have completed a period of at least 15 years of contribution or employment (Article 29(2) of Convention No. 102), the Government indicates that it has carried out the actuarial calculations necessary to calculate the cost of this measure to the pension system managed by the ONP. Currently, as a result of the retroactive effect of Decree-Law No. 19990, such a pension is, in fact, only paid to insured persons who have turned 60 before the entry into force of Decree-Law No. 25967, i.e. 19 December 1992 at the latest. The Government states that, given the size of the resources concerned (approximately 70 per cent increase in the national budget), it is for the Ministry of Economy and Finance to assess and decide on the implementation of this proposal. The Government is requested to draw the attention of the Ministry of Economy and Finance to Peru's international obligation to restore the right to a reduced pension for insured persons who have completed at least 15 years of contribution or employment, in accordance with Article 29(2) of Convention No. 102, and to indicate in its next report the progress made on this matter. The Committee also invites the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO, particularly as regards the actuarial evaluation of the impact of such a measure on the pension system.

Insufficient coverage and evasion of the obligation of membership in the social security system

According to an ILO study, 2009, in 2007 only 35 per cent of the economically active employed population benefited from coverage for old age, invalidity and survivors, which demonstrates a significant level of evasion from the obligation to affiliate to the social security system in the formal economy. In 2006, among the approximately 2.2 million people over 65 years of age, only 500,000 were receiving old-age, invalidity or survivors' benefits, representing a level of coverage of the elderly of approximately 23 per cent. As regards health-care protection, only 36 per cent of the total population was covered. Overall, these figures reveal the alarming situation of the evasion from the obligation of membership, particularly by large enterprises in the formal sector, and the need for the State to significantly strengthen the control exercised by the national body responsible for collecting tax and social contributions (SUNAT). By virtue of the international social security standards ratified by Peru, the Government has in fact the duty to ensure compliance with the requirement of compulsory affiliation to the social security system and is obliged to take concrete steps to improve coverage of the entire social security system. Article 5 of the Convention provides in this respect that States must ensure that the minimum percentage of membership in each branch of social security is actually achieved in practice. To achieve this result requires, among other things, providing the organs responsible for collecting contributions means to carry out their mission and providing for penalties that are sufficiently deterrent for offenders. In the case of Peru, the measures to control the application of the national legislation will be greatly facilitated by the fact that the urban labour force represents 65 per cent of the total workforce. The Committee trusts that the Government will set itself specific goals in terms of percentages of the population to which coverage will be extended within the assigned time frame, through the strengthening of its capacity to enforce the obligation of membership to the social security system, particularly as regards the urban workforce. Please provide detailed statistics on the extension of coverage of the country's social security system for each branch of social security in both the public and private system.

Status of micro- and small enterprises

The Committee recalls that, at the time Peru ratified Convention No. 102 in 1961, it availed itself of the possibility for States whose economies and medical facilities are insufficiently developed, to apply the provisions only to 50 per cent of all employees in industrial workplaces employing 20 persons or more, instead of 50 per cent of all employees (Article 3 of the Convention). States that have used this derogation are required to indicate in their periodic reports the action taken to gradually expand the scope of persons covered and to specify whether the reasons for maintaining a reduced scope of application subsist, or whether they renounce to avail themselves of this exception in the future.

In 2008, with a view to providing coverage to most of the population working in small and medium-sized enterprises and to combating the significant level of evasion from membership and the payment of contributions by these companies, the Government adopted a Legislative Decree amending the legal regime for these companies as regards social security (DL No. 1086). The new Decree defines micro-enterprises as those employing not more than ten workers, and small enterprises as those employing up to 100 employees and a turnover below a certain amount. It establishes a special legal regime applicable to micro-enterprises where workers are not required to join a mandatory system of pension insurance and benefit from a special regime as regards health-care protection. Employers are required to make monthly contributions for each of their workers, supplemented by equivalent contributions paid by the State.

The Committee notes that, unlike health-care insurance which remains compulsory with certain adjustments, Legislative Decree No. 1086 renders the affiliation to the pension system voluntary. Given the large number of workers employed by these enterprises, it hopes that this measure only represents a transitional solution only applicable to newly created micro-enterprises for the maintenance of rights acquired under the previous regime. The Committee also draws the attention of the Government to the provisions of Article 6 of the Convention, which establishes the principles to be met by voluntary insurance schemes (control by public authorities or administered by joint operation of employers and workers, coverage of a substantial part of persons with low incomes, etc.). In light of these considerations, the Committee expects to receive information from the Government on the impact of the reform relating to the coverage of workers in micro-enterprises.

Introduction of a universal health-care insurance

The system of health-care protection in Peru is composed of the following schemes: Seguro Social de Salud (ESSALUD), Seguro Integral de Salud (providing significantly reduced benefits compared to the system ESSALUD and are financed by the Ministry of Health) and private insurances (EPS). Despite a considerable increase in the coverage of the contributory health-care social security system between 1999 and 2007, only about 36 per cent of the population benefited in 2007 from health-care coverage, and the remaining 64 per cent was not covered. In 2006, the percentage of employees covered was 32 per cent on average, with significant disparities between the public sector where the rate was 68 per cent and the private sector where the rate of coverage was 24 per cent. These rates determine Peru as one of the countries of the region where health-care coverage is generally the lowest and a country where regional inequalities within the country are most pronounced.

In recognition of this fact, the Government adopted in 2009 a framework law on universal health-care insurance (Law No. 29344 of 9 April 2009), the aim of which is to gradually extend to the entire population health-care benefits of a preventive, curative and rehabilitative nature on the basis of a basic plan for health-care insurance. This text is intended to give effect to the basic rights under the Peruvian Constitution, in particular the right to health-care protection, the universal and progressive right of everyone to social security which guarantees free access to health-care benefits provided by public, private and mixed entities, as well as the duty of the State to determine the national health policy. According to the framework law, the right to universal health-care insurance should be fully and progressively guaranteed to all residents at every stage of life, without any discrimination. The Ministry of Health is responsible for preparing the said basic plan and for creating a technical committee for the implementation of the universal health-care insurance. According to the latest information available in September 2009, the establishment of the universal health-care insurance had begun in some parts of the country, notably Apurímac, Huancavelica and Ayacucho.

The Committee notes that the introduction of a system of universal health-care insurance could, if implemented effectively, allow for the extension of health-care protection to an increasingly large part of the population. It notes however that in order to make the system of universal health-care insurance fully operational, the abovementioned law should be supplemented by technical regulations which ensure compliance with compulsory membership and contributions, especially for employees in the formal economy where evasion of the obligation to affiliate seems particularly high, progress can also be made in respect of employees in the informal economy, as independent workers, as well as the rural populations. The Committee will closely monitor the implementation of the system of universal health-care insurance and therefore requests the Government to provide information on the nature of care provided, as well as the progress made in terms of coverage of the population by economic sector and geographic region.

Developing a national strategy for sustainable development of social security

In 2001, the International Labour Conference (ILC) reaffirmed the central role of social security and reiterated that it remained a challenge for all member States which had to be urgently addressed. The conclusions adopted by the ILC in 2001 recognize that “of highest priority are policies and initiatives which can bring social security to those who are not covered by existing systems”. To achieve this objective, the Conference urged each country to define a national strategy closely linked to other social policies. States parties, such as Peru, to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), are required to develop a national strategy for the full implementation of the right to social security and should allocate adequate fiscal and other resources at the national level (General Comment No. 19 of the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), adopted in 2007). The Committee considers that the need for such a national strategy stems from the overall responsibility of the State to ensure the sustainability and proper functioning of the social security system, as established by Convention No. 102. The launch of a national strategy for the consolidation and development of a sustainable social security system would allow the State to fully exploit all of the potential offered by international social security standards to ensure the good administration of schemes and allow the gradual extension of coverage to the entire population. The Committee draws the attention of the Government to the possibility of making recourse to the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Rwanda

Article 2 of the Convention. Coverage of apprentices and casual and temporary workers against the risk of employment injury. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report, including the law regulating labour in Rwanda, No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 (Labour Law) and the National Social Security Policy document of the Ministry of Financing and Economic Planning of February 2009. Section 2 of the new Labour Law provides that this law applies to the labour relations between workers and employers as well as between the latter and the apprentices or the trainees under their authority as per contract. Casual and temporary workers are included in the scope of application by virtue of section 3, while section 47 establishes the obligation of the employer to affiliate workers to the social security scheme. On the basis of the above sections of the newly adopted Labour Law, the Committee notes with satisfaction the extension of the national legislation on the protection against employment injury to apprentices and casual and temporary workers.

The Committee also welcomes the National Social Security document, which provides an analysis of the current social security programme and policy orientations for its improvement with the objective of achieving social security coverage for all. As regards employment injury, the policy document indicates the Government's commitment to reinforce measures to establish 100 per cent coverage for employment injury of all workers in the formal sector. In the absence of coherent legal texts defining the basic social security framework, the policy document recommends a legal reform through an organic law, which will be guided inter alia by the provision that employment injury benefits are managed by the Rwanda Social Security Board and mandatory for all workers with a formal employment contract. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in developing a legal framework for the social security system in Rwanda.

Sierra Leone

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 5 of the Convention. In its last report, the Government indicates, in reply to the comments made for many years by the Committee, that a Bill on Workmen's Compensation has been formulated but not adopted as yet. It further states that the abovementioned draft legislation reflects the provisions of the Convention concerning the payment of injury benefits throughout the period of contingency and that copy of the revised legislation will be communicated to the ILO as soon as it is adopted. The Committee notes this information as well as the Government's request for technical assistance from the Office in order to accelerate the implementation process of the revised legislation. The Committee expresses the hope that the draft legislation will soon be adopted and requests the Government to provide a copy of it. On the basis of the new legislation, the ILO would certainly be able to discuss with the Government the terms of the requested technical assistance.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Thailand

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1968)

In a communication dated 5 June 2009, the State Enterprise Workers' Relations Confederation (SERC) alleges that the Government of Thailand fails to grant to migrant workers who fall victims of industrial accidents, and to their dependents, the right to equal treatment with Thai nationals, in breach of domestic and international labour standards.

Since 2006, the SERC has supported research undertaken by the Human Rights and Development Foundation (HRDF) establishing that refusal to allow migrants access to work-related accident and disease compensation from the Workmen's Compensation Fund (WCF) constitutes systematic discrimination against approximately two million unskilled migrant workers from Myanmar, Cambodia and Lao People's Democratic Republic. The refusal of access to the WCF results from the inability of migrant workers to satisfy, in most cases, the conditions imposed on them by the circular of the Social Security Office (SSO) RS0711/W751 of 2001 relating to the provision of protection for migrant workers who incur work-related accidents or illnesses, which requires migrant workers to possess a passport or alien registration documents and obliges their employer to register and pay contributions to the WCF in respect of the worker concerned. Recognizing that many of these workers have entered Thailand illegally without official documents, the Government of Thailand has, since 1996, created systems for registering migrants from Myanmar to work legally once they are in Thailand and has issued work permits and identity cards with the mention "not possessing Thai nationality" to over 500,000 nationals of Myanmar (documents Thor. Ror. 38/1, issued by the Department of Provincial Administration, Ministry of Interior). The SSO, however, refuses to accept these documents to enable migrants to access the WCF as insufficient documentary evidence under the circular RS0711/W751, and prohibits employers of migrant workers holding Thai work permits and identity cards from paying contributions to the WCF. The SERC alleges that the circular RS0711/W751 and its implementation by the SSO violate the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1994 (WCA), which applies equally to national and migrant workers and obliges employers to pay contributions to the WCF irrespective of their nationality. The numerous attempts to challenge the legality of the SSO circular before the labour and administrative tribunals have failed. The Labour Court of Appeal refused to revoke the SSO circular on the basis that it did not exceed the powers of the SSO. The Supreme Administrative Court also rejected the case on the basis that administrative tribunals are not competent to review labour policies falling within the jurisdiction of labour courts. Although the decision of the Labour Court of Appeal was itself appealed to the Supreme Court and to the Central Labour Court, the SERC states that any decision of these courts revoking the SSO circular will not be binding since in the Thai legal system the only tribunals having competence to revoke administrative acts of the Ministry of Labour are the administrative courts. Having exhausted all domestic legal remedies and fearing that the SSO circular instituting unequal treatment of migrant workers might become unreviewable by the national tribunals, the SERC has decided to seek protection of migrant workers in Thailand under Convention No. 19.

In reply to these allegations, the Government states that the SSO of the Ministry of Labour realizes the suffering of migrant workers, many of whom are illegal migrants whose nationalities have not been verified. At present, the Department of Employment of the Ministry of Labour is verifying these workers' nationalities and is expected to complete this task by February 2010. Migrants will subsequently be covered by the social security system, i.e. both the Social Security Fund and the WCF. Consequently, the requirement established by the SSO circular to possess a valid passport will no longer be applied to migrant workers. As for the employers' obligation to pay contributions to the WCF in respect of migrant workers, the Government indicates that the WCA provides for equal treatment between Thai and foreign workers in this matter. Although migrant workers are not entitled to compensation from the WCF for work injuries, they receive compensation directly from their employers, the amount of which is equal to the compensation paid by the WCF.

The Committee notes with deep concern the situation of some 2 million workers from Myanmar, many of whom are described by the SERC as being in "a social zone of lawlessness" where they are not protected by the laws of Thailand or Myanmar. It notes, however, the stated commitment of the Thai Government to treat all workers fairly and equally without any discrimination based on nationality and to promote the human dignity of all migrant workers, documented or undocumented. The Committee considers that in a situation where equal treatment of migrant workers may be jeopardized on a mass scale leading to exploitation and suffering, the bona fide application of the Convention would require member States to deploy special and urgent efforts commensurate with the gravity of the situation, unilaterally as well as in cooperation with one another. With regard to the measures reported by the Thai Government, the Committee notes that, while it endeavours to treat all workers equally irrespective of their nationality, the SSO does not recognize the identity cards issued by the Thai authorities with the mention "not possessing Thai nationality" and the measures reported by the Government are directed exclusively at verifying nationalities of migrant workers. With regard to the situation in law, the Committee observes that, while the WCA grants foreign workers the right to equality of treatment, the SSO circular RS0711/W751 subjects the exercise of this right to fulfilment of certain conditions, which in the current situation effectively deprives migrant workers of protection by the WCF enjoyed by the Thai workers. With respect to the Government's statement that foreign workers who are thus deprived from compensation by the SSO, are entitled instead to an equal compensation from their employer, the Committee notes that the Government does not contest the fact that, in practice, as explained by the SERC, the SSO orders obliging the employer to pay compensation directly to the worker concerned are usually ignored, as migrant workers are unable to engage in costly and lengthy judicial proceedings necessary to enforce the SSO orders. With these considerations in mind, the Committee observes that the principle of equal treatment in social security would lose all meaning if access to social security benefits were made subject to such conditions, the fulfilment of which for migrant workers becomes either particularly difficult or depends on the actions of the employers or of the authorities of the receiving country. To prevent and remedy such situations, the international social security law has put in place a number of safeguards, which offer guidance to governments wishing to apply the principle of equality of treatment in good faith. In particular, eligibility for workers' compensation shall not be made conditional upon the payment of contributions by the employer in respect of the worker concerned. Governments shall assume the general responsibility for the proper administration of the social security institutions, ensuring their close cooperation with other agencies, such as the Ministry of Interior, Department of Employment, Immigration Service, etc., with a view, inter alia, to facilitating social security coverage of migrants. The Committee asks the Government to review the policy of the SSO concerning social security coverage and protection of migrant workers in case of occupational accidents and diseases in the light of the above guiding principles and safeguards established by international law for the promotion of equal treatment of foreign workers. Taking into account the gravity of the situation, the Committee asks the Government to instruct the SSO to take positive and urgent measures lifting restrictive conditions and facilitating access of migrant workers to the WCF irrespective of their nationality. With respect to the SSO circular RS0711/W751, the Government is asked to explain what procedures exist in the Thai legal system to supervise, review and revoke contested circulars issued by a government agency at the level of the ministry concerned, at the level of the Government or by an independent judiciary authority. Finally, noting that the legality of the SSO circular is currently pending before the Supreme Court as well as the Central Labour Court, the Committee hopes that these jurisdictions will take into account the present comments.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Tunisia

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee recalls that section 49 of Decree No. 74-499 of 27 April 1974 respecting the old-age, invalidity and survivors' schemes in the non-agricultural sector and section 77 of Act No. 81-6 of 12 February 1981 to organize social security schemes in the agricultural sector provide that the grant of the above benefits to nationals of Tunisia is subject to the applicant residing in Tunisia at the date on which the application is made, although this requirement is lifted for foreign nationals of countries which are bound to Tunisia by a bilateral or multilateral social security treaty. As Tunisian nationals do not benefit from equality of treatment with foreign nationals, in accordance with Article 4(1) of the Convention, and may be refused, contrary to Article 5(1) of the Convention, the provision of old-age, invalidity and survivors' benefit in the event that they are resident abroad when applying for the benefit in a country that has not concluded a bilateral treaty with Tunisia, the Committee previously requested the Government to bring the national legislation into full conformity with the Convention by abolishing the above residence requirement for Tunisian nationals.

Over the course of the past 25 years, the Government indicated in 1987 that, even though Tunisian nationals are obliged to be resident in Tunisia on the date of making the application for the pension, the residence requirement was subsequently lifted in relation to the provision of pension arrears. In 2002, the Government added, although without citing the relevant provisions, that the requirement of residence in Tunisia for the grant of pensions is also lifted for Tunisian nationals in the event of the assignment of a Tunisian worker to an enterprise based in a country with which Tunisia has concluded a social security agreement, or in the event of a temporary stay in the country of origin of the worker and her or his dependants. With regard to the requirement for Tunisian nationals to be resident in Tunisia at the time when the application for benefit is made, the Government undertook to take the Committee's comments into consideration in the revision of the texts in question. However, in its last report, received in September 2006, the Government no longer refers to this intention and confines itself simply to indicating that when section 49 of Decree No. 74-499 of 1974 and section 77 of Act No. 81-6 of 1981 are "read in conjunction" with the provisions of the bilateral and multilateral social security agreements concluded by Tunisia, the requirement of residence is also lifted for the nationals of the contracting countries and for Tunisians resident in those countries. The clause relating to the lifting of the residence requirement forms part of the Association Agreement with the European Union in which the principle of free remittance is fully valid in relation to all social security benefits envisaged in sections 62 to 64 of the Agreement for the nationals of both contracting parties.

The Committee observes that the outcome of reading the above provisions in conjunction, as indicated by the Government, namely the raising of the residence requirement, only concerns Tunisian nationals resident in countries to which Tunisia is bound by bilateral or multilateral agreements and does not therefore resolve the problem of inequality of treatment of Tunisian nationals who may not benefit from any system of reciprocity established by such agreements. Nor is it clear to which residence requirement the Government is referring in its report: the requirement to be resident in Tunisia at the date of applying for the benefits or the residence requirement after making the application when pension arrears are due. Finally, with regard to a reading of the above legislation in conjunction with the provisions of Convention No. 118, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would demonstrate, by referring to decisions of the institutions administering social security, that the requirement to be resident in Tunisia at the time of making the application for benefits that is imposed under these laws is effectively raised for all Tunisian nationals, in the same way as for nationals of any other State that has ratified the Convention, wherever they are resident outside Tunisia and even in the absence of bilateral or multilateral agreements with the State in question. By way of illustration, the Committee requests the Government to explain the manner in which section 49 of Decree No. 74-499 of 1974 and section 77 of Act No. 81-6 of 1981 would apply in practice to Tunisian nationals and nationals of Egypt, Mauritania, the Syrian Arab Republic or Turkey, and their dependants, who are resident in one of these countries at the time that they make the application for their benefits in Tunisia.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that it has accepted the obligations of the Convention for the following branches of social security: medical care, sickness benefit, maternity benefit, employment injury benefit, and it indicates that invalidity and retirement pensions are not covered by the clause raising the residence requirement envisaged by the Convention as these benefits are not among the branches of social security accepted by Tunisia when ratifying the Convention. The Committee is bound to recall that when ratifying the Convention in 1965 Tunisia accepted its obligations in respect of the following branches: (a) medical care; (b) sickness benefit; (c) maternity benefit, (g) employment injury benefit; and

(i) family benefit. On 21 April 1976, Tunisia extended its obligations to the following branches: (d) invalidity benefit; (e) old-age benefit; and (f) survivors' benefit which, under the terms of Article 2(5) of the Convention, are deemed to be an integral part of the ratification and to have the force of ratification as from the above date. Under the terms of Article 2(2) of the Convention, Tunisia is under the obligation to apply the provisions of the Convention in respect of all the branches accepted. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will ensure that institutions administering social security responsible for reading the national legislation "in conjunction" with the provisions of the Convention are correctly informed (by a circular, if necessary) of the extent and scope of Tunisia's international obligations under the Convention and ascertain that invalidity and retirement pensions are covered by the clause raising the residence requirement for nationals of Tunisia on an equal footing with the nationals of other countries which have ratified the Convention, in accordance with the specifications of Articles 4 and 5.

Branch (g) (Employment injury benefit). In its previous comments concerning the Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19), the Committee noted that, by virtue of section 59 of Act No. 94-28 of 21 February 1994 establishing the compensation scheme for occupational accidents and diseases, foreign beneficiaries of periodical payments who cease to reside in Tunisia receive as the whole of their compensation a lump sum equal to three times the total of the annual periodical payment which was or would have been granted to them, subject to the more favourable provisions of bilateral social security agreements or international treaties. In reply, the Government indicates that, taking into account the hierarchy of standards, the provisions of Conventions, including those of Convention No. 19, prevail over section 59 referred to above. The provisions of Conventions are imperative laws of immediate application and do not require instructions to be issued to institutions administering social security for their implementation. The Committee takes due note of these statements which, mutatis mutandis, would also be applicable to the provisions of Convention No. 118. Article 5(1) of Convention No. 118 requires the payment of periodical payments due in respect of employment injury in the event of residence abroad irrespective of the conclusion of any other bilateral or multilateral social security agreement. In view of the complementary obligations of Tunisia under Conventions Nos 19 and 118, the Committee requests the Government to confirm explicitly whether the nationals of all the States that have ratified Convention No. 19 and the nationals of all the States that have accepted the obligations of Convention No. 118 for branch (g) (Employment injury benefit), as well as Tunisian nationals, benefit from the provision of their periodical payments – and not a lump sum equal to three times the annual periodical payment – when they cease to be resident on the territory of Tunisia. In the absence of clear instructions to institutions administering social security, please provide examples of the application in practice of Act No. 94-28 of 21 February 1994, with particular reference to section 59, based on a specific case of the remittance of benefits consisting of the current payment of periodical payments in respect of employment injury, for example, to a national of Egypt, Mauritania, the Syrian Arab Republic or Turkey, and to their dependants resident in one of these countries.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17)

The Committee notes the Government's response to its previous comments, according to which the Labour Advisory Council is currently in the final stages of putting recommendations together to forward to the minister to approve the Workmen's Compensation Act in the near future which will give effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee hopes that the abovementioned Act will be amended without further delay and that it will include provisions implementing Article 5 of the Convention (payment of compensation in the form of periodical payments).

Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope. The Committee notes the adoption on 9 April 2003 of Act No. 2450 regulating salaried domestic work. It notes that this Act, at least to a certain extent, secures the application to women domestic workers of certain provisions of the Convention, including Article 3 (maternity leave) and Article 6 (protection against dismissal). However, the Committee notes that the implementing text concerning the affiliation of women domestic workers to the National Social Security Fund, as envisaged in section 24 of Act No. 2450, is still in draft form. The Committee therefore hopes that the necessary texts will be adopted in the near future to secure for this category of women workers in both law and practice the protection envisaged by the social security legislation, not only with regard to medical care, but also cash maternity benefits, under the conditions set forth in Article 4 of the Convention.

The Committee also considers it necessary to supplement Act No. 2450 of 2003 on a number of points that it is raising in a request addressed directly to the Government.

In the absence of a reply by the Government to its previous comments concerning the protection of women agricultural workers, the Committee is bound once again to express the firm hope that the necessary measures will be adopted in the near future to ensure that all of these women workers benefit in law and practice from the maternity protection afforded by the national legislation (General Labour Act and Social Security Code).

Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information with its next report, including statistics, on the application in practice of the social security scheme (the regions and municipalities covered, the number of employees covered in practice by the protection envisaged by the social security system in relation to the total number of employees) with regard to maternity care and maternity cash benefits.

Article 3, paragraph 2. Duration of maternity leave. The Government indicates in its report that it intends to promote the adoption in the near future of the necessary measures to prevent any contradiction between the various provisions of the legislation applicable in relation to maternity leave. The Committee therefore hopes that the relevant provisions of the labour legislation (section 61 of the General Labour Act and Supreme Decree No. 2291 respecting women workers in the public administration) will be aligned in the very near future with those respecting social security (section 31 of Decree No. 13214 of 24 December 1975) so as to establish explicitly and without ambiguity the right to maternity leave of at least 12 weeks, in accordance with the Convention. It considers the adoption of these measures all the more necessary as the social security legislation still does not apply to all the women workers covered by the Convention.

Article 3, paragraph 4. Late confinement. The Government states once again that it intends to take measures in the near future to incorporate the Committee's recommendations into the national legislation. The Committee trusts that the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on the measures taken in practice to include in the General Labour Act, the Social Security Code and the legislation respecting the public administration a provision explicitly providing for the possibility of extending prenatal leave where confinement takes place later than the presumed date, without any reduction in the minimum period of post-natal leave of six weeks prescribed by the Convention.

Article 4, paragraphs 1 and 3. Medical benefits. The Committee notes the information concerning the development of a new national health policy and the adoption of the Act respecting universal health insurance for mothers and children (Seguro Universal Materno Infantil – SUMI) on 22 November 2002. It notes in this respect that the principal objectives of the new health policy include the improvement of health services and the proclamation of a right to health guaranteed by the State; with health no longer being considered an exclusive function of the health authorities, but as requiring the involvement of local authorities for the purposes of achieving broader participation by the population and better knowledge of its rights, while refusing the commercialization of the right to health. With regard to the SUMI, which forms part of the first phase of the reform process, the Committee notes that its primary objective is the rapid reduction of maternal and child mortality through the provision, throughout the territory and for all pathologies, of free and full medical care, including surgical care, medical examinations and medicine at all levels, to pregnant women during their pregnancy and up to six months after confinement, and to children under 5 years of age, with specific attention to the particular needs of the rural population. According to the Government's report, the SUMI therefore constitutes one of the elements for securing the provision of health services that are constantly more accessible and leading up to the establishment of an integral and universal social security scheme, instead of the current situation in which only 24 per cent of the population are covered by the network of health funds of the social security system. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation in practice of the SUMI, with the provision of statistics on the number of women workers in relation to the total number of employees and the number of women workers who have received care from the health services in the context of the SUMI, with an indication of the nature of the care received. Please also provide copies of the implementing regulations envisaged in section 10 of the Act of 22 November 2002. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would provide information with its next report on the results achieved and the difficulties encountered in the implementation of the new national health policy.

Article 4, paragraphs 4, 5 and 8. Right to benefits. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure the provision of maternity benefits: (i) by means of public funds for women who are not yet covered by the social security scheme; and (ii) in the context of public assistance for those who fail to meet the qualifying conditions prescribed by the Social Security Code.

Article 5. Nursing breaks. The Committee is bound to request the Government once again to indicate in its next report the measures adopted or envisaged to supplement the legislation respecting conditions of employment in the public administration with a provision explicitly granting entitlement to nursing breaks for women workers in this sector.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Chile

Article 4, paragraph 3, of the Convention. Medical benefits. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government states that section 139 of Ministry of Health "Decree with Force of Law" No. 1 of 2005 (DFL) to "revise, coordinate and systematize" Legislative Decree No. 2.763 of 1979 and Acts Nos 18.933 and 18.469, requires the State to ensure that care is free from the onset of pregnancy until the sixth month following the birth of the child, and for newborn children until the sixth year of their lives. The Committee notes that what section 139 actually provides is that all pregnant women, during pregnancy and until the sixth month following the birth of the child, are entitled to care including medical checks during pregnancy and following confinement (subsection 1); and that newborn children likewise have this entitlement until the sixth year of their lives (subsection 2). Subsection 3 provides that care during confinement is included in the medical assistance laid down in section 138(b) of DFL No. 1, which specifies that curative medical assistance includes consultations, diagnostical and surgical examinations and procedures, hospitalization, obstetric care and treatment including the medicines specified in the national form and the other health care and measures. With regard to the costs of these benefits, the Committee notes that section 145 of DFL No. 1 provides that the care established in subsections 1 and 2 of section 139 is free, whereas the care during confinement laid down in subsection 3 of section 139 (including hospitalization) is charged for. It also notes that under sections 158, 159, 160 and 161, the State's participation in medical costs during confinement has been maintained in respect of beneficiaries whose income exceeds a certain amount (categories C and D). Consequently, some women workers remain under the obligation to share in the cost of medical care received during confinement as laid down in subsection 3 of section 139. The Committee would remind the Government in this connection that, as it has been pointing out for several years, the Convention guarantees ipso jure, for all women within its scope fulfilling the requirements, free medical benefits (prenatal care, care during confinement, postnatal care and hospitalization where necessary). It notes with regret that the Government has failed to take the opportunity to adopt regulations to this effect in order to bring its legislation into conformity with this provision of the Convention. It draws the Government's attention to the need to fulfil the international obligations assumed by Chile by providing in the national legislation for free medical benefits for maternity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this connection in its next report. Please also indicate whether Ministry of Health Resolution No. 1717 of 1985, referred to by the Government in its 2004 report, is still in force and, if so, provide a copy of it.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain the information that the Committee requested previously regarding freedom of choice of doctor and hospital. The Committee requests the Government to specify in its next report whether, in the context of DFL No. 1, insured persons have freedom of choice of doctor and between a public or a private hospital, in accordance with this provision of the Convention, and to specify the relevant legislative and regulatory provisions.

Article 4, paragraph 5. Assistance benefits. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not answer its previous comment that no benefits out of social assistance funds are payable, subject to the means test, to women who do not fulfil the affiliation requirements set in section 4 of Decree with Force of Law No. 4 of 1978 and so are not eligible for cash benefits. The Committee accordingly hopes that in its next report, the Government will indicate the measures taken or envisaged to give full effect to this provision of the Convention.

Germany

Maternity Protection Convention, 1919 (No. 3) (ratification: 1927)

Article 3(c) of the Convention. Financing of cash benefits. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the need to amend the maternity protection legislation regarding the payment by employers of a part of the cash benefits due to women on maternity leave. It noted that while some of the allowance was covered by sickness insurance, the larger part – consisting of the difference between the coverage assumed by the sickness insurance and the average wage of the women workers – was financed directly by employers. Legal provisions passed in 1997 changed this system in order to have the sickness insurance cover in full the maternity benefits paid by small enterprises, the aim being to enhance the employment prospects of young women in these enterprises. The Committee invited the Government to extend this practice to large and medium-sized enterprises so as to ensure equal treatment between women workers however large or small the enterprise, and to prevent maternity from becoming a source of indirect discrimination among women in the labour market, a possibility where a part of the maternity benefit is payable by employers. In November 2003, the Federal Constitutional Court ruled that the maternity benefit supplement payable by the employer offends against the principle of equal treatment laid down in the German Constitution and is potentially discriminatory against women, in that large and medium-sized enterprises could find it to their advantage to employ fewer women.

In its last report, the Government indicates that, since 1 January 2006, it has amended the applicable legislation so as to extend to all employers the reimbursement of the maternity benefit supplement which they formerly covered, regardless of the number of workers they employ (Act of 22 December 2005 on the compensation of employers' expenditure). The Government states that the new system has removed an incentive for employers to discriminate against women in hiring staff. The Committee takes note with satisfaction of these measures allowing full effect to be given to Article 3(c) of the Convention.

Guatemala

Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103) (ratification: 1989)

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information and statistics provided in the Government report and, in particular, the information concerning the application of Article 6 of the Convention regarding the prohibition of dismissal during maternity leave, including the opinion of the Technical and Legal Advisory Council of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.

Article 1. Coverage. The Committee recalls that, in 2003, the Government expressed the intent to extend geographical coverage of the sickness, maternity and employment injury scheme of the Guatemalan Social Security Institute (IGSS) to the remaining three departments (El Petén, El Progreso and Santa Rosa). In this respect, the report indicates that feasibility studies regarding the extension of coverage of the sickness and maternity insurance scheme found that such extension would result in losses for the IGSS and that consequently the only way to extend coverage would be through the use of public funds (capital solidario). The administration has put out to public tender the feasibility and viability studies to extend the sickness and maternity programmes and the Government has committed itself to follow-up on this process and inform the Committee accordingly. With regard to statistics on the number and categories of women workers actually covered by the sickness and maternity scheme of the IGSS requested by the Committee in its previous comments, the Government indicated that no such statistics were available, but that currently a new system was being developed to collect this type of information. The Committee takes due note of the Government's commitment to extend maternity benefits to women workers in the departments of El Petén, El Progreso and Santa Rosa either through the sickness and maternity insurance scheme of the IGSS or by means of public funds. The Committee hopes that concrete progress will be achieved in this area in the very near future and that the Government will be able to effectively monitor the situation through the new system of collection of statistical indicators on the number of women actually enjoying maternity benefits both in the public and private sectors and irrespective of the size of the enterprise.

Article 3, paragraphs 2 and 3. Compulsory period of maternity leave. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to amend section 152 of the Labour Code in order to guarantee a period of compulsory post-natal leave of at least six weeks. In response, the Government states that section 34 on the Regulations respecting cash benefits (Order No. 468 of the IGSS) makes the right to maternity cash benefit conditional on effective rest of the woman worker, who has to abstain herself from remunerated work while in receipt of maternity cash benefits. The Committee observes that section 34 prohibits women from receiving concurrently maternity cash benefits and income from work, but does not establish a minimum period of compulsory post-natal maternity leave required by the Convention as a protective measure aimed to prevent women from resuming work as a result of pressure or need before the expiry of the statutory period of leave to the detriment of her health. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to legally guarantee the compulsory period of post-natal leave of at least six weeks to all women covered by the Convention and to prohibit employers from employing a woman during her post-natal leave.

Article 4, paragraph 1. Suspension of benefits. In its previous comments the Committee asked the Government to repeal the provisions which allow suspension of benefits in the event of "clearly anti-social behaviour" of the beneficiary (section 48 of the Regulations on sickness and maternity protection, section 149 of the Regulations on medical assistance and section 71 of the Regulations on cash benefits). In response, the Government informs that in the last year and a half there have been no cases of dismissal on the basis of the provisions in question and that an information programme has been developed by the IGSS on the rights and obligations of women who are entitled to the maternity protection programme. In the light of the practice, the Committee trusts that the Government will have no difficulty in repealing the abovementioned provisions in the very near future.

Article 4, paragraphs 4, 5 and 8. Employer liability. The Committee trusts that the Government's next report will contain a detailed reply to the Committee's longstanding request to amend the national legislation under which the employer may be required to bear the cost of maternity benefits for women workers who are not yet covered by the social security scheme (Chapter X, section 10, of the Basic Act respecting the IGSS) or have not completed the requisite qualifying period (section 23 of the Regulations on sickness and maternity protection and section 24 of the Regulations on cash benefits).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that the Government submitted to the Office in August 2007 for comments a draft of the new Labour Code. According to the Government's latest report, the draft took account of the observations of the Committee and was to be submitted to the General People's Congress before the end of 2008. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the new Labour Code has been adopted and, if so, to provide a copy of it together with detailed information on the extent to which the new legislation gives effect to the following issues, on which the Committee has commented for many years:

- Inclusion of certain categories of women workers in the scope of application of the new Labour Code, who are excluded from the Labour Code in force, No. 58 of 1970 AD, in particular domestic and similar workers, women engaged in stock-raising and agriculture – except those who work in enterprises processing agricultural products or repairing machinery necessary for agriculture – and permanent or temporary public officials working in public bodies and state administration (Article 1 of the Convention).
- Amendment of section 43 of the Labour Code in force, in order to eliminate the requirement that the granting of maternity leave is conditional upon the completion of a qualifying period of six consecutive months of service with an employer (Article 3, paragraph 1).
- Elimination of the incompatibility between the provisions of the Labour Code in force relating to the length of maternity leave and those of Social Security Act No. 13 of 1980 so as to ensure that women workers under the new Labour Code are entitled to at least 12 weeks of maternity leave and a compulsory period of maternity leave after confinement of at least six weeks, in accordance with the Convention (Article 3, paragraphs 2 and 3).
- Inclusion of a provision supplementing section 43 of the Labour Code in force in order to ensure that where confinement occurs after the presumed date, prenatal leave must in all cases be extended until the actual date of confinement, and that the period of compulsory leave to be taken after confinement shall not be reduced on that account (Article 3, paragraph 4).

Article 2. Equal treatment for foreign employees. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under the terms of section 5 of the Regulation of 1982 on registration, contributions and inspection, registration under the social security system of non-Libyan officials is on a voluntary basis unless an agreement has been concluded with the countries of which these workers are nationals. In its report, the Government stated that the Social Security Fund has tried to amend section 5 and make participation in the Social Security Fund compulsory for all categories of workers, including non-national self-employed workers, but this amendment has not yet been enacted. The Committee expresses the hope that the amending legislation will soon be enacted and asks the Government to send in a copy of it, once adopted.

Article 4, paragraphs 1, 4 and 8. Cash benefits. The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the need to bring section 25 of Social Security Act No. 13 of 1980 into conformity with the above provisions of the Convention by organizing the provision of cash benefits in a manner consistent with the Convention and by ensuring that in no circumstances the employer shall be individually liable for the cost of such benefits due to women employed by him either directly, by paying at his cost the benefits to which they are entitled, or indirectly, by acting in place of the social security fund.

The Committee notes the Government's report received in 2009 replying to its 2008 observation and direct request, as well as the Government's response received in 2008 replying to the comments made in 2006 and 2007 by the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprise Workers (FENASEP).

Article 1 of the Convention. Coverage. In reply to its previous observation soliciting information on the manner in which the provisions relating to maternity protection are applied in practice to women employed in export processing zones, the Government states that at present export processing zones do not exist anymore. Other sources however, indicate that the so-called free trade zones, most notably the Colon Free Zone, are currently operating in Panama (see for example www.dobusinessinpanama.com). The Committee asks the Government to explain to what extent and in what manner maternity protection (maternity leave, nursing breaks and protection against dismissal) is guaranteed in law and practice to women working in the Colon Free Zone and other free trade zones in Panama.

Article 3, paragraph (c). Maternity benefit provided to women who do not meet the conditions for entitlement under social insurance. In Panama, according to section 107 of the Labour Code, private employers are obliged to pay the benefits or part of the benefits for women employees who do not fulfil the conditions of entitlement to maternity cash benefits from the Social Security Fund. Taking into account that making employers directly liable for the costs of benefits due to their women employees may, as a rule, result in their discrimination on the labour market, the Committee asks the Government to study the possibility of replacing employers' liability by social security benefits provided out of public funds.

Article 3, paragraph (d). Nursing breaks. Section 114 of the Labour Code gives women workers nursing their children the choice between 15-minute breaks every three hours or two half-hour breaks per day. The Government states that the 15-minute nursing breaks every three hours are rarely used in practice, but remains silent as to the use of the other option of two half-hour breaks per day. Instead, the report argues that research in different South American countries shows that nursing may affect the health of the mother and child due to the high incidence of pesticides in the mother's milk. The report indicates, for example, that the use of agrochemicals in the agricultural sector and the substances contained in the textiles in the confection industry may cause chronic effects for nursing women working in these sectors and their newborns. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would supply copies of the studies establishing the presence of toxic substances in maternal milk and state what measures have been taken or are contemplated in order to improve conditions of work in the sectors of activity concerned. The Committee also wishes to emphasize that 15-minute nursing breaks every three hours do not enable effect to be given to Article 3(d) of the Convention. It therefore requests the Government to formulate, in consultation with the social partners and representative organizations of women workers, practical recommendations giving effect to the second option offered by section 114 of the Labour Code which provides, in conformity with the Convention, that every woman worker shall have the right to two half-hour nursing breaks.

