Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from these worst forms, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Child prostitution and sex tourism. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed concern at the persistence of child prostitution and sex tourism involving young Moroccans and immigrants, particularly boys, despite an amendment made to the Penal Code in 2003 to introduce sex tourism as a criminal offence. It noted that, according to the Government, as part of the National Action Plan for Children (PANE) for the decade 2006–16, a preliminary study on problems relating to the sexual exploitation of children was carried out in February 2007 with a view to framing a national strategy to prevent and combat such exploitation.

The Committee notes the information sent by the Government to the effect that child protection units have been set up in Casablanca and Marrakesh to provide better medical, psychological and legal assistance for children who have been the victims of violence or ill-treatment, including children who have suffered from sexual or economic exploitation. The Committee nonetheless observes that the Government provides no information on the results of the preliminary study on problems relating to the sexual exploitation of children, or on the preparation of the national strategy to prevent and combat the sexual exploitation of children, a concern shared by the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women in its concluding observations of 8 April 2008 (CEDAW/C/MAR/CO/4, paragraph 22). The Committee accordingly requests the Government to take immediate, effective and time-bound measures to ensure that the national strategy to prevent and combat the sexual exploitation of children is adopted and that it includes measures to: (a) prevent children from falling victim to prostitution, particularly in the context of sex tourism; and (b) provide the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from this worst form of child labour and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic workers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that according to the ITUC, the physical and sexual abuse of young girls working as housemaids (petites bonnes), is among the most serious problems confronting Moroccan children. The Committee noted that a national programme to combat the use of little girls as housemaids (INQAD) had been adopted as part of the PANE.

The Committee notes the information sent by the Government to the effect that as part of its Strategic Plan 2008–12 and following implementation of the INQAD programme, the MSDF plans to organize a second nationwide awareness-raising campaign to combat domestic work by little girls, and to prepare regional action plans. The Committee notes that to this end, as part of the Multisectoral Programme to combat gender-based violence by empowering women and girls in Morocco implemented in collaboration with the UNDP, ILO–IPEC has started up an action programme to combat domestic work by girls in the Marrakesh–Tensift–El Haouz region for the period from 1 January 2009 to 31 December 2010. The programme is to benefit 1,000 school children to discourage them from dropping out of school; 100 school girls under 15 years of age from very poor families for whom the risk of drop-out is high are also to benefit from this awareness-raising; 30 girls under 15 years of age are to be removed from domestic work and rehabilitated and socially reintegrated; 20 girls aged between 15 and 17 are to be withdrawn from domestic work in which conditions are hazardous and which are among the worst forms of child labour; and 50 girl domestic servants aged between 15 and 17 years working in conditions that are acceptable will nonetheless have both their living and their working conditions improved. While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government to combat domestic work by children, the Committee notes that this form of labour remains a very serious scourge in Morocco. It accordingly requests the Government to redouble its efforts to protect these children, in particular against economic and sexual exploitation, and requests it to continue to provide information on progress made in this area, in terms of the number of children under 18 years of age prevented from engaging in or removed from worst forms of child labour in the domestic work sector.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 99th Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Mozambique

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. The Committee previously noted the information in the Government's report that it has undertaken a reform of the national legislation that is in force and, in the context of this reform, measures will be taken to bring the Penal Code into conformity with the Convention. It requested the Government to provide information on progress in this regard, and to provide a copy of the Penal Code currently in force. The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government's report on this point, though notes that the Trafficking in Persons Act (Trafficking Act) and the Child Protection Act was adopted in 2008. The Committee once again expresses its hope that the planned amendments to the Penal Code will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the new Penal Code once it has been adopted. In the meantime, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the Penal Code that is currently in force.

Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children for economic and sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that Mozambican boys are trafficked to South Africa to work on farms and that Mozambican women and children are trafficked to South Africa for sexual exploitation. It also noted that a Bill on the trafficking of persons, with particular reference to women and children, had been submitted to the National Assembly. It requested the Government to provide information on any progress towards the adoption of this Bill and to supply a copy, once adopted.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Trafficking Act was approved by the National Assembly in April 2008, and was published in the Official Gazette on 9 June 2008. The Committee notes that section 10 of the Trafficking Act prohibits the trafficking in persons, including the recruitment, transportation, receiving or providing, of persons (including under the false pretence of domestic work in another state), for the purposes of forced labour, slavery and prostitution. The Committee notes that section 5(a) of the Trafficking Act provides that when the victim of the trafficking is a child, this is an aggravating circumstance of the crime, and that the annex defines a child as all persons under 18.

Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee noted previously that, under Act No. 24/97 on military service, a citizen may normally only enrol in the armed forces in the year of his 20th birthday. Conscripts could, however, join the armed forces from the age of 18, although under no circumstances could citizens under 18 years of age take part in military action. The Committee noted however that, under section 2(2) of the Act on military service, the age for conscription may be altered “in time of war”. According to the Government’s indications, this provision has given rise to debate in various Mozambican bodies as it allows persons under 18 years of age to be enrolled to participate in military activities. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that, as the country is currently at peace, there is no need for legislation with regard to compulsory recruitment.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee previously noted the Government’s indication that Decree No. 417/71 on the jurisdictional statute of assistance to minors addresses sexual exploitation of children, as does Act No. 6/99. The Committee notes the information available from the UN Regional Crime and Justice Institute that the Mozambican juvenile justice system (civil and criminal), previously regulated by Decree No. 417/71, was reformed in June 2008 by the Child Protection Act (Law No. 7/2008) and by the Judicial Organization of Minors Act (Law No. 8/2008).

The Committee notes that section 63(1)(b) of the Child Protection Act requires the State to adopt legislative or administrative measures to protect children against all forms of sexual exploitation, including prostitution and other illicit sexual activity. The Committee also notes that section 63(1)(a) of the Child Protection Act states that legislative measures to protect children must include punishing parents, legal guardians or other family members who induce children to engage in illegal sexual exploitation. Section 63(2)(b) of the Child Protection Act states that the legislative measures adopted need to provide for rigorous sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the legislative or administrative measures that have been adopted pursuant to section 63 of the Child Protection Act, prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of children for the purpose of prostitution.

Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously noted that, although national legislation provided for the protection of minors from being exposed to pornography, it did not prohibit the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the national legislative measures which prohibited the use, procuring or offering of children under the age of 18 years for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, and if no such prohibitions existed, to adopt such legislation as a matter of urgency. The Committee notes that section 63(1)(c) of the Child Protection Act states that the State must take legislative measures to protect children from all forms of sexual exploitation, including the exploitation of children in pornography or pornographic performances, and that section 63(2) states that this legislation must include rigorous penalties. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the legislative measures enacted, prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of persons under the age of 18 for the production of pornography or pornographic performances, pursuant to section 63 of the Child Protection Act.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption in March 1997 of Act No. 3/97 which reportedly provides for prison terms of between 25 and 30 years for persons found guilty of using minors for the production, transport, distribution and consumption of the substances and by-products set out in the schedules to the Act. Noting the absence of information in the Government’s report on this point, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of Act No. 3/97 and of any other provision prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years of age for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Children in domestic service. The Committee previously noted that pursuant to section 3 of Act No. 23/2007 of 27 August 2007 (Labour Law), domestic work would be governed by regulation. The Committee also noted the information in the Government’s report that regulations to implement the new Labour Law were under preparation, including regulations on domestic work. The Committee observed that children, and particularly young girls, engaged in domestic service are often victims of exploitation, and that it is difficult to supervise their conditions of employment due to the clandestine nature of such work, and expressed the hope that the regulations on domestic work would determine the working conditions of children engaged in domestic work, particularly with regard to hazardous work.

The Committee notes an absence of information on the status of regulations pursuant to the Labour Law. However, the Committee notes the Government's statement in its 23 March 2009 report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child that domestic work is one of the most common types of child labour in Mozambique, and that children are frequently forced to work in this sector (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraphs 356 and 358). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the regulations on domestic work, stipulating the working conditions of children engaged in hazardous domestic work, will soon be elaborated and adopted. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 4, paragraph 1. Determination of hazardous types of work. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to section 23(2) of the Labour Law, employers shall not engage persons under 18 years of age in hazardous work, as defined by the competent authorities after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers. The Committee noted the information provided by the Government that, in the context of the legislative reform, work was being carried out on the formulation of specific legislation on this subject.

Noting an absence of information on this point in the Government's report, the Committee reminds the Government that by virtue of Article 4(1) of the Convention, the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under the age of 18 shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee draws the Government's attention to Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190), which indicates that in determining the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age, consideration should be given, among other issues, to the types of work enumerated in that Paragraph. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that specific legislation determining the hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age will be prepared and adopted in the near future. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of this legislation once it has been adopted.

Article 5 and Part V of the report form. Monitoring mechanisms and application of the Convention in practice. Trafficking. The Committee notes the information in the Government's reply to the list of issues of the CRC of 29 September 2009, that several measures have been taken to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies with regard to the monitoring of trafficking. The Committee notes that a criminal investigation police brigade in Maputo was established, that deals with trafficking cases, and lectures were given on the subject of trafficking at police training schools. Training and capacity-building programmes combating the phenomenon of trafficking have been held for officials from the public prosecutor and the judiciary as well as other justice administration agents, and social workers (CRC/C/MOZ/Q/2/Add.1, paragraph 44). The Committee also notes that border guard police received training to improve their capacity to identify, assist and guide persons who have been trafficked (CRC/C/MOZ/Q/2/Add.1, paragraph 52). The Committee further notes the information in the Technical Progress Report on the ILO-IPEC programme "Combating the worst forms of child labour in Portuguese-speaking countries in Africa" of 30 July 2007 (ILO-IPEC TPR) that the Government participated in a regional conference, on preventing the trafficking in children in southern Africa. In addition, the Trafficking in persons report of 2009, available from the web site of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking in persons report), indicates that police and ministry of justice officials began regularly meeting with NGOs to develop a viable anti-trafficking strategy for the 2010 World Cup, which is expected to increase the incidence of Mozambicans trafficked to South Africa for sexual exploitation.

The Trafficking in persons report indicates that police forces rescued 200 Mozambican children being trafficked to South Africa in the first half of 2008. However, the statistics on child victims of crime, provided by the Government in its reply to the list of issues of the CRC, indicate that no cases of trafficking of children were recorded in 2006 and 2007, and only three victims were recorded in 2008 (CRC/C/MOZ/Q/2/Add.1, paragraph 50). The Committee also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed concern at the continuous trafficking of children from rural to urban areas for forced labour, the trafficking of girls to and from other states for sexual exploitation and domestic servitude and that investigations of cases of human trafficking or abductions were rarely being followed by prosecutions and convictions (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2 paragraph 86). Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies to ensure that those who sell and traffic children are effectively prosecuted. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the practical application on the Trafficking in Persons Act 2008, including information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

Commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that a community monitoring system for reporting incidents of sexual exploitation and abuse of children was established. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report to the CRC of 23 March 2009 that, in order to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children, the Ministry of the Interior and the Ministry of Labour are supporting the police to document all incidents pertaining to such violations (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraph 363). The Committee also notes that the Government also identifies prostitution as one of the forms of work that children are frequently forced to work in (CRC/C/MOZ/2 paragraph 358). The Committee further notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed deep concern that child prostitution is increasing in Mozambique, especially in the Maputo, Beira and Nacala regions as well as in some rural areas (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 84). The Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of all persons under the age of 18, and requests it to provide information on measures taken in this regard. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the functioning of the monitoring mechanisms set up by the ministries of the interior and labour and police to detect and combat child commercial sexual exploitation.

Data collection and labour inspectorate. The Committee previously observed that there were no available statistics relating to children engaged in the worst forms of child labour in Mozambique, although noted the ILO-IPEC information that a study on the worst forms of child labour would be prepared. It requested the Government to provide a copy of this study as soon as it became available. The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government's report on this point. However, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed concern about the lack of reliable data on child labour and expressed concern that the labour inspectorate and police face shortages of qualified staff, adequate funds and training to carry out their mandate with regard to child labour (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 80). The Committee expresses its concern at the lack of data available on the prevalence of the worst forms of child labour, and requests the Government to take measures to ensure that sufficient data is available. In this regard, the Committee hopes that the study on the worst forms of child labour will soon be completed, and requests the Government to provide a copy when it is available. Furthermore, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that the labour inspectorate and police are allocated sufficient resources to carry out their mandate with regard to the monitoring of the worst forms of child labour.

Article 6. Programme of action. National Action Plan for Children. The Committee notes the Government's information in its reply to the list of issues of the CRC, that through Decree No. 8/2009 of the Council of Ministers of 31 March 2009, a National Council of the Rights of the Child (CNAC) was established. The CNAC is chaired by the Minister of Women and Social Affairs, and includes the ministers of education and culture, justice, health and youth and sports. The Committee notes that the CNAC is responsible for the dissemination and implementation of the rights of the child, including the National Action Plan for Children (PNAC), which provides clear provisions on child labour prevention and child education. The Committee also notes that the CNAC will take measures aimed at preventing child prostitution, child labour, trafficking and other forms of child exploitation (CRC/C/MOZ/Q/2/Add.1, paragraph 6). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of the National Action Plan for Children to combat the worst forms of child labour.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the CRC, expressed concern that girls continue to have less access to education than boys beyond primary education and that the literacy rates of girls, particularly those over 15 years of age, were extremely low. Certain practices, such as the imposition of excessive domestic work on girls, contributed to limiting their access to education. The Committee nevertheless noted that the Government had taken measures to improve the education system, particularly with regard to school attendance rates.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's reply to the list of issues of the CRC of 29 September 2009, that the gross rate of completion of primary education continued to rise, from 75 per cent in 2006 to 78 per cent in 2008. In secondary education, the gross rate of children who completed the seventh grade increased from 35 per cent in 2006 to 55 per cent in 2008 (CRC/C/MOZ/Q/2/Add.1, paragraph 55). The Committee also notes that the Government, through the direct support programme to schools, distributed additional school material to vulnerable children to facilitate their access to education. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report to the CRC of 23 March 2009 that, to particularly encourage girls to attend school, the Government has adopted teacher training policies that prioritize teacher training for women (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraph 306). The Committee notes the positive results with regard to the education of girls: the net rate of schooling for females in primary education (ages 6–12) increased from 86.3 per cent in 2006 to 96.2 per cent in 2008 (CRC/C/MOZ/Q/2/Add.1, paragraph 57).

Nonetheless, the Committee notes the statement in the Government's progress report for the UN General Assembly Special Session on HIV and AIDS prepared by the National AIDS Council of Mozambique in January 2008 (UNGASS report) that the number of children attending school is much lower than the number enrolled (page 67). The Committee also notes that, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, the CRC expressed concern that one in five children remain deprived of education, that nearly half of primary school-aged children drop out of school before they complete grade five, and that significant disparities in accessing education persist between provinces, particularly affecting the provinces of Niassa, Nampula and Zambezia (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 71). The CRC also expressed concern at the high prevalence of sexual abuse and harassment in schools which reportedly leads some girls to refuse to go to school, and that gender disparity remains high in the higher levels of education (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 73). The Committee expresses concern at the continued low school attendance rates, particularly among girls, and the reports of sexual abuse and harassment deterring girls' access to education. Considering that education contributes to preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system, particularly by increasing school enrolment rates and reducing school drop-out rates, with special attention to the situation of girls. It also urges the Government to address the regional disparities of access to education, to facilitate access to education to all children in Mozambique.

Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee notes that section 21 of the Trafficking in Persons Act specifies that services for the rehabilitation and social reintegration of victims of trafficking should be provided, including shelter, medical and psychological assistance, legal assistance, assistance with repatriation and access to vocational and educational opportunities. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that the Protection of Minors Act provides for special treatment for children who are victims of trafficking, sexual exploitation and abuse, in order to ensure that they are duly protected. The Government's report also indicates that, pursuant to the Protection of Minors Act, a support service for women and children was established. The Committee further notes that the Women's and Children's Support Service (an organizational unit of the General Police Command) was created to protect the rights of women and children, and provides support and assistance to victims of sexual exploitation and trafficking, and facilitate their access to justice.

However, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed concern at the limited resources available for efforts to protect victims of trafficking and the absence of safe houses and of a formal referral system for victims of trafficking (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 86). Therefore, while noting the measures taken by the Government to provide services for victims of trafficking, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to establish a formal referral system and to ensure that adequate resources are allocated to the institutions responsible for the provision of these services. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures implemented pursuant to the Trafficking in Persons Act, and Protection of Minors Act to provide rehabilitation and repatriation services for child victims of trafficking. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been effectively removed, rehabilitated and socially reintegrated as a result of the measures implemented.

Debt bondage. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the CRC and ILO-IPEC information that children in rural areas are sometimes used to settle financial and other disputes, with families sending their children to work for periods of time to settle debts. The Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed concern at the continued practice of sending children to work to settle families' financial debts and other obligations and urged the Government to take measures to end this practice (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 65). In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take immediate effective and time-bound measures, to bring an end to the practice of sending children to work to settle debts and to provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children who have been victims of this practice.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child victims/orphans of HIV/AIDS. The Committee previously noted that, according to the report on the global AIDS epidemic published by UNAIDS, the number of children orphaned in Mozambique due to the virus was approximately 510,000. It also noted that the Government had formulated a second Strategic National Plan on HIV/AIDS (2005–09) and a National Action Plan for Children, Vulnerable Children and Orphans (POA OVC). The Committee notes the information in the UNGASS report that the POA OVC aims to provide six basic services to OVCs: health, education, nutritional/food support, legal and psychological and financial support, and hoped to provide services to 1.2 million OVCs. The Committee notes that by 2006, 23 per cent of the OVCs identified in the POA OVC (or over 220,000) had gained access to at least three basic services (page 24).

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report to the CRC of 23 March 2009 that HIV/AIDS is a significant cause of child labour, as HIV/AIDS orphans are frequently forced into child labour, since they have been left without any family support (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraph 348). The Committee also notes the Government's statement in the UNGASS report, that HIV/AIDS orphans have very limited means of generating income, and thus often have to resort to risky coping strategies, such as transactional sex or hazardous child labour (page 65). The Committee further notes the indication in the UNGASS report that the number of children who have lost their parents to HIV/AIDS is estimated to reach 630,000 by 2010 (page 65). In addition, the Committee notes that the CRC in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009 expressed concern that services for orphans and vulnerable children, including child heads of households, remained inadequate (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraph 67). The CRC also expressed serious concern at the situation of orphaned children being economically exploited by foster families (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 79). The Committee expresses serious concern at the high number of children orphaned due to HIV/AIDS and observes that the negative consequences on orphans include a higher risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children who have been orphaned by HIV/AIDS are not exploited economically by their foster families. The Committee also requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to take specific effective and time-bound measures in the context of the implementation of the National Action Plan for Children, Vulnerable Children and Orphans, to prevent HIV/AIDS orphans from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour.

Street children and begging. The Committee previously noted that the Government indicated that many children live or work in the streets in Mozambique and that the exploitation of child beggars is increasingly frequent in several provincial capitals.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report to the CRC of 23 March 2009 that, due to poverty, there has been an increase in begging, though the Government has taken measures to reduce poverty, to increase social protection and to improve housing policies to address this issue (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraphs 278 and 279). The Committee also notes the Government's statement in its report to the CRC that street children continue to be a problem in Mozambique in urban areas, and that intervention in this area involves partnerships between the Government and civil society, and with the children and their families, in order to reintegrate the street children into families. It further notes the Government's indication that these children, throughout the reintegration process, are provided with assistance at shelters for children and that these children are also encouraged to participate in professional and productive activities, as well as schooling, in order to prepare for successful reintegration into the community (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraph 387). However, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed concern that insufficient measures have been taken to address the situation of children living in the streets (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 82). The Committee recalls that children who live or work in these streets are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour and therefore requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children living in the streets from these worst forms, and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration.

Netherlands

Aruba

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138)

Article 2, paragraph 3, of the Convention. Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Government of Aruba had made a commitment to ensure that all children receive compulsory education up to the age of 17 years. The Committee once again notes the Government's indication that the State Ordinance on Compulsory Education has not yet been approved and that it will supply a copy of the Ordinance once it has been adopted. The Committee trusts that the State Ordinance on Compulsory Education will be in conformity with Article 2(3) of the Convention. Considering that there is presently no specified age of completion of compulsory schooling in Aruba and that the Government has been referring to the enactment of the State Ordinance on Compulsory Education for a number of years, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that it is adopted in the very near future.

Article 3, paragraphs 1 and 2. Hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 17(1) of the Labour Ordinance provides that it is prohibited to cause women and juvenile persons to perform night work or work of a hazardous nature, which is to be described by a state decree. Section 4 of this Ordinance defines juveniles as persons who have reached the age of 14, but not yet the age of 18. The Committee had noted the Government's information that one of the tasks of the Committee for the Modernization of Labour Legislation (CMLL) is to fill the existing voids in the legislation, creating the state decrees (which are yet formalized) referred to in the Labour Ordinance. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour legislation review is still under way and that the state decree specifying the types of hazardous work prohibited to young persons under 18 years of age has not yet been enacted. Considering that the Government has been referring to the enactment of the state decree provided for under section 17(1) of the Labour Ordinance determining the types of hazardous work for a number of years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that it is adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy, once it has been adopted.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the state decree provided for under section 16(a) of the Labour Ordinance allows exemptions for certain tasks which are necessary for the learning of a trade or profession, and can be done by children of 12 years or over who have completed the sixth class of primary school. It had also noted the Government's information that there were no instances recorded to indicate that children between 12 and 14 years of age are employed for training purposes. The Committee notes the Government's information that the state decree provided under section 16(a) of the Labour Ordinance has not yet been addressed in the CMLL. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the state decree specifying the employment permitted for vocational education or technical training purposes under section 16(a) will be addressed in the CMLL and adopted thereafter in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7. Light work. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the progress made with regard to the state decree provided for under section 16(b) of the Labour Ordinance to specify certain tasks which can be carried out by children of 12 years of age and above who have completed the sixth class of primary school. The Committee had recalled that Article 7(3) of the Convention requires that the competent authority determine the activities allowed as light work in which young persons between 12 and 14 years of age may be permitted to participate, and to prescribe the number of hours of work and the conditions of employment or work. The Committee notes the Government's information that the state decree under section 16(b) of the Labour Ordinance has not yet been addressed in the CMLL. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the state decree specifying the light work activities permitted to children of 12 years and above provided for under section 16(b) of the Labour Ordinance will be adopted at the earliest possible date and requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's information that the labour inspection did not report any violations with regard to national legislation on child labour or the provisions of the Convention. It also notes the information provided by the Government that, according to the annual report of the Inspection Division of the Labour Department, in 2008, one child, aged 14 years and 11 children, aged 15 years were employed. It further notes the Government's indication that control and enforcement of the labour legislation by the labour inspectors continues to be weak due to regulatory and financial challenges. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services in order to ensure the effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age on the nature, extent and trends in child labour and extracts from the reports of inspection services, information on the number and nature of contraventions reported and penalties applied.

New Zealand

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report. It also notes the comments made by the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) and the Government's response thereto.

Article 3(d) and Article 4, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted that, by virtue of section 54(d) of the Health and Safety in Employment Regulations of 1995 (HSE Regulations), "every employer shall take all practicable steps to ensure that no employee under the age of 15 works in any area at a place of work under the control of that employer ... at any time when any work is being carried out in that area that is likely to cause harm to the health and safety of a person under the age of 15 years". It had observed that the prohibition did not extend to children under 18 years of age. The Committee had also noted the Government's statement that the HSE Act addresses the health and safety of young persons over 15 years of age through a combination of duties imposed on the employer, including various requirements of training and supervision. It had further noted the Government's indication that it intended to review the HSE Regulations in order to prohibit hazardous work for employees aged under 16 years of age (raising the prohibition from 15 years).

The Committee notes the NZCTU's allegation that statistics on work-related injuries indicated that, in 2006, about 300 children under 15 years visited their local doctor for a work-related injury. Moreover, in the same year, accident compensation entitlements and rehabilitation assistance were provided to about ten children under the age of 9; 15 children between the ages of 10 and 14, and between 1,000–2,000 children between the ages of 15 and 19. According to the NZCTU, the common location of such fatalities is farm work. The NZCTU further contends that there is also widespread under-reporting of accident compensation claims and workplace accidents.

The Committee notes that, while the Government shares the concerns raised by the NZCTU with regard to the workplace injuries of children and young persons, which in some cases prove fatal, it believes that the existing legislative protections generally ensure that young people are not exposed to hazardous work. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is aware of the under-reporting of accident claims and workplace injuries. It nevertheless considers that several activities are in place to raise young people's awareness of workplace health and safety and their rights at the workplace, such as the "Grim Harvest" campaign which alerts workers including young persons about seasonal fatalities during work on farms, and the Children's Employment Work Programme. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that, during the period from 2007 to 2009, it has analysed young people's work patterns, where they sustain work-related harms and at what age young people mature physically and psychologically, in order to understand age as a risk factor. The Committee finally notes the Government's indication that it has decided not to review the HSE Regulations in order to prohibit hazardous work for young employees, but to seek non-regulatory options for the protection of young people under the age of 16 years from hazardous work through developing practice guidelines and information. The Committee further notes the Government's information on the prosecutions in 2007 and 2008 related to workplace injuries sustained by a 14-year-old child with partial amputation of three fingers on a snip saw; death of a 12-year-old who fell from a truck; and a 17-year-old who had his fingers and wrist crushed by a pastry machine.

Finally, the Committee notes the Government's statement that employees under 15 years of age are prohibited from working in a number of high-hazard workplaces such as construction, logging and tree-felling operations, work where goods are being manufactured and prepared for sale, working with any machinery, lifting heavy loads or performing other tasks likely to be injurious to the employee's health, night work (prohibited for children under 16 years) and driving or riding any tractor or heavy vehicles (sections 54–58 of the HSE Regulations).

The Committee must express its serious concern over the fact that children between 15 and 18 years of age are allowed, in law and in practice, to perform the abovementioned types of work which are clearly hazardous, as acknowledged by the Government itself. It also expresses its serious concern at the number of injuries and fatalities, including death suffered by children under 18 years working in hazardous types of work as underlined by the NZCTU and not contested by the Government. The Committee, therefore, emphasizes that, by virtue of Article 3(d), work which, by its nature and the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children, constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. It reminds the Government that, while determining the types of work referred to under Article 3(d) of the Convention, in accordance with Article 4(1), the relevant international standards shall be taken into consideration, in particular Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190), which enumerates activities to which the Government should give special consideration when determining types of hazardous work. It also recalls that Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190 addresses the possibility of authorizing the employment or work of young persons as from the age of 16 under strict conditions that their health and safety be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. Considering the significant number of injuries and fatalities suffered by children, it would appear that the conditions of protection and prior training, as set out in Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190, are not fully met in all circumstances. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to comply with Article 1 of the Convention, read with Article 3(d), to prohibit children under 18 years of age from engaging in hazardous and dangerous work. However, where such work is performed by young persons between 16 and 18 years of age, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that such work is only carried out in accordance with the strict conditions set out in Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190, namely that the health and safety of such young persons be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in that activity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Self-employed children. The Committee had previously noted that the HSE Regulations, which contain provisions for the employment of children in hazardous occupations, only apply to a “place of work under the control of that employer” (section 54). It had also noted the Government’s statement that the Minors Contracts Act of 1969 provides protection for minors (persons under the age of 18) entering a contract for service (self-employment). The Committee had noted the comments made by the NZCTU in 2007 that the Government’s action was long overdue on introducing an amendment to the HSE Regulations to extend their coverage to child workers who are contractors rather than employees. Noting the Government’s information that the Department of Labour would review the HSE Regulations in order to extend such Regulations to children working as independent contractors as well as self-employed children under 16 years of age, the Committee had hoped that the HSE Regulations would soon be reviewed in order to cover young self-employed persons.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the provisions restricting the employment of children in hazardous work (15 years) and night work (16 years) under the HSE Regulations have been amended in order to cover self-employed children working as independent contractors (sections 58A–58F of the Health and Safety in Employment Amendment Regulations of 2008). The Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to comply with Article 1 of the Convention, read with Article 3(d), to ensure that self-employed workers under the age of 18 years are protected from hazardous work. However, where such work is performed by young persons between 16 and 18 years of age, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that self-employed persons under 18 years of age enjoy the protection afforded by Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard. The Committee further requests the Government to provide a copy of sections 58A–58F of the Health and Safety in Employment Amendment Regulations of 2008.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Occupational safety and health service. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government’s information that the Department of Labour (DoL) intended to begin investigating workplace practices relating to persons between 16 and 18 years of age engaged in hazardous work. In this regard, it had also noted the NZCTU’s recommendation, in its communication of 2007, that input be sought from experts in child and youth development in order to assess the physical and psychological limits of young persons in relation to hazardous work. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that, from March to May 2008, the DoL introduced certain communication methods to reinforce the application of the HSE Regulations under a “Know your Rights” theme. This included preparing a factsheet using a comic/graphic style, and running a radio song competition aimed at promoting the health and safety of young persons at work. The Government further states that the DoL is continuing to investigate workplace practices relating to persons between 16 and 18 years of age engaged in hazardous work which forms part of the review of the age threshold on hazardous work and their physical and psychological limits in relation to such work. Noting that children of 15 years and above are allowed to perform hazardous work, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of the investigations carried out by the Department of Labour on workplace practices related to persons between 15 and 18 years engaged in hazardous work.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the NZCTU’s allegation that the 2009 Youth in the Labour Market Report does not include children aged less than 15 years of age, in spite of New Zealand having no minimum age for work, nor does it provide disaggregated information on a year-by-year basis for young people under 18 years of age. It notes the Government’s response that the Youth in the Labour Market Report is primarily based on the data from Statistics on New Zealand’s Household Labour Force Survey, which only collects information on persons of 15 years and above. Moreover, disaggregated information of young people between 15 and 18 was not included as the majority of stakeholders did not require it. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that, during the period 2007–08, there were three prosecutions under the HSE Act and HSE Regulations regarding injuries sustained by young persons under 18 years at the place of employment. The Committee expresses its regret at the insufficient data on working children and young persons and it strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the situation of working children in New Zealand, including children under 15 years of age is available. It requests the Government to supply statistics on the employment of children and young persons and extracts from the reports of inspection services as soon as this information becomes available. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by age and sex.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nicaragua

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1981)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the national study on child labour of 2005 (ENTIA 2005), 239,220 children between the ages of 5 and 17 years were engaged in work in the country. The Committee also noted with interest that, according to the final evaluation report of the National Strategic Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and the Protection of Young Workers (2001–05) (Strategic Plan 2001–05) of October 2006, child labour has decreased by around 6 per cent since 2000. According to this final report, over 100,000 children in poor families received direct or indirect assistance from the various actors in civil society who were engaged in the implementation of the Strategic Plan 2001–05. Furthermore, 14,075 children benefited from action programmes on the worst forms of child labour implemented by ILO/IPEC in the country.

The Committee also noted the draft Decent Work Country Programme for Nicaragua and noted that measures were envisaged to improve the application of standards relating to child labour and to continue efforts for the progressive elimination of child labour by 2015, with particular reference to the worst forms of child labour. Furthermore, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government according to which a second National Strategic Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and the Protection of Young Workers (PEPETI 2007–16) was being prepared. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken in the context of the draft Decent Work Country Programme to eliminate child labour. It also requested it to provide information on the PEPETI 2007–16, as well as on the action programmes implemented in the context of this Plan and the results achieved in terms of the progressive abolition of child labour.

The Committee notes the final text of the Decent Work Country Programme, which was prepared with ILO assistance. It notes that, in the context of this programme, it is envisaged to strengthen the work of the National Committee on the Progressive Elimination of Child Labour (CNEPTI) and the National Committee against the Sexual Exploitation of Children and Young Persons. The Decent Work Country Programme also aims to promote the creation and implementation of a system of monitoring and evaluation of the PEPETI 2007–16 and the improvement of the information system so that information is available concerning the magnitude, distribution and characteristics of child labour in the country.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government that the specific objectives of the PEPETI 2007–16 are namely: the removal of children from work and their integration into the education system; access to free health services for children who are removed from work and their families; access to income-generating projects and programmes for the families of working children and young persons; the adaptation of the national legislation; the participation of the social partners and particularly working children and young persons and their families in measures and the process of preventing and eliminating child labour; and the establishment of bodies for the supervision, monitoring and evaluation of child labour.

The Committee also notes that the Government supports the “Love Programme” (Programa Amor), which involves the Ministry of Family, Adolescence and Childhood, as well as the Ministries of Health, Education, the Interior and Labour, the Nicaraguan Social Security Institute (INSS), the Nicaraguan Institute for Youth and Sport, the Institute of Culture, the Nicaraguan Women’s Institute, the Office of the Human Rights Prosecutor and the Public Prosecutor’s Office. The programme aims to restore the rights of children and adolescents, to ensure the right of children and young persons to an education and to ensure that children have access to health, security, sport, art and leisure. To that end, it provides for the creation of child development centres and community daycares to provide professional care for the children of working mothers. To date, comprehensive care has been provided for 83,884 children under 6 years of age in 1,099 community daycares. Furthermore, the children have been provided with food, furniture, educational material and toys, as well as vaccinations for the purpose of preventing disease and chronic malnutrition. Through the 41 child development centres, the programme has also provided comprehensive health care, education and food security for 4,737 children under 6 years of age whose mothers are working in urban areas.

Finally, the Committee notes that discussions are currently taking place between the Government and the Inter-American Development Bank aimed at securing financing for the implementation in urban areas of a programme targeting families living in extreme poverty, due to be implemented in 2010–11. Child labour will be taken into account as an indicator when selecting the beneficiary families.

The Committee notes with interest the various measures taken by the Government to combat child labour. It strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to combat child labour and requests it to provide information on the measures which will be taken in this regard, particularly in the context of the PEPETI 2007–16, and on the results achieved.

Article 2, paragraph 1. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government that Ministerial Agreement JCHG-008-05-07 on the implementation of Act No. 474 provides that the General Directorate of Labour Inspection shall be responsible for the implementation of Act No. 474 and the organization of a system of inspection for the prevention of child labour and its supervision in accordance with the rights of young persons engaged in work in the formal and informal sectors. It also noted the Government's indication that, with a view to increasing labour inspection activities in the informal sector, and particularly to eliminating child labour, the labour inspection system had been strengthened through links with various governmental and non-governmental organizations. The labour inspectorate for children and the general labour inspectorate will therefore collaborate with a view to protecting children from work and its worst forms and removing them from exploitation. Taking due note of the information provided by the Government, the Committee requested it to provide information on the measures taken by the labour Inspectorate for children and the general labour Inspectorate to protect and remove children from child labour who are not bound by an employment relationship, such as those working on their own account.

The Committee notes the indication in the Government's report that the Ministries of Labour, Education and Health have supported and promoted an informal education pilot strategy entitled "Educational bridges" in the context of the coffee harvesting plan 2007–08, promoted by the CNEPTI. This strategy has been implemented on five coffee plantations and has benefited a total of 555 children in the Department of Jinotega.

The Committee observes that the Government has not provided any other information. Consequently, it once again requests it to provide information on the measures taken by the labour Inspectorate for children and the general labour Inspectorate to protect and remove from work children who are not bound by an employment relationship, such as those working on their own account.

Minimum age for admission to employment and light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Government had indicated in its report that Act No. 474 regulates work by children and establishes 14 years as the minimum age for admission to employment, without any exception to this age being envisaged. While noting the Government's indication, the Committee nonetheless noted once again that, according to the ENTIA 2005, a number of children aged between 12 and 14 years, which is below the minimum age for admission to employment, are engaged in work. It therefore recalled that, under Article 2(1) of the Convention, no one under the minimum age shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, with the exception of light work, and requested the Government to provide information on the measures that it intended to take to bring an end to work by children under 14 years of age. The Committee observes that the Government provides no information in this regard. It also notes the statistics provided by the Government with its report, according to which children under 14 years of age were found to be working in enterprises in various sectors, including agriculture and the industrial sector, during 2008 and 2009. Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the work of children under 14 years of age is brought to an end in practice and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 2, paragraph 3. Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to increase the school attendance rate and reduce the school drop-out rate so as to prevent children under 14 years of age from working, particularly on their own account. It also requested it to step up its efforts to combat child labour by strengthening measures that allow child workers to be integrated into the school system, whether formal or informal, or into vocational training, provided that the minimum age criteria with regard to employment or work are respected.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that one of the first measures taken was to promote and facilitate the education of children and young persons at the national level through its education policy for 2007–11 entitled "A ministry in the classroom". As a result of the implementation of this policy, nearly one million children and young persons of school age have benefited from free schooling, in accordance with the provisions of article 121 of the National Constitution.

The Committee also notes that a subcommittee (composed of members of the CNEPTI and of advisory bodies such as the ILO–IPEC programme, Save the Children, the CARE international intergovernmental development agency, UNICEF, as well as of engineers of the Programa Amor and projects aimed at child workers (ENTERATE, PRONIÑO, CUCULMECA, Fundación Eduquemos)), set up to define the methodologies and strategies to be implemented by the Ministry of Education in taking care of children excluded from the education system, while coordinating the actions provided for under the strategic plan and roadmap for declaring the country a child labour free zone. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Education and Sport has in turn launched a national literacy and education campaign for children and young persons excluded from the education system. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to increase the school attendance rate and facilitate the access of children to education, to prevent children from turning to work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 3, paragraph 2. Determination of hazardous types of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with satisfaction the adoption of Ministerial Agreement No. VGC-AM-0020-10-06 of 14 November 2006, on the list of hazardous types of work applicable in Nicaragua which was drawn up in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers and civil society and contains a detailed list of hazardous types of work. According to the Government's report, tripartite consultations on the matter of updating this list are currently being held within the National Occupational Safety and Health Council and the CNEPTI, but also with the labour Inspectorate for children. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of these consultations and to provide, if applicable, a copy of any related text or draft text.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clauses (a) and (b). Sale and trafficking of children and the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the national legislation does not contain provisions prohibiting the sale or trafficking of young persons under 18 years of age for economic exploitation or the procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. It expressed the strong hope that the draft amendment to the Penal Code would be adopted in the near future and that it would give effect to Article 3(a) and (b) of the Convention.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the promulgation of Act No. 641 of 16 November 2007 issuing the new Penal Code. The new Penal Code, which entered into force again in July 2008, defines commercial sexual exploitation in the chapter on "Offences against freedom and sexual integrity". These offences cover sexual exploitation, pornography and the sexual act with young persons in return for payment (section 175); the promotion of tourism for the purpose of sexual exploitation (section 177); aggravated procurement (section 179); procurement (section 180); and the trafficking of persons for the purposes of slavery or sexual exploitation (section 182). Furthermore, section 315 of Title X of the same Code on "Offences against labour rights" provides for the imposition of a prison sentence of five to eight years on anyone who, in the context of an employment relationship, subjects, forces or maintains another person in a situation of slavery or in conditions similar to slavery or forced labour. The same section provides for the imposition of penalties on persons who traffic other persons for the purpose of labour exploitation. It also provides for heavier penalties if the victims are children. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of the above provisions of the new Penal Code in practice, including, in particular, statistics on the number and nature of violations reported, the investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Clause (d). Hazardous work in agriculture. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the statistics available to the Office, 60 per cent of children who work in Nicaragua are engaged in activities in the agricultural sector, which is a branch of economic activity in which the working conditions may be hazardous for young persons under 18 years of age. It also noted that the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for young persons under 18 years of age, set out in the Ministerial Agreement of 14 November 2006, includes types of hazardous work in the agricultural sector. In view of the above statistics, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure that no young person under 18 years of age is engaged in the worst forms of hazardous work in agriculture, that those responsible for availing themselves of such labour are prosecuted and that effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed on such persons.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that tripartite consultations on the matter of updating the list of hazardous types of work are currently being held within the National Occupational Safety and Health Council and the National Committee on the Progressive Elimination of Child Labour (CNEPTI), but also with the labour inspectorate for children. The Committee also notes with interest that sections 315 and 317 of the new Penal Code provide respectively for a penalty of 2 to 4 years' imprisonment for anyone who recruits a minor under 18 years of age for the purpose of labour exploitation with the exception of cases authorized by law, as well as a prison sentence of 3 to 6 years and a financial penalty of 400 to 600 fine days for anyone who uses or allows children under 18 years of age to carry out work in unhealthy environments which pose a threat to their life, health or physical, psychological or moral integrity. These types of work include work in mines, underground, rubbish dumps, evening entertainment centres, involving the use of dangerous machinery, equipment and tools, the manual transport of heavy loads, toxic objects and substances, psychotropic substances, as well as night work in general or in any other task defined as hazardous work for children, in accordance with the relevant provisions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the consultations held with regard to the updating of the list of hazardous types of work, in particular hazardous work in agriculture, and to provide a copy of any relevant text or draft text. Furthermore, while welcoming the legal measures adopted with a view to ensuring that no child under 18 years of age is engaged in hazardous work and that any person who avails himself of such labour shall be liable to the above administrative and penal sanctions, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide information and statistics in its next report showing the impact, in practice, of these new provisions.

Domestic work. In its previous comments, the Committee encouraged the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that young persons under 18 years of age, particularly young girls, who are engaged in domestic service do not perform hazardous types of work, and expressed the hope that the preparatory work on the draft amendment to Title VIII of the Labour Code would be completed in the near future and that measures would be taken for its adoption very soon.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Act No. 666 of 4 September 2008 on domestic work and amending Chapter I of Title VIII of the Labour Code. This Act protects young persons working in domestic service by laying down the recruitment and working conditions, as well as the penalties applicable in the case of abuse, violence or humiliation of these young workers by the employer or his family. It also prescribes the obligation of the employer to notify the labour inspectorate of such recruitment and also provides for cash remuneration and a 6-hour day between 6 a.m. and 8 p.m. The employer is also under the obligation to promote and facilitate the education of his young domestic workers and register these workers under the social security scheme. Moreover, the wage paid must not be below the wage set by the National Minimum Wage Committee. The Act also provides for joint periodic inspections of the employer by the labour inspectorate and the Ministry of Family, Adolescence and Childhood. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Act No. 666 on domestic work in practice, including any difficulties encountered and, in particular, statistics on the inspections carried out, violations reported, administrative sanctions imposed, any criminal charges laid, prosecutions and penal sanctions imposed.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour. Commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments concerning the number of children removed from the sex trade and their rehabilitation and social integration, the Committee noted that, according to the 2007 evaluation reports on the ILO–IPEC regional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children (the regional project), a greater number of children are being targeted in Nicaragua. Accordingly, 1,720 children should receive direct assistance, of which 580 are in Nicaragua, and 18,000 should receive indirect assistance. The Committee strongly encouraged the Government to continue its efforts to combat commercial sexual exploitation. It requested it to provide information on the implementation of the ILO–IPEC regional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the National Plan to combat commercial sexual exploitation (2003–08), as well as on the number of children who are in practice removed from this worst form of child labour. The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the economic alternatives envisaged and on the measures taken to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of children removed from this worst form of child labour.

The Committee notes, among the information available to the ILO, that the general objectives of the National Plan to combat commercial sexual exploitation (2003–08) were: the gradual development of strategies and actions for the prevention and detection of commercial sexual exploitation of children and young persons, as well as for the protection and comprehensive care of victims; the modification of attitudes and values of the population in order to promote the elimination of commercial sexual exploitation of children and young persons; the improvement of access to the judicial system and the facilitation of the filing of complaints; the application of the relevant procedures; prevention; the punishment of those responsible; and the strengthening of the institutions responsible for implementing the plan so that they are in a position to take appropriate measures to achieve their objectives.

The Committee notes that, according to the Technical Progress Report (TPR) of 1 March 2009 on the ILO–IPEC regional project entitled “Contribution to the prevention and elimination of commercial sexual exploitation of children in Central America, Panama and the Dominican Republic”, a total of 320 children were removed or prevented from becoming engaged in the worst forms of child labour, such as trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, through the provision of educational services and training opportunities between September 2008 and February 2009, including 51 children in Nicaragua. It also notes that, during the same period, a further 87 children were removed or prevented from becoming engaged in the same worst forms of child labour, through the provision of services unrelated to education, including 14 children in Nicaragua.

The Committee also notes with interest that the Programa Amor (Government programme which since October 2008 has had the functions of the National Council for the Comprehensive Protection of Childhood and Adolescence (CONAPINA) and which, as a result, is now responsible for monitoring the national policy and the National Plan to combat commercial sexual exploitation) aims to restore the rights of 25,000 street children and young persons, who are very vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation, and that the Government has set the objectives of integrating all children into the education system and ensuring that they receive social benefits by 2011.

The Committee also notes that programmes such as the “Zero interest” programme and the “Zero hunger” programme, implemented in the context of the Programa Amor, also constitute Government efforts to help the most vulnerable families. The “Zero interest” programme is designed to help and benefit thousands of women who are unable to obtain credit from the private financial system to strengthen their small enterprises, while the “Zero hunger” programme is a proposal for the provision of ecologically friendly agricultural technologies for poor rural families which can be turned into capital, but also a proposal for assistance and support in organizing their production activities.

The Government also points out in its report that one of the actions aimed at protecting working children and young persons is the amendment of the technical inspection guide with regard to the inspection of work carried out by children and young persons. It also indicates that the Ministry of Labour has implemented programmes of special inspections targeting 101 night clubs, massage centres, restaurants, hotels and snooker halls in markets in the Departments of Managua and Río San Juan, and that fines have been imposed on eight enterprises for obstructing the work of labour inspectors. The Government also indicates that statistics on child labour and the worst forms of child labour are gathered and dealt with in a manner that enables the Ministry of Labour to apply the necessary corrective measures. It also notes that issues relating to child labour and its gradual elimination are included in the Decent Work Programme, although they still come under the ILO–IPEC programme. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on any other measures implemented under the ILO–IPEC regional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the Programa Amor and on the results achieved. It also requests it to provide information on the number of children who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration, following their removal from the worst forms of child labour.

Child labour in agriculture. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Nicaragua had signed a memorandum of understanding with the ILO–IPEC for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, particularly in the agricultural sector. It requested the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent children from being engaged in hazardous types of work in the agricultural sector and to provide information on the number of children who are in practice removed from this worst form of child labour. It also requested the Government to provide information on the economic alternatives envisaged, as well as on the measures taken to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of children removed from this worst form of child labour. Noting that no information has been provided by the Government concerning other measures aimed at eliminating, in practice, child labour in agriculture, or on the number of children who are in practice removed from this worst form of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to provide this information in its next report.

Article 8. International cooperation. Commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the ILO–IPEC regional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children envisages the strengthening of horizontal collaboration between participating countries. The Committee was of the view that international cooperation between law enforcement agencies is indispensable to prevent and eliminate commercial sexual exploitation, through the collection and exchange of information and assistance with a view to detecting, prosecuting and convicting the individuals involved and repatriating the victims. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken in the context of the implementation of the ILO–IPEC regional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children with a view to cooperating with the countries participating in the project and thereby strengthening security measures so as to bring an end to this worst form of child labour. Noting that the Government has not replied to its request for information, the Committee once again requests it to provide information on any measures implemented in the context of the ILO–IPEC regional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children relating to cooperation with other beneficiary countries with a view to strengthening security measures so as to bring an end to this worst form of child labour and on the results achieved.

Protocol respecting the repatriation of child victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted the Protocol respecting repatriation procedures for children and young persons who are victims of trafficking (Protocol) adopted by the Ministry of the National Coalition to Combat the Trafficking of Persons. It also noted that, under section 2 of the Protocol, its objective is to establish interinstitutional coordination mechanisms to offer special protection to child victims of trafficking and to facilitate their repatriation. The Committee also noted that the Protocol applies to both Nicaraguan child victims of trafficking abroad and to foreign victims of trafficking to Nicaragua. The Committee requested it to provide information on the implementation of the Protocol by indicating, in particular, the number of Nicaraguan and foreign child victims of this worst form of child labour who have been repatriated. Noting that the Government has not provided the information requested, the Committee once again requests it to provide information on any measures implemented under the above Protocol with a view to providing special protection for child victims of trafficking and facilitating their repatriation, and statistics on the number of children repatriated.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nigeria

Minimum Age (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 123) (ratification: 1974)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalled that for a number of years, it had been requesting the Government to indicate measures taken to give effect to the Convention (Article 4(5)), under which the employer shall make available to the workers' representatives, at their request, lists of the persons who are employed in work underground and who are less than two years older than the minimum age specified by the Government which is 16 years. The lists should contain the dates of birth of persons aged between 16 and 18 years and the dates at which they were employed or worked underground in the undertaking for the first time.

The Committee noted that under section 62 of the Labour Act, every employer is required to keep a register of all young persons in his employment with particulars of their ages, the date of employment and the conditions and nature of their employment and to produce the register for inspection when required by an authorized labour officer. The Committee further noted that under section 91(1) of the same Act, "young person" means a person under the age of 18 years and "industrial undertaking" includes mines, quarries and other works for the extraction of minerals from the earth. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that section 62 of the Labour Act is amended so that such registers may also be made available to workers' representatives, at their request. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Oman

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (d). Hazardous work. Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that Omani law provides that juveniles under the age of 18 may not be employed in mines and quarries or in hazardous work. It also noted that an Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Committee had been established between government ministries and private sector establishments, and was in charge, amongst others, of determining activities that were hazardous or physically demanding. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on a provisional list of 43 hazardous occupations, types of work and industries prohibited for juveniles under the age of 18 years, which had been determined by the OSH Committee. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that it is currently preparing a new list of hazardous occupations, in consultation with the social partners, following the establishment of the Confederation of the Workers of the Sultanate of Oman. The Committee firmly hopes that this list, determining the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under 18 years of age, will be adopted as soon as possible. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this list, once adopted.

Camel jockeys. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed concern for the health and safety of children under 18 years of age involved in camel racing and subject to exploitation. The Committee noted that while the Regulations on holding and organizing camel races in the Sultanate of Oman (Camel Race Regulations), issued by the Oman Equestrian and Camel Federation (OFRC) on 7 August 2005, state that no jockey under 18 years of age will be allowed to take part in camel races, section 2 of these Regulations states that this minimum age would be reached progressively starting from a minimum age of 14 years, over four years starting from the 2005–06 season. The Committee also noted that the OFRC had issued a decision which specifies the gradual increase in the age of camel jockeys to 18 years in 2010, in order to take part in camel races.

The Committee noted the Government's information that the OFRC fully observes the measures set down to protect the health and safety of camel jockeys under 18 years of age, by obliging them to wear protective headgear and suitable clothing. It also noted the Government's information that races only occur in Oman when the OFRC – working under the direct supervision of the Ministry of Sport Activities – agrees that all conditions are respected, including the age and health of camel jockeys, and conditions regarding the safety measures are fulfilled. According to the Government, the OFRC continued to undertake unannounced inspection visits to verify that the age of camel jockeys is not less than 15 years (the minimum age for camel jockeys at the time). Meanwhile, in 2007, all camel jockeys participating in camel races were required to register their names with the OFRC and hand over their passports, personal photographs and birth certificates to the OFRC. The Committee requested the Government to continue providing information on the progress in raising the minimum age for taking part in camel races to 18 years. It also requested the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that the measures aimed at protecting the health and safety of camel jockeys under 18 years of age are strictly enforced, pending the progressive increase in the minimum age to 18 for camel racing.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the targeted minimum age of 18 years will be reached in the forthcoming 2009–10 season. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that the OFRC takes measures to ensure the application of the current rules and that the necessary precautions are taken in relation to the organization of races. The Committee further notes that organizers and supervisors verify the age of camel jockeys through their identity card issued by the State, based on a birth certificate and that a person shall be excluded from the race if he does not meet the conditions of racing, particularly the age requirements. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Regulations on holding and organizing camel races in the Sultanate of Oman (Camel Race Regulations), issued by the Oman Equestrian and Camel Federation on 7 August 2005, prohibiting the use of children under the age of 18 as camel jockeys will be strictly and effectively enforced in the 2009–10 camel racing season. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure the effective implementation of these regulations, including through unannounced inspections carried out by the labour inspectorate. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, and the results obtained, with regard to the elimination of the use of camel jockeys under the age of 18.

Article 7, paragraph 1. Penalties. The Committee previously noted that Decision No. 30-2002 of 8 August 2005 of the OFRC states that any person who violates the Camel Race Regulations shall be convicted by the courts. The Committee noted that the Government supplied a document showing the list of names of camel jockeys prohibited from participating in camel races by the OFRC, including two cases concerning a violation of the rules on the legal age to participate in camel races. The Committee observed that the Government's report contained no information on the penalties imposed on persons who use under age children as camel jockeys in camel races in violation of Decision No. 30-2002 of 8 August 2005, and requested the Government to provide information on the penalties imposed.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the relevant bodies shall promulgate regulations and a statute on penalties with regard to the use of under age racing, after the application of the progressive age of 18 years during the 2009–10 season, and that it will communicate any developments in this regard. The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government's report on the application of penalties imposed, pursuant to Decision No. 30-2002 of 8 August 2005, on persons who use under age camel jockeys. The Committee reminds the Government that, according to Article 7(1), of the Convention, the Government is required to take all necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including by laying down and imposing penal sanctions or, if appropriate, other sanctions. As the minimum age of 18 for camel jockeys comes into effect in the forthcoming 2009–10 season, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties exist for the use of persons under 18 as camel jockeys, and that these penalties are applied in practice. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of penalties for the use of camel jockeys under the age of 18, including statistics on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Pakistan

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the Government's report and the communications of the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) of 30 March 2007 and of the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF) of 2 May 2007.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee had previously noted the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), according to which trafficking in persons is a serious problem in Pakistan, including the trafficking of children. Women and children reportedly arrive from Bangladesh, Myanmar, Afghanistan, Sri Lanka and India, many to be bought and sold in shops and brothels. The Committee had also noted that the ITUC's allegations that several hundred boys from Pakistan were trafficked to the Gulf States to work as camel jockeys. Moreover, in some rural areas, children are sold into debt bondage in exchange for money or land. The Committee had noted that the ILO–IPEC launched in 2000 the subregional project to combat child trafficking (TICSA) in Bangladesh, Nepal and Sri Lanka and that the project was subsequently extended to Pakistan, Indonesia and Thailand. According to the project report of September 2002 (pages 14–15), approximately 100,000 women and children were internally trafficked in Pakistan, and approximately 200,000 women and children were trafficked from Bangladesh to Pakistan between 1990 and 2000. The Committee had also noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC/C/15/Add.217, 27 October 2003, paragraph 76), while noting the serious efforts undertaken by the State party to prevent child trafficking, had expressed its deep concern at the very high incidence of trafficking in children for the purposes of sexual exploitation, bonded labour and camel jockeying.

The Committee had observed that sections 2(f) and 3 of the Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance of 2002 provide that human trafficking for the purpose of exploitative entertainment (i.e. activities in connection with sex), slavery or forced labour is prohibited. Section 370 of the Penal Code also prohibits the sale and trafficking of persons for the purpose of slavery.

The Committee notes that, according to the Technical Project Report of March 2006 for the second phase of the TICSA project (TICSA-II), a regional legal review was commissioned in early 2005 and has been completed to contribute to the improvement of national capacity to make legal reforms in the light of the international instruments to combat trafficking and towards effective enforcement of relevant laws and regulations to combat child trafficking for sexual and labour exploitation. By reviewing the Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance of 2002, it was observed that the definition of "human trafficking" fails to recognize the transfer and transportation of persons as important parts of the trafficking process. Moreover, the definition focuses only on transportation in and out of Pakistan and ignores trafficking within Pakistan, which is prevalent in the country. The Committee noted that in order to discuss the findings of the review, a tripartite regional workshop was organized and that recommendations were made to amend the legislation and strengthen implementing and monitoring mechanisms.

The Committee consequently observes that, although national legislation exists to prohibit the trafficking of children for labour or sexual exploitation, it is not comprehensive and trafficking remains an issue of concern in practice. The Committee once again requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the transfer and transportation of children under 18 years of age for labour and sexual exploitation, as well as the internal trafficking of children under 18 for the same purposes, is effectively prohibited in national legislation. The Committee also once again invites the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the situation and to take the necessary measures to eliminate the internal and cross-border trafficking of children under 18 for labour and sexual exploitation. It once again asks the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Debt bondage. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the ITUC's indications that Pakistan has several million bonded labourers, including a large number of children. Debt slavery and bonded labour are mostly reported in agriculture, construction (in particular in rural areas), brick kilns and carpet-making sectors. The Committee had also noted that the Federal Cabinet approved a National Policy and Plan of Action for the Abolition of Bonded Labour and Rehabilitation of Freed Bonded Labourers (National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour) in September 2001, but that its implementation has been slow. The Committee had noted that, by virtue of section 4(1) of the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act (BLSA), 1992, "the bonded labour system shall stand abolished and every bonded labourer shall stand free and discharged from any obligation to render any bonded labour". Section 4(2) of the BLSA states that no one shall make an advance under or in pursuance of the bonded labour system or other forms of forced labour.

The Committee noted that, in its report submitted under Convention No. 29, the Government specifies recent initiatives against bonded labour it is taking or contemplating, apparently within the framework of its National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour, including the establishment of a legal aid service and the incorporation of the issue of child bonded labour into the syllabi of the judicial, police and civil service academies. The Committee also noted that an ILO project to promote the elimination of bonded labour in Pakistan (PEBLIP) is being implemented for the period of March 2007 to April 2010 as an expansion and continuation of ongoing technical cooperation undertaken by the ILO in Pakistan since 2001. One of the key strategies of this project is to focus on policy and law revision to create a national conducive environment and to develop institutional capacity for its effective implementation, while the key implementation mechanism will be the National Committee on Bonded Labour, a tripartite-plus standing committee established under the National Policy on Abolition of Bonded Labour. The project aims to protect bonded labourers, prevent women and men who are at risk of falling into bondage and assist the families that have been released from bondage.

The Committee once again reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, child debt bondage is prohibited, and that, under Article 1 of the Convention, it is obliged to take immediate measures to prohibit and eliminate this worst form of child labour. While recognizing the initiatives taken by the Government pursuant to the National Policy on Abolition of Bonded Labour, the Committee once again requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure its effective implementation. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the impact of the ILO PEBLIP project on the situation of child bonded labourers in Pakistan, notably with regard to the removal of children under 18 from bonded labour and their rehabilitation.

Article 3(d) and Article 4, paragraph 1. Hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted that article 11(3) of the Constitution states that “no child below the age of fourteen years shall be engaged in any factory or mine or any other hazardous employment”. The Committee had also noted that sections 2 and 3 of the Employment of Children Act of 1991 provide that children under 14 years of age shall not be employed in the occupations listed in Parts I and II of the Schedule of the Employment of Children Act which provide for a detailed list of the types of work that children under 14 years of age shall not perform. Section 12 of the Employment of Children Rules of 1995 also provides for types of work that shall not be performed by children under 14. The Committee had also observed that night work between 7 p.m. and 8 a.m. is prohibited for children under 14 years of age under section 7 of the Employment of Children Act of 1991. The Committee had further noted the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Labour, Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis was working on the consolidation and rationalization of labour laws which will include amending the definition of a child so as to bring its legislation into line with the Convention. The Government had added that the process requires the approval of Parliament, which takes time.

The Committee noted that, according to the information provided by the Government, the Employment of Children Act, as amended by Act No. 1280(1) of 2005, includes in the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 14 years of age “work in underground mines and quarries including blasting and assisting in blasting”. The Committee once again recalls that, under Article 3(d) of the Convention, children under 18 shall not perform work which, by its nature of the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm their health, safety or morals. The Committee accordingly once again requests the Government to take immediate measures as a matter of urgency to ensure that the legislation is amended to raise the minimum age for admission to hazardous work to 18. It also once again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the types of hazardous work, in particular those provided in Parts I and II of the Schedule of the Employment of Children Act, are prohibited to children under 18 years of age.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Local vigilance committees. The Committee had noted, in its previous comments, the ITUC’s indication that the BLSA prohibits bonded labour but remains ineffective in practice. It had also noted that local vigilance committees were constituted to monitor the implementation of the BLSA but that there were reports of serious corruption within these committees. The Committee had noted that the vigilance committees are composed of the deputy commissioner of the district, representatives of the police, the judiciary, the legal profession, the municipal authorities; and under the recommendation of the ILO Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, membership was extended to include workers’ and employers’ representatives. The Committee had also noted the Government’s statement that efforts were being made to implement the BLSA with an Anti-Corruption Strategy that was formulated in 2003. The Committee had noted that, in the framework of the 2007 ILO PEBLIP project, the vigilance committees will also ensure better on-ground implementation of project activities. Furthermore, according to the Government’s report submitted under Convention No. 29, one of the recent initiatives taken by the Government within the framework of the National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour is to organize training workshops for key district government officials and other stakeholders to enhance their capacity and enable them to draw up district-level plans to identify bonded labourers and activate the district vigilance committees. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken by the local vigilance committees to ensure the effective implementation of the BLSA and of the ILO PEBLIP project to promote the elimination of bonded labour, and the results achieved. It also requests the Government to indicate whether the Anti-Corruption Strategy has contributed to improving the implementation of the BLSA.

Labour inspection. The Committee had noted, in its previous comments concerning the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the measures taken by the Government in cooperation with ILO-IPEC to reinforce labour inspection so as to efficiently combat child labour. The Committee had noted, however, the ITUC’s indications that the number of inspectors is insufficient, that they lack training and are reported to be open to corruption. The ITUC had added that inspections do not take place in undertakings employing less than ten employees, where most child labour occurs. The Committee notes the indication of the PWF, according to which the Government of Pakistan should take more effective measures to monitor the use of child labour in the informal sector with the cooperation of the “Independent Labour Inspection Machinery”. Furthermore, in communications sent to the Office with the Government’s report under Convention No. 81, the PWF indicated that the governments of the two largest provinces of the country, namely Sindh and Punjab, have no system for supervising the application of the legislation. According to the PWF, these governments apply a policy of not inspecting a business for one year following its establishment. The PWF, in a communication of May 2007, further indicated that in the two abovementioned provinces, inspectors may not enter a workplace without prior permission from the employer or prior notice on the employer. The Committee also noted that, in its communication of 21 September 2008, the PWF observed that the Employment of Children Act of 1991 needs to be implemented more effectively. In this regard, the PWF indicated that it held a bilateral dialogue with the Federal Minister and the provincial governments to enforce the provisions of this Act through an effective labour inspection mechanism.

The Committee had noted that, according to the Technical Progress Report of March 2007 for the ILO-IPEC project to combat child labour in the carpet industry, the ILO’s external monitoring system is in place in each district of Pakistan and independent verification of the child labour situation is being done continuously through the ILO’s external monitoring system. In the case of the carpet weaving industry, the Committee noted that 4,865 monitoring visits have been made to 3,147 workplaces in the project areas, while 2,569 visits have been made to non-formal education centres to verify that children who were prevented or withdrawn from carpet weaving were actually attending schools. The Committee also noted that, according to the information available to the Office under Convention No. 81, a tripartite workshop organized jointly with the ILO-IPEC on "Revitalizing Labour Inspections System in Punjab" was held on 22 and 23 August 2007 in Lahore. In the course of the workshop, various issues were addressed including the Government's labour inspection policy. The Committee nevertheless noted the information provided by the Government that 49,547 inspections were carried out in 2005, 9,286 in 2006 and 322 in 2007. It observed with concern that, according to those statistics, the number of inspections had decreased dramatically from 2005 to 2007. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue taking measures to train labour inspectors and provide them with adequate human and financial resources in order to enable them to monitor the effective implementation of the national provisions giving effect to the Convention, in all sectors where the worst forms of child labour exist and, more specifically, to strengthen the monitoring systems in the Punjab and Sindh provinces. It also requests the Government to provide more information on the number of workplaces investigated per year, and on the findings of labour inspectors with regard to the extent and nature of violations detected concerning children involved in the worst forms of child labour.

Article 6. Programmes of action. TICSА-II project. The Committee had previously noted that the subregional project to combat child trafficking (TICSА) aimed at, amongst other things, determining the demand side of trafficking of children and women in Pakistan for labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee noted that, according to the Technical Project Report of March 2006 for the second phase of the TICSА project (TICSА-II), the regional study on the demand side of trafficking in Asia has been completed. The Committee also noted that an Information Kit on Human Trafficking was developed in English and Urdu to provide training to district officials, representatives of workers' and employers' organizations, non-governmental organizations and other relevant groups in the districts of Sindh and Punjab. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken as a result of the regional study on the demand side of trafficking in Asia and information on the use and efficacy of the Information Kit on Human Trafficking.

Article 7, paragraph 1. Penalties. The Committee had previously noted the ITUC's indication that persons found guilty of violating child labour legislation are rarely prosecuted and that when they are prosecuted, the fines imposed are usually insignificant. The Committee noted the APFTU's indication, in its recent communication, that, although child labour is prohibited by national legislation, the reality of the situation shows that child labour and its worst forms are still widespread.

The Committee noted that, according to the information provided by the Government, the number of prosecutions decreased from 377 in 2005, to 55 in 2006, to none in 2007. The Committee observed that the statistics provided by the Government offer no particular indication as to whether the prosecutions that were reported relate to cases which involved the engagement of children under 18 years of age in the worst forms of child labour. The Committee once again recalls that, by virtue of Article 7(1), of the Convention, the Government shall take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the application of dissuasive sanctions. The Committee once again emphasizes the importance of taking the necessary measures to ensure that whoever violates the legal provisions giving effect to the Convention is prosecuted and to press for the imposition of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penal sanctions. It also once again requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the laws, including the number of infringements reported of the abovementioned provisions, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Bonded labour. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the Rapid Assessment Studies on Bonded Labour in Different Sectors in Pakistan of 2004, workers in the brick kiln sector were not aware of the general legislation that applies to bondage. It noted that, in the framework of the 2007 ILO PEBLIP project, one of the followed strategies is to field-test tripartite models for the prevention of bonded labour, in particular through pilot initiatives in the brick kiln sector in Punjab. The project also aims to launch a national-level programme on awareness raising. The Committee once again requests the Government to supply information on the impact of the ILO PEBLIP project on preventing children under 18 years of age from being engaged in bonded labour, especially in the brick kiln sector.

Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking. The Committee had noted that, according to the Technical Progress Report of March 2006 for the ILO-IPEC TICSА-II project, the Child Protection and Rehabilitation Bureau (CPRB) that has been established in Lahore to rehabilitate street children has also been assigned the task of housing returned camel jockeys from the United Arab Emirates and of facilitating their reintegration within their families and communities. The Committee also noted that the Regional Child Friendly Guidelines for the Rehabilitation of the Victims of Trafficking have been developed in the framework of the TICSА-II project. The objective of this activity is to contribute to the improvement of the overall services at the rehabilitation shelters during the process of recovery and rehabilitation of the child victims of trafficking. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation who were effectively withdrawn and rehabilitated by the CPRB or other rehabilitation shelters.

Child bonded labourers. The Committee had previously noted that the European Union and the ILO were assisting the Government in the setting up of 18 community education and action centres for combating exploitative child labour through prevention, withdrawal and rehabilitation of former child bonded labourers. The Committee had also noted that the Government had established a "Fund for the education of working children and rehabilitation of freed bonded labourers". The Committee had noted that the 2007 ILO PEBLIP project to promote the elimination of bonded labour in Pakistan aims to provide social and economic assistance to the families that have been released from bondage to help them re-establish their lives. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the abovementioned measures on removing children from bonded labour and on providing for their rehabilitation and social integration.

Children working in the carpet industry. The Committee had previously noted the ITUC's indication that 1.2 million children were reported to work in the carpet industry, which is a hazardous industry. It had noted that the Pakistan Carpet Manufacturers' and Exporters' Association (PCMEA) and ILO-IPEC launched in 1998 a project to combat child labour in the carpet industry which had, so far, contributed to the withdrawal of 13,000 carpet-weaving children (83 per cent of whom were girls) from hazardous working conditions. The Committee had noted that, according to the March 2007 Technical Progress Report for the second phase of the ILO-IPEC project to combat child labour in the carpet industry, a baseline survey on child labour in the carpet weaving industry in the province of Sindh has been completed. According to this survey, there are over 25,752 carpet weaving households in the Sindh province with an estimated 33,735 carpet weaving children, out of which 24,023 are estimated to be below 14 years of age and 9,712 are between 14 and 18 years of age. The Committee had noted with interest that 11,933 children (8,776 girls and 3,157 boys) have been withdrawn from carpet weaving and enrolled in non-formal education centres. The Committee once again encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to rehabilitate children under 18 years of age who undertake hazardous work in the carpet weaving industry and to provide information on the results achieved.

Children working in the surgical instruments industry. The Committee had previously noted the ITUC's indication that children constitute about 15 per cent of the workforce in the surgical instruments industry, which is one of the most hazardous industries. The Committee had also noted that the ILO-IPEC, with the assistance of the Italian social partners and the Surgical Instruments Manufacturers' Association of Pakistan, launched in 2000, a project to combat hazardous and exploitative child labour in surgical instruments manufacturing through prevention, withdrawal and rehabilitation. Under its direct action programmes, 1,496 children employed in surgical instruments production workshops had received non-formal education and pre-vocational training. The Committee had noted that this project had been extended up to 2006 to cover a larger number of children. It notes that, according to the progress report for the second phase of the ILO-IPEC project of January 2005 to May 2006, 2,033 children working in the surgical instruments industry received non-formal education through their placement in non-formal education centres or non-formal education cells with mobile teaching systems. The Committee had noted with interest that, of these children, 633 were mainstreamed from the non-formal education centres to neighbouring schools, thereby withdrawn completely from work, while 137 children have left the surgical trade due to other project interventions. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to withdraw and rehabilitate once again children under 18 years of age performing hazardous types of work in the surgical instruments industry and to provide information on the results achieved.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child bonded labourers in mines. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the Rapid Assessment Studies on Bonded Labour in Different Sectors in Pakistan (Chapter 4 on the mining sector, pages 1, 24 and 25), some miners ask their children of 10 years of age to work with them in mines to lighten the burden of peshgi (i.e. any advance whether in cash or in kind made to the labourer). Thus, in Punjab and in the North-West Frontier Province (NWFP), children are usually assigned the job of taking donkeys underground and bringing them out laden with coal. The rapid assessment also indicates that children working in mines are sexually abused by miners. The Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary effective and time-bound measures to eliminate child debt bondage in mines, as a matter of urgency.

Children working in brick kilns. The Committee had previously noted that nearly half of children aged 10–14 working in brick kilns work more than ten hours a day without any safeguards and that working in the kilns is a particularly hazardous occupation for children. The Committee had noted that, according to the Technical Progress Report of March 2007 for the ILO-IPEC project to combat child labour in the carpet industry, 3,315 children have been withdrawn from trades, including agriculture, scavenging and the brick kilns industry. The Committee once again requests the Government to pursue its efforts to protect children under 18 engaged in the brick kilns sector from hazardous work and to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation. The Committee had previously noted that Pakistan participates in the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC). The Committee had noted that the Government signed the SAARC Convention on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Women and Children for Prostitution in 2002. It had noted that according to the ILO-IPEC TICSAs report of September 2002, the signatories had committed themselves to develop a regional plan of action and to establish a regional task force against trafficking. The Committee had also noted that, according to the ILO-IPEC Technical Progress Report of September 2004, Pakistan signed Memoranda of Understanding with Thailand and Afghanistan to promote bilateral cooperation and address various issues of mutual interest including human trafficking. The Committee had noted that, according to the March 2006 Technical Progress Report for the ILO-IPEC TICSAs-II project, national governments in the Asia-Pacific region increasingly recognize the interrelationship between unregulated labour migration and child trafficking and this new realization is leading towards an approach in dealing with the human trafficking issues within the migration framework. According to the report, newly signed bilateral agreements could contribute positively to efforts to combat child trafficking. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in the launching of a regional plan of action and regional task force against trafficking. It also asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the Memoranda of Understanding signed with Afghanistan and Thailand, as well as of any other bilateral agreement, on the elimination of child trafficking.

Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that accurate data on the extent of bonded labour is essential to develop effective programmes to eliminate debt bondage. The Committee once again encourages the Government to undertake a nationwide survey in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations and with human rights institutions and organizations to determine the extent of child debt bondage and its characteristics.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Peru

The Committee notes the communications of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 24 August 2006 and 26 August 2009.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (d). Hazardous types of work. Children who work in mines. In its observations, the ITUC indicates that workers and their families exploit artisanal mines, which are mines abandoned by industrial producers in the country. The children work from the age of 5 and help their mothers to pick up rocks containing gold deposits. When they are older, they work with their father and sometimes dive into flooded shafts to retrieve stones. In the case of gold, the children use mercury, which is toxic, to extract the gold from the rocks. They also transport gold outside the mine, carrying very heavy loads of stone and rocks on their backs. The mines are located in unhealthy places and the children are therefore exposed to serious injury and harm. The children breathe in the contaminated air and are exposed to soil and water that is contaminated with metals and chemical products. The mining industry is concentrated in the districts of Madre de Dios, Puno, Ayacucho, Arequipa and La Libertad.

In its report, the Government indicates that Act No. 28992 of 27 March 2007, replacing the third final and transitional provision of Act No. 27651 on the formalization and promotion of small-scale and artisanal mining, prohibits the employment of persons under 18 years of age in mining of any description. The Committee also notes that, in accordance with Supreme Decree No. 007-2006-MINDES (Supreme Decree No. 007-2006), approving a detailed list of the types work and activity that are hazardous or harmful for the physical and moral health of young persons and are prohibited for such persons, namely any person between 12 and 18 years, work in mines is considered to be a hazardous type of work.

However, the Committee notes that, according to an ILO/IPEC study of 2007 on girls in mining, both boys and girls are in practice engaged in hazardous types of work in small artisanal mines, with girls being increasingly frequently involved in extraction, transport and transformation activities. It notes that, according to the information contained in a document relating to the National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2005–10), the number of children working in artisanal mines in Peru is estimated at around 50,000. The Committee further notes that, in its concluding observations on the third periodic report of Peru of March 2006 (CRC/C/PER/CO/3, paragraph 62), the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed deep concern at the information that hundreds of thousands of children and adolescents are on the labour market, especially in the informal sector, where they are the victims of exploitation. The Committee on the Rights of the Child also expressed concern that legislative provisions protecting children from economic exploitation are often violated and that children are exposed to dangerous and/or degrading work, including in mines.

The Committee expresses deep concern with regard to the use of children in hazardous types of work in mines. It reminds the Government that under the terms of Article 3(d) of the Convention, hazardous types of work constitute one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures shall be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worse forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure that no young person under 18 years of age is engaged in hazardous types of work in mines, and particularly in artisanal mines. It further requests the Government to provide information on the effect given in practice to the national legislation governing hazardous types of work, including statistics on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations undertaken, prosecutions, convictions and the penalties imposed.

Child domestic workers. In its comments, the ITUC indicates that the practice exists in Peru of parents sending their children to work as domestic workers in the city with a view to helping the family. However, the children do not usually receive any benefits, except for food and accommodation from their employer. These children have to cook, clean, wash clothes, look after other children and go shopping. According to the ITUC, child domestic workers have long hours of work in the day. They work at least 12 hours a day and are on call 24 hours a day. Many work without any time off and without any leave. A very large number of these children are the victims of abuse and exploitation, such as verbal abuse and physical punishment. Sexual abuse also occurs, although to a lesser extent. In most cases, the children lose contact with their parents. The ITUC adds that at the national level the number of domestic workers is estimated at 300,000, of whom 110,000 are reported to be under 18 years of age. Although the national legislation recognizes the rights of domestic workers, such as eight hour working days, public holidays and 15 days holiday a year, it is not applied as very few workers are aware of their rights and very few employers worry about complying with the obligations imposed upon them by law. The ITUC concludes that the authorities responsible for supervising the application of the law need to implement it more rigorously.

The Committee notes that, according to the 2007 ILO–IPEC study on approaches to prevention and the vulnerability of children engaged in domestic work in families which live in rural and urban areas, domestic work by children is widespread in the country. It further notes that, in accordance with Supreme Decree No. 007-2006, domestic work is considered to be a hazardous type of work in view of the working conditions involved. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour, and especially hazardous types of work, and to provide information on this matter.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Children who work in mines. The Committee notes the indication by the ITUC that there are at present no concrete policies for the eradication of child labour in mines. The Committee notes that, in accordance with the National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2005–10), work by children in mines is one of the worst forms of child labour and its objectives include the prevention and elimination of these forms of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the time-bound measures adopted in the context of the implementation of the National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour with a view to preventing children from being employed in mines and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from this worst form of child labour. In particular, it requests the Government to indicate the number of children who are prevented in practice from being engaged in hazardous types of work in mines and who are removed from these types of work. Finally, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure the rehabilitation of these children.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic workers. In its comments, the ITUC indicates that there are no programmes intended to help children engaged in domestic work. The ITUC adds that very few or no shelters have the means to provide assistance to child domestic workers, such as education and training services, advice or financial assistance. The Committee notes that the elimination of work by children as domestic workers, as a hazardous form of work, is included in the objectives of the National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2005–10). The Committee observes that children, and particularly young girls, when engaged in domestic work are often the victims of exploitation, which can take on very diverse forms, and that it is difficult to supervise their conditions of work due to the clandestine nature of such activities. The Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective time-bound measures in the context of the National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2005–10) with a view to protecting children engaged in domestic work from the worst forms of child labour, removing them and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration, particularly through the establishment of shelters provided with the necessary resources.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Philippines

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee had previously noted the Government's information that the Department of Labor and Employment is implementing a Working Youth Center programme which caters to employed, self-employed and under-employed persons between 15 and 30 years of age. It had further noted that, according to the statistical information contained in the Labor Force Survey for 2005 provided by the Government, there were 155,000 self-employed children aged 5–17 years found to be working. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the manner in which self-employed children are covered by the protection provided for in the Convention.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report, that several ordinances are in place at the local level which prohibit the employment of children both within and outside an employment relationship in certain sectors, such as: begging or any other services for pay in the streets; hiring or employing children in any business or entertainment establishments; work as waiter/waitresses/entertainers; and manufacturing of pyrotechnics or fire crackers. It also notes that by virtue of section 4 of the Department Order No. 4 of 1999, persons aged 15–18 years may be allowed to engage in domestic or household service. The Committee observes, however, that there appear to be no provisions which provide for the application of the minimum age provision to children working in the agricultural sector. In this context, the Committee notes that according to the Government's report of 20 March 2009 to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC/C/PHL/3-4, paragraph 255), the 2001 survey on working children reported that there were 4 million children engaged in economic activity, out of which 2.3 million children were found to be working in the agricultural sector. Observing that a very large number of children work in the agricultural sector, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children under the minimum age specified by the Government (15 years) working in the agricultural sector enjoy the protection afforded by the Convention. In this regard, it requests the Government to envisage taking measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services so that they can secure the protection set out in the Convention for children working in the informal sector, such as agriculture.

Article 2, paragraph 3. Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee had previously noted that schooling is compulsory for children aged 6–12 years. It had also noted the Government's indication that no measures had been taken to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling to 15. The Committee had therefore requested the Government to strengthen its measures in order to increase school attendance and reduce drop-out rates, so as to prevent the engagement of children in child labour. The Committee notes the Government's information on the various measures undertaken to keep children in school, which include: (a) an alternative learning system for the disadvantaged children and out-of-school children; (b) Project EASE which provides self-learning modules; (c) the Modified In-school Off-School Project which provide self-learning modules for elementary students; (d) an Education Voucher System which provides vouchers to poor or deserving elementary students to enrol in private schools; and (e) the Special Programme for Employment of Students to facilitate drop-outs and other employed students to pursue their education. The Committee further notes the statistical data provided by the Government on the school enrolment and drop-out rates estimated by the Department of Education. According to this data, the net enrolment ratio at the elementary and secondary levels for the year 2006–07 was 83.22 per cent and 58.59 per cent, respectively. With regard to school drop-out rates, in 2006–07 the school drop-out rates at the elementary level was 6.37 per cent, and at the secondary level it was 8.55 per cent. The Committee observes that the school drop-out rates fell by 0.96 per cent at the elementary level and by 3.96 per cent at the secondary level. However, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report of 20 March 2009 to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC/C/PHL/3-4, paragraph 211) that there is a serious concern about the increasing number of children who are not able to go to school which is currently estimated at 4.2 million. Considering that free and compulsory education is one of the effective means of combating child labour, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the age of completion of schooling to 15 years. It also requests the Government to continue taking measures to improve the functioning of the education system, in particular by increasing school enrolment and attendance rates among children under 15 years of age at the primary as well as the secondary level.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that according to the information provided by the Government in its report under Convention No. 182, the Sagip Batang Manggagawa, an inter-agency mechanism to monitor and rescue children from child labour and its worst forms has been operational in 16 regions around the country. From 1998 to 2008, a total of 806 rescue operations were conducted with a total of 2,711 child labourers rescued. It also notes that the Philippines has stepped into a second phase of the Philippine Time Bound Programme (PTBP) for the years 2009–13, which aims to work towards 75 per cent reduction in child labour, with a main focus on agriculture, mining, fishing and domestic labour. The Committee notes, however, that according to the 2001 survey on children, out of 4 million economically active children aged 5–17 years, 246,000 were children between the ages of 5–9 years, and 1.9 million in the age group of 10–14 years. Expressing its deep concern at the situation and high number of children under the age of 15 years working in the Philippines, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the situation. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the PTBP and the results achieved, particularly in terms of the PTBP's contribution to the effective abolition of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's report. It also notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 29 August 2008 and the Government's reply thereto.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years for labour and sexual exploitation is prohibited by the Philippine legislation under various provisions (sections 7 and 18 of Act No. 7610; section 4 of the Anti-trafficking in Persons Act No. 9208 of 2003 (Republic Act 9208); section 59 of the Child and Youth Welfare Act). It had noted that the Government adopted a number of measures aimed at preventing and combating the trafficking of children, such as:

- (i) the adoption of Administrative Order No. 114 aimed at screening the purpose of the travel of a child abroad and ensuring that the child's best interest is protected before the issuance of a certificate to travel;
- (ii) amendments made to the Rules governing private recruitment and placement agencies to local employment by introducing provisions against child trafficking;
- (iii) Ordinances to implement the Anti-trafficking in Persons Act of 2003 in the local communities;
- (iv) Ordinance No. SP-1472 aimed at preventing and combating trafficking for the purpose of exploitation in domestic work; and
- (v) the rules issued by the Philippine Overseas Employment Agency for overseas Filipino households to protect them from trafficking and widespread employer abuse.

It had further noted that the Visayan Forum Foundation (VFF) had initiated the organization of a multi-sectoral network against trafficking in October 2003.

The Committee notes the ITUC's allegation that many children are easy targets for trafficking because of the common belief among parents that child domestic labour is the safest work for children. These children then find themselves in a situation of bonded labour where they are forced to endure exploitative work conditions because of the debts they have incurred. The Committee also notes the ITUC's contention that in the Visayan Forum-Philippine Ports Authority Port Halfway House, a safe house that provides protection and direct services to victims and potential victims of trafficking, 75 per cent of the 4,000 women and children provided with assistance were recruited for domestic work. The ITUC further alleges that, in April 2009, nine domestic workers who sought refuge in the Philippine embassies were repatriated from Jordan, the youngest of whom was 13 years old. The Committee also notes the ITUC's comment that given that 230 members of the Philippine National Police (PNP) have been trained for the investigation of child trafficking and that there are 17 dedicated anti-trafficking prosecutors in the Department of Justice (DOJ), the number of successful prosecutions of trafficking to date is disappointing.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it continues to undertake initiatives to prevent and combat the trafficking of children, in particular for domestic work in coordination with the VFF through its Kasambahay (House-helpers) Programme. This programme provides for immediate responses to child domestic workers at risk, psychological services to child victims of trafficking in temporary shelters and eventual reintegration with their families or other foster institutions; and systematic coordination with school administrations and other partners to assist child domestic workers who combine work and study, as a strategy to prevent them from becoming involved in other worst forms of child labour. Furthermore, the Government and the VFF in collaboration with the Philippines Ports Authority opened a halfway house in different seaports across the country to assist and protect women and children stranded at the port and thus prevent the possibility of trafficking. These halfway houses offered 24-hour services including:

- (i) emergency temporary shelter;
- (ii) information about travel, employment and possible support networks;
- (iii) quick referral cases, including legal remedy;
- (iv) counselling;
- (v) regular outreach for stranded passengers; and
- (vi) training and advocacy to port community members such as the police, coastguards, shipping crews, porters and security guards.

The Government further states that the Anti-Trafficking Task Force at the ports enables the effective and coordinated responses for the investigation, rescue and removal, prosecution, healing and reintegration of victims of human trafficking. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the Department of Labour and Employment (DOLE), DOJ, and the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) along with its regional offices, cooperate and coordinate well in providing assistance, guidance in prosecution, reintegration, locate and coordinate with the family and repatriation of child victims of trafficking.

The Government further states that in cooperation with Asia Acts against Child Trafficking, (Asia ACTS) since 2001, several campaigns and training activities against child trafficking were conducted in 30 provinces which led to the discovery of several child trafficking cases. The Committee notes the Government's statement that following the Asia ACTS campaign, the Government signed in 2006 a Presidential Proclamation declaring December 12 as the National Day against Child Trafficking. It further states that the DOLE signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Public Employment Service Office (PESO) in order to strengthen their partnership in controlling illegal recruitment in the country. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the DOLE is currently reviewing the proposed amendments of the revised rules and regulations governing private recruitment and placement agencies for local employment, which also includes a provision requiring the employment agencies not to engage in the recruitment and placement of workers that are in violation of the provisions of Republic Act 9208 and Republic Act 9231 (Child Labour Law).

The Committee notes, however, that in its Concluding Observations of 22 October 2009 (CRC/C/PHL/CO/3-4, paragraph 78), the Committee on the Rights of the Child while noting the various legislative, administrative and policy measures adopted by the State party for combating child trafficking, expressed concern at the high number of women and children who continued to be trafficked from, through and within the country for purposes of sexual exploitation and labour. It further expressed concern at the low number of prosecutions and convictions of traffickers and at the existing risk factors contributing to trafficking activities, such as persistent poverty, temporary overseas migration, growing sex tourism, impunity and weak law enforcement in the State party.

The Committee takes due note of the comprehensive measures taken by the Government to combat trafficking in children. It nevertheless observes that although the law prohibits the trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation, it still remains an issue of concern in practice. The Committee therefore requests the Government to redouble its efforts to prevent and combat the trafficking of children under 18 years for labour or sexual exploitation and to provide information on progress made in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the pending projects on trafficking in eliminating the trafficking of children. The Committee finally requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the effective implementation of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act, and other laws which prohibit trafficking of children and which provide for penalties for the offences related to trafficking of children.

Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee had previously noted that the compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years to serve in the Armed Forces of the Philippines (civilian units or other armed groups), as well as to take part in fighting or to be used as guides, couriers or spies, is prohibited by law (sections 3(a) and 22(b) of Act No. 7610). The trafficking of children for such purposes is also prohibited (section 4(h) of Republic Act 9208). The Committee had nevertheless noted the ITUC's comments dated 30 August 2006, that numerous children under 18 years continued to take part in armed conflicts. The New People's Army (NPA) included 9,000 to 10,000 regular child soldiers (representing between 3 and 14 per cent of NPA members). The ITUC had further stated that children were reportedly being recruited into the Citizens Armed Force Geographical Units (a government-aligned paramilitary group) and in the armed opposition groups, in particular the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF). Moreover, the Committee had observed that, according to the United Nations Secretary-General's Report on children and armed conflict (A/59/695-S/2005/72, 9 February 2005, paragraphs 45 and 46), even though the Inter-Agency Committee for Children Involved in Armed Conflict was mandated to initiate projects for the rescue, rehabilitation and reintegration of children involved in armed conflict, as of September 2004, no measures for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of child soldiers had been taken by the NPA or the MILF. The Committee had requested the Government to take prompt and effective action to ensure that the practice of forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age in armed conflict, directly or indirectly, is eliminated both in the national armed forces and in rebel groups.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has implemented a National Peace Plan through the Medium-Term Philippine Development Plan (2004–10) in order to prevent and stop the recruitment of children in armed hostilities. This plan includes:

- (i) the peace process with MILF through cessation of hostilities, rehabilitation and development of conflict-affected areas;
- (ii) implementation of the interim peace agreements with two local communist movements, particularly in terms of rehabilitation of conflict affected communities, cessation of hostilities, and reintegration;
- (iii) continuous monitoring of and advocacy on the implementation of the Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law between the Philippine Government and the Communist Party of the Philippines-New Peoples Army-National Democratic Front;
- (iv) complementary measures to reduce the level of violence by supporting the local and indigenous peacemaking and peacekeeping mechanisms and supporting the implementation and civilian monitoring of ceasefire agreements;
- (v) efforts to complete the implementation of the existing peace agreements with Islamic MILF and the Cordillera Peoples Liberation Army (CPLA);
- (vi) efforts to mainstream former rebels through reintegration and rehabilitation programmes by creating the National Committee on Social Integration under the Office of the Presidential Adviser on the Peace Process; and
- (vii) measures for the rehabilitation, development and healing of conflict-affected people.

The Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its Concluding Observations (CRC/C/PHL/CO/3-4, of 22 October 2009, paragraph 69) welcomed the visit by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict to the Philippines, and the signature in July 2009, of an action plan by the MILF with concrete and time-bound steps to prevent the recruitment of children and promote their reintegration into civilian life. Nevertheless, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, while noting the positive steps taken by the Government, expressed concern at the continued reports on the recruitment of children by armed groups to serve as combatants, spies, guards, cooks or medics. The Committee, notes, however, that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its Concluding Observations under the Optional Protocol to the CRC on the involvement of Children in Armed Conflict (CRC/C/OPAC/CO/1 of 15 July 2008, paragraph 20) expressed its concern that children continued to join armed groups mainly due to poverty, indoctrination, manipulation, neglect or absence of opportunities. It further expressed concern at the lack of effective implementation of the legislation prohibiting the recruitment and use of children in hostilities especially in conflict areas, and at the fact that there have been no prosecutions for the recruitment or use of children in armed conflict. The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the situation and to take immediate and effective measures to put a stop in practice to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed groups and the armed forces. In this regard, it requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It further requests the Government to pursue its efforts to rehabilitate and integrate children affected by the armed conflict, and to indicate how many of these children under 18 years have been rehabilitated and reintegrated in their communities through such measures.

Article 3, clause (d), and Article 4, paragraph 1. Hazardous work and child domestic work. The Committee had previously noted that children under 18 years of age shall not perform the types of hazardous work listed in Department Order No. 4 of 1999 (section 3). It had also noted that, by virtue of section 4 of the same Order, persons aged 15–18 years may be allowed to engage in domestic or household service, but shall not perform the types of hazardous work listed in section 3 of the Order. The Committee had noted the ITUC's allegation that hundreds of thousands of children, mainly girls, worked as domestic workers in the Philippines and were subject to slavery-like practices. Particularly, these children were deprived of opportunities for education and isolated from their families. The ITUC further underlined that, based on a study undertaken under the ILO–IPEC Time-bound Programme (TBP), 83 per cent of child domestic workers lived in their employers' home and only half of them were allowed to take one day off per month. They were on call 24 hours a day, more than half of them dropped out of school. The Committee also notes the ITUC's more recent allegations dated 29 August 2008 based on the estimates provided by the VFF, that there are at least one million children in domestic work in the Philippines. The ITUC also refers to some examples of physical, psychological and sexual abuses and injuries suffered by children under 18 years, especially girls employed as domestic workers and some examples of children working in harmful and hazardous conditions. The ITUC once again points out that, notwithstanding the positive initiatives taken by the Government at the level of local legislation regulating the employment of domestic workers, there are limitations in both law and practice which need to be addressed as a matter of urgency. Particularly, while the Labour Code requires employers to treat their domestic workers fairly and humanely, it lacks specific measures to tackle existing exploitative practices. In this regard, the ITUC underlines that the Domestic Workers' Bill (Batas Kasambahay), first filed in Congress in 1995, which sets out the rights of domestic workers and defines for them decent working standards, has remained pending for over ten years. According to the ITUC, the enactment of this Bill would be a vital step in addressing the abuse and exploitation of child domestic workers in the Philippines. It further points out that according to a survey of 2005 conducted by the Social Weather Station, 87 per cent of the Filipinos strongly agreed that there should be a law addressing the domestic work sector.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Domestic Worker's Bill has been filed during the 14th congress and is currently under deliberation by the House Committee on Labour and Employment. The Committee also notes the Government's detailed information on the impact of several initiatives and programmes undertaken within the ILO–IPEC assisted Philippine Time-bound Programme (PTBP) 2002–07 and other national programmes, on eliminating the worst forms of child labour, including child domestic work. It notes the Government's indication that under the PTBP, as of April 2007, a total of 40,549 children were withdrawn or prevented from the six priority sectors identified under this TBP, including child domestic work. The Committee also notes that the Philippines has stepped into a second phase of the PTBP for the years 2009–13, which aims to work towards 75 per cent reduction in child labour, with a main focus on agriculture, trafficking, mining, fishing and domestic labour. While observing the various efforts undertaken by the Government to combat child domestic work and the successful results achieved under the PTBP and other initiatives, the Committee expresses its serious concern at the economic and sexual exploitation which continues to be experienced by child domestic workers. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure the adoption of the Domestic Workers' Bill (Batas Kasambahay) which would specifically address the situation of domestic workers. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure that anyone who uses the domestic labour of children under 18 years in the form of forced labour, or who employs children in hazardous work, is prosecuted and that effective and sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed. It finally requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in terms of the prevention and withdrawal of children from domestic labour under the PTBP – Phase II.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT) continues to undertake different projects geared towards the prevention and elimination of trafficking in persons, protection and rehabilitation of victims of trafficking and conviction of offenders of trafficking. These projects include the: (a) development of a manual on the law enforcement and prosecution of trafficking in persons cases, and on the recovery and reintegration of victims of trafficking; (b) development of standards orientation module on trafficking in persons for service providers; (c) establishment of Ninoy Aquino International Airport Task Force against Trafficking; (d) development of a local ordinance on anti-trafficking in persons project; (e) development of guidelines for the protection of trafficked children; and (f) creation of a regional inter-agency committee against trafficking. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that as of October 2009, the IACAT has recorded 15 convictions for violation of Republic Act 9208. It further states that the IACAT ensures strict enforcement of the rules and guidelines related to the local and overseas employment of persons. It also submits periodical reports of cases of illegal recruitment and trafficking to the IACAT Secretariat and the Department of Justice.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that as of June 2008, the Inter-Agency Quick Action Team established under the Sagip Batang Mangagagawa (SBM – an inter-agency mechanism to monitor and rescue children from the worst forms of child labour), conducted a total of 793 rescue operations which resulted in the rescue of 2,698 child labourers. Most of these children were integrated into their families and provided thereafter with educational assistance and skills training.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the DOLE, through the Bureau of Women and Young Workers conducted in February 2009, a series of advocacy orientations on Republic Act 9231, Republic Act 9208 and other child labour-related laws for about 270 village chiefs (barangay) followed by a series of training for labour inspectors, hearing officers and sheriffs on the effective enforcement of these legislations. These activities were aimed at strengthening the capacities of law enforcers and other implementers to effectively utilize and enforce anti-child labour laws towards prevention and elimination of child labour and its worst forms. The Committee finally notes that the DOLE through its labour inspectors, monitors the compliance of labour standards relating to children in private establishments, as well as coordinates with the PNP and the DSWD to remove children found in the worst forms of child labour. The DOLE, through its Labour Standard Enforcement Framework (LSEF) conducts inspections of households to monitor any violation of labour standards, including non-payment or under-payment of household salaries. The Government further states that the DOLE also assists working children and their parents or guardians with free legal services, facilitates with the provision of educational assistance and health services, provides livelihood assistance to parents and older siblings, and refers working children and victims of child labour to proper agencies of institutions for psychological services. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of children rescued from the worst forms of child labour, the number of convictions recorded related to the worst forms of child labour, and the number of cases of illegal recruitment and trafficking of children reported by the IACAT. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the impact of the various measures undertaken by the DOLE to eliminate the worst forms of child labour, and on the number of violations of child labour laws detected by the DOLE through the labour inspectors and LSEF.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Romania

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1975)

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee had previously noted that, under the terms of section 2, the Labour Code applies only to persons employed on the basis of a labour contract. It had also noted the Government's indication that the Labour Inspectorate monitors the work of persons employed by an individual labour contract and has no competence with regard to self-employment. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, according to section 5(1) of Government Decision No. 600/2007, employment of children is prohibited. Exception to this provision is provided under section 5(2) of Government Decision No. 600/2007 in the case of children of at least 16 years of age who are subject to compulsory schooling to conclude an individual contract of employment for light work. The Committee notes, however, that section 5, subsections (1) and (2), read in conjunction with section 3 of Government Decision No. 166/2007 appears to apply only to children having an individual contract of employment. The Committee once again reminds the Government that the Convention applies not only to work performed under an employment contract, but to all types of work or employment, including self-employment. Observing that it has been raising this matter for a number of years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children carrying out an economic activity on their own account enjoy the protection afforded by the Convention. In this regard it requests the Government to envisage the possibility of taking measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services so as to ensure the protection envisaged by the Convention for children who work on their own account or in the informal economy.

Article 7, paragraph 3. Determination of light work. The Committee had previously noted that the National Steering Committee drew up a draft Decision on Hazardous Work by Children. It had also noted the Government's statement that all those activities or types of work not covered by this draft shall be considered as light work which young persons between 15 and 18 years of age will be allowed to perform. The Committee understands from the Government's statement "the draft Decision on Hazardous Work by children is under public debate" that this draft Decision has not yet been adopted. The Committee also notes that, according to section 3(c) of Government Decision No. 600/2007, "light work" is defined as any work, which on account of the inherent nature of the tasks which it involves and the particular conditions under which it is performed is not likely to be harmful to the safety, health or development of children; not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational guidance or training programmes approved by the school management, or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. The Committee hopes that the Decision on Hazardous Work by Children will soon be adopted and requests the Government to send a copy as soon as it has been adopted.

Article 9, paragraph 3. Keeping of a register by employers. The Committee had previously noted the Government's information that Decision No. 161/2006 establishes the methodology of drawing up and keeping a general register of employees. It had also noted that, according to section 3, subsections (1) to (4), the register must be drawn up in electronic format and must contain the following data of the employee: full name, personal identification number which includes the age of the employee, hiring date, occupation details and type of contract. The employer shall send this register to the territorial labour inspectorate within 20 days after hiring the worker. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of Government Decision No. 161/2006.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's information that, during the reporting period, the territorial labour inspectorates filed 87 complaints regarding the violation of the provisions concerning the employment of children; for 77 cases the trials were under way; and for six cases administrative penalties were imposed. It also notes that, during the period from 1 June to 31 December 2007, the labour inspectors carried out 44,476 inspections and identified 144 young people aged between 15 and 18 years working without a legal employment contract. During the period from January 2008 to April 2009, the labour inspectors carried out 107,582 inspections, identified 275 young people aged between 15 and 18 years working without a legal employment contract, and imposed penalties on 244 employers for illegally using young people at work. It further notes the information provided by the Government in its report under Convention No. 182 that the above cases of illegal employment of children were found in the manufacture of textile and footwear, agriculture, construction, manufacture of wood, manufacture of grain mill products, food products, wholesale warehouses, street commerce activities, markets, and in garages. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of the Convention in practice, including the number and nature of contraventions reported and penalties imposed.

Russian Federation

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee previously noted that section 63(1) of the Labour Code prohibited children under 16 years of age from signing an employment contract. It asked the Government to supply information on the measures taken or contemplated to ensure the application of the Convention to all types of work outside an employment relationship. The Committee noted the Government's statement that the illegal employment of minors and the violation of their labour rights are frequent occurrences in the informal economy. This involves minors who wash cars, engage in trading and perform auxiliary work. The Committee therefore reminded the Government that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment or work, whether or not there is a contractual employment relationship and whether or not the work is remunerated. The Committee notes the detailed statement in the Government's report indicating the measures taken to prevent children from signing employment contracts in breach of the national labour legislation, particularly with regard to the minimum age for admission to employment in hazardous types of work. However, the Committee observes that the Government does not supply any information regarding the measures taken to ensure that children who work without having signed an employment contract enjoy the protection afforded by the Convention. The Committee therefore again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention is enjoyed by children carrying out an economic activity without an employment contract, particularly self-employed children and children working in the informal economy, as soon as possible. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the progress made in this respect in its next report.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to a study on child labour carried out in St. Petersburg (Leningrad) from May to October 2009 in the context of the ILO–IPEC project on street children in the St. Petersburg (Leningrad) regions, the 1,003 children who were interviewed were engaged in the following kinds of work: collecting empty bottles and recycling paper and beer bottles (58.6 per cent); transporting goods (25.4 per cent); cleaning workplaces (21.3 per cent); looking after property (14.3 per cent); street trading (10.4 per cent); and cleaning cars (2.6 per cent). The study also indicates that 22 per cent of boys started working at 8 or 9 years of age, compared with 5.8 per cent of girls, and 40 per cent of boys started working at 10 or 11 years of age, compared with 15.4 per cent of girls. While expressing its deep concern at the situation of children engaged in work, particularly in the informal sector, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that child labour for young persons under 16 years of age is abolished in practice. Furthermore, the Committee again requests the Government to supply information on the application in practice of the national legislation giving effect to the Convention, including extracts from official reports and information on the number and nature of reported infringements, particularly with regard to children under 16 years of age working in the informal sector.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the Government's report and also the discussions held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at the 98th Session (June 2009) of the International Labour Conference.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the communication from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), thousands of persons are trafficked from the Russian Federation to other countries, including Canada, China, Germany, Israel, Italy, Japan, Spain, Thailand and the United States. Internal trafficking within the Russian Federation is also reportedly taking place and confirmed cases have been reported of children being trafficked for sexual exploitation. The Committee further noted that, according to the report of 24 January 2007 submitted by the UN Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography in Ukraine (A/HRC/4/31/Add.2, paragraphs 48–49), the Russian Federation is also a destination country for boys and girls between 13 and 18 years of age trafficked from Ukraine. According to the report, half of the children trafficked across borders from Ukraine are taken to neighbouring countries, including the Russian Federation. The children trafficked across borders are exploited in street vending, domestic labour, agriculture, dancing, employment as waiters/waitresses or for the provision of sexual services.

The Committee previously observed that section 127.1 of the Penal Code prohibits the sale and trafficking of human beings, defined as the purchase or sale of persons or their procuring, transportation, transfer, concealment or reception, if committed for the purposes of exploitation. Section 127.1(2) provides for a heavier penalty when the offence is committed in relation to a known minor (defined in section 87 as a person between 14 and 18 years of age). The Committee also noted that section 240(2) of the Penal Code prohibits the transportation of any person across the state border of the Russian Federation for the purpose of delivering that person into prostitution or illegal detention abroad. A heavier penalty is incurred when this offence is committed against a minor. The Committee also noted that a draft Act against the trafficking of persons which aims to establish appropriate measures to ensure legal protection and social rehabilitation for victims of trafficking, in accordance with the Palermo Protocol, was under consideration. However, the Committee noted that the special Act on assistance for victims of trafficking, pending before the Duma, was neither voted on nor enacted in 2006.

The Committee notes the statement from the Government representative present at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards to the effect that the draft Act against the trafficking of persons is still under discussion in the Duma Commission on Family Issues for Women and Children, and a series of substantial amendments have been incorporated in the Penal Code with a view to imposing heavier penalties for violations of the law involving the trafficking of persons. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report to the effect that Act No. 218 of 25 November 2008 amended section 127.1 of the Russian Penal Code in such a way as to prohibit any transaction involving a child, regardless of the purpose of the transaction.

Furthermore, the Government indicates that, over the years, several dozen criminal groups which were recruiting Russian citizens for the purpose of offering their sexual services in Western Europe, the Middle East, Africa, Asia and North America have been exposed. The Government also indicates that, according to the centre for information analysis of the Ministry of the Interior, the total number of instances of trafficking of persons revealed by judicial inquiries increased by 4.6 per cent (68 cases) in 2008. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2008 the courts examined the cases of five persons involved in three instances of the trafficking of minors.

While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee observes that the number of cases involving the trafficking of children reported by the authorities remains low. The Committee also notes the indication by the Worker members of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards that the draft Act against the trafficking of persons appears frozen since 2006. The Committee therefore again observes that, although the trafficking of children for economic or sexual exploitation is prohibited by law, it remains a source of serious concern in practice. It reminds the Government that, under Article 3(a) of the Convention, the sale and trafficking of young persons under 18 years of age for economic or sexual exploitation are considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures must be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. With reference to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts and take immediate and effective measures to eliminate in practice the trafficking of young persons under 18 years of age without delay. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to take steps to ensure that perpetrators are investigated and prosecuted that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed on persons found guilty of the trafficking of children for economic or sexual exploitation. The Committee also requests the Government to take immediate steps to ensure that the draft Act against the trafficking of persons is adopted in the very near future. Finally, it requests the Government to continue to supply information on the number of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed for violations of the legal prohibitions on the sale and trafficking of children.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee previously noted the detailed information from the Government on the network of social institutions which provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children removed from the worst forms of child labour. It also noted that the establishment of social rehabilitation centres for minors was stepped up in 2004 (with the addition of 163 new centres by comparison with 2002). The Committee notes that, according to the 2009 UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, another centre for the rehabilitation of victims of trafficking opened in April 2007. This centre has the capacity to cater for 19 victims at a time. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the number of child victims of trafficking for sexual or economic exploitation who have been rehabilitated and socially integrated as a result of the action of the abovementioned rehabilitation and social integration centres.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. International cooperation. The Committee previously noted that the Russian Federation is a member of Interpol, which facilitates cooperation between countries in different regions, particularly in combating the trafficking of children. It also noted that the Russian Federation has ratified the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, its Protocol against the smuggling of migrants by land, sea and air, and its Protocol to prevent, suppress and punish trafficking in persons, especially women and children. The Committee notes that the Government representative present at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards emphasized the importance of international and regional cooperation in combating the trafficking of persons. The Government indicates in its report that a Europol national contact point has been established within the Ministry of the Interior. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the impact of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its Protocol, and also the measures taken by Interpol and Europol in the Russian Federation relating to the elimination of the trafficking of children for economic or sexual exploitation.

Regional cooperation. The Committee previously noted that joint operations have been under way since 1998 with the countries of the Council of the Baltic Sea States (CBSS) with a view to preventing cross-border smuggling of children. Under the auspices of that body's executive committee, "contact officers", including some from the Russian Ministry of Internal Affairs, deal with specific cases requiring action to prevent trafficking in children for the purpose of sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of the Interior has also drafted a cooperation agreement between the Ministries of the Interior (police) of the member countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States to combat the trafficking of persons. Furthermore, the Ministry of the Interior participates in the activities of a number of special working parties, including the CBSS Special Group for combating the trafficking of persons and the Working Party of the Organization of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation for combating organized crime. With reference to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee requests the Government to continue to reinforce its cooperation with other countries concerned with the trafficking of children to or from the Russian Federation. It requests the Government to continue to supply information on the specific measures taken to eliminate the cross-border trafficking of children for economic or sexual exploitation, and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Saudi Arabia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced or compulsory labour. The Committee previously observed that Order No. 1/738 of 4 July 2004 prohibits child labour and the exploitation of children, including any inhumane form of work and morally hazardous work, though observed that this regulation does not explicitly prohibit the forced or compulsory labour of children under 18 years. The Committee notes the copy of regulations submitted with the Government's report, identified by the Government as the Ministerial Order No. 244 of 20/7/1430 (2009) (Order No. 244) taken by the Council of Ministers approving regulations on human trafficking. The Committee notes that section 2 of Order No. 244 prohibits trafficking, including for the purpose of forced labour. The Committee observes that this provision does not appear to prohibit forced labour that occurs independently of human trafficking.

The Committee refers to its comments made in its 2008 observation under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), that the new Labour Code does not contain provisions prohibiting forced labour. In this observation, the Committee further noted that section 7 of the Labour Code excludes agricultural workers and domestic workers, an exclusion that has particular significance for migrant workers who are often employed in those sectors. The Committee observed that the lack of such protection for migrant workers exposes them to exploitation in their working conditions, such as the retention of their passports by their employers, which in turn deprives them of their freedom of movement to leave the country or change their employment. The Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, in its concluding observations of 8 April 2008, expressed concern with regard to the economic and sexual exploitation and ill-treatment of young migrant girls employed as domestic servants (CEDAW/C/SAU/CO/2, paragraph 23). The Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery such as the forced or compulsory labour of children under 18 years constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour must be taken as a matter of urgency. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt in national legislation a prohibition on the forced and compulsory labour of children who are not the victims of trafficking. It also asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who commit offences with regard to the forced or compulsory labour of children are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution and pornography. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution or for pornographic performances was prohibited by the Holy Koran and the Prophet's Sunna. It also observed that Order No. 1/738 of 2004 prohibits child labour exploitation, as well as inhumane or immoral treatment, but does not specifically prohibit the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years for prostitution and pornography. The Committee noted the Government's information that draft regulations on child protection, containing provisions for the protection of children from maltreatment and neglect, including sexual, psychological and physical exploitation, had been submitted to the competent authorities for examination. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the regulations are still being examined in the Majilis El Shoura. The Committee expresses the firm hope that these regulations will include provisions specifically prohibiting the use, procuring and offering of children under 18 years for prostitution and for the production of pornography or pornographic performances, and urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft regulations on child protection are adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of these regulations as soon as they are adopted.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Domestic and agricultural workers. The Committee previously noted that by virtue of section 3 of the Labour Code the following workers do not benefit from the protection laid down in the Labour Code: (i) persons employed in pastures, animal husbandry or agriculture, except for persons working in agricultural establishments which process their own product or persons who are permanently engaged in the operation or repair of mechanical equipment required for agriculture; or (ii) domestic servants and persons considered as such. The Committee noted the Government's reference to Ministerial Order No. 20879 of 2003 which identifies the types of hazardous work in which the employment of young persons is not authorized, and requested the Government to indicate if this Ministerial Order applies to agricultural workers and domestic servants under 18 years of age. The Committee notes the Government's indication that following the adoption of a new Labour Code, (promulgated by virtue of Order No. m/51 of 26 September 2005), a new Ministerial Order concerning prohibited types of hazardous work was promulgated (No. 2839 of 1 October 2006). The Committee notes the Government's indication that this Ministerial Order does not apply to categories of workers excluded in the Labour Code, such as agricultural workers and domestic workers. Since children who work in these sectors do not appear to be protected in the relevant legislation, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children under 18 years working as domestic servants and agricultural workers do not perform work which, by its nature and the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm their health, safety or morals. The Committee also requests the Government to supply a copy of the Ministerial Order No. 2839 of 1 October 2006, concerning prohibited types of hazardous work.

Article 7, paragraph 1. Penalties. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted that Order No. 1/738 did not impose sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties for the offence of the sale and trafficking of persons. It also noted that the Government of Saudi Arabia does not comply with the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking, especially because of its failure to prosecute those guilty of trafficking. The Committee notes that section 3 of Order No. 244 states that any person who commits human trafficking shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a maximum period of 15 years, or to a maximum fine of 1 million riyals (SAR) (approximately US$266,652), or both. The Committee also notes that section 4 of Order No. 244 states that penalties set out in the regulations shall be harsher if the act is committed against a child, even if the aggressor did not know that the victim was a child. Section 4 also prescribes harsher penalties if the offence is committed by a parent or guardian of the child victim. However, the Committee notes the information in the UNICEF report entitled “Preventing child trafficking in the Gulf countries, Yemen and Afghanistan” (UNICEF Trafficking Report), released in 2007, that a UNICEF rapid assessment survey estimated that tens of thousands of children, particularly boys from Yemen, are trafficked to Saudi Arabia for the purpose of labour exploitation each year. The Committee therefore observes that although the national legislation appears to prohibit trafficking in human beings, the trafficking of children under 18 very much remains an issue of concern in practice. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to enforce the law. It also asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of Order No. 244, including the number and nature of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed.

Child begging. The Committee previously noted that Order No. 1/738 did not impose sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties for the offence of hiring children for the purpose of begging. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that persons who use, procure or offer children under 18 years for this purpose are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. The Committee notes that section 2 of Order No. 244 prohibits the trafficking of humans for the purpose of begging. However, the Committee notes an absence of information on the Committee’s concerns with respect to the imposition of penalties for the use, procuring or offering children under 18 years for the purposes of begging unrelated to the offence of trafficking. The Committee reminds the Government that by virtue of Article 7(1), of the Convention, the Government shall take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the provision and application of penal sanctions. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who use, procure or offer children under 18 years for the purpose of begging are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed.

Employing children under 18 years as camel jockeys. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the Royal Decree No. 13000 of 17 April 2002, a camel owner who employs a jockey under 18 years of age to participate in camel racing will not, in case of winning, receive the prize. The Committee also noted the information in the Government’s report that young persons are entirely prohibited from camel jockeying by virtue of Royal Decree No. 13000 which punishes any person who violates the prohibition by penalties. These penalties include banning any camel jockey who has not attained 18 years from participating in races and denying the camel owner the prize money if the camel jockey proves to be under 18 years. The Committee observed that the Royal Decree only punishes the offender in the case in which the camel jockey under 18 years employed by him wins the race and that the existing provisions appear to penalize the victim more than the offender. The Committee also observed that the penalties imposed by Royal Decree No. 13000 on persons who employ children under 18 years as camel jockeys do not appear to be sufficiently effective and dissuasive, and drew the Government’s attention to its observation of 2006 made on the application by Qatar of Convention No. 182, in respect of the prohibition and elimination of the use of children under 18 years for camel racing as well as the use of robot jockeys.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that a camel owner who employs a person under 18 is punished whether or not he wins the race. However, the text of the Royal Decree No. 13000, supplied by the Government with a previous report, does not appear to specify this, stating only that a camel owner who wins a race using a jockey under the age of 18 will not be able to collect his prize. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a person who employs a child under 18 years of age as a camel jockey is liable to sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties, particularly when the camel ridden by an underage jockey has not won.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Measures taken to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking of children for labour or sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that there were reported cases of children trafficked from Bangladesh to the Middle East to work as camel jockeys, in addition to women under the age of 18 who were trafficked from Indonesia for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee noted the Government’s information that innumerable efforts are being deployed by the Government to eliminate the trafficking of children, including the drafting of new regulations on trafficking in persons. The Committee notes the copy of regulations on trafficking submitted with the Government’s report, and notes the information in the Government’s report that this document is the Ministerial Order No. 244 taken by the Council of Ministers, although it observes that the copy supplied does not contain a date. The Committee requests the Government to supply an official dated copy of Order No. 244 of 20/7/1430 (2009) taken by the Council of Ministers, approving regulations on human trafficking. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of these regulations with respect to preventing the trafficking of children under 18 years, in addition to information on any effective and time-bound measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Street children and children engaged in begging. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that measures have been adopted aimed at protecting child victims of violence and exploitation, including the establishment of a centre to receive complaints on violence, harm and exploitation of women and children, the establishment of a residence centre for foreign children who beg, in coordination with UNICEF, and the establishment of the "Women's Charity Association for Family Protection", specialized in the protection of women and children from violence through rehabilitation programmes. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the number of former victims of trafficking, especially for purposes of labour exploitation and begging, who have been protected and rehabilitated through these measures.

The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government's report on this point. However, the Committee notes the information in the UNICEF Trafficking Report released in 2007 that it is officially estimated that there are over 83,000 children selling small goods and begging on the streets of major cities in Saudi Arabia. The Committee also notes the information in the UNICEF report entitled "Trafficking in children and child involvement in beggary in Saudi Arabia" (UNICEF Beggary Report) that the Ministry of Social Action established the Office for Combating Beggary, and that these offices employ social workers and inspectors, who cooperate with law enforcement agencies to undertake daily raids in areas where beggars are found, and arrest them. Once arrested, children under 15 are sent to the Shelter Centre in Jeddah. The Committee also notes that the UNICEF Beggary Report indicates that the majority of persons involved in begging are foreign nationals, and if found to be undocumented or illegal residents, these children are deported within a period of two weeks from their arrest. The UNICEF Beggary Report also indicates that there is no effort made to distinguish between trafficked and non-trafficked children.

The Committee notes that since the establishment of the Shelter Centre in 2004, some 839 children have been deported to their country of origin. The Committee also notes that, at the time of the UNICEF Beggary Report, these children were not provided with psychological or legal assistance, and that there were few services for the rehabilitation and social integration of these children. Expressing its serious concern at the number of children engaged in begging and street work, and at the lack of legal, psychological and medical services provided to these children once arrested, the Committee requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure the provision of appropriate services to these children, to facilitate their rehabilitation and social integration. With regard to children who are foreign nationals, the Committee requests the Government to take measures that include repatriation, family reunification and support for former child victims of trafficking, in cooperation with the child's country of origin.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Labour inspectorate and the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the labour inspectorate had not detected any cases of prohibited child labour, and it requested the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no cases of human trafficking have been detected. However, the Committee notes the information in the 2009 report on trafficking in persons in Saudi Arabia, available on the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' web site (www.unhcr.org), that Saudi Arabia is a destination country for Nigerian, Yemeni, Pakistani, Afghan, Chadian and Sudanese children, trafficked for the purpose of labour exploitation. The Committee also notes the information available in the UNICEF Trafficking Report that while trafficking of children remains a significant issue in Saudi Arabia, there is a severe lack of data on this topic.

The Committee expresses its concern at the lack of data available on the trafficking of children, and it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the situation of child victims of trafficking is available. The Committee also expresses its concern regarding the lack of detection of cases of child trafficking, and requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure the effective monitoring of this phenomenon. In this regard, it requests the Government to expand the authority of the labour inspectorate in enforcing the laws and to increase the human and financial resources of the labour inspectorate. It further requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that unannounced inspections are carried out by the labour inspectorate and that persons, regardless of their nationality, who traffic children are prosecuted.