Article 4. Employment protection. FENASEP draws attention to numerous cases of the non-renewal of fixed-term contracts of pregnant women or women on maternity leave reported in the public sector. Taking into account the number of such cases brought to the Committee's attention, and the fact that fixed-term contracts should not be used to circumvent the legislation protecting pregnant women or women on maternity leave, the Committee hopes that all existing procedures including the Bipartite Commission Ministry of Labour and Employment Development (MITRADEL)-FENASEP, would be used in order to investigate and follow up on these cases, and that the Government will provide in its next report information on the measures taken in this respect so as to avoid maternity-based discrimination of women whose fixed-term contracts terminate during the period protected by the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Romania

Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183) (ratification: 2002)

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction new Emergency Government Ordinance No. 148/2005, regarding the provision of leave and indemnities for social health insurance, which ensures a better application of Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Section 23 provides that all insured persons have the right to maternity leave and benefits for a period of 126 calendar days and that the same benefits are granted to women who are not insured on a compulsory basis if they give birth to a child within nine months after termination of entitlement to insurance.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 3 (Argentina, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Guinea, Nicaragua); Convention No. 103 (Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, Papua New Guinea, Russian Federation, San Marino, Slovenia, Spain, Tajikistan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine); Convention No. 183 (Belize, Cuba, Cyprus, Hungary, Italy, Lithuania, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Slovakia).

Social policy

Brazil

Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117) (ratification: 1969)

Parts I and II of the Convention. Improvement of standards of living. The Committee notes the Government's detailed report received in November 2008. The Government emphasizes the measures adopted to promote economic growth in the country, infrastructure investments for economic and social development and the introduction of a National Biodiesel Production and Utilization Programme (PNPB). Among other innovative measures, a "social fuel" certification has been established for producers of biodiesel who encourage social integration and regional development. The Committee hopes that in its next report the Government will include an updated summary of the results achieved by these measures and by other initiatives intended to ensure that "the improvement of standards of living" is regarded as the principal objective in the planning of economic development (Article 2).

Part IV. Remuneration of workers. In the 2005 observation, information was requested on the measures envisaged or adopted to determine the maximum amount and manner of repayment of advances on wages, in accordance with Article 12 of the Convention. The Committee notes that the report received in November 2008 does not contain information on this issue, which has been pending for many years. The Committee invites the Government to include with its next report copies of court rulings and administrative decisions giving effect to the provisions of Article 12.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government has not provided information on the application of the Convention since its first report received in June 2002. Major changes have occurred in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In recent years, the Democratic Republic of the Congo has received technical assistance from the ILO and has been a recipient of aid from international financial institutions and other international partners assisting in the country's transitional process towards political and economic stability.

Parts I and II of the Convention. Improvement of standards of living. The Committee recalls that Article 1 provides that all policies shall be primarily directed to the well-being and development of the population and to the promotion of its desire for social progress. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide information on how the provisions of Parts I and II have been taken into account in the formulation and implementation of the measures adopted in the context of the current economic reforms.

Part VI. Education and training. The Committee recalls its previous comments indicating that the Government referred to the national education plan "Education for all by 2015" to ensure that children are able to profit from facilities for education. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide information on how it gives effect to Part VI.

The Committee notes that the preparation of a detailed report, including the indications requested in this observation, will certainly provide the Government and the social partners with an opportunity to ensure the effective implementation of the Convention. In this regard, the Government might wish to request further technical assistance from the relevant units of the ILO to address obstacles in reporting on compliance with the Convention.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 82 (United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, United Kingdom: Falkland Islands (Malvinas), United Kingdom: Gibraltar); Convention No. 117 (Georgia, Ghana, Guinea, Italy, Madagascar, Malta, Republic of Moldova, Nicaragua, Niger, Panama, Paraguay, Senegal, Sudan, Tunisia, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela).

Migrant workers

Barbados

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous observation. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Articles 7 and 9 of the Convention. Free services rendered by public employment agencies and transfer of remittances. The Committee notes the communication from the Congress of Trade Unions and Staff Associations of Barbados (CTUSAB), dated 19 June 2008, in which it expresses concerns relating to the Farm Labour Programme between Barbados and Canada, which still employs thousands of Barbadians. According to the CTUSAB, 25 per cent of the workers' earnings are being remitted to the Barbados Government directly from Canada, 5 per cent of which is retained by the Government for administrative expenses. The CTUSAB also maintains that the costs of going to Canada, as well as pension contributions for both Barbados and Canada and medical contributions in Canada are immediately deducted from their pay, which is creating hardship for the workers concerned. In the view of the CTUSAB, the system must be reviewed so as not to disadvantage the workers under the programme.

The Committee notes that the Government has not replied to the comments from the CTUSAB. The Committee recalls that under Article 9 of the Convention, ratifying States undertake to permit the transfer of such part of the earnings and savings of the migrant for employment as the migrant may desire. Requiring migrant workers to remit 25 per cent of their earnings to the Government would, in the view of the Committee, be contrary to the spirit of Article 9 of the Convention. Moreover, the Committee recalls that Article 7(2) of the Convention provides that services rendered by public employment services in connection with the recruitment, introduction and placing of migrants for employment are to be provided free of charge. The Committee draws the attention of the Government to the fact that charging workers for purely administrative costs of recruitment, introduction and placement is prohibited under the Convention (General Survey of 1999 on migrant workers, paragraph 170). The Committee urges the Government:

- (i) to undertake a review of the Farm Labour Programme between Barbados and Canada, in cooperation with the workers' and employers' organizations;
- (ii) to explain the reasons for requiring migrant workers under the programme to remit 25 per cent to the Government, including 5 per cent for administrative costs; and
- (iii) to ensure that purely administrative costs of recruitment, introduction and placement are not borne by the workers recruited under the programme, and that migrants for employment are permitted to transfer their earnings or such part of their earnings and savings as they desire.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Italy

Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2009 and the resulting conclusions of the Conference Committee. It also notes the written information of the Government submitted to the Conference Committee, and the extensive information in the Government's report, including legislation and statistics, received on 1 September 2009. The Committee further notes the communication from the Italian Union of Labour (UIL), submitted on behalf of the UIL, the Italian General Confederation of Labour (CGIL) and the Italian Confederation of Workers' Trade Unions (CISL) received on 24 September 2009, which provides additional information on many of the observations already made by the Worker members during the discussion in the Conference Committee, and adds some new issues. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to the UIL communication, received on 4 December 2009. The Committee will examine the UIL communication together with the Government's reply at its next session.

Combating irregular migration, while protecting the rights of migrant workers in an irregular situation. The Committee notes the conclusion of the Conference Committee that the phenomenon of irregular migration is a complex and global issue, and that Italy faces particular challenges in addressing the rapid increase in immigration flows and in protecting the basic human rights of migrant workers. The Conference Committee noted that the Government was taking certain measures aimed at combating irregular migration, including the illegal employment of migrants, while at the same time improving compliance with the laws and regulations concerning conditions of work and strengthening assistance measures. The Conference Committee asked the Government to undertake a detailed analysis of recent legislative initiatives targeting irregular migration, including the illegal employment of migrants, and to take measures to ensure that migrant workers who are in an irregular situation were able to enjoy their basic human rights, in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention. It encouraged the Government to strengthen its efforts to promote tolerance and respect between all groups of society.

The Committee takes due note of the extensive information in the Government's report regarding the many efforts made to combat human trafficking, through national and transnational actions, and the programmes providing assistance to victims of trafficking and serious exploitation managed by the Inter-Ministerial Committee for the Support of the Victims of Trafficking, Violence and Serious Exploitation contemplated under section 18 of the Unified Text of provisions concerning immigration and the status of foreigners (Legislative Decree No. 286/1998 of 25 July 1998). The Committee also notes that Law No. 94/2009 of 15 July 2009 amending, among others, Legislative Decree No. 286/1998 further increases the sanctions laid down for the exploitation of workers illegally employed.

The Committee notes that the Government reaffirms its commitment to protect the fundamental human rights of all migrant workers, and refers in this regard to section 2 of Legislative Decree No. 286/1998 guaranteeing any foreigner at the border or in Italy the enjoyment of fundamental human rights provided in the national legislation, the international Conventions in force and the generally recognized principles of international law. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the stigmatization of certain ethnic or social groups and the racist and xenophobic propaganda, mainly targeting non-European Union (EU) immigrants and minority groups, such as the Roma, are matters of serious concern which compromise the difficult process of peaceful integration and coexistence. The Committee notes from the information provided by the Government that the Programmatic Document 2009–11 will contain a strong focus on policies fighting both the exploitation of immigrants and racial discrimination and xenophobia, based on surveys and monitoring interventions and campaigns to promote equal opportunities. The Committee also notes the Government's commitment to see to it that constant action to combat irregular immigration also helps to reduce exploitation of migrant workers who are in the country in an irregular situation and who can therefore be more easily exploited. In this context, the Committee notes the measures taken to regularize undeclared Italian, EU workers and non-EU workers in the care sector pursuant to section 1ter of Legislative Decree No. 27/2008 (converted into Act No. 102/2009 on the "family assistance and support declaration").

With respect to its concerns expressed in its previous observation regarding reports on human rights violations and exploitative working conditions of undocumented workers coming from Africa, Asia and Eastern Europe, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report on the special surveillance campaigns, some aimed at the agricultural sector, carried out in the Puglia region and Foggia district since 2006 where the phenomenon is particularly widespread. It also notes that the 2008 document on Strategic Programming of the Monitoring Activity of the Ministry of Labour, Health and Social Policies gives particular attention to inspections aimed at fighting irregular migration flows and illegal employment of migrants. Particular attention is given to minorities, operating outside any employment or regulatory framework, promoting the irregular immigration of their own nationals to keep them in situations of exploitation in violation of workers' rights. The Committee notes that in 2008 labour inspection activities aimed at detecting abusive employment found that out of the 4,666 workers in an irregular situation, lacking a residence permit, 336 were employed in the agricultural sector, 711 in the services sector, and 2,231 in construction. Out of the 9,608 workers who were found to be irregular for other reasons, 732 were employed in agriculture, 2,229 in services and 2,989 in construction. The Committee further notes that research is being carried out in Campania, Apulia, Calabria and Sicilia on new forms of labour exploitation, which has worsened in recent years. The Committee asks the Government to provide information as follows:

- (i) a copy of the Programmatic Document 2009–11 and other documents concerning the policies fighting both the exploitation of immigrants and racial discrimination and xenophobia, including of migrants of Roma and Sinti origin, as well as information on the surveys conducted, the monitoring interventions undertaken, and campaigns held to promote equal opportunities;
- (ii) the results achieved by the various measures and programmes undertaken, including inspections carried out, to detect employment of foreigners in abusive conditions, and to protect those migrants who have been victims of abuse or exploitation;
- (iii) the number and nature of infringements, and sanctions pronounced against those organizing or facilitating clandestine migration, and those employing migrant workers in abusive conditions, particularly in agriculture, construction and services sectors;
- (iv) the number of male and female migrants in an irregular situation who have been identified as victims of abuse and exploitation in the agriculture and construction sectors, and how many of those have been granted a special permit pursuant to section 18 of Legislative Decree No. 286/1998; and
- (v) the number of undeclared EU and non-EU workers, men and women, working in the care sector that have been regularized pursuant to Act No. 102/2009. The Government is also requested to indicate whether it intends to adopt similar measures to regularize undeclared migrant workers in other sectors, such as agriculture and construction.

Measures directed at migrant workers. The Committee notes that in June 2009 the Conference Committee requested the Government to undertake a detailed analysis of the legislative provisions proposed in the context of the so-called Security Package with a view to ensuring their compliance with the Convention. The Committee recalls that during the discussion in the Conference Committee concerns were raised about the possible adverse effects of the provisions in the Security Package, should it be adopted, especially the provision introducing the offence of illegal entry or residence in Italian territory. The Committee notes that Law No. 94/2009 (the Security Package) amending Legislative Decree No. 286/1998 was adopted on 15 July 2009. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the objective of the new law is to make State action to prevent or combat minor and major criminality more effective, and that the severe line taken in particular sectors is accompanied by greater protection against every form of oppression and violence against so-called disadvantaged groups. The Committee notes that the law introduces the offence of illegal entry or residence by inserting section 10bis in Legislative Decree No. 286/1998 which punishes unlawful entry and residence in Italian territory by a fine of between 5,000 to 10,000 euros. Section 10bis further provides that the accused foreigner can be expelled without it being necessary to obtain advance clearance from the competent court for the investigation of the offence. Section 10bis further provides that once the foreigner has been expelled, the Chief of Police (questore) informs the court which dismisses the case based on no case to answer.

The Committee also notes that the Tribunal of Pesaro, in a decision of 31 August 2009, raised a question to the Constitutional Court regarding the constitutionality of section 10bis, as regards the offence of “illegal stay” on the territory, on the basis of the consideration that it is contrary to: (i) the principle of reasonableness, including from the perspective of proportionality; (ii) the principle of equality (article 3 of the National Constitution) as it assumes arbitrarily that all migrants in an irregular situation are socially dangerous; (iii) the principle of solidarity (articles 2 and 3 of the National Constitution); (iv) article 10 of the National Constitution that provides for the respect of international customary law; and (v) articles 3 and 37 of the National Constitution because it does not contemplate the possibility of a “justified cause” for the irregular stay in the country.

The Committee draws the attention of the Government to the fact that if the fight against clandestine migration is justified, at the same time, it is important to ensure respect of the basic human rights of all migrant workers, in order to avoid migrant workers (notably those in an irregular situation) finding themselves in a situation where their rights are not respected and where they are vulnerable to abuses of all kinds (paragraph 361 of the 1999 General Survey on migrant workers). The measures advocated in Part I of the Convention to combat clandestine movements of migrants (Articles 2–6) are primarily targeted at the demand for clandestine labour rather than the supply (see paragraph 338 of the 1999 General Survey on migrant workers). The objective of Article 6(1) of the Convention is therefore to define and apply sanctions against organizers of clandestine movements and against employers in cases of illegal employment, and not against migrant workers who are in an irregular situation themselves. Through Articles 1 and 9, the Convention aims to ensure that migrant workers enjoy a minimum level of protection with respect to their basic human rights and with respect to claims regarding rights arising out of past employment, even when they have immigrated or are employed illegally and their situation cannot be regularized.

The Committee notes that pursuant to section 331(1) of the Code of Criminal Proceedings public officials are obliged to report criminal offences and that the introduction of the crime of illegal entry and stay of foreign workers may prevent migrant workers in an irregular situation from requesting assistance from essential public services. This may also prevent them, in practice, from filing complaints with regard to violations of their basic human rights. The possibility for migrant workers to claim certain rights arising out of past employment with respect to remuneration, social security and other benefits before a competent body, as provided by Articles 9(1) and (2) of the Convention, may also remain merely theoretical if migrant workers in an irregular situation who report violations of these rights are immediately expelled. The Committee expresses concern that section 10bis of Legislative Decree No. 286/1998 will further marginalize and stigmatize migrant workers in an irregular situation, and increase their vulnerability to exploitation and violation of their basic human rights. The Committee notes that the Government’s report does not contain any information on whether it has undertaken the detailed analysis of the impact of recent legislative initiatives targeting irregular migration, including illegal employment of migrants, especially the Security Package, as requested by the Conference Committee.

The Committee, in line with the Conference Committee’s conclusions, asks the Government to undertake a detailed analysis of the impact of recent legislative measures aimed at combating irregular migration, and especially of section 10bis of Legislative Decree No. 286/1998, on the basic human rights of migrant workers in an irregular situation and the equality of treatment of these workers with respect to their rights arising out of past employment, guaranteed by Articles 1 and 9 of the Convention, with a view to assessing the need to amend or repeal this and other provisions of Legislative Decree No. 286/1998. Concerning the pending question before the Constitutional Court on the constitutionality of section 10bis, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the outcome of the decision, once handed down. The Committee further asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 10bis, including the number of migrant workers who have been identified as irregular and expelled since the entering into force of the Act. The Government is also requested to indicate how it is ensured that migrant workers, who are in an irregular situation, especially those accused of the crime of illegal immigration, including as a result of labour inspections, and who are the object of an expulsion order, can file complaints with regard to violations of their basic human rights and can claim certain rights arising out of past employment with respect to remuneration, social security and other benefits as provided by Articles 1 and 9 of the Convention.

Part II of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment between migrants lawfully in the country and nationals. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee requested the Government to ensure full respect for the equality of opportunity and treatment of migrant workers lawfully in the country with nationals, and to pursue its efforts, in cooperation with the social partners, to promote and ensure the observance of a national policy in this regard. The Conference Committee states further that the Government should take additional measures to ensure the effective protection of migrant workers against direct and indirect discrimination, in accordance with Articles 10 and 12 of the Convention. The Committee notes that the integration of the immigrant population is one of the objectives of the social inclusion strategy outlined in the National Report on Social Protection and Inclusion 2008–10, and that the Programmatic Document 2009–11 is to include interventions on integration and immigration. The Committee also notes the information in the report on the initiatives carried out under the National Fund for Social Policies (FNPS) to promote social inclusion and integration, including the interventions promoting labour insertion of the Roma, Sinti and Traveller populations (Lombardia, Piemonte, Toscana and Puglia).

With respect to the incidences of discrimination against the Roma, including attacks at Roma camps, the Committee notes the Government's reply that the issues connected with the presence of the Roma community on the national territory has long received attention and that it is making all efforts to put in place initiatives aimed at ensuring a more secure and fairer civil coexistence. According to the Government these initiatives aim at improving integration and the quality of relations with the resident population in order to protect more effectively public security, and to prevent discrimination and intolerance against the Roma. The Government mentions in this regard the state of emergency declared in some regions between 21 May 2008 and 31 May 2009 and the collaborative actions of delegated commissions in this context, which according to the Government had positive results. The Committee notes that during the Conference Committee discussion the Worker members questioned the emergency-like approach vis-à-vis the Roma and Sinti populations, and called for a well-defined integration policy on housing, schooling and employment. The Committee notes the Government's written statement to the Conference Committee that as part of its efforts of defining a national strategy on Roma issues, the Programmatic Document 2009–11 will include a special section on actions supporting the Roma and Sinti communities, promoting and defining a new approach to the issue of Sinti and Roma, based on interventions on social inclusion, the concept of equal rights and duties for nationals and immigrants, the reception of immigrants and acceptance of diversity. In addition, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report on the activities organized by the Office for the Promotion of Equality of Treatment and the Elimination of Discrimination based on Race and Ethnic origin (UNAR) to promote social inclusion and intercultural dialogue, and to address discrimination against immigrant workers. Recalling that the policy on equality of opportunity and treatment between nationals and migrant workers referred to in Article 10 of the Convention focuses on discrimination based on nationality, the Committee will examine any issues and action taken specifically relating to combating discrimination on the basis of race, colour or national extraction against the Roma and Sinti populations, including in the context of an integrated national strategy on the Roma, in the context of the Government's report on the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111).

The Committee asks the Government to provide information, including statistics, on the specific results achieved under the projects to promote equality of opportunity and treatment between nationals and migrant workers lawfully in the country and to eliminate discrimination based on nationality, in particular with regard to employment and occupation. Please indicate how the social partners have been involved in any of the measures taken or envisaged to promote and ensure the observance of the national equality policy. Noting the information in the Government's report regarding specific programmes and actions, including awareness raising, to combat discrimination and promote social inclusion in the labour market and society, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the impact of these measures on promoting tolerance and respect between all groups of society. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on all actions taken in the context of a national integrated strategy on the Roma, to prevent and address discrimination against Roma migrant workers, and promote their equal opportunity and treatment with nationals in accordance with Article 10 of the Convention.

Integration agreement. The Committee notes that Law No. 94/2009 introduces section 4bis in Legislative Decree No. 286/1998 aimed at promoting cohabitation between Italians and foreigners and making the issuing of a residence permit conditional upon the signing of an "Integration Agreement" setting out the objectives of integration (and related "credits") to be achieved by the foreigner during the period of validity of his or her residence permit. In the event of complete loss of "credits", the residence permit is revoked and the foreigner must be expelled from the national territory, with some exceptions relating to asylum, humanitarian reasons, long-term EC residence permit, or family reasons. The Committee notes that the criteria and modalities for the signing of the Integration Agreement will be established by regulations. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the regulations and examples of any integration agreements already signed and information on the measures taken to assist foreigners to achieve the integration objectives set under the agreements.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 97 (Albania, Barbados, Belize, Guyana, Nigeria, Saint Lucia, Tajikistan, United Republic of Tanzania: Zanzibar, United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands); Convention No. 143 (Guinea, Italy, Philippines, San Marino, Togo, Uganda).

Seafarers

General observation

Maritime Labour Convention, 2006

The Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006) requires registered ratifications by at least 30 Members, representing at least 33 per cent of the world gross tonnage of ships, to enter into force. To date, five of the 30 ratifications have been registered representing approximately 44 per cent of the world fleet and more than satisfy the tonnage requirement. According to available information, the parliamentary processes to allow for ratification are either completed or well advanced in a number of countries. Implementation measures such as the training of national maritime inspectors are also under way in many countries. Based on this information, it is expected that the remaining 25 ratifications will be deposited in the course of the year 2010, with entry into force 12 months after the 30th registered ratification. A new format and approach to the article 22 report for the MLC, 2006, based on the features of the MLC, 2006, as well as providing for electronic reporting, is under preparation. The entry into force of the MLC, 2006, will necessitate considerable adjustments to the approach which the Committee has adopted to the examination of the 37 maritime labour Conventions that will be revised by the MLC, 2006.

The Committee requests all governments (except those that have ratified the MLC, 2006) to provide information or supplement the information already provided to the Director-General of the International Labour Office in accordance with article 19, paragraph 5(c), of the ILO Constitution for evaluation at the Committee's next session, on the advancement of the ratification process and any implementation steps for the MLC, 2006.

Algeria

Food and Catering (Ships' Crews) Convention, 1946 (No. 68) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee refers to its previous requests for statistical information in the form of an annual report on inspection activities regarding food and catering, as required under Article 10 of the Convention.

The Committee renews its request for the Government to forward the required annual report, and in particular to provide full information concerning: (i) the number of inspectors assigned to carry out the required food and hygiene inspections; (ii) the number of crew complaints received and complaint-generated inspections carried out and their results; (iii) the number of programmed inspections of national and foreign vessels and their results; and (iv) the number and results of inspections carried out at sea.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Accommodation of Crews Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 92) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government concerning the draft Decree to establish detailed conditions for the arrangement and equipment of crew accommodation. It notes that the Merchant Marine Directorate deemed the adoption of such a decree to be untimely because the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006) is under consideration with a view to ratification, and it covers aspects of crew accommodation dealt with by this Convention. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that the MLC, 2006, requires, as does the present Convention, that Members adopt legislation to ensure that vessels flying their flags observe the minimum standards needed to ensure that the accommodation made available to seafarers working or living on board is safe, decent and consistent with the relevant provisions of the MLC, 2006. Recalling that the present Convention is still not fully applied, the Committee again asks the Government to remedy this situation. Furthermore, it asks the Government to report on any developments regarding the ratification of the MLC, 2006.

Argentina

Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936 (No. 53) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in response to its previous observation, including information concerning the application of the legislation in practice with regard to the recognition of foreign competency certificates as well as the number of competency certificates issued during the course of the last reporting period.

Barbados

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the observations made by the Congress of Trade Unions and Staff Associations of Barbados (CTUSAB).

In its previous comments, the Committee had noted with regret from the Government's reports that the seafarers' identity document required under the Convention did not exist for national seafarers in Barbados, and that foreign seafarers holding identity documents issued pursuant to the Convention are not accorded the facilities provided for in that instrument.

It had further noted that the Immigration Department has no objections to accepting the responsibility for issuing the seafarers' identity document provided for in the Convention, although it had never been assigned to do so. The Government had referred to two possible solutions: amending the Immigration Act; or enacting new legislation to empower the Immigration Department to issue such documents.

In its latest report, the Government indicates that no legislation has been amended or enacted that would affect the application of the Convention. Changes had, however, occurred with respect to the practical application of the Convention, since, over the past years, the lack of new opportunities had impacted severely on the seafaring industry, and the job opportunities offered to Barbadian seafarers had disappeared. This meant that, while the requisite regulations giving force of law to the Convention were in place, there were no situations in practice to apply them to.

The Government does not give any indication as to whether, in the meantime, foreign seafarers holding identity documents issued pursuant to the Convention are accorded the facilities provided for in that instrument.

The Committee therefore again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that its obligations under the Convention are fully respected, at least with regard to foreign seafarers calling in its ports, and to inform the Office of measures taken in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate any instances in which Barbadian seafarers apply for seafarers' identity documents, and to describe the action taken to provide them with the requisite documents in accordance with the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee also wishes to revert to the observations made by the CTUSAB which, with a view to enhancing national and personal security, suggested that the Government of Barbados move to ratify the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), which revises the present Convention and calls for improved security measures.

The Committee asks the Government to inform the Office of any consultations held and of any steps taken or envisaged with a view to ratifying Convention No. 185.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Cameroon

Placing of Seamen Convention, 1920 (No. 9) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous comments relating to the application of Article 5 of the Convention. In particular, it notes the establishment of a joint mixed commission to draw up and negotiate the national collective agreement for the maritime sector in Cameroon. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide additional information in its next report on the following points.

Article 2, paragraph 2. Penal sanctions. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled the requirements set out in the Convention that the law of each country shall provide for penal sanctions for any violation of the provisions of the Convention. The Government indicates that it has noted these requirements, without, however, providing information on the measures adopted to give effect to them. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to indicate the penal sanctions applicable in the event of violations of the provisions of the Community Merchant Shipping Code relating to the placing of seafarers.

Article 3. Exceptions. The Government emphasizes in its report that it could not refuse to authorize the placement of seafarers by an enterprise engaged in the training of seafarers, which applies for such authorization in accordance with the conditions established by Decree No. 93/570 of 15 July 1993 determining the arrangements for the placement of workers. It reiterates the existence of the National Employment Fund and the decentralized services of the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training, which are responsible for the placement of workers free of charge and which offer an alternative to the fee-paying placement of seafarers. However, the co-existence of public employment services free of charge and of fee-paying placement agencies for seafarers does not suffice to ensure compliance with the Convention, since the latter expressly prohibits the placement of seafarers for pecuniary gain, without any exceptions. The Committee notes that the Government has taken note of its previous comments. It requests the Government to indicate the measures envisaged or adopted to separate training activities from those of placement, which cannot be carried out on a profit-making basis.

The Committee welcomes the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC) Subregional Workshop on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), organized by the Government in Douala from 30 May to 2 April 2009, which provided an opportunity for Cameroon to obtain further information on this instrument. It invites the Government to envisage ratifying the MLC, 2006, following which the existence of profit-making recruitment and placement agencies would be allowed under the conditions established in its Title 1.4. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information in its next report on any consultations held to this end.

Cuba

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes the adoption of Resolution No. 9 of 13 May 2009 approving the Regulation concerning the issuance of the seafarers' book of the Republic of Cuba.

Article 3 of the Convention. Retention of the seafarer's identity document by the seafarer. For many years, the Committee had been requesting the Government to bring section 33 of the Decree No. 26 of 1978 into conformity with the Convention to ensure that the seafarer's identity document remains in the seafarer's possession at all times. The Committee notes with interest that the seafarer is obliged to carry the new seafarer's book, and to present it to national or foreign migration or maritime authorities on request (section 7 of the 2009 Regulation). However, in view of section 8 of this Regulation, the Committee asks the Government to explain how the new seafarer's book relates to the seafarer's passport issued under the 1978 Decree.

Furthermore, the Government had previously indicated that it was examining the possibility of ratifying the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), which is the up to date instrument in the field, and whose ratification would entail the denunciation of the present Convention. The Committee would be grateful if, in its next report, the Government would communicate information on any consultations held in this regard and on any developments concerning the ratification of Convention No. 185.

Djibouti

Sickness Insurance (Sea) Convention, 1936 (No. 56) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee is once again bound, as it has done for a number of years, to draw the Government's attention to the need to establish in the country a compulsory sickness insurance scheme applicable to seafarers employed on board vessels, other than ships of war, carrying out maritime navigation or sea-fishing, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. The special compulsory sickness insurance scheme for seafarers, which must be established pursuant to the Maritime Affairs Code of 1982, has never been established owing to the low number of seafarers in Djibouti; as to the general social protection scheme established by Act No. 135/AN/3ème of 1997 establishing the social protection body, it does not comprise a compulsory sickness insurance branch. In these circumstances, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will be able, in its next report, to inform it of the adoption of measures constituting real progress concerning the establishment of a sickness insurance system applicable to seafarers that will guarantee them protection in conformity with that envisaged by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Seafarers' Pensions Convention, 1946 (No. 71) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that, as the number of seafarers in Djibouti is very small, they are subject to the general retirement scheme for salaried employees and that the special pension insurance scheme for seafarers envisaged in section 142 of the Code of Maritime Affairs has not accordingly been established. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate in its next report whether, as the Committee understands, the pensions scheme for salaried employees is governed by Act No. 154/AN/02/4ème of 31 January 2002 codifying the operation of the Social Protection Organization (OPS) and the general retirement scheme for salaried employees. This legislation guarantees, in accordance with the Convention, the right for salaried employees who have reached the age of 55 years to benefit from a pension at the rate of 2 per cent or 1.5 per cent (depending on the year of retirement) for all insurance annuities applied to the average wage for the past ten years subject to a ceiling.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Egypt

Placing of Seamen Convention, 1920 (No. 9) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes that the Bill to improve recruitment and placement agencies for seafarers has not yet been finalized. It would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the following points.

Article 2 of the Convention. Prohibition of fees. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that, according to the Labour Code of 2003, recruitment agencies are authorized to obtain fees from the employer and, exceptionally and in order to cover administrative expenses, to charge a sum not exceeding 2 per cent of a worker's pay during the first year of employment. While noting that this matter is being discussed by the competent authority, the Committee points out that the Convention expressly prohibits the business of finding employment for seafarers as a commercial enterprise for pecuniary gain. While the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006) allows recruitment and placement services to obtain remuneration from employers, it prohibits, in Standard A1.4, paragraph 5, the charging of seafarers for recruitment or placement. The Committee again asks the Government to take the necessary steps to prevent any person, company, or other body from obtaining, directly or indirectly, remuneration of any kind for the placement of seafarers, whether for administrative or other costs, in order to bring the legislation in line with the Convention.

Article 4. Public employment offices for seafarers. The Government indicates that placement and recruitment agencies for seafarers have been established in accordance with the General Shipping Union, and are under constant supervision by the Ministry of Labour and Migration. The Committee reminds the Government that, unlike the MLC, 2006, which authorizes private recruitment and placement services for seafarers to operate in the context of a licensing or certification system, the present Convention requires that a system of public employment offices for seafarers shall be organized and maintained either by representative associations of shipowners and seafarers under the control of a central authority, or by the State itself. The Committee again asks the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the system of placement offices for seafarers is organized and maintained jointly by representative organizations of shipowners and seafarers under the control of a central authority, or by the State itself.

Article 5. Advisory committees. The High Commission for Planning and Employment of Labour Inside and Outside Egypt (HCPem), composed of representatives of the Government and employers' and workers' organizations, has been established to formulate a general policy on the placement of workers in Egypt and abroad and to establish the necessary regulations and procedures. The Government's report again indicates that a project to change the operating methods of the HCPem, improve its facilities, set up new offices and train its staff, is currently under discussion with the competent authority. The Committee strongly hopes that, in the context of this project launched by the HCPem, the Government will do its utmost to give effect in the very near future to Article 5 of the Convention by setting up advisory committees composed of an equal number of seafarers and shipowners, who could be consulted on issues pertaining to the operation of seafarers' placement offices.

The Committee also invites the Government to envisage ratifying the MLC, 2006, which is the most up to date international instrument in this area, and the ratification of which would have the effect of partially aligning the national legislation with this new instrument. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information in its next report on any consultations held on this matter.

Shipowners' Liability (Sick and Injured Seamen) Convention, 1936 (No. 55) (ratification: 1982)

Article 11 of the Convention. Equality of treatment for foreign seafarers. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government's report, the amendment of the Social Insurance Act (No. 79 of 1979) has not yet been completed. It recalls the comments that it has been making for many years on the need to ensure the application of the Convention to foreign seafarers, irrespective of the duration of their contracts and whether or not a reciprocity agreement has been concluded. The Committee asks the Government to refer to the observation under the Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118).

Estonia

Placing of Seamen Convention, 1920 (No. 9) (ratification: 1923)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous observation concerning the existence of private placement agencies on its territory. It also notes the adoption, in 2006, of a new Act governing labour market services. Under section 38(1) of this Act, private entities which have registered in advance with the competent administration may place individuals seeking employment. These private placement agencies may also charge fees payable by employers, but the new text expressly prohibits agencies from making the persons seeking employment bear the costs of the placement. The Committee recalls that, contrary to the Recruitment and Placement of Seafarers Convention, 1996 (No. 179), and the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), which allow private agencies to place seafarers provided that they demand no fees from them, the present Convention prohibits the placement of seafarers for pecuniary gain. Neither shipowners nor seafarers should have to pay fees. The Committee also emphasizes that each Member is required to establish an efficient system of – in principle – public employment offices for finding employment for seafarers without charge (Article 4 of the Convention). It also notes that the exceptions authorized to the principle of the free placement of seafarers under Article 3 should be temporary, and that the Government agrees to take all practicable measures to abolish the practice of finding employment for seafarers as a commercial enterprise for pecuniary gain as soon as possible. The Committee notes that the new legislation is not in conformity with the obligations arising under the Convention.

In view of the envisaged ratification of the MLC, 2006, an amendment of the legislation and the return to a practice in conformity with the provisions of Convention No. 9, ratified in 1923, does not appear desirable. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure the necessary legal consistency by taking, for example, all possible measures to ratify the MLC, 2006, which authorizes private recruitment and placement services to be operated in conformity with a system of licensing, certification or other form of regulation. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any measures taken or envisaged with a view to ratifying the MLC, 2006.

France

The Committee notes the Government's communication that, due to internal administrative constraints related to preparations for ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, the services in charge of reporting on maritime Conventions were unable to submit the reports on time and will make efforts to communicate them to the Office as soon as possible. In the meantime, the Committee is bound to repeat its previous comment, which read essentially as follows:

Article 6, paragraphs 2 and 4, of the Convention. Appropriate measures to ensure compliance with the provisions on accident prevention. The Committee notes the information concerning the preparation of a draft Act establishing the Higher Council for the Prevention of Occupational Risks in the Maritime Sector and for Seafarers' Welfare, an advisory body participating in the drawing up of a national policy for the prevention of occupational risks in maritime labour and for the welfare of seafarers at sea and in port. The Council will propose to the ministry concerned any measures likely to improve safety and health, working conditions and welfare for seafarers. It will also give an opinion on the laws and regulations adopted in these areas and will promote any initiative designed to improve the prevention of occupational risks. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the abovementioned Act once it is adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Greece

Accommodation of Crews Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 92) (ratification: 1986)

In its report concerning the Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147), the Government indicates that national legislation is currently being revised in the framework of the adjustment of internal legislation to the provisions of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), "since Greece promotes the necessary procedures for the ratification" of that Convention.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that when the MLC, 2006 will come into force for Greece, Regulation 3.1, paragraph 2, of this Convention provides that, for ships constructed before that date, the requirements relating to ship construction and equipment that are set out in the Accommodation of Crews Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 92), shall continue to apply to the extent that they were applicable, prior to that date, under law and practice of the Member concerned.

Under article 28, paragraph 1, of the Greek Constitution, international conventions, once ratified, have the force of law without the need for transposition into national legislation.

The Committee nevertheless emphasizes that certain provisions of the Convention are of a general nature and require the adoption of national legislation for their application. Hence, under Article 3 of the Convention, "each Member for which this Convention is in force undertakes to maintain in force laws or regulations which ensure the application of the provisions in Parts II, III and IV of this Convention". Such legislation shall, in particular:

- (a) require the competent authority to bring it to the notice of all persons concerned;
- (b) define the persons responsible for compliance therewith;
- (c) prescribe adequate penalties for any violation thereof;
- (d) provide for the maintenance of a system of inspection adequate to ensure effective enforcement; and
- (e) require the competent authority to consult the organizations of shipowners and/or the shipowners and the recognized bona fide trade unions of seafarers in regard to the framing of regulations, and to collaborate so far as practicable with such parties in the administration thereof.

Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in the framework of the adjustment of the legislation which is supposed to give effect to the MLC, 2006, to ensure that effect is given in compliance with the relevant provisions.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Accommodation of Crews (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1970 (No. 133) (ratification: 1986)

In its report concerning the Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147), the Government indicates that national legislation is currently being revised in the framework of the adjustment of internal legislation to the provisions of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), “since Greece promotes the necessary procedures for the ratification” of that Convention.

The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that when the MLC, 2006 will come into force for Greece, Regulation 3.1, paragraph 2, of this Convention provides that, for ships constructed before that date, the requirements relating to ship construction and equipment that are set out in the Accommodation of Crews (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1970 (No. 133), shall continue to apply to the extent that they were applicable, prior to that date, under law and practice of the Member concerned.

Under article 28, paragraph 1, of the Greek Constitution, international conventions, once ratified, have the force of law without the need for transposition into national legislation.

The Committee emphasizes, nevertheless, that certain provisions of the Convention are of a general nature and require the enactment of national legislation for their application.

Under Article 4 of the Convention, “each Member for which this Convention is in force, undertakes to maintain in force laws or regulations which ensure its application”.

This legislation shall, in particular:

- (a) require the competent authority to bring it to the notice of all persons concerned;
- (b) define the persons responsible for compliance therewith;
- (c) prescribe adequate penalties for any violation thereof;
- (d) provide for the maintenance of a system of inspection adequate to ensure effective enforcement; and
- (e) require the competent authority to consult the organizations of shipowners and/or the shipowners and the recognized bona fide trade unions of seafarers in regard to the framing of regulations, and to collaborate so far as practicable with such parties in the administration thereof.

Consequently, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures in the framework of the adjustment of the legislation which is supposed to give effect to the MLC, 2006, to ensure that effect is given in compliance with the relevant provisions.

Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Ministerial Circular No. 3529.2/15/2009 of 18 February 2009 concerning the strengthening of the supervision of the application of the relevant legislation relating to ships’ crews, in accordance with the provisions of Article 2(b)(ii) and (d) of the Convention.

Furthermore, it notes with interest that the national legislation is in the process of being revised in the context of the adjustment of the national legislation in line with the provisions of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, given that Greece is in the process of promoting the necessary procedures for ratification of that Convention.

Seafarers' Hours of Work and the Manning of Ships Convention, 1996 (No. 180) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with interest that, according to the information provided in the Government’s report concerning the Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147), the national legislation is in the process of being revised in the context of the adjustment of the national legislation in line with the provisions of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), given that Greece is in the process of promoting the necessary procedures for ratification of that Convention.

Furthermore, the Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Ministerial Circular No. 3529.2/15/2009 of 18 February 2009 concerning the strengthening of supervision of the application of the relevant legislation relating to ships’ crews, thereby giving full effect to Article 15(a) and (c) of the Convention.

The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the following points.

Article 8, paragraph 1. Copy of records. The Government’s report refers to section 9(1) of Presidential Decree No. 152/2003, which provides that seafarers “may” receive a copy of the records pertaining to them. However, Article 8(1) of the Convention provides that seafarers “shall” receive a copy of the records pertaining to them. In the same vein, the Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that Standard A2.3, paragraph 12, of the MLC, 2006, also provides that seafarers shall receive a copy of the records pertaining to them, without having to request it. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that all seafarers receive, without having to request it, a copy of the records of their daily hours of work and rest.

Article 8, paragraph 2. Retention of records. With regard to the matter of keeping records on board, the Government previously referred to section 9(2) of Presidential Decree No. 152/2003, which provides that the records of the past eight days and, in any case, the records relating to the voyage from one port to the following port shall be kept at the disposal of the authorities responsible for inspection.

In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that the retention of records on board for a period of only eight days or for only one voyage makes it virtually impossible for any inspection service to examine and endorse these records, since inspections are normally carried out at much larger intervals in practice. The Committee also reminded the Government that the legislations of other ratifying countries provide for the keeping of records on board for periods of up to several years, to allow effective monitoring of hours of work and rest.

In its latest report, the Government maintains that the provisions of section 9(1) of Presidential Decree No. 152/2003 are not contrary to those of Article 8(2) of the Convention. The Government adds that this provision of the Convention does not expressly establish the period during which these records shall be retained on board. Furthermore, the Government indicates that, under section 9(1) of Presidential Decree No. 152/2003, the master shall ensure that the records of daily hours of work and rest are kept on board.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that Standard A2.3, paragraph 12, of the MLC, 2006, provides that each Member shall require that records of seafarers' daily hours of work and rest be maintained to allow monitoring of compliance with the requirements set out in paragraphs 5–11 of Standard A2.3.

Although the relevant provisions of the national legislation provide that records of daily hours of work and rest shall be kept on board, and that the master shall be responsible for keeping these records, the period during which these records remain on board is too short to make it possible to monitor compliance with the requirements relating to the hours of work and rest of seafarers. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the procedures for keeping records on board allow monitoring of their conformity with the provisions relating to hours of work and rest.

Article 9. Examination and endorsement. In reply to the Committee's previous comments concerning how often the records referred to in Article 8 are examined and endorsed, the Government previously indicated that it is impossible to determine beforehand regular intervals for the examination of the records for ocean-going ships because of the nature of their voyages. The Government added that the records of ships flying the Greek flag are in any case examined each time that these ships call at Greek ports or at ports where Greek consular authorities are based.

The Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 9, the competent authority shall examine and endorse, at appropriate intervals, the records of seafarers' daily hours of work and rest. In this context, the notion of "appropriate" intervals is distinguished from that of "preset" intervals. In this regard, and particularly in view of the nature of maritime transport, a certain degree of discretion may be allowed with regard to the choice of minimum and maximum intervals between examinations. However, examining records only when ships call at Greek ports, or at foreign ports where Greek consular authorities are based, would seem difficult to achieve in practice. Consequently, in order to allow the effective monitoring of compliance with the requirements relating to hours of work and rest, this type of information shall be kept for a relatively long period and, in any case, for a period exceeding eight days, as is currently the case under section 9 of Presidential Decree No. 152/2003.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that Standard A5.1.3 of the MLC, 2006, provides that maritime labour certificates, which shall contain information relating to hours of work and rest, shall be inspected and approved by the flag State as part of the ship certification procedure. The MLC, 2006, provides that maritime labour certificates shall be issued to ships for a period which shall not exceed five years, and that the validity of the certificate shall be subject to an intermediate inspection between the second and third anniversary dates of the certificate.

The Committee requests the Government to set intervals at which the competent authority shall examine and endorse the records of seafarers' daily hours of work and rest, so as to ensure compliance with the provisions relating to hours of work and rest giving effect to the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the inspection report on the records of hours of work and rest on ships flying the Greek flag, where inspections are carried out by the competent Greek consular authority.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guinea

Prevention of Accidents (Seafarers) Convention, 1970 (No. 134) (ratification: 1977)

For many years, the Committee has been asking the Government to indicate the specific instruments that govern the prevention of occupational accidents of seafarers. The Government has so far indicated that appropriate regulatory texts were in preparation and would be reviewed with the technical assistance of the ILO to ensure their compliance with the provisions of the Convention. In its last report, the Government refers only to the provisions of the Labour Code and Merchant Shipping Code, noting that they provide for the adoption of regulations on occupational safety and health. The Government further indicates that the authorities responsible for framing and supervising maritime regulations were also to draft a whole series of texts in this area. The Committee emphasizes that Guinea ratified this Convention 32 years ago, in 1977. It also points out that the provisions of the national legislation are general in nature and do not always ensure that full effect is given to the requirements of the Convention. Consequently, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will make every effort to ensure that legislative texts giving full effect to the Convention are adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of them as soon as they have been enacted.

Part IV of the report form. Court decisions. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the courts of law or any other tribunals have handed down decisions involving matters of principle pertaining to the application of the Convention and, if so, to provide copies of them with its next report.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee also asks the Government to provide general information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, supplying extracts of reports of inspection services, information on the number of workers covered by the legislation, and the number and nature of contraventions and of occupational accidents reported.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Guinea-Bissau

Certification of Ships' Cooks Convention, 1946 (No. 69) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes that there is no naval school in the country, and that, therefore, the certificates of qualification are for internal use only. The Committee hopes that the state services and national institutions will soon be operating normally again, and that the necessary legislation and practical measures to implement the Convention will be put in place. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed about all progress made in this respect, and to continue to provide information with respect to its previous observation regarding Articles 3(2) and 4 of the Convention, as well as Part V of the report form.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Honduras

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes all the documents provided by the Government in reply to its previous observation concerning the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185). The Government has transmitted a preliminary draft of a legislative decree dated 15 January 2009, which is intended to introduce as rapidly as possible the biometric identification of national seafarers. However, no information concerning the ratification of Convention No. 185 or the use of its Article 9 has been provided by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any new developments relating to the ratification of Convention No. 185 or the use of the transitional provisions set out in its Article 9.

Iraq

Unemployment Indemnity (Shipwreck) Convention, 1920 (No. 8) (ratification: 1966)

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Payment of indemnity against unemployment; Remedies. For many years, the Committee has been pointing out that the provisions of the existing Labour Code No. 71 of 1987 do not give effect to these Articles of the Convention. The Government states that, under the existing Labour Code, the employer shall, in the event of shipwreck of any vessel for unforeseen reasons or in circumstances of force majeure, pay to the workers of the vessel an indemnity against unemployment for the period during which the vessel is wrecked, not exceeding 30 days. Indeed, section 65 of the Labour Code in force provides that, if work has stopped entirely or in part owing to exceptional circumstances or force majeure, the employer shall be required to pay to the workers their wages for the period of stoppage for up to 30 days. Under the Convention, however, seafarers shall be paid, in every case of loss or foundering of their vessel, irrespective of the circumstances, an indemnity against unemployment at the same rate as the wages, which may only be limited to two months. Section 65 of the 1987 Labour Code thus cannot be considered to be in compliance with Article 2 of the Convention.

The Government further indicates that the draft new Labour Code is currently at the stage of being examined in the State Consultative Council in order to finalize the legislative aspects. The Committee therefore requests the Government to make every effort to ensure that, either the necessary amendments to the Labour Code are made or that new relevant legislation is adopted, providing that: (i) in every case of loss or foundering of any vessel, each person employed thereon shall be paid for the days during which he or she remains unemployed, an indemnity against unemployment at the same rate as the wages payable under the contract, although the total indemnity payable to any one seafarer may be limited to two months' wages (Article 2); and (ii) seafarers have the same remedies for recovering the indemnities as they have for recovering arrears of wages earned (Article 3). The Committee trusts that the Government will take all measures to ensure that full effect is given to Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, and that it will report on any progress made in its next report.

The Committee notes from the Government's two most recent reports, that follow-up to the Committee's previous comments is ongoing with the competent authority (i.e. Ministry of Transport) to obtain the requested data related to the Convention. The Committee had invited the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), which is the up to date international instrument in the field and whose ratification would result in the automatic denunciation of the present Convention. The Committee notes the Government's response that Iraq has not ratified the MLC, 2006, because the extent of maritime labour in the country is limited. For the same reason, no decision in this respect has been taken by the Tripartite Consultation Committee.

Article 2, clause (a), of the Convention. Conventions listed in the Appendix to Convention No. 147, but not ratified by Iraq. Substantial equivalence. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate how substantial equivalence with the ILO Conventions enumerated in the Appendix to the Convention, is ensured in law and practice in Iraq. In its reports, the Government confines itself to indicating that Iraq has not ratified the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936 (No. 53), the Sickness Insurance (Sea) Convention, 1936 (No. 56), the Food and Catering (Ships' Crews) Convention, 1946 (No. 68), the Medical Examination (Seafarers) Convention, 1946 (No. 73), the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Prevention of Accidents (Seafarers) Convention, 1970 (No. 134). The Committee wishes to point out that, in accordance with Article 2(a) of Convention No. 147, each Member is under an obligation to satisfy itself that its relevant legislation is substantially equivalent to the Conventions or Articles of Conventions referred to in the Appendix to this Convention, even if the Member has not ratified them. In the case of Iraq, the Government is under an obligation to satisfy itself that national laws or regulations are substantially equivalent to the following Conventions, which it has not ratified: Convention No. 53, Articles 3 and 4; Conventions Nos 56, 73 and 87; and Convention No. 134, Articles 4 and 7; and also to satisfy itself that, unless the relevant shipboard living arrangements are covered by collective agreements, national legislation is substantially equivalent to Convention No. 68 (Article 5).

In the absence of relevant information in response to the previous direct request, the Committee is bound to repeat its previous comments which read as follows:

- Convention No. 56. The Committee recalls that, for the purposes of substantial equivalence with Convention No. 56, there should be a compulsory sickness insurance scheme (Article 1) with cash benefits for the seafarer or his family at the national going rate for at least 26 weeks (Articles 2 and 4); medical benefit (Article 3); maternity benefit (Article 5); and death or survivor's benefit (Article 6); benefits should cover the normal interval between engagements (Article 7); and the shipowners and seafarers should share the expenses of the scheme (Article 8). The Committee notes the clarification provided by the Tripartite Consultation Committee that measures ensuring compliance with Convention No. 56 do not fall under the scope of the Ministry of Labour but rather within the remit of the Ministry of Transport, which has already been approached. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to indicate the specific provisions of the national legislation substantially equivalent to Convention No. 56 and to provide copies of the respective laws or regulations.
- Convention No. 73. The Committee recalls that the requirement of substantial equivalence in respect of Convention No. 73 may be met where there are laws or regulations providing for compulsory regular medical examinations for seafarers, preferably every two years (six years in respect of colour vision), but more frequently than every five years; the certificate issued should attest to fitness in respect of hearing and sight and, where necessary in the deck department, colour vision, and should attest that no disease incompatible with service at sea or likely to endanger the health of others is suffered; there should preferably be arrangements for re-examination in case of refusal of certificate. The Government indicates that measures ensuring compliance with Convention No. 73 fall within the remit of the Ministry of Transport. The Committee hopes that the necessary efforts will soon be made to ensure that specific provisions substantially equivalent to Convention No. 73 are adopted; the Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the relevant applicable laws or regulations.
- Convention No. 134 (Articles 4 and 7). The Committee notes that measures ensuring compliance with these provisions of Convention No. 134 fall within the remit of the Ministry of Transport. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to indicate, for the purposes of substantial equivalence with Convention No. 134, the specific provisions of the national laws or regulations dealing with the nine general and specific subjects listed in Article 4(3) and providing for the appointment of one or more crew members as responsible for accident prevention under Article 7.
- Convention No. 68 (Article 5). The Committee recalls that, for the purposes of substantial equivalence with Convention No. 68: (i) food and water supplies, having regard to the size of the crew and the duration and nature of the voyage, should be suitable in respect of quantity, nutritive value, quality and variety; and (ii) the catering department in every vessel should be arranged and equipped in such a manner as to permit the service of proper meals to crew members. The Government indicates that measures ensuring compliance with this provision of Convention No. 68 fall within the remit of the Ministry of Transport. The Committee hopes that, unless the issue is covered by collective agreements, the necessary efforts will soon be made, to indicate the specific provisions in national laws or regulations substantially equivalent to Article 5 of Convention No. 68 and to provide copies of the respective legislation.
- Convention No. 53 (Articles 3 and 4). The Committee notes that measures ensuring compliance with these provisions of Convention No. 53 fall within the remit of the Ministry of Transport. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to indicate the specific provisions of the national legislation which establish requirements in respect of the education of officers, prescribe requirements in respect of a minimum period of professional experience, and provide for the organization and supervision of examinations, so as to ensure substantial equivalence with Convention No. 53 for the purposes of Article 2(a)(i).

- Convention No. 87. The Committee recalls that substantial equivalence to Convention No. 87 involves at the minimum the observance and implementation in respect of seafarers on ships registered in the national territory of the following four basic guarantees of freedom vis-à-vis the public authorities for workers and employers to exercise the right to organize: (i) all workers and employers should have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization (Article 2 of Convention No. 87); (ii) those organizations should have the right to draw up their constitutions and rules, to elect their representatives in full freedom, to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes (Article 3 of Convention No. 87); (iii) the organizations are not liable to be dissolved or suspended by administrative authority (Article 4 of Convention No. 87); and (iv) the organizations should have the right to establish and join federations and confederations and affiliate with international organizations of workers and employers (Article 5 of Convention No. 87), such federations and confederations having the same rights as their constituent organizations (Article 6 of Convention No. 87).

In its previous reports, the Government had indicated that seafarers are considered as civil servants rather than workers. In its latest report, however, the Government refers to Trade Union Organization Act No. 52 of 1987, which only applies to private, mixed and cooperative sectors. The Committee requests the Government to clarify the statute of seafarers (civil servants or workers) and to indicate the specific provisions in national legislation that are substantially equivalent to Convention No. 87. It further asks the Government to provide a copy of these laws or regulations. With respect to the Government's indication that the new draft Labour Code took into account the relevant provisions of Convention No. 87, the Committee asks the Government to supply a copy of the draft Labour Code and provide information on any further developments regarding its adoption.

Standards of manning. In the absence of relevant information, the Committee recalls that the essential requirement of Article 2(a)(i) in respect of standards of manning is that ships should be sufficiently manned to ensure the safety of life on board. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to ensure that national laws or regulations laying down safety standards in respect of manning are adopted. Please report on any progress made in this respect.

Article 2, clause (f). The Committee again asks the Government to describe the inspection or other arrangements which exist to verify compliance with the national laws or regulations required under Article 2(a), applicable collective agreements and ratified international labour Conventions. Please also give details of the functioning of these arrangements such as size of inspection staff, numbers and results of inspections and investigations of complaints, penalties imposed, etc.

Italy

The Committee notes the legislative and other texts communicated by the Government and, in particular, the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 108 of 27 May 2005 amending Legislative Decree No. 271 of 27 July 1999 on working time on board merchant ships. The Committee further notes the information supplied by the Government in response to the Committee's previous comments concerning Article 2(a)(i) and (g), of the Convention, and Part V of the report form, as well as the statistical data provided with regard to Article 2(f).

Article 2, subparagraphs (a), (b) and (f). Obligations of the ratifying Member with regard to ships registered in its territory. The Committee had previously noted the establishment of the "international register" in accordance with Act No. 30 of 27 February 1998 and, in particular, the possibility provided by section 3 of that Act to apply, in case of seafarers who are not nationals or residents of a European Union (EU) Member State, the law selected by the parties. In an earlier direct request, the Committee had asked the Government to furnish details as to how it fulfils its obligations under Article 2(b) and (f) with regard to vessels registered in the international register.

The Government merely indicates that, in the case of ships registered in Italy (including those in the international register), control of application of provisions of national legislation concerning safety and working and living conditions on board is carried out by the harbour master's office in the port where the ship is moored. According to the Government's report, for every engagement of seafarers on board ships registered in Italy (including those in the international register), the articles of agreement must show the conditions established in the current national collective agreement and in laws governing the sector.

According to section 3(1) of Act No. 30/1998, the economical, normative and social security conditions of seafarers with Italian or other nationality of an EU Member State on board vessels registered in the international register are governed by the laws concerning contracts and by the collective agreements of the respective member States.

Section 3(2) of that Act provides that the work relationships of seafarers on board vessels registered in the international register who are not nationals or residents of an EU Member State, are regulated by the law selected by the parties and in conformity with ILO maritime Conventions. In the Committee's view, this could lead to situations where the work relationship of foreign seafarers working on board ships registered in the Italian international register is, for instance, governed by the legislation of the country of origin of the respective seafarer, instead of the law of the country in which the ship is registered (for example, the Italian law). The Committee considers that such a scenario would not be in compliance with Convention No. 147, which places the primary responsibility as regards regulation of working and living conditions of seafarers on the flag State. In this context, the Committee wishes to point out that, similar to this Convention, the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006) places the primary responsibility for regulating working and living conditions on board ships on the flag State, with the exception of Title 1.4 (recruitment and placement) and Title 4.5 (social security), which place the responsibility on the labour-supplying States.

The Committee wishes to recall that Article 2(a), sets out the obligation of every ratifying Member “to have laws or regulations laying down, for ships registered in its territory”, safety standards ((i)); social security measures ((ii)); and shipboard conditions of employment and shipboard living arrangements, in so far as these, in the opinion of the Member, are not covered by collective agreements ((iii)); and to satisfy itself that the provisions of such laws and regulations are substantially equivalent to the Conventions referred to in the appendix, in so far as the Member is not otherwise bound to give effect to the Conventions in question.

Furthermore, the Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 2(b), each Member which ratifies this Convention undertakes “to exercise effective jurisdiction or control over ships which are registered in its territory”, in respect of safety standards, social security measures and shipboard conditions of employment and living arrangements prescribed by national laws or regulations.

Moreover, the Committee draws the Government’s attention to Article 2(f), according to which each Member which ratifies this Convention undertakes “to verify by inspection or other appropriate means that ships registered in its territory comply with ... the laws and regulations required by subparagraph (a) of Article 2”, with ratified international labour Conventions and, as appropriate, with collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to make every effort necessary to ensure that flag State obligations in respect of ships registered in the international register of Italy are effectively discharged, in conformity with Article 2(a), (b) and (f).

Furthermore, the Committee invites the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying the MLC, 2006, which is the up to date instrument in the field, and is expected to enter into force in the near future. The provisions of the present Convention have been consolidated into the MLC, 2006, which, similar to Convention No. 147, places the primary responsibility for regulating working and living conditions on board ships on the flag State (see Article V(1)), with the exception of Title 1.4 (recruitment and placement) and Title 4.5 (social security), which place the responsibility on the labour-supplying States. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would communicate information on any measures taken concerning the ratification of the MLC, 2006, and on any progress achieved in this respect.

Japan

Article 2, clause (a)(i), of the Convention. Conventions listed in the Appendix to the Convention but not ratified by Japan. Convention No. 53, Article 3, paragraph 1. The Committee notes with satisfaction the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous observation. The Government indicates that, following consultations held between the Government and organizations of shipowners and seafarers, the regulations on watch duty were amended in March 2006, so as to place the master of the vessel under the obligation to ensure that at least one person performing watch duty has been awarded an officers’ competency certificate of grade six. In the case of watch duty being performed by several persons, the persons other than the officer shall be in possession of a certificate issued by the ministry testifying to their knowledge and skills in this area.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Liberia

Shipowners' Liability (Sick and Injured Seamen) Convention, 1936 (No. 55) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with interest that on 7 June 2006, Liberia ratified the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). The entry into force of the MLC, 2006, will result in the immediate denunciation of, inter alia, the present Convention. Pending the entry into force of the MLC, 2006, however, the Committee will continue to examine the conformity of national legislation with the relevant requirements of the present Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1, paragraph 2, of the Convention. In reply to the Committee’s previous comments, the Government refers to the provisions of section 51 of the Maritime Law concerning vessels which can be registered under Liberian law. In this regard, the Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention to the fact that its comments concerned section 290-2 of the Law, which provides that persons employed on vessels of less than 75 net tons are not covered by the provisions of Chapter 10 of the Law relating specifically to the obligations of the shipowner in the event of seafarers’ sickness or accident.

Article 2, paragraph 1. The Committee noted that section 336-1 of the Maritime Law provides for payment of the wages, maintenance and medical care of the seafarer in cases of sickness or accident while he or she is off the vessel provided that the seafarer is “off the vessel pursuant to an actual mission assigned to him by, or by the authority of, the master”. The Committee recalls that under this provision of the Convention the shipowner is liable in all cases of sickness and injury occurring between the date specified in the articles of agreement for reporting for duty and the termination of the engagement.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Accommodation of Crews (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1970 (No. 133) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with interest that, on 7 June 2006, Liberia ratified the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). The entry into force of the MLC, 2006, will result in the immediate denunciation of, inter alia, the present Convention. Pending the entry into force of the MLC, 2006, however, the Committee will continue to examine the conformity of national legislation with the relevant requirements of the present Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

At the 89th Session of the International Labour Conference (ILC) in June 2001, a Government representative indicated that the first report would be submitted to the Committee in the near future. In agreement with the findings of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards during that session of the ILC, the Committee reiterates the crucial importance of submitting first reports on the application of ratified Conventions. The Committee urges the Government to submit the report for the attention of the Committee at its next session.

The Committee notes the Government's response to the comments made by the Norwegian Union of Marine Engineers (NUME) that alleges non-observance by Liberia of the Accommodation of Crews Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 92), and the present Convention. The Committee notes, in particular, the Government's indication that the ship "Sea Launch Commander" serves as the command ship, that is "mission control", for the launching of rockets from the seagoing launch platform M/S Odyssey. The rockets are assembled in the assembly bay of the "Sea Launch Commander" while the ship is in port moored to a dock and then transferred to M/S Odyssey. The Government points out that the "Sea Launch Commander" neither transports cargo or passengers for the purpose of trade nor does it engage in other traditional commercial activity while at sea. According to the Government, the primary functions of the "Sea Launch Commander" are to serve as the assembly facility for the rockets when the ship is moored to the dock, and to serve as command ship for the launching of rockets from the M/S Odyssey when the ships are at sea.

The Government considers that, based on the nature of its operations, the "Sea Launch Commander" is not a seagoing vessel for the purpose of trade or commercial activity in the sense envisaged by the relevant ILO Conventions. Therefore, it is the Republic of Liberia's determination that the aforementioned ILO Conventions do not apply to this ship, and the NUME complaint is neither appropriate nor applicable to the "Sea Launch Commander", and that its "statement of claim" to the ILO is, therefore, without merits.

The Committee recalls that the present Convention applies to every seagoing ship, whether publicly or privately owned, which is engaged in the transport of cargo or passengers for the purpose of trade or is employed for any other commercial purpose, and which is registered in a territory for which this Convention is in force (Article 1(1) of the Convention). National laws or regulations shall determine when ships are to be regarded as seagoing ships for the purpose of this Convention (Article 1(2)). Under Article 1(1), the Convention applies "to every seagoing ship ... employed for any other commercial purpose" and does not distinguish between traditional and non-traditional commercial activities.

Referring also to its 2002 observation, the Committee asks the Government to clarify: (i) whether the ship "Sea Launch Commander" is regarded under national laws or regulations as a "seagoing ship"; (ii) whether national laws or regulations contain the definition of the term "commercial activity"; and (iii) whether the launching of rockets from the seagoing launch platform M/S Odyssey is carried out for a commercial purpose.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Seychelles

Unemployment Indemnity (Shipwreck) Convention, 1920 (No. 8) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information supplied by the Government in its report. According to this information, the proposals to amend the Merchant Shipping Act and its enabling regulations are shortly to be submitted to the National Assembly for adoption. The Government adds that it will send a copy of these texts as soon as they have been adopted. The Committee consequently refers the Government to its observation and direct request of 2005 in which it pointed out where the national laws and regulations needed amending to bring them fully into conformity with the Convention. The Committee trusts that the texts adopted will enable all matters pending to be resolved.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Sweden

Seafarers' Hours of Work and the Manning of Ships Convention, 1996 (No. 180) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the observations submitted by the Swedish Ship Officers' Association, the Merchant Marine Officers' Association and the Union of Service and Communication Employees (SEKO) – Seafarers' Branch, as well as by the Swedish Shipowners' Employer Association (SEA).

Article 4 of the Convention. Normal working hours' standard. In its previous observation, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate by what means it was ensured that the mathematically admissible maximum of 91 hours of work per week retains its exceptional character, thus ascertaining that the normal working hours' standard for seafarers of 48 working hours per week, as acknowledged by Sweden through its ratification of the Convention, remains meaningful.

The Government contests that Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention constitute a system with a principal rule (Article 4) and exceptions (Article 5). In the Government's view, Article 4 only obliges the ratifying State to acknowledge – not to legislate – a certain normal working hours' standard. This was reflected in section 7 of Act No. 958/1998, which was even more favourable to seafarers than the Convention, as it provided that working time exceeding 40 hours a week shall be compensated.

The unions consider that Sweden does not acknowledge the eight-hour day with one day of rest per week and rest on public holidays given that, in its safe manning decisions, the competent authority may dispense with positions of crew members on board, as long as Act No. 958/1998 is not violated and overtime compensation is paid. Moreover, section 7 gives the possibility to work 52 times 48 hours per year (i.e. 2,496 hours) as opposed to the annual working hours of shoreworkers of 1,880 hours.

The SEA opposes the unions' view, since both the old legislation based on working hours and Act No. 958/1998 assume a 40-hour working week.

The Committee wishes to point out that Article 4 does not require the ratifying State to prescribe a certain normal working hours' standard or to justify deviations from it. The Committee reiterates, however, that, according to Article 4 of the Convention, ratifying Members acknowledge that the normal working hours' standard for seafarers, like that for other workers, shall be based on an eight-hour day with one day of rest per week and rest on public holidays. This has implications for the compensation of overtime. Moreover, a bona fide application of the provisions of the Convention means that applying minimum hours of rest provisions does not imply that all hours not devoted to rest may be considered as hours of work. The practice of dispensing with positions on board, as long as the rest of the crew can work within the limits of hours of rest prescribed by Act No. 958/1998, may amount to treating the prescribed minimum hours of rest as the normal standard.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide further information on how work is organized in practice so as to ensure both a bona fide application of Article 4 and strict compliance with the minimum hours of rest prescribed by Act No. 958/1998, in order not to compromise the health and safety of seafarers as well as navigational safety. Please also provide samples of relevant collective bargaining agreements, statistics of results of inspections on the issue and any other relevant documentation.

Procedure for compensation of overtime. In its previous observation, the Committee had asked the Government to provide details on the procedure for compensating seafarers working more than 40 hours a week. In its response, the Government refers to the collective agreement concerning wages and general conditions of employment of helmsmen and telegraphers communicated with the report.

The unions allege that collective agreements are mostly "all-in-one" or uniform pay agreements, and that they do not prevent dispensing with positions of crew members on board, which usually results in 13- to 14-hour days for the remaining crew. The SEA asserts that the unions have full control over working hours, since uniform pay agreements are based on average working hours and are concluded with the central trade unions. If the normal working hours were 13–14 hours per 24 hours of service, most uniform pay agreements would need to be renegotiated, as they were based on an average of 10–11 working hours per day. Moreover, the old legislation allowed the crew to be exempted from the Act and permitted up to 16 working hours per day and 112 per week. Act No. 958/1998 was more restrictive, since no seafarer on watch can be exempted from the Act, the maximum working hours per 24 hours are 14 and the maximum weekly working hours are 91 hours.

The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the unions and the SEA, most collective agreements take an "all-in-one" or uniform payment approach based on an average of 10–11 working hours per day. This would mean that the ceiling amount of compensation for seafarers who have been working 14 hours in a 24-hour period would correspond to the compensation paid for a 10- to 11-hour working day. While the collective agreement for helmsmen and telegraphers supplied by the Government does not appear to take such an approach, the Committee would like to point out that compensation for overtime needs to mirror the actual overtime hours worked in addition to the normal working hours' standard based on an eight-hour day with one day of rest per week. The Committee asks the Government to indicate by what means it is ensured that seafarers working more than the normal working hours' standard established in Article 4 are compensated for the overtime hours that they have effectively worked.

Enforcement. Furthermore, the Committee had previously asked the Government to explain how section 7 of Act No. 958/1998 concerning rest periods for seafarers was enforced in practice.

The Government explains that the procedure for compensating seafarers working more than 40 hours a week is a matter for collective bargaining agreements. As to enforcement in practice, the Government did not control by inspection or other means whether obligations under collective agreements were met by the parties, since enforcement of collective agreements was the concern of the parties to the agreement. Labour-related disputes can, however, be brought before the Swedish Labour Court.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to Article 1(7)(c) and Article 5(2)(b) of the Labour Inspection (Seafarers) Convention, 1996 (No. 178), ratified by Sweden, according to which inspections are also carried out to verify that collective agreements upon which the force of law is conferred, are being observed. Moreover, section 7 of Act No. 958/1998, which stipulates that working hours above 40 hours a week shall be paid in accordance with a collective agreement, is a provision of national law that needs to be enforced by the competent authority. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures envisaged or taken to ensure that section 7 of Act 958/1998 is complied with in practice.

Article 5, paragraph 1, clause (b), in conjunction with Article 11. Limits on hours of rest and manning. In its previous observation, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate what measures had been taken to avoid infringements of the requirements of the Convention as regards rest hour limits, resulting from additional work which officers have to perform outside their watchkeeping routine, e.g. duties under the International Ship and Port Facility Security (ISPS) Code. The Committee had also asked the Government to indicate by what means it is ensured that, when determining, approving or revising manning levels, the competent authority takes into account the need to ensure sufficient rest.

The Government states that infringements resulting from additional work under the ISPS Code are avoided by means of inspection by the competent authority (Swedish Maritime Safety Inspectorate (SMI)) and via the shipowner's shipboard organization and standing working orders. It further indicates that, according to its written working procedures, the SMI, when determining or revising manning levels, is bound to take into account the provisions of Act No. 958/1998.

The unions emphasize that the safe manning document does not take into account duties other than watchkeeping. They also reiterate that, in its safe manning decisions, the competent authority authorizes to exempt a position if the rest of the crew can work within the limits of Act 958/1998, and that this practice has resulted in crews being cut down to an absolute minimum. The SEA considers that, where available time is insufficient, further crew members should be signed on, regardless of the crew size indicated in the safe manning document.

The Committee notes the procedures of the SMI. In view of the unions' comments regarding duties other than watchkeeping, the Committee recalls that time during which a seafarer is required to do work on account of the ship shall be considered to be working time (Article 2(b)). It is essential for securing compliance with the prescribed minimum hours of rest that, when determining the safe manning of a vessel, account is taken not only of duties relating to watchkeeping but of all duties, including duties under the ISPS Code or duties pertaining to the arrival in and departure from port. Moreover, the practice of systematically allowing the exemption of positions, provided that the rest of the crew is able to work within the limits on hours of rest, does not give effect to the requirement in Article 11(2). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the competent authority, when determining, approving or revising manning levels: (i) makes allowance for all work that officers regularly have to perform on account of the ship, including work outside their watchkeeping duties; (ii) takes into account, especially in case of ships that operate on a two-watch system, the need to limit fatigue, in particular cumulative fatigue, and to minimize excessive hours of work as far as practicable; and (iii) takes into account the international instruments identified in the Preamble, especially IMO Assembly Resolution A.890(21) (1999) on Principles of Safe Manning.

Article 5, paragraph 1, clause (b), in conjunction with Article 9. Examination of the records of ships operating on a two-shift system. The Committee had previously queried whether the examination of the records of ships operating on a two-shift system had revealed infringements of the requirements of the Convention.

The Government states that it is not in a position to respond, since the shift system is irrelevant when examining the records, the inspector's concern being solely to check whether the relevant national legislation has been infringed. The report thus indicates that it was not possible to deduce from the inspection material what shift system the inspected ship operated on, and even less whether and to what extent the shift system had any influence on infringements. As a measure to avoid future infringements, the SMI was planning for random inspections of the rules on rest periods.

The unions counter that the shift system had an important role to play when it came to infringements of Act No. 958/1998. If two officers shared the watch hours of each day, there was no time left for other duties of the officer, for example relating to arrival and departure from port. Moreover, the safe manning document did not take into account duties other than watchkeeping. The SEA indicates that a two-watch system could consist of either an officer and a mate or an officer and two mates. In its view, if the two-watch system consisted of the former and the time available was insufficient, an additional mate should be signed on so that the officer could relieve the mates when necessary.

The Committee considers that a six hours on/six hours off watchkeeping regime is more liable to pose a serious risk of cumulative fatigue than the three-watch system, in particular in the event of an intense trading pattern of the ship. It is therefore imperative for inspectors checking the records on hours of rest of ships operating on a two-shift system to be aware of this background and be particularly vigilant. Given that there is a number of ships registered in Sweden that operate on a system where the watchkeeping responsibilities are shared by only two officers, the Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that, when examining and endorsing the records on hours of rest to monitor compliance with the minimum hours of rest, the competent authority takes into account the nature of the watchkeeping regime of the vessel.

Articles 9, 10 and 15, and Part V of the report form. Enforcement of prescribed maximum of yearly working hours. The Committee had previously asked the Government to describe how the provision prescribing a maximum of yearly working hours is controlled and enforced in practice.

The Government explains that the control and enforcement of the maximum yearly working hours is a task for the ship surveyor responsible for the inspection of the records of hours of rest and the International Safety Management (ISM) Code, as well as the responsibility of the master and of the designated person of the shipowner.

The unions criticize that the Government did not clarify how the competent authority controlled and enforced the maximum yearly working hours in case of a seafarer changing ship and employer. The SEA shares the unions' concerns in this respect. It would prefer that the provision be removed from the legislation, as annual hours of work were not relevant and very difficult both for the public authority and the shipping company to check.

In view of the comments of the social partners, the Committee requests the Government: (i) to explain the purpose of this provision as compared to the daily and weekly minimum hours of rest; (ii) to furnish details on methods to effectively verify maximum yearly working hours; and (iii) to provide a general appreciation of the practical application of this provision in Sweden.

The Committee notes with interest the detailed information provided by the Government in its report. It notes, in particular, the information regarding the adoption of a national "Social Plan of the Republic of San Marino 2006–2008" taking an innovative approach to occupational safety and health including closer collaboration with universities and research centres with the objective of participating in international research projects and increasing awareness among professionals and citizens. It also notes the information regarding the adoption of numerous pieces of legislation in the area of occupational safety and health including Decree No. 25 of 26 February 2006, amending Decrees No. 74 of 17 May 2005 and No. 139 of 30 October 2003, which prescribe collaboration between several employers at temporary or mobile work sites and give effect to Article 6(2) of the Convention. The Committee also notes the information regarding effect given to Articles 12–15.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United Kingdom

Unemployment Indemnity (Shipwreck) Convention, 1920 (No. 8)

The Committee notes that the Government's report, received in 2008, contains no reply to previous comments. It is therefore bound to draw the attention of the Government to the substance of its previous observation.

Article 2 of the Convention. Payment of indemnity against unemployment. Section 37 of the 1979 United Kingdom Merchant Shipping Act amends section 15 of the 1970 United Kingdom Merchant Shipping Act to the effect that it is no longer possible to deprive seafarers of the right to unemployment indemnity, where they have failed to exert reasonable efforts to save the ship, persons and cargo. According to the Government's indications, however, the provisions of section 37 of the 1979 United Kingdom Merchant Shipping Act have not been extended to Montserrat.

For a number of years the Government has failed to reply to the Committee's comments in this regard. The Committee therefore urges the Government to re-examine the question and indicate, in its next report, the steps taken to extend to Montserrat the application of section 37 of the 1979 United Kingdom Merchant Shipping Act, so as to ensure to seafarers, in case of loss or foundering of the vessel, the payment of an unemployment indemnity for a period of at least two months without restriction, as required by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 9 (Panama); Convention No. 16 (Hungary); Convention No. 22 (Estonia); Convention No. 23 (Azerbaijan); Convention No. 53 (Italy); Convention No. 69 (Greece); Convention No. 73 (Argentina); Convention No. 74 (Algeria); Convention No. 92 (Angola, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Denmark); Convention No. 108 (China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Guatemala); Convention No. 133 (China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Denmark); Convention No. 134 (Finland, Israel); Convention No. 163 (Hungary); Convention No. 164 (Hungary); Convention No. 165 (Hungary); Convention No. 166 (Hungary); Convention No. 178 (United Kingdom: Isle of Man).

Fishers

Liberia

Minimum Age (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 112) (ratification: 1960)

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's very brief report does not reply to its previous observations and that, 49 years after its ratification, the Convention has still not been given effect in its entirety. It recalls that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, the term "fishing vessel" includes all ships and boats, of any nature whatsoever, whether publicly or privately owned, which are engaged in maritime fishing in salt waters. Only fishing in ports or in river estuaries, and individuals fishing for sport or recreation, are excluded from the scope of the Convention. However, the Committee observes that section 326 of the Maritime Act of Liberia, which establishes the minimum age for work on board vessels (including fishing vessels) at 15 years, only applies to vessels registered under the Act. Section 51 of the Maritime Act limits the registration procedure to certain types of vessels. This procedure is open to any vessel under 20 tonnes, the owner of which is a national of Liberia and which only makes voyages between Liberian ports or between Liberia and other West African countries, as well as any vessel of over 1,600 tonnes engaged in international trade, the constructor or owner of which is a national of Liberia. Furthermore, by virtue of section 290 of the Maritime Act, Chapter 10 of the Act, which covers seafarers and includes, among its provisions, the rules respecting minimum age, only applies to persons engaged on board vessels of at least 75 tonnes. The Committee wishes once again to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the scope of the provisions of the national legislation respecting the minimum age required for work on board fishing vessels is much narrower than that of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures without further ado to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention on this point. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice including, for instance, extracts from the reports of the inspection services and, if such statistics are currently available, information on the number and nature of the contraventions reported and the measures taken as a consequence. It further requests the Government to indicate the number of fishing vessels and fishers who are currently excluded from the scope of application of the Convention.

Finally, the Committee understands that the tripartite representatives of Liberia participated in a subregional workshop organized in Accra (Ghana) in October 2009 which was intended to promote the ratification of the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188). It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any measure that may be taken, in the context of the follow-up to this workshop, with a view to the ratification of Convention No. 188.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Medical Examination (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 113) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Nature of medical examination and particulars to be included in medical certificate. For many years the Committee has asked the Government to indicate whether certain provisions applicable to merchant vessels, i.e. the Requirements for Merchant Marine Personnel (RLM-118) and Maritime Regulation No. 10.325(2), also apply to fishing vessels. The Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will provide full explanations regarding the applicability of the Liberian maritime laws and regulations to the medical examination of fishermen. The Government is requested to indicate whether consultations with the fishing-boat owners' and fishermen's organizations concerned, if they exist, had taken place prior to the adoption of the applicable laws and regulations on the nature of the medical examination and the particulars to be included in the medical certificate as required by Article 3(1) of the Convention and to provide particulars on how the age of the person to be examined and the nature of the duties to be performed are taken into account in prescribing the nature of the examination as required by Article 3(2).

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the new Work in Fishing Convention, adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 96th Session (June 2007), which revises and updates most ILO instruments on fishing, including Convention No. 113. While noting the Subregional Seminar on the promotion of the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), which was held in Accra from 27 to 30 October 2009 for the English-speaking countries in West Africa, the Committee requests the Government to give all due attention to this new comprehensive instrument on the working and living conditions of fishers and to keep the Office informed of any decision that it may take with a view to its eventual ratification.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Fishermen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 3 to 9 of the Convention. Articles of agreement. The Committee notes the Government's earlier indication that the Committee's comments have been submitted to the Commissioner of the Bureau of Maritime Affairs for immediate action.

Referring to its previous comments, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any possible reaction by the Commissioner. It also urges the Government to provide full information on each of the provisions of the Convention and each question in the report form approved by the Governing Body.

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the new Work in Fishing Convention, adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 96th Session (June 2007), which revises and updates most ILO instruments on fishing, including Convention No. 114. The Committee requests the Government to give all due attention to this new comprehensive instrument on the working and living conditions of fishers and to keep the Office informed of any decision that it may take with a view to its eventual ratification.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Sierra Leone

Fishermen's Competency Certificates Convention, 1966 (No. 125) (ratification: 1967)

Articles 3 to 15 of the Convention. Certificates of competency. The Committee has been commenting for a number of years on the absence of laws and regulations giving effect to the Convention. The Government stated in its report communicated in 2004 that progress was being made in this respect and that a national workshop on the formulation of fishing policies was organized. The Government also indicated that copies of the new legislation and the texts defining the new policies would be communicated to the ILO as soon as they were adopted.

The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome of the national workshop on the formulation of fishing policies and on any concrete progress made in respect of the adoption of national laws implementing the Convention. The Committee understands that the Office remains ready to offer expert advice and to respond favourably to any specific request for technical assistance in this regard. Finally, the Committee would appreciate receiving up to date information concerning the fishing industry, including statistics on the composition and capacity of the country's fishing fleet, the approximate number of fishers gainfully employed in the sector, etc.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the new Work in Fishing Convention, adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 96th Session (June 2007), which revises and updates most ILO instruments on fishing. The Committee requests the Government to give all due attention to this new comprehensive instrument on the working and living conditions of fishers and to keep the Office informed of any decision that it may take with a view to its eventual ratification.

Trinidad and Tobago

Fishermen's Competency Certificates Convention, 1966 (No. 125) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes that the Government in its very brief report indicates that it participated in the activities organized by the International Maritime Organization (IMO) to assist its member States in the implementation of the 1993 Torremolinos Protocol for the Safety of Fishing Vessels and the 1995 International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Fishing Vessel Personnel (STCW-F Convention). It further notes the Government's indications that it has embarked upon a legislative process with a view to giving effect to Convention No. 125 and the STCW-F Convention. However, the Committee regrets to note that the Government does not indicate any tangible measures to finally give effect to the Convention, almost 40 years after its ratification. It is therefore bound once again to urge the Government to adopt the necessary measures without further delay to ensure the full application of the Convention. The Government is requested to provide information on the results of the activities to promote the implementation of the STCW-F Convention organized by the IMO, in which it participated, and on the progress achieved in the procedure of the adoption of legislation to give effect to Convention No. 125.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 113 (Guinea, Kyrgyzstan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia); Convention No. 114 (Cyprus, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia); Convention No. 126 (Denmark: Faeroe Islands, Kyrgyzstan, Sierra Leone, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia).