Senegal

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the observations by the National Confederation of Workers of Senegal (CNTS) set out in a communication of 1 September 2008.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted with interest that the Government is participating in an ILO-IPEC project entitled "Contribution to the abolition of child labour in French-speaking Africa", the overall objective of which is to contribute to abolishing child labour. It had also noted with interest that the Government is participating in the ILO-IPEC Time-bound Programme (TBP) on the worst forms of child labour. It had observed that in the context of these two projects, the Government has adopted a strategy for the implementation of national initiatives to combat child labour through education, vocational training and apprenticeship. Lastly, it had noted that a national child labour survey was carried out in Senegal and that the data collected were being analysed.

The Committee noted the Government's information that, as a result of the implementation of the abovementioned ILO–IPEC project and the TBP, 6,208 children had been prevented from entering the labour market too early. The Government further indicated that in the context of the ILO–IPEC projects, two action programmes had been implemented and had prevented 6,023 children from working through the provision of education services. The Committee further noted that the Government had sent a number of statistics published in the 2007 analysis report on the national survey of child labour in Senegal carried out in 2005. It noted that of an estimated 3,759,074 children aged from 5 to 17 years, 1,378,724 (36.7 per cent) were involved in some activity or work in Senegal and that in 2005 more than two out of ten (21.4 per cent) children aged from 5 to 9 years had already worked. The Government also stated that boys appeared to be more affected by child labour since 26.4 per cent of boys 5–9 years of age, as opposed to 15.9 per cent for girls, and 51.7 per cent of boys of 10–14 years of age, as compared to 36.2 per cent for girls, are working. The report also showed that, overall, 1,739,571 children were forced to engage in housework, i.e. 46.3 per cent of all children aged from 5 to 17 years. Furthermore, in addition to the housework performed by some children, and regardless of their age or sex, the great majority of child workers were to be found in the agricultural sector (75.4 per cent) followed by the stockbreeding and fisheries sectors (8 per cent), handicrafts and work on looms (4 per cent), domestic and household jobs (3.1 per cent), sales and services to private persons (5.5 per cent), construction and public works (2.5 per cent), other (1.4 per cent). While noting the measures taken by the Government to abolish child labour, the Committee once again expresses concern at the number and percentage of children still working in the various sectors and requests the Government to redouble its efforts to combat child labour. It further asks the Government to continue to send information on the impact of the action programmes currently under way in terms of the numbers of children prevented from entering the labour market too early and the number of children withdrawn from work.

Article 2, paragraph 1. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's statement that self-employed workers are treated as traders and that children may not be self-employed because their status as minors precludes their entering freely into contracts. It had further noted that although the national legislation excludes all forms of self-employment by children, in practice, poverty has facilitated the development of such activities among children (shoe cleaners, hawkers), who engage in them illegally.

The Committee noted the allegations of 1 September 2008 by the CNTS that even if children working on their own account can be regarded as traders, the minimum age is not well-observed in the informal sector. The CNTS accordingly asked the Government to indicate what policy it intended to apply in order to protect such children, most of whom have had no basic education and are in no kind of training.

In this regard, the Government indicated that, in collaboration with ILO–IPEC, it had carried out a number of activities with a view to withdrawing self-employed children from work. They included:

- (a) taking charge of children working in the handicrafts sector, in refuse scavenging at the Mbeubess dump, and street children;
- (b) giving families access to replacement income and assisting them in developing income-generating activities;
- (c) raising public awareness through surveys, media reports and audiovisual documents, as well as displays, brochures and flyers, in French and the national languages, about child labour;
- (d) improving children's access to and maintenance in school;
- (e) providing children with basic training and training in skills that afford them better work prospects.

The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the abovementioned measures in terms of the number of children who are not bound by an employment relationship, such as those working on their own account, who have been withdrawn from work.

Minimum age of admission to employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section L.145 of the Labour Code allowed waivers from the minimum age of admission to employment by order of the Minister in charge of labour, taking account of local circumstances and the tasks to be performed. The Committee had reminded the Government that it had specified a minimum age of 15 years upon ratifying the Convention and that the waiver allowed by section L.145 of the Labour Code was inconsistent with this provision of this Convention. The Committee had noted the information from the Government to the effect that it was revising the legislation in order to make the necessary amendments. It had noted that a legislative study had been carried out in the context of the ILO–IPEC TBP, which identified shortcomings in Senegal's legislation in relation to the Convention. The findings of the study were submitted to the competent authorities so that they could take the appropriate action. The Committee had also noted that, according to the Government, no orders had been issued granting waivers from the minimum age for admission to employment or work and determining the nature of the light work that may be carried out in a family context.

The Committee noted the information sent by the Government to the effect that the matter was still under study by the competent authorities. The Committee once again urges the Government to take steps to ensure that the competent authorities' work leads to the amendment of section L.145 of the Labour Code in the near future to bring it into line with the Convention by allowing waivers from the minimum age for admission to employment or work only in the instances set forth in the Convention. It once again requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this respect in its next report.

Article 3, paragraph 3. Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 1 of Order No. 3748/MFPTEOP/DTSS of 6 June 2003 on child labour provided for a minimum age of 18 years for admission to hazardous work. It had observed, however, that according to Order No. 3750/MFPTEOP/DTSS of 6 June 2003 determining types of hazardous work prohibited for children and young persons (Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003), certain types of hazardous work could be performed by persons under 16 years of age. For example, section 7 of Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003 allows work in underground mines, quarries and other mineral extraction plants by male children under 16 years of age. The Committee had also noted that children 16 years of age were allowed to perform the following types of work: work using circular saws provided that authorization in writing has been obtained from the labour inspector (section 14), operation of vertical wheels, winches and pulleys (section 15), operation of steam valves (section 18), work on mobile platforms (section 20) and the performance of hazardous feats in public performances in theatres, cinemas, cafes, circuses and cabarets (section 21). The Committee had observed that the requirements set forth in Article 3(3) of the Convention appeared not to be fulfilled. It had noted the information supplied by the Government to the effect that in the course of the ongoing amendment of the laws and regulations, all these issues and inconsistencies would be remedied so as to harmonize the Convention and the national legislation. The Committee had also noted that on the matter of children's safety and health, 13 texts were in the process of adoption under the Labour Code to take account of the situation of children authorized to work.

The Committee noted the Government's information that the work in underground mines, quarries and other mineral extraction plants which may be done by male children under 16 years of age pursuant to section 7 of Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003 consists of light work such as the sorting and loading of ore, the handling and haulage of trucks within the weight limits set by section 6 of the same Order, and the overseeing or handling of ventilation equipment. The Government added that permits for young people of 16 years or more for work with circular saws are issued only after an inquiry and may be revoked. Lastly, the Government indicated that the jobs provided for in section 15, 18, 20 and 21 of Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003 which may be performed by young people of at least 16 years of age, are authorized in full observance of the letter and spirit of the Convention. The Committee noted that, according to the Government, all the other provisions that are inconsistent with the Convention are to be remedied in the context of the legislative revision, which was still ongoing, and account taken of the Committee's comments.

The Committee reminds the Government that under Article 3(3) of the Convention, hazardous work, such as the tasks provided for in Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003, may be performed by young persons of over 16 years of age provided that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee once again requests the Government to take measures to ensure that, as part of the ongoing legislative revision, the minimum age for admission to work underground in mines, quarries and other mineral extraction plants is 16 years both for girls and for boys. It also asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the conditions set in Article 3(3) of the Convention are fully ensured for young persons aged 16–18 years engaged in the jobs provided for in sections 14, 15, 18, 20 and 21 of Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003. It requests the Government to provide copies of the 13 texts on occupational safety and health that take account of the situation of children authorized to work, as soon as they are adopted. Lastly, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the legislative revision will be completed in the near future, and asks the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the communication of the National Confederation of Workers of Senegal (CNTS) of 1 September 2008.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. In its comments, the CNTS indicated that the Government needs to indicate clearly the action that it intends to take to eradicate the exploitation of children, and particularly the phenomenon of child talibés, which may be considered as one of the worst forms of child labour. The CNTS added that persons responsible for such exploitation of children are easily identifiable.

The Committee noted that according to the UNICEF report on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, in West and Central Africa, published in 2006, internal trafficking exists in Senegal from rural to urban areas, particularly in the case of child talibés, who beg in the streets of Dakar. Child talibés from Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Gambia and Mali are also exploited in the large cities of Senegal. The Committee further noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations on the second periodic report of Senegal in October 2006 (CRC/C/SEN/CO/2, paragraphs 60 and 61), expressed concern at the large number of working children and in particular the current practices of Koranic schools run by marabouts who use the talibés for economic gain by sending them to agricultural fields or to the streets for begging and other illicit work that provides money, thus denying them access to health, education and good living conditions.

The Committee noted that section 3(1) of Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 prohibits any person who, for economic gain, organizes another person to beg or who employs, procures or deceives a person with a view to delivering such person to beg or who exerts pressure on a person to beg or to continue to beg. Under subsection (2) of this section, there shall be no suspension of the implementation of the sentence where the offence is committed in relation to a minor.

The Committee observed that, although the legislation is in conformity with the Convention on this point, the phenomenon of child talibés remains a concern in practice. The Committee expressed concern at the use of these children for purely economic purposes. It once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to the national legislation on begging and to punish marabouts who use children for purely economic purposes. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the time-bound measures adopted to prevent young persons under 18 years of age from becoming victims of forced or compulsory labour, such as begging. Furthermore, it once again asks the Government to indicate the effective and time-bound measures adopted to protect these children against forced labour and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Sierra Leone

Minimum Age (Industry) Convention (Revised), 1937 (No. 59) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

In its previous comments, the Committee had taken note of the draft Employment Act prepared with the ILO's technical assistance. The Committee noted the information provided by the Government that section 34(4) of the draft Employment Act provides that "no child under the age of 18 years may work or be employed to perform any work that is likely to jeopardize his/her health, safety, or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development, or to interfere with his/her education. No employer shall continue to employ such a child after being notified in writing by a labour officer that the employment or work is injurious to health or dangerous". The Committee observed that this section 34(4) of the draft Employment Act gives effect to Article 5 of the Convention. It once again expresses the hope that the new Act will be adopted in the very near future in order to ensure complete conformity of the national legislation with the Convention on this point. The Committee requests the Government to communicate the text of the new Employment Act as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Spain

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1977)

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that the provisions of the national legislation governing the minimum age of admission to employment for children were not sufficient to guarantee the protection afforded by the Convention to children working on their own account. In this regard, the Government had indicated that, although it considered that the national legislation enables effective controls of work done by young people, it envisaged regulating the work of self-employed persons.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that, pursuant to section 9, paragraph 1 of the Statute 20/2007 of 11 July on self-employed workers, children under 16 years may not work on a self-employed basis or be engaged in professional activity, even within their own families. The Committee also notes that section 8 of the Statute on self-employed workers addresses the issue of the prevention of professional risks. The first paragraph of section 8 provides that public administrations will undertake an active role in the prevention of professional risks of self-employed workers through activities promoting prevention, technical advice, and the monitoring and control of the application of the legislative provisions on the prevention of professional risks by self-employed workers. According to section 8, paragraph 2, of the Statute on self-employed workers, the said administrations must promote training on risk prevention which is specific and adapted to independent work.

Sri Lanka

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the communication of the National Trade Union Federation (NTUF) dated 22 July 2009.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted with satisfaction that, by virtue of section 358A of the Penal Code, as amended by the Penal Code (Amendment) Act No. 16 of 2006, the recruitment of children under 18 years for use in armed conflict is punishable as an offence. However, the Committee had noted with concern that, according to the information from the United Nations Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict of 27 June 2006 (OSRG/PR060623), the LTTE militant group continued to recruit and use child soldiers. Moreover, the Karuna faction, a breakaway group of the LTTE, continued to abduct and recruit children under 18 years. It had also noted the report of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict in Sri Lanka of 20 December 2006 (S/2006/1006; the "Secretary-General's report"), as well as the Conclusions of the UN Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict of 13 June 2007 (S/AC.51/2007/9), that, despite previous commitments by the LTTE, that group continued to use and recruit children. It had further noted the UNICEF estimates on the high number of boys and girls who had been abducted and recruited by the LTTE and the Karuna faction. The Committee, while sharing the concern of the UN Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict about the continuous pattern of abduction, recruitment and use of children by the LTTE and the Karuna faction, had requested the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that the practice of forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age in armed conflict was eliminated.

The Committee notes the NTUF's comment that the recruitment of children for armed conflict existed until recently in LTTE areas, but now with the end of the war no such recruitment is found. The Committee notes the Government's indication that after three years of continued humanitarian operations carried out by the Sri Lankan Armed Forces, the country is now free from the scourge of LTTE terrorism. The armed conflict between the Government and the LTTE came to an end on 18 May 2009 with the death of the LTTE leaders and surrender of the remaining LTTE cadres.

The Committee notes that with the end of the war the practice of the forced recruitment by the LTTE of children under 18 years of age in armed conflict has also come to an end.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee had previously noted the International Trade Union Confederation's (ITUC) indication that child prostitution is prevalent in Sri Lanka and that, according to PEACE (an NGO), at least 5,000 children in the age bracket of 8–15 years were exploited as sex workers, particularly in certain coastal resort areas. It had also noted that sections 360A, 360B and 288A of the Penal Code, as amended, prohibit a wide range of activities associated with prostitution, including the prohibition of the use, procuring or offering of minors under 18 years for prostitution. The Committee had further noted the Government's information that prosecutions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children are carried out by the Department of Police and the National Child Protection Authority (NCPA) of Sri Lanka. The police records had revealed that 70 per cent of child trafficking cases for commercial sexual exploitation concerned boys. The Committee had also observed that the Government had taken measures to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children, especially paedophilia, through the NCPA and Cyber Watch activities. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the investigations conducted with regard to cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children and penalties applied to offenders.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking. The Committee notes the Government's information that it has developed a National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Children for Sexual and Labour Exploitation, after consultation with the NCPA and ILO-IPEC. According to the Government, this National Plan of Action covers the following four areas: legal reform and law enforcement; institutional strengthening and research; prevention and rescue; and protection and reintegration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the National Plan of Action to combat trafficking in children and on the results achieved in terms of the number of children withdrawn from trafficking and rehabilitated.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has developed a two-year National Action Plan to Combat Child Sex Tourism, 2006, led by UNICEF and the Sri Lanka Tourist Board. The strategic objectives of this project on combating the commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourism (CCSECT) include: to ensure that all tourists are made aware of the tourist industry's zero-tolerance policy in relation to child sex tourism (CST); to maximize the involvement of the private tourism sector in combating CST; to bring in new policies, laws and regulations to combat CST and to maximize the coordination with the police, social authorities, District Child Protection Committees (DCPCs) and NGOs in tourist areas; and to empower children and adolescents through life skills-based interventions to take more control of their lives. The Committee notes that, within the framework of this project, several awareness-raising programmes were implemented in 2007 for hotel staff in high-risk areas, tourist van drivers and service providers, school children, teachers and tourist police officers. It also notes the information provided by the Government on the workplan activities on the CCSECT project for the year 2008. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Sex Tourism in terms of the elimination of the commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourism. It also requests the Government to indicate the number of children prevented or withdrawn from commercial sexual exploitation and rehabilitated pursuant to this National Action Plan.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identify and reach out to children at risk. Children who have been affected by armed conflict. The Committee had previously noted that various programmes were adopted with the assistance of ILO-IPEC, UNICEF and other international organizations to address the problems of children involved in armed conflict, and to prevent them from being involved in the worst forms of child labour, especially by providing them with education or vocational training. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government on the following measures taken with regard to the rehabilitation and reintegration of former child combatants:

- The Commissioner General of Rehabilitation (CGR), together with the NCPA, is providing care and protection for all ex-child combatants in the three rehabilitation centres established in the Northern and Eastern provinces. According to the information available with the CGR, 128 children who were under the age of 18 years at the time of surrendering were reunified with their families or recruited for foreign employment.
- The Government amended, on 15 December 2008, the Emergency (Miscellaneous Provisions and Powers) Regulations, 2005, and inserted a new section 22A, according to which child combatants are granted an amnesty and are entitled to undergo the rehabilitation programme in the Protective Child Accommodation Centres established under the terms of these Regulations. These centres provide accommodation, support, catch-up education and vocational training for persons under 18 years of age who surrendered under the terms of this Regulation.
- With the support of ILO-IPEC, the Government developed a draft National Framework Proposal on the reintegration of ex-combatants into civilian life in Sri Lanka on 30 July 2009. This proposal aims to address the specific emotional, social and economic needs of this vulnerable group of people. The proposed reintegration process aims to equip this target group with social education and skills required for civilian life, and to identify suitable vocational and technical training, employment and income-generating activities in community-based reconstruction programmes in the North and East provinces.
- The Government, together with UNICEF, launched a national campaign to prevent child recruitment and to promote the release of all recruited children. The campaign "Bring back the child", which targets armed groups, vulnerable communities and the children affected, provides reintegration and rehabilitation services for children who are released.

- The Ministry of Education and the Department of Examinations has established ten special examination centres in Vavuniya for 1,263 displaced children, including 166 former child soldiers, who are presently housed in Internally Displaced Persons welfare houses in Vavuniya. They were provided with several extra classes to upgrade their knowledge and almost all the 166 ex-child soldiers appeared for the senior secondary-level exams held in August 2009.

The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to rehabilitate and reintegrate former child combatants. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of former child combatants who have been rehabilitated in the Protective Child Accommodation Centres and in other rehabilitation centres in the Northern and Eastern provinces.

Children affected by the tsunami. The Committee had previously noted the Government's statement that the NCPA launched a project entitled "Strengthening the capacity of the National Child Protection Authority to mobilize tsunami-affected communities in Sri Lanka and to prevent the trafficking of tsunami-affected orphans into exploitative employment". The Committee notes the Government's statement that it adopted the Tsunami (Special Provisions) Act No. 16 of 2005 which provides for special protection mechanisms for every child and young person who was left an orphan, or with a single parent who is unable to take care of such a child, or who is in need of care and protection (section 7). The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the NCPA together with the Ministry of Justice and with the assistance received from the Asian Development Bank launched a project to appoint foster parents to those children through courts which would ensure better protection and care for children. The Committee further notes that according to the ILO-IPEC Technical Progress Report of June 2008 on the project entitled "Emergency response to child labour in selected tsunami-affected areas in Sri Lanka", 3,532 children were provided direct services such as formal education, non-formal education, vocational or training skills, and legal and health services; 6,588 children were provided with indirect services such as nutrition, uniforms, books and other school supplies; and 468 families were provided with vocational or skills training and income-generating activities. Moreover, 2,465 children were prevented from child labour through educational services or training opportunities, and 1,233 children through other non-education-related services.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sudan

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Slavery and practices similar to slavery. Abduction and the exaction of forced labour. In its previous comments under Convention No. 29, the Committee had noted the International Trade Union Confederation's (ITUC) allegation that the report on the situation in Darfur issued by Amnesty International in July 2004 indicates cases of abduction of women and children by the Janjaweed militia, including some cases of sexual slavery. Abductions had continued in 2003 and 2004. The ITUC also indicated that, according to the Dinka Chiefs Committee (DCC) and the Committee for the Eradication of Abduction of Women and Children (CEAWC), there were some 14,000 people who had been abducted. The Committee had also noted the information contained in the ITUC's communication of 7 September 2005 that the signing of a Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA) in January 2005, the inauguration of a new Government on 9 July 2005 and the adoption of the interim Constitution provided a historic opportunity for the new Government of Sudan to resolve the problem of abductions, but it would not automatically lead to an end of abductions and the exaction of forced labour.

The Committee had noted that article 30(1) of the Constitution of the Transitional Sudan Republic of 2005 prohibits slavery, the slave trade in all its forms and forced labour (unless sanctioned by the tribunal). It had also noted the Government's information that section 32 of the Child Act of 2004 specifically prohibits "the employment of children in forced labour, sexual or pornographic exploitation, illegal trade, or armed conflict". The Committee had further noted that various provisions of the Penal Code prohibit forced labour (section 311), including abductions for that purpose (section 312).

The Committee notes that, according to the Report of Activities of the CEAWC annexed to the Government's communication of 27 April 2008, the CEAWC has successfully identified and resolved 11,237 of the 14,000 cases of abduction and reunified 3,398 abductees with their families. It notes that, according to the statement of the Government representative at the discussion under the Forced Labour Convention (No. 29) of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the June 2008 International Labour Conference, the number of cases of abduction identified was raised to 11,300. The Government representative recalled that the CEAWC had achieved a large measure of success in dealing with cases of abduction and affirmed that there have been no cases of forced labour in the country since the signature of the 2005 CPA. However, the Committee notes that both Worker and Employer members affirmed that there was evidence of the persistence of abductions of women and children and their forced labour in Sudan. In this regard, the Committee, while taking note of the measures taken by the Government, expressed the view that there was no verifiable evidence that forced labour was completely eradicated and expressed concern at the reports relating to the involuntary return of certain abductees, including cases of displaced and unaccompanied children.

The Committee further notes that, in its communication of 29 August 2008, the ITUC observed that, despite the Government's claim that "there were no further cases of abduction and forced labour in the country", information from various sources provide evidence that abductions have continued in Darfur, in the context of the current conflict there. In response to the ITUC's allegations, the Government, in its communication of 2 November 2008, reiterated its commitment to completely eradicate the phenomenon of abductions and to provide continued support to the CEAWC. The Government also once again confirmed that abductions have stopped completely which, according to the Government, has also been confirmed by the DCC.

The Committee notes, however, that there is broad consensus among United Nations bodies, the representative organizations of workers and non-governmental organizations of the continuing existence and of the scope of the practices of abduction and the exaction of forced labour from children. Indeed, the Committee observes that the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in a Security Council report on children and armed conflict in the Sudan, of 10 February 2009, reported many instances of child abductions in southern Sudan and Darfur in 2007, as well as continuing concerns about incidents of abductions in 2008 (S/2009/84, paragraphs 35–37). Furthermore, the Committee notes that, in his Report to the Human Rights Council of June 2009, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan highlights cases of abduction of children in March and April 2009 in Jonglei State, as well as between December 2008 and March 2009 in Western Equatoria and Central Equatoria States, in the context of continued attacks and fighting.

The Committee therefore once again observes that, while there have been positive and tangible steps to combat the forced labour of children, which include the conclusion of the results achieved by the CEAWC, there is no verifiable evidence that the forced labour of children has been eradicated. Therefore, although the national legislation appears to prohibit abductions and the exaction of forced labour, this remains an issue of concern in practice, in particular in the context of renewed violence and conflict. In this regard, the Committee once again reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, forced labour is considered as one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. It strongly urges the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the situation and to take effective and time-bound measures to eradicate abductions and the exaction of forced labour from children under 18 years, as a matter of urgency. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to remove children from situations of abduction and forced labour and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration, and to continue providing information on the results achieved.

Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the government armed forces, including the paramilitary Popular Defence Forces (PDF), the government-backed militias, the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and other armed groups, including tribal groups not allied to government or armed opposition groups, have forcibly recruited child soldiers in the north and the south of Sudan. Recruitment took place predominantly in Western and Southern Upper Nile, Eastern Equatoria and the Nuba Mountains. An estimated 17,000 children remained in the government, SPLA and militia forces in 2004.

The Committee had noted that the National Service Law of 1992 stipulates that any Sudanese person having attained 18 years of age and who is not older than 33 years of age may be subject to conscription. However, section 10(4) of the People's Armed Forces Act of 1986 states that all those who are capable of bearing arms are regarded as a reserve force and may be called upon to serve in the armed forces whenever the need arises. Subsection (5) of section 10 further states that, without prejudice to the provisions of subsection (4), the President of the Republic may require any person who is capable of bearing arms to undergo military training and thus be prepared as a member of a reserve force in accordance with the conditions specified by any law or decree in force. Furthermore, the government-run PDF established as a paramilitary force by the Popular Defence Forces Act of 1989, were allowed to recruit 16-year-olds.

The Committee had noted the Government's information that section 9(24) of the Sixth Protocol of the CPA of 2005 requires "the demobilization of all child soldiers in the span of six months as from the date on which the Comprehensive Peace Agreement is signed". Section 9(1)(10) of the Protocol considers the conscription of children a violation of the provisions of the Agreement. The Committee had also noted the Government's information that a Committee was set up after the CPA which is specialized in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. However, the Committee had considered that the prohibition of forcibly recruiting children should not be confined to the scope of the said CPA. Hence, the Committee had observed that, according to the legislation in force, children under 18 years may be recruited as "reserve forces" as well as members of the PDF (from 16 years of age). The Committee had accordingly requested the Government to take the necessary measures to prohibit in the national legislation the compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years including as "reserves", in any military force and to adopt appropriate penalties for contraventions of the prohibition.

The Committee notes that, according to the mission report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict of 24 January to 2 February 2007, the Government of Sudan was finalizing the Sudan Armed Forces Bill that fixes the age of recruitment at 18 years and criminalizes the recruitment of anyone under 18. The Committee notes with interest that the Sudan Armed Forces Act was adopted in December 2007. The Committee further notes with interest that the Child Act of Southern Sudan was adopted in 2008. Section 31 of this Child Act establishes a minimum age of 18 years for conscription or voluntary recruitment into armed forces or groups. Section 32 provides that any person involved in the recruitment of a child into the armed forces is liable to be sentenced to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years or to a fine, or both.

While taking note of these advances, the Committee nevertheless observes that the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in his Security Council report on children and armed conflict in the Sudan of 10 February 2009, indicates that United Nations field monitors reported the recruitment and use of 101 children by the SPLA and that the recruitment and use of 67 children has been reported in six separate incidents in the Abyei area. On 18–19 June 2008, the United Nations reported the presence of 55 uniformed children aged 14 to 16 years among SAF soldiers who had presented themselves for registration in the Joint Inspection Unit. Furthermore, the Secretary-General indicates that United Nations field monitors reported the recruitment and use of 487 children by various armed forces and groups operating in all three Darfur states, most of which have been used as combatants, and that it is known that many cases remain unreported. Moreover, over 14 Sudanese and foreign armed forces and groups are reportedly responsible for recruiting and using children in Darfur. In February 2008 alone, at least 89 children were recruited by various armed groups: 10 in southern Darfur, 30 in northern Darfur, and 49 in western Darfur. Some of the children recruited were as young as 12 years of age. The Secretary-General further reports that Government forces are also responsible for recruiting children in Darfur. For example, reports indicate that the Central Reserve Police recruited 49 children and the SAF recruited 45 children between 1 August 2007 and 30 December 2008 (S/2009/84, 10 February 2009, paragraphs 9–17).

The Committee notes that, despite the adoption of the Sudan Armed Forces Act in 2007 and the Child Act of Southern Sudan in 2008, children are still being recruited and forced to join illegal armed groups or the national armed forces in practice. It expresses its profound concern with regard to the persistence of this practice, especially as it leads to other violations of the rights of children, in the form of abductions, murders and sexual violence. The Committee refers to the Secretary-General's call upon the Government of National Unity and the Government of Southern Sudan to live up to the commitments they have made to end the recruitment and use of children in their forces in accordance with their obligations under international law as well as national legislation (S/2009/84, 10 February 2009, paragraph 68). The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the situation and to adopt, as a matter of urgency, immediate and effective measures to put a stop in practice to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed groups and the armed forces. It urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years for use in armed conflict are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to send a copy of the Sudan Armed Forces Act.

Article 7, paragraph 1. Penalties. Forced labour. In its previous comments under Convention No. 29, the Committee had noted that the CEAWC was of the opinion that legal action was the best measure to eradicate abductions, while the tribes, including the DCC, had requested the CEAWC not to resort to legal action unless the amicable efforts of the tribes had failed.

The Committee had noted the ITUC's allegation that the impunity that those responsible for abductions and the exaction of forced labour have enjoyed – illustrated by the absence of any prosecutions for abductions in the last 16 years – has been responsible for the continuation of this practice throughout the civil war and more recently in Darfur. The Committee noted the Government's reply of November 2005 according to which the main reasons for which all the tribes concerned, including the DCC, have requested the CEAWC not to resort to legal action unless the amicable efforts of the tribes are not successful, are that: legal action is very long and expensive; it may threaten the life of young abductees; and it will not build peace among the tribes concerned.

The Committee had noted that the Penal Code of 2003 contains various provisions which provide for sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties of imprisonment and fines for anyone who commits the offence of forced labour. It had also noted the Government's information that section 67(d) of the Child Act of 2004 states that any person who violates section 32 prohibiting forced labour shall be punished by imprisonment for a maximum period of 15 years and by a fine decided upon by the tribunal. The Committee had considered that the lack of enforcement of the penal provisions prohibiting the forced labour of children under 18 years, while sometimes ensuring that victims are effectively retrieved, has the effect of ensuring impunity for perpetrators instead of punishing them.

The Committee notes that the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards indicated that, with a view to giving effect to legal procedures and to bringing those procedures closer to the victims, four prosecutors had been appointed covering all the regions addressed by the CEAWC. However, not a single victim made use of these legal procedures and so, as of January 2008, the CEAWC recommenced its work to continue the methods that had been previously applied. The Worker members nevertheless pointed out that international provisions regarding sanctions should prevail to prevent perpetrators from enjoying impunity. The Worker members noted that the lack of prosecutions had undoubtedly contributed to the persistence of abductions during the civil war and until today in Darfur. The Conference Committee therefore considered it necessary to pursue effective and urgent action to put an end to impunity by punishing perpetrators, particularly those unwilling to cooperate, independently from the CEAWC's activities. In this regard, in her Report to the Human Rights Council of June 2009, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan expressed ongoing and serious concern at the level of impunity in all areas of Sudan (A/HRC/11/14, paragraph 91).

The Committee once again reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government shall take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the provision and application of penal sanctions. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the protection of children under 18 years of age against abductions for the exaction of forced labour in practice, including by ensuring that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out, and that effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are imposed on those engaged in the abduction and exaction of forced labour from children under 18 years. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child soldiers. The Committee notes that the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in his Security Council report on children and armed conflict in the Sudan of 10 February 2009, indicated that during the reporting period (1 August 2007 to 30 December 2008), almost 600 children formerly associated with armed forces and groups under the CPA, as well as 12,000 other vulnerable children, were supported through reintegration programmes across the Sudan. It notes that the National Council for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (DDR) Coordination and the Northern Sudan DDR Commission were established by the CPA in February 2006, while a DDR Commission for Southern Sudan was created in May 2006. The Northern and Southern Sudan DDR Commissions have jointly developed a national reintegration strategy for children associated with armed forces and groups, which will provide a common approach for child reintegration throughout the country. In this regard, the Southern Sudan DDR Commission has reintegrated 150 children and registered an additional 50, and the Northern Sudan DDR Commission has recently started the reintegration of some 300 children. The Secretary-General also indicates that a DDR process for children in Darfur was launched in June 2008 as a result of a workshop that brought together representatives of the six groups that are signatories to the Darfur Peace Agreement, all of whom have committed themselves to releasing children as a priority. However, although the CPA signed in January 2005 called for the immediate and unconditional release of all children from various fighting forces and groups within six months, the Secretary-General points out that children continue to be recruited and used by all parties to the conflict (S/2009/84, paragraphs 56–60). While noting the progress achieved in the country, the Committee observes that the current situation in Sudan remains a cause for serious concern. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts and take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed conflict and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. In this regard, it requests the Government to supply information on the number of children under 18 years of age who have been rehabilitated and reintegrated into their communities as a result of the Northern and Southern Sudan DDR Commissions.

Furthermore, in accordance with the recommendation of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee invites the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use or procuring of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 187 of the Penal Code penalizes any person who commits a sexual act with a child under 16 years of age. In this respect, it noted that, in its report and message of 20 September 1999, the Federal Council indicates that section 187 establishes the age of sexual consent at 16 years, and that young persons between 16 and 18 years of age may engage in prostitution, provided that they do so of their own free will. The Committee also noted that section 195 of the Penal Code punishes any person who induces a young person (that is a person who has not yet reached the age of 18 years) to engage in prostitution. The Committee considered that section 195 of the Penal Code covers the prohibition of the procuring of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution, in accordance with the Convention. However, it observed that, with regard to the use of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution, Swiss penal law is not fully in conformity with the Convention because section 187 of the Penal Code only punishes those who have committed acts of a sexual nature with children under 16 years of age. The Committee emphasized that it is necessary to make a distinction between the age of sexual consent and the freedom to engage in prostitution. Indeed, the freedom of sexual activity accorded to a young person by the law cannot include the freedom to engage in prostitution without being in violation of one of the objectives of the Convention, namely the prohibition of the worst forms of child labour.

With regard to the consent of a young person between the ages of 16 and 18 years of age, the Committee referred to the preparatory work for the adoption of the Convention (ILC, 86th Session, 1998, Report VI(2), pp. 52–53) in which the Office indicated that “this provision [Article 3(b) of the Convention] would still prohibit the use, engagement or offering of a person under 18 for prostitution. A child’s consent to a sexual act would not preclude it from the prohibition”. The Committee also referred to the message of the Federal Council of 11 March 2005 in which it indicated that “it should be noted that, in the view of the working group, the agreement of the child is not sufficient to exempt prostitution from any penalty” (see p. 2656 of the message). The Committee therefore considered that, when adopting Convention No. 182, the ILO also intended that the consent of a young person would not affect the prohibition in Article 3(b).

Moreover, with regard to the meaning of the expression “use of a child for prostitution” the Committee referred to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, 2000. Under the terms of Article 2(b) of the Protocol, child prostitution means the use of a child in sexual activities for remuneration or any other form of consideration. Accordingly, the Committee considered that, in the context of Convention No. 182, the use of a child for prostitution applies to a person, in this case a client, who engages in a sexual act with a child under 18 years of age for remuneration or any other form of consideration.

The Committee therefore considered that, although the national legislation (section 187 of the Penal Code) recognizes that a child of over 16 years of age may lawfully consent to a sexual act, the age of consent does not affect the obligation to prohibit this worst form of child labour. It also considered that the act of engaging in a sexual act with a child under 18 years of age for remuneration constitutes the use of a child for prostitution, whether or not the child consents. Accordingly, section 195 of the Penal Code does not give full effect to the prohibition set out in Article 3(b) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the issue of extending the culpability of persons who have recourse to the prostitution of young persons under 16 years of age to those who have recourse to the prostitution of young persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years is currently under discussion. This question will be examined in the context of the possible adhesion of Switzerland to the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse (CETS No. 201) following which, and in the light of the responses received by the cantons, the Federal Council will decide on the action to be taken. The Government adds that parliamentary interventions have already been submitted on the subject, in which the Federal Council considered that the prostitution of young persons under 18 years of age may be prejudicial to their sexual development, traumatize them and result in their psychological and social destabilization. The Federal Council, however, noted that it would not be wise to anticipate the results obtained in the cantons from this hearing. The Committee reminds the Government, however, that, under the terms of Article 1, each Member which ratifies the Convention shall take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the discussions on the culpability of persons having recourse to the prostitution of young persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years results in the adoption of legal provisions prohibiting and penalizing the use of children under 18 years of age for prostitution as soon as possible. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any developments in this respect.

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee had previously noted, that at the time of ratification, Tajikistan had specified a minimum age of 16 years for admission to employment or work. The Committee had, however, noted that section 174 of the new Labour Code (Act of 15 May 1997) only prohibits the employment of persons under the age of 15 years in contrast to section 180 of the previous Labour Code of 1973 which fixed the minimum age of 16 years. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, in accordance with sections 27 and 174 of the Labour Code of 1997, the conclusion of a labour contract and admission to employment or work is allowed only with respect to persons of not less than 15 years of age. Section 174 further permits the employment of children of 14 years of age with the consent of their parents or guardian, in light work provided that such employment is not dangerous or harmful to their health or is not prejudicial to attendance at school. The Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 2(1) of the Convention, no one under the minimum age for admission to employment or work, specified upon ratification of the Convention (16 years), shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation except for light work as authorized under Article 7 of the Convention. It further reminds the Government that Article 2(2) of the Convention foresees the raising of the minimum age but does not allow the lowering of the minimum age once declared. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take immediate measures, pursuant to its declaration under Article 2 of the Convention, to fix the minimum age for employment or work at 16 years, with the exception of light work.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United Republic of Tanzania

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee had previously noted that under the terms of section 139A(1)(b)(i) of the Penal Code, trafficking in children for labour exploitation was only prohibited if the consent of the parent or lawful guardian had not been given. It had requested the Government to indicate in what way trafficking in children for labour exploitation is prohibited where consent of their parents or guardian has been given, but which may, nonetheless, be clear cases of trafficking for the purposes of labour exploitation.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the enactment of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act, 2008, which repeals section 139(A) of the Penal Code. According to section 4(1) of this Act, a person commits an offence of trafficking if that person recruits, transports, transfers, harbours, provides or receives a person by any means under the pretext of domestic or overseas employment for the purposes of labour or sexual exploitation. Section 4(3) of the Act provides that, if the victim is a child under the age of 18 years, the consent of the child, parent or guardian shall not constitute a defence in prosecution. The Committee also notes that, according to section 6(2)(a) of the Act, trafficking in children under the age of 18 years shall be considered as “severe trafficking in persons”, which carries more severe penalties, namely a fine ranging between 5 million shillings and 150 million shillings or imprisonment ranging from ten years to 20 years, or both. Sections 5 and 7 of the Act further provide penalties for the offences related to procuring or facilitating or acting as an intermediary for the commission of trafficking in persons.

Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. Referring to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 10 November 2003 (A/58/546-S/2003/1053, paragraph 47) that armed opposition groups were recruiting children from refugee camps in western Tanzania, the Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to prohibit the forced recruitment of children from refugee camps for use in armed conflict.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 4(1)(g)(ii) of the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2008, prohibits any person from recruiting, hiring, adopting, transporting or abducting a child under the age of 18 years for the purposes of engaging the child in armed conflict. According to subsection (5) of section 4 of the Act, this offence shall be punishable with a fine of not less than 5 million shillings but not more than 100 million shillings or imprisonment for a term ranging between two years and ten years, or both.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee had previously observed that the provisions of the Employment and Labour Relations Act, No. 6 of 2004 (sections 5(4) and 5(7)), and the Penal Code (sections 138, 139A(1)(b) and 139A(1)(b)(i)) do not appear to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that efforts will be made to bring about the prohibition of the above offence. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take immediate measures to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties and establish penalties for the same. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 3(d) and Article 4, paragraph 1. Prohibition and determination of hazardous work. Mainland Tanzania. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the process of adopting the rules and regulations of the Employment and Labour Relations Act are under way. The Committee also notes that, according to the ILO-IPEC Progress Report of September 2009 on the project entitled “Support for the Time Bound Programme on the Worst Forms of Child Labour in Tanzania-II” (TBP-II), the process of integrating the list of hazardous types of work in the national labour laws will be completed in October 2009. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the regulation on the list of hazardous types of work will be adopted shortly in consultation with the social partners and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect. It also requests the Government to supply a copy of the list, once it has been adopted.

Zanzibar. The Committee had previously noted that the draft Employment Act for Zanzibar, which contains a general prohibition of hazardous work for persons under 18, would be adopted shortly. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s statement that Employment Act No. 11, which prohibits child labour including the employment of persons under 18 years in hazardous work, has been adopted since 2005. The Committee requests the Government to supply a copy of Employment Act No. 11 of 2005 along with its next report.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. The Committee had previously noted the Government’s statement that, during Phase I of the ILO-IPEC project entitled “Supporting the Time-Bound Programme on the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2002–05)” (TBP), the National Inter-Sectoral Coordination Committee (NISCC) approved 15 action programmes on child labour. The Committee notes the Government’s information that, as a result of the programmes of action approved by the NISCC, the incidence of child labour has been reduced from 25 per cent in 2000–01 to 21 per cent in 2005–06.

Article 7, paragraph 1. Penalties. The Committee had previously observed that, due to devaluation, most of the monetary penalties mentioned in the Penal Code and the Employment and Labour Relations Act, 2004, have become very low. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2008 provides for a higher penalty for the offences related to trafficking in children. However, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to review the monetary penalties prescribed for the other offences mentioned under clauses (a) to (d) of Article 3 of the Convention, which are dealt with under the Penal Code and the Employment and Labour Relations Act.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee had previously noted that according to the ILO-IPEC Progress Report, 2006 (TBP Phase I, page 2), the Government had introduced the Primary Education Development Programme (PEDP) from 2002 to 2006 and the Secondary Education Development Programme (SEDP) for the period from 2005 to 2009 which had contributed to increased enrolments in primary schools and secondary schools. It had also noted that the Government adopted a Complementary Basic Education (COBET) programme as a strategy to reach out-of-school children, including those in child labour. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, according to the Basic Education Statistics in Tanzania, 2007, as a result of the programmes to improve education under the PEDP, SEDP, as well as the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (PRSP), the number of children enrolled in primary education has increased to 12,418,679 pupils in 2007, and the secondary school enrolment has increased to 1,020,510 pupils. The Committee also notes the statistical data provided by the Government on the number of children learning under the COBET programme. According to this data, in 2007 a total of 185,206 children (106,463 boys and 78,743 girls) between the ages of 11 and 18 years were COBET learners. Considering that education contributes to preventing children from engaging in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure free basic education and to keep children in school. It requests the Government to continue supplying data on the enrolment rates in school disaggregated by sex.

Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking in children. The Committee notes that according to the provisions under Part IV of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2008, the Government shall secure the protection, assistance and rehabilitation of child victims of trafficking; and establish or designate centres for the protection and assistance of victims of trafficking in persons (sections 19 and 20). The Committee requests the Government provide information on any measures taken, pursuant to the provisions of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2008, to secure the protection, assistance and rehabilitation of child victims of trafficking, and on the number of centres established for this purpose.

Commercial sexual exploitation and child labour in tobacco farming. The Committee notes with interest that according to the ILO-IPEC Progress Report, 2009, of the project TBP-II a total of 20,143 children (10,015 boys and 10,128 girls) were withdrawn or prevented from child labour through educational services or training opportunities; and 2,375 children (912 boys and 1,463 girls) were withdrawn or prevented from child labour through other non-education related services. It also notes that within this project 858 children (167 boys and 691 girls) were withdrawn and 648 children (414 boys and 234 girls) were prevented from commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee further notes that, according to the ILO-IPEC Progress Report of August 2008 of the project entitled "Towards Sustainable action for prevention and elimination of child labour in tobacco farming in Urambo district, Tanzania", a total of 600 children (224 girls and 376 boys) were withdrawn or prevented through educational services or training opportunities; and 1,000 children (488 girls and 512 boys) were withdrawn or prevented through other non-education related services, and a total of 612 families were provided with income-generating activities. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the achievements of the TBP-II and other ongoing action programmes within the TBP-II, and their impact with regard to removing children from the worst forms of child labour, in particular, the commercial sexual exploitation of children and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration.

Clause (d). Identify and reach out to children at special risk. Child orphans of HIV/AIDS. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) 1.5 million people were believed to be affected in the United Republic of Tanzania. It also noted that, according to the Rapid Assessment document entitled "HIV/AIDS and child labour in the United Republic of Tanzania", more than 60 per cent of children working in the informal sector were either single or double orphans. Most of their parents had died from HIV/AIDS. It had also noted the Government's initiative at the national level, through the National Policy on HIV/AIDS of 2001 and the National Multi-Sectoral Strategic Framework on HIV/AIDS (2003–07). The Committee had further noted the Government's statement that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Youth Development in collaboration with local government councils and NGOs, had developed HIV/AIDS sexual and reproductive health education programmes for out-of-school children and those children at risk. The Committee notes that according to the information contained in the Epidemiological Factsheet on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), October 2008, over 970,000 children aged below 17 years are HIV/AIDS orphans in Tanzania. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee observes with concern that one of the serious consequences of this pandemic on orphans is their increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour. The Committee therefore requests the Government to redouble its efforts to protect child victims and orphans of HIV/AIDS from the worst forms of child labour, in particular by increasing their access to education and vocational training. It also requests the Government to provide information in this regard and the results achieved.

Thailand

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee noted with satisfaction that the draft Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act has been adopted by the National Legislative Assembly in November 2007. This Act defines "human trafficking" as the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of persons, by means of threat or the use of force or other forms of coercion, abduction, fraud, deception, of the abuse of power, or of a position of vulnerability, or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. The consent of a child or woman victim of trafficking to the intended exploitation should be irrelevant where any of the abovementioned means have been used. Key elements of the Act include, amongst others, protective and rehabilitative measures (physical, psychological, legal, and educational services) provided to the victims of trafficking. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the Prevention and Suppression of the Human Trafficking Act with its next report.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. The police and public officials. The Committee noted the Government's information on various measures aimed at training and raising public officials' awareness on preventing and eliminating child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. In particular, the Department of Labour Protection and Welfare has carried out various seminars on collaboration between concerned agencies aimed at raising the awareness of public officials in preventing, eliminating and punishing unfair labour practices concerning children and women. The seminars were attended by 50 officers, including the Immigration Bureau and Juvenile Aid Subdivision under the Office of the Royal Thai Police. Moreover, the various measures promoted by the Subcommittee to Coordinate Combating Trafficking in Children and Women (SCTCW) to implement the National Policy and Plan of Action on Preventing, Suppressing and Combating Domestic Transnational Trafficking of Children and Women (NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07) include the following: (a) promoting cooperation with the Royal Thai Police to establish a specific unit responsible for combating trafficking of children and women (Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women Division); (b) organizing workshops for officers responsible for protecting children, women and disadvantaged persons. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken by the newly established Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women, to combat child trafficking.

Protection and Occupational Development Committee (PODC). The Committee had previously noted that the Prostitution Act of 1996 established a Protection and Occupational Development Committee (PODC), composed of representatives of various ministries as well as representatives of the police and central and juvenile court police (section 14). The PODC was responsible for coordinating plans of action, projects, working systems and determining action plans to be implemented jointly by government agencies and the private sector involved in preventing and suppressing prostitution (section 15 of the Prostitution Act). Noting that the Government provides no information on the concrete measures taken by the PODC as well as their impact on preventing and eliminating child prostitution, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on this point in its next report.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. The ILO–IPEC TICW project and the National Plan on Prevention and Resolution of Domestic and Cross-border Trafficking in Children and Women (NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07). The Committee had previously noted that the ILO–IPEC project to combat trafficking in children and women in the Mekong subregion (TICW project) was launched in 2000 and covered Thailand, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Viet Nam, Cambodia and Yunnan (province of China). In Thailand, the first phase of the project (2000–03) focused on rural communities in the provinces of Phayao, Chiang Mai, Chiang Rai and Nong Khai. The second phase of the project (2003–08) would expand project interventions to cover the complete perspective of Thailand as a source, transit and destination country of trafficking victims with the objectives of: (i) enhancing the capacity of governmental agencies, civil society organizations and community-based groups to combat and monitor human trafficking; (ii) providing direct assistance to vulnerable groups (including people living in poor rural areas, tribal and migrant peoples); and (iii) increasing the role of the organizations of employers and workers in combating the trafficking of children and women. In the framework of the second phase of the TICW project, the National Committee on Combating Trafficking in Children and Women launched, in 2003, its first National Policy and Plan of Action on Preventing, Suppressing and Combating Domestic Transnational Trafficking of Children and Women (NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07), focusing on prevention, with short-term and long-term interventions, as well as on research, monitoring and evaluation systems. The Committee noted the Government's information that the following activities have been carried out at the national level in implementing the NPA: (a) signing of memorandum of understandings (MOUs) for nine northern provinces on common guidelines of practices for agencies in addressing trafficking in children and women; (b) MOU on the common guidelines and practice for government agencies concerned with cases of trafficking of children and women; (c) MOU on the procedural cooperation between governmental and non-governmental agencies concerned with cases of trafficking of children and women; (d) MOU on the operational guidelines of NGO agencies concerned with cases of trafficking of children and women. The Committee further noted the information contained in the TICW, phase II (TICW-II), progress report of 2007 that the Operational Centre for the Prevention and the Protection of Trafficking in Women and Children and the concerned governmental and non governmental agencies signed the domestic MOU on trafficking among 19 north-eastern provinces (3 July 2006). The MOUs will be expanded to cover all 17 northern provinces in the first half of 2007. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken at the national level in implementing the second phase of the TICW and the NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07, and their impact on eliminating child trafficking.

Child prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Office of the National Commission on Women's Affairs estimated that there were between approximately 22,500 and 40,000 prostitutes under 18 years of age (representing approximately 15–20 per cent of the overall number of prostitutes). These estimates did not include foreign child prostitutes. It had also noted that, according to UNICEF, estimates of the number of children engaged in prostitution varied from 60,000 to 200,000, with 5 per cent of them being boys (Official summary of the state of the world's children 2005). The Committee had noted that the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2004–09), aims at preventing and eliminating the worst forms of child labour, including child prostitution and had asked the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken under the National Plan of Action. The Committee is very concerned about the absence of information from the Government on this point. It observes that although the commercial sexual exploitation of persons under 18 is prohibited by law, it remains an issue of concern in practice. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken under the National Plan of Action to eliminate the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 for prostitution, and the results achieved.

Article 7, paragraph 1. Penalties. Statistical information on child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, prosecutions, convictions and penalties. The Committee had previously noted that the enforcement of the existing penalties was very ineffective. It noted the Government's information that, according to the statistical figures of the Office of the Court of Justice, in the period 2003–04 there were 823 prosecutions concerning the offences of procuring and trafficking children for the purposes of prostitution and sexual abuse under the Penal Code. The Committee also noted that the Government mentions the difficulty of collecting precise statistics on the worst forms of child labour, especially on national and international trafficking through illegal channels. This is especially due to the unwillingness of victims of trafficking to identify themselves or their perpetrators, as well as the unwillingness of some citizens to become involved. Therefore, Thailand's next attempt is to improve and produce a more comprehensive system of data collection and analysis, disaggregated by sex, age, region and other socio-economic categories. The Committee considered that the issues of improving data collection on the number of children involved in trafficking and the effective enforcement of the penalties for child trafficking are linked. It welcomed the willingness of the Government to improve the system of data collection and analysis on trafficked children. In view of the high number of children under 18 years who are victims of trafficking and prostitution, the Committee once again requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that persons who traffic in children or exploit children in prostitution are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. The Committee also encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to improve the system of data collection and analysis on children involved in the worst forms of child labour, especially in trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide, in its next report, statistical information on the number of children involved in trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, and on infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

Measures aimed at securing compensation for victims of trafficking. The Committee noted that the Government has taken a number of measures aimed at securing justice and compensation for victims of trafficking, including children, and protecting victims of trafficking during the trial period. In particular, it noted that the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act, has been adopted in order to improve the judicial system to ensure justice for victims of trafficking and prosecute the offenders. More specifically, this Act covers the following aspects: (a) the possibility of prosecuting every offender of human trafficking, no matter where the offence has been committed; (b) the protection of victims of trafficking and witnesses during the trial; (c) the possibility for victims of trafficking to claim compensation from the offenders; and (d) the provision of funds amounting to 500 million baht set up by the Government under the draft Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act, for the rehabilitation, occupational training and development of victims of trafficking. In this regard, the Government adds that the Accused Act, BE 2544 (2001) states that children who are deceived into trafficking, prostitution, or forced labour, shall receive compensation. The Committee further noted the Government's information that the Central Juvenile and Family Court, in order to give effect to the provisions of the Convention, has taken several measures aimed at training court officers to deal with children involved in trials. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate in its next report the number of former child victims of trafficking who have received compensation either from the offenders or through funds set up by the Government under the Accused Act BE 2544 (2001) or the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking of children. The Committee had previously noted that the Government, with the assistance of ILO/IPEC and collaboration of the social partners and NGOs decided, on 17 January 2005, to establish, under the TICW, joint forces in Chiang Mai, Chaing Rai and Phayao. The objectives of the joint forces were to collect data concerning the supply of and demand for trafficked individuals, to establish victim support hotlines, raise awareness about the dangers of human trafficking, strengthen networks, develop provincial and district mechanisms for the prevention of trafficking, and promote community and school "watchdogs". The action programme would last 16 to 24 months and was expected to benefit 12,000 children and women from Chiang Mai, Chaing Rai and Phayao, who were at heightened risk of being trafficked. The Committee noted that, according to the TICW-II progress report of 2007, a provincial-level database has been developed, which contains data from various sources on persons and communities at risk of trafficking, victims of trafficking (especially for sexual exploitation), workplaces considered vulnerable to trafficking, and lessons learned. Moreover, the following activities have been carried out to raise awareness on child trafficking issues: (a) a seminar aimed at increasing the media's knowledge on trafficking and migration issues; (b) a campaign to stop violence against women and children; (c) the establishment of watchdog systems in the vulnerable communities of Phayao, Chiang Rai, and Chiang Mai; (d) the distribution of a safe migration guide for foreign migrant workers in the subregion. The Committee noted with interest that, according to the same report, 1,786 boys, 2,765 girls, and 921 young women have been prevented from trafficking through the provision of educational services or training opportunities. Furthermore, 396 boys, 286 girls, and 1,511 young women have been prevented from trafficking through the provision of other non-education-related services.

Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. TICSAs project. The Committee noted that, according to the TICSAs, Phase II, progress report of 2006, TICSAs-II and the Centre for the Protection of Children's Rights jointly initiated the documentation of the "Multi Disciplinary Approach to Rehabilitation of the Victims of Trafficking". This systematic approach to rehabilitation with the support of a group of experts (physicians, psychologists, lawyers, police), has proven to be successful in various shelters. Moreover, as the "Case Information Management System" (a computer software that improves the capacity of collecting data of trafficked victims - CIMS), developed and implemented at two Government shelters, was successful, the Ministry of Social Development and Human Security (MSDHS) has planned to set up a computerized database at its shelters in other provinces.

Measures adopted by the Ministry of Social Development and Human Security (MSDHS). The Committee noted with interest the Government's information that the MSDHS has adopted the following measures to protect and assist children and women who are trafficked both into and out of Thailand:

- (a) establishment of the Operation Centre on Human Trafficking at the provincial, national and international levels, aimed at coordinating the concerned organizations to protect and assist the victims of trafficking;
- (b) provision of welfare protection to child and women victims of trafficking;
- (c) establishment of 99 welfare homes (the most important is the Kredtrakarn Protection and Occupational Development Centre) in 75 provinces to provide temporary assistance to Thai and non-Thai child and women victims of trafficking;
- (d) establishment of reception homes for women, and welfare protection and occupational development centres for women, in order to provide trafficked women with rehabilitative services;
- (e) provision of counselling on human trafficking concerns, especially through the telephone helpline "1300"; and
- (f) development of return and reintegration programmes with Cambodia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, and Yunnan Province in China.

The Committee noted the Government's information that the number of foreign victims assisted and housed in the MSDHS's shelters from 1999 to 2004 was 1,633. Moreover, according to the record of the MSDHS from 2000 to 2005, 3,062 foreign trafficking victims have been protected in Thai shelters and repatriated to their home countries. These include: 959 Cambodians, 567 Burmese, 501 Laotians, 20 Chinese, 12 Vietnamese, nine persons of other nationalities and four of unidentified nationality. The Committee once again requests the Government to specify how many of these victims of trafficking are children under 18 years. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of child victims of trafficking, including Thai children, who have been rehabilitated and reintegrated in their communities.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Children from ethnic minorities. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the ILO/IPEC's report of December 2004 on TICW, ethnic communities in the north of Thailand are particularly vulnerable to trafficking and labour exploitation. Noting the absence of information on this point in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to protect children under 18 years of age of ethnic minorities from trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation, particularly from prostitution.

Migrant workers. The Committee noted the information contained in the TICW, phase II, progress report of 2007 (page 16), that the document "The Mekong challenge – underpaid, overworked and overlooked: The situation of young migrant workers in Thailand", based on a research project targeting migrant workers in agriculture, fishing, fish-processing, small-scale manufacturing, and domestic work underlines several human rights violations, such as the forced labour and hazardous work of young migrant workers. However, ILO/IPEC is starting a new project entitled "Support for national action to combat child labour and its worst forms in Thailand". The project, which started in 2006 and will end in 2010, primarily targets migrant children found in the worst forms of child labour and will promote improved education and training policies. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the ILO/IPEC project "Support for national action to combat child labour and its worst forms in Thailand" on protecting child migrant workers from the worst forms of child labour.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation. The Committee noted that, according to the Government's report, the following measures have been taken to combat child trafficking at the regional level: (a) the UN inter-agency project on trafficking in women and children in the Mekong subregion (UNIAP) has conducted meetings under the Coordinated Mekong Ministerial Initiative against Trafficking (COMMIT) to strengthen cooperation and coordination among countries to deal more effectively with human trafficking; (b) a draft MOU on cooperation against trafficking in persons in the greater Mekong subregion has been proposed; and (c) the MSDHS has maintained coordination with five countries in the Mekong subregion through governmental, non-governmental, international organizations, embassies in Thailand and embassies in those countries, for providing assistance to foreign children and female victims of trafficking. In particular, physical and psychological rehabilitation is being provided for the foreign trafficking victims while maintaining coordination with the relevant agencies in the countries of origin in order to trace the families of the victims and assess how well prepared they are for the reintegration of the woman or child victim in the society. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue providing information on the concrete measures taken to eliminate the cross-border trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation, and the results achieved.

Bilateral agreements. The Committee had previously noted that Thailand and Cambodia signed, on 31 May 2003, an MOU on bilateral cooperation for eliminating trafficking in children and women and assisting victims of trafficking, targeting the repatriation process, the prosecution process, and collecting and exchanging information. Moreover, an MOU on bilateral cooperation for the elimination of trafficking in children and women and assistance to victims of trafficking between Thailand and Lao People's Democratic Republic was signed on 13 July 2005. Finally, a draft MOU between Thailand and Viet Nam, based on the model MOU between Thailand and Cambodia, has been drawn up. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures adopted under the bilateral MOUs and the results achieved with regard to eliminating the trafficking of children between the countries parties to the bilateral agreements.

Poverty alleviation. The Committee noted the Government's information that, according to the report of the Office of the National Economic and Social Development Board (NESDB), proactive socio-economic measures have been employed to integrate human trafficking strategies with development and poverty eradication. These include the policies of allocating 1 million baht to each village to use as a credit facility, and offering microfinance which would enable Thai women to have more opportunities to gain more income and diminish their risk of being trafficked to foreign countries. The economic cooperative strategy project has been promoted in neighbouring countries to mitigate the cases of trafficked women and children sent to Thailand. Moreover, the mobile unit "Poverty Eradication Caravan" has been set up by the Ministry of Labour to give advisory services to the poor in order to eradicate poverty and combat the worst forms of child labour. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the microfinance credits, the economic cooperative strategy project, and the Poverty Eradication Caravan, on the effective reduction of poverty among children removed from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Turkey

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the indication of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) that no national policy was being pursued in Turkey to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and that the number of child workers was increasing. TÜRK-İS had added that the effectiveness of a national policy to eliminate child labour depends entirely on the elimination of the causes of child labour, namely the employment and employment stability of adults, but that government policy was not designed along those lines.

The Committee had also previously noted that, in addition to the elimination of the worst forms of child labour within ten years, one of the objectives of the national Time-Bound Policy and Programme Framework (TBPPF) was also to establish a coherent policy for the elimination of child labour. In this respect, it had noted that the Child Labour Unit (CLU), established by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security with a mandate to gather and disseminate information on child labour, ensure coordination among cooperating parties and develop policies related to child labour, had developed a Policy Framework for the Elimination of Child Labour in Turkey, which was presented for comment to the various parties concerned by child labour.

The Committee noted the information provided by the Government in its report, particularly with regard to the programmes of action implemented in collaboration with ILO-IPEC. Furthermore, the Committee notes with interest that, according to the Biannual Interim Report of 27 November 2006 to 31 May 2007 on the ILO-IPEC project "Eradicating the worst forms of child labour in Turkey", this project aimed to help make a significant reduction in child labour, in line with the Government's strategy of eliminating the worst forms of child labour by 2015. One of the main objectives of the project is to enhance the national and regional capacity of the CLU. To that end, many measures have been taken by the Government, including training programmes on child labour monitoring and child labour and education, awareness-raising events and guidance and referral services to working children, children at risk and their families.

The Committee also noted that a third Child Labour Survey was conducted by the Turkish Statistics Institution, with ILO-IPEC's support, in the period from October to December 2006. It noted with interest that according to the results of this survey, the proportion of working children (aged 6–17 years) has dropped from 10.3 per cent in 1999 to 5.9 per cent in 2006. Furthermore, according to the Biannual Interim Report, a comprehensive and integrated child labour monitoring system (CLM) was established which includes two components: (1) the monitoring itself, and (2) the provision of social support for rehabilitation and referral according to the needs of the children withdrawn from work. As a result of the monitoring system, 4,209 children in various sectors of work, worst forms and otherwise, have been identified during the October–December 2006 reporting period, of which 3,611 have been either withdrawn from work or prevented from starting to work. Nevertheless, the Committee noted that, according to the Child Labour Survey, 320,000 children in the 6–14 age group were working in 2006. While noting the measures adopted by the Government to eliminate child labour, the Committee once again encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to progressively improve this situation. It once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results achieved by the implementation of the abovementioned ILO-IPEC programmes in eliminating child labour and its worst forms. Finally, it also requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts of inspection reports, as well as the number and nature of contraventions reported and penalties imposed.

Article 3, paragraph 3. Authorization to perform hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the regulations on hazardous and arduous work of 1973 define the types of work considered to be hazardous and arduous and those to which young persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years may be admitted. It had also noted the adoption of Regulations No. 25494 on hazardous and arduous work of 16 June 2004 which include, in Appendix 1, a detailed list of hazardous types of work which may be performed by young workers between 16 and 18 years of age. It had also noted that, under the terms of section 4 of Regulations No. 25494, the conditions set out in Article 3(3) of the Convention are respected, namely that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's information that the Regulations on hazardous and arduous work of 1973 have been repealed by a decision of the Council of Ministers of 7 April 2006 and by the publication of this decision in the Official Gazette No. 26152 of 28 April 2006. It also noted that various employers' and workers' organizations (the TISK, TÜRK-İS, HAK-İS and DISK confederations) were consulted at the time of the enactment of Regulations No. 25494 in 2004.

Article 4. Exclusion from the application of the Convention of limited categories of employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the categories of employment or work which have been excluded from the scope of application of the Convention, by virtue of the flexibility clause contained in Article 4, consist of limited categories of employment or work. It had further noted that under the terms of section 4(1) of the Labour Act, No. 4857 of 22 May 2003 (Labour Act), the following activities and categories of workers are not covered by the Act: (a) sea and air transport businesses; (b) enterprises carrying out agricultural and forestry works and employing fewer than 50 workers; (c) all building work related to agriculture within the limits of the family economy; and (d) domestic service. It had noted that the Act on Turkish civil aviation regulates the working conditions of personnel on aircrafts and that the minimum age for admission is 18 years, but that Maritime Labour Act No. 854 does not contain a provision establishing the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee had reminded the Government that Article 5(3) of the Convention enumerates the sectors of economic activity to which it shall be applicable as a minimum, which include maritime transport.

The Committee noted the Government's information that the minimum age required for admission to employment as a seafarer is provided for in the Regulations for Seafarers, published in the Official Gazette No. 24832 of 31 July 2002. The Committee noted with satisfaction that, according to these Regulations, the minimum age required for work as a seafarer at the lowest levels, including as deck boys, wipers and cadets, is 16 years of age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that Turkey is a transit and destination country for trafficked children. These children originate from the following countries: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, Republic of Moldova, Romania, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. The ITUC added that Turkey is a transit country, mainly for children from Central Asia, Africa, the Middle East and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, who are then sent to European countries. The ITUC also indicated that trafficked children are forced into prostitution or debt bondage.

The Committee had noted that the new Penal Code (Act No. 5237 of 26 September 2004) contains new provisions on, among other matters, the trafficking and sexual exploitation of children, including the prostitution of children, as well as more severe penalties for these crimes. It had requested the Government to provide information on the application of the penalties in practice.

The Committee noted that the Child Protection Law, which entered into force on 3 July 2005, aims at integrating international standards into the procedures and principles regarding children in need of protection. It also noted that, according to the 2006 concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child in consideration of the report submitted by the Government under the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (CRC/C/OPSC/TUR/CO/1, paragraph 4), the National Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings was established, and a National Plan of Action was accordingly adopted in 2003. However, the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed its concern that there is no specific plan of action on the sale of children in Turkey. Furthermore, according to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, there is a lack of information on the actual situation of the sale of children (CRC/C/OPSC/TUR/CO/1, paragraph 15). In this regard, the Committee recalled that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, the sale and trafficking of children is considered as one of the worst forms of child labour, and that by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. Consequently, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years for commercial sexual exploitation is eliminated. The Committee also once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the offenders are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. Finally, it requests the Government to take measures to withdraw child victims of trafficking from commercial sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, as a matter of urgency.

Article 7, paragraph 1. Penalties. Inciting or using a child for begging. The Committee had previously noted with satisfaction that section 229 of the new Penal Code prohibits the use of children for begging and establishes a penalty of one to three years' imprisonment. It noted the Government's information that 252 families, who insisted on inciting their children to beg despite being provided with various professional and social services, were penalized. The 305 children identified in such conditions were afterwards taken from their families and placed in a foster home or an institution suitable to their gender and age. The Committee also noted that the Government indicates that it has attached statistical data on the number of cases and convictions which were imposed in this regard. However, no such information was actually joined to the Government's report. Consequently, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide this information with its next report, as well as to continue providing information on the application of the penalties in practice.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Necessary direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children working in the agricultural sector. The Committee had previously noted that the protection afforded by the Labour Code does not cover children who work in agricultural undertakings employing fewer than 50 workers. It had also noted that, of the 1,008,000 children between the ages of 6 and 14 years who worked in 2000, 77 per cent were in agriculture (report on the implementation of labour inspection policy in Turkey, June 2000, page 2). The Committee had also noted that, according to the Labour Inspection Board, 87 per cent of children who work are employed in small enterprises with between one and nine workers. In that regard, the Committee noted that, to ensure the protection of young persons under 18 years of age who work in the agricultural sector from the worst forms of child labour, a programme on the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in commercial seasonal agriculture through education was being implemented, the objective of which was to achieve the school attendance of children concerned.

The Committee noted that the more recent available information indicates that 41 per cent of the 958,000 children between the ages of 6 and 17 years who worked in 2006 were employed in agriculture (2006–07 ILO–IPEC Biannual Interim Report on the EWFCLT, page 2). It noted that, according to the summary outline for the Action Programme on Child Labour in Seasonal Commercial Agriculture of 2005, work in seasonal commercial agriculture, and especially in cotton harvesting, has been identified as a worst form of child labour. The Action Programme, which was extended until June 2007, therefore targeted 2,750 boys and girls, 1,000 of whom would be withdrawn and 1,750 prevented from entering this worst form of child labour. Furthermore, the Action Programme aimed to provide 2,000 of these boys and girls with educational and training services, while the remaining 750 would be provided other non-education related services. The Committee noted the Government's information that, within the scope of this programme and as of 8 March 2007, 2,458 children have been identified, 1,128 of them girls and 1,330 of them boys. These children have been settled in boarding primary regional schools and neighbouring schools. Moreover, a Project for Combating Child Labour through Education (2004–08) has been implemented by the firm IMPAQ, under the coordination of the CLU and the Ministry of National Education, to increase access to basic and vocational education for children employed in agriculture, particularly children engaged in, or at risk of engaging in, seasonal work as migrant labourers. According to the Government, this project targets 10,000 children and a significant number have already been reached. The Committee once again encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that children under 18 years are protected from working in seasonal commercial agriculture, identified as a worst form of child labour. It once again requests the Government to provide more information on results attained by the implementation of the Action Programme, more specifically on the final number of children who were prevented or withdrawn from being engaged in seasonal commercial agriculture and then rehabilitated by being provided with educational, vocational or other services. Finally, the Committee asks it to provide more detailed information on the impact of the Project for Combating Child Labour through Education in this regard.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Children living or working on the streets. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the indication of the TISK that children who work on the streets are not registered and work under dangerous conditions without protection. The Committee had also noted the ITUC's report that nearly 10,000 children were working on the streets of Istanbul and nearly 3,000 in Gaziantep. The ITUC had added that street children can be classified into two groups: the first is composed of children who go out onto the streets during the day to sell all kinds of items and return home in the evening, the second consists of children who live and work on the streets. The latter are engaged in garbage collection and sorting, and are often involved in drug abuse, street gangs and violence. The Committee had also noted that, according to a rapid assessment conducted by ILO–IPEC on street children working in Adana, Istanbul and Diyarbakir, street children who work are between the ages of 7 and 17 years, with an average age of 12 years.

The Committee had noted the implementation, in the context of the Time-Bound Policy and Programme Framework (TBPPF), of the December 2004 Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour in Street Trades in 11 provinces. The Committee had noted that the Programme directly targeted 6,700 boys and girls, 2,700 of whom were to be removed from the worst forms of child labour and 4,000 to be prevented from becoming engaged in work. It had also noted that an estimated 6,000 children would benefit indirectly from the Programme. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the impact of the Programme and the results achieved.

The Committee had noted that, according to the Biannual Interim Report of 27 November 2006 to 31 May 2007 on the ILO-IPEC project "Eradicating the worst forms of child labour in Turkey" (EWFCLT), a comprehensive child labour monitoring and reporting mechanism was established in 13 provinces which permitted the identification of 4,209 working children for the period covered. The Committee had noted with interest that, of these 4,209 children, 1,699 were found working on the streets and were consequently withdrawn and provided with services. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that young persons under 18 years of age who live and work on the streets are not engaged in work which, by its nature, is likely to harm their health, safety or morals, and to provide information on the results achieved. It also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the ILO-IPEC Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour in Street Trades, especially in terms of the number of street children who were prevented or withdrawn from the worst forms of child labour and rehabilitated.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the issue of the worst forms of child labour was included in the short-term priorities of the Accession Partnership (2003–04), in which it was stated that efforts to address the problem would be continued. The Committee had noted that the Accession Partnership has been revised in 2006, so as to allow it to evolve as Turkey progresses. It had noted the Government's statement that the European Union has been supporting the TBPPF in a way to enhance the institutional capacities to combat child labour, notably in the context of projects on children working on the streets, in dangerous work or in the agricultural sector. However, the Committee had observed that the Government does not provide information on the cooperation or assistance measures adopted or envisaged with the European Union or with other countries to eliminate, in particular, the trafficking of children for the exploitation of their labour or for sexual exploitation. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide this information in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Uganda

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. However, it takes note of the report of the Technical Advisory Mission (the Mission) on Child Labour Issues that was carried out in Uganda in July 2009.

Article 3. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Abductions and the exaction of forced labour. The Committee had previously noted that article 25:1 of the Constitution of Uganda stipulates that no person shall be held in slavery or servitude and that section 25:2 states that no person shall be required to perform forced labour. It had noted that the Penal Code punishes as offences abduction (section 126); detention with sexual intent (section 134); and abduction for the purpose of reducing to slavery (section 245). Moreover, section 5 of the Employment Act of 2006 states that anyone who uses or assists any other person in using forced or compulsory labour commits an offence. Finally, section 252 of the Penal Code provides that any person who unlawfully compels any other to labour against their will commits a misdemeanour.

However, in its previous comments under Convention No. 29, the Committee had noted that the armed group Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) abducted children of both sexes, forcing them to provide work and services as concubines, these alleged activities being associated with the killings, beatings and rape of these children. The Committee had noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Uganda of 7 May 2007 (Secretary-General's report of 2007) (S/2007/260, paragraph 10), the figures from 2005 suggested that as many as 25,000 children may have been abducted since the onset of the conflict in northern Uganda in Kitgum and Gulu districts. However, the total number of abductions had significantly reduced since its peak in 2004. The total number of abductions in January 2005 was estimated to be approximately 1,500, significantly reducing to 222 over the first six months of 2006. Since September 2006, there had been no confirmed reports on the abduction of children in Uganda by the LRA. Moreover, the peace talks between the Government of Uganda and the LRA had officially opened on 14 July 2006 and the parties had signed a formal cessation of hostilities agreement in August 2006, which was extended until 30 June 2007. It was initially expected that the prospects of the signing of a peace agreement would mean a potentially significant increase in the number of children released by the LRA. However, despite repeated pleas by various stakeholders, the LRA had not released children from its ranks.

The Committee notes that, in its concluding observations for the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict of 17 October 2008, the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern over continued abductions of children living in border regions by the LRA, to be used as child soldiers, sex slaves, spies and to carry goods and weapons (CRC/C/OPAC/UGA/CO/1, paragraph 24). The Committee on the Rights of the Child was further concerned over the inhuman and degrading treatment of the abducted children. Moreover, the Committee notes that, according to the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Uganda of 15 September 2009 (Secretary-General's report of 2009), the LRA has not knowingly operated in Ugandan territory since the cessation of hostilities in August 2006. Over the past four years, however, the LRA, including a substantial but unknown number of Ugandan children associated with its forces, has increasingly moved into neighbouring countries to establish additional bases; and children and their communities in the Sudan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic have been the victims of attacks that have claimed hundreds of lives and resulted in the disappearance of hundreds of children. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, 233 abductions of children by the LRA were documented by child protection partners between 1 December 2008 and 30 June 2009. The Secretary-General further indicates that efforts to sign a Comprehensive Peace Agreement with the LRA failed and, as a result, the LRA has increasingly become a regional actor. Since December 2008, LRA elements, operating in small groups, reportedly conducted attacks against several localities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, killing civilians, burning houses and abducting children and adults. In total, it is estimated that more than 1,000 civilians have been killed and several hundred abducted by the LRA since it increased its violent activities in 2008.

The Committee therefore once again expresses its deep concern at the situation of children abducted by the LRA and forced to provide work and services as informants, porters, hostages, as well as becoming victims of sexual exploitation and violence. It observes that, although national legislation appears to prohibit abductions and the exaction of forced labour, this remains a serious issue of concern in practice, in particular in the context of renewed violence and conflict. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, the exaction of forced labour from children is considered as one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to eradicate abductions and the exaction of forced labour from children under 18 years, as a matter of urgency. In this regard, it requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It also urges the Government to take measures to cooperate with the neighbouring countries and accordingly reinforce security measures, particularly on the common borders with the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Central African Republic and Sudan, with a view to bringing an end to this worst form of child labour.

Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007 (paragraph 5), Uganda is among the countries where parties to armed conflicts – the Ugandan People Defence Force (UPDF), the local defence units and the LRA – recruited or used children and were responsible for other grave violations. According to this report, it was estimated that, notwithstanding various peace agreements, up to 2,000 women and children may still have been held by the LRA within its ranks and had not been released. Regarding children recruited by the national military forces, the Secretary-General's report of 2007 indicated that the UPDF recruited young boys to serve in its armed forces, especially within the local defence units, which are UPDF auxiliary forces. The report of 2007 also indicated that during recruitment, age verification was rarely carried out. After training, many of these children were said to be fighting alongside the UPDF. Although the Government of Uganda incorporated, in 2005, in the Uganda People's Defence Forces Act, a provision prohibiting the recruitment and use of child soldiers, the lack of effective monitoring at the local level led to children continuing to join some elements of the armed forces. However, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007, the Government had committed itself to strengthening the implementation of the existing legal and policy frameworks on the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. Moreover, in December 2006, the UPDF agreed to undertake inspection and monitoring, including to verify age during the recruitment process. Furthermore, the Uganda Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting (UTF) had committed itself to working with the UPDF and the local defence units to ensure immediate and appropriate follow-up to remove any person under 18 years of age found within the UPDF and local defence units, including through referral to appropriate child protection agencies.

The Committee notes that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009 (paragraphs 3–7), on 16 January 2009, the Government of Uganda and the UTF signed an action plan regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda, which obligates the Government to prevent and end the association of children under the age of 18 with armed auxiliary forces; appoint focal points at the highest level of the Government on the implementation of the action plan; provide access on a regular and ad hoc basis to the UPDF and auxiliary facilities to the UTF to monitor and verify compliance; and promptly investigate allegations of recruitment and use of children and ensure the prosecution of perpetrators. Furthermore, the action plan identifies time-bound activities relating to children associated with the armed forces in Uganda. Among others, the measures include verification visits to all UPDF facilities and regular access to all relevant UPDF units by the UTF. In compliance with the action plan, the Government of Uganda and the UTF agreed upon a series of visits by the UTF to UPDF facilities in northern Uganda in early 2009, with a view to verifying that no persons under the age of 18 were present within, or recruited into, its ranks.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that no case of recruitment or use of children by the UPDF or its auxiliary forces has come to the attention of the UTF. Throughout its visits, the UPDF extended excellent cooperation to the verification team. Furthermore, the UTF observed the UPDF recruitment process in the northern districts of Uganda from 12 to 14 February 2009. It was noted that age requirements for recruitment into the UPDF, as set forth in existing laws and regulations, were strictly observed and followed by UPDF officers in compliance with the UPDF internal circular of February 2009 containing instructions on recruitment criteria. The Committee notes that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009, the UTF will nevertheless continue to monitor compliance of the UPDF within the action plan framework to ensure that continuous efforts are made to prevent the recruitment and use of children and that the implementation of the action plan continues.

However, the Committee notes that the LRA, whose leadership originates in Uganda and a significant number of whose forces are also from Uganda, remains listed on the Secretary-General's annexes to his reports on children and armed conflict because of the continued practice of recruitment of children within its ranks. Although LRA violations against children were originally reported solely under Uganda country situation reporting, the geostrategic situation of that group, which is expanding its armed activities to the wider region, has prompted the request of a strategy for increased regional joint capability to monitor and report on cross-border recruitment and use of children by the LRA. The UTF has therefore been engaged in consultations with the Resident Coordinator of the United Nations Country Team in Uganda, the United Nations Children's Fund headquarters and regional offices, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations missions in Sudan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, on appropriate steps to establish a subregional strategy to monitor and report on grave child rights violations committed by the LRA in the region.

The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the Government and the positive results it has registered with regard to the UPDF. However, it expresses its concern at the situation of children who continue to be recruited for armed conflict by the LRA. The Committee refers to the Secretary-General's call upon the Government of Uganda to prioritize the protection of children in its military actions against LRA elements, either on Ugandan territory or in joint operations in neighbouring countries (S/2009/462, 15 September 2009, paragraph 28). The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the situation and to take, as a matter of urgency, immediate and effective measures to put a stop in practice to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by the LRA. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a strategy for increased regional joint capability to monitor and report on cross-border recruitment and use of children by the LRA is adopted as soon as possible. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years for use in armed conflict are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children who have been affected by armed conflict. The Committee had previously noted that the orphans and vulnerable children policy includes interventions to mitigate the impact of the conflict on vulnerable children, especially by providing them with psychological support and with health-care services. It had also noted that a number of measures had been taken in order to rehabilitate children affected by conflict: (a) the psychological support programme for the care of children in conflict areas; (b) the creation of the National Core Group for Psychological Support, responsible for advocacy against abduction and conflict-related child abuse; and (c) the project implemented by Save the Children from Denmark and Sweden, in collaboration with the UPDF and Gulu Support Children Organization (GUSCO) with the aim of training officers in the UPDF's Child Protection Unit and promoting the observance of rights of children affected by armed conflict. Moreover, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007 (paragraph 62), interim care centres, known as reception centres, were established in the north of Uganda in order to receive formerly abducted children, including those referred by the UPDF Child Protection Unit.

The Committee notes that, according to the mission report, the Ministry of Education and Sports (MoES) made interventions for child victims of armed conflict, as well as abducted children, and specialized schools have been built in the north of the country to give support and rehabilitate these children. Indeed, the Committee notes that, according to the report on Education Needs Assessment for Northern Uganda of February 2008 (ENA report) prepared by the Education Planning Department, the MoES has, among other things, provided psychosocial back-up support by training 50 trainers in psychosocial training, helped with the demobilization of 53 child soldiers, supported eight reception centres for former child abductees. The MoES has also constructed 27 learning centres with 114 classrooms in Kitgum, Pader and Lira for 6,000 displaced primary school children, as well as a primary boarding school at Laroo in Gulu with a capacity for 1,000 pupils. Furthermore, the ENA report indicates that many education provider organizations have contributed to the interventions of the MoES with a view to provide an interim response to the needs of northern Uganda in terms of education. The Committee also notes that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009, the action plan regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda signed by the Government of Uganda and the UTF on 16 January 2009 covers different areas of activities, including preventing the recruitment of children under 18 years for use in armed conflict and releasing and reintegrating underage recruits. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts and take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed conflict and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of children under 18 years of age who have been rehabilitated and reintegrated into their communities through these measures, in particular through the action of the MoES and through the activities undertaken under the action programme regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ukraine

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1979)

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee had previously noted the Government's information that the provisions of section 188 of the Labour Code, regulating the minimum age for admission to employment, as well as the provisions prohibiting the employment of children in hazardous work, apply to workers of all enterprises, institutions and organizations, irrespective of the forms of ownership, type of activity and sectoral affiliation. It had observed that since 2005 the Goznadzortrud (authority within the Ministry of Social Labour and Social Policy which monitors the compliance of labour legislation) had participated in the implementation of the ILO-IPEC project "Institutional development of labour inspection for participation in the System of Child Labour Monitoring (CLMS) in two pilot regions – Donetsk and Kherson regions". Under this project, workplaces in both the formal and informal economy have been monitored. Moreover, in 2006, six districts were identified in the Donetsk and Kherson regions where the identification of working children is under way, both in the formal and informal sectors.

The Committee had noted with interest the Government's information that the CLMS developed in the Donetsk and Kherson regions will be replicated at the country level under the "National Plan of Action to implement the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child for 2006–16", adopted in June 2007. The introduction of the system of permanent monitoring of child labour will make it possible to detect cases of the illegal use of child labour as well as to remove children from the worst forms of child labour. The Committee, however, noted the Government's statement that, the supervision of the use of child labour in the informal sector of the economy remained an outstanding issue. This concerns, above all, the right of access to workplaces in the informal sector. The lack of criteria of evaluation of the presence of employment relations when using child labour in private garden plots or in the street does not provide the inspectors with the grounds to apply administrative sanctions. The basic problem, therefore, consists in the development of a mechanism to collect evidence testifying to the fact that a child works for an employer in the absence of any written arrangements. The labour inspectors involved in the implementation of the ILO-IPEC programme in the Donetsk and Kherson regions were carrying out their activities to develop such a mechanism with the participation of the representatives of other supervisory bodies. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again expresses its hope that, in adopting the CLMS at the national level, the labour inspection component concerning children working in the informal sector will be strengthened. It requests the Government to redouble its efforts to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services in the informal sector, in order to ensure that the protection established by the Convention is ensured for children working in this sector. It also requests the Government to provide information on any impact of the recent adoption of the CLMS at the national level on improving the capacity of labour inspectors to detect cases of child labour in the informal sector with a view to removing these children from child labour and its worst forms.

Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee had previously noted that under section 188(2) of the Labour Code, children of 15 years of age may exceptionally be authorized to work with the consent of their parents or parent substitutes. The Committee had observed that the above provision of the Code allows young people to carry out an economic activity at an age lower than the minimum age for admission to employment or work specified by Ukraine upon ratifying the Convention, namely 16 years. It had requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that no one under the age of 16 may be admitted to employment or work in any occupation. The Committee notes the Government's information that, since the time of the submission of the previous report, no changes were introduced into the legislation relating to the increase of the minimum age for employment of minors. It notes that, according to the Government, in 2005, the State Employment Service assisted in employing 79 children who had reached the age of 15 years, and in 2006, it assisted 61 children who had reached the age of 15 years. Moreover, between August and December 2005, the labour inspectorate identified 459 children from 15 to 16 years of age who were working. The Committee notes the Government's information that within the framework of the ILO-IPEC project "Declaration of the basic rights and freedoms at work", a draft Labour Code of Ukraine was prepared the provisions of which comply with international labour standards. In the framework of the adoption of the new Labour Code, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no one under the age of 16 years may be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, in conformity with Article 2(1) of the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the new Labour Code, as soon as it has been adopted.

Article 3, paragraph 3, and Article 6. Authorization to perform hazardous work from the age of 16 and vocational training. The Committee had previously noted the Government's information that section 3 of Order No. 283/P-9 of 10 September 1980 allows work that includes harmful tasks to be carried out for training purposes by persons over the age of 15 years. Moreover, according to same section 3 of this Order, persons under the age of 18 for the purposes of vocational training may perform hazardous types of work for not more than four hours a day on condition that existing sanitary regulations are strictly observed. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that the performance of such work is only authorized for persons between 16 and 18 years of age in conformity with the conditions of Article 3(3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's information that Order No. 283/P-9 of 10 September 1980 is not applicable in the territory of Ukraine, including its section 3. Instead, section 2(3) of the Order of the Ministry of Health of Ukraine

No. 46 of March 1994 is applicable. Section 2(3) of this Order states that persons under 18 years enrolled in vocational technical institutions are allowed to participate in the production process, occupations and works included in the list of hazardous work contained in Order No. 46 of 1994. They cannot work more than four hours a day under the condition of the strict observance of the existing sanitary and health norms on labour protection. The Committee further notes the Government's information that vocational training of children in the professions connected with types of hazardous work, is contained in the "Provisions concerning labour and vocational training of minors in the professions connected with hard or dangerous working conditions as well as types of work requiring higher security", approved by Order No. 244 of the State Labour Protection Inspectorate of 15 December 2003. According to these provisions, the admission of minors to employment in hazardous occupations is allowed only when minors reach the age of 18 years when they finished training in those occupations. The Committee observes the Government's information on the provisions regulating the instruction and monitoring of minor trainees before and during training. However, it notes the Government's information that there are no adopted norms stipulating minimum age for the admission of children and young persons to training. The Committee observes that, in connection with national legal provisions on light work dealt with under Article 7 of the Convention, it seems that children between 14 and 16 years are allowed to perform hazardous work during vocational training. It reminds the Government that, according to Article 3(3) of the Convention, the competent authority may, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, authorize employment or work as from the age of 16 years on condition that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that the young persons have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. In the framework of the adoption of the new Labour Code, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children who follow vocational training programmes or apprenticeships are allowed to perform hazardous work only from the age of 16 years, in conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention.

Article 7, paragraph 3. Determination of light work. The Committee had previously noted that section 188(3) of the Labour Code provides that, in order to teach young people to work productively, students in general vocational and technical education or specialized secondary education having attained 14 years of age may perform light work during their leisure hours provided the consent of one of their parents or parent substitutes is obtained and on condition that it does not harm their health or interrupt their schooling. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to determine light work activities, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's information that, according to section 51 of the Labour Code, the length of the working time of pupils who work during the academic year when they have no classes may not exceed 12 hours per week. The Committee further notes the Government's information that the draft Labour Code provides that the list enumerating the types of light work which may be performed by children shall be approved by a specially authorized authority dealing with labour issues. The Committee hopes that provisions determining light work activities which may be performed by children from the age of 14 years will soon be adopted pursuant to the provisions of the draft Labour Code. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, and to provide a copy of the provisions determining the light work activities as soon as they have been adopted.

Article 8. Artistic performances. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that an attempt is made in the draft Labour Code to regulate the labour relations of young persons admitted to employment in the cinema, theatre and concerts. Upon agreement of one of the parents or guardians, it will be permitted to employ children under 14 years for participation in artistic performances if this is not harmful to their health, morals and development. In such cases, the child will be admitted to work after receiving the permission of the services of juvenile affairs. A written labour contract will be concluded with the minor and signed by him/her and his/her parents or guardians. The Committee recalls that, under Article 8(2) of the Convention, permission granted in individual cases to children under 14 years for their participation in artistic performances must limit the number of hours during which, and prescribe the conditions in which, such employment or work is allowed. In the framework of the adoption of the new Labour Code, the Committee hopes that the Government will take account of the above comments.

Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. The Committee had previously expressed its concern at the large number of children under the age of 16 who increasingly worked in practice, especially in the informal sector. It had also noted the Government's statement that identifying children working in the illegal mines were difficult due to the lack of information about the location of such mines. However, within the framework of the ILO-IPEC programme, since 2006, a set of measures had been envisaged aimed at identifying children working in the illegal mines and engaged in the grading and loading of coal on the open surfaces. It was envisaged to identify such children with the participation of the members of the Trade Union of Free Miners of Ukraine. Moreover, the Committee had also noted the Government's information that, in the framework of the ILO-IPEC programme, the Centre of Social Expertise of the Institute of Sociology of the National Academy of Sciences had conducted a study on the use of child labour in six sectors of the informal economy (agriculture, street trade, work in mines, services sector, commercial sexual exploitation and illegal activities, including begging) in Ukraine, following the example of the Donetsk and Kherson regions. This study served as a basis for developing vocational training programmes for children at risk of being involved in child labour and its worst forms. However, the lack of updated statistical data at the national level on the use of child labour in the informal sector constituted a problem.

The Committee notes the Government's information that, as a result of the inspections carried out in August 2008 in 660 enterprises, including 160 agricultural undertakings, violations of child labour legislation were identified with respect to 2,237 minors. Out of this, 66 working children were under the age of 14 years, out of which 64 were engaged in agricultural undertakings. Other violations were with regard to the keeping of records of the young persons by the employer, children working under heavy and harmful working conditions, and long working hours. The Committee also notes the Government's information that 453 orders and directives were issued by the labour inspectors against the employers for the violations of the provisions of child labour, and 351 notices were issued to the court to bring the employers to administrative responsibility. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the study conducted by the Centre of Social Expertise of the Institute of Sociology of the National Academy of Sciences. It also requests the Government to indicate the outcome of the measures taken within the framework of the ILO-IPEC project to identify children working in the illegal mines and engaged in the grading and loading of coal on the open surfaces. It finally requests the Government to continue to provide extracts from the inspection services, especially regarding children working in the informal sector, as well as information on the number and nature of the contraventions reported and penalties applied.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the ILO-IPEC publication entitled "Child trafficking – the people involved: a synthesis of findings from Albania, Republic of Moldova, Romania and Ukraine", 2005 (pages 14–15), Ukraine is not only a source of trafficking victims but also an important transit route from other countries in the region. Children trafficked are generally between 13 and 18 years of age. Girls are most likely to end up in sexual exploitation, while boys are used as cheap labour or to peddle drugs. The Committee had also noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child in its concluding observations (CRC/C/15/Add.191 of 9 October 2002, paragraph 66) expressed concern at the large-scale trafficking of children, in particular girls, for the purpose of sexual and other forms of exploitation. The Committee had observed that section 149 of the Penal Code prohibits the sale and trafficking in persons for the purpose of sexual exploitation, use in the pornographic industry, engagement in criminal activities, peonage, adoption for commercial purposes, and use in armed conflict and labour exploitation. Subsection (2) provides for a higher penalty when this offence is committed against a minor.

The Committee had further noted with interest the various measures adopted by the Government to prevent and combat child trafficking at various levels, as well as the measures taken to ensure the effective enforcement of the legislation on human trafficking. However, the Committee had noted that according to the report of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution, and child pornography of 24 January 2007 (A/HRC/4/31/Add.2, paragraphs 48–53, pages 15–17), trafficking in children through and from Ukraine is a big problem. In respect of cross-border trafficking, girls are sent to the Russian Federation, Turkey, Poland, the Czech Republic, Italy and the United Arab Emirates. Boys are sent to the Russian Federation, Poland, Republic of Moldova, Turkey and Romania. Children trafficked across borders are exploited in street-vending, domestic labour, agriculture, dancing, as waiters and for sexual services. Another characteristic of child trafficking in Ukraine is that in most cases children are trafficked within the country, mainly to provide sexual services or to beg, despite promises of work as cleaners, waiters or hawkers. The recruitment for trafficking often takes place when traffickers, to force their victims to work, trap children in debt bondage: to pay off the costs of their trip and related "services" such as food and accommodation, the children must stay and work. Trafficked children are obliged to work long hours (often eight hours a day) and frequently at night. As of 30 June 2006, 120 unaccompanied children were repatriated from nine countries, mostly from the Russian Federation, Turkey and Poland. Finally, according to the Special Rapporteur, notwithstanding the very useful efforts undertaken by the International Organization for Migration (IOM) in providing assistance to victims of trafficking, the figure of 2,345 persons assisted since 2000 is just the tip of the iceberg, and many victims remain unaccounted for and unassisted abroad or when they return to Ukraine.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that, in 2008, 322 crimes were registered under section 149 of the Criminal Code, including 31 crimes committed against children, and 21 crimes involving children were detected in 2009. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the issue of involving children in a criminal activity and coercing children into begging remains a pressing problem in the country. It notes the Government's information that in 2008, 1,982 cases involving children in a criminal activity/begging (section 304 of the Criminal Code) were reported and 675 cases were reported in 2009. Furthermore, in 2008, 164 cases of coercion of children into begging by adults were detected; and 34 cases under section 150 of the Criminal Code (exploitation of children) were detected in 2009. The Committee notes with interest the Government's statement that the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA) introduced a new section (section 150-1) to the Criminal Code of Ukraine which provides penalties for the offences of using or coercing a child for begging. According to section 150-1, the use of a child for begging by the parents or his/her guardian or any other person with or without the use of force or threat, as well as committed repeatedly or by a person punished under sections 150 and 304 of the Criminal Code is punishable by imprisonment ranging from three to ten years. It further notes the Government's indication that in 2009, 17 criminal cases were initiated under section 150-1 of the Criminal Code. The Committee notes that according to the ILO/IPEC publication entitled "Activities for combating child labour and trafficking in Ukraine", 5,214 victims of trafficking were returned to Ukraine during the period from 2000–08 by the IOM from various countries, out of which, 256 victims were minors. Considering the seriousness of the problem related to trafficking in children, within and outside Ukraine, the Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts to combat and eliminate the trafficking of children under 18 years, for sexual and labour exploitation, including begging. It also requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the penalties laid down in sections 149, 150, 304 and 150-1 of the Criminal Code.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted, the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine's (FTUU) allegations that in Ukraine, children as young as 10 years old were involved in prostitution, pornographic activities and the sex industry. It had observed that, although various provisions of the Penal Code prohibited the commercial sexual exploitation of children, it remained an issue of concern in practice.

The Committee had noted with interest that the Government had taken a number of measures to combat the use, procuring or offering of children under the age of 18 for prostitution and pornography, including the initiative by the police and the MIA units to dismantle the networks of individuals and organized criminal groups involved in prostitution and pornography (22 groups discovered in 2005 and 65 in 2006). In addition, in order to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children, from 2005 onwards, the police carried out around 2,500 raids and verified the legality of nearly 750 photographic studios, 307 modelling agencies, some 3,000 night clubs, 375 massage parlours and 525 hotels.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that in 2008, 851 crimes were registered under section 301 of the Criminal Code (importation, manufacturing, marketing and dissemination of pornographic articles), including 12 cases involving minors; and in 2009, three cases were registered. Similarly, in 2008, 317 cases were registered under section 303 of the Criminal Code (trading and involving persons in prostitution), including 17 cases involving minors, and in 2009, five cases were registered. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the representatives of the MIA take part in the international, national and regional seminars, conferences and training events in the prevention and control of crimes against children. In March 2009, the MIA participated in a workshop on the fight against the spread of child pornography on the Internet. Furthermore, the promotional activities in this area and regular coverage of these subjects through the mass media, weblogs and on television has helped to make the public aware of the legal aspects with regard to the prevention and control of the crimes related to child pornography. The Committee further notes the Government's information that inspections and regular raids are being carried out in modelling agencies, hotels, employment agencies abroad, night clubs and other entertainment establishments to identify and detect persons who involve minors into prostitution, or for the production and dissemination of pornographic materials. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to eliminate the use, procuring or offering of children under the age of 18 for prostitution, the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that persons who use, procure or offer children for prostitution and pornography are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. ILO-IPEC programme on child trafficking – PROTECT CEE. The Committee had previously noted the information regarding the implementation of the ILO-IPEC programme relating to child trafficking in the Balkans and Ukraine entitled "Prevention and reintegration programme to combat trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation in the Balkans and Ukraine" (PROTECT CEE 2002–07), and the results achieved. Noting that the PROTECT CEE programme ended on 31 January 2007, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures under other action programmes to remove children from trafficking and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration.

Programme to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee had previously noted that, in July 2004, Ukraine signed an agreement of cooperation with ECPAT International "End Child Prostitution, Child Pornography and Trafficking of Children for Sexual Purposes" on questions relating to the protection of children from commercial sexual exploitation. The purpose of the cooperation was to implement a national programme which is aimed at combating the commercial sexual exploitation of children and strengthening government structures and NGOs in this area. It had noted the Government's information that ECPAT, and the NGO "La Strada-Ukraine" were implementing the project on the "Development of the national system of assistance for child victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation". The project is designed to elaborate the national and international framework of assistance for child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. In 2005, ECPAT also started to introduce measures to prevent the use of children for the production of pornographic material. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide further information on the implementation of the ECPAT/La Strada-Ukraine project "Development of the national system of assistance for child victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation", as well as the results achieved.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Child trafficking. The Committee had previously noted that the MIA of Ukraine prepared multilateral and bilateral agreements to promote the cooperation of law enforcement bodies in countering human trafficking, especially child trafficking, with the Czech Republic, France, Hungary, Israel, Poland, Romania, Republic of Moldova, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. It had also noted the Government's information that the MIA ensures a constant exchange of information with the police in these countries concerning criminal groups and individuals involved in trafficking Ukrainian citizens, including minors, abroad for sexual or labour exploitation which had led to the dismantling of several trafficking network groups and detection of several cases of trafficking. The Committee had also noted the Government's information that, Ukraine had established cooperation with Interpol, Europol, the Regional Centre of the South-East Cooperation Initiative for Cooperation against Transnational Crime, as well as international organizations and law enforcement agencies of other countries. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to continue to provide information on the impact of the international cooperation measures on the elimination of the trafficking of young persons under 18 for labour or sexual exploitation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United Arab Emirates

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that Ministerial Order No. 5/1 of 1981, which lists operations that are dangerous, arduous or detrimental to health, and prohibits the employment of young persons in those occupations, applies to young persons under the age of 17. It also noted that the draft amended text of section 20 of the Labour Code states that persons under the age of 18 years may neither be employed in exhausting tasks nor in tasks which, by their nature or the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to harm their health, safety or morals. Such types of employment shall be determined by virtue of a ministerial order, after consultation with the competent authorities. It further noted that the draft amended text of section 20 of the Labour Code would replace Ministerial Order No. 5/1 of 1981, and noted the Government's indication that the draft amendments to the Labour Code (containing the amended section 20) were going through the constitutional channels for its adoption. It requested the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard. The Committee notes that while the Labour Code was amended by Federal Law No. 8/2007, these amendments did not include the drafted amended text of section 20. Therefore, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft amended section 20 of the Labour Code, on the prohibition of hazardous work for persons under 18, will soon be adopted, and requests the Government to keep it informed of any progress in this regard. Following the adoption of this amendment, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, following consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, the promulgation of a ministerial order to determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18, pursuant to the draft amended text of section 20.

Article 6. Minimum age for admission to apprenticeship. The Committee previously observed that, according to section 42 of the Labour Code, the minimum age to enter into an apprenticeship contract (defined as the contract whereby the employer undertakes to provide the employee full vocational training) was 12 years. It also noted the Government's statement that the draft amended text of section 42 of the Labour Code provided 15 years as the minimum age for being accepted in training or vocational education, and noted that this text was going through the constitutional channels in the State. Noting an absence of information in the Government's report on this point, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that draft amended section 42 of the Labour Code is adopted in the near future. Furthermore, it once again requests the Government to keep it informed of any progress in this regard, and to provide a text of the amended provision as soon as it has been adopted.

Considering that the Government has been referring to the amendments to the Labour Code, concerning the prohibition of hazardous work for persons under 18 years of age and the minimum age for apprenticeships, for a number of years, the Committee again expresses the firm hope that the draft amendments to the Labour Code are adopted in the near future, in order to bring national legislation into line with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any progress made in this regard and invites it to consider technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clauses (a) and (d). Slavery and practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children for their use in camel jockeying. In its previous comments, the Committee observed the International Trade Union Confederation's (ITUC) allegations that some 2,000 children from Bangladesh, India, Mauritania and Pakistan were taken to the United Arab Emirates (UAE) to work as camel jockeys, including children as young as 5 years of age. The Committee noted the adoption of Federal Law No. 15 of 2005, which prohibits the trafficking of children under 18 for camel racing. It also noted the Government's indication that the country took clear measures to address the offence of trafficking in persons by adopting Federal Act No. 51 of 2006, which relates to the trafficking of persons. It further noted the Government's indication that camel owners had a rising interest in the use of robot jockeys instead of child camel jockeys, though noted the ITUC's allegations that smaller camp-based venues still used children as jockeys. In addition, the Committee noted several measures taken by the Government to prevent and eliminate the trafficking and the use of children for camel jockeying, including a meeting with delegates from Bangladesh, Mauritania, Pakistan and Sudan to affirm a commitment to ending the use of children as camel jockeys and providing services and compensation to children formerly used for this purpose in the UAE. Finally, the Committee requested the Government to provide a copy of Federal Act No. 51 of 2006.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 1 of Federal Act No. 51 of 2006 defines human trafficking as the “recruitment, transport, deportation or receipt of persons by threat or use of force or any other form of coercion, including kidnapping, deception, cheating, abuse of authority or abuse of state of weakness, or by giving or receiving financial sum or benefits in order to obtain the approval of a third person who might have influence on another for the purpose of exploitation”. This Act provides for a penalty of life imprisonment if the victim is a child, which is defined in section 1 as any person under the age of 18 years. The Committee also notes the information in the Government’s report that, pursuant to Ministerial Order No. 251 of 2005, an executive-level office with headquarters was established at the Ministry of the Interior, to eliminate the use of children under the age of 18 as camel jockeys. The Committee further notes that this executive-level office took the following measures to address this issue:

- (i) established the conditions for granting entrance permits to the category of riders, in conformity with the provisions in federal law;
- (ii) controlled and monitored, in coordination with the Federation of Camel Racing, all fields of camel races;
- (iii) coordinated with the Ministry of Health to verify the age of racers in comparison to the age inscribed in their passport; and
- (iv) implemented an awareness campaign for all camel owners with respect to the penalties under Federal Law No. 15 of 2005 related to human trafficking.

The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that children under 18 years of age are not trafficked nor used in the future for the purpose of camel jockeying.

Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC’s allegations that, according to a report of the International Organization for Migration (IOM), girls from Azerbaijan, Georgia and the Russian Federation, as well as other countries, had been trafficked to the UAE for sexual exploitation. It also noted the Government’s indication that section 346 of the Penal Code prohibits the trafficking of children, and section 363 prohibits abetting, enticing or inducing a male or a female to commit prostitution, and that, by virtue of Federal Act No. 51 of 2006, anyone who traffics a boy or girl under 18 years of age is liable to life imprisonment. However, the Committee further noted that, according to the 2007 report of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Ukrainian girls were trafficked to the UAE, for the purposes, inter alia, of sexual services (A/HRC/4/31/Add.2, paragraphs 48–53). The Committee observed that, according to the information available at the Office, no progress was reported in the UAE in punishing trafficking crimes. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who traffic in children for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation are prosecuted in practice, and requested the Government to provide information in this regard.

The Committee notes that section 1 of Federal Act No. 51 of 2006 prohibits human trafficking for the purpose of exploitation, and defines exploitation to include all forms of sexual exploitation and prostitution. The Committee notes the 18 October 2009 statement by the UN Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography following her visit to the UAE (statement of the UN Special Rapporteur), that she received a low number of reported cases of sale of children for the purposes of sexual exploitation. However, the annual report (2008–09) of the National Committee to Combat Human Trafficking in the UAE (NCCHT report) indicates the continued existence of trafficking of children for this purpose. The Committee notes that the 43 victims of trafficking who received services from the Dubai Foundation for Women and Children (DFWAC), 95 per cent of whom had been subject to sexual abuse, included 11 children under the age of 18. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent and eliminate the trafficking of persons under the age of 18 for the purpose of sexual exploitation. Furthermore, noting an absence of information in the Government’s report concerning the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for this offence, the Committee again requests the Government to provide this information.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. National Committee to Combat Human Trafficking (NCCHT). In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication in the Government’s report that, following the adoption of Federal Law No. 15 of 2005, the Minister of Interior established the NCCHT. It noted that the NCCHT was presided over by the Under-Secretary of the Ministry of Justice, and included representatives of the Ministries of Interior, Foreign Affairs, Labour, Social Affairs, and the General Director of the Dubai Police, Zayed Corporation for Charity, and the Red Crescent. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken by the NCCHT with regard to the trafficking of children.

The Committee notes the information in the NCCHT report that the NCCHT meets frequently, and during 2008–09, took numerous measures to address the problem of trafficking. The NCCHT established a web site and launched an awareness-raising campaign on the issue of trafficking. It also conducted workshops and training sessions, throughout the year, in cooperation with various law enforcement departments and ministries. A brainstorming session to discuss the national strategy against human trafficking was held in 2008 and attended by 80 senior representatives from law enforcement and the judicial department, where these officials were instructed to focus on further prosecutions and to work towards a centralized documentation system on trafficking to better understand the extent of the problem. The Committee also notes that, following directives of the NCCHT, all law enforcement departments in the country, including police, prosecutors and immigration officials, have been conducting specialized annual training programmes to strengthen the capacity of these bodies to combat this crime. The Committee further notes the information in the NCCHT report that a new visa system was instituted in July 2009, to better address the issue of trafficking. The Committee welcomes these measures and requests the Government to continue to provide information on the activities of the NCCHT, and the impact of these measures on the elimination of the trafficking of children under 18 years for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation and labour exploitation.

Article 7, paragraph 1, and Part III of the report form. Penalties and court decisions. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's allegation that prosecutions of persons exploiting trafficked children in camel races were rare. Young child camel jockeys were found in al-Baraimmi in Oman and in al-Ain in the UAE, where the employers of camel jockeys form part of the local elite and enjoy impunity. The Committee also noted that Federal Law No. 15 of 2005 provides for three years' imprisonment or a minimum fine of 50,000 dirhams or both for persons who traffic in, recruit, or use children under 18 years of age for camel racing. However, the Committee noted the ITUC allegation that, considering the fact that approximately 2,000 child camel jockeys were found in the UAE in May 2005, the figure for prosecutions under the new law was very disappointing and raised questions as to whether existing monitoring and enforcement mechanisms were adequate. It further noted two cases in which penalties were imposed on persons who, due to the negligence in adopting the necessary safety measures, were responsible for causing injuries to child camel jockeys. The Committee requested the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who traffic in children for camel racing, as well as persons who use children as camel jockeys, in contravention of the provisions of Federal Law No. 15 of 2005, were prosecuted and received appropriate penalties.

The Committee notes, that pursuant to section 2(2) of Federal Act No. 51 of 2006, the penalty for trafficking a person under the age of 18 shall be life imprisonment. The Committee also notes the statement in the NCCHT report that the penalties imposed for this offence are, in practice, growing harsher, as those convicted in 2007–08 received jail terms ranging from three to ten years for committing, aiding or abetting human trafficking, while in 2008–09 at least two offenders received life sentences. The Committee further notes the information in the NCCHT report that ten cases of trafficking were registered in 2007 and 20 cases were registered in 2008. This report also indicates that in 2008, 43 persons were charged under Federal Act No. 51 of 2006.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, in Case No. 1866/2008 of 22 May 2008, the two persons accused of selling four children as slaves in return for money were charged, by virtue of section 346 of the Penal Code and sections 1(2), 2(2), 4 and 6 of Federal Act No. 51 of 2006. However, the Committee notes that the two accused received convictions only under the Penal Code. The accused therefore received only three and six months' imprisonment, as the court decided to remove the charges under Federal Act No. 51 of 2006, in view of the lack of evidence necessary to prove criminal intent, as required in this Act. The Committee reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 7(1), of the Convention, the Government shall take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the provision and application of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that those persons responsible for the trafficking and use of these children are in practice prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children trafficked for use as camel jockeys. The Committee previously noted the Government's 2007 agreement with UNICEF to establish a second and expanded phase of their programme to rehabilitate and repatriate child camel jockeys to their country of origin (UAE–UNICEF programme). It also noted that the Government continued to cooperate with UNICEF and the Governments of Bangladesh, Mauritania, Pakistan and Sudan, in order to withdraw children trafficked to the UAE for use in camel jockeying, and to rehabilitate them, repatriate them to their countries and reintegrate them into their communities. Within the framework of the UAE–UNICEF programme, the UAE Ministry of Interior and government representatives from Bangladesh, Mauritania, Pakistan and Sudan, decided to establish an independent claims facility to compensate any anguish, pain, emotional distress or physical injuries that child camel jockeys from these countries who were formerly involved in camel racing in the UAE may have suffered.

The Committee notes with interest the information in the Government's report that, by 2008, 3,778 children had been withdrawn from work as camel jockeys (879 from Bangladesh, 465 from Mauritania, 1,303 from Pakistan, and 1,131 from Sudan). The Committee also notes the Government's indication that it has provided approximately US$8,414,900 in monetary compensation to the child victims of this type of work. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report that, in addition to the financial compensation given to victims, it took the following initiatives, in collaboration with UNICEF and various NGOs:

- (i) set up centres to provide medical aid and other services to children in Sudan;
- (ii) organized a follow-up system for the families of child victims, in conjunction with the judicial authorities in Mauritania;

- (iii) provided social services to children in Pakistan, and organized a campaign to promote their return to school;
- (iv) set up a social welfare committee in Bangladesh; and
- (v) provided a follow-up mechanism to enable NGOs and local institutions to monitor the payment of wages in arrears to children benefiting from rehabilitation and compensation programmes.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of children who have been repatriated and rehabilitated within the framework of the UAE–UNICEF programme, in addition to the number of children receiving financial compensation. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on other measures taken to remove, rehabilitate and reintegrate these children, in the UAE and in their country of origin.

Child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's allegation that the authorities of the UAE made no distinction between prostitutes and victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation, all of whom bear equal criminal responsibility for involvement in prostitution. The ITUC pointed out that trafficked persons were consequently not treated as victims and were not supported or protected. The Committee observed the Government's information that child prostitutes are sentenced to imprisonment and when they are foreigners (which is generally the case), they are repatriated to their country of origin. The Committee noted the Government's information that the DFWAC was set up in order to ensure the welfare of women and children and would provide social protection, accommodation, support, health services, psychological care and education to women and child victims of trafficking, in order to reintegrate them into society. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the number of child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation who have been rehabilitated and socially integrated through the DFWAC or other centres.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in reply to the ITUC's allegations that it considers persons who are exposed to sexual exploitation as victims who need protection and support through guidance and rehabilitation programmes. It also notes the Government's statement that it has a record of providing protection and assistance to victims of sexual exploitation, and that it helps victims secure the necessary documents for their repatriation, under the umbrella of the "Programme to assist victims of crime", in collaboration with the governments of their countries of origin and NGOs.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report concerning the active work of various organizations in the UAE to provide support for the victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation. The Committee notes that the DFWAC provided services to 43 women and children who were victims of trafficking. The Committee also notes the information in the NCCHT report that the police regularly refer victims of trafficking to appropriate services, and that 80 per cent of the victims of trafficking provided shelter by the DFWAC were referred by the police department. The Committee further notes the establishment of the Centre for the shelter of women and children who are victims of human trafficking in Abu Dhabi, in January 2008, with a budget of 8.8 million dirhams (approximately US$2,395,894), which has helped 15 victims of trafficking. The Government also indicates that the Red Crescent Agency intends to establish centres to provide assistance to women and children who are victims of trafficking, including shelter, medical and psychological care, and social support. In addition, the Committee notes that the Public Department for the Protection of Human Rights in Dubai provided diverse assistance to 27 victims of trafficking, through the provision of temporary shelter, temporary visas and airplane tickets for their return to their country of origin.

Nonetheless, the Committee notes that, in her statement of 18 October 2009, the UN Special Rapporteur noted that the age of criminal responsibility of 7 years of age was too low, and encouraged the Government to ensure that all persons who are sexually exploited be treated as victims and not as delinquents. She stated that these children should not be put in jail, but given access to adequate care, protection, rehabilitation, reintegration and repatriation. Therefore, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to ensure that children trafficked to the UAE for commercial sexual exploitation are treated as victims rather than offenders. It requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation, and to provide information on measures taken in this regard.

Article 8. International cooperation. The Committee notes the information in the 2009 Global Report on trafficking in persons, issued by the UN Office on Drugs and Crime, that the Government provided financial support for the preparation and publication of the report. The Committee also notes the information in the NCCHT report that the Government signed bilateral agreements with several countries (Bangladesh, China, India, Nepal, Pakistan, Philippines, Sri Lanka and Thailand) to regulate the flow of labour which would contribute to the elimination of trafficking. The Committee further notes the Government's continued cooperation with the IOM, including participation in a regional conference on human trafficking and a two-day training programme for law enforcement officials.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that amendments to the Labour Code would soon be adopted, which would help to establish a full system of information on the labour market, including young persons. The Committee notes that the statement of the UN Special Rapporteur indicates that there is a lack of an information system for gathering data on the sale and trafficking of children and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, in addition to a lack of analysis, recording, sharing of information, and reporting in this regard. The Special Rapporteur noted that the Government recognized the need for such a system and that it was in the process of establishing one. The Committee therefore urges the Government to pursue its efforts to establish a system to record and collect data on the number of children engaged in the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United States

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 1999)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Slavery and practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee had previously noted the Government's information that, on 19 December 2003, Congress enacted the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act (TVPRA), which reauthorized the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 (TVPA) in 2003 and 2005, and added responsibilities to the United States Government's anti-trafficking portfolio. The TVPRA of 2003 mandated new information campaigns to combat sex tourism, enhanced anti-trafficking protection under federal criminal law and created a new civil action that allows trafficking victims to sue their traffickers in federal district courts. The TVPRA of 2005 extended and improved prosecutorial and diplomatic tools, provided for new grants to state and local law enforcement agencies, and expanded the services available to certain family members of victims of severe forms of trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that, on 23 December 2008, the TVPRA of 2008 was enacted which once more reauthorized the TVPA for four years and authorized new measures to combat human trafficking, including efforts to increase effectiveness of anti-trafficking in persons programmes, providing interim assistance for potential child victims of trafficking and enhancing the ability to criminally punish traffickers. For example, the Committee notes that, according to the detailed information provided in the Attorney-General's Annual Report to Congress and Assessment of United States Government Activities to Combat Trafficking in Persons of June 2009 (Attorney-General's Annual Report of 2009), the TVPRA of 2008 broadens the crime of sex trafficking by fraud, force or coercion by providing that the Government need merely prove that the defendant acted in reckless disregard of the fact that such means would be used. The TVPRA also broadens the reach of the crime of sex trafficking of minors by eliminating the requirement to show that the defendant knew that the person engaged in commercial sex was a minor in cases where the defendant had a reasonable opportunity to observe the minor. The Committee once again strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to eliminate the trafficking of children under 18 years of age for labour and sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard and the results attained.

Article 3(d) and Article 4, paragraph 1. Hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted that, as an exemption from section 213 of the Fair Labour Standards Act (FLSA), in agriculture, 16 is the minimum age under section 213(c)(1) and (2) of the FLSA for employment in occupations (outside family farms) that the Secretary of Labour finds and declares to be "particularly hazardous for the employment of children". It had observed that section 213 of the FLSA authorizes children aged 16 and above to undertake, in the agricultural sector, occupations declared to be hazardous or detrimental to their health or well-being by the Secretary of Labour.

The Committee had noted the allegation of the American Federation of Labour and Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO) that between 300,000 and 800,000 children are employed in agriculture under dangerous conditions. Many work for 12 hours a day and are exposed to dangerous pesticides, suffer rashes, headaches, dizziness, nausea and vomiting, often risking exhaustion or dehydration due to lack of water, and are often injured. The Committee had further noted that, according to the AFL-CIO and the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH), during the period from 1992 to 1997, a total of 403 children under 18 years were killed while working. One third of the occupational deaths were associated with tractors. The industry that had by far the highest number of fatalities – 162, or 40 per cent – was agriculture, forestry and fishing, even though only 13 per cent of children under 18 worked in this sector. This high rate of fatal injuries was confirmed by the fact that youths of 15–17 years of age working in agriculture appear to have over four times the risk of injury than youths working in other industries. However, eventual changes to Hazardous Orders (HOs) could not be expected to have an impact on the injuries of young workers of 16 and 17 years who fall outside the coverage of the FLSA. The Committee had also noted that, according to the Worker member of the United States at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at the 95th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2006, among 15–17-year-olds, child workers in agriculture accounted for at least 25 per cent of all fatalities experienced by young workers. The Committee therefore shared the concern expressed by many speakers with regard to the hazardous and dangerous conditions that were and could be encountered by children under 18, and indeed in some cases under 16, in the agricultural sector.

The Committee had noted the Government's statement that the FLSA, which was developed through a process open to the participation of employers' and workers' representatives, does not authorize the Secretary of Labour to restrict young persons of 16 years and older from working in agriculture. Moreover, in determining types of hazardous work pursuant to Article 3(d) and Article 4(1), of the Convention, Paragraph 4 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190), allows ratifying countries to permit 16- and 17-year-olds to engage in types of work referred to by Article 3(d) on condition that the health, safety and morals of the children are fully protected. Therefore, the Congress had determined that it is safe and appropriate for children at 16 to perform work in the agricultural sector, in conformity with Article 3(d) and Article 4(1) of the Convention. However, the Committee, considering the significant number of injuries and fatalities suffered by children under 18 years working in the agricultural sector, observed that the conditions of protection and prior training appeared not to be fully met in all circumstances and requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this work is only carried out in accordance with the strict conditions set out in Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the Department of Labour (DOL) have robust health and safety standards for the agricultural sector, including the EPA's worker protection regulation (40 C.F.R. 170) and certified pesticide applicator regulation (40 C.F.R. 171), both of which are scheduled to undergo modifications in 2010. The Government indicates that the proposed modifications, which were delayed under the previous administration, would help ensure the health and safety of young agricultural workers by setting specific age requirements for pesticide-related activities. Furthermore, the Government indicates that the EPA and DOL have training requirements to protect all agricultural workers' health and safety, including the standard on occupational hazard communication that requires training on the recognition of chemical hazards and appropriate protective measures. The DOL's Wage and Hour Division (WHD) and the United States Department of Agriculture have also worked together to reinvent and streamline a voluntary tractor certification programme for 14- and 15-year-olds, who are permitted by HOs to operate certain otherwise prohibited farm equipment after being properly trained and certified in the equipment's safe operation. Moreover, the DOL's Occupational Safety and Health Administration also engages in significant education and outreach designed to keep youth safe, including child farm workers.