Dockworkers

Algeria

Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention (Revised), 1932 (No. 32) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 12, 13 and 15 of the Convention. Application of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report of 2008 is almost identical to the one which was sent in 2007, that it contains no reply to the Committee's comments despite its repeated requests over a number of years and that the Government still does not appear to have taken the necessary steps to adopt the legislative text concerning ports and dockers pursuant to Act No. 88-07 as planned. However, the Committee notes the Government's efforts to improve the situation relating to occupational safety and health by ratifying the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). It notes that this Convention applies to all branches of economic activity, including dock enterprises and dockworkers, and that it therefore constitutes a general context for the application of Convention No. 32. However, the Government continues to be bound by its obligation to adopt specific legislative provisions giving full effect to the provisions of Convention No. 32. The Committee requests the Government once again to take the necessary steps in the very near future to give full effect, in law and in practice, to the provisions of the present Convention, particularly Articles 12, 13 and 15, and to send copies of all relevant legislative texts once they have been adopted.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. Article 17, paragraph 2. Labour inspection. The Committee notes the lack of information concerning the application in practice of the Convention. With specific reference to the provisions of Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to send its general observations on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including, for example, extracts of the reports of the inspection services, up to date statistical information on the number of inspection visits carried out, the number of infringements reported and also the number, nature and causes of accidents recorded, etc.

The Committee takes this opportunity to remind the Government that the ILO Governing Body invited the States parties to Convention No. 32 to envisage ratifying the Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152), which revises Convention No. 32 (GB.268/LILS/5(Rev.1), paragraphs 99–101). Ratification of Convention No. 152 would entail ipso jure the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 32. The Committee would also like to draw the Government's attention to the code of practice recently adopted by the ILO entitled Safety and health in ports (Geneva, 2005), which is available, inter alia, on the ILO web site: www.ilo.org/public/english/protection/safework/cops/english/index.htm. The Government is requested to keep the Office informed of all progress made in this field.

Brazil

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1990)

Legislation. The Committee notes with interest the full report from the Government and notes with satisfaction the consolidated version of Regulatory Standard on Safety and Health in Dock Work No. NR 29 of 17 April 2006, and which provides for mandatory protection for dock workers against accidents and diseases, facilities first aid, and aims at establishing the best possible conditions for safety and health for dockworkers, and which, in conjunction with other provisions already in force, gives substantial expression to the Convention. However, the Committee notes that more detailed information is required to clarify a number of points which are being dealt with in a direct request.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Congo

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government according to which a national advisory technical committee on occupational safety and health has been set up pursuant to Decree No. 2000-29 of 17 March 2000 which gives effect to Article 7 of the Convention. It also notes, however, that the information requested concerning Articles 2, 4, 5, 6 and 11–36 are to be provided by the Government subsequently. As regards the further information the Committee has requested the Government to provide, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has either not replied to questions raised by the Committee in its previous comments or it has provided information that is applicable to enterprises in general. The Government appears to imply that dockworkers should be treated in the same manner as other workers and ports be treated like any other enterprise. With reference to Articles 4–7, the Committee wishes to recall that the Government is required to take measures to give effect to the specific provisions in the Convention. The Committee must therefore once again repeat its previous observation which read as follows.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to the absence of specific health and safety provisions for dock work. The Committee noted previously that a draft Order on safety and health in dock work had been prepared by the technical departments of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. In its report for the period ending 30 June 1993, the Government repeated this information and added that the draft had been submitted for adoption. The Committee hopes that the provisions of this text will ensure the application of the following provisions of the Convention: Article 4 (objectives and areas to be covered by measures to be established by national laws and regulations, in accordance with Part III of the Convention); Article 5 (responsibility of employers, owners, masters or other persons as appropriate, for compliance with safety and health measures; duty of employers to collaborate whenever two or more of them undertake activities simultaneously at one workplace); Article 7 (consultation of and collaboration between employers and workers). It asks the Government to provide a copy of the above Order as soon as it has been adopted.

In its previous reports, the Government referred to Orders No. 9033/MTERFPPS/DGT/DSSHT on the organization and functioning of the socio-medical centres of enterprises in the People's Republic of the Congo and No. 9034/MTERFPPS/DGT/DSSHT laying down the procedures for the establishment of socio-medical centres which are common to several enterprises in the People's Republic of the Congo. Since these texts have not been received, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of them.

Article 6. The Committee notes from the Government's report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that briefings are to be organized to inform workers about safety provisions in the place of work at which heads of establishment can alert them about the dangers arising from the use of machinery and the precautions to be taken. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the provisions concerning the organization of these briefings and the measures taken to give effect to paragraph 1(c) of this Article.

Article 8. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that all safety measures are provided for in Chapter II of Order No. 9036 of 10 December 1986. The Committee notes that the above part of the Order provides for general protective measures whereas the Convention requires the adoption of measures specific to dock work. It asks the Government to indicate which provisions require the adoption of effective measures (fencing, flagging or other suitable means including, when necessary, cessation of work) to ensure that when the workplace has become unsafe, workers are protected until it has been made safe again.

Article 14. The Committee notes from the Government's report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that the application of this Article is ensured by labour inspectors by means of inspections in enterprises. The Committee asks the Government to indicate which provisions ensure that electrical equipment and installations are so constructed, installed, operated and maintained as to prevent danger, and which standards for electrical equipment and installations have been recognized by the competent authorities.

Article 17. The Committee notes that section 41 of Order No. 9036, cited by the Government in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 as giving effect to this Article of the Convention, includes specific measures only for the use of lifting gear in particular weather conditions (wind). The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the means of access to a ship's hold or cargo deck are in conformity with the provisions of this Article.

Article 21. The Committee notes the provisions of sections 47–49 of Order No. 9036 which the Government cites in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 as giving effect to this Article of the Convention. It notes that the above sections provide for protective measures for some machinery or parts of machines which can be dangerous. It asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that all lifting appliances, every item of loose gear and every sling or lifting device forming an integral part of a load comply with the provisions of the Convention.

Articles 22, 23, 24 and 25. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993, the Government refers to the certification of machinery, including lifting appliances, which is conducted by technical inspectors and advisory bodies, as a general measure to ensure that lifting appliances are sound and in proper working order. However, these Articles of the Convention provide for a set of measures to ensure that appliances and loose gear can be used by workers without any danger or risk: testing of all lifting appliances and loose gear (every five years in ships); thorough examination (at least once every 12 months); regular inspection before use. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the provisions requiring the above measures to be taken in respect of all lifting appliances – on shore and on board – and of all loose gear.

Article 30. The Committee notes that section 43 of Order No. 9036 referred to by the Government, does not relate to the attaching of loads to lifting appliances. It asks the Government to indicate which provisions relate to this matter.

Article 34. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the instructions concerning the wearing of personal protective equipment referred to by the Government in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993.

Article 35. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 147 of the Labour Code regulates the evacuation of injured persons who are able to be moved and who are not able to be treated by the facilities made available by the employer. It notes that the Government also refers in its reports to Orders Nos 9033 and 9034 mentioned in paragraph 2 above. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken either under the above texts, or otherwise, to ensure that adequate facilities, including trained personnel, are available for the provision of first aid.

Article 37, paragraph 1. The Committee recalls that, under this provision of the Convention, committees which include employers' and workers' representatives must be formed at every port where there is a significant number of workers. Recalling the Government's statement that the health and safety committees provided for by the law have not been formed, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the establishment of such committees in ports with a significant number of workers.

Article 38, paragraph 1. The Government indicates in its report that, in the absence of health and safety committees, instruction and training are entrusted to a specialist in the matter within the enterprise. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the activities of these specialists.

Article 39. The Committee notes that section 61 of Act No. 004/86 of 25 February 1986 establishing the Social Security Code gives effect in part to this Article of the Convention. It asks the Government to indicate the provisions which ensure that this Article is applied to occupational diseases.

Article 41, paragraph 1(a). Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government refers to Order No. 9036 of 10 December 1986 as being the text which lays down general obligations for the persons and bodies concerned with dock work (ports being treated as any industrial enterprise) and that no specific measures have been taken in respect of dock work. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to set out the specific obligations taken for the persons and bodies concerned with dock work.

In the absence of any information on the application of the above provisions, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the specific measures which give effect to the following provisions of the Convention.

- Article 9, paragraphs 1 and 2. Safety measures with regard to lighting and marking of dangerous obstacles.
- Article 10, paragraphs 1 and 2. Maintenance of surfaces for traffic or stacking of goods and safe manner of stacking goods.
- Article 11, paragraphs 1 and 2. Width of passageways and separate passageways for pedestrians.
- Article 16, paragraphs 1 and 2. Safe transport to or from a ship or other place by water, safe embarking and disembarking, and safe transport to or from a workplace on land.
- Article 18, paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. Regulations concerning hatch covers.
- Article 19, paragraphs 1 and 2. Protection around openings and decks, closing of hatchways when not in use.
- Article 20, paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4. Safety measures when power vehicles operate in the hold; hatch covers secured against displacement; ventilation regulations; safe means of escape from bins or hoppers when dry bulk is being loaded or unloaded.
- Article 26, paragraphs 1, 2 and 3. Members' mutual recognition of arrangements for testing and examination.
- Article 27, paragraphs 1, 2 and 3. Marking lifting appliances with safe working loads.
- Article 28. Rigging plans.
- Article 29. Strength and construction of pallets for supporting loads.
- Article 31, paragraphs 1 and 2. Operation and layout of freight container terminals and organization of work in such terminals.
- Article 38, paragraph 2. Minimum age limit for workers operating lifting appliances.

Hoping that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures in the very near future, the Committee invites the Government to solicit technical assistance of the ILO to resolve any problems related to the application of this Convention.

Costa Rica

Dock Work Convention, 1973 (No. 137) (ratification: 1975)

National policy to ensure employment for dockworkers. The Committee notes the Government's report requested for 2009. The Government provides information on the Pacific and the Atlantic ports. With regard to the former, the Costa Rican Pacific Ports Institute (INCOP) confirms that since August 2006, all the workers covered by Convention No. 137 and the Continuity of Employment (Seafarers) Convention, 1976 (No. 145), have been dismissed. The Committee notes that INCOP acts as the guarantor of compliance with workers' rights for enterprises licensed to operate in Puerto Caldera. INCOP refers to the preliminary study for the drafting of regulations to define the rights of seafarers and dockworkers as part of the staff hired by these enterprises. With regard to the Atlantic ports, the Committee understands that the workers of the Committee for Port Administration and Economic Development of the Atlantic Coast (JAPDEVA) have been offered compensation for dismissal. The Committee notes that the Government has no exact figures for the number of dockworkers covered by the Convention.

In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the following matters:

- the measures taken to encourage all concerned (particularly INCOP and the enterprises licensed to operate on the Atlantic coast) to provide permanent or regular employment for dockworkers (Article 2(1), of the Convention). The report should also indicate the minimum periods of employment or minimum income assured to dockworkers, as prescribed in Article 2, paragraph 2;
- the manner in which registers are established and maintained for all occupational categories of dockworkers (Article 3(1)); and
- the manner in which registered dockworkers are assured priority of engagement for dock work (Article 3(2)–(3)).

Article 4, paragraph 2, and Article 5. The Committee emphasizes that the next report should describe the measures taken to prevent or minimise the detrimental effects on dockworkers due to a reduction in numbers and should provide particulars on safety, health, welfare and vocational training provisions applying to dockworkers.

Article 5. The Committee stresses that for dealing with the matters covered by this observation and for improving the efficiency of work in ports, it is important to encourage cooperation between the social partners.

France

Dock Work Convention, 1973 (No. 137) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received since 2002. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will provide updated information on the effect given to the provisions of the Convention and on changes in the number of professional and monthly dockworkers. Please also include copies of the collective agreements concluded, and particularly agreements relating to the organization and conditions of work and agreements on wages.

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government concerning the adoption of new regulations designed to improve the application of the Convention, particularly Decree 2006-892 of 19 July 2006 issuing safety and health regulations applicable in cases where workers are exposed to noise-related hazards; the Order of 1 March 2004 concerning the inspection of lifting appliances and gear; the Order of 2 March 2004 concerning maintenance of records for lifting appliances; and the Order of 3 March 2004 concerning the close inspection of tower cranes. The Committee also notes the Government's reply concerning the provisions giving effect to Article 31(2), of the Convention with regard to the safety of workers lashing or unlashng containers. The Committee is also aware of the adoption of Act No. 2008-660 of 4 July 2008 concerning dock reforms and the texts for the implementation thereof. It notes the amendments relating to dock development and the organization of dock work and also the implementation of a new mode of governance of major seaports.

With reference to its comments in 2002 and 2007, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information on the measures taken to ensure the application of certain provisions of the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat its previous requests to the Government, which read as follows:

Article 20, paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4. Safety measures to be taken where power vehicles operate in the hold; securing of hatch covers; ventilation regulations; safe means of escape from bins or hoppers when dry bulk cargo is being loaded or unloaded. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information on the measures taken to ensure the application of this provision of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged with a view to applying the provisions of this Article.

Article 26, paragraphs 1, 2 and 3. Mutual recognition of arrangements made by Members for testing and examination. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report that there is not a principle of general recognition of the international equivalence of testing. However, the Government indicates that a principle of equivalence is implicit under the European Treaty. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure the mutual recognition of arrangements made by other Members for the testing, examination, inspection and certification of lifting appliances and items of loose gear forming part of a ship's equipment.

Article 28. Measures to ensure that rigging plans are carried on board every ship. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information on the measures taken to give effect to this Article of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged with a view to applying the provisions of this Article.

In view of the possible practical repercussions of the abovementioned reforms on safety and health in dock work, the Committee requests the Government to supply all relevant information concerning the impact of all the new legislative provisions and regulations concerning the application of the Convention, particularly Articles 4, 5, 7 and 31.

Guinea

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must, therefore, repeat its previous direct request which read as follows:

Article 6, paragraph 1, subparagraphs (a) and (b), of the Convention. Measures to ensure the safety of portworkers. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that sections 170 and 172 of the Labour Code, establishing that workers have a general obligation to use health and safety equipment correctly and that those responsible for workplaces have an obligation to organize appropriate practical training with regard to safety and hygiene issues for the benefit of workers, ensure the application of Article 6, (1)(a) and (b), of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to ensure that these general provisions are applied to portworkers.

Article 7. Consultation with employers and workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with regard to sections 288 and 290 of the Labour Code, which provide for the establishment of a consultative committee which is to be responsible, amongst other things, for issuing opinions and formulating proposals and resolutions on labour legislation and regulations and social laws. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application, in practice, of the measures taken to ensure the collaboration between workers and employers provided for in Article 7 of the Convention.

Article 12. Fighting fire. The Committee notes that sections 71, 72 and 76 of the Merchant Marine Code briefly touch upon the question of fire protection systems and equipment, but only in the context of inspections of vessels engaged in international voyages. The Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to ensure that appropriate and sufficient firefighting measures are made available for use wherever dock work is carried out.

Article 32, paragraph 1. Dangerous cargoes. The Committee notes that section 174 of the Labour Code states, in general, that vendors or distributors of dangerous substances, as well as those responsible for workplaces where such substances are used, are required to mark and label them. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the application, in practice, of this provision, which is general in scope, in the dock sector.

The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government in its report of May 2005 on the application of Articles 16, 18, 19(1), 29, 30, 35 and 37, are general in nature and do not permit the Committee to ascertain whether they are being applied in the dock sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the measures taken to ensure the application of Articles 16, 18, 19(1), 29, 30, 35 and 37, of the Convention and to attach copies of the relevant national laws and regulations.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain replies to its request for further information contained in the previous direct request regarding the application of Articles 19(2) and 33, of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide the information requested, as well as information on the measures taken with regard to the application of these Articles.

The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government does not provide any clarification with regard to the measures taken to give effect to Article 6(1)(c), and Articles 2, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, 32(2-5), and 34 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure the application of these Articles and to keep the Committee informed of any action taken in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Japan

Marking of Weight (Packages Transported by Vessels) Convention, 1929 (No. 27) (ratification: 1931)

The Committee notes the Government's report submitted in October 2008 including, in annex, observations submitted by the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) dated 29 August 2008 and the Government's additional comments submitted 2 November 2009, including, in annex, further observations submitted by JTUC-RENGO dated 2 October 2009. The Committee notes that the Government indicates, in both its reports, that there was no new information to report as regards questions I, IV and V of the report form.

Marking of weight and application of the Convention in practice. Article 9 of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that, in addition to relevant legislation, "Guidelines for Safe Overland Transportation of International Marine Containers" were developed and adopted in 2005 providing for concrete measures that have to be taken by each party affected in order to increase safety in transportation. The Committee also notes that the JTUC-RENGO observes that these guidelines are not sufficient to prevent accidents during the transit of international marine containers because of their non-binding force and fatal accidents have continued to occur frequently including six accidents in the first five months of 2009 resulting in four fatalities, and that, as measures taken often are not in line with the guidelines, binding legislation is indispensable for preventing overloading, improper loading or mislabelling of cargo items by shippers, requiring shippers to disclose information and enabling parties to share cargo information. The Committee further notes that the JTUC-RENGO also states that since container transportation has become predominant in the area of logistics worldwide, it cannot be said that the Convention is well suited for dealing with cargo handling operations and that efforts to draw up a new Convention should be initiated as soon as possible in this respect, and that, in response to a request by the Japanese dockworkers union, the International Transport Workers Federation (ITF) adopted a resolution in June 2008 calling upon the ILO to set up a forum for the examination of problems related to the safe transportation of container cargo. In its most recent report the Government indicates that according to a survey published in August 2009, safety problems experienced by truck drivers while transporting containers have decreased after the publication of the guideline. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government that while the number of labour inspection offices seems to remain stable, the number of labour standards inspectors had increased to 3,939. The Committee once again refers to its 2007 general observation on the Convention and asks the Government to continue to provide information on any difficulties encountered in the application of the Convention in relation to modern methods of cargo handling, with particular reference to containers, as well as on the measures taken to prevent accidents.

Netherlands

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in response to its direct request including information on amendments adopted in 2007-08 to the Working Conditions Act (WCA), 1998 (available as amended until 18 March 2008) the Working Conditions Decree (WCD), 1997 (available as amended until 18 March 2008) and the Working Conditions Rules (WCR), 1997. The Committee notes with satisfaction that these amendments include provisions which give effect to Articles 22(4), 36(1), and 39 of the Convention.

The Committee also notes that the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) submitted observations on 2 November 2007 concerning the application in practice of the Convention, that these observations were transmitted to the Government on 17 December 2007, but that the Government has not provided a response thereto. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the following points.

Article 32, paragraphs 3 and 4. Safe handling of dangerous substances. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government with reference to section 4 of the WCD as enforced by the labour inspectorate. The Committee also notes the FNV's comments that workers are frequently exposed to dangerous goods (notably disinfectants and pesticides) during the handling and trans-shipment of containers and that the FNV regrets the lack of information from the Government on the application in practice of these provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the practical application of Article 32(3) and (4), taking into account, inter alia, the comments by the FNV.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes more generally that the Government's response to the Committee's request for information on the application in practice is limited to affirmations that the labour inspectorate continues to address the situation regarding dock work, and that, during the period 2001–06, 319 companies active in dock work were visited by the inspectorate. No further details were provided, however, regarding the outcome of these visits. The Committee deems it relevant to note the limited information on the application in practice of the Convention in the light of three different circumstances. (1) The fact that the Government in its response to the Committee's requests for further information on the application of numerous Articles of the Convention, including Articles 2, 11(1), 15, 16(1), 17(1)(b), 18(1), 20(4), 21(a), 22(2), 24, 29, 38(2) and 41(a) states that enforcement of national legislation is ensured by the labour inspectorate. (2) The observations by the FNV that information regarding application in practice is readily available. The FNV underlines the persistence of a large number of risks for safety and health in dock work, and that enforcement of the WCA is only partly possible because there are many self-employed workers on ships engaged in inland navigation. As a result, a lot of dangerous and unsafe situations remain invisible and unreported. In terms of available information on the application in practice of the Convention, the FNV refers, inter alia, to the 2005 inspection report concerning Inland Navigation (Projectrapportage Inspectieproject Binnenvaart 2005) in which it is noted that 136 offences were recorded on 73 ships out of 210 inspected, and in the period 1997–2003, 12 fatal accidents, in which eight workers drowned, and 100 serious accidents were reported. Major offences consisted of not wearing life jackets during hazardous operations, unsafe workplaces as well as unsafe work equipment. The FNV also refers to the 2005 report on Ports of Trans-shipment A697 (Projectrapportage Inspectieproject Overslag Havens 2005-A697) noting that there were, on average, 32 serious accidents per year in the Dutch transit harbours (a higher average than in any other sector in the Netherlands); that great problems were caused by the exposure of workers to carcinogenic diesel particles (for example by the use of forklift trucks), and that there was no surveillance over the use of personal protective equipment. The FNV concluded its observations by calling for better monitoring of risks and a stricter implementation of legislation. (3) The third factor to be taken into account is that in its reply on the question of application in practice of the Convention, the Government reports on a change in its national policy on occupational safety and health. This change implies a shift of the Government's role towards formulating basic rules. These basic rules would be further detailed only when a clear need existed and it would be the responsibility of the social partners to develop in further detail these basic rules within the areas of their respective responsibilities. Against this background the Committee requests the Government to provide further detailed information on how the Convention is applied in practice, including as regards the application of Articles 2, 11(1), 15, 16(1), 17(1)(b), 18(1), 20(4), 21(a), 22(2), 24, 29, 38(2) and 41(a) and taking into account the comments by the FNV. The Committee also requests the Government to provide further details on the reported shift in the national OSH policy, whether this new approach has been applied as regards matters relevant for the application of the present Convention and in that case, provide an appreciation of the impact that this shift has had on the application of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Peru

Legislation. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 27866 (Dock Work Act) of 16 November 2002 issuing employment regulations applicable to the handling of loads, unloading of goods and related tasks in dock work; Supreme Decree No. 013-2004-TR, approving the single unified text of the implementing regulations for the Dock Work Act; Directorial Decision No. 011-2006-APN/DIR, as amended on 9 September 2008, approving the general considerations for the use of personal protective equipment in docks and dock installations and the national standard providing for the use of personal protective equipment in docks and dock installations, the preamble of which refers to the present Convention; Directorial Decision No. 010-2007-APN/DIR establishing the national standard for occupational safety and health in dock work and directives for obtaining a safety certificate for dock installations, which refers to the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155); and Supreme Decree No. 009-2005-TR (Occupational Safety and Health Regulations), and Supreme Decree No. 007-2007-TR, which amends it. The Committee notes that this new legislative framework substantially modifies the application of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to supply a detailed report indicating the legislative, regulatory and other provisions and their relevant sections which give legislative expression to each Article of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to supply the practical information requested in the report form.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2010.]

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 27 (Denmark, France, Kyrgyzstan); Convention No. 32 (Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Kyrgyzstan, Malta, Nigeria); Convention No. 137 (Guyana, Iraq, Kenya, Nigeria); Convention No. 152 (Brazil, Denmark, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Netherlands, Spain).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 27 (Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela).

Indigenous and tribal peoples

Argentina

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes a communication from the Association of Health Professionals of Salta (APSADES), of 12 June 2009, forwarded to the Government on 2 October 2009. It also notes a communication from the Confederation of Argentinean Workers (CTA), of 31 August 2009, forwarded to the Government on 18 September 2009. The Committee will examine these communications at its next session together with any observations of the Government in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the communication of APSADES and CTA.

Follow-up to the representation submitted under article 24 of the ILO Constitution (report of the Governing Body (GB.303/19/7) 12 November 2008). The Committee recalls that in November 2008, the Governing Body adopted a report on the representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Educational Workers' Union of Río Negro (UNTER), in which the Governing Body examined issues of consultation at national level as well as issues of consultation, participation and performance of traditional activities of indigenous peoples in the province of Río Negro. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government refers to the Provincial Survey Programme on Indigenous Communities for the Province of Río Negro, which provides for the survey of 124 communities to be executed over the next two years. However, the Committee notes with regret that no information is provided in reply to the recommendations formulated in paragraph 100 of the Governing Body's report. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide information, in its next report, with respect to the following recommendations formulated by the Governing Body:

- (a) continue making efforts to strengthen the CPI and ensure that, when elections of indigenous representatives are held in all the provinces, all the indigenous communities and all institutions considered by the communities themselves to be representative are invited to participate;
- (b) carry out consultations with regard to the bills referred to in paragraphs 12 and 64 of this report and to establish mechanisms to ensure that consultations with indigenous peoples take place whenever legislative or administrative measures that may directly affect them are being considered. The consultations should be carried out sufficiently early so as to be effective and meaningful.
- (c) ensure that, in implementing Act No. 26.160, all communities and truly representative institutions of the indigenous peoples likely to be directly affected are consulted and able to participate;
- (d) ensure that, in accordance with the principle of concurrent powers of national and provincial authorities, effective consultation and participation mechanisms are established involving all the truly representative organizations of the indigenous peoples, as set out in paragraphs 75, 76 and 80 of this report, in particular in the process of implementing national Act No. 26.160;
- (e) in implementing Act No. 26.160 to make substantial efforts, in consultation with and with the participation of the indigenous people of Río Negro Province, to clarify: (1) the difficulties in the procedures for regularizing land, with a view to developing a rapid and accessible procedure that meets the requirements of Article 14, paragraph 3, of the Convention; (2) the question of the levy for land use referred to in paragraph 92 above; (3) any problems in obtaining legal personality; and (4) the issue of dispersed communities and their land rights;
- (f) make efforts to ensure that measures are adopted in Río Negro Province, including interim measures, with the participation of the indigenous people involved, to ensure that indigenous stockbreeders have easy access to marks and signs certificates and carry on their activities in conditions of equality, and to strengthen that activity in accordance with the terms of Article 23 of the Convention.

Communication from the UNTER of July 2008. The Committee recalls that in its previous observation it referred to a communication from UNTER, received on 28 July 2008, in which various issues related to the alleged violation of Articles 6, 7, 15(2) and 17(2), of the Convention are raised. The Committee asked the Government to provide information on the points raised in UNTER's communication, so that it could fully examine these matters in 2009. The Committee notes with regret that such information was not received. The Committee urges the Government to provide complete information in its next report on the issues raised in UNTER's communication.

Follow-up to the seminar/workshop. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, as a result of the seminar/workshop which took place in May 2007, involving representatives of indigenous communities, social partners, the National Institute of Indigenous Affairs (INAI), the Ministry of Labour and the ILO, among others, proposals and an action plan were drawn up for the purpose of applying the Convention relating to the following points: lands, work, health and social security, vocational training, education and communication, and participation and consultation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the follow-up to the proposals and action plan, and the results achieved, particularly with regard to participation and consultation.

Coordinated and systematic policy

Coordination Council provided for in Act No. 23302. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that pursuant to INAI Decision No. 042 of 28 February 2008, the Coordination Council provided for in section 5 of Act No. 23302/85 has been created. The Committee notes that pursuant to this Decision, the persons mentioned in the annex are included, on a provisional basis, as the representatives of indigenous communities and shall remain in their posts until replaced by other representatives elected in accordance with the mechanisms established by INAI Decision No. 041/2008. The Committee also notes the establishment of the Advisory Council which has the functions set out in section 15 of Regulatory Decree No. 155/89. While it considers that the establishment of the Coordination Council and the Advisory Council constitutes progress, the Committee requests detailed information on the procedures for the election of indigenous representatives, in particular whether such procedures ensure that the indigenous peoples are able to elect their representatives without any interference. The Committee also requests copies of the decisions mentioned.

Coordination of the various bodies representing indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that the Indigenous Participation Council (CPI) has the functions set out in Act No. 26160, Regulatory Decree No. 1122/07 and Decision No. 587/07 which creates the land survey programme. According to the Government, the CPI has been given considerable recognition by the institutions of the national Government and those of the provincial governments and its minutes are made public to ensure that the communities are aware of the issues dealt with by the CPI. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the distribution of competencies and the coordination mechanisms established between the Coordination Council, the Advisory Council and the CPI.

Lands. Emergency Act No. 26160 on the ownership and possession of traditionally occupied lands. The Committee notes that a central coordination team has been set up in this regard. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government concerning the national programme entitled “Indigenous Communities Land Survey” (Re.Te.Ci.), created under Decision No. 587 of 27 October 2007. Furthermore, the Government indicates that, at the decentralized level, a technical operation team will be set up in each province, which will work in coordination with the CPI and with a member of the provincial executive branch appointed by the Governor. The Committee notes that a “National Coordination Network for the Survey of Lands of Indigenous Communities” has been established and the following instruments have been created to implement the programme: (a) the “jaguar” system, which is a geographical information system; (b) a social community questionnaire, which is a tool for gathering socio-demographic data; (c) a survey of natural and cultural resources; and (d) an administrative procedures and operations manual. As of September 2008, projects were being developed relating to the regularization of lands in Buenos Aires (involving 40 communities), Chaco (involving 40 communities), Río Negro (involving 87 communities) and Salta (involving 330 communities). The Committee notes that the state of emergency declared with regard to the possession and ownership of traditionally occupied lands will last for four years from 23 November 2006, the date on which Act No. 26160 entered into force, and that the suspension of evictions will therefore be lifted on 23 November 2010. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made and difficulties encountered with regard to the regularization of lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples, including information on the following:

- (i) lands claimed by indigenous peoples, including quantity and percentages by province;
- (ii) lands regularized in relation to these percentages; and
- (iii) lands to be regularized.

Please also indicate the measures envisaged to guarantee the rights laid down in Article 14 of the Convention if the regularization process has not been completed within the period mentioned.

Advances in case law. The Committee notes with interest the detailed information provided by the Government on new decisions relating to the rights established in the Convention. These decisions appear to be in line with the Convention, in terms of both lands and participation. With regard to lands, the Committee notes, for example, the decision of the Magistrate’s Court of the Fourth District of the Province of Neuquén in the case of Antiman, Víctor Antonio y Linares, José Cristóbal Linares s/ usurpación, of 30 October 2007, in which the court recognized the new era with regard to rights over indigenous lands, ruling that it was “an era of recognition, recovery and reassertion of rights enshrined in the Constitution, as a result of which a decision criminalizing the conduct of the Mapuche people on 31 January 2005 would mean going back in time and failing to recognize the current legal and constitutional framework”. With regard to participation and natural resources, the Committee notes that the Supreme Court of Justice, in a decision of 26 March 2009 (S.1144.XLIV, Salas, Dino y otros c/ Salta, provincial y Estado Nacional), confirmed the suspension of authorizations for felling and clearing until the completion of an environmental study and stipulated that the study had to be carried out “with the broad participation of the communities living in the affected area”. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on this matter. Furthermore, referring to a 2004 ruling which it noted in its previous comments, declaring that the Forestry Act of the Province of Chaco was unconstitutional because the indigenous communities had not been consulted, the Committee requests the Government to report on the measures taken as a result of the ruling.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Committee is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Bangladesh

Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957 (No. 107) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the Government's report which covers the period from 1 September 2007 to 30 August 2008. It also notes the Decent Work Country Programme for Bangladesh (2006–09) and the National Strategy for Accelerated Poverty Reduction II (2009–11) (NSAPR) published by the Government in October 2008, which address matters relevant to the application of the Convention. The Committee welcomes the commitment of the Government, expressed in the NSAPR, to ratifying the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), and it encourages the Government to seek technical assistance from the ILO in this regard.

Implementation of the Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord, 1997. The Committee recalls that it has been examining the situation in Bangladesh for many years, against the background of large-scale migration into the Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT) by non-indigenous Bengali settlers from other parts of Bangladesh, the consequent displacement of indigenous communities from their traditional land, and an armed insurgency by indigenous militants which was resolved by the Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord, 1997. In reply to the Committee's request to identify those provisions of the Peace Accord which remain to be implemented, the Government provided an overview table indicating the status of implementation of the Peace Accord's various provisions. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the implementation of the following provisions remains "under process": the transfer of authority to appoint local police officers to the district hill councils (Clause B, section 24); the harmonization of the Chittagong Hill Tracts Regulation, 1900, and related laws with the Local Government Council Act of 1989 (Clause C, section 11); the cancellation of land allocation for rubber and other plantations to non-tribal and non-local persons who did not undertake any projects during the last ten years or had not used the land properly (Clause D, section 8). With regard to the land survey envisaged under Clause D, section 2, the NSAPR states that the land survey has not yet started. Referring to 200 temporary army camps, the Government's report considers the Peace Accord's provisions regarding demilitarization as "implemented". The Government's report makes reference to the implementation of Clause B, section 34, which lists subjects to be added to the functions and responsibilities of the Hill District Councils. Considering that the implementation of the outstanding provisions are crucial with a view to building and consolidating peace in the region, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to achieve the full implementation of the Peace Accord and to provide detailed information on the progress made in this regard. Please also provide information on the implementation of Clause B, section 34.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Coordinated and systematic government action – collaboration and participation. The Committee notes that a series of government interventions are set out in the NSAPR to address the situation of indigenous communities of the plains and in the CHT, with the overall objective of ensuring their "social, political and economic rights; ensure their security and fundamental human rights; and preserve their social and cultural identity". The NSAPR aims at achieving access of indigenous communities to education, health care, food and nutrition, employment and protection of rights to land and other resources. The Committee notes that overall responsibility for coordinating governmental activities for indigenous communities in the plains is with the Special Affairs Division, while the Ministry for Chittagong Hill Tracts Affairs continues to take the lead for that region. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government concerning development projects carried out in the CHT. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken by the relevant line ministries responsible for the action in favour of indigenous communities in the plains and the CHT envisaged under the NSAPR and on the results achieved in improving their situation. It also requests the Government to report on the progress made in adopting and implementing the National Indigenous People's Policy as mentioned in the NSAPR. Finally, the Committee requests that the Government ensure appropriate collaboration and participation of the indigenous communities and their representatives concerned in the design and implementation of measures affecting them, in keeping with Article 5 of the Convention, and to provide information in this regard.

Legislation in force. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Chittagong Hill Tracts Regulation, 1900, is still in force, but that it has been supplemented by a number of subsequent laws, including a number of laws passed after the Peace Accord. The Committee also notes that the 1900 Regulation was amended by the Chittagong Hill Tracts Regulation (Amendment) Act, 2003, which has been put in effect as of 1 August 2008. The Committee notes that these amendments concern the transfer to newly established courts of jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters which formerly vested in civil servants at the district and divisional levels. According to a recent ILO study, the amendments do not affect the existing functions of the traditional chiefs and head men in dispensing justice on tribal customary laws (Roy, The ILO Convention on Indigenous and Tribal Populations, 1957 (No. 107), and the Laws of Bangladesh: A Comparative Analysis, 2009, p. 30). The Committee requests the Government to provide, on a continuing basis, information on legislative developments relating to the application of the Convention with regard to the indigenous communities of the plains and the CHT.

Articles 11–14. Land rights. The Committee recalls that the Peace Accord envisages the rehabilitation of indigenous returned refugees and internally displaced indigenous persons and the resolution of land disputes, followed by a land survey to be conducted by the Government in consultation with the Regional Council. As previously noted by the Committee, the Land Commission Act was enacted in 2001, to provide for the establishment of such a Commission to resolve land disputes in the CHT. While noting that, at the time of reporting, the Land Commission was still not functioning, the Committee understands that a new Chair of the Commission has been appointed recently. According to the Government, a process had been started to amend the Act to bring it in line with the Peace Accord. The Committee hopes that the process of amending the Land Commission Act will be concluded without delay, and requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end, and any other measures taken to enable the Land Commission to fulfil its functions.

The Committee notes from the NSAPR that indigenous communities are subject to extortion by “land grabbers”, and that the formulation of a policy to address issues affecting indigenous communities is envisaged. Recalling that under Article 11 of the Convention, the right of ownership, collective or individual, of the members of the populations concerned over the lands which these populations traditionally occupy shall be recognized, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate steps to ensure that the land rights of indigenous people and communities in Bangladesh, including those of the plains, are fully recognized and effectively protected, in collaboration with their leaders. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the specific measures taken in this regard, including measures to investigate fully reports of illegal seizures of the traditional lands of indigenous communities. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in adopting and implementing the national land policy for indigenous communities envisaged under the NSAPR.

Rehabilitation of returned refugees and internally displaced persons. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has appointed a new chairperson of the Task Force envisaged under the Peace Accord mandated to rehabilitate indigenous refugees repatriated from India and internally displaced indigenous persons. While noting that, according to the Government, all refugees from India have been rehabilitated, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific activities undertaken by the Task Force with regard to internally displaced indigenous persons in the CHT who have yet to be rehabilitated. It once again requests the Government to indicate the number of internally displaced indigenous persons yet to be rehabilitated.

Jum cultivation. The Committee recalls its previous comments regarding statements made by the Government to the effect that it was making efforts to abolish “jum cultivation”, which is the traditional shifting cultivation method of many people in the CHT. The Committee notes that the Government’s report no longer refers to the abolition of jum cultivation and that the NSAPR calls for the preservation of the social and cultural identity of the indigenous communities and recognizes their traditional food production systems. The Government indicates that development projects focusing on alternative livelihood strategies were undertaken with the consent and participation of the population concerned “to reduce dependence on jum cultivation”, as produce and income obtained from it was inadequate on account of “constantly shrinking area of jum lands”. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that indigenous communities have the possibility to continue to engage in jum cultivation, including through accelerating measures protecting their land rights, and the measures taken to include shifting cultivation in relevant policies and programmes regarding rural development.

Bolivia

The Committee notes with satisfaction the legislation issued by Bolivia with regard to consultation on oil and gas exploitation and the consultations already held, and these will be referred to in greater detail below. In more general terms, the Committee welcomes the efforts made by Bolivia to achieve full participation which establishes the right of indigenous peoples to decide their own priorities for the process of development, in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention.

Articles 2 and 33. Coordinated and systematic action. The Committee notes the dissolution of the Ministry of Indigenous Affairs and Native Peoples (MAIPO). The Committee notes with interest that the Government has established the Unit for Indigenous Peoples’ Rights (UDPI) at the Ministry of the President’s office with the aim of promoting and coordinating the mainstreaming of indigenous peoples’ rights within state institutions. The Committee considers that this mainstreaming initiative could provide important channels for achieving greater coordination of state institutions in the handling of issues covered by the Convention and thereby facilitate coordinated and systematic action for its application. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the following: (i) the manner in which the UDPI structures and develops this mainstreaming, including the results achieved and any difficulties encountered; (ii) the manner in which the UDPI gives effect to Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention; and (iii) the manner in which the UDPI guarantees indigenous participation according to the terms established by Articles 2 and 33.

Consultation, participation and natural resources: hydrocarbons

Legislation. For a number of years the Committee has been asking the Government to develop mechanisms and procedures for consultation and participation provided for by the Convention in relation to the exploration and exploitation of natural resources, particularly hydrocarbons (oil and gas). The Committee welcomes the efforts made by the Government to implement the consultation and participation rights of indigenous peoples with regard to natural resources. In this regard, the Committee notes the promulgation of Act No. 3058 (Hydrocarbons Act) (sections 114–118), which provides for mandatory consultation; Supreme Decree No. 29033 of 16 February 2007, issuing regulations for consultation and participation regarding oil and gas activities, which develops procedures for consultation and participation; and Supreme Decree No. 29124 of 9 May 2007, which complements the above.

Supreme Decree No. 29033. The Committee notes that, in the preamble to Decree No. 29033, there are multiple references to the Convention and also to the recommendations made by the ILO Governing Body in the report adopted on the representation made by the Bolivian Workers' Federation (COB) in March 1999 (GB.274/16/7). The Committee notes that this Decree defines an extensive scope of application for consultation in both the personal field (indigenous and original peoples, and peasant farming communities), and in the material field (community lands of origin, community properties and lands to which these groups traditionally occupied or had access to). It establishes that the decision-making and representative bodies of the indigenous and original peoples and peasant farming communities at national, departmental, regional and local levels are the representative institutions to be involved in the processes of consultation and participation. It also regulates the financing of procedures (charged to the project). The Committee notes in particular that, under section 11 (planning), a joint agreement – between the competent authority and the representatives of the indigenous and original peoples and peasant farming communities – must be drawn up on the procedure to be followed for consultation, which will give rise to a memorandum of understanding. The consultation process will then be executed by the competent authority in coordination with the representative bodies of the indigenous and original peoples and peasant farming communities. The results of the consultation procedure will be set down in a validation agreement, which will state the position, observations, suggestions, additions and recommendations agreed upon by the indigenous and original peoples and peasant farming communities which might be affected. The consultation process will be deemed null and void if the established procedure is not respected, on account of false information or obtaining consent through pressure, intimidation, bribery, blackmail or violence, etc.