The Committee notes, however, that the United States Government has no special training or instructional requirements at the federal level for 16- and 17-year-old agricultural workers engaged in hazardous labour and there are currently no separate health and safety standards under federal law for child farm workers aged 16 or 17 engaging in hazardous work. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that all children on family farms and 12- and 13-year-old farm workers working alongside their parents or with parental consent are excluded from the FLSA minimum-age requirements.

The Committee must express its serious concern over the fact that children under 18 years of age are allowed, in law and in practice, to perform these types of work which are clearly hazardous, as acknowledged by the Government itself in its report when it refers to agriculture as the industry with the highest youth fatality rate. It also expresses its serious concern that children aged 14 and 15 years are permitted by HOs to receive training in the operation of otherwise prohibited farm equipment, such as tractors, and that children of all ages working on family farms or 12- and 13-year-olds working alongside their parents or with parental consent are excluded from the application of the FLSA. The Committee must therefore once again emphasize that, by virtue of Article 3(d), work which, by its nature and the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children under 18, constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. It also recalls that Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190 addresses the possibility of authorizing the employment or work of young persons as from the age of 16 under strict conditions that their health and safety be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. Considering the significant number of injuries and fatalities suffered by children, as reflected by the fact that agriculture is the industry with the highest fatality rate, it would appear that the conditions of protection and training as set out in Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190 are not fully met in all circumstances. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to comply with Article 1 of the Convention, read with Article 3(d), to prohibit children under 18 years of age from engaging in hazardous and dangerous work in agriculture. However, where such work is performed in the agricultural sector by young persons between 16 and 18 years of age, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this work is only carried out in accordance with the strict conditions set out in Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190, namely that the health and safety of such young persons be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 4, paragraph 3. Examination and periodical revision of the types of hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted that 28 HOs adopted by virtue of the FLSA determine the types of work or activities that children under 18 shall not perform. It had also noted that these Orders were established in 1939 and 1960 with regard to non-agricultural occupations and 1970 for agricultural occupations. It had noted the AFL-CIO's allegation of June 2005 that the NIOSH issued recommendations for changing the existing agricultural HOs. The Committee had noted that, in 2004, the DOL issued a final rule addressing six of the 35 NIOSH report recommendations relating to non-agricultural HOs. Furthermore, it had noted the Government's information that the DOL published a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM) and Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (ANPRM) on 17 April 2007, both of which address the remaining 29 non-agricultural HO recommendations. The Committee had further noted the Government's statement that the DOL intended to give the HOs for agricultural occupations the same attention it has given the other NIOSH recommendations relating to non-agricultural occupations.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, due to the amount of work involved, the DOL has been following up on the NIOSH recommendations in stages. The Government indicates that the ANPRM requested comments from the public on the student-learner and apprentice exceptions contained in certain of the HOs, as well as additional recommendations made by the NIOSH report for which there was not sufficient data to propose new rules. The DOL has reviewed the comments that were received from the public and is in the process of moving forward in its efforts. The Government also indicates that the DOL values the NIOSH report's recommendations on agricultural HOs for youth employment and is still evaluating the appropriate course of action. The DOL is also continuing its ongoing review of workplace conditions of youth in agriculture to assess the relevancy of existing regulations. Noting that the Government has been referring to the envisaged amendments to the HOs for a number of years, the Committee requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the NIOSH's recommendations for changing the existing HOs are followed up on and that the amendments to the HOs are effectively adopted pursuant to these recommendations as a matter of urgency, in particular with regard to the agricultural HOs. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Hazardous work and agriculture. The Committee had previously noted the AFL-CIO's indication that an estimated 100,000 children suffer agriculture-related injuries annually in the United States and that very few inspections take place in agriculture. Moreover, it had expressed its concern at the decreasing number of child labour investigations conducted in the agricultural sector. Finally, the Committee had noted that, according to the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards of the 95th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2006, although child labour violations across industries continued to decrease, violations in agriculture had increased in the previous year.

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report that, in 2007, the WHD conducted 1,667 investigations of agricultural employers, in which 75 minors were found illegally employed in 35 cases. The number of cases with agricultural HO violations was six and the number of minors employed in the agricultural industry in violation of HOs was seven. In 2008, the WHD conducted 1,600 investigations of agricultural employers in which 52 minors were found illegally employed in 34 cases. The number of cases with agricultural HO violations was ten and the number of minors employed in violation of HOs was 11. Furthermore, from September 2007 to August 2009, the OSHA and its state partners conducted a total of 5,415 inspections of agricultural employers and in 3,399 cases found 10,694 violations.

The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the WHD will be hiring 250 additional wage and hour inspectors in 2010. The Government indicates that the WHD has used and continues to use every tool available – enforcement, compliance, assistance, public awareness, partnership, regulation and legislation – to promote compliance with child labour laws. In addition, the WHD has begun working with an independent evaluator to assess its strategies and their effectiveness in increasing compliance with the FLSA child labour provisions, and this study is ongoing. However, the Committee notes the Government's statement that these statistics do not include enforcement data relating to farming operations that do not maintain a temporary labour camp and employ ten or fewer employees. Indeed, as a result of a provision from Congress, the OSHA's inspection personnel only conduct inspections and levy fines on farms with over ten employees. The Committee recalls that Article 5 of the Convention requires each Member, after consultation with the social partners, to establish or designate appropriate mechanisms to monitor the implementation of the provisions giving effect to the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that the necessary monitoring mechanisms are in place so that all farms are inspected and monitored, regardless of the number of persons they employ. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the inspections carried out and on the number and nature of violations detected with regard to children under 18 employed in the worst forms of child labour and, particularly, in agricultural undertakings and in farms where ten or fewer employees are employed.

Parts III, IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Attorney-General's Annual Report of 2009, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) participates in a significant majority of the Bureau of Justice Assistance-funded human trafficking task forces as well as other human trafficking task forces and working groups. In fiscal year 2008, the FBI opened 132 human trafficking investigations, made 139 requests and filed 60 complaints. In the same fiscal year, 129 information/indictments were filed in FBI human trafficking cases and 94 convictions were obtained. Furthermore, in June 2008, the Innocence Lost Task Forces of the Innocence Lost Initiative, launched by the FBI and the Department of Justice's Child Exploitation and Obscenity Section in 2003, participated in the Operation Cross Country to combat domestic sex trafficking in children. This operation resulted in the arrest of 356 individuals and the recovery of 21 children. In October 2008, Operation Cross Country II took place. A total of 630 law enforcement personnel participated in the operation, which resulted in 642 arrests, the disruption of 12 large-scale prostitution operations and, most importantly, the rescue of 49 children aged 13–17 years from the sex trade. From the inception of the Innocence Lost Initiative in June 2003 to the execution of Operation Cross Country II in October 2008, over 575 children were rescued from such situations. The Committee further notes that the Human Trafficking Reporting System, which provides data on human trafficking incidents on a regular basis, conducted analyses on those incidents investigated between 1 January 2007 and 30 September 2008. During the 21-month analysis period, 1,229 suspected incidents of human trafficking were reported, nearly 83 per cent of which involved sex trafficking and 12 per cent involved trafficking for labour exploitation. Of the 1,018 alleged sex trafficking incidents, 391 (38 per cent) involved allegations of child sex trafficking. Finally, the Committee observes that the Attorney-General's Annual Report of 2009 enumerates several examples of cases investigated or prosecuted by the Department of Justice in fiscal year 2008 which involved the trafficking of children for labour or sexual exploitation.

Uzbekistan

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2008)

The Committee notes the Government's first report. It also notes the communication of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) dated 26 August 2009.

Articles 3 and 7, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and sanctions. Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour in cotton production and hazardous work. In its comments under the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention (No. 105), the Committee had previously noted the observations made by the Council of the Trade Unions Confederation of Uzbekistan, communicated by the Government with its 2004 report, which contained allegations concerning practices of the mobilization and use of labour for purposes of economic development in agriculture (cotton production), in which public sector workers, school children and university students are involved. In this regard, the Committee notes that the IOE confirms that the legal framework against the use of forced labour exists in Uzbekistan but that, despite this fact, there are continued reports by non-governmental organizations and the media denouncing the systemic and persistent use of forced labour, including forced child labour, in the cotton fields of Uzbekistan.

The Committee notes the allegation of the IOE that the mass mobilization of children was one of the characteristics of cotton production during the Soviet regime. Referring to several reports, the IOE indicates that, every year, hundreds of thousands of Uzbek school children are forced by the Government of Uzbekistan to work in the national harvest for up to three months. Estimates of the number of children forced to participate in the cotton harvest range from half a million to 1.5 million school children in grades 5 to 11. The IOE further reports that forced labour has a substantial negative impact upon the education of the country's rural school children. Rural children are said to lag behind their urban peers in schooling, due to participation in the cotton harvest.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 24 January 2006 (E/C.12/UZB/CO/1, paragraph 20), the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed its concern about the persistent reports on the situation of school-age children obliged to participate in the cotton harvest every year who, for that reason, do not attend school during this period. The Committee also notes the concern expressed by the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 2 June 2006 (CRC/C/UZB/CO/2, paragraphs 64–65), about the involvement of the very many school-age children in the harvesting of cotton, which results in serious health problems such as intestinal and respiratory infections, meningitis and hepatitis. The Committee on the Rights of the Child therefore urged the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the involvement of school-aged children in cotton harvesting is in full compliance with the international child labour standards, inter alia, in terms of their age, their working hours, their working conditions, their education and their health.

The Committee notes the Government's information that article 37 of the Constitution of Uzbekistan directly prohibits any compulsory labour and that article 45 of the Constitution contains state guarantees of protection of the rights and interests of children. The Committee notes that section 7 of the Labour Code prohibits forced labour, i.e. the obligation to perform work under menace of applying any penalty (including as a means to maintain labour discipline). It further notes that section 138 of the Criminal Code provides that the forceful illegal deprivation of liberty shall be punished with a fine of up to 50 minimum monthly wages or correctional labour or imprisonment of up to three years. The same action committed with the placement of a victim in conditions endangering their life or health shall be punished with imprisonment from three to five years. Furthermore, the Committee notes that, pursuant to section 241 of the Labour Code prohibiting the employment of persons under 18 years of age in work in unfavourable conditions and work which may harm their health, safety or morality, the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection (MoLSP) and the Ministry of Health, in consultation with the social partners, adopted the "List of occupations with unfavourable working conditions in which it is forbidden to employ persons under 18 years of age" of 30 May 2001, which provides that children under 18 years of age are forbidden from watering and gathering cotton by hand. In this regard, the Committee notes that section 49 of the Administrative Responsibility Code provides that an infraction of labour and occupational safety legislation shall entail a fine of from two to five times the minimum wage.

The Committee expresses its serious concern at the situation of children who, every year, are taken from school for up to three months and made to work in the cotton fields in hazardous conditions. It observes that, although national legislation appears to prohibit forced labour and hazardous work in cotton production, this remains a serious issue of concern in practice. The Committee refers to the Universal Periodic Review of Uzbekistan of 9 March 2009 (A/HRC/10/83, paragraph 106(8) and (27)), in which, in response to the recommendations that Uzbekistan do its utmost to eliminate forced child labour, intensify its efforts to effectively implement the national legislation and stop the practice of sending school-age children to participate in the harvesting of cotton, the Government indicated that measures are already being implemented or have already been implemented and will further be considered. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, forced labour and hazardous work are considered as worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour, as a matter of urgency.

Furthermore, the Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 7(1), of the Convention, ratifying countries are required to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the provision and application of penal sanctions.

The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to eradicate the forced labour of, or hazardous work by, children under 18 years in cotton production, as a matter of urgency. In this regard, it requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and that effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 6. Action programmes. National Action Plan (NPA) for the application of ILO Conventions Nos 138 and 182. The Committee notes that, according to the IOE, in September 2008, the Uzbek Prime Minister signed a decree that bans child labour in cotton plantations in Uzbekistan and approves a NPA to eradicate child labour. In this regard, the Committee notes that the NPA for the application of ILO Conventions Nos 138 and 182 includes the following paragraphs on activities specifically regarding the forced labour of children, in particular in the agricultural sector:

- (a) Monitoring and control of the prohibition of the use of pupils of schools of general education, vocational colleges and academic lyceums, in forced labour (paragraph 12).
- (b) Public control of the prohibition of the use of forced child labour in territories of self-governing bodies of citizens (paragraph 14).
- (c) Establishing a working group to monitor locally the prohibition of the use of forced labour in cotton picking of pupils in schools of general education, including public schools, and submitting analytical information to the Cabinet on the results of this monitoring (paragraph 20).
- (d) Acceptance of a joint statement on the inadmissibility of the use of forced child labour in agricultural works by the Association of Farm Entities, the Council of Federation of trade unions in Uzbekistan and the MoLSP (paragraph 29).
- (e) Informing farmers on matters relating to the prohibition of violating legislation on the engagement of children in agricultural works (paragraph 33).

While noting the measures enumerated in the framework of the NPA for the application of ILO Conventions Nos 138 and 182, the Committee notes the allegation of the IOE according to which it remains uncertain if the implementation of these recently adopted measures will be sufficient to address the deeply rooted practice of forced child labour in the cotton fields. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the activities envisaged in the abovementioned NPA pertaining to the prohibition and elimination of the use of forced child labour in the agricultural sector are effectively implemented, as a matter of urgency, and to provide information on the results achieved.

In this regard, the Committee invites the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance on the assessment to be made on the effective implementation of the NPA for the application of ILO Conventions Nos 138 and 182.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 99th Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Zambia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1976)

Article 2, paragraph 3 of the Convention. Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee had observed the International Trade Union Confederation's (ITUC) allegation that 25 per cent of primary school age children did not receive any schooling and that in 1999 less than 29 per cent of children reached the secondary school level. It had noted the information provided by the Worker members at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2008 that Zambia does not yet have a system of free, compulsory, formal public education and therefore it would not be able to succeed in eliminating child labour. It had also noted the Worker members' statement that although the abolition of school fees had resulted in an increase in the school enrolment rates and a decrease in the number of out-of-school children from 760,000 to 228,000 between 1995 and 2005, disadvantaged children were still two to three times less likely to be in school than other children.

The Committee had noted that according to the Child Labour Survey Report of 2005, about 1,185,033 children between the ages of 5 and 17 were in school, out of which 49 per cent were child labourers. It also noted the incidence of child labour which was estimated at 895,000 of which 46 per cent were children between the ages of 10 and 14. The survey had indicated that child labour is predominantly a rural phenomenon with 92 per cent of all working children residing and working in rural areas. The Committee had further noted the statistics provided by the Educational Statistical Bulletin of 2006, which revealed that there were 93,451 out-of-school children between the ages of 7 and 15. The Committee, while appreciating the efforts made by the Government to increase school enrolment rates and to provide free and compulsory education for all children, observed that poverty is one of the main causes of child labour and that the HIV/AIDS pandemic had left a lot of children parentless. It had further expressed concern at the number of out-of-school children as well as the number of school-going children who were involved in child labour in the country.

The Committee notes the Government's information that Circular No. 3 of 2003 introduced free education from grades 1 to 7. It also notes the Government's statement that efforts are under way to make schooling compulsory up to basic education level at which stage children will have attained the minimum age of employment of 16 years. The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government in its report under Convention No. 182 on the measures adopted to resolve the challenges associated with HIV/AIDS at workplaces. The Committee expresses the firm hope that in the next report the Government will be in a position to provide information on the progress made with regard to its efforts to make schooling compulsory up to the minimum age for employment, which is 15 years for Zambia. The Committee also requests the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system, in particular by increasing the school enrolment rates and reducing school drop-out rates, especially among child orphans of HIV/AIDS and children in the rural areas so as to prevent the engagement of these children in child labour.

Article 3, paragraph 2. Determination of hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that a "statutory instrument" was formulated to enforce the Employment of Young Person's and Children's (Amendment) Act of 2004, as well as to serve as Zambia's hazardous work list. It had also noted that this "statutory instrument on hazardous work" prohibits work in a covered site in any of the following types of occupations: excavation/drilling; stone crushing; block/brick-making; building; roofing; painting; tour guiding; selling/serving in bars; animal herding; fishing; working in tobacco and cotton fields; spraying of pesticides, herbicides and fertilizers; handling farm machinery and processing in industries. The Committee notes the Government's information that the Hazardous Labour Statutory Instrument developed in collaboration with the stakeholders raised some legal concerns which are currently being considered by legal experts. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Hazardous Labour Statutory Instrument containing the list of types of hazardous work will be adopted soon and requests the Government to provide a copy of the same once it has been adopted.

Article 7. Light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the statutory instrument determining light work activities had been formulated and had requested the Government to provide a copy of the same once it had been adopted. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no statutory instrument for light work activities has been developed. However, it is envisaged that once the Hazardous Labour Statutory Instrument is adopted, it will define light work activities. The Committee trusts that the Hazardous Labour Statutory Instrument will define the light work activities as well as prescribe the number of hours during which and the conditions in which such work may be undertaken by children between 13 and 15 years of age.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee had previously noted the ITUC's allegation that child labour in Zambia is almost non-existent in the formal economy. However, children are reported to work in the unregulated economy, often in dangerous or harmful work. According to the ITUC, children are mostly found in agriculture, domestic service, small-scale mining operations, stone-crushing and pottery. The Committee had taken note of the Government's information on the measures taken to reduce the incidence of child labour, for example, through ILO-IPEC projects, by establishing 11 district child labour committees to monitor the implementation of programmes to sensitize the public on child labour and its worst forms as well as programmes to withdraw, rehabilitate and reintegrate identified children. Noting that a National Child Labour Action Plan was under way, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate the measures adopted within the framework of this national plan for the elimination of child labour, especially in the informal sector. It had also requested the Government to redouble its efforts to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services in the informal sector.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the draft National Action Plan on Child Labour includes measures for the elimination of child labour in the informal sector, such as: awareness-raising and sensitization activities; prevention, withdrawal and reintegration measures; and the creation of an enabling environment for the implementation of the various activities. The Government further states that, due to lack of transport and communication services, the District Child Labour Committees are not able to function effectively in the districts and hence information on the number of children withdrawn and rehabilitated is not available. The Committee notes, however, the Government's statement that, once the National Action Plan is finalized, the District Child Labour Committees would be given the necessary resources to meet their administrative costs. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the National Action Plan on Child Labour and its impact on reducing child labour, especially in the informal sector. It also requests the Government to redouble its efforts to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services in the informal sector, in order to ensure that the protection established by the Convention is ensured for children working in this sector.

Article 3 and Part V of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and application in practice. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), that there were reports of trafficking of children to neighbouring countries for the purpose of forced prostitution and that combatants from neighbouring Angola kidnapped Zambian children to perform forced labour in Angola. It had also noted that there are criminal provisions in place prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years for any purpose. However, based on the results of a study conducted by the ILO-IPEC on the nature and extent of trafficking in Zambia, the Committee had expressed concern at the prevalence of internal trafficking of children for domestic labour, farm work and commercial sexual exploitation and requested the Government to redouble its efforts to eliminate the trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation, and on the penalties imposed on the perpetrators.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that three cases of child trafficking were reported under section 143 of the Penal Code (Amendment) Act of 2005, out of which two perpetrators were sentenced to twenty years of imprisonment while the third case is under investigation. In addition, two perpetrators of child trafficking were charged under the Immigration Act, for which prosecutions are under way. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the reported cases have led to the withdrawal of six children from trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied, for violations of the legal prohibitions on the sale and trafficking of children. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken for the rehabilitation and social integration of the children withdrawn from trafficking.

Article 4, paragraph 1. Determination of hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that it had formulated a "Statutory Instrument on hazardous work" which prohibits work in a covered worksite in any of the following types of occupations: excavation/drilling; stone crushing; block/brick-making; building; roofing; painting; tour guiding; selling/serving in bars; animal herding; fishing; working in tobacco and cotton fields; spraying of pesticides, herbicides and fertilizers; handling farm machinery and processing in industries. It had noted that section 3(a) of the Employment of Young Persons and Children (Amendment) Act of 2004 (EYPC), defines a child as a person under the age of 15 years and section 3(e) defines a young person as a person aged between 15 and 18 years. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report under Convention No. 138 that the Hazardous Labour Statutory Instrument developed in collaboration with the social partners and stakeholders raised some legal concerns which are currently being considered by legal experts. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Hazardous Labour Statutory Instrument, containing the list of types of hazardous work, will be adopted soon and requests the Government to provide a copy of it once it has been adopted.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. The Committee had previously noted the establishment of 11 District Child Labour Committees to monitor the implementation of programmes to sensitize the public to child labour and its worst forms, as well as programmes to withdraw, rehabilitate and reintegrate identified children. It had also noted that six labour inspectors were trained in the prosecution of child trafficking cases. The Committee further noted the information provided by the Government representative of Zambia to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2008 concerning the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) that an Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking was established to provide specialized intervention on human trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the role of the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking includes: to coordinate programmes on protection, prevention and prosecution on human trafficking issues; and to help in the development and revision of policies and legislation on human trafficking. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking developed a draft communication strategy for the implementation of anti-trafficking measures; developed and adopted the Anti-Human Trafficking Act of 2008; and set up the National Human Trafficking Secretariat. The Committee further notes the Government's statement that the District Child Labour Committees have not so far dealt with any cases of child trafficking due to administrative and financial difficulties faced by these committees. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to make the District Child Labour Committees functional, and thereafter requests it to provide information on the number of children withdrawn and rehabilitated pursuant to the implementation of the programmes monitored by the District Child Labour Committees. It also requests the Government to provide further information on the implementation of the programmes on protection, prevention and prosecution on human trafficking coordinated by the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking, and the results achieved.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Effective time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Child victims/orphans of HIV/AIDS. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the ITUC's indication that the number of street children in the capital Lusaka nearly tripled over the 1990s. It had also noted that since the number of Zambians dying of HIV/AIDS had increased, the number of orphans had also increased and that nearly all of these children were working, particularly in hazardous work. The Committee had also noted that the Government developed a national HIV/AIDS policy which addresses the issues of orphans, as well as HIV-positive children and launched a National Decent Work Country Programme in December 2007, which has outlined HIV/AIDS prevention and elimination of child labour among its priorities. It had further noted the Government's statement that, as of March 2008, there had been an increase in the number of children prevented and withdrawn from HIV/AIDS-induced child labour, through educational support, recreational and psychological support, and through income-generation activities for the families affected by HIV/AIDS. Many children who were integrated into formal and informal schools continued their education after receiving school requirements, and those who completed vocational skills training were provided with employment. The Committee had also noted that through the ILO-IPEC project entitled "Combating and preventing HIV/AIDS-induced child labour in sub-Saharan Africa (September 2004–December 2007)”, in Zambia a total of 1,124 children were withdrawn from exploitative child labour and 1,149 children were prevented from being engaged in exploitative child labour, through educational and social protection services.

The Committee had noted, however, that according to the “Report on the global AIDS epidemic” published by the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), in July 2008 over 60,000 children aged below 17 years were HIV/AIDS orphans in Zambia. The Committee had observed with concern that one of the serious consequences of this pandemic on orphans is their increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour. It had therefore requested the Government to pursue its efforts to combat HIV/AIDS-induced child labour and to provide information on the implementation of the national HIV/AIDS policy, the national Decent Work Country Programme and the results achieved in terms of the elimination of HIV/AIDS-induced child labour. The Committee notes that the Government’s report contains only information on the measures adopted to resolve the challenges associated with HIV/AIDS at work places. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the national HIV/AIDS policy, the national Decent Work Country Programme and on the results achieved in terms of the elimination of HIV/AIDS-induced child labour. It encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that children orphaned by HIV/AIDS are prevented from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour.

Article 8. International cooperation. The Committee had previously noted that the Zambia police service established a human trafficking desk as a way of cooperating with other countries to combat human trafficking. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the role of the human trafficking desk in combating cross-border trafficking in children. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the human trafficking desk has not yet been established but the process has begun and has reached an advanced stage. According to the Government’s report, the human trafficking desk would enable the public to report cases of child trafficking to the police, thereby providing for a quick intervention on matters relating to child trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the progress made in the establishment of the human trafficking desk and on the number of cases of child trafficking reported. It also requests the Government to provide information on its impact in combating internal as well as cross-border trafficking in children.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zimbabwe

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Labour Act of 2002 and the Labour Relation Regulations of 1997 do not apply to self-employed workers. It had noted, however, the Government’s information that in practice children not bound by a labour relationship, such as self-employed workers, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. It had also noted that consultations with the social partners would be undertaken with a view to amend the legislation in order to explicitly cover all types of employment or work. The Committee noted the Government’s information that the labour law reform was ongoing in Zimbabwe and that, in this framework, the Government would be consulting the social partners on this issue. In the framework of the labour law review, the Committee once again encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that self-employed children benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. It once again requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 2, paragraph 3. Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 5 of the Education Act of 1996 states that it is the objective in Zimbabwe that primary education for every child of school-going age shall be compulsory and to this end it shall be the duty of parents of any such child to ensure that such child attends primary school. It had also noted, however, that in its Concluding Observations on the initial report of Zimbabwe (CRC/C/15/Add.55, paragraph 19), the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed its concern noting that primary education is neither free nor compulsory and that the quality of education is low.

The Committee noted the ZCTU’s contention that children as young as 6 years work on farms in order to pay for their school fees. It also noted the ZCTU’s statement that the Government should reintroduce free education at the primary level in order to contribute to eradicating child labour, including its worst forms, on farms.

The Committee noted the Government’s information that consultations with the Ministry of Education, Sport and Culture would be made concerning the legislation fixing a specific age for the completion of compulsory schooling. Moreover, the Government indicated that it had launched various programmes, such as the Basic Education Assistance Module (BEAM) and the National Action Plan for Orphans and other Vulnerable Children (OVC NPA) which are aimed at ensuring that children of school age attend school.

The Committee noted that, according to the 2004 labour force survey contained in the Project for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour report (WFCL Project’s report), supplied by the Government under Convention No. 182, out of the children aged 5–14 years involved in economic activities (42 per cent), 4 per cent never attended school and 14 per cent left school. Among children from 5 to 14 years performing non economic activities, such as household chores like fetching firewood and water, 6 per cent never attended school and 35 per cent left school. The Committee expressed the view that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the BEAM and the OVC NPA on increasing school attendance and reducing school drop-out rates, so as to prevent the engagement of children in child labour. It further requests the Government to provide information on any progress made towards the adoption of legislation fixing a specific age for the completion of compulsory schooling.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. The Committee had previously noted that section 11(1)(a) and (3)(b) of the Labour Act of 2002, permits the employment of apprentices from the age of 13 years. However, Chapter 4, Part IV, subsection (1)(a), of the Manpower Planning and Development Act prescribes that the minimum age for apprenticeship is 16 years. It had therefore noted that section 11(1)(a) and (3)(b) of the Labour Act of 2002, permitting the employment of apprentices from the age of 13 years, was not in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee noted the Government's statement that it recognized the need for harmonized legislation in the area of apprenticeship. In this regard, the ongoing labour law reform in the country will include these issues, in consultation with the social partners. In the framework of the labour law reform, the Committee once again encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to harmonize the relevant legislation, in particular section 11(1)(a) and (3)(b) of the Labour Act, and Chapter 4, Part IV, subsection 1(a), of the Manpower Planning and Development Act, in order to ensure conformity with Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 7, paragraphs 1 and 4. Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, light work. The Committee had previously noted that section 3(4) of the Labour Relations Regulations establishes that children over 13 years of age may perform light work where such work is an integral part of a course of education or training and does not prejudice their education, health and safety. It had also noted the Government's statement that it intended to consult with the social partners with a view to amending its legislation so as to detail the types of light work, which may be undertaken by children from the age of 13 years and the conditions in which such work may be undertaken. The Committee had finally observed that quite a number of children below 13 years of age were economically active in some way or another. Particularly, 406,958 children aged 5–14 were found working with a time limit of at least three hours. The Committee also noted the Government's information that it would address, jointly with the social partners, the requests under this Article in the framework of the WFCL Project. In fact, it is the Government's objective to ensure that this Project will deal with all forms of child labour. The Committee noted the Government's information under Convention No. 182 that the Government and the social partners, in collaboration with the ILO, and other UN specialized agencies, are at an advanced stage towards the implementation of the WFCL Project. In the framework of the implementation of the WFCL Project, the Committee once again encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no child under 13 years is allowed to carry out light work and that, where work is authorized from the age of 13 years, the employment or working conditions are consistent with the provisions of Article 7 of the Convention. It also once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress made towards amending its legislation in order to detail the types of light work, which may be undertaken by children from the age of 13 years and the conditions in which such work may be undertaken.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee had previously expressed its concern at the seriousness and magnitude of the situation of children under 14 years working in the agricultural sector and in domestic services.

The Committee noted the ZCTU's statement that the Government had failed to put in place measures that would help to eradicate child labour and its worst forms in the agricultural sector. In fact, whilst section 11 of the Labour Act prohibits child labour, in practice children as young as 6 years are working on farms. The Committee noted the Government's statement in reply to the ZCTU's allegations that it was not aware of situations in which 6-year-old children were working on farms.

The Committee, however, noted the child labour statistical data contained in the 2004 labour force survey (included in the WFCL's Project report). This survey divides child labour into two categories: (a) economic child labour, where a child between 5 and 14 years is engaged in economic activities for at least three hours a day; (b) non-economic child labour, where a child between 5 and 14 years is engaged in non-economic activities for at least five hours a day. According to the survey, 42 per cent of children between 5 and 14 years were involved in economic activities and 2 per cent in non-economic activities. Of the children between 5 and 14 years involved in economic activities, 96 per cent were found in rural areas, the agricultural sector, hunting and the fishing industry. The highest number of children engaged in both economic and non-economic activities came from households with an income below ZW$50,000. As for occupational hazards, 3 per cent of children involved in economic child labour were injured at work, about 78 per cent of these occurring in agriculture. The Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the large number of children under the age of 14 who are found to be working, especially in the agricultural sector and in household activities. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to improve this situation and asks the Government to provide detailed information on measures taken in this regard, especially in respect of children working in the agricultural sector and domestic services. The Committee also once again asks the Government to provide statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, especially regarding the agricultural and domestic sectors, as well as extracts from the reports of inspection services, information on the number and nature of contraventions reported and penalties applied.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Equality of opportunity and treatment

Afghanistan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that section 8 of the new Labour Code, submitted to the National Assembly for approval in April 2007, provides that workers have the right to work and to receive remuneration, and that workers are entitled to receive wages and salaries on the basis of the quality and quantity of the work and in accordance with their grade, rank and post. Section 93 envisages the establishment of job descriptions. Section 9(1) prohibits discrimination in respect of salaries and allowances. Discrimination in the payment of wages is prohibited under section 59(4). While the Committee notes that these provisions may provide some protection from discrimination based on sex with respect to remuneration, they do not fully apply the principle of the Convention. Recalling the 2006 general observation stressing the importance of giving full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention, the Committee asks the Government to consider including a provision explicitly providing for the right of men and women to receive equal remuneration for work of equal value, and to indicate in its next report any progress made in this regard.

The Committee recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention defines the term "remuneration" in the broadest possible terms. Accordingly, the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value has to be applied to all aspects of remuneration. Noting that sections 8, 9 and 59(4) of the new Labour Code appear to prohibit discrimination in respect of salaries, wages, and allowances, the Committee asks the Government to indicate how the Convention's principle is applied with respect to other elements of remuneration, such as "salary supplements" mentioned in section 3, or any other emoluments, whether in cash or in kind.

With regard to the determination of remuneration, the Committee notes section 62 of the Labour Code which provides that the amount and conditions of payment of wages for government employees and employees of certain mixed enterprises are determined by the Government, while they are to be determined through mutual agreement in the private sector. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in establishing the remuneration for public sector employees and to indicate the methods used to ensure that salary scales are established in accordance with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalls that employers' and workers' organizations play an important role with regard to the full application of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to indicate any initiatives or measures taken, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations, to ensure the application in practice of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee previously noted that section 9 of the Labour Code does not contain a definition of "discrimination". It notes the Government's indication that any infringement of rights guaranteed under the legislation was considered to constitute discrimination. While noting this information, the Committee requests the Government to include in the legislation a definition of discrimination, with a view to facilitating the implementation of the Labour Code's non-discrimination provisions. Such a definition should cover direct and indirect discrimination and include the prohibited grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, as well as any other ground the Government may determine in accordance with Article 1(1)(b) such as, for instance, age, disability or health status. Please indicate any further developments in this regard.

The Committee notes that preparations are under way for the National Assembly to adopt new legislation on persons with disabilities, which, inter alia, will address vocational rehabilitation, training and employment of disabled persons. The Government may also wish to include in the new legislation provisions prohibiting discrimination in employment and occupation based on disability. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in adopting the legislation concerning persons with disabilities.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes the Government's indication that women actively participate in the economic and social life of the country. The Committee would appreciate further information on the progress made in enhancing women's access to education and employment. Recalling that the Convention specifically requires governments to ensure respect for the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment under the direct control of the authorities, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote and ensure women's access to employment in the civil service, including in management positions. The Committee would appreciate if the Government would continue to provide statistical information on the number of men and women that have benefited from vocational training.

Awareness raising. Recalling its previous comments noting that further progress in realizing gender equality and non-discrimination is being held back, inter alia, by customary practices, the Committee notes from the Government's report that awareness-raising and training activities concerning the Labour Code and with regard to equal access to training, employment and occupation of women, disabled persons and disadvantaged ethnic minorities took place through seminars and workshops. The Committee hopes that such awareness-raising and training activities will continue, with the support of the ILO and the United Nations system, and that workers' and employers' organizations will have an active role in this regard. Please continue to provide information on awareness-raising activities on gender equality and non-discrimination in employment and occupation.

Article 5. Special measures of protection. The Committee notes that the Government has not yet established a list of physically arduous or harmful work prohibited for women as envisaged under section 120 of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that any future list does not contain exclusions that go beyond what is strictly necessary to protect women's reproductive capacity, as special protective measures for women which are based on stereotyped perceptions regarding their capacity and role in society would be contrary to the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the list of work that is prohibited for women under section 120 of the Labour Code, as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Algeria

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that section 27 of the general conditions of service of the public service, enacted in 2006, prohibits any discrimination among public employees on the grounds of their opinions, sex, origin and any other personal or social condition. The Committee also notes that section 17 of Act No. 90-11 with respect to labour relations prohibits any provision in an agreement, collective agreement or employment contract which gives rise to discrimination in employment, remuneration or working conditions on grounds of age, sex, social or marital situation, family relations, political convictions and membership or not of a trade union. The Committee further notes that the Labour Code is currently under revision. The Committee urges the Government to take advantage of the opportunity of the formulation of the new Labour Code to ensure that the new provisions of the Labour Code prohibit discrimination at all stages of employment and occupation on all the grounds set out in the Convention, including those not covered by the 1990 Labour Code, namely race, colour, religion and national extraction. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee invites the Government to provide a copy of the draft Labour Code to the International Labour Office before the adoption of the final text so that it can assist the Government in its efforts to guarantee the application of the principles of the Convention in the new legislation.

Article 1 of the Convention. Sexual harassment. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 341bis of the Penal Code only appears to cover quid pro quo harassment. The Committee recalls that there are two types of sexual harassment that need to be addressed by legislation, quid pro quo harassment and sexual harassment due to a hostile working environment, which takes the form of an intimidating, hostile or humiliating work environment. For further guidance, the Committee draws the Government's attention to its 2002 general observation on this subject. The Committee reminds the Government that sexual harassment at work undermines the dignity and well-being of workers, as well as enterprise productivity and the basis of the working relationship. In view of the serious consequences of these practices, the Committee hopes the new Labour Code will ensure complete protection against sexual harassment by prohibiting quid pro quo sexual harassment and harassment through a hostile work environment, and it requests the Government to keep it informed in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted with a view to preventing sexual harassment and protecting workers against it in employment and occupation, including information on education and awareness-raising campaigns and the organization of activities in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations.

Articles 2 and 3. Discrimination based on sex. National policy. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed concern at the low participation of women in employment and the persistence of strongly stereotyped attitudes with respect to the roles and responsibilities of women and men in society and in the family. The Committee also emphasized the negative impact of these attitudes on the access of women to employment and training. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the applicable training and qualification programmes are not restrictive or discriminatory on the ground of sex and that the choice of subjects for training is an individual matter. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that in practice there are two forms of discrimination in access to training. Discrimination may be a result of laws or regulations which give rise to direct discrimination or, more frequently, practices based on stereotypes mainly related to the role of women in society. As a consequence, and in order to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention, it is necessary, firstly, to adopt legislation that is in conformity with the principle of equality and, secondly, to accompany this legislation with proactive measures through which de facto inequalities affecting women can be corrected. The Committee once again requests the Government to take urgent and proactive measures to further its national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for women in respect of employment and occupation, including efforts to address stereotyped attitudes, and to keep the Committee informed of any progress in this respect. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to facilitate and encourage the access of women and girls to more diversified vocational training opportunities, including those leading to traditionally male occupations, so as to afford them greater opportunities to enter the labour market.

Article 5. Special protection measures. For a number of years, the Committee has been urging the Government to give its attention to the importance of reviewing the provisions prohibiting night work for women, as well as the assignment of women to work that is dangerous, insalubrious or harmful to their health. The Committee notes that, when reviewing these provisions, a distinction should be made between special measures to protect maternity and measures based on stereotyped perceptions of the capacity and role of women in society. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that all other measures intended to protect women on the sole grounds of their sex may seriously undermine the principle of equality of treatment and opportunity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the revision of the Labour Code with regard to night work by women and their assignment to hazardous, insalubrious or harmful types of work. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that, in the context of the new Labour Code, the restrictions relating to the access of women to certain types of work are limited to maternity protection and it requests the Government to keep it informed on this point.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Angola

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with regret that for a number of years the Government's reports have failed to respond to the points raised in the Committee's comments. The Committee once again emphasizes that this prevents it from assessing the progress made with regard to the practical application of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure that its next report contains information in reply to all the issues raised by the Committee.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report and recalls the communication from the National Union of Angolan Workers (UNTA) dated 16 August 2007, which had been forwarded to the Government.

Discrimination in practice. The Committee notes that, although the Government has put in place legal provisions concerning discrimination in employment and occupation, including sections 3 and 268 of the General Labour Act No. 2/00, discrimination continues to occur in practice. In its report the Government states that violations of the non-discrimination provisions occur particularly in the private sector where imbalances in the participation in decision-making positions and a tendency to exclude women during and after maternity can be observed. The Government previously reported that gender-based discrimination also exists in the informal economy. As noted by the Committee previously, there is also a significant gender imbalance in the judiciary and as regards management positions in the civil service.

Further, the Committee notes that according to the UNTA a practice of fixing a maximum age of 35 years for recruitment has been observed. The Committee considers that such a practice is likely to be indirectly discriminatory against women as it may particularly affect women wishing to enter employment following an absence from the labour market for child rearing.

In its report, the Government states that it was difficult to measure the incidence of gender-based discrimination as women do not file petitions or complaints due to shortcomings in the "legal culture". The Government also states that it has made efforts to raise awareness of legal matters, particularly among women, by expanding information and education programmes on women's rights, using different national languages and various forms of communication. Efforts were also being made to address discriminatory cultural and traditional practices still prevailing in the country, which, for instance, lead to unequal access of girls to education. The Government, in a very general manner, also refers to the National Strategy and Strategic Framework to Promote Gender Equality and the Rural Growth and Development Programme which includes a programme for the economic empowerment of women. The report refers to the preparation and use of gender-disaggregated data, although such data has not been provided.

- (i) The Committee requests the Government to respond to the comments made by the UNTA. Concerned over the discriminatory effects of using age as a recruitment criteria, particularly on women, the Committee encourages the Government, in collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations, to take measures to ensure that women are not indirectly discriminated against in access to employment on the basis of age. Please provide information on the measures taken in this regard.
- (ii) The Committee encourages the Government to continue and intensify its efforts to raise awareness and understanding of the principle of non-discrimination and the related legislation among men and women, and requests the Government to indicate the specific activities carried out to this end. Given the reports of discrimination based on sex and pregnancy in the private sector, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to enhance the capacity of the labour inspectorate and other competent authorities to identify and address discrimination in employment and occupation. Please also provide information regarding whether the competent authorities have addressed any such cases, and if so, the results thereof.
- (iii) The Committee considers that the Government should take specific and proactive measures to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of women in the civil service, including the judiciary, and it asks the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in this regard, including measures to ensure that women have access to management positions on an equal footing with men.
- (iv) Noting that the Government has yet to provide statistical information on the situation of men and women in the labour market, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to collect and provide such data with its next report. This information should, as far as possible, include data on the representation of men and women in the different industries and occupations, as well as indications as to the representation of women in decision-making positions. Please also indicate the share of men and women considered to work in the informal economy and the measures taken to ensure their access to training and employment opportunities, irrespective of sex, race, religion or other grounds.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Austria

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee notes the Government's report as well as the observations made with regard to the application of the Convention by the Federal Chamber of Labour, which were received with the Government's report.

Assessment of the gender remuneration gap. The Committee notes that the gross annual income of women employed full time for 2007 was some 22 per cent lower than men's. In the same year women's gross hourly wage was 25.5 per cent lower than men's, the second largest pay gap in the European Union. The gender remuneration gap in respect of gross annual income of employed workers (including part-time workers) was 40.1 per cent, practically unchanged since 1997. Similarly, wide gender remuneration gaps exist in respect of average hourly wages received by full-time and part-time workers. The Committee expresses concern that this very wide gender remuneration gap persists, despite the measures that have been taken so far to address it.

The Committee notes that according to the Government, the gender remuneration gap is primarily due to unequal remuneration offered to women upon entry into employment, unequal opportunities for promotion, and childcare responsibilities which have a limiting effect on women's access to better paid positions. In addition, the Government regards the lack of information and of transparency in relation to remuneration levels as contributing to the persisting gender remuneration gap. In the Government's view, the publication of workplace wage differentials would assist in closing this gap. According to the Federal Chamber of Labour, the income differentials between men and women cannot be explained by differences in working hours, levels of education, sectors or occupations, but rather by the existence of structural discrimination against women who receive lower pay for work of equal value. The Chamber also points to the need to improve wage transparency within and between companies.

The Committee notes that tripartite consultations are currently taking place on amendments to the Equal Treatment Act regarding wage transparency. Central aspects of the discussions are the possibility of requiring regular anonymous wage reports by enterprises of a certain size and the inclusion of pay information in vacancy announcements. The Committee firmly hopes that the ongoing consultations will be successfully concluded in the near future, and it asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to strengthen the existing legislation to provide a basis for reinforced action to eliminate the gender remuneration gap, including through the publication of enterprise-based wage information.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bahrain

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the communication of the Bahrain Chamber of Commerce and Industry (BCCI) received on 15 September 2009. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the issues raised in the communication.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the draft Labour Code is still under discussion in the National Assembly. In its previous comments, the Committee had expressed the hope that a specific provision would be included in the new Labour Code defining and prohibiting discrimination. The Government had stated in a previous report that the comments made by the Committee had been taken into consideration in the revision process. In the Government's most recent report, it states that as current customs which have the force of law do not distinguish between men and women in the workplace, an explicit text on the issue is not seen to be necessary. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that the absence of discriminatory provisions in the legislation is not sufficient to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation, with a view to eliminating any discrimination in respect thereof, as set out in Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee considers that, given persisting patterns of discrimination in drafting a new Labour Code, it would be regrettable if the opportunity were not taken to clearly define and prohibit direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation to ensure more effective application of the Convention. The Committee, therefore, strongly urges the Government to take steps to ensure that the new Labour Code includes provisions explicitly defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination, on all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation, and covering all workers, including domestic workers, casual workers and agricultural workers. Please provide information on any developments in this regard.

Sex discrimination. Legislation. The Committee previously raised concerns regarding section 63 of the Labour Code, which according to the English translation published by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, provides that "the Minister for Labour and Social Affairs shall make an Order prescribing the occupations and jobs in respect of which an employer may offer alternative employment to a female worker because of her marriage". The Government merely replies that the Bahraini legislation does not impose any restrictions on women in employment, and that the new Labour Code will grant protective privileges for women. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the new Labour Code does not discriminate against women by authorizing occupations and jobs to be prescribed in respect of which an employer may offer alternative employment to women because of their marriage. The Committee also hopes that the new Labour Code will strictly limit protective measures for women to maternity protection.

Sex discrimination. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Government had previously indicated that it would take the necessary steps to enact appropriate regulation on sexual harassment. However, in its most recent report, the Government indicates that it considers the existing provisions of the Penal Code punishing rape and sexual assault to provide sufficient protection against sexual harassment. The Committee recalls that sexual harassment is a serious form of sex discrimination, and it is important to take effective measures to tackle not only the most serious forms of sexual harassment that would constitute sexual assault, but the range of conduct in the context of work that should be addressed as sexual harassment. Referring to its 2002 general observation, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the definition of sexual harassment set out therein. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the new Labour Code defines and prohibits sexual harassment at work, encompassing both quid pro quo and hostile environment harassment. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken to prevent and address sexual harassment at the workplace.

Migrant workers. In its previous comments, the Committee raised concerns regarding the vulnerability of migrant workers to abuse and discrimination, particularly women migrant domestic workers. The Committee also drew attention to the fact that this situation is exacerbated by the sponsorship system, making migrant workers dependent on their employers and reluctant to make formal complaints. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code will address issues such as hours at work, holidays and bonuses for domestic workers. The Committee also notes that 915 complaints were filed by migrant workers in 2008, compared to 1,070 in 2007. The Government attributes the decrease in the number of complaints to increasing awareness and care by employers, and better monitoring and application of the legislation, and indicates that the majority of complaints involved non-payment of entitlements upon cessation of activity, linked to the financial crisis. The Committee also notes the adoption of Order No. 79 of 16 April 2009, which relates to the procedures governing the transfer of a foreign worker from one employer to another. Section 2 of the Order states that the foreign worker shall have the right to transfer to work with another employer without violating the rights of an employer by virtue of the provisions of the law or the text of the labour contract concluded between the parties. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, in collaboration with the International Labour Office, has carried out a study on the alternatives to the sponsorship system, and is in the process of considering this study.

The Committee would like to underline the importance of ensuring effective legislative protection, and the promotion and enforcement of such legislation, to ensure that migrant workers are not subject to discrimination and abuse. The Committee also considers that providing for appropriate flexibility for migrant workers to change their workplace assists in avoiding situations in which they become particularly vulnerable to discrimination and abuse. The Committee recalls the particular vulnerability of migrant domestic workers to multiple forms of discrimination based on race, colour, religion or sex due to the individual employment relationship, lack of legislative protection, stereotyped thinking about gender roles and undervaluing of this type of employment. Recalling the large number of migrant workers in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to ensure that migrant workers have effective legal protection against discrimination in employment and occupation, in particular based on race, colour, religion or sex. The Committee also hopes that the provisions on domestic workers in the new Labour Code will provide effective rights and protection, including addressing the under-valuation and disadvantaged position of these workers. The Committee also requests information on the status of the follow-up to the study on the alternatives to the sponsorship system as well as information on any other studies dealing with the situation of migrant workers. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the number and nature of complaints filed by migrant workers or detected by labour inspectors, in particular relating to domestic workers, the sanctions imposed and the remedies provided;
- (ii) the number of migrant workers that have successfully applied to transfer to another employer pursuant to Order No. 79, indicating the reasons for granting such a change; and
- (iii) whether and to what extent the labour contract between the migrant worker and the employer can limit the right of the worker to transfer to another employer pursuant to Order No. 79.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1973)

Principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Constitution. Noting that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is not expressly incorporated in the labour legislation, and recalling that in its general observation of 2006 the Committee urged governments to take the necessary steps to amend their legislation so as to give legal expression to the principle of the Convention, the Committee notes with satisfaction that under article 48(V) of the new Constitution promulgated on 7 February 2009, "the State shall promote the integration of women into work and shall ensure that women receive the same remuneration as men for work of equal value, in both the public and private spheres”. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on steps taken under this constitutional provision, including with respect to the incorporation of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value in the labour legislation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)
(ratification: 1977)

National plan on equality between men and women. In its previous comments, the Committee asked for information on the measures taken under the 2004–07 National Public Policy Plan for the full exercise of women’s rights. It notes that the Plan was implemented in part, including through activities to deal with the problems of violence and citizens’ participation, such as the holding of workshops in mining centres or with organizations of rural women. The Government indicates that access to credit has been democratized with 50 per cent of all loans by the Production Development Bank going to women entrepreneurs. A gender-sensitive budget programme is being developed with participation of the organizations of women grouped together in the National Bureau for Work on Gender-Sensitive Budgets and this is reflected, inter alia, in plans and programmes for rural development and in municipal programmes. Some of the objectives of these programmes are: (i) gender equality in access to, and use and control of, the resources of production; (ii) access to and equality in participation in decision-making; and (iii) enhancing opportunities for paid employment and income generation. The Government also states that in the new Constitution, promulgated on 7 February 2009, focus on gender is more systematic and practical than it was in the old Constitution. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the legislative and policy changes with respect to equality between women and men in employment and occupation as a result of the new Constitution. Noting that, under Supreme Decree No. 29894 of 7 February 2009, the Ministry of Justice and the Vice-Ministry of Equality of Opportunity are given specific competences with respect to the formulation and implementation of plans, programmes and policies directed at promoting equality of opportunity between men and women, the Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on any programmes and policies specifically concerning equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation that have been adopted by these bodies and their implementation.

Indigenous women. The Committee notes that, in the framework of the sectoral programme support to the rights of indigenous peoples and of the programme to regularize and title indigenous lands (Componente Saneamiento y Titulación de Tierras Comunitarias de Origen Fase II 2005–09), funded by Denmark, a strategy is to be formulated for cross-cutting gender activities in the regularization of lands, with a view to including systematic participation by women in all processes of regularization of agricultural land. The Committee notes that, in the period 1997–2005, women accounted for 46 per cent of a total of 42,178 titles and certificates issued. It also notes with interest that the Distribution of Lands and Human Settlements Programme of the Lands Vice-Ministry includes a gender perspective in many activities, for instance a gender dimension has been incorporated in the Five-Year Plan to regularize and issue titles in respect of community ancestral lands. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on this matter.

Racial discrimination. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that public policy measures are being taken with respect to racial discrimination and that the political will exists to tackle racism and discrimination. It notes the measures indicated by the Government on literacy programmes, redistribution policy, and universal access to health services, which focus on disadvantaged sectors that suffer from structural racial discrimination. The Government indicates that there is a new approach to the framing of public policies which is based on the redistribution criteria set forth in the “Vivir Bien” National Development Plan, in sectoral plans and inter-institutional initiatives that are implemented in combination with legislation that targets the fundamental causes of racial discrimination. The Government indicates that the lands and territory issue is of great importance to the elimination of the servitude, exploitation and slavery suffered by the peoples that are subject to such racism. The report refers to the “Plan Guaraní”, which seeks to restore the fundamental rights of the Guaraní people, including the restitution in part of their lands of origin. The Ministry of Labour is at present giving impetus to the promulgation of legal standards on workers’ rights in the sugar cane and chest nut sectors. Furthermore, the Ministry of the Presidency’s group on the Coordination and Promotion of Indigenous Policy and Rights has given priority to tackling racial discrimination in its plan of operations for 2008. The Government also refers to the application of the requirement to consult indigenous peoples on their participation in the profits of extraction operations, their participation in environmental control, and other forms of wealth redistribution to combat structural exclusion and discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information in this regard.

Access to education and vocational training. The Committee notes with interest the measures taken to give priority to education for rural and indigenous peoples and women. It notes the creation of three inter-cultural community indigenous universities (Unibol), one for the Aymará people, another for the Quechua and the other for the Guaraní. The Committee addresses this point in greater detail in its comments under Convention No. 169. The Government further indicates that education being the basis for equitable access to jobs, the intake in secondary schools for both sexes was higher in 2006 than in 2005. However, while male enrolment was 57.42 per cent, female enrolment was 42.58 per cent. Since the lowest school attendance rates are registered in rural areas, particularly among women, the national education policy makes such areas a priority and has established two implementation plans, one on rural boarding accommodation and the other on rural transport, to facilitate access to school for girls and young persons and to keep them in education.

The “Vivir Bien” National Development Plan includes education as a priority, taking into account that the first problem to be tackled is lack of equality in education, in terms of access, quality and avoidance of drop-out. In this framework, the Ministry of Education formulated its Multiannual Operation Plan 2004–08 (POMA) as part of the Strategic Plan for the education sector. With regard to technical training geared to the production sector, coverage is to be 171,074 men and 156,873 women. The Government refers to other measures, and by way of conclusion states that “the aim is to lay new foundations for education in Bolivia in the interests of education that is decolonized, equitable, inter-cultural and bilingual. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue this path and requests it to continue to provide information on these matters.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1998)

While noting the Government’s report, the Committee notes with regret that the report does not contain any information in reply to the comments which the Committee has been making to the Government since 2000.

The Committee recalls that the Convention aims to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment for men and women workers with family responsibilities, and also between the aforementioned workers and all other workers. In this regard, Article 3 of the Convention states that each Member shall make it an aim of national policy to enable persons with family responsibilities who are engaged or wish to engage in employment to exercise their right to do so without being subject to discrimination and, to the extent possible, without conflict between their employment and family responsibilities. The Committee also recalls that the Convention contemplates the adoption of measures, compatible with national conditions and possibilities, with a view to creating effective equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women workers with family responsibilities.

The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information in its next report on the application of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to report in detail in 2010.]

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Confederation of Independent Trade Unions of Bosnia and Herzegovina (SSS BiH) dated 20 August 2009. The communication refers to the conclusions of the Governing Body, from November 1999, regarding workers who had been dismissed from two undertakings on the grounds of national extraction or religious belief (the representation made pursuant to article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Union of Autonomous Trade Unions of Bosnia and Herzegovina (USIBH) and the Union of Metalworkers (SM)), stating that the situation has not been resolved. The communication also refers to discriminatory job advertisements. The Committee asks the Government to reply to the issues set out in the communication of the ITUC and the SSS BiH regarding the progress of implementation of the recommendations of the Governing Body and with respect to the existence of discriminatory job advertisements, and to indicate the steps being taken to address these matters.

Botswana

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1997)

Article 1 of the Convention. Legal protection from discrimination. Recalling its previous comments regarding the legal protection from discrimination available under the Constitution, the Committee notes with satisfaction that its section 15 was amended in 2004 to include the prohibited ground of sex. The Committee requests the Government to take steps so that protection from discrimination based on social origin is also ensured, and to provide information on any cases regarding discrimination in employment and occupation decided by the courts. Recalling its previous comments regarding section 15(4)(e) of the Constitution which allows differential treatment by law where this is “reasonably justifiable in a democratic society”, please indicate how this provision has been and is being applied in practice.

The Employment Act. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Employment Act is being amended. Recalling its previous comments noting that the Employment Act currently only prohibits discrimination in respect of termination of employment contracts, the Committee hopes that the Government will take this opportunity to include more comprehensive provisions to prohibit direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation, including with regard to recruitment and selection, all terms and conditions of employment, and training. Please indicate any further developments in this regard.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes with interest that the Public Service Act was amended in 2000 to include new provisions on sexual harassment. Section 32(1) declares sexual harassment to constitute misconduct. A definition of sexual harassment is set out in section 32(2). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases that have been brought under these provisions. Noting the Government's indication that most institutions in the private sector have not yet put in place policies on sexual harassment, the Committee recommends that the Government includes similar provisions in the Employment Act.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes from the Government's report that it has adopted a gender mainstreaming strategy to ensure that a gender perspective is included in all policies and programmes; gender audits have been carried in a number of ministries, including the Ministry of Labour and Home Affairs. The Department of Women's Affairs has continued its awareness-raising activities on gender equality issues. A review of all laws that discriminate against women is still ongoing. While there is no explicit policy on affirmative action, the Government has nominated women to decision-making positions and allocated special funds to promote women's participation in economic and income generating activities. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide more detailed information on the specific measures taken or envisaged to promote and ensure equality of opportunity of men and women in employment and occupation, including access to vocational training and access to credit. Please also provide statistical information available on women's participation in the labour market (public and private sectors), including self-employment, as well as their share in the informal economy. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures it takes to eliminate customary practices that are detrimental to women's equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, such as the practice of legal guardianship by men over unmarried women.

The situation of indigenous peoples. The Committee recalls that discrimination as set out in Article 1 of the Convention covers discrimination against indigenous peoples and that the national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment to be adopted and implemented in accordance with Article 2 should include measures to eliminate discrimination against these peoples. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including measures to promote and facilitate the ability of indigenous peoples to pursue their traditional occupations.

Brazil

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1965)

Article 1 of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee recalls that in its previous observation it referred to a communication from the Union of Teachers of Itajaí and Region concerning the dismissal of three university teachers which was based, according to the communication, on their political opinions. The Committee noted that, according to the Government's report, the investigation into the case was closed on 27 March 2007 because the allegations could not be proved; it was subsequently forwarded to the Higher Council of the Labour Prosecution Office so that it could be recorded as having been set aside. The Committee also noted that no specific action had been taken to combat discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of political opinion. The Committee notes that the Government repeats this information while indicating at the same time that discrimination on the basis of political opinion would be covered by the general initiatives taken with a view to eradicating all forms of discrimination. The Government adds that complaints have not been recorded by the respective administrative and judicial bodies of cases of discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on any case of discrimination in employment or occupation on the basis of political opinion which is brought before the judicial or administrative authorities and the outcome thereof. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that workers do not suffer discrimination on the basis of political opinion.

Discrimination on the basis of gender, race or colour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the population of African descent continues to be at a disadvantage in education and the labour market. It further notes that, according to the Government's report, stereotypes relating to gender and race continue to give rise to the segregation of workers of African descent, indigenous workers and women workers into lower quality jobs. With regard to women, the Committee notes in particular that they are over-represented in domestic work, production for family consumption and unpaid work. The Government's report also indicates that the unemployment rates of women, workers of African descent and indigenous workers are higher than average, and that the situation of women of African descent and indigenous women is even more precarious.

The Committee notes the many initiatives undertaken by the Government with a view to eradicating discrimination and promoting equal opportunities for the most underprivileged sectors of society. It notes in particular the educational measures and awareness-raising activities envisaged under the II National Plan for Policies for Women with a view to overcoming gender and race prejudice, as well as the awareness-raising activities carried out by the regional commissions for equality of opportunities on the basis of gender, race and ethnic origin, and for persons with disabilities, and to combat discrimination in enterprises, workers' and employers' organizations, universities and governmental and non-governmental organizations. It further notes the training programme for men and women domestic workers (National Domestic Work Programme/PLANSEQ) and the plans to review the national legislation with a view to extending all labour rights to this category of workers. The Committee requests the Government to continue making efforts to ensure full equality of opportunity and treatment for women, persons of African descent and indigenous persons, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures adopted in this respect and their impact, and it refers to the more detailed comments contained in its direct request. The Committee also asks the Government to provide statistical data in its next report on the distribution of men and women in the various occupations, jobs and economic sectors, disaggregated in so far as possible by race and colour.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bulgaria

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Implementation of the anti-discrimination legislation. The Committee notes with interest that the Commission on the Protection against Discrimination has been able to increase its level of activities, both in the area of prevention of discrimination as well as in the adjudication of cases. In 2006, some 389 complaints were filed with the Commission compared to 89 in 2005. In respect of 220 complaints of discrimination, proceedings were initiated and in 71 cases the Commission found violations of the equal treatment principle. The Committee notes that a number of cases related to employment matters, although the report gives no precise case information either as to the subject matter or the ground of discrimination in respect of each case. The Committee welcomes the efforts of the Commission to extend its activities to the different regions of the country which has led to increased awareness of the legislation and, as a result, an increase in the number of complaints received. The Committee also notes that the Commission has collaborated with the national workers' and employers' organizations and has signed framework agreements on cooperation on the prevention of discrimination in the field of labour with the Confederation of Independent Trade Unions in Bulgaria (CITUB) and the Agency for Persons with Disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to:

- (i) continue to provide information on the activities of the Commission on the Protection against Discrimination as regards discrimination in employment and occupation, including detailed information on the number, nature and outcome of cases dealt with by the Commission and an indication of the level of compliance with its decisions;
- (ii) provide information on the Commission's efforts in the area of awareness raising and prevention of discrimination, including its collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations and other public authorities, such as the Agency for Persons with Disabilities or the labour inspectorate; and
- (iii) provide detailed information on the number, nature and outcome of court cases involving questions of discrimination in employment and occupation.

Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of national extraction or religion. Access to education, training and employment. In its previous observation, the Committee urged the Government to indicate any measures taken to assess the impact of the special measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of ethnic minority groups which are in a vulnerable social-economic situation. The Committee also asked the Government to provide information on the actual employment situation of persons of Roma and Turkish origin and the extent to which they were actually able to obtain jobs in the public and private sectors after having benefited from skills training or other assistance. The Committee further wished to receive information on the progress made in increasing the number of integrated schools, including the number of Roma children attending such schools.

With respect to these matters, the Committee notes the Government's statement that in 2006 the Employment Agency had not gathered any statistics regarding the ethnicity of persons seeking employment. Accordingly, no information on the employment situation of ethnic minority groups could be given. However, the Employment Office Directorate sent a letter to the Employment Agency on 16 May 2007 providing a form by which employment seekers could identify themselves as members of ethnic groups. The Committee also notes that the Government's report contains certain data on the level of participation of Roma in a number of programmes and projects implemented by the Employment Agency in 2006 in relation to the National Action Plan under the Decade of Roma Inclusion 2005–15. The Government indicates that this data has been established through an expert assessment made by officials of the Employment Office Directorate. For instance, an estimated half of the 82,550 persons having participated in the "From Social Assistance to Employment" Scheme were Roma, while 9,729 unemployed Roma were included in vocational orientation courses. In addition, some 2,675 Roma acquired specific vocational qualifications through training. The report also states that the job fairs were held in areas with concentrated Roma population which offered a total of 4,560 jobs and led to some 3,000 persons obtaining employment. With regard to the access of boys and girls from Roma communities to quality education, the Committee particularly notes the information provided on the ongoing desegregation projects. While duly noting the information provided, the Committee requests the Government to:

- (i) continue to provide information, including statistical data, on the participation of the Roma or persons of Turkish origin in active labour market measures, and information on the extent to which persons from these groups have actually found employment after having benefited from such measures;
- (ii) continue and intensify its efforts to assess and to monitor the employment situation of members of ethnic minority groups, particularly the Roma and persons of Turkish origin, and to provide statistical information on the overall employment situation of these groups as soon as it is available; and

- (iii) continue to provide information on the progress made in ensuring equal access of women and men from ethnic minority communities, in particular the Roma, to quality education at all levels.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that both article 57 of the Constitution and section 73 of the Labour Code provide for equal remuneration for equal work, which falls short of fully reflecting the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value as set out in Article 1 of the Convention. In its report, the Government states that there is no obstacle to reflecting the principle of the Convention in the national legislation. Noting the Government's willingness to bring article 57 of the Constitution and section 73 of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures as soon as possible and to indicate in its next report the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which reads as follows:

The Committee notes the comments on the application of the Convention made by the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU) dated 30 August 2008, to which the Government has not as yet replied. It requests the Government to provide its comments regarding the issues raised by COSYBU.

Discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction. In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to address discrimination in employment between different ethnic groups. In reply, the Government once again refers to the 2005 Constitution, and to the Arusha Agreement. As previously noted by the Committee, article 122 of the Constitution prohibits discrimination based, inter alia, on an individual's origin, race, ethnicity, sex, colour and language. The Committee also notes that, pursuant to article 129(1) of the Constitution, 60 per cent and 40 per cent of the seats in Parliament are reserved for Hutus and Tutsis, respectively. Similar provisions also exist for government positions. In its report, the Government also asserts that ethnic discrimination in employment and occupation no longer exists. As the elimination of discrimination and the promotion of equality is a continual process, and cannot be achieved solely through legislation, the Committee finds it difficult to accept statements to the effect that discrimination is inexistent in a given country. It stresses the need for the Government to take continuing action with a view to promoting and ensuring non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation. The Committee therefore reiterates its request for information on any specific measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment, irrespective of ethnic origin, in respect of employment in the private and public sectors, including awareness-raising activities and measures to promote respect and tolerance between the different groups. It also reiterates its request for information on the activities of the newly established public service recruitment commission with a view to promoting equal access to public service employment of different ethnic groups.

The Committee notes that, despite the provisions of article 7 of Protocol I to the Arusha Agreement which provides for the promotion of disadvantaged groups, notably the Batwa, the Working Group of Expats on Indigenous Populations/Communities of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (Report of the Research and Information Visit to the Republic of Burundi, March–April 2005, page 31) reports that this particular group continues to suffer from strong negative stereotypes and racial harassment by other segments of the population. While taking note of the Government's very general statement that measures have been taken in the field of education, the Committee observes that, according to the African Commission's Working Group, the Batwa's access to education is well below the national average. The illiteracy rate among the Batwa is estimated to be over 78 per cent. The Committee urges the Government to take all measures necessary to ensure equal access of the Batwa to education, vocational training and employment, including through reviewing and strengthening relevant national laws and policies and ensuring their full implementation. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to combat stereotypes and prejudice against this group. The Government is requested to provide detailed information with regard to these matters in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Cameroon

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1970)

Article 2, paragraph 2(a), of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 61(2) of the Labour Code did not give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration as laid down in the Convention in that equal remuneration is restricted to “equal conditions of work and equal professional ability”. It asked the Government to take the necessary steps to include in the legislation the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. It notes that in its report, the Government affirms that “in accordance with the provisions of section 61(2) of the Labour Code, the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value is established”. The Committee refers to its general observation of 2006 and wishes to draw the Government’s attention, once again, to the notion of “work of equal value” which goes further than the notions of “equal conditions of work” and “equal professional ability”. When men and women perform different jobs and when women are confined to certain occupations, in particular because of historical perceptions towards the role of women in society along with stereotypical assumptions regarding their professional abilities, it is essential to compare the value of the work done. This is because although the work may involve different types of qualifications, skills, responsibilities or working conditions it is nevertheless work of equal value overall. In order to determine whether different jobs are of equal value, it is necessary to examine the tasks involved on the basis of criteria that are fully objective and non-discriminatory, taking particular care to ensure that “skills traditionally considered to be female” (such as those required in the caring professions) are not undervalued in comparison with “skills traditionally regarded as male” (such as those relating to physical strength). Accordingly, in order to prevent and address effectively discrimination in remuneration, the Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 61(2) of the Labour Code so as to fully reflect the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention, and to provide information on any measures taken to this end.

Article 2. Scope of the principle laid down in the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps, in cooperation with the social partners, to ensure that the provisions of article 70 of the CAMRAIL collective agreement, concerning the grant of benefits in the form of transport facilities only to the wife and children of an employee, conform with the principle of equality laid down in the Convention. In a communication of 5 December 2007, the Government states, referring to the application of the CAMRAIL agreement, that the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC) asserts that equal treatment exists in practice. Consequently, the Government says, that is enough. The Committee also notes that the Government indicates in its 2009 report that the CAMRAIL collective agreement has not been renegotiated, nor is it in the process of renegotiation. While noting the statement that equality is observed in practice, the Committee is of the view that maintaining discriminatory provisions in the text of the CAMRAIL collective agreement may have the effect of preventing men and women workers from knowing their rights and seeking to assert them. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take the necessary steps, in cooperation with the social partners, to ensure that the provisions of the CAMRAIL agreement observe the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value, and to encourage the social partners to revise any discriminatory provisions on remuneration, including allowances and benefits, in collective agreements when they are renegotiated.

Articles 2 (paragraph 2(c)), and 4. Work of equal value. Collective agreements. Cooperation with employers’ and workers’ organizations. In its report, the Government indicates that some collective agreements have been negotiated or revised recently, and affirms that they provide for measures to give effect to Article 2 of the Convention. The Government also states that measures under way to convince the social partners of the need to bring the provisions of collective agreements into line with those of the Convention, are to be pursued. The Committee hopes that the recently concluded collective agreements incorporate the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value and that those in the process of negotiation will likewise reflect the principle, and asks the Government to provide a copy of the clauses of these agreements that pertain to wages, allowances and bonuses.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1988)

Article 1, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination covered by the legislation. Recalling its comments over many years regarding the need to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention by including all grounds of discrimination listed in Article 1(1)(a), the Committee notes that the Government reiterates that it will consider this issue in the context of a future revision of the Labour Code, though no specific information in this regard is provided. Recalling that despite its repeated requests, the Government has not yet taken any measures to initiate such a revision process, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to revise the legislation to include provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on all the grounds listed in the Convention (race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin) in respect of all stages of the employment process, including recruitment, in accordance with the obligations it has undertaken by ratifying the Convention. The Government is requested to provide detailed information on the progress made in this regard.

Discrimination based on sex. Legislation. The Committee notes that the Government’s report does not contain information in reply to its previous comments which stressed the importance of repealing any provisions of the legislation that discriminate against women, in order to ensure that full effect is given to the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation. It recalls in particular that in accordance with section 223 of the Civil Code, husbands can prevent their wives from engaging in certain occupations. The Committee also notes that in its 2009 concluding observations, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women noted an absence of progress regarding the abrogation of discriminatory provisions, particularly in the Penal Code, the Civil Status Registration Ordinance and the Civil Code. (CEDAW/C/CMR/CO/3, 10 February 2009, paragraph 14). The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take, without further delay, concrete measures to initiate a process of legislative reform to repeal all provisions which have the effect of nullifying or impairing women's equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, and requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end.

Article 2. National policy on equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee notes that the Government affirms that the national policy on employment and vocational training currently under preparation is dedicated to the principle of equal treatment and access to employment and non-discrimination. The Committee recalls nevertheless that in its previous comments it underlined that the recognition of the principle of equality alone is not sufficient to constitute a national policy within the meaning of Article 2 of the Convention, and that it is necessary to adopt and implement concrete and proactive measures such as training programmes and public awareness raising, to promote equality of opportunity and treatment effectively. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its 2009 concluding observations expressed concern over the persisting patriarchal attitudes and deep-rooted stereotypes concerning the roles and responsibilities of women, which are a source of discrimination against them (CEDAW/C/CMR/CO/3, 10 February 2009, paragraph 24). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to elaborate and implement a national policy which includes action programmes and concrete measures to promote equality of opportunity and treatment and to address discriminatory practices in employment and occupation effectively. The Government is requested to provide information on the progress made with regard to the elaboration and implementation of such national policy and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Central African Republic

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1964)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Application in law of the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the fact that section 9 of the draft Labour Code which concerns equal remuneration was not conform with the Convention because it required equal wages for equal working conditions. Noting the enactment on 29 January 2009 of Act No. 09.004 issuing the Labour Code, the Committee observes that section 10, relating to equal remuneration reproduces the terms of the abovementioned draft and provides for "equal wages for equal working conditions". The Committee further observes that according to section 222 of the Labour Code, "for equal conditions of work, skills and output, wages shall be the same for all workers, regardless of their origin, sex and age ...". The Committee points out that by limiting equal wages to jobs involving equal working conditions, skills and output, rather than to "work of equal value", sections 10 and 222 of the new Labour Code lay down a narrower principle than the one enshrined in the Convention. It reminds the Government that work done by a man and by a woman may involve different working conditions or require entirely different skills and yet still be of equal value, and that accordingly the Convention requires that it must be remunerated at the same level. The Committee would also draw the Government's attention to the fact that experience shows that "insistence on equal conditions as regards work, skill and output can be taken as a pretext for paying women lower wages than men" (General Survey on equal remuneration, 1986, paragraph 54). Consequently, the focus should be on the nature of the work performed so that the tasks involved can be compared and evaluated on the basis of objective criteria, an objective evaluation being essential to effective elimination of the undervaluation of jobs traditionally done by women. The Committee notes with regret that the Government failed to take the opportunity afforded by the adoption of a new Labour Code to give full effect in law to the principles set forth in the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary steps to amend sections 10 and 222 of Act No. 09.004 issuing the Labour Code in the near future so as to provide expressly for equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value. The Government is asked to provide information on measures taken to this end.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

Article 1, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination. In its previous comments the Committee asked the Government to amend the national legislation in order to ensure that it at least covers discrimination on the basis of all the grounds listed in the Convention, including a prohibition on any discrimination based on race or colour. While noting the Government's statement that it faces difficulties which prevent it from revising the Constitution accordingly, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that these grounds could be included in the provisions of the Labour Code concerning discrimination (sections 6 and 7), which in their current wording cover sex, age, nationality, membership or non-membership of a trade union, trade union activity, and the origin and opinions (particularly religious and political) of the worker, or that regulations implementing the Labour Code could be adopted to also cover race and colour before any revision of the Constitution is undertaken. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to adopt legislation, or revise existing legislation or expand the provisions of the Labour Code so that at least all the grounds on which discrimination is based, which are prohibited under the terms of Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, are expressly covered by the national legislation, and to supply information on the measures adopted in this respect.

Discrimination on the basis of sex. For a number of years the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the incompatibility of section 9 of Ordinance No. 006/PR/84 of April 1984 issuing regulations on trading with the provisions of the Convention and has asked the Government to take the necessary steps to repeal this provision. In view of the lack of any reply from the Government on this point, the Committee requests the Government to state whether the 1984 Ordinance is still in force and, consequently, to clarify whether a husband still has the right to object to the commercial activities of his spouse. If so, it urges the Government once again to repeal section of the Ordinance because of their discriminatory nature with regard to women.

Sexual harassment. In view of the lack of information in the Government's report on the measures taken or contemplated to combat sexual harassment in the workplace, the Committee is bound to repeat its request in this respect, referring once again to its general observation of 2002, in which it emphasizes that sexual harassment undermines equality at work by jeopardizing the integrity, dignity and well-being of workers and is harmful to enterprises by weakening the foundations of the employment relationship and reducing productivity.

Article 1, paragraph 1(b). Additional grounds of discrimination. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 019/PR/2007 of 15 November 2007, protecting the rights of persons living with HIV/AIDS. This Act contains provisions which define the denial of access to employment for HIV-positive persons as a discriminatory act (section 22), prohibit screening for HIV in relation to obtaining employment, promotion, training or benefits (section 36), guarantee employment to any employee who is living with HIV as long as he or she is capable of working, and guarantees the offer of acceptable replacement work (section 36), and prohibit any penalty or dismissal on the basis of the worker's HIV status (section 38). The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the implementing decrees provided for in section 64 of the Act No. 019/PR/2007 have been adopted, particularly as regards the abovementioned provisions relating to the right to work (sections 32–41) and, if so, to provide a copy of the decrees. The Government is also requested to provide information on any measure taken or contemplated to ensure the effective implementation of these legislative provisions against discrimination towards, and stigmatization of, persons living with HIV/AIDS, for example awareness-raising campaigns on equality at work intended for workers' and employers' organizations, labour inspectors, magistrates and the general public.

Also noting, according to the information contained in the report drawn up by the Ministry of Education in October 2008 on the development of education, that an Act on the protection of disabled persons has been adopted, the Committee requests the Government to send a copy of it to the Office and indicate the steps taken to ensure in practice the equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation for disabled persons.

Article 2. National policy to promote equality. Access to education and vocational training. As regards education and training, on which actual possibilities of access to employment and occupation in both the public and private sectors depend, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 016/PR/06 of 13 March 2006 issuing guidelines for the Chadian education system, which focuses on combating the exclusion from education of groups considered the most vulnerable, namely girls living in rural areas, nomadic and lake-dwelling groups, street children, physically disabled persons, refugees and displaced persons, child domestic workers, child herders and child soldiers. The objectives of this Act include ensuring equitable access to high-quality education for all Chadian children and promoting schooling for girls by removing stereotypes and other socio-economic and cultural obstacles to the full development of girls and women in terms of the education process.

The Committee also notes, according to the abovementioned report on education, that incentives aimed at making school attendance more attractive to girls are provided for in the "National plan of action for education for all" and that experimental action has been taken in four pilot areas to promote schooling for girls, such as awareness raising on a large scale with regard to gender issues, grants to communities to undertake income-generating activities, waiving school fees and no age limits on school enrolment for girls, etc.

Welcoming the efforts made and the desire shown by the Government to achieve greater equality in the area of education and training, the Committee hopes that the planned measures to promote equal access to education will be implemented in the near future and that the abovementioned experimental measures can be extended throughout the country in order to rectify the inequalities which exist in practice. It requests the Government to supply information on the results achieved, in the context of the various mechanisms established, with respect to schooling and access to vocational training for girls and women, particularly those living in rural areas. Please also provide information on any measure taken or contemplated to combat discrimination on grounds other than sex in education and vocational training, including the results achieved.

Article 3(d). Employment in the public sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide as detailed information as possible on the measures taken or contemplated to promote and guarantee equality of opportunity and treatment in the public sector, including the results achieved by these measures in terms of employment, promotion and training of women within the public service. The Government is also requested to supply all available statistical information on the numbers of men and women employed at different levels in public service and, more generally, in the public sector.

Part V of the report form. Practical application and statistics. The Committee notes that in reply to its request for statistics the Government indicates that it will soon give labour inspectors the means to gather information relating to the situation of workers on the ground. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken to equip labour inspectors with the appropriate resources and to supply the statistical information thus obtained on employment in the private and public sectors, disaggregated by sex, and also any statistical information available on employment in the informal economy, in order to enable an evaluation of the effect given to the Convention in practice.

Colombia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1963)

Article 1 of the Convention. Remuneration. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not supply any information on the Committee's comments regarding the communication of 15 August 2007 from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) concerning the narrow definition of remuneration in the legislation. The Committee asks the Government once again to take the necessary steps to ensure that account is taken not only of the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary but also of "any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker's employment" to ensure equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to include information in this respect in its next report.

Work of equal value. For a number of years the Committee has been pointing out that certain legislative provisions should be amended, specifically section 5 of Act No. 823 of 10 July 2003 concerning equal opportunities for women, and also section 143 of the Substantive Labour Code, which establish a narrower principle than the one set forth in the Convention since they refer to equal wages for "equal work" and not for "work of equal value". The Committee urges the Government to amend the abovementioned provisions to bring them into line with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on steps taken in this regard.

Article 2. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 1257 of 4 December 2008 establishing standards regarding awareness raising, prevention and penalties relating to violence and discrimination against women. The Committee also notes the reform of the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, the adoption of Act No. 294 of 1996 and of other provisions. In particular, section 12 establishes that the Ministry of Social Protection will promote the social and economic recognition of the work of women and will implement mechanisms for enforcing the right to equal remuneration. The Committee hopes that the planned mechanisms will include effective measures to ensure equal remuneration for work of equal value and not only for equal work, in order to effectively address pay discrimination against women. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on these mechanisms and their implementation.

Articles 3 and 4. The Committee again asks the Government to supply information in its next report on the way in which it collaborates with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned in order to apply the provisions of the Convention, and in particular on any training activities relating to the principle of the Convention and the adoption of measures for promoting objective job evaluation on the basis of the tasks involved.

Research and statistical information. The Committee notes the information supplied in the Government's report on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), concerning the research undertaken to compare the income of men and women in the private sector with a view to making progress in identifying possible reasons for the persistent wage gaps in the country. The Committee would welcome further information on the results of, and follow-up to, research on the gender wage gap. The Committee asks the Government once again to supply statistical information to the extent possible, in accordance with its 1998 general observation, namely with regard to:

- (i) the distribution of men and women in the public sector, the federal and/or state civil service, and in the private sector by earnings levels and hours of work (defined as hours actually worked or hours paid for), classified by: (1) branch of economic activity; (2) occupation or occupational group or level of education/qualification; (3) seniority; (4) age group; (5) number of hours actually worked or paid for; and, where relevant, by (6) size of enterprise and (7) geographical area; and*
- (ii) statistical data on the composition of earnings (indicating the nature of earnings, such as basic, ordinary or minimum wage or salary, premium pay for overtime and shift differentials, allowances, bonuses and gratuities, and remuneration for time not worked) and hours of work (defined as hours actually worked or paid for), classified according to the same variables as the distribution of employees (subparagraphs (1) to (7) of paragraph (i) above).*

Monitoring of application. The Committee asks the Government once again to supply information on the inspection unit's activities in relation to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government in its report, including extracts from the case law of the Constitutional Court which refer to the labour rights of women.

Discrimination on grounds of race, colour and social origin. The Committee notes that there is no reference in the Government's report to the Committee's requests concerning a communication from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) relating to discrimination in access to employment with regard to members of indigenous and Afro-Colombian peoples. The Committee also notes the concern expressed by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD/C/COL/CO/14, 28 August 2009) at the fact that, despite national policies establishing special measures, in practice Afro-Colombian and indigenous peoples continue to have great difficulty in securing respect for their rights and continue to be the victims of de facto racial discrimination and marginalization. The Committee further notes that the National Development Plan 2006–10 proposes the formulation of a comprehensive policy for indigenous peoples, including components relating to territoriality, identity, autonomy, governance and development plans. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to take effective measures towards the elimination of discrimination in access to employment or occupation on the basis of social origin, race, colour or physical characteristics. It also requests the Government to take steps to ensure that no investigations into the social background of workers are carried out which result in discrimination on the basis of social origin, that actions are taken to prohibit in law and in practice discriminatory vacancy announcements and to promote the employment of Afro-Colombian and indigenous peoples, and to supply information on the measures taken. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the training and employment situation of indigenous and Afro-Colombian men and women, including those living in the Pacific region.

Gender-based discrimination. The Committee notes that the National Development Plans lay down general guidelines for the definition of a policy for Colombian women focusing on job creation, access to and quality of education, prevention and elimination of gender-based violence and improvement of conditions for rural women. The Committee notes the programmes promoted by the Ministry of Social Protection, the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development, the National Training Service (SENA), the Ministry of Trade, Industry and Tourism, and especially those of the Presidential Office for Equal Rights for Women, by means of which the Government seeks to combat discrimination in employment and empower women. It also notes the Strategic Plan for the defence of women's rights under the law in Colombia, specifically the plan for the protection of women against employment discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the practical application and results of such policies, plans and programmes, and specifically on how they are helping to eliminate discrimination against women in employment and occupation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to give effect to the Equal Opportunities Act (No. 823 of 2003), specifically those aimed at establishing programmes of employment training and skills development for women which are free from stereotypes regarding "female" jobs, and on measures to ensure that rural women have access to land ownership or possession, agrarian credit, technical assistance, and agricultural training and technology. The Committee also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the situation of women and men in the labour market and on their distribution in the various economic occupations, posts and sectors.

Indigenous women. Noting that the Presidential Office for Equal Rights for Women is designing actions in favour of indigenous women with a view to tackling the various forms of discrimination which affect them and promoting equal opportunities, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on these actions and the results achieved with regard to education, vocational training, employment and occupation, including information on the pilot project referred to in the report.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 1257 of 4 December 2008 enacting legal provisions on awareness raising, prevention and penalties with respect to certain forms of violence and discrimination against women. The Committee also notes that Act No. 1257 amends the Penal Code, the Code of Penal Procedure, and Act No. 294 of 1996, and enacts other provisions. The Committee notes that sexual harassment has been defined as a criminal offence, with section 210A of the Penal Code laying down a penalty of imprisonment ranging from one to three years for anyone found guilty of committing sexual harassment. The Committee requests the Government to consider adopting specific legislation regulating sexual harassment at work, including both quid pro quo and hostile environment harassment in the definition, and which also regulates the scope of responsibility as regards employers, supervisors, work colleagues and, where possible, clients or other persons connected with the performance of work. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any campaigns conducted to prevent acts of discrimination and violence against women in the work environment and on the procedures being adopted for handling complaints of sexual harassment.

Comoros

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1978)

Article 2, paragraph 2(a), of the Convention. Principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes that according to the Government's report, in the context of the draft revision of the Labour Code, particularly section 97, the draft section on equal remuneration states that all employers must ensure equal remuneration for the same work or for work of equal value. The Committee also notes the communication from the Comoros Employers' Organization (OPACO) dated 1 September 2009, which states that the revision of section 97 of the Labour Code has not yet been carried out. It notes the Government's reply referring the OPACO to its report. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the progress of the legislative work relating to the revision of the Labour Code and hopes that the new Labour Code, giving full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, will be adopted in the near future. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the role of the social partners in the process of the revision of the Labour Code and to send a copy of the new Code once it has been adopted.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2004)

Article 2 of the Convention. National policy. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes the adoption of the National Policy on Gender Equity and Equality (PNEEG) in June 2008. According to the Government's report, the PNEEG promotes equality in employment and occupation, taking into account the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also notes that the Organization of Employers of Comoros (OPACO), in a communication received on 1 September 2009, indicates that it had not been informed of the elaboration of such a policy, and also regretted that no measures have been taken to prevent the exclusion of women from certain jobs and occupations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in reply to OPACO's comments and strongly encourages the Government to cooperate with the workers' and employers' organizations in the implementation of the PNEEG. In this regard, the Government is requested to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the PNEEG's effective implementation, as far as they relate to equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of access to education, vocational training, wage and non-wage employment and working conditions (including remuneration, promotion, and security of tenure). Please provide a copy of the PNEEG.

Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. In the absence of any information from the Government regarding this matter, the Committee recalls once again that in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention the Government is required to declare and pursue a national policy with a view to eliminating discrimination based on all the grounds listed in Article 1 of the Convention, and not only discrimination based on sex. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to declare and pursue a national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, irrespective of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Costa Rica

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1962)

Sexual harassment. The Committee refers to its previous observation and notes the Government's indication that in 2007 draft Act No. 16566 amending the Act against Sexual Harassment in Employment and Teaching received the unanimous support of the Special Permanent Commission of Women and is now pending before the Congress. The Committee also notes that since the entry into force of the Act, the Office of the Defender of Women has made efforts to follow up on and assist in the elaboration of internal labour regulations concerning sexual harassment. The Committee notes that in its report of 2008–09, the Office of the Defender of Women formulates recommendations to eradicate bad legal practices, and suggests strategies for prevention of sexual harassment and related capacity building. The Committee also notes that, according to this report, 40 per cent of the sexual harassment complaints received were dismissed. It notes that, of this 40 per cent, 25 per cent of cases failed because women complainants did not want to pursue the complaints.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Gender Equality Unit of the Ministry of Labour and Security considers that most of the women who were victims of sexual harassment desisted from filing complaints before the Office of Labour Inspection owing to the perception that the system is slow and ineffective, to the fear of being victimized, to the fear of counter complaints on the part of the authors of sexual harassment in case they could not gather sufficient evidence supporting their claim, and owing to the fact that the law currently in force has a gap as regards clear sanctions against the authors of sexual harassment.

The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the developments concerning the adoption of the draft Act mentioned above and to supply information on the following:

- (i) the measures adopted as a follow-up to the recommendations of the Office of the Defender of Women;
- (ii) the complaints brought before the Office of the Defender of Women and their results;
- (iii) the measures adopted to provide support and to effectively protect the victims of sexual harassment, including from the risk of reprisals and victimization;
- (iv) the educational and sensitization measures adopted or envisaged to prevent sexual harassment in the workplace;
- (v) any initiatives of employers' and workers' organizations to combat sexual harassment at work.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Côte d'Ivoire

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain a reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to reiterate its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes that for some years section 14(2) of Act No. 92-570 of 1992 issuing general regulations for the public service has allowed access to certain positions to be reserved for persons of one or the other sex on the basis of physical aptitude. The Committee observes that the Government has previously expressed its intention to repeal this provision, and notes with regret that, according to its report, section 14 was not revised when the general public service regulations were reviewed. It notes, however, that the Government has renewed its resolve to take into account the concern that section 14 has caused as regards observance of equality between the sexes in treatment and access to the public service. The Committee requests the Government to amend section 14 so as to ensure its conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in the context of the Social Forum to revise this provision, and to send additional information on progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Croatia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. The Committee notes from the Government's report that work is under way to draft a comprehensive anti-discrimination law, with a view to harmonizing the legislation with the relevant European directives. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, at present, section 2 of the Labour Code and section 6 of the Act on Civil Servants prohibit discrimination on the basis of a wide range of grounds, including the grounds specifically listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. These provisions also provide protection from discrimination based on family status, situation or responsibilities, in line with the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156), ratified by Croatia. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the new legislation does not restrict the currently available level of protection from discrimination in employment and occupation, in line with Conventions Nos 111 and 156. The Government is requested to provide information on the progress made in the adoption of new anti-discrimination legislation and the steps taken to ensure that it is in line with relevant ILO Conventions, as well as on the consultations held with workers' and employers' organizations in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3. Gender equality in employment and occupation. The Committee notes that the Gender Equality Ombudsperson received 174 complaints in 2007, almost twice as many as in 2004, while in 2006 the number of complaints received was 193. More than one third of the complaints related to employment discrimination against women, including sexual harassment, in both the private and public sectors. The Committee is concerned that, as observed by the Ombudsperson, a wide range of discriminatory practices exist that exclude pregnant women or women having small children from employment. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the work of the Gender Equality Ombudsperson, including information on the complaints received and the follow-up action taken in response to recommendations issued.

The Committee notes that the National Policy for the Promotion of Gender Equality 2006–10 is aimed at eliminating discrimination against women and establishing genuine gender equality, including in the labour market. The Policy outlines a number of measures to reduce the female unemployment rate, ensure women's economic empowerment and eliminate all forms of discrimination. Measures to enhance collection, processing and publication of gender-specific statistical data are envisaged as well. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the following:

- (i) the measures taken under the National Policy for the Promotion of Gender Equality to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of women, as well as the results achieved by such action, including detailed statistical information concerning women's participation in the private and public sectors, disaggregated by industry and occupational category;
- (ii) the progress made in increasing women's participation in decision-making and management positions; and

- (iii) the measures taken to promote a better sharing of family responsibilities between men and women and to ensure that men and women can make use, in practice, of family-related rights and benefits, without being subjected to discrimination based on family responsibilities.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the Roma. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the specific measures implemented under the National Programme for the Roma and the Ten-Year Plan of Action for the Inclusion of the Roma 2005–15 to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of the Roma in employment and occupation, as well as the results achieved by such action. The Committee regrets that the information provided in this regard is so general in nature that it does not allow the Committee to conclude whether adequate effect is being given to the Convention's provisions. The Committee urges the Government to provide specific and detailed information on the concrete measures taken to promote and ensure equal access of Roma men and women to employment and occupation, without discrimination based on sex, race, colour and national extraction.

The Committee recalls the importance of monitoring, on a continuing basis, the impact of the measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the Roma. In this regard, the Committee notes from the Government's report that the Croatian Employment Service does not maintain information on the ethnic origin of the unemployed. However, estimates concerning unemployment among the Roma are established on the basis of the place of residence of jobseekers and knowledge of the Roma language. The Committee also notes that Roma representatives participate in the Commission for the Monitoring of the Implementation of the National Programme for Roma. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the actual situation of men and women from the Roma community in the labour market, including the estimated levels of employment, unemployment and self-employment;
- (ii) the level of participation of Roma men and women in employment promotion measures, such as vocational training or public works programmes; and
- (iii) the work of the Commission for the Monitoring of the Implementation of the National Programme for Roma concerning the implementation of measures to promote equal access to employment and occupation.

Article 3(d). Access of minorities to employment under the control of a national authority. The Committee notes with interest that a number of positive steps have been taken with regard to the implementation of section 22 of the Constitutional Act on the Rights of National Minorities of 2002, which guarantees proportional employment of national minorities in the state administration. The Civil Service Employment Plan 2007, for the first time includes targets for the recruitment of national minorities to the civil service, and a proposal is being discussed to introduce similar targets with respect to the judiciary. A series of round-table discussions to promote the access of national minorities to public employment have been held, in cooperation with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on its efforts to promote and ensure access of members of national minorities to public employment, including information on the progress made in achieving recruitment targets concerning minorities. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the current ethnic and gender composition of the civil service.

Enforcement of anti-discrimination legislation. The Committee notes from the National Policy for the Promotion of Gender Equality that, the enforcement of the anti-discrimination legislation continues to be subject to many challenges, including lack of awareness of the legislation among workers, employers and the judiciary. The Committee notes, however, that the National Policy's Action Plan, envisages a number of measures to strengthen the enforcement of the anti-discrimination legislation, including systematic collection of statistical data on cases of gender discrimination in employment and work, as well as awareness-raising and training activities for relevant target groups. The Committee welcomes these envisaged measures and requests the Government to ensure that information is collected also in relation to cases concerning discrimination on the basis of grounds other than sex. It requests the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) progress made in collecting and analysing information on court cases on discrimination in employment and occupation on the grounds of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin; and
- (ii) measures taken to raise the awareness of the judiciary and other competent bodies to better equip them to deal with cases of discrimination.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Czech Republic

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee recalls its previous observation issued in 2007 which addressed the following issues: (1) the developments concerning the adoption of new non-discrimination legislation; (2) the situation of the Roma in employment and occupation; and (3) the outstanding issues with regard to the follow-up to the representations under article 24 of the ILO Constitution (November 1991 and June 1994) regarding Act No. 451 of 1991 (Screening Act). In its observation, the Committee asked the Government to supply full particulars to the International Labour Conference at its 97th Session and to report in detail in 2008.

Subsequently, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards discussed the application of the Convention by the Czech Republic at its 97th Session (June 2008). In its conclusions, the Conference Committee expressed concern that the Labour Code of 2006 had withdrawn the previously available protection from discrimination based on a number of additional grounds, including family responsibilities, marital or family status or membership of or activity in political parties, trade unions or employers' organizations. It urged the Government to hold consultations with the representative employers' and workers' organizations and other appropriate bodies concerning these additional grounds, as required under Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention, with a view to maintaining the previous level of protection. It also called on the Government to adopt the new non-discrimination legislation without further delay and to ensure that it was in full conformity with the Convention.

With regard to the situation of the Roma, the Conference Committee stressed that it was essential that the measures taken would lead to objectively verifiable improvements as regards the situation of the Roma in practice. In this regard, the Conference Committee urged the Government to take measures to develop improved means to assess and monitor the situation of the Roma in employment and occupation and unemployment, including through the collection and analysis of appropriate data. It also requested the Government to take further measures to promote and ensure equal access of the Roma to education, training, employment and occupation.

With regard to the Screening Act, the Conference Committee regretted that previously announced plans to repeal the Act had not been followed through and that the Government asserted before the Committee that the Act is not in contravention with the Convention. The Conference Committee strongly urged the Government to bring its legislation into line with the Convention without further delay, in accordance with its obligations, taking into account the relevant conclusions and recommendations of the Governing Body and the Committee of Experts' comments. The Conference Committee requested the Government to provide information on all these issues in its report under article 22 due in 2008.

The Committee recalls that a report had not been received in 2008 and the Committee repeated its previous comments. However, the Committee noted comments received from the Czech Moravian Confederation of Trade Unions (CM KOKS) dated 25 November 2008. In its comments, the CM KOKS states that, following the 97th Session of the Conference, it made an official request to the Prime Minister to place the application of the Convention on the agenda of the national tripartite body. In October 2008, a meeting of the national tripartite body took place. According to the union, the Government failed on this occasion to submit to the social partners the conclusions adopted by the Conference. The CM KOKS also reiterates its concerns regarding the withdrawal of specific legal protection from discrimination based on marital status, family responsibilities, political or other conviction, membership of, or activity in political parties and movements, trade unions or employers' organizations. The CM KOKS further maintains that there is a need to improve the role of the State in monitoring compliance of anti-discrimination legislation. Further, it calls for the repeal of the Screening Act.

The Committee notes with regret that since the Conference discussion in 2008 no report has been received from the Government, despite the specific request made by the Conference Committee. The Committee is concerned that its previous comments and the Conference conclusions may not yet have been discussed in an appropriate manner at the national level. The Committee urges the Government to take the measures necessary to ensure follow-up to all the points raised by the Committee in its 2007 observation and direct request, and by the Conference Committee in 2008, and to provide all the information requested without delay.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 99th Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning section 86 of the Labour Code which provides that with equal conditions of work, vocational qualifications and output, the salary is equal for all workers, irrespective of origin, sex or age. The Committee noted that this provision is not in conformity with the Convention which requires measures to promote and ensure equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In accordance with the Convention, women and men should have the right to equal remuneration not only where they have the same working conditions, vocational qualifications and output, but also where they have different vocational qualifications and when they work in different working conditions, so long as the work performed is of equal value. The Committee draws the Government's attention to its 2006 general observation which further elaborates on this matter and calls on States which have not yet done so to ensure that their legislation fully reflects the principle of the Convention.

Application of the principle to all aspects of remuneration. Further to the above, the Committee notes that section 86 provides for equality with respect to the "salary", which is one of the elements of "remuneration" as defined in section 7(h) of the Labour Code. In addition, the term "remuneration" as defined in section 7(h) includes additional payments, such as commissions, payments in kind, bonuses etc., whereas it is provided that transport allowances, family allowances, accommodation and accommodation allowances and health care are not considered part of the remuneration. Section 138 of the Labour Code specifies that the right to accommodation and accommodation allowance also applies to women workers, and according to the Government this applies irrespective of marital status. Recalling that under the Convention it must be ensured that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is applied to all aspects of remuneration, as broadly defined in Article 1(a), the Committee is concerned that the Labour Code currently provides for equality only in respect of the salary (section 86) and accommodation and accommodation allowances (section 138).

Based on the above, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into line with the Convention with a view to ensuring that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women is fully reflected in the legislation and that it applies to all the elements of remuneration, as defined in Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee previously noted that the Labour Code contains no provisions prohibiting and defining discrimination in employment and occupation, although section 1 provides that the Labour Code applies to all employers and all workers, with the exception of state public services, regardless of race, sex, civil status, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. Act No. 81/003 of 17 July 1981, which promulgates the conditions of service of career members of the state public service, also lacks anti-discrimination provisions. Recalling its previous comments concerning the need to include in legislation provisions prohibiting and defining indirect and direct discrimination in employment and occupation, including in respect of recruitment, the Committee welcomes the Government's statement that it will examine the matter and take the Committee's comments into account. The Government is requested to indicate the steps taken with a view to including such provisions in the Labour Code and Act No. 81/003 and any progress made in this regard.

Discrimination based on sex. The Committee previously noted that a reading of sections 448 and 497 of Act No. 87/010 of 1 August 1987, issuing the Family Code, appears to indicate that, in certain cases, a woman has to obtain the authorization of her husband to take up salaried employment, whereas no such obligation is imposed upon the husband. Furthermore, in relation to jobs in the public service, the Committee notes that section 8 of Act No. 81/003 of 17 July 1981, issuing the conditions of service of career members of the state public services, and section 1(7) of Legislative Ordinance No. 88-056 of 29 September 1988, respecting the activities of magistrates, provide that a married woman must have obtained the permission of her spouse to be recruited as a career member of the public service or appointed as a magistrate. The Committee considers that the above provisions constitute discrimination on grounds of sex which are contrary to the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women workers in employment and occupation, as set out in the Convention. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the Government's statement that these provisions, being contrary to the Constitution, are null and void and that the modification of these texts was under way. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken to bring the abovementioned provisions into conformity with the Convention and to provide the amended texts, as soon as possible.

Discrimination based on race or ethnic origin. In response to the Committee's comments regarding the socio-economic situation of the Batwa, a minority indigenous group, and discrimination faced by the Batwa in employment and occupation, the Government refers to article 51 of the Constitution under which the State has the obligation to ensure and promote the peaceful and harmonious coexistence of all ethnic groups of the country. In addition, article 51 requires the State to ensure the protection and promotion of vulnerable groups and minorities. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its concluding observations of 17 August 2007, expressed concern that pygmies (Bambuti, Batwa and Bacwa) are subjected to marginalization and discrimination with regard to the enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights, in particular their access to education, health and the labour market, and also that the rights of pygmies to own, exploit, control and use their lands, their resources and communal territories – which are the basis for the exercise of their traditional occupations and livelihood activities – are not guaranteed (CERD/C/COD/CO/15, 17 August 2007, paragraphs 18 and 19). The Committee urges the Government to take measures with a view to ensuring equality of opportunity and treatment of the Bambuti, Batwa and Bacwa in employment and occupation, and to indicate the steps taken in this regard. In this context, the Government is also requested to indicate the measures taken to ensure that these indigenous groups enjoy their right to engage in their traditional occupations and livelihoods without discrimination.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Djibouti

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read in relevant parts as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. ... The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation and enforcement of section 137 of the new Labour Code, including information on the measures taken or envisaged to raise awareness of these provisions among workers and employers and their representatives and public officials responsible for the enforcement of the labour legislation. In this regard, the Committee also asks the Government to provide information on whether any cases concerning section 137 have been dealt with by the responsible authorities and the manner in which they have been resolved, including any remedies provided or sanctions imposed.

Article 2(c). Collective bargaining. The Committee notes from the Government's report that salaries in the private sector are determined by way of collective agreements. Section 258 of the new Labour Code provides that collective agreements may determine the salary applicable to each occupational category. Section 259(4) provides that collective agreements cannot change the modalities of the application of the principle of "equal salary for equal work", irrespective of the origin, sex or age of the worker. The Committee notes that section 259 is not in conformity with the Convention as it refers to equal salary for equal work rather than to equal salary for work of equal value, and is also at variance with section 137 of the Labour Code. The Committee asks the Government to take the steps necessary to amend section 259(4) to bring it into alignment with the provisions of section 137 and to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to provide examples of collective agreements, as well as indications as to how the agreements implement the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Ecuador

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the adoption of the new Constitution in September 2008 following its approval by referendum. The Committee notes with interest that article 11(2) of the Constitution includes new grounds on which discrimination is prohibited, including migration and being HIV positive. It also notes that article 43 provides that the State shall guarantee that pregnant women are not discriminated against on grounds of pregnancy in the educational, social and labour fields. The Committee further notes that article 47(5) of the Constitution recognizes the right of persons with disabilities to work under conditions of equality of opportunity with a view to developing their capacities and potential, through policies for their integration into public and private entities. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to give effect to these provisions.

Article 2 of the Convention. National equality policy. The Committee notes that Executive Decree No. 1733 (Official Bulletin No. 601 of 29 May 2009) abolished the National Women's Council (CONAMU) and established the Transition Commission to determine the public institutions that will guarantee equality between women and men, and which is entrusted with responsibility to prepare draft legislative reforms for the establishment of the National Gender Equality Council. The Committee notes that, in addition to the CONAMU, changes have also been made to the Council for the Development of the Peoples and Nationalities of Ecuador (CODENPE), the Afro-Ecuadorian Development Corporation (CODAE), the Council for the Development of the Coastal Montubio People (CODEPMOC), the Council for Children and Young Persons (CNA) and the National Disability Council (CONADIS). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of this process of transition and on the institutions established in accordance with articles 156 and 157 of the new Constitution which are entrusted with responsibilities related to guaranteeing equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation.

National policy on gender equality. The Committee notes the concern expressed by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women in its concluding observations of November 2008 about the high rates of women's underemployment and unemployment, especially in rural areas, and cases of gender discrimination in the workplace, including dismissals relating to maternity, and discriminatory labour practices against women, especially indigenous and migrant women and those of African descent (CEDAW/D/ECU/CO/7, 7 November 2008, paragraphs 34–36). The Committee once again requests information on the results achieved in the prevention and eradication of work by women under conditions of exploitation which, as noted by the Committee in its previous comments, was one of the objectives of the Equal Opportunities Plan 2005–09 (PIO). The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the policies and programmes intended to ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for women, especially indigenous women, migrant women and women of African descent, and their impact.

Promoting the access of women to public sector employment. With reference to its previous observation, in which it noted with interest the conclusion of a Framework Inter-institutional Cooperation Agreement with a view to ensuring that effect is given to the principles of equality and equity between men and women in the processes of institutional modernization and the re-evaluation of work in public institutions in Ecuador, the Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, in the context of the above Agreement, gender was included in the Integrated Human Resources Information System (SIIRH) developed by the National Technical Secretariat for the Development of Human Resources and Remuneration in the Public Sector (SENRES) and the study "Public employment in Ecuador: A gender view" was published. It notes that the Transition Committee has also worked to introduce gender as a cross-cutting issue in the law and standards issued by the SENRES with the objective of promoting the access of women to public employment. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the introduction of gender as a cross-cutting issue in the standards issued by the SENRES with the objective of women gaining access to public employment and the impact of this measure. Noting that the Framework Inter-institutional Cooperation Agreement expires in December 2009, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures envisaged to continue ensuring the application of the principle of the Convention in the public sector. The Committee also refers to its comments on the application of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100).

Legislation. The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government, the draft amendment of the Cooperatives Act is before the National Assembly. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee urges the Government to take this opportunity to repeal section 17(b) of the Regulations of the Cooperatives Act, under which married women require the authorization of their husbands to be members of agricultural housing and family garden cooperatives. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect in its next report.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Gender and Youth Unit of the Ministry of Labour is preparing a compendium on sexual harassment in the fields of education, labour, politics and domestic work which includes basic definitions, practical cases, national and international legislation and the contact details of support bodies and organizations. The Committee also notes the draft constitutional proposal of February 2008 to discourage situations of harassment, which involves the termination of officials who commit repeated offences of sexual and psychological harassment and abuse of authority. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact that this compendium has had in terms of preventing sexual harassment in the working environment and to provide information on other measures that are being adopted to raise awareness of the harmful effects of harassment at the workplace. The Committee invites the Government once again to take appropriate legislative measures to prohibit sexual harassment in employment and occupation which include both quid pro quo and hostile work environment harassment.

Afro-Ecuadorian peoples. The Committee notes that the National Development Plan 2007–10 contains a component with the objective of combating historical disparities which hinder the human development of Afro-Ecuadorian persons. It notes that according to the statistics contained in the Plan, the racial prejudice index against Afro-Ecuadorian persons is 75.9 per cent. It also notes that, according to the living conditions survey of 2006, while a white person can obtain average monthly income from employment of US$316.60, an Afro-Ecuadorian person only obtains US$210.80. With regard to the urban unemployment rate, the Committee notes that it is 11 per cent for Afro-Ecuadorian persons, compared with a national average of 7.9 per cent, and 17.5 per cent for Afro-Ecuadorian women. It further notes that 92.8 per cent of Afro-Ecuadorian persons do not reach university level. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results and impact of the various types of action envisaged in the plan referred to above, including the application of affirmative action measures, the development of the “Work without discrimination” programme and the action taken to promote and increase the access of young Afro-Ecuadorian persons to university. The Committee also requests information on the measures promoted, as envisaged in the Plan, to monitor and punish any act of racial discrimination against Afro-Ecuadorian persons on the labour market.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ethiopia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee regrets that for the second consecutive time the Government’s report does not adequately respond to the issues raised in the Committee’s comments. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide full information on all matters raised in the comments below.

Legislation. The Committee recalls that section 14(1)(f) of Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 provides that it shall be unlawful for an employer to discriminate between workers on the basis of nationality, sex, religion, political outlook or any other conditions. The Committee requested the Government to clarify whether section 14(1)(f) protects workers from discrimination in the selection and recruitment process and whether the employment service is bound by the principle of non-discrimination. In its report, the Government states that article 41 of the Constitution provides that every Ethiopian has the right to engage freely in economic activities and to pursue a livelihood of his or her choice. According to the Government this provision requires all public bodies, including the employment service, as well as employers to abstain from discrimination. The Committee nevertheless considers it important that the non-discrimination provisions contained in the Labour Proclamation are amended with a view to explicitly providing that workers and candidates for employment, including non-citizens, are protected from discrimination and to include all the prohibited grounds listed in Article 1, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention, including social origin and national extraction. In the meantime, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on any cases concerning discrimination in employment and occupation identified and addressed by the competent authorities, including the labour inspectors and the courts.

Recalling that the non-discrimination clause of the Federal Civil Service Proclamation No. 262/2002 does not include the grounds of social origin and national extraction (section 13(1)), the Government previously indicated that the question of amending section 13(1) to include these grounds had been placed on the agenda of the task force responsible for amending the Proclamation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in the public sector, irrespective of sex and ethnicity. The Committee recalls that section 13(3) of the Federal Civil Service Proclamation No. 262/2002 authorizes preferential recruitment of women and members of ethnic groups underrepresented in the civil service. However, the Committee regrets that no information has been provided in response to the Committee’s comments regarding the promotion of gender equality and ethnic diversity in the public sector. Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to:

- (i) provide information on the measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in the civil service, including in respect to recruitment, training and promotion;
- (ii) provide information on any measures taken to promote access to the civil service of all ethnic groups;

- (iii) provide statistical information on civil service employment by type of service and grade, disaggregated by sex, and to provide information on the ethnic composition of the civil service; and
- (iv) provide an indication as to how the Convention is applied with respect to state-owned enterprises.

Education and training. The Committee notes from the Government's report that in 2006–07 the gross enrolment rate of girls increased to 85 per cent in secondary education, 51 per cent in technical and vocational education and training and to 25 per cent in higher education. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made in ensuring equal access of men and women to education and training at all levels. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure equal access of women to employment and income-generating activities.

Indigenous communities. The Committee notes from the 2003 report of the African Commission's Working Group of Experts on Indigenous Populations/Communities that a number of pastoralist communities live in Ethiopia who depended on their ancestral lands to engage in their traditional occupations and livelihood activities. The report indicates that the adoption of a new strategy on pastoral development by the federal Government constituted a positive step in addressing the problems faced by pastoralist communities, particularly evictions from their land. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the strategy on pastoral development and information on its implementation.

Follow-up to the representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the National Confederation of Eritrean Workers concerning Conventions Nos 111 and 158 (GB.282/14/5, November 2001). The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no new information concerning this matter. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any further decisions reached by the Ethiopia–Eritrea Claims Commission and on measures taken, in line with such decisions, to indemnify as fully as possible the workers displaced following the outbreak of the 1998 border conflict, and to grant appropriate relief in accordance with Conventions Nos 111 and 158.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Georgia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee recalls that the Labour Code of 2006 contains no provision regarding equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and that the Committee therefore pointed to the need to introduce legislation giving effect to this principle, as set out in the Convention. In its reply to the Committee's comments, the Government states that the legislation guarantees gender equality and that it protects women from any kind of discrimination. The Government refers to article 14 of the Constitution and to section 2(3) of the Labour Code, which provide that "Any type of discrimination due to race, colour, ethnic and social category, nationality, origin, property and position, residence, age, gender, sexual orientation, limited capability, membership of religious or any other union, family conditions, political or other opinions are prohibited in employment relations".

The Committee notes that while section 2(3) of the Labour Code is important in the context of the Convention, it falls short of giving legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that the concept of "work of equal value" is the cornerstone of the Convention and lies at the heart of the fundamental right of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and the promotion of equality. The importance of the concept of work of equal value lies in its requirements that the content of the work performed is the focus when comparing remuneration received by men and women, and that the scope of comparison is not restricted to situations where men and women perform the same, identical or similar jobs, but extends to jobs that are of an entirely different nature, which are nevertheless of equal value. Furthermore, the application of the Convention's principle is not limited to comparisons between men and women in the same establishment or enterprise, but the reach of comparison should be as wide as allowed by the level at which wage policies, systems and structures are coordinated. The Committee considers that legislation that is more restrictive in its scope than is required to give effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is not in conformity with the Convention. Finally, the Committee notes that the absence of court cases regarding equal remuneration, as reported by the Government, may well indicate the lack of an appropriate legal basis for bringing such cases. Noting that the Action Plan on Gender Equality for 2007–09 provides for the creation of a legal framework for gender equality, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen the legislation by giving full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, with a view to ensuring full and effective implementation of the Convention. Please provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination. In its previous observation the Committee asked the Government whether the Labour Code's prohibition of discrimination "in employment relations" (section 2(3)) covers discrimination at the stage of recruitment and selection and whether it covers direct and indirect discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Georgian legislation protects the population from any kind of discrimination, including "discrimination in employment and occupation processes", referring to article 14 of the Constitution, section 2(3) of the Labour Code, and non-discrimination clauses contained in a number of other laws. The Government further states that indirect discrimination is prohibited by the Georgian legislation, inter alia, referring to section 142 of the Penal Code and section 2(4) of the Labour Code which addresses the issue of harassment. The Government has not explicitly confirmed whether section 2(3) of the Labour Code is interpreted as prohibiting indirect discrimination, although it generally states that in the absence of a legal definition of indirect discrimination, it is for the courts to deal with this matter on a case-by-case basis. However, the Government has no information on any discrimination cases lodged before the court under the Labour Code. Taking into account the Government's statements that the legislation is meant to cover all forms of discrimination in employment and occupation, including discrimination in respect of recruitment and selection, as well as indirect discrimination, the Committee strongly recommends that the existing non-discrimination provisions of the Labour Code be amended: (i) to provide for a clear definition of direct and indirect discrimination; and (ii) to clarify that the prohibition of discrimination also applies to recruitment and selection, in accordance with the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to sensitize the judiciary, labour inspectors and the public regarding the prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation. Please also provide copies of relevant court decisions.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ghana

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1968)

Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee had asked the Government to provide information on the progress made with a view to amending section 68 of the Labour Act 2003, which provides only for equal pay for equal work, so as to ensure full conformity with the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value set out in the Convention. Section 10(b) of the Labour Act is expressed in the same terms. The Committee notes from the Government's report that due to a change of government, the Committee's comments in this respect are still being examined by the new Minister responsible for Labour. With reference to its previous comments and recalling its 2006 general observation on the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures in the near future with a view to amending sections 10(b) and 68 of the Labour Act 2003 in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention.

Remuneration in the public sector. The Committee notes that the job evaluation exercise undertaken to determine the value of all public sector jobs, one of the objectives of which is to ensure that jobs within the same job value range are paid within the same pay range, was completed in April 2009. As a result, a single spine pay structure was adopted. The Committee also notes that the ultimate goal for the National Job Analysis and Evaluation Exercise, as set out in the briefing notes on the public sector pay policy attached to the Government's report, "was to enable government to reward its employees in accordance with the principle of "equal pay for equal worth" consistent with article 24(1) of the 1992 Constitution of Ghana and section 10(b) of the Labour Act". Both the Constitution and the Labour Act refer however to "equal pay for equal work". The evaluation has been made on the basis of four main job factors (knowledge and skill, responsibility, working conditions and effort) which were subdivided into 13 sub-factors and it has used the point factor method. The Committee notes that during the consultative workshop held in May 2009 on the single spine pay policy, the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs and the Ghana Trade Union Congress agreed that the policy should be implemented, as of 1 January 2010, while efforts are being made to address concerns and challenges that may arise from its implementation. It also notes that the unions and associations were to submit outstanding issues or concerns to the Fair Wages and Salaries Commission. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value will be duly taken into account and recognized as an explicit objective in the implementation of the public sector pay policy. It also asks the Government to provide information on the implementation process of this policy, including on the issues dealt with by the Fair Wages and Salaries Commission and the steps taken by this Commission to ensure full application of the principle of the Convention in the public service. The Government is requested to provide a copy of the single spine pay policy and of the single spine pay structure adopted.

Discriminatory Minimum Wage Order. The Committee previously raised concerns regarding the discriminatory nature of the Minimum Wage Order SRO 11 (2002), which provides different wages for female and male agricultural workers. The Committee noted previously that the Grenada Employers' Federation and the Grenada Trade Union Council had agreed with the Committee's comments and that the Department of Labour had proposed an amendment to provide for the same wage rate for male and female agricultural workers. The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to the Committee's previous observation on this matter and, therefore, it must urge the Government to take steps, without further delay, to ensure that the Minimum Wage Order no longer provides different wages for male and female workers. The Committee also asks the Government to provide a copy of the revisions once they are adopted. Please also provide copies of any other minimum wage orders currently in force for the various trades, industries and occupations, as well as information on the criteria used for fixing the applicable minimum wages.

Guatemala

Wage gap. The Committee notes that, according to the statistics for 2007 supplied by the Government, the average monthly wage for women is approximately 94 per cent of the average wage for men (wage gap: 6 per cent). However, the wage gap varies according to the age group and economic activity concerned. The Committee notes in particular that the average monthly wage for women represents 88.76 per cent of the average wage for men in the mining and quarrying sector, 83.64 per cent in the manufacturing industry, 84.60 per cent in commerce and 87.72 per cent in services, indicating that in some cases the gender-based wage gap may exceed 15 per cent. The Committee asks the Government to supply detailed information on the measures taken or contemplated to reduce the gender wage gap. It also asks the Government to supply up to date statistics on the rates of remuneration for men and women in the various sectors of activity, disaggregated by occupational category and job, to enable the Committee to evaluate progress achieved.

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous observation the Committee noted that no progress had been made on the adoption of measures to give legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and urged the Government to intensify its efforts and keep the Office informed in this respect.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report does not supply any information in this respect. The Committee once again underlines the importance of explicitly establishing the principle of the Convention in the national legislation in order to promote the elimination of pay discrimination against women. Referring to its 2006 general observation on the Convention, the Committee points out that the principle of equal remuneration for "work of equal value" goes beyond equal remuneration for "equal", the "same" or "similar" work, since it also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature but which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee also wishes to emphasize that the concept of "work of equal value" is fundamental to tackling occupational sex segregation in the labour market resulting from historical attitudes and stereotypes regarding women's aspirations, preferences and capabilities with regard to certain jobs, the result of which has been that certain jobs are held predominantly or exclusively by women and others by men and "female jobs" are undervalued in comparison with work of equal value performed by men, when determining wage rates.