The Committee notes that efforts are being made to extend consultation to the mining and metallurgy sectors and work is being done on a project for indigenous participation in benefits and environmental control. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would supply information on the progress achieved in this respect and on any other new legislation adopted relating to participation and consultation.

Forced labour, consultation and participation. The Committee will provide a more detailed follow-up regarding forced labour in the context of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and in these comments it will examine the general measures adopted and indigenous consultation and participation for the elimination of forced labour. In its previous observation the Committee noted that a plan of action had been formulated, with ILO technical assistance, to eliminate forced labour, most victims of which are members of indigenous peoples, and that consultations on the plan were being held with workers' organizations, indigenous organizations and the Ministry of Indigenous Affairs and Original Peoples. The Committee notes numerous measures adopted by the Government to eliminate forced labour. It notes that these include Act No. 3351 of 21 February 2006 and its regulations (Decree No. 28631 of 8 March 2006), which gives the Ministry of Labour competence for the development and coordination of policies to eliminate forced labour. By virtue of these competencies, the Ministry of Labour, by means of Supreme Decree No. 29292 of 3 October 2007, established the Inter-Ministerial Council for the elimination of forced labour comprising the following: the Ministry of Justice; Ministry of Rural Development, Agriculture and the Environment; Ministry of the President's Office; Ministry of Development Planning; Ministry of Production and Micro-enterprise; and chaired by the Ministry of Labour. It indicates that the elimination of forced labour was based on joint action by various ministries and contained a land reorganization component. According to the report, the main difficulty encountered by this objective has been the resistance of landowners to the land reorganization process.

The report states that the following participatory measures were implemented: (i) the Assembly of the Guarani People approved the 2007–08 Inter-Ministerial Plan for Guarani people, the aim of which is to create decent living conditions for the Guarani families registered in the Chaco Boliviano, further to which the Government approved the execution of the Plan by means of Supreme Decree No. 29292; (ii) on 5 November 2008, the Ministry of Labour approved the internal regulations of the 2007–08 Inter-Ministerial Plan approved by the Guarani people and formed an executive board comprising six minister members of the Inter-Ministerial Council for the elimination of bonded labour, forced labour and other similar practices and six representatives of the Assembly of the Guarani People; (iii) other actions of the Ministry of Production and the Ministry of Justice. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to eliminate forced labour involving indigenous persons and to provide information in this respect, particularly as regards indigenous participation in the formulation, application and monitoring of measures adopted to eliminate indigenous forced labour.

Articles 21–23. Training. The Committee notes with interest that pursuant to Supreme Decree No. 29664 of 2 August 2008, three indigenous universities – of a community, inter-cultural and productive nature – were set up under the collective title of the Indigenous University of Bolivia (UNIBOL). One is for the Aymara people, another for the Quechua people and the third for the Guarani people. Areas of study include: highland (altiplano) agronomy, food industry, textiles industry, veterinary science, zoology, oil and gas industry, forestry and fisheries. Academic training will be in each people's language, with additional courses for learning Spanish and a foreign language. Thesis projects will be defended in the native language of each region. Diplomas will be awarded at higher technical, bachelor's degree and master's degree level. The objective of the three universities is to reconstruct indigenous identities and develop scientific knowledge, know-how and technology on the basis of community criteria and the principles of complementarity, cooperative work, individual and collective responsibility, and respect for the environment. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to supply information in this respect.

Constitutional reform. The Committee notes with interest that on 7 February 2009 the constitutional reform establishing a pluri-national State was promulgated and requests the Government to supply information on the changes that have occurred in law and in practice pursuant to the reform, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Brazil

The Committee notes the communication from the Union of Rural Workers of Alcántara (STTR) and the Union of Family Agriculture Workers of Alcántara (SINTRAF), of 20 October 2009, forwarded to the Government on 6 November 2009. The Committee will examine this communication at its next session together with the observations of the Government in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the communication of the STTR and SINTRAF.

The Committee recalls that on 27 August 2008 it received a communication from the STTR and SINTRAF on the application of the Convention in the country, which was sent to the Government on 5 September 2008. It also recalls that on 1 September 2008, it received a communication from the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) sent to the Government on 18 September 2008. This communication also attached comments made by the following indigenous organizations: the Coordinating Committee of the Indigenous Peoples of the North-East, Minas Gerais and Espírito Santo (APOINME), the Indigenous Council of Roraima (CIR), the Coordinating Committee of the Indigenous Organizations of Brazilian Amazonia (COIAB) and the Warã Brazilian Indian Institute. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that it received a communication, dated 19 September 2008, from the Workers' Union of the Federal University of Santa Catarina (SINTUFSC), forwarded to the Government on 4 November 2008.

Quilombola communities of Alcántara. The Committee notes that by means of a communication of 26 December 2008, the Government provided information with regard to the observations formulated by the STTR and SINTRAF. The Committee notes that the information submitted by the Government only refers to one of the issues raised by the STTR and SINTRAF, namely the situation of Quilombola communities in the face of the establishment and expansion of the Alcántara Launch Centre (CLA) and the Alcántara Space Centre (CEA) on territory traditionally occupied by Quilombola communities, without their being consulted and without their participation.

The Committee notes that, according to what emerges from the information submitted by the Government, the Technical Study on Identification and Demarcation was published. Following an administrative conciliation procedure between the governmental institutions concerned (Ministry of Science and Technology, Ministry of Agricultural Development, National Institute for Settlement and Agrarian Reform (INCRA), the Brazilian Spatial Agency and the Alcántara Space Centre), the Study established that 78,105,3466 hectares will be considered as territory of the Quilombola communities of Alcántara. The Committee understands that this entailed the reduction of the territory occupied by Quilombola communities and notes that the indications regarding the extent of such reduction differ. The Committee also notes that, according to article 11 of Decree No. 4887/2003, when the lands occupied by descendants of Quilombola communities overlap with, among others, national security areas, appropriate measures shall be taken to ensure the sustainability of these communities, conciliating, at the same time, States' interests. In this regard, the Committee notes that according to the Advisory Opinion/AGU/MC/N.1/2006 of the Attorney General, in the event of overlapping interests, conflicts shall be settled in the light of the principle of "reasonableness".

The Committee recalls that, as indicated in its previous observation, the communities in question appear to meet the requirements for being covered by the Convention and they identify themselves as tribal peoples within the meaning of Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Inasmuch as these communities meet the requirements set out in Article 1 of the Convention, the Articles of the Convention shall be applied when addressing the issue which is the object of the communication. The Committee recalls the special importance for the cultures and spiritual values of the peoples covered by the Convention of their relationship with the lands or territories which they occupy or otherwise use and the obligation of governments to respect that relationship. The Committee considers that the recognition and effective protection of the rights of these peoples to the lands that they traditionally occupy in accordance with Article 14 of the Convention is of vital importance for safeguarding the integrity of these peoples and, consequently, for respecting the other rights established in the Convention.

Likewise, the Committee emphasizes that governments have the obligation, under Article 6(1)(a) and (2), of the Convention, to consult the peoples covered by the Convention, through their representative institutions, whenever consideration is being given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly, with the objective of achieving agreement or consent to the proposed measures. The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the fact that, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention, governments shall ensure that studies are carried out, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of planned development activities. The Committee cannot overemphasize that the results of these studies shall be considered as fundamental criteria for the implementation of these activities. The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government does not contain any reference to the participation of the affected communities in the procedure mentioned above. Neither does it contain references to their consultation. In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on:

- (i) the way in which the participation and consultation of the Quilombola communities affected were ensured, through their representative institutions, with the objective of achieving agreement or consent about the solution of the case, including information on the participation of these communities in the elaboration of the Technical Study on Identification and Demarcation;
- (ii) the way in which due account was taken of the obligation to ensure the cultural, social and economic integrity of the Quilombola communities affected when reconciling the conflicting interest of the parties involved in the issue at hand;
- (iii) the measures adopted to carry out studies in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of the establishment and expansion of the CLA and the CEA, including with a view to ensuring the viability of the traditional activities of these communities;
- (iv) the progress made in identifying and demarcating the lands traditionally occupied by the Quilombola communities following the adoption of the Technical Study on Identification and Demarcation and the measures adopted to guarantee the rights of ownership and possession of these communities over their traditional lands and to safeguard their right to use lands not exclusively occupied by them but to which they have traditionally had access for their subsistence and traditional activities; and
- (v) the special measures adopted, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, to safeguard the persons, institutions, property, labour, cultures and environment of the communities concerned for as long as the recognition and demarcation of their lands is pending.

Communication from the Workers' Union of the Federal University of Santa Catarina (SINTUFSC), dated 19 September 2009. The Committee asks the Government to reply to the communication from SINTUFSC so as to allow the Committee to examine it in detail at its next session.

Noting the Government does not provide information in respect to the other points raised in its previous observation, the Committee is bound to repeat its previous observation, which read in relevant parts as follows:

Article 1, paragraph 2. Undermining of the application of the criterion of self-identification. The CUT also states that the criterion of self-identification established in Article 1(2) of the Convention was incorporated in national law by means of Decree No. 4887/2003, which regulates the procedure for granting titles regarding lands occupied by the remaining Quilombola communities. Nevertheless, the Government is allegedly undermining self-identification by means of subsequent legislation (Decree No. 98/2007), thereby preventing issues regarding land titles from being settled since doing so depends on registration of communities. It is, according to the trade union, more and more difficult to obtain registration and thus secure the application of other rights, in particular with regard to land. The violation of the criterion of self-identification is also visible in the dispute between the Quilombola community of Isla de Marambai and the Navy. The communities identify themselves as indigenous and claim the protection afforded by the Convention. Although occurring less frequently, the indigenous identity of the Indians of the North-East is sometimes not recognized either, and this makes the recognition of their rights to the lands they have traditionally occupied more difficult. In the light of the information received, the Committee considers that the Quilombola communities appear to meet the requirements laid down by Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, according to which the Convention applies to "tribal peoples in independent countries whose social, cultural and economic conditions distinguish them from other sections of the national community, and whose status is regulated wholly or partially by their own customs or traditions or by special laws or regulations". Article 1(2) states that "self-identification as indigenous or tribal shall be regarded as a fundamental criterion for determining the groups for which the provisions of this Convention apply". The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention to the Quilombola communities, and should the Government consider that these communities do not constitute tribal peoples within the meaning of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to state the reasons for its viewpoint.

Communication from the CUT

Articles 2, 6, 7 and 33. Consultation and participation. The communication indicates that although there has been an increase in social dialogue, the effectiveness of such forums is questioned by the indigenous peoples because of their defining features (places which are difficult to access, convocations issued with little notice or superficial discussions) and the impression exists that the sole purpose of such consultations with the peoples, when they are actually held, is to rubber-stamp public policies. The Committee reminds the Government, as it has done repeatedly, that consultation and participation must not just be formal and devoid of content but must constitute a genuine dialogue, by means of appropriate mechanisms, so that they can result in projects including those in which the peoples covered by the Convention may participate in their own development. The Committee requests the Government to examine the existing mechanisms for consultation and participation, in cooperation with the indigenous organizations, so as to ensure that they are in conformity with the Convention, and to supply information in this respect.

Article 6. Consultation and legislation. The communication indicates that no consultation takes place with regard to the legislative and administrative measures referred to in Article 6 of the Convention. Examples of this are Decree No. 98/2007 concerning the Palmares Cultural Foundation referred to above, the draft Act concerning mining on indigenous lands (PL No. 1610/1996) and draft Decree No. 44/2007, which suspends the application of Decree No. 4887/2003 regulating the procedure for granting titles regarding Quilombola lands. The Committee notes that governments have the obligation to consult the peoples covered by the Convention whenever consideration is given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly, and requests the Government to supply information in this respect.

Article 14. Lands. The CUT points out that the Constitution guarantees for Indians and Quilombola communities the right to the lands which they occupy but, although there are 343 indigenous territories and 87 Quilombola territories which are registered, land titles have still not been regularized for most of the lands; 283 indigenous lands and 590 Quilombola lands are the subject of administrative proceedings and 224 indigenous lands have not even reached this stage. The number of indigenous persons who have been killed has increased, particularly in Mato Grosso do Sul, as a result of unresolved land disputes. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the application of Article 14 of the Convention with regard to the Quilombola communities.

Articles 6, 7 and 15. Participation, consultation and natural resources. Detailed reference is made to five projects in which the CUT alleges there has been no participation or consultation: (1) the Belo Monte hydroelectric project; (2) diversion of the River San Francisco; (3) draft Act No. 2540/2006, which proposes authorization for a hydroelectric project at the Tamanduá Falls on the River Cotingo in the Raposa Serra do Sol indigenous territory; (4) the Guaraní-K'iwóá indigenous territory, where 12,000 indigenous persons live confined to reserves such as Dourados, living in abject poverty, with projects and policies implemented without any consultation or participation; (5) mining in the Cinta Larga indigenous territory, which will be severely affected by the draft law on mining, regarding which there has been no consultation with the peoples concerned. The Committee expresses its concern regarding the allegations and reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 7, it must ensure that studies are carried out, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of planned development activities. The results of these studies shall be considered as fundamental criteria for the implementation of these activities. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information regarding the cases referred to above.

The Committee hopes that the Government will supply detailed information in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments on these communications, together with its reply to the present comments. Noting that the Government's report does not provide a reply to the questions posed by the Committee in its 2005 direct request, it requests the Government to also include a reply to the 2005 comments.

Colombia

The Committee takes note of the communication of 27 August 2009 by the Workers' Trade Union Confederation of the Oil Industry (USO), sent to the Government on 2 September 2009. It also notes the communication of 28 August 2009 from the Union of Workers of the National Mining Enterprise "Minercol Ltda." (SINTRAMINERCOL), sent to the Government on 18 September 2009. It further notes the communication of 31 August 2009 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) sent to the Government on 3 September 2009. The Committee notes that the Government's report was received on 14 August 2009 and that, consequently, it contains no observations responding to the abovementioned communications.

The Committee notes that the recent communications from the USO, SINTRAMINERCOL and ITUC follow up on issues raised by the Committee in its previous comments, such as the situation of the Afro-Colombian communities of Curvaradó and Jiguamiandó, the situation in the Chidima and Pescadito reservations and the situation of the Embera Katío peoples of Alto Sinú. A new dimension that arises is that of the implementation of the Mandé Norte project which is affecting the Afro-Colombian community of Jiguamiandó and the Embera community of the Urada Jiguamiandó reservation and is related to matters brought up by the Committee in earlier comments.

In view of the gravity of the events alleged, the persistence of the issues raised by the Committee and the irremediable consequences that could result, the Committee will have regard to the relevant information contained in the new communications, as it relates to matters that have already been raised by the Committee. Before turning to the specific cases, however, the Committee deems it appropriate to make some general remarks on the situation of indigenous and Afro-Colombian peoples in Colombia, since the problems in applying the Convention indicated in the communications are widespread.

The Committee notes with serious concern the persistence of violence in the country. It is particularly worried to note that the indigenous and the Afro-Colombian communities are still the brunt of violence, intimidation, dispossession of lands and the imposition of projects on their territory without consultation or participation, and continue to suffer violations of the rights laid down in the Convention. It notes with regret that, according to the communications, the leaders of these communities and the organizations involved in defending the communities' rights are often the victims of violence, threats, harassment and stigmatization because of their work and that, according to the allegations, the offenders often go unpunished.

The Committee takes notes of the statement made by the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders on completion of a mission to Colombia in September 2009 to the effect that indigenous and Afro-Colombian leaders, as well as other categories of human rights defenders, have been killed, tortured, ill treated, disappeared, threatened, arbitrarily arrested and detained, judicially harassed, under surveillance, forcibly displaced or forced into exile (United Nations Press Release, 18 September 2009). The Committee also notes that, according to the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial summary of arbitrary executions, such executions affect the indigenous and Afro-Colombian peoples disproportionately (Press Release, 18 June 2009). The Committee notes that similar concerns were expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people (see, respectively, concluding observations, CERD/C/COL/CO/14, 28 August 2009, paragraphs 12, 14 and 15, and Preliminary note on the situation of indigenous peoples in Colombia, A/HRC/12/34/Add.9, 23 September 2009) which likewise emphasize that there are serious problems regarding the indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities' rights to land and consultations (respectively, paragraphs 19–20, and 10–11).

The Committee notes that according to Resolutions Nos 004 and 005 of January 2009 by the Constitutional Court of Colombia which concern indigenous and Afro-Colombian peoples who have been, or are in danger of being, forcibly displaced, there is “a general attitude of indifference at the horror the indigenous communities of the country have had to bear in recent years”. It also notes the Court's view that “the response of the state authorities ... has mainly been to issue rules, policies and official documents, which, while valuable, have had little practical effect” (Resolution No. 004).

The Committee notes with concern from the Government's report that in the last year there has been a significant increase in the number of killings of indigenous people. It notes the Government's statement that the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions has devised and is implementing a comprehensive action plan aimed at greater efficiency in the investigation of cases in which the victims are members of indigenous communities. It also notes the initiatives taken to comply with the orders set forth in Resolution No. 004 of the Constitutional Court concerning the preparation of a “programme to guarantee the rights of indigenous peoples affected, or in danger of being affected, by displacement” and “ethnic safeguard plans”.

The Committee urges the Government to:

- (i) adopt without delay and in a coordinated and systematic manner all necessary measures to protect the physical, social, cultural, economic and political integrity of the indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities and their members and to guarantee full observance of the rights laid down in the Convention;
- (ii) take urgent measures to prevent and punish acts of violence, intimidation and harassment against members of the communities and their leaders and to investigate the alleged offences efficiently and impartially;
- (iii) immediately suspend the implementation of projects affecting indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities until an end has been put to all intimidation of the affected communities and their members and until the participation and consultation of the peoples concerned has been ensured through their representative institutions in a climate of full respect and trust, pursuant to Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention;
- (iv) provide detailed information on the results of the investigations held under the action plan of the National Directorate of Public Prosecutions; and
- (v) provide information on the measures taken to comply with the resolutions of the Constitutional Court.

Afro-Colombian communities of Curvaradó and Jiguamiandó. In its previous observation the Committee expressed deep and growing concern at the allegations made in the USO's communication of 2007 and at the lack of any response to them by the Government. The USO referred in particular to the presence of paramilitary groups in the community territory, impunity for violations of the fundamental rights of members of the community and the “judicial persecution” against members of these communities and members of supporting organizations who are accused of assisting the guerilla. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to guarantee the lives and physical and moral integrity of the members of the communities, to put an end to all persecution, threats or intimidation and to ensure that the rights laid down in the Convention are implemented in a climate of security.

The Committee notes with deep concern that, according to the USO's communication of 2009, the threats, harassment and attempts on the lives and integrity of members of the community have not stopped. The USO alleges in its communication that although the Colombian Institute for Rural Development (INCODER) issued Resolutions Nos 2424 and 2155 in 2007 clarifying and setting the boundaries of the private property of community territories, recognizing collective entitlement, in a show of bad faith third parties continue to occupy these lands. It further alleges a lack of prompt and timely investigations of those responsible, and the persistence of “judicial persecution” and smear campaigns against members of the communities and their supporting organizations.

The Committee notes that according to the Government's report, in February 2009 the company “Agropalma” voluntarily handed over 254 hectares of territory to the Community Council of the Rio Curvaradó Basin. According to the report, 220 of these were sown with palm trees, 100 per cent of which were diseased (bud rot) upon delivery. The Committee notes that the legal offices of the Ministry of the Interior and Justice and the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development are engaged in initiatives for the physical restitution of the territories. The Committee refers to its previous comments and also urges the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure effective protection of the rights of the Curvaradó and Jiguamiandó Afro-Colombian communities over their lands, and to prevent any intrusion, in accordance with Articles 14(2) and 18 of the Convention. Please provide information on the measures taken to this end and report on the restitution of lands at the initiative of the abovementioned ministries.

The Embera Katío and Embera Dóbida peoples. Chidima and Pescadito reservations. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the invasion by outsiders of the lands of the Embera Katío and Embera Dóbida peoples and a series of activities that were implemented without consulting these peoples. The Committee urged the Government to take steps as a matter of urgency to put an end to the intrusion and asked it to join the three plots of the Chidima reservation into one in so far as there had been traditional occupation of the land. It also asked the Government to suspend activities arising from concessions granted for exploration and/or infrastructure projects, pending the consultation and participation of the indigenous peoples, in accordance with Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention.

The Committee notes that in its communication of 2009, the USO alleges that the Government has taken no steps to carry out a study of traditional occupation by these communities in the Chidima reservation with a view to joining the three plots, as the Committee requested. It also notes that the settlers are still present. It notes that according to the Government's report, as a result of Constitutional Court decision No. C-175 of 2009, the establishment, reorganization, restructuring and extension of reservations is no longer the responsibility of the Directorate of Indigenous Affairs, Minorities and Roma of the Ministry of the Interior and Justice, but of INCODER.

The USO also states that the abovementioned projects are still ongoing with no consultation of the indigenous peoples. It also asserts that there have been threats to the lives and physical integrity of a number of indigenous leaders and that the army's presence in the territory is growing ever more permanent. Further, on 1 June 2009, the communities filed a constitutional complaint (acción de tutela) against the national bodies, seeking a halt to the construction works for the Ungia-Acandí highway, and the infrastructure, hydroelectric and mining exploration and exploitation works, on grounds of breach of their right to prior consultation, participation and collective ownership; but the complaint failed. With regard to the mining concession in the municipality of Acandí, the USO reports that the Environmental Alternatives Diagnosis is being conducted and that according to the Ministry of Environment, Housing and Territorial Development, "prior consultation is not required" as regards this study. The Committee would point out to the Government that according to Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention, the peoples concerned must participate and be consulted regarding environmental impact studies. The Committee again urges the Government to take steps as a matter of urgency to put an end to all intrusion in the lands of the Embera Katío and Embera Dóbida peoples and to suspend exploration and exploitation activities and implementation of infrastructure projects affecting them, pending full compliance with Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention. It also repeats its requests to the Government to take steps to join the three plots of the Chidima reservation into one in so far as there has been traditional occupation of the land and to guarantee effective protection of the rights of ownership and possession of the peoples concerned, in accordance with Article 14(2) of the Convention.

Embera Katío people of Alto Sinú. The Committee recalls that the case of the Embera Katío people of Alto Sinú was examined by the Governing Body in connection with the construction, without consultation, of the Urrá I hydroelectric dam in a report adopted in 2001 (document GB.282/14/4). In that report, the Governing Body recommended that the Government maintain dialogue with the Embera Katío people in a climate of cooperation and mutual respect, in order to seek solutions to the situation that this people was going through and that it provide information in particular on measures taken to safeguard the cultural, social, economic and political integrity of this people, prevent acts of intimidation or violence against its members and compensate them for the losses and damage suffered. The Committee notes with regret that according to the ITUC's communication of 2009, there has been no compensation for the damage caused to the Embera Katío people by the Urrá I dam, and that, in 2008, a project for the construction of a new dam on their territory was submitted. The ITUC indicates that in June 2009, the Ministry of Environment turned down the application for an environmental licence for the project but that the risk that projects for the exploitation of environmental resources will be imposed remains latent. It further indicates that the people's traditional authorities have reported an ever-growing military presence on their territory since 2007 and that this is involving the community directly or indirectly in armed conflict. It further alleges that the protection machinery set up to safeguard the lives and personal safety of the members of the community has grown gradually weaker and that in the last few years there has been a serious decline in the situation regarding security and guarantees. The Committee refers to its earlier comments and requests the Government to guarantee the right of the Embera Katío people to decide their own priorities for the process of development and participate in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of plans and programmes for national and regional development which may affect them directly, in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention.

Mandé Norte project. The Committee notes with concern the communication sent by SINTRAMINERCOL in 2009, alleging that the Embera people in the Urada Jiguamiandó reservation are in imminent danger of forced displacement due to the implementation, without consultation, of the Mandé Norte mining project, the militarization of their land, the threat of armed conflict and the invasion and disregard of their holy places by the armed forces.

SINTRAMINERCOL indicates that the Colombian Institute of Agrarian Reform (INCORA) issued Resolution No. 007 of 2003 establishing a reservation for the Embera Dóbida community covering a total area of 19,744 hectares consisting of two plots of unplanted land that form part of the Pacific Forest Reserve. In 2005, a licence was granted for the technical exploration and economic exploitation of a copper, gold and molybdenum mine in an area of approximately 16,000 hectares for a period of 30 years, renewable for a further 30 years. Of these 16,000 hectares, the areas located in the municipality of Carmen del Darién, amounting to 11,000 hectares, are traditional lands and the reserve of the indigenous Embera people of Urada Jiguamiandó. Overall, the project affects more than 11 indigenous communities, two Afro-Colombian communities and an unspecified number of peasant communities. The organization adds that the indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities were not consulted before the mining contracts were signed. For the exploration phase, consultation was carried out by the Working Group on Prior Consultation of the Ministry of the Interior and Justice and the procedure was challenged by the indigenous and Afro-Colombian authorities on the grounds that the persons with whom the consultation was planned, agreed on and endorsed, were not legitimate representatives of the communities. Furthermore, it was when the activities to implement the project began that military personnel started to move in to the River Jiguamiandó Basin. According to SINTRAMINERCOL, since January 2009, the licence holder has been engaged in a campaign to discredit the communities and their leaders and support organizations and to invalidate their legitimacy. The Committee notes that the USO's communication of 2009 makes the same allegations regarding the Afro-Colombian community of Jiguamiandó, which is likewise affected by the project.

The Committee points out that the principle of representativeness is an essential component of the requirement to consult laid down in Article 6 of the Convention. As the Governing Body noted in another case, if an appropriate consultation process is not developed with the indigenous and tribal institutions or organizations that are truly representative of the communities affected, the resulting consultations will not comply with the requirements of the Convention (document GB.282/14/2, paragraph 44). The Government is therefore bound to ascertain that the consultations are held with the institutions that truly represent the peoples concerned before any programme for prospecting or exploiting their lands is undertaken. The Committee further observes that a climate of mutual trust is essential to any consultations if a genuine dialogue between the parties is to be established so that appropriate solutions can be sought to the problems at hand, as the Convention requires. The Committee further considers that the militarization of the area where the project is being carried out and the campaigns to discredit and deny the legitimacy of the communities, their leaders and support organizations are not consistent with the basic requirement that consultations must be genuine. It points out that the obligation to consult should be viewed in the light of the fundamental principle of participation set forth in Article 7(1) and (3) of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to:

- (i) suspend activities related to the implementation of the Mandé Norte project until it has ensured the participation and consultation of the peoples affected through their representative institutions in a climate of full respect and trust, in accordance with Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention;
- (ii) take the necessary steps to put an end to the climate of intimidation; and
- (iii) conduct studies, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the impact of the abovementioned project, in accordance with Articles 7(3) and 15(2), of the Convention, bearing in mind the obligation to protect the social, cultural and economic integrity of the peoples, in accordance with the spirit of the Convention.

Please provide full information on the measures taken to these ends.

The Awa people.* Noting the Ombudsperson's Resolution No. 53 of 2008 which refers to threats, harassment, disappearances and killings of members of the Awa people, as well as the recent statement by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, condemning the killings of members of the Awa people on the morning of 25 August 2009 in the department of Nariño, the Committee requests the Government to provide full information on the situation of the Awa people and the measures taken in response to the Committee's previous comments.

Consultations. Legislation. The Committee recalls that in two reports it issued on representations in 2001, the Governing Body found Decree No. 1320 of 1998 to be inconsistent with the Convention in terms both of the adoption process, which did not involve consultations, and of its content, and accordingly asked the Government to amend it in order to align it with the Convention, in consultation with and with the active participation of the representatives of the indigenous peoples of Colombia (documents GB.282/14/3 and GB.282/14/4). The Committee also recalls that the Constitutional Court of Colombia, in judgement No. T-652 of 1998, suspended application of the abovementioned Decree in the specific case of the indigenous communities of Embera Katio of Alto Sinú because the Decree was inconsistent with the Constitution of Colombia and the Convention. The Committee further notes that on several occasions the Constitutional Court has been exemplary in identifying problems regarding the holding of prior consultations with the communities concerned, on the latest occasion in judgement C-175/09 of 18 March 2009 on the adoption of Act No. 1152 of 2007 (Rural Development Statute), which the Court found to be unenforceable on grounds of non-compliance with the requirement for prior consultation. The Committee notes from the information supplied by the Government in its report that the Working Party on Prior Consultation of the Ministry of the Interior and Justice, established by Resolution No. 3598 of 2009, has drafted a statute to regulate the consultation process. The Committee notes with regret that this bill was not the subject of any consultations or process of participation with the indigenous and tribal peoples. It further notes with concern that, according to the abovementioned communication, the content of the bill has not eliminated the problems of Decree No. 1320 and does not envisage consultation as a process of genuine negotiation between the parties involved.

The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the participation and consultation of indigenous peoples is established in the abovementioned provisions that are to regulate the consultation process and refers the Government to the recommendations made by the Governing Body in the two reports mentioned above regarding the fundamental requirements to be observed as to content. The Committee encourages the Government to seek technical assistance from the Office on this matter and asks it to provide a copy of the abovementioned draft regulations.

Costa Rica

Articles 2, 6 and 7 of the Convention. Indigenous legislation and consultation. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, Bill No. 12032 for the autonomous development of indigenous peoples has been shelved and replaced by Bill No. 14352 on the same subject which is still before the Legislative Assembly. The Government states that the current Bill seeks the consolidation of self-determination rights entailing the right of indigenous peoples to negotiate with States on equal terms. The Government indicates that Bill No. 14352 was submitted for consultation with the indigenous peoples between 22 July and 9 September 2006 in the 24 indigenous territories and on 11 September 2007 it obtained the majority approval of the Standing Committee on Social Affairs of the Legislative Assembly. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates the political will and support for keeping this initiative alive in the Legislative Assembly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which consultations were undertaken, regarding the Autonomous Development of Indigenous Peoples Bill (No. 14352) including information on the representative institutions of the indigenous peoples which were consulted and the other requirements laid down in Article 6 of the Convention in the light of its general observation of 2008, and on the outcome of these consultations.

Article 14. Lands. The Committee notes sections 5, 6, 11, 12, 13 and 14 of Bill No. 14352 and that these sections govern a summary procedure for the reclaiming of lands. It notes that these sections provide that: (i) within this rapid procedure, if the lands being reclaimed were occupied by a party purchasing indigenous lands in good faith, the State will finance the recovery of such lands (section 12); (ii) as regards the possession of lands by indigenous peoples since time immemorial, the prevailing criterion will be that the burden of proof regarding legitimate possession will fall exclusively on non-indigenous parties claiming possession, who will be entitled to the payments to be made by the State (section 13(d)); and (iii) the corresponding Indigenous Territorial Council may participate and become involved at any time in the procedure, and the requirements regarding identification and written documentation are simplified, these being acceptable even in handwritten form. The Committee hopes that Bill No. 14352 will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to provide information regarding the status of its adoption. In the absence of the adoption of the Bill, the Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the manner in which such matters are currently regulated, particularly the issue of lands reclaimed by indigenous persons which are owned or occupied by non-indigenous persons.

The Committee further notes that, according to data from the National Commission for Indigenous Affairs (CONAI) sent by the Government, the total surface area of indigenous territories in Costa Rica is 334,447 hectares, 38 per cent of which are still in non-indigenous hands. The Committee notes the information to the effect that lands have been bought by the Institute of Agrarian Development with a view to returning them to indigenous peoples. Taking account of the fact that indigenous peoples are currently in possession of 62 per cent of their lands, the Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the increase in the percentage of indigenous lands resulting from the new initiatives for reclaiming land, in order to be able to evaluate developments in the recovery of traditionally occupied lands.

Articles 7 and 16. Development projects, participation, consultation and relocation. With regard to its previous observation and the issues relating to the Boruca hydroelectric project, which might give rise to the relocation of indigenous peoples, the Committee notes that the project has not yet been implemented and that its characteristics and name have changed, now being known as the "El Diquís" hydroelectric project. The Government indicates that the population has been kept informed but at the current stage of the project no formal consultation has yet been undertaken because the project is still in the feasibility study phase. The Government indicates that, according to Executive Decree 32966-MINAE, for projects involving indigenous peoples or any possibilities of dispute, a participatory and interactive process must be launched. The Electricity Institute of Costa Rica (ICE) has so far maintained a relationship of mutual respect with the communities, which in turn have remained open to dialogue and participation. In its previous comments the Committee noted that it was estimated that 3,000 persons of the Teribe and Brunca indigenous peoples would be affected by the flooding of 14.7 per cent of the total surface area of their lands.

The Committee notes that, according to information from CONAI attached to the Government's report, the ICE initially approached the community of the indigenous territory of Térraba with a view to obtaining the community's consent for conducting preliminary studies. The community gave its consent on condition that an agreement was signed between the ICE and the community setting out in detail the terms and conditions under which their permission was given. When no such agreement was forthcoming, the community launched a series of actions, including in the courts, to expel the ICE until such time as an agreement was reached in which the community would benefit from any implementation of the project. CONAI asserts that the Government issued a statement supporting the ICE, declaring that the construction of the dam was in the national interest. The community challenged this decision in the Supreme Court of Justice on the grounds that it violated their ownership and consultation rights.

Recalling that, with regard to development activities, the consultation and participation provided for in the Convention are closely linked and that Article 7 of the Convention provides that indigenous peoples must participate in the formulation of development plans (paragraph 1) and in studies which assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of planned development activities (paragraph 3), the Committee requests the Government to ensure as soon as possible that the indigenous peoples concerned enjoy the right of participation provided for in this Article and to keep it informed in this respect. Furthermore, recalling that the results of these studies must be considered as fundamental criteria for the implementation of these activities, the Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the results of such studies and on the consideration which has been given to them. Should provision be made for relocations, the Government is asked to ensure that this issue is the subject of further consultation pursuant to Article 16 of the Convention and the Committee requests the Government to keep it informed in this regard.

Article 28. Indigenous languages. The Committee notes the Government's statement that Act No. 7878 of 2003 implies that the State has the obligation to guarantee the preservation of indigenous languages. It notes a 2007 decision of the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, according to which the protection of the aboriginal languages of Costa Rica not only helps to preserve the right of indigenous peoples to express themselves in their own language but also contributes to maintaining the cultural heritage of the nation. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any educational measures adopted to preserve these languages, including the provision of bilingual education.

Ecuador

The Committee notes the detailed report supplied by the Government of Ecuador and the comments sent by the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL), including an alternative report on the application of the Convention in Ecuador. The alternative report analyses the situation of the indigenous peoples from the ratification of the Convention in 1999 until July 2006 and was drawn up by the "Observatory for the Monitoring of Convention No. 169", with the support and participation of various civil society groups, indigenous organizations, academic institutions, etc. The alternative report refers to problems regarding the criteria used for censuses, a greater incidence of poverty among indigenous peoples compared with non-indigenous peoples, a lack of consultation and participation particularly with regard to natural resources, and the violation of territorial rights. As regards the greater incidence of poverty, the alternative report indicates that, according to the sixth Population and Housing Census, nine out of ten persons self-defined as indigenous and seven out of ten persons self-defined as black are poor, whereas slightly less than five out of ten persons self-defined as white are poor. The Committee notes that the Government did not make any comments on this report but that, according to the Secretariat of Peoples, Social Movements and Civic Participation in official letter No. 0767-DM-SPPC-08, the alternative report could be very useful for drawing up the Government's report on the application of the Convention.

Legislation and changes. The Committee notes the Government's indications in various paragraphs of its report that information is provisional since, at the time the report was drafted, the adoption of the new Constitution was pending. The Committee notes that the Constitution of Ecuador came into force in October 2008 at the time of its publication in the Official Register (RO). The Government states repeatedly that changes will be made in law and in practice on the basis of the new Constitution, and that the new Constitution represents progress with regard to the indigenous peoples. The Committee notes with interest that the new Constitution establishes rights which are laid down by the Convention, including rights regarding lands, consultation, participation, cross-border cooperation, and protection and preservation of the environment. In order to have a fuller idea of the changes arising from the Constitution, the Committee requires more information on the changes made in law and in practice on the basis of the new Constitution. The Committee therefore requests the Government to supply information on the main changes in law and in practice relating to the Convention, resulting from the adoption of the 2008 Constitution.

Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention. Coordinated and systematic action. Agencies or other appropriate mechanisms. The Committee notes that, by means of Decree No. 133 of 13 February 2007, published in RO No. 35 of 7 March 2007, the Secretariat of Peoples, Social Movements and Civic Participation was established, which, with the support of the Ministry of Labour, will safeguard and coordinate the rights of indigenous peoples and communities. The Government states that in order to ensure coordinated and systematic action via the abovementioned Secretariat, three institutions were set up: the Council for the Development of Afro-Ecuadorian Peoples (CODAE), the Council for the Development of Indigenous Peoples and Nationalities (CODENPE) and the Council for the Development of the Montubio People of the Ecuadorian Coast and Sub-tropical Zones of the Coastal Region (CODEPMOC). The "Project for the development of indigenous and black peoples of Ecuador (PRODEPINE)", to which the Committee referred in previous comments, was cancelled and taken over by CODENPE. In addition, CODENPE became an autonomous entity on the basis of the Organic Act concerning the institutions of the indigenous peoples of Ecuador (RO No. 175 of 21 September 2007). The Committee requests the Government to institutionalize and reinforce the bodies responsible for indigenous policy and also indigenous participation in those bodies, and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as information on the following:

- (i) the activities of those bodies; and
- (ii) the form that indigenous participation in those bodies takes, with reference to Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention.

Articles 6, 7 and 15. Consultation, oil activities and monitoring of the implementation of the recommendations made in document GB.282/14/2. The Government stated recently that it would be in a position in its next report to provide information on mechanisms for consultation with the indigenous and Afro-Ecuadorian peoples, once the Secretariat referred to above had the relevant data and results and also in relation to the 2008 Constitution. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that as part of the procedures undertaken at the Ministry of Mining and Petroleum for obtaining an oil concession, the indigenous communities who would be affected by such a concession are consulted. The Committee notes that, according to the alternative report sent by the CEOSL, serious problems exist in relation to consultation, participation and oil exploitation, and particular emphasis is placed on the serious problems which the Sarayacu community has been facing since 1996 until the present day. Reference is also made to other situations in which serious shortcomings are alleged with regard to consultation, failure to comply with rulings, problems of representation, violence and other problems, with particular reference to "Block 31" in the province of Orellana and "Blocks 18 and 24" in Ecuadorian Amazonia. With regard to Block 24, the Committee notes that, in 2001, the Governing Body adopted a report concerning a representation made by the CEOSL (see GB.282/14/2). In its previous comments the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the application of the recommendations of the Governing Body contained in paragraph 45 of its report. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is the new Secretariat of Peoples, Social Movements and Civic Participation which will be responsible for follow-up action on this matter. The Committee expresses its concern at the time which has elapsed and at the lack of information concerning action taken to comply with the recommendations of the Governing Body. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to resolve the disputes referred to above by means of consultation and participation and requests it to provide information on the cases referred to, particularly regarding action taken to comply with the recommendations of the Governing Body in the case of Block 24.

With reference to its general observation of 2008, the Committee requests the Government to supply information on the measures taken with regard to the following:

- (i) including the requirement of prior consultation in legislation regarding the exploration and exploitation of natural resources;
- (ii) engaging in systematic consultation on the legislative and administrative measures referred to in Article 6 of the Convention; and
- (iii) establishing effective consultation mechanisms that take into account the vision of governments and indigenous and tribal peoples concerning the procedures to be followed.