The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary steps to give legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and encourages the Government to seek technical assistance from the Office in this respect, if necessary.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the communication of the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala (MSICG), dated 28 August 2009, sent to the Government on 19 October 2009. The MSICG comprises the following organizations: the General Confederation of Workers of Guatemala (CGTG); the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (CUSG); the National Trade Union and Peoples' Coordinating Body (CNSP); the Altiplano Rural Workers Committee (CCDA); the National Indigenous Rural Workers and People's Council (CNAICP), the National Front for the Defence of Public Services and Natural Resources (FNL); and the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA). The Committee will address this communication, along with any comments of the Government, at a future session.

Discrimination on the basis of pregnancy: pregnancy testing and dismissals. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it considered the problem of the practice of pregnancy tests and dismissals on the ground of pregnancy, especially in export processing enterprises (maquiladoras), on the basis of communications received from UNSITRAGUA and the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU), now the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). Furthermore, it recalls that in its previous observation, it noted the communication of the Trade Union of Civil Aviation Workers (USTAC), which alleged that the hiring of workers under heading 29 has made it possible to dismiss pregnant women and make illegal arrangements whereby they are requested to leave their employment at the enterprise for the purpose of giving birth, to be hired again subsequently. The USTAC also indicated that this situation occurs throughout the public service.

The Committee considered that the problem of dismissals based on pregnancy was part of a wider problem which called for vigorous structural measures to tackle it and requested the Government to take such measures. It also requested the Government to step up its efforts to tackle discrimination on the ground of pregnancy with regard to obtaining or keeping a job and to strengthen the protection afforded to pregnant workers.

The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates in its report that the General Labour Inspectorate has not received any complaints relating to the imposition of pregnancy tests by enterprises. With regard to the cases of dismissal, it indicates that efforts have been made to encourage the employers concerned to reinstate the workers affected without it being necessary to refer the cases to the courts. It also indicates that the General Labour Inspectorate and the Department for the Promotion of Working Women have managed to raise the awareness of several agencies which have hired women under heading 29 – which nonetheless meet the requirements laid down by the Labour Code for the establishment of an employment relationship – and these women have been granted the benefits relating to pregnancy, maternity and nursing periods.

The Committee wishes to stress that discrimination on the basis of pregnancy constitutes a serious form of discrimination on the basis of sex. The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the fact that the lack of complaints of discrimination on the ground of pregnancy with regard to obtaining or keeping a job does not mean that this type of discrimination does not exist in practice. Not only is there often a lack of awareness among workers of their rights and the extent of those rights, victims of discrimination are also afraid of possible reprisals from their employers.

Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures without delay and in consultation with the social partners, to ensure effective protection of women against discrimination on the basis of pregnancy with regard to obtaining and keeping a job and against reprisals for bringing cases of discrimination, including measures aimed at sensitizing judges, lawyers, labour inspectors and bodies responsible for enforcing compliance with the relevant regulations. Please also provide information on the measures taken in this regard by the Department for the Promotion of Working Women and the number of cases of reinstatement of women workers and recognition of maternity benefits which are the result of action taken by the General Labour Inspectorate and the Department for the Promotion of Working Women.

Discrimination on the basis of race and colour. Indigenous peoples. The Committee notes the conclusions of the "Analysis of Racism in Guatemala, 2009" concerning the cost of discrimination on the basis of ethnic group or race against indigenous peoples. It notes, in particular, that according to this study the wage gap between indigenous workers and non-indigenous workers is around 8,500 quetzales per year. It notes that this gap is the result of discrimination and of the different working conditions and levels of education between indigenous persons and non-indigenous persons. With regard to access to education, it also notes that the gap between indigenous persons and non-indigenous persons has been narrowing at the pre-primary and primary levels, but has been widening even further at the middle and university levels. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to eliminate the gaps between indigenous persons and non-indigenous persons, as identified in the "Analysis of Racism" study, with regard to access to education, employment and occupation and with regard to working conditions, including information on the measures taken in the context of the public policy on coexistence and the elimination of racism, and on the results achieved.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

Article 1 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It recalls its previous comments regarding section 20 of the Order of 5 March 1987 on the general principles of the public service, which prohibits discrimination only on the basis of philosophical or religious views and sex. Recalling that where provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of non-discrimination contained in the Convention, they should include all of the grounds set forth in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, the Committee asks the Government to amend section 20 and to indicate the steps taken in this regard.

Guyana

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Legislation. The Committee recalls that section 9 of the Prevention of Discrimination Act No. 26 of 1997 imposes the obligation on every employer to pay equal remuneration to men and women performing work of equal value, while section 2(3) of Equal Rights Act No. 19 of 1990 provides for "equal remuneration for the same work or work of the same nature", which is a narrower concept than that required by the Convention. Further, the Committee recalls that section 28 of the 1997 Act stipulates that the Act shall not derogate from the provisions of the Equal Rights Act of 1990 but that the Government previously stated that the 1997 Act takes precedence over the 1990 Act. In light of the fact that section 2(3) of the 1990 Act falls short of the requirements of the Convention, the Committee remains concerned about the inconsistency between the above provisions concerning equal remuneration. Noting that no progress has been made concerning this matter for a number of years, the Committee asks the Government once again to amend the legislation in question with a view to ensuring that it is in accordance with the Convention and to avoid any uncertainties as to the interpretation of the provisions concerned, for instance, through expressly providing that the 1997 Act, in case of conflict, takes precedence over the 1990 Act. The Committee asks the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Application in practice. The Committee recalls its previous comments asking the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote and supervise the application of the equal remuneration provisions of the Prevention of Discrimination Act. The Committee also recalls the communication received from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU, now International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC)), of 30 October 2003 which was forwarded to the Government on 13 January 2004 and again on 1 June 2006, and to which the Government has not yet replied. The ICFTU raises concerns regarding the promotion and effective enforcement of equal pay legislation. In this context, the Committee notes the Government's statement that there were no cases of male and female workers receiving different pay for the same work and that it was a long established fact that men and women received equal remuneration both in the public and private sectors. The Committee draws to the Government's attention the fact that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value does not merely require equal pay for the same or equal work but also equal pay for different work that is nevertheless of equal value, as established on the basis of an objective evaluation of the content of the work performed. The absence of differential wage rates for men and women, while necessary in order to apply the Convention, is not sufficient to ensure its full application. Concerned that the Government's report indicates misunderstandings as to the scope and meaning of the Convention's principle, the Committee considers that training concerning the principle of equal remuneration for labour inspectors and judges, as well as workers' and employers' representatives is essential to effectively ensure the application of the Convention. It asks the Government to indicate in its next report any measures envisaged or taken to ensure the application of the equal pay legislation and the Convention through training and awareness raising and to indicate any steps taken to seek the cooperation of workers' and employers' organizations in this regard. Further, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on any judicial or administrative decisions relating to the equal pay provisions of the Equal Rights Act No. 19 of 1990 and the Prevention of Discrimination Act of 1997.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted the communication from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU, now International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC)), of 30 October 2003 pointing to the low representation of women in traditionally male-dominated areas of work, the weak labour force participation of Amerindian women, and the lack of effective procedures dealing with complaints of discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's reply that more and more women are undergoing training and are entering areas of work that had previously been dominated by men. Women are now engaged in technical fields including working as electricians, mechanics and masons, and they make up a large percentage of employees of security firms. Women also represent the largest portion of graduates of the University of Guyana. The Government refers in this regard to statistics showing the number of women in areas of study that were traditionally male. However, these statistics were not attached to the Government's report. The Government concludes that persons are free to choose whatever field of occupation they desire and that the various branches of education are accessible to all.

The Committee notes the developments on women's employment and training mentioned by the Government but wishes to point out that without reliable statistics disaggregated by sex or any other information on the participation of women, as compared to men, in a wide range of occupations and vocational training courses, it is difficult for the Committee to assess whether progress has been made in achieving the objectives of the Convention. The Committee recalls that while some women may in theory be free to choose the occupations or training courses they desire, discrimination often flows from social stereotypes that deem certain types of work as suitable for men or for women. As a result, persons may apply for jobs based on work deemed to be suitable for them, rather than on actual ability and interest. Such stereotypes channel women and men into different education and training and subsequently into different jobs and career tracks which may not be in keeping with their ability or interest. Lastly, the Committee recalls the importance of effective complaints procedures to enforce legislation on non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to provide in its next report information on the following points:

- (a) statistical data disaggregated by sex on the participation of men and women, including Amerindian women, in the various occupations and sectors of the economy as well as their participation in vocational training courses;*
- (b) the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that policies and plans under its control are not reinforcing stereotypes on the roles of men and women in employment and occupation;*
- (c) the measures taken or envisaged, including in the area of vocational training and education, to encourage women to consider a wider choice of trades and occupations;*
- (d) the measures taken to ensure that the existing complaints procedures allow for effective implementation of the legislation prohibiting discrimination in employment, including on the measures taken or envisaged to prevent delays in litigating complaints. Please also indicate whether any cases alleging discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention have been brought to the courts, and the outcome thereof.*

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Honduras

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1956)

The Committee recalls that on 22 May 2008 it received a communication from the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP) providing information on the questions raised by the Committee and on the action carried out by the COHEP to contribute to the application of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Work of equal value. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information on the amendment of section 44 of the Equal Opportunities for Women Act (LIOM), which the Committee considers to be inadequate to give effect to the principle of the Convention as it establishes the requirement of equal wages for equal work. The Committee further notes that on 25 November 2008 Regulations were adopted under the LIOM, but that section 20(8) of the Regulations does not give expression in law to the concept of “work of equal value”. However, the Committee notes that the second Gender Equality and Equity Plan 2008–15 recognizes as one of the challenges the “full achievement of equal remuneration for women and men for equal work or work of equal value”. The Committee once again asks the Government to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and asks the Government to provide specific information on the progress achieved in amending section 44 of the LIOM and section 20(8) of its Regulations.

Articles 2 and 3. Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes that in relation to the objective evaluation of jobs, the Government refers only to evaluations relating to those seeking jobs, and not evaluations of jobs in themselves. The Committee further notes the indication by COHEP in its communication that it is not aware of public or private initiatives undertaken for the purpose of the objective evaluation of jobs. The Committee also notes COHEP’s concern regarding the absence of a job classification system for the civil service, in accordance with sections 12 to 15 of the Civil Service Act, and their indication that there are significant wage disparities in the public sector. According to COHEP, the absence of a harmonized national classification of occupations with tripartite approval makes it difficult to undertake comparisons between jobs and it is not feasible to establish a comparison of the value of the various tasks. The Committee notes that, according to COHEP, at the end of 2006, an inter-institutional working group was established, composed of representatives of the Secretariat of State for the Labour and Social Security Offices, the National Institute of Statistics, the National Institute of Vocational Training, the Secretariat of State for the Education Office, the Honduran Export Processing Association (AHM) and COHEP, to undertake the revision and harmonization of existing classifications.

The Committee asks the Government to take steps to ensure progress is made in developing a national classification system, based on objective and non-discriminatory criteria free from gender bias. The Government is also asked to provide specific information on the progress made in formulating a job classification system for the civil service, and to undertake an examination of the nature and extent of any wage disparities between men and women in the public sector. Please also provide information on the progress made by the inter-institutional working group to undertake the revision and harmonization of existing classifications.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

India

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1958)

Assessment of the gender remuneration gap. The Committee notes the detailed statistical information provided by the Government. It notes the Sixth Round of the Occupational Wage Survey on ten engineering industries, the report on “Socio-economic conditions of women workers in selected food processing industries including seafood and marine products”, and information compiled by the National Sample Survey Organization providing statistical data on earnings of men and women by occupation, sector or industry, and level of skills or education. The Committee notes that the data provided show that considerable differentials in the earnings of men and women exist, even where they are engaged in the same occupations or where they have the same level of skills or education. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide detailed statistical information on the earnings of men and women. It also encourages the Government to undertake in-depth studies into the reasons for the wide gender remuneration gap, particularly where men and women engage in the same occupations and have the same levels of skills or education, with a view to promoting equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration legislation. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning the scope of section 4 of the Equal Remuneration Act 1976, which requires employers to pay equal remuneration to men and women for the same work or work of a similar nature. The Committee observed that section 4 was more restrictive than is required to give effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, as set out in the Convention, because the concept of “work of equal value” goes beyond “similar work” and encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. Accordingly, the Committee considered that limiting the scope of the legislation to “work of a similar nature” would unduly restrict the scope of comparison of remuneration received by men and women.

In its report, the Government states that replacing the notion of “work of a similar nature” in section 4 with “work of equal value” was not considered necessary in the Indian context, “especially since the term ‘work of equal value’ has not been quantified”. The Committee notes that the importance of the concept of work of equal value lies in its requirements that the content of the work performed is the focus for comparing the remuneration of men and women, and that the scope of comparison is as wide as possible. Noting that the Government refers to six cases decided by the Supreme Court of India, the Committee would be grateful if the Government could provide copies of these decisions. It also requests the Government to review and strengthen the existing equal pay legislation, taking into account the Committee’s general observation of 2006 on the Convention.

Enforcement of the legislation. Further to the abovementioned judicial decisions, the Committee notes that the Government has supplied statistical data on action taken to enforce the Equal Remuneration Act by the respective authorities at the levels of the central Government and the state governments. As regards the establishments falling under the competence of the Central Government, the number of inspections has increased from 3,004 in 2006–07 to 3,224 in 2007–09. The Committee notes that in a large majority of these inspections violations were identified and rectified, and that in a considerable number of cases prosecutions were launched (3,051 violations detected, 2,712 rectified, 439 prosecutions launched in 2007–08). The Committee notes that the increase in the number of inspections was accompanied by an increase in violations detected. This may indicate that, in practice, violations of the Acts are widespread. According to data received from ten states or union territories 27,290 inspections in establishments falling under the competence of the respective authorities had been carried out in 2006–07, and 24,441 in 2007–08. In 2007–09, 172 violations were detected in these ten states and union territories and 158 were rectified, while six prosecutions were launched. The Committee notes that taken together the number of inspections for these ten states and union territories has decreased. The Committee notes with concern that only very few violations have been detected, particularly when compared to those inspections undertaken by the central authorities. The Committee considers that the above information points to a need to make the principle of equal remuneration for men and women, the Convention, and the pertinent national legislation, better known and understood among workers and employers, and also to a need to strengthen enforcement action, particularly at the level of the states and union territories. The Committee also notes that a more in-depth analysis of the violations detected would provide a basis for further action to ensure the effective application of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged with regard to strengthening enforcement of the legislation applying the Convention. The Committee encourages the Government to consider seeking the ILO’s assistance and support in this regard.

The Committee previously noted a number of proposals made by the Centre of Indian Trade Unions (CITU) with a view to strengthening the application of the Convention. In reply to these proposals the Government indicates that setting up special units exclusively monitoring the implementation of the Equal Remuneration Act by state governments may not be practicable, given the low number of violations reported. The Government agrees that the involvement of female officers in hearing and deciding equal remuneration complaints can be arranged, subject to availability. As regards the suggestion that trade unions should be allowed to lodge complaints under section 12 of the Act, the Government indicates that the central Government has recognized four institutions as competent to bring complaints, in addition to the aggrieved persons, namely the Centre of Women Development Studies, the Institute of Social Studies Trust, the Working Women’s Association and the Self-Employed Women’s Welfare Association (SEWA) which is a recognized central trade union. As stated above, the Committee does not interpret the low level of violations detected by the authorities of the states and union territories as indicating that such violations do not occur; it therefore hopes that measures to strengthen these authorities would be considered. In addition, the Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the participation of women officers in the enforcement of the Equal Remuneration Act in practice, and also to elaborate further on the extent to which the abovementioned institutions have made use of the possibility of bringing complaints under section 12 of the Act and the outcome of such complaints.

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. The Committee recalls that by ratifying the Convention, India has undertaken to take measures to promote the objective evaluation of jobs on the basis of the work to be performed, where such action will assist in giving effect to the provisions of this Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted information indicating that women’s remuneration was determined on the basis of classifications which did not reflect the real nature of the work involved. The Committee considered that there was a clear need to promote the use of objective job evaluation methods, as envisaged in Article 3. In its reply, the Government states merely that there is no mention of job classification based on sex or otherwise in the Equal Remuneration Act or the Minimum Wages Acts. While noting the Government’s statement, the Committee emphasizes that the Convention envisages the promotion of objective job evaluation as a key aspect of ensuring equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Hence, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the measures necessary to give effect to Article 3 of the Convention with a view to promoting the use of objective job evaluation methods as a means of determining wage rates irrespective of the worker’s sex, and to provide information on any further developments in this regard.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the Government's report, as well as the observations made by the Akhil Bhartiya Safai Mazdur Congress, a trade union, in their communication dated 28 August 2009 which was forwarded to the Government on 18 September 2009.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Discrimination based on social origin. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the implementation of India's quota system for employment by the central and state governments of persons considered to belong to "scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and other backward classes". The Committee notes that as of 1 January 2006 persons considered to belong to the scheduled castes, which amount to 16.23 per cent of the Indian population according to the Eleventh Five-Year Plan (2007–12) ("11th Plan"), were represented in central government services as follows: 13 per cent in group A; 14.5 per cent in group B; 16.4 per cent in group C; and 18.3 per cent in group D (excluding sweepers). In November 2008, a special recruitment campaign was launched to fill up the backlog of reserved vacancies. No new information is at the Committee's disposal regarding the achievements of the reservation system in state government employment. The Committee further notes the detailed information provided on the various programmes and schemes aimed at the educational and economic empowerment of the scheduled castes, including education grants, coaching, loans and subsidies. In this context, the Committee also notes that the 11th Plan points to the need for new measures to address the persisting exclusion and discrimination of the scheduled castes, including with regard to employment. More specifically, the Plan states that there is a need to complement protective legislation with "promotive legislation which should cover the rights of scheduled castes with respect to education, vocational training, higher education and employment" (paragraph 6.48), and it also mentions the possibility of affirmative action in the private sector. Recalling that discrimination in employment and occupation against men and women on account of being considered to belong to a certain caste is unacceptable under the Convention and that continuing measures are required to end such discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide comprehensive information on the implementation of the various existing schemes and programmes in this regard, including the reservation system for the public service at the central and state levels. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the design and implementation of any new measures, including those referred to in the 11th Plan. Finally, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken to launch and intensify awareness-raising campaigns on the prohibition and unacceptability of caste-based discrimination in employment and occupation, including information on the steps taken to seek the cooperation of workers' and employers' organizations in this regard.

With regard to the enforcement of protective legislation, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Protection of Civil Rights Act, 1955, which provides punishment for the practice of untouchability, is implemented by the respective state governments and union territory administrations. The Government provided statistical information on the cases handled by the police and the courts. According to this information, the total number of court cases regarding scheduled castes under the 1955 Act was 2,613, only 63 of which resulted in a conviction. Similarly, the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, which aims at the prevention of offences against persons belonging to scheduled castes and tribes is implemented by the states and union territories. According to the Government's report, there were 104,003 cases before the courts in 2007 under the 1989 Act, out of which 6,505 resulted in a conviction. The statistical information suggests that under both Acts large numbers of cases remained pending. The Committee notes the Government's indications that the Parliamentary Committee on the Welfare of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes recommended that the competent central ministries and the National Commission for Scheduled Castes and the National Commission for Scheduled Tribes meet regularly to devise ways and means to curb offences of untouchability and atrocities and ensure effective administration of the two Acts. A dedicated committee was set up for this purpose which held three meetings in 2008–09. The Committee also notes that the 11th Plan called for enforcement of the two Acts in letter and spirit and suggests measures to educate judicial officers, public prosecutors and police officials, with a view to ensuring more and speedier convictions. The Government's report states that some 430 million rupees have been provided to 25 states and union territories to strengthen the enforcement of the two Acts. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the measures taken to ensure strict enforcement of the Protection of Civil Rights Act, 1955, and the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, including the measures mentioned in the 11th Plan, and on the number and outcome of the cases handled by the competent authorities.

The Committee recalls its comments over many years regarding the practice of manual scavenging and the fact that Dalits, and very often Dalit women, are usually engaged in this practice due to their social origin in contravention of the Convention. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the Employment of Manual Scavengers and Construction of Dry Latrines (Prohibition) Act, 1993, so far had been adopted by 20 states and all union territories. Five states that have not adopted the Act report that they do not have dry latrines or that they are scavenger free; two have adopted their own legislation on the subject. With regard to the Act's enforcement, the Government's report states that the state of Uttar Pradesh had reported 27,114 cases of prosecutions. Enforcement information regarding other states has not been provided. The Committee is also aware that in an order of 8 May 2009 the Supreme Court of India (Safai Karamchari Andolan and others v. Union of India and others) noted that a detailed report submitted by the petitioner showed that scavenger work is widely prevalent in various districts of the state of Rajasthan. The Committee further notes that the Akhil Bhartiya Safai Mazdur Congress provided findings of field research in Solapur and Pandarpur, two cities in the state of Maharashtra. This research found the continuing existence of manual scavenging, and that it was practiced by municipal employees belonging to particular castes. Similarly, the National Action Plan for the Total Eradication of Manual Scavenging by 2007, which was subsequently extended, refers to reports that in several states municipal employees still perform manual scavenging.

The Committee notes that the Government's efforts continued to concentrate on the conversion of dry latrines under the centrally sponsored Integrated Low Cost Sanitation (ILCS) Scheme. Following implementation difficulties, the Scheme has been reviewed and new guidelines have been in effect since February 2008. The Government indicates that, within one year of the revision of the guidelines, the states of Andhra Pradesh, West Bengal, Nagaland and Assam had stated that they had no dry latrines in their states. According to the Government, only four states have reported the existence of such latrines (Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Uttarakhand and Jammu and Kashmir). Under the revised ILCS Scheme it is envisaged that within a period of three years (2007–10) all remaining dry latrines will be converted. The 11th Plan referred to 342,000 remaining manual scavengers, while according to Government's report a total of 138,464 manual scavengers were still to be liberated under the ILCS Scheme as of 31 March 2009. A Self-Employment Scheme for the Rehabilitation of Manual Scavengers has been formulated to rehabilitate the remaining scavengers in a time bound manner by March 2009 through training, and extension of loans and subsidies.

The Committee notes that the Government has continued to take measures towards the elimination of the practice of manual scavenging. However, the Committee expresses serious concern that, despite these efforts, thousands of Dalit men and women still find themselves trapped in this inhumane and degrading practice. The Committee is particularly concerned at the apparent weak enforcement of the Employment of Manual Scavengers and Construction of Dry Latrines (Prohibition) Act 1993, and that the practice even continues in employment under the Government's authority contrary to Article 3(d) of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to ensure the full enforcement of the 1993 Act and to take all measures necessary to ensure that the practice is eliminated effectively, including through low-cost sanitation programmes and promoting decent work opportunities for liberated scavengers. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on measures taken regarding these issues and the results achieved, including statistical information. Please provide detailed information on: (i) the status of the pending litigation on the issue in the Supreme Court together with copies of any orders that may have been passed by the Court; and (ii) the enforcement of the 1993 Act at the central and state levels.

Equality of opportunity and treatment of women and men. The Government's report provides a general overview of the various vocational training programmes available to women under the responsibility of the central Government, including statistical information on the number of training institutions. The National Council for Vocational Training has recommended that state governments reserve 25–30 per cent of seats in the general Industrial Training Institute for Women. The Government also highlights the Support to Training and Employment Programme (STEP). It further indicates that the Unorganized Sector Workers Social Security Act, 2008, will facilitate the formulation of policies and programmes for women who have so far been deprived from social security coverage. In addition, the Committee notes that overall women appear to have benefited from the National Rural Employment Guarantee Act, 2005 (NREGA), on an equal footing with men. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the vocational training opportunities provided for women, particularly for jobs and occupations other than those traditionally considered "suitable" for women. The Committee also asks for information supported by statistics as to what extent the NREGA has led to employment of women in rural areas of the different states and union territories. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that it is engaging in extensive consultations to finalize legislation on the protection of women against sexual harassment, and hopes that such legislation will be adopted in the near future.

While appreciating the measures reported by the Government with a view to promoting women's equality, the Committee notes from the 11th Plan (paragraphs 4.41–4.46) that the labour force participation of women remains very much lower than that of men. In urban areas unemployment is much higher for young women than for men in the corresponding age group in both the unorganized and the private sectors. According to the Plan's analysis, women's labour force participation remains low principally due to wage rates for women being lower than for men for comparable occupations; to women being denied access to certain occupations; and skill development being provided only in a limited number of occupations. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity in employment and occupation, in rural and urban areas, as well as the private, public and unorganized sectors. In this regard, the Committee also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the participation of men and women in employment, according to sector and employment status, if possible.

Islamic Republic of Iran

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2009. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee noted that, during its examination of this case in June 2008, it had requested the Government to take urgent action on all the outstanding issues with a view to fulfilling its promises of 2006 that it would bring all the relevant legislation and practice into line with the Convention by no later than 2010. The Conference Committee noted with concern the lack of information that had been provided to the Committee of Experts, and the range of serious issues that remained outstanding.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, while acknowledging that certain achievements had been made in the past in respect of education, vocational training and employment of women, remained concerned at the lack of evidence of any real progress made with respect to their situation in the labour market. Detailed information on the number of women actually finding employment after their education and training was still lacking, and concerns remained with respect to existing and draft legislation limiting women's employment. The Conference Committee also noted the need for information on the quota system in universities and how it was applied in practice, as well as information on the impact on women's employment of the recent bill limiting working hours for women with children. The Conference Committee expressed continuing concern about the situation of religious and ethnic minorities with regard to their equal access to employment and occupation, and the failure to provide adequate statistical information in this regard. It concluded that the Baha'i continued to be subjected to discrimination as regards access to education and employment without any significant measures being taken by the Government to bring discriminatory practices, including on the part of the authorities, to an end.

The Conference Committee urged the Government to take immediate and urgent action to ensure the full application of the Convention, both in law and practice, and to establish genuine social dialogue in this context. It urged the Government to provide full, objective and verifiable information in its report of 2009 on the application of the Convention, in reply to all the issues raised by the Conference Committee and by the Committee of Experts.

However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which, in relevant parts, read as follows:

Legislative developments

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a comprehensive Bill prohibiting any form of discrimination in employment and education has been drafted. The Bill relates to access of all Iranian nationals, irrespective of gender, colour, creed, race, language, religion, ethnic and social background, to education, technical and vocational training, and to job and employment opportunities and similar working conditions. The Government states that violations of the proposed Bill would be subject to very heavy penalties and sanctions, unlike violations of the Constitution or the Labour Law. The Committee notes that this Bill is awaiting approval of the Cabinet of Ministers, and that the Government hopes to receive comments of the Office on the Bill. The Committee understands that the proposed Bill has not yet been sent to the Office with a request for comment thereon. The Committee urges the Government to forward the proposed Bill on non-discrimination to the Office for its comments as soon as possible. The Committee hopes that in drafting the new law, the opportunity will be taken to prohibit direct and indirect discrimination against nationals and non-nationals, on all the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including political opinion, national extraction and social origin. Noting the concern expressed by the Conference Committee that over the years a number of bills, plans and proposals had been referred to which had not come to fruition, the Committee hopes that every effort will be made to adopt a comprehensive law on non-discrimination which is fully in conformity with the Convention, in the near future.

National equality policy

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Charter of Citizenry Rights referred to in article 100 of the Fourth Economic, Social and Cultural Development Plan (the Plan) was approved by Parliament in 2007. The Committee also notes from the Government's report that disciplinary measures, including dismissal, were taken by the head of the judiciary against the judges who failed to apply the Charter. As regards article 101 of the Plan, calling for the elaboration of a national plan for the development of "meritorious work" on the basis of a number of principles, including "prohibition of discrimination in employment and profession", the Government indicates that regular meetings with the social partners are held in order to survey and monitor the implementation of this provision. No information is provided with regard to article 130 of the Plan empowering the judiciary to take measures towards the elimination "of all types of discrimination – gender, ethnic and group – in the legal and judicial [field]". The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Charter of Citizenry Rights as well as information on its application in practice, and detailed information on any measures taken against judges and other officials failing to respect and apply the rights set forth in the Charter, including any disciplinary sanctions imposed. The Committee also reiterates its request for information on the status of the adoption of the National Plan foreseen under article 101 of the Plan and on any measures taken to implement article 130. The Committee would also appreciate receiving specific information on the outcome of the meetings held to survey and monitor the implementation of article 101 of the Plan, including detailed information on the measures taken to implement this provision. The Committee again requests the Government to provide translated summaries of the evaluation reports prepared pursuant to article 157 of the Plan, and any other information on the implementation of the Plan in practice, and the results achieved with respect to furthering equality in employment and occupation. Please also provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to raise awareness of the Plan, in particular with respect to equality rights. The Committee again requests the Government to provide a copy of the Charter of Women's Rights, to clarify how the Charter and the Plan interrelate, and to provide information on any measures taken to implement the provisions of the Charter of Women's Rights.

Equal opportunity and treatment of men and women

With regard to the measures taken to improve women's access to employment and occupation, through increasing access to university and technical and vocational training, the Committee recalls that in June 2008 the Conference Committee, while noting the efforts to promote women's access to university education, also noted the Government's acknowledgement that there remained a long way to go in practice to remove the barriers to women's employment. The Committee notes that in his report on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, the UN Secretary-General pointed out that "women have limited participation in wage labour outside of the agricultural sector, estimated at 16 per cent, which signifies that the progress achieved in female education in the recent past has not as yet translated into increased women's economic participation" (A/63/459, 1 October 2008, paragraph 51). The Committee also notes the ITUC's allegation that quotas restricting women's access to university have been secretly applied since 2006 in up to 39 fields of study.

The Committee notes that, according to official government statistics collected by the ILO, the unemployment rate for women decreased from 17 per cent in 2005 to 15.8 per cent in 2007. In the same period, however, the number of women in the occupational category of legislators, senior officials and managers, decreased by almost 20 per cent. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the Deputy Minister for Industrial Relations is responsible for the supervision of the Presidential Circular calling for the guarantee of equal access to women and religious minorities to employment opportunities. Moreover, the Government indicates that various empowerment programmes for women were implemented under article 101 of the Plan. The Committee recalls that the Conference Committee urged the Government to provide the Committee of Experts with the detailed statistics it had been repeatedly calling for in order to allow it to make an accurate assessment of the situation of women in vocational training and employment. The Committee notes that these statistics were not provided. The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed statistics on the number of women and men in public and private sector employment, disaggregated by category and level of employment. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of women participating in the empowerment programmes mentioned in the Government's report. Please also provide more information on the content and impact of these programmes. The Committee also asks the Government to provide a copy of the Presidential Circular referred to above and more detailed information on the role of the Deputy Minister for Industrial Relations in supervising the implementation of the Circular. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the number of women trained through the Technical and Vocational Training Organization (TVTO) and on the participation rate of women and men in the various disciplines of technical and vocational training in privately run institutes. The Committee further reiterates its request for information on the activities of the Women's Entrepreneurship Guild as well as on the activities of the Centre for Women and Family Affairs.

The Committee notes from the ITUC's submission that an increasing number of women are working in temporary jobs and contract employment, and thus are not covered by legal entitlements and facilities, including maternity protection. The ITUC states that since Iranian labour law does not require companies employing less than 20 people to abide by these regulatory protections and women often work in small and medium-sized enterprises, they may in practice face serious discrimination in the labour market. The Committee recalls that the Conference Committee had urged the Government to ensure that all entitlements and facilities are made available to women working in temporary and contract employment. Noting that no information has been provided by the Government on this point, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that women in temporary and contract employment benefit from all the legal entitlements and facilities, and to provide information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee recalls the Government's acknowledgement that the existing imbalance in women's participation in the labour market in comparison with that of men "is a direct result of cultural, religious, economic and historical factors". The Government also raised the issue of the difficulty of women balancing work and family responsibilities. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs held regular workshops throughout the country to raise public awareness about ILO standards and the rights set out in the Labour Law. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that various workshops were held at provincial level with a view to "teaching Iranian women how best to balance work and family responsibilities". The Committee refers to its previous comments and stresses that restricting measures to reconcile work and family responsibilities to women reinforces the assumption that women are solely responsible for caring for children. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to improve awareness, access and enforcement of equality and non-discrimination rights and policies, as well as on protection and benefits aimed at balancing work and family responsibilities. It also again requests the Government to consider extending the special measures for workers with children to men as well as women.

The Committee recalls the findings of the technical assistance mission regarding the prevalence of discriminatory job advertisements. In the absence of the information previously solicited, the Committee again requests the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to prohibit such practice. Further to its 2002 general observation, the Committee also reiterates its request for information on measures taken or envisaged to prevent and prohibit sexual harassment in employment and occupation.

Discriminatory laws and regulations

The Committee, as well as the Conference Committee, has raised over a number of years the need to repeal or amend discriminatory laws and regulations. In June 2008, the Conference Committee expressed deep regret that despite the Government's statements that it was committed to repealing laws and regulations that violated the Convention, progress in this regard was slow and insufficient. The Committee notes with regret that despite the repeated call from this Committee and the Conference Committee for the amendment or repeal of the laws and regulations restricting women's employment and the discriminatory application of the social security legislation, the Government reports no new developments since the Conference Committee discussion.

Regarding section 1117 of the Civil Code pursuant to which a husband can prevent his wife from taking up a job or profession, the Government states that due to the existence of section 18 of the Family Protection Law, section 1117 is automatically repealed and courts are not authorized to hear complaints regarding section 1117. The Committee notes from the UN Secretary-General's report that a family protection draft Bill was being debated. However, it is not clear if the reference to section 18 in the Government's report is a provision in the draft Bill. The Committee also notes that the same explanation was provided to the Conference Committee, which nonetheless expressed concern that in the absence of the express repeal of section 1117, the provision would continue to have a negative impact on women's employment opportunities. The Committee requests the Government to clarify the content of section 18 of the Family Protection Law, and how it automatically repeals section 1117, as well as to provide information on the status and content of the family protection draft Bill. Noting the concern expressed by the Conference Committee that in the absence of an express repeal of section 1117, it would continue to have a negative impact on women's employment opportunities, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to repeal the provision or to ensure that the public is aware of any consequential repeal due to the adoption of new legislation, and the fact that a husband can as a result no longer prevent his wife from taking up a job or profession. Please provide the Committee with detailed information of steps taken in this regard.

Regarding the discriminatory provisions in social security regulations, the Government indicates that it is collaborating with the social partners to launch a global plan for social security that would address amendments to the social security regulations. With respect to the limitations on women's access to all positions in the judiciary, with particular reference to Decree No. 55080 of 1979, the Government once again refers to a Bill addressing this issue having been drafted. The Government rejects the existence of any administrative rules restricting the employment of wives of government employees. With respect to the age barrier to women's employment, the Government states that the maximum age for employment is 40 years, not 30, and a five-year extension is possible exceptionally in the civil service. On the issue of the obligatory dress code, the Committee notes that no information has been provided by the Government. The Committee urges the Government to repeal or amend all laws and regulations restricting women's employment, and the discriminatory application of the social security legislation. The Committee also urges the Government to take measures to address any barriers to women being hired after the age of 30 or 40. Please also provide details of the content and status of the most recent Bill regarding women in the judiciary.

Discrimination on the basis of religion

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the situation of unrecognized religious minorities, and in particular the Baha'i, appeared to be very serious, and called on the Government to take a range of measures. The Conference Committee also strongly urged the Government "to take decisive action to combat discrimination and stereotypical attitudes, through actively promoting respect and tolerance for the Baha'i", to withdraw all discriminatory circulars and other government communications, and to ensure that authorities and the public were informed that discrimination against religious minorities, in particular the Baha'i, would not be tolerated. In reply, the Government states generally that a circular was recently issued by the President of the Technical and Vocational Training Organization, providing that all Iranian nationals had free access to vocational training. Noting that the Committee has been urging the Government to take decisive action to address the very serious situation of discrimination against religious minorities, in particular the Baha'i, and the urgency expressed by the Conference Committee with respect to this matter, the Committee deeply regrets that the Government appears to have taken no action along the lines called for by this Committee or the Conference Committee, and urges it to do so without further delay. The Committee is also once again obliged to request information on the practice of "gozinesh" and on the status of the Bill that had been before Parliament asking for a review of this practice.

Ethnic minorities

Noting the very general information provided by the Government to the Committee's previous request, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on the employment situation of ethnic minority groups, including the Azeris, the Kurds and the Turks, including statistics on their employment in the public sector, and information on any efforts taken to ensure equal access and opportunities to education, employment and occupation for members of these groups. The Committee also reiterates its request for information on the positions from which members of ethnic minorities are excluded on the ground of national security.

Dispute settlement and human rights mechanisms

As no information has been provided regarding the Committee's previous request on this issue, the Committee, stressing the importance of accessible dispute resolution mechanisms to address cases of discrimination, again requests the Government to provide information on the nature and number of complaints lodged with the various dispute settlement and human rights bodies and the courts, including the outcome thereof. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to raise awareness of the existence and mandate of the various bodies, and to ensure the accessibility of the procedures for all groups.

Social dialogue

The Committee previously raised concerns that in the context of the freedom of association crisis in the country, meaningful national-level social dialogue regarding issues related to the implementation of the Convention would not be possible. The Conference Committee also expressed deep concern in this regard. The Committee regrets that the Government has provided no information on this issue. The Committee understands, however, that there has been no improvement in the social dialogue situation in the country. The Committee, expressing its deep concern at the social dialogue situation in the country, urges the Government to make every effort to establish constructive dialogue with the social partners to address the considerable gaps in law and practice in the implementation of the Convention, and to demonstrate concrete results by 2010.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Iraq

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1963)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to revise section 4(2) of the Labour Code to give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value. The Committee stresses the importance of enshrining this principle in the legislation since wages for skilled workers are determined by agreement between the worker and the employer. The Committee notes the Government's statement that section 4 of the draft Labour Code provides for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It further notes that the draft text will be discussed by the State Consultative Council. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the status of the draft Labour Code and in particular on the progress made with a view to adopting provisions that give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will soon be in a position to report progress on the adoption of new provisions on equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ireland

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning article 41.2 of the Constitution of Ireland which provides that "the State recognises that by her life within the home, woman gives to the State a support without which the common good cannot be achieved" and that "the State shall, therefore, endeavour to ensure that mothers shall not be obliged by economic necessity to engage in labour to the neglect of their duties in the home". The Committee expressed concern that these provisions might encourage stereotypical treatment of women in the context of employment, contrary to the Convention and requested the Government to consider reviewing them. In this regard, the Committee notes that the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution revisited the issue of article 41.2 of the Constitution in its Tenth Progress Report of 2006, concluding that a change of these provisions was desirable and recommending amendments. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made with regard to the recommended revision of article 41.2 of the Constitution with a view to eliminating any tension between this provision and the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation.

Article 1, paragraph 1(b). Additional grounds of discrimination. The Committee recalls that, for the purpose of this Convention, the term "discrimination" includes differential treatment based on any of the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a), as well as on any additional ground as may be determined by the Member concerned in accordance with Article 1(1)(b). In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Employment Equality Act covers a number of grounds beyond those expressly listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention (marital status, family status, age, disability, sexual orientation and membership of the Travelling Community) and invited the Government to indicate whether it considers that these grounds are covered by the Convention in respect of Ireland, pursuant to Article 1(1)(b). In its report, the Government confirms that section 6(2) of the Act includes these additional grounds in the definition of discrimination. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that these provisions were drafted in accordance with the usual legislative procedures, including consultations with employers' and workers' organizations and representatives of the Travelling Community. Noting with interest the Government's statement that it considers the grounds of marital status, family status, age, disability, sexual orientation and membership of the Travelling Community to be within the parameters of Article 1(1)(b), the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in employment of occupation, with a view to eliminating discrimination based on these additional grounds in respect thereof.

Article 1, paragraph 2. Inherent requirements of the job. The Committee recalls that section 2 of the Employment Equality Act provides that "persons employed in another person's home for the provision of personal services for persons residing in that home where the services affect the private or family life of such persons" are not considered employees under the Act as far as access to employment is concerned. The term "personal services" includes "but is not limited to services that are in the nature of services in loco parentis or involve caring for those residing in the home" (section 2). The Committee notes that these provisions deprive certain domestic workers from protection against discrimination in respect of access to employment. Noting from the Government's report that this exception is meant to balance the competing rights to respect of one's private and family life and to equal treatment, the Committee notes that these provisions, in practice, would appear to have the effect of allowing employers of domestic workers to make recruitment decisions on the basis of the grounds listed in section 6(2) of the Act, without such decisions being considered discriminatory.

The Committee recalls that the Convention is intended to promote and protect the fundamental right to equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation and that it only allows for exceptions from the principle of equal treatment as far as they are based on the inherent requirements of the particular job. It therefore considers that the right to respect for one's private and family life should not be construed as protecting conduct that infringes on this fundamental right (including conduct consisting of differential treatment of candidates for employment on the basis of any grounds covered by Article 1 of the Convention where this is not justified by the inherent requirements of the particular job in question). The Committee also notes that the definition of personal services affecting private or family life contained in section 2 of the Act appears to be broad and non-exhaustive, and open for extensive interpretation. The Committee considers that the exclusion of domestic workers from the protection against discrimination in respect to access to employment, as currently provided for in section 2, may lead to discrimination against these workers contrary to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of these provisions, including information on any relevant administrative or judicial decisions. It also requests the Government to indicate whether it is considering amending the relevant parts of section 2 of the Employment Equality Act to ensure that decisions concerning the recruitment of all domestic workers cannot be based on any of the grounds contained in section 6(2) of the Act except where this is justified on the basis of inherent job requirements.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Jamaica

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Legislation – equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee has been pointing out for a number of years that section 2 of the Employment (Equal Pay for Equal Work) Act of 1975 by referring to “similar” or “substantially similar” job requirements only applies the principle of equal remuneration for equal work, whereas the Convention provides for equal remuneration for men and women for work of “equal value”, even though the jobs compared are different in nature. Although the Committee has noted in the past the commitment and efforts made by the Government to make progress in reducing the wage differentials between men and women, it regrets that once again the Government states that no consideration has yet been given to the amendment of the abovementioned legislation. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the general observation of 2006 on this Convention underscoring the importance and clarifying the meaning of “work of equal value”. In this observation, the Committee, noting that legal provisions that are narrower than the principle laid down in the Convention hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination against women, urges governments to take the necessary steps to amend their legislation. Such legislation should provide not only for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but should also prohibit pay discrimination that occurs in situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee urges the Government to take steps to revise section 2 of the Employment (Equal Pay for Equal Work) Act, 1975, and to indicate the progress made in this regard as well as any other measures taken to ensure conformity with Article 1(b) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Japan

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes the observations of the All Japan Construction, Traffic and Transportation Workers' Union Tokyo dated 13 October 2009, concerning the long hours of bus workers, which the union states are incompatible with taking responsibility for the family, and thus violate the Convention. As the Government has not yet had an opportunity to reply to these observations, the Committee invites the Government to provide any information that could be of assistance to the Committee in examining this matter.

Kazakhstan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the fact that the right to equal remuneration set out in section 7(2) of the 1999 Labour Act was narrower than the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value set out in the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes that the new Labour Code of 2007 contains the same provision in section 22(15) providing that the employee shall have the right to “equal payment for equal labour without any discrimination”. In addition, section 7(1) prohibits sex discrimination in the exercise of labour rights.

The Committee recalls its general observation of 2006 in which it emphasized that the concept of “work of equal value” includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, the “same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee urged countries still retaining legal provisions that are narrower than the principle of the Convention to amend their legislation to ensure that it not only provides for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also prohibits pay discrimination that occurs in situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has failed to take these comments into account when adopting the Labour Code of 2007. It also notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women had similarly called on Kazakhstan to introduce legislative provisions on equal pay for work of equal value (CEDAW/C/KAZ/CO, 2 February 2007, paragraph 24). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, providing for the right of men and women to equal remuneration for work of equal value. It asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee notes that the new Labour Code, which was adopted on 15 May 2007, includes a number of provisions which give effect to the Convention. Section 4 declares the prohibition of discrimination to be the principle of the labour legislation of the Republic of Kazakhstan, while section 7 sets out this prohibition in more detail:

- section 7(1) provides that everyone shall have equal opportunities to exercise their rights and freedoms in the sphere of labour;
- section 7(2) provides that no one may be subjected to any discrimination in exercising their labour rights based on sex, age, physical disabilities, race, nationality, language, material, social or official position, place of residence, attitude to religion, political convictions, tribe or social stratum or membership of public associations; and
- section 7(3) provides that differences, exceptions, preferences and restrictions determined by requirements inherent in the nature of the work or dictated by the state's concern for people in need of increased social and legal protection, do not constitute discrimination.

The Committee notes that these provisions cover all prohibited grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a), of the Convention, except the ground of colour. It also notes that section 7(2) also includes a number of additional grounds, as envisaged in Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention (namely age, physical disability, tribe and membership in a public association). The Committee regrets that the ground of citizenship, which was included as a prohibited ground in the previous Labour Code has been removed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the above provisions, including information on any activities undertaken to make these known and information on the number, nature and outcome of discrimination cases dealt with by the courts or the labour inspectorate. In the absence of such information, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to collect such data, and to indicate the measures taken to that end. The Committee recommends that the prohibited ground of colour is added to section 7(2).

Equality of men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee notes with interest that the new Labour Code grants paid leave to adoptive parents (either the mother or the father) to care for a newly born adopted child (section 194) and unpaid childcare leave until the child reaches the age of three at the parents' choice, either for the father or the mother (section 195). The Committee welcomes these measures, in particular those that are available to women and men on an equal footing, and requests the Government to provide information on the extent to which this entitlement is being used by men and women.

However, the Committee notes that under section 187 of the Labour Code the employer is prevented from either engaging in night work or overtime work women with children under the age of 7 years and other persons bringing up children under the age of 7 years without a mother, or sending them on business trips or to perform rotational work, without their written consent. Under sections 188 and 189, fathers have the right to child-feeding breaks and to part-time work only in respect of children without a mother. The Committee notes that, in accordance with the principle of gender equality, measures aimed at facilitating the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities should be available on an equal footing for women and men. Provisions which reflect an assumption that caring for a child is the primary role of women prolong and reinforce gender inequality in society and the labour market. The Committee therefore requests the Government to amend these provisions accordingly.

Special measures of protection. The Committee notes that, under section 186(1) of the Labour Code, it is prohibited to engage women to perform heavy work or work under harmful and hazardous working conditions. Under section 186(2), it is prohibited for women to lift and move manually weights in excess of the maximum standards established for them. The list of jobs for which it is prohibited to engage women and the maximum weights for women to lift and move manually shall be determined by the state labour authority in agreement with the health authorities. The Committee recalls that special protective measures for women should be limited to safeguarding maternity, and should be proportional to the nature and scope of the protection needed. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the list referred in section 186 of the Labour Code for examination by the Committee.

Draft gender equality legislation. The Committee previously noted that a draft law on equal rights and opportunities for men and women is under consideration. The Committee hopes that such legislation can be passed in the near future and requests the Government to provide the text of the law when adopted.

Practical application. The Committee notes that the Government has not yet replied to a number of requests for information made by the Committee with regard to the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide the following:

- (i) detailed information on the specific measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of women and men in employment and occupation, including measures to promote women's access to occupations and employment in areas where they are currently under-represented, including within the civil service;
- (ii) statistical information on the participation of men and women in the labour market (private and public sectors), branch of economic activity, occupational group and status of employment;
- (iii) information indicating how the principle of gender equality has been integrated into the programmes and measures to promote employment, including statistical information on the number of women who have benefited from employment promotion measures;

- (iv) statistical information on the position in the labour market of men and women belonging to ethnic or religious minorities, including information on their participation in employment in the civil service; and
- (v) information on the measures taken to plan and implement activities to raise awareness of the principles of equality, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations as envisaged under Article 3(a) and (b) of the Convention.

Kenya

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the new Employment Act 2007 which covers both the private and public sectors. The Act prohibits direct and indirect discrimination and harassment against an employee or a prospective employee on grounds of “race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, nationality or ethnic or social origin, disability, pregnancy, mental status or HIV status” (section 5(3)(a)), in respect of recruitment, training, promotions, terms and conditions of employment, termination of employment or other matters arising out of the employment (section 5(3)(b)), and requires employers to pay equal remuneration for work of equal value (section 5(4)). Under the Act, the Minister, labour officers and the industrial court have a duty to promote equality of opportunity in employment in order to eliminate discrimination, as well as to promote and guarantee equality of opportunity for a person who is a migrant worker or a member of his or her family, lawfully in Kenya (section 5(1)(a) and (b)). Employers, including employment agencies, shall promote equal opportunity in employment and strive to eliminate discrimination in any employment policy or practice (section 5(2) and (7)). “Employment policy or practice” is broadly defined by section 5(7)(c) of the Act and covers all aspects of employment. Furthermore, the Act prohibits sexual harassment by the employer, employers’ representatives, as well as co-workers (section 6). The definition of sexual harassment includes quid pro quo and hostile environment, and requires employers of more than 20 employees to adopt and implement a policy statement on sexual harassment (sections 6(1) and (2)). Finally, section 5(6) provides for the shifting of the burden of proof to the employer in the case of an alleged discrimination based on section 5. The Committee welcomes the provisions concerning non-discrimination and equality in the Employment Act 2007, and requests the Government to provide information on their practical application.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Kuwait

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2009 and the resulting conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Committee also notes the Government’s report received in May 2009, and the additional information received in June and September 2009. The Committee welcomes the Government’s efforts to provide specific information, including statistics, in response to many of the points raised by the Committee and the Conference Committee. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to collect and provide such information and analysis, which assists it considerably in assessing the progress made in implementing the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee expressed concern at the considerable obstacles to women’s access to a number of posts and occupations, including stereotyped views regarding the role of women. The Conference Committee urged the Government to remove any existing legal obstacles to women’s access to employment and to take proactive measures to address the practical barriers to women’s access to education and training opportunities and to certain posts and careers. The Conference Committee also urged the Government to ensure that effective measures, in law and practice, were put into place to protect all persons, including foreign workers, from discrimination on the grounds of race, colour or national extraction. Noting the particular vulnerability of migrant domestic workers, the Conference Committee urged the Government to pursue efforts to ensure more effective protection in law and practice against discrimination of these workers, on the grounds set out in the Convention, and to ensure that all workers were aware of their rights relating to non-discrimination, and that there was effective enforcement and access to complaints procedures. The Conference Committee stressed that the range of measures should be part of a coherent national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation. Noting the Government’s request for ILO technical assistance, the Conference Committee expressed the hope that such technical assistance would be provided to enable the Government to apply the Convention in law and practice.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the draft Labour Code is currently before the National Assembly, and that the Government intends to upgrade the provisions of the draft to expressly prohibit direct and indirect discrimination. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that the draft Labour Code pays special importance to increasing privileges for women. The Committee welcomes the Government’s expression of commitment to effectively address discrimination in the new Labour Code, and hopes that the new Labour Code will be adopted in the near future and will promote equality of opportunity in employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the new Labour Code includes provisions explicitly defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination, on at least all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a), of the Convention (race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin), with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation, and covering all workers, including domestic workers. Please provide information on any developments in this regard. With regard to the “special privileges for women” to be set out in the new Labour Code, the Committee asks the Government to ensure that it does not include protective measures which exclude women from certain work or jobs, based on stereotypical perceptions of their abilities and role in society, as such provisions would violate the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that protective measures for women are strictly limited to maternity protection, and to provide information in this regard.

Access of women to particular occupations. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the access of women to jobs in the military, the police, the diplomatic corps, the Administration of Justice Division and the Department of Public Prosecutions. The Government states that there is no legal basis to exclude women from any posts.

Regarding the police and the firefighters, the Committee welcomes the Government’s indication that the first group of female police officers have graduated from the police academy, and that the Public Fire Department expects to welcome the first group of graduate female firefighters shortly. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that for the first time in the history of the country, four women have recently been elected to the National Assembly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of women and men who have successfully completed their training as police officers and firefighters, and how many of those have obtained positions in the police department and the fire department as a result, and at what level, disaggregated by sex.

With regard to women in the judiciary, the Government states that “women assume in all freedom a number of posts and occupations suitable to their nature as women”, and points to environmental factors, tradition and the nature and responsibility of the job as playing a large part in guiding authorities in appointments. The Government points out that women have been appointed to positions where they are responsible for investigations, providing formal legal opinions and as State lawyers defending the position of the Government. The Committee notes, however, that women do not seem to have been appointed as judges. With respect to the Ministry of Defence, the Government states that 70 per cent of the employees in the support services are women, and that women work as engineers, doctors and administrative staff at military camps. With respect to the diplomatic corps, the Government provides information evidencing that a few women have been appointed to high-level diplomatic positions (six women out of a total of 384 positions); however, the Government states that women generally refrain from such a career as a result of social and family pressures, since they are required to reside outside the country. Noting that there continue to be considerable barriers in practice to women accessing high-level positions in occupations under the Government’s control, including due to stereotyped assumptions regarding what is “suitable to their nature”, the Committee urges the Government to take proactive measures to ensure that women have equal opportunities with men to access all positions under the control of the Government, as well as to promote the equal access of women to positions at all levels in the private sector. Please indicate in this context any measures taken or envisaged to address gender stereotypes and the need to balance work and family responsibilities for both men and women.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government’s response to its previous request for information on the measures taken to prevent and combat sexual harassment in employment and occupation, indicating that it considers the provisions of the Penal Code, namely sections 191–192, 198–201 and 204, protecting women against rape and immoral acts, to be sufficient. The Committee notes that the provisions referred to by the Government do not explicitly address sexual harassment. The Committee considers that such provisions regarding crimes of a sexual nature are insufficient to address sexual harassment in the workplace, as sexual harassment includes a much broader range of behaviour and practices than those covered by the Penal Code. Recalling its 2002 general observation on this matter, the Committee requests the Government to take the opportunity of the drafting of the new Labour Code to include provisions that specifically define and prohibit sexual harassment in the workplace (both quid pro quo harassment and sexual harassment due to a hostile work environment), as well as providing effective remedies, and asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction. The Committee has raised concerns in the past regarding the apparent absence of measures to ensure that no person, including foreign nationals, is subjected to discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that it is committed to upgrading its legislation in the light of international labour standards, in the current legislative reform process. The Committee welcomes the Government’s expression of commitment to address discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction, and asks the Government to include a prohibition of such discrimination in the new Labour Code, along with effective remedies. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the progress of amending the Penal Code to address racial discrimination. Noting the Government’s indication that information would be provided in due course on the participation of residents without nationality (“Bidoons”) in the labour market, the Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide such information in its next report, including information on the sectors or branches of work in which they are concentrated.

Migrant domestic workers. The Committee previously raised concerns regarding the absence of legislation protecting migrant domestic workers against discrimination, as discrimination is not addressed in the Regulation of Domestic Service Agencies (Act No. 40 of 1992). The Committee had stressed the particular vulnerability of migrant domestic workers, the majority of whom are women, and the importance of ensuring that they are protected against discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government to the effect that the mandatory model contract for domestic workers has been amended with respect to the minimum wage, the duration of annual holidays, rest periods and compensation for occupational injuries, and payment of the return ticket. The Government also provides information on government accommodation provided to migrant domestic workers, and assistance provided to a number of domestic workers while awaiting wage settlement from their employers. The Committee also notes the information provided on the number of complaints filed against employment agencies, and the Government's indication that it is currently preparing statistics on the penalties imposed on employers and on the owners of employment agencies found in violation. The Committee also notes from the discussion in the Conference Committee, that preliminary research has been undertaken with a view to reviewing the sponsorship system. The Committee welcomes the steps taken by the Government to review the sponsorship system, and to provide support to migrant domestic workers, and asks it to provide information on further developments in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the nature and number of complaints submitted by domestic workers, and on sanctions imposed and remedies provided. Please also provide information on any steps taken to provide specific legal protection for migrant domestic workers against discrimination, whether in the context of the new Labour Code or otherwise.

National equality policy. The Committee notes that in pursuance of a national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, with a view to eliminating any discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, the Government indicates that as well as preparing the new Labour Code, it is undertaking awareness raising aimed at fighting discrimination in all its forms, including through official television stations, and through campaigns launched by the Ministry of Religious Endowment and Muslim Affairs. The Committee recalls the importance of adopting proactive measures in the context of a national equality policy, including with respect to the areas set out in Article 3 of the Convention, and draws the Government's attention also to Paragraphs 2 to 4 of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Recommendation, 1958 (No. 111), in this regard. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on awareness-raising activities relating to the principles of the Convention, and any other measures taken with a view to declaring and pursuing a national equality policy. Noting that the Government in its report again requests ILO technical assistance with respect to the revision of the Labour Code, the Committee hopes that, with ILO assistance, the Government will develop and implement a coherent national policy on equal opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, a component of which would be the revision of the Labour Code.

Lebanon

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1977)

Legislation to provide for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it asked the Government to resolve the discrepancy in the national legislation concerning the concept of equal value (i.e. draft section 56 amending the Labour Law provides for equal remuneration for men and women wage earners for work of equal value, and Legislative Decree No. 29 of 13 May 1943 refers to the same basic wages for men and women when performing "equal work and tasks"). The Committee notes the Government's reply that Legislative Decree No. 29/1943 is no longer in force. The Government further confirms that the draft amendment to the Labour Law, which is still being discussed, should be understood within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Convention and the explanations provided by the Committee in its 2006 general observation. The Committee urges the Government to adopt draft section 56 of the Labour Law so that finally full legal expression can be given to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1977)

Legislative prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee recalls its previous observation indicating that section 1 (definition of wage earner) and section 35 (protection of women against discrimination) of the most recent version of the draft Labour Law still fell short of prohibiting discrimination in employment and occupation based on all the grounds defined in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the commission charged with the revision of the draft Labour Law is still finalizing its work. Recalling that the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to this point for many years, the Committee trusts that the Government will make every effort to ensure that the draft Labour Law will soon be adopted and that its final version will include an explicit prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination based on race, colour, sex, religion, national extraction, political opinion and social origin in respect of all aspects of employment. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lesotho

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1998)

Articles 1, 2 and 3(c) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning the fact that, under customary law and in common law, married women were considered to be minors and therefore could not conclude a contract, open a bank account, obtain a loan or apply for a passport without their husband's consent. In this regard, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the Legal Capacity of Married Persons Act enacted in 2006 repeals "common law, customary law and any other marriage rules in terms of which a husband acquires marital powers over the person and property of his wife" (section 3(1)). The Committee notes that the Act removes restrictions on the legal capacity of married women as regards the following: (a) entering into a contract; (b) suing or being sued; (c) registering immovable property in her name; (d) acting as an executive of a deceased's estate; (e) acting as a trustee of an estate; (f) acting as a director of a company; (g) binding herself as surety; and (h) performing any other act which was restricted by any law due to marital power before the commencement of the Act (section 3(3)). The Act also provides for spouses "married in community of property" to have equal powers (section 5). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to ensure the Act's full implementation and on its impact on women's employment and access to occupations. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any judicial decisions issued enforcing the Act's provisions and on the measures taken to raise awareness of the Act. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken specifically to prevent continued application, in practice, of customary law regarding marital powers restricting women's equality in employment and occupation.

Measures to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning the participation of men and women in the labour market, requesting the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that men and women enjoy equal employment opportunities in all sectors and industries, based on merit and excluding stereotypical considerations. In this regard, the Committee notes that, during the Extraordinary Meeting of the African Union Conference of Ministers of Gender and Women's Affairs held in Maseru on 18 December 2008, the Prime Minister announced plans to set up a Gender Commission which would provide support for the implementation of the 2003 Gender and Development Policy and that the ministry responsible for gender issues is establishing a women's credit scheme to stimulate self-employment. The Decent Work Country Programme (2006–09) document indicates that job cuts in the textile industry severely impacted on women's job opportunities and identifies job creation as a priority area to be addressed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the establishment of the Gender Commission and its activities to promote gender equality in employment and occupation, the implementation of the women's credit scheme, as well as information on any other measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that men and women benefit from job-creation programmes on an equal footing. Noting that updated information on the participation of men and women in employment is not yet available, the Committee requests the Government to provide such data as soon as possible.

Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour or national extraction. The Committee previously noted that a Race Relations Bill, 2004, had been drafted which prohibits racial discrimination in respect of access to schools, services and public facilities. The Committee had also noted information concerning ethnic tensions between the Basotho and ethnic Asian communities, including at the workplace. In this regard, the Committee notes from the Government's report that no further developments have occurred with regard to practical measures to ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of all workers in Lesotho, irrespective of race, colour or national extraction. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether any progress has been made with regard to adopting legislation addressing racial discrimination. Please also provide information on the employment situation of the various ethnic communities, and on any measures taken to promote and ensure equality in employment and occupation, irrespective of race, colour or national extraction.

Article 3(a). Cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it had not yet been able to take any action to seek the cooperation of workers' and employers' organizations with a view to promoting the application of the Convention. The Committee encourages the Government to take active steps to seek the cooperation of the social partners with a view to discussing and deciding on specific measures to promote equality at work, including through awareness raising and training on the principles of the Convention and the non-discrimination provisions contained in the legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to this end.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Discrimination on the basis of race, colour or national extraction. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it expressed regret regarding the lack of measures taken by the Government to address discrimination against foreign workers, especially those originating from sub-Saharan Africa, on the basis of race, colour or national extraction in employment and occupation. The Committee regrets that the Government continues to give general replies and it is concerned at the Government's apparent lack of consideration of the need to take active measures to protect both citizens and non-citizens against ethnic and racial discrimination. Without specific information on the actual situation of foreign workers from sub-Saharan Africa in the Libyan labour market, and on the measures taken to promote and ensure their equality of opportunity in law and in practice, it is difficult for the Committee to assess to what extent the Convention is being effectively applied in their regard. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate steps to examine the situation of alleged racial and ethnic discrimination against foreign workers originating from sub-Saharan Africa, and to report on the findings. The Committee also urges the Government to provide detailed information on all measures it is taking to prevent and eliminate the occurrence of ethnic or racial discrimination in law and in practice in all aspects of employment and occupation, and to take measures to promote tolerance, understanding and respect between Libyan citizens and workers from other African countries.

Lack of national policy on equality. In previous observations, the Committee expressed serious concern about the persistent lack of information in the Government's report on its obligation under Article 2 of the Convention to declare and implement a national policy on equality with respect to all the grounds covered by the Convention. The Committee recalled that Act No. 20, 1991, on the promotion of freedom only concerned equality between men and women and that there was no comprehensive legislation to prevent and prohibit direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation on the grounds contained in Article 1(1)(a), of the Convention. The Committee regrets that the Government continues to maintain that the principle of equality and prohibition of discrimination is reflected in the national legislation but fails to provide any information about the concrete measures taken to declare and pursue a national policy on equality in employment and occupation with respect to all the grounds covered by the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate steps to declare and pursue a national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation with respect to the grounds of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. Noting that the new Labour Code has been submitted to the General People's Congress, the Committee firmly hopes that the Code will contain provisions clearly prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation on all the grounds contained in the Convention, and requests the Government to provide information on status of the adoption of the Code.

Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women with respect to employment and occupation, vocational training and placement services. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it had noted that, while increasing, women's economic activity remained low (29.59 per cent). The Committee further recalls Decision No. 258, 1989, of the General People's Committee relating to the rehabilitation and training of Libyan women which provides that all workplaces are obliged to employ women who have been referred to them by the employment offices (section 2). Decision 258 also provides for the establishment of municipal employment units responsible for providing job opportunities to women and for the formulation of a specific training programme for women (sections 3 and 4). The Committee had expressed concern that the practical effect of certain provisions in Decision No. 258, 1989 referring to "suitable job opportunities to women", "suitable to women's nature and social conditions" or "suitable their psychological and physical make-up" could result in gender inequalities in the labour market, and encourage occupational gender segregation.

The Committee notes that with respect to access to employment the Government's report merely includes information previously provided regarding the access of women in certain government, judicial and public prosecution posts and in the judicial administration. With respect to access to vocational training, the Government replies that there are no areas of education or training prohibited to women and that in 2007 women represented 69.2 per cent of the university graduates, accounted for 39.6 per cent of the higher education graduates and 44.2 per cent of the graduates of intermediate technical schools. The Committee notes this information but considers it to be insufficient to assess to what extent real progress has been made with respect to the promotion of women's participation in all fields of study and in a wide range of job opportunities at all levels. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide full information on the following:

- (i) the meaning of "suitable job opportunities to women", "suitable to women's nature and social conditions" or "suitable to their psychological and physical make-up" referred to in Decision No. 258, 1989, of the General People's Committee on the rehabilitation and training of women;

- (ii) the concrete measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the practical effect of Decision No. 258, 1989, does not lead to women being excluded or discouraged from participating in vocational training courses or being denied job opportunities in traditionally male areas, and the results achieved;
- (iii) detailed statistical data disaggregated by sex on the employment of men and women in the various occupations and sectors of the economy, including their employment in high-level posts in both the public and the private sectors;
- (iv) the practical effect given to sections 2 to 4 of Decision 258, 1989, and their impact on improving the position of women in the labour market; and
- (v) detailed statistical data disaggregated by sex on women's and men's participation in all fields of vocational training and education, and the measures taken to ensure that women are offered a wide range of job opportunities at all levels, including in sectors in which they are currently absent or under-represented.

Lithuania

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1994)

Assessment of the gender wage gap. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled the observations submitted by the trade union Lietuvos Darbo Federacija (LDF) concerning the continued existence of a gap between men's and women's remuneration in spite of the legislative provision for equal remuneration, and noted that since 2000 the gap had been widening in the private sector. The Committee notes from Eurostat that the differential in men's and women's average gross hourly earnings has continued to increase from 13.2 per cent in 2002 to 17.1 per cent in 2006 and 20 per cent in 2007. The Committee notes that the statistics provided by the Government confirm that this trend mainly concerns the private sector where the gender wage gap has steadily increased from 14.6 per cent in 2002 to 22.2 per cent in 2007. The Committee also notes that, although no further widening of the gap was registered in the public sector, the progress made in reducing the gender wage gap appears slow as the disparity between the remuneration received by men and women has remained around 18 per cent since 2005. The Committee further notes that in 2007 the widest gender wage gap existed in the financial mediation (42.6 per cent) and manufacturing (29.1 per cent) sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under the Programme on Equal Opportunities for Men and Women (2005–09), various workshops were organized with the aim of overcoming traditional stereotypes concerning women's role in economic activities. A number of projects to this end were also carried out by scientific institutions and women's organizations under European Union Structural Funds. The Committee therefore urges the Government:

- (i) to step up its efforts to reduce the gender wage gap, particularly in the private sector, and to provide full information on the measures taken in this regard and the impact thereof, including measures pursuant to the Programme for Equal Opportunities for Women and Men and the European Union Structural Funds;
- (ii) to analyse the underlying causes of the present differentials in women's and men's remuneration levels and to take measures to address them accordingly; and
- (iii) to collect and submit statistical information on the distribution of women and men in the different sectors of economic activity, occupational categories and positions and to continue to provide statistical data on the levels of women's and men's earnings.

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Objective job evaluation. Cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with interest the adoption by the Tripartite Council of the "Methodology for the Assessment of Jobs and Positions" which was recommended for use by enterprises, institutions and organizations. It also noted that on 12 June 2005 trade unions and employers' organizations signed a bilateral agreement on the application of the Methodology. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2009–10 the practice of applying the Methodology will be reviewed. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the outcome of the review of the application of the Methodology for the Assessment of Jobs and Positions and reiterates its request for information on how collective agreements have been used to promote objective job evaluation as a means to ensure that remuneration for women and men is determined in a non-discriminatory manner. Please also provide information on the number of undertakings applying the Methodology.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1994)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the amendments to the Law on Equal Opportunities for Women and Men adopted on 18 December 2007, pursuant to which the burden of proof has been shifted from the alleged victim of discrimination to the person or institution against which a complaint is filed (section 2(1)). The Committee also notes that a second paragraph was added to section 9 of the Law providing that a workers' or employers' organization or any other legal persons may represent the alleged victim of discrimination in judicial or administrative procedures upon receiving his or her written consent. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the number, nature and outcome of cases brought pursuant to the Law on Equal Opportunities for Women and Men, as amended.

Practical application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the Lietuvos Darbo Federacija (LDF) indicating, among other things, that workers continue to experience discrimination on the basis of gender, age, sexual orientation and family status despite the fact that the Labour Code prohibits such treatment. Accordingly, the Committee urged the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure that the legislation is known, understood and observed in practice, and requested information on the measures taken to this end and on the number, the nature and the outcome of cases concerning discrimination in employment and occupation addressed by the competent authorities. The Committee notes from the Government's report that in 2006 the National Antidiscrimination Programme for 2006–08 was launched with the objective of promoting the implementation of the legislation establishing the principle of non-discrimination and equal opportunities and of raising public awareness of the relevant provisions, the measures for protection and the possible manifestation of discrimination. The Committee also notes that a similar programme was drafted for the period 2009–11. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to implement the National Antidiscrimination Programme and to submit a copy of the last annual report on its implementation. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether the draft programme for 2009–11 has been adopted and, if so, to provide information on its implementation. The Committee also reiterates its request for information on the number, nature and outcome of cases concerning discrimination in employment and occupation which have been dealt with by the competent authorities.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report again contains no reply to its previous comments concerning discrimination on the basis of political opinion. It is therefore bound to repeat the relevant parts of its previous observation, which read as follows:

Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee recalls its previous comments regarding section 9(6)(3) of the Act on Civil Service of 8 July 1999 (No. VII-1316), which provided that former staff officers of the USSR State Security Committee shall not be eligible for the civil service. The Committee expressed concern that this provision could amount to discrimination on the ground of political opinion. The Committee requested the Government to confirm that the exclusion established under section 9(6)(3) of the Act on Civil Service had been abolished and to provide a copy of the Act as in force. The Government was also asked to indicate any additional grounds for non-eligibility that may have been adopted in any laws.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information concerning these matters. It nevertheless notes from the official translation published by the Seimas of the Act on Civil Service of 8 July 1999 (No. VII-1316), as amended on 23 April 2002 (No. IX-855), that section 9(6)(3) has been repealed, while the new section 9(3) states generally that persons shall not be eligible for the civil service in case this is provided for by other laws. The Committee also notes that restrictions not only in respect of access to employment in the civil service but also in the private sector are provided for in the Act on the Evaluation of the USSR State Security Committee (NKVD, NKGB, MGB, KGB) and the Present Activities of Former Permanent Employees of the Organization of 16 July 1998, which entered into force on 1 January 1999 ("SSC Act"). Section 2 of the SSC Act provides as follows:

For a period of ten years from the date of entry into force of this Act, former employees of the SSC may not work as public officials or civil servants in government, local or defence authorities, the State Security Department, the police, the prosecution, courts or diplomatic service, customs, State supervisory bodies and other authorities monitoring public institutions, as lawyers or notaries, as employees of banks and other credit institutions, on strategic economic projects, in security companies (structures), in other companies (structures) providing detective services, in communications systems, or in the educational system as teachers, educators or heads of institutions[;] nor may they perform a job requiring the carrying of a weapon.

(Judgement of 27 July 2004, in the case of Sidabras and Džiautas v. Lithuania, paragraph 24)

The Committee notes that the European Court of Human Rights, in its judgement of 27 July 2004, in the case of Sidabras and Džiautas v. Lithuania, held that the restrictions imposed under the SSC Act on the applicants to apply for private sector jobs violated their rights under article 14 (prohibition of discrimination) in conjunction with article 8 (private life) of the European Convention on Human Rights. Taking the Committee of Expert's surveys and observations concerning similar situations into account, the Court held that section 2 of the SSC Act was a disproportionate measure. In the Court's view, such a legislative scheme must be considered as lacking the necessary safeguards for avoiding discrimination and for guaranteeing adequate and appropriate judicial supervision of the imposition of such restrictions (paragraph 59). In the case of Rainys and Gasparavičius v. Lithuania (judgement of 7 April 2005), the Court reached the same conclusion in respect of the applicants' dismissal from private sector jobs on the basis of their status as "former permanent employees of the SSC".

The Committee also notes that the European Committee on Social Rights, in its 2006 conclusions concerning Lithuania, considered that the situation described above was not in conformity with the European Social Charter. That Committee concluded that while the measures in question served the legitimate purpose of protecting national security, they are not necessary and proportionate in that they apply to a large field of employment and not solely to those services which have responsibilities in the field of law and order and national security or to functions involving such responsibilities.

The Committee recalls that Convention No. 111 provides protection from discrimination in respect of access to employment and work in the public and private sectors. It recalls that requirements of a political nature can be set for a particular job but, to ensure that they are not contrary to the Convention, they should be limited to the characteristics of a particular post and be in proportion to its labour requirements. The Committee observes that the exclusions provided for under section 2 of the SSC Act apply broadly to employment in the public sector and to parts of the private sector rather than to specific jobs, functions or tasks (with the exception of the references to "lawyers or notaries", and "teachers and educators or heads of institutions" in educational institutions). The Committee is concerned that these provisions appear to go beyond justifiable exclusions in respect of a particular job based on its inherent requirements as provided for under Article 1, paragraph 2, of the Convention. It recalls that in order to ascertain whether a distinction could be permissible under Article 1(2), careful examination of each individual case is required. For measures not to be deemed discriminatory under Article 4, they must be measures affecting an individual on account of activities he or she is justifiably suspected of, or proven to be engaged in, which are prejudicial to the security of the State. The application of such measures must be examined in the light of the bearing which the activities concerned may have on the actual performance of the job, task or occupation of the person concerned. The Committee also notes that in cases where persons are deemed to be justifiably suspected of or engaged in activities prejudicial to the security of the State, the individual concerned shall have the right to appeal to a competent body in accordance with national practice. As stressed in the Committee's 1996 Special Survey, it is important that the appeals body is competent to hear the reasons for the measures taken against the appellant and to afford her or him the opportunity to represent her or his case in full (paragraph 129).

The Committee considers that the broad exclusion of "former permanent SSC employees" from work in the private and public sectors is not sufficiently well-defined and delimited to ensure that it does not lead to discrimination in employment and occupation based on political opinion. The Committee is concerned that the operation of this scheme may have deprived a considerable number of workers of their human right to equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation. While noting that the scheme provided for under the SSC Act is due to expire on 1 January 2009, the Committee urges the Government to revise the provisions concerned and, in doing so, to have recourse to the indications provided by the Committee in its General Survey of 1988 on equality in employment and occupation, in particular paragraphs 126, and 135–137, and of paragraphs 192–202 of the Special Survey of 1996.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to bring the legislation concerned into conformity with the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the practical application of the SSC Act, including information on the following:

- (a) the number of persons that are considered "former permanent SSC employees" and the number of such persons that have been dismissed from private or public employment or who had their application rejected;
- (b) the procedural protections of appellate review available to affected persons, and information on the outcome of any administrative or judicial decisions relevant to the application of these provisions; and
- (c) any measures taken or envisaged to remedy the situation of persons excluded from employment and occupation as a result of national law and practice that is contrary to Lithuania's international obligations.

Madagascar

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1962)

Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes that section 53 of Act No. 2003-044 of 28 July 2004 issuing the Labour Code provides that for the same vocational qualifications, the same job and work of equal value, wages shall be equal for all workers irrespective of their origin, colour, national extraction, sex, age, union affiliation, opinions and status under the conditions set out in that chapter. In its previous comments the Committee emphasized that such provisions appeared to be more restrictive than those of the Convention since they restrict the application of the principle to identical jobs. It notes the indication in the Government's report that this provision is applied more broadly in practice since there is an exact correspondence with the lowest category of job classification. However, the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to its general observation of 2006, in which it underlines the importance of establishing the principle of the Convention in the legislation in order to eliminate pay discrimination in situations where men and women carry out work which is different but of equal value. The Committee emphasizes that the concept of "work of equal value" encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature but nevertheless of equal value and that, in order to determine whether different jobs are of equal value, there has to be an examination of the respective tasks involved, on the basis of entirely objective and non-discriminatory criteria in order to avoid an assessment being tainted by gender bias. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that section 53 of the 2004 Labour Code is amended in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, in accordance with the Convention, and to supply information on the measures taken to this end.

Collective agreements. Discriminatory provisions. With regard to the procedure concerning the application of section XII of the Air Madagascar collective agreement relating to conditions of work for commercial air crews, which sets the retirement age at 50 years for men and 45 years for women, the Committee notes that the Court of Appeal of Antananarivo referred in its ruling of 5 April 2007 to the present Convention as ratified by Madagascar and considered that since section XII of the collective agreement provides for different treatment to the detriment of female air crew members, this constitutes gender-based discrimination. Ruling on the merits of the case, the Court of Appeal thus upheld Social Judgement No. 84 of 26 March 1999, which found that there had been unfair dismissals and ruled that the employer must pay damages and interest to the complainants. Noting this information with interest, the Committee asks the Government to indicate whether this Court of Appeal ruling has had an impact on the employment and remuneration of the female and male air crew members concerned. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to encourage the social partners to remove discriminatory provisions constituting obstacles to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value from collective agreements.

Malaysia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1997)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Application in law and practice. In its previous comments, the Committee welcomed the addition of gender to the prohibited grounds of discrimination contained in article 8 of the Constitution. Noting, however, that this provision only protects individuals from discrimination by the State or its agencies and does not reflect fully the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, the Committee remained concerned about the lack of a provision reflecting the principle of the Convention in the Employment Act or in the Wages Council Act. The Committee also stressed that the lack of court cases concerning discrimination in remuneration based on sex, rather than indicating an absence of discrimination, could in fact indicate the lack of an appropriate legal basis or procedures for bringing these claims to the attention of competent bodies, and a lack of public awareness of the principle of the Convention and of the existing remedies under the law. The Committee further emphasized that patriarchal attitudes and stereotypes regarding the roles and responsibilities of women and men in society regularly result in gender-biased undervaluation of the work performed by women and discriminatory determination of wages, benefits and other forms of remuneration received by them. The Committee therefore considered that specific measures should be taken, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure the full application of the Convention in law and practice, including a review of the current legislation with a view to giving legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and ensuring that it covers all the elements of remuneration indicated in Article 1(a) of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government expresses the view that the purpose of the Convention is that no employer is allowed to discriminate against workers on the basis of gender and that it provides for equal remuneration for the same work or work of a similar nature. The Government also states that the concept of equal remuneration, if based only on job evaluation and analysis, could be considered to be in conflict with the practice of determining remuneration on the basis of other factors such as academic qualifications or length of service. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, equal pay legislation would be incompatible with the practices of Malaysian industries, as under such legislation wage rates would be determined on the basis of a “politically motivating or social justice related factor”, rather than on the basis of productivity. In this regard, the Committee notes that promotional activities on the implementation of the “productivity linked wage system” (PLWG) are being carried out by the Industrial Relations Department. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that in practice there is no discrimination in remuneration between men and women performing jobs of “the same nature and category” and that no cases of gender discrimination in respect of remuneration have been dealt with by the labour inspectors and the competent courts of law. The Government also states that in the unionized sectors remuneration is fixed by collective agreements, and, the question of discrimination would not arise.

The Committee concludes from the views expressed by the Government that there is a serious misunderstanding as to the meaning of the provisions of the Convention, their scope, and application in practice. At the outset, the Committee points out that the Convention places upon ratifying Members of the ILO the obligation to ensure respect for the principle of the Convention, wherever the State is the employer or is in a position to intervene in the wage-fixing process, and to promote its application in other cases, through all appropriate means. In this connection, the Committee considers that the adoption of legislation which gives effect expressly to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is essential in order to promote and ensure its application, as required by the Convention. The Committee emphasizes that governments must act in good faith and cannot evade their obligations on the pretext that they are prevented from interfering in the wage-fixing process (see the General Survey of 1986 on equal remuneration, paragraph 29). Recalling its 2006 general observation, the Committee also wishes to stress that the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, the “same” or “similar” work, and that it also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. The application of the principle presupposes that work performed by women and men is compared and evaluated on the basis of objective factors, such as skill, effort, responsibilities or working conditions. In this regard, Article 3 of the Convention envisages the promotion of objective job evaluation methods. Such methods are particularly important in order to avoid the discriminatory undervaluation of jobs in which women are concentrated. The Committee emphasizes that the application of the principle of equal remuneration for women and men for work of equal value by no means excludes consideration of productivity-related criteria, length of service or relevant academic requirements, in the setting of remuneration, as long as these criteria are used in an objective and non-discriminatory manner. In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government:

- (i) to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to review the legislation so as to incorporate expressly the principle of equal remuneration for women and men for work of equal value, taking into account that it has to be applied to all the elements of remuneration as defined in Article 1(a) of the Convention;
- (ii) to take measures to promote the development and use of objective job evaluation on the basis of the work to be performed in line with the indications provided in the general observation of 2006 on this issue;
- (iii) to take appropriate measures to raise awareness and promote public understanding of the principle of the Convention;

(iv) to consider providing specific training on the concept of “work of equal value” and the issues relating to the application of the Convention to judges, labour inspectors and other relevant public officials, such as members of the inter-agency committees established by the Cabinet Committee on Gender Equality to review the national legislation ; and

(v) to provide information on any steps taken and results achieved regarding the above.

Mexico

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1952)

Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, there have been no changes to the legislation concerning the principle of equal pay for work performed in the same posts, working day and conditions of efficiency. The Committee reiterates that section 86 of the Federal Labour Act, which provides that “there shall be equal pay for equal work performed in the same post, for same working day hours of work and conditions of efficiency”, does not give effect to the principle set out in the Convention of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Work of equal value covers not only work that is equal, the same or similar but also different work in different jobs and different sectors, which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore asks the Government once again to take steps to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention and to provide information on the measures taken.

Wage gap. The Committee notes the statistical data provided by the Government. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report, the revenue gap between men and women was 31.1 per cent in 2006. The Government indicates that the revenue of men and women are traditionally compared based on net monthly income and that, according to this criterion, there has been a slight downward trend in recent years with regard to the gap, which has ranged from 43.9 per cent in 2000 to 32 per cent in 2007. Furthermore, it indicates that if the earnings per hour worked are compared based on the average income divided by the number of hours actually worked, the gap is reduced to 5 per cent on average. As the Government points out, the 5 per cent is an average across different branches of activity and the Committee notes that these differences are significant. There is a 0.6 per cent gap in wholesale trade, for example, and a 68.8 per cent gap in corporate management. In this regard, the Committee further notes that there is a gap per hour of 55 per cent in health and social assistance, 41.3 per cent in professional, scientific and technical services, 35.2 per cent in information and mass media and 39.5 per cent in manufacturing industries. The Committee considers that examining the gap according to branch of activity may help to uncover the reasons for the gap and facilitate appropriate action to reduce it, whereas the average gap across sectors does not help in investigating its origins. The Committee therefore asks the Government to examine in more detail the reasons for the gap in those branches in which the gap is 30 per cent or more and to provide detailed information on this matter. The Committee also asks the Government to continue providing information on any changes in the wage gap according to hours worked and branch of activity.

Republic of Moldova

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1996)

Discrimination on the basis of colour. Further to its previous comments on the absence of any reference to the ground of colour in the anti-discrimination provisions of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government’s explanation that “colour” would be covered by section 8(1) of the Code as it falls under the “other criteria which are not linked to the professional qualifications of the workers”. The Committee also notes from the Government’s report under the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities that a draft law on preventing and combating discrimination is being drawn up which will cover, among others, the areas of employment and education, thus complementing and clarifying the existing provisions of the Labour Code (ACFC/SR/III(2009)001, 24 February 2009, pages 7–8). Recalling once again the importance of including explicit references to all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a), of the Convention in national legislation prohibiting discrimination (see paragraph 206 of the Special Survey on equality in employment and occupation, 1996), the Committee encourages the Government to consider inserting an explicit prohibition of discrimination covering all grounds enumerated in the Convention, including colour, in the law on preventing and combating discrimination and requests it to provide a copy of the law once it has been adopted. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 8(1) of the Labour Code to cases of discrimination based on colour.

Mozambique

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1977)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value in law and practice. Over the years, the Committee has been emphasizing the need to ensure the consistent and full application of the principle of the Convention in national legislation. Noting the adoption of the new Labour Act (Law No. 23/2007) on 1 August 2007, the Committee regrets that the Government did not take this opportunity to include in the legislation a provision explicitly providing for equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee notes that under section 108(3) of the Act all employees have the right to receive equal wages and benefits for “equal work” without distinction based on, among others, sex. However, the Committee once again emphasizes that requiring equal remuneration solely for women and men who perform equal, similar or the same work falls short of fully reflecting the principle of the Convention, which also requires that women and men performing work of an entirely different nature, but which is nonetheless of equal value, be remunerated equally. The Committee refers to its 2006 general observation on the topic and urges the Government to take steps to amend section 108 of the Labour Act, 2007, so that it fully reflects the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value.

Namibia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2001)

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Labour Act (No. 11 of 2007) entered into force on 1 November 2008. It notes with interest that the new Act, while essentially maintaining sections 5 and 7 of the former Labour Act, 2004, concerning non-discrimination and the resolution of related disputes, has broadened the scope and the definition of discrimination. Previously, section 5 provided that a person must not discriminate “in any employment practice”; the current section states that a person must not discriminate “in any employment decision ... or adopt any requirement or engage in any practice which has the effect of discrimination”, which appears to cover indirect discrimination. The prohibited grounds, however, remain the same: race, colour, ethnic origin, sex, marital status, family responsibilities, religion, creed, political opinion, social or economic status, degree of physical or mental disability, AIDS or HIV status; or previous, current or future pregnancy. A new provision in section 33 has been added, providing that dismissal on the basis of an employee’s sex, race, colour, ethnic origin, religion, creed or social or economic status, political opinion or marital status is unfair dismissal. The Committee notes, however, that section 33 omits the additional grounds of AIDS or HIV status, degree of physical or mental disability and family responsibilities which are listed in section 5. Further, the Committee regrets that the 2007 Act does not prohibit discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation, which had been covered under the 1992 Act, and which the Government had previously indicated was to be covered pursuant to Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government as follows:

- (i) to provide information on the practical application of sections 5, 7 and 33 of the Labour Act, 2007, including information on the number, nature and outcome of disputes brought before the competent authorities;
- (ii) to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that workers are protected against dismissal on the grounds of HIV or AIDS status, degree of physical or mental disability and family responsibilities, including whether any cases in this regard have been lodged with the courts or other competent bodies and the results thereof; and
- (iii) the Committee again requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to ensure that workers are protected against discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation.

Articles 2 and 5. Implementation of national policy and affirmative action. In its previous observation the Committee noted that, although the number of affirmative action plans received under the Affirmative Action (Employment) Act, 1998, had increased during 2005–06, this had not necessarily translated into an improvement of the representation of persons in designated groups in management positions. The Committee also noted that the reporting threshold was lowered to workplaces with more than 25 employees. The Committee notes from the 2007–08 annual report of the Employment Equity Commission that the representation of racially disadvantaged persons in managerial positions dropped by 5 per cent. The report also shows that racially disadvantaged persons represented approximately 90 per cent of the total number of employees, and accounted for 59 per cent of the workers in managerial positions but only 27 per cent of them held a post as executive director. Women represented only 16 per cent of the total numbers of executive directors while accounting for 41.47 per cent of employees. As to persons with disabilities, the Committee notes that they represented 0.4 per cent of the total number of employees reported and they held 0.8 per cent of the managerial positions. The Committee further notes that the scarcity of skilled persons from designated groups (racially disadvantaged persons, women, persons with disabilities) was cited by some employers as an obstacle to the implementation of affirmative action. The Committee also notes that persons from designated groups are concentrated in the public service and the service sector. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to implement affirmative action in employment and occupation, and on any measures to increase the impact thereof. Please include information on measures to ensure and promote equality of opportunity and treatment of persons from designated groups in respect of access to vocational training with a view to fostering both their career advancement and their access to a wider range of jobs. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on any other policies and measures taken to promote and ensure the application of the principle of the Convention with respect to the designated groups, in cooperation with the social partners, and their impact.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

New Zealand

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the extensive information in the Government's report and the comments by the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) and by Business New Zealand (Business NZ) attached to the Government's report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal pay legislation. The Committee recalls that the Employment Relations Act, 2000, (ERA), the Human Rights Act, 1993, (HRA) and the Equal Pay Act, 1972, (EPA) limit the requirement for equal remuneration for men and women to the same and similar work, which is more restrictive than the concept of "equal value" provided for in the Convention. Furthermore, the ERA limits the scope of comparison to situations where men and women work for the same employer. The Committee notes the Governments' statement that the EPA provides broad protection which is further strengthened by other legislation, policies and initiatives, including the Five-Year Plan of Action on Pay and Employment Equity. The Government also indicates that it has no current plans to review the EPA but will continue to monitor developments in this regard. The Committee recalls that in 2004 the Task Force on Pay and Employment Equity defined "pay equity" as "men and women receiving the same pay for the same work and for work which is different, but of equal value". The Committee, recalling its 2006 general observation on this Convention asks the Government to continue to report on any developments with respect to the amendment of its equal pay legislation, with a view to giving full legal expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Government is also requested to provide information on any judicial decisions indicating that the Equal Pay Act is being interpreted by the courts in conformity with the broader meaning of Articles 1(b) and 2 of the Convention.

Applying the principle in the public service. The Committee notes with interest the implementation of the Five-Year Plan of Action on Pay and Employment Equity in the public service, and particularly the pay and employment equity reviews and response plans that have been undertaken in the thirty nine departments. The findings of the reviews carried out by mid-2008 indicate a gender pay gap ranging from 3 to 25 per cent, higher starting rates and performance pay for men, an under-evaluation of women's work, an under-representation of women in management and their concentration in administrative and clerical work with limited career paths, difficult career-advancement for part-time workers, and workplace cultures that limit women's contributions. The Committee notes that the organizations' responses to the pay reviews include reviewing job-evaluation methods for gender bias, undertaking job-evaluation exercises, ensuring that performance pay systems are gender-neutral, improving access to flexible work, supporting managers in managing flexible work, and improving professional development and career-paths for jobs primarily performed by women. The Government indicates that action on the responses is at an early stage but would include some of the following interventions: pay increases for re-evaluated jobs, gender-sensitive human resources policies, systems and data, more flexible work arrangements, some permanent employment contracts and new career paths across job levels. The Committee notes that two pay investigations have been agreed in public sector-based occupations in which women are predominant. The Pay and Employment Equity Unit of the Ministry of Labour will monitor and analyse action on the responses proposed, and report on the progress made. The Committee welcomes the efforts made in promoting and applying the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value in the public service through pay and employment equity reviews, and asks the Government to continue to report on the action taken to implement the recommendations made by the reviews.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report as well as the communication from the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) and the Government's reply thereon. With respect to the NZCTU's comments concerning migrant workers under the Recognized Seasonal Employer (RSE) Scheme, the Committee notes that the issues raised primarily relate to inequalities with respect to social security, remuneration, accommodation and trade union membership covered by the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97). As some of the issues have been addressed by the Committee in its observation of 2007 on Convention No. 97, the Committee will examine the NZCTU's comments on the RSE Scheme together with the Government's next report on that Convention.

Access to employment and vocational training – Maori and Pacific Island peoples. The Committee recalls its previous observation addressing issues relating to the occupational segregation of Maori and Pacific Island people into certain occupations and their generally lower education, qualifications and skills levels. The Committee notes the Government's statement that despite the increasing labour force participation of Maori there is a need to ensure that skills of those Maori entering employment are matched to higher skilled and higher wage jobs. The Government also indicates that Pacific Island people, especially women, continue to be overrepresented among the unemployed, lower skilled and low-income earners. Maori and Pacific Island people also continue to be disproportionately represented in services and sales, trades and elementary occupations. The Committee further notes from the communication of NZCTU that, according to 2005 statistics, 20 per cent of Pacific Island workers earned less than the current minimum wage level. The Committee notes that there are a number of initiatives in place to increase skills levels of, and provide employment assistance to, Maori and Pacific Island people. The positive outcomes for Maori under the initiatives to improve sustainable employment, as well as the positive outcomes of the training programmes run in 2007 by the Tertiary Education Commission to achieve equality in employment and vocational training are particularly noteworthy. However, participation of Maori and Pacific Island people remains low in industry training and particularly in the Modern Apprenticeship Scheme. While welcoming the Government's commitment to improving the education levels of Maori and Pacific Island people and to increase their training and employment opportunities, the Committee invites the Government to accelerate its efforts to address the continuing inequalities faced by Maori and particularly Pacific Island people in the labour market. The Government is requested to provide information on what lessons have been learned on the impact achieved so far from the various strategies, programmes and initiatives used to improve the skills levels and sustainable employment for men and women belonging to Maori and Pacific Island communities.

Access to vocational training and occupation – Women. The Committee recalls that training and vocational guidance are of paramount importance for achieving equality in the labour market in that they are a key element in determining the actual possibilities of gaining access to a wide range of occupations and employment. The Committee recalls the low participation rate (26.7 per cent) of women in courses provided by industry training organizations (ITOs) and the extremely low (less than 10 per cent) participation rate of women in some of the courses offered by the Modern Apprenticeship Scheme. The Committee notes the information concerning the training programmes run by the Tertiary Education Commission, including the positive outcomes regarding the participation rates and subsequent employment of women for some of the programmes. It also notes, however, that the NZCTU continues to express concern at the low participation of women in the Modern Apprenticeship Scheme, and points out that female participation is almost nonexistent in the three industries dominating the Scheme, notably building and construction, engineering and motor engineering. According to the NZCTU, public sector and tourism are the only sectors where there are more women than men. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Equal Employment Opportunities (EEO) Commissioner and the Industry Training Fund (ITF) continue to take measures to improve diversity in the Modern Apprenticeship Scheme and to promote the spread of industry training into new industries in which women predominate. No information had been provided however on the specific results of these efforts. The Committee asks the Government to step up its efforts to extend industry training and the Modern Apprenticeship Scheme to industries in which women predominate and to encourage women's enrolment in courses where their participation is particularly low. The Government is also requested to continue to report on the results achieved by the EEO Commissioner and the ITF to promote diversity and to promote equality of opportunity and treatment with respect to the vocational training courses offered to men and women. With respect to occupational segregation, the Committee also refers to its observations on the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Pakistan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee recalls that since the Convention's ratification by Pakistan, it has been commenting on the importance of enacting legislation to ensure the effective application of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a draft "Employment and Service Conditions Act" has been prepared which includes provisions on equal remuneration for men and women. The Committee stresses that provisions intended to give effect to the Convention should give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In particular, the provisions should not be limited to providing equal remuneration for "equal", the "same" or "similar" work, but should also provide for equal remuneration for men and women for work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. In addition, the legislation should ensure that this equal remuneration principle applies to all aspects of remuneration, as broadly defined in Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to continue its efforts to put in place legislation giving effect to the Convention and to ensure that this legislation is in full conformity with the Convention.

Minimum wages. In its previous observation, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the specific and practical measures taken to ensure that minimum wages are set in accordance with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In reply, the Government states that in view of the presence of employers, workers and government representatives on the provincial minimum wages boards, care has been taken to ensure that no bias is shown as regards jobs predominately performed by women. The Committee considers that the tripartite nature of the Provincial Minimum Wages Board, while important, does not in itself ensure, that wage rates for categories of work predominately performed by women are not set at lower levels than the rates for male-dominated work where the work performed by men and women is, in fact, of equal value. The Committee therefore encourages the Government, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations to examine the functioning of the mechanisms for the setting of minimum wages in the light of the need to promote and ensure the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to indicate any steps taken in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to provide copies of the minimum wage notifications currently in force, and to indicate which of the occupational groups covered tend to be female dominated.

Awareness raising and training. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Directorate of Workers' Education under the Ministry of Labour, Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis, the National Institute of Labour Administration and Training and the Industrial Relations Institute are undertaking education and training activities for workers through seminars, workshops and training courses, including activities relating to the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide more detailed information on these training activities, including the number of courses and participants, as well as examples of the training materials used as regards the principles of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Further, please indicate any activities specifically implemented for employers, and whether any of these activities have addressed the issue of objective job evaluation.

Cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalls that the Government has closely cooperated with the employers' and workers' organizations in the preparation of the Labour Protection Policy (2006). It notes the comments received from the Pakistan Workers' Federation on the dialogue held with the Government and the Employers' Federation of Pakistan on strengthening the labour inspection machinery. The Committee also notes that, as a follow-up to the labour protection policy, the Government has started studies on a number of important issues, including the links between working and living conditions and productivity, labour protection in the informal economy, and the effectiveness of the labour administration. Trusting that these studies will provide an opportunity to examine issues relating to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and identify measures to strengthen its application, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken with a view to examining the issue of equal remuneration in the context of the abovementioned studies, and the results of these studies, once available.

Statistical information. The Committee notes that the Government has not yet provided statistical information on the earnings of men and women. Recalling that statistical information on the levels of remuneration of men and women working in the different sectors of the economy is an important means to monitor progress with regard to promoting and ensuring respect for the principle of equal remuneration, the Committee asks the Government to indicate to what extent such data are being collected and published.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under the Payment of Wages Act, 1936, provincial governments have appointed inspectors who can examine documents relating to the calculation of wages and payment of wages. Further, the provincial payment of wages authorities can hear and decide any matter relating to the payment of wages. The Committee concludes from the indications given in the Government's report, that the labour inspectorate and the labour courts have apparently not yet addressed any cases concerning violations of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the provincial wages inspectors and payment of wages authorities have dealt with any cases involving equal remuneration for work of equal value, and to continue to provide information on any such cases that might have been dealt with by other competent bodies, including the labour courts. The Committee encourages the Government, in addition to including equal remuneration provisions in the legislation, to take appropriate measures with a view to strengthening the mechanisms to enforce the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to indicate the measures taken in this regard.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Legislation. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's statement that under the Constitution of Pakistan, all citizens have equal opportunities in private and public employment and that the labour legislation was being applied equally to all workers, without discrimination. The Government adds that no complaints of discrimination in any industrial or commercial undertaking had been recorded. The Committee notes that the Convention aims at the protection against discrimination in employment and occupation of all workers, both citizens and non-citizens. The Committee also recalls that constitutional protection alone, while being important, may not be sufficient in terms of granting effective protection from discrimination in employment and occupation, and that the mere absence of discriminatory provisions in the legislation does not amount to a prohibition of discrimination, nor does it generally provide an appropriate legal basis for discrimination complaints to be brought.

The Committee recalls that the Convention aims at the elimination of discrimination as defined in Article 1 of the Convention through the adoption and implementation of a national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment (Article 2). Under Article 3(b), Pakistan has undertaken to enact such legislation as may be calculated to secure the acceptance and observance of such national policy. The Committee also recalls that, in its 2008 General Report, it stressed the importance of adopting non-discrimination and equality legislation in order to give effect to the Convention.

In this context, the Committee refers to its comments under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), in which it notes that the Government has prepared a draft Employment and Service Conditions Act which contains a provision on equal remuneration for men and women. The Committee trusts that the Government will give due consideration to introducing into the legislation non-discrimination provisions prohibiting discrimination in employment and occupation based on race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin, and any other ground determined after consultations with workers' and employers' organizations, as provided for under Articles 1(1)(a) and 1(1)(b) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that where provisions are being adopted to give effect to the Convention, they should, as a minimum, cover discrimination on all the seven grounds explicitly listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. It is equally required by the Convention that equality of opportunity and treatment is ensured with respect to selection and recruitment, all terms and conditions of employment, as well as termination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken with a view to including provisions on non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation in the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act and to provide a copy of the Act as soon as it is adopted.

Sexual harassment. With regard to its previous comments concerning the prevalence of sexual harassment in the workplace and the ongoing efforts to address it, the Committee notes the Government's indications that the Ministry of Women's Development has prepared two draft bills which comprehensively address sexual harassment of women in the workplace. The Committee understands that since the Government submitted its report, the bills were approved by Cabinet on 9 February 2009 and are now pending in Parliament. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in adopting legislation on sexual harassment in the workplace, and to provide a copy of the new legislation as soon as it is adopted.

Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes that according to the Labour Force Survey 2007/2008, the labour force participation rate (refined) was 69.5 per cent for men and 19.6 per cent for women, whereas the corresponding figures for 2001–02 were 70.3 per cent for men and 14.4 per cent for women. While welcoming the progress made with regard to women's participation in the labour force, the Committee observes that the gender differential, as regards labour force participation, continues to be high. The Committee also notes that women's participation rate increased in rural areas, whereas it actually decreased in urban areas. With regard to the employment status of men and women, the Committee notes from data established for 2001–02 and 2007–08, that the percentages of women being employees and own-account workers significantly decreased, combined with a gradual increase of women in the category of unpaid family workers (from 46.9 to 65 per cent). Women remain concentrated in unskilled elementary occupations or skilled agricultural work. In this context, the Committee notes the observations made by the Pakistan Workers Federation (PWF) in their communication dated 21 September 2008, stressing the need for measures to enable women to move from the informal to the formal economy, including through extending social security and minimum wages, and training and education for rural women.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to the Committee's comments regarding gender equality in employment and occupation. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Women's Development is implementing a National Gender Reform Plan (GRAP) which provides for measures to increase women's employment in the public sector, including through improvements of office facilities to provide for restrooms and day care facilities. The Government also continued to implement a 10 per cent quota for women in government employment at the federal level; efforts are under way to increase the quota to 20 per cent. The Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the implementation of the public sector quota system, including statistical information on the current distribution of men and women in the different government departments, jobs and positions. The Committee further requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to promote and ensure women's equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation beyond the public sector, as well as statistical information indicating the progress made in enhancing their participation in the labour market, both in rural and urban areas. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the specific measures taken:

- (i) to promote gender equality in the private sector; and
- (ii) to enable women to move from the informal to the formal economy.

As regards the access of women and girls to education and training, the Government states that emphasis is presently placed on increasing participation of girls in secondary school education. The measures taken in this area include scholarships and subsidies for low-income households, revision of the curricula and textbooks to avoid gender stereotypical views and media campaigns to change social attitudes towards girls' education. The new draft National Education Policy sets the target of achieving gender parity among teachers at all levels of education by 2015. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to promote equal access of girls to education and training at all levels, as well as updated statistical information in this regard.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of minorities. The Committee notes with interest that by a Cabinet decision of 20 May 2009, the Government introduced a 5 per cent quota for the employment of minorities in federal government employment. The modalities of implementation of the quota have been notified in Office Memorandum No. 4/15/94-R-2, dated 26 May 2009, of the Cabinet Secretariat's Establishment Division. The Committee notes that the quota is to apply to any person who is "a non-Muslim" as defined in article 260(3)(b) of the Constitution ("a person belonging to the Christian, Hindu, Sikh, Buddhist or Parsi community, a person of the Qadiani Group or the Lahori Group who call themselves ‘Ahmadis’ or by any other name, or a Bahai, and a person belonging to any of the Scheduled Castes”). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in implementing the 5 per cent quota for employment of minorities in the federal government employment, including statistical information on the number of minority members employed, disaggregated by sex and minority group, and according to government department, jobs and positions.

The Committee further notes that, as indicated by the Government, the National Commission for Minorities, which was formally established in 1993, is non-functional at present, although a proposal to reconstitute it was before the Prime Minister for approval. Chaired by the Minister for Minorities, the Commission is mandated, inter alia, to examine laws and administrative practices alleged to be discriminatory against minorities, to recommend to the Government steps to ensure full and effective participation by minorities in all aspects of national life, and to look into grievances of minority communities. The Committee notes that the Government also implements a development scheme and offers scholarships to minority students. The Committee trusts that the National Commission for Minorities will be reconstituted in the near future and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard. It also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of schemes and programmes to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment for minorities in training and education, and also to provide information on any other measures taken to promote access of minorities to employment and occupation, including self-employment.

Discrimination based on social origin. The Committee notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its concluding observations of 4 March 2009, has expressed concern about the persisting de facto segregation and discrimination against Dalits regarding their enjoyment of economic, civil, political and social rights, and the fact that no specific legislation prohibiting discrimination based on caste has been adopted (CERD/C/PAK/CO/20, 4 March 2009, paragraph 21). Recalling that discrimination based on caste is a form of discrimination based on social origin covered by the Convention, the Committee stresses that ratifying States have an obligation to take effective measures towards the elimination of such discrimination in employment and occupation. In this regard, the Committee recommends that a prohibition of discrimination based on social origin, including caste, be included in the legislation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, irrespective of caste, through legislation and other appropriate measures.

Discrimination based on religion. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning certain provisions of the Penal Code relating to offences relating to religion (“blasphemy laws”). Some of these offences single out the members of the Ahmadi minority. For instance, section 298C establishes sentences of imprisonment for up to three years for members of this group who, inter alia, preach or propagate their faith, whether by spoken or written words, or by visible representations. The Committee also recalls that Pakistani passports include a mention of religion and that Muslims applying for a passport must sign a declaration to the effect that the founder of the Ahmadi movement is an impostor, which is designed to prevent members of this movement from obtaining passports identifying them as Muslims. The Committee recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have expressed concern for many years over the impact of these measures on the enjoyment of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the religious minority concerned. The Committee also recalls that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the question of religious intolerance concluded in 1996 that provisions specifically applying to the Ahmadi minority were questionable, stressing that blasphemy legislation should not be discriminatory and should not give rise to abuse. The Special Rapporteur also recommended that no mention of religion should be included in passports and that the declaration mentioned above be deleted (E/CN.4/1996/95/Add.1, paragraphs 82 and 85). More recently, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination expressed concern about the risk that blasphemy laws may be used in a discriminatory manner against minority groups (CERD/C/PAK/CO/20, paragraph 19). The Committee also notes that during the Universal Periodic Review of Pakistan under the auspices of the UN Human Rights Council, the Government announced that “specific steps are being considered to strengthen laws and procedures to reduce incidence of their abuse” (A/HRC/8/42/Add.1, 28 August 2008, paragraph 8). While noting the general explanations provided by the Government in its report regarding the protection of freedom of religion available under the Constitution, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to review the abovementioned measures, and to provide information on any steps taken in this regard, as announced during the Universal Periodic Review.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Panama

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes the communication of the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprise Workers (FENASEP), dated 23 July 2009, sent to the Government on 31 August 2009. The Committee notes that the communication refers to the violation of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value in the public sector and, specifically to the absence of rates of remuneration established without discrimination based on sex. The Committee notes that it has not yet received the Government’s observations in reply to the comments made by FENASEP.

The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in the public sector, including statistics on the wage levels of public servants disaggregated by sex, occupational category and post, and any other information that it considers appropriate in reply to the comments submitted by FENASEP.

Article 1 of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee refers to its previous comments in which it asked the Government to amend section 10 of the Labour Code, which is limited to guaranteeing equal remuneration for “equal work”, in order to give full legislative expression to the concept of equal remuneration for men and women for “work of equal value”, as provided for under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that no progress has been made in this regard given that a consensus has not been reached among the social partners to amend the Labour Code. The Committee also notes that the Government reiterates the arguments put forward by the Legal Advisory Department of the Ministry of Labour and Employment Development (MITRADEL) that there is no inconsistency between section 10 of the Labour Code and the Convention. The Committee notes, in particular, that the Government indicates in its report that the Convention takes legal precedence over Panama’s national law and must therefore be applied in all labour relations and employment contracts.

However, the Committee notes the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of Justice of Panama, referred to by FENASEP in its communication, that international conventions normally lack constitutional hierarchy and that the State therefore has an obligation to adapt its domestic legislation to the provisions of such conventions (Legal Registry of May 1991). The Committee also notes the difficulties which continue to be encountered in applying the Convention in practice, which are reflected in a significant and persistent wage gap between men and women. The Committee considers that there is a lack of understanding concerning the scope of the principle of the Convention and that incorporating this principle into the national legislation in accordance with the Convention would help to clarify the situation.

The Committee therefore draws the Government’s attention once again to its general observation of 2006. The Committee emphasizes that the concept of equal remuneration for “work of equal value”, although encompassing equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work, is broader than that because it requires that equal remuneration also be given to workers carrying out work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. This comparison between different jobs is essential due to the gender segregation which exists in the labour market, which results in certain jobs being performed mainly or exclusively by men or women. The Committee also reminds the Government that provisions that are expressed more narrowly than the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination. The Committee therefore asks the Government to:

- (i) promote dialogue with the social partners on the need to expressly prohibit pay discrimination in situations in which men and women perform different jobs which are nonetheless of equal value with a view to amending section 10 of the Labour Code;
- (ii) expressly establish in its legislation the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value;
- (iii) provide information on any progress made in these respects; and
- (iv) provide information on the steps taken or envisaged to promote understanding of the principle of the Convention by the authorities and organizations of workers and employers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes the communication sent by the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprise Workers (FENASEP), dated 23 July 2009, sent to the Government on 31 August 2009. The Committee notes that the communication refers to the risk of public servants being dismissed because of their political opinions in connection with elections. The Committee notes that it has not yet received the Government’s observations in reply to these comments. However, the Committee recalls that FENASEP had already raised the problem of discrimination on political grounds in its previous communications and the Committee addressed that matter in its previous observations.

Discrimination based on political opinion. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a communication from FENASEP in 2001, in which it indicated that the Government had dismissed more than 19,000 public servants without just cause and without following the procedures established by law. FENASEP pointed out that 80 per cent of those dismissed were registered members of the political party called the Democratic Revolutionary Party (PRD) and that the dismissals constituted discrimination on political grounds in breach of Article 1 of the Convention. In its 2008 observation, the Committee noted another communication sent by FENASEP, received on 7 October 2008 and sent to the Government on 13 October 2008, which pointed out the lack of progress made in the work of the bipartite commission comprising officials of the Ministry of Labour (MITRADEL) and FENASEP aimed at reinstating the persons concerned. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that the majority of leaders dismissed were reinstated in their posts or appointed to the various state bodies. The Committee also notes that in May 2008, the Government issued the necessary instructions for all public servants working under a contract with government bodies to be made permanent so that they would be able to enter the administrative career system. The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to prevent the recurrence of similar cases of discrimination based on political opinion and requests it to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to that end. The Committee also requests the Government to continue its efforts through the above bipartite commission, to solve the cases of dismissal based on political opinion which are still pending.

Administrative career system. The Committee recalls that the Government re-established the administrative career system to integrate public servants into the system in order to protect them from political pressure. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, Act No. 9 of 20 June 1994 which establishes and regulates the administrative career system was amended by Act No. 24 of 2 July 2007 and Act No. 14 of 28 January 2008 with the result that from 30 April 2008, the special procedure for entry into the administrative career system could no longer be used and the only way of entering the public administration was the regular procedure by means of competitive examination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the aim of this amendment was to eliminate the possibility of appointing political officials to administrative career posts on a discretionary basis. The Committee also notes that according to the provisions of section 136 of Act No. 9, as amended by the above Acts, the stability of employment of career public servants is dependent, inter alia, on their effective, productive, honest, efficient and responsible performance. The Committee also notes that section 5 of Executive Decree No. 44 of 11 April 2008 stipulates that the administrative career system shall promote the occupation of all public posts by public servants who stand out for their suitability, competence, loyalty, morals and honesty. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 136 of Act No. 9 and section 5 of Executive Decree No. 44, particularly concerning the interpretation of the requirement of loyalty from public servants, including information on any court decisions handed down in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the percentage of public servants who have been integrated into the administrative career system through the special entry procedure in accordance with section 67 of Act No. 9.

Gender-based discrimination. The Committee refers to its previous comments in which it considered communications received from FENASEP concerning cases of the dismissal of women on the grounds of maternity or pregnancy. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the women were employed under fixed-term contracts and that they were removed from their posts simply because the period for which they had been recruited came to an end. The Committee notes that in its 2008 communication, FENASEP refers to new cases of the dismissal of women who were pregnant or on maternity leave by the National Bank of Panama. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern at the practice of requiring pregnancy tests as a condition for access to employment (CCPR/C/PAN/CO/3, 17 April 2008, paragraph 16). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent discrimination on the ground of pregnancy, especially with regard to access to employment and job security and to ensure that temporary contracts are not used as a means to discriminate against woman based on pregnancy. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in the context of its equality policy to ensure that women on temporary contracts do not find themselves in situations where they are vulnerable to discrimination on the basis of pregnancy.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1970)

Equality between men and women. Policies, plans, programmes and application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Act No. 28983 of 2007, Law of Equality of Opportunity for Men and Women, and asked the Government to provide information concerning the policies, plans and programmes adopted under this Law. The Committee notes that since the entry into force of this law, a budget with a focus on gender has been approved at the national level (Act No. 29083, National Budget System). On the basis of this budget, public authorities include the impact of gender equality policies in the analysis of budget evaluation. The Committee notes that among the national policies to be implemented by the national government authorities, the second policy "equality between men and women" was adopted together with targets and indicators. The Committee notes that in 2007 various regional and local authorities referred to in the Government's report adopted policies on equality of opportunity for men and women. With regard to education, the Government refers to inclusive education programmes and mentions, among others, Directive No. 001-2007-VMGP/DITOE which promotes the inclusion of a focus on gender in the initial, primary and secondary levels. The Government also provides information on the National Programme to Foster Literacy, as a result of which in 2007, 666,000 persons were taught to read and write throughout the country, 79 per cent of which were women. With regard to the indicators and statistical information, the Government indicates that it has developed a system to follow up and monitor the Plan of Equality of Opportunity for Men and Women and that the National Institute of Statistics and Computing prepared a Statistics Plan 2008–12 which will allow the development of indicators linked to the theme of gender. The Committee notes that in 2010, official statistical information disaggregated by sex will be available with gender indicators and that in certain areas referred to in the Government's report, such statistics already exist. Moreover, the Committee notes that three Observatories of Women have been established in Puno, Apurimac and Ayacucho. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation of the measures adopted, particularly the indicators and statistics and on any new measure adopted under the Law of Equality of Opportunity for Men and Women. Please also provide information on the participation of the social partners in the elaboration and implementation of these measures.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1957)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning section 6(2) of the Labour Code (Act No. 53/2003) which provided for equal pay for equal work rather than for equal remuneration for work of equal value, as required by the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes with satisfaction that Emergency Ordinance No. 55/2006 amended the Labour Code to provide in section 6(3) that “any discrimination based on sex shall, as regards all elements and conditions of compensation, be prohibited for equal work or work of equal value”. The Committee notes that the Emergency Ordinance was approved by Act No. 94/2007 of 16 April 2007. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the enforcement of section 6(3) of the Labour Code, including relevant decisions of the labour inspectorate or the courts.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1973)

Discrimination based on political opinion – inherent requirements of the job. In its previous observations, the Committee drew the Government’s attention to section 50 of Act No. 188/1999 on civil servants, as amended and reissued in 2004, which provides that “to hold public office a person shall meet the following conditions: ... (j) [shall] not have been carrying out an activity in the political police as defined by the law”. The Committee noted that this restriction regarding entry into the civil service may go beyond what would be a justifiable exclusion in respect of a particular job based on its inherent requirements as provided for under Article 1(2) of the Convention.

The Committee cannot but regret that for the second consecutive time, the Government has failed to reply to the Committee’s comments on this matter. It recalls that without the cooperation of governments, it is unable to fulfil the mandate entrusted to it. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government once again to supply information on what constitutes an “activity in the political police” under section 50(j) of Act No. 188/1999, as amended, including relevant laws and judicial decisions, and to provide detailed information on the rationale and practical application of this provision, including the number of persons that have been excluded from the civil service on this basis.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1956)

Application in practice. The Committee notes the Government’s report which contains general information regarding the situation of women in the labour market. However, the Government has once again failed to provide the information requested by the Committee in its previous comments. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to provide the following:

- (i) detailed statistical information on the earnings of women and men in the private and public sectors, as far as possible as set out in the Committee’s 1998 general observation;
- (ii) information on the measures taken or planned to raise awareness and understanding of the right to equal remuneration for women and men for work of equal value among workers and employers, as well as public officials responsible for monitoring the application of the Convention;
- (iii) information on equal pay cases dealt with by the competent administrative and judicial authorities; and
- (iv) information on the specific steps taken to seek the cooperation of employers’ and workers’ organizations with a view to giving effect to the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee urges the Government to provide the information requested in its next report.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Gender equality and special measures of protection. The Committee recalls its comments regarding Resolution No. 162 adopted by the Government on 25 February 2000 which contains a list of industries, occupations and work from which women are excluded. The Resolution excludes women from being employed in 456 occupations in 38 sectors of industry. In its report, the Government states that the list contained in Resolution No. 162 is in accordance with section 253 of the Labour Code which provides that “the use of labour of women in arduous work and work in harmful and/or dangerous conditions, and also in underground work, except for non-physical work or work with regard to sanitary and domestic servicing, shall be limited". The Government states that the list contained in Resolution No. 162 has been established on the basis of consultations with representatives of scientific and research institutes and that every restriction has been medically justified. The Government confirms that the list's intention was not specifically to protect women's reproductive health, but more broadly to "exclude women from such working conditions which generally do not correspond to the requirements of life and health protection of workers". The Government points out that, in accordance with Resolution No. 162, the employer may decide to assign women to work included on the list provided that the employer creates safe working conditions and these are certified as safe by the competent state authorities. In the Government's view, Resolution No. 162 did not require any changes as it did not establish unjustified restrictions.

The Committee maintains that Resolution No. 162 raises issues with regard to equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of men and women. It recalls that the Convention aims at promoting and ensuring equality of men and women, inter alia, in respect of terms and conditions of employment, including regarding occupational safety and health measures. The Convention therefore requires the Government to provide occupational safety and health protection to men and women on an equal footing. However, the approach embodied in Resolution No. 162 raises doubts as to whether adequate measures are being taken to provide such equal protection. Further, the Committee recalls that, where special measures of protection for women within the meaning of Article 5 of the Convention are being taken, it must be ascertained that exclusions from employment opportunities are limited to cases where this is strictly necessary to protect women's reproductive health and that the measures are proportional to the nature and the scope of the protection needed. The Committee considers that the exclusion of women from any work or employment due to arduous, hazardous or dangerous working conditions that involve equal risks for men and women goes beyond what is permitted under Article 5. On this basis, the Committee also remains concerned that broad exclusions from employment opportunities due to occupational safety and health concerns that only apply to women not only have a discriminatory effect on women's equality in the labour market, but may also hinder further progress in providing healthy and safe working environments to men and women. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to review the current system of protective measures excluding women from employment opportunities with a view to ensuring equal opportunities for women and men and equal protection of health and safety, and provide information on the action taken in this regard. Please also include information on the measures taken to consult workers' and employers' organizations and the results of such consultations.

Enforcement of the Labour Code's non-discrimination provisions. The Committee previously noted that, following the 2006 amendments to the Labour Code, persons considering themselves to be discriminated against in the sphere of labour can no longer petition the labour inspectorate. In this connection, the Committee notes the Government's explanation to the effect that due to the special nature of labour disputes regarding discrimination, it was considered preferable to have such matters decided by the courts through civil legal proceedings, rather than by the labour inspectorate through administrative proceedings. Accordingly, the legislation does not permit the Federal Service on Labour and Employment to settle disputes regarding discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases concerning discrimination in employment and occupation brought before the court under the Labour Code, and on the outcome of such cases. In addition, noting that the broad mandate of the Federal Service on Labour and Employment would not appear to exclude it from providing information and at least advice on the prohibition of discrimination to workers and employers, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to strengthen the capacity of labour inspectors to provide such advice.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes from statistical data compiled by the ILO that in 2008 the rate of economically active women (over 15 years of age and older) was 56.1 per cent, compared to a rate of 70.4 per cent for men. The Committee notes that the labour market in the Russian Federation remains highly segregated, with women being concentrated in clerical occupations and underrepresented in senior positions. The Committee also notes that the Government's report contains no reply to the Committee's previous comments requesting information on the measures taken to promote equal opportunities of men and women in employment and occupation, including information on the specific steps taken to ensure that men and women have equal access to employment in the broadest possible range of sectors and industries, as well as at all levels of responsibility. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to supply the requested information, as well as updated detailed statistical information on the distribution of men and women in the different sectors and industries, as well as levels of responsibility.

The Committee notes the Government's confirmation that a draft Federal Law on state guarantees of equal rights and freedoms and equal opportunities for men and women in the Russian Federation has been adopted by the State Duma in a first reading. However, the report highlights that a number of issues have arisen in the course of the elaboration of the draft Law. More specifically, the Government indicates that some of the provisions should rather be included in the federal Constitution. The Government also notes that there are overlaps with legislation already in force and uncertainties as to which government body would be in charge of supervision. The Government adds that it would be preferable to introduce amendments to the Labour Code instead. The Committee hopes that further efforts will be made to strengthen the legal framework in the Russian Federation to promote and ensure gender equality in employment and occupation and requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and progress made in this regard.

Equality of opportunity and treatment of ethnic minorities and indigenous peoples. In its report, the Government refers to the Constitution which requires the State to guarantee the equality of human and citizens' rights, regardless of race, nationality, language, origin, place of residence, religion and prohibits "all forms of limitations of human rights on social, racial, national, linguistic or religious grounds" (article 19). The Government also acknowledges that a number of constituent republics of the Russian Federation are built on "national and territorial principles", which explains some of the problems in these republics with regard to preferences being given to people belonging to the locally predominant ethnic group. The Government considers that these problems cannot be overcome by legal means. It states that with a view to overcoming "discriminatory trends in the field of employment and occupation" and to build harmonious inter-ethnic relations, it is necessary to encourage ethnic associations created under the Federal Law on National and Cultural Autonomy, 1996, to participate in addressing these problems. In this connection, the Committee also notes that the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination has recently recommended that measures be taken to address discrimination against ethnic minority workers in respect of recruitment (CERD/C/RUS/CO/19, 20 August 2008, paragraph 25). The Committee welcomes the Government's acknowledgement that there is a need for measures promoting non-discrimination in employment and occupation based on ethnic or national origin and to promote tolerance between the various ethnic groups in the country. The Committee shares the Government's view that promotional measures involving civil society organizations is important, but it also stresses the need to provide effective legal protection from discrimination. The Committee recommends that measures be taken to strengthen the enforcement of the Labour Code's provision on non-discrimination, with particular emphasis on discrimination on racial or ethnic grounds. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of ethnic minorities through promotional measures as well as effective enforcement of the legislation. It reiterates its request to the Government to provide information with regard to equal opportunities and treatment in employment and occupation of the indigenous peoples.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to conference at its 99th Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Rwanda

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1980)

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 regulating labour in Rwanda. It notes that the new Act refers to the present Convention in its Preamble and that it contains a definition of the expression "work of equal value" (section 1.9). However, it notes that this definition is too narrow to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention since it refers to "similar work", and further, that the new Act contains no substantial provisions prescribing "equal remuneration for work of equal value". Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government mentions in its report article 11 of the Constitution which prohibits any discrimination in general, and notes that article 37 of the Constitution specifies that "every person having equal competence and capacity shall have the right, without any discrimination, to equal pay for equal work". Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not taken the opportunity to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value within the meaning of the Convention.

While it is important to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex in employment, this is not sufficient to ensure the full application of the principle of equal remuneration pursuant to the Convention. Referring to its general observation of 2006, in which it clarifies the meaning of the concept of "work of equal value" under the Convention, the Committee would like to stress that, whilst this concept encompasses the concept of "equal", "the same" and "similar" work it also goes beyond that because it encompasses work which is of an entirely different nature but which is nevertheless of equal value. The concept of "work of equal value" therefore allows for a much broader comparison to be made between jobs performed by men and women in different places or sectors, or between different employers. It therefore allows pay discrimination to be combated more effectively where men and women traditionally perform work that is of an entirely different nature but which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1981)

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislative developments. Scope of protection of workers against discrimination. The Committee notes that section 12 of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 regulating labour in Rwanda extends the protection afforded to workers covered from all the grounds of discrimination prohibited under Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention as well as from other grounds (Article 1(1)(b)). Section 12 of that Act prohibits any discrimination, either directly or indirectly, in the course of employment intended to deprive workers of equality of opportunity and treatment where such discrimination is based on: (1) race, colour, origin; (2) sex, marital status or family responsibilities; (3) religion, beliefs or political opinions; (4) social or economic conditions; (5) national extraction; (6) handicap; (7) previous, current or prospective pregnancy; and (8) any other form of discrimination. The Committee also notes that the new Act establishes general penalties in the case of the violation of its provisions (section 169), namely two months' imprisonment and/or a fine of 50,000 to 300,000 Rwandan francs. It notes, however, that, in the French version of the Act at least, direct or indirect discrimination is prohibited only "during the course of employment" and that this prohibition does not therefore cover all stages of employment and occupation, particularly recruitment. The Committee also notes that section 12 appears to prohibit acts done with an intention to deny equality of opportunity and treatment, which would be more restrictive than the definition of discrimination set out in Article 1 of the Convention under which intent is not required. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to prohibit discrimination during access to employment or to an occupation. It also requests the Government to clarify whether intent is required for an act to constitute discrimination under section 12 of Act No. 13/2009. The Government is also requested to provide information on the application of section 12 of the Act, in practice and to specify, in particular, whether any appeals have been lodged on the basis of any one of the prohibited grounds of discrimination and whether penalties have been imposed under section 169 of that Act.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 59/2008 of 10 September 2008 on the prevention and punishment of gender-based violence, section 24 of which establishes punitive measures in the case of "sexual harassment of a subordinate" imposed on "any employer or any other person who uses his or her position to harass a subordinate by way of orders, intimidation and terror for the purpose of sexual pleasure". It also notes the inclusion in Act No. 13/2009, of provisions prohibiting "gender-based violence" in employment (section 9), that is "any act of a physical, psychological or sexual nature directed at a person or likely to damage their property on the grounds of their sex" which "infringes their rights and affects their integrity". Section 9 of Act No. 13/2009 also prohibits moral harassment at work, either directly or indirectly, which is defined as "any act of harassment at work of any origin, either external or internal to the enterprise, which manifests itself in particular through behaviour, words, intimidation or anonymous written communications designed to have an adverse effect on the dignity of a worker in the workplace, endanger his or her job and constitute an obstacle to his or her work". The Committee welcomes the adoption of these new legislative provisions which, when combined, appear to cover the two essential elements of sexual harassment at work as defined in its 2002 general observation, namely: (1) any physical, verbal or non-verbal conduct of a sexual nature and other conduct based on sex affecting the dignity of women and men, which is unwelcome, unreasonable and offensive to the recipient; and a person's rejection of, or submission to, such conduct is used explicitly or implicitly as a basis for a decision which affects that person's job (quid pro quo); and (2) conduct that creates an intimidating, hostile or humiliating working environment for the recipient (hostile work environment). However, in order to ensure adequate protection for men and women workers and to clarify the legal regime applicable to this discriminatory practice, the Committee requests the Government to consider taking the necessary measures to adopt a clear and precise definition of sexual harassment in the workplace, ensuring that this definition covers both quid pro quo and the creation of a hostile working environment. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to prevent this form of gender-based discrimination in the workplace, particularly in the context of the national gender policy adopted in 2004 (education programmes, awareness-raising campaigns on preventive measures and appeal mechanisms, etc.).

Saint Lucia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1983)

Definition of remuneration. The Committee recalls the absence of a definition of the term "remuneration" in the Equality of Opportunity and Treatment in Employment and Occupation Act, 2000, which provides for equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee notes the Government's reply that the new Labour Code, which was the subject of final consultations with the social partners in 2008, will contain a broader definition of remuneration in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention. Noting the Government's statement that it is moving forward to giving effect to the new Labour Code, the Committee asks the Government to confirm that the new Labour Code has been adopted and has entered into force, and that it defines "remuneration" in accordance with the Convention. Please also provide a copy of the Labour Code. The Committee also asks the Government to confirm that the term "remuneration" as used in the Equality of Opportunity and Treatment in Employment and Occupation Act is to be understood as defined in the new Labour Code.

Different wages and benefits for women and men. The Committee recalls that the Contracts of Service Act provides for different ages for men and women with respect to entitlement to severance pay. It also recalls its previous comments regarding the existence of certain laws and regulations establishing differential wage rates for men and women, contrary to the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the differences in ages between men and women with regard to severance pay have been corrected in the new Labour Code. Recalling the Government's previous statements that the Contracts of Service Act would be revoked with the adoption of the new Labour Code, the Committee asks the Government to confirm that all legislation containing wage differentials for men and women, including the Contracts of Service Act, has been revoked.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Serbia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the Government's report as well as the observations from the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia and the Trade Union Federation "Nezavisnost", which were received along with the Government's report.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Act on the Prohibition of Discrimination (Official Gazette No. 22/09) in April 2009. The Committee notes that the Act prohibits direct and indirect discrimination in a number of areas, including education, vocational training and employment (sections 16 and 19). The Committee notes that the Act's definition of discrimination includes an open list of prohibited grounds as follows: race, skin colour, ancestors, citizenship, national affiliation or ethnic origin, language, religious or political beliefs, gender, gender identity, sexual orientation, financial position, birth, genetic characteristics, health, disability, marital and family status, previous convictions, age, appearance, membership in political, trade union and other organizations and other real or presumed personal characteristics (section 2(1)). The Committee welcomes that the Act goes beyond prohibiting discrimination based on the seven grounds explicitly listed in the Convention, as envisaged in Article 1(1)(b). The Committee also notes that the Act provides for the establishment of a Commissioner for the Protection of Equality. The Commissioner's mandate includes receiving and reviewing complaints regarding violations, the issuing of opinions and recommendations, and filing cases before courts.

Implementation of the non-discrimination legislation. The Committee notes from the comments made by the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia and the Trade Union Federation "Nezavisnost" that despite the legislation in place, discrimination continues to occur in practice. In this regard, the Committee recalls its previous comments in which it requested the Government to provide information on the manner in which the labour inspection services supervise the application of the provisions prohibiting employment discrimination contained in sections 18 to 23 of the Labour Code. Noting that the Government has not yet provided a reply to these comments, and also in view of the newly adopted Act on the Prohibition of Discrimination, the Committee wishes to emphasize the importance of concrete and practical measures to promote awareness and understanding of the non-discrimination legislation among workers and employers, and the public at large. In addition, efforts may be required to enable the competent administrative and judicial authorities to be able to address cases of employment discrimination including through workshops and training activities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure the full implementation of the provisions relating to discrimination in employment and occupation contained in the Labour Code and the Act on the Prohibition of Discrimination, including promotional and training activities. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number, nature and outcome of employment discrimination cases addressed by the labour inspectorate and the Commissioner for Equality, including information on remedies provided or sanctions imposed. If such information is not available, the Committee requests the Government to take the steps necessary to collect such data, and to provide it in its future reports.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sierra Leone

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Lack of national policy. The Committee regrets that the Government does not provide any new information in respect to the Convention's application. Since Sierra Leone has ratified the Convention, the Government has consistently reported that no legislative or administrative regulation or other measures existed to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and the Government has failed to provide information on any measures taken in this regard. In its latest report the Government repeats the general statement that it had a broad-based policy which ensured jobs for all who apply and are willing to work, regardless of sex, religion, ethnicity or political opinion. The Committee is therefore bound to recall that under the Convention, Sierra Leone has the obligation to declare and pursue a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation, with a view to eliminating discrimination regarding vocational training, access to employment and particular occupations, as well as terms and conditions of employment.

In connection with the above, the Committee recalls that articles 7 to 9 of the 1991 Constitution establish economic, social and educational objectives for the State that potentially promote the application of the Convention. Article 15 guarantees the right to equal protection of the law irrespective of race, tribe, place of origin, political opinion, colour, creed or sex, and article 27 of the Constitution provides constitutional protection from discrimination. The Committee considers that these provisions may be an important element of a national equality policy in line with the Convention, but recalls that provisions affirming the principles of equality and non-discrimination in itself cannot constitute such a policy. As stated in the Committee's 1988 General Survey on the Convention, the national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment should be clearly stated and should be applied in practice, presupposing state implementation measures in line with the principles set out in Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention and Paragraph 2 of the accompanying Recommendation No. 111.

While being aware of the many challenges the Government is facing in the process of consolidating peace, the Committee encourages the Government to give serious consideration to the application of the Convention in law and practice as an integral part of its efforts to promote peace and social and economic stability. The Government is requested to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to promote and ensure equal access to technical and vocational training, public and private employment, as well as equal terms and conditions of employment, including through educational programmes and cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee also reiterates its previous requests to the Government to provide information in particular on the measures taken to ensure equality in employment and occupation between women and men and among members of the different ethnic groups.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Slovakia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Application of the principle to all elements of remuneration. The Committee recalls its previous comments with respect to section 118(2) of the Labour Code, 2006, which excluded from the definition of wages certain payments provided in relation to employment. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 119(1) of the Labour Code, as amended in 2007 by Act No. 348/2007 Coll., now provides that wage conditions must be agreed without any form of sex discrimination and that this applies to all remuneration for work and benefits that are paid or shall be paid in relation to employment according to the other provisions of the Labour Code or special regulations. The Committee also takes note of the Government's statement that section 119(1) extends the right to equal remuneration also to those payments which otherwise, within the meaning of section 118(2) of the Labour Code, would not be regarded as wages for labour law purposes.

Work of equal value. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted that section 119(3) of the Labour Code, which provided for equal wages for work of an equal level of complexity, responsibility and difficulty, performed under the "same working conditions and upon achievement of the same efficiency and work results", had been amended in 2007 to guarantee "equal wages for men and women for equal work or work of equal value". The Committee notes that section 119(2) of the Labour Code, as amended in 2007 by Act No. 348/2007 Coll., now states that women and men have the right to equal pay for like work or work of equal value, which is considered as work of the same or comparable complexity, responsibility and arduousness, performed in the same or comparable working conditions, producing the same or comparable productivity and results for the same employer. Furthermore, section 119(3) states that if a system of job evaluation is being used, this must be based on the same criteria for men and women without sex discrimination; the employer may use other objectively measurable criteria in addition to those given in paragraph 2 if they can be applied to all employees without regard to sex. The Committee asks the Government to confirm that the wording "comparable working conditions, productivity and results" permit a comparison between jobs performed by men and women that are of an entirely different nature but nevertheless of equal value. It also asks the Government to provide copies of judicial decisions concerning the application of section 119 of the Labour Code, and in particular those decisions which show how the courts have interpreted the wording "comparable working conditions, productivity and results".

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Discrimination on the basis of race and national extraction. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted the Constitutional Court's ruling regarding the unconstitutionality of section 8(8) of the Anti-Discrimination Act 2004 which provided for specific positive measures aimed at addressing disadvantages linked to race and ethnic origin. It also recalls that the various measures and programmes envisaged by the Government to promote equality in education and employment of persons belonging to the Roma community remained to a large extent unimplemented. The Committee notes from the Government's report that following amendment of the Anti-Discrimination Act 2004, by Act No. 85/2008, effective 1 April 2008, section 8a provides for "the adoption of temporary compensatory measures by state administrative bodies targeted to eliminate forms of social and economic disadvantages and disadvantages arising due to age or disability, with the aim to ensure equality of opportunities in practice". The Committee notes that such measures could include measures "(a) consisting of the promotion of the interests of members of disadvantaged groups in employment, education, culture, health care and services; and (b) ensuring the equality in access to employment and education especially through targeted preparation programs for members of disadvantaged groups or through dissemination of information on these programmes or on possibilities to apply for jobs or places in the system of education". The Committee further notes the Government's statement that the "Basic propositions of the Government policy concept for the integration of the Roma communities (2003)" is the guiding policy document for addressing Roma issues, which is to be implemented by 2010 and which provides for special temporary measures for social inclusion of the Roma. The Government also approved, in March 2008, the "Medium-term Concept of the Development of the Roma National Minority in the Slovak Republic – Solidarity – Integrity – Inclusion for 2008–13". However, without further information on the actual follow-up to these policy documents, and on the results achieved so far, it is difficult for the Committee to evaluate whether real progress has been made in promoting equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for persons belonging to the Roma national minority. The Committee therefore urges the Government to make serious and concerted efforts with respect to their implementation of the various policy documents regarding social inclusion of the Roma population. In this context, the Committee asks the Government as follows:

- (i) to provide information on any special temporary measures taken aimed at eliminating social and economic disadvantages faced by the Roma population with a view to achieving equality in practice, pursuant to section 8a of the Anti-Discrimination Act; and
- (ii) to indicate the results achieved in obtaining the targets set for 2010 by the basic policy document of 2003 with respect to access to employment and education, and in implementing the policy document for social inclusion of the Roma for 2008–13.

Noting further that no cases concerning race or ethnic discrimination in employment have been dealt with by the courts or the National Centre for Human Rights, the Committee asks the Government to take appropriate measures, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations, to increase the awareness and accessibility of available protection and remedies, and to provide information on the steps taken to this end.

Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. In its previous observation, the Committee urged the Government to take steps to increase public awareness with respect to gender discrimination, and to provide information on the specific impact of the various projects carried out with respect to discrimination against women in the labour market, and to promote their access to training and particular occupations. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the new administrative structures set up to promote equality, such as the Permanent Committee on Gender Equality and Equal Opportunities. The Committee also notes the new legislative provisions in the Labour Code and Act No. 5/2005 on employment services, as amended in 2007, to assist workers in reconciling work and family responsibilities and to prevent exclusion of disadvantaged groups in employment, such as mothers with children, from the labour market and promote their integration. The Committee further notes the very general reference in the Government's report to projects and campaigns that have been carried out to raise awareness about discrimination. While welcoming these initiatives, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information regarding specific activities undertaken to raise public awareness on gender discrimination, or on the specific impact of the measures taken to address gender discrimination in the labour market and promote women's access to training and employment, as requested in its previous observation. The Committee once again urges the Government to take concrete steps to increase public awareness with respect to gender discrimination in the labour market, and report on the results achieved. It also urges the Government to undertake an impact assessment of its previous and present projects to address sex discrimination in employment and occupation, and to promote women's access to a wider range of training and jobs, and to report on the progress made in this regard. Please also provide up to date statistics, disaggregated by sex, on the participation of men and women in employment and particular occupations and training courses.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

South Africa

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2000)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the Government's indication that Chapter 2 of the Employment Equity Act (EEA) on prohibition of unfair discrimination is understood to encompass the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Recalling its 2006 general observation on the Convention, in which the Committee urged governments to take the necessary steps to amend their legislation in order to incorporate expressly the principle of the Convention, the Committee asked the Government to consider amending the EEA so as to provide explicitly for equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee notes from the Government's report that in the context of the review of the Employment Equity Regulations, which is scheduled for 2008/9, the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value will be included in the new regulations. The Committee also takes note of the Government's statement that, in the event of an amendment of the EEA, consideration will be given to incorporating the principle of the Convention in the Act. Welcoming the Government's intention to include the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value in the new Employment Equity regulations, the Committee also hopes that the Government will give due consideration to the possibility of including explicitly the principle of the Convention in the EEA and asks it to provide information on any developments in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to supply a copy of the amended

Employment Equity Regulations and reiterates its request for information on the practical application of the relevant provisions of the EEA to cover equal remuneration for work of equal value.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sudan

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1970)

Absence of conditions to ensure protection against discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it continued to express serious concern at the human rights situation in Darfur, and in particular at the repression of political dissent as well as arbitrary arrests and detention of individuals, including lawyers, community leaders, teachers and business people, predominantly from the Fur, Maasaalit and Zaghawa tribes. The Committee had urged the Government to take measures to ensure that all parts of the population in Darfur, irrespective of race, colour, national extraction, sex, religion, political opinion and social origin, could exercise their occupations free from discrimination. The Committee notes that the Government has taken some legislative steps to address the human rights situation in Sudan, including the passing of the National Human Rights Commission Act on 21 April 2009 and of the Southern Sudan Human Rights Commission Act on 16 February 2009. However, it also notes the most recent report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Sudan indicating that the general human rights situation in Sudan remains critical, including serious problems with respect to the effective administration of justice and continuing arbitrary detention and ill-treatment of members of political opposition and journalists on the account of their work, opinions or peaceful assembly (A/HRC/11/14, June 2009).

The Committee notes that the Government continues to assert that discrimination in employment and occupation does not exist in Sudan, that no complaints have been submitted to the courts in this regard, and that there is thus no need for specific policies and programmes to address such discrimination. The Committee profoundly regrets the Government's persisting general statements that no discrimination exists in Sudan. The Committee considers that such a position is contrary to the spirit of the Convention and is a considerable obstacle to its implementation. The absence of discriminatory provisions in the national legislation or the absence of complaints is not sufficient to fulfil the obligations under the Convention; nor is it an indicator of an absence of discrimination in practice. Moreover, the absence of complaints of discrimination in employment and occupation is often due to an inadequate legal foundation or lack of access to dispute resolution and enforcement mechanisms and problems with respect to the administration of justice. The Committee must once again draw the attention of the Government to the fact that in the process of applying the Convention, it is essential to acknowledge that no society is free from discrimination and that continuous action is required to address it. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to:

- (i) ensure that all parts of the population in Darfur, including the Fur, Maasaalit and Zaghawa tribes, can exercise their occupations free from discrimination, irrespective of ethnic origin or political opinion;
- (ii) ensure the effective enforcement of the right to non-discrimination for all parts of the population, irrespective of race, colour, national extraction, sex, religion, political opinion or social origin, including the establishment of adequate and effective dispute resolution and complaints mechanisms; and
- (iii) report on the results achieved with respect to all the measures taken.

In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures that the National Human Rights Commission and the Southern Sudan Human Rights Commission are established, and asks the Government to provide information on steps taken by them to give effect to the provisions of the Convention.

Article 1, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination set out in the Convention. The Committee recalls article 31 of the Interim Constitution of the Republic of Sudan 2005 providing for equal protection of the law to all persons without discrimination based on the grounds set out in the Convention, except social origin. It also recalls the absence of a provision in the 1997 Labour Code of the Republic of Sudan explicitly prohibiting discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation. The Committee notes that such a provision is included in the Southern Sudan draft Labour Act (section 10(1) and (2)), and that section 18 of the Interim Constitution of Southern Sudan 2005 provides for equal protection without discrimination based on all of the grounds set out in the Convention. The Committee further notes the Government's statement that social origin discrimination does not exist in Sudan. Noting the Government's intention to take into account the Committee's comments regarding the need for a legal provision prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation with respect to all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, in the process of formulating the final Constitution, the Committee requests that concrete steps be taken to insert such a provision in the final Constitution and the Labour Code.

Article 3. Measures to implement the national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment. With respect to measures taken pursuant to Article 3 of the Convention, the Committee notes the Government's reply that tripartite dialogue and cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations are well-established practices in Sudan; the laws of Sudan do not contain discriminatory provisions nor are there any laws, circulars or administrative practices in force contrary to the Convention. The Government further maintains that following the adoption of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement 2005, any practice contrary to international human rights Conventions was stopped. The Committee stresses that by ratifying the Convention, the Government has undertaken to take proactive measures to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation in the framework of a national policy, with a view to eliminating discrimination. While the choice of the concrete measures to be taken is left to the Government in view of the national conditions and practice, the Convention requires that these measures be effective. The Committee also recalls that under Article 3(f) of the Convention, the Government is called upon to indicate in its reports the action taken in pursuance of this national policy and the results secured by such action. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to provide full particulars in its next report on the specific measures taken by the Federal Committee of Manpower, the Ministry of Education and the High Council of Vocational Training not only to promote the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment, but also to ensure that no inequalities exist nor discrimination is practised on any of the grounds set out in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Swaziland

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1981)

Equality of opportunity and treatment of ethnic minorities. In its previous observation, the Committee had reiterated its earlier request for specific information on the employment situation of those belonging to certain ethnic minority communities, namely the Zulu and the Tonga. The Committee regrets that the Government again merely refers to the Constitution and states that no discrimination of such people takes place. The Committee draws the Government's attention once again to the importance under the Convention, not only of the absence of discriminatory legal provisions, but also of declaring and implementing a national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment with respect to all the grounds covered in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention and taking concrete measures to implement the policy in accordance with Article 3. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that in the context of the national equality policy, concrete measures are taken to ensure that workers from ethnic minorities, in particular the Zulu and the Tonga, are protected against discrimination in employment and occupation, and requests the Government to provide information in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to provide specific information on the employment situation of ethnic minorities in the country.

Grounds of discrimination. The Committee notes the entry into force on 1 January 2009 of the Discrimination Act, 2008, superseding the Equal Opportunities Act and the Prohibition of Discrimination Act. The Committee notes that the new Act is designed to combat discrimination and promote equal rights and opportunities regardless of sex, transgender identity or expression, ethnicity, religion or other belief, disability, sexual orientation or age. The Committee also notes that, pursuant to Chapter 2, section 1, of the Act, the protection against discrimination has expressly been extended to include, in addition to employees and jobseekers, also training applicants and trainees, persons enquiring about job vacancies and persons seeking or performing temporary or agency work. Recalling its previous comments concerning the absence in the legislation of the prohibited grounds of political opinion and social origin, the Committee notes that such grounds have not been included in the new Act. The Committee also notes the clarification provided by the Government that the ground of "belief" is not meant to cover political opinion. The Committee wishes to stress that, when provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle laid down in the Convention, they should include all the grounds of discrimination specified in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. In this regard, it notes the Government's indication that the possibility of adopting an open list of prohibited grounds of discrimination has been envisaged as a subject matter for further study. The Committee requests the Government as follows:

- (i) to clarify the reasons for not including the grounds of political opinion and social origin in the new Discrimination Act, and to indicate any developments concerning the adoption of an open list of prohibited grounds of discrimination;
- (ii) to indicate how the application of the Convention in respect of the grounds of political opinion and social origin is ensured in practice.
- (iii) to provide detailed information on the application of the Discrimination Act, including information on the adoption of the "active measures" contemplated in Chapter 3 and their impact on promoting the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation.

United Republic of Tanzania

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

Article 1 paragraph 1(b) of the Convention. Legislative developments. HIV/AIDS. The Committee notes with interest the adoption in 2008 of the Act on HIV and AIDS (Prevention and control), Part VII of which covers stigmatization and discrimination. The Act contains provisions providing, inter alia, that: (a) nobody shall formulate “a policy, promulgate a law or act in a manner that discriminates directly or by its implications against persons living with HIV and AIDS, orphans or their families” (section 28); (b) a person shall not stigmatize or discriminate in any manner against any other person on the grounds of such other person’s actual, perceived or suspected HIV/AIDS status (section 31); and (c) a person may not deny any person employment opportunity on the grounds of the person’s actual, perceived or suspected HIV/AIDS status (section 30(c)). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the 2008 Act on HIV and AIDS (Prevention and control) with regard to employment and occupation, and to indicate whether any regulations regarding section 28 of this Act have been made pursuant to section 52(m) and, if so, to provide a copy.

Articles 1 and 2. Implementation of the provisions concerning the prohibition of discrimination and the promotion of equality of opportunity and treatment. Enforcement. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote and ensure the implementation of the provisions of the Employment and Labour Relations Act, 2004 relating to equality and non-discrimination, and to indicate the number of equality plans that have been registered by employers with the Labour Commissioner under that Act. According to the Government’s report, since the adoption of the Employment and Labour Relations Act and its regulations in 2004 and 2007 respectively, awareness-raising activities have been carried out by the tripartite constituents to promote equal opportunities and eliminate discrimination in all workplaces. The Government also indicates that few equality plans have been registered with the Labour Commissioner and that, to rectify this situation, the supervision of the application of the legislative and regulatory provisions relating to equality has been included in the tools used by labour inspectors to ensure that employers are taking all the necessary measures to comply with the legal provisions concerned. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government would like to be able to benefit from technical assistance from the ILO to strengthen the capacities and knowledge of labour inspectors with regard to equal opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation and urges the Government to take the necessary steps to obtain that assistance.

Noting this information and, in particular, the Government’s efforts to strengthen the supervision of the application of the legal provisions relating to non-discrimination and equality, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to encourage employers to draw up and register the plans provided for under the Employment and Labour Relations Act 2004 with the Labour Commissioner as soon as possible, and to continue providing information on the number of equality plans registered as well as their content. The Government is also requested to provide information on:

- (i) the measures taken or envisaged at the national level to combat discrimination on any grounds prohibited by the 2004 Act and to promote equal equal opportunity in employment for the entire population;
- (ii) the means and tools available to inspectors to ensure supervision of the application of the legal provisions relating to equality and combating discrimination;
- (iii) the labour inspectorate’s activities involving employers and workers and their organizations (activities relating to the supervision of establishments and advisory activities), violations reported and the outcome of the proceedings initiated;
- (iv) the steps taken to obtain technical assistance from the Office for the purposes of providing labour inspectors with relevant training.

Tunisia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1959)

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. National policy relating to discrimination on grounds other than sex. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has once again failed to provide any details on the measures adopted to combat discrimination on grounds of race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion and social origin in the context of a national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its indication that under article 6 of the Constitution all Tunisians have the same rights and the same duties and are equal before the law. It also notes the Government’s indication that the competent services of the Ministry of Employment and the Vocational Integration of Youth have not reported any case of discrimination based on race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin in relation to employment and occupation, and that no complaints have been registered by the administrative services or the courts.

The Committee once again reminds the Government that constitutional provisions providing for equal protection under law are not sufficient in themselves to ensure the full application of the Convention. Similarly, the fact that the authorities have not received any complaints does not mean that there is no discrimination in the country. The Committee considers that this may on the other hand indicate that the victims either have an inadequate knowledge of the relevant legal provisions and dispute resolution procedures available, or fear possible reprisals by the employer. The Committee also wishes to emphasize once again that Article 2 of the Convention requires the Government to declare and pursue a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment with a view to eliminating any discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of the criteria set out in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to:

- (i) consider in the context of a national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment adopting legislation explicitly prohibiting discrimination based on race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion or social origin, and to take concrete measures to eliminate such discrimination in practice;
- (ii) take measures to raise awareness in the public and among the social partners of the principles set out in the Convention and the legal provisions relating to equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation;
- (iii) take measures, for example in the form of studies, to evaluate the effectiveness of dispute resolution procedures, including any difficulties of a practical nature encountered by men or women workers in obtaining legal redress for discrimination based on any of the grounds set out in the Convention.

Turkey

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1967)

Training and awareness raising. In its previous observation, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on any measures taken to promote awareness and understanding of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention and section 5(4) of the Labour Act, among relevant target groups, including labour inspectors. In its report, the Government provides information on a number of activities and projects aimed at the promotion of gender equality more generally and greater access to employment for women. However, the information does not indicate whether any specific activities were undertaken to promote understanding and awareness of the principles of the Convention. In this context, the Committee notes that according to the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS), inadequate supervision by the labour administration is one of the reasons for unequal pay between men and women. The Committee hopes that the Government, in consultation with the workers' and employers' organizations, will carry out training and awareness-raising activities specifically addressing equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value among relevant target groups, including labour inspectors, and asks it to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is currently no system for classifying infringements identified by the labour inspectorate according to the related provisions of the labour legislation. However, it indicates that a new system is to be established allowing for such a classification. The Committee welcomes this information and hopes that the new system will allow the labour inspectors to establish data on the number, nature and outcome of infringements of section 5(4) with regard to equal remuneration of men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the number, nature and outcomes of the cases addressed by the labour inspectorate under section 5(4) of the Labour Code, as soon as possible.

Article 3 of the Convention. Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes that the Government has provided no information in reply to its previous comments on the issue of objective job evaluation. However, it welcomes the information provided by the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TİSK) on the use of objective job evaluation systems by its affiliates. For instance, the Metal Industry Job Classification System (MIDS) examines jobs on the basis of twelve factors which are classified under four main factors, namely dexterity, responsibility, effort and working conditions. In 2007, the Union of Turkish Metal Industrialists organized seminars for heads of human resources departments in four cities with a view to making the MIDS known, and assessing problems in its application and possible solutions to them. The Committee asks the Government once again to provide information on any steps it is taking to promote objective job evaluation as envisaged in Article 3 of the Convention, both in the private and public sectors, including information on any measures taken to ensure that equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is made an explicit objective of job evaluation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes the Government's report, as well as the comments made by the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ), which were attached to the report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Discrimination based on political opinion. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning the application of the Anti-Terrorism Act or the Penal Code in cases involving journalists, writers and publishers expressing their political opinions. Noting that the Government has provided no information, the Committee requests the Government once again to provide information on the number and outcomes of cases against journalists, writers and publishers, including a brief summary of the facts and specific charges brought. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken, including legislative measures, to ensure that no journalist, writer or publisher is restricted in the exercise of their employment or occupation because of political opinions expressed by them.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment of women and men. The Committee notes from ILO statistical data that the rate of economically active women (15 years of age and more) further declined to 24.5 per cent in 2008 (24.8 per cent in 2005). By comparison the activity rate for men was 70.1 per cent in 2008 (72.2 per cent in 2005). The Committee notes that between 2001 and 2008 there was a decline of economic activity of women younger than 20 years of age and of women older than 45 years of age. The decline of economic activity of younger women, which coincides with their increasing participation in education, has translated into some increases of economic activity of women between 20 and 45 years of age. The Committee notes that according to the Government's report the enrolment rate of girls in secondary school was 55.8 per cent in 2007–08, compared to 61.1 per cent for boys for the same period.

The Committee welcomes progress towards equal opportunities of men and women in education, but notes with concern the continuing overall low level of participation of women in the labour market, and particularly the decline of the activity rate of women older than 45 years of age. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee notes that the Government's report refers to the equal treatment provisions of the Constitution, the Labour Code and the regulations governing active labour market programmes; that 13,123 unemployed women and 30,418 unemployed men have participated in training courses and integration programs organized by the Turkish National Employment Agency; the preparation of legislative amendments regarding paternity leave which the Committee already noted in 2007; and efforts to analyse the situation of women in the labour market in the context of the European Employment Strategy. The Committee notes that the Government has provided very little information on practical and promotional measures to promote women's equality of opportunity and treatment in practice and that no information was provided on the follow-up to the Women's Employment Summit held in Istanbul in 2006, or any related collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations. The TISK refers to 24 projects to assist unemployed women and youth to acquire vocational skills and experience submitted in April 2008 under a scheme financed by the European Union. The TISK also states that as a corollary to the National Employment Strategy the National Employment Policy for Women needs to be implemented. TÜRK-İŞ considers that the vocational training institutions at the provincial level did not function satisfactorily. Noting that overcoming the persisting inequality between men and women in the labour market will require proactive policies and measures, the Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the practical measures or projects implemented to promote women's equal opportunities and treatment in employment and occupation, including specific measures targeting women in rural areas and women over 45 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to follow up on the 2006 Women's Employment Summit, including the steps taken to cooperate with the social partners. Further, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide detailed statistical information on the situation of men and women in the labour market, including their participation in the various sectors and occupations.

In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide an assessment of the impact of the current prohibition for university students to wear head coverings on the participation in higher education of women wishing to wear headscarves out of religious obligation or conviction. In this regard, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the number of female students expelled from universities for wearing headscarves on university premises. In reply to these comments, the Government indicates that it was not in a position to provide such information. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it has point out that, while the existing prohibition of head coverings includes all forms of coverings and applies to men and women, this measure may have a discriminatory effect on women with regard to their access to university education. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to obtain and provide information on the number of female students expelled from universities for wearing headscarves on university premises, and to report on the measures taken to assess and review this matter.

Articles 1, 2 and 3. Legal protection from discrimination in respect of recruitment and selection. The Committee recalls that section 5(1) of the Labour Code prohibits any discrimination based on language, race, sex, political opinion, philosophical belief, religion and sect or similar reasons in the employment relationship. In its previous comments the Committee has concluded that this provision does not prohibit discrimination at the recruitment stage. However, the Committee has noted that section 122 of the Turkish Penal Code, which entered into force in 2005, provides that a person, practising discrimination on grounds of language, race, colour, sex, disability, political opinion, philosophical beliefs, religion, creed or other grounds, who makes the employment of a person contingent on one of these grounds or who prevents a person from carrying out an ordinary economic activity shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a term of six months to one year or a judicial fine. The Committee notes that as indicated by the Government there has been one case invoking section 122 of the Penal Code. Recalling that under the Convention, there is an obligation to address discrimination in respect of access to employment, including recruitment and selection, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number, nature and outcome of criminal proceedings under section 122 of the Penal Code to allow the Committee to ascertain whether effective protection from discrimination at the recruitment stage is available under the existing legislation. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether persons considering themselves victims of discrimination in recruitment can bring complaints under section 122 of the Penal Code and whether they can obtain compensation or other remedies.

Enforcement of section 5 of the Labour Code. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that according to trade union comments it had received, discrimination continues to occur in practice, despite the equal treatment clause set out in section 5 of the Labour Code. In reply to the Committee's request for information on the measures taken by the labour inspectorate to monitor compliance with these provisions, the Government generally states that compliance with section 5 is being considered in the context of inspections and that an individual application can trigger an inspection. However, the data provided do not indicate whether any of the inspections carried out or fines imposed involved issues under section 5 of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on whether the labour inspectorate has dealt with any cases under section 5 of the Labour Code and it reiterates its request to the Government to indicate whether the courts have decided any such cases. Please indicate the number, nature and outcome of such cases.

Articles 1, 2 and 3(d). Application of the Convention in the civil service. The Committee recalls the concerns expressed by the Confederation of Public Employees Trade Unions (KESK) that the legislation covering public employees was lacking non-discrimination provisions, indicating that the general protection against discrimination based on sex available under article 10 of the Constitution was insufficient. The KESK referred to instances of discriminatory job announcements and unequal access of women to managerial positions in the civil service. In reply to the Committee's previous comments regarding this matter, the Government states that civil servants are nominated according to the result of a centralized examination throughout the country. Interviews are only conducted for a limited number of positions, which, in the Government's view, reduce the possibility of discrimination. Further, the Government asserts that there is no gender discrimination as regards appointment to higher level positions. While noting this information, the Committee trusts that the Government will take swift action to address any allegations of discrimination in the civil service. It also requests the Government to provide detailed statistical information on the participation of men and women in the examinations for different branches and positions in the civil service, the actual number of appointments made after interviews and the measures taken to promote equal opportunities for men and women, including measures to allow men and women to reconcile work and family responsibilities.

The Committee further recalls its previous comments in which it expressed concern that security investigations may lead to exclusions from civil service employment contrary to the requirements of the Convention, for instance due to having peacefully expressed political opinions. Noting that the Government failed to provide the information requested by the Committee in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to assess the extent to which security investigations have led to exclusions from public employment, and indicate the outcome of such assessment. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of administrative appeals filed by persons excluded from public employment on the basis of security investigations and the outcomes of these proceedings.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United Kingdom

Gibraltar

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Equal Opportunities Act, 2006, entered into force on 1 March 2007. Section 31 provides for equal pay for men and women for like work, equivalent work, or work which is in terms of the demands (for instance under such headings as effort, skill and decision) of equal value. The Committee notes with interest that the provision explicitly incorporates the notion of work of equal value and that pay is defined broadly (section 31(6)(a)), in accordance with the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation and enforcement of section 31 of the Equal Opportunities Act, including information on any cases brought before the courts and their outcomes. It also asks the Government to indicate measures taken to promote awareness of the Act's equal pay provisions.

The Committee recalls that the Convention does not limit the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value to the level of the enterprise or undertaking. In this regard, the Committee notes that section 31 allows men and women to bring equal pay claims against their employers using comparators employed by the same employer or by any associated employer in Gibraltar in which common terms and conditions of employment are observed either generally or for employees of the relevant classes. Two employers are considered to be associated if one is a company of which the other (directly or indirectly) has control, or if both are companies of which a third person has (directly or indirectly) control. In addition, the Committee notes that under section 63 of the Act, terms contained in a collective agreement or any rule made by an employer are void where “the making of the collective agreement is, by reason of the inclusion of the term, unlawful by virtue of this Act” or “the term or rule is included or made in furtherance of an act which is unlawful by virtue of this Act” (section 63(2)(a) and (b)). The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether section 63 renders void terms of collective agreements or terms or rules of undertakings that violate the right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Assessment of the gender pay gap. The Committee notes from the Employment Survey Report published by the Statistics Office in March 2008 that the gender wage gap for October 2007 (average monthly earnings for full-time work) was as wide as 31 per cent. The gender pay gap was wider in the private sector (33.3 per cent) than in the public sector (26.7 per cent). As regards the different industries, the gender pay gap was particularly wide in “financial intermediation” (47.6 per cent). The Committee asks the Government to provide updated information on the earnings of women and men that would allow the Committee to assess the progress made in closing the wide gender pay gap. In this regard, the Committee also asks the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to analyse and correct the causes of the continuing income gap between men and women and the results achieved by such measures.

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. Noting that the Equal Opportunities Act’s equal pay provisions refers to the notions of “work rated as equivalent” and “work of equal value” in terms of the demands made on the employee, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to promote the development and use of methods for the objective evaluation of jobs, in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Uruguay

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1989)

Wage boards and the promotion of the principle of the Convention through collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that according to the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers – National Convention of Workers (PIT–CNT), wage board decrees still contain discriminatory criteria, such as the female form of names for certain activities, and 85 per cent of these decrees contain no general clauses on equality. It indicated that these are the instruments most often and directly used by workers, in particular at trade union level, and that the incorporation into such decrees of the principle set forth in the Convention would constitute an important means of dissemination and awareness raising. The PIT–CNT also indicated that women are under-represented on the wage boards mentioned.

The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government that steps have been taken with regard to the comments indicated and it notes, in particular, that the Tripartite Commission on Equality of Opportunity and Treatment in Employment (CTIOTE) unanimously decided to include an equality clause in the wage board round. Under this clause, which is included in collective agreements, the parties agree to promote compliance with the ILO Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156), and the MERCOSUR Social and Labour Declaration. According to the report, for the purposes of implementing this clause, a series of conditions have been proposed, including the principle in the Convention of equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Government also indicates that although women are under-represented on the wage boards, each delegation (Government, employers and workers) selects its own representatives and the only delegation which has a majority of women (70 per cent) is the Government. The Government also indicates that the terminology used does not affect the principle of equality but that the government representatives on the wage board will be instructed to modify the terminology which is regarded as discriminatory. The Committee wishes to stress that the use of the female form of names for certain activities may hinder the full application of the principle of the Convention because it contributes to the maintaining of certain stereotypical assumptions regarding the role of women in the labour market. As highlighted by the Committee in its general observation of 2006, this may result in the segregation of women in certain jobs as well as in the undervaluation of the jobs predominantly or exclusively performed by them. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take steps to ensure that the discriminatory terminology in the wage board decrees is amended and asks it to provide information in this regard. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the inclusion of the equality clause in collective agreements, in particular, with regard to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It also asks the Government to continue providing information on the representation of women on wage boards and on any steps taken by the Government and by the social partners to increase the representation of women on wage boards.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1989)

National gender policy. The Committee notes with interest that Act No. 18104 of March 2007 on equality of rights and opportunity between men and women in the Republic provides that the activities directed at equality of rights and opportunity between men and women are of public interest and that the State shall adopt all necessary measures to implement public policies that incorporate a gender perspective. The National Institute of Women is charged with designing the National Plan of Equality of Opportunity and Rights, with wide participation of women's organizations, and in 2007 the first National Plan on the subject was adopted. The Committee also notes that the Tripartite Commission for Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in Employment (CTIOTE) elaborated a Plan of Action 2008. The Committee notes that within the CTIOTE a consensus was reached about promoting the implementation of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156), as well as the Labour Declaration of MERCOSUR in the framework of collective bargaining. The Government also indicates that, within the Ministry of Social Development, the National Institute of Women is putting in place a gender information system the purpose of which is to highlight the forms of inequality between men and women existing in society. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation and impact of the national policy of equality in employment and occupation.

Complaints procedures. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to a communication from the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers – National Convention of Workers (PIT–CNT) in which the PIT–CNT stressed the need to implement a flexible complaints mechanism to resolve labour discrimination disputes and that, in this respect, the burden of proof should be reversed, placing the onus on employers, and protection against reprisals should be afforded to workers who lodge complaints or testify. The Government informs that a unit competent to receive complaints and to provide advice to workers has been established within the General Labour and Social Security Inspection (IGTSS). It also indicates that in 2006 and 2007 all technical staff of the IGTSS was trained on sexual harassment and fundamental rights. The Government also indicates that the IGTSS has a Protocol on proceedings regarding complaints for discrimination. Such complaints are considered as urgent and priority is given to their examination. The Committee also notes the labour inspection's procedures for dealing with complaints regarding sexual harassment. The Committee further notes that the IGTSS has kept a registry of complaints regarding moral and sexual harassment since 2004. The Committee notes that 17 sexual harassment complaints were examined in 2006 and 24 in 2007. The Committee asks the Government to provide an assessment on the operation of the existing complaints procedures to resolve discrimination cases, indicating whether these procedures meet the concerns of PIT–CNT concerning the burden of proof and protection against reprisals. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the complaints lodged for discrimination and their outcomes.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the communication of the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), dated 28 August 2009, sent to the Government on 16 September 2009.

Discrimination on the basis of political opinion

Tascón list. The Committee recalls that in its 2007 observation, it referred to communications sent in 2004 and 2006 by the National Single Federation of Public Employees (FEDE–UNEP) concerning threats, harassment, transfers, the worsening of working conditions and the dismissal of employees of the Central and Decentralized National Public Administration in response to their participation in the collection of signatures to initiate a referendum to revoke the public offices assigned by popular election, in accordance with the Constitution. According to FEDE–UNEP and the CTV, the names of the workers who signed the proposal for a referendum were published prior to their dismissal on a list on the Internet which was used as a source of information for reprisals. The Committee further recalls that according to a communication received from the CTV in 2007, on 15 December 2005 the President of the Republic recognized the discriminatory use made of the list and stated that the list “should be discarded”. However, the CTV alleged that the discrimination continued and worsened in the public sector.

Petróleos de Venezuela (PDVSA). In its 2007 observation, the Committee referred to the dismissal of 19,500 workers from the PDVSA which, according to the CTV's allegations, were based on political grounds.

The Committee notes that in its 2009 communication, the CTV reiterates that discrimination on political grounds persists in the public sector. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that discrimination on political grounds is non-existent in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, that the national Government does not under any circumstances harass, threaten or harm workers on the basis of their political principles or a lack of support for a given political ideology or view, and that, on the contrary, national policies in recent years have expanded the possibilities for men and women citizens to obtain an education and decent productive employment. With regard to the PDVSA case, the Government also states that measures were taken against persons who participated in the sabotage of the oil industry. However, the Committee cannot ignore the fact that a different picture emerges from the communications which it continues to receive from the CTV. The Committee also notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the measures taken to investigate the allegations of discriminatory practices, which it urged the Government to take in its previous observation. Consequently, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to investigate the allegations regarding management practices in the public sector, including the PDVSA, that discriminate against employees on the basis of their political opinion, and to put an end to such practices where they are found to exist. The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the measures taken in this regard.

The armed forces. With regard to the armed forces, the Committee recalls that in its 2007 observation, it noted the CTV's indication that soldiers and officers are obliged to shout the slogan "Fatherland, socialism or death" and that the President of the Republic has stated that anyone who is not prepared to give voice to this slogan must resign. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to the Basic Act on the Bolivarian National Armed Forces, adopted under Decree No. 6239 of 22 July 2008, which establishes the principles governing the organization, operation and administration of the armed forces. The Committee notes that the above Basic Act contains no provisions prohibiting discrimination against members of the armed forces in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee recalls that in its previous observation, after noting that section 7 of the Organic Labour Act provides that members of the armed corps, meaning the armed corps of the national armed forces, the police services and other bodies involved in the defence and security of the nation and the maintenance of public order are excluded from the scope of that Act, the Committee emphasized that, although the Organic Labour Act does not apply to members of the armed corps, they, like other workers, enjoy the protection laid down by the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the fact that, according to paragraph 47 of its Special Survey of 1996 on the Convention, "the general obligation to conform to an established ideology or to sign an oath of political allegiance would be considered discriminatory".

Pressure on public officials. With regard to the allegations made by the CTV concerning the pressure exerted on public officials to join the political party established by the President of the Republic, the Committee notes that the Government once again refers to article 67 of the Constitution with regard to freedom of association. The Committee considers that the reference to this provision in this context is not relevant since, as pointed out in its previous observation, the matters raised do not concern the possibility of forming a political party, but rather the pressure exerted on workers, whether from the public or private sector, to join a given party or face dismissal.

The Committee regrets that it has not received specific information on the measures requested in its previous observation and once again emphasizes that threats, harassment, transfers, worsening of working conditions and the dismissal of employees on the basis of their activities expressing opposition to the established political principles, as well as the requirement to conform to a specific ideology constitute discrimination on political grounds within the meaning of the Convention (see General Survey of 1988, paragraph 57, and the Special Survey of 1996, paragraph 47).

The Committee once again expresses deep concern at the discriminatory practices on political grounds referred to above. The Committee strongly urges the Government to:

- (i) take all the necessary measures in law and practice to provide redress for the effects of the acts of discrimination concerned and to prevent such situations from recurring;
- (ii) protect workers in both the public and private sectors from discrimination on the ground of political opinion, in accordance with the Convention; and
- (iii) provide detailed information on the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Viet Nam

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1997)

Assessment of the gender wage gap. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to the findings of the Viet Nam Country Gender Assessment prepared in 2006 by the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the UK's Department for International Development and the Canadian International Development Agency, according to which the gender wage gap existing in the country resulted from sex-based labour market segregation, due, inter alia, to "widespread discrimination against women in recruitment", and the "low value attached to women's work in particular sectors". It urged the Government to take the necessary measures to collect, analyse and provide statistical information on men's and women's earnings that would allow an assessment of the progress made in closing the gender pay gap. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2008 the Department of Gender Equality was established under the Ministry of Labour, Invalids and Social Affairs and that the collection of statistical data relating to gender equality has not yet been arranged. The Committee also notes that, according to the data at the disposal of the General Statistical Office, in 2006 the average monthly income of women in the public sector amounted to 92 per cent of men's remuneration while in the private sector and in the foreign invested sector it accounted, respectively, for 75.9 per cent and 65.5 per cent of men's income. The same source indicates that the gender wage gap in the mining sector was 29.9 per cent, in the processing industry it was 25.1 per cent and in the agriculture, forestry and fisheries sector it was 19.7 per cent. The Committee urges the Government to take appropriate measures to reduce the gender wage gap and address its underlying causes and asks it to provide information on the implementation of such measures. It also asks the Government to provide information on the distribution of men and women in the different sectors of economic activity, occupational categories and positions and to continue to supply statistical information on men's and women's remuneration levels in both the private and public sectors.

Work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 111 of the Labour Code and section 13 of the Law on Gender Equality fall short of fully reflecting the principle of the Convention and urged the Government to consider giving full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value and to report on the steps taken in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no discrimination between men and women in respect of remuneration is allowed either under the Labour Code or under other legislation. The Committee points out that the provisions of the Labour Code and the Law on Gender Equality provide only for equal remuneration for men and women who perform equal work, while the Convention also requires that men and women performing jobs of a different nature, which are nonetheless of equal value, receive equal remuneration. The Committee draws the Government's attention to its 2006 general observation addressing this matter. It emphasizes once again that comparing different jobs on the basis of objective factors free from gender bias is essential in order to eliminate pay discrimination resulting from the undervaluation of jobs traditionally held by women. Noting that by 2010 the Labour Code will be subject to a comprehensive revision, the Committee urges the Government to take the opportunity afforded by the revision process to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and asks it to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1997)

Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the adoption of the Law on Gender Equality, sections 13 and 14 of which deal with equal treatment of men and women in employment, training and education, and requested the Government to provide information on its implementation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no complaints were filed concerning violations of sections 13 and 14 of the Law. It also notes the Government's statement that labour laws and regulations are revised on a yearly basis, including the list of occupations from which women are barred, and that in this context the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment is taken into account. The Committee further notes that the Ministry of Labour, Invalids and Social Affairs is conducting campaigns for the dissemination of ILO Conventions, including Convention No. 111. The Committee requests the Government as follows:

- (i) to provide information on the outcome of the yearly revision of labour laws and regulations, and the specific amendments that have been made, as they relate to the application of the principle of the Convention, including those enumerating occupations from which women are barred. Please also provide an updated list of the occupations from which women are barred, and an indication of the justification for such prohibitions; and
- (ii) to indicate the target groups of the information campaigns carried out by the Ministry of Labour, Invalids and Social Affairs and whether similar initiatives have been taken or are envisaged to raise public awareness of the relevant legislation, and the procedures and remedies available in cases of discrimination in respect of employment and occupation. Please also continue to provide information on any judicial or administrative decisions relating to the application of sections 13 and 14 of the Law on Gender Equality and on any violations detected by or brought to the attention of the labour inspection services, the sanctions imposed and the remedies provided.

Further to its previous request for information on the action taken to address women's inequality in the labour market, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it has created a number of jobs for women in "light industries", including the textile, footwear and traditional handicrafts industries. The Government also implemented the National Target Programme on Poverty Reduction and the National Target Programme on Employment, and adopted preferential policies to enable women to migrate overseas for higher income employment. In addition, the Government facilitated women's access to credit and training. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken or envisaged under the National Target Programme on Poverty Reduction and the National Target Programme on Employment to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women in respect of employment and occupation. The Committee also requests the Government to take appropriate measures to promote women's access to employment in a wider range of occupations and industries, including through a more diversified choice of educational and training opportunities, and to supply information in this respect. The Committee further asks for statistical data indicating the distribution of men and women in the different sectors of economic activity, occupational categories and positions, in both the public and private sectors, as well as information on the percentage of women and men workers migrating overseas.

Discriminatory recruitment practices based on sex. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the existence of widespread discriminatory recruitment practices affecting women, such as giving preference to male job applicants and discouraging female applicants by establishing requirements prohibiting marriage and pregnancy during a certain period following recruitment. The Committee requested the Government to take urgent measures to put an end to these practices. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government refers to section 111(3) of the Labour Code prohibiting dismissal of a female employee for reasons of marriage, pregnancy, taking maternity leave, or raising a child under 12 months old, and indicates that no complaints were lodged under this provision. The Committee notes that the reported discriminatory practices affect women's access to employment while section 111(3) addresses dismissal on discriminatory grounds. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take urgent measures to put an end to discriminatory practices affecting women's access to work and to provide full information on the steps taken and the progress made in this regard.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no cases of sexual harassment were brought to the attention of the competent bodies either under section 111(1) of the Labour Code or under section 121 of the Penal Code. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that it will study the possibility of incorporating sexual harassment provisions in the legislation. Recalling its 2002 general observation on this issue, the Committee encourages the Government to take appropriate measures to raise awareness of workers and employers and their organizations about sexual harassment at the workplace, and the relevant procedures and remedies currently available under the legislation. It also encourages the Government to incorporate in the legislation specific provisions defining, prohibiting and preventing sexual harassment at the workplace. Please provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Equality of opportunity and treatment of ethnic minority groups. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a number of policies had been adopted with a view to promoting employment and training for persons of ethnic minority origin, including Decision No. 267/2005/QĐ-TTg of 31 October 2005 regarding vocational training for ethnic minority groups and Decision No. 134/2004/QĐ-TTg of 20 July 2004 regarding access of ethnic minority households to land and water, and it sought information from the Government on the implementation of these policies and on the measures taken to consult with the groups concerned in connection with their development and implementation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under Decision No. 267/2005/QĐ-TTg all ethnic minority graduates from boarding secondary schools or high schools are exempted from school fees and entrance exam fees for boarding vocational schools and that they also qualify for scholarships and social welfare. The Committee notes that by December 2007 only 5.5 per cent of the total number of students enrolling in secondary technical and vocational institutions belonged to ethnic minority groups. The Committee also notes that a special preferential programme to promote ethnic minority students' access to secondary technical schools has been implemented since 2001. According to the Government, ethnic minority workers with secondary technical education are a pool of candidates for recruitment as government employees in ethnic minority areas. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the type of training provided and the kind of occupations and employment promoted under the preferential policies aimed at ethnic minority groups, as well as indications as to the number of ethnic minority workers employed by the Government and in which jobs. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to implement Decision No. 134/2004/QĐ-TTg of 20 July 2004 regarding access of ethnic minority households to land and water. Further, it again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to consult with the groups concerned when developing and implementing the abovementioned programmes and policies.

Discrimination based on political opinion, religion, colour and national extraction. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's statement that discrimination on the basis of political opinion, colour and national extraction did not exist in Viet Nam. It emphasized that combating discrimination is an ongoing process and that the absence of discriminatory provisions in the law and the fact that no complaints have been raised with the authorities are not indications of the absence of discrimination. The Committee also stressed that the application of the Convention is a permanent process that requires continuing vigilance and action to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. In the absence of the information previously solicited, the Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the full application of the Convention in law and practice with respect to equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of political opinion, national extraction and colour. It also reiterates its request for information on the application of section 8 of Ordinance No. 21/2004/PL-UBTVQH11 which prohibits discrimination on religious grounds, indicating the manner in which it provides protection against religious discrimination in employment, including in respect of persons whose religion does not correspond to any of the religious organizations recognized under section 16 of the Ordinance.

Measures affecting individuals who are justifiably suspected of, or engaged in, activities prejudicial to the security of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application of section 36 of the Penal Code, pursuant to which a ban from holding certain posts, or bans from practising certain occupations or doing certain jobs can be imposed when it is deemed that to allow the sentenced persons to hold such posts, practice such occupations or do such jobs, may cause harm to society. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the persons on whom a ban under section 36 has been imposed have the right to appeal the decision within 15 days of the date of conviction. The Committee also notes that the courts have issued various verdicts banning persons from holding certain posts, practising certain occupations or doing certain jobs. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the offences in connection with which such bans have been imposed, and the number and nature of the appeals lodged and the outcomes thereof.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

National policy on equality of opportunity with respect to political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Committee regrets to note the Government's failure to reply to the Committee's repeated requests for information on the measures taken to adopt and implement a national policy with respect to all the grounds set out in the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate steps to collect and provide detailed information on all the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that no discrimination on the basis of political opinion, national extraction and social origin occurs in employment and occupation in accordance with Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 100 (Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Austria, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Georgia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Islamic Republic of Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Malta, Mexico, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Mozambique, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Sudan, Sweden, United Republic of Tanzania, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Viet Nam, Yemen); Convention No. 111 (Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Austria, Bahrain, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, China, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Gabon, Georgia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Kenya, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Republic of Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Mozambique, Namibia, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, United Republic of Tanzania, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Yemen); Convention No. 156 (Bolivia, Bulgaria, Ethiopia, Guinea, Niger, Paraguay, Russian Federation).

Tripartite consultation

Algeria

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 2 and 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Consultation procedures and effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the brief information provided by the Government in its report received in May 2008. The Government indicates that the reports transmitted to the ILO concerning the application of international labour Conventions, and the replies to the observations of the Committee of Experts, are transmitted by the public authorities to the most representative social partners, and that consultations between the Government and the social partners are held in the context of the meetings of a body that has existed since 1991. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the draft Labour Code will include a clarification of the procedures through which tripartite consultations are ensured on international labour standards. The Committee refers to its previous comments and requests the Government to provide detailed and relevant information on the tripartite consultations held during the period covered by the next report on each of the items covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention (questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the Conference, submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly, ratification prospects, reports to be made on the application of ratified Conventions and the denunciation of Conventions).

Bangladesh

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1979)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report received in August 2009 in reply to its 2007 observation requesting substantive information on the consultations held on matters related to international labour standards. The Committee notes that the replies to questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the Conference were prepared on the basis of tripartite consultations (Article 5(1)(a) of the Convention). The Government indicates that proposals to be made to Parliament were thoroughly considered in the Tripartite Consultative Committee (Article 5(1)(b)). The Committee notes that the Government is actively considering the ratification of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), and others on the basis of the socio-economic conditions (Article 5(1)(c)). The Government also indicates that no questions arose with regard to reports to be made on ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)). The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a report containing more concrete information on the effective consultations held by the Tripartite Consultative Committee on international labour standards. In this respect, the Committee hopes that the next report will also include information on reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations covered by the Convention.

Belize

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2000)

Articles 2, 3 and 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In reply to its previous observations, the Government indicates in the report received in September 2009 that the Labour Advisory Board was reactivated on 13 March 2009. The Government further indicates that the Board's membership is comprised of nine individuals: three individuals representing workers, three representing employers and three representing the Government. The Government also indicates that training on the consultative procedures would be beneficial for the participants. The Committee notes that prior to March 2009, in the absence of the Labour Advisory Board, draft reports due under article 22 of the ILO Constitution were forwarded to employers' and workers' organizations for their comments, whereas now they will be submitted to the Board. The Committee notes that one of the functions of the Board is to review all unratified Conventions. The Government indicates that instruments adopted by the Conference in October 1996 and the other 17 sessions held between 1990 and 2007 will be submitted to the Labour Advisory Board for their recommendation to the Minister of Labour and the National Assembly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held to re-examine the prospects of ratification of the unratified Conventions, and on any follow-up to recommendations derived from such consultations. The Government is also requested to report on the activities of the Labour Advisory Board concerning each of the other matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Botswana

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1997)

Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report received in June 2009. The Government indicates that the Labour Advisory Board was established pursuant to section 143 of the Employment Act, and serves as an appropriate forum for consultations amongst the social partners. The Labour Advisory Board meets at least once a year and bears, amongst its functions, the role of advising the Minister of Labour of any proposed legislation, rules, codes, guidelines or model agreements relating to dispute prevention and resolution, and in respect of any matter on which advice or recommendations are required or permitted in terms of the Employment Act or any other labour law. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government on the procedures in place to ensure effective consultations on the matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to give further particulars in its next report on the consultations held on each of the matters set out in Article 5(1) indicating the nature of any reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations. The Government is also asked to describe any arrangements made for the financing of any necessary training of participants on the consultative procedures.

Burkina Faso

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2007 observation, which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government indicated in its report received in September 2007 that discussions had been under way since 2001 to establish a formal framework for tripartite consultations, and that a series of workshops had been planned to this end but have been unable to be held so far owing to budgetary constraints. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on progress made in the actual establishment of procedures for effective tripartite consultations on international labour standards. It invites the Government to supply detailed information on all the tripartite consultations which occur during the reporting period on each of the matters covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Article 4. Administrative support and financing of training. The Government stated that members of already formalized consultative bodies, such as the Labour Advisory Committee, receive a flat-rate daily allowance of CFA15,000, covered by the state budget. The Committee noted that further details of administrative support and financial arrangements will be provided when the consultation framework is formalized. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made regarding administrative support for tripartite consultation procedures, and also regarding arrangements made for the funding of training needed for participants in consultative procedures.

Burundi

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2007 observation, which read as follows:

Article 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government stated in a brief report received in November 2007 that it has prepared a note on Conventions to ratify or denunciate. This note has been transmitted to the Burundi Employers Association (AEB) and the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU). The result of these consultations will be communicated to the ILO. Referring to its 2006 observation, the Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide detailed information on the content and results of tripartite consultations held during the period covered by the report, on questions concerning international labour standards, and in particular on the reports to be made to the ILO as well as the re-examination of unratified Conventions and of Recommendations (Article 5(1)(c) and (d)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Chad

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1998)

Articles 2 and 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Consultation mechanisms and effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in October 2009. The Government refers to a Higher Committee for Labour and Social Security which is tripartite in composition. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no information is available on the consultations held during the period covered by the report on each of the items set out in Article 5(1). The Committee refers to the comments that it has been making since its examination of the first report and expresses the conviction that the Government and the social partners should endeavour to promote and strengthen tripartism and social dialogue on the matters covered by the Convention. The Committee refers to the 2008 Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, which reaffirms that “social dialogue and the practice of tripartism between governments and the representative organizations of workers and employers within and across borders are now more relevant to achieving solutions and to building up social cohesion and the rule of law through, among other means, international labour standards”. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government’s next report will contain detailed information on the consultations held on all the items covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention, and on the other points raised in its previous observations in relation to Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention.

Chile

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1992)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government’s detailed report received in November 2009. The Committee recalls its observations of 2007 and 2008 in which it noted the comments made by the National Union of Workers of Chile (UNT), received in June and August 2007. The UNT alleged systematic discrimination, complaining that it was excluded from the meetings convened in accordance with the Convention, particularly meetings to discuss ILO-related matters. The UNT wished to be consulted in accordance with Articles 2, 3 and 5 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s replies received in April 2009 recalling the existence of three trade union confederations established in accordance with national law. The Government indicates that, on 10 February 2009, the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) had a membership of 447,971 workers, compared to the National Union of Workers with a membership of 41,113 workers. According to the Government, the clearly larger membership of the CUT, the fact that it is a national trade union confederation providing general representation of the interests of Chilean workers and the fact that it combines all productive sectors in both the private and public sectors, means that the CUT is indisputably representative for the purposes of Articles 1, 2 and 5. The Government maintains that ignoring that representativeness would mean ignoring the will of the workers freely exercising their right to choose the workers’ association which most reflects their right to organize. The Government observes that the procedures for ensuring effective consultations as set out in Article 5 make no reference to the appointment of delegates for the International Labour Conference in accordance with the provisions of article 3 of the ILO Constitution. In its report, the Government states that the CUT was deemed the only organization having the “representative” nature established in the Convention. The Committee refers to paragraphs 34–38 of its 2000 General Survey on tripartite consultations. In this General Survey, the Committee indicated that although the Convention requires that the most representative organizations of employers and workers participate in consultations, it does not in any way prevent the involvement of representatives of other organizations. The Committee understands that, by using the phrase “representative organizations” in the plural, the Convention invites Governments to include in the procedures those representative organizations which have indicated their interest in participating in the tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Government previously indicated that Chilean workers are organized in three trade union confederations: the Single Confederation of Workers, the Autonomous Confederation of Workers and the National Union of Workers of Chile. The Committee therefore requests the Government to examine once again, in consultation with the interested representative organizations, the manner in which it can be ensured that the representative organizations of workers participate in the tripartite consultations concerning international labour standards required by the Convention (Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention).

Article 5, paragraph 1, subparagraphs (b) and (c). Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee refers to its observation on the fulfillment of the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Congress. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the tripartite consultations required by the Convention with regard to this constitutional obligation.

China

Hong Kong Special Administrative Region

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (notification: 1997)

The Committee notes the Government’s reply to its 2008 observation received in September 2009 and the observations made by the Hong Kong Confederation of Trade Unions (HKCTU) on the Government’s report.

Article 3 of the Convention. Free choice of workers’ representatives. The Government indicates that it has taken into account the views expressed by the HKCTU in 2005 and that the current method of elections for returning representatives to the Labour Advisory Board (LAB) was most suitable to local circumstances and in compliance with the requirements of the Convention as applied to the Special Administrative Region of Hong Kong. It further provides indications on the activities of the Committee on the Implementation of International Labour Standards (CIILS) under the auspices of the LAB. In its observations, the HKCTU states that a review of the LAB election method had been conducted in 2006 only and that the HKCTU had not been consulted. It also contests that the distribution of voting weights in the LAB was in accordance with the Convention since a union with seven members would have the same influence as a union with 80,000 members. This constituted a systemic distortion of representativeness. Furthermore, the bloc voting method of the LAB would make it possible for the largest single group of trade unions to win every seat and in the previous LAB elections, the five worker representatives always came from the same five unions. The Committee refers to the 2000 General Survey on tripartite consultation in which it indicated that governments should endeavour to secure an agreement of all the organizations concerned in establishing the consultative procedures provided for by the Convention (paragraph 34). It further recalls that the Government and the social partners should establish procedures which ensure effective consultations in a manner that is satisfactory to all parties concerned. The Committee asks the Government to keep providing detailed information on the measures taken in order to ensure effective tripartite consultations within the meaning of the Convention, including on the manner in which the representatives of employers and workers for the purposes of the Convention are chosen (Article 3). It further requests the Government to continue to report on the consultations held by the CIILS on each of the subjects listed in Article 5 during the period covered by the next report.

Colombia

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1999)

Strengthening of social dialogue and tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending June 2009. The Government refers to its statement to the Conference Committee in June 2009 during the discussion on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Government indicated that it values spaces for dialogue which make it possible to analyse the situation in the country in an objective manner, including its achievements and difficulties, and propose actions intended to continue strengthening institutional capacities and public policies with a view to making progress in ensuring respect for the rights and well-being of the entire population. It undertook to encourage existing tripartite spaces, improving their procedures and establishing the basis for concluding agreements and achieving tangible results in the medium term. In its previous comments on the application of Convention No. 144, the Committee requested detailed information on any written communications sent to satisfy the requirement for consultations with regard to international labour standards. The Committee also requested clarification as to whether the Standing Committee for Joint Action on Wage and Labour Policy participates in the consultations required by the Convention. The Committee noted the information received from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), forwarded to the Government in October 2008. Among other matters, the CUT indicated that consultations are not held in a systematic and continuous manner. According to the CUT, the reports due to be supplied to the ILO are dealt with outside the Standing Committee for Joint Action on Wage and Labour Policy. In its reply, received in March 2009, the Government indicates that in practice the Ministry of Social Protection coordinates the tripartite dialogue machinery known as the Standing Committee for Joint Action on Wage and Labour Policy, but does not provide specific information on the consultations held during the period covered by the report on each of the items enumerated in Article 5(1) of the Convention. In these circumstances, the Committee once again expresses its conviction that the Government and the social partners should take tangible measures to promote and reinforce tripartism and social dialogue on matters relating to international labour standards covered by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide specific information in its next report on the manner in which the Government and the social partners have held "effective" consultations on international labour standards, as required by Convention No. 144 (Article 5(1)(d)). The Committee recalls that the 2008 Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization identifies Convention No. 144 as one of the most significant instruments from the viewpoint of governance.

Article 5, paragraph 1(b). Tripartite consultations prior to submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes that the consultations required by this provision of the Convention have not been held and that the instruments adopted by the Conference have not been submitted to the National Assembly. The Committee refers to its observation on the obligation of submission as provided for in article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the Constitution of the ILO in which it notes that 31 instruments adopted by the Conference are still awaiting submission. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effective consultations that are held with the social partners on the proposals made to the Congress in relation to the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Congo

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2008 observation, which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. In its report received in January 2008, the Government indicates that in compliance with the Convention an Advisory Technical Committee on International Labour Standards, composed of representatives of the administration, unions and employers, was established by Order No. 788 of 6 September 1999. The Committee refers to its previous comments in which it noted the Government's statement that, due to a lack of adequate financial resources, the Advisory Technical Committee was still not operational. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken to establish the Advisory Technical Committee on International Labour Standards, with a description of the consultation procedures established within the Committee in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention.

Article 4, paragraph 2. Training. The Government indicates that the necessary training for participants in the consultation procedures is provided by the State. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on training for persons participating in consultation procedures, with an indication of whether arrangements have been made or are envisaged to finance the necessary training for such participants.

Article 5, paragraph 1. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government indicates that the consultations cover general conditions of labour and government replies to questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the Conference. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of Article 5(1), tripartite consultations also have to be held on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference, the re-examination at appropriate intervals of unratified Conventions and of Recommendations, reports on ratified Conventions and the denunciation of ratified Conventions. The Committee refers to its comments on the constitutional obligation of submission and requests the Government to provide detailed information on the tripartite consultations held, including those in the Advisory Technical Committee on International Labour Standards, on each of the issues covered by Article 5(1) during the period covered by the next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Côte d'Ivoire

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1987)

Articles 5, paragraph 1, and 6 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the report provided by the Government for the period ending September 2009. The Government once again indicates that all the matters covered by Article 5(1) have on each occasion been brought to the attention of the social partners for information. It adds that the tripartite committee on matters concerning ILO activities was admittedly established by Order No. 061/TFP/DTR of 9 January 2003, but has still not met in view of the crisis affecting the country. The Committee notes that the Government intends to make every effort to ensure that this institution functions normally as soon as possible. The Committee recalls that the 2008 Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization affirms that "social dialogue and the practice of tripartism between governments and the representative organizations of workers and employers within and across borders are now more relevant to achieving solutions and to building up social cohesion and the rule of law through, among other means, international labour standards". The Committee invites the Government and the social partners to hold the "effective consultations" on international labour standards envisaged by the Convention. It therefore hopes that the next report will enable it to examine precise and detailed information on the effective tripartite consultations held on each of the matters covered by Article 5(1). It reiterates its interest in being able to examine extracts from the summary reports of meetings of the tripartite committee (section 8 of Order No. 061/TFP/DTR of 2003) or the annual report of its activities.

Article 5, paragraph 1(b). Submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference. The Government indicates that certain instruments adopted by the Conference between 1996 and 2006 have already been submitted to the competent authorities and that it will endeavour to ensure that this is also done for the others. The Committee refers to its repeated observations concerning serious failure to submit instruments to the National Assembly and trusts that the Government will provide precise and detailed information in its next report on the effective tripartite consultations held on the proposals to be made to the National Assembly in relation to the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1996 and 2007.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government has not provided information on the application of the Convention since its first report received in July 2004. Major changes have occurred in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In recent years, the Democratic Republic of the Congo has received technical assistance from the ILO and has been a recipient of aid from international financial institutions and international donors assisting in the country's transitional process towards political and economic stability. The Committee asks the Government to provide up to date and detailed information on the application of the Convention, including information on the manner in which representatives of employers and workers for the purposes of the Convention are chosen (Article 3 of the Convention).

Articles 2 and 5, paragraph 1. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee recalls its 2004 observation and notes that no effective tripartite consultations have been held on the matters set out in the Convention. The Committee further recalls that Article 2 provides that each Member that ratifies the Convention must undertake to operate procedures which ensure effective consultations with respect to the matters set out in Article 5(1) between representatives of the Government, employers and workers. The nature and the form of procedures are to be determined by each country in accordance with national practice, following consultation with the representative organizations, where such procedures have not yet been established. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide information on how it gives effect to Article 2 and on the content and outcome of tripartite consultations held on each of the matters listed in Article 5(1).

The Committee notes that the preparation of a detailed report, including the indications requested in this observation, will certainly provide the Government and the social partners with an opportunity to ensure the effective implementation of the Convention. In this regard, the Government might wish to request further technical assistance from the relevant units of the ILO to address obstacles in reporting on compliance with Convention No. 144.

Fiji

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1998)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report received in June 2009. The Government indicates that effect is given to the Convention by the Employment Relations Promulgation 2007, which establishes the Employment Relations Advisory Board. This Board is the peak tripartite body which advises the minister on all matters pertaining to employment relations. The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149), the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), the Working Conditions (Hotels and Restaurants) Convention, 1991 (No. 172), the Labour Inspection (Seafarers) Convention, 1996 (No. 178), and the Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184), was registered on 28 May 2008. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the consultations held by the Employment Relations Advisory Board on each of the matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, indicating the nature of any reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations.

Gabon

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1988)

Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report, received in October 2009, in reply to the observation of 2007. The Government indicates that the members of the three tripartite bodies – the Labour Advisory Commission, the National Commission for Wage Studies and the Occupational Safety and Health Committee – have been appointed, and that a protocol calling for a 30-month period of social concord was signed in May 2009. The Government also indicates that the protocol, the participation in the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference and also the follow-up to the activities of the programme to promote the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work (PAMODEC) were based on tripartite consultations. A training workshop on social dialogue was also held during 2009. The Committee requests the Government to communicate further information in its next report on the working of the advisory bodies, particularly the Labour Advisory Commission. It requests the Government to provide updated information on the tripartite consultations held on each of the matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, indicating the frequency of such consultations and the nature of any reports or recommendations relating to international labour standards.

Guatemala

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1989)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Government indicates in its report received in August 2009 that the Tripartite Committee for International Labour Affairs has been meeting in a warm and respectful atmosphere. The Government points out that this Committee has been an extremely useful forum for dialogue working on matters of the utmost importance. The Government encloses with its report copies of the communications, attendance lists and minutes of the meetings held between August 2007 and August 2009, which record the opinions exchanged by the social partners. Technical assistance from the ILO was sought on various occasions, in particular with regard to the prospects for the ratification of the Part-Time Work Convention, 1994 (No. 175). The Government indicates that the Tripartite Committee's aim is drafting a specific law governing part-time work, which would provide legal certainty for part-time work, without ratifying Convention No. 175. The possibility of denouncing the Night Work (Women) Convention (Revised), 1948 (No. 89), and ratifying the Night Work Convention, 1990 (No. 171), is also being discussed. Furthermore, the Government provides information on the current tripartite discussions in the Tripartite Committee on a new legal regime for the imposition of penalties by the General Labour Inspectorate. The Tripartite Committee met with the ILO high-level tripartite mission that visited Guatemala in February 2009. However, the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala indicated that it had not received the reports due in 2009 on which it wished to comment. The Committee reiterates its observation of 2008 in which it pointed out that the consultations covered by the Convention will enable the Government and social partners to maintain and strengthen tripartism and social dialogue. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the tripartite consultations held on the matters related to international labour standards covered by the Convention.

Guinea

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observations, which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In a report received in May 2005, the Government recalled that, with a view to holding tripartite consultations on matters relating to ILO activities, it established an Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation (CCTLS) in 1995. However, the Government recognized that this body has met rarely since its establishment and that there has been no tripartite dialogue on the items on the agenda of the Conference. The Government indicated that this situation is due, among other factors, to the lack of reaction of the social partners. Furthermore, the Government reported that, following a tripartite workshop on international labour standards held in October 2004, the Department of Employment and the Public Service renewed the officers of the CCTLS and relaunched legislative activities. The Committee expresses again the firm hope that the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on the measures adopted to ensure effective tripartite consultations on the matters covered by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide reports regularly containing detailed information on the consultations held on all the subjects covered by Article 5(1), including precise information on the activities of the Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation.

Article 4. Financing of training. The Government indicated that there are no specific arrangements for the training of participants. However, when training is initiated at the national level by the competent authority in the context of social consultations, it is generally tripartite in nature. In this respect, the Committee recalls that, where training for participants in the consultations proves to be necessary to enable them to perform their functions effectively, its financing should be covered by appropriate arrangements between the Government and the representative organizations (see the 2000 General Survey on tripartite consultation, paragraphs 125 and 126). It requests the Government to take measures for this purpose and to describe in its next report, where appropriate, the content of these arrangements (Article 4(2)). Finally, the Government indicated that a training programme was envisaged in the context of the Regional Programme for the Promotion of Social Dialogue in French-speaking Africa (PRODIAF), but that, in the absence of any reaction by the social partners, it was limited to activities initiated by the Ministry of Employment and the Public Service and carried out at the national level. The Committee requests the Government to describe in its next report the training activities undertaken in relation to international labour standards. It also requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in the implementation of the PRODIAF programme in relation to the necessary training for participants in the consultation procedures, as required by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Guyana

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments:

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the brief replies supplied by the Government in May 2006 to its 2003 direct request. It refers to its previous comments and recalls again that certain subjects covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention (replies to subparagraphs (a), submissions to the National Assembly (b), reports to be made to the ILO (d)) involve annual consultation, while others (re-examination of unratified Conventions and of Recommendations (c), proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions (e)) call for less frequent examination. The Committee recalls its interest in any consultations concerning unratified Conventions. Please also supply information on the frequency of consultations and the nature of any reports or recommendations resulting therefrom (Article 5(2)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Iceland

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1981)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report received in September 2009 in reply to its previous observation which commended the approach of the Government and the social partners in providing that effective tripartite consultation be held on measures taken to promote the implementation and ratification, as appropriate, of Conventions and Recommendations. The Committee notes with interest that after detailed studies and having received a letter of clarification from the Office, the Icelandic ILO Committee advised the Government to ratify the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129). Iceland's ratification of Conventions Nos 81 and 129 were registered in March 2009. Furthermore, the Government indicates that the main conclusion of a September 2007 report concerning termination of employment was that it was not possible to draft guidelines unless it was based on more detailed political policy-making. This issue has not been further discussed within the Icelandic ILO Committee as the main organizations of employers and workers reached an agreement, as part of their collective agreement signed 17 February 2008, on procedures concerning dismissals. The Committee notes that in October 2008, the Icelandic ILO Committee arranged a meeting with all the major stakeholders which could be affected by Iceland's possible ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, and the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188). Some obstacles were detected concerning possible ratification of these two instruments and the question of ratification is currently studied jointly by the Icelandic ILO Committee, the Ministry of Communication, which is responsible for maritime questions, and the Icelandic Maritime Administration. The Government lastly indicates in its report that the Icelandic ILO Committee has studied the possible ratification of the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), and requested the opinion of the Administration on this issue. The main conclusion is that Icelandic legislation does not meet the requirements of the Convention in respect of collecting data on occupational accidents and diseases. However, possibilities for remedying this situation are being studied. The Committee invites the Government to continue to report on measures taken to promote tripartite consultations on international labour standards, as required under Convention No. 144.

Indonesia

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1990)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention and technical assistance from the Office. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report received in October 2009 in reply to its previous observation. The Government indicates that Government Regulation No. 46/2008, amending Regulation No. 8/2005, provides that the composition of the Tripartite Cooperation Institution (LKS) will consist of an equal number of members representing the Government, workers and employers. Furthermore, under the new regulation, the education requirement of members was modified from holding a university degree to a senior high school degree. The Committee also notes the LKS activities in 2008 and 2009 include social dialogue and consultation at the provincial level, discussions concerning the global economic crisis, and an audience with the President of the Republic of Indonesia and the Parliament. In view of the information received, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the possibility of seeking the Office's technical assistance in order to provide detailed information of such a nature as to demonstrate that the tripartite consultations on international labour standards required by the Convention are actually held in practice. The Committee once again refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to report on the effective consultations held by the LKS as required by Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Ireland

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1979)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in October 2005. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, including particulars of the tripartite consultations held on the matters related to international labour standards set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Kuwait

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2000)

Effective tripartite consultations required by the Conventions. The Committee notes the Government's report, received in September 2009. The Government indicates that, in the context of the application of the principle of tripartite consultation, sections 92 and 93 of Act No. 38 of 1964 concerning the Labour Code for the private sector refer to a labour affairs advisory commission, which comprises representatives of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour and other ministries and also representatives of employers' and workers' organizations. This commission is responsible for issuing advisory opinions on labour legislation. The Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour is responsible for the publication of decrees regulating the composition of this commission and also its working methods. The Government has not supplied any information on the setting up of the advisory commission provided for by the Labour Code, or any other information on the tripartite consultations relating to international labour standards required by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to supply a report containing detailed information on the consultations held on each of the matters relating to international labour standards set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, stating their object and frequency, and also to indicate the nature of any reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations.

Article 6. Working of consultative procedures. The Government indicates that the Ministry has not received any report but that it will take account of the recommendation to draw up an annual report on consultative procedures. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any new developments in this respect.

Lesotho

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1998)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report containing detailed information received in November 2008. In reply to the 2006 observation, the Government included reports of the five meetings held in 2006 and the four meetings held in 2007 by the National Advisory Committee on Labour (NACOLA). The Committee notes that NACOLA approved the ratification of the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154). The Employer members expressed concern in the NACOLA over whether the Government had sufficient capacity to comply with its reporting obligations and considered that ratifying more Conventions would add more pressure on the Government. Due to the high staff turnover in the National Advisory Council on Occupational Health and Safety, the consultation on ratifying the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), was not completed. The Committee also notes that the NACOLA discussed questions arising out of the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). The Committee notes with interest that progress has been achieved within NACOLA on the matters related to international labour standards covered by the Convention (Article 5(1) of the Convention). The Committee invites the Government to report regularly on the consultations held within NACOLA on matters set out in Article 5(1), including information on other steps taken towards the ratification of Conventions Nos 154 and 176.

Madagascar

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1997)

Articles 2 and 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In its observation of 2008 the Committee noted that the Malagasy Workers' Conference (CTM) indicated that the ministries responsible for drafting laws relating to conditions of work in export-processing zones ignored the principle of consulting the National Labour Council, even though the latter is the tripartite consultation body within the meaning of the Convention provided for by section 184 of the Labour Code. The Government pointed out in its reply received in December 2008 that it had supported the adoption by the Malagasy Parliament of a legislative framework which was favourable to the creation and development of productive investments. It also stated that regulations concerning night work had been amended. Accordingly, the Committee notes with interest the ratification by Madagascar, on 10 November 2008, of the Night Work (Women) Convention (Revised), 1948 (No. 89), and its Protocol of 2002, and also the Night Work Convention, 1990 (No. 171). The Government states that their respective implementing regulations are currently before the tripartite National Labour Council for examination. This could lead subsequently to the adoption of other international instruments, in an ongoing quest for greater flexibility in the domestic labour standards in force and, in particular, for a new perception of night work. It also states that the aim is to harmonize the promotion of investment and the development of the private sector with the promotion of decent work, while respecting the principle of the acquired rights of workers. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held within the National Labour Council on the matters covered by the Convention.

Article 6. Working of consultation procedures. The Government indicates in a report received in August 2009 that the representative organizations will be consulted with regard to the production of an annual report on the working of the procedures covered by the Convention, once these procedures have been established. The Committee requests the Government to include in its next report any relevant new information on this matter.

Nicaragua

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1981)

Article 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government indicates in a report received in January 2009, that, once the National Labour Council has been set up, the Committee will be informed of any opinion formulated by that body on the consultations required by Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that, in its observation of 2006, it noted with interest that Act No. 547 of August 2005 had established the National Labour Council which would serve as a consultative body with a view to the application of Convention No. 144. The Committee understands that the National Labour Council has not yet been set up.

The Committee refers to the 2008 Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization which states that “social dialogue and the practice of tripartism between governments and the representative organizations of workers and employers within and across borders are now more relevant to achieving solutions and to building up social cohesion and the rule of law through, among other means, international labour standards”. The Committee therefore repeats its invitation to the Government to hold “effective consultations” on international labour standards as required by Convention No. 144, which is most significant from the viewpoint of governance. The Committee looks forward to examining detailed information on the consultations held on each of the matters covered by Article 5(1).

Article 5, paragraph 1(d). Transmission of draft reports. The Committee observes that in the reports received, the Government indicates that, in accordance with article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution, copies of the reports have been transmitted to the social partners. The Committee recalls that the obligation to consult the representative organizations on the reports to be made concerning the application of ratified Conventions, under the terms of Article 5(1)(d), of the Convention, must be distinguished from the obligation to communicate reports under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution. The tripartite consultations required by the Convention have to be held during the process of preparing reports. Where consultations are held in writing, the Government should transmit a draft report to the representative organizations in order to gather their opinions before preparing its definitive report (paragraph 92 of the General Survey of 2000). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which its practice has developed with regard to the consultations required when preparing draft reports on the application of ratified Conventions.

Nigeria

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last replies in relation to the Committee’s 2004 direct request. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee’s 2008 observation, which sets forth the following matters.

Consultations with representative organizations. The Committee noted that the Nigeria Employers Consultative Association (NECA) and the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC) are consulted at the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) level with regard to some matters covered by the Convention. The Government further indicated that the National Labour Institutions Bill, which makes provision for the NLAC, was before the National Assembly. The Committee reminds the Government that it is important for employers’ and workers’ organizations to enjoy the right to freedom of association, without which there could be no effective system of tripartite consultation. It asks the Government to report on the results of the legislative reform and its impact on the improvement of consultations with representative organizations that enjoy freedom of association, as required under this Convention.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee recalls that the tripartite consultations covered by the Convention are essentially intended to promote the implementation of international labour standards and concern, in particular, the matters enumerated in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide full and detailed information on the tripartite consultations dealing with:

- (a) the Government’s replies to questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the International Labour Conference and the Government’s comments on proposed texts to be discussed by the Conference; and
- (b) questions arising out of reports to be made to the International Labour Office under article 22 of the Constitution of the Organization.

Prior tripartite consultation on proposals made to the National Assembly. The Committee notes that the instruments adopted at the 95th Session of the Conference were submitted to the National Assembly for noting on 21 August 2006. The Government further stated that there was no tripartite consultation as there was no request for their ratification. The Committee points out that, for those States which have already ratified Convention No. 144, effective prior consultations have to be held on the proposals made to the competent authorities when submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference (Article 5(1)(b)). Even if the Government does not intend proposing the ratification of a Convention, the social partners must be consulted sufficiently in advance for them to reach their opinions before the Government finalizes its decision. The Committee trusts that the Government and the social partners will examine the measures to be taken with a view to holding effective consultations on the proposals made to the National Assembly when submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference, as required by the Convention.

Operation of the consultative procedures. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether, in accordance with Article 6, the representative organizations have been consulted in the preparation of an annual report on the working of the consultation procedures provided for in the Convention and, if so, to indicate the outcome of these consultations.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Norway

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1977)

Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in December 2008, which included comments provided by the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO–Norway), which were supported by the Norwegian Confederation of Vocational Unions (YS), and the Norwegian Confederation of Unions for Professionals (UNIO). The Committee notes the concerns expressed by LO–Norway about the manner in which social partners are involved in providing comments on the Government's reports on ratified Conventions. In this regard, LO–Norway states that, while it is satisfied with the agreements reached between the Government and social partners on the reporting procedures, in practice, social partners receive the reports far too late to be able to present satisfactory comments. LO–Norway urges the Government to keep the schedule presented to them by the ILO. The Government indicates that it continues to consider, in consultation with the Norwegian Tripartite ILO Committee, means to improve methods with regard to reporting and other issues concerning the functioning of that Committee. The Government indicates that it is working to improve the time allocated for social partners to give their comments on the Government's reports on Conventions and Recommendations before the reports are sent to the ILO. The Committee invites the Government and the social partners to re-examine the effectiveness of the consultative procedures in place for consultations on questions arising out of reports to be prepared under article 22 of the Constitution (Article 5(1)(d) of the Convention).

Article 5, paragraph 1(c). Prospects of ratification of unratified Conventions. The Committee notes with interest the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, in February 2009. LO–Norway indicates that, on several occasions, it has asked for a stronger ratification policy with regard to the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 83), but this has not led to any initiatives from the Government. The Committee also takes note of the explanations provided by the Government about the difficulties it faces in ratifying Convention No. 183. The Committee invites the Government to continue to report on the measures taken to promote tripartite consultations on international labour standards, as required under Convention No. 144, in particular, on the outcome of consultations held to re-examine the prospects of ratification of unratified Conventions, and on any follow-up to recommendations derived from such consultations.

Pakistan

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes that the report requested and replying to the matters raised in its 2008 observation was not received. It further notes the comments submitted by the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF) in July 2009. The PWF refers to the principle set out in the Convention which provides that tripartite consultations are carried out with the most representative organizations of workers and employers. The PWF indicates that it has the largest membership of workers in the country and is duly registered and certified by the National Industrial Relations Commission. The PWF also maintains that the most representative organization of workers in terms of their membership may not be excluded from tripartite consultations and their views should be taken into consideration. The PWF notes that the Government has recently constituted two national tripartite boards for two important federal institutions – the Workers Welfare Fund and the Old-Age Benefits Institution. The PWF urges the Government to review the selection process of the representatives of workers in those tripartite boards in order to comply with the Convention. The Committee recalls its 2008 observation and once again asks the Government to supply information on the progress made towards the establishment of the Tripartite Consultation Committee. Taking into account the concerns of the PWF, the Committee asks the Government to also provide detailed information on how Articles 1, 2, 3 and 5 of the Convention are applied, so as to ensure that the most representative organizations of workers participate fully in the tripartite consultations required by the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Philippines

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1991)

Article 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report received in May 2009. The Committee notes that, as a result of the adoption of the second Decent Work Country Programme and the Consultative Tripartite Conference on Decent Work in February 2005, subcommittees were established in the context of the Tripartite Industrial Peace Council (TIPC) to identify concerns, gaps, obstacles, strategies and the time frame and mechanisms to facilitate the ratification or denunciation of ILO Conventions which are predetermined as priorities under the Decent Work Country Programme. In this regard, the plenary of the TIPC adopted a revised functional structure which highlights the inclusion of the Committee on Decent Work, as well as four standing committees which form the pillars of decent work. The Committee notes with interest that the Philippines ratified the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97), in April 2009. The Government also indicates that support was gathered in the TIPC to promote the ratification of the Home Work Convention, 1996 (No. 177). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the consultations held to examine the prospects of ratification of the unratified ILO Conventions, and on any follow-up to recommendations derived from such consultations. The Government is also invited to continue to report on the consultations held by the TIPC on matters set out in Article 5(1).

Article 3. Selection of representatives of employers and workers. The Committee recalls that, in its 2008 direct request, it noted that the Public Services Labour Independent Confederation (PSLINK) considered that there was no genuine mechanism for tripartite consultations in the Philippines as the Government determines the most representative workers' organizations through appointments made by the executive. The Government indicates in its report that representatives of the labour and employer sectors are appointed by the President of the Philippines, upon nomination by their respective sectors and the Labour Secretary. The Committee asks the Government to provide further specific information on the manner in which the representatives of employers and workers are nominated, for the purposes of the Convention, specifically on how it is ensured that they have been freely chosen by their representative organizations.

Sao Tome and Principe

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations which read as follows:

Mechanisms for tripartite consultations and the consultations required by the Convention. In a brief report received in March 2007, the Government refers to the tripartite consultations carried out through the National Council for Social Dialogue. The Government also indicates that the National Council meets regularly. The Committee refers to its previous observations and once again invites the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the National Council is involved in the consultations required by the Convention and to provide particulars of the consultations held on each of the matters on international labour standards referred to in Article 5(1) of the Convention, including information on the reports or recommendations made on international labour standards as a result of such consultations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Sierra Leone

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations which read as follows:

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's report supplied in June 2004 indicating its commitment to promote tripartite consultation throughout the country as well as supporting the tripartite delegation to the International Labour Conference. It recalls that, at its 90th Session (June 2002), the Conference adopted a resolution concerning tripartism and social dialogue in which it emphasized that social dialogue and tripartism have proven to be valuable and democratic means to address social concerns, build consensus, help elaborate international labour standards and examine a wide range of labour issues in which the social partners play a direct, legitimate and irreplaceable role. The Committee hopes that the Government and the social partners will examine how the Convention is applied and that the Government's next report will contain indications on any measures taken in order to implement effective tripartite consultation in the sense of the Convention (Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention).

The Committee recalls that the Office has the technical capacity to help strengthen social dialogue and support the activities that governments and employers' and workers' organizations undertake for the consultations required by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Slovakia

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1997)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government reported in November 2008 that the Economic and Social Council was established in 2007 as a body for consultations and consensus building amongst the social partners at the national level. The Government further indicates that matters covered by the Convention fall within the competence of the Economic and Social Council. The Committee notes with interest that the proposal of the Confederation of Trade Unions of the Slovak Republic to ratify Conventions Nos 135 and 154 as well as Conventions Nos 81 and 129, were accepted by the Government by virtue of Resolution No. 1092 of 19 December 2007 and that the legislative procedure is being followed towards achieving the process of ratification (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention). The Government also provided information on the tripartite consultations held on the other matters covered by the Convention. The Committee hopes it will continue to receive information on the content and outcome of the consultations held on matters related to international labour standards set forth in the Convention.

United Republic of Tanzania

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

Articles 2, 3 and 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In reply to its previous observation, the Government indicates in the report received in September 2009 that the members of the Labour, Economic and Social Council (LESCO) are appointed by the minister responsible for labour matters. The Council consists of an equal number of members representing the Government, workers and employers. Prior to appointing a member of the Council, the Government indicates that the minister, by notice in writing, invites nominations from the trade unions and employer associations. In this regard, members of the Council are nominated on merits, with transparency and full participation of the constituents. The Government further indicates that the Council has been very useful in advising it on issues relating to the promotion of economic growth and social equity, economic and social policy, labour market policy, labour laws, and other matters concerning employment relations. The Committee notes with interest the information provided in the Government's report. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the consultations held on the matters concerning international labour standards set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee requests specific information on the subject, frequency and nature of any reports or recommendations resulting from the consultations held by the tripartite bodies such as LESCO on the issues covered by the Convention.

Article 4. Administrative support and training. The Government indicates that it makes staff available from the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Youth Development to serve as a secretariat of the Council. The Government also indicates that participants in tripartite consultations received training in mediation and arbitration, and that the newly elected members have been informed on their roles and functions. A plan is under way to train members on social dialogue and negotiation skills. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the training provided to members of LESCO, more specifically on training of participants on the consultative procedures required by the Convention.

Togo

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in September 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report, including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee's 2004 observation, which set forth the following matters:

Consultation procedures. The Committee noted the project to create a national task force on standards to be responsible for “consensus-based management of relations with the ILO essentially in matters pertaining to constitutional obligations and ongoing promotion of social dialogue”. It requests the Government to provide information on the effect given to this project.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government supplied information on the activities of the National Labour Council. The Committee noted that the information was not specific enough to enable it to assess the effect given to this Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the consultations held on each of the matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, specifying their purpose, and frequency, and the nature of any reports or recommendations resulting from the consultations.

The Government stated that the main difficulty is finding funds for the activities of the bodies that conduct social dialogue and that extra assistance would be essential to strengthen such dialogue, which is becoming increasingly indispensable. The Committee hopes that the Office will be able to furnish its advice in response to the Government’s request so that effective consultations can be held on the subjects covered by the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Turkey

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1993)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government’s report for the period ending May 2008 and the detailed contributions provided by the Turkish Confederation of Employer Association (TİSK), and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ). The Committee notes that the Tripartite Consultative Committee established under the Labour Act to ensure effective tripartite consultations met several times between 2004 and 2007. In this connection, the Committee notes the TÜRK-İŞ’s concern that the Tripartite Consultative Committee has not been consulted on important labour law amendments. The Committee also notes the activities carried out by a tripartite working group on social dialogue established by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to evaluate mechanisms established in the country and to elaborate recommendations, taking into consideration the experience of the EU countries. The Committee invites the Government to continue reporting on the content and outcome of consultations in the Tripartite Consultative Committee, and other tripartite bodies, on matters related to international labour standards covered by Article 5 of the Convention.

Uganda

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last replies in relation to the 2004 direct request. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report, including information in reply to the following points raised in 2004:

The Government indicated that the application of this Convention continues to depend on active tripartite participation, and that consultations were undertaken particularly at the time of revision of the national labour legislation. It also stated that training on the procedures and content of international labour standards might increase the effectiveness of tripartite consultation. The Government stated that it has received technical and financial assistance from the ILO to hold seminars and workshops on consultative procedures. The Committee invites the Government to report on any progress achieved in the field covered by the Convention, following the assistance received from the Office.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide details on the consultations regarding international labour standards covered by the Convention (Article 5(1)).

Article 5, paragraph 1(c) and (e). The Committee recalls that the ILO Governing Body has invited States which are parties to certain Conventions that Uganda has ratified to contemplate ratifying the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), and denouncing Conventions Nos 50, 64, 65 and 86. States parties to the Underground Work (Women) Convention, 1935 (No. 45), were invited to contemplate ratifying the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176). Please indicate if tripartite consultations are envisaged on this matter.

Article 6. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate whether the representative organizations were consulted with regard to the production of an annual report on the operation of the procedures covered by the Convention and, if so, to state the outcome of these consultations.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 144 (Albania, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Barbados, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Central African Republic, China, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Liberia, Malaysia, Namibia, Netherlands: Aruba, San Marino, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Zambia).

Labour administration and inspection

General observation

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81)

However advanced it may be, a country's labour legislation is liable to remain a dead letter if there is no system of labour inspection to enforce it, not only in law, but also in practice.

Articles 10, 20 and 21 of the Convention. Availability of basic information essential to evaluate the implementation of the Convention in practice; statistics of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to labour inspection and of the number of workers covered. When examining annual reports on the work of the labour inspection services provided in accordance with Article 20 of the Convention by a growing number of countries, the Committee often has occasion to express regret at the lack of statistics on industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein (Article 10(a)(i) and (ii) and Article 21(c)). At the national level, the absence of such data represents an insurmountable obstacle for any assessment of the rate of coverage by labour inspection services in relation to their scope, as defined in national legislation. As a consequence, the budgetary resources allocated to this public function rarely meet its duly justified and quantified needs, either for the determination of the appropriate number of labour inspectors, the necessary material resources for the discharge of their functions (Articles 10, 11 and 16) or the provision of training (Article 7). At the international level, it is extremely difficult for the ILO supervisory bodies to evaluate the effect given in practice to the Convention.

The Committee emphasized in paragraph 326 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection the essential character of the availability of a register of workplaces and enterprises liable to inspection containing data on the number and categories of men and women workers employed therein, and it called on governments to make a particular effort to establish and update such a register. It welcomes the significant progress made in many countries including developing countries in this regard. It also welcomes the significant increase in the requests for ILO technical assistance for this purpose and the importance given to this aspect in the recommendations drawn up following audits of labour inspection services in several countries.

The Committee strongly encourages Members to endeavour to establish registers of workplaces liable to inspection or to improve existing registers. It has observed that the more detailed the information in registers, the greater their impact on the effectiveness of labour inspection activities. Part IV of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), in Paragraph 9(c), indicates some criteria which may serve as a basis for the disaggregation of this information. However, it is possible to define other pertinent criteria as a function of the respective quantitative and qualitative objectives and the available resources.

Continuing inter-institutional cooperation between the labour inspection services and other government bodies and public or private institutions in possession of relevant data (tax services, social security bodies, technical supervisory services, local administrations, police, judicial authorities, occupational organizations, etc.) is particularly desirable to ensure that the register of workplaces and enterprises meets the expected objectives.

The Committee wishes to emphasize that, in addition to providing the central labour inspection authorities with the data essential for preparing the annual report, the publication and communication to the ILO of which is required by Article 20, the register of workplaces can be an important tool for assessing the effectiveness of external services and their personnel. The central authority can therefore assess the relationship between the activities carried out and the resources available, especially for the development of a human resources policy that takes into account merit and motivation.

The Committee asks governments to take measures rapidly to foster inter-institutional cooperation for the establishment or improvement, as appropriate, of a register of workplaces liable to labour inspection. It asks them to ensure that the register also contains, in so far as possible, data that are useful to improve the coverage of the labour inspection system and its effectiveness.

The Committee asks governments to provide information on any measures taken for this purpose and their impact, and on any difficulties encountered and the solutions envisaged.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129)

However advanced it may be, a country's labour legislation is liable to remain a dead letter if there is no system of labour inspection to enforce it, not only in law, but also in practice.

Articles 14, 26 and 27 of the Convention. Availability of basic information essential to evaluate the implementation of the Convention in practice; statistics of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection and of the number of workers covered. When examining annual reports on the work of the labour inspection services provided in accordance with Article 26 of the Convention by a growing number of countries, the Committee often has occasion to express regret at the lack of statistics on agricultural undertakings liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein (Article 14(a)(i) and (ii) and Article 27(c)). At the national level, the absence of such data represents an insurmountable obstacle for any assessment of the rate of coverage by labour inspection services in relation to their scope, as defined in national legislation. As a consequence, the budgetary resources allocated to this public function rarely meet the duly justified and quantified needs, either for the determination of the appropriate number of labour inspectors, the necessary material resources and transport facilities for the discharge of their functions (Articles 14, 15 and 21) or the provision of specific training (Article 9). At the international level, it is extremely difficult for the ILO supervisory bodies to evaluate the effect given in practice to the Convention.

The Committee emphasized in paragraph 326 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection the essential character of the availability of a register of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection containing data on the number and categories of men and women workers employed therein, and it called on governments to make a particular effort to establish and update such a register. It welcomes the significant progress made in certain countries in this regard and the relevant recommendations drawn up following audits of the labour inspection services carried out by the ILO in several developing countries.

The Committee strongly encourages Members to endeavour to establish registers of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection or to improve existing registers. It has observed that the more detailed the information in registers, the greater their impact on the effectiveness of labour inspection activities. Part IV of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), in Paragraph 9(c), indicates some criteria which may serve as a basis for the disaggregation of this information. However, it is possible to define other pertinent criteria as a function of the respective quantitative and qualitative objectives and the available resources.

Continuing inter-institutional cooperation between the labour inspection services and other government bodies and public or private institutions in possession of relevant data (tax services, social security, technical supervisory services in agriculture, local administrations, police, judicial authorities, occupational organizations, etc.) is particularly desirable to ensure that the register of agricultural undertakings meets the assigned objectives.

The Committee wishes to emphasize that, in addition to providing the central labour inspection authorities with the data essential for preparing the annual report, the publication and communication to the ILO of which is required by Article 26, the register of undertakings can be an important tool for assessing the effectiveness of external services and their personnel. The central authority can therefore assess the relationship between the activities carried out and the resources available, especially for the development of a human resources policy that takes into account merit and motivation.

The Committee asks governments to take measures rapidly to foster inter-institutional cooperation for the establishment or improvement, as appropriate, of a register of workplaces liable to labour inspection. It asks them to ensure that the register also contains, in so far as possible, data that are useful to improve the coverage of the labour inspection system and its effectiveness.

The Committee asks governments to provide information on any measures taken for this purpose and their impact, and on any difficulties encountered and the solutions envisaged.

Algeria

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report on the developments which have occurred in the organization and functioning of the general labour inspectorate with the implementation of Decree No. 05-05 of 6 January 2005 and also on their results in practice. It notes the redistribution of its functions among the central bodies and the restructuring of the decentralized labour inspection bodies with a view to adapting to the new realities of the working environment. In particular, the Committee notes the provisions of the above Decree relating to: the formulation, implementation and evaluation of annual and multi-annual training plans for labour inspection staff (section 13 respecting the functions of the training and documentation subdirectorates); the formulation and implementation of a prevention and monitoring strategy in occupational health, safety and medicine, and also the implementation of cooperation between the labour inspection services and the partners and institutions concerned in the various areas of enforcement of labour standards (section 5 respecting the functions of the directorate of occupational relations and monitoring of working conditions); the formulation of a development strategy for the computerization and compilation of statistics and the establishment of a system for the collection, processing and consolidation of all statistical information in relation to the work of labour inspectors (sections 10 and 14 respecting the functions of the administration and training directorate and the computerization and statistics subdirectorates, respectively); the establishment and updating of the register of enterprises (section 9 respecting the functions of the standardization and methodology subdirectorates); and the periodic assessment of offences reported by the labour inspectorate and the evaluation of follow-up action taken by the competent authorities (same section). With reference to its observation of 2007, the Committee also notes that the wilaya labour inspectorate (the decentralized inspection body at the departmental level) is responsible for monitoring the procedures and actions instituted by the labour inspectorate in the courts and for keeping the hierarchical authority informed (section 24).

The Committee also notes the adoption of the texts implementing the above Decree, namely: the Inter-ministerial Orders of 16 August 2005 concerning the organization and territorial competence of (i) labour inspection offices, and (ii) regional labour inspectorates, and also concerning the organization of labour inspection at the wilaya level; and the Inter-ministerial Order of 18 January 2006 establishing the office structure of the general labour inspectorate.

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Publication and communication of an annual inspection report. Improvements to labour inspection statistics and dissemination of other information on labour inspection activities. The Committee notes, further to its repeated requests, the communication by the central labour inspection authority of two reports including information on developments in the working of the labour inspection system, statistics on inspection activities relating to the subjects covered by Article 3(1)(a), of the Convention, and on their results for 2007 and the first six months of 2008. The statistics cover the enforcement of the relevant legal provisions (Article 21(d) and (e)) and also the information and advice provided to employers and workers at their request or through planned activities (Article 3(1)(b)).

The statistical summaries for inspections are disaggregated by sector of the economy (public and private), type of inspection (routine, follow-up and special) and branch of activity (agriculture, industry, construction and public works, services). Statistics of the offences reported by the labour inspectorate are disaggregated by the number of reported warnings issued and written comments.

The Committee also notes that the construction sector has been the subject of particular vigilance on the part of the inspection services and that advice has been given by the inspectorate to strengthen observance of the legal provisions relating to safety and health. The reports also refer to the celebration for the fourth consecutive year of the World Day for Safety and Health at Work, organized by the National Institute for the Prevention of Occupational Risks, at the headquarters of the National Oil Well Services Company (ENSP), at the Hassi-Messaoud oilfield. Apart from communications on the management of occupational risks, particularly concerning a key aspect of the safety and health culture at the workplace, namely the principle of the use of personal protective equipment, reference was also made to the relevant ILO Conventions and Recommendations. Similarly, the World Day against Child Labour, with the participation of the ILO representative, provided an opportunity for the chief labour inspector to present occupational safety and health measures, and particularly the establishment of a national commission responsible for coordinating action by the ministerial departments concerned. The Day was celebrated by seven regional labour inspectorates (Annaba, Oran, Constantine, Batna, Tired, Ouargla and Bechar).

The Committee also notes the inclusion in the reports published by the general labour inspectorate of technical, legislative and practical information for use by inspectors and employers and workers on issues related to conditions of work and the protection of workers. For example, the 2007 inspection report dealt with methods for preventing chemical hazards in industry and the role of the labour inspectorate in prosecuting breaches of the legislation respecting remuneration.

Article 7. Further training of labour inspectors, particularly through knowledge transfer (dissemination programme). The Committee notes that internal further training programmes for inspectors covered a variety of subjects during the reporting period, for example the exercise of the right to organize, home work, investigation and monitoring techniques, the establishment of contracts covering the employment relationship and the organization of the prevention of occupational risks. The Committee also notes that senior inspectors who attended training programmes abroad are given the task of transferring knowledge and competence thus acquired to other labour inspectors. It also notes that, in the context of its training programme, the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security organized training on the treatment of psychological and social problems related to work, entitled the "SOLVE Programme".

Article 11. Improving the conditions of work of labour inspectors. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report and the general labour inspectorate's reports concerning the adoption of specific financial measures taken by the Government to reinforce the operational resources of the inspectorate and enhance its credibility.

Labour inspection buildings (offices and staff housing). The Committee notes the completion of buildings housing the new labour inspection headquarters in several wilaya capitals and other local inspection services (Oum El Bouaghi, Adrar, Illizi, Ouenza), and also the detailed information on the progress made on other building projects across the country, which are due to be completed in 2009. It notes that a total of 43 projects are being undertaken for the construction of new inspection headquarters, the extension and equipment of other inspection offices, and the creation of official housing for each inspectorate.

Office equipment and transport facilities. The inspection services have more than 912 computers, or one per inspector, as they are considered an essential tool for the development of management and communication methods. It should be noted that, in the context of special programmes, 15 wilayas in the High Plateau region and five wilayas in the south of the country have been the recipients of office furniture, computers and copying equipment, and also 12 vehicles, including nine four-wheel drive vehicles, out of the 128 new vehicles purchased by the general labour inspectorate in 2006 and 2007.

The Committee hopes that adequate financial resources will be allocated so that the legal and organizational measures taken will be given effect in practice and will lead to a substantial improvement in the effectiveness of labour inspection activities in accordance with the objectives of the Convention. The Committee also hopes that relevant information will continue to be supplied by the Government in its report on the application of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Angola

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes the Government's report, the comments by the National Union of Angolan Workers–Trade Union Confederation (UNTA–CS), received at the ILO on 17 November 2008. It also notes with interest the annual inspection report for 2008 in the form of a publication, as required by Article 20 of the Convention, and containing instructive information on the organization and working of the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT).

Legislation. Noting that the Government has not sent the information requested on the measures to develop, in consultation with the social partners, regulations to implement certain provisions of the law, the Committee requests the Government to take these measures and to keep the Office informed. It reminds the Government that it may seek assistance from the ILO for this purpose.

Article 3, paragraph 1(b), Article 17, paragraph 2, and Article 21(e) of the Convention. Practical instructive measures to prevent risks of occupational accidents and punishment of negligent employers. The Committee notes that, having declined in 2007, the number of occupational accidents again climbed to a high level in 2008. The reason appears to be a significant increase in the number of industrial and commercial workplaces (from 15,722 in 2006 to 18,555 in 2008) and of workers. In this connection, the Committee notes with interest the preventive measures taken such as: (a) the planning of inspection visits targeting activities that traditionally expose workers to a high risk of accidents (particularly civil and industrial construction and transport); (b) significant development in technical information activities; (c) various information campaigns on occupational safety and health, one of which, launched in 2007, is a standing programme on the prevention of occupational accidents and diseases in the construction sector; (d) establishment of a World Day for Safety and Health at Work; (e) dissemination in the press and audiovisual media of information on the IGT's role in occupational safety and health, the Committee on the Prevention of Industrial Accidents in the Hydrocarbons Sector, standards concerning noise at work, occupational safety and health in the diamond mining sector; and (f) the creation of enterprise safety and health committees and accident prevention committees. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on the activities carried out by inspectors to introduce an occupational risk prevention culture, and on progress made in this area (statistics on occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease, contraventions of the relevant legislation). The Committee also asks the Government to indicate the policy applied by the labour inspectorate regarding employers that are reluctant to heed its technical advice and warnings.

Article 10. Adapting the labour inspectorate's human, material and logistical resources to the expansion of industry and commerce. The Committee notes with interest that the staff of the inspectorate has been increased (99 inspectors in 2005, 114 in 2006, 120 in 2007 and 138 in 2008) in order to cope with the continued growth in the number of workplaces subject to inspection. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how the budget for the IGT is determined, and in particular the share of the resources earmarked for annually programmed visits to workplaces by inspectors (technical equipment, transport facilities and reimbursement of duty travel expenses, for example).

The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any outside financial support obtained in order to reinforce the labour inspection system, and to report on any progress made in this area.

Article 3, paragraph 2, and Article 5(a). Cooperation between the labour inspection services and other public bodies and institutions. According to the Government, the feasibility of establishing a forum for cooperation in the IGT, following a proposal by the UNTA-CS, is currently under study by the National Committee on ILO-related matters. The Government also indicates that joint inspections are carried out by the control services of the provincial governments, health inspectors and financial authorities. The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the need to ensure that any cooperation between the inspection services and other public bodies or institutions should not target objectives that conflict with those of the Convention, but should contribute to improving the working of the labour inspectorate. The Committee invites the Government to refer in this connection to the Committee's comments on this subject in its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection (paragraphs 75–78 and 150–162), and asks the Government to provide information on the objective of the above joint inspections and on the measures taken to ensure that these do not adversely affect the duty of the labour inspectorate to protect workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Antigua and Barbuda

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1983)

Article 5 of the Convention. Cooperation between the labour inspection services and other Government services or public institutions and collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee notes that no progress has been made since 1997 in promoting cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the Ministry of Health despite the Government's commitment to this end. The Committee is therefore once again bound to request the Government to supply detailed information on the practical measures taken or envisaged to establish and develop this cooperation (for instance, through the regular exchange of information and data, common training seminars or conferences, etc.) and on the results achieved or any difficulties encountered. It also asks the Government to provide the information requested previously on the contents and modalities of the cooperation in question.

The Committee notes that the collaboration with trade unions, announced by the Government in its 2006 and 2008 reports, is very limited, merely consisting of the trade unions informing the Labour Department of violations of legal provisions in workplaces. The Committee therefore wishes to refer the Government once again to Part II of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), on examples of measures that might be taken to encourage collaboration between labour inspectors and both workers and employers, such as the organization of conferences or joint committees, or similar bodies to provide a space for discussions on safety and health issues. The Committee requests the Government to inform the ILO of the measures taken to encourage collaboration between the labour inspectorate and the social partners, and the results achieved in the areas covered.

In addition, noting the information communicated by the Government on the application of Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), on the existence of a Labour Advisory Board with a tripartite structure, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the matters discussed within this body and to provide the ILO with copies of relevant documents.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Australia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the information provided in reply to its previous comments. It also notes the comments made by the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) in a communication dated 1 September 2008, as well as the Government's response to these comments. The Committee finally notes the adoption of the Fair Work Act 2009 (No. 28, 2009) (FWA) which establishes Fair Work Australia, a new statutory body with a wide range of functions including an inspectorate – the Fair Work Ombudsman and its Office – which has responsibility for monitoring and enforcing compliance with industrial laws.

Impact of legislative development on the functioning of labour inspection. In a previous direct request the Committee had noted comments communicated by the ACTU with regard to a change in orientation of the labour inspectorate which, instead of focusing on its traditional task of recovering wages owed to workers, had begun to use aggressive methods of investigation in order to determine whether trade unions and workers were in breach of the legislation which applied prior to the adoption of the FWA (i.e. the Workplace Relations Act 1996 (WR Act)) and which had itself been found by the Committee to be contrary to other international labour standards.