Part VIII of the report form. Noting: (1) the imminent changes to be made on the basis of the new Constitution; (2) the Government's stated intention to make progress as regards consultation and participation; (3) the alternative report sent by the CEOSL; and (4) the fact that the Secretariat of Peoples, Social Movements and Civic Participation considers that the alternative report is extremely useful, the Committee considers that it would be extremely beneficial for the Government to consult the principal indigenous organizations with a view to the preparation of its next report, as this would enable it to conduct an analysis, with the participation of the peoples concerned, of the situation regarding the application of the Convention and the corresponding proposals for improving its application. The Committee requests the Government to supply information in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guatemala

The Committee notes the communication from the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala for the Defence of Workers' Rights (MSICG), of which the following are members: the General Confederation of Workers of Guatemala (CGTG); the Single Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (CUSG); the National Trade Union and People's Coordinating Body (CNSP); the Committee of Rural Workers of the Altiplano (CCDA); the National Indigenous, Rural Workers and People's Council (CNAICP); the National Front for the Defence of Public Services and Natural Resources (FNL); and the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA). The communication was dated 28 August 2009, and was forwarded to the Government on 19 October 2009. The Committee will examine the communication in 2010, together with any observations of the Government in this regard. The Committee also recalls that in its previous observation it did not examine the Government's report of 2008, as it was received late, and will therefore examine it in the present observation, together with the report of 2009.

Sacatepequez and cement company. State of emergency. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the communication from the MSICG, received on 31 August 2008. The communication referred to the award of a permit in the Sacatepequez case and the implementation of a mining project by force, despite the fact that the proposal for exploitation by mining was totally rejected by the community, with 8,936 votes against and four in favour. It added that a state of emergency was declared with a view to imposing the establishment of the cement company without consultation. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning Government Decree No. 3-2008 introducing the state of prevention. However, it notes that no information has been provided on the special measures adopted, as requested by the Committee, to safeguard the persons, institutions, property, labour, cultures and environment of the peoples concerned, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention.

With regard to the application of Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention in the present case, the Committee notes the indication by the Ministry of Energy and Mining that it is impossible for it to hold consultations in accordance with the Convention due to the absence of specific regulations on this subject. It adds that, in view of the absence of such provisions, the Ministry has to comply with the Mining Act that is currently in force, which establishes a series of requirements that have to be met by the party concerned to obtain a mining permit and, once they have been fulfilled, requires the administration to grant the permit without giving it any option to do otherwise. It further notes that the Ministry urged those interested in obtaining permits to approach the indigenous communities and inform them fully concerning their projects. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, a forum for dialogue was established for the Government and the representatives of the communities concerned with a view to assessing the situation.

The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the right of indigenous peoples to be consulted on each occasion that measures are envisaged which are likely to affect them directly is derived directly from the Convention, irrespective of whether or not consideration has been given to the adoption of specific national legislation. It also wishes to note that the obligation to ensure that indigenous peoples are consulted in accordance with the Convention rests with the Government, and not with private individuals or enterprises. Furthermore, the provisions of the Convention relating to consultations have to be read in conjunction with Article 7, which sets out the right of indigenous peoples to decide their own priorities for the process of development and to participate in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of plans and programmes for development which may affect them directly. In this respect, it recalls that in its 2008 general observation on the Convention, the Committee emphasized that "[d]isregard for such consultation and participation has serious repercussions for the implementation and success of specific development programmes and projects, as they are unlikely to reflect the aspirations and needs of indigenous and tribal peoples". It also emphasizes that Article 7(3) of Convention provides that governments shall ensure that studies are carried out, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of planned development activities, and that Article 15(2) establishes that consultations have to be held with a view to ascertaining whether and to what degree the interests of indigenous peoples would be prejudiced, before undertaking or permitting any programmes for the exploration or exploitation of resources pertaining to their lands. Furthermore, in accordance with Article 7(4), governments shall take measures, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to protect and preserve the environment of the territories they inhabit.

The Committee therefore urges the Government to:

- (i) bring existing legislation, such as the Mining Act, into conformity with Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention;
- (ii) adopt without delay all the necessary measures to hold constructive dialogue in good faith between all the parties concerned in accordance with the requirements set out in Article 6 of the Convention to seek appropriate solutions to the situation in a climate of mutual trust and respect, taking into account the Government's obligation to safeguard the social, cultural and economic integrity of indigenous peoples in accordance with the spirit of the Convention; and
- (iii) immediately suspend the alleged activities while such dialogue is being held and assess, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact of the envisaged activities and the extent to which the interests of indigenous peoples would be prejudiced, in accordance with Articles 7 and 15 of the Convention.

Please provide detailed information on the measures adopted regarding these matters.

Articles 14 and 20. Land and wages. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that the communication referred to above indicated that the rights to lands recognized in the Convention were being violated and mentioned the following cases: Finca Termal Xauch, Finca Sataña Saquimo and Finca Secacnab Guaquitim. It added that indigenous peoples are not recognized as the traditional occupants and that, having been employed on their own lands, their wages were not paid and they were violently removed and their ranches burned. With reference to the June 2007 report of the Governing Body (GB.299/6/1), the Committee recalled that, although the regularization of lands takes time, indigenous peoples should not be adversely affected by the duration of this process and it requested the Government to adopt transitional measures in order to protect the land rights referred to in Article 14 of the Convention and to provide detailed information on the wages due.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a National Policy for Integral Rural Development has been formulated which, according to the report, is intended, among other objectives, to "reform and democratize the system for the use, holding and ownership of lands", "promote laws for the recognition of the rights of possession, ownership and allocation of lands to persons belonging to rural indigenous peoples" and "promote decent work in rural areas in general". However, the Committee notes that information is not provided on the cases referred to previously, in which the allegations concern violations of the rights of indigenous peoples to their lands, nor is information provided on the transitional measures requested by the Committee. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the transitional measures adopted to protect the land rights of indigenous peoples until progress is made in the regularization of lands. It requests the Government to provide information on the situation with regard to the Finca Termal Xauch, Finca Sataña Saquimo and Finca Secacnab Guaquitim and to indicate the measures adopted to ensure that indigenous peoples enjoy the full benefit of the rights set out in the labour legislation, in accordance with Article 20 of the Convention. It invites the Government to provide a copy of the National Policy for Integral Rural Development and to supply information on its implementation in relation to the peoples covered by the Convention. It also refers to the additional comments on this subject contained in the direct request on the Convention.

Articles 2 and 33. Coordinated and systematic action with the participation of indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, multi- and intercultural public policies, formulated by presidential committees with representation of the Maya, Garífuna and Xinca peoples, have been implemented. The Government cites as an example its public policy on living in harmony and eliminating racism and racial discrimination. The Government also refers to a Bill on sacred sites and a preliminary draft of legislation to regularize land occupancy. The Government states that progress is being made, but recognizes that there is still some way to go towards effective implementation, which involves a gradual process of establishing the appropriate bodies and mechanisms. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the creation of the State Inter-Institutional Coordination Unit on Indigenous Issues (CIIE), comprising 29 state institutions involved in indigenous issues, and the establishment in 2005 of the Indigenous Advisory Council (CAI). It also noted that, according to comments by the Council of Mayan Organizations of Guatemala (COMG), sent by the General Confederation of Guatemalan Workers (CGTG), there was still only token participation by indigenous peoples.

The Committee recalls that in the report of June 2007 on the representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Federation of Country and City Workers (FTCC) alleging the non-observance of certain provisions of the Convention (GB.299/6/1), the Governing Body called on the Government to develop coordinated and systematic action, within the meaning of Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention, with the participation of indigenous peoples, when applying its provisions. The Committee also draws the Government's attention to its 2008 general observation, in which it notes that Articles 2 and 33 provide that governments are under an obligation to develop, with the participation of indigenous and tribal peoples, coordinated and systematic action to protect the rights and to guarantee the integrity of these peoples. In this regard, the Convention calls for the establishment of agencies and other appropriate mechanisms to administer programmes, in cooperation with indigenous peoples, including all stages from the planning to the evaluation of the measures proposed in the Convention. While the Committee understands that ensuring full application of the Convention is a continuing process, it notes that the information provided does not appear to suggest that the Government's action is either coordinated or systematic, nor does it show the existence of agencies or mechanisms that would allow indigenous peoples to participate effectively in the development and implementation of such action. The Committee therefore urges the Government, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to take the measures and establish the mechanisms provided for in Articles 2 and 33, which should allow for coordinated and systematic action to implement the Convention, and to provide detailed information in this respect.

Legislation on consultation and participation. For several years, the Committee has been following the issue of the establishment of institutional mechanisms for consultation and participation as envisaged by the Convention. The Committee notes that in its most recent report, the Government refers to a draft General Act on the rights of indigenous peoples of Guatemala (registered as No. 40-47), which was tabled in the Plenary of the Congress on 11 August 2009 and is awaiting the opinion of the Committee on Legislation and Constitutional Matters and the Committee on Indigenous Peoples. Reference is also made to the Bill on the consultation of indigenous peoples (registered as No. 36-84), which was tabled in the Plenary of the Congress on 25 July 2007 and is still awaiting the opinion of the Committee on Legislation and Constitutional Matters and the Committee on the Economy and External Trade. The Committee also understands that there is another Bill on consultation, under No. 40-51, which received a favourable opinion in the Committee on Indigenous Peoples on 27 September 2009. It further notes that the Ministry of Energy and Mining refers to a third legislative initiative on the subject, under No. 34-13. The Committee also notes that, in accordance with section 26 of the Act respecting urban and rural development councils (Decree No. 11-2002), "until the Act is issued governing the consultation of indigenous peoples, the consultations with the Maya, Xinca and Garífuna peoples on development measures promoted by the executive authorities and which directly affect these peoples may be held through their representatives in the development councils".

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the Government, the High-level Committee of the Ministry of Energy and Mines submitted a proposal to amend the Mining Act to the President of the Republic, focusing on “information, participation and consultation of the peoples concerned”. The Committee notes that, according to the Government’s report, this draft has not been transmitted to the Legislative Department, which is consequently unaware of its contents.

The Committee recalls that it has been following these matters since the ratification of the Convention; that the lack of appropriate consultation mechanisms was the subject of a report and recommendations by the Governing Body in response to a representation; that on various occasions it has examined comments by trade unions on serious situations relating to the lack of consultation and the exploitation of natural resources; and that in 2005 it noted the fact that the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsperson had expressed concern about the award by the Government, without prior consultation, of 395 exploration and exploitation permits. The Committee also refers to its 2008 general observation on the application of the Convention, in which it considered it important that governments, with the participation of indigenous and tribal peoples, as a matter of priority, establish appropriate consultation mechanisms with the representative institutions of those peoples. The Committee expresses its concern at the lack of measures to this end. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Bill on consultation would be finalized shortly and that a High-level Committee was working on amendments for the inclusion of prior consultation in the mining legislation. However, regrettably no progress appears to have been made concerning these initiatives. Moreover, legislative initiatives appear to have multiplied in a seemingly uncoordinated manner. While the Committee understands that measures to ensure consultation and participation take time, it emphasizes that the steps required in the short, medium and long term need to be clearly established so that the results required under the Convention can be achieved. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure the establishment of appropriate machinery for consultation and participation as provided for in the Convention, taking into consideration its general observation of 2008, and to provide detailed information in this regard. The Committee reminds the Government that it can request technical assistance from the Office and asks it to provide detailed information on the measures envisaged with a view to adopting and implementing legislation on consultation and participation. Please provide information on the effect given in practice to section 26 of the Act on urban and rural development councils.

Follow-up of a communication from the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA) alleging lack of consultation and participation in relation to the granting of a permit to Montana-Glamis Gold. For several years, the Committee has been following up comments from UNSITRAGUA relating to the permit for mining exploration and exploitation granted to Montana-Glamis in the departments of San Marcos and Izábal, which would extend over an area covering lakes Atitlán and Izábal. The Committee reiterated its invitation to the Government to continue making efforts to hold consultations with the peoples concerned, taking into account the procedure laid down in Article 6 of the Convention, to ascertain whether and to what degree their interests will be prejudiced, as required by Article 15(2) of the Convention. The Committee repeatedly invited the Government to examine whether, with the continuation of exploration and exploitation by Montana-Glamis, it would be possible to carry out the studies provided for in Article 7(3) of the Convention in cooperation with the peoples concerned before the potentially harmful effects of these activities become irreversible. Furthermore, the Committee invited the Government to redouble its efforts to shed light on the incident in which a villager died in the course of a demonstration against the installation of a cylinder for the mine and has requested it to provide detailed information in this respect.

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that no permit of any kind has been granted for Lake Izábal and that discharges of any kind into any body of water have been prohibited. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided new information in this regard. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it observed that the Government did not deny the alleged lack of consultation, but stated that the enterprise had undertaken an environmental impact study that was approved by the relevant government office. Furthermore, the Committee noted the concerns expressed by the Office of the Human Rights Ombudsperson in its May 2005 report on mining activity. The above Office expressly referred to the project to which the UNSITRAGUA objected and expressed its concern regarding the risks of open-cast mining, and particularly the procedure used in this case, i.e. cyanide leaching. According to the above Office, this type of procedure has had damaging effects on the environment and health in other countries and has been prohibited in other regions of the world, and its potential impact would affect: (1) water sources; (2) air quality, through the release of particles; and (3) the useful and fertile life of the soil, permeated by cyanide solutions. The Committee drew the Government’s attention to the fact that these risks should be subject to prior consultation under Article 15(2) of the Convention, as well as the studies provided for in Article 7(3) of the Convention. Consequently, the Committee, noting that the Government’s report reiterates the information provided previously, expresses its concern regarding the lack of progress in the case under examination and urges the Government to suspend the exploitation in question until the studies provided for in Article 7(3) of the Convention and the prior consultation provided for in Article 15(2) of the Convention can be carried out, and to provide detailed information in this regard. Furthermore, the Committee asks the Government to take the measures necessary to shed light on the incident in which a villager died in the course of a demonstration against the installation of a cylinder for the mine and requests it to provide detailed information in this respect.

Follow-up of the 2007 recommendations of the Governing Body. The Committee notes with regret to note that the Government's report does not contain information on the matters raised in its 2007 observation as a follow-up to the recommendations adopted by the Governing Body in its report of June 2007. The report concerned a representation alleging a lack of prior consultation of the peoples concerned regarding the award of a permit for mining exploration for nickel and other minerals, number LEXR-902 of 13 December 2004, to the Izábal Exploration and Mining Corporation SA (EXMIBAL) to begin exploratory mining in the territory of the indigenous Maya Q'eqchi people (GB.299/6/1). The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the action taken to give effect to the 2007 recommendations of the Governing Body (GB.299/6/1).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

India

Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957 (No. 107) (ratification: 1958)

Communication dated 27 August 2009 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). The Committee notes that the ITUC's communication was forwarded to the Government on 3 September 2009 for its comment and that the Government has not yet provided any comments in reply. In their communication, the ITUC draws the Committee's attention to the situation of the Dongria Kondh indigenous community, a group of about 8,000 people living in 90 settlements scattered over and at the base of the Niyamgiri Hills, Lanjigarh, in the State of Orissa. The Dongria Kondh practice shifting cultivation in the hills, and also rely on them as a source of water, wood and traditional plants. The communication also describes the sacred nature of the hills for this indigenous community. According to the ITUC, India's Ministry of Environment and Forests gave environmental clearance on 28 April 2009 for operating a bauxite mine at the top of the Niyamgiri Hills, occupying close to 700 hectares of the traditional lands of the Dongria Kondh. Bauxite from the mine is to be processed at a refinery plant at Lanjigarh, which is at the foot of the hills. The ITUC cites reports attesting to a negative environmental and health impact of the mining project threatening the very basis of the community's existence. The ITUC states that neither the Government of India nor the Government of the State Orissa have ever consulted with the community as regards leasing of the lands or any other aspect of the mining project. While some public hearings regarding the project were held, the ITUC submits that these were inappropriate to ensure that the interests of the Dongria Kondh could be taken into account. The Committee also notes that the Supreme Court of India ordered the establishment of a "Special Purposes Vehicle (SPV)" with the State of Orissa and the companies pursuing the mining project as stakeholders, which is to provide a rehabilitation package involving, inter alia, an obligation by the companies to contribute to the development of the affected tribal areas. However, according to the ITUC, no development plans have been disclosed to the local communities nor has their participation been sought. The ITUC submits that the Government has failed to give effect to Articles 2, 5, 11, 12, 20 and 27 of the Convention.

The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in reply to all the issues raised by the ITUC. While awaiting a reply from the Government, the Committee, given the seriousness of the situation, nevertheless wishes to express concern over the reported adverse impact on the Dongria Kondh of the bauxite mining and processing activities on the lands which they traditionally occupy and which appear to be central to their very existence. The Committee expresses serious concern at the apparent lack of involvement of the tribal communities affected in matters relating to the project which affects them directly. The Committee urges the Government to take the measures necessary to ensure their rights and interests are fully respected and guaranteed, and to indicate the measures it has taken. In this regard, the Committee also requests the Government to report on the implementation of the rehabilitation and development measures ordered by the Supreme Court, and the measures the Government has taken to ensure the involvement of the communities themselves in the design and implementation of such measures.

Articles 2, 5 and 27 of the Convention. Coordinated and systematic action. The Committee notes from the Government's report that a National Tribal Policy is still under consideration, but not yet finalized. The Government indicates that the policy would aim at strengthening the legal protection and empowerment of the tribal communities, raising levels of human development, and at encouraging and protecting tribal traditions. The policy would also focus on particularly vulnerable tribal groups. The Prime Minister of India, when addressing the Chief Ministers' Conference on the Implementation of the Forest Rights Act, 2006, on 4 November 2009, welcomed the efforts made by the Ministry of Tribal Affairs towards achieving consensus on the National Tribal Policy. The Committee considers that the elaboration and implementation of such a policy would indeed provide an important opportunity to strengthen the Government's action to protect the rights and interests of India's tribal population in accordance with international standards. The Committee takes this opportunity to encourage the Government to draw on and consider ratifying the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), which revises Convention No. 107, which is also encouraged by the Governing Body of the ILO and would be consistent with the recognition of the need for new approaches in dealing with tribal affairs as highlighted by the Prime Minister on 4 November 2009. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made in adopting the National Tribal Policy, including information on how the collaboration with and consultation of tribal groups and their representatives in the process of developing the policy is sought. Noting that the Government in its report, and through a request made to the ILO in May 2009, expressed interest in sharing experiences with other countries regarding strategies for the improvement of the situation of tribal groups, including through workshops and training programmes to be organized in cooperation with the ILO, the Committee looks forward to receiving information on the holding of such activities and their outcomes.

Articles 11–13. Land rights. Legislative developments. The Committee notes the enactment of the Scheduled Tribes and Other Traditional Forest Dwellers (Recognition of Forest Rights) Act, 2006 (“Forest Rights Act, 2006”). The Act recognizes individual and collective rights of tribal and other forest dwellers with regard to land they have traditionally occupied or used, as defined in section 3 of the Act. The Gram Sabha (assembly of all men and women in the village above 18 years of age) is the authority mandated to receive rights claims, to consolidate and verify them and to prepare a map delineating the area of each claim that it recommends to be accepted. A subdivisional-level committee set up by the state Government is responsible for examining resolutions passed by the Gram Sabha and for preparing a record of forest rights for final decision by a district-level committee. In addition, a state-level monitoring committee is to be established to oversee the process, which reports to the ministry of the central Government dealing with tribal affairs. The functions and procedures of these various committees are laid down in the Scheduled Tribes and Other Forest Dwellers (Recognition of Forest Rights) Rules, 2007. The Committee notes that special provision is made to ensure representation of women, scheduled tribes and other tribal groups in the Gram Sabha and the committees at the different levels.

The Committee notes that under the Forest Rights Act no member of a forest-dwelling tribe or other traditional forest dweller shall be evicted until the recognition and verification procedure is complete (section 4(5)). Once the process of recognition and vesting of rights is complete, the Act allows under certain conditions the relocation of forest dwellers from their land to create protected areas for wildlife conservation. Among the specified preconditions for such relocation, there must be no other reasonable options to avoid irreversible damage or threat to the existence of a species in its habitat. Further, a resettlement package providing for a secure livelihood must be prepared, communicated to rights holders, and receive the free and informed consent of the Gram Sabha concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Scheduled Tribes and Other Traditional Forest Dwellers (Recognition of Forest Rights) Act, 2006, including information on the number of claims processed and title deeds issued, as well as any grievances brought against decisions made under the Act and their outcomes. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate whether any relocation has taken place and, in such cases, provide information indicating that resettlement has complied with Article 12(2) and (3) of the Convention. In addition, the Committee asks the Government to indicate whether any further legislative initiatives are envisaged to ensure that the rights of the tribal population to the land they have traditionally occupied are identified and protected to give effect to Article 11 of the Convention.

The Sardar Sarovar Dam Project. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to provide information regarding the number of persons displaced by the Sardar Sarovar Dam Project and their resettlement and compensation. In its report, the Government states that a total of 244 villages will be affected by the dam project either by total or partial submergence or otherwise, which are home to 46,606 families comprised of 127,446 persons (based on the 1991 Census). Recalling its comments over many years on this project, the Committee notes that the number of affected persons, a majority of them being belonging to the tribal population, has continued to increase. The Government, in its report, reiterates the requirements for resettlement and rehabilitation that had been established by the Narmada Water Disputes Tribunal in 1979. However, the Government states that the three states involved in the project introduced more favourable conditions since then and provides detailed information regarding the amount of land allocated and other assistance provided. According to the Government’s report, as of 31 July 2008, all 32,434 affected families at this date had been resettled. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated information on the number of persons belonging to the tribal population displaced from the land they traditionally occupy as a result of the Sardar Sarovar Dam Project and the measures taken to guarantee their resettlement and compensation in conformity with Articles 12(2) and (3) of the Convention.

Parts III–VI of the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on measures taken in the areas of education and training, including vocational training, and employment and social security. It also notes that, according to the comments made by the Centre of Indian Trade Unions (CITU) in their communication dated 25 August 2009, the members of the tribal population are not able to benefit from the job reservations made for them in government employment and state-owned enterprises due to the lack of education and training made available to them. The CITU suggests that the Government provide more detailed statistics on the employment situation of tribal population. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated information on the various measures taken in the areas of education, training and employment and other areas covered in Parts III–VI of the Convention to the benefit of the tribal population, including statistical information of the participation of men and women belonging to tribal groups in education and employment.

Iraq

Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957 (No. 107) (ratification: 1986)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that all parts of the population are considered to be of the same Iraqi origin. The Government also states that Iraq pursues comprehensive national policies covering the entire population, taking into account local particularities, in accordance with the Constitution. The Committee notes that article 43 of the Constitution reads as follows: "The State shall seek the advancement of the Iraqi clans and tribes and shall attend to their affairs in a manner that is consistent with religion and the law and upholds its noble human values in a way that contributes to the development of society. The State shall prohibit the tribal traditions that are in contradiction with human rights." The Committee requests the Government to identify the tribal groups which correspond to the criteria set out in Article 1(a) of the Convention, and to provide information on the measures taken to promote their advancement, in accordance with the Constitution and the provisions of the Convention.

Mexico

The Committee notes the communication from the Trade Union Delegation of Radio Educación, section XI of the National Union of Education Workers (SNTE), dated 25 September 2009, which was sent to the Government on 5 October 2009. It also notes the communication from the Independent Union of Daily Workers (SITRAJOR), dated 7 September 2009, which was also sent to the Government on 5 October 2009. Owing to their late arrival, the Committee will examine both communications in 2010, together with the observations of the Government in this respect. With reference to its previous observation, the Committee also recalls that it was unable to examine the Government's report fully owing to its late arrival and will therefore examine it in its direct request, together with the most recent report.

Community of San Andrés de Cohamiata. Follow-up to the Governing Body report of June 1998 (GB.272/7/2). The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any information in reply to its previous observation in which it examined the case of the Community of San Andrés de Cohamiata on the basis of a communication received from the SNTE, dated 7 November 2007. In this communication, the SNTE alleged that the Government of Mexico had not complied with the recommendations made by the Governing Body in a 1998 report on the representation submitted by the abovementioned trade union years earlier (GB.272/7/2).

The Committee recalls that the subject of the representation was the claim made by the Union of Huichol Indigenous Communities of Jalisco, through union delegation D-III-57 of the SNTE, for the return to the Huichol community of San Andrés de Cohamiata of 22,000 hectares awarded by the Federal Government to agrarian groups in the 1960s. The land claimed included Tierra Blanca, El Saucito, in the State of Nayarit (which includes the villages of El Arrayán, Mojaras, Corpos, Tonalisco, Saucito, Barbechito and Campatehuala) and Bancos de San Hipólito, in the State of Durango.

The Committee also recalls that it re-examined the case of the community of San Andrés de Cohamiata in its direct request of 2001 and its observation of 2006, in connection with the receipt of communications from the SNTE which referred in particular to the situation of the community of Tierra Blanca and the community of Bancos de San Hipólito or Cohamiata.

In its observation of 2008, the Committee noted that the Government, according to the 2007 communication from the SNTE, was still failing to take the necessary action to rectify the situations which had given rise to the representation and that the territorial situation of the community of Bancos had seriously deteriorated since there was a real threat that what the SNTE called the "legalized dispossession" of the lands of this community might become definitive. The SNTE indicated in its communication that the agrarian tribunals had issued a ruling validating the Presidential Decision of 1981 which had been contested by the Huichol community. This Decision awarded the Bancos lands to the agrarian community of San Lucas de Jalpa. The SNTE also indicated that, on 10 August 2007, the community filed a claim for the protection of constitutional rights (amparo) against the ruling of the Higher Agrarian Tribunal and this is the final judicial procedure available in national law.

The SNTE alleged that, as things stand at present, the agrarian legislation does not provide for adequate procedures as referred to under Article 14(3) of the Convention, to recognize land traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples and that, on the contrary, the courts only recognize the validity of official documents. The union pointed out that, although there was substantial proof that the Huicholes had lived on the lands from time immemorial – as shown by the existence of titles granted by the Spanish Crown, as well as topographical, historical and anthropological studies – this was insufficient because there were no procedures in national law to establish a link between the facts as presented and international standards.

The Committee expressed its concern because the situation which had given rise to the representation remains unchanged. It observed that the key issue at stake in this case is the way in which national law and the Convention regulate land rights and remarked that, under Conventions Nos 107 and 169, "traditional occupation" is in itself a source of rights. However, it noted that, although the Government maintains that the procedures of the agrarian tribunals give expression to Article 14, the SNTE asserted that these procedures failed to take account of the evidence of traditional occupation because they gave precedence to the formal validity of the titles granted to San Lucas de Jalpa over the concept of traditional occupation. The Committee also pointed out that “the Convention does currently apply with respect to the consequences of the decisions taken prior to its entry into force” (GB.276/16/3, paragraph 36). In the light of the above, the Committee asked the Government to do its utmost to guarantee the application of Article 14 in settling this case, including by means of negotiation, and to provide information in this respect. It also asked the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which national law gives expression to Article 14 of the Convention and especially the concept of traditional occupation as a source of ownership rights.

The Committee understands that since the communication from the SNTE in 2007, various judicial rulings were issued on the case in question, culminating in amparo ruling No. 46/2009 of 17 June 2009 from the Administrative Collegial Tribunal and the ruling of 11 August 2009 issued by the Higher Agrarian Tribunal in compliance with the final judgement of the Collegial Tribunal: (i) declaring the partial nullity of the Presidential Decision of 28 July 1981, solely with respect to the disputed area of land of 10,720 hectares, which was issued in the proceedings for the recognition of, and granting of title to, communal property in favour of San Lucas de Jalpa, in order to make the village of Bancos de Calitique (or Cohamiata) a party to the proceedings; (ii) declaring the nullity of the proceedings which gave rise to the negative report from the Agrarian Advisory Board dated 20 June 1985 rejecting the award of land to the village of Bancos de Calitique; and (iii) ordering the Single Agrarian Tribunal of Durango to institute the claim of Bancos de Calitique dated 8 March 1968 as proceedings for the recognition of, and granting of title to, communal property. It also adds that the Single Agrarian Tribunal must also take into consideration in both proceedings that none of the claimant agrarian groups holds titles to land.

While noting these developments, the Committee is bound to express its concern at the fact that, although the proceedings for the recognition of, and granting of title to, communal property are being reintroduced, the obstacle remains that, according to the allegations, there is no adequate procedure which enables land claims to be settled in conformity with the Convention. The Committee again reminds the Government that, with regard to the application of the Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957 (No. 107), it emphasized the fact that traditional occupation confers the right to land under the terms of the Convention, regardless of whether that right has been recognized or not. Similarly, Article 14 of Convention No. 169 provides that traditional occupation is in itself a source of rights. This means that if claims to land demonstrating traditional occupation cannot be settled, the land rights of indigenous peoples may be violated.

In particular, this implies that the procedures referred to by Article 14(3), of Convention No. 169 can only be considered “adequate” if they enable indigenous peoples to assert traditional occupation as the source of their land rights and thereby settle their claims. In this respect, the Committee wishes to emphasize once again that “the Convention does currently apply with respect to the consequences of the decisions taken prior to its entry into force” (GB.276/16/3, paragraph 36) and that, in the case in question, tackling the consequences which are still felt at the present time is precisely what is necessary.

However, the Committee recalls that one of the allegations made by the SNTE is basically that judicial rulings under national law took no account of the proof of traditional occupation by the community of Bancos, such as titles granted by the Spanish Crown, and topographical, historical and anthropological studies submitted by the community, and precedence was given to the formal validity of the titles granted to the agrarian community of San Lucas de Jalpa, whereas it was precisely those titles which were contested for having been granted without taking account of the traditional occupation by the community of Bancos.

The Committee also expresses its deep concern at the fact that the claims in question have remained before the agrarian tribunals for decades without any solution being reached. In addition to the above the Committee considers that a criterion for determining procedures are “adequate”, in accordance with the terms of Article 14(3), of the Convention, is that they enable land claims to be settled within a reasonable period of time. The Committee also recalls that, according to the terms of Article 14(2), of the Convention, Governments have the obligation to take the necessary steps to identify the lands which the peoples concerned traditionally occupy, and to guarantee effective protection of their rights of ownership and possession. In this respect, the Committee also wishes to emphasize that Article 12 of the Convention states that the peoples concerned must be able to take legal proceedings for the effective protection of their rights or, in other words, legal procedures must exist which enable the effective protection of their rights.

Moreover, the Committee cannot overemphasize the special importance for the cultures and spiritual values of the peoples concerned of their relationship with the lands or territories which they occupy or otherwise use and the obligation of governments to respect that relationship. The Committee considers that the recognition and effective protection of the rights of indigenous peoples to the lands that they traditionally occupy in accordance with Article 14 of the Convention is of vital importance for safeguarding the integrity of these peoples and, consequently, for respecting the other rights established in the Convention.

Emphasizing the Government’s obligation to recognize the rights of the peoples concerned to the lands that they traditionally occupy and to which they have traditionally had access in accordance with Article 14 of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps without delay to ensure full compliance in practice with this provision in resolving the case of the community of Bancos and, in particular, to ensure that account is taken of traditional occupation as a source of land rights, including through negotiations. Recalling that the claim submitted by the community of San Andrés de Cohamiata also covers the reincorporation of areas other than Bancos, the Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that there are adequate procedures in accordance with the terms described above to settle the land claims which are still pending. More generally, the Committee requests the Government to contemplate the possibility, in consultation with the indigenous peoples, of modifying existing procedures relating to land claims in order to solve the problems relating to the full application of Article 14 of the Convention such as those which have arisen in the case of San Andrés de Cohamiata. The Committee also requests the Government to supply detailed information on the measures taken in this respect and also with regard to compliance with the recommendations contained in paragraph 45(a) and paragraph 45(b)(i), (ii) and (iii) of Governing Body report GB.272/7/2.

Articles 2, 3 and 7. Forced sterilization. Follow-up to the Governing Body report of March 2004 (GB.289/17/3). The Committee refers to its observations of 2006 and 2007 containing its follow-up to the Governing Body report of March 2004 (GB.289/17/3) and with regard to point (g) of paragraph 139 of the report (forced sterilization), including on the basis of a communication received from SITRAJOR.

The Committee recalls that the reports of the Commission for the Defence of Human Rights (CODDEHUM-GUERRERO) and the National Human Rights Commission sent by SITRAJOR refer to complaints, investigations, observations and recommendations regarding cases in which members of public health institutions, both state and federal, were alleged to have performed vasectomies on indigenous men and fitted indigenous women with intra-uterine devices as a method of birth control, without their free, informed consent, in the States of Guerrero and Oaxaca. The Committee also noted the report's reference to a specific local study alleging that the health system for indigenous communities is precarious, and referring to the inhumane and discriminatory treatment of indigenous persons in health-care centres, and to the practice of forced contraception of women by tying their fallopian tubes without their consent.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the health institutions of the Government of Mexico have no record of judicial or administrative complaints concerning alleged violations of the sexual and reproductive rights of the indigenous population. The Government states that, in the context of the "Opportunities" programme of the Mexican Social Security Institute (IMSS), guidance is given on family planning and the result of such activities was that more than 12,000 persons came to the medical centres to take permanent contraceptive measures, their freedom of choice being fully respected. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the steps taken to guarantee that the decision to take permanent contraceptive measures is indeed a free choice and to ensure that the persons concerned are fully aware of the permanent nature of the contraceptive measures concerned. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the extent to which indigenous peoples participate and are consulted with regard to reproductive health and family planning programmes and policies. The Committee requests the Government to carry out thorough investigations into the allegations of forced sterilization and supply information on the results of the investigations and, if applicable, the penalties imposed and the measures taken to compensate the victims. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken to promote community health services for indigenous peoples with their full participation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Norway

The Committee notes the Government's report due on 1 September 2008 which was, however, only received by the ILO on 15 December 2008, after the Committee's last session. The Committee recalls the communication received from the Norwegian Sami Parliament dated 28 August 2008, and notes the additional communication from the same body dated 29 April 2009. The Committee also notes the Government's reply dated 20 October 2009, to the Sami Parliament's comments of 29 April 2009. The Committee recalls that the Sami Parliament, according to the wishes expressed by the Government upon ratification, plays a direct role in the dialogue associated with supervision of the application of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government's report provides an update with regard to the application of various parts of the Convention, while the comments of the Sami Parliament focus on a number of specific aspects. The Committee will highlight certain positive developments and also address some specific questions in relation to which difficulties have arisen.

Follow-up to the Committee's previous comments. In its 2003 observation, the Committee examined information provided by the Government and the Sami Parliament regarding the preparation and submission to the National Parliament (Storting) of draft legislation to regulate legal relationships and administration of land and natural resources in the county of Finnmark (draft "Finnmark Act"). On that occasion the Committee urged the Government and the Sami Parliament to renew discussions on the disposition of land rights in the Finnmark, in the spirit of dialogue and consultation embodied in Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention. The Committee notes with satisfaction that following the Committee's comments, the Storting's Standing Committee on Justice held formal consultations with the Sami Parliament and the Finnmark County Council to discuss the draft legislation in question and received several rounds of written comments from these bodies. The final draft legislation prepared by the Standing Committee on Justice was unanimously endorsed by the Sami Parliament and a large majority of the Finnmark County Council and adopted by the Storting in June 2005 as the Act relating to the legal relations and management of land and natural resources in the county of Finnmark (the "Finnmark Act").

The Committee notes that with the entry into force of the Finnmark Act, state ownership of some 95 per cent of the land in Finnmark was transferred to a newly created body, the Finnmark Estate, which is managed by a board composed of six members (three members elected by the Finnmark County Council and three by the Sami Parliament). Section 5 of the Act acknowledges that through prolonged use of land and water areas, the Sami have collectively and individually acquired rights to land in Finnmark, and clarifies that the Act does not interfere with collective and individual rights acquired by the Sami and other people. In order to establish the scope and content of the rights held by Sami and other people living in Finnmark "on the basis of prescription or immemorial usage or on some other basis", the Act establishes a process for the investigation and recognition of existing rights to land, and, in this regard, provides for the establishment of a commission ("Finnmark Commission") and a special court (the "Uncultivated Land Tribunal for Finnmark"). The Committee notes that the Finnmark Commission was appointed by Royal Decree of 14 March 2008, while the Uncultivated Land Tribunal for Finnmark had not yet been established at the time of reporting.

The Committee notes that under section 29 of the Finnmark Act, the Commission "shall investigate rights of use and ownership to the land" taken over by the Finnmark Estate "on the basis of current national law". In this connection, the Committee also notes that section 3 clarifies that "the Act shall apply within the limits that follow from ILO Convention No. 169" and that it shall be applied "in compliance with the provisions of international law concerning indigenous peoples and minorities". The Committee trusts that the steps necessary will be taken to ensure that the process of identifying and recognizing rights of use and ownership under the Finnmark Act will be consistent with Article 14(1), and also Article 8 of the Convention which requires due regard to customs and customary law of the indigenous peoples concerned in applying national laws and regulations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on further developments and progress made regarding the survey and recognition of existing rights in Finnmark county, including information on the work of the Finnmark Commission and the Uncultivated Land Tribunal for Finnmark.

The Committee further notes that the Finnmark Act provides that the Sami Parliament may issue guidelines for assessing the effect of changes in the use of uncultivated land on Sami culture, reindeer husbandry, use of uncultivated areas, commercial activity and social life (section 4). The guidelines are to be approved by the competent Ministry. The Act requires the state, county and municipal authorities to assess the significance of such changes in the use of uncultivated land, taking into account the guidelines of the Sami Parliament. The Committee looks forward to receiving information on the implementation of the Finnmark Act as regards the management of the use of uncultivated land in Finnmark county and on how the rights and interests of the Sami have been taken into account in this process.

Article 6. Consultation. Both the Government's report and the Sami Parliament's comments highlight that following the experience of putting in place the Finnmark Act, the need for an agreed framework for consultations became evident. The Committee notes with interest that agreement between the Government and the Sami Parliament on such a framework was reached with the establishment of the "Procedures for consultations between the state authorities and the Sami Parliament of 11 May 2005" (PCSSP). The PCSSP recognize the right of the Sami to be consulted on matters that affect them directly, set out the objective and scope of the consultation procedures in terms of subject matter and geographical area, as well as general principles and modalities regarding consultations. The Committee notes that the PCSSP are a framework agreement, which means that the state authorities and the Sami Parliament can conclude special consultation agreements concerning specific matters, as may be necessary.

With regard to the implementation of the PCSSP, the Committee notes that the Government and the Sami Parliament, in some instances, express differing views on whether or not the agreed consultation procedure has been respected. These differences appear to be related principally to the issue of whether a consultation has been initiated early enough, to uncertainties as to whether a consultation process on a specific matter has actually commenced or concluded and to whether certain announcements made by state authorities during a consultation process amount to a lack of good faith. For instance, the Sami Parliament considers that the Government prematurely announced its position on how to deal with Sami rights in the new Mining Act in March 2008, before consultations had been concluded. The Committee welcomes the PCSSP as a significant step towards ensuring that consultations, in accordance with the Convention, take place with regard to all matters affecting the Sami directly, and looks forward to receiving continuing information on its implementation and on any special agreements with regard to specific matters. Welcoming the apparently increasing number of consultation processes, the Committee encourages the Government and the Sami Parliament to consider ways and means to address and settle disagreements regarding the PCSSP's application, particularly with regard to the abovementioned differences, in a timely fashion. Noting that under the PCSSP, the state authorities are to inform the Sami Parliament "as early as possible" about the "commencement of relevant matters which directly affect the Sami", and emphasizing that consultations should be initiated as early as possible to ensure that indigenous peoples get a real opportunity to exert influence on the process and the final outcome, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the measures necessary to ensure that these requirements are applied fully and systematically.

Articles 14 and 15. Rights to land in traditional Sami areas south of Finnmark county. The Committee notes that the Sami Rights Committee was reappointed on 1 June 2001 to report on issues relating to the Sami's right to, disposition and use of land and water in traditional Sami areas other than those covered by the Finnmark Act. The Government indicates that the main report of the Sami Rights Committee was presented in December 2006, and was circulated broadly for comments which were to be received by 15 February 2009. The Committee notes that the Sami Parliament expresses concerns that the process of identifying rights takes a long time and that interventions by governmental authorities in areas where rights have not been identified was "a constantly recurring problem". The Committee welcomes the ongoing efforts with regard to the land rights of the Sami in their traditional areas south of Finnmark county. The Committee trusts that Articles 14 and 15 will be duly taken into account in this process and that consultation and participation in accordance with Articles 6 and 7 will take place. While acknowledging that the identification of rights under Article 14 is a process which may require considerable time, the Committee also considers that transitional measures should be adopted during the course of the process, where necessary, in order to protect the land rights of the indigenous peoples concerned, while awaiting the outcome of the process.