The Committee takes note of the Government's reply which was communicated prior to the adoption of the FWA. The Government provides information on the activities of the Workplace Ombudsman who preceded the recently established Fair Work Ombudsman. The Workplace Ombudsman had commenced on 1 July 2007 on the basis of Part 5A of the WR Act. According to the Government, it had established itself as a strong, effective and independent regulator having finalized over 45,000 investigations, having recovered in excess of 52 million Australian dollars (AUD) on behalf of employees, and having commenced 123 court proceedings for breaches of the WR Act. The courts imposed over AUD2 million in penalties against employers as a result of the Workplace Ombudsman's work. Furthermore, the Workplace Ombudsman performed targeted compliance and education campaigns, as a result of which it audited more than 9,500 businesses and recovered more than AUD14 million on behalf of over 15,000 employees.

The Committee also notes that in the meantime, the WR Act was replaced by the FWA and the Workplace Ombudsman ceased operations on 30 June 2009, all of its functions having been assumed by the Office of the Fair Work Ombudsman. It also takes note of the statement of the Chairperson of the ACTU to the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference (Geneva, June 2009) according to which "[i]n July [2009], the Fair Work Act will begin operation, re-establishing a decent safety net for all working Australians, restoring unfair dismissal rights, placing collective bargaining at the centre of industrial relations, and restoring the powers of the independent umpire with Fair Work Australia". (Provisional Record No. 9, page 44)

The Committee takes note of this information with interest. It requests the Government to provide in its next report information on the activities of the Fair Work Ombudsman, with statistical information in particular on the number of violations found and prosecutions initiated.

The Committee also notes that in its comments, the ACTU raised the issue of provisions in the WR Act which restricted the right to access of trade unions to workplaces, effectively preventing them from performing inspection functions. The ACTU indicated that under the Australian industrial relations system, trade unions had historically played a key role in overseeing the enforcement of awards and agreements. In recent years, however, the WR Act, as amended by the Work Choices Act, had severely restricted the capacity of union officials to enter the workplace to investigate a suspected breach of industrial obligations and to hold discussions with employees. The ACTU strongly regretted that the new Government had indicated its intention to retain the existing restrictions.

The Committee notes that the WR Act has now been replaced by the FWA, Part 3–4 and in particular sections 481–483E which enable union representatives to enter premises and investigate suspected contraventions of the FWA or a term of a fair work instrument (i.e., a "modern award", "workplace determination" or order issued by Fair Work Australia, or an enterprise agreement (section 12)) that relates to or affects a member of their organization. However, the exercise of this right is subject to certain conditions concerning the right of entry aimed at maintaining a balance between the right of organizations to investigate suspected contraventions and the right of occupiers of premises and employers to go about their business without undue inconvenience (as stipulated in section 480 of the FWA). Moreover, trade union representatives are not entitled to exercise general inspection functions under the FWA. According to section 152(b) of the FWA, a "modern award" must not include terms that require or authorize an official of an organization to enter premises to inspect any work, process or object. Moreover, the conditions under which trade union representatives have right of entry to carry out inspections of suspected contraventions, cannot be modified by enterprise agreement, as provided in section 194 of the FWA.

The Committee observes that these provisions place certain restrictions on the wide powers traditionally conferred upon trade unions to ensure enforcement of awards and agreements. The power to enforce legal entitlements has now been transferred to a public authority, namely, the Fair Work Ombudsman while trade unions maintain the power to investigate suspected contraventions which relate to or affect one of their members.

The Committee recalls that, according to Article 4 of the Convention, so far as is compatible with the administrative practice of the Member, labour inspection shall be placed under the supervision and control of a central authority. At the same time, the Committee notes that according to Article 5(b), the competent authority shall make appropriate arrangements to promote collaboration between officials of the labour inspectorate and employers and workers or their organizations. The Committee notes that in its report, which antedated the adoption of the FWA, the Government referred to the measures taken to ensure that the Workplace Ombudsman (now replaced by the Fair Work Ombudsman) was as accessible as possible to the Australian community: the agency investigated all complaints and allegations of breaches of workplace relations law from any source, including employer and employee industrial associations, individuals, Commonwealth and state territory agencies, state and federal members of Parliament, and the media. Members of the public could access the Workplace Ombudsman and information regarding compliance rights and obligations through the post, the telephone, in person or online. In addition to this, key stakeholders including union and employer associations were contacted prior to the commencement of compliance and education campaigns and provided with the opportunity to both comment on and participate in the educational phase of the campaigns. Furthermore, the Workplace Ombudsman had a good general working relationship with peak union and employer associations such as the ACTU and the Australian Chamber of Commerce and Industry (ACCI).

While taking due note of this information, the Committee emphasizes that possible arrangements for collaboration with the social partners normally go beyond the right to communicate complaints to the Ombudsman and can take various forms, ranging from tripartite bodies, to cooperation agreements at various levels (national, regional, sectoral and enterprise) (see General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, paragraphs 163–71). The Committee also recalls that Recommendation No. 81 provides specific guidance on possible forms and methods of collaboration in the area of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes that it does not have recent information at its disposal to enable it to evaluate whether the collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations has been further developed after the creation of the Fair Work Ombudsman. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information in its next report on arrangements made or envisaged in order to promote collaboration between the Fair Work Ombudsman and employers' and workers' organizations.

Specific impact of new legislation on labour inspection in the building and construction sector. The Committee finally notes that in its comments dated 1 September 2008, the ACTU refers to the Australian Building and Construction Commission (ABCC), established on the basis of the Building and Construction Industry Improvement (BCII) Act, 2005. The ACTU raises serious concerns about the conduct of the ABCC, in particular, its unbalanced approach in favour of employers in relation to the selection of matters for prosecution, its refusal to prosecute employer breaches of industrial instruments and its failure to observe reasonable standards of prosecutorial fairness in the conduct of litigation against unions and workers. The ACTU emphasizes that according to the ABCC's annual report for 2006–07, trade unions were the subject of 73 per cent of investigations and employees the subject of 11 per cent (a total of 84 per cent). At the same time, the total number of employers prosecuted by the ABCC since October 2005 for failure to pay minimum lawful entitlements was zero; the total number of employers referred to other statutory agencies for such breaches was four. This was the case although the Workplace Ombudsman had ranked the construction industry as having the fourth highest rate of non-compliance with minimum standards by employers. According to the ACTU, the ABCC had apparently adopted a policy position not to investigate or prosecute such matters.

The ACTU adds that the BCII Act contains provisions which give the ABCC wide-ranging coercive powers akin to an agency charged with investigating criminal matters and a harsh regime of financial penalties for acts which constitute regular trade union activity. Among other things, the BCII Act imposes the penalty of imprisonment for failing to appear and answer questions or provide documents to the ABCC. As of May 2008, the overwhelming majority of individuals who had been served with notices under section 52 of the BCII Act compelling them to attend and answer questions, were workers as opposed to management representatives. The total amount of financial penalties imposed from 1 October 2005 to May 2008 was AUD1.2 million, including AUD883,200 imposed on 107 individual employees in a single prosecution in Western Australia. Finally, on 2 June 2008, a trade union officer in Victoria was prosecuted and faced imprisonment simply for failing to attend and answer questions as required by a notice issued by the ABCC (section 52(6) BCII Act) without being the subject of any investigation.

According to the ACTU, since the election of the new Government in 2007, the BCII Act has continued to apply without amendment and the ABCC has continued to operate with the same powers, with undiminished resources and unaltered policy direction. Despite having the capacity to do so under section 11(1) of the BCII Act, the incoming minister has not issued any directions to the ABCC specifying the manner in which the ABCC should exercise or perform the powers or functions it has under the Act. The new Government announced that the ABCC would be retained until 31 January 2010, and after that date, responsibilities would transfer to a specialist division within Fair Work Australia. The ACTU objects to the creation of a specialist division on building and construction.

The Committee notes the Government's reply to these comments, according to which the ABCC will be retained until 31 January 2010, after which time it will be replaced with a specialist building and construction division of the inspectorate of Fair Work Australia. The Government has engaged a former judge of the Australian Federal Court to consult and report on matters related to the creation of the specialist division and to report to the Government in 2009. A report will be provided to the Committee of Experts once the Government has had the opportunity to consider the recommendations of this inquiry.

The Committee recalls that under Article 3 of the Convention, the functions of the system of labour inspection shall be to secure the enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work; any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. The Committee considers that the prosecution of workers does not constitute part of the primary duties of inspectors and may not only seriously interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties – which should be centred on the protection of workers under Article 3 of the Convention – but also prejudice the authority and impartiality necessary in the relations between inspectors and employers and workers. This is even more so when the laws on the basis of which the workers are prosecuted have been repeatedly found by this Committee to be contrary to other international labour standards, notably Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

The Committee hopes that the above issues will be fully resolved in the framework of the formal inquiry into the regulatory arrangements to replace the ABCC and the establishment of a specialist building and construction division in Fair Work Australia. The Committee requests the Government to communicate the results of this inquiry and to indicate in its next report the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that labour inspectors in the building and construction division of Fair Work Australia focus on enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work and that any further duties which may be entrusted to them are not such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bahrain

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending in September 2008 and the annual reports published by the labour inspection authority and the occupational safety and health authority on their respective inspection activities in 2006 and 2007. The Government has provided, as indicated in its previous report, at the request of the Committee, information and documentation allowing an assessment of the operation of the labour inspection system in practice, the progress made and the prospects for progress in the application of the following provisions of the Convention.

Article 3, paragraphs 1 and 2, and Article 20 of the Convention. Transfer of competence for the enforcement of the legislation on the employment of foreigners and content of the annual report on labour inspection activities. According to the preamble to the annual report of the labour inspection section for 2007, competence for the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to the employment of foreign workers will soon be transferred from the Ministry of Labour to the body responsible for regulating the labour market. The Committee can only firmly encourage such an initiative, which should have the effect of refocusing inspection activities on working conditions and the protection of both national and foreign workers while engaged in their work. In its 2004 direct request, the Committee noted with regret the incomplete nature of the statistical tables contained in the annual inspection report of the Division for Safety in the Workplace for 2003 and the lack of information on inspection activities relating to general conditions of work, such as hours of work, holiday, wages and the employment of women, young persons and children. It once again notes that the annual report of the labour inspectorate for 2006 mainly contains information and statistics relating to the activities carried out in the context of labour market supervision. The report also indicates that joint campaigns have been conducted with the immigration and passport police to search for illegal foreign workers and that it is regrettable that such campaigns, which result in the arrest of these persons, are not conducted as frequently as is necessary to combat the growing phenomenon of illegal immigration. According to the report, the limited prison capacity and the high cost of accommodating and repatriating workers are the main obstacles to conducting such campaigns more frequently. It therefore seems clear that labour inspectors participate in operations which are not only outside the remit of the labour inspectorate under the Convention, but also obviously contrary to the objective of the Convention of enforcing the application of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of the progress made in transferring competence for the monitoring of the work permits of foreigners to the authority responsible for regulating the labour market so that labour inspectors are no longer involved in monitoring activities performed in workplaces aimed at arresting, imprisoning and then repatriating illegal workers. It requests the Government to provide copies of any relevant text or document.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would ensure that future annual reports of the labour inspection authority provide information on inspection activities mainly aimed at enforcing the application of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work (wages, hours of work, holiday, weekly rest, night work by women, the employment of children and the disabled, etc.) and the protection of workers while engaged in their work (non-discrimination, social security, representation of workers, etc.), without consideration of the legal situation of workers employed in the workplaces inspected.

Reminding the Government of the guidance provided in Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), concerning the level of detail useful in respect of the information required by Article 21, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the application of the Convention on any measures implemented to improve the content of the reports relating to inspection activities, as well as on any difficulties encountered.

Article 14. Notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. Further to its previous comments on this matter, the Committee notes with interest that henceforth, under Order No. 1 of 2006, industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease shall be notified by the employer not only to the Social Insurance Fund and the competent police station, in accordance with Act No. 24–76 on social insurance, but also to the Ministry of Labour. It notes that the preamble to the Order refers to the present Convention. It trusts that, in accordance with Article 14 of the Convention, the labour inspectorate will receive relevant information which will be dealt with by the central inspection authority with a view to developing a policy on prevention focusing on high-risk occupations (construction, the chemical industry, the energy sector, work involving the operation of heavy machinery, activities involving overexposure to the sun, etc.). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide details on the notification procedure for industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease and on the action taken in response to such notifications in practice. It requests it to provide a copy of any relevant legal texts or documents.

Article 20. Impact of the publication of annual reports of the labour inspectorate and the occupational safety and health authority. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the reactions (criticism, praise, proposals for the improvement of the inspection system, etc.) to the information published in the above annual reports by employers, workers or their representative organizations, as well as other public authorities concerned. The Government is also requested to indicate the impact of these reactions on the operation and the means of action of the labour inspection system (allocation of resources, focus of activities, inter-institutional cooperation, etc.).

Belgium

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report received by the ILO on 26 September 2008, accompanied by statistics for 2007 and 2008 on the activities and results of the inspection services, and the annual reports on the activities of the social inspection services for 2005 and 2006. The numerous legal texts received by the ILO on 15 October 2009 will be examined together with the Government's next report.

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of the competence of the labour inspection services. The Committee notes with interest that the inspection functions not only cover establishments and enterprises located in Belgium, but also foreign employers not covered by Belgian social security in respect of workers detached in the country.

Article 3, paragraph 1(a) and (c). Extension of the legislative fields covered by the inspection services. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that action to combat cross-boundary fraud had been given priority among the objectives of the labour inspectorate in 2006. It noted that the system to combat trafficking in human beings rested on a difficult compromise between, on the one hand, the wish to protect victims and offer them prospects for the future and, on the other, the need to combat networks effectively. According to the Government, in addition to the fact that the various types of fraud related to unlawful work are endangering the very financing of the social security system and creating unfair competition with employers that are in compliance with the rules, they prejudice the workers, who are often taken on without any social protection. Furthermore, in many cases, this type of engagement may even be associated with a form of trafficking in human beings in the broader sense. Consequently, inspectors responsible for supervising conditions of work may, in the context of action to combat trafficking in human beings and economic exploitation, deduce that there is a case of economic exploitation where, in practice, they are confronted with situations characterized by such factors as: a wage that is manifestly unrelated to the very large number of hours of work performed, possibly without a rest day; the provision of unpaid services; remuneration levels below the minimum monthly average income established in a collective labour agreement; and the engagement of one or more workers in a working environment that is manifestly not in conformity with the standards set out in the law. The Committee notes with interest that the vulnerability of the victim is an aggravating circumstance in relation to the offence of trafficking in human beings, as set out in section 433septies of the Penal Code, and that consequently the penalty for any person committing such an offence is greater, particularly where the victim is in an unlawful or precarious administrative situation. According to the definition provided in section 433quinquies of the Penal Code, the offence of trafficking in human beings is constituted by the act of "recruiting, transporting, transferring, lodging, receiving a person, giving up or transferring control over such a person, with a view ... to causing such person to work or allowing such a person to be put to work under conditions inconsistent with human dignity". The Government indicates that the social inspection services of the Federal Public Service (SPF) for social security systematically ensure that the work performed by workers "intercepted" at a workplace is, even in the event of unlawful employment, fully and correctly declared to the National Social Security Office so that they can be guaranteed the provision of the related social benefits. With reference to the reasoning given for the Bill relating to the Act of 10 August 2005, the Government emphasizes that the objective is not merely to combat "illegal work", but rather economic exploitation and that there is a significant difference between “illegal employment under social legislation and economic exploitation”. In cases in which the social inspection services of the SPF for social security identify the existence of an irregularity, they systematically proceed to regularize the situation by submitting a specific form to the National Social Security Office containing certain data on the employer, the worker and their labour relationship in practice, namely the date of the beginning and the end of the worker’s engagement, the remuneration received in relation to the level that should have been paid taking into account the occupation, the number of days worked, etc. The National Social Security Office may at its own initiative draw up or correct this declaration on the basis of legal requirements. It then proceeds to undertake an automatic registration and to calculate and claim from the employer the amount of social contributions evaded based on the illegal employment, and accordingly to guarantee the worker concerned the social entitlements deriving from the work (health insurance, unemployment benefits, pensions, employment accident and occupational disease benefits, family allowances and annual holidays). The employer then pays the amount that is due in social contributions, under penalty of the application of civil financial penalties (an increase in the rate of the contributions and the interest due for delayed payment, and administrative penalties) and/or penal sanctions (imposed by the courts).

The Government adds that, in the context of supervisory activities targeting unlawful or clandestine employment, as well as those carried out to combat trafficking in human beings, the inspection services devote their energies not only to identifying violations relating to unlawful or clandestine employment, but also to ascertaining compliance with laws and regulations respecting conditions of work from the viewpoint of health and safety and of labour regulations (compliance with the wage scales applicable in the sector, working hours, public holidays, etc.).

The Committee however observes that, taking into account the types of fraud related to illegal work to which the Government refers, “undeclared work by foreign workers in an illegal situation”, in view of the wording, would appear to imply that the person committing such fraud is the worker her or himself and not, as in the other types of fraud, the employer. According to the information provided by the Government, a “pro justitia” (report of a violation) or a report of a criminal offence is always forwarded to the judicial authorities where the worker concerned by the contravention of the legislation on the employment of foreign nationals is in a situation of unlawful residence. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would specify whether the absence of a declaration by the worker is an offence attributable to the employed worker and indicate in any event the penalties incurred by this specific type of violation and the procedure applicable in this respect in relation to the employer and the workers concerned, where the latter are employed persons.

The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which it is ensured that foreign workers engaged in an employed labour relationship, but whose situation in respect of the rules relating to residence is unlawful, benefit from the same protection as other illegal workers. The Government is requested to provide information on the procedure applicable for this purpose and on the role of the inspection services in relation to foreign workers who are subject to being taken back to the frontier or to expulsion.

Noting that an ethical code common to the four federal social inspection services is due to be adopted, following the opinion of the Federal Committee to Combat Illegal Work and Social Fraud, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy to the ILO immediately or, if it is not adopted during the period covered by the next report, to provide clarifications on the matters that it covers.

Article 5(a) and (b). Developments in the collaboration between the labour inspection services and other government services and public institutions, on the one hand, and the social partners, on the other. The Committee notes the composition of the two bodies of the Department of Research and Labour Information to combat social fraud and illegal work, established by the Framework Act of 27 December 2006, namely the General Assembly of the Partners and the Federal Guidance Office, which include representatives of the Office of the Attorney-General and of the four inspection services, as well as other public social security institutions, the National Pensions Office, the National Institute for Sickness and Invalidity Insurance, the National Family Allowances Office for Employees, as well as representatives of employers and workers’ unions. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the role of the inspection services in these structures and its impact on the discharge of inspection functions, as determined in Article 3(1) of the Convention.

Specific cooperation with judicial bodies. Educational and information exchanges. In reply to the 2007 general observation, the Government indicates that training for all supervisory personnel provided by an alternate judge of the court of Brussels was organized in September 2006. It covered issues relating to the powers of labour inspectors, penal repression, penal referral, the setting aside of cases and administrative penalties, the organization of judiciary enforcement and, particularly in the context of penal labour law for civil action, time limits, etc. The Government adds that a circular issued by the College of Prosecutors General in courts of appeal, dated 18 January 2007, recalling the general principles of prosecution and intended to harmonize judicial practices, recommends that labour auditors (representatives of the Office of the Attorney General in social jurisdictions) ensure joint training in their districts for labour inspectors and police officers with a view to improving knowledge sharing. The Committee notes this information with interest and would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on exchanges between the labour inspection services and judicial bodies with a view to enabling labour inspectors to describe to professionals in the judiciary tangible cases illustrating the gravity of the human, social and economic consequences of failure to comply with or deliberate violations of the legal provisions covered by the Convention.

Communication of the judicial action taken on cases referred by labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest that, as envisaged in section 14 of the Act of 16 November 1972 respecting labour inspection, labour inspectors are already informed, at their request, of the action taken on the violations reported by them to judicial bodies, and that such communication will be compulsory and automatic as from 2012 through access to the information technology systems recording court decisions. It also notes with interest that, in practice, the directorate for administrative penalties already systematically transmits rulings to the inspection services which identified the violation. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the practical impact of the measures to provide systematic access by the labour inspection services to judicial decisions on the matters resulting from their action, in terms of the credibility and effectiveness of the labour inspection services.

Article 15(c). Confidentiality of the source of any complaint and of any link that may exist between a complaint and a visit of inspection. While noting that, as indicated by way of example by the Government, a labour inspector may decide to conduct a general investigation even where a complaint only covers the failure to provide holiday pay, the Committee nevertheless observes that the investigation may be “confined” to the subject of the complaint where a general investigation has already been undertaken in the specific enterprise in the previous five years. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which it is ensured in such cases that, as envisaged in Article 15(c) of the Convention and with a view to protecting the complainant from any reprisals, the inspector shall treat as absolutely confidential the source of any complaint and shall give no intimation to the employer or his or her representative that a visit of inspection was made in consequence of the receipt of a complaint.

Articles 17 and 18. Progressive decriminalization of violations of certain provisions of the labour legislation. The Committee notes that, under the terms of the circular of 18 January 2007 referred to above, labour auditors are invited to give preference to the referral of matters to the administrative fines service, where this is envisaged, with prosecution in the criminal courts being reserved for more serious offences, cases in which no action is taken to regularize the situation, manifest bad faith, repeat offences or the non-payment of the proposed remedial measure. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the impact of this decriminalization of violations on compliance with the legislation concerned and if it would provide specific examples of cases of violations referred to criminal jurisdictions and the corresponding decisions.

Bolivia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received for the fourth time. It is therefore bound to renew its reiterated observation, which read as follows:

Further to its previous comments, and referring in particular to the information available to the ILO, the Committee notes the launching of the multilateral technical cooperation project ILO/FORSAT, financed by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs of Spain and covering other countries in the region, with the objective of strengthening labour administrations. It notes that labour inspection is one of the important components of the project and that cooperation and assistance activities should be undertaken for the definition of a legal and structural framework and the determination of working methods and procedures with a view to the development of an effective inspection system. The Government is requested to provide detailed information in its next report on any measure adopted in the context of this project and on the results achieved in relation to the objectives established, as well as in relation to the matters raised in the Committee’s comments of 2003.

Part V of the report form and article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution. Recalling the obligation to communicate to the representative organizations of employers and workers, in accordance with this article of the Constitution, copies of the information and reports communicated, particularly under article 22 of the ILO Constitution, to the Director-General of the ILO, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the precise reasons which might provide an explanation for the failure to comply with these provisions in the case of the present Convention.

The Committee urges the Government to make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Referring to its observation under Convention No. 81, the Committee notes that, owing to the economic crisis, the Government is encountering economic and financial restrictions which affect in particular the implementation of monitoring functions relating to the application of labour legislation and occupational safety standards in the agricultural sector. The Committee notes, however, that despite these difficulties a pilot project has been implemented by the Ministry of Labour in the regions of Bermejo, Yacuiba, Villamontes and Riberalta and that the officials operating in these regions are doing their utmost to perform their duties in accordance with the provisions of the General Labour Act, its implementing decree and other connected standards.

The Committee also notes that the Government hopes that, when the labour inspection system is reorganized as a result of the ILO/FORSAT multilateral cooperation project, of regional scope, to strengthen the labour administrations, the functioning of this system will be able to be extended to the agricultural sector. The Committee recalls that the ratification of the present Convention implies de jure obligations whose aim is the coverage of needs specific to agricultural undertakings by the inspection services with respect to monitoring of the legislation concerning conditions of work and worker protection. The Government is therefore requested to take measures promptly to ensure the implementation of such obligations, without prejudice to any improvement expected from the overall reorganization of the inspection system which is under way, and to communicate to the ILO all available information requested in the report form according to the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide further information on the activities undertaken and the results obtained by the inspection services involved in the implementation of the abovementioned pilot project.

Part V of the report form and article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution. Recalling the obligation to communicate to representative organizations of employers and workers, under the abovementioned article of the Constitution, copies of reports and information transmitted to the ILO Director-General, particularly under article 22 of the ILO Constitution, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the precise reasons which might explain the failure to implement these provisions in relation to the present Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Burundi

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee takes note of the little information contained in the Government's report and further clarifications received in the ILO on 4 September 2006.

Primary duties of labour inspectorates. In its previous comments the Committee had observed that labour inspectorates' activities focused mainly on dispute resolution issues, instead of activities aiming at the enforcement function provided for by Article 3(1) of the Convention. Its appreciation was based on the reports on 2000 and 2001 first-quarter labour inspection activities, showing also the performing of a huge amount of administrative tasks. The Committee notes that five out of the nine inspectors are entrusted with collective dispute resolution issues, only three others dealing with control of conditions of work, though all of them have participated in a seminar organized by the Programme for promoting social dialogue in African French-speaking countries (PRODIAF) on proceedings relating to labour dispute resolution, during the first quarter of 2006. This information confirms that labour inspection continues to be taken off its main role to be put on labour dispute resolution missions.

According to the Government, the absence of a special status, the lack of means of transport, of qualifications and of technical equipment seem to have lead to a lack of confidence from the employers towards labour inspectors.

The Committee once again stresses that it is necessary for labour inspectors to focus on the enforcement of legal provisions on labour conditions and protection of workers while engaged in their work (Article 3(1)) and that any further duties entrusted to them should not interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary in their relations with employers and workers (paragraph 2). It also recalls the Government's obligation of the competent authority to take measures to make available to labour inspectors the necessary means, such as transport facilities where no appropriate public transport facilities exist and reimbursement of any travelling and incidental expenses which may be necessary for the performance of their duties (Article 11). It expresses the hope that appropriate financial support will soon be granted through international cooperation to this end. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate any steps taken and any progress achieved in this regard and communicate in the nearest future any available report on labour inspection activities in industrial and commercial workplaces, concerning the application of legal provisions on conditions of work and protection of workers.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Cape Verde

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes once again with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending 1 September 2005 and the elements of information that it contains in reply to its previous comments, as well as the comments made by the Commercial, Industrial and Agricultural Association of Barlavento (ACIAB), the National Union of Workers of Cape Verde – Trade Union Confederation (UNTC-CS) and the Cape Verde Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CCSL), which were forwarded by the Government. It requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the following points.

Means of action of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes that, in the view of the CCSL, the labour inspectorate is not functional due to the lack of material and human resources. The low number of inspectors means that it is not possible to exercise effective supervision in all the islands of the country and travel by inspectors is infrequent due to the lack of transport facilities. In this respect, the UNTC-CS considers that the Government should allocate greater resources to ensure effective labour inspection. The Government indicates that it is planning to take measures to establish new inspection services in islands where employment has grown the most over recent years. The Committee also notes that the Government is proposing to organize the recruitment by competition of new labour inspectors and their training in the near future with the support of Brazilian cooperation. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on any further measures taken to ensure that inspectors are sufficient in number to secure the effective discharge of their duties (Article 10 of the Convention), that they have the necessary material resources and transport facilities (Article 11) and receive adequate initial and further training (Article 7).

Functions and duties of inspectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that new mediation and conciliation functions are to be attributed to labour inspectors by the draft Labour Code that is currently being adopted. It also notes that the Government plans to revise the general conditions of service of the labour inspectorate. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee is confident that the Government will ensure that the new functions which may be entrusted to labour inspectors are not such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties (Article 3(2)). Furthermore, the Committee notes the Government's assurances that the revision of the general conditions of service of the labour inspectorate will take into account the need for provisions prohibiting inspectors from revealing, even after leaving the service, any manufacturing or commercial secrets or working processes which may come to their knowledge in the course of their duties, in accordance with Article 15(b) of the Convention.

Notification of cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes the view of the ACIAB that it is important for the labour inspectorate to be notified not only of industrial accidents, but also of cases of occupational disease so that it can compile statistics on occupational risks, take preventive action and ensure the appropriate coverage of the victims. The Committee notes that, in reply to its previous comments on this subject, the Government provides assurances that account will be taken, in the context of the adoption of the new Labour Code, of the need to supplement the legislation so that it establishes the obligation to notify the labour inspectorate of cases of occupational disease, in accordance with Article 14 of the Convention.

Publication of an annual report. The Committee notes the reports from the various inspection offices of the inspections carried out during the years 1999 to 2005, which were transmitted by the Government with its report. The Committee observes that these are reports submitted to the central inspection authority, in accordance with Article 19 of the Convention; they cannot replace the annual report which, under the terms of Article 20 of the Convention, has to be published by the central inspection authority and transmitted to the ILO within a reasonable period. With reference to the comments that it has been making for many years on this subject, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures in the near future to ensure that an annual report on the matters set out in Article 21 of the Convention is published within the required time limits.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Chad

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1965)

Further to its previous comments, the Committee once again notes with concern that the information sent by the Government is the same as that already received in April 2005 and 2006, and that the reports on the work of the inspectorate and the local inspection offices announced time and again in the Government's reports as being attached have still not been sent. Consequently, while noting that between 2005 and 2009 the number of labour inspectors rose from 15 to 23, the Committee is bound to draw the Government's attention once again to the commitments it made when it ratified the Convention, and accordingly to urge it to provide the Office with up to date information on the legislative and practical measures taken or envisaged to apply the Convention, and on any difficulties encountered.

Legislation. The Committee once again asks the Government to take steps for the adoption of texts giving effect to the provisions of the Labour Code on the powers and duties of labour inspectors and controllers and for the enactment of the draft decree issuing regulations governing labour inspectors and controllers to which the Government has been referring for many years. Please report any progress made in this regard.

Article 10 of the Convention. Increasing the numbers and qualifications of the labour inspectorate. The Committee requests the Government to specify the context in which the number of labour inspectors was increased and to indicate whether measures have been taken or are envisaged for the training of the staff of the inspectorate, either to update their skills or to give them further training to enable them to perform their duties effectively. Please describe any such measures and indicate their impact in terms of the achievement of the objectives of labour inspection.

Articles 11 and 16. Material resources and transport facilities made available to labour inspectors for the performance of their duties. Noting the information contained in an earlier report about possible financial support in the context of international cooperation, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on any developments in this matter in recent years and on any progress made in providing the labour inspection services with material resources for their work, particularly transport facilities, so that they are able to implement workplace inspection programmes. If the Government has been unable to obtain financial support, the Committee asks it to indicate the obstacles encountered and the measures envisaged for this purpose.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the International Labour Office of an annual report on labour inspection activities. Further to its previous comments, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the central labour inspection authority publishes and sends to the ILO an annual report, in accordance with these provisions of the Convention and with section 469 of the Labour Code, and to provide information in this respect.

While aware of the financial difficulties that are preventing the strict application of the relevant provisions of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide all the information and documentation that is currently available on the legislation covered by the Convention (Articles 2, 3(1)(a) and 21(a)) and on the work of the inspectorate and the results achieved (Article 21(c)–(g)), to enable the Committee to assess the situation and provide useful recommendations for the progressive application of the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will do its utmost to take the necessary steps in the very near future.

China

Hong Kong Special Administrative Region

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (notification: 1997)

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period 1 June 2006 to 31 May 2008 in reply to its previous comments. It also notes the annual reports of the Labour Department for 2006 and 2007 which contain detailed information and figures on labour inspection activities and results. The Committee notes with interest in particular the activities and results achieved in the framework of the Safety and Health at Work programme in the most hazardous activities, such as industry, construction, boilers, etc. Detailed information on the subject is available through the web site link at www.labour.gov.hk/eng/osh/content.htm.

Article 3, paragraph (a) and (b), Articles 14 and 18 of the Convention. Enforcement and educational activities aimed at ensuring the application of legal provisions relating to work conditions of work. The Committee notes with interest that, according to the annual report for 2006, a key element in the enforcement of the occupational safety and health legislation is the provision of advice on accident prevention. Among other activities, special promotional visits were undertaken to encourage employers to adopt a self-regulatory approach to the management of risks at the workplace and regular enforcement inspections were carried out to various workplaces to monitor whether those responsible have observed all the related statutory requirements set out in safety legislation. Television and radio announcements, leaflets, posters, newspapers, the departmental homepage and seminars on the Compensation Ordinance were used to strengthen the promotion of the timely reporting of work accidents by employers. Promotional activities have focused on the statutory obligation of employers to take out insurance policies covering their liability for injury at work in respect of their employees. The Committee notes with satisfaction that blitz operations targeting various high-risk work activities were conducted not only on normal working days, but also at night and during holidays, to detect and clamp down on offending contractors. The annual report also indicates that establishments with a poor record of safety performance are still under close surveillance, which has resulted in significant improvements.

Similar territory-wide blitz operations and inspections were conducted to detect wage offences and resulted in various penalties, including custodial sentences in three cases in 2006. The annual report for 2007 indicates that seven custodial sentences were imposed during territory-wide inspection campaigns launched with the collaboration of trade unions and targeted at offence-prone trades for the non-payment of wages through an early warning system. The Committee notes with interest the indication in the annual report that vigorous inspections have been carried out of workplaces in which government service contractors employ non-skilled workers with a view to protecting their statutory rights and benefits. As a result of the concerted efforts of the Labour Department and procuring departments through increased monitoring and enforcement, the annual report indicates that there has been a great improvement in compliance with labour laws.

Article 3, paragraph 2, and Article 17. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. Objectives of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted in the Annual Report of the Labour Department for 2005 that joint operations were carried out by the labour inspectorate, the police and the Immigration Department, leading to the arrest of 538 illegal workers and 237 employers suspected of employing illegal workers. The Committee also noted that such operations had led to the imprisonment of foreign workers who do not possess the necessary residence authorization. It noted in the annual report an illustration of suspected illegal workers being arrested, sitting on the ground with their faces to the wall. The Committee expressed its concern that the exercise by labour inspectors of duties related to the monitoring of the illegal immigration of workers could be a serious obstacle to the discharge of their duties of supervising conditions of work and the protection of workers. Referring to paragraph 78 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, it asked the Government to take measures aimed at re-establishing the primary duties of the labour inspectorate, and limiting its role in the enforcement of the legislation respecting the illegal immigration of workers to the extent necessary for the prosecution of employers who are in breach of the rules and for the protection of the workers concerned.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, enforcement actions, such as the arrest and detention of illegal workers suspected of breaches of the Immigration Ordinance were carried out by officers of other law enforcement authorities, such as the police and the Immigration Department. The Government further indicates that the role of labour inspectors in combating illegal employment has not posed any obstacle to the discharge of their duties in enforcing legislative provisions on conditions of work and the protection of the workers. However, the Committee is bound to note that, according to an illustration in the annual report of the Labour Department for 2006, subtitled "labour inspectors and the police detecting suspected illegal workers in a joint operation" the Government's statement is not in accordance with reality. The purpose of the joint operation was clearly contrary to the objective of the protection of the worker shown in the photograph referred to above. The worker appears to have both hands tied behind his back and two men are pushing him forward with another figure preceding them who is clearly a labour inspector. Such a situation is not acceptable, as the Convention provides for the protection by the labour inspection system of workers engaged in their work, regardless of their status in relation to immigration laws. The fact that the role of the labour inspector consists, on the one hand, of targeting in the workplace workers suspected of being "illegal" and, on the other hand, of witnessing their mistreatment is in total contradiction with the protective function entrusted to labour inspectors by the Convention. Noting in the annual report for 2007 that 170 further similar operations were undertaken with the police and the Immigration Department, the Committee is bound once again to draw the Government's attention to the fact that any cooperation of the labour inspectorate with immigration authorities should be carried out cautiously, bearing in mind that the main objective of the labour inspection system is to protect the rights and interests of all workers and to improve their working conditions (paragraph 161 of the General Survey on labour inspection). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures as soon as possible to ensure that labour inspectors are no longer involved in joint operations which, by granting the police and immigration authorities access to workplaces, allow them to arrest workers on the grounds of their illegal residence situation. The Government is also asked to ensure that the collaboration of labour inspection officers with the said authorities is limited to legal proceedings against employers found to be in violation of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, and to inform the ILO of the action taken to this end and the results achieved.

Congo

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report for the period ending September 2007, which was received in the Office in January 2008.

Article 11 of the Convention. Working conditions of labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest that the staff of the labour inspectorate has been strengthened during the period since the report sent by the Government in 2004. However, it notes that no measures have been taken to improve the working conditions of inspectors and that they do not benefit from the transport facilities necessary for the discharge of their duties, nor the full reimbursement of their travelling and incidental expenses. The Government is requested to take the necessary measures to ensure that effect is given to the provisions of the above Article of the Convention and to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect, on the difficulties encountered and the solutions envisaged to overcome them.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Reporting obligations on the inspection activities. With reference to its previous comments concerning information relating to the application in practice of the legal provisions giving effect to the Convention, the Committee notes that, contrary to the Government's indication in its report received in 2004, no regional inspection report has been provided to the ILO. Furthermore, no annual report, as required by Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention, has been transmitted to the ILO. The Committee does not therefore have available the information that is essential on the operation of the labour inspection system in practice to allow it to monitor developments and provide support to the Government for its improvement in relation to the requirements of the Convention. The material and logistical situation described by the Government gives grounds for fearing, despite legislation that is in conformity on many points with the provisions of the Convention, that there is a significant gap between the extent of the needs for the supervision of conditions of work and the level of coverage that the inspection services are able to ensure. The Committee hopes that, so that it can fulfil its responsibilities, the Government will provide in its next report all the information available allowing it to assess the level of application of the Convention more than a decade after its ratification. This information should cover, among other matters: (i) the geographical distribution of the public officials responsible for inspection functions as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention (the schedule announced by the Government in its report was not attached); (ii) the geographical distribution of workplaces liable to inspection or, at the least, those for which the Government considers that the conditions of work require specific protection from the labour inspection services and the judiciary on the basis of the violations reported by the labour inspectorate; (iii) the frequency, content and number of participants at the training courses provided for labour inspectors during their career; (iv) the level of remuneration and conditions for career progression in relation to other public officials with comparable responsibilities; (v) the proportion of the national budget allocated to the public labour inspection services; (vi) a description of the cases in which inspectors travel to enterprises, the procedure followed and the transport facilities that they use for this purpose, the activities that they carry out and their outcome; and (vii) the proportion of supervisory activities carried out by inspectors in relation to their conciliation duties.

The Government is also requested to indicate the nature of the obstacles or difficulties (of a financial, structural, political or other nature) encountered in the implementation in practice of its legislation respecting labour inspection and to describe the measures adopted or envisaged to resolve them (for example, seeking international financial cooperation, inter-institutional cooperation within the country, collaboration with the social partners; the adoption of specific conditions of service for labour inspectors, rationalization of the way in which the resources of the labour administration are used).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the Government's report. It notes Decree No. 2003-219 of 21 August 2003 to organize the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security, and Decree No. 2000-29 of 17 March 2000 on the composition of the National Technical Committee on occupational safety and health and occupational risk prevention.

Financial obstacles to the implementation of the Convention. The Committee notes that, although financial constraints have prevented adoption of special regulations for the management and staff of the labour administration and any meetings of the abovementioned Technical Committee, the Government welcomes the benefits drawn from the technical seminars organized with support from the ILO and the African Regional Centre for Labour Administration (CRADAT), and would like this type of training to be continued.

Organization and working of the administration system. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide further information on the current working of the labour administration system; provide a copy of the Decree setting out the powers of the new Ministry; indicate the number, types and terms of reference of any tripartite consultative bodies reporting to the Ministry; describe the bodies comprising the Ministry both at central level and in external departments; indicate any other bodies accountable to the Ministry; provide copies of any legal texts, reports or other documents pertaining to the composition, terms of reference and working of the bodies comprising the labour administration system (Articles 1, 4, 5 and 6).

The Government is requested also to provide information on the composition of the Technical Advisory Committee on international labour standards and all the matters on which consultations were held in the Technical Committee (Article 8).

Financial resources for meeting the obligations of the Convention. Noting with concern that the working of the labour administration is still severely affected by a lack of resources and that, despite technical assistance from the ILO, no new resources have been assigned to it, the Committee requests the Government to consider seeking further financial assistance through international cooperation with a view gradually to covering the human, material and logistical resources the labour administration needs in order to carry out its functions, as defined in Article 6. It would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of any steps taken to this end and on any measures taken or envisaged to apply the provisions of the Convention in law and in practice, and to provide copies of any relevant texts.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Costa Rica

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the Government's 2008 report, which was received too late to be examined at its previous session. It also notes the comments made by the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) and the Labour Union of the National Bank of Costa Rica (SEBANA) dated 25 May 2009, on the application of the Convention, which were forwarded by the ILO to the Government on 30 July 2009. The Committee recalls that its 2006 observation referred to previous comments made by the CTRN and the Union of Employees of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (AFUMITRA) and that, after noting the information provided in reply by the Government, the Committee asked it to supply further information relating to certain provisions of the Convention.

Article 3, paragraphs 1(a) and 2, of the Convention. Labour inspection in the context of the economic and financial crisis. In their comments received in May 2009, the CTRN and SEBANA refer to a Bill supported by the Government and Costa Rican entrepreneurs for the protection of employment in times of crisis, which they consider to be "irreconcilable" with the Decent Work Programme and the ILO's 1998 Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work. They qualify it as unilateral and unacceptable, as it was drafted without any consultation with the social partners, particularly with regard to the right of employers to reduce the wages of workers.

Furthermore, the National Directorate of the General Labour Inspectorate issued Directive No. 004-009 on 4 March 2009, the text of which was supplied by the CTRN and SEBANA, by virtue of which employers may accumulate and/or reduce working days, reduce wages or take any other measures affecting workers' rights for a period of up to six months. The workers' organizations consider this Directive to be in violation of the Convention, as well as of article 56 of the national Constitution and section 88 of the Framework Act of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. They add that Directive No. 004-009 violates not only the fundamental principles, guarantees and rights of workers established in the Constitution, such as the right to work and dignity, the right to a minimum wage and the protection of wages, but also the inalienable rights of workers set out in law, as well as Article 2 of the Convention, under which the system of labour inspection in industrial workplaces shall apply to all workplaces in respect of which legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work are enforceable by labour inspectors. In the view of the CTRN and SEBANA, the Directive implies that the labour inspectorate is relinquishing the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution as a public authority. The Committee notes that, under the terms of section 4 of the Directive, where an application is received from an employer to obtain authorization to accumulate or reduce a working day, modify the wages of workers or take other measures deemed necessary to minimize the effects of the crisis, a labour inspector shall be designated to ascertain whether the request is supported by all the workers, examine the documentation and other matters relating to the financial situation of the enterprise and any other element that may serve to ascertain the facts. The labour inspector then has to submit a report to the regional chief, who transmits it to the National Directorate of the Labour Inspectorate, so that a decision can be taken in accordance with the law and the directives issued for that purpose by the Higher Administration of the Ministry.

The Committee notes with concern that the provisions of Directive No. 004-009 are contrary to the objectives of the Convention, which are to ensure the enforcement of the legislation relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. The measures allowed by the Directive appear to be part of a strategy intended to help diminish the risk of unemployment in the context of the current global financial crisis. However, the Committee observes that these measures do not appear to have been negotiated with the social partners, and particularly with the representative organizations of workers, even though the workers are the ones whose rights are the most directly and immediately threatened. It also notes that one of the criteria to be taken into account in the treatment of the request submitted by employers in the context of Directive No. 004-009, namely whether or not the measures requested are supported by all workers, is not clear as to its impact on the decision to be taken.

Noting that the Government has not replied to the allegations made in May 2009 by the CTRN and SEBANA, the Committee urges the Government to keep the ILO informed of the procedure relating to the draft Bill for the protection of employment in times of crisis which is criticized by the CTRN and SEBANA, to indicate in particular whether employers' and workers' organizations were consulted in the process of its formulation, and to clarify how the implementation of the respective provisions is intended to help attain the outcome expected by the Government and the employers. Referring to its previous observation under Article 5, in which it noted the allegations of the CTRN and AFUMITRA concerning the lack of interest of the public authorities in collaboration with the social partners, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would also indicate whether the National Advisory Council was called upon to examine the measures to reduce the effects of the global financial crisis. If so, it requests the Government to indicate the views expressed by the members of the National Advisory Council.

Article 10. Criteria for the determination of the number of labour inspectors. With regard to the size of the inspection staff, according to the communication of the CTRN of 12 September 2008, the number of inspectors continued to fall, reaching 90 in 2008 compared to 105 in 1997, which the CTRN considers to be insufficient in light of their very broad and diverse workload. Moreover, the CTRN indicates that 75 per cent of labour inspectors spend 40 per cent of their time providing conciliation services, which constitutes a significant obstacle to them discharging their primary duty of inspection. According to the union, as the staff responsible for providing conciliation, consultancy and administrative services is not sufficient, labour inspectors also have to provide these services. However, the Government indicates that 29 new positions have been created with effect from the beginning of 2009 and that 32 new positions are expected to be created later in 2009 in order to increase the number of labour inspectors. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the total number and geographical distribution of labour inspectors following the adoption of the above measures. It also asks it to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors spend most of their working time discharging their primary functions, as set out in Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Convention.

Article 12, paragraph 1(a). Right of free access by inspectors in workplaces liable to inspection. Noting that the Government has not replied to its previous request under this provision of the Convention, the Committee asks it once again to provide information on the manner in which the technical inspection is carried out of plant and machinery that is idle in workplaces operating during the day and on the manner in which inspectors check whether any night work is being performed unlawfully.

Article 12, paragraph 2. Notification of presence on the occasion of an inspection visit. Efficiency of the control. According to the Government, the adoption of specific measures is not yet envisaged to empower labour inspectors not to notify the employer or his or her representative of their presence on the occasion of an inspection visit where such notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties. The Committee asks the Government once again to consider this issue seriously, to take all the necessary measures in the very near future to grant labour inspectors this right and to keep the ILO duly informed.

Article 16. Measures aimed at increasing the number of inspection visits. The CTRN indicates that, because of the excessive number of tasks assigned to labour inspectors, they are not able to inspect workplaces as regularly and thoroughly as is necessary in accordance with the Convention. According to the CTRN, by September 2008, the average annual coverage of workplaces was not much higher than in 2003, when it was around 55 per cent of the total. The CTRN adds that labour inspectors spend a significant amount of time on the administrative aspects of grievance procedures. The Government indicates that the adoption of the Plan of Transformation and of Regulation No. 28578-MTSS has resulted in a better organization of the respective procedures and the acceleration of their investigation, thereby allowing inspectors more time to discharge their primary duties. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would inform the ILO of the measures taken to ensure that workplaces are inspected as regularly and thoroughly as required under the Convention.

Articles 5(a), 20 and 21. Measures aimed at promoting effective cooperation between labour inspection services and the justice system. According to the Government, the National Directorate of the Labour Inspectorate holds regular meetings with the judicial authorities and the discussions have focused on various themes, including labour infringements. The Government also expressed its readiness to strengthen links between the judicial and administrative authorities. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the ILO with more detailed information on the content and results of the above meetings and discussions, their impact on labour inspection activities and any subsequent efforts made to strengthen dialogue between the administrative and judicial authorities. Moreover, the Committee requests the Government to provide the ILO with detailed information on the impact of the measures taken to accelerate the treatment of the complaints lodged by workers and labour inspectors and to ensure the right of workers to prompt justice, and on any further measures that are expected to be taken.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the Government's 2008 report, which was received too late to be examined at its previous session. It also notes the comments made by the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) and the Labour Union of the National Bank of Costa Rica (SEBANA), dated 25 May 2009, on the application of the Convention, which were forwarded by the ILO to the Government on 30 July 2009.

Since the Government's report and the comments from the unions relate to both the present Convention and the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee draws the Government's attention to its observation under Convention No. 81, and would be grateful if the Government would communicate any comments it may deem appropriate on the issues corresponding more specifically to labour inspection in agricultural undertakings.

Côte d'Ivoire

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not refer to any positive developments with regard to the application of the Convention.

The Committee's previous request referred to the question of training of labour inspectors in agriculture (Article 9 of the Convention), the material resources available for the performance of their duties, especially office and transport facilities and the reimbursement of labour inspectors' travel costs related to their work in agriculture (Article 15), and preventive controls in agricultural undertakings, as envisaged in Article 17.

In an observation to the Government in 1999, the Committee drew attention to the fact that no annual report on the work of the labour inspection services had been sent to the ILO.

In its 2002 report relating to the application of the Convention, the Government announced, however, in relation to Articles 14 and 15, that since 2001 the training of labour inspectors working in agricultural areas had resumed at the National School of Administration in Abidjan and that additional staff were expected, namely seven labour administrators, ten labour attachés and 12 labour controllers. In its observation of 2003, the Committee requested the Government to supply information on any steps taken towards the establishment of an inspection system in agriculture and on any progress made, and it also requested the Government to supply documentation and information of a practical nature on inspection activities undertaken in the area of combating child labour.

The Government's report received in 2004 indicated that there were still no specialist labour inspectors in agriculture. Not only were there insufficient material resources to meet the professional requirements of inspectors working in agricultural areas, but also the inadequately equipped labour inspection offices were located without taking into consideration the geographical distribution of agricultural enterprises.

With reference to the report made in relation to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), received in 2008, in which reference is made to a substantial reinforcement of labour inspection staff and structures, the Committee notes with concern that, according to repeated statements by the Government in 2006 and 2009, no progress has been made in the application of the present Convention. It is therefore bound to remind the Government that, in ratifying the Convention, it undertook to take the necessary steps to implement it in law and in practice, particularly by establishing, in accordance with Article 6(1), a system of labour inspection whose functions would be: (a) to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of agricultural workers while engaged in their work; (b) to supply technical information and advice to employers and workers concerning the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions; and (c) to bring to the notice of the competent authority defects or abuses not specifically covered by existing legal provisions and to submit to it proposals on the improvement of laws and regulations. In view of the large numbers of workers occupied in the agricultural sector in the country (men, women and children), especially in coffee, cotton, banana, oil palm and cocoa plantations and other agricultural undertakings, and also in view of the specific occupational risks to which these persons are exposed because of pesticides and other toxic substances handled and used in their environment, the Committee considers that there is an urgent need for the Government to meet its commitments deriving from the ratification of this Convention. In its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, the Committee emphasized in its final remarks that the priority nature of labour inspection should be reflected in the level of resources allocated and that a strong and effective labour inspectorate provides not only better protection, but also better prevention and productivity at work, to the benefit of everyone (paragraphs 371–374).

The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure the application of this Convention, particularly through the training of sufficient numbers of qualified inspection staff in the area of the occupational safety and health of agricultural workers, and equipping these staff with sufficient resources to meet the requirements of inspection in agricultural undertakings (appropriate office and transport facilities, technical equipment needed for the analysis of products and substances handled and used, etc.).

The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that information on inspection activities in agricultural undertakings included periodic reports which are sent to the central authority so that the latter can include the information in an annual report which is published and a copy of which is sent to the ILO, as provided for in Articles 26 and 27. Until such time as the conditions exist for the publication of such a report, the Committee urges the Government to keep the Office informed of the inspection activities carried out in agricultural undertakings and the results achieved during the period covered by the next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cuba

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1980)

Article 6, paragraph 2(b), of the Convention. Improvement in the performance of the labour administration in the fields of employment, social protection and occupational safety and health. The Committee notes with interest the detailed information provided concerning the positive developments in the operation of the labour administration system during the period covered by the report.

The Government indicates that at the end of 2008, as a result of the improvement of employment capacities and the continuous training of human resources, vocational adaptation courses and other specific programmes, the unemployment rate was reduced to 1.6 per cent. The programme of assistance to young persons is reported to have promoted the integration of a large number of persons in work, with the action being undertaken in cooperation between the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, training institutes and other public bodies through various employment arrangements (direct employment, partial employment, on-the-job training and employment rehabilitation courses).

The level of minimum pensions is also reported to have been increased over recent years and, under the terms of Act 105 of December 2008 respecting social security, the annuities and benefits provided by the social security system have been extended to cover 100 per cent of workers, with entitlement to total or partial invalidity pensions being guaranteed.

The Government adds that greater vigilance in the implementation of occupational safety and health measures has resulted in a reduction in the number of employment accidents. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate whether it is planned to examine and find solutions for the issue of the unemployment of certain categories of workers, such as women and persons with disabilities, and if it would provide information and documentation on this subject.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Re-establishment of the exercise of the right to organize. The Committee notes that the work of the National Labour Council in 2004 gave rise to the adoption, among other regulatory texts on workers' right of representation, of Ministerial Order No. 12/CAB/MIN/TPS/VTB/053/2004 of 12 October 2004 lifting the suspension of trade union elections in enterprises and establishments of all types. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the impact of this Order on industrial relations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Denmark

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1972)

Article 5(a) and (b) of the Convention. Cooperation and collaboration with a view to improving the protection of agricultural workers and their family members against risks to safety and health in agricultural undertakings. The Committee notes with satisfaction the information supplied by the Government in its report received in November 2008, on the initiatives taken by the Danish Working Environment Authority with the National Centre of the Danish Agricultural Advisory Service to improve occupational safety and health and reduce the number of accidents in agricultural undertakings since the beginning of 2006, in particular to reduce the number of fatal accidents occurring in the sector. During the first half of 2008, the Danish Working Environment Authority organized meetings with stakeholders in the sector to evaluate and continue to focus on these initiatives.

The Sector Working Environment Council BAR Jord til Bord was established under the Working Environment Act to contribute to solving safety and health problems in the agricultural sector and to support safety and health measures at the sectoral and enterprise levels. Among the Council's activities, the Government draws attention to the following activities focusing on safety and health in the agricultural sector, which are described on its web site (www.barjordtilbord.dk/):

- A survey of all work processes in order to obtain a total outline of initiatives, which may help to improve safety and health at work in the potato production process was prepared in cooperation with the United Federation of Danish Workers, the Market Garden, Agricultural and Forestry Management Employers' Association and the National Centre of the Danish Agricultural Advisory Centre ("Safety and health at work in handling potatoes").
- A national campaign focusing on traffic, machinery, children and accidents due to falls, as the most important causes of serious accidents in the agricultural sector.
- Numerous articles on industrial injuries caused by large animals have been written under the Health and Safety Committee of Farming, in the context of the Sector Working Environment Council BAR Jord til Bord. These articles can be downloaded from the Council's web site.
- The Safety and Health Committee of Agriculture has revised "The Sector Guidelines on children and young persons' work in agriculture", approving and prohibiting tasks, working and rest periods for children and young persons, including trainees and children and young persons in family farming. The rules on young persons driving tractors and working with substances and materials are also being reviewed.
- The Safety and Health Committee of Agriculture has worked together with the Silkeborg State Forest Region on preparing tools tailored for agriculture, including material on the completion of the statutory workplace assessments (WPA), with a survey on the psychosocial working environment and job satisfaction.

With references to its 2008 observation, in which it welcomed the screening procedures established to assess the status of enterprises in relation to occupational safety and health legal requirements, the Committee notes that all agricultural enterprises with employees are subject to screening within the period 2005–11 by the general inspection services of the Danish Working Environment Authority. The screening is an unannounced visit and lasts for an average of two hours during which safety and health at work is reviewed, the aim being to identify enterprises with serious safety and health problems and to select these for more thorough inspection. On the occasion of screening activities in 2005, 2006 and 2007, the Danish Working Environment Authority issued a number of stop notices (13, 15 and 15, respectively) and improvement and immediate improvement notices (265, 338 and 222, respectively), while guidance was given in 166, 169 and 55 cases, respectively, primarily linked to risks of accidents, the effort required, ergonomic safety and health problems, and chemical and biological risks.

Dominica

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes that the Government's report received in March 2009 contains no information in reply to its direct request formulated in 2007 and repeated in 2008. It notes that, despite the reminder sent to it by the ILO in May 2009, the Government has not supplied the required information. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat its previous direct request on the following points:

Given that for many years the Government has not supplied a detailed report on the manner in which effect is given in law and in practice to the Convention and that the most recent annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate transmitted to the ILO concerns 1996, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would take all the necessary steps to ensure that the next report pursuant to article 22 of the ILO Constitution contains the level of detail required by the report form. It requests the Government to ensure that the information available on each of the subjects listed in Article 21 are included in its report pending the publication of the next annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate.

Articles 3, 6, 10, 12, 13, 15, 17 and 19 of the Convention. Duties, status, numbers, rights, obligations and powers of labour inspectors. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the staff of the Labour Department consists of four officials, namely the Labour Commissioner, his deputy, and two agents. According to the Government, these officials perform all the duties allocated by the Labour Department. Although they possess the necessary qualifications for providing high-quality advice to employers and workers, the staff of the Labour Department are, however, insufficient in number and also faced with a lack of equipment aggravated by the austerity measures imposed by the International Monetary Fund, making it difficult to undertake advisory activities. Nevertheless, the Government expresses the hope that recommendations resulting from a study of the situation undertaken by a former ILO expert may be implemented. The Committee, however, notes that a copy of the report on this study has not been transmitted to the ILO, despite a written request dated 19 March 2007.

In reply to the Committee's requests concerning the way in which it is ensured that labour inspectors abide by the code of ethics relevant to their duties, as defined by Article 15(a), (b) and (c) of the Convention, the Government has supplied information on the legal provisions concerning the general obligations of all officials. The Committee would like to emphasize that these provisions are insufficient in relation to the requirements of the Convention. There has to be the strictest possible observance of ethical principles by inspectors to counterbalance the extensive powers and prerogatives which, in accordance with the Convention, have to be accorded exclusively to labour inspection officials in the performance of their duties. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would refer to its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection with regard to: (i) the prohibition on labour inspectors to have "any direct or indirect interest" in enterprises liable to inspection (paragraph 227); (ii) the scope of the obligation of professional secrecy (paragraphs 229–232); and (iii) the obligation of confidentiality with respect to the source of any complaint and the connection that may exist between an inspection visit and a complaint (paragraphs 235–237). The Committee requests the Government to take steps to ensure that the legislation is supplemented in the light of these clarifications with regard to the duties and obligations of labour inspection officials. It further requests the Government to keep the Office informed of all progress in this respect and to send copies of any relevant draft or final texts.

Necessity for adequate penalties. Article 18. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the amount of fines which can be imposed on persons who contravene the legislation enforceable by the labour inspection officials has not been revised since 1990 and section 32 of the Act on labour standards provides that anyone contravening the provisions of sections 28 and 29 (concerning the powers and prerogatives of labour inspectors) is liable to a fine, the amount of which is fixed at 75 dollars and multiplied by the number of days for which the contravention continues. However, the Committee notes that section 13 of the Act of 1983 on occupational safety (Chapter 90:08) provides that the amount of the fine applicable for a violation of its provisions is 5,000 dollars, with the possible addition of imprisonment for one year. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would clarify whether the staff responsible for monitoring enforcement of the Act on occupational safety are the same as the staff of the Labour Department, who are also responsible for monitoring the legislation concerning other conditions of work and protection of workers, and to supply a list of the provisions establishing penalties for violations of the provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers and the contraventions to which they apply. The Committee also requests the Government to send a copy of any document describing specific cases of convictions of employers involving the imposition of a fine and/or imprisonment.

In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the study carried out in 2007 on the situation of the labour administration system, together with information on the follow-up measures taken by the Government in relation to the recommendations contained in the study.

Finland

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1950)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in October 2008 containing replies to its previous comments, in particular on the points raised by the Central Organization of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK) and the Confederation of Unions for Professionals and Managerial Staff in Finland (AKAVA), as well as a copy of Act No. 1233/2006 on the contractor's obligations and liability when work is contracted out.

The Committee also notes the new comments made by the above organizations and the Finnish Confederation of Professionals (STTK), which were included in the Government's report with its reply.

Articles 10 and 16 of the Convention. Matching the number of labour inspectors to the scope and complexity of their duties. In its previous report, the Government indicated, in reply to the comments of the SAK and AKAVA on the stagnation of the number of inspectors and the decreasing coverage of the labour inspectorate in certain sectors of activity, that the amalgamation of occupational health and safety districts had been conducted satisfactorily and that the new units were fully operational. The Government further provides figures showing the substantial increase of labour inspection activities in 2007 and draws attention to the new performance agreements (framework agreements) signed with occupational safety and health inspectorates for 2008–11, according to which the number of officially mandated inspections should be further significantly increased. The Committee also notes that on 16 July 2008 the Rsurssi II working group, set up by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health with a view to improving the efficiency of occupational safety and health oversight and developing operating approaches for OSH inspectorates, should submit a proposal on the allocation of health and safety administration resources. Nevertheless, the SAK, STTK and AKAVA fear that the Government's productivity programme and the reform project for regional state administration, which will run until 2015, will compromise the OSH inspectorate framework agreement for 2008–11, under which a tripartite agreement was concluded on the development of inspectorate operations in such a manner that resources would be allocated to address key problems in the workplace and inspections would increase by 50 per cent by 2012. The above organizations emphasize that, under the Council of State developmental decision, approximately 100 posts would be eliminated from OSH inspectorates, which would not only compromise the quality of OSH, but would also fail to meet the requirements of the Convention. Noting that the Government did not supply the information requested in its previous observation in this regard, the Committee asks it once again to indicate the number, content and results of labour inspections in the various categories of workplaces liable to inspection, including in commerce, services and the construction industry. It would also be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of Decree No. 1035 of 2003.

It requests the Government to indicate the proposal made by the Rsurssi II working group with regard the allocation of health and safety administration resources and the measures taken in this respect.

Articles 14 and 21(f) and (g). Improvement of the system for the reporting of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes with interest the detailed information on the mechanisms, involving a number of public bodies and institutions, the most representative employers' and workers' organizations and the Finnish Association of Occupational Health Physicians (STLY), established under the Department of the Advisory Board on Occupational Health Care to ensure the proper functioning of the occupational disease diagnostics system and, in the event that an occupational disease is suspected, to ensure that the patients concerned are given the proper medical attention, regardless of the sector, occupation or location. This information seems to match in quite large measure the concern expressed by the SAK and AKAVA as to the need to promote the prevention and diagnosis of work-related illnesses and occupational diseases. The organizations nevertheless still observe that statistics released by the Finnish Institute of Occupational Health show an increase in the number of occupational diseases during the reporting year, and deplore that occupational safety and health inspectorates do not maintain physicians or experts who would possess the necessary medical expertise to prevent occupational diseases and work-related illnesses. The organizations also refer to studies conducted by the Finnish Institute of Occupational Health, according to which occupational diseases have increased and under-diagnosis become more common, whereas the Confederation of Finnish Industries considers that the health-care situation of workers is satisfactory, that Finland has the world's largest per capita centre for occupational health care which not only provides nationwide training of occupational health-care staff, but also studies all controversial cases of suspected occupational diseases. The Government indicates in this regard that the purpose of the "Prevention Programme for Work-related Illnesses and Occupational Diseases: Action and Project Plan" is to provide explanations for regional differences in diagnosis, and that the directive on the identification of work-related accidents and occupational diseases by the inspectorate has been amended with a view to improving and standardizing examinations. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of the directive, as amended, and information on the findings of the prevention programme referred to above and the action taken in this respect.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on the work of the safety and health services. According to the Government, annual reports and joint statements prepared by the Ministry concerning inspectorates were made available on the Occupational Safety and Health Inspectorate web site (www.tyosuojelu.fi). This information is proposed under Article 19 of the Convention. The Government also indicates that the organizations are not aware the existence of reports prepared in compliance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would take the necessary measures to ensure that an annual report containing the information set out in Article 21 and elaborated in accordance with the guidance provided in Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), is published and communicated in the very near future. It hopes that the Government will not fail to keep the ILO informed of any progress made in this respect or any difficulty encountered.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1980)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. The focusing of labour administration on labour-related issues. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, following the changes made in the organization of the Government's structures by Act No. 970/2007 to amend the Government Act, since the beginning of 2008, the overall coordination of immigration and integration issues lie within the competence of the Ministry of the Interior, while the Ministry of Employment and the Economy (replacing the former Ministry of Labour and the former Ministry of Trade and Industry) and its administrative services continue to be responsible for promoting the employment of immigrants and for the implementation of work-related immigration policy.

In this respect, the Committee recalls that functions related to refugees, including refugee quotas, and the integration of immigrants, as well as issues related to emigration and return migration previously entrusted to the former Ministry of Labour, are not primarily labour matters within the meaning of the Convention and cannot therefore be considered as public administration activities in the field of national labour policy, in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention.

Gabon

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the Government's report which was received by the ILO on 18 December 2008, too late for it to be examined at the Committee's previous session, and for this reason it repeated its previous comments. However, it notes that the information supplied constitutes only a partial reply and is therefore bound to ask the Government once again to provide additional information on the following points.

Article 18 of the Convention. Proceedings in respect of violations of the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors and the obstruction of labour inspectors in the performance of their duties. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of any court decisions given against employers guilty of violations of legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors or, in pursuance of sections 227, 228, 229 and 249 of the Labour Code, acts involving the obstruction of the performance of inspection duties.

Article 19. Periodical reports by the inspection services. Noting that, according to the Government, each year, at the request of the General Labour Directorate, quarterly and annual activity reports are prepared by the inspection services, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide copies of these reports.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on the work of the inspection services. In reference to the Government's commitment to do its utmost to attenuate the difficulties in applying the Convention, the Committee once again emphasizes that in order to do this, measures must be taken to centralize the information required under Article 21 with a view to preparing an annual labour inspection report, the main purpose of which is to serve as a basis for the periodical assessment by the central inspection authority of the adequacy of the available resources in relation to needs and, consequently, to determine priority areas of action. The Committee once again reminds the Government of the possibility of requesting technical assistance from the ILO, as well as international financial aid, with a view to establishing the material and institutional conditions necessary for the publication of such a report. In its 2004 direct request, the Committee urged the Government to make the necessary efforts to implement measures designed to enable the central inspection authority to discharge its obligation in this respect and pointed out that the annual inspection report should be as detailed as possible and contain precise information on human, logistical, practical or other difficulties explaining deficiencies in the services. Since the Government has not reported any progress in this area, the Committee requests that it quickly takes the necessary measures and keeps the Office duly informed in this respect.

Monitoring of child labour and publication of an annual inspection report. The Government's report does not provide any information in reply to the Committee's previous comments on the delicate aspects of procedures for removing children from the workplace under Decree No. 000031 of 8 January 2002. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the measures taken, on the one hand, to adopt the texts necessary for the implementation of Decree No. 000031 such as are referred to in its section 6, and, on the other hand, to provide the labour inspectors who participate in operations to remove children from the workplace with appropriate and specific technical and psychological training. It would be grateful if the Government would supplement this information with copies of any relevant texts.

The Committee is raising a number of other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will do its utmost to take the necessary measures in the very near future.

Germany

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee notes the Government's report, the annual reports on the situation with regard to occupational safety in each Land, the activity reports on work in mines and the report of the Federal Government on occupational safety and health. It notes with interest the communication by the Government of the links to Internet sites on which many documents and much information are available on the subjects covered by the Convention.

Further to its previous comments on the matters raised by the Union of Technical Officials, Employees and Labourers (BTB) in its 2004 and 2006 observations, the Committee notes the additional information provided by the Government concerning the effects of the restructuring of the labour inspectorate in Baden-Württemberg.

Article 4 of the Convention. Organization of the labour inspection system. Duality of structures and risk of a diversity of approaches to enforcement in each Land. According to the Government, the organization of labour inspection services lies within the sovereign competence of the Länder and can only be influenced to a limited extent. However, it specifies that uniformity of treatment in relation to the objectives of occupational safety is guaranteed at the federal level by the Committee of the Länder for Occupational Safety and Health (LASI), which is specifically responsible for examining the fundamental aspects of the subject from a unified approach. The representatives of the higher labour inspection authorities of the Länder take decisions in the LASI with regard to the implementation of the relevant regulations, with the object of adopting an identical approach in all Länder. Moreover, the LASI examines legal issues relating to occupational safety and health with a view to the harmonized application of the legislation, both with regard to substantive issues and organizational matters inherent to its implementation (strategy, organization, personnel, reporting and information mechanisms and procedures, continuous training and education, the exchange of experience). The Government considers that, despite the diversity of the administrative structures, this guarantees a consistent approach beyond the frontiers of the Länder. It adds that, in the context of the joint strategy developed by the federal Government, the Länder and the employment injury insurance institutions throughout the country, the Länder endeavour to optimize their cooperation with injury insurance providers, which has the effect of improving the cooperation between the Länder themselves. The Government refers by way of illustration to the implementation of the federal labour programmes and the harmonization of advisory and inspection strategies in various ways.

According to the BTB, the fragmentation of inspection functions between the various services, municipal authorities and rural districts of the Land of Baden-Württemberg is also reducing the impact of state control to the mere supervision of compliance with the law. The explanations provided in this respect by the federal Government, and the government of Baden-Württemberg, show that the distribution of functions between the various urban and rural districts is specific to that Land. The territory of the Land is very great and its population is over 10 million. Its administrative structure is divided into three levels and functions in respect of labour inspection are divided, at the lower administrative levels, between an exceptional number of urban and rural districts. In the view of the government of Baden-Württemberg, the number of authorities at the lower administrative levels is balanced and appropriate, both in terms of effectiveness and of response to the expectations of citizens. It considers that, contrary to the allegations of the union, the fact that inspection functions are divided between four government offices and 44 urban and rural districts does not have the effect of diminishing the quality of inspections. The government offices and the lower administrative authorities provide both ministries with relevant data on their respective supervisory activities, which have to be approved by the offices and the authorities, are covered by a report on the activities of the inspection services (TS-GWA) and are published in the annual report on these services. Each year, in addition to providing statistics and data, the services are responsible for addressing a list of subjects related to priority fields of action according to predetermined approaches and, based on the instructions provided to them, on the manner in which functions of particular topical interest should be addressed.

The government of Baden-Württemberg emphasizes that regular meetings are held covering all the fields of activity of the labour inspectorate and that they include the participation of representatives of government ministries and offices, as well as those of lower level offices and administrative authorities. It adds that the introduction of new supervisory mechanisms has made it possible to conclude targeted agreements in the Land of Baden-Württemberg, in the context of collaboration between government ministries and intermediate-level offices. These agreements, which constitute one of the aspects of the current administrative reform, are likely to multiply, also at the lower levels of the administrative structures of the Land, which will make it possible for government offices to conclude such agreements with the structures for which they are responsible.

Consequences of the diversity of structures responsible for labour inspection on the communication of information. According to the BTB, another cause for concern lies in the use by each structure responsible for labour inspection of different information technology systems, resulting in difficulties in the communication of information. The Government affirms that the labour inspection services in the Länder use standard information technology systems and that there is no difficulty in the exchange of information and data by electronic mail. It considers that technological progress means that it is possible to exchange data between different systems without the risk of data loss. It adds that the relevant data are compiled in 12 Länder using a common programme (the IFAS Information System for Labour Inspection Administrations), that the Land of North Rhine-Westphalia, which currently uses its own programme, is envisaging the introduction of IFAS, and that the system used in Hamburg is compatible with IFAS. According to the Government, although the exchange of operational data between the Länder is limited by the legislation on data privacy, taking into account the territorial competences of the Länder, the direct exchange of information between Länder is not necessary. With regard to issues relating to labour inspection, the Government considers that the data should be compared with those of the systems of injury insurance providers. It indicates in this respect that the Internet portal established for this purpose is at the pilot stage and that it will be federal in scope as an integral part of the joint strategy on safety for Germany.

The Committee further notes the provision by the Government, appended to its report, of a report prepared by the government of the Land of Baden-Württemberg (publication No. 14/1740 of the Parliament of Baden-Württemberg of 18 September 2007), indicating that the experience acquired in the field of labour inspection should serve as a basis for the adoption of legislation on the continued reform of administrative structures, planned for 2008.

The Committee observes that the comments made by the BTB focus on the absence of a central inspection authority within the meaning of Article 4 of the Convention. It recalls that, under the terms of Article 4(2), the central authority under the control and supervision of which labour inspection has to be placed may be either the federal authority, or a central authority of a constituent federated entity. It observes that the situation described by both the union and the Government differs in this respect, as several structures that are independent of each other are responsible at the federal, Land and municipal levels for inspection functions. Although the explanations provided by the Government show that efforts are being made to ensure a certain uniformity in the discharge of inspection functions by each of these structures, the Committee finds that progress still needs to be made to achieve the objective of the Convention equally throughout the territory of the federation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken to give effect in so far as possible to the letter and spirit of the Convention in relation to the need for a labour inspection system operating on the basis of common principles of organization, methods of action and the allocation and management of human and financial resources.

Articles 7 and 10. Number and qualifications of inspection personnel. According to the BTB, for several years a dispersal of competence for the recruitment of inspection personnel has led to a decrease in the number of new recruits and therefore a considerable loss of expertise. In addition, the large number of authorities responsible for training in the various structures is resulting in a managerial imbalance in this respect.

The Government indicates in its report that in Baden-Württemberg, Hessen, Lower Saxony, North Rhine-Westphalia and Rhineland-Palatinate, competence for supervision of the legal decisions of labour inspectors and for the general performance of labour inspectors charged with functions relating to safety at work are exercised by different ministries, but that in all Länder the distribution of competences is clearly defined in respect of the recruitment of new personnel. While recognizing that the number of inspectors is decreasing, it indicates that this trend is the result of the general policy of a reduction of the number of public officials, in accordance with the austerity plans of the governments of the Länder. The Government confirms that, in most Länder, departures for retirement and for other reasons have resulted in a considerable loss of technical expertise. However, it reports rare opportunities for recruitment in the Länder of Baden-Württemberg and Lower Saxony and, out of a concern for uniformity and to make up for the loss of expertise, that training and further training for inspectors are subject to centralized control at the level of the Länder.

Expressing its concern at the consequences of the policy to reduce the numbers of public officials on the size of the labour inspection staff and recalling the eminently important socio-economic role of inspectors, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would take the necessary measures to ensure that the numbers of labour inspectors are determined in each Land on the basis of the criteria set out in Article 10 and that their training is adequate, as envisaged by Article 7, and adapted to the new technologies and conditions of work prevailing in industrial and commercial workplaces. It requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Article 5(a). Cooperation between the inspection services and other government services and public or private institutions engaged in similar activities. Cooperation in the field of occupational safety. The Committee notes that the Federal Government, the Länder, which under the federal safety system are responsible for supervising occupational safety, and insurance institutions have developed a joint safety strategy for Germany. This strategy involves the establishment of common occupational safety and health strategies and the determination of common fields of action and work programmes, in the context of a harmonized procedure and the sharing of competences between the authorities responsible for occupational safety and accident insurance institutions. For the period 2008–12, the objectives are to:

- reduce the number and seriousness of occupational accidents;

- reduce musculoskeletal stress and related pathologies; and
- reduce the number and gravity of skin diseases.

The Government indicates that this strategy is implemented by a “National Occupational Safety Conference” (NAK), supported by the federal Government, the Länder and accident insurance institutions.

Specific cooperation between the labour inspectorate and judicial bodies. The Committee notes with interest the detailed information provided by the Government in reply to its general observation of 2007, according to which cooperation between the labour inspectorate and judicial bodies occurs, in compliance with the constitutional principles of the distribution of powers and the independence of the judiciary, at three levels:

- (i) at the level of administrative tribunals which, in the view of the Government, usually rule competently in cases of legal appeals against the imposition of an administrative fine by the competent labour inspection authority;
- (ii) at the level of the Office of the Public Prosecutor, in respect of which the Government considers that effective cooperation would be desirable to ensure compliance with occupational safety legislation. In particular, it deplores the fact that, due to the absence of feedback, particularly where an investigation does not result in prosecution, the labour inspectorate cannot use its authority to impose administrative fines. For example, particularly in cases of serious or fatal accidents, procedures have been set aside on the grounds of the responsibility of the victim of the accident (human error), without the question of the attribution of any part of the responsibility to hierarchical superiors being suitably examined, as only the direct cause was taken into consideration. The Committee nevertheless notes with interest that the inspection services are endeavouring to strengthen communication with public prosecutors with a view to improving their knowledge of the responsibilities of employers in relation to occupational safety rules, such as risk evaluations and general and specific technical instructions, etc. Certain Länder report regular meetings (Hamburg and Rhineland-Palatinate), or information and training sessions, as well as seminars (Hamburg, Lower Saxony and Saxony-Anhalt) with the offices of public prosecutors;
- (iii) at the level of local courts, in the case of minor infringements, in cases where the employer appeals, the competent court rules on the legality of the decision and the amount of the fine. The courts hand down their rulings in full independence in accordance with the Constitution. The Government therefore considers that effective cooperation between the inspection services and the judiciary consists of presenting the material facts in the best possible way, as well as the specific point concerned.

The Committee notes with interest that the labour inspection authorities at the federal level and in the Länder have access to the judicial information technology system, which contains data on the rulings handed down and the applicable legal provisions, administrative regulations and European directives, thereby providing them with relevant guidance in their activities.

Nevertheless, according to the Government, court decisions relating to occupational safety are generally handed down in contexts that are too specific to be addressed in accordance with statistical concepts. Moreover, in view of the very long periods before they become available, their inclusion in the annual report would not be relevant to the period described in the report. The Committee requests the Government to continue to keep the ILO informed of the progress achieved in the cooperation between the inspection services and the judiciary and on its impact on the level of compliance with legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work.

Article 5(b) Collaboration between the labour inspectorate and the social partners. The Committee notes with interest that the social partners are consulted in the context of the NAK in relation to the determination of priority fields of action and the principal aspects of the implementation of the programmes of action determined by the Federal Government, the inspection authorities in the Länder and accident insurance institutions. Moreover, there is constant dialogue between the social partners and the various bodies concerned with occupational safety issues in the context of the Occupational Safety Forum, the views of which are examined by the National Occupational Safety Committee. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the fields in which it has been possible to achieve progress in the operation and outcomes of labour inspection under the influence of the social partners in the context of the NAK and the Occupational Safety Forum, with an indication of their scope in practice at the level of the Länder.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1981)

Article 7 of the Convention. Extension of labour administration functions to self-employed workers (category of workers who are not, in law, employed persons). The Committee notes with satisfaction that, since 1 February 2006, in accordance with section 28a of Book III of the Social Code (SGB III), self-employed workers have had the possibility of concluding an unemployment insurance contract which entitles them to unemployment benefits. They also qualify for supplementary benefits under the SGB II.

Article 10. Qualified staff within the employment services. The Committee notes with interest the establishment in September 2006 of the higher education college for labour market management which offers students three-year bachelor degree courses in labour market management and employment-oriented counselling and case management. The courses are designed to improve the qualifications of employment services staff with regard to placement and integration into the labour market, benefits, resource management and career counselling and guidance.

Ghana

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes the Government's report covering the period ending in September 2008 and the attached statistical data on the number of inspections conducted in 2007 and the first quarter of 2008, and of workers covered by these inspections.

Article 12, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention. Right of labour inspectors to enter freely workplaces liable to inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that section 124(1)(a) of the 2003 Labour Act, which limits the timing of workplace inspections to "working hours", is not compatible with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. It notes the Government's indication that the above provision of the Labour Act is sufficient to uncover clandestine moves by employers. Referring to its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection (paragraphs 268–271), the Committee wishes to recall that the conditions for the exercise of the right of free entry to workplaces laid down by the Convention are intended to allow inspectors to carry out inspections, where necessary and possible, to enforce the application of legal provisions relating to conditions of work. The protection of workers and the technical requirements of inspection should be the primordial criteria for determining the appropriate timing of visits, for example to check for violations such as abusive night work conditions in a workplace officially operating during the daytime, or to carry out technical inspections requiring machinery or production processes to be stopped. It should be for the inspector to decide whether a visit is reasonable and inspections should only be carried out at night or outside working hours where this is warranted. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to remove the restriction on the right of labour inspectors to enter freely workplaces from section 124(1)(a) of the Labour Act of 2003 and to keep the ILO informed.

Article 3, paragraph 1, and Articles 17 and 18. Inspection duties. Enforcement of legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers. Legal proceedings and provision of adequate penalties for violation of legislation. In its previous report, the Government indicated that it wishes to encourage compliance with legal provisions through the promotion of a social partnership attentive to the mutual interests of employers and workers, rather than through legal proceedings against employers who have committed a violation. The Committee requested the Government to provide practical information on any mechanisms established to that effect and to specify the role of labour inspectors in this regard. It notes that, in its report of 2008, the Government only reaffirms that it wishes to promote partnership and compromise between employers and workers. The report provides no information on the findings of the labour inspectors during the visits that they conducted in workplaces throughout the country in 2007, nor on any actions undertaken following such inspections. The Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to paragraph 280 of its General Survey, in which it emphasizes that, even if the credibility of any inspectorate depends to a large extent on its ability to advise employers and workers on the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions within its remit, it also depends on the existence and implementation of a sufficiently dissuasive enforcement mechanism, the functions of enforcement and advice being inseparable in practice.

The Committee requests the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure that legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers are effectively enforced through legal proceedings where necessary. It further requests the Government to provide information on the violations reported by labour inspectors and the fines imposed to employers in accordance with section 38 of the Labour Regulations adopted in 2007, during the reporting period, and to specify the value of a "penalty unit" and the manner in which such value may be revised to remain dissuasive in the event of monetary inflation. The Government is also requested to indicate the measures taken to ensure that such penalties were effectively enforced.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Periodical reports and annual report on the work of the labour inspection services. While noting the information on the number of inspections carried out in 2007 and during the first quarter of 2008, the Committee emphasizes that, by virtue of the ratification of the Convention, the Government undertook to ensure that practical measures would be taken to centralize information required under Article 21, with a view to preparing an annual labour inspection report, the main purpose of which is to serve as a basis for the periodical assessment by the central inspection authority of the adequacy of the available resources in relation to needs and, consequently, to determine priority areas of action. The Committee requests the Government take measures rapidly to establish the conditions in which the central labour inspection authority can collect data on the activities of the services under its control with a view to publish an annual report on the work of the inspection system containing information on the following subjects:

- (a) relevant laws and regulations;
- (b) staff of the labour inspection services (including the number, geographical location and distribution of inspectors by gender and by category);
- (c) statistics of workplaces liable to inspection (number and geographical distribution) and the number of workers employed therein (men, women, young persons);
- (d) statistics of inspection visits (unannounced, scheduled and follow-up visits, visits following a complaint, etc.);
- (e) statistics of violations and penalties imposed (number of violations reported, legal provisions concerned, types of sanctions imposed, etc.);

- (f) statistics of industrial accidents (number of fatal and non-fatal accidents); and
- (g) statistics of cases of occupational disease (number and causes by industry and occupation).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Greece

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1955)

Article 20 of the Convention. Publication of the annual labour inspection report. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Government published the annual labour inspection report for 2007 less than 12 months after the end of the year to which it related, and communicated it to the ILO by September 2008. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would ensure the continuation of this practice, in accordance with Article 20 of the Convention.

Article 21. Content of the annual labour inspection report. The Committee notes with interest the detailed information and statistics contained in the annual report for 2007 on labour inspection visits by branch of activity, industrial accidents, the establishments and workers covered, the violations found and the penalties imposed. The Committee however notes that, while Article 21 refers to statistics of cases of occupational disease, such statistics are still not reflected in the annual report. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate whether and in which manner statistics on occupational diseases are being collected and whether their publication in the annual report is envisaged.

The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would indicate or transmit to the ILO any comments made by employers' and/or workers' organizations on the work of the labour inspection services.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guatemala

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending 1 September 2008 and the numerous documents attached, sent to the ILO on 25 September 2008. It also notes the comments made on 31 August 2008 by the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala for the Defence of Workers' Rights (MSICG) concerning the application of the Convention, sent to the Government by the ILO on 17 September 2008. Referring to its 2007 observation concerning in particular the comments made by the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA) in 2004, the Committee also notes the Government's replies to these comments, the content of the collective agreement on conditions of work ("the collective agreement") concluded between the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MTPS) and the trade union of employees of that Ministry (SIGEMITRAB), approved by MTPS resolution No. 078-2008 of 9 April 2008, as well as the analysis of the situation relating to labour inspection carried out by the ILO in September 2008 at the request of the MTPS, and the action plan drawn up in November 2008 for the implementation of the recommendations arising from the analysis.

The Committee notes that the comments made by the MSICG largely echo those made by UNSITRAGUA and concern the precarious status, conditions of service and conditions of work of labour inspectors, as well as the impact of this precariousness on the conduct of labour inspectors when performing their duties in relation to their obligations.

The MSICG also reports pay inequalities between inspectors in the category of "professional assistant" and those in the category of "chief technician" to the detriment of the latter; the non payment of overtime; the lack of transport facilities available to labour inspectors and the failure to reimburse their travelling expenses; the lack of human resources within the inspectorate and the confinement of certain inspectors to administrative tasks and measures prohibiting them from performing certain inspection duties defined by law; the lack of initial training and subsequent training in the course of employment for inspectors; and the derisory size of the labour inspectorate's budget and the number of inspections it carries out.

The Committee notes with interest that the collective agreement and the action plan drawn up between the Government and the ILO to improve the labour inspection system provide for measures designed to address to a large extent the concerns expressed by UNSITRAGUA and the MSICG, particularly those relating to the structure of the labour inspectorate and its tripartite aspect; the composition and qualifications of labour inspectors, as well as their conditions of service; the inspection methods; the procedure for taking legal action in the case of violations and the application of penalties; and the exchange of information for the purpose of preparing registers for use by the labour inspectorate.

Articles 4, 5(a) and 19 of the Convention. Structure of the labour inspectorate and tripartism. The Committee notes that, with a view to ensuring better coordination of labour inspection, the action plan drawn up by the Government and the ILO envisages that the services responsible for supervising general conditions of work and occupational safety and health will be merged and integrated into a single service under the supervision of the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT). It is recommended that this body should strengthen its role as a central authority, in particular by planning labour inspection activities across the entire territory and ensuring that inspections are no longer carried out solely in response to a complaint but are programmed in a proactive manner. It is also envisaged that the distribution of duties between inspectors will be reviewed, in particular supervisory duties and those related to conciliation in labour disputes, and that inspectors will be relieved of those duties which interfere with the effective discharge of those defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention. The reforms envisaged also include developing the tripartite nature of labour inspection. Under the action plan, this should be achieved through the consultation of the social partners within the Tripartite Committee on International Affairs and, in particular, through the creation of a national information campaign on the role of the labour inspectorate.

Articles 7, 9 and 10. Composition and qualifications of inspection staff. The above action plan and the collective agreement provide for the establishment of a specific selection procedure for candidates for the occupation of labour inspector based on minimum technical conditions and a system of career progression and classification. Furthermore, with a view to the rational redistribution of duties among inspectors, the action plan envisages the gradual strengthening of inspection staff assigned to enforcing the legislation on conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. With regard to training, according to the Government, in the majority of cases, the training of inspectors depends on the opportunities offered for training. As an example it mentions the training sessions offered by the ILO Subregional Office and the regional and international cooperation agencies. The Government indicates that the MTPS is responsible for providing training for its officials for the purposes of carrying out their duties and applying the principles relating to public labour policy and that the action plan provides for initial training programmes and subsequent training in the course of employment to be agreed upon with technical institutes and universities to update the technical skills of inspectors, including by means of distance learning. A programme dealing specifically with occupational safety and health is to be created. The Committee notes a provision in the collective agreement designed to encourage MTPS officials to develop their skills on a voluntary basis by providing for the continued payment of wages for up to 40 days in the case of training (section 34.1 of the agreement).

Article 6. Conditions of service of labour inspectors and professional code of ethics. Like UNSITRAGUA in 2004, the MSICG heavily criticizes the disciplinary and dismissal procedures applied in the event of professional misconduct under the Civil Service Act. The organizations allege unilateral decisions relating to suspension or final dismissal, the arbitrary nature, in practice, of the definition of professional misconduct by the competent authority and the denial of the presumption of innocence and call for the establishment of a defence mechanism providing for the right to appeal against verbal or written warnings as well as guarantees protecting labour inspectors from the immediate effects of dismissal decisions through the right to reinstatement and payment of wages.

The Committee notes that the collective agreement contains numerous provisions on the administrative career system, the selection and promotion conditions, the conditions relating to transfers, the reassessment of posts and the duties and salaries of all public servants. Its implementation should result in an adjustment of the conditions of service of labour inspectors and all other public servants employed within the Ministry. The provisions relating to the disciplinary rules seem to address the concerns of the trade union organizations relating to the presumption of innocence and the right of defence and appeal by providing, in particular, for the participation of the SIGEMITRAB Executive Committee in the defence procedure for the public servants concerned.

Furthermore, the collective agreement provides for the granting of advances to cover the professional travelling expenses incurred by labour inspectors and their reimbursement. The Committee notes that a specific recommendation to that end is also included in the action plan. Given the period of validity of the collective agreement, the wage increase provided for under section 37 of the agreement for public servants employed within the Ministry of Labour should have started to take effect in April 2009 with a view to full implementation the following year.

In reply to the allegations of UNSITRAGUA concerning the lack of probity of certain labour inspectors, the Government indicates that the supervision of the conduct of labour inspectors has been strengthened, including in their carrying out of inspections, by means of a supervisory programme targeting regional and subregional inspection offices. It points out that directors have been given instructions to strengthen the supervision of labour inspectors and mentions the preparation of an information and dissemination campaign targeting the public in general and workers in particular, the aim of which is to encourage people to report any suspicion of public servants of the Ministry of Labour having a direct or indirect interest in the matters within their remit and to allow the application of the disciplinary procedures provided for under the Civil Service Act and the collective agreement.

Article 12, paragraph 1, Articles 13, 15(c), 16 and 19. Method and performance of inspections. The Committee notes that the action plan provides for the planning of activities at the national level and cooperation to that end with the Guatemalan Social Security Institute (IGSS). Furthermore, it provides for the preparation of procedural manuals and technical manuals, checklists, registers, inspection report forms and the use of notifications. The performance of programmed inspections will ensure the presence of inspectors in workplaces no longer solely in response to complaints (which is the case in 90 per cent of inspections according to the analysis), but also in the interests of prevention and dissuasion, while preventing untimely inspections of the same workplace by different units. This will ensure better respect of the obligation of confidentiality relating to complaints since the visit of an inspector in a workplace will no longer be systematically perceived by the employer as the result of a complaint. The Committee also notes that, in the context of the “Cumple y Gana” project, a practical guide to inspection procedures was published in October 2008. This guide covers, in particular, the ethical principles of inspection.

Articles 17 and 18. Legislation relating to the prosecution of violations and the application of penalties. Referring to its previous observation in which it mentioned the point of view expressed in 2005 by the former World Confederation of Labour (WCL) concerning the power of inspectors to impose administrative sanctions on those responsible for violations, the Committee notes the documents provided in reply by the Government (including a copy of the documentation relating to legal proceedings initiated by a labour inspector against an enterprise which had committed a violation and settled by an appeal body pursuant to a ruling of the Constitutional Court), as well as the provisions of the action plan concerning the future developments in this regard. The Committee notes that, as previously pointed out by the Government, following ruling Nos 898-2001 and 1014-2001 of the Constitutional Court, the provision of Decree No. 18-2001 which authorized the General Labour Inspectorate to impose fines directly on employers who have committed a violation has been repealed on the grounds that it is unconstitutional and that this power is assigned to the courts under articles 103 and 203 of the National Constitution and section 135 of the Act on the judicial system.

The Committee notes that one of the recommendations arising from the analysis of labour inspection is to envisage the possibility of defining, by means of consultations held within the Tripartite Committee on International Labour Standards, an administrative procedure allowing the General Labour Inspectorate to impose penalties subject to a right of appeal for employers. The action plan includes this recommendation but mentions the consultation of the Constitutional Court on the legal point raised rather than the consultation of the social partners. This solution would have the merit of speeding up the implementation of rulings and strengthening the authority and credibility of the labour inspectorate. Furthermore, in many cases, the immediate application of a fine would be more effective than lengthy proceedings in encouraging compliance with the legal provisions. It is also envisaged that the legislation will be supplemented with a legal provision defining the specific offence of obstruction of labour inspectors in the performance of their duties and establishing the penalty to which those responsible shall be liable. In this regard, the Committee refers to the opinion formulated in its 2007 observation.

Article 11. Material working conditions of labour inspectors. Referring to its 2007 observation in which it noted the improvements pointed out by the Government in this regard (in particular, provisions facilitating the reimbursement of inspectors' professional travelling expenses and the granting of advances for that purpose), the Committee notes the Government's announcement of a thorough review of the material needs of the inspectorate carried out to provide the competent authorities with objective information to take into account in determining an appropriate budget for its effective operation. It notes with interest that the Ministry of Labour and Social Security has to that end taken steps to establish closer links with the other bodies of the executive authority and the legislative authority and that this exercise has facilitated the development of an operational plan for 2009 demonstrating the importance of labour inspection and emphasizing the need to increase its resources.

Article 5(a), Article 10, paragraph 1(a)(i), and Article 21(c), (f) and (g). Register of enterprises, exchange of information and statistics. The Committee notes that the analysis carried out of the labour inspection situation has highlighted the lack of a register of enterprises and that a recommendation has been made in that regard. The recommendation has been included in the action plan, which provides for the creation of a register at the national level within the Ministry based on the register developed and used by the IGSS. The Government has provided a copy of a draft cooperation agreement between the MTPS and the IGSS on the exchange of information relating to occupational safety and health in the textile industry, and the action plan provides for an agreement on the exchange of relevant data between the MTPS, the tax authorities and the registrar of companies.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the measures implemented under the collective agreement and the action plan with regard to the matters mentioned above, as well as a copy of any relevant text or draft text, and to indicate to the Office any difficulties encountered.

Further to its previous comments, the Committee also requests the Government once again to provide a copy of the legal provisions in force concerning the mechanism to compensate labour inspectors for overtime.

Furthermore, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information in reply to the allegation made by the MSICG concerning the wage discrimination against inspectors in the category of "chief technicians".

Finally, noting the statistics on inspection activities provided by the Government with its report, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the measures defined in the action plan to strengthen the labour inspection system have been taken to enable the central authority to publish and transmit to the ILO as soon as possible an annual report as required under Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 25 September 2008 and the numerous documents attached. It notes in particular the analysis of the labour inspection system carried out by the ILO in 2008 and the resulting action plan drawn up to improve its operation.

Articles 6 and 14 of the Convention. Human resources allocated to labour inspection activities in agricultural undertakings. Number and qualifications. Number of men and women inspectors in relation to the number of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection (Article 14). According to the Government, the number of inspectors carrying out their duties in the agricultural sector is not sufficient, but efforts are being made to ensure that each regional office covers all agricultural undertakings through the introduction of programmed inspections with a view to enforcing the labour legislation and checking all the documents required concerning conditions of work (payment of the minimum wage, bonuses and compensation), as well as the implementation of health and safety measures (in particular the obligation to provide workers with the necessary equipment to prevent industrial accidents and occupational diseases). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of the texts on which these checks in agricultural undertakings are based, as well as a copy of any relevant document illustrating their application in practice (model form, inspection report, etc.).

Appropriate training of men and women inspectors in agriculture and the updating of their technical skills (Article 9). Further to its previous comments concerning the usefulness of specific training for inspectors responsible for enforcing the legal provisions on conditions of work in agriculture, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, such training is provided by the Occupational Safety and Health Department of the General Directorate of Social Welfare for inspectors from the regional offices of the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT) carrying out inspections in agricultural undertakings. The training focuses on safety measures relating to installations and operations carried out during the stage preceding the export of goods, as well as protective equipment for agricultural workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the frequency, content and duration of this type of training, as well as the number of participants. It requests it to keep the ILO informed of the follow-up to the 2008 action plan which resulted from the analysis carried out by the ILO in terms of the ongoing training, including distance learning, of inspectors working in the agricultural sector through the conclusion of agreements with technical institutions and universities.

Article 6. Duties entrusted to labour inspectors. Paragraph 1(a). Conditions of work in agricultural undertakings producing for multinational agri-food enterprises. In reply to the Committee's previous comments concerning the denial of rights of workers in these undertakings, according to the information provided by the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA), in particular concerning hours of work and the payment of overtime, the Government indicates that the IGT has made efforts to ensure that in all subregional or regional offices labour inspectors carry out programmed inspections in undertakings in which they have reason to believe that the conditions of work are contrary to the legislation in force and harmful to the workers. The Committee also notes the texts provided of collective agreements regulating the remuneration of overtime concluded within various agri-food undertakings. Noting this information with interest, the Committee nonetheless wishes to remind the Government that, under Article 21 of the Convention, agricultural undertakings should be inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary and that, under Article 20(c), inspectors should treat as absolutely confidential the source of any complaint and give no intimation to the employer or his representative that a visit of inspection was made in consequence of the receipt of such a complaint. However, to be able to respect this obligation of confidentiality effectively, it is essential that both employers and workers are convinced of the possibility of any undertaking being inspected at any time and not exclusively in response to a complaint. This is the only way to avoid drawing the employer or his representative's attention to the link which may exist between an inspection and a complaint. By focusing their inspection activities only on undertakings which have been reported or are the subject of a complaint, labour inspectors are unable to hide this link and therefore expose the person making the complaint to the risk of reprisals by the employer. For this reason, it is essential that measures are taken to ensure that inspections of agricultural undertakings are also carried out routinely in as many agricultural undertakings as possible. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would therefore take measures to ensure that inspections in agricultural undertakings are carried out not only in response to a complaint, but also routinely based on an appropriate schedule. It requests the Government to take prompt measures to that end and to provide in its next report a copy of any relevant document, as well as any statistics available concerning the type of inspections carried out during the period covered by the report.

Noting that the collective labour agreements sent to the Office expired in 2008 and 2009, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments with regard to conditions of work in the agricultural undertakings covered by the agreements which have expired.

Paragraphs 2 and 3. Duties relating to the conditions of life of the families of agricultural workers and compatibility of further duties entrusted to labour inspectors with inspection duties. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide statistical and other information concerning the activities of labour inspectors with regard to the families of agricultural workers and the results of those activities. It also requests it to provide information on the manner in which it is ensured, as indicated in its report, that the duties entrusted to labour inspectors in addition to those defined in Article 3(1)(a), (b) and (c) do not interfere with the discharge of those duties.

Articles 8 and 20. Need to improve the conditions of service of labour inspectors to enable them to respect the ethical principles of their profession. Drawing the Government's attention to its comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (under Article 6) on the same subject, the Committee would be grateful if it would take measures to ensure that labour inspectors carrying out their duties in the agricultural sector benefit from conditions of service (remuneration, career prospects, consideration in which they are held by the public authorities, etc.) such that they are above any attempt to bypass the ethical principles of integrity and impartiality inherent in their profession and if it would provide information on the progress made in that regard.

Articles 12, 15 and 16, paragraph 1(c)(iii). Cooperation of the Guatemalan Social Security Institute (IGSS) and higher education establishments with the labour inspectorate. Cooperation relating to preventive control of new plant and dangerous materials or substances used and handled in agricultural undertakings. In reply to the Committee's request concerning the association of inspectors in this preventive function, the Government indicates that, where the IGT is informed of the geographical extension of the activities carried out by an agricultural undertaking, a team of inspectors who are experts in health and safety is immediately appointed by the competent regional office to carry out a visual inspection and issue the relevant instructions. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, health and safety technicians from the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare use suitable tools to analyse the harmful or toxic materials or substances and make recommendations to the employer on this matter, including with regard to protective equipment for workers. In the event that the technical inspection means of the IGSS prove insufficient, the analysis of products and substances is entrusted, for the purposes of obtaining advice and recommendations, either to a university institution (chemistry and pharmacology faculty) or to the National Institute of Forensic Medicine for advice and recommendations on the safe use of these products, materials and substances. The IGSS provides support to the inspection services in all departments of the Republic and samples of substances, materials and products taken by labour inspectors during inspections are transmitted to the competent laboratory of the IGSS for analysis. According to the Government, the IGSS responds within ten working days with any recommendations that are necessary to protect the health and safety of workers exposed to these substances and products. The labour inspectorate then carries out automatic inspections to ensure that these recommendations have been implemented and any employer responsible who fails to comply with any warnings issued by the inspector is liable to prosecution. While taking due note of this information, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide with its next report a copy of the legal provisions governing the cooperation procedures described above, as well as any other relevant documents or statistics.

Cooperation relating to the exchange of information and the keeping of registers. Further to the analysis of labour inspection carried out which noted a confusion between the respective activities and functions of the inspectors of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare and the IGSS inspectors, as well as the poor coordination between their activities, the Government indicates that cooperation has been established between these two institutions, which has resulted in particular in the exchange of information in the context of a project in the textile industry. While taking due note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to specify the action taken in the agricultural sector under the 2008 action plan with regard to the conclusion of coordination agreements between the inspection services of the IGSS and the IGT through regular meetings, as well as with regard to the conclusion of an agreement on the planning and implementation of joint activities and the exchange of information. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of any legal text or any other relevant document, as well as statistics on the activities carried out by the two institutions.

Noting that the action plan also provides for the establishment of cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the tax authorities and Registrar of companies with a view to creating a specific labour inspection database, the Committee requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard and to provide a copy of any legal text or any other relevant document.

Article 19, paragraph 1. Notification of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease to labour inspectors. In reply to the Committee's 2007 direct request concerning the need to supplement the legislation with provisions defining cases and the manner in which the labour inspectorate shall be notified of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease, the Government expresses its political will to take relevant steps. In this regard, it refers to a cooperation project between the IGSS and the IGT relating to the notification of occupational accidents and diseases through the post or by electronic mail and provides a document relating to such cooperation in the textile industry, as well as draft regulations on the notification by workers of occupational accidents and diseases to the labour inspectorate in accordance with Conventions Nos 81 and 129. The Committee takes due note of this information and requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the measures already taken and implemented in practice to improve the system of notification to the labour inspectorate of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease in agricultural undertakings. It would be grateful if it would provide a copy of any legal text adopted in this regard, as well as any other relevant documents and any statistics available.

Referring to the 2008 action plan, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would also specify the action taken to give effect to the recommendation to establish a computer system to facilitate the use of IGSS data to create a national register of notifications of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease.

Articles 22, 23 and 24. Role of labour inspectors in the prosecution of violations committed by agricultural employers. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, inspectors refer to the labour and social security tribunals cases of violations of the labour legislation identified during their inspections. In the light of its observation under Convention No. 81 concerning the prosecution and punishment of violations, the Committee requests the Government to provide information concerning the agricultural sector.

Articles 25, 26 and 27. Periodical reports and annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government concerning the laws and regulations covered by the labour inspectorate and the regional distribution of inspection staff, as well as the statistical tables on the agricultural undertakings liable to inspection; the number of persons working in those undertakings; inspection visits; violations committed and penalties imposed; occupational accidents and their causes and occupational diseases and their causes. It also notes the statistical tables attached to the report on the cases dealt with by the inspection and conciliation sections of the various regional offices. Noting the lack of information on the number and distribution of labour inspectors carrying out their duties in agricultural undertakings, the Committee requests the Government to provide this information in its next report.

Furthermore, the Committee cannot over-emphasize the need for the Government to take measures, in the context of the 2008 action plan, to ensure that an annual labour inspection report containing up to date information on the matters listed in Article 27 is published rapidly and a copy sent to the ILO within the period prescribed by Article 26. The Committee reminds the Government that, in accordance with Article 26(1), the report may be drawn up either as a separate report or as part of a general annual inspection report.

Guinea

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report received in June 2006 and observes that, despite the Office's reminder of 20 June 2006, the annual inspection report which was due to be sent has not been received by the ILO. While noting the information on the legal provisions giving effect in law to the Convention, the Committee would point out that the Government has not supplied the information called for in its previous observation regarding the practical functioning of the labour inspection system. It is therefore bound to repeat the same observation:

Resources of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes with concern that the information provided by the Government in its report for the period ending June 2005 reveals that the labour inspectorate suffers from a persistent shortage of resources. It notes, in particular, that retired labour inspectors are no longer being replaced and that the inspection services as a whole suffer from a lack of computer equipment and transport facilities. It notes, moreover, that labour inspectors have not received any training since 2000. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to furnish the labour inspectorate with the resources it needs to operate effectively, in particular in order to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient (Article 10 of the Convention), that they are furnished with the material means and transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties (Article 11) and that they receive adequate training for the performance of their duties (Article 7(3)). The Government is requested to transmit information on any progress made in this regard in its next report.

Publication of an annual report. The Committee notes that no annual inspection report has been transmitted since that covering the period of 15 October 1994 to 15 October 1995. Referring to its previous requests, it once again requests the Government to take any appropriate measures with a view to the fulfilment by the central inspection authority of its obligation to publish and transmit to the International Labour Office an annual report in accordance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Guyana

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Obligation to report pursuant to article 22 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes the communication by the Government, in reply to its previous request, of the circulars (notices) of 18 March 2005 designating the authorities which must be notified of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease, in relation to Article 19 of the Convention. It also notes the communication of the annual report for 2004 from the Industrial Relations Department of the Ministry of Labour, containing brief information on labour inspection activities in the agricultural sector. However, the Committee notes that no detailed report on the application of the Convention has been sent for more than ten years. The Committee therefore requests the Government to supply, in its next report under article 22 of the ILO Constitution, all the information required by each part of the Convention report form.

Articles 26 and 27 of the Convention. Objectives and content of the annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes that, despite the high number of strikes in sugar plantations and agriculture in 2004 and their socio-economic impact (227 strikes resulting in the loss of 82,880 workdays and wages amounting to 129,061,000 dollars) the labour inspectorate only performed six inspections for the whole sector. The Committee considers that these figures testify both to poor conditions of work and lack of vigilance on the part of the inspection authorities responsible for monitoring conditions of work in agricultural undertakings. In any event, they call for the adoption of measures to curb the deterioration of the social climate, particularly by means of inspection activities and initiatives to provide employers and workers with information. However, the Committee notes that the Government has not supplied any information indicating that such measures have been taken or are envisaged. It also notes that the content of the report does not allow any assessment to be made of the level of coverage of the labour inspection system in relation to worker protection requirements in the sector, these needs not being defined, particularly with regard to occupational safety and health. The significant lack of statistics relating to inspection visits (Article 27(d)) and violations (clause (e)) and the total lack of information regarding the laws and regulations giving effect to the provisions of the Convention (clause (a)), the number of staff of the labour inspection service (clause (b)), the number of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection and the number of persons working therein (clause (c)), and also the lack of statistics with respect to penalties imposed (clause (e)), occupational accidents, including their causes (clause (f)) and occupational diseases, including their causes (clause (g)), make it impossible for the Committee to perform its role of monitoring the practical application of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that the requirement to publish an annual report on inspection activities and send it to the ILO serves an important purpose at both the national and international level. It is an essential tool for evaluating the operation of the labour inspection system and for making improvements to it, with the participation of employers and workers and their respective organizations (Articles 26 and 27). The Committee invites the Government to refer to paragraphs 320–328 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection and requests it to take the necessary measures, if need be with technical assistance from the Office, to enable the central labour inspection authority to include all the information required by each of clauses (a) to (g) of Article 27 in the annual report on its work.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Hungary

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1994)

Article 3, paragraph 1(a) and (b), of the Convention. Preventive measures in the area of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes with interest the measures taken to improve levels of occupational safety and health, namely: (a) the unification of competence for inspections relating to occupational safety and health and general working conditions (Decree No. 295/2006 establishing the legal and institutional conditions for the uniform supervision of health and safety by regional inspectorates); (b) the reinforcement of inspections (inspections outside regular hours, inspections focusing on sectors in which employees are exposed to serious hazards, inspections in the priority sectors of agriculture, construction and processing industries); (c) more severe sanctions; (d) the publication of lists of employers which have violated health and safety regulations as a deterrent on the Ministry's web site; and (e) the introduction of the "Partnership for Safe Employment" initiative. The latter initiative is intended to improve occupational safety and health, enhance the social responsibility of employers and disseminate good practices. This initiative consists of a voluntary commitment to compliance with the regulations respecting health, safety and labour conditions and this takes the form of a written agreement entitling employers to use the label "Safety Employment Partner" at their events and in the provision of their services. A list of employers which have signed the agreement is published on the web site of the labour inspectorate. These employers are provided with regular information on labour law provisions by the Government. Any violation of the respective requirements involves the risk of losing the right to use the label.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on any further measures adopted with a view to promoting a culture of good safety and health conditions in all workplaces and their impact.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Italy

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in July 2008, its replies to the Committee's previous comments and the attached substantial documentation relating to the implementation of Legislative Decree No. 124 of 23 April 2004 on the rationalization of inspection duties relating to social security and labour.

Article 3, paragraph 2, of the Convention. Impact of monitoring and sanctioning of illegal employment and unauthorized work on inspection of conditions of work. In its previous comments the Committee had noted that numerous structural and legislative measures adopted to implement Legislative Decree No. 124/2004 focused on strengthening the powers of the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy for combating unauthorized work and illegal employment and that labour inspectors played a major role in this process. The Committee had emphasized the need to re-establish labour inspectors in their duties defined by the Convention and limit their cooperation with the immigration authorities to an extent that is compatible with the purpose of this Convention.

The Committee notes the indication by the Government that inspectors' powers are not limited to the control of clandestine non-EU workers and their principal objective is to ensure observance of employment and social legislation. The Government enumerates the duties of the inspectors of the Ministry of Labour, Health and Social Policy under Act No. 628 of 22 July 1961 and Legislative Decree No. 124 of 23 April 2004. These include the monitoring of the application of all laws concerning civil and social rights, the protection of labour relations and the occasional control of contractual arrangements, typical or atypical; the monitoring of the correct application of contracts and collective agreements; the monitoring of occupational safety in the building sector only; the supervision of the functioning of pension funds and the welfare activities of professional associations; the carrying out of inquiries and investigations at the request of the Ministry of Labour; and the fulfilment of the functions required by legislation and regulations or delegated by the Ministry of Labour.

The Government adds that monitoring and control is entrusted not only to inspectors of the Ministry of Labour, Health and Social Policy but also to the Carabinieri of the Labour Protection Division, the inspectors of the social security and insurance institutions and the local health authority inspectors. The inspectors of the Ministry of Labour operate as officials of the criminal police “within the limits of the service assigned and under powers conferred under current legislation”. The Carabinieri of the Labour Protection Division perform similar functions to the inspectors of the Ministry of Labour, that is criminal police activities which, unlike those of labour inspectors, are not subject to “the limits of the service and under powers conferred under current legislation”. Monitoring and control functions in pensions and welfare matters are also exercised by the inspectors of the National Social Security Institute (INPS), the National Occupational Accidents Insurance Institution (INAIL) and other bodies who do not have the status of officials or agents of the criminal police. Finally, local health authorities also have staff responsible for monitoring and control of the application of legislation on occupational safety and health. Like the labour inspectors, this staff also has the status of criminal police officer.

The Committee also notes that, according to the comments of the Italian Confederation of Small and Medium Private Industry (CONFAPI) on the Government’s report, the Italian legislation in this area is largely in line with the Convention.

The Committee finally takes note of the detailed information attached by the Government on the results of special investigations carried out during the second half of 2006 and 2007 as well as several circulars issued by the General Inspectorate of the Ministry of Labour since 28 September 2006 for the implementation of Legislative Decree No. 124 of 23 April 2004. The Committee observes that the control of the legality of employment, including employment of clandestine migrants, appears to constitute one of the main targets of these circulars and investigations.

The Committee recalls from its previous comments that the role of the labour inspectorate, pursuant to the provisions of the Convention, is to monitor not the legality of the employment relationship but the conditions in which the work is performed and that the system of labour inspection must apply to all employees or apprentices, however they may be remunerated and whatever the type, form or duration of their contract. Cooperation with the immigration authorities should be carried out cautiously, keeping in mind that the main objective of the labour inspection system is to protect the rights and interests of all workers and to improve working conditions. In this respect, it should be emphasized that the expression “while engaged in their work” used in Article 3(1)(a) of the Convention indicates that the protection afforded by labour inspection must be provided to workers during their period of employment.

The Committee considers that the role assigned to labour inspectors as Carabinieri of the criminal police may severely jeopardize the performance of their original duties as defined by the Convention, namely to ensure that workers are protected against the imposition of conditions of work which are contrary to the legislation. As indicated in its previous comments, systematically involving labour inspectors in coordinated operations to combat illegal employment does nothing to promote a climate of confidence, which is necessary if cooperation on the part of workers with an irregular status of residency is to be achieved, especially in the form of reports and complaints to labour inspectors. On the contrary, it represents an obstacle to the opportunities for inspectors to obtain information regarding the conditions of work experienced by these workers.

The Committee therefore once again emphasizes the need for the Government to take measures to distinguish with sufficient clarity the powers and working methods of labour inspectors from those of the officials of other bodies responsible for combating illegal employment and migration. Such a separation in no way excludes the possibility of establishing a form of collaboration which involves labour inspectors drawing the attention of the competent authorities to employers in breach of the legislation regarding conditions of work and the protection of workers, especially as regards abuses reported with regard to workers whose situation is irregular. The Committee emphasizes once again that the financial consequences (fines and workers’ wage claims) resulting from the actions of the labour inspectorate can constitute an effective deterrent against the employment of persons in an irregular situation with regard to labour legislation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report any measures taken or envisaged to re-establish labour inspectors in their duties defined by the Convention and limit their cooperation with the immigration authorities to an extent that is compatible with the purpose of the Convention. It would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of all progress made in this respect or, if necessary, inform it of any difficulties encountered.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual inspection report. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of the Government’s decision not to publish an annual report in the immediate future on account of institutional reforms concerning primarily the methods for the collection of statistics. The Committee notes from the Government’s latest report that, nevertheless, the results of inspection activities are published either on the Ministry of Labour web site or through press conferences. The Committee recalls that the publication of an annual inspection report is required by Article 20(1) and (2) of the Convention and once again requests the Government to publish such a report in the near future, containing detailed information on each of the matters covered by Article 21, and to ensure that a copy is sent to the ILO within the deadlines required by Article 20(3).

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1981)

Article 6, paragraphs 1(a) and 2, of the Convention. Detrimental impact of the monitoring and sanctioning of illegal and unauthorized work on the discharge of the primary duty of the monitoring of conditions of work. With reference to its observation relating to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee recalls from its previous comments under this Convention that the extent of illegal employment in various forms in agriculture has led the Government to focus inspection operations, conducted jointly with other official bodies pursuing different objectives from that of the protection of workers while engaged in their work, mainly on the detection of undertakings guilty of contraventions and on prevention in this area.

The Committee notes from the Government's report that the employment relationship in the agricultural sector is subject to special provisions under the Civil Code, sectoral collective agreements and numerous legal provisions concerning social security, as well as the practices of the National Social Security Institute (INPS) and the National Occupational Accident Insurance Institute (INAIL). The enforcement of these provisions is chiefly entrusted to the competent departments of the Ministry of Labour which take and coordinate initiatives to combat clandestine and illegal labour along with surveillance of labour and social legislation, including with the assistance of the above social security institutes and their agencies.

The Committee also notes that the Italian Confederation of Small and Medium Private Industry (CONFAPI), in its comments on the Government's report, is of the view that Italian legislation in this area is largely in line with the Convention.

The Committee notes the four analyses attached by the Government containing data relating to the routine surveillance in agriculture conducted in 2007 by the regional and provincial labour departments throughout the national territory. The Government indicates that, as can be seen from these analyses, in 2007 a total of 14,397 agricultural businesses were inspected, of which 5,978 were in violation; of the 61,992 workers covered by the inspections, 10,048 were found to be illegal, including 1,803 non-EU workers and 187 children.

In view of the results of the controls mentioned by the Government, the Committee observes, as it does under Convention No. 81, that the control of the legality of employment, including the employment of clandestine migrant workers, appears to constitute one of the main targets of these controls. It once again points out that, under the terms of Article 4 of the present Convention, the system of inspection in agriculture must cover all wage workers or apprentices, "however they may be remunerated and whatever the type, form or duration of their contract". It recalls once again that during the preparatory work for the adoption of Article 4 of the Convention, most of the member States considered that the existence of a wage relationship with the operator should be the determining factor in defining the workers covered by this provision (General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, paragraph 77). Although the labour inspectorate may often be asked to cooperate with the immigration authorities in view of the growing numbers of migrant workers in many countries, such cooperation should be carried out cautiously, keeping in mind that the main objective of the labour inspection system is to protect the rights and interests of all workers and to improve their working conditions (General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 161.) The Committee therefor once again recalls that even though there may be no doubt that measures are necessary to put a stop to the phenomenon of illegal migration, the role assigned to labour inspectors in this regard at the workplace can severely jeopardize the realization of the prime objective of the Convention, namely, to ensure the protection of workers against the imposition of conditions of work which are contrary to the relevant legal provisions. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate in its next report the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that labour inspectors working in the agricultural sector refocus their action on the duties defined by the Convention and to limit their collaboration with services responsible for monitoring immigration to an extent which is compatible with the aim of the Convention. It would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of any progress made in this respect and inform it of any obstacles encountered.

Articles 26 and 27. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual inspection report. In this respect, the Committee once again refers to its comment under Convention No. 81 and requests the Government to ensure that detailed information on each of the subjects covered by Article 27 is published soon in an annual report and that a copy is sent to the ILO within the deadline prescribed by Article 26.

Kenya

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1964)

Articles 5(a) and 21(e) of the Convention. Effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system. The Committee notes that it is envisaged to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspection system and the justice system with a view to encouraging due diligence and attention in the treatment by judicial bodies of violations reported by the labour inspectorate. In this regard, the Government indicates the development of procedural rules and regulations for the industrial court which complete the recently reviewed and adapted labour legislation. The Committee asks the Government to keep the ILO informed of any developments in terms of strengthening the above cooperation and, where applicable, to send a copy of any law or regulation adopted governing the legal procedure of the industrial court.

Article 2, paragraphs 1 and 23, and Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Scope of labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest that Legal Notice No. 227/1990, which exempted establishments located in export processing zones (EPZs) from the application of the health and safety legislation, is now null and void and that the provisions of the Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act apply to all workplaces, including those in EPZs.

It further notes that the services of the Department of Occupational Safety and Health carried out a total of 4,117 occupational safety and health inspections during the 2008–09 financial year. Although it indicates that the Department monitored the activities of the safety and health committees established under section 9 of the OSH Act and trained 5,150 labour inspectors, the Government explains that it cannot provide information on the number of occupational safety and health committees established in industrial and commercial establishments in EPZs due to the limited capacity of the data-capturing system which does not segregate different workplaces. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of the court ruling which found Legal Notice No. 227/1990 to be null and void and if it would continue to keep the ILO informed of further inspection visits carried out by occupational safety and health officers. It requests the Government to make every effort to improve the data-capturing system with a view, among other objectives, to the disaggregation of data by industrial and commercial establishments, and to communicate the missing information in the near future.

The Committee notes that the categories of workers to be exempted from the scope of the Labour Institutions Act on labour administration and inspection, as provided for by section 4(3) of the Act, are to be specified by relevant rules and regulations. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO duly informed in this regard and to communicate a copy of any relevant rules and regulations.

Articles 10, 11 and 16. Adequate means of action and working conditions of labour inspection staff. Having expressed its concern at the persistent lack of labour inspection staff, office equipment and means of available transport facilities, the Committee regrets that, according to the Government, no progress has yet been made in this regard. Although fully aware of the difficulties that the country faces in the ongoing global recession and food crisis, the Committee nevertheless encourages the Government to do its utmost to seek international financial assistance to enable it to ensure sustainable resources for the effective functioning of the labour inspection services and to keep the ILO informed of any measures taken and the results achieved in this respect.

Article 14. Reporting and investigation of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes the description by the Government of its investigation procedure with regard to occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease: after reporting to the Director of the Occupational Safety and Health Services (DOSH) through the relevant accident reporting form (DOSH 1), occupational safety and health inspectors are sent to visit the scene of the accident, where they interview witnesses as well as the victim of the accident and collect other necessary evidence. The relevant report drafted following accident investigations constitutes the basis for action such as, where appropriate, improvement or prohibition notices, training, advice or prosecution. While the possibility to set up a tribunal to investigate occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease is foreseen in section 128 of the OSH Act, the Government sees no need to constitute such a tribunal as the DOSH has been entrusted with the investigation of these cases. Noting the indication that, in the years 2008 and 2009, a total of 291 accidents were investigated, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the number of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease reported in comparison with the number of investigations actually conducted, as well as the action taken following these investigations (improvement or prohibition notices, prosecutions and penalties imposed).

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the obligation set out in Article 22 of the OSH Act for medical practitioners to notify occupational diseases to the Director of the OSH Services is not functioning in a satisfactory manner in practice as medical practitioners, despite an existing list of 40 occupational diseases in the second schedule to the OSH Act, are not adequately sensitized, bearing in mind the complexity of diagnosing occupational diseases. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to sensitize medical practitioners (e.g. through awareness campaigns, the distribution of brochures or the organization of training sessions). Drawing the Government's attention to the possibility of ILO technical assistance to this end, the Committee would be grateful if it would indicate any steps taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on labour inspection activities. The Committee notes that no annual report has been received, although the Government mentions an annual ministerial report under these Articles. It had noted in its previous report the obligation under Article 42(1) of the Labour Institutions Act for the Commissioner for Labour to prepare and publish, not later than 30 April of each year, a report on the activities undertaken in his/her department. The content of the report, as set out in Article 42(2), includes the information required under Article 21 of the Convention. It also noted that Article 25 of the OSH Act provides for the development and maintenance of an effective programme of the collection, compilation and analysis of occupational safety and health statistics covering occupational accidents and diseases, as well as the existence of an accident database where information sent through the DOSH 1 form is entered. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in establishing a system to give effect to the requirements of Article 25 of the OSH Act in practice and any difficulties that have been encountered.

It urges the Government to ensure that an annual report, containing all the information and statistics on labour inspection activities required by Article 21 of the Convention, is published and communicated to the ILO.

Labour inspection and child labour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has not yet provided the child labour division with any budgetary allocation due to financial constraints. However, it notes with interest, that under the Time-bound Programme for the elimination of child labour implementation with ILO-IPEC, training sessions have been organized for the labour inspectorate in the area of project management, strategic management, capacity building on child labour issues and the training of trainers. The Committee requests the Government to ensure, where applicable within the framework of international financial cooperation, that adequate resources are rapidly made available. It asks the Government to specify the content of the above training of labour inspectors, the number and function of the participants and the duration of the training, and to provide information on any further training in this regard, as well as on its impact on the level of observance of legal provisions relating to child labour.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1971)

Article 3, paragraphs 1 and 2, and Article 5(a) of the Convention. Cooperation between the labour inspection services and judicial bodies with a view to improving the implementation of the legislation covered by the Convention. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, labour inspectors periodically file their reports of offences at the police station responsible for their area, which forwards them to the Public Prosecutor of the Republic. The latter refers them to the competent court for processing and a decision. According to the Government, this procedure illustrates the close cooperation that exists between labour inspectors, the police services, the public prosecutor and the courts. The Committee nonetheless notes that the statistics of offences reported in 2007 in the course of inspection visits and the action taken on them show no judicial follow-up. Furthermore, the 2007 annual inspection report contains information on a large-scale inspection campaign targeting filling stations, restaurants, shops, hotels and other commercial establishments and focusing on the detection of work permit infringements and breaches of the legislation on foreign labour, and indicates that legal procedures have been set up to regularize the situation of the persons concerned in coordination with the Prosecutor General and the provincial prosecutors with a view to investigating and settling cases referred by the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes first that these controls focused not on conditions of work (hours of work, wages, leave, weekly rest, employment of women and young persons, etc.) and the protection of workers in the exercise of their occupation (freedom of association, social security, etc.), but on enforcement of the legislation on foreign labour and work permits, and secondly that no information has been supplied indicating that judicial proceedings were initiated or concluded. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would send copies of the legislative or regulatory provisions that constitute the basis in law for the cooperation between the labour inspectorate and judicial bodies, together with information on the number and the subjects of the judicial decisions handed down following reports of contraventions submitted directly or indirectly by the labour inspectorate.

Articles 20 and 21. Reporting obligations on the activities of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes that, as is the case with the statistics so far sent by the Government, the annual labour inspection report for 2007 is not in the form of a publication, as required by Article 20. The purpose of this obligation is to inform any authority that may be interested or concerned, and particularly employers and workers and their respective organizations, concerning the way in which the labour inspectorate functions, so that they may make any comments they deem fit or any proposals for improvement.

Furthermore, while the report contains detailed information on the composition and geographical distribution and by sex of the inspection staff (Articles 8, 10 and 21(b)), the data on inspection visits Article 21(d) are too scant and imprecise to allow an assessment of their frequency and quality or to determine the legal provisions covered by inspections. Table No. 3 on inspection visits in the hydrocarbons sector shows that, between 3 and 12 March 2007, 15 worksites and 80 enterprises were visited and 180 infringements were noted. The figures contained in table No. 4 are 6,704 restaurants and cafes, 1,346 pastry shops and bakeries, 40,676 commercial establishments, that is a total of 48,726 workplaces, in which 49,315 Libyan and 25,909 foreign workers were employed. These figures would appear to relate to an inspection programme covering these categories of establishments with a view to regularizing the situation of the persons that they employ. The Committee regrets that it has to emphasize that this information cannot serve as a basis for any evaluation of the mandate of the labour inspectorate or its coverage (Article 21(c) and (d)).

The statistics set out in two other tables (Nos 5 and 9) are completely identical. One purports to show inspections in the area of occupational safety and health and the other inspections with no specification as to the legal aspects covered. Their results are set out under the titles "measures taken", "measures already taken", "time limits set" and "files opened". Such data cannot serve as a basis for any form of evaluation of the application of the Convention. Furthermore, no information is supplied on any sanctions that may have been imposed on offenders (Article 21(e)), or on occupational accidents (Article 21(f)) or cases of occupational disease (Article 21(g)). The Committee however noted in its previous comments the existence of legal provisions requiring the notification of statistics of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease and the powers of labour inspectors in this respect. The Committee is therefore bound once again to emphasize to the Government how essential the annual report prescribed by the Convention is as an instrument for attaining the twofold objective assigned to it at both the national and international levels. The Committee invites the Government to refer to paragraphs 320 et seq. of the General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, and to ensure that effect is given, at the earliest possible date, in both law and in practice, to Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention through the publication and communication to the Office of an annual report on the work of the inspectorate containing the information set out in Article 21(a)–(g). The Committee once again reminds the Government of the valuable guidance provided in the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), regarding the presentation and appropriate level of detail of the information to be included so as to allow an accurate evaluation of how the labour inspection system functions and the determination of the resources needed for its gradual improvement.

Luxembourg

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's reports for the periods ending on 30 June 2005 and 30 June 2007, received at the ILO on 21 December 2005 and 26 November 2007, respectively, the annual report of the Inspectorate of Labour and Mines (ITM) for 2005 and the legislation attached. It also notes that the Labour Code, adopted on 31 July 2006, does not change the previous legal provisions on labour law, including those on labour inspection.

Developments in the labour inspection system. The Committee notes the process to enhance the efficiency and relevance of the labour inspection system, in particular a bill to reform the ITM currently before the competent parliamentary bodies. It awaits any developments in this respect and would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed.

International cooperation in labour inspection. The Committee notes that the annual report of the ITM contains information on each of the subjects set out in Article 21 of the Convention, and also on the ITM's regional activities in the context of the European Union, such as participation in the drafting of new directives on occupational health and safety, and its activities at international level including the organization, in collaboration with the ILO, of a conference on integrated labour inspection systems held from 9 to 11 March 2005 and attended by delegates from some 70 countries. The Committee notes that according to section 6 of the Act on the Posting of Workers, the ITM's purpose is to act as a liaison office for international cooperation with counterpart public administrations in the Member States of the European Union. The synergy thus created will enhance action to prevent industrial accidents and occupational diseases among migrant workers, in the "major region" composed of the founding members of the "old Europe". The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the ways and means used to attain this objective, and on the results.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Malawi

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1965)

Article 4, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Need to re-establish a central authority entrusted with control and supervisory powers in the labour inspection system. According to the Government's vague indications in reply to the observation made by the Committee on the basis of the recommendations of an ILO technical mission which visited the country in May 2006: (1) the labour inspection system is in the process of being developed in consultation with social partners; (2) the Ministry has already started putting in place measures to come up with a labour inspection policy and set guidelines, and a meeting was held in 2009 to kick-start the process; (3) the Ministry has placed emphasis on the planning of inspections, and sweeping inspections have been carried out in the major cities, while some joint inspections with labour inspectors and safety and health inspectors have been undertaken, for example in the northern region of the country; (4) the functional review of the Ministry, under which the Inspection Services Unit is to be strengthened to enable it to set annual targets and conduct inspections in the field, is awaiting approval; and (5) the Ministry has undertaken supervisory visits to field offices and organized some training for inspectors, including those responsible for occupational safety and health with a view to developing an integrated inspection system.

In addition, the Committee notes from the Government's report under the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), that the budgeting and funding of labour inspection is decentralized in such a manner that each office is allocated funds directly by Treasury according to the latter's priorities. Consequently, offices with motorcycles or motor vehicles cover fuel and maintenance, while the Ministry only receives reports on the activities performed. Based on this information, the Committee observes that the very notion of a central labour inspection authority seems to have become devoid of all substance, as the Ministry's only residual role consists of receiving activity reports from labour inspection offices, without any power to determine the needs of the labour inspection services in terms of financial and material resources with a view to their proper operation. The objective of the ILO technical mission was to help the Government to anticipate the effects of globalization on working conditions and workers' rights, to secure the commitment of the social partners to the principle that an effective labour inspection service allows the twofold interests of social protection and improved productivity, and to raise the Government's awareness of the importance of the tripartite dimension of labour administration. Although it made no reference to a decentralized labour inspection system, the mission emphasized, on the contrary, that there were no inherent or structural barriers for the operation of an effective and efficient labour inspection service; and that there was considerable room for improvement, in particular in policy, planning, management procedures, communications, equipment and training, and that this could be done by rationalizing, streamlining and consolidating the inspection functions of the Labour Directorate in the field structure. The decentralized operation of the labour inspection system, as described by the Government in the report on the application of Convention No. 129, is not such as to meet the economic and social objectives of the labour inspection Conventions. The obligations deriving from the ratifications of a Convention in any event remain the responsibility of the State. Consequently, the Government is bound, among other obligations, to: (i) observe the principle of placing the labour inspection system under a central authority, pursuant to Article 1; (ii) ensure that the number of labour inspectors is determined on the basis of the criteria listed in Article 10; and (iii) make the necessary arrangements to equip labour inspectors with the material means and transport facilities, and to reimburse any travelling and incidental expenses necessary for the performance of their duties (Article 11). The Government is also bound under the Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150), which has also been ratified by Malawi, to ensure that the staff of the labour administration system have the status, the material means and the financial resources necessary for the effective performance of their duties. Consequently, the allocation to labour inspectorates of material means and financial resources should be left to the discretion of the decentralized authorities, but should be determined by the Government at the central level in accordance with the priorities of labour inspection and national economic and financial possibilities. Only if the central labour inspection authority is entrusted with the powers laid down in the Convention can the Government's commitments, as reaffirmed in its report, be fulfilled and an annual report on labour inspection activities, as provided for in Articles 20 and 21, be published and serve as a basis for the assessment by the central authority of the respective needs and priorities. The technical assistance mission recommended the strengthening of the Office of the Chief Labour Officer in order to allow it to play a more important role in the setting of annual targets, the monitoring of performance by both the field and headquarters and the evaluation of the quality of inspections themselves. It added that more work is required in Malawi if the goals of decent work are to be achieved and expressed the view that as the country has embarked on a process of attracting foreign investment in agriculture and manufacturing, especially textiles, there is a need to strengthen institutions that will promote a good and fair labour market.

The Committee urges the Government, to provide details of the measures announced in its report as a follow-up to the recommendations of the ILO technical mission and to provide copies of all relevant texts or documents. It also urges it to adopt all the necessary measures to secure an inspection system operating under the supervision and control of a central authority (Article 4) that is provided with adequate human resources in terms of both numbers and skills (Articles 6, 7 and 10) and the material conditions necessary for the exercise of its functions in relation to labour inspections (Article 11), and to keep the ILO informed of any developments in law and in practice in this respect.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on labour inspection activities. The Committee notes with concern that the statistics of inspections covering all the sectors of the economy, as published in the Labour Statistics Yearbook, show a significant decrease from 3,043 in 2006 to 1,088 in 2007. Recalling that an annual report on labour inspection activities, which has to be published and communicated to the ILO in accordance with Article 20, shall contain information on each of the topics listed in Article 21, the Committee observes that the above statistics do not allow any appraisal of the effect of this decrease in inspections on compliance with the legislation covered by this Convention. It draws the Government's attention to Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), which provides guidance on the manner in which such information could be presented. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide the available statistics on the types of industrial and commercial workplaces and indications of the legal areas targeted by inspections and the results achieved during the period covered by the next report. It also asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the publication of an annual report, as provided for in Articles 20 and 21.

Labour inspection activities targeting child labour. According to the Government's report, 3,000 children were removed from employment in the framework of the ILO-IPEC programme, instead of the target of 1,500. Noting that the project mostly targets child labour in agriculture, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the ILO with the latest statistics on labour inspection activities pertaining to child labour, specifically in industrial and commercial workplaces, and the action taken as a result.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee draws the Government's attention to its observation under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and asks it to provide the ILO with information relating to the points raised as far as they also concern the present Convention.

Article 7 of the Convention. Need to re-establish a central authority entrusted with control and supervisory powers over the labour inspection system in agriculture. With reference in particular to the indication by the Government that the budgeting and funding of labour inspection is decentralized in such manner that officers with motorcycles or motor vehicles take care of the fuel and maintenance, and the Ministry only receives reports on the activities performed, the Committee would like to emphasize the overall crucial importance for labour inspectors to have at their disposal appropriate transport facilities to be in a position to perform their duties in most undertakings liable to labour inspection.

Taking into consideration that agriculture is the major economic sector of the country, the Committee notes with concern, according to the description by the Government of the way that decentralization operates, that it is not the obligation of the Government to provide for appropriate conditions of work for labour inspectors in agriculture, as this is left to the discretion of each district authority. As emphasized in the observation under Convention No. 81, the allocation to the labour inspectorates of material means and financial resources should not be determined by decentralized labour administration authorities, but by taking into account nationwide labour inspection priorities and national economic and financial possibilities. Only if the central labour inspection authority is entrusted with the powers laid down in the Convention can the Government fulfil its commitments, including the obligation to ensure the publication of an annual inspection report containing the information required by Article 27 in order to give the central authority the necessary basis for the identification of the priority actions to be undertaken. The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the specific recommendation made by the ILO technical assistance mission which visited the country in 2006 concerning the need to strengthen the labour inspection system in agricultural undertakings with a view to securing decent work in the most attractive sector in the country for foreign investments.

The Committee is bound to urge the Government, in the light of the above: to provide details of the progress achieved in the implementation of the measures announced in its report to follow up the recommendations of the ILO technical mission, in so far as they relate to labour inspection in agriculture; to provide copies of all relevant texts or documents and to adopt all measures that are essential to secure a labour inspection system in agriculture under the supervision and control of the central authority that is provided with human resources and material conditions of work adapted to the specific needs of the agricultural sector (Articles 8, 9, 14 and 15); and to keep the ILO informed of any developments in this regard. It also urges the Government to send a copy of any relevant legal texts and documents.

The Committee notes with concern that the statistics of inspection visits covering all sectors of the economy, published in the Labour Statistics Yearbook show a significant decrease (from 3,043 in 2006 to 1,088 in 2007). The Committee recalls in this respect the requirements for the publication and communication to the ILO of an annual report on labour inspection activities, as provided for in Article 26, containing information on each of the topics listed in Article 27 relating to labour inspection in agricultural undertakings. The Committee observes that the above statistics do not allow any appraisal of the extent to which the decrease in inspection visits affects the application of the Convention. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide any available statistics on the types of agricultural undertakings and legal areas targeted by the inspections and the results achieved during the period covered by the next report.

Labour inspection activities targeting child labour. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that, instead of the target of 1,500, a total of 3,000 children were removed from employment in the framework of the ILO-IPEC programme. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the role played by labour inspectors in this regard.

Mali

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1964)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Publication and communication of reports on the activities of the inspection services. The Committee notes with interest the annual reports of the National Labour Directorate for 2007 and 2008. These reports contain much of the information required by Article 21. The Committee can thus assess to some extent how far the Convention is applied and support the Government in its efforts for gradual improvement. It notes, however, that the National Directorate's annual reports cover not only inspection work, in accordance with Article 21 of the Convention, but also other labour administration duties, done by other public servants than inspectors. One of the aims of Articles 20 and 21 is to provide the central inspection authority with the kind of information it needs in order to determine, in the light of the social and economic objectives of labour inspection, the resources required to run the services efficiently, and in order to submit appropriate budgetary proposals for the attainment of these objectives. This aim can be achieved only if the data on the operation and results of labour inspection are compiled and consolidated separately from data on other functions of labour administration. Since, as the annual reports of the National Labour Directorate indicate, relevant data on labour inspection are available, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps in the near future, with the requested ILO assistance, to have a separate annual report on the work of the inspection services published, in accordance with Articles 20 and 21, setting out clearly the information on labour inspection in industrial and commercial workplaces. Referring to its general observation of 1999 on the labour inspectorate's role in combating child labour, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would ensure that the report in question also includes information on child labour in relation to industrial and commercial workplaces.

Article 5(a). Specific measures to encourage cooperation between the inspection services and the justice system. The Committee notes that trial magistrates, public prosecutors and labour inspection officials participated in the subregional seminar on cooperation between inspection services and judicial bodies held in Dakar from 8 to 10 May 2008 as part of a project to modernize labour administration and inspection (ADMITRA). It notes with interest that the Minister of Justice addressed a circular letter to general prosecutors asking them to urge regional prosecutors to provide for action to be taken on reports of infringements drawn up by labour inspectors and to maintain healthy cooperation with inspectors in the interests of better compliance with the labour legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report information on the practical action taken on this circular. It requests the Government to ensure that relevant statistics are published in future annual reports on the work of the labour inspection services.

Articles 6, 7 and 10. Status, conditions of service and composition of the labour inspection staff. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, contrary to what the Government has been announcing for years, the draft decree on bonuses and indemnities for labour inspectors has still not been promulgated. It also notes that despite the Government's statement that 12 labour inspectors were to be recruited in 2008, the list of labour personnel for Mali includes no inspectors, and that the staff of the inspectorate are all, without exception, in the category "controllers" (31).

In an earlier report on the application of this Convention (2003), the Government indicated that it would be utopian to expect training in labour inspection, and that training for labour inspectors was limited to a grounding in labour law at the National School of Administration, an internship in the services and participation in a training course at the African Regional Labour Administration Centre (CRADAT). The Committee notes with interest, however, a training plan sent in 2008 intended for all labour services personnel and covering, inter alia, occupational risk prevention in the construction and public works sector (BTP); inspection methodology; penal action; and the preparation of various forms of inspection visit reports. Furthermore, the National Labour Directorate's annual report for 2008 indicates that a training workshop on ethics in inspection work, work contracts and hours of work was held for controllers from 14 to 25 April 2008 and that a training session for labour inspection trainers on occupational risks was also organized, under the guidance of two experts from GIP INTER.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on any developments in the area of initial training for inspection staff, and on the number and distribution by category and level of qualification of the staff currently performing inspection duties as prescribed in Article 3(1) of the Convention, specifying the criteria used to differentiate between these categories. It would be grateful if the Government would also explain why the 12 inspectors who were supposed to be recruited in 2008 are not on the list of central and regional labour administration staff sent to the Office.

The Committee again asks the Government to adopt the measures that are essential to the improvement of the conditions of service of labour inspection staff (remuneration, career plan, merit bonuses, etc.) so as to attract to, and retain in the profession persons who are sufficiently qualified and motivated, and hopes that in its next report the Government will be in a position to provide information showing real progress in this area.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would also continue to provide details of the training received by staff performing labour inspection duties and on the practical impact of such training.

Articles 11, 16 and 21(c). Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors, transport facilities and frequency of inspection visits. According to the abovementioned annual report for 2008, the duties of the inspection services consist not only of dispute settlement and conciliation, but also supervision of the application of the labour legislation, "which must ordinarily take up most of their time". The report even stresses that "they must make visits to workplaces their main occupation". The Committee notes with interest from the same report that ten vehicles have been assigned to the National Labour Directorate and the regional directorates for labour, employment and vocational training. In the absence of any figures on the industrial and commercial workplaces subject to labour inspection, the statistics of inspections (306) and the workers they covered (16,613) in the course of 2008, are not sufficient for an assessment of the labour inspectorate's coverage rate in relation to the scope of its mandate. It nonetheless notes that in 2008, out of 1,482 individual complaints, 1,091 were settled through conciliation. The report also indicates that 11 collective labour disputes were recorded, 40 per cent of which were followed by work stoppages in which 2,935 workers took part, mostly in the mining (2,680 workers) and the hotel (208) sectors. The Committee would like to stress that conciliation is not among the duties of the labour inspectorate as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention and that, furthermore, according to Paragraph 8 of Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), "the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes".

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would take measures to relieve labour inspection staff of conciliation duties so as to enable them to devote themselves more fully to supervising the legislation on working conditions and the protection of workers, making use, in particular, of the vehicles recently acquired by the labour administration. The Government is asked in its next report to provide information in this regard (number and distribution of vehicles made available to labour inspectors for travel to workplaces; measures taken to relieve labour inspectors from conciliation duties).

Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the labour inspectorate has access to reliable data such as the number, categories and geographical distribution of workplaces and establishments subject to inspection, and the number of workers employed in them, so that the central inspection authority can plan inspection activities (supervision, advice, information) that ensure protection of the most vulnerable categories, and to ensure that this information is included in the annual report required by Articles 20 and 21.

Articles 17 and 18. Follow-up action taken by the labour inspectorate in relation to breaches of the legislation covered by the Convention. The Committee notes with interest from the 2008 annual report the most frequent causes of the individual complaints submitted to the National Labour Directorate (claims for wages and accessories; notices of dismissal or resignation; overtime; paid leave; and dismissals), and the infringements noted in the course of inspections (concerning pay registers, employer registers and safety registers; labour contracts; wages; minimum wages; safety and hygiene; hours of work; staff representation; weekly rest; social contributions; and occupational medicine). It nonetheless notes that no information is provided as to the causes of the collective labour disputes, which affect the mining and hotel sectors in particular. According to information available at the ILO, the collective action affecting the mining sector is founded on an enterprise's violation of the provisions of a collective agreement on working conditions and the protection of certain rights at work. The miners' claims reportedly concern, in particular, the rate of output demanded of them, the length of the working day and the non-payment of overtime and other bonuses included in a collective agreement. It would appear that the enterprise dismissed en masse workers who were covered by this collective agreement only to re-employ them under new inferior contractual conditions. The Committee requests the Government to send to the Office detailed information on the role of the labour inspectorate in collective labour disputes, particularly in the mining sector, where these conflicts have affected 2,680 workers and consequently their families. Please also indicate whether, in the enterprises concerned by these disputes, the inspection staff noted any infringements of the labour legislation covered by the Convention and whether they recommended remedial measures or the application of penalties. Pointing out that according to Article 27 of the Convention, legal provisions consist not only of laws and regulations but of arbitration awards and collective agreements upon which the force of law is conferred and which are enforceable by inspectors, the Committee requests the Government to supplement the required information with relevant statistics and documents.

Articles 14 and 21. Notification of occupational accidents and cases of occupational diseases. The Committee notes that the annual reports for 2007 and 2008 contain information on reported industrial accidents and, in the case of the report for 2008, the inquiries conducted into these accidents. It observes, however, that no information at all is provided on cases of occupational disease, although information available at the ILO refers to pathologies linked to the handling and ingestion by workers of certain toxic substances in the course of extraction work in gold mines. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the preventive measures taken to reduce the number of accidents and mitigate their consequences in the mining and public works sectors, and to take measures to allow the diagnosis of cases of service-incurred diseases and the notification of such cases to the inspection services so that their most common causes can be identified and eliminated to the extent possible. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the measures taken for these purposes.

Mauritius

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1969)

Articles 5(a) and 21(e) of the Convention. Effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system. The Committee notes with interest, with reference to its 2007 general observation, that under section 26 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act, 2005, the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Labour, Industrial Relations and Employment, or any officer of the Ministry, may conduct a prosecution under the OSH Act before any court other than the Supreme Court. They are also empowered, by the Industrial Court Act, in respect of legal provisions relating to conditions of work, to institute both legal and criminal proceedings in the Industrial Court for, and in the name of a worker, through its prosecution unit. The Committee notes in particular with interest that the principal occupational safety and health officers are provided with prosecution courses by officers of the State Law Office and act as prosecutors for the Occupational Safety and Health Inspectorate. The Committee also notes with interest that the powers entrusted to labour inspectors to conduct prosecutions before the Industrial Court, as well as before other courts, give them the opportunity to facilitate the proceedings, particularly by suggesting the postponement of a decision on the case until the defect is remedied. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate any further measures taken to encourage cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the justice system, such as the organization of meetings, seminars or training sessions aimed at mutual awareness raising for common objectives, the exchange of information, the execution of decisions, etc., and on the impact of such cooperation on observance of the legal provisions pertaining to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work.

Montenegro

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes with interest the Government's first report and the Montenegrin labour inspection audit report which was carried out by the ILO in May–June 2009 in the context of a technical cooperation project on Enhancing Labour Inspection Effectiveness, funded by the Government of Norway.

The Committee also notes that the Union of Free Trade Unions of Montenegro (USSCG) formulated comments on the application of the Convention dated 2 September 2009, which were transmitted to the ILO by the Government on 9 September 2009.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the ILO with any comment it deems relevant on the points raised by the USSCG.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

New Zealand

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes the Government's report, as well as the comments of the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU), received on 28 August 2009, and the Government's reply received on 30 August 2009. It also notes the comments of Business New Zealand, received on 30 August 2009.

Articles 5(a) and 21(e) of the Convention. Effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system. Referring to its 2007 general observation, the Committee notes with interest that, according to the Labour Department's policy "Keeping Work Safe", the Department provides guidance to judges on sentencing according to its enforcement principles after a decision is taken to prosecute a case. However, as the Government has not provided any further information on measures aimed at promoting effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system, the Committee invites the Government to refer to paragraph 158 of its General Survey of 2006 and to its general observation of 2007, to take appropriate measures and to provide relevant information to the ILO.

Articles 10 and 16 of the Convention. Number of labour inspectors and inspections. The Committee notes the NZCTU's allegations concerning the reduction in the number of inspections of workplaces in general, and particularly of random inspections, in recent years. It refers to reports to the Australasian Workplace Relations Ministers' Council, which indicate a decrease in the number of active field inspectors in occupational health and safety from 1.2 inspectors per 10,000 employees in 2001 to 0.8 inspectors per 10,000 employees in 2004 and a decrease of inspections by health and safety inspectors from 26,405 in 1995 to less than 5,000 by 2005–06. Despite the slightly increased level of inspections since 2006, the NZCTU still considers them insufficient as an effective deterrent to violations of provisions respecting labour conditions. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's indication that the number of health and safety inspections has increased from 5,717 in 2005–06 to 8,196 visits in 2008–09 and that the number of safety and health inspectors has increased slightly from 166 in 2004 to 172 in 2008 (156 safety and health inspectors, 12 specialist positions and four professional leadership positions). The Committee also notes that the total number of labour inspectors responsible for the enforcement of general conditions of work is only 33, of whom five are assigned to the Recognized Seasonal Employer (RSE) scheme, which targets the horticulture/viticulture sector. The Committee requests the Government to take appropriate measures in the near future to ensure that the number of labour inspectors (general labour inspectors and safety and health labour inspectors) is sufficient for the effective enforcement of laws and regulations respecting labour conditions in industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection.

Articles 3, paragraphs 1 and 2, 5, paragraph 1, 6, 12, 15(c) and 17. Additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors. Mobilization of resources and incompatibility in the light of the objectives pursued. The Government's reply to a comment by the NZCTU indicates that labour inspectors and immigration officers carry out joint inspections. According to the Government, this is the case in the RSE programme, as well as in so-called crisis situations under the Decent Work Taskforce. The Government indicates that other areas for such cooperation are under consideration. The Committee refers in this regard to paragraphs 75 to 78 and 161 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection in which where it recalls that the principal function of labour inspection is not to enforce immigration law and that, given that the human and other resources available to inspection services are not unlimited, the volume of inspection activities devoted to conditions of work is likely to be diminished in relation to those concerning the legal status of workers under immigration law. It also emphasized that neither Convention No. 81 nor the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), contain provisions suggesting that any worker be excluded from the protection afforded by labour inspection on account of their irregular employment status. The Committee further emphasized that, to be compatible with the objective of labour inspection, the function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all workers. It therefore advocated caution in any collaboration between the labour inspectorate and the immigration authorities, since such objective can only be met if workers are convinced that the primary task of the inspectorate is to enforce the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and protection of workers. To ensure effective and efficient collaboration by all workers with labour inspectors, foreign nationals residing illegally in the country, who are among those who presumably suffer most from abusive conditions of work, should not fear the double penalty of losing their jobs and being expelled. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take measures to ensure that the powers of inspectors to enter workplaces liable to inspection are not misused for the implementation of joint operations to combat illegal immigration. It requests the Government to take measures to promote collaboration by the services responsible for combating illegal immigration with the labour inspection services, in such a manner that these services notify the labour inspectorate of cases of illegal immigrants apprehended outside a workplace who are engaged in a labour relationship covered by the Convention. Labour inspectors should accordingly be in a position to ensure their protection in accordance with the powers conferred upon them under the terms of the Convention and national labour legislation.

Articles 17 and 21(e). Consistency of decision-making by labour inspectors. Development of a coherent prosecution policy and statistics on enforcement actions. The Committee notes with interest that the Labour Department has completed a range of work to improve the consistency and transparency of enforcement (of health and safety legislation in particular). In this regard, it notes that the prosecution panel which was set up as a means of learning about consistency in decision-making and enforcement processes has completed its evaluation and a Labour Department enforcement policy, “Keeping Work Safe” (which can be accessed through the link: <http://www.dol.govt.nz/publications/research/keeping-work-safe/index.asp>), has been developed and was officially released in 2009 following public consultation in 2008. The policy explains the various enforcement tools available to the Department and provides specific guidance relating to enforcement. The policy is supported by the development of internal policy guidelines and various improvements in practice to assist staff in its application. The Committee welcomes the fact that the government policy provides for the publishing of details of cases where this is considered appropriate, which might have a dissuasive effect, and it asks the Government to provide details of cases in which the labour inspectorate has made use of this possibility.

Noting that the Labour Department adheres to the principle of the use of the minimum enforcement necessary, it requests the Government to ensure that, with a view to the credibility of the labour inspectorate and as requested by the NZCTU, labour inspectors do not fail to apply sanctions where appropriate with a view to ensuring that the system is dissuasive in practice.

Noting that, based on the evaluation of the prosecution panel, it is envisaged to develop new methods to improve the consistency of decision-making and investigation practice, the Committee asks the Government to keep the ILO informed in this regard and to provide copies of any relevant documents.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and content of the annual inspection report. The Committee notes that the annual report of the Labour Department (available on the government web site at www.dol.govt.nz) does not contain all the statistics needed by the Committee to make an evaluation of the operation of the labour inspection system. The Government is requested to ensure that an annual inspection report in accordance with the requirements of Article 21 is published and made available to the ILO.

Norway

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation on the following points:

Article 19 of the Convention. Notification of occupational accidents. The Committee notes that, to remedy the under-reporting of occupational accidents, the Labour Inspection Authority is taking measures to ensure both a higher percentage of reports and better quality of the data provided. Development of the system aims at better harmonization with statistics presented at the European level. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on all progress made in this respect and also on the notification of cases of occupational disease in agricultural undertakings. The Committee again asks the Government to provide a copy of the document relating to the mandatory quality management system, including occupational health and safety aspects, established by the Norwegian Agriculture Cooperation and client companies of agricultural undertakings.

Articles 26 and 27. Communication of an annual inspection report. The Committee requests the Government to send the annual report of the Labour Inspection Authority, which was not attached to its report as announced.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Pakistan

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. While noting the brief information received by the ILO on 1 November 2008, it is bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government’s report, received on 8 November 2007, contains no information responding to its previous observation or to the matters raised by the Pakistan Workers Federation (PWF) in its communications of 25 November 2006 and 2 May 2007, forwarded by the Office to the Government on 1 March 2007 and 19 June 2007, respectively.

According to the abovementioned organization, the Government of the two largest provinces of the country, namely Sindh and Punjab, have no system for supervising application of the legislation. On the contrary, they apply a policy prohibiting the inspection of an industry for one year following its establishment, thus endangering the workers in the event of breach of the occupational safety and health prescriptions applying to high-risk activities, although the State has prime responsibility for applying these prescriptions. In its communication received in May 2007, the above organization states that although the Government is required by Articles 11, 12 and 38 of the Constitution to abolish child, bonded and forced labour and to ensure, in accordance with Convention No. 81, safe working conditions by establishing independent labour inspection machinery, in the two abovementioned provinces, inspectors may not enter a workplace without prior permission from the employer or prior service of notice on the employer. This has made the labour laws redundant and allowed the employers to exploit the workers. Citing a draft labour inspection policy developed by the Government to restore independent labour inspection machinery in order to enforce fundamental rights of workers in letter and in spirit, the abovementioned organization requests that they be enforced by statutory laws.

The Committee notes in this connection that in March 2006, the Ministry of Labour, Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis published a document on labour inspection policy setting out new approaches to inspection. It also notes that a tripartite workshop organized jointly with the ILO on “Revitalizing Labour Inspections System in Punjab” was held on 22 and 23 August 2007 at Lahore. In the course of the workshop, various issues were addressed including the Government’s labour inspection policy and the implementation of the ILO/IPEC project. The Committee hopes that the Government will not fail to provide the information it requested in its observation of 2005 and to inform the ILO of its position on each of the points raised by the Pakistan Workers Federation, so that the Committee can examine them together with the report. The Government is also asked to specify how it gives effect in law and in practice, including in the area of child labour, to the new approach to labour inspection, the main objectives of which are, according to the Government’s representative in his speech to the workshop:

- flexible, transparent, fair and innovative approaches to labour inspection;
- extension of inspection activities in both formal and informal sectors;
- involvement of private sector in provision of labour inspection services;
- compliance with labour policies and laws;
- increased harmony and cooperation between workers and managers.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Paraguay

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes the Government’s report, the partial replies to the comments made in 2006 by the Ibero-American Confederation of Labour Inspectors (CIIT), the documents attached and the press release by the Ministry of Justice and Labour dated 15 October 2009, received later. It notes with interest the adoption of a Decent Work Country Programme under a tripartite agreement concluded between the Ministry of Justice and Labour, employers’ and workers’ organizations and the ILO, and draws the Government’s attention to the following points.

Articles 3, paragraphs 1(a) and 2, and 18 of the Convention. Low level of supervision; impunity of those committing offences. In reply to the criticism made in 2006 by the CIIT concerning the low level of supervision of the legislation relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers, the Government points out that the new administration, in office since the election of a new President in August 2008, has been able to bring to light numerous cases of reported violations which have not resulted in legal proceedings and bring them to the attention of the public prosecutor. Referring to the statistics attached to its report, the Government emphasizes that the number of charges and penalties imposed (where cases have been the subject of court decisions) has since increased and the amounts of the fines imposed have also increased substantially. The Committee notes this information with interest and requests the Government to provide, while awaiting the production of an annual report on inspection activities as provided for by Articles 20 and 21, statistical data on the violations reported by inspectors in the areas covered by the Convention, the legal action taken against employers at fault and the penalties imposed.

Recalling that, in accordance with Article 18, the penalties should be not only adequate but also effectively enforced, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the proportion of penalties imposed which are effectively enforced. It invites the Government to refer to Paragraph 9(c) of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), with regard to the manner in which statistics could usefully be presented.

Article 6. Precarious status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. In reply to the allegations made by the CIIT concerning the poor conditions of service and precarious status of labour inspectors, the Government acknowledges that the collective agreement concluded in 1998 by the Ministry of Justice and Labour and the Single Union of Officials and Employees of the Ministry of Justice and Labour (SUFEMJTPY) is not applied in practice. It indicates that 85 per cent of labour inspectors are permanent officials, while the remaining 15 per cent are new recruits or persons seconded from other ministerial departments or State institutions. With regard to the level of remuneration of inspectors, the Government provides information showing that it is very close to the legal minimum wage and is in no way commensurate with their level of training, the complexity of their duties or their length of service. The Government also indicates that an investigation conducted in respect of several inspectors following allegations of corruption resulted in six titular controllers/inspectors being charged and suspended until the end of the proceedings. It also resulted in more than half the number of titular inspectors being transferred to other posts within the same Ministry and the recruitment of nine new inspectors. These developments have resulted in a substantial reduction in the level of seniority of personnel. The Committee expresses concern at the situation described by the Government and urges it to take the necessary measures to enhance the conditions of service of labour inspectors and controllers (remuneration, career prospects, consideration of their socio-economic role) to protect them from the corrupt practices to which they are currently exposed on account of their vulnerability. The Committee requests the Government to refer in this respect to paragraphs 201 to 220 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection and to provide information in its next report on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard including, in particular, information allowing a comparison of the conditions of service of labour inspectors with those applicable to other officials carrying out activities with a comparable level of responsibility, such as inspectors in the ministry responsible for finance and tax.

Article 7, paragraph 3. Inadequacy of training for labour inspectors. The Committee notes three resolutions of the Deputy Minister of Labour and Social Security attached to the Government’s report concerning the various training courses which have been provided for officials, including labour inspectors, namely: a four-day training workshop in the context of the HIV/AIDS in the workplace project; a three-day workshop on work and health within the labour inspectorate; a day on labour law and AIDS in the context of the HIV/AIDS project; and an advanced computer course. The Government also announces other courses organized specifically for occupational safety and health inspectors, without providing further information. The Government adds that a labour inspection manual has been produced in cooperation with workers' organizations (CPT, CNT and CUT) and employers' organizations (UIP and FEPRINCO). The manual deals with: the objectives and principles of labour inspection and supervision; the characteristics of the labour inspection service and its fields of competence; the different types of inspection and the various areas covered; the responsibilities and duties of inspectors; the labour inspection procedure; the preparation of inspection reports and follow-up inspections; and finally the penalties applicable under the labour legislation. The relevant ILO Conventions and Recommendations, as well the national legislative provisions, laws and decrees, governing the activity of labour inspection and supervision are attached to the manual. Referring to the allegations made by the CIIT concerning the inadequacy of training for labour inspectors, the Committee notes that the training sessions mentioned by the Government are very short, concern relatively limited matters compared to the numerous and complex duties they have to carry out and were only attended by a small number of inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to improve the initial training provided to labour inspectors to enable them to carry out the duties set out in Article 3(1) of the Convention, as effectively as possible and to offer them subsequent training in the course of employment to update their knowledge and skills to enable them to adapt to technological or other developments in the world of work. The Committee would be grateful if it would provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to that end and on any difficulties encountered. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the above labour inspection manual.

Article 11. Inadequacy of material resources for inspectors. The Committee notes that the Government does not indicate any progress concerning the material resources made available to inspectors and does not reply to the concerns expressed by the CIIT in this regard. However, it notes that under the Decent Work Country Programme, labour inspection is one of the five priorities of labour policy. The Committee requests the Government to take measures, if necessary with external financial assistance, to improve the material and logistical resources available to labour inspectors with a view to the effective performance of their duties and to provide information in this respect.

Article 12, paragraph 1(a), and Article 15(c). Restrictions on the right of inspectors to enter workplaces liable to inspection: obstacles to compliance with the obligation of confidentiality relating to complaints. The Committee notes, according to the documents attached to the report, that labour inspectors are not empowered, as provided for under Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention, to enter freely any workplace liable to inspection and that all inspections seem to be subject to an order by the Deputy Minister of Labour. In its 2006 General Survey mentioned above, the Committee considered that the requirement for a formal authorization issued by a higher authority or by another competent authority to carry out an inspection constitutes a restriction on the principle of the inspectors' free initiative with regard to the inspection of workplaces (paragraph 265). In accordance with Article 12 of the Convention, inspectors should be empowered to carry out inspections subject only to their being provided with proper credentials. The inspector's professional identity card should suffice to meet the requirement of proper credentials referred to in the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring this practice to an end and to ensure that inspectors are empowered, in both law and practice, to enter freely at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection, as provided for by paragraph 1(a) of Article 12, and to provide information on these measures and their results.

Articles 15(c), 16, 19, 20 and 21. Planning of inspections: conditions required for compliance with the obligation to treat complaints as confidential and for the publication of an annual report on labour inspection activities, as a tool for the evaluation and improvement of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes with interest Decree No. 580 creating the Department for the Registration of Employment Relationships, regulating the Employee Employer Register and defining the penalties applicable in the case of violation, under which all employers are under the obligation to ensure registration in the Employment Register within 60 days from the start of an employment relationship (section 3). It also notes that the tripartite agreement on the Decent Work Country Programme provides for improved computerization of administrative registers and the granting of benefits to employers, particularly to SMEs, who enter into formal employment relationships. The Committee hopes that the Decent Work Country Programme will be launched quickly, as the existence of a workplace register is necessary to achieve the objectives of the Convention. Such registers are an essential tool for the application of Article 16 relating to the frequency and quality of inspections. They facilitate the planning and carrying out of routine inspections in the workplaces covered by the Convention and ensure that labour inspectors comply with the obligation to treat complaints as confidential with a view to preventing the employer or his representative from detecting any link whatsoever between the inspection and the likelihood of a complaint, identifying the person responsible for the complaint and taking reprisals against that person (Article 15(c)). The Government is requested to take measures, particularly through the implementation of the Decent Work Country Programme, to give full effect in both law and practice to the above provisions and to provide information on the progress made in that regard, in particular on the results of the implementation of Decree No. 580 in relation to the above objectives of the Convention.

Noting the continued failure to give effect to Articles 20 and 21 concerning the publication, transmission and content of the annual inspection report, as well as the lack of information on this matter, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the implementation of the necessary measures to that end, particularly in response to the efforts to computerize data as envisaged in the Decent Work Country Programme and apply the provisions of the inspection manual relating to the obligation of inspectors to submit periodical reports to the higher authority (Article 19).

Articles 5(a) and 21(e). Effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the judicial bodies. According to the press release of the Ministry of Justice and Labour, dated 15 October 2009, the creation is envisaged, in the context of the Decent Work Country Programme, of units specializing in labour law within the public prosecutors' offices in the towns of Pozo Colorado, Filadelfia and Villa Hayes, with a view to improving conditions of work in the Chaco area. Appropriate training should be provided to these public prosecutors to enable them to support the measures taken by labour inspectors in enforcing the law. The Committee takes due note of this information and requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of the follow-up to this project and to indicate any other measures taken to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the judicial bodies.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Poland

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 8 September 2009 as well as the Executive Summaries of the Chief Labour Inspector's Annual Reports for 2006, 2007 and 2008 and the Programme of Activities of the National Labour Inspectorate (NLI) for 2007. It also notes the Act of 13 April 2007 on the National Labour Inspectorate.

Article 3, paragraph 1(a) and (b), Articles 5 and 16 of the Convention. National actions and international cooperation in the field of labour inspection. The Committee notes the detailed information in the Programme of Activities of the NLI for 2007 concerning: (a) long-term actions for 2007–09 (definition of priority actions); (b) inspection-supervisory actions in the annual programme for 2007 (targeted inspection areas, assessment of legal acts); (c) training and the building of the IT system of NLI; and (d) cooperation with other bodies and institutions dealing with labour protection issues.

The Committee notes with interest in the annual reports the information on various preventive actions undertaken in 2008 cooperation with the social partners and other authorities and organizations, and particularly by campaigns on asbestos, the manual handling of loads, occupational risk assessment, on safe building and young workers starting their employment; as well as programmes on the observance of labour law in small companies and stress in the workplace and competitions aimed at promoting work safety, such as the all-Poland competition "Employer-organizer of safe work". The Committee notes in particular with interest the actions and preventive measures addressed at young people in 2008, such as:

- the actions in summer and winter camps for children in collaboration with Polish scout associations;
- the informal educational programme "Safety Culture", implemented in post-gymnasium schools;
- additional training sessions for a total of 6,528 pupils and students; and
- numerous events (fairs, career days) during which the NLI distributed specific publications for young people and provided legal advice to young people starting their employment.

The Committee further notes with interest that in 2008 a total of 16,500 persons attended training events organized by the NLI. Relevant information is provided via the mass media (newspapers, radio, TV), as well as through leaflets, brochures, posters and periodical publications prepared by the NLI, on the Government's web site (www.pip.gov.pl), and through the large amount of advice provided upon request by the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes with interest that the NLI maintains close cooperation with various international institutions, including in the area of the training of labour inspectors and the exchange of information, such as the Senior Labour Inspectors Committee (SLIC), the European Agency for Safety and Health at Work in Bilbao, the International Social Security Association (ISSA), the International Network of Training Institutes for Labour Relations (RIIFT) and other partners at the regional level. It further notes with interest the priority given by the labour inspectorate to activities aimed at protecting persons working in sectors and companies with the highest incidence of occupational hazards, such as in the construction sector.

Articles 8 and 10. Number of labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest that the labour inspection staff at the NLI increased from 2,423 employees in 2006 to 2,655 in 2007. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the proportion of women inspectors and specify whether they are entrusted with duties specifically targeting women workers in industrial and commercial workplaces.

Article 5(a) of the Convention. Specific cooperation between the labour inspection services and the judicial system and other public services or institutions. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report, already contained in its 2007 report that, since 1 July 2007, competent labour inspectors act as public prosecutors in certain cases of minor offences relating to general labour conditions and the legality of employment by lodging complaints with the competent courts (article 37 of the Act on the National Labour Inspectorate). It further notes that in 2008, out of the 1,114 notifications filed with the Office of the Public Prosecutor, 101 indictments were referred to the courts, with 11 persons being fined, two sentenced to suspended prison sentences and one being acquitted. Meetings to exchange information on current proceedings and to explain problems arising in practice are organized between the regional labour inspectorates and the Office of the Public Prosecutor. The Committee especially welcomes the meetings and instructions pertaining to the methodology for prosecuting crimes and securing evidence which are aimed at ensuring that prosecutions are brought to a conclusion. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the ILO informed of any further cooperation activities and their impact, including extracts from relevant judicial decisions.

Article 12, paragraph 1. Right of inspectors to enter workplaces freely. While noting the information provided by the Government on the content of the Act of 19 December 2008 amending the Act on freedom of economic activity and certain other Acts, in the absence of the text of the new Act, the Committee is not in a position to assess whether its provisions give effect to Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. Some of the explanations provided by the Government on the new Act appear to relate to inspection on issues other than the labour-related matters covered by the Convention. The Committee emphasizes once again that labour inspectors with proper credentials should be entitled to carry out supervisory functions without the need for further authorization. Moreover, it is important that there should be no prior notification of inspection visits to the employer or her or his representative, unless the labour inspector deems such notification necessary for the effectiveness of the control to be performed. The Committee asks the Government to provide the ILO with a copy of the Act of 19 December 2008. It also asks it once again to take the necessary steps to ensure that the legislation fully complies with this important provision of the Convention. It requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of any progress achieved in this regard and to communicate a copy of any relevant legal provisions.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1995)

Article 6, paragraph 1(a) and (b), of the Convention and Paragraph 14 of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Recommendation, 1969 (No. 133). Preventive activities by the labour inspectorate in agriculture. The Committee notes with interest that the labour inspectorate has again taken various measures during the reporting period aimed at reducing the incidence of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease (according to the information on the Government's web site, the incidence of accidents is two-and-a-half times higher in agriculture than in other sectors of the economy). These measures include an increase in the number of inspection visits to agricultural undertakings of 48 per cent compared to 2007 (including controls of a large number of agricultural machines and technical facilities, and demonstrations of the safe operation of tractors, machines, saws and chainsaws), as well as inspections in timber and other forestry management activities. The Committee also notes with interest the annual preventive and promotional campaign to improve safety and health conditions at work in individual farms. The National Labour Inspectorate (NLI) has also organized conferences, meetings, training and seminars for agricultural and forestry entrepreneurs, workers and occupational health and safety staff on relevant legal provisions, the hazards inherent to asbestos, transport activities, child labour in agricultural undertakings, and on musculoskeletal disorders and occupational diseases. The Committee notes with satisfaction the organization of other kinds of preventive activities, such as: (1) field shows and training courses in safe cutting methods in the event of specific threats (trees brought down by storms or snowfalls) in some forest district offices; (2) education in rural areas targeting children (including talks to over 32,000 children, with the help of schoolteachers) as well as adults, on the most frequent work-related hazards, accompanied by around 500 competitions and other interactive activities (Olympic, knowledge and artistic contests) for almost 53,000 rural children and young people, as well as actions in summer and winter camps for children, as indicated under Convention No. 81; (3) the organization of inspection stands and consultation points on technical safety at work during mass rural events, such as machine shows and exhibitions; (4) the publication and distribution of brochures, guidebooks and leaflets; and (5) the provision of information to the public through newspapers, radio and television. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on any further labour inspection actions and initiatives for the same purpose in agriculture, including forestry.

Article 16, paragraph 1. Right of inspectors to enter agricultural undertakings freely. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that, according to an accepted interpretation of the Act on the National Labour Inspectorate of 13 April 2007, inspection authorities in agricultural and forestry undertakings do not require authorizations, even though section 24 of the Act envisages such authorization. The Committee would like to refer the Government to its related comment under Article 12(1) of Convention No. 81 and asks the Government to ensure that the legislation is brought into line with the relevant provisions of both Conventions with regard to the free access of labour inspectors to workplaces liable to inspection with a view to avoiding differences in inspection procedures in practice.

Romania

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in July 2009, the attached legislation, and also the comments from the National Trade Union Confederation (CNS "Cartel ALFA"), received on 29 June 2009 and sent to the Government on 24 July 2009. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to those comments and its indication that it will provide further information in due course.

Article 5 of the Convention. Inter-institutional cooperation and collaboration with employers and workers. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the cooperation protocols concluded during the reporting period between the labour inspectorate or territorial labour inspection services and other public or private bodies or institutions, and with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the forms and modes of cooperation concerned, especially with regard to the protocols concluded with the Ministry of Justice and the National Trade Registry, the gendarmerie, the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Administrative Reforms and the Immigration Office, or to provide copies of these protocols.

International cooperation in the field of labour inspection. The Committee requests the Government to supply details (content, impact and period of validity) of the cooperation agreements concluded with the inspection authorities of Hungary, Portugal and Spain.

Articles 7, 8, 10 and 11. Reinforcement of labour inspection staff and improvement of their conditions of work. The Committee notes the detailed information concerning the geographical distribution of inspection staff by sex, grade and speciality, and also the reinforcement of their numbers and qualifications during the 2007–08 period. It also notes the information concerning improvements in their conditions of work through the provision to labour inspectors of new offices, equipment and vehicles for the effective performance of their duties. The Committee further notes that between 2002 and 2008, men and women inspectors received training in different forms and in different areas (occupational safety and health, industrial relations, legislation, public relations, public service management and communication, etc.). It notes with particular interest the reference to a "train the trainers" programme for 257 inspectors in 2007 and 225 in 2008 as part of the PHARE project (for strengthening labour inspection capacities) aimed at monitoring the application of the new legislation transposing the acquis communautaires in the area of international relations, in partnership with the labour and social security inspectorate of Spain. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would supply information on the impact of these training activities on the operation of the labour inspectorate in practice and on its results.

Article 6. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, the draft regulations for labour inspectors, the preparation of which was announced by the Government at the June 2005 session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, and also in the Government's report for 2005, have still not been adopted. The Government does not provide an explanation with regard to this postponement. However, according to CNS "Cartel ALFA", under sections 11 and 12 of Emergency Ordinance No. 37/2009, adopted on 22 April 2009, the employment relationship of civil servants and other contractual public employees has been suspended with immediate effect. Among the various civil servants employed in a variety of state institutions, labour inspectors are affected by this Ordinance. A number of these inspectors, including in the higher category, who enjoy professional recognition in the field and possess the requisite level of competence and seniority, have reportedly already been transferred and replaced on the basis of political criteria and without any selection based on an objective appraisal of the requisite competencies, by persons belonging to the political class in power. The trade union considers that this Ordinance breaches the provisions of the national Constitution (article 20(2) of which establishes the supremacy of international treaties in the hierarchy of national standards); of Act No. 188/1999 issuing the civil service regulations, as amended, published in Official Journal No. 365 of 29 May 2007 (the trade union claims that section 19 affirms the status of labour inspectors as civil servants and their independence in relation to any change of government and any undue external influence). It is also in breach of the present Convention, Article 6 of which provides that the inspection staff shall be composed of public officials whose status and conditions of service are such that they are assured of stability of employment and are independent of changes of government and of improper external influences. In a letter received on 22 October 2009 relating to the union's comments, the Government indicates that the implementation of the provisions of Emergency Ordinance No. 37/2009 has not been detrimental to the stability or independence of public servants occupying managerial posts. In this regard, it points out that, during the notice period, in accordance with section 99 of Act No. 188/1999, the Ministry of Labour, Family Affairs and Social Protection offered to officials in managerial positions whose positions had been closed other vacant posts in the civil service, taking into account their seniority and professional qualifications. Appointments thus made were the result of free consent given in writing by the officials to the options available. The Government states that, firstly, these transfers from managerial to executive posts do not signify any denial of the professionalism of the persons concerned and, secondly, many of them were appointed to managerial posts created pursuant to the provisions of Emergency Ordinance No. 37/2009. The Government also provides details of the conditions required for access to posts under management contracts concluded with the principal credit controller for a period not exceeding four years. With regard to labour inspectors, the Government states that they were recruited in accordance with Act No. 188/1999, as amended, issuing the civil service regulations, and Government Decision No. 611/2008 concerning the approval of standards relating to career development and structures for civil servants.

However, it explains that the Emergency Ordinance concerned was adopted with a view to reducing public expenditure and tackling budget deficit problems, including through the definition of performance criteria for the organization and coordination of certain public authorities and institutions. The Government affirms that, in applying the provisions of the Emergency Ordinance, it was not a question of diminishing the professional status of the labour inspectorate, but rather to improve the management and efficiency of the work of the public institutions while reducing budgetary expenditure, all of this being in the public interest. The Government states that further information on any new developments will be sent in due course. The Committee wishes to emphasize the vital importance of providing labour inspectors, in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention, with stability of employment, and also the need to ensure that, in accordance with Article 7, candidates for the labour inspection service are recruited on the basis of their qualifications for the performance of their duties and that they are duly trained to this end. The Committee requests the Government to provide clarifications on any legislative measures affecting the status of labour inspectors, together with copies of any relevant text, and also on the practical consequences of these measures for the careers of labour inspectors who participated in training between 2002 and 2009 and who were in active service at the time that Emergency Ordinance No. 37/2009 was promulgated. It requests the Government to take all the necessary steps to ensure that any new legal provision or practical measure implemented with regard to the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors does not obstruct the full application of Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention, and to keep the ILO duly informed in this respect.

Articles 16, 17 and 18. Priorities for inspection visits and action taken further to reported infringements. The Committee notes with interest that, according to the information supplied by the Government, inspections are carried out on the basis of: an annual or monthly programme approved by the chief labour inspector and determined according to criteria such as the number of workers and the level of risk of workplaces; statistical trends relating to industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease; and the number of labour inspectors and material resources available. Further to its previous comments, the Committee also notes once again a significant increase in the number of penalties imposed on persons responsible for infringements, and observes in particular that this increase is more substantial for infringements of the legal provisions relating to industrial relations than for those in the area of occupational safety and health, whereas the overall number of corresponding penalties does not display any great difference. The number of stoppages of work in enterprises and stoppages in the operation of certain installations ordered by the labour inspectorate also increased considerably between 2007 and 2008. With reference to its previous comments asking the Government to provide further information with regard to the increase in the number of penalties and also to indicate whether this was due to new enforcement methods, better training of inspectors or a proliferation of infringements, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided any clarification and therefore requests it to do so and also to explain the reason for the considerable increase in stoppages of work or plant operations ordered by labour inspectors.

The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on court decisions issued during the next reporting period further to prosecutions instituted on the initiative of the labour inspectorate, stating the areas of legislation to which they refer and the branches of activity concerned.

Articles 20 and 21. Communication of the annual labour inspection report. The Committee notes that the annual labour inspection report for 2007 was not attached to the Government's report, contrary to what the Government indicated. The Committee requests the Government to send this report to the ILO and ensure that future annual reports are sent within the prescribed deadlines.

Russian Federation

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the Government's reports received in October 2008 and September 2009 containing a partial reply to its previous comments. In order to assess more accurately the effect given to the Convention in law and in practice, it requests the Government to supplement the information provided on the following points.

Legislation. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the Ministry of Labour and Social Development Orders Nos 1035 of 9 September 1999, 73 of 24 October 2002, 909-K and 378-RK of 29 October 1999, 143 of 9 July 2002 and Act No. 53-FZ of 20 May 2002 and to provide in its report information on the substance of the provisions of each of these texts. Furthermore, the Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the Statute of the Federal Labour and Employment Service, approved by the Ordinance of the Government of the Russian Federation of 30 June 2004, No. 324, which has still not been received by the ILO.

The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would supply a copy of any document of a legislative, regulatory or administrative nature relating to the matters covered by the Convention.

Articles 8 and 10 of the Convention. Composition and geographical distribution of the labour inspection staff. Referring to its previous direct request, the Committee once again asks the Government to indicate the proportion of women in the labour inspection staff at all levels of responsibility and to indicate, where appropriate, the special tasks assigned to men and women inspectors, respectively, as well as the geographical distribution of labour inspectors, the number of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of persons employed therein.

Articles 16 and 19. Coverage, frequency and thoroughness of inspections. In the absence of any report from the Federal Labour Inspectorate, the Government is asked to provide any available statistics and other data concerning the inspection of workplaces throughout the country (number, categories of private and publicly managed enterprises, activities exercised and the number of workers occupied therein, as well as types and frequency of inspections).

The Committee once again requests the Government to provide copies of inspection reports for publicly managed organizations and private establishments.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the ILO of the annual report on labour inspection activities. The Committee notes that the report of the Federal Labour Inspectorate for 2007, indicated as being attached to the Government's report for 2008, has not been received by the ILO. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the above report, together with any subsequent annual reports, and if it would inform the ILO of the manner in which such reports are published.

Labour inspection activities relating to child labour. With reference to its 2007 observation under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Committee would be grateful if the Government would take appropriate measures to ensure that the annual report of the Federal Labour Inspectorate contains statistics on activities to enforce the legal provisions pertaining to child labour in industrial and commercial workplaces. It also requests the Government to indicate the measures undertaken to this effect, any difficulties encountered and the progress achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1998)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Reporting obligations on the activities of the labour inspection services. The Committee notes with interest the indication in reply to its request of 2008 that the Department of Labour is in the process of establishing a labour market information system with technical assistance provided by the ILO Subregional Office in Port-of-Spain. According to the Government, as of 31 July 2009, all preliminary and follow-up consultations with key stakeholders, including employers' and workers' representatives, had already been concluded and all existing forms had been revised and new forms and electronic databases created. Moreover, the training of staff in the use and operation of the new system was due to have been completed by the end of September 2009 and the system is expected to be functional by 31 July 2010. The Government is of the view that, once operational, the system will significantly assist the Department of Labour in generating in an efficient and timely manner a wide range of labour market statistics including those on labour inspection. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the new system will allow the labour inspection central authority to publish and communicate to the ILO in the very near future and on an annual basis a report on the work of the services placed under its supervision and control, and that the report contains the information indicated in points (a)–(g) of Article 21. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate any progress made and any difficulties encountered.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make use of the guidance provided in Paragraph 9 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81) to this end.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sao Tome and Principe

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It therefore is bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 14 of the Convention. Information on industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes the Government's commitment, in response to its previous comments, to making every possible effort to ensure that the labour inspectorate is informed of industrial accidents and occupational diseases. It asks the Government to provide in its next report information on the procedures introduced and the specific measures taken to this effect.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Inspection activity reports. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on measures taken to ensure the publication and communication to the ILO of an annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate. It therefore asks the Government to take, in the very near future and with ILO technical assistance if necessary, measures to ensure that the central inspection authority fulfils its obligations under Articles 20 and 21, on the basis of regular inspection reports submitted to it, in accordance with Article 19, by the services under its control. The Committee asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this respect and to provide in its next report any available information on inspection visits carried out during the period covered and on the results of these visits (including, in particular, details of the number and categories of inspected establishments, the contraventions reported, the measures prescribed, and the penalties imposed and effectively enforced).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Sweden

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes the Government's reports received on 1 November 2007 and 2 August 2009. It also notes with interest the three brochures annexed to the 2007 report on: safety instructions for clearing forests damaged by storms ("Minimum requirements for salvage harvesting in wind-thrown forests"); the use of chemical substances on unsalvaged forest and existing stands; and the use of chemical substances for the planting and raising of new trees, all published by the Swedish Work Environment Authority (WEA).

Articles 6, paragraph 1(b), 5, paragraph 1(a), and 12 of the Convention. Inter-institutional cooperation for occupational safety and health in agriculture, including for independent farmers. The Committee notes with satisfaction the various measures taken by the WEA, in constant coordination with other national authorities and the social partners to prevent work injuries and accidents. According to the Government, information is distributed through brochures (such as the brochure "ADI 629-Working safely with animals"), a specific site on agriculture on the WEA's web page (<http://www.av.se/teman/jordochskog/>), as well as through media activities and the participation of the WEA in trade union meetings. The WEA also provides individual advice on matters such as simple systems of risk assessment which can easily be applied by individual farmers, for example in enterprises with few or no employees, as well as supplying contact information to the respective enterprises on social partners with expertise on specific issues. In addition, the Government refers to the launching of a joint supervisory initiative in 2009 aimed at changing farmers' attitudes to hazards in their work environment. The initiative will continue for three years and will focus on systematic work environment management, machinery, the hazards of firewood production, personal protective equipment and work with animals. It will include undertakings both with and without employees, as most fatal accidents occur in undertakings that do not have employees.

Articles 6, paragraph 1(a) and (b), and 9, paragraph 3. Specific preventive measures taken after the storms "Gudrun" (2005) and "Per" (2007), including special training for labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest the short- and long-term measures carried out by the WEA in reaction to the consequences of the above storms. In the short term, the districts worst affected by the storm were allowed to coordinate functions in the area of supervision, including calling in work environment inspectors from all over Sweden to join the work. In addition, a specialist conference for 24 inspectors was organized to cope with the special situation in order to improve their skills for the surveillance of the areas hit by the storm. With regard to long-term measures, the WEA supplied information through the above brochures on special work risks following the storm, appropriate personal protective equipment and suitable working methods to cope with risks arising in chainsaw work for emergency salvage harvesting, and the spreading of strong chemical pesticides to prevent insect attacks in unsalvaged forests and existing stands, as well as pesticides to facilitate planting in cleared areas. In addition, labour suppliers, plant nurseries and major forestry enterprises have been targeted with supervisory measures.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide details of the other activities to which it refers in its report, namely: (1) media activities; (2) the system of risk assessment; and (3) the joint supervisory initiative in 2009 aimed at changing farmers' attitudes to hazards in their work environment.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Switzerland

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1949)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Publication and content of the annual report on labour inspection activities. The Committee notes with satisfaction the publication of the annual report of the labour inspectorate for the period 2001–08 on the web site of the State Secretariat for Economic Affairs (SECO) (see www.seco.admin.ch/dokumentation/publikation/00008/00022/01737/index-htm1?lang=fr) and the annual report on occupational safety and health for the same period on the web site of the Federal Coordination Commission of Occupational Safety (CFST) (see www.ekas.admin.ch/index-fr.php?frameset=14). It notes in particular the conformity with the provisions of Article 20 of the Convention with regard to the date of publication of the report and the exhaustive nature of the information included in these reports on the matters referred to in Article 21. Furthermore, the maintenance on the above web sites of the reports relating to several years is useful in that it enables an analysis of developments in activities and the results achieved in relation to the measures implemented.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Syrian Arab Republic

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

Content of the information sent in response to the Committee's comments. Legal aspects and practical scope. While noting the information on the process under way to adopt a new Labour Code concerning health supervision in enterprises, and certain information on the policy to prevent discrimination, prohibit human trafficking and protect domestic workers, the Committee notes that the Government has not replied to its previous comments, particularly those on the effect given in law and in practice to the provisions of the Convention.

It further notes that despite the Government's stated intention, no annual inspection report has reached the Office. It points out that this is an obligation deriving not only from Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention, but also from section 41 of the regulations governing the bodies competent for health and safety. Furthermore, as the Government observes, labour inspection is high on the list of priorities in the Decent Work Country Programme agreed with the social partners in 2008 and publication of an inspection report has been recognized as essential, as the Committee has pointed out consistently since 2001.

The Committee is therefore bound to ask the Government in its next report to provide more than merely general or theoretical information on the manner in which effect is given to the Convention. It reiterates its previous request for the Government to provide copies of all the implementing texts adopted in the areas covered by the Convention, particularly regarding the establishment and operation in practice of occupational safety and health committees, and to send information to the Office, including relevant figures, on the impact of these measures in terms of the inspections carried out and trends in the occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease recorded.

Noting that the Government's report does not reply to the Committee's request for specific information on the role attributed to labour inspectors in the implementation of projects for international cooperation in the area of labour migration, and says nothing of the role they are called on to play in the context of the widespread shift towards enterprise privatization, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide this information together with statistics and any other relevant documentation.

The Committee also once again asks the Government to ensure, in accordance with Article 20, that an annual report on the work of the inspectorate containing the information requested under Article 21(a)–(g) is actually published by the central inspection authority and that a copy is sent to the ILO as soon as it is published. Compliance with this obligation is doubly essential: first, for the Committee and the other ILO supervisory bodies in performing their functions with respect to this Convention; and, secondly, for the need for the central labour inspection authority, other competent authorities and the social partners to be informed about the work of the labour inspectorate in law and in practice, with a view to contributing to its improvement.

Lastly, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the ILO informed of any developments in the functioning of the labour inspectorate in the context of implementation of the Decent Work Country Programme.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1972)

Principal reasons for the lack of a satisfactory inspection system in agriculture and the place of labour inspection in the objectives of the Decent Work Programme (2008–10). The Committee notes that, despite the adoption of relevant texts for the development of labour inspection in agriculture, numerous obstacles persist, namely:

- the insufficient number of inspectors;
- the severe lack of specific training activities designed to update the skills of labour inspectors, particularly with regard to occupational safety and health;
- the derisory financial resources in relation to the size of the agricultural sector;
- the lack of compensation for inspectors for the conditions of work in a particularly difficult sector;
- the lack of job security for inspectors;
- the lack of experience of inspectors, the very limited awareness of agricultural workers and employers and the lack of knowledge concerning the labour legislation.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the report on the application of the Convention has been forwarded to several bodies and institutions, such as the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Industry, the Confederation of Trade Unions and the Damascus Chamber of Industry. It notes, however, that the report was not sent to the Ministry of Finance, the Ministry responsible for the Public Service and Domestic Affairs, the Ministry of Education or the Ministry of Justice, even though the matters raised in the report concern issues falling within the remit of each of these bodies and the bodies concerned could contribute to strengthening the labour inspectorate. The matters raised relate to the allocation of the financial resources necessary for its operation, the updating of the training of labour inspectors as public servants, the phenomenon of child labour and the support of the police and judicial bodies in labour inspection activities.

The Committee requests the Government to ensure that labour inspection, which has been made a national priority under the Decent Work Programme established for the country, is gradually allocated the necessary financial resources to strengthen the number and qualifications of inspectors assigned to the agricultural sector. It draws the Government's attention in particular to the need to ensure that the conditions of service of inspectors are such that they are assured of stability of employment, especially through appropriate career prospects, and requests it to provide information in its next report on any progress made to that end in both law and practice and on any difficulties encountered.

The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted in the context of the implementation of the Decent Work Programme with regard to the establishment of a labour inspection system operating effectively in agriculture, including appropriate cooperation mechanisms involving the other bodies and institutions concerned, and the social partners.

Articles 26 and 27 of the Convention. Annual report on inspection activities. Noting the Government's assessment that 24 labour inspectors is a derisory number in relation to the size of the agricultural sector, the Committee notes the lack of any annual report which would allow an accurate assessment of the nature and volume of activities carried out by these inspectors. Furthermore, the Government's brief indication of a single judicial body in relation to the provisions of the Convention, without specifying its purpose, is not sufficient to allow an assessment of the impact of the legal provisions allocating educational duties to labour inspectors to encourage employers to comply with the legislation on conditions of work and duties relating to the imposition of penalties in the case of resistance on the part of employers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide a copy of the annual report on labour inspection in agricultural undertakings, which has not been sent to the Office, as well as copies of the subsequent annual reports prepared during the period covered by the Government's next report.

Hoping that information on the content of the decisions handed down by the courts following the proceedings initiated by the labour inspectorate in agriculture will be included in the annual report, the Committee nonetheless requests the Government to provide the information available in this regard in its next report.

United Republic of Tanzania

Tanganyika

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

1. Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Labour inspection system. The Committee notes the adoption of the 2003 Occupational Health and Safety Act, which establishes, among other things, the powers, rights and obligations of the inspectors responsible for enforcing the Act (sections 5 to 11), and the adoption of the 2004 Labour Institutions Act, Part VI (sections 43 to 49) of which is devoted to labour administration and the labour inspectorate which is responsible for enforcing labour legislation.

2. Articles 10, 20 and 21. Staff of labour inspection services and annual report on their work. The Committee notes that the number of labour officers rose from 74 in 2006 to 87 in 2007, that they cover the whole country and, according to the Government, act as labour inspectors. It further notes that the 2004 Act provides that "There shall be as many labour officers as are necessary to administer and enforce the labour laws" (section 43(4)). The Committee points out that for this purpose there should be a regular update of the total number of workplaces liable to inspection by these officials and by inspectors responsible for occupational health and safety, and of the number of workers employed in them. The Committee further points out that the information to be included in the annual report on the work of the inspection services, pursuant to Article 21 of the Convention, should make it possible to gain a general understanding of how the system works, to analyse obstacles and constraints, to identify priority needs and to determine the budgetary allocations needed to meet them. The Committee again expresses the hope that the Government will be in a position in the near future to publish such a report, with technical assistance from the ILO if necessary, and to send a copy of it.

3. Article 12, paragraph 1(a). Right of inspectors to enter workplaces freely. Timing of inspection visits. The 2004 Labour Institutions Act provides that a labour officer may, with the prescribed certificate of authorization, "at any reasonable time" enter any premises (section 45(1)(a)). The Committee refers to its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection (paragraphs 268–271), and points out that the purpose of the abovementioned provisions of the Convention, which provide that inspectors "shall be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection" is to allow inspectors to carry out inspections where necessary and possible in order to ensure the protection of workers and in accordance with the technical requirements of inspection. Inspectors must also have the authority to decide when inspection of the workplace is appropriate. Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to specify in its next report the practical scope of the expression "at any reasonable time" used in the 2004 Labour Institutions Act and to indicate how it is ensured that it is the labour officer who decides whether the time of the visit is reasonable.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Turkey

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1951)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report received by the Office on 31 October 2007 in reply to its previous comments as well as the observations of the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) provided subsequently by the Government.

Articles 2 and 23 of the Convention. Developments in the scope of labour inspection. In its 2006 observation, the Committee requested the Government to continue providing information on: (i) the progress achieved in extending the coverage of the labour inspection system so as to also protect workers engaged in establishments in the informal sector; and (ii) the practice of inspection by geographical area and by sector. It observes that the Government has not provided the information requested, but that the TISK continues to deplore the absence of records of labour inspections and updated statistics. The employers' organization considers that it is not possible to target labour inspection on unregistered enterprises, as they have not been identified. The Government is requested once again to provide information on the measures adopted to extend the scope of the labour inspection system to include establishments in the informal economy, with an indication of the manner in which the identification of these establishments is ensured or envisaged. It is requested to keep the Office informed of any difficulties encountered and, where appropriate, the measures envisaged or adopted to overcome them.

Articles 4 and 5(a). Placement of labour inspection under the supervision and control of a central authority and effective cooperation between the various services entrusted with labour inspection. According to the TISK, the transfer of duties from the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to other ministries (Ministry of Health, Ministry of Defence, Ministry of Energy and Natural Resources) and to municipalities constitutes an obstacle to the necessary coordination of labour inspection activities. In the view of the TISK, the dispersion of responsibilities jeopardizes the integrity of inspection and does not allow the necessary coordination under the authority of a central body, as envisaged in the project for intervention against illegal employment prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. The TISK adds that, although section 95(2) of the Labour Law establishes the requirement to inform the responsible regional authorities of the results of inspections, this requirement is not often met, with the result that neither inspection records nor the relevant statistics are up to date. The TISK calls for the Government to publish the results of the remedial measures adopted for this purpose.

The Committee observes that neither the Government's report received in 2007, nor the general report of the labour inspection for 2005 refers to any restructuring of the labour inspection system. The Committee would be grateful in this respect if the Government would provide clarifications, describe the measures referred to by the TISK to improve the exchange of information between inspection services and supply detailed information on their implementation in practice and on their impact on the compilation of statistics.

With reference to its 2007 general observation, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measure implemented to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the judiciary with a view to the achievement of the economic and social objectives of the labour inspection services.

Article 5(b). Collaboration between the labour inspection services and employers and workers. The Committee notes that, according to the Government the Labour Inspection Council of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security has undertaken 17 tripartite projects since 2004 covering both occupational safety and health, and the application of general labour legislation. The Government indicates that, during the implementation of an inspection project, the social partners are informed and consulted concerning professional developments. Furthermore, reports on the results of inspection projects are published and made available to the social partners concerned. The Committee however notes that the Government does not provide sufficient details in this respect. It would be grateful if the Government would indicate the purpose, frequency and arrangements for this tripartite collaboration and provide information on its impact in terms of the objectives of labour inspection.

Article 3, paragraph 1(a) and (b), and Articles 10, 11 and 16. Human and logistical resources of the labour inspectorate necessary for the discharge of its duties. In its previous comment, the Committee referred to the comments of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) and requested the Government to indicate the manner in which it envisaged strengthening the staff, transport facilities and equipment necessary for the effective discharge of inspection functions. The Government announces the allocation of financial resources for the recruitment of inspectors. It adds that labour inspectors have access at all times to all existing transport facilities for their professional travel, and that a budget is envisaged and reserved for the purchase of portable computers. The Committee requests the Government to indicate developments in staff numbers and prospects in this respect, as well as changes in equipment, resources and transport facilities made available to labour inspectors during the period covered by the next report.

Article 3, paragraph 1(a) and (b), and Articles 17 and 18. Labour inspection activities. Balance between the function of inspection, on the one hand, and technical advice and information, on the other. The Committee notes that labour inspectors through inspections at the workplace raised 29,245,439.43 Turkish New Lira (TRY) in 2005 and TRY30,438,285.53 in 2007 in fines. Furthermore, they referred 7,843 cases of violations to the Public Prosecutor in 2005 and 5,327 cases in 2006. The TISK considers that the inspection system is principally repressive, with labour inspectors hardly discharging their preventive functions, namely the provision of information and technical advice. It also regrets that inspectors do not always have the necessary technical equipment for their investigations and that their reports of violations are drawn up rapidly and without a scientific basis, which can have serious consequences for employers. It observes that appeals against the decisions of labour inspectors are most frequently set aside by the courts, which are overworked, even though section 17 of Labour Law No. 4857 provides for the possibility to produce proof to the contrary. The TISK considers that labour inspectors should therefore only use their powers of punishment with care and attention. In its view, practices should be adopted which reward employers that comply with the law and limit intervention by the labour inspectorate in enterprises covered by a collective agreement to cases in which a complaint has been made.

The Committee notes, from the information provided by the Government, that Law No. 4817 affords any person concerned a right to information and that advice is provided upon request either by the Labour Inspection Council or its regional departments, and also by the Communication Unit of the Office of the Prime Minister (BİMER). Information on the application of labour legislation and labour disputes is provided to the social partners through a telephone system "Allo labour". However, the TISK considers that the system is inadequate and that it should be possible to provide information without a request being made, in a proactive manner. While noting the Government's indications concerning the various information services available, the Committee draws the Government's attention to paragraph 86 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection on this subject. In this paragraph, it refers to Paragraph 14 of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Recommendation, 1969 (No. 133), which provides examples of measures for the promotion of continued education intended to inform the social partners of the applicable legal provisions and the need to apply them strictly, as well as the dangers to the life or health of persons and the most appropriate means of avoiding them (clause 1) and appropriate means of workers' education (clause 2). The Committee encourages the Government to take inspiration from this guidance to develop educational approaches and tools intended to give the best possible effect to Article 3, paragraph 1(b), of the Convention and asks it to inform the ILO of any progress achieved in this respect.

Improvement of the labour inspection system in the field of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes the information provided by the TISK concerning the development of an inspection policy based on prioritizing sectors and establishments that are at risk and involving the regular redefinition of the relevant criteria with a view to improving the supervisory techniques and methods of labour inspectors, their training and their capacity to issue appropriate recommendations. The Government is requested to provide information on the impact of this policy on the occupational safety and health situation in the industrial and commercial workplaces covered by the Convention, including the level of application of the relevant legislation and the number of accidents and cases of diseases that are occupational in origin. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would also provide data on the prosecutions made against employers which are at fault or in violation in the above fields and on the penalties imposed during the period covered by the next report.

Labour inspection and child labour. With reference to its comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), the Committee notes the information provided by the TISK reporting the conclusion between the TISK and the TÜRK-İS on 12 December 2005 of a collaboration agreement to contribute to the implementation of the social collaboration project to combat child labour and the time-bound policies and programmes in the province of Adana. This collaboration takes the form of the establishment of an office responsible for the education of children, their families and employers, and for the provision of appropriate training in several regions and for various sectors. This structure followed the opening by the TISK of a working children's bureau, which has been operational since April 1999 in three industrial sites. The joint office is reported to have begun providing services to seasonal child workers and street children, as well as those engaged in furniture production. The TISK suggests that this model should be extended to industrial regions of the organized economy and to smaller industrial sites. The objective is to provide health, education and training services to child workers and advice to adult workers and employers throughout the country. According to the TISK, as 87 per cent of children who work do so in small-scale workplaces (one to nine workers), measures should be designed to combat illegal employment in those enterprises.

Recalling that, in accordance with Article 3(1)(a) of the Convention, legal provisions relating to conditions of work include those respecting the employment of children and young persons, and with reference to its 1999 general observation on this issue, the Committee hopes that the Government will rapidly take the necessary measures at the various levels of social policy with a view to bringing an end, with the active collaboration of the labour inspectorate, to the illegal employment of these categories of particularly vulnerable workers, while at the same time guaranteeing their integration or reintegration into school. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on these measures and on the specific role attributed to labour inspectors in this area by the projects implemented in the context of cooperation with the ILO/IPEC programme. It would also be grateful if it would provide relevant statistics on the ten-year project to combat child labour, 2005–15, referred to in its report.

Article 6. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. The Committee notes, from the information provided by the TISK, that draft conditions of service for the public service, including a draft text of the specific conditions of service of labour inspectors, have still not been adopted and that labour inspectors are accordingly still covered by a 1979 text. The Government is asked to provide clarifications on this matter and to supply a copy, if possible in one of the working languages of the ILO, of any text that is in force determining the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors.

Article 7. Aptitude of labour inspectors and specific training for the discharge of certain functions. According to the TISK, between June 2005 and July 2007 significant progress was achieved in reforming social security schemes. However, the organization regrets that certain of the government services entrusted with responsibility for supervising the legislation which entered into force in May 2006, in contrast with labour inspectors who are duly trained for this purpose, often lack the necessary technical competence and human qualities indispensable for the discharge of their duties. The Government indicates in this respect that in 2006 labour inspectors participated in training seminars for an accumulated duration of 3,914 hours, particularly in the fields of occupational safety and health, personal protective equipment and labour legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide clarifications on the viewpoint expressed by the TISK regarding the sharing of responsibilities for the supervision of social security legislation and to supply information on the content and regularity of the training provided to inspectors during their employment, and on the number of participants concerned in each case.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Uganda

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes that the Government has not sent the report requested by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards concerning the measures taken to follow up its conclusions adopted at its session in May–June 2008. However, it notes the information received by the ILO on 11 November 2008 concerning the adoption in 2006 of Employment Act No. 6 and Occupational Safety and Health Act No. 9, and the views expressed by the Central Organization of Free Trade Unions (COFTU) and the National Organization of Trade Unions in Uganda (NOTU) at a tripartite workshop on the application of the Convention. The Committee also notes that, as recommended by the Conference Committee in 2001, 2003 and 2008, an ILO technical assistance mission was received from 13 to 17 July 2009 and that, together with the Government and the social partners and various public bodies, it examined the reasons for the deterioration in the labour inspection system since the 1990s, with a view to remedying it.

Need to establish a labour inspection system that meets the requirements of the Convention

The ILO technical assistance mission noted that the dismantling of the labour inspection system that followed its decentralization observed by an earlier ILO mission in 1995, has progressively worsened. The many interviews it had with staff of the labour administration and other public departments and with the social partners provided the mission with information betraying a level of distress that demands the urgent re-establishment of a labour inspection system able to ensure the supervision of the legal provisions related to conditions of work and the protection of workers, in accordance with Article 3, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention and to provide both employers and workers in industrial and commercial workplaces with useful information for their implementation, as required by Article 3(1)(b).

The field visits proposed to the mission were limited to two very large foreign-owned agro-food companies located in areas of very intense industrial activity (Kampala and Jinja) and the mission regretted that it had not been in a position in which it could assess working conditions in small and medium-sized Ugandan establishments. However, the gradual deterioration in the labour inspection situation can be discerned from the information contained in the annual inspection reports received at the ILO in 1994 and 1996. According to the report covering 1994, the Labour Department had 83 employees, of whom 62 worked in the districts. Despite limited resources, the inspection staff managed to carry out 280 fully fledged visits, 292 visits to monitor implementation and 436 visits for other purposes. As prescribed by Article 3(1)(a) of the Convention, these inspections focused on application of the provisions on working conditions (general conditions and occupational safety and health) and the protection of workers. Of the many complaints from workers that had reached it, the labour inspectorate was able to deal with 1,252 and refer 32 to the courts. The annual inspection report for 1994, as well as providing detailed information on the work of the inspectorate, supplied statistical data together with relevant analyses and comments, including on occupational accidents, placing special emphasis on the lack of general safety and health standards in small and medium-sized establishments.

In 1995, an ILO technical assistance mission found that the labour administration was only represented in 20 of the country's 39 districts and had lost over 75 per cent of its human resources. For example, of the 67 posts planned for the occupational safety and health department, only two existed, one in Jinja, the other in Mbala, notwithstanding the significant number of establishments covered by the 1964 Factories Act and the fact that they were located throughout the country.

The annual inspection report for 1996 referred to 17 collective labour disputes concerning trade union rights, the refusal by employers to pay wage arrears and retirement benefits, and unfair dismissals of unionized workers. With the restructuring of the country's administration, unemployment was compounded by the dismissals of public employees. During the period covered, supervision of working conditions appears to have been marginalized in relation to employment policy and to no longer have been a matter of concern for the Government. The central labour administration's resources had been so reduced that no vehicles were left for travel outside the capital to supervise the operation of district services, some of which were unattainable by telephone. During the year covered by the above report, only 13 of the 21 district labour services were able to communicate information on their work: in all, 1,151 inspection visits were carried out, for some of which transport was provided by the employers. In total, there were 19 occupational safety and health inspection staff. Out of the 104 occupational accidents notified, only eight were investigated. Records showed that 25 per cent of the accidents were in construction and 33 per cent in government services and private security bodies. The 26–30 age group accounted for 34.61 per cent of the accidents, but no legal proceedings had been initiated during the period covered. The industrial court nonetheless apparently played an important role in pacifying and harmonizing industrial relations and, in most of its decisions it found for the workers. Its impact was attributed to its functional and financial independence.

In the observations it made in the years that followed, the Committee repeatedly noted that the Convention was not applied and reminded the Government of the obligations arising out of ratification, asking it to take the necessary steps to remedy the situation of the labour inspection services. Such measures involve, in particular, placing the inspection services under the supervision and control of a central authority and recruiting qualified and properly trained personnel. Financial, material and logistical resources are also essential for the control of the industrial and commercial establishments covered by the Convention and of the relevant national legislation (suitably equipped offices, provision of appropriate technical equipment for inspections and transport facilities and repayment of duty travel expenses). The diversity and complexity of the labour inspection functions defined in the Convention also require labour inspectors to devote most of their time to these duties, in their capacity as public officials who are assured of stability of employment and are independent of improper external influences.

Nevertheless, due to the decentralization of the labour administration as a whole, the Ministry of Labour as such soon disappeared and its component parts were absorbed by a succession of ministries. The labour administration is now a department in the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development (MGLSD). Its resources have been significantly reduced, as has its authority over the decentralized services. While decentralization was designed as a response to the demands of a policy to encourage investment, both national and international, in the interests of developing the national economy and creating jobs, its implementation has become increasingly detrimental to workers because it has overlooked issues relating to conditions of work, which is in violation of the Convention.

The Local Governments Act, No. 1 of 1997, transferred labour issues to the districts, together with services and activities for social rehabilitation, probation and well-being of street children and orphans, the role of women in development, community development, youth, culture and information services. With this transfer of authority, the districts are now exercising powers formerly held by central government, such as formulating development plans on the basis of priorities defined at the local level including raising, levying, managing and assigning resources through separate budgets, and establishing or abolishing public service bodies. As labour administration issues were no longer given priority, district labour departments were consequently reduced to rudimentary structures, and in some instances disappeared altogether. Furthermore, the number of districts increased from 56 to 75 in 2005 and to 80 in 2009, and is likely to increase further in the near future. Only the district of Kampala, which has a special status, is administered by the country's central authorities. COFTU and NOTU have expressed concern at the fragmentation of the country's administration at a time of drastic reductions in labour administration personnel and have called for amendment of the Constitution so that labour inspection can be placed back under the control and supervision of a central authority in a fully fledged ministry of labour endowed with the necessary capacities to fulfil its functions effectively. Although a similar view was expressed by nearly all the political and administrative officials and other stakeholders it met, the mission concluded that there is no such prospect on the agenda.

On 15 September 2008, the Local Governments Act was again amended with a view to the further decentralization of the administration taking account of a distinction between rural and urban entities. In accordance with section 77 of the Act, local governments will have the right and duty to formulate, approve and execute their budgets and plans subject to compulsory budgetary equilibrium (paragraph 1). Subject to the obligation to give priority to the objectives set out in national programmes (paragraph 2), urban governments are given financial independence, provided that their plan is incorporated into the district plan (section 79). The Committee notes that, according to section 83 (paragraph 2), central Government allocates to local governments to finance the operation of decentralized services, an unconditional minimum amount calculated in accordance with Chapter 7 of the Constitution, equal in value to the amount of the previous tax year for the same item.

In its report received in November 2008, the Government stated that it was seeking funds within the framework of the Decent Work Country Programme adopted in May 2007, while pointing out that the enhancement of labour inspection is a key element of a strategy for improvement of industrial relations through the promotion of rights at work. It undertakes to address all the issues raised by the Committee in the report due in 2009, taking into account the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2008. However, the Government has not sent the report as announced, but documented information gathered by the ILO mission of July 2009 shows that, while the MGLSD received an additional budgetary allocation in the course of the year, the labour inspectorate had no place in the MGLSD's budgetary allocations for the current fiscal year and that, moreover, labour administration issues in general are not included in any of the projects or strategies developed for the short and medium term by the Ministry in charge of local governments.

The Committee nevertheless hopes that, as soon as possible, the labour inspectorate will be given a key role in the country's social and economic development strategy, in particular through the process for revising the Decent Work Country Programme adopted in 2007, through the enactment of the above new legislation on employment and occupational safety and health, and to ILO technical assistance in fulfilling the objectives of the Convention. The Committee recalls that labour inspection is a function of the public administration that needs its own operating budget allowing the recruitment of suitable personnel and adequate resources to be made available. It is for the ministry responsible for labour to define requirements for this purpose and to raise awareness among governmental authorities and the social partners, particularly employers, of the positive impact of efficient labour inspection on a country's economic development and enterprise financial results.

The Committee notes with interest the re-establishment of an Industrial Court financed by the state budget. In accordance with Act No. 8 of 2006 on labour disputes (arbitration and settlement), the court hears disputes that the labour inspector has been unable to settle or appeals by one of the parties where there has been no decision within 90 days. However, if the Industrial Court is to play its role fully, it would be advisable for the legislation on the functioning and powers of the labour inspectorate to be revised so as to adapt it to developments in the world of work, and for the legislation on conditions of work to be supplemented by regulations to give it practical effect under the supervision of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes the indication to the technical assistance mission that a parliamentary process is under way for this purpose. The Committee notes with interest that the Employment Act, No. 6 of 2006, and the Occupational Safety and Health Act, No. 9 of 2006, contain provisions that are largely consistent with the Convention, and requests the Government to take measures promptly to give effect to them in practice. In particular, it requests it to ensure that effect is given in the near future to section 3(1) of the Occupational Safety and Health Act (No. 9) and section 9 of the Employment Act (No. 6), concerning the recruitment of the necessary inspection staff to ensure the implementation of these Acts, and that the number of inspectors will be determined in each district on the basis of the technical and geographical criteria referred to in Article 10 of the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to ensure that the necessary conditions are created to establish effective cooperation between the labour administration and the other public services and private institutions that possess useful data (such as the ministries of finance, justice, tourism, commerce and industry, the Bureau of Statistics, the Investment Authority and the National Social Security Fund (NSSF)) for the establishment of a companies register providing the labour inspectorate with the necessary information to develop an inspection programme that takes into account the branches of activity in which workers are the most vulnerable in view of the general conditions of work and the risks for their safety and health.

The Committee notes with interest that, in accordance with section 20 of the Employment Act (No. 6), an annual report containing information on labour inspection must be published by the labour commissioner at the ministry responsible for labour, which seems at least to suggest a return to the idea of a central labour inspection authority within the meaning of Article 4 of the Convention to supervise and control the work done by the district inspection services. An annual report, prepared in accordance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention, will also enable the national authorities concerned, as well as the social partners and the ILO's supervisory bodies, to gain a sufficiently clear idea of the way the labour inspection system functions and hence to envisage or propose, as the case may be, the necessary means of improving it.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in pursuit of the above objectives, together with any relevant documents. It would be grateful for information on the manner in which it plans to give effect to Article 4 of the Convention in terms of organizing and running the labour inspection system in practice in the context of the application of the current version of the Local Governments Act. The Committee finally requests the Government to ensure that an annual inspection report, containing the information available on the subjects listed at Article 21 of the Convention and reflecting both progress made and the shortcomings of the labour inspection system, will be published and that a copy will be sent to the ILO.

Ukraine

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2004)

The Committee notes the communication by the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FPU), dated 28 September 2009, containing comments on the application of the present Convention, particularly the impact of Cabinet Order No. 502 of 23 May 2009, supplementing Law No. 877-V of 5 April 2007 concerning the fundamental principles of state supervision of economic activities. The Office sent these comments to the Government on 20 November 2009. The Committee requests the Government to provide its opinion on the points raised by the above organization, as well as any relevant documentation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 2004)

The Committee notes the communication by the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FPU), dated 29 September 2009, containing comments concerning the application of the present Convention, particularly the impact of Cabinet Order No. 502 of 23 May 2009 supplementing Law No. 877/V of 5 April 2007 concerning the fundamental principles of state supervision of economic activities. The Office sent its comments to the Government on 20 November 2009. The Committee requests the Government to provide its opinion on the points raised by the Organization, as well as any relevant documentation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United Kingdom

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1949)

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Health and Safety Executive's web site www.hse.gov.uk/index.htm publishes numerous documents and information on many topics, such as surveys on the occupational hazards, including psychological risks, to which men and women workers are most frequently exposed in a number of industries, together with measures to reduce or even eliminate them. It notes, for example, the web page www.hse.gov.uk/lead/index.htm, which focuses on lead exposure and the specific risks incurred by men, women and young people who work with lead, and provides useful guidance for identifying and eliminating such hazards. The Committee firmly hopes that the information provided will be put to good use throughout the United Kingdom, as a supplement to the obligations under the Convention, and that other countries will also take advantage of it, in the interest not only of protecting men and women workers, but also of improving the economic performance of enterprises. The Committee notes with interest in this connection the information sent by the Government showing, through a study of developments in work days lost due to various health disorders, the close link between protection and productivity, which was also noted by the Committee in its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection (paragraph 374).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uruguay

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes the Government's report received by the ILO on 1 October 2009 in reply to its previous observations, the annual reports of the General Labour and Social Security Inspectorate (IGTSS) for 2007 and 2008, as well as the observations made in August 2008 by the Ibero-American Confederation of Labour Inspectors (CIIT) on matters partly raised in its previous comments, as well as the legislative texts and documents attached.

Article 6 of the Convention. Status and conditions of service of labour inspection staff. Stability of employment and independence. The Committee notes that, according to the CIIT, only three of the 33 new occupational safety and health inspectors in the Work Environment Division are public servants, and that others are employed under contracts which are renewed at the discretion of the administrative authority. This allegation contradicts the Government's statement in its 2007 report that all labour inspectors are public servants. Consequently, it would appear that the conditions of access and employment of labour inspectors laid down by Act No. 18.172 of 31 August 2007 do not apply to all inspection staff. In particular, it is not therefore certain that persons carrying out labour inspection duties based on temporary contracts are subject to the system of exclusivity of duties for the Ministry of Labour (MTSS). Consequently, these inspectors could be required or authorized to carry out other duties for other public or private employers which, in the Committee's view, constitutes a serious obstacle to the independence required for the performance of their primary duties. However, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it plans to incorporate into the body of labour inspectors the 33 contract workers who do not yet have the status of public servant. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on any developments relating to the implementation of this measure.

The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Ministerial resolution which, according to the Government, concerns the compensation of overtime worked by labour inspectors.

Conditions of service. With regard to the issue of the disparity between the wages of tax inspectors and those of labour inspectors, to the detriment of the latter, the CIIT indicates that the difference is 25 to 40 per cent. It also points out the persistent wage inequality compared to other officials in the form of the issue of food vouchers equivalent to around 10 per cent of their wage. Furthermore, according to the CIIT, Act No. 18.172 and MTSS Resolutions Nos 129 and 139 of 2007 have resulted in a loss in the wage benefits previously negotiated for labour inspectors, as well as the loss of the usual benefit of clothing and shoes. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the remuneration of inspectors is at least in line with that of other public servants with responsibilities of a similar level and complexity (for example, tax inspectors), and to provide details on these measures as well as illustrative statistics in this regard.

Discrimination against labour inspectors based on trade union membership or the performance of trade union activities. The Committee notes that, in reply to the allegation made by the CIIT concerning discrimination relating to the promotion of affiliated inspectors, the Government provides information including a list of names indicating that ten of the 14 team leaders working in the General Conditions of Work Division (CGT) and the Work Environment Conditions Division (CAT) are affiliated to the Association of Labour Inspectors of Uruguay (AITU) and adds that the exclusive criteria for appointment are professional competence and the skills necessary to coordinate labour inspectors. It also points out that the managerial posts advertised in 2003 and 2004 in the CAT and CGT Divisions were filled by the most qualified candidates.

In reply to the allegation made by the CIIT concerning the abusive nature of the transfers imposed on inspectors affiliated to trade union organizations, the Government indicates that transfers are exceptional and are based on the existence of family connections incompatible with the performance of duties within the same office, in accordance with Decree No. 30/003.

According to the CIIT, since the end of 2007, discrimination against inspectors for trade union activities has also taken the form of a reduction in wages the amount of which corresponds to the period spent carrying out these activities during the working day. This period is allegedly determined by means of the obligation imposed on inspectors to complete a form available for that purpose on the MTSS intranet site giving a very detailed account of their daily activities (administrative work, travelling time, study of documentation and related tasks, rest, interruptions, trade union activities).

The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government in reply to the allegations made by trade union organizations and requests the Government to provide a copy of any legal text or document on the basis of which inspectors may not be subjected to harassment or sanctions at the hands of their superiors.

Article 7. Retraining of inspectors. According to the CIIT, inspectors do not benefit from the retraining that is necessary to enable them to adapt to technological and legislative changes, particularly those concerning general conditions of work. The Government nevertheless mentions various types of training in the course of employment relating to arbitration awards, the content of collective agreements, new regulations and occupational safety issues. Furthermore, the annual reports provide further information on some of these training activities, including training relating to the prevention of chemical hazards with the support of Spain, training on occupational hazards in the construction and electromagnetic assembly sector with ILO support, as well as training for the team leaders in the CGT Division on the supervision of wages and the working environment and conditions. The Committee notes with interest that inspectors also benefit from specific training designed to protect their own health during inspections. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would ensure that the training of inspectors continues to be updated regularly and requests it to provide the ILO with information on any measures taken to that end.

Article 10. Number of labour inspectors. According to the Government, the labour inspectorate is now staffed by 152 inspection personnel (compared with 142 in 2007) covering a population of 1,230,000 workers, equivalent to around one inspector for every 8,000 workers. The number of staff in the Legal Division has been increased, as previously announced, through the recruitment of seven jurists and three officials responsible for the legal affairs of the IGTSS before the courts. The information provided by the Government nonetheless seems to confirm the allegations of the CIIT concerning the uneven distribution of inspectors between the capital (80 per cent) and the rest of the country. This situation seems to be explained by the concentration of protected workers in the capital. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed and up to date information on the geographical distribution of labour inspection staff. Noting that it has not provided information concerning the comments made by the CIIT concerning the uneven distribution of inspectors between the CAT and CGT Divisions, the Committee requests the Government to provide any comments that it considers relevant in this regard.

Article 10(a)(i) and (ii), and Articles 11 and 16. Working conditions of inspectors and inspection visits. According to the CIIT, the lack of means available to the labour inspectorate already reported (lack of physical space, furniture and computer equipment) has been exacerbated further as a result of the increase in the number of staff and the increasing complexity of the tasks related to the supervision of wages in the various sectors. The health of inspectors has even been affected and has resulted in sick leave. Furthermore, the lack of suitable transport facilities, in particular four-wheel drive vehicles, is hindering the performance of inspection visits. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, in order to address needs relating to the strengthening of human resources, the MTSS plans to establish a new IGTSS head office close to the current premises. With regard to means of transport for journeys in rural areas, the Government indicates that the entire fleet of vehicles is to be replaced soon and that bids have been invited to that end.

The Committee notes with interest the provision to the ILO of the CGT and CAT inspection procedure manuals (the CAT manual is in the process of being revised), which the CIIT had indicated were necessary, as well as the information that cases of administrative disputes brought before the courts are analysed regularly by members of the Legal Division with a view to rectifying procedural errors in the future.

After criticizing the lack of an inspection policy targeting on a priority basis activities characterized by a high rate of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease, the CIIT indicates that the broad system of inspections (the “rake” system) has been replaced by specific operations and inspections carried out in response to complaints. The Committee notes, in the annual inspection reports, information indicating the implementation of operations targeting particular sectors, such as bakeries, construction and commerce. It notes the information showing the performance of proactive inspections relating to general conditions of work, while the information concerning occupational safety and health seems to show activities triggered mainly by complaints or reports.

The Committee notes the information provided concerning the “Chameleon” project introducing a computerized registration system allowing registration of enterprises via the Internet. This system is based on the information which has to be submitted each year by employers under Decree No. 108/07. It will allow the gradual centralization of information concerning formal enterprises (branch of activity, number and distribution by sex and by category of worker, wages, etc.), firstly in the capital and then in the rest of the country. The Committee hopes that the “Chameleon” project will facilitate the rational programming of inspection activities and increase the number of proactive inspections relating to safety and health in branches in which workers are exposed to a high risk of occupational hazards. In this regard, it notes that a draft document concerning the monitoring of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease is being examined with technical assistance from the ILO. The Committee hopes that the establishment of the register of construction enterprises introduced by Act No. 18.362 of 6 October 2008 will contribute to strengthening inspections in this sector where the risk of industrial accidents is very high.

The Committee notes with interest the information provided concerning bilateral cooperation with Argentina relating to the exchange of training. The Government indicates that Uruguayan inspectors have already benefited from training in occupational safety.

The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of any developments relating to the envisaged improvement in conditions of work, including the transport facilities and means of labour inspectors, as well as the impact of new means on inspection activities.

It would be grateful if the Government would take the measures to extend the “Chameleon” system across the country in the near future and to implement the project relating to the monitoring of industrial accidents, and requests it to provide information on any progress made.

Article 5(b) and Paragraphs 4–7 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81). The Committee notes from the annual activity reports for 2007 and 2008 that the IGTSS has carried out training activities for workers on various subjects (labour law; risk prevention in industry, commerce and services; regulations applicable in the construction sector; and risk prevention). It also notes the participation of the IGTSS in events organized by universities and schools to disseminate information concerning labour rights. Furthermore, since 1999, a list of occupational safety and health laws has been provided on the web site of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MTSS) (www.mtss.gub.uy).

Referring to its comments concerning the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), the Committee notes with interest the numerous actions undertaken by the tripartite branch committees to disseminate information on risk prevention during various events (construction fairs; audiovisual campaigns; training programmes for trainers provided by the ILO for the social partners).

The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the cooperation between the labour inspection services and the social partners in the area of risk prevention with a view to promoting an occupational safety and health culture.

Articles 5(a) and 21(e). Effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and judicial bodies. Further to its 2007 general observation, the Committee notes with interest, from the Government's report concerning the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), that a course has been given by a magistrate to labour inspectors on the activities of the labour courts in specific cases. According to the Government, labour inspectors have in turn been called on by the courts as experts. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on any cooperation implemented between the labour inspectorate and the judicial bodies, including information concerning cases in which inspectors have been consulted by the courts as experts.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual inspection report. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would ensure that future annual reports on inspection activities contain detailed information on all the matters covered by Article 21, if possible following the guidance provided in this regard in Paragraph 9 of Recommendation No. 81.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes the Government's report received by the ILO on 1 October 2009 in reply to its previous observations, the annual reports of the General Labour and Social Security Inspectorate for 2007 and 2008, as well as the observations made in 2008 by the Latin American Confederation of Labour Inspectors (CIIT) on matters partly raised in its previous comments. The Committee also notes the legislative texts and documents attached to the report.

Referring to its observation concerning the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee requests the Government to provide the information requested in its next report, in so far as it relates specifically to labour inspection in agriculture.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Yemen

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government in reply to the numerous points raised in its previous comments are very general and vague and therefore do not allow any assessment of the level of application of the Convention. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous requests, which read as follows:

Articles 19, 20 and 21 of the Convention. The Committee's follow-up of the content of labour inspection reports as tools for evaluating and improving the operation of the inspectorate. In the comments that it has been making for nearly 20 years, the Committee has encouraged the Government to take the necessary steps to publish and send to the ILO an annual inspection report containing in particular, the information required on the matters listed at clauses (a) to (g) of Article 21 of the Convention. In the dialogue that it has held with the Government over these years, the Committee has noted that despite the political and economic difficulties it has had to cope with, the Government has done its utmost to send available information, largely in the form of statistical tables on some of the subjects covered by the Convention pertaining to one or other geographical or administrative division of the country. The Government has repeatedly stated, however, that the labour inspectorate's lack of financial resources was the cause of the failure to publish an annual report as required by the Convention. In 1994, the Committee noted with interest an annual report on the work of the inspection services for an earlier period, but pointed out that it lacked information essential to an assessment of the extent to which the labour inspection system actually covers the duties that have to be discharged (for example, the number of workplaces liable to inspection and the numbers of workers employed in them). It also noted that the Government had obtained technical assistance from the ILO to restructure and reorganize the Ministry of Labour in the context of the country's reunification, and expressed the hope that application of the Convention would improve as a result. In 1995, however, the Committee observed that the Government was having difficulty in providing the labour inspectorate with sufficient human resources of high quality and the material and logistical resources it needed to carry out its functions.

The Government nonetheless stated that it would shortly be sending an inspection report for 1994. Although this proved impossible, the Government continued to send statistical tables covering in part some of the subjects listed at Article 21. In a direct request sent to the Government in 2000, the Committee again pointed out the need to know the number of industrial and commercial establishments liable to inspection, the activities they carry on and the number of workers they employ, as a basis on which to determine the inspectorate's needs in terms of human and material resources. It asked the Government also to send information on developments in the legislation affecting the organization and working of the labour inspectorate and the status and conditions of work of labour inspectors.

In its observation of 2004, the Committee took note of the Government's efforts gradually to reinforce the labour inspection system, in particular by including in the Labour Code new provisions setting out the duties and powers of labour inspectors, and to equip the inspection services with computer hardware with a view to setting up a countrywide network for exchanging information and to providing the central administration with the means to monitor compliance with the law in workplaces on a permanent basis. The Committee accordingly considered that it should henceforth be possible for an annual inspection report to be drawn up and expressed the hope that such a report would shortly be published. It also welcomed the fact that an inventory of workplaces liable to inspection had been undertaken in Sana'a and hoped that such an inventory would also be undertaken for all other parts of the country, thus allowing an objective evaluation of the coverage provided by the inspection services with a view to determining what needed to be done in order to improve them gradually.

In its observation of 2006, the Committee continued to monitor progress reported by the Government in the development and efficiency of the system of statistics and sought information on the action taken by the Government further to its commitment to send the Office a report by the General Administration of the Labour Inspectorate showing inspections by workplace, the number of workers by enterprise, the number of infringements reported, and the penalties and other measures applied. It nonetheless noted that, according to the Government, owing to a lack of resources the General Administration had no computers; that eight governorates had no inspection service because there was no economic activity; and that the inspections recorded concerned only the capital and the governorate of Hamdramaout because the other governorates had not sent in statistics. The Committee asked the Government to report on developments in the enactment of legislation that was to be revised with technical assistance from the ILO and the participation of the social partners. In its report received in September 2007, the Government provides information on the content of the statistics by enterprise (number of workers broken down between Yemeni and non-Yemeni, situation at the workplace at the time of the inspection, type of infringement of the provisions of the Labour Code and action taken by the labour inspectorate) and states that these data are published in an annual report of the General Department of Labour Inspection. The Government indicates, however, that the draft revision of the Labour Code is still under consideration by the social partners, and again requests technical assistance in undertaking the necessary amendments. A report issued by the ILO's Beirut Office on a mission carried out from 9 to 14 October 2008 shows that the revision of the Labour Code should be completed before the end of the year.

The Committee notes that the Department of Industrial Relations' annual assessment report for 2006, which the Government sent with its report for 2007, contains information and statistics on the activities of numerous labour agencies including the labour inspectorate, in ten of the country's 21 governorates. The Committee notes, however, that according to the introduction to the report, the labour administration is weak, disorganized, and operates in a routine manner on a shoestring budget. The report launches an urgent appeal to the Ministry of Labour to give labour issues the importance they deserve and to implement the necessary measures, particularly financial measures, to stop the exodus of labour administration managers at a time when such heavy demands are being made of the Ministry of Labour.

Implementing the provisions of the Convention and reinforcing the labour inspection system by launching a Decent Work Country Programme. The Committee notes that a Decent Work Country Programme, prepared in cooperation with the Government, the social partners and the ILO, and launched in August 2008, makes the establishment of an efficient labour inspection system a priority. A tripartite committee should soon be set up to monitor implementation of the programme and a national working group appointed by the Minister of Social Affairs and Labour and a national working group is to be appointed by the Minister of Social Affairs and Labour to ensure coordination with the ILO. The programme provides, inter alia, for ILO technical assistance in setting up a tripartite audit and formulating and implementing a national action plan that takes due account of the provisions of the Conventions on labour inspection and health and safety. The programme will also seek to promote the adoption of modern inspection practices that target prevention and more efficient integration of labour inspection in other programmes, with a focus on the efforts that will be needed in those areas of labour inspection that target the worst forms of child labour. The Committee also notes that one of the roles assigned to the Office will be to promote the recruitment and training of women inspectors with a view to proper supervision of the conditions of work of the female workforce. The Committee would be grateful if in its next report the Government would provide information on all progress made, particularly through the implementation of the Decent Work Country Programme for 2008–10, towards establishing and operating a labour inspection system in industrial and commercial enterprises that is consistent with the principles laid down in the Convention and the guidance provided in the accompanying Recommendation, No. 81. Such information should cover the legislative amendments that the Committee has recommended in its comments since ratification of the Convention, the number and qualifications of men and women labour inspectors (Articles 8, 10 and 21(b)); their status and conditions of services (Article 6), the material resources, including computers, facilities and means of transport needed for the performance of their duties (Article 11); the machinery set up by the central inspection authority for the control and supervision of all the services for which it is responsible, including compliance by the labour inspectors with their obligations to report on their work in the areas of prevention and enforcement of the legislation on the conditions of work and the protection of workers in the carrying out of their occupation (Articles 4 and 19); measures to secure effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the other public or private institutions and bodies engaged in similar work, including judicial bodies, so as to enlist their support for the work of the labour inspectorate (Article 5(a)); and measures for effective collaboration between labour inspectors and employers and workers (Article 5(b)) and Part II of Recommendation No. 81).

The Committee hopes that, in view of the progress already made in compiling certain statistics that are of use in assessing the operation of the labour inspection system, the Government will be in a position to take the necessary steps to ensure that an annual inspection report is published and sent to the ILO within the time limits set by Article 20 of the Convention, containing the information required by Article 21, clauses (a) to (g). So that the information is useful to the central inspection authority in defining priorities for action in collaboration with the social partners and other interested parties while taking into account the financial resources available under the national budget, the Committee invites the Government to follow the guidance given in Recommendation No. 81 (Part IV) on the amount of detail that is appropriate.

Articles 5(a) and 21(e). Cooperation between the inspection services and the judicial bodies. Furthermore, further to its 2007 general observation, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning measures designed to promote effective cooperation between the inspection services and the judicial bodies. The Government is requested to provide as detailed information as possible on the urgent cases referred exceptionally to ordinary courts by the labour inspectorate and on the decisions handed down in these cases.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 63 (Barbados, Djibouti); Convention No. 81 (Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Australia, Belarus, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iraq, Israel, Kyrgyzstan, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malta, Mauritius, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Netherlands: Netherlands Antilles, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Poland, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Sweden, Switzerland, United Republic of Tanzania: Tanganyika, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Kingdom: Gibraltar, United Kingdom: Guernsey, United Kingdom: Isle of Man); Convention No. 85 (United Kingdom: Anguilla); Convention No. 129 (Belgium, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Egypt, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Malta, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Romania, Ukraine, Uruguay); Convention No. 150 (Antigua and Barbuda, Belize, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Central African Republic, Cuba, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominica, Guinea, Guyana, Iraq, Lesotho, Liberia, Republic of Moldova); Convention No. 160 (Brazil, Czech Republic, Ireland, San Marino, Swaziland).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 81 (United Kingdom: Jersey).

Employment policy and promotion

Australia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009, including replies to the matters raised in its 2007 direct request, evaluation data concerning the Welfare to Work reforms, and further information provided by the governments of South Australia and Western Australia. The Committee notes the comments received from the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU).

Employment trends and active labour market measures. The Government indicates that the effects of the global economic crisis in Australia resulted in an increase in the unemployment rate as redundancies grew, skills shortages remained in particular industries and some locations, and certain industries faced these issues combined with the effects of an ageing workforce. The Government reports that it responded with a comprehensive package of programmes and employment services reforms. The Committee notes that Australia's unemployment rate has risen from 3.9 per cent in February 2008 to 5.8 per cent in July 2009, an increase of almost 40 per cent and the highest rate in almost six years. In its 2007 direct request, the Committee recalled that the Convention has a critical role to play in combating poverty and promoting social cohesion. The Government indicates in its report that it believes that all Australians should have the opportunity and capacity to play a role in all aspects of Australian life. The Government further reports that the Social Inclusion Agenda works, among other goals, to afford every Australian the opportunity to secure a job. In order to progress the Social Inclusion Agenda, the Government has created several new departments, e.g. the Ministry for Social Inclusion in Australia; a Parliamentary Secretariat with specific responsibility for social inclusion; a Social Inclusion Unit located in the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet; and the Australian Social Inclusion Board. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information and evaluation data on the impact of the various labour market reform measures undertaken on the employment situation, and information on the involvement of the social partners in the design and implementation of an active employment policy in accordance with the Convention (Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention).

Employment services. The Committee notes that since the previous report, the Government undertook a comprehensive review of the delivery of employment assistance programmes. The Government implemented Job Services Australia in July 2009, which replaced the Job Network, the Active Participation Model and a number of other smaller programmes. The Government reports that under Job Services Australia, jobseekers will no longer be moving in and out of different programmes, or from one provider to another. Every jobseeker will be linked to a provider of their choice, who will develop an individually tailored plan to assist the jobseeker in gaining employment. This plan will bring together the various types of assistance – vocational and non-vocational – needed to address the barriers faced by that individual. The Committee notes that the ACTU has welcomed the Government's announced changes to the employment services to include a greater focus on disadvantaged jobseekers, employer servicing and local labour markets. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the effects of the changes to employment services with regard to the objectives of the Convention.

Education and training policies. The Committee notes that under the Skilling Australia for the Future initiative, the Government has funded the Productivity Places Program which will deliver 711,000 training places over five years in areas of skills shortage to ensure that Australian workers develop the skills they need. The Government reports that these training places are being delivered in an industry-driven system, ensuring that training is more responsive to the needs of businesses and participants. Of the places, 392,000 training places will be allocated to existing workers wanting to gain or upgrade their skills, and 319,000 places will be allocated to jobseekers. The Government further reports that it has introduced the Jobs and Training Compact to support young Australians, retrenched workers and local communities get back to work, add to their skills, or learn the new skills required to obtain jobs as the labour market recovers. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in the area of education and training policies and on their relation to prospective employment opportunities. The Committee also invites the Government to provide evaluation data on the Jobs and Training Compact.

Means to promote employment of workers with disabilities. The Committee notes that, as part of its Social Inclusion Agenda, the Government is developing a National Mental Health and Disability Employment Strategy to increase employment opportunities for people with disabilities, including mental illness. The Strategy will be released in 2009 and is being developed following consultations with people with disabilities, peak bodies, service providers, employers and unions. The Government reports that it has already started implementing some early and important elements of the Strategy, including developing the new disability employment services and an employment incentive pilot. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government is investing 1.2 billion AUD in the new Disability Employment Services which will commence in March 2010, and will help jobseekers with disabilities to secure and maintain sustainable employment. Under these changes, all jobseekers with disabilities will have access to individually tailored employment services that are better suited to their needs, with stronger links to training and skills development. The Committee also notes the commitment in South Australia to double the number of people with disabilities employed in the public sector by 2014. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on labour market measures regarding workers with disabilities and evaluation data on the Disability Employment Services.

Means to promote employment of older workers and younger workers. The Government indicates that despite a strong labour market over the past decade, there are still groups of people who experience labour market disadvantages. These groups will face further challenges in the context of the global economic recession – for example, young people who are out of work in a recession can find it particularly hard to recover once conditions improve. The Government indicates that it has agreed to establish a Compact with Young Australians which will entitle every Australian under the age of 25 to an education or training place. Through the Compact, a national “learning or earning” requirement (the National Youth Participation Requirement) will also ensure that all young people complete standard 10 and participate in education, training or employment until the age of 17. The Committee also notes the South Australia Works initiative which has developed a number of programmes aimed at providing young people aged 16–24 with skills and opportunities to move successfully from school, further education and training or unemployment, into stable, rewarding work. Concerning older workers, the Government reports that participation requirements for mature age jobseekers were examined by the Participation Review Taskforce. The Taskforce concluded that adult jobseekers should have the same participation requirements as other jobseekers but that any changes should be preceded by broader Government action to ameliorate negative attitudes towards adult workers. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures intended to encourage and support employment levels of older workers. It also asks the Government to include in its next report information on the way in which recently adopted measures have increased opportunities for lasting employment for young people entering working life.