The Mining Act. The Committee notes that the Mining Act was amended in 2005, in conjunction with the enactment of the Finnmark Act. The amendments, inter alia, provided that "significant emphasis" shall be placed on the due consideration of Sami interests in Finnmark when applications for licensed prospecting are being considered and that bodies representing Sami interests are to be heard with regard to such applications. The amendments also provide that in case of mines on the land owned by the Finnmark Estate, the King may determine a higher "landowner's fee". The Committee further notes that a new Mining Act was enacted on 19 June 2009, which will enter into force on 1 January 2010. The new Mining Act carries over the provisions concerning Sami interests in Finnmark, but fails to address these issues in other traditional Sami areas. The Sami Parliament describes the consultation process beginning in 2007 regarding a new Mining Act as difficult, and lacking real dialogue and good faith on the part of the Government. The Government states that the consultations had been conducted in accordance with the PCSSP; however, full agreement could not be reached and the consultation had therefore been concluded without full agreement being reached. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the follow-up to the 2006 report of the Sami Rights Committee will establish the basis for legal amendments regarding Sami rights outside Finnmark, including possible amendments to the Mining Act.

The Committee notes that the issue of benefit sharing was one of the issues on which the Government and the Sami Parliament disagreed. The Government considered that a benefit-sharing mechanism, such as the one provided for under the Finnmark Act, where the funds emanating from a higher landowner's fee is received and managed by the Finnmark Estate as the landowner, was "appropriate to fulfil the obligations under Article 15(2) of the Convention." The Sami Parliament considered that benefit sharing should not be limited to the landowner; in other words, indigenous peoples who are not owners of the land concerned but have traditionally used it should also participate in the benefits of exploration and exploitation of resources pertaining to the lands.

The Committee observes that Article 15(2), second sentence, reads as follows: "The peoples concerned shall wherever possible participate in the benefits of such activities, and shall receive fair compensation for any damages which they may sustain as a result of such activities." As stated in the first sentence of Article 15(2) this applies in "cases where the State retains the ownership of mineral or sub-surface resources or rights to other resources pertaining to lands". The term "lands" in Article 15(2) is to be understood as defined in Article 13(2) as including "the concept of territories, which covers the total environment of the areas which the peoples concerned occupy or otherwise use". On this basis, the Committee confirms that the Convention does not limit the participation in benefits and the receipt of compensation under Article 15(2) to indigenous peoples who are landowners under the national legislation. The Committee, however, considers that there is no single model for benefit sharing as envisaged under Article 15(2) and that appropriate systems have to be established on a case by case basis, taking into account the circumstance of the particular situation of the indigenous peoples concerned.

In the present case, the Committee notes that agreement between the Sami Parliament and the State had been reached on 95 per cent of previously state-held land to be owned by the Finnmark Estate in the management of which Sami representatives participate on an equal footing with other representatives. The Committee also notes that the Finnmark Estate receives the funds emanating from the landowner's fee and is competent to decide on how these funds are to be used. Based on the information before it, the Committee is not in a position to assess how this mechanism has functioned in practice with a view to allowing the Sami to participate in the benefits of mining activities in Finnmark. The Committee asks the Government to send information in this regard. In any event, the Committee recommends that the functioning of the mechanisms intended to ensure that the Sami, as the indigenous people concerned, participate in the benefits of mining activities as envisaged in Article 15(2) be reviewed jointly by the State authorities and the bodies representing Sami interests, from time to time. More generally, the Committee considers it of importance that the national mining legislation is amended as soon as possible to ensure the effective application of Articles 14 and 15 in traditional Sami areas south of Finnmark county, and urges the Government and the Sami Parliament to renew discussions on this matter. It calls on the Government to ensure that until such legislation has been enacted, the Sami rights in the areas concerned are safeguarded by other appropriate means.

Pakistan

Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the development of the Federally Administered Tribal Areas (FATA) is pursued under the FATA Sustainable Development Plan 2006–15 (SDP) which covers a wide range of sectors, including education, health, infrastructure, rural development, agriculture, industry and mining, and skills development. The Committee also notes the list of projects prepared by the FATA secretariat contained in the Government's report. However, the Committee notes with concern the Government's indications that the recent conflict in FATA have severely impacted on the implementation of the SDP. In this context, the Committee also notes that the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF), in a communication of 21 September 2008, stressed the need for further action by the Government to promote the welfare of the tribal population which continues to be affected by poverty and unemployment. Recalling that under Article 2 of the Convention, the Government has the primary responsibility for developing coordinated and systematic action for the protection of the tribal population concerned, including action to promote the social, economic and cultural development of the population concerned and to raise their standard of living, the Committee urges the Government, in cooperation with its international partners, to take the necessary steps to address the consequences of the conflict in the tribal areas, including through appropriate recovery and rehabilitation measures, and to ensure the full implementation of the SDP. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken and the results achieved in this regard. While noting the Government's indication that the administration of the Provincially Administered Tribal Areas (PATA) of the North–West Frontier Province (NWFP) and of Baluchistan is under the direct responsibility of these two provinces, the Committee reiterates its request for information on the measures taken to apply the Convention to the population concerned in these areas.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Panama

Chan 75 hydroelectric project. The Committee notes that, according to the observations on the situation of the Charco la Pava community presented to the Human Rights Council by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people (A/HRC/12/34/Add.5, 7 September 2009), in January 2008, construction work began on the Chan 75 hydroelectric dam in the district of Changuinola (Bocas del Toro). It noted that this project would entail the flooding of the lands of various communities of the Ngöbe indigenous people, including Charco la Pava, Valle del Rey, Guayabal and Changuinola Arriba, with a population of approximately 1,000 persons, and that another 4,000 indigenous persons would also be affected. It also notes that, according to the Special Rapporteur (ibid.), the start of the construction work was accompanied by protests by members of the communities and these protests were suppressed by the national police. It further notes the allegations in the report concerning the permanent presence of officers of the national police who have been assigned the task of ensuring the further progress of the work.

The Committee understands that the communities affected were not consulted in relation to the decision to implement the hydroelectric project. The Committee also notes that the current situation arose from the failure to recognize the rights of the abovementioned indigenous communities relating to their traditional lands and the consequent consideration of those lands as state land. The Committee further notes the precautionary measures adopted by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights in June 2009, requesting the State of Panama to suspend the construction work in order to avoid irreparable damage to the ownership rights of the Ngöbe indigenous people.

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government to the effect that on 10 August 2009 a high-level round table was established to conduct a dialogue on the issues affecting the indigenous communities as a consequence of the construction of the Chan 75 hydroelectric dam. The Committee notes that the round table comprised the Deputy Minister for Governance and Justice, the Minister for External Relations, the Minister for Social Development, the Administrator-General of the National Environment Authority, the Governor of Bocas del Toro province, the mayor of the district of Changuinola, the National Assembly deputy for the area, two representatives of each of the communities affected by the project with their legal adviser, and two representatives of the company responsible for the project (AES) with their legal advisor.

The Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 11 of the Convention, governments have the obligation to recognize the right of ownership of indigenous populations over the lands traditionally occupied by them. The Committee also wishes to emphasize that consideration must be given, in defining the rights of these populations, to their customary laws in accordance with Article 7. Furthermore, the Committee draws the Government's attention to Article 5, which states that, in applying the provisions of the Convention, governments must seek the collaboration of the indigenous populations and their representatives with regard to the formulation and implementation of the relevant measures.

The Committee notes that in his statement of 25 November 2009, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people expressed his “extreme concern about the forced eviction and the destruction of their housing suffered on 20 November 2009 by the Naso communities of San San and San San Druy, in Changuinola, Bocas del Toro province”. According to the statement, “about 150 riot policemen evacuated with tear gas bombs more than 200 indigenous Naso living in the communities of San San and San San Druy. After they were taken out of the area, employees of the Ganadera Bocas company entered the area with machinery and proceeded to demolish indigenous people houses” (UN Press Release, 25 November 2009).

The Committee expresses its serious concern in the face of these events and recalls that, according to the principle set out in Article 12 of the Convention, the groups affected cannot be removed from their territories without their free consent, subject to certain specific exceptions.

The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps, in collaboration with the representatives of the indigenous communities affected by the Chan 75 project, to recognize the rights of these communities over the lands traditionally occupied by them. It urges the Government to seek agreed solutions between all the parties concerned to remedy the current situation and provide information on all progress achieved in this respect, including information on any agreements reached by the abovementioned round table for dialogue. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that measures are adopted to protect the institutions, persons, property and labour of the communities affected until a solution of the issue is reached.

Land rights. The Committee notes the draft Act No. 411 of 2008, which establishes a special procedure for awarding collective ownership of lands of indigenous peoples and prescribes other provisions. It notes that this draft Act is before the Committee for Indigenous Affairs of the National Assembly of Deputies. The Committee understands that the draft Act will encompass draft Act No. 17 concerning the rights of the Emberá and Wounaan peoples and will enable examination of the issue of the recognition of the Bri-bri territory and the creation of the comarca (indigenous region) of Pueblo Naso. The Committee requests the Government to send a copy of draft Act No. 411 of 2008 and indicate to what extent the indigenous peoples were consulted with regard to the preparation of this legislative text. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on any progress made with regard to the adoption of the draft Act.

The Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169). The Committee notes the Government’s indication to the effect that it has examined the possibility of ratifying Convention No. 169, although no major progress has been achieved owing to the complexity of the matters covered by the Convention and the discrepancies which exist in relation to national law and practice. The Committee recalls that, in its general observation of 1992 on the Convention, it emphasized the fact that Convention No. 169 is more oriented than Convention No. 107 towards respect for and protection of the cultures, ways of life and traditional institutions of indigenous and tribal peoples. It therefore encouraged governments which had ratified Convention No. 107 to give serious consideration to ratifying Convention No. 169. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to consider ratifying Convention No. 169 and encourages it to seek technical assistance from the Office in order to address any difficulties which might arise in connection with ratification. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made on this matter.

Socio-economic situation of indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that according to the fourth National Report on the Situation of Women in Panama (2002–07), in indigenous areas, 98.5 per cent of the population lives in poverty and 89.7 per cent lives in extreme poverty. The Committee notes with interest the numerous programmes implemented by the Government in the areas of health, education, vocational training and support for indigenous enterprise development with a view to eliminating extreme poverty and improving the social, economic and cultural situation of the indigenous peoples. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the implementation of these programmes and their impact, also indicating the manner in which the participation of indigenous peoples and their representatives in the formulation and implementation of programmes is ensured.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Paraguay

The Committee recalls that in 2006 the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards urged the Government to take measures to enable it to send full information on the questions raised by the Committee of Experts on a regular basis. In 2008 the Committee noted with regret that the Government’s report had not been received and therefore repeated its previous comments. Noting that the Government’s report was received in September 2009, the Committee hopes that the Government will continue its efforts to provide regular reports.

Article 20 of the Convention. Recruitment and conditions of employment. The Committee refers to its previous comments concerning discrimination relating to wages and treatment based on the indigenous origin of workers, particularly those working on ranches within the country and for Mennonite communities, which in certain cases constitute situations of forced labour. The Committee notes the conclusions of the report on the Mission to Paraguay by the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues in 2009 that a system of servitude and forced labour exists in the Chaco region. It notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Justice and Labour has established, under Resolution No. 230 of 2009, a tripartite committee, the Committee on Fundamental Rights at Work and the Prevention of Forced Labour, which has been entrusted with the task of drawing up an action plan on fundamental rights at work and the prevention of forced labour involving the participation of the Paraguayan Indigenous Institute (INDI). Furthermore, it notes that in September 2008, the Regional Labour Directorate opened an office in the town of Teniente Irala Fernández (Chaco region). It also notes that the eradication of forced labour is one of the priorities of the 2009 Decent Work Country Programme and that the Decent Work Country Programme includes the promotion of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the implementation of the above action plan and its impact on the eradication of forced labour involving indigenous peoples, including information on the extent to which the indigenous peoples concerned were consulted and participated in the development of that plan. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of the inspections carried out by the Office of the Regional Labour Directorate for the Chaco region, the action taken and penalties imposed, and on any other initiatives undertaken by that Office with the aim of eradicating forced labour of, and discrimination against, indigenous peoples, particularly those working on ranches or in Mennonite communities. The Committee also refers to its comments under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29).

Articles 2, 6, and 33. Coordinated and systematic action and consultation. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the INDI can rely on the collaboration of a series of indigenous organizations and the support of several coordinating bodies, such as the Coordinating Committee for the Self-Determination of Indigenous Peoples (CAPI). In this regard, the Committee notes that in April 2009, the CAPI drew up, with the participation of 15 indigenous organizations, a series of "proposals for public policies on indigenous peoples". It also notes the creation under Decree No. 1945 of the National Programme on Indigenous Peoples (PRONAPI) coordinated by the INDI, under which, according to the report, consultations will be held with indigenous peoples so that they can define their own needs. The Committee understands that based on the outcome of the consultations held in the context of the PRONAPI and on the CAPI initiative, an indigenous policy could be defined and a legislative reform carried out which includes the creation of a State body on indigenous affairs with the participation of indigenous peoples with regard to both its definition and composition. Noting the various organizations which collaborate with the INDI and its different coordinating bodies, the Committee emphasizes the importance of institutionalizing the participation of the peoples covered by the Convention in devising, implementing and overseeing the public policies which affect them, in accordance with Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the consultations held in the context of the PRONAPI and on the CAPI initiative and on any resulting initiatives relating to legislative reform, including with regard to the institutionalization of indigenous participation. Noting that the Executive Authority's Human Rights Network, created in June 2009, is competent to draw up a schedule of proposed measures, such as laws incorporating the international instruments ratified by the State, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the initiatives undertaken by the Network in relation to the Convention and on the measures taken to ensure coordination with the INDI and the participation of the peoples concerned.

Article 14. Rights to land. The Committee notes that, according to the report on the Mission to Paraguay by the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, 40 per cent of the indigenous communities in Paraguay still have no legal title to their lands. The Committee also notes that in July 2009, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights filed an application with the Inter-American Court under Case No. 12420 concerning the land rights of the indigenous community Xákmok Kásek of the Enxet-Lengua People whose land claim has been pending since 1990. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the legislation in force with regard to land claims by indigenous communities and the difficulties encountered in practice due to their geographical dispersion and creation of new communities. The Committee also notes the indigenous land regularization project, which is based on an agreement signed between the INDI and the World Bank; implementation of which began in 2008. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures, including measures of a procedural nature, to make rapid progress, in consultation with the peoples concerned, with regard to the regularization of indigenous lands and requests it to provide information on the following:

- (i) the progress made in the context of the INDI/World Bank project in that regard;
- (ii) the initiatives undertaken by the Inter-Institutional Committee responsible for the implementation of the measures necessary to carry out international rulings (CICSI);
- (iii) the particulars and the percentage of indigenous communities whose lands have still not been regularized.

The Committee also refers to its previous comments and requests the Government to provide information on the application of Acts Nos 1372/88 and 43/89 establishing a procedure for the regularization of settlements of indigenous communities, in particular with regard to resolving cases in which the land occupied is insufficient given the number of indigenous claims, and on the establishment of adequate procedures within the national legal system, in accordance with Article 14(3).

Article 15. Natural resources. With regard to the exploitation of forestry resources, the Committee notes that under Resolution No. 1324 of 2008, the INDI suspended indefinitely the application of Resolution No. 139/07 on environmental and forestry management in relation to lands assigned to indigenous communities until adequate consultations with indigenous peoples determine whether the Resolution concerned will be amended or repealed. The Committee notes that Resolution No. 139/07 was adopted with the aim of “curbing the obvious plundering taking place in several communities” and that it was suspended because “in many circles there is a confusion between the authorization to implement management plans and the plundering of forest resources”. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held for the purpose of amending Resolution No. 139/07 in relation to lands assigned to indigenous communities and their outcome, and on the measures taken to protect the rights of indigenous peoples to the natural resources existing on their lands, including their rights to participate in the use, management and conservation of those resources. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the penalties imposed by the Office of the Environmental Prosecutor at the request of the INDI in cases of ecological offences, and on applications submitted to the INDI by exploration companies seeking information on the existence of indigenous communities in certain areas of the country.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Peru

The Committee takes note of the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2009 and the conclusions of the Conference Committee. It also notes the observations of 23 July 2009 by the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), which were sent to the Government on 31 August 2009. The CGTP's observations were prepared with input from the Inter-Ethnic Association for the Development of the Peruvian Rainforest (AIDSEP), the National Coordinating Committee for Communities Affected by Mining (CONACAMI), the National Agrarian Confederation (CNA), the Peasant Farmers' Confederation of Peru (CCP), and non-governmental organizations belonging to the Indigenous Peoples Working Group of the National Coordinating Committee on Human Rights. The Committee further recalls that in its previous observation it did not address the whole of the Government's report because of its late arrival. It will accordingly examine it as appropriate in this observation, together with the latest report.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee indicated that the Committee has raised concerns in comments it has been making for years about persistent problems in applying the Convention in a number of areas, and went on to express grave concern at the incidents in Bagua and urge all parties to refrain from violence. It observed that the present situation in the country was linked to the adoption of legislative decrees relating to the exploitation of natural resources on lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples, and urged the Government immediately to establish a dialogue with indigenous peoples' representative institutions in a climate of mutual trust and respect. It called on the Government to establish mechanisms for dialogue as required by the Convention in order to ensure systematic and effective consultation and participation. It further urged the Government to remove the ambiguities in the legislation as to the identification of the peoples covered by it, and to take the necessary steps to bring national law and practice into line with the Convention. In this connection, the Conference Committee asked the Government to elaborate a plan of action in consultation with the representative institutions of the indigenous peoples.

The Committee shares the grave concerns of the Conference Committee about the incidents in Bagua in June 2009 and considers that they are related to the adoption, without consultation or participation, of decrees affecting the rights of peoples covered by the Convention to their lands and natural resources. The Committee notes that both the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people and the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination have likewise expressed such concern at the situation of the indigenous peoples in Peru (see respectively, A/HRC/12/34/Add.8, 18 August 2009, and CERD/C/PER/CO/14-17, 31 August 2009). The Committee recalls that the Conference Committee called on the Government to make further efforts to guarantee indigenous peoples' human rights and fundamental freedoms without discrimination in accordance with its obligations under the Convention. The Committee is of the view that a prompt and impartial inquiry into the events in Bagua is essential to ensuring a climate of mutual trust and respect between the parties, a prerequisite for establishing genuine dialogue in the search for agreed solutions, as the Convention requires. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary steps to have the incidents of June 2009 in Bagua effectively and impartially investigated, and to provide specific information on the matter.

Article 1 of the Convention. Peoples covered by the Convention. The Committee notes that in its report the Government states, as it did during the discussion in the Conference Committee, that a draft Framework Act on Indigenous or Original Peoples of Peru has been prepared, which sets out a definition of indigenous or original peoples, with a view to removing ambiguities from the national legislation regarding identification of the peoples covered. The Committee notes that section 3 of the draft contains such a definition, whereas section 2 states that indigenous or original peoples of Peru include “the so-called peasant communities and native communities; as well as indigenous people in a situation of isolation and a situation of initial contact; it likewise applies to those who identify themselves as descendants of the ancestral cultures settled in Peru's coastal, mountain and rainforest areas”. The Committee notes that, although the definition in section 3 of the draft reproduces the objective elements of the Convention's definition, it makes no reference, unlike section 2, to the fundamental criterion of self-identification. The Committee also notes that the objective elements of the definition in the abovementioned draft include the criterion that these peoples “are in possession of an area of land”, which does not appear in the Convention. The Committee would point out in this connection that Article 13 of the Convention stresses the special importance for these peoples of the cultures and spiritual values of “their relationship with the lands or territories, or both as applicable, which they occupy or otherwise use”. The Committee also draws the Government’s attention to the fact that Article 14(1) of the Convention, and in particular the expression “the lands which they traditionally occupy”, has to be read in conjunction with Article 14(3) on land claims, in that the Convention likewise covers situations in which indigenous and tribal peoples have recently lost occupation of their lands or have been recently expelled from them. The Committee accordingly urges the Government, in consultation with the indigenous peoples, to align the definition in the draft Framework Law on Indigenous or Original Peoples of Peru with the Convention. Please also supply information on the manner in which effective consultation and participation is ensured with indigenous peoples in the preparation of the abovementioned draft. Furthermore, the Committee again asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that all those covered by Article 1 of the Convention are likewise covered by all provisions of the new legislation and enjoy the rights set forth therein on an equal footing.

Articles 2 and 6. Coordinated and systematic action and consultation. Plan of action. With regard to the Conference Committee’s request for a plan of action to be drawn up in consultation with the representative institutions of indigenous peoples, the Committee notes the Government’s statement that proposed guidelines have been submitted for the development of a plan of action aimed at responding to the main observations put forward by the ILO’s supervisory bodies. Although the report affirms that the plan of action must be formulated in collaboration with the representatives of indigenous peoples, the Committee notes that there is no information on the manner in which participation of the indigenous peoples in this process is to be established, and that a “meeting with the representatives of the indigenous organizations” is envisaged with regard to the implementation phase of the abovementioned plan.

The Committee also notes that several bodies have been set up whose purpose, according to the Government’s report, is to establish dialogue with the indigenous peoples of the Amazonian and Andean areas. The Committee notes that, in March 2009, a Bureau for Ongoing Dialogue between the State and the Indigenous Peoples of the Amazonian Area of Peru was established and that, according to section 2 of Supreme Decree No. 002-2009-MIMBES establishing the Bureau, it “may” (podrá) include representatives of indigenous peoples. It also notes the Multisectoral Committee to deal with indigenous problems in the Amazonian area (Supreme Decree No. 031-2009-PCM of 19 May 2009), and observes that the minutes of the opening and first ordinary session of the Committee make no mention of indigenous representatives. It further notes the Bureau for Comprehensive Development of Andean Peoples (RS 133-2009-PCM, of 24 June 2009), the Bureau for Dialogue on the Comprehensive Development of Andean Peoples in Extreme Poverty (RS 135-2009-PCM of 26 June 2009) and the National Coordinating Group for the Development of Amazonian Peoples, which is responsible for formulating a comprehensive sustainable development plan for these peoples (Supreme Resolution No. 117-2009-PCM of 26 June 2009). With regard to the latter body, the Committee notes that it set up four working group to work on the composition of the Commission of Inquiry into the Bagua incidents, the revision of the legislative decrees, mechanisms for consultation and a national development plan for the Amazon region. The Committee likewise notes the concern expressed by the People’s Ombudsperson about the status of the dialogue process established within the abovementioned Group.

The Committee has insufficient information to assess the level of participation ensured for indigenous peoples in the various bodies mentioned above. It nonetheless considers that the information supplied appears to indicate that, at least in some cases, the participation of indigenous peoples through their legitimate representatives and dialogue between the parties is not effective. The Committee also expresses concern that the proliferation of bodies with mandates that sometimes overlap may hamper the development of a coordinated and systematic response to the problems of protecting and ensuring the rights of indigenous peoples established in the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to ensure full and effective participation and consultation of the indigenous peoples through their representative institutions in the preparation of the abovementioned plan of action, in accordance with Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention, so as to address in a coordinated and systematic manner outstanding problems concerning the protection of the rights of the peoples covered by the Convention, and to align law and practice with the Convention. It also asks the Government to provide information on this matter and on the work of the various bodies mentioned above, indicating how the participation of the peoples concerned and the coordination of the activities of these bodies are ensured, as well as coordination between the work of these bodies and the preparation of the plan of action. Please provide a copy of the plan of action as soon as it is finalized.

Articles 2 and 33. INDEPA. The Committee refers to its previous observation, in which it noted the CGTP’s assertion that the National Institute of Andean, Amazonian and Afro-Peruvian Peoples (INDEPA) lacked real authority. The Committee notes from the CGTP’s 2009 communication that although the administrative autonomy of INDEPA has been restored, indigenous participation in its Governing Council has not been re-established and no concerted policies have been developed on any issues affecting the indigenous peoples. The CGTP further asserts that there is no forum for cooperation on such policies. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that Ministerial Resolution No. 277-2009-MIMDES establishes a sectoral committee responsible for drafting new “regulations on the organization and functions of INDEPA". The Committee notes that the sectoral committee is composed of the Vice-Minister for Social Development of the Ministry for Women and Social Development (MIMDES), the Executive President of INDEPA and the Director-General of the General Office of Planning and Budget of MIMDES, and that it has the authority to invite specialists and representatives from various institutions in the public and the private sectors. The Committee notes that the abovementioned Resolution contains no express reference to the participation of indigenous peoples. It further notes that the reform of INDEPA is likewise envisaged in the guiding framework for development of the abovementioned plan of action. The Committee reminds the Government that indigenous peoples must participate in designing mechanisms for dialogue and recalls the concerns raised previously about coordination between the various bodies and activities. The Committee urges the Government to ensure effective participation by the representative institutions of indigenous peoples in the design and implementation of mechanisms for dialogue and the other mechanisms needed for the coordinated and systematic administration of programmes affecting indigenous peoples, including the reform of INDEPA. It also asks the Government to ensure that such mechanisms have the necessary resources to perform their functions properly and have independence and real influence in the decision-making process. Please provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Articles 6 and 17. Consultation and legislation. In its previous observation, noting that Legislative Decrees Nos 1015 and 1073 were adopted without consultation, the Committee expressed concern that communications are still being received alleging a lack of prior consultation on the measures provided for in Articles 6 and 17(2) of the Convention, and urged the Government to take steps without further delay, with the participation of the indigenous peoples, to devise appropriate mechanisms for participation and consultation. The Committee notes that in its communication of 2009 the CGTP states that no mechanisms have been established for prior consultation, so the indigenous peoples are unable to have a say in specific decisions that affect them. The Committee notes that Legislative Decrees Nos 1015 and 1073 setting conditions for disposing of communal land were repealed by Act No. 29261 of September 2008, and that Legislative Decrees Nos 1090 and 1064 approving, respectively, the Forests and Wild Fauna Act and the Legal Regime for the Exploitation of Lands for Agrarian Use were repealed by Act No. 29382 of June 2009. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the working groups set up within the National Coordinating Group for the Development of Amazonian Peoples have responsibility for revising the legislative decrees and dealing with the issue of prior consultation. The Committee understands, however, that the issue of consultation is likewise addressed in the draft Framework Act on Indigenous or Original Peoples of Peru. It also takes note of a Bill on consultation, No. 3370/2008-DP of 6 July 2009, submitted to Congress by the People's Ombudsperson. The Committee stresses the need for indigenous and tribal peoples to participate and be consulted before the adoption of legislative or administrative measures likely to affect them directly, including in the drafting of provisions on consultation processes, as well as the need for provisions on consultation to reflect among other things the elements set forth in Articles 6, 7, 15 and 17(2), of the Convention. The Committee also refers the Government to its previous comments on the need for a coordinated and systematic approach. It urges the Government to establish, with the participation of the peoples concerned, the mechanisms for participation and consultation required by the Convention. It also asks it to send information on the manner in which it ensures that the peoples concerned participate in and are consulted about the formulation of provisions governing consultation. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee reminds the Government that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's request for technical assistance and encourages it to pursue this course.

Articles 2, 6, 7, 15 and 33. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that the communications received referred to many serious situations of conflict connected with a dramatic increase in the exploitation of natural resources on lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples, without participation or consultation. The Committee notes that, in its communication of 2009, the CGTP refers to a statement by the People's Ombudsperson to the effect that there has been an increase in social and environmental conflicts in the country and that they are concentrated in indigenous areas and are related to access and control of natural resources. The CGTP asserts that the Peruvian State persists with a "top-down" approach, imposing its projects in the Amazonian and Andean areas. It asserts that development policies lack sufficient guarantees to protect the environment for the indigenous peoples and that the Ministry of Environment lacks the authority to intervene in energy and mining policies. It refers to a ruling by the Constitutional Court (file No. 03343-2007-PA-TC), in proceedings brought by the regional government of San Martín against various petroleum enterprises and the Ministry of Energy and Mines regarding hydrocarbon projects being carried out in a regional conservation area. In its ruling, taking account of the provisions of the Convention, the Court reaffirmed the right of indigenous peoples to be consulted before the start-up of any project that might affect them, and also referred to article 2(19) of the Constitution which requires the State to protect ethnic and cultural plurality in the Nation (paragraph 28). The CGTP furthermore refers to a number of "emblematic instances" of exploration and exploitation of natural resources affecting indigenous peoples, such as the Cacataibo people, who live in voluntary isolation, the Awajun and Wampí peoples and the communities of Chumbivilcas province.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Peruvian State construes consultation as "processes whereby points of view are exchanged" and has held a series of socialization workshops. It also notes that the Government refers to Decree No. 012-2008-MEM (regulations on citizens' participation in hydrocarbon activities), according to which the purpose of consultation is "to reach better understanding of the scope of the project and its benefits", which is much narrower than what the Convention provides.

The Committee wishes to point out that Article 6 of the Convention provides that the consultations shall be undertaken with the objective of achieving agreement or consent to the proposed measures. Although Article 6 of the Convention does not require consensus in the process of prior consultation, it does require, as the Committee underlined in its general observation of 2008 on the Convention, the form and content of consultation procedures and mechanisms to allow the full expression of the viewpoints of the peoples concerned, “so that they may be able to affect the outcome and a consensus could be achieved”. The Committee wishes to underscore that the Convention requires a genuine dialogue to be established between the parties concerned to facilitate the quest for agreed solutions, and emphasizes that, if these requirements are met, consultation can play a decisive role in the prevention and settlement of disputes. The Committee further points out that meetings solely for the purpose of information or socialization do not meet the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee considers that Supreme Decree No. 020-2008-EM regulating citizens’ participation in the mining subsector has similar limitations. Noting that the Decree envisages the possibility of citizens’ participation after a mining licence has been granted, the Committee is of the view that it does not meet the requirements of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to bring national law and practice into line with Articles 2, 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention, taking into account the right of the peoples covered by the Convention to decide on their own priorities and participate in national and regional development plans and programmes. Recalling that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government’s request for technical assistance, the Committee encourages the Government to pursue that course. It also asks it to:

- (i) suspend the exploration and exploitation of natural resources which are affecting the peoples covered by the Convention until such time as the participation and consultation of the peoples concerned is ensured through their representative institutions in a climate of full respect and trust, in accordance with Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention;
- (ii) provide further information on the measures taken, in cooperation with the indigenous peoples, to protect and preserve the environment of the territories they inhabit, in accordance with Article 7(4) of the Convention, including information on coordination between the Energy and Mining Investment Supervisory Body (OSINERGMIN) of the Ministry of Energy and Mines and the Environmental Evaluation and Control Agency (OEFA) of the Ministry of Environment; and
- (iii) provide a copy of Supreme Decree No. 002-2009-MINAM of 26 January 2009, regulating the participation and consultation of citizens in environmental matters.

With regard to the benefits of extraction activities, the Committee notes the information supplied by the Government concerning a system of mining royalties and a mining tax. It also notes that in its communication of 2009, the CGTP indicates that this system allows the benefits to be distributed within the state apparatus with no benefits going directly to the communities affected. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken to ensure that the peoples concerned participate in the benefits accruing from the exploitation of natural resources in their lands and receive fair compensation for any damage they may sustain as a result of such activities.

Article 14. Legislative Decree No. 994. The Committee notes the observations made by the CGTP in its communication of 2009 concerning Legislative Decree No. 994 “which promotes private investment in irrigation projects to broaden the agricultural horizon”. The Committee notes in particular that the abovementioned Decree lays down a special regime for promoting private investment in irrigation projects on unused land (tierras eriazas) with agricultural potential belonging to the State. The Committee notes that section 3 of the Decree establishes as state property all tierras eriazas with agricultural potential other than such lands for which a title for private or communal ownership is entered in the public records. The Committee notes with concern that this provision does not establish the rights of indigenous peoples over traditional lands where there is no official title of ownership. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with the Convention, traditional occupation confers a right to the land regardless of whether or not such right has been recognized and that, consequently, Article 14 of the Convention protects not only the lands over which the peoples concerned already have title of ownership but also the lands they traditionally occupy. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to determine the lands that the peoples concerned traditionally occupy and to guarantee effective protection of their rights of ownership and possession, including through effective access to appropriate procedures for settling their land claims. Please provide information on the measures adopted to this end.

Article 31. Educational measures. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed its concern at a number of statements which could give rise to prejudice or misconceptions regarding indigenous peoples. In this regard, the Committee expresses concern at the CGTP’s statement in its communication of 2009 that a discriminatory and aggressive attitude towards indigenous peoples on the part of the public authority continues to be noted. The Committee urges the Government to take educational measures as a matter of urgency in all sectors of the national community so as to eliminate any prejudice there may be about the peoples covered by the Convention, in accordance with Article 31.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Education and means of communication. Indigenous Languages Act. The Committee notes with interest the Indigenous Languages Act, which came into force on the date of its publication in the Official Gazette No. 38981 of 28 July 2008. The purpose of the Act is to regulate, promote and reinforce the use, revival, preservation, defence and development of indigenous languages, a means of communication and cultural expression to which indigenous peoples and communities are entitled, the National Institute for Indigenous Languages being set up as the implementing body. It notes in particular that under section 17 of the Act, in order to be president or vice-president of the National Institute for Indigenous Languages, it is necessary to: (1) be indigenous; (2) speak the language of the indigenous people concerned; (3) be trained and have professional and academic experience in the use, research, development and dissemination of indigenous languages; and (4) be nominated by an indigenous people, community or organization. The Committee notes that, under section 28 of the Act, indigenous peoples and communities have the right to participate in the formulation, planning and implementation of public policies relating to indigenous languages and that other sections of the Act also establish the right to participation. Noting that the final transitional provision of the Act establishes that the Institute will begin to operate no later than one year following the entry into force of the Act, the Committee requests the Government to supply information on the functioning of the Institute and on the application of the Act in practice, particularly the manner in which section 17 is applied and the manner in which participation provided for in the other sections of the Act is undertaken.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 107 (Angola, India, Malawi, Pakistan, Panama); Convention No. 169 (Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela).

Working Conditions (Hotels and Restaurants) Convention, 1991 (No. 172) (ratification: 1994)

Article 4 of the Convention. Working conditions in the hotel and catering sector. The Committee notes the comments of the Federal Chamber of Labour according to which recent studies show that employment in the hotel and catering sector is marked by a high degree of instability, low employment duration, high risk of unemployment and a high level of stress due to difficult working conditions and atypical forms of working time (weekend work, night work, seasonal work). Based on the findings of three recent studies carried out by the Vienna Chamber of Labour, the Federal Chamber of Labour maintains that working conditions in the hotel and catering sector have worsened in recent years and points at the increasing number of recorded accidents and the larger number of disability pensions awarded on account of mental illness. Furthermore, the Federal Chamber of Labour (BAK) draws attention to the feminization trend in the sector (approximately two-thirds of the persons employed in the sector are women) and also the increasing proportion of migrants, now amounting to almost one third of all employees in the hotel and catering trade. In this latter connection, the Committee notes that according to a study conducted by the SORA Institute for Social Research and Analysis in 2003, one out of four immigrants working in the hotel and restaurant sector complained about being discriminated against in areas such as pay, workload, appreciation of job performance, and assignment of unpleasant tasks. The Committee requests the Government to submit any views it may wish to express in response to the observations of the Federal Chamber of Labour.

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1979)

Article 5, paragraph 3, of the Convention. Settlement of disputes. The Committee notes the observations made by the Commission of Local Authority Employers (KT) concerning the industrial action taken by the Union of Health Professionals (TEHY) during the collective negotiations held in autumn 2007. According to these observations, the TEHY attempted to force a 25 per cent pay increase by undertaking a mass resignation that directly and critically threatened the life and health of patients. TEHY action allegedly affected emergency units and operations in complete disregard of ministerial directives and established labour practices. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reaction to the observations of KT, especially in light of Article 5(3) of the Convention which requires the settlement of collective labour disputes through independent and impartial procedures such as mediation, conciliation and voluntary arbitration with a view to making it unnecessary for the organizations of nursing personnel to have recourse to industrial action which may be disruptive of sensitive health-care operations.

France

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1984)

Article 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Participation of nursing personnel in the planning of nursing services. The Committee has been commenting for the last 15 years on the method for appointing members of the nursing care committees and has been requesting information on the participation of representative organizations in these consultative bodies. The Government in successive reports has not supplied any explanations on this point, nor has it informed of any follow-up discussions concerning the modification of the method of appointing members of the nursing care committees which were to be held with trade union organizations under the terms of the protocol agreement signed in March 2000 by the Government and representative organizations of nursing personnel.

The Committee recalls once again that Article 5(1) of the Convention does not specify the role to be played by the representatives of nursing personnel in promoting participative and consultative practices within health care establishments, nor does it indicate any particular method of appointing representatives of the personnel. However, reference may be made to Paragraphs 19(2) and 20 of the Nursing Personnel Recommendation, 1977 (No. 157), according to which the representatives of nursing personnel should be understood within the meaning of Article 3 of the Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135), which sets out specific procedures for the appointment of representatives.

The Committee requests the Government once again to indicate whether the possible modification of the method of appointing members of nursing care committees by drawing lots is still under consideration and to report on any further developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Guatemala

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1995)

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Formulation and implementation of a policy for nursing services and nursing personnel. The Committee notes the adoption of Decree No. 07-2007 of 20 February 2007 establishing an Act for the provision of nursing care and also its implementing regulations of 11 January 2008 (Acuerdo Gubernativo No. 56-2008), which establish the National Council for Nursing Care and the Nursing Services Development Unit. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Public Health is responsible for managing the implementation of policies in the area of health and for coordinating the various public, private and community bodies. It further notes the Government's statement that efforts have been made to establish national policies for nursing services. These efforts have resulted in a national workplan drawn up in cooperation with the National Nursing School of Guatemala, the Guatemalan Association of Professional Nurses and also the chief nurses of public hospitals and health centres. The Committee notes that this plan – the “Integrated nursing care development plan 2008–12” – deals with the reinforcement of nursing care management capacity, professional competence, coordination of services, training and communication, and human resources.

The Committee understands that there are substantial disparities in the country regarding the distribution of human resources in the area of health care between rural and urban areas since 70 per cent of nursing personnel work exclusively in hospitals, leaving rural health centres with serious shortages of nursing staff. It notes that in 2005 a programme for the promotion of basic nursing care was launched by the National Nursing School of Cobán in five municipalities in the north of Guatemala to enable nursing personnel in rural districts to be trained by the most qualified personnel from urban areas.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that, according to a recent study by the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO), Guatemala is experiencing a shortage of nursing personnel since the ratio is only 3.6 per 10,000 inhabitants. It also notes, according to a study published in 2004, that 34 per cent of qualified nursing personnel have emigrated to the United States and auxiliary nursing staff represent 82 per cent of the workforce in this area. The Committee understands that the main causes of migration of qualified nursing personnel abroad are low wages, the economic situation, the low standard of living, family needs, poor career prospects and the lack of public policies in this area. It wishes to refer to the Code of practice currently being drafted by the WHO concerning the international recruitment of health personnel, which encourages member States to conclude bilateral and multilateral agreements to promote cooperation and coordination relating to migrant health personnel in the recruitment process, in order to optimize the advantages and reduce the potentially negative impact of the international recruitment of health personnel, and which also calls for measures to conserve and maintain a qualified national workforce of health personnel by improving their economic and social situation, living and working conditions, possibilities of employment and career prospects. While noting the efforts made by the Government and also the need to collect up to date information in this area, the Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on (i) the application of the “Integrated nursing care development plan 2008–12” and the “Programme for the promotion of nursing care 2005” and also the results achieved, and (ii) any developments in the situation of nursing personnel and, if applicable, information on any additional measures taken or contemplated to contain the phenomenon of migration of qualified nursing personnel abroad.

Article 2, paragraphs 2(b) and 3. Pay for nursing personnel. Consultation with employers' and workers' organizations. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any specific reply to the comments made by the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA) dated 25 August 2003 and sent to the Government on 8 October 2003. Specifically, UNSITRAGUA indicated that: (i) overtime worked by nursing personnel was not paid and there was no adequate procedure for the compensation of hours worked in the event of changes in terms of duty; and (ii) there was no collective agreement concerning conditions of work which applied specifically to nursing personnel, the nursing trade unions not having been consulted. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention, each Member must take the necessary measures to provide nursing personnel with employment and working conditions, including career prospects and remuneration, which are likely to attract persons to the profession and retain them in it. In addition, the policy concerning nursing services and nursing personnel must be formulated in consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the matters raised by UNSITRAGUA.

Article 5. Participation of nursing personnel in the planning of nursing services and consultation of personnel on decisions concerning them. The Committee recalls that UNSITRAGUA also indicated that nursing personnel did not participate in the planning of nursing services, decisions on this subject being taken unilaterally by the directors and heads of assistance centres. While recalling that Article 5 of the Convention requires the adoption of measures to promote the participation of nursing personnel in the planning of nursing services and consultation with such personnel on decisions concerning them, the Committee requests the Government to send its comments in reply to the allegations made by UNSITRAGUA.

Article 7. Occupational safety and health. With regard to the conditions of employment and protection of nursing personnel, the Committee recalls that UNSITRAGUA emphasized that there was no health and safety policy for nursing personnel, particularly as regards the risk of contamination by HIV/AIDS owing to the lack of suitable protective equipment in national hospitals, thus obliging nursing personnel to work under dangerous conditions. In this regard, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the "Joint ILO/WHO guidelines on health services and HIV/AIDS", published in 2005, with a view to helping health services to strengthen their capacity for providing workers with a healthy and decent working environment, this being the most effective means of reducing the transmission of HIV and improving the provision of care for patients. The Committee would also like to refer to the discussion held at the June 2009 session of the International Labour Conference on "HIV/AIDS and the world of work", with a view to the adoption of an international labour Recommendation, in particular paragraph 37 of the draft conclusions (see ILC, 98th Session, 2009, Report IV(2), page 310), which states that public health systems should be strengthened, where appropriate, in order to ensure greater access to prevention, treatment, care and support and to reduce the additional strain on public services, particularly on health workers, caused by HIV/AIDS. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any new measure taken or contemplated in order to improve the protection of nursing personnel against infectious diseases, including HIV/AIDS.

Guinea

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 to 7 of the Convention. Employment and conditions of work and life of nursing personnel. The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government in its last report remains fragmentary, and estimates that, in the interest of maintaining a meaningful dialogue on the application of the Convention in law and practice, the Government should make a genuine effort to collect and transmit all relevant information, including legislative texts or other official documents, dealing with health care policy and nursing services. For instance, despite repeated requests in the last ten years, the Committee has still not received a copy of Decree No. 93/043/PRG/SGG of 26 March 1993, establishing general regimes for hospitals; nor has it received copies of the statutory texts and collective agreements applicable to nursing staff, particularly as regards remuneration and hours of work. Moreover, the Government has been referring since 1992 to ongoing negotiations on two sets of general regulations, one for medical and paramedical staff and another for nurses, without any indication as to the time frame for the possible conclusion of those negotiations. In addition, the Committee notes with concern the Government's last statement to the effect that there is no specific policy concerning nursing services and that accordingly there are no particular texts or provisions addressing the special nature of nursing work.

Under the circumstances, the Committee asks the Government to prepare a detailed and fully documented report on the effect given to the main requirements of the Convention, particularly as regards: (i) the formulation of a national policy on nursing services designed to improve the quality standards of public health care but also to create a stimulating environment for the exercise of the nursing profession (Article 2(1)); (ii) measures relating to nursing education and training as may be taken in consultation with the National Nurses Association (ANIGUI) (Article 2(2)(a) and Article 3); (iii) the institutional framework and practical modalities of the process of consultation with employers' and workers' organizations in matters of nursing policy (Article 2(3) and Article 5(1)); (iv) sufficient protection for nursing personnel, in light of the constraints and hazards inherent in the profession, especially in terms of hours of work and rest periods, paid absence and social security benefits (Article 6); and (v) measures to improve the occupational safety and health conditions of health workers, including any specific initiative aimed at protecting nursing personnel from HIV/AIDS infection (Article 7).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1992)

Article 2 of the Convention. Policy concerning nursing services and personnel. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not communicated a report on the application of the Convention for more than ten years. It once again requests the Government to provide detailed information concerning the application of all the provisions of the Convention, especially in the light of the new Labour Code (Act No. 106 of 4 August 2004) and of Act No. 6 of 9 January 2005 on the protection of citizens' health.

Netherlands

Home Work Convention, 1996 (No. 177) (ratification: 2002)

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. National policy on home work and equality of treatment between homeworkers and other wage earners. The Committee notes the observations of the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) which essentially reiterate views expressed in earlier communications. According to the FNV, the position of homeworkers is not as positive as the Government attempts to describe it in its report; whereas higher-educated workers performing telework may well be protected by labour contracts, workers performing low-skilled jobs very often do not enjoy such protection as they are engaged on a task contract and are remunerated on piece-rate or performance-based. The FNV adds that even when a labour contract exists, many homeworkers do not fulfil the criteria for health, disability and unemployment insurance (i.e. work at least on two days per week, contract at least for 30 days and earnings representing at least 40 per cent of the minimum wage), while many collective agreements specifically exclude homeworkers from their scope. The FNV considers that the number of teleworkers and homeworkers is increasing, and that given such developments in the labour market a specific policy on telework and homework is required, especially for the protection of low-skilled homeworkers.

In addition, the Committee notes the comments of the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) according to which the Government has not produced any solid arguments or facts to support its conclusion that the situation of homeworkers does not call for further measures. The CNV accordingly considers that more information is necessary.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments made by the Trade Union Federation for Middle and Higher Level Employees (MHP) which basically draw attention to the problem of enforcement of homeworkers' rights. Recalling that the Government openly admits that labour inspection services do not actively inspect homeworkers because they are difficult to identify, the MHP maintains that labour law must be so structured as to provide effective protection to homeworkers, who in most cases are not assertive, do not want to draw attention to themselves by starting procedures against their employer, and have become too disengaged from the regular labour market. The MHP also indicates that the situation should be kept under review since the increase in flexible working goes hand in hand with new forms of homeworking, and in this connection the MHP regrets that the Government's report does not elaborate on the second evaluation of the Flexibility and Security Act which has shown that many people do not dare to take action to assert their rights. The Committee requests the Government to submit any views it may wish to express in response to the observations of the FNV, the CNV and the MHP.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

II. Observations concerning the submission to the competent authorities of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference (article 19 of the Constitution)

Angola

The Committee notes the communications received in June and October 2009 in which the Government indicates that it is experiencing difficulties in complying with the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities. The Committee hopes that the Government will redouble its efforts to be in a position to provide information as soon as possible on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions of the Conference (2003–07). The Committee recalls that information also needs to be provided on the submission to the National Assembly of the Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Recommendation, 1992 (No. 180) (79th Session, 1992), the 1995 Protocol to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (82nd Session, 1995) and the Job Creation on Small and Medium-sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189) (86th Session, 1998).

Antigua and Barbuda

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its previous observations. It asks the Government to supply the relevant information concerning the submission to the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda of the instruments adopted by the Conference during the 12 sessions held between 1996 and 2007 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Azerbaijan

The Committee refers to its previous observations and requests the Government to provide information with regard to the submission to the Mili Mejlis (National Assembly) of Recommendation No. 180 (79th Session), and the instruments adopted at the 83rd, 84th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions of the Conference. Please also indicate the date of submission of Recommendation No. 195 to the National Assembly.

Bahamas

The Committee recalls that the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, was registered on 11 February 2008. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the submission to Parliament of the remaining 16 instruments adopted by the Conference between 1997 and 2007 (85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Bahrain

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative at the Conference Committee in June 2009 and a written communication received in August 2009. The Government indicated that Conventions envisaged for ratification were usually submitted to the Council of Ministers for examination and for the formulation of proposals, which would then be forwarded to the National Assembly. The Government also indicated that the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), and the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), have been submitted to the competent authorities. The Committee refers to its previous comments and recalls that under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, the competent national authority shall normally be the legislature, in the case of Bahrain, the National Assembly. The Committee therefore reiterates its hope that the Government will be soon in a position to provide the relevant information indicating that all the instruments adopted by the Conference at the seven sessions held between 2000 and 2007, were submitted to the National Assembly.

Bangladesh

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Bangladesh at the Conference Committee in June 2009, indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference had passed through the various stages of the process for submission. The Ministry of Labour and Employment is in contact with different governmental agencies to expedite the process of submission and to report to the relevant Parliamentary Standing Committee. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the remaining instruments adopted at the 77th Session (Convention No. 170 and Recommendation No. 177), the 79th Session (Convention No. 173 and Recommendation No. 180), the 84th Session (Convention No. 179 and Recommendations Nos 185, 186 and 187), and the 85th Session (Recommendation No. 188), as well as all the instruments adopted at the 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions.

Belize

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the Government's communication received in September 2009 indicating that the recently appointed Labour Advisory Board will review all unratified Conventions and make recommendations to the Ministry of Labour for onward submission to the National Assembly. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 40 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 84th (Maritime) Session (October 1996), and during the other 17 sessions held between 1990 and 2007.

Bolivia

In its previous observations, the Committee noted that the international labour Conventions adopted by the Conference from 1990 to 2003 were submitted to the National Congress on 26 April 2005. The Committee asks the Government to report on the decision taken by the National Congress with regard to the Conventions submitted. It also requests the Government to indicate the representative organizations of employers and workers to which the information forwarded to the Director-General concerning the submission of the abovementioned Conventions was communicated. The Committee asks the Government to provide all the information required on the submission to the National Congress of all the remaining Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference between 1990 and 2007.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Serious failure to submit. In its previous observations, the Committee noted that the instruments pending submission have been forwarded to the relevant authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina for their consideration and possible ratification. With the assistance of the Office, 32 instruments adopted by the Conference since 1993 were translated and sent to the entities. The entities – the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska – were encouraged to involve the social partners at the entity level in the consultation process. In November 2007, the Government confirmed that the instruments adopted by the Conference between its 80th and 95th Sessions were sent to the authorities concerned and to the social partners of the entities and of the Brijuni District for their examination with a view to an eventual ratification. The Committee hopes that it will soon be possible to examine all the required information concerning the submission to the Parliamentary Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2007.

Brazil

The Committee recalls that Conventions Nos 128 to 130, 149 to 151, 156 and 157 and the other instruments adopted at the 52nd, 78th, 79th, 81st, 82nd (1995 Protocol), 83rd, 84th (Conventions Nos 179 and 180; 1996 Protocol, Recommendations Nos 186 and 187), 85th, 86th, 88th, 90th, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions of the Conference are still waiting to be submitted to the National Congress. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon report on other measures that have been taken to submit all the pending instruments to the National Congress. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Tripartite Committee on International Relations (CTRI) requested the Ministry of External Relations in March 2006 to take the necessary steps to submit to the National Congress the Tenants and Share-croppers

Recommendation, 1968 (No. 132), the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189), the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193), the List of Occupational Diseases Recommendation, 2002 (No. 194), and the Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195).

Burkina Faso

Submission to the National Assembly and ratification of Conventions. The Committee notes the communication of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security bringing to the knowledge of the Government the instruments adopted by the Conference between 2000 and 2007. The Government also indicated that, at its meeting on 25 February 2009, the Council of Ministers examined and adopted a report authorizing the ratification of five international Conventions, namely Conventions Nos 122, 142, 183, 184 and 187, and the Instrument for the Amendment of the Constitution of the Organization, 1997. At its plenary sitting on 15 June 2009, the National Assembly authorized the ratification of these five Conventions and the Instrument for the Amendment of the Constitution, 1997. The Government also indicated that other instruments for which ratification was not authorized have been brought to the knowledge of the Deputies of the National Assembly, which noted their adoption and invited the Government to use them as a source of inspiration for social and economic progress in the world of work. The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Conventions Nos 122, 142 and 184 was registered on 28 October 2009. The Committee welcomes the Government's initiative of ratifying the five Conventions referred to above and the Instrument for the Amendment of the Constitution, 1997, and the submission to the National Assembly of all the instruments adopted by the Conference between 2000 and 2007.

Cameroon

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest the Government's information dated 2 November 2009 indicating that the conventions, recommendations and protocols adopted by the Conference at the 25 sessions held between 1983 and 2007 have been communicated to the competent authorities. The Government refers to the provisions of article 19 of the Constitution of the Organization and states that it will communicate, in due time, the decisions adopted by the competent authorities on the instruments concerned by the submission. The Committee refers to its previous comments and welcomes this progress. It invites the Government to indicate the date on which the abovementioned instruments were submitted to the National Assembly and the decisions taken on the instruments submitted.

Cape Verde

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide the information required on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference during 13 sessions held between 1995 and 2007 (82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to the National Assembly.

Central African Republic

Serious failure to submit. ILO assistance. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of the Central African Republic to the Conference Committee in June 2009, indicating that his Government had considered that, once the period of 18 months following the Conference session set out in article 19 of the Constitution had elapsed, submission to the competent authorities was no longer possible for the instruments adopted between 1988 and 2007. The Government representative indicated that it had only been in 2008, during a consultation with the ILO, that his Government had understood that the expiry of this period did not result in the extinction of the obligation and that, on the contrary, the obligation was not fulfilled until the instruments had been submitted to the National Assembly. He also emphasized the importance placed on the ratification of Conventions, while indicating that the specific characteristics of the country did not facilitate certain instruments being taken into account, such as those relating to seafarers, as the country is landlocked and without expectations of developing a maritime fleet. Discussion was nevertheless under way on the interest of ratifying the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169). However, the service responsible for standards had been confronted with the departure of many managerial staff responsible for these files. A tripartite committee would nevertheless be established in the coming months to examine the instruments, follow through the submission and ratification procedures and draw up the reports. Several documents on standards had been submitted to the members of the National Assembly, the President of the Bar and the Ministry of Justice. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will make every effort in the near future so that it is soon in a position to announce the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at the 20 sessions held between 1988 and 2007.

Chad

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest the communication of 20 May 2009 in which the Ministry of the Public Service and Labour wrote to the President of the National Assembly with a view to the submission of the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2007. The Committee also notes that the Government and the social partners, in the context of their consultations, examined the possibility of proposing the ratification of the Conventions which are applicable to the national situation. The Committee welcomes this progress and the consequent fulfilment of the obligation to submit to the National Assembly the instruments adopted by the Conference over several sessions.

Chile

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide the information required on the submission to the National Congress of the instruments adopted at 12 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2007 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to the National Congress.

Colombia

The Committee refers to its observation on the application of Convention No. 144 and asks the Government to provide all relevant information on the submission to the Congress of the Republic of the 31 instruments adopted at the 75th (Convention No. 168), 79th (Convention No. 173), 81st (Recommendation No. 182), 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th (Recommendation No. 191), 89th (Recommendation No. 192), 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions of the Conference.

Comoros

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the Government's reply, received in September 2009, indicating that it is awaiting the renewal of the National Assembly scheduled to take place in October 2009 for the gradual submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1992 and 2007, according to the schedule of parliamentary sessions. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to announce that the instruments adopted at the 16 sessions held between 1992 and 2007 have been submitted to the Assembly of the Union of Comoros.

Congo

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes that no information has been received on the steps taken to actually transmit to the National Assembly the instruments adopted at the 54th (Recommendation Nos 135 and 136), 55th (Recommendations Nos 137, 138, 139, 140, 141 and 142), 58th (Convention No. 137 and Recommendation No. 145), 60th (Convention Nos 141 and 143, Recommendations Nos 149 and 151), 62nd, 63rd (Recommendation No. 156), 67th (Recommendations Nos 163, 164 and 165), 68th (Convention No. 157 and Recommendations Nos 167 and 168), 69th, 70th, 71st (Recommendations Nos 170 and 171), 72nd, 74th and 75th (Recommendations Nos 175 and 176) Sessions of the Conference and the instruments adopted between 1990 and 2007 (77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). The Committee urges the Government to spare no effort to comply with the obligation of submission and recalls that the Office is available to the parties concerned to overcome this significant backlog.

Côte d'Ivoire

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of the Côte d'Ivoire to the Conference Committee in June 2009 indicating that the Government was taking all the necessary measures to ensure the submission of all the instruments concerned to the National Assembly. The Committee refers to its previous observations and hopes that the Government will provide the respective information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 12 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2007 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Croatia

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the instruments adopted at the 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st and 92nd Sessions of the Conference had not been submitted to the Croatian Parliament because the translation had not yet been finished. It asks the Government to take appropriate measures in order to ensure that all the remaining instruments adopted by the Conference between 1998 and 2007 are submitted to the Croatian Parliament.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide all relevant information concerning the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted at 12 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2007 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Djibouti

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Djibouti to the Conference Committee in June 2009 recalling that his country had ratified over 60 Conventions, most of which did not correspond to the geographical, economic and social characteristics of the country. The Government had therefore decided to review all the ratified Conventions in order to gradually denounce those not adapted to the real situation in the country, such as the Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 6), and the Underground Work (Women) Convention, 1935 (No. 45), which had been denounced in May 2008. The Committee also notes that the Government intends to refer the issue of submissions to Parliament once this process has been completed. The Committee recalls that, in its comments on the application of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), ratified by Djibouti in February 2005, it noted the work of the National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training, a tripartite body which may give technical and legal advice on the proper implementation or possible denunciation of the Conventions to which Djibouti is a party. The Committee notes with serious concern that the failure of submission by Djibouti concerns the instruments adopted at the 26 sessions of the Conference held between 1980 and 2007. The Committee expresses serious concern and requests the Government to make every effort in a tripartite framework to ensure that it is in a position in the near future to provide the required information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 26 sessions of the Conference held between 1980 and 2007 (66th, 68th, 69th, 70th, 71st, 72nd, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Dominica

Serious failure to submit. The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to its previous observations. It reiterates its hope that the Government will soon announce that the instruments adopted by the Conference during 15 sessions held between 1993 and 2007 (80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions) have been submitted to the House of Assembly.

El Salvador

In its previous comments, the Committee observed the failure to submit to the Congress of the Republic the instruments adopted at the 62nd, 65th, 66th, 68th, 70th, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th and 89th Sessions of the Conference, as well as the remaining instruments from the 63rd (Convention No. 148 and Recommendations Nos 156 and 157), 67th (Convention No. 154 and Recommendation No. 163) and 69th (Recommendation No. 167) Sessions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the submission to the Congress of the Republic of all the remaining instruments, including Recommendations Nos 193 and 194 (90th Session, 2002) and the instruments adopted at the 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions (2003–07).

Equatorial Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the communication dated 9 May 2008 in which the Ministry of Labour and Social Security requested the Head of Government to proceed with the submission to the House of People's Representatives of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held between 1993 and 2006. The Committee asks the Government to provide the other relevant information on compliance with the obligation of submission, and particularly the date on which the instruments adopted between 1993 and 2007 were in fact submitted to the House of People's Representatives.

Ethiopia

The Committee asks the Government to provide the relevant information on the submission to the House of People's Representatives of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th (Recommendation No. 191), 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions.

Fiji

The Committee recalls that the ratification of Conventions Nos 81, 149, 155, 172, 178 and 184 was registered on 28 May 2008. In its 2008 observation, the Committee further noted that by Cabinet Decisions of May 2007, it was decided to defer the ratification of Conventions Nos 177, 179, 180, 181, 183 and 185. The Committee recalls that even when a decision to defer the ratification of Conventions is adopted, Governments still have the obligation to submit to parliament all Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference. The Committee asks the Government to provide the relevant information on the submission to the Parliament of Fiji of the remaining instruments adopted by the Conference at its 84th Session (Maritime, October 1996) and all the instruments adopted at the 83rd, 85th, 86th, 88th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions.

Gabon

The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Conventions Nos 122 and 155 was registered in October 2009. It recalls its previous comments, inviting the Government to report on Parliament's decision regarding Conventions Nos 138, 142, 155, 176, 177, 179, 181, 184 and 185. In February 2008 the Government indicated that it intends to submit to Parliament the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, for its ratification. The Committee invites the Government to provide information concerning the submission to Parliament of the other Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols not yet submitted to Parliament that were adopted at the 74th, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions of the Conference.

Gambia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not provided information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at the 13 sessions held between 1995 and 2007.

The Committee recalls that Gambia has been a Member of the Organization since 29 May 1995. It further recalls that, under article 19 of the Constitution of the Organization, each Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies "for the enactment of legislation or other action". The Governing Body of the International Labour Office has adopted a Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities asking for particulars on this subject.

The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to spare no effort with a view to complying with the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the Office can provide it with the necessary technical assistance to help in overcoming this significant backlog.

Georgia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to report on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at the 13 sessions held between 1993 and 2007 (80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). The Committee urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the instruments to Parliament.

Ghana

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the information provided by the Government in July 2006, indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st and 92nd Sessions were sent by the Labour Department to the Sector Ministry for their submission to the Parliament of the Republic of Ghana. It asks the Government to indicate if all the instruments adopted by the Conference at the eight sessions held between 2000 and 2007 have been submitted to Parliament. In addition, the Committee recalls its previous comments and once again asks the Government to supply the indications required with regard to the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 80th Session (Convention No. 174 and Recommendation No. 181), 81st Session (Convention No. 175 and Recommendation No. 182), 82nd Session (Convention No. 176 and Recommendation No. 183, and the Protocol of 1995) and 84th Session (Recommendations Nos 185 and 186).

Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous comments and asks the Government to provide the information requested regarding the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 11 sessions held by the Conference between October 1996 and June 2007 (84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Guinea-Bissau

The Committee refers to its previous observations and notes that the ratifications of Conventions Nos 138 and 182 were registered in March 2009 and August 2008, respectively. The Committee requests the Government to supply updated information on the submission to the National People's Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th and 96th Sessions.

Haiti

Serious failure to submit. ILO assistance. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Haiti to the Conference Committee in June 2009 explaining that the reasons for the failure of submission were related to the political and social crisis, natural cataclysms and the unrest that had affected the country. She indicated that her country had received ILO technical assistance in March 2009 with a view to carrying out the remaining submissions. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will make every effort in the near future to be in a position to announce soon the submission to the National Assembly of the following instruments:

- (a) the remaining instruments from the 67th Session (Conventions Nos 154 and 155, and Recommendations Nos 163 and 164);
- (b) the instruments adopted at the 68th Session;
- (c) the remaining instruments adopted at the 75th Session (Convention No. 168, and Recommendations Nos 175 and 176); and
- (d) the instruments adopted at the 19 sessions of the Conference held between 1989 and 2007.

Ireland

Serious failure to submit. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to announce soon that the instruments adopted by the Conference at the eight sessions held between 2000 and 2007 (88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions) were submitted to the Oireachtas (Parliament).

Kazakhstan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to supply the requested information on the submission to Parliament of the 32 instruments still pending submission which were adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2007. It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to Parliament.

Kenya

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Kenya at the Conference Committee in June 2009, in which the Government declared that the delay in submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly was not deliberate and was largely due to the political circumstances in the country since 2002. The lengthy process of reviewing the labour law, following the last two general elections and the 2005 referendum, had affected the process of submitting the pending instruments. The National Labour Board was established in November 2008 and inaugurated in April 2009. The 1995 and 1996 Protocols and all the instruments adopted between 2000 and 2007 were included among the priority agenda items for consideration by the tripartite board and for subsequent submission to the competent authorities. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide the required information on the submission to the National Assembly of the Protocols adopted at the 82nd and 84th Sessions and of all the other instruments adopted by the Conference at its eight sessions held between 2000 and 2007.

Kyrgyzstan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not communicated information on the submission to the competent authorities of instruments adopted by the Conference at the 16 sessions held between 1992 and 2007.

The Committee notes that Kyrgyzstan has been a Member of the Organization since 31 March 1992. It recalls that, under article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies “for the enactment of legislation or other action”. The Governing Body of the International Labour Office has adopted a Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, asking for particulars on this subject. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide all the information requested by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum about the competent authority, the date on which the instruments were submitted and any proposals made by the Government on measures to be taken with regard to the instruments that have been submitted.

The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the Office can provide technical assistance to overcome this serious delay.

Lao People's Democratic Republic

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the assistance provided by the ILO in 2008 to translate the instruments still pending submission into Lao. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon indicate that the instruments adopted by the Conference during 13 sessions held between 1995 and 2007 have been submitted to the National Assembly.

Liberia

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in May 2009 indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd and 95th Sessions, as well as the Protocols of 1990 and of 1995, have yet to be submitted to the National Legislature. The Committee recalls that the National Tripartite Committee was established in June 2008 following the conclusion of a Memorandum of Understanding among the social partners for the implementation of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). The Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will soon be in a position to submit to the National Legislature the instruments adopted by the Conference at the six sessions held between 2000 and 2007, as well as the 1990 and 1995 Protocols.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide the information requested concerning the submission to the competent authorities, within the meaning of article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the ILO Constitution, of all Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted at 12 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2007 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instrument to the competent authorities.

Malta

The Committee asks the Government to provide all the required information on the submission to the House of Representatives of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions (2003–07).

Mongolia

The Committee asks the Government to indicate if the instruments adopted by the Conference at 11 sessions held between 1995 and 2007 (82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions) were submitted to the State Great Khural.

Mozambique

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Mozambique in June 2009 to the Conference Committee. The Government indicated that it had begun the examination of all the remaining Conventions and Recommendation for submission to the Assembly. Submission had been delayed as the instruments needed to be translated into Portuguese. The Committee observes that the Government requested the ILO's assistance to obtain translations into Portuguese of the instruments that are awaiting submission. The Committee hopes that the Government will obtain the requested assistance and that it will be in a position to announce shortly that the instruments adopted at the 12 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2007 have been submitted to the Assembly of the Republic.

Nepal

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative of Nepal to the Conference Committee in June 2009 indicating that measures had already been taken for the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference. It further recalls its 2008 observation in which it noted the volume forwarded to the Office in August 2008 containing the instruments adopted by the Conference between June 1995 and June 2006 that were due to be submitted to Parliament for its consideration. The Committee therefore reiterates its hope that the Government will soon be in a position to announce that the 26 instruments adopted by the Conference between 1995 and 2007 have been submitted to Parliament.

Niger

The Committee notes with interest the registration in February 2009 of the ratifications of Conventions Nos 155, 161 and 187. It hopes that the Government will also be in a position to provide the information required concerning the submission to the National Assembly of the 23 instruments adopted by the Conference at 11 sessions (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th (for the Employment Relationship Recommendation, 2006 (No. 198)) and 96th) held between 1996 and 2007.

Pakistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to report on the measures taken to submit to Majlis-e-Shoora (Parliament) the instruments adopted by the Conference at 14 sessions held between 1994 and 2007 at its 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions. It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to Parliament.

Papua New Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Papua New Guinea at the Conference Committee in June 2009, indicating that the prolonged delay in the submission of the instruments adopted between 2000 and 2007 had been due to administrative difficulties. The Department of Labour and Industrial Relations was engaged in preparing a single comprehensive policy submission to Cabinet which would include all the instruments adopted by the Conference since 2000. The Committee further notes the Government's intention to pursue a new approach of submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference directly through the Cabinet, with the National Tripartite Consultative Council (NTCC) being advised. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will provide soon information on the submission to the National Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at eight sessions between 2000 and 2007 (88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Paraguay

Serious failure of submission. ILO assistance. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Paraguay to the Conference Committee in June 2009. The Government representative indicated that authentic copies of the instruments awaiting submission had been requested from the Office and it undertook to transmit them to the executive authorities with a view to the completion of the respective procedure. The Government also undertook to communicate to the principal organizations of employers and workers the texts of the information that would be sent to the Director-General. The Government also indicated in August 2009 that, with the cooperation of the Office, it was planned to hold a meeting with the members of the legislative chambers during the course of 2009. The Committee recalls its previous observations, and particularly that no information has been received concerning the submission to the National Congress of the instruments adopted at the ten sessions of the Conference held between 1997 and 2007 (85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). The Committee hopes that the Government will provide the remaining information required to indicate that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1997 and 2007 have been submitted to the National Congress.

Peru

The Committee recalls its previous observation and requests the Government to provide further information on the measures adopted for the submission to the Congress of the Republic of the remaining instruments adopted at the 84th, 88th and 90th Sessions of the Conference, and at the other sessions of the Conference held between 2001 and 2007 (89th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Russian Federation

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the communication dated 17 June 2009 that was sent by the Chair of the Committee on Labour and Social Policy of the State Duma to the Ministry of Health and Social Development of the Russian Federation requesting the Government of the Russian Federation to comply in a timely manner with its obligations under article 19 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee further recalls the resolution adopted by the State Duma on 29 June 2007 requesting the Government of the Russian Federation to take additional measures to ensure unconditional observance of article 19 of the ILO Constitution with regard to the mandatory and timely submission to the State Duma of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference. In conformity with article 19 of the ILO Constitution, the Committee also asks the Government to take appropriate measures to comply with the requirement of the submission to the State Duma of the instruments adopted by the Conference at the seven sessions held between 2001 and 2007 (89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions).

Rwanda

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to report on the submission to the National Assembly of the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference at the 14 sessions held between 1993 and 2007 (80th, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to the National Assembly.

Saint Kitts and Nevis

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. The Committee asks the Government to provide the required information about the date on which the instruments were submitted to the National Assembly and the proposals made by the Government on the measures which might be taken with regard to the instruments adopted by the Conference at the 12 sessions held between 1996 and 2007 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). It again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance with the constitutional obligation to submit.

Saint Lucia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. It recalls that, in accordance with article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the Constitution of the Organization, Saint Lucia, as a Member of the Organization, has the obligation to submit to Parliament all the remaining Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference from 1980 to 2007 (66th, 67th (Conventions Nos 155 and 156 and Recommendations Nos 164 and 165), 68th (Convention No. 157 and Protocol of 1982), 69th, 70th, 71st, 72nd, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). The Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance with the constitutional obligation to submit.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

Serious failure to submit. In its previous observations, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government indicating that it had fulfilled its obligation to submit to the competent authorities all of the instruments adopted by the Conference. Through the Minister of Labour, the Department of Labour submitted to the Cabinet a list of all the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference from October 1996 to June 2004, along with its recommendations for ratification. The submission to the Cabinet was made on 11 September 2006 and the representative organizations of employers and workers were duly notified. The Committee once again notes that, under the 1979 Constitution of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, the Cabinet is the executive authority which has the responsibility for making final decisions on ratification and for determining any matter that is brought before the House of Assembly for legislative action. The Committee asks the Government to fulfil its remaining obligations under article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the ILO Constitution by also submitting to the House of Assembly the instruments (Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols) adopted by the Conference at 12 sessions held from October 1996 to June 2007.

Sao Tome and Principe

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls that the Government has not provided the required information on the submission to the competent authorities of 41 instruments adopted by the Conference between 1990 and 2007 (77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). The Committee asks the Government to make every effort to fulfil the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the International Labour Office is available to provide the necessary technical assistance to give effect to this essential obligation.

Senegal

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest the communication forwarded to the Presidents of the Senate and the National Assembly containing explanatory technical notes on each of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference from 1992 to 2007. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will continue to provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly.

Submission of protocols. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the Protocol of 1995 to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (82nd Session), and the Protocol of 2002 to the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (90th Session).

Seychelles

The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the instruments adopted by the Conference at the seven sessions held between 2001 and 2007 (89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions) have been submitted to the National Assembly.

Sierra Leone

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. The Committee asks the Government to report on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference in October 1976 (Convention No. 146 and Recommendation No. 154, adopted at the 62nd Session) and the instruments adopted between 1977 and 2007.

Solomon Islands

Serious failure to submit. The Committee requests the Government to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation to submit to the National Legislature the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1984 and 2007.

Somalia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee trusts that, when the national circumstances permit, the Government will provide information on the submission to the competent authorities with regard to the instruments adopted by the Conference between October 1976 and June 2007.

Spain

Submission to the Cortes Generales. The Committee notes the communications received in July and November 2009 informing the ILO of the decisions by the Council of Ministers dated 12 June 2009. The Committee notes that the Council of Ministers decided to submit to the Cortes Generales certain Conventions and Recommendations for information. Furthermore, the Committee notes with interest that the Council of Ministers decided to authorize the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (adopted at the 94th Session of the Conference) and decided on its submission to the Cortes Generales. The Committee welcomes the fact the Government has complied with its obligation to submit to the Cortes Generales the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 63rd, 80th, 81st, 83rd, 84th, 86th, 89th, 92nd and 95th Sessions. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide information regularly on compliance with its obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Cortes Generales.

Sudan

Serious failure to submit. Assistance by the ILO. The Committee notes the statement by the Government representative of Sudan at the Conference Committee in June 2009, in which the Government indicated that despite the difficulties and the exceptional situation that the country was facing, it undertook to supply all the reports due by the end of 2009 to achieve its common objectives so that the respective Conventions and Recommendations were submitted to the National Assembly. The Committee further notes that the Government requested the assistance of the ILO's Subregional Office in Cairo concerning international labour standards. The Committee therefore reiterates its hope that the Government will announce soon that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1994 and 2007 were submitted to the National Assembly.

Syrian Arab Republic

The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Convention No. 155 and its Protocol of 2002 was registered in May 2009. It recalls that 40 of the instruments adopted by the Conference are still waiting to be submitted to the People's Council. The Committee hopes that the Government will shortly be in a position to announce that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 66th and 69th Sessions (Recommendations Nos 167 and 168) and at its 70th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 90th (Recommendations Nos 193 and 194) 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions have been submitted to the People's Council.

Tajikistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the information on submission to Parliament required by article 19 of the ILO Constitution for the instruments adopted by the Conference at the ten sessions of the Conference held between October 1996 and June 2007 (84th, 85th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions) has not been received. The Committee urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to Parliament.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not sent the information concerning the submission to the competent authorities of instruments adopted by the Conference at the 12 sessions held between 1996 and 2007 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). The Committee urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to the competent authorities.

Togo

The Committee refers to its previous comments and asks the Government to indicate the date on which the instruments on maternity protection (88th Session, 2000) were submitted to the National Assembly and the representative employers' and workers' organizations to which the information supplied to the Office was communicated. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the instruments adopted by the Conference at the six sessions held between 2002 and 2007 at the 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions of the Conference have been submitted to the National Assembly.

Turkmenistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not provided information on the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held by the Conference between 1994 and 2007.

The Committee notes that Turkmenistan has been a Member of the Organization since 24 September 1993. It recalls that, under article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies "for the enactment of legislation or other action". The Governing Body of the International Labour Office adopted a Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, asking for particulars on this subject. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide all the information requested by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum about the competent authority, the date on which the instruments were submitted and any proposals made by the Government on the measures to be taken with regard to the instruments that have been submitted.

The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the Office can provide technical assistance to overcome this serious delay.

Uganda

Serious failure to submit. The Committee asks the Government to provide the required information on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 14 sessions held between 1994 and 2007 (81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to Parliament.

Ukraine

The Committee notes the reply provided by the Government, in May 2009, to its previous comments indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 2003 and 2007 were referred to the competent bodies of the executive authority in order to examine the possibility of their ratification. The Government further stated that these instruments were not submitted to the Supreme Rada of Ukraine since no proposals were made with regard to their ratification.

The Committee notes that, by virtue of the relevant provisions of article 19, paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, of the Constitution, the Members of the Organization have undertaken to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action. In the Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, the Governing Body indicated that the competent authority is the authority which, under the Constitution of each State, has the power to legislate or to take other action in order to implement Conventions and Recommendations. The competent national authority should normally be the legislature. Even in the case of instruments not requiring action in the form of legislation, it would be desirable to ensure that the purpose of submission, which is also to bring Conventions and Recommendations to the knowledge of the public, is fully met – to submit these instruments also to the parliamentary body.

The Committee also notes that for many years the Government has provided information on the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Supreme Rada. Submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Supreme Rada does not imply any obligation for the Government to propose the ratification of a Convention or Protocol, or the application of a Recommendation. Governments have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made when submitting instruments to the competent authorities. Furthermore, the proposals to be made to the competent authority or authorities in connection with submission have to be the subject of consultation in accordance with the tripartite procedures required in Article 5(1)(b) of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), which has been ratified by Ukraine.

The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will be in a position in the near future to provide all the information requested in the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum on the submission to the Supreme Rada of Ukraine regarding the instruments adopted at the 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions of the Conference (2003–07).

Uzbekistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls that the Government has not communicated information on the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference during 14 sessions held between 1993 and 2007.

The Committee notes that Uzbekistan has been a Member of the Organization since 31 July 1992. It recalls that, under article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies “for the enactment of legislation or other action”. The Governing Body of the International Labour Office has adopted a Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, asking for particulars about this subject. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide all the information requested by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum about the competent authority, the date on which the instruments were submitted and the proposals made by the Government on the measures which might be taken with regard to the instruments that have been submitted.

The Committee urges the Government, in the same way as the Conference Committee, to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the Office can provide technical assistance to overcome this serious delay.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls that 41 instruments await submission to the National Assembly adopted at the 79th and 81st Sessions (1992 and 1994) and between 1996 and 2007, as well as certain instruments adopted earlier (74th Session, 1987: Conventions Nos 163, 164, 165 and 166, and Recommendation No. 174; 75th Session, 1988: Convention No. 168 and Recommendation No. 176; 77th Session, 1990: Convention No. 171 and Recommendation No. 178, the Protocol of 1990 to the Night Work (Women) Convention (Revised), 1948; 78th Session, 1991: Convention No. 172; 82nd Session, 1995: Protocol of 1995 to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947). The Committee refers to the communication received in August 2008 which indicated that in due course the Government will report on the procedure for approval by the National Assembly and ratification by the President of the Republic. The Committee reiterates the comments which it has made for many years and invites the Government to proceed with the tripartite consultations to be held under Convention No. 144 and the submission to the National Assembly of the 41 instruments pending.

Zambia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee requests the Government to provide the relevant information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at the 12 sessions held between 1996 and 2007 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th and 96th Sessions). It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to the National Assembly.

Direct requests

Appendices

Appendix I. Table of reports received on ratified Conventions as of 11 December 2009
(articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

Article 22 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization provides that “each of the Members agrees to make an annual report to the International Labour Office on the measures which it has taken to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which it is a party. These reports shall be made in such form and shall contain such particulars as the Governing Body may request”. Article 23 of the Constitution provides that the Director-General shall lay before the next meeting of the Conference a summary of the reports communicated to him by Members in pursuance of article 22, and that each Member shall communicate copies of these reports to the representative organizations of employers and workers.

At its 204th Session (November 1977), the Governing Body approved the following arrangements for the presentation by the Director-General to the Conference of summaries of reports submitted by governments under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution:

- (a) the practice of tabular classification of reports, without summary of their contents, which has been followed for several years in respect of reports subsequent to first reports after ratification, should be applied to all reports, including first reports;
- (b) the Director-General should make available, for consultation at the Conference, the original texts of all reports received on ratified Conventions; in addition, photocopies of the reports should be supplied on request to members of delegations.

At its 267th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures for rationalization and simplification.

Reports received under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution appear in simplified form in a table annexed to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations; first reports are indicated in parentheses.

Requests for consultation or copies of reports may be addressed to the secretariat of the Committee on the Application of Standards.

Appendix IV. Summary information supplied by governments with regard to the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to the competent authorities

Article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization prescribes, in paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, that Members shall bring the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the International Labour Conference before the competent authorities within a specified period. Under the same provisions, the governments of member States shall inform the Director-General of the International Labour Office of the measures taken to submit the instruments to the competent authorities, and also communicate particulars of the authority or authorities regarded as competent, and of the action taken by them.

In accordance with article 23 of the Constitution, a summary of the information communicated in pursuance of article 19 is submitted to the Conference.

At its 267th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures of rationalization and simplification. In this connection, the summarized information appears in an appendix to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations.

The present summary contains information relating to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 96th Session (May–June 2007): the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188) and the Work in Fishing Recommendation, 2007 (No. 199). The period of 12 months provided for the submission to the competent authorities of Convention No. 188 and Recommendation No. 199 expired on 15 June 2008, and the period of 18 months on 15 December 2008.

The summarized information also consists of communications which were forwarded to the Director-General of the International Labour Office after the closure of the 98th Session of the Conference (Geneva, June 2009) and which could not therefore be laid before the Conference at that session.

Appendix V. Information supplied by governments with regard to the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities

(31st to 97th Sessions of the International Labour Conference, 1948-2008)

Note. The number of the Convention or Recommendation is given in parentheses, preceded by the letter "C" or "R" as the case may be, when only some of the texts adopted at any one session have been submitted. The Protocols are indicated by the letter "P" followed by the number of the corresponding Convention. When the ratification of a Convention was registered, that Convention and the corresponding Recommendation are considered as submitted.

Account has been taken of the date of admission or readmission of States Members to the ILO for determining the sessions of the Conference whose texts are taken into consideration.

The Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations at its 57th Session (June 1972), 73rd Session (June 1987), 93rd Session (June 2004) and 97th Session (June 2008).