Means to promote employment of indigenous peoples. In reply to the previous comments, the Government reports that it recognizes the particular disadvantage experienced by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the labour market and that special measures are required to assist indigenous jobseekers into employment. Indigenous jobseekers are more heavily represented in regional and remote employment service areas than in metropolitan areas. The Government indicates that in June 2009, there were approximately 18,700 active registered indigenous jobseekers (4 per cent of total jobseekers) in metropolitan areas, whereas the numbers in regional areas was around 43,300 (13 per cent) and in remote areas 25,300 (80 per cent). Overall, indigenous jobseekers made up 11 per cent of that total Job Network active case load. The Government further reports that, in the 2008–09 fiscal year, Job Network members and other job placement organizations placed 38,000 indigenous jobseekers into work. Job Services Australia, which replaced Job Network on 1 July 2009, has an increased emphasis on assisting the most disadvantaged jobseekers, including many indigenous peoples. All Job Services Australia providers have a new requirement to develop and implement an indigenous employment strategy to increase the employment and retention of indigenous peoples within their organizations. Furthermore, the Committee notes the main findings in the 2009 Overcoming Indigenous Disadvantage Report, indicating that between 2001 and 2006 there were improvements in the indigenous unemployment rate, labour force participation rate and the employment to population ratio, although large gaps still remain between the indigenous and non-indigenous population. The Committee notes the comments formulated by the ACTU, which believes that sustainable, real employment is one of the corner stones in bridging the gap between Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and the remainder of the population. The ACTU is concerned that aspects of the National Indigenous Employment Policy may be “more of the same” and suggests that historically these programmes produce few real employment outcomes with many participants finding themselves out of work once Government funding commitments have ceased. The ACTU believes employers, Government, unions and communities should work together to increase employment programmes and training producing long-term engagement in the workforce. The Committee invites the Government and the social partners to continue to provide information on the impact of the measures taken to promote productive employment opportunities for indigenous people.

Barbados

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1976)

Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government’s report received in February 2009. The Government indicates that its active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment is declared through the Protocols formulated by the social partner, and through the speeches of the Prime Minister of Barbados and other ministers and government officials. The Government has reduced the level of the corporation taxes with the aim of reducing the cost of doing business. Furthermore, the Central Bank of Barbados reduced the prime rate for commercial banks by 0.25 percentage points to 4 per cent in October 2008 in order to encourage borrowing for investment purposes with the goal of driving economic growth. The Government indicates that its trade and industrial policies seek to create increased employment throughout the economy. The Committee notes that, in the second quarter of 2008, the unemployment rate rose to 8.6 per cent of the labour force. As the 2008 Preliminary Overview of the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) indicates, this slight increase of the unemployment rate over the same period of 2007 is still lower than it was in previous years (the participation rate was 68.7 per cent of the total adult population). The Committee further recalls the comments provided by the Barbados Workers’ Union in June 2008, in which it indicated that the union continues to support policy interventions on behalf of micro-enterprises and the self-employed, aimed at promoting increased access to credit facilities and market information, formal education and training and, generally, the provision of decent work in the informal economy.

The Government also indicates that the policies are kept under review through individual monitoring by ministries, agencies and departments, under whose responsibility the implementation of such policies fall. The Ministry of Economic Affairs, Empowerment, Innovation, Trade, Industry and Commerce, through the Economic Affairs Division, has a monitoring process where the status of proposed policies are captured under a matrix format indicating the status of implementation of the financial and economic policies. Information on the status is transmitted to the Director of Finance and Economic Affairs and the Minister. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the measures implemented as part of an active policy intended to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment, and the results thereof. The Government is also asked to provide further information on the manner in which economic objectives are taken into account in the adoption and review of measures under monetary, budgetary and taxation policy, and price, income and wage policy.

The Government indicates that Manpower Research and the Statistical Unit of the Ministry of Labour and Immigration conduct research and surveys in order to gather information about labour supply and demand. The Government also indicates that the Disabilities Unit and the Bureau of Gender Affairs seek to meet the needs of particular categories of workers such as women, young people, older workers and workers with disabilities. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures implemented to meet the needs of vulnerable categories of workers such as women, young people, older workers and workers with disabilities.

Education and vocational training. The Committee notes that the Barbados Training Board conducts vocational training through its skills training programmes. The Government also indicates that the Technical and Vocational Education and Training Council was established to disburse funds to training institutions to enable them to provide industry-specific training. The Technical and Vocational Education and Training Council is mandated, amongst other things, to ensure the standardization of training. The Committee would appreciate receiving information on the impact such measures have had on improving coordination between education and training policies and prospective employment opportunities.

Participation of social partners. The Committee notes that national consultations on the economy are held on a yearly basis. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information in its next report on the manner in which consultations on the matters covered by the Convention are ensured, including any examples of the questions addressed or the decisions reached on employment policy through tripartite boards and committees that exist in the country. The Government is also requested to provide information on whether consultations are carried out with representatives of the rural workers and the informal economy, as requested in the report form under Article 3 of the Convention.

Belarus

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1968)

Measures to promote the employment of vulnerable categories of workers. The Committee notes the comments submitted by the Belarusian Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (BKDP) in August 2009. The BKDP refers to the right to work of the citizens, and argues that short-term contracts, in practice, limit workers' rights to free choice of employment. The BKDP indicates that short-term contracts are contrary to the spirit of the Convention, because terminating these contracts deprive workers of their right to work. The BKDP refers to non-renewal of fixed-term contracts in enterprises located in Bobruisk and Novopolstok. In this context, the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to certain provisions of related international labour instruments (see Article 2, paragraph 3, of the Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158), and Paragraph 3 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166)) that provide for the protection of workers against the use of contracts which can impair the achievement of the objectives of full and productive employment as laid down in Convention No. 122. The Committee invites the Government to reply to the BKDP comments, particularly to specify how it has been possible to satisfy the employment needs of the workers whose short-term contract of employment had ended. It also requests information in the Government's next report on the measures envisaged with the cooperation of the social partners to improve employment security in the labour market.

The Committee received the Government's report submitted in September 2009 replying to its 2008 direct request. It looks forward to addressing the Government's information, as well as any response to the BKDP comments that the Government wishes to set forth, during its next session.

Brazil

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy in the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. The Committee notes the Government's report on the Convention received in January 2009 as well as the detailed replies to the questionnaire for the General Survey on employment (2010). The Government explained in its report that the positive dynamic macroeconomic indicators have led to a decline in the unemployment rate (which fell from 9.5 per cent in July 2007 to 8.1 per cent in July 2008). The Government also indicated that the main characteristic of the cycle of growth was the marked formalization of the labour market. According to Panorama Laboral 2008, the evolution of the labour market in 2008 was one of the most favourable in recent years. The trend of reduced unemployment and informal employment continued. The average registered unemployment rate in the six metropolitan regions was 8 per cent in the period January to November 2008, 1.5 percentage points lower than that of the same period in 2007. In November 2008, there were early signs of a slowdown, with a loss of 40,800 jobs – the first negative result for the month of November in six years. The Committee also notes that unemployment has affected women more than men (in 2007, the rate was 10.8 per cent among women and 6.1 per cent among men). Young people have also suffered higher unemployment rates than the rest of the population (youth unemployment was 15.4 per cent in 2007, whereas the average rate of unemployment across the population was 8.2 per cent). The Committee also notes that, according to the Institute of Applied Economic Research (IPEA), the number of poor families in Brazil fell from 35 per cent to 24.1 per cent between 2002 and 2008 in six major cities of the country, which has entailed that 4 million people ceased to be considered poor. The Government adopted counter-cyclical measures and maintained its infrastructure projects under the Growth Acceleration Plan, entailing investments of US$300 billion in 2009. Programmes to build houses for the poorest families are promoted, as well as an expansion of beneficiaries of the Bolsa Familia programme that provides financial assistance to 11.1 million families in the country. The Committee invites the Government to provide an evaluation in its next report of the impact of the various active labour measures undertaken, including the views of the social partners, on the current employment situation.

Workers in the informal economy. Support to small-sized and micro-enterprises and to cooperatives. The Committee notes that the Job and Income Generation Programme (PROGER) continues to distribute funds to sectors which typically have little or no access to the financial system, such as micro- and small enterprises, cooperatives and workers' associations, liberal professionals, farming families and informal sector productive initiatives. PROGER also provides support to enterprises in sectors which are prioritized in Government development policies, developing infrastructure, promoting export activities and encouraging technological innovation. According to the statistics provided, between 2000 and 2008, over 16.3 million contracts were signed under PROGER. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information regarding the impact of the activities promoted by PROGER in terms of employment generation. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, even in light of the global crisis, micro- and small enterprises continue to generate jobs and the sector represents the bigger part of the formal enterprises in the country. The Committee asks the Government to keep it informed regarding the measures implemented to promote the development of technical and managerial skills among the workers in the sector. The Committee also notes that currently the National Congress is implementing a new project to upgrade the existing regulations on cooperatives. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the development of a new legal framework favourable to cooperatives and of its expected impact on the creation of employment.

Contribution of the employment services. In respect of the matters raised in its 2008 observation, the Committee notes that the Government deems it necessary to achieve greater integration of the 340 centres in the Public Employment, Labour and Income System (SPETR) and between the various activities of the system and a more adequate distribution of the resources made available to the SPETR. The Committee requests the Government to provide information, in its next report, on the advances made to ensure that the public employment services are contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Convention.

Article 2(a). Collection and use of employment data. The Committee notes that the Labour Market Observatory is a tool for research and planning whose objective is to produce and disseminate information, analyse and make action-oriented proposals for advising administrators of public policies and subsidies. The Committee asks the Government to indicate how the information and statistics on the employment situation and trends submitted by the Labour Market Observatory have contributed to the adoption and review of the employment policies.

Educational and vocational training policies. The Committee notes the information provided on the Social and Vocational Training Programme (QSP), which is a comprehensive vocational education programme that has made a significant contribution in terms of helping people participate in the world of work, thereby helping to achieve the objectives set out in the National Training Plan (PNQ). From 2003 to 2007, the PNQ provided vocational training to meet the requirements of 664,850 workers in the country. In 2008, 39 training plans for specific economic sectors were under way. A joint initiative by the Ministry of Social Development and the Ministry of Labour and Employment, directed at the construction sector, will promote a national training and vocational placement initiative for the beneficiaries of the Bolsa Familia programme. The Committee invites the Government to include information in its next report on the impact the QSP and other initiatives have had on providing workers with the opportunity to acquire the necessary training to find suitable employment and to use their training and skills in such employment.

Cambodia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report received in November 2008, and the communication of the Free Trade Union of Workers of the Kingdom of Cambodia (FTUWKC) received in August 2008. The FTUWKC indicates that Cambodia is one of the poorest countries in Asia, where life expectancy is 56 years and where 80 per cent of the population live on less than US$2 a day. The FTUWKC also indicates that the garment industry, which has developed rapidly over the last ten years, now accounts for 90 per cent of Cambodia's exports and employs around 355,000 people, mainly young women from the poor rural communities. The Committee notes the concerns expressed by the FTUWKC that core labour standards are not being complied with in many factories, as workers are being forced to work long hours, night shifts and overtime, and do not benefit from paid, sick, or maternity leave.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee notes that the Government has implemented the National Strategic Development Plan (NSDP), with the aim of reducing poverty and achieving the Cambodian Millennium Development Goals. In this regard, the Government has operated the long-term "Rectangular Strategy" in order to deliver on the NSDP. The Committee notes that the Rectangle III programme specifies policies relating to private sector development and employment. In particular, it specifies a systematic policy aimed at: (i) creating jobs, particularly for young persons entering the labour market, and for all Cambodian workers through various measures which encourage domestic investment and attract foreign direct investment in priority sectors, including agriculture, agro-industry, labour-intensive industries and tourism; (ii) establishing skills training networks for the poor; and (iii) developing a labour statistics system. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to indicate in its next report whether specific difficulties have been encountered in achieving the objectives defined in the Rectangular Strategy on employment policies, and the extent to which these difficulties have been overcome. The Committee also invites the Government to provide indications on the progress achieved in the collection of labour market data and the manner in which such data is used in the formulation and implementation of the employment policy.

ILO technical assistance. The Committee notes that the 21st synthesis report for "Better Factories Cambodia" indicates that the programme has contributed to an improvement in the working conditions and standard of living of more than 270,000 workers, especially young women from rural areas. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress of the "Better Factories Cambodia" programme and on the impact it has had on the creation of productive employment.

Rural employment. The Committee notes that the Government has implemented diversification measures in different regions across the country. In Preah Vihear, the mountain areas are being converted into tourist destinations; in Svay Rieng, factories are now operating in former poor rural areas; and factories are being established in Kampong Chhnang. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the measures it has taken to promote employment opportunities in rural areas, including data on how such measures have contributed to ensuring balanced regional development.

Youth employment. The Committee notes from the ILO's Policy Brief on Youth Employment in Cambodia (2007) that the total number of young people is expected to grow from 3.2 million in 2005 to 3.6 million in 2011. Young persons will still have a 24 per cent share of the total population. In this regard, there is concern over how the labour market will absorb an estimated 275,000 young jobseekers expected for each year over the next five years. The Committee notes that the NSDP includes provision for the implementation of a systematic policy to create more jobs, especially for young people entering the labour market, through various measures such as the establishment of skills training networks to assist young people and new graduates in response to labour market needs. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure productive employment opportunities for young persons.

Labour market and training policies. The Committee notes that, in 2007, 38 educational and vocational institutions were in operation, under the overall responsibility of the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training. In this year, 69,471 students attended training courses in those institutions, of whom 46,384 persons from 17 provinces, received certificates. The Government also indicates that, with the assistance of the Governments of India and Japan, entrepreneur training centres were established in order to promote a culture of entrepreneurship in the country. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved by the measures taken by the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training to coordinate education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities and to promote an entrepreneurship culture.

Business development. The Committee notes that the Government has adopted a comprehensive SME Development Framework and prepared an SME Development Programme. Measures implemented under this programme are intended to create a favourable business environment for SMEs and micro-enterprises, to enable their better access to medium- and long-term finance, and to establish specific systems to support women in business, including through facilitating women's access to SME development initiatives and services. The Committee notes with interest the measures taken to stimulate small and micro-enterprises and asks the Government to provide information in its next report on the effects of these initiatives on the creation of productive employment. It also asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken to involve social partners so as to ensure that the concerns of small businesses are taken into account in the formulation of employment policies and measures. In this regard, the Government may deem it useful to consult the provisions of the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189).

Article 3. Participation of social partners. The Government indicates in its report that the Labour Advisory Committee has not been consulted in the development and review of employment policies and programmes. The Committee recalls that, under the Convention, governments are required to ensure that the opinions of workers' and employers' organizations, as well as workers in the rural sector and the informal economy, are to be consulted "with a view to taking fully into account their experiences and views". The Committee asks the Government to provide concrete examples on the manner in which the views of employers, workers and other affected groups are sufficiently taken into account in the development, implementation and review of employment policies and programmes.

Canada

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Employment trends, active labour market policies and involvement of the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009 including detailed information provided by the provincial governments and comments received from the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC). The Government indicates that between October 2008 and May 2009, 362,500 jobs were shed from the Canadian economy (on a seasonally adjusted basis) and unemployment rose to an 11-year high of 8.4 per cent in May 2009 from 6.3 per cent in October 2008. On 27 January 2009, the Government introduced Canada's Economic Action Plan (Budget 2009) in response to the economic crisis. Budget 2009 provides over 46 billion Canadian dollars (CAD) over the next two years, almost CAD62 billion when combined with the support provided by other levels of government, to support the Canadian economy and help to create jobs. Together with the tax reductions announced in the 2007 economic statement, Budget 2009 is estimated to create or maintain over 265,000 jobs by the end of 2010. The initiatives of Budget 2009 aim to reduce taxes permanently, help the unemployed, create jobs through significant infrastructure spending, support industries and communities most affected by the global downturn, and improve the access to and affordability of financing for Canadian households and businesses. Furthermore, the Committee notes the various labour market measures taken at the federal and provincial levels aimed at creating employment opportunities and recovering from the crisis. The Committee recalls that Article 1 of the Convention provides that Members shall declare and pursue, as a major goal, an active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment. In this regard, the Committee notes the comments of the CLC indicating that it finds little recent evidence for such a declaration to have been enunciated "as a major goal" (Article 1(1)) by Canada or by most provinces, at least with enough clarity and conviction for the public to be meaningfully aware of it. Moreover, the CLC indicates that it is not aware that such a policy, in practice, is fully integrated in socio-economic decision-making of the country, and it seems notably absent with respect to macroeconomic policy making, including financial, trade and development policies. In its comments, the CLC also refers to the 2004 General Survey on promoting employment and strongly recommends that the Government and social partners review this document for the purpose of identifying how to improve inter-ministerial coordination, monitoring and reporting mechanisms, employment assessment processes and for programmes to prevent discrimination in employment or for re-employment of workers who lose their jobs for economic reasons. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the impact on the labour market of the measures taken in Budget 2009 and to indicate how such measures are kept under periodical review within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy (Article 2(a)). The Committee also invites the Government to keep in mind the concerns raised by the CLC and to provide further information on the effective consultations held with the social partners on the matters covered by the Convention (Article 3).

Education and training policies. The Government reports that, in 2008–09, Human Resources and Skills Development Canada allocated CAD12.9 million annually to support the Pan Canadian Innovations Initiative (PCII). PCII projects must partner with provinces or territories and focus on one or more of the following priorities: literacy and essential skills, immigrants, Aboriginal peoples, under-represented groups, workplace training, and apprenticeship. The Committee notes that project examples include the partners building futures in New Brunswick and the British Columbia reclamation and prospecting teams. The Government indicates that, while interim results are positive, evaluation data is not yet available. The Committee further notes that the Government is providing CAD8.3 billion to the Canadian skills and transition strategy which includes extra support for people who have lost their jobs, enhancements to employment insurance and more funding for skills and training development to help Canadians to obtain better jobs. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in the area of education and training policies and on their relation to prospective employment opportunities. The Committee also asks the Government to provide evaluation data on the PCII when it becomes available.

Special measures in respect of vulnerable categories of workers. The Government indicates that since October 2008 the number of job losses has fallen more heavily for certain groups of workers, and workers from specific provinces and industries, resulting in their over-representation when counting net job losses. For example, recent immigrants account for 3 per cent of employed persons in Canada but resulted in 12 per cent of net job losses. The impact was even more pronounced in the cities of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver (53 per cent of net job losses). Concerning workers with disabilities, the Committee notes the measures adopted at the federal and provincial levels such as the “10 by 10 challenge” in British Columbia and the Ontario disability support program. With regard to older workers, the Committee notes that the Government will contribute additional funding to extend the Targeted Initiative for Older Workers (TIOW) until March 2012 to help more older workers remain active and productive participants in the labour force. TIOW provides support to unemployed older workers in communities affected by significant downsizing or closures, or a general high unemployment rate, through programming aimed at reintegrating these workers into the workforce. A summarizing evaluation is scheduled to begin in the autumn of 2009 and is expected to address programme relevance, success and cost-effectiveness. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information and evaluation data on labour market measures regarding workers with disabilities, older workers, immigrants, and other vulnerable categories of workers.

Comoros

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1978)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the report received in September 2008, in which the Government indicates that no significant developments have been observed since the previous report and that it hopes to provide all the information requested in its next report. The Committee recalls that in its 2008 observation it noted that a framework document on the national employment policy had been adopted following a national workshop organized in November 2007. The Government also indicated that a survey of young graduate jobseekers, undertaken in the island of Grande Comore by the General Directorate of Employment, would be extended to the islands of Mohéli and Anjouan so as to obtain full data on the employment market. The Committee notes that the central objective of the ILO Decent Work Country Programme in the Comoros 2009–12 (PPTD) is employment promotion and that the expected outcomes include, in particular, the formulation of an employment promotion strategy and the adoption of laws and regulations with a view to: implementing the strategy; developing the Act on cooperatives; formulating a strategy for women’s entrepreneurship and youth employment; introducing transparent and confidence-building procedures to spur investment and job creation; and, finally, implementing an information and monitoring system on labour market trends. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report whether specific difficulties have been encountered in achieving the objectives established by the framework document on national employment policy and the PPTD and to indicate the extent to which these difficulties have been overcome. The Government is also requested to provide information on the progress made in gathering labour market data and on the manner in which such data are taken into consideration when formulating and implementing employment policy.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policy. The Government referred in its previous report to the importance of the involvement of the social partners, in both the formulation and implementation of employment policies and in the preparation of the PPTD. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the steps taken to achieve the priorities of the PPTD, indicating the mechanisms and regularity of the consultations held with the representatives of the persons concerned, in particular with the representatives of employers and workers, on the subjects covered by the Convention. Please also indicate the initiatives that have received ILO support for the promotion of the objectives of the creation of productive employment, as set out in the Convention (Part V of the report form).

Ethiopia

Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the Government’s report received in November 2008 referring again to the Employment Agency Proclamation No. 104 of 1998, which has already been examined in previous comments. The Committee also understands that in June 2007 the Office reviewed a draft proclamation aimed at strengthening the authority of public authorities in dealing with private employment agencies and to revise the regulations concerning the operation of those agencies. The draft proclamation was also discussed in tripartite workshops with government authorities and other stakeholders. In this context, the Committee asks the Government to provide a report including the text of any new legislative text enacted concerning the application of the Convention and information on the matters raised in its previous comments.

Article 8 of the Convention. Protection of migrant workers. The Government indicates that to implement the Convention, the Ministry of Labour consulted with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Ethiopian embassies. An inter-ministerial committee has been established including representatives of the Ministry of Justice, the Emigration Office and the federal police. The Government also mentions the provisions of section 598 of the Criminal Code to combat unlawful recruitment. The Committee reiterates its concern regarding the protection of Ethiopian workers recruited or placed either through regular or irregular private agencies for employment outside the country and the prevalence of trafficking in persons. The Committee asks the Government to report on the measures taken by the inter-ministerial committee to provide adequate protection and prevent abuses of workers recruited in Ethiopia for employment abroad and law cases.

Please also provide particulars of cases when section 598 of the Criminal Code has been applied to abusive recruiters. Please also specify if the most representative organizations of employers and workers have been consulted in this matter (Article 8, paragraph 1). It also again requests the Government to provide information on bilateral labour agreements concluded to prevent abuses and fraudulent practices in the recruitment, placement and employment of Ethiopian migrant workers abroad (Article 8, paragraph 2).

Article 9. Trafficking of children. The Government states in its report that, according to section 15(4) of the procedure prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, recruited workers should not be less than 18 years and that this would be safeguarded by routine inspection systems. The Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), and requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that child labour is not used or supplied by private employment agencies.

The Committee reiterates its interest in receiving detailed information in the Government's next report on the measures adopted to apply the provisions of the Convention which are referred to specifically in a direct request.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Guinea

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in February 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee's 2004 observation, which set forth the following matters:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. In its report received in February 2004, the Government provided information on the establishment of the "employment" component of the poverty reduction strategy approved in 2002, including its plans to enhance the range of vocational and technical training available, promote small and medium-sized enterprises, promote labour-intensive work and improve access to employment for women. The Committee also noted the objectives of the Labour and Employment Statistical Information Network (RISET), the establishment of which was already noted in its previous comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide up to date information on the measures taken to guarantee that employment, as a key component in poverty reduction, is at the heart of macroeconomic and social policies. It asks the Government in particular to provide information on the results achieved by group, such as for young people and for women, by the measures taken to improve the range of vocational and technical training available, on the promotion of small and micro-enterprises and on the jobs created by labour-intensive programmes.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policies. The Committee recalled in 2008 that Article 3 of the Convention requires consultations with all interested parties – in particular, representatives of employers and workers – in the establishment and implementation of employment policies. It is the joint responsibility of the Government and the representative organizations of employers and workers to ensure that representatives of the most vulnerable and marginalized groups of the active population are associated as closely as possible with the formulation and implementation of measures of which they should be the prime beneficiaries. The Committee trusts that the Government will include detailed information in this regard.

Part V of the report form. ILO technical assistance. The Committee once again asks the Government to indicate the actions taken to implement an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention, further to the technical assistance received from the ILO.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Iceland

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1990)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market measures. The Committee takes note of the information provided in the Government's report received in September 2009. The Government reports that its economy went into a major crisis in October 2008 when the banking system collapsed as a result of the global credit crunch, and that this recession will become even more severe in 2009. The Government further reports, that this crisis reduces the effectiveness of its monetary policies, and that repayments of credits can no longer be controlled. The Committee notes that, while there was little change in gross domestic product (GDP) in 2007 and 2008, forecasts allow for a contraction in GDP of up to 11 per cent in 2009. One of the consequences of the collapse of the banking system on the labour market is a great increase in unemployment, which rose from 1.3 per cent in September 2008 to 9.1 per cent in April 2009. The Government anticipates an average rate of unemployment for 2009 between 8 and 9 per cent. The Government also envisions unemployment benefits will be more than five times greater in 2009 than they were in 2008, i.e., about 25 billion Icelandic krona (ISK). The Government further hopes that the economy will recover with a rate of 2–3 per cent each year as from 2010, achieving a budgetary surplus in 2012. The Committee notes new programmes that the Government has implemented, such as a measure to amend the rules of the Icelandic Student Loan Fund, to meet the needs of those who have suffered financial setbacks. The Government has also begun a new development project, Starfsorka, which consists of a three-sided agreement between the Directorate of Labour, a company, and a jobseeker for an engagement in a position that involves innovation and development together with the payment of unemployment benefits. The aims of this project are to, (i) support new ventures and development within companies; (ii) establish contact between jobseekers and companies; (iii) support entrepreneurs who have ideas for new ventures; and (iv) support jobseekers and facilitate their search for employment. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide Education and training policies. The Government reports that the Vocational Education Council disburses grants from the Ministry of Social Affairs Vocational Education Fund. In this regard, employers' and workers' organizations, companies, vocational education councils in the individual sectors and educational establishments, in collaboration with the above parties, are entitled to apply for grants. The Government further reports that the amount available for disbursement from the fund in 2009 is ISK35 million. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide in its next report information on the measures taken in the area of education and training policies and on their relation to prospective employment opportunities.

Business and household developments. The Committee notes that the Government is reconstructing the banking system. It is also providing grants to those with innovative ideas for enterprise creation or growth. The Government reports that it has made partial unemployment benefit payments available where recipients were employed part time, and that remedial measures are now available for jobseekers. The Government also reports that it prioritizes supporting households, protecting welfare and preserving "safety nets", that its Housing Financing Fund has a variety of means to lighten the burden of mortgage holders and other financial institutions, and that it prioritizes the full-strength functioning of businesses as means to resuscitate the national economy. To this end, the Government has reduced customs duties and its value added tax, has introduced construction projects financed by the State, and has granted the Housing Financing Fund broader authorizations to grant loans for maintenance projects that create employment. The Committee asks the Government to provide information in its next report on the impact of the measures to facilitate business growth and household prosperity. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to include information regarding the remedial measures it provides to jobseekers, and the effects of the above measures on lasting and productive employment.

Article 3. Participation of social partners in the formulation and application of policies. The Committee notes that the Ministry of Social Affairs and Social Security appoints local seven-member labour market councils. Each council consists of two members who are nominated by workers' organizations, two members who are nominated by the employers' associations, and representatives of the Minister of Education, Science and Culture, the Minister of Health and the local authorities' association. These labour councils are to submit annual reports to the Directorate of Labour in November, along with proposals on the labour market measures they wish to prioritize the following year. The Committee asks the Government to report on the progress achieved for the implementation of the Convention by these councils. It trusts that the Government will continue to provide information on the consultations held on the matters covered by the Convention with the social partners, including details of their contribution to the implementation of an active employment policy.

Ireland

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received since 2005. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, including information on the following matters.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and labour market policies. The Committee invites the Government to provide an assessment of the impact of its active labour market measures. It would also appreciate receiving information on how the measures taken to promote full and productive employment operate within a "framework of a coordinated economic and social policy", including information on the achievements of the National Action Employment Programme, in terms of employment generation.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the consultations held with representatives of the persons affected, both at the stage of the formulation of employment policies and in relation to the implementation of the measures adopted under such policies.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Japan

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1992)

Follow-up to a representation submitted under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes that, at its 304th Session (March 2009), the Governing Body adopted on 18 March 2009, the recommendations of the tripartite committee established to examine the representation alleging non-observance by Japan of the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159), made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO by the National Union of Welfare and Childcare Workers. These recommendations entrust the Committee with following up the application of the Convention in respect of the questions raised in the representation (document GB.304/14/6). Accordingly, the Committee invites the Government to reply to its 2005 direct request and to provide detailed information on the matters raised in the conclusions of the tripartite committee in its next report, which is due in 2010.

Kyrgyzstan

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in June 2005. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee's 2005 observation, which sets forth the following matters.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Policies to promote employment and coordination with poverty reduction. The Government enumerated the aims of the National Employment Policy, which was established in the context of the national poverty reduction strategy 2003–05, and was approved by Decree No. 126 on 14 March 2005. The objectives of the employment policy aimed, among others, at assisting unemployed citizens in choosing an occupation and placement; improving vocational training and retraining of the unemployed; organizing temporary employment and voluntary work; preventing the rise of unemployment by eliminating or reducing the effect of the factors which lead to mass unemployment; and supporting entrepreneurship and self-employment. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that employment, as a key element of poverty reduction, is central to macroeconomic and social policies. Indeed, the Committee considers that it is essential from the outset for employment objectives to be included “as a major goal” in the formulation of economic and social policy if these objectives are truly to be an integral part of the policies that are adopted. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results and progress achieved with the implementation of the measures envisaged by the National Employment Plan, including information on the employment situation of socially vulnerable groups such as women, young persons and older workers.

The Committee also requests the Government to include in its next report information on the following matters that were raised in its 2004 observation:

- training and retraining measures for workers affected by structural reforms (such as the declining of the Kumtor gold mine);
- the impact of the different programmes adopted by the Government concerning specific groups of workers, such as the “National programme ‘Zhashtyk’ on youth development until 2010” and the “State programme ‘New Generation’ for the protection of children’s rights”.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policies. The Government reported that a tripartite committee has been created to regulate issues of employment promotion, which held its first session on 17 May 1999. The basic tasks of the tripartite committee: were the preparation of the National Employment Policy up to 2010; the development of corresponding measures to determine future directions in reducing tensions in the labour market; and the development of proposals to introduce amendments in Kyrgyz legislation on employment promotion and other regulatory acts in application of employment policy. The Committee asks the Government to provide specific information about the operation of the abovementioned tripartite committee, as well as the involvement of social partners in the formulation and implementation of the National Employment Plan. It also requests information regarding the measures taken or contemplated to involve in the consultations required by the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Lithuania

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 2004)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2008 which mirrors the information already provided in its report for the period ending in June 2006. It also notes the information concerning the measures taken to implement the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189), and the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193), provided by the Government in its replies to the questionnaire for the General Survey on employment. The Committee also refers to its 2009 observation on the application of the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142).

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends. The Government indicates that the employment rate was 63.6 per cent in 2006, increasing to 64.9 per cent in 2007, and that the unemployment rate, harmonized amongst 15–74 year-olds, was 5.6 per cent in 2006, falling to 4.3 per cent in 2007. The Government refers to the National Reform Programme and the working groups established to monitor and evaluate its implementation under the National Lisbon Strategy. The Committee notes the Council of the European Union's March 2009 analysis set forth in its country-specific recommendations for Lithuania, which establishes that, in 2008, employment growth turned negative and unemployment was expected to increase to over 5 per cent. Large-scale employee dismissals were on the increase, affecting in particular the lower skilled, low-qualified, young persons, rural residents and older workers. Finally, the analysis predicts that regional differences in unemployment may become more pronounced. The Committee notes the deterioration that has taken place in the employment situation since its last comments. It understands that the Government intends to support full employment in the context of the European Lisbon Strategy for jobs and growth. The Committee requests the Government to specify in its next report how, pursuant to Article 2, it keeps under review the measures and policies adopted according to the results achieved in pursuit of the objectives specified in Article 1. It recalls that, in the terms of Article 1, an active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment should be pursued "as a major goal". As required by Article 3, the Committee hopes that the Government's report will also provide information on consultation and cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations in the formulation and implementation of employment policies to alleviate the current employment situation.

Regional development. The Government indicates that it has prepared a draft programme for promoting the migration of workforce in the country, which serves to: (i) encourage territorial mobility of its citizens; (ii) increase employability of population; (iii) coordinate workforce supply and demand; and (iv) support enterprises in recruiting relevant employees. The Committee also notes that a suggestion was made to implement measures of the programme in 2008–10. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report information on the implementation of this programme, as well as other specific activities undertaken to promote employment in disadvantaged regions, including the enhancement of labour mobility.

Small and medium-sized enterprises. Cooperatives. The Government reported that, in the 2007 Law on Small and Medium-sized Business Development of the Republic of Lithuania, it established more specific criteria to define very small, small and medium-sized enterprises and provided for new forms of state support for their business activities. The Department of Statistics is collecting and publishing data on cooperative enterprises. The Committee invites the Government to supply further information in its next report on the impact of this new law on the promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises as well as on the measures adopted to support cooperatives on employment creation.

Corporate social responsibility. The Government indicates in its report that, since 2004, it has promoted corporate responsibility for all enterprises as a way to integrate social and environmental concerns and enable interactions with stakeholders. The Committee notes that the Government elaborated upon the draft measures promoting corporate social responsibility in 2006–08 and launched the National Responsible Business Award, which honoured, inter alia, enterprises that managed to establish safe, healthy, high quality and attractive jobs for their employees. The National Gender Equality Programme 2005–09 was established to increase opportunities for women to start and develop businesses and to promote their economic activity. In the context of employment deterioration, the Committee notes that corporate social responsibility promotes the development of enterprises by fostering a positive environment and dialogue amongst businesses and other stakeholders, in particular authorities responsible for designing and implementing active labour market measures and workers' organizations. The Committee therefore welcomes this innovative way in promoting productive employment. The Committee invites the Government to continue fostering programmes in pursuit of corporate social responsibility and to provide in its next report any information available on the impact of the National Responsible Business Award and the National Gender Equality Programme on employment generation by small and medium-sized enterprises.

Youth employment. Other vulnerable categories of workers. The Committee notes that, in 2006–07, the Lithuanian Labour Exchange implemented measures promoting learning, job search and selection of professional opportunities for young persons. The Government reports that it has ten youth labour centres, and that three of the centres were opened in 2007. The Committee notes that, in 2007, a new strategy of youth job centres was approved, which seeks to facilitate the integration of youth into the labour market. In addition, the development of skills necessary for competition in the labour market, and motivating the youth to lifelong learning as part of the strategy. The Committee invites the Government to specify in its next report the impact of the measures taken aimed at finding lasting employment for young workers entering into the labour market. The Government reports that, in 2007, more than 42,000 unemployed persons over 50 years of age were registered in its territorial labour exchange, and that it placed 23,600 of those workers into jobs. The Committee also invites the Government to include information on measures taken to ensure the return of long-term unemployed persons and older workers to the labour market.

Madagascar

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee notes the Government's report received in October 2008, which contains brief replies to the observation of 2007. The Government indicates in its report that the Madagascar Action Plan (MAP) 2007–11, which places employment promotion and poverty reduction at the heart of economic priorities, is supervised by the Ministry of Labour, which is responsible for integrating it with the programmes of all ministries. The Government also indicates that the National Employment Support Programme (PNSE) has been disseminated in approximately ten regions by ministry staff with the support of UNDP experts and that the National Agency for the Implementation for the PNSE (OMPE/VATSI) has been established as a support structure. The Integrated National Monitoring and Evaluation System (SNISE) has also made it possible to evaluate the implementation of the MAP, with the indication that the promotion of full employment was less dynamic during the first half of 2008. Data recorded on employment by the Malagasy Employment and Training Observatory (OMEF) indicate that, while unemployment affected 6 per cent of the workforce, namely 483,000 persons, underemployment (disguised unemployment) remains very high, affecting 60 per cent of the active population. The numbers of new jobseekers have also increased by 4 per cent per year, i.e. an annual average of 382,000 persons of working age (15–65 years) entering the job market. Moreover, according to UNDP estimates, more than two-thirds of the population of the country (68.7 per cent) still live beneath the poverty line and nearly three-quarters of those living in poverty are in rural areas, where nearly 80 per cent of the population live. The Committee also notes that the draft Decent Work Country Programme for 2008–12 stipulated that improvements in employment policy must be based on strengthening the employability of vulnerable groups, such as young persons, women and rural residents, by means of vocational training and the matching of skills to the requirements of the labour market. The Committee cannot overemphasize the key role of an active employment policy in economic and social policies for reducing poverty and creating productive employment. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information in its next report on the results achieved in the context of the MAP in terms of the creation of lasting employment, reduction of underemployment and poverty reduction. The Committee also requests the Government to provide up to date information on trends in the labour market, particularly regarding the general situation, and levels and trends relating to employment, underemployment and unemployment throughout the country, stating what steps have been taken to promote employment among the most vulnerable categories (women, young persons and rural workers).

Coordination of education and training policy with employment policy. The Government indicates that the Malagasy Employment Promotion Office (OMEP) and the employment promotion programme, implemented with UNDP support, give priority to targeting young persons, women and disabled persons, particularly in the informal sector. The Committee notes that, according to UNDP estimates, underemployment affects more than 45 per cent of the workforce in rural areas and that the level of illiteracy remains a source of concern. The latter affects 47 per cent of the population, particularly the female population, and affects nearly 31 per cent of young persons. Despite significant progress in education, nearly 27 per cent of the population over 15 years of age is illiterate, according to figures for 2006, and an even greater proportion has not received basic schooling. Furthermore, 94 per cent of workers have not received any vocational training. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the results achieved through the actions taken by the Government to ensure the coordination of education and vocational training policies with employment policy. It requests the Government to communicate the results achieved in terms of access to lasting employment for young persons leaving university.

Collection and use of employment data. The Government states that the National Strategy for the Development of Statistics has been established with the participation of the Ministry of Labour. The National Employment Information System (SNIE) is operational owing to the establishment of the OMEF, which has a web site on which employment offers and requests may be consulted. The Government points out that training organized by the ILO in 2008 on the MAP/PNSE information system and monitoring indicators was of particular benefit to managerial staff at the Ministry of Labour and the OMEF. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the progress made to establish reliable statistical data, thereby enabling the formulation and implementation of an employment policy pursuant to the requirements of the Convention.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Government describes the functions of the National Labour Council (CNT) and the National Monitoring Committee for the Promotion of Employment and Poverty Reduction (CNSPERP), two tripartite bodies concerned with employment policy. The Committee requests the Government to supply full information on consultations conducted under the auspices of the CNT and the CNSPERP with a view to the formulation and implementation of an active employment policy. It also requests the Government to supply information in its next report on consultations conducted with the representatives of workers in the rural and informal sectors, and also on the outcome of these consultations with regard to employment policies.

Mongolia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1976)

Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report received in November 2008, including information in reply to the Committee's previous comments. The Government indicates that it has been implementing the National Programme on Employment Promotion, the National Programme on Improving Occupational Safety and Health Environment, and the National Programme on Supporting Living Standards of Households, which lead to the creation of 81,172 new jobs in 2007. The Government indicates that the overall unemployment rate was 3 per cent in 2007, of which 56.2 per cent were female. The number of registered unemployed jobseekers stood at 30,800. The Committee notes that the Government declared 2007 as the "Year of Job Creation", whereby a set of activities and measures were developed to promote efforts towards job creation, to improve employment conditions through the distribution of labour market information to all citizens, to reduce poverty, to develop effective and efficient employment services in rural areas, and to revise the legal environment for employment promotion. The Committee also notes that the Mongolian National Development Policy Paper, as approved by Parliament in 2008, provides for a policy directed at implementing the Millennium Development Goals. The Government indicates that the National Development Policy will be implemented within the context of the mid- and short-term development programmes and action plans, the Government Action Plan and other programmes. The Committee asks the Government to provide information in its next report on the results of the implementation of the aforementioned national programmes and the National Development Policy Paper, with particular regard to employment generation. It also hopes that the information provided in the next report on active employment policy measures implemented by the Government will enable the Committee to examine the means by which economic growth translates into better labour market outcomes and poverty reduction (Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention).

Vocational training and education. The Committee notes that the Government is making revisions to the system of vocational training and education so as to provide for greater participation of the private sector and social partners in all stages of activities, such as the definition of vocational training requirements, the formulation of a training policy, the development of training standards and the contents thereof, the organization of trainings, testing of the level and quality of vocations, and to provide training participants with jobs. To this end, the following reforms were envisaged: (i) the development of a legal framework on vocational education and training and for its implementation; (ii) increased finances from the state budget for vocational education and training; (iii) the formulation of standards for vocational training of the population; (iv) development of school buildings; (v) training and retention of foreign teachers; and (vi) the development of a methodological system of management for vocational education. The Committee understands that the Law on Technical and Vocational Training was adopted in February 2009 and that the Government established a 16-member national authority for vocational education and training which will be responsible for working with employers to determine the demand for vocational training and technical education among their employees and consult on issues concerning vocational education, training and employment. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information in its next report on the policies and measures being implemented to improve skills levels and coordinate education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities. The Government is also invited to supply information on the results of the implementation of the Law adopted in February 2009 and on the activities of the National Authority for Vocational Education and Training.

Employment services. The Government indicates that, as a result of the Social Security Sector Strategy Paper adopted in 2003, the Employment Promotion Law was revised in 2006 so as to provide for State employment services targeted at vulnerable categories of workers, employees in the informal sector and herders, increased types of State employment services, and revised revenues and expenditures of the Employment Promotion Fund. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the activities of the employment services, and how they contribute towards implementing active labour market policies.

Youth employment. The Committee notes that youth unemployment is higher than that compared with other age groups. The unemployment rate of young persons aged 15–17 was 18 per cent, and that of persons aged 20–24 was 21.2 per cent. The Government indicates that the draft National Plan on Youth Employment for 2008–15 was formulated with a view to promoting school-to-work transition and to support the employment of young persons. In this context, micro-credit programmes for the promotion of student employment were being carried out in connection with XAC bank. In 2007, the Employment Promotion Fund disbursed 200 million tugriks as micro-credit for employment promotion, which enabled the provision of job opportunities to graduates. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to implement the National Plan on Youth Employment, and to report on the effect such measures have had on increasing the access of young people to sustainable employment.

Persons with disabilities. The Committee further notes that, as part of its efforts to implement the objectives of the National Programme on Support for Disabled Persons, the Government has been working to provide guidance to organizations so as to encourage the employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the results of the implementation of the National Programme on Support for Disabled Persons in addressing the employment needs of persons with disabilities.

Herders. Further to the Policy on Support for Herders in Entrepreneurship, a programme was formulated and approved to encourage herders to become entrepreneurs, and to share herding practices and experiences with young herders. The programme also sought to support herders to run their enterprises effectively and to deliver appropriate employment services and measures for them. The Government is invited to continue to provide information on the measures taken to address the particular needs of herders.

Workers in the informal economy. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it has defined policies on informal economy employment, which is one of the challenges facing the labour market. Further to the National Policy on Informal Employment, measures were taken to coordinate the State's approach to workers in the informal economy, to provide them with information on the laws on employment and social security, to enable such workers to participate in social and health insurance, to organize training courses to provide workers in the informal economy with knowledge of labour relations, occupational safety and health, social welfare. The Government indicates that, in order to formalize records and develop information services for informal workers, the Aimag and the labour and social welfare service agencies carried out a survey on informal workers in 2007. As a result of this survey, 80,000 people were registered and given an identity card. The Committee welcomes such approach to address the needs of workers in the informal economy. The Committee invites the Government to include information in its next report on the implementation of measures to enable the progressive transfer of workers from the informal economy to the formal economy, and any measures to promote complementary relationships between the formal and informal economy and to provide greater access of undertakings in the informal sector to resources, product markets, credit, infrastructure, training facilities, technical expertise and improved technologies (Part V of the Employment Policy (Supplementary Provisions) Recommendation, 1984 (No. 169)).

Migrant workers seeking employment abroad. The Government indicates that amendments were introduced to the law on sending workers abroad and receiving workers and professionals from abroad, which are pending parliamentary approval. The proposed amendments provide for the development of a registration system for compiling information about workers sent abroad, and those foreign workers and professionals working in Mongolia. The amendments also seek to address the duties, responsibilities and requirements incumbent on mediation organizations, revises the procedure for giving special licences, refines the monitoring scheme, and improves state services for mediation organizations. The Committee further notes that steps are being taken to develop a legislative initiative on migrant workers, with the assistance of the Office. The Committee invites the Government to include information in its next report on the implementation of the aforementioned amendments to the law on sending workers abroad and receiving workers and professionals from abroad, including measures taken within the framework of an active employment policy to prevent abuse in the recruitment of migrant workers (Part X of the Employment Policy (Supplementary Provisions) Recommendation, 1984 (No. 169)).

Consultation with the persons affected. The Committee notes that the Tripartite National Committee on Labour and Social Dialogue was established to influence the formulation and implementation of State social policy on labour issues, to develop a tripartite social dialogue system, to monitor the implementation of the Tripartite Labour and Social Dialogue Agreement and to discuss economic and social issues. The Government also indicates that a National Council of Employment was established as a supernumerary organization of representatives from governmental organizations, which represent the rights and legal interests of the Government, employers and workers. The National Council of Employment is tasked with discussing issues relating to employment and unemployment, unemployment insurance and related issues of economic and social policy at the national level. It is intended to influence the formulation and implementation of State policy on unemployment insurance, to monitor budgets of revenues and expenditures of the Employment Promotion Fund, to develop conclusions and recommendations on employment issues, and to submit relevant matters to the competent authority for decision. The Committee asks the Government to report on the activities of the Tripartite National Committee on Labour and Social Dialogue and the National Council of Employment in respect of employment policies and the steps taken to ensure that the views of representatives of social partners (including representatives of the rural sector and the informal economy) are fully taken into account for the purposes of formulating and enlisting support for employment policies.

Morocco

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1979)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the indications provided by the Government in its report supplied in August 2008 in reply to the questions raised in the 2007 direct request. The Government indicates that stability of the macroeconomic framework is considered to be an essential prerequisite for the development of a healthy economy, and that it offers greater visibility to national and international investors by making the Moroccan economy more attractive. Accordingly, the Government reports that this will increase its potential for job creation. The Government also provides information on the positive developments achieved in 2006 by the Moroccan economy, including a decrease in unemployment from 11.5 per cent in 2005 to 9.7 per cent in 2006. The efforts made have had a positive impact on poverty reduction, with the poverty level falling by 6.3 percentage points between 2001 and 2007. The relative poverty rate accordingly fell from 15.3 per cent in 2001 to 9 per cent in 2007. The Committee notes that 1.7 million Moroccans emerged from poverty, and 1.2 million from vulnerability. In 2008, despite the crisis, economic growth reached 5.8 per cent. The Committee hopes that the Government will describe in its next report the monetary, budgetary and trade policies that are contributing “within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy” to the attainment of the objectives of full employment set out in the Convention. It emphasizes in this respect the importance of collaboration between the principal national institutions responsible for the implementation of employment policy, and hopes that the next report will also contain information on the arrangements for cooperation between the National Agency for the Promotion of Employment and Skills (ANPEC) and the other ministerial administrative departments participating in the formulation and implementation of measures which have an impact on employment.

The Government indicates that it has established for the period 2006–08 an “Employment–Initiatives”, plan of action with the goal of the integration of 200,000 jobseekers through three active programmes: IDMAJ (Integration), TAEHIL (Qualification) and MOUKAWALATI (My Enterprise). The Committee notes that, between January and the end of May 2008, the “Integration” programme, the aim of which is to enable young persons to develop skills through a first professional experience in enterprises, helped 19,233 young graduates. The “Qualification” programme, which is aimed at improving the employability of jobseekers, helped 23,000 persons. The “My Enterprise” programme is aimed at the creation of enterprises. An impact evaluation of the plan of action is due to be conducted in 2009 by the National Employment Observatory. The Committee invites the Government to provide an evaluation in its next report of the results achieved by the three active programmes of the “Employment–Initiatives” plan of action in terms of the integration of jobseekers. The Government is also invited to supplement its report with data on the evaluation of the implementation of the MOUKAWALATI programme in terms of the number of enterprises created, the economic sectors concerned and the proportion of women and young persons who have benefited, as well as its impact on employment and unemployment.

Women’s employment. The Government indicates in its report that the vocational training system is not characterized by any structural discrimination against girls. No regulations limit or prohibit the access of girls to any type of training, and all the options are now legally open to them. The Government further indicates that it takes measures to eliminate any discrimination against girls in the vocational training system. The Government also provided data on the proportion of women in the various levels of training. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on any active measures taken to increase the participation of women in the labour market, and the impact of any measures adopted in this respect, as well as the employment opportunities available to beneficiaries following training.

Employment promotion in small and medium-sized enterprises. The Government recalls the implementation of measures to encourage and finance the creation of small enterprises, including the Charter for Small and Medium-sized Enterprises. In the replies to the questionnaire for the 2010 General Survey on employment, the Government indicates that the promotion of small enterprises is an area that requires particular attention from the public authorities, in view both of the role that these enterprises play in strengthening the national economic fabric and their capacity to adapt to the constraints of competition on the international market. In the framework of the “My Enterprise” programme, by the end of May 2008, over 1,000 small enterprises with 3,320 jobs had been created. The Committee invites the Government to provide more detailed information in its next report on the various forms of financing established for the development of small and medium-sized enterprises, the number of beneficiary enterprises and the economic sectors concerned.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in policy formulation and implementation. The Government indicates in its report that it has established a Higher National Employment Promotion Council and regional and local councils. The Higher National Employment Promotion Council is an advisory body of which the social partners are members. At its first meeting in December 2007, the Council adopted a number of recommendations for the evaluation of employment promotion measures, the formulation of new measures and the strengthening of the role of the social partners. The Committee asks that the Government provide information on the activities of this tripartite body and on the manner in which it is consulted in the formulation and review of employment policies and programmes. Please also indicate the manner in which the views are taken into account of the “representatives of other sectors of the economically active population”, and particularly workers in the rural sector and the informal economy, with a view to obtaining their full cooperation in the formulation of employment policies and their help in securing support for such policies.

Mozambique

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1996)

Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government’s report received in October 2008 including detailed replies to its 2007 observation. The Government reports on the adoption of a new Labour Code by Act No. 23 of 1 August 2007 and the implementation of the Employment and Vocational Training Strategy (EEFP). The Committee notes with interest that the EEFP was adopted as the guiding instrument for government policy up to 2015. By implementing the EEFP the Government intends to strengthen the role of the State in the promotion and monitoring of actions aimed at protecting vulnerable groups. The EEFP also advocates the maximization of the employment variable in all development programmes and projects aimed at combating absolute poverty; increasing employment-creation and income-generation opportunities for the population; the introduction of vocational information and guidance to maximize equality among jobseekers in terms of potential and capacities, and improving the operation of the employment services working alongside the private employment agencies. The Committee further notes that the ILO is contributing to the implementation of the EEFP through the “Working out of Poverty” (WOOP) programme developed to promote decent work, greater awareness and application of international labour standards, the strengthening of social dialogue and income-generating opportunities for designated target groups. The Committee welcomes this approach and looks forward to examining in the Government’s next report further information on how the EEFP has improved employment opportunities and where it has failed to meet these expectations.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. From data available in the ILO, the Committee notes that the level of unemployment remains very high. In 2004–05, the urban population had an employment rate of 31 per cent and the unemployment rate in the rural areas was 13 per cent. The Government states in its report that the economy of Mozambique has shown impressive and encouraging signs of recovery over the last ten years and prospects for the future are extremely promising. However, the enormous challenge that unemployment poses, together with the high levels of poverty in the country, demonstrate that a large segment of the population is not benefiting from the economic recovery. The Committee notes that the plan of action for the Reduction of Absolute Poverty Programme (PARPA) would be finalized in 2009. The Committee asks the Government once again to provide information in its next report on the results of the implementation of PARPA. It reiterates its interest to examine information on the extent to which economic growth translates into the creation of lasting employment and poverty reduction for the most vulnerable workers, such as women, young workers and those in the informal sector.

Women. The Committee notes that, according to the available data, the unemployment rate for women (22 per cent) is much higher than that of men (15 per cent) and that their levels of educational attainment are very low compared to those among men. Furthermore, women appear to be affected by HIV/AIDS by a much higher percentage. The Committee asks the Government to include information in its next report on the efforts made to improve the employment situation of women, especially in rural areas, with particular reference to the measures which are being implemented under PARPA.

Youth employment. The Committee notes the high level of youth unemployment, particularly in urban areas where it stands at 57 per cent for persons aged 20–24. The Committee understands that active employment measures targeted at newly graduated young people and young workers are being implemented and that a special focus on youth has been placed in the context of local initiatives for developing training and employment opportunities supported through cooperation with district governments. The Government is invited to include in its next report information on the implementation of measures and programmes at the national and local levels aimed at supporting the social inclusion and labour market integration of young workers.

Article 2(a). Collection and use of employment data. The Government reports that various public and private sector institutions, coordinated by the Ministry of Labour, are responsible for collating information on the labour market. However, due to lack of resources and a shortage of qualified staff, the accuracy of the data currently available is not satisfactory. The Government indicates that the Labour Market Information System has now been set up, which will allow analysis of data concerning economic growth and jobs created under the EEFP. The Committee invites the Government to include statistics on the situation and trends on employment in its next report, and to specify how these statistics are used in deciding on, and reviewing, employment policy measures.

Education and vocational training. In reply to previous comments, the Government indicates that the school network has been expanded on an unprecedented scale and there is now access to general, vocational and higher education in all provinces and districts. In this regard, the Committee notes the adoption of the Education Sector Strategic Plan, which aims at widening access to education and vocational training and at modernizing the technical vocational schools, bringing curricula and programmes in line with economic realities, so as to establish strong links with the productive sector. The Committee further notes that, under the Integrated Programme for Vocational Education Reform (PIREP), a Skills Development Fund (FUNDEC) has been created to support technical and vocational training projects in public and private sector institutions and community organizations at the district level. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the results of the measures implemented under PIREP.

Workers in the informal economy. Support to small-sized and micro-enterprises and to cooperatives. Concerning the measures taken under the EEFP to promote employment creation through micro-, small and medium enterprises (MSMEs) and to integrate informal economic activities into the formal sector, the Committee notes the establishment of an MSME Development Fund coordinated by the Ministry of Planning and Finance, the introduction of fiscal incentives as well as the wider access to government procurement schemes granted to local enterprises. The Committee also notes that the Government refers in its report to the adoption of active employment measures supporting associations and cooperatives in the field of production in order to favour, inter alia, the social inclusion of the vulnerable members of the population. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide such information on the measures taken to improve the legislative and regulatory basis for micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises and cooperatives, as well as on efforts made to shift activities from the informal economy to the formal economy.

Article 3. Participation of social partners in the formulation and application of policies. In reply to previous comments, the Government states that the active participation of representatives of workers' organizations in the formulation of the employment policy has contributed to labour market flexibility and the promotion of fair labour conditions while strengthening social dialogue on issues related to employment and vocational training. Social partners participate in the mobilization of resources for the creation of an Employment and Vocational Training Fund as well as in the establishment of a Vocational Training Centre for Metalwork. They are also actively involved in the campaign for the adoption of new legislation to protect the rights of persons living with HIV/AIDS. The Committee would appreciate if the Government would continue to provide information on the participation of social partners in the formulation of the employment policy as well as on their involvement in the activities of vocational education and training institutions. Please also indicate the measures taken or contemplated to involve, in the consultations required by the Convention, the representatives of other sectors of the active population, such as persons working in the rural sector and in the informal economy.

Myanmar

Unemployment Convention, 1919 (No. 2) (ratification: 1921)

Advisory committees on the operation of free public employment agencies. The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2009, including its replies to the 2006 observation. The Government reports that the Department of Labour provides a free employment service through its network of 77 township labour exchange offices, and that, also through these offices, the Department of Labour provides manpower supply services to industries and establishments in public, cooperative and private sectors. The Government adds that measures are being taken to review the existing labour laws, including those relating to unemployment. The Committee refers to its previous comments and reiterates its hope that the future legislation will ensure the establishment of free and independent workers' organizations for the purposes of consultation on the operation of free public employment agencies, as required by the Convention. It asks the Government to specify the measures taken to combat unemployment in the country (Article 1 of the Convention).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Netherlands

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report for the period ending in June 2008, and the comments provided by the Trade Union Confederation of Middle and Higher Level Employees' Unions (MHP), the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV), and the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) received in August 2008. The Government indicates that economic growth was robust over the period 2006–08, with GDP rising by 2.75 percentage points in 2006, 3 percentage points in 2007 and 2.25 percentage points in 2008. The Government indicates that the positive economic developments also translated into the labour market, with increasing labour shortages caused by rising vacancies with rapidly falling unemployment. Furthermore, due to labour market tightness, people previously disengaged from the labour market found their way into employment. The Government projects, however, that the financial turmoil is likely to disrupt the economic outlook from 2008 onwards. As of 2007, the total participation rate was 76 per cent. In view of the ageing society, the Cabinet committed itself to achieve a participation rate of 80 per cent in 2016, and intends to make a substantial step in that direction by 2011. In its comments, the MHP questions the link between the entry of severely disengaged persons into the labour market and labour productivity. In this regard, the MHP states that people who are severely disengaged from the labour market have yet to find employment, and that there was still a clear need in the Netherlands for ever greater innovation so as to encourage productivity. The FNV observes that there has been an increase in unemployment, and considers that structural unemployment in the lower segments of the labour market will persist, which will require specific measures to be taken in response. Furthermore, the FNV expresses its doubts as to whether the Government's policies are compatible with the requirement that the policy ensures freedom of choice of employment and the fullest possible opportunity for each worker to qualify for, and to use his/her skills and endowments in, a job for which he or she is well suited. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the impact of the active labour market measures on the current employment situation and in particular to indicate how such measures are decided on and kept under periodical review within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. The Committee also invites the Government to provide its observations on the concerns raised in respect of the compatibility of the employment policy pursued with the requirements of the Convention.

Older workers. The Committee notes that the labour participation rate of persons aged between 55 and 64 rose to 50.9 per cent in 2007. The Government indicates that this increase in employment among older workers is an indication that policies aimed at extending working lives are effective. The Government has drawn up a "45 plus" action plan which is aimed at reducing unemployment among people aged 45 years and above. The Ministry of Social Affairs and Employment is supporting the implementation of the action plans by means of a national action team whose task it is to intensify cooperation between regional and local parties involved in the reintegration processes. The Centre for Work and Income is also deploying 300 advisers to provide services for people in this age group. As of February 2008, the goal of 30,000 additional placements was achieved, however efforts continue to be made to further reduce unemployment in this age group. Furthermore, the Government indicates that it set up a Steering Group (Grey Works) to provide a national communication programme in order to remove prejudices against older workers, to promote exchange of practical solutions among employers and employees and to reach agreements with and between social partners on stimulating employees to work longer. The Government also refers to the temporary subsidy scheme for employers and branches to encourage age-awareness policies by developing innovative human resources policies in order to improve sustainable employability of older workers, which will end in the middle of 2010. In its comments, the CNV expresses its belief that it should be made easier for people to be able to work after the legal age of retirement, i.e., 65. In this regard the CNV indicates that it promotes the removal of any “forbid” rules in the Collective Labour Agreements that make working after the age of 65 more difficult. The MHP has also expressed its concern on the implementation of the old-age insurance levy and its impact on stimulating older workers to work longer. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on these and other measures implemented to retain older workers in the labour market.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that unemployment among young people has continued to fall in recent years, falling from 13.5 per cent in 2004 to 9.2 per cent in 2007. The rate of youth unemployment is still twice as high as the average unemployment level. The Government indicates that the Youth Unemployment Task Force reached its target of helping 40,000 young persons find jobs, and was accordingly disbanded in the spring of 2007. The Task Force advised the new Cabinet to sustain its efforts to reduce youth unemployment, and made recommendations for tackling the hard core unemployed youth at the local level, introducing national evaluation criteria for preparatory secondary vocational education and upper secondary vocational education. The Government indicates its intention to implement these recommendations. The Government also indicates that it has appointed a Minister for Youth and Family, in consideration that a comprehensive approach to youth and family policy is extremely important. On 28 June 2007, the Minister of Youth sent his programme “All opportunities for all children”, including policies relating to the transition from school to work, to Parliament for its consideration. In this regard, the CNV refers to the Government’s initiative, “Work-Learn Duty” for persons under 27 years of age, whereby persons of this age group either learn at school, or have jobs, or a combination of the two. The CNV indicates that it agrees with this proposal in so far as it means that municipalities have the duty to assist young persons with an offer of a relevant learning trajectory or a suitable job. The CNV states that this does not mean that pushing young persons as fast as possible into any job is always the right solution from the perspective of long-term participation in the labour market. The CNV also indicates that there should be scope for the introduction of exceptions to this initiative, for example young single parents. Furthermore, the CNV states that provision should be made for persons who have not been offered a job or learning trajectory to claim benefits. The MHP also indicates that the Government’s plans to require employers to allow their workers to obtain a national starting qualification if they do not already possess one offers a comprehensive way forward. The Committee asks the Government to continue to report on measures taken to meet the needs of young persons, and how these ensure that young persons have the fullest possibility to qualify for and to use their skills and endowments for jobs for which they are well suited.

Ethnic minorities. The Government indicates that, while the labour market position of ethnic minorities is less favourable than that of other nationals, there have been some positive developments. A broad-based programme is being developed to reduce language disadvantage and prevent early school leaving. The Social and Economic Council observed that the problem was not lack of a policy, but rather a need to improve the implementation of existing policy. The drive to combat early school leaving will continue and will be reinforced through cooperation between Government, parents, schools, businesses, social workers, youth services, municipalities, police and the Ministry of Defence. The Government also indicates that it supports the recommendation of the Social and Economic Council to develop a strategy aimed at raising awareness of prejudices and reinforcing positive perceptions across society. The Government is presenting its Integration Delta Plan aimed at improving the quality of integration so that more people will be able to complete the integration process at a higher level and participate economically, socially and culturally in society. In addition, the Government has subsidized several projects, many of which involved the close cooperation of social partners and the rest of civil society, aimed at improving the labour market position of ethnic minorities. The Government is requested to continue to provide information on the measures to promote the access by ethnic minorities to the labour market, including information on the steps taken to ensure better implementation of such measures.

Article 3 of the Convention. Cooperation with social partners. The Committee notes that the Government, social partners, provinces, municipalities, implementation offices, as well as individual employers and employees are jointly responsible for the functioning of the Dutch labour market and the Dutch employment policy. The Government further indicates that a Participation Summit was held in June 2007 where the Government consulted with the labour foundation (central employers’ and employees’ organizations) and with the Association of Dutch Municipalities. The Participation Summit resulted in a tripartite policy commitment by which all partners acknowledged the urgency, challenges and outcome of the analysis related to the labour market, and committed themselves to raising effective labour participation rate to 80 per cent, to increase the adaptability of the labour market and to create labour market opportunities for vulnerable groups. The Government is requested to continue to report on similar such initiatives to ensure that representatives of employers’ and workers’ organizations and representatives of other sectors of the economically active population are involved in the formulation and implementation of active employment policies.

New Zealand

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1949)

The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report received in August 2009, including its reply to the 2005 observation as well as comments of the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) and Business New Zealand.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. The Government indicates that Work and Income is part of the Ministry of Social Development. Its role is to help to find work and to pay income support on behalf of the Government. Work and Income has over 4,000 employees with 143 service centres nationwide, regional offices in 11 regions and a national office based in Wellington. Work and Income has also five contact centres located across the country. The NZCTU states that the current economic recession is accompanied by higher levels of redundancies and rising unemployment. It expresses its concern that the statements of the Government on the assistance to be provided to workers facing unemployment have not been backed up by substantive action. In particular, the NZCTU refers to the budget cuts envisaged for tertiary education, including adult and community education, despite the increased training needs for the unemployed having been laid off due to the crisis. The NZCTU also points out that the situation is particularly difficult for young workers; the current youth unemployment rate being just under 20 per cent. The Government indicates that it has introduced a comprehensive range of economic stimulus and social assistance measures to help the country respond to the current global economic situation. These measures include a job support scheme and a specific youth opportunity package aimed at creating new work, education and training opportunities for young persons. The Committee notes the NZCTU's comments concerning the measures recently taken to implement the Social Security Amendment Act 2007, which require parents or guardians of school-age children to plan for, or take up employment, despite the existing shortage of affordable quality childcare. The NZCTU also expresses concern over the partial restructuring of the employment service proposed by the Government, including plans to close the Child, Youth and Family centres in the provinces. The Government clarifies that the current restructuring is being carried out primarily at the national level and aims at refocusing the operations of the Child, Youth and Family service by strengthening frontline service delivery, whereas no changes are being made to the regional structure of the public employment service. The Committee refers to its comments on the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and invites the Government to provide information, in its next report, on the measures taken to achieve the best possible organization of the employment market, in particular by adapting the network of the public employment service to the needs of the economy and the active population.

Articles 4 and 5. Cooperation of employers' and workers' representatives. The NZCTU reiterates that there are no advisory committees on general employment services, or employment policies and practices, with representation of the NZCTU or other unions. It emphasizes the need for the Government to consult in a more systematic way, and to directly involve, workers' representatives in the development of employment policies and practices that will deliver effective measures to respond to pressures caused by the economic recession. While acknowledging that representatives of the Ministry of Labour meet regularly with the NZCTU officers to discuss a range of issues and that irregular consultations are held on specific topics, the NZCTU considers that this does not constitute full and meaningful consultation as required under Article 4 of the Convention. As a consequence, unions are not provided with an overview of future developments, nor are they enabled to suggest improvements to employment service policy and practice. In its reply, the Government indicates that it regularly consults the social partners, and that advisory committees or working parties may be established for specific projects where such a focus is required. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Convention requires that suitable arrangements should be made through advisory committees for the cooperation of representatives of employers and workers in the organization and operation of the employment service and in the development of employment service policy, and that the representatives on these committees should be appointed after consultation with representative organizations of employers and workers. Furthermore, the general policy of the employment service in regard to referral of workers to available employment should be developed after consultation with representatives of employers and workers through these advisory committees. The Committee asks the Government to include in its next report further information on the consultations which have taken place with regard to the adoption of measures to give full effect to the essential requirements provided under Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention.

Article 6, paragraphs (b)(iv) and (c). Movement of workers. In its comments, the NZCTU refers to the difficult situation of many migrant workers who had been encouraged by immigration services to move to New Zealand and who are now facing termination of their contracts and whose temporary work visas are not renewed. The NZCTU suggests that skill shortages lists be reviewed to ensure that migrant workers are not provided misleading information. The Government indicates that its immigration policy has always been based on ensuring that citizens have been given priority in hiring; however, it points out that New Zealand still needs skilled migrants and that these needs are reflected in skill shortages lists, which are reviewed yearly based on extensive consultations with key government departments, employers' groups, training organizations and unions. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report information on the measures taken to facilitate any movement of workers from one country to another, as well as on the measures adopted to ensure that the fullest available information on the situation of the employment market and its probable evolutions, including skill shortages in specific sectors, are made available to the public authorities, the social partners and the general public.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report for the period ending in May 2009, including replies to the 2007 observation, as well as comments of Business New Zealand and the Government's corresponding reply.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market measures. In its previous observation, the Committee asked the Government to keep providing information on the results of its employment strategy, Better Work Working Better (BWVB), launched in 2004. The Government refers to the economic and social indicators used to measure progress towards the goals of BWVB and notes that the steady macroeconomic performance has seen reductions in the official unemployment rate and increases in the participation rate since December 1999, which have resulted in progress towards meeting these goals until the end of 2007. In 2007, there was a registered employment growth of 2.5 percentage points, with employment standing at a record high of 2,173,000 persons and the labour force participation rate reaching 68.8 per cent, the highest rate recorded over the last 21 years. According to Statistics New Zealand, after a record low of 3.4 per cent in October–December 2007, the unemployment rate has progressively increased to reach 4.7 per cent at the end of 2008. With reference to the work–life balance work programme, the Government recognizes that improved work–life balance contributes to increased workplace productivity, improved wellbeing and quality of life, and addresses skill and labour shortages by encouraging labour market participation. The Committee notes that the Employment Relations (Flexible Working Arrangements) Amendment Act 2007 provides employees with caretaking responsibilities with the right to request a variation to their working hours, days of work, or place of work. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide evaluations in its next report of the impact of the various labour market reform measures undertaken on the current employment situation.

Education and training policies. The Committee notes the detailed information provided in the Government's report on education and training policies, focusing in particular on the Unified Skills Strategy 2008–12 which is based on a collaboration and commitment to social partnership through the active engagement of the NZCTU and Business New Zealand, government agencies and other stakeholders, including education and training providers. The strategy aims at lifting labour productivity through skills development. Among the priorities set to be achieved within the framework of the tertiary education strategy, the Committee notes that a special focus is placed on increasing literacy, numeracy and language levels for the workforce, as around 1.1 million New Zealanders have low literacy skills. With reference to the initiatives taken to increase employment opportunities for Maori, Pacific peoples and new immigrants, the Government indicates a number of legislative and other measures that are being implemented, including support mechanisms to increase skills levels, employment schemes benefiting Maori jobseekers through partnerships with local and regional councils, and policy measures to facilitate the temporary entry of foreign seasonal workers. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information, including statistical data, on the measures taken to coordinate education and training policies with employment opportunities for vulnerable categories of workers, specifically Maori, Pacific peoples and new immigrants.

Entrepreneurship. The Government reports on workshops organized jointly by employers and industry partners which were attended by over 3,000 firms for the implementation of the Workplace Productivity Agenda (WPA). The Government further underlines that the most representative workers' and employers' organizations have been active in promoting these workshops to their members. The Committee would welcome receiving information in the next report on the results obtained in increasing workplace productivity and information on measures taken to create employment by the promotion of entrepreneurship of small and medium-sized enterprises.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policies. Business New Zealand indicates that although the Government undertakes regular consultations with employers' representatives on employment-related issues, their views are rarely taken into account, which might have an adverse effect on the job opportunities that the policy measures taken are supposed to promote. In this regard, the Government indicates that, while both employers and employees generally agree that workplace flexibility is positive, the views of other stakeholders are divergent. The Government recalls that, in November 2006, a general consensus on the importance of flexible work for all New Zealanders has been reached, not only including parents or persons with caretaking responsibilities. In this regard, the Committee would appreciate continuing to receive information and data on successes, problems encountered and lessons to be learned from the experience of social partners in New Zealand with regard to the application of the Convention.

Nicaragua

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1981)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adoption and implementation of an active employment policy within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. The Government indicates that, in accordance with Decree No. 30-2006 establishing the national employment policy, macroeconomic, wage-related, fiscal, financial and public expenditure measures have been taken into account to generate productive and stable employment. Furthermore, the Government supports the creation of productive and decent employment through the strengthening of the domestic market and the promotion of policies which provide an attractive environment for national and direct foreign investment in traditional and non-traditional sectors. The Committee notes the adoption of the Decent Work Country Programme 2008–11 which aims to contribute to the economic and social development of Nicaragua through the generation of employment and decent work in a sustained manner within a framework of efficiency, productivity, competitiveness and social justice. The Committee notes that programmes have been adopted under the National Employment and Decent Work Policy (PNETD) to generate employment, provide vocational training and support the integration of women into the labour market. The Committee also notes that in view of the international economic crisis, in January 2009, the Government adopted the Plan for the protection of production, growth and employment, the five central components of which include maintaining financial stability, public investment in infrastructure projects, encouraging private investment and production, the protection of solidary employment through consensus on wages policy and the promotion of local jobs, and fiscal austerity. The Committee once again notes with interest the manner in which the Government has proposed that the Convention be applied and requests that it provide information in its next report on how the measures taken under the programmes implemented as part of the National Employment Policy and the Plan for the protection of production, growth and employment have contributed to generating productive, stable and high-quality employment. In this regard, the Government has indicated that the economic crisis has had a considerable impact on employment in the export processing zones and that the Plan for the protection of production, growth and employment includes measures to facilitate exports. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on developments relating to employment in export processing zones and on the measures taken to ensure that these zones offer lasting and high-quality employment.

Coordination of employment policy and poverty reduction. According to the estimates available, in 2007, poverty affected 46 per cent of the total population, while 15 per cent were living in extreme poverty. In November 2007, unemployment in Nicaragua stood at 5.2 per cent, while underemployment stood at 34.1 per cent. A total of 62.7 per cent of employed persons were working in the informal economy, which represents an increase of 3.9 percentage points since 2005. According to the statistics included in the Government's report, women accounted for only 37.2 per cent of the total employed population. The Committee also notes that under the Zero Hunger programme productive vouchers are offered to help those living on limited resources. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information in its next report on the situation, level and trends of employment, unemployment and underemployment, indicating the extent to which they effect the most vulnerable sectors and the results achieved by the measures taken to combat poverty. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the steps that it is taking to increase employment opportunities and improve working conditions in the informal economy.

Promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises for job creation. The Committee notes with interest that in January 2008, Act No. 645 on the promotion and development of micro, small and medium-sized enterprises (MSMEs) was adopted, which aims to formalize MSMEs through the creation of support centres and a single decentralized register. A National Council for Micro-, Small and Medium-sized Enterprises (CONAMYPE) was established as an advisory body for dialogue and consensus, tasked with determining national priorities, programmes, measures and activities aimed at promoting the sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the results of the measures taken to develop the productivity and competitiveness of MSMEs and the progress made in achieving the objective of turning MSMEs into sources of sustainable, high-quality employment and income.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes that the priorities defined in the Decent Work Country Programme include, in particular, strengthening the National Labour Council (CNT) so that it contributes to devising and implementing employment and decent work policies and programmes. The Committee requests the Government to continue including information on the experience of the social partners in applying the Convention and specifically on the consultations held with representatives of the rural sector, the informal economy and those working in exports processing zones.

Nigeria

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2006 observation, which read as follows:

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. In its 2004 observation, the Committee requested the Government to report in detail on the application of the Convention. In June 2006, the Government reported that a total of 6,640 applicants were registered in the Employment Exchange and Professional and Executive Registries in 2005. Of these, 1,516 applicants were placed in employment, while a total number of 1,989 vacancies were notified. In reply to a request by the Office for supplementary information, the Government provided, in August 2006, figures on the impact of the National Economic Empowerment and Development Strategy (NEEDS) concerning the training of youth under the Vocational Skills Development Programme between 2002 and 2005. The Committee notes that NEEDS covers small-scale enterprise programmes, rural employment promotion programmes, assistance for self-employment, special public work programmes and women's cooperatives. The Committee notes again, as pointed out by NEEDS, that since manufacturing is stagnant there are few jobs for the growing urban population, and urban unemployment was estimated at 10.8 per cent in 2004. NEEDS policies are expected to create about 7 million new jobs by 2007, by making it easier for private enterprises to thrive by training people in skills relevant for the world of work and by promoting integrated rural development in collaboration with the States. The Committee hopes that the Employment Exchange and Professional Executive Registries will effectively perform their essential task within the meaning of the Convention, that is, of ensuring, in accordance with Article 1(1) of the Convention, the best possible organization of the employment market for the achievement and maintenance of full employment and for the development and use of productive resources. The Committee therefore requests the Government to report on the measures taken, in cooperation with the social partners, so that the public employment service is run efficiently and free of charge, and that it comprises a network of offices sufficient in number to meet the specific needs of jobseekers and employers countrywide. It also asks the Government to describe in its next report the activities of the employment service and the effects noted or expected on employment as a result of implementing its poverty reduction strategy.

The Committee further requests the Government to include in its next report statistical information published in annual or periodical reports on the number of public employment offices established, applications for employment received, vacancies notified and persons placed in employment by such offices (Part IV of the report form). Please also provide information on the following matters:

- consultations held with representatives of employers and workers on the organization and operation of the employment service and the development of employment policy (Articles 4 and 5);
- the manner in which the employment service is organized and the activities which it performs in order to carry out effectively the functions listed in Article 6;
- the activities of the public employment service concerning the various occupations and industries, as well as particular categories of jobseekers that are in socially vulnerable positions, in particular workers with disabilities (Article 7);
- measures proposed by the employment service to assist youth in finding suitable employment (Article 8);
- measures proposed by the employment service, with the cooperation of the social partners, to encourage the full use of employment service facilities (Article 10);
- measures taken or envisaged by the employment service to pursue cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies (Article 11).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Pakistan

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2006 observation, which read as follows:

Part II of the Convention. Progressive abolition of fee-charging employment agencies conducted with a view to profit. The Government refers in a report received in February 2006 to the operation of the Overseas Employment Corporation (OEC), which operates in the public sector and has been able, to date, to dispatch 125,000 Pakistanis in various professions for employment abroad. The OEC is utilizing modern techniques by striving to obtain maximum job opportunities for Pakistanis abroad. Foreign employers are required to ensure completion of the necessary documentation and to seek permission from the concerned Protector of Emigrants. Foreign employers initiate the process of recruitment by inviting applications from the general public, including interviews and tests. Neither regional nor provincial quotas are followed in the selection of workers. The Government also states that the Overseas Employment Promoters (OEPs) operate in the private sector and have established an association, that is, the Pakistan Overseas Employment Promoters' Association (POEPA), along with provincial and regional heads. The POEPA deals with the issues and grievances confronted by the OEPs while processing the recruitment of Pakistanis for placement abroad. There exists a close liaison between POEPA and the Ministry of Labour, Manpower and Overseas Pakistanis to resolve issues and problems that are faced from time to time. The Ministry – under section 12 of the Emigration Ordinance, 1979 – has issued 2,265 licences – out of which 1,180 are actively functioning in the recruitment business.

In relation to the abolition of fee-charging employment agencies, as required by Part II of the Convention, the Government reiterates that draft rules have been framed to regulate the operation of fee-charging employment agencies. The Government also confirms that the policy of renewal of licences for OEPs is made for a period of one, two or three years. In relation to Article 9 of the Convention, the Government indicates that due to the economic conditions of Pakistan, levies have been established for migrant workers. Therefore, the Government is not in a position to adopt a policy of abolishing fee-charging employment services for migrant workers. It also adds that punitive action is taken against those OEPs that are involved in violations of the Emigration Ordinance, 1979, and Emigration Rules, 1979.

The Committee recalls the comments made by the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) on the application of the Convention, which were forwarded to the Government in June 2005. The APFTU stated that agencies are allowed to charge fees for recruitment abroad and that some of them are involved in human trafficking.

The Committee also recalls that in 1977 it noted the enactment of the Fee-Charging Employment Agencies (Regulation) Act, 1976, which provided for the licensing of fee-charging employment agencies and empowered the public authorities to prohibit all or any fee-charging employment agencies in any area where a public employment service has been set up. According to section 1(3) of the Act, the Act would come into full force when the federal Government notified the same in the Official Gazette. The Committee has from time to time requested the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the Act into operation in order to achieve the aim of Part II of the Convention, that is the progressive abolition of fee-charging employment agencies conducted with a view to profit. Taking into account the lack of progress in achieving the abolition of fee-charging employment agencies, the Committee asks the Government to provide information in its next report on the following issues:

- the measures taken to abolish fee-charging employment agencies, the numbers of public employment offices and the areas served by them (Article 3(1) and (2));
- the measures taken to consult employers' and workers' organizations as regards the supervision of all fee-charging employment agencies (Article 4(3));

- with regard to overseas employment promoters, the measures taken to ensure that these agents may only benefit from a yearly licence renewable at the discretion of the competent authority (Article 5(2)(b)) and charge fees and expenses on a scale submitted to and approved by the competent authority (Article 5(2)(c)).

Revision of Convention No. 96 and protection of migrant workers. The Committee recalls that, in March 2006, a Multilateral Framework on Labour Migration has been published by the ILO which includes non-binding principles and guidelines for a rights-based approach to labour migration. It provides particularly for the licensing and supervision of placement services for migrant workers in accordance with the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), and its Recommendation (No. 188). Convention No. 181 recognizes the role played by private employment agencies in the functioning of the labour market. The ILO Governing Body invited the States parties to Convention No. 96 to contemplate ratifying, as appropriate, Convention No. 181, the ratification of which would involve the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 96 (document GB.273/LILS/4(Rev.1), 273rd Session, Geneva, November 1998). The Committee invites the Government to provide information on any developments which, in consultation with the social partners, might occur to ensure full application of the relevant international labour standards for the placing and recruitment of workers abroad (Article 5(2)(d) of the Convention).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Paraguay

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the detailed document prepared by the National Employment Service, received in September 2009, in reply to its previous comments.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Government provides detailed statistics on employment characteristics and developments in Paraguay. In 2008, the period of relative economic growth continued, while both the economically active population and the rate of unemployment remained at similar levels to those of 2007 (69.5 per cent and 5.6 per cent respectively). The population of working age registered sustained growth between 2003 and 2008 (increasing from 62.9 per cent to 66.2 per cent) and unemployment among young persons aged between 15 and 19 years (13.6 per cent) and between 20 and 24 years (10.2 per cent) is considerably higher than in other groups, confirming the trend of previous years. The Government indicates that since August 2008, based on the new guidelines of the government plan, the generation of permanent employment has been considered as a means of reducing extreme poverty. A National Employment Plan has been drawn up with advice from the Inter-American Development Bank and efforts are being made to strengthen the National Employment Service (SNE), which devises, implements and oversees employment policy. A new organizational structure for the SNE has been proposed to provide it with a network of employment offices, a section responsible for vocational training, a labour observatory and a planning division. The Committee notes the Decent Work Country Programme, approved by tripartite agreement in February 2009, which includes the priorities of formulating and implementing an employment strategy and generating employment through public investment. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Justice and Labour's Strategic Plan for 2008–13 includes decent work as one of the areas to be addressed. The Committee requests the Government to include information in its next report on the results achieved through the implementation of the National Employment Plan and the Decent Work Country Programme in achieving the objective of full and productive employment set out in the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to include quantitative information in its report on the activities of the National Employment Service. Please also indicate the manner in which it has been ensured that the social partners and the representatives of other groups concerned, such as workers in the rural sector and the informal economy, participate in the formulation and implementation of employment policies.

Regional dimension of employment policy. The Committee notes the information included in the report concerning the agreement reached by the Ministers of Labour of the MERCOSUR countries during Paraguay's Presidency. At the 98th Session of the Conference (June 2009), MERCOSUR expressed its support for the Global Jobs Pact agreeing to maintain the MERCOSUR Employment Growth Strategy (GAN Empleo) as devised by the High-level Employment Group. The Committee notes with interest the declaration signed on 17 June 2009 by the Ministers of Labour of the MERCOSUR countries on the protection of employment against the crisis, which asserts "the right to work as a fundamental human right generating both social and economic wealth in harmony with productive capital". The MERCOSUR initiatives include proposals to expand unemployment protection systems; link the extension of social protection to employment with training activities; develop measures to protect and formalize jobs with the agreement of employers and trade unions to prevent the crisis from having a negative impact on workers; strengthen the institutional framework of public employment services by promoting their coordination in the region; support and strengthen employment programmes for vulnerable groups, especially young persons; and support the operation of micro and small enterprises and individual undertakings. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the manner in which the MERCOSUR initiatives aimed at promoting active employment policies within the meaning of the Convention have been implemented.

Youth employment. The Committee also notes that, with ILO assistance, the National Round Table for the Generation of Youth Employment has been established. The Round Table is an inter-institutional tripartite body encompassing various legislative and policy initiatives aimed at increasing job opportunities for young persons. The initiatives include the establishment of departmental committees in all regions, the proposal for a comprehensive labour integration system, the identification of vulnerable groups and the establishment of tripartite bodies to ensure the implementation of the policies. The National Committee drew up a bill on the integration of young persons into the labour market which provides for the integration into employment of young persons aged between 18 and 29 years through training, work placements, work scholarships, starter employment contracts and part-time contracts. The Committee requests the Government to include information in its next report on the impact of the decisions of the National Committee for the Generation of Youth Employment, including information on the adoption of the draft legislation designed to promote the productive employment of young persons.

Coordination of employment policy with education and vocational training policies. The Committee notes with interest the participation of the Ministry of Education and Culture in the National Committee for the Generation of Youth Employment, which has in turn established a vocational training, education and labour committee. The working group on rules relating to vocational training has received support from the ILO. The Committee notes that the working group refers to the overlap between the efforts of the bodies under the Ministry of Justice and Labour responsible for training (the National Vocational Promotion Service and the National Vocational Training System). The working group also mentions the lack of coordination of both bodies with the Ministry of Education and Culture. The Committee reiterates its interest in receiving information on the efforts made to improve the coordination of education and vocational training policies with employment policy.

Peru

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Formulation of an active employment policy. In reply to the observation of 2007, the Government states in its report for the period ending in May 2008 that, although no national employment plan is in force, the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion has developed Guidelines on Social and Labour Policy 2007–2011. The Guidelines are for management purposes and aim to improve the performance of the labour administration and the promotion of employment and micro- and small enterprises. According to the Guidelines, the Ministry's role is to build capacity to direct the implementation of policies and programmes to generate productive employment and to encourage the creation and/or "formalization" of micro- and small enterprises, to facilitate access to business information and other business and financial development services, to contribute to improving employability and/or labour market integration, particularly among vulnerable sectors of the population and to contribute to improving the production, quality and dissemination of social and labour-related information. According to an opinion from the Autonomous Confederation of Peruvian Workers (CATP) which was included in the Government's report, since there is no national employment plan, implementation of the Guidelines on Labour and Social Policy 2007–2011 is very difficult. The Committee refers the Government to Article 1(1), of the Convention, which requires an active policy to be declared and pursued in order to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment. Furthermore, according to Article 3 of the Convention, the full cooperation of the social partners must be enlisted in formulating the abovementioned policy and the necessary support obtained for its implementation. The Committee hopes that, in the Government's next report, it will find information indicating the manner in which implementation of the Guidelines on Social and Labour Policy 2007–2011 has contributed to attainment of the Convention's objectives. The Committee further hopes that the next report will include the texts in which, with the participation of the social partners, an active employment policy has been defined, as required by the provisions of the Convention.

Labour market trends. The Committee observes that in 2008 the persistently high growth rates boosted expansion of the demand for labour. Employment in urban areas registered an 8.7 percentage point improvement between January and October 2008 over the same period in 2007. Furthermore, the Household Survey of metropolitan Lima shows that the unemployment rate dropped from 8.8 per cent to 8.6 per cent in the first three quarters of 2007 and 2008, respectively, with a 0.4 percentage point reduction in the employment rate. According to the National Statistics Institute (data published in May 2008), poverty rates have dropped since 2004. According to the National Household Survey, in 2007, 39.3 per cent of the population were living in poverty, 64.6 per cent of whom were to be found in rural areas and 25.7 per cent in urban areas. The Committee notes with interest that these figures indicate a 5.2 percentage point drop in poverty rates as compared with the figures for 2008 and 2006. Furthermore, extreme poverty levels have likewise fallen. While in 2006, 16.1 per cent of the population lived in extreme poverty, in 2007 this figure dropped to 13.7 per cent. The Committee notes that one of the strategies set forth in the Guidelines on Labour and Social Policy 2007–2011 is to promote the development of employment-generating programmes for the most vulnerable population groups. According to the Government, the RED CIL Pro-Employment Programme has extended its coverage nationwide by strategic alliances with public and private institutions involved in employment promotion, both in urban and in rural areas. The Government also provides information on the work done to strengthen the strategies for rural action, with emphasis on self-employment, so as to enable rural inhabitants to improve their standards of living and join the labour market on an independent footing. In the CATP's view, progress is insufficient in terms of job quality, as can be seen from the high rate of employment in the informal sector. The CATP states that there are gender and age-group differentials, young people being among the most vulnerable groups.

The Committee refers to the information received in September 2009 in the report on the Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88). The Government states that in January 2009, 15 sets of guidelines agreed on in an Anti-Crisis Task Force were approved to counteract the effects of the international crisis in the economy, production and the labour market. The Committee notes with interest that the proposals agreed on include the implementation of a programme designed to retrain workers laid off as a result of the crisis and place them in new jobs. The Committee asks the Government to include information in its next report on the implementation of the proposals to counteract the effects of the international crisis in the labour market.

The Committee notes in this connection that work is being done to identify the information needs of vulnerable groups (older and disabled persons) and mechanisms for dissemination in order to provide relevant information so that they can render adequate decisions facilitating their access to the labour market. The RED CIL Pro-Employment Programme has developed and implemented measures for intermediation focused on the regions of Ica, La Libertad, Piura and Lambayeque to respond to the needs of the agro-industrial sector employing unskilled labour, organizing workshops to improve their employability and facilitate access to job offers. Work has been done to strengthen the strategies for rural action, with emphasis on self-employment, which will enable rural dwellers to improve their standards of living and join the labour market on an independent footing. However, according to the document attached to the report produced by the Technical Secretariat of the National Council for Labour and Employment Promotion (CNTPE), the Operational Plan for the Agricultural Sector has not been revised in a tripartite framework. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the measures taken (and results achieved) to enable vulnerable groups to obtain productive employment, particularly in rural areas, where poverty rates are still very high. The report should provide information on the nature, extent and trends of employment, unemployment and underemployment in the urban as well as the rural areas of the country.

Training and employment promotion policies. The Government states that, since 52.7 per cent of the population is affected by underemployment, conditions must be created that are conducive to appropriate training for employment so that the demand for jobs can be met. The Committee observes that the strategies set out in the Guidelines on Social and Labour Policy 2007–2011 include improving levels of occupation adjustment so as to match skills supply and demand. The objective is to develop permanent monitoring machinery and disseminate information on occupational training needs. In July 2006, national policy guidelines for vocational training were approved which involved the design of regional policies for vocational training and approval of a regional vocational training plan for every region in the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on progress made in designing regional policies and plans to facilitate the coordination of education and vocational training policies and employment prospects. The Committee notes the proposals and diagnoses carried out by the Technical Committee on Vocational Training and the policy proposals for systematizing vocational training programmes prepared in conjunction with the CNTPE. The National Directorate for Employment has conducted studies on the quantitative and qualitative qualification of human resources in the textile, plastic, pharmaceutical, tourism, agro-industry and maritime and dock work sectors. In 2008, a study was launched on the manufacturing sector. The Committee hopes that the next report will contain information on coordination that has been set up to link the various initiatives mentioned above in order to meet the training needs identified to improve the skills of the workers in the sectors concerned. According to the CATP, employers do not provide training for their workers because it is not tax deductible, despite the submission of proposals to amend the tax law. The CATP also suggests that the State does not invest in improving the education of its citizens or prepare young persons for the world of work. The Committee hopes that the next report will also include information on support obtained in this area from the social partners. It refers in this connection to the Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195), in which members are invited to “define, with the involvement of the social partners, a national strategy for education and training, as well as establish a guiding framework for training policies at national, regional, local and sectoral and enterprise levels” (Paragraph 5(a) of Recommendation No. 195).

Informal economy. The Committee notes from the ILO data published in Panorama Laboral 2008 that, between 2006 and 2007, Peru’s informal economy has shrunk more than in other countries of the region. This is due to the growth of financial establishments and to the manufacturing industry, two sectors with a high number of registered workers. The Government states in its report that in June 2007 a special tripartite committee was set up to address the problems of the informal economy in Peru. The special committee established criteria for defining the economy and informal employment and analysed statistics allowing it to characterize informal workers. The studies carried out by the special committee show that due to the large proportion of informal jobs in micro-enterprises, the cost of joining the formal economy would be too high. Many of the informal micro-enterprises in rural areas have workers with little training and virtually no management capacity, and they see little point in paying taxes or contributions to services in the formal sector to which they have no access. Micro-enterprises in the urban sector likewise have a high proportion of informal jobs, as they opt not to join the formal sector because of the high costs involved. According to the Government, the 2006 National Household Survey shows that 53 per cent of the active population work in micro- and small enterprises and inadequate access to training and on-the-job training is one of the major problems currently affecting the sector, where 89 per cent of the workers have gone no further than secondary school. The Committee notes that the National Promotion and Formalization Plan for the Competitiveness and Development of Micro- and Small Enterprises 2005–2009 has been implemented only in part. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in establishing and formalizing micro- and small enterprises, facilitating access to business information, advisory and other business and financial development services that foster the expansion of such enterprises in a favourable environment, and the implementation of policies and programmes that contribute to making them more productive.

Cooperatives. The Committee notes that in April 2008 a new general Cooperatives Act was drafted. The Committee refers to the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193), the provisions of which encourage governments to “introduce support measures, where appropriate, for the activities of cooperatives that meet specific social and public policy outcomes, such as employment promotion or the development of activities benefiting disadvantaged groups or regions”. The Committee hopes that the next report will include information on the manner in which cooperatives have contributed to the promotion of productive employment in Peru.

Philippines

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1976)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market measures. The Committee notes the Government’s detailed report received in August 2008, including its replies to the 2007 observation. The Committee also notes the replies provided by the Government to the questionnaire for the General Survey on employment in May 2009. The Government reports that it is concerned by the trend of employment lagging behind economic growth. Over the period 2004–07, the gross domestic product grew at an average annual rate of above 6 per cent. However, average annual growth in employment grew at only 2.6 per cent. The service sector grew by 4.1 per cent and continues to account for the majority of employment, while growth in the combined agriculture, fishery and forestry sectors was marginal. The Government reports that the quality of employment improved, as reflected by the rise in wage and salary employment to 5 per cent, the increase in full-time employment to 4.7 per cent, and the decline in the rate of underemployment, from 22.6 per cent to 20.1 per cent. The Government also reports that underemployment remains a more serious problem than unemployment, and that it affects one in every five Filipinos, cutting across age and gender. The rate of unemployment decreased from 8 per cent in 2006 to 7.3 per cent in 2007. The Committee notes that underemployment is more prevalent in less developed regions, where the agricultural and self-employment sectors dominate. The rate of unemployment in urbanized areas and among young workers remains higher than the other categories of workers. The Government reports that it has established the Worktrep Entrepreneurship Program (Unlad Kabuhayan Program Laban sa Kahirapan) to assist marginalized self-employed workers in the informal sector who wish to expand or make their small livelihood undertakings grow into feasible and sustainable business enterprises. The Committee notes that the Government has also established the Magna Carta for Small Enterprises, which aims to promote, support, strengthen and encourage the growth and development of micro-, small and medium enterprises engaged in industry and agro-business and/or services, whether single proprietorship, cooperative, partnership or cooperation. The Committee welcomes the Government’s analysis of the labour market, including level and trends of employment and underemployment. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on how its policy measures are implemented within a framework of a coordinated economic and social policy (Article 2(a)). As requested in the previous observation, please specify how the four major employment promotion strategies: employment generation, preservation, enhancement and facilitation that were articulated in the Medium-Term Development Plan (2004–10) have been executed and whether special difficulties have been encountered in attaining the objectives of the strategies announced. The Committee also invites the Government to specify in its next report the impact of the Worktrep Entrepreneurial Program on assisting workers in the informal sector to enter into sustainable business enterprises.

Youth employment. The Government reports that, in 2007, it established the Philippine Program for Youth to align youth-related programmes with other youth-related goals and strategies of the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE). The Government also reports that it envisions Filipino youth to be productive and competitive workers by 2010. The Working Youth Centre (WYC) has been re-engineered to respond more effectively to new challenges and needs of the working youth. The WYC has facilitated the organization of 2,048 working clubs, with 56,860 members. In 2008, the Youth Entrepreneurship Support projects, subsumed under the WYC programme, were developed and implemented to provide entrepreneurial opportunities to graduates and would-be graduates of agricultural-related and technical-vocational students who could not be absorbed by wage employment. The Government also reports that it implemented the Youth Education–Youth Employability (YE–YE) project to respond to the urgent need to create more opportunities for the youth to study and to enhance their employability. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the measures the Government has taken to provide employment to young workers entering the labour market.

Coordination of training policies with employment opportunities. The Government reports that the Technical Education and Skills Development Authority (TESDA) manages the Technical Vocational Education and Training (TVET) in the country. The Government also reports that one of its TVET policies is the SEEK-FIND-TRAIN paradigm, which aims to: (i) seek business opportunities and jobs through domestic and international labour market intelligence; (ii) find suitable persons for the jobs; and (iii) train the right persons for the available jobs using quality standards developed in consultation with the industry. The Committee notes that the Government has implemented the National Technical Education and Skills Development Plan (NTESDP), 2005–09, which targets: (i) improved access to and equity in TVET; (ii) improved assessment and certification; and (iii) enhanced employability of TVET graduates. The Committee also notes the Pangulong Gloria Scholarships, launched in 2009, which expanded the coverage of the previous Pangulong

Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo Training for Work Scholarship Program. The Government reports that these scholarships will provide free training, training support funds and free competency assessment to support job creation and job preservation. The programme objectives are to: (i) produce a pool of qualified and globally competent workers who are ready to take a job; (ii) develop skills and competencies of the unemployed and underemployed; and (iii) empower the public and private training providers in expanding their absorptive capacities and to enable them to offer programmes for various qualifications including higher levels of technology. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide information on the vocational training and programmes executed by the TESDA, and asks the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken to adopt a training strategy. The Committee would also appreciate receiving information, disaggregated by gender and age, concerning education, training and lifelong learning.

Article 3. Participation of social partners in the formulation and application of policies. The Committee notes that with respect to local government, private recruitment and placement agencies are licensed to operate by the DOLE regional office. The Government reports that, during the process of amending the rules and regulations governing private recruitment and placement agencies for local employment, a series of formal consultations with workers' organizations, recruitment agencies, concerned non-governmental organizations and relevant government agencies took place to ensure that practical changes in the rules were properly deliberated. The Committee notes that policy recommendations affecting labour and employment are subjected to consultation with the Tripartite Industrial Peace Council (TIPC), which is composed of representatives of employers' organizations, workers' groups and government organizations. The Committee asks the Government to further elaborate in its next report on the role that the social partners have had in establishing new conditions to promote cooperation between the DOLE and private employment agencies. Please also include information on the policy recommendations made on the matters covered by the Convention within the TIPC and how representatives of workers of the rural sector and in the informal economy were involved in the formulation and implementation of the employment measures.

Poland

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Implementation of an active employment policy. The Government reports that, similar to the years 2005–06, one of the main objectives of the employment policy in the years 2007–08 had been, inter alia, to increase employment and improve its quality, decrease the unemployment rate and improve human capital. At the end of May 2008 the overall number of unemployed had decreased to 1.5 million persons and the registered unemployment rate was 10 per cent. In this regard, the Committee notes the increased efficiency of the employment services achieved through further decentralization, as laid down in the National Reform Programme 2005–08. It also notes a further improvement in the cooperation between the public authorities and the social partners and their consultation on budgetary matters and matters concerning education and vocational training. Furthermore, NGOs – including representatives of organizations of the unemployed – were included on the voivodeship level. The National Action Plan for Employment 2008 re-emphasizes the Government's endeavours to reintegrate vulnerable groups, such as persons with disabilities and workers over 50 years of age, into the workforce, resulting in 674,300 unemployed being provided with active labour market programmes in 2007. While persons with disabilities benefited significantly from these programmes, the reintegration of workers above 50 years of age into the labour force, whose share is increasing, remains difficult due to skill mismatches with labour market requirements. The Government further reported that results achieved in 2007 through measures aimed at increasing employment and limiting unemployment proved to be better than anticipated. This was substantially influenced by subsidies received from the European Community and the overall economic conditions. The Committee notes that Poland is continuing its transition from an agricultural to an industrial and service economy but that a large amount of persons were employed in the informal economy (2004: 1.317 million persons) and would thus not appear in the statistics. It further notes that, despite dropping significantly from 13.9 per cent in 2006 to 9.6 per cent by the end of 2007 – the lowest unemployment rate since 1992 – Poland's overall unemployment rate was still the second highest in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). Only in the second quarter of 2008, with 7.3 per cent, the unemployment rate was below the OECD average for Europe of 7.7 per cent. It further notes that, although the participation rate of the population above 15 years of age slightly dropped in 2007 to 53.7 per cent, by the first quarter of 2008 this had risen to 58.3 per cent. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing evaluations in its next report of the impact of the various labour market reform measures undertaken on the current employment situation and the involvement of the social partners in the design and implementation of an active employment policy in accordance with Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee further invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the results achieved through active labour market measures to provide employment for the long-term unemployed.

Youth unemployment. The Committee notes that, despite more favourable demographical conditions, the employment rate of persons between 15 and 24 years of age remains low at 25.8 per cent in 2007. Although a significant decrease of 8.1 percentage points in the youth unemployment rate had been achieved, at the end of May 2008, 23.8 per cent (i.e. 289,000 persons) of employment seekers were below 25 years of age. The Government reports that this was partly caused by this age group's delayed entry into the labour market due to the continuation of education. The low employment rate would be addressed through various actions outlined in the 2007 Act amending, inter alia, the Act on Employment Promotion and Labour Market Institutions of 2004. In 2007, 268,900 unemployed persons below 25 years of age had participated in active labour market programmes. This is equivalent to 40 per cent of the overall number of unemployed youths, and represents an increase of 14,000 persons, i.e. 5.5 percentage points as compared to 2006. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing detailed information in its next report on the efforts made to improve the employment situation of young persons, and the results achieved in terms of job creation, particularly as a result of the actions adopted under the 2007 Act amending the Act on Employment Promotion and Labour Market Institutions of 2004.

Women. The Committee notes that, despite an increase of 2.9 percentage points, which is on par with that for men, the employment rate among women remains significantly lower than that of men. In 2006, the employment rate for men stood at 67.6 per cent, the employment rate of women was 56.8 per cent. This situation was further reflected in the unemployment rate: in 2007, 889,100 women and 636,500 men were without employment. The Government is aware of the fact that the unemployment rate for women registered in labour offices decreases at a slower pace than that of men. The “activation programmes” launched in 2007 were aimed to remedy this situation. Some 381,000 women benefited from the programme, resulting in an increase of women participating in community services and trainings. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing detailed information in its next report on the efforts made to improve the employment situation of women, and the results achieved in terms of job creation as a result of the 2007 activation programmes.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 2004)

Articles 3 and 7 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Implementation of a national policy on vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee notes the detailed information forwarded by the Government in its report received in September 2009, in reply to the 2007 direct request, listing numerous measures adopted in the context of the national policy on vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee notes that, since the introduction in 2004 of remuneration subsidies, there has been a significant increase in the number of persons with disabilities employed in the open labour market, which rose from 28,000 to 40,000 in January 2009. The number of persons with disabilities in companies receiving state support for their employment also rose from 173,000 to 180,000. Finally, the Government indicates that the impact of the measures adopted following the passing of the Act amending the Act on social and vocational rehabilitation and employment is already evident from the data registered between December 2008 and February 2009, when the employment of persons with disabilities increased by 20,888 individuals. The Committee invites the Government to continue supplying in its next report information on the application in practice of the measures taken in the context of the national policy on vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities, with specific reference to educational and training opportunities. Please also provide any other document containing statistics, studies or surveys on the matters covered by the Convention.

Article 4. Effective equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women workers with disabilities and other workers. The Committee notes the comments transmitted by the Independent and Self-Governing Trade Union “Solidarność” in July 2009, expressing concern over the practice followed by employment offices, dividing job offers into two different groups depending on whether they are addressed to all jobseekers or, more specifically, to persons with disabilities. In addition, Solidarność indicates that, in several employment offices, vacancies addressed to persons with disabilities are displayed in a different space than job offers generally addressed, which may limit in practice their access to offers and their chances to find a job. The Committee notes the measures introduced by the Government in 2008, through amendments to the 2004 Act on employment promotion and labour market institutions, which also targeted persons with disabilities, including special programmes for the selection and activation of people with special needs in job searching. It also refers to cross-regional and nationwide projects implemented under the Human Capital Operational Programme (HC OP) and co-financed by the European Social Fund, to facilitate access to the labour market of persons with disabilities. The Committee notes that a number of targeted measures have been implemented in 2007 and 2008 through funds allocated under the State Fund Rehabilitation of People with Disabilities (PFRON), in the area of job counselling and advisory services (including the use of a vocational coach), and training with a view to increasing employment opportunities for this category of workers. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the impact of special positive measures aimed at effective equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women workers with disabilities and other workers.

Portugal

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1981)

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee takes notes of the detailed report provided by the Government for the period ending May 2008 which contains comments from the General Confederation of the Portuguese Workers – National Trade Unions (CGTP-IN) and the General Workers’ Union (UGT). In its previous observation, the Committee asked for information on the manner in which the employment objectives of the National Action Programme for Growth and Employment 2005–08 (PNACE) have been obtained, particularly in terms of reducing the number of long-term unemployed and improving the efficiency of the employment services. According to the CGTP-IN, there has been no improvement in the employment situation since the adoption of the PNACE, as economic growth is still far below the EU average and the employment rate has been progressively rising. The CGTP-IN points out that the precariousness in employment was also on the rise as non-permanent contracts increased, rising from 19.8 to 22.4 per cent. Referring to the process of restructuring undergone by enterprises to adapt to increasingly globalized markets, the UGT stresses the importance of creating joint committees to follow up upon the implementation of agreements, in particular as regards employment planning and personnel training plans, so that representatives of workers may participate more effectively in the restructuring process. While recognizing that the overall unemployment rate has showed a rising trend since 2001, the Government underlines that long-term unemployment decreased in 2007, which confirmed the effectiveness of the measures specifically targeting young persons, and adults, and are being implemented to modernize the public employment services. The Committee notes with interest the Tripartite Agreement on a New System of Labour Regulations, Social Protection and Employment in Portugal, signed on 25 June 2008, which envisages the adoption of active employment measures to facilitate the transition from unemployment to employment, namely for long-term unemployed and workers from disadvantaged groups. The Committee notes that the Tripartite Agreement also provided for a reform of the Labour Code in order to modernize employment protection by introducing greater flexibility in the employment relationship and that this reform has been adopted through Law No. 7/2009 of 12 February 2009. The Committee notes with interest that the objectives of full and productive employment were set forth in the tripartite agreements. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the extent to which the difficulties encountered in attaining the objectives of the Convention have been overcome and on the effects of legislative and other measures adopted to improve employment security for workers who have benefited from the provisions of Act No. 7 of 2009.

Measures to promote employment among vulnerable workers. The CGTP-IN states that the employment situation has further deteriorated for disadvantaged workers. Unemployment among women is increasingly higher than among men, especially long-term unemployment, and significant inequalities still exist between men and women in the labour market. The CGTP-IN also indicates that unemployment and precariousness in employment among young persons and migrant workers has been rising since 2004, whereas the percentage of Portuguese workers leaving the country to work abroad has increased. In its report, the Government describes in detail the measures implemented for particularly disadvantaged categories of workers, such as women, young persons, older workers, persons with disabilities, socially excluded groups and immigrants. The Committee invites the Government to include updated information in its next report on the results achieved by the measures adopted to promote employment for vulnerable categories of workers, with particular regard to the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Tripartite Agreement of 25 June 2008.

Education and training policies. The CGTP-IN states that adolescent school drop-outs have decreased only slightly between 2004 and 2007 and that only 52.9 per cent of youngsters aged 20 to 24 had attained secondary education levels in the second semester of 2007. Participation of adult workers aged 25 to 65 in continuous training had declined as the Government did not take measures to ensure the observance of the legislation allowing workers to benefit from a minimum of 35 hours of vocational training every year. The CGTP-IN also reports that workers with higher qualifications still have greater access to continuous training than low-skilled workers. The Government refers to the adoption of the Tripartite Agreement on the Reform of Vocational Training concluded on 14 March 2007 with the aim, among others, of creating the conditions needed to attain the objectives of the initiative Novas Oportunidades, namely increasing the secondary-school enrolment rate and improving youth and adult qualifications. The Committee welcomes the information provided in the Government's report on the application of the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142), and asks the Government to continue to provide updated information on the measures taken to coordinate education and training policies with employment in the context of the recent reform of vocational training, with particular reference to the implementation of the right to training provided under the Labour Code.

Russian Federation

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's brief report received in October 2008. In its previous comments, the Committee requested information on the results of the implementation of the social and economic development programme on employment generation, and how employment policy measures were reviewed regularly within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. The Committee also requested information on measures taken to reduce labour market differences among categories of workers and how unemployment benefits have been expanded in order to cover a greater number of unemployed persons and promote the re-entry into employment of beneficiaries. In its brief reply, the Government indicated that Decision No. 194 of 23 March 2008 was adopted to establish the level of the minimum (781 roubles) and maximum (3,124 roubles) amounts of unemployment benefits. The Committee also notes the measures envisaged under the Anti-Crisis Programme of the Government of the Russian Federation for 2009 which prioritizes, among other things, developing human resources; maintaining and developing industrial and technological capabilities for future growth; stimulating domestic demand for Russian goods as the basis for revitalizing economic growth; stimulating innovation and restructuring the economy; creating the environment for economic growth by improving the key market institutions and lifting barriers to business operation; and ensuring macroeconomic stability and preserving the trust of Russian and foreign investors. The Committee notes that regional governments are implementing the same set of anti-crisis policies, including measures co-financed by the federal Government and other measures, independently financed from regional and local budgets. The key goals of the anti-crisis policies implemented by the regions include, among other things, joint implementation of an employment support programme. To this end, the federal Government will provide employment support and unemployment relief subsidies to the regions for: vocational training and retraining of employees threatened by mass layoffs; organization of community work, temporary employment, internship and experience-gaining programmes for unemployed persons and individuals seeking jobs, such as new graduates and employees threatened by mass layoffs; targeted support of persons wishing to move to a different location where jobs are available, including jobs created under targeted federal programmes and investment projects; and, support for small and medium-sized businesses and self-employment of jobless persons. As in its previous observation, the Committee requests that the Government report in detail, in its next report, on the measures taken to promote full employment within a “framework of a coordinated economic and social policy” (Article 2(a)). The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the impact in terms of employment creation of the measures taken through the 2009 Anti-Crisis Programme. The Committee requests that information be supplied on the situation, level and trends of employment, unemployment and underemployment, both aggregated and disaggregated, with respect to particular categories of workers, including young persons, women jobseekers, older workers and workers with disabilities.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Committee recalls that the Convention asks for consultations with all persons affected by the formulation and implementation of employment policies, in particular, the representatives of employers and workers. It is the joint responsibility of governments and employers’ and workers’ organizations to ensure that the most vulnerable and marginalized groups of the active population are represented and associated in the formulation and implementation of measures of which they would be the prime beneficiaries. The Committee trusts that the Government will supply detailed information on this important matter in its next report.

Part V of the report form. ILO technical cooperation. The Committee recalls that the cooperation programme between the ILO and the Russian Federation 2006–09 provided that improvements in employment policy must be based on changes in social policy. The Committee asks the Government to include in its next report information on the initiatives undertaken with ILO support to promote the objective of the creation of productive employment as set out in the Convention.

San Marino

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received since 1998. The Committee hopes that a report will be supplied and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its 1998 direct request, in which it noted the provisions of sections 46 and 47 of a Bill respecting placement and vocational training as they relate to the responsibilities, composition and functioning of the Placement Commission. The Committee considered that the establishment of this Placement Commission would meet the requirements of Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention with regard to the “suitable arrangements” which were to be made for the cooperation of representatives of employers and workers in the organization and operation of the employment service and in the development of its general policy. The Committee had therefore requested, in 2005, a copy of the Act replacing the Bill. Since there has been no response, the Committee asks the Government to transmit a detailed report so that it can re-examine the situation in the light of the texts which are in force.

Sao Tome and Principe

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. The Committee notes the Government’s report received in April 2007 in reply to its 2006 observation, which includes a brief statement that there is no formal cooperation between the public employment services and representatives of employers’ and workers’ organizations and that the public employment services have not yet been properly organized to act in accordance with the Convention. The Committee understands that human resources development and access to basic social services are one of the five principles set out in the National Strategy for Poverty Reduction (NSPR – Estratégia Nacional De Redução de Pobreza), which was validated in December 2002 and approved in January 2003. From the information contained in the update of the NSPR published in January 2005, urban and rural unemployment in the country is still a matter of serious concern. In this context, the Committee emphasizes the need to ensure the essential function of employment services, which is to achieve the best possible organization of the labour market, including its adaptation to meet the new needs of the economy and the active population (Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention). It requests the Government to provide the statistical information available in published annual or periodical reports concerning the number of public employment offices established in the district of Agua Grande and in rural areas, the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified and the number of persons placed in employment, disaggregated by gender and the location of the offices concerned (Part IV of the report form).

Cooperation of the social partners. The Committee refers once again to the provisions of Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention and asks the Government to report on the manner in which the representatives of the social partners have been associated with the operation of the public employment service. The Committee recalls that for many years, it has been pointing out that the above provisions of the Convention require the establishment of advisory committees to secure the full cooperation of representatives of employers and workers in the organization and operation of the employment service.

The Committee recalls again that the Office is available to provide the Government with technical advice and assistance for the implementation of a public employment service within the meaning of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Senegal

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report in reply to its 2007 observation has not been received.

Regulation of fee-charging employment agencies. Articles 10–14, Parts III and V of the Convention. The Committee noted the observations made by the National Confederation of Employers of Senegal (CNES) and the National Confederation of Workers of Senegal (CNTS) on the 2006 Government report. To remedy the abuses, the CNTS requested the Government to establish rules governing the operation of employment agencies, in particular definitions of employers in connection with the protection of workers. Based on the information provided by the Government in the questionnaire for the General Survey on employment (2010), the Committee notes that the procedure for the adoption of the decree defining the obligations of employment agencies and the protection of workers employed by temporary work agencies under section L226 of the Labour Code is still ongoing and that the country would appreciate assistance from the Office for the application of the decree once adopted. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the decree when adopted, as well as information on other regulations on fee-charging employment agencies and on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice including, for instance, extracts from official reports. It further requests the Government to indicate any other measure taken to regulate all fee-charging agencies and ultimately to abolish fee-charging agencies conducted with a view to profit.

Revision of Convention No. 96. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the issue of the ratification of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), is being examined. The Committee recalls that Convention No. 181, which takes into account the flexibility in the operation of labour markets, is the most up to date standard on the role and operation of private employment agencies and it again invites the Government and the social partners to examine the possibility of ratifying Convention No. 181, which would result in the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 96.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information since the report received in September 2006. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report, including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee's 2007 observation, which sets forth the following matters:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy and poverty reduction. The Government indicated that the urban unemployment rate remains very high, although it fell to 12.7 per cent in 2001, compared with 14.1 per cent in 1994. The Committee noted the Growth and Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (GPRSP) 2006–10, of October 2006, which indicated that the principal problem of the employment market is visible underemployment, which is at the rate of 21.8 per cent of the population. The Government reported that it has formulated, in a participatory manner, a new national employment policy (PNE), which was being validated. In this respect, the Committee noted from the GPRSP 2006–10 that, with a view to promoting a decent employment policy, the State will implement a policy of productive and inclusive employment, which has the following specific objectives: (i) promoting the improved management and employability of the labour force; (ii) reinforcing the effectiveness and transparency of the employment market; (iii) promoting self-employment in rural and urban areas; (iv) increasing the employment content of growth; (v) reinforcing and intensifying the contribution of productive sectors to employment creation and poverty reduction; (vi) developing and modernizing the public employment system; (vii) promoting an improved organization of the participation of migrant workers; (viii) promoting labour-intensive works; (ix) improving the economic and social situation of persons experiencing difficulties on the employment market; and (x) improving the health and living conditions of workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide a report containing detailed information on the manner in which the employment policy objectives set in the context of the GPRSP 2006–10 have been achieved. It also requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved by the measures adopted in the context of the poverty reduction strategy, with particular reference to young persons and women, and through any other measures implemented to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment.

Compilation and utilization of employment data. The Government indicated that the employment market is characterized by a lack of visibility, with no coordination between the various sources of information. To remedy this situation, the Government indicates that a project has been developed for the establishment of a national observatory of employment and vocational skills (ONEQP). The Committee noted that the Government has also received ILO assistance for the initiation of other projects, such as the operational list of occupations and jobs (ROME). In this respect, the National Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Senegal (UNSAS) reported slowness and delays in the implementation of the National Employment Agency, ONEQP and ROME. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate in the next report the progress achieved in the compilation of employment data, with an indication of the employment policy measures adopted as a result of the establishment of the Statistical Agency and the ONEQP.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the design and formulation of policies. In reply to the comments of the UNSAS, the Government emphasized that tripartism is used systematically in all phases of the design, implementation and evaluation of all employment programmes. It adds that the National Employment Policy Monitoring Committee has been replaced by the Intersectoral Committee to follow up the implementation, supervision and evaluation of the statement by Heads of State and Government of the African Union on employment and combating poverty. The Government indicated that this tripartite committee has held several meetings with a view to formulating the new national employment policy. The Committee requests the Government to provide examples in its next report of the consultations held with the social partners, among others in the context of the intersectoral follow-up committee, on the subjects covered by the Convention, with an indication of the opinions expressed and the manner in which they have been taken into account. The Committee recalls that the consultations envisaged by the Convention require the consultation of representatives of all of the persons affected, including those in the rural sector and the informal economy, and it requests the Government to indicate the measures envisaged with a view to ensuring that the latter collaborate fully in the design and implementation of employment policies.

Part V of the report form. ILO technical assistance. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the action taken as a result of the technical assistance received from the ILO, with a view to the implementation of an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Slovakia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Active labour market measures. Youth unemployment. The Committee notes the Government's report received in November 2008, replying to the observation of 2007. It notes that youth unemployment has decreased (from 26.6 per cent in 2006 to 20.3 per cent in 2007) due to more targeted active labour market policy measures and increased participation in education and training. The Government refers to the school leavers' work experience programme as an efficient active labour market tool designed to prevent long-term unemployment of young persons under 25 years of age. This programme allows school leavers to acquire vocational skills and practical experience through work experience in a job which corresponds to the educational level they have achieved. The Committee further notes that under the National Reform Programme for 2008–10, a set of new active labour market policy measures were adopted in 2008 with the objective of decreasing regional differences in employment rates, especially in underdeveloped regions with high unemployment rates. It notes that long-term unemployment remains the highest in the European Union (EU) area (8.3 per cent in 2007 with the overall unemployment rate standing at 11 per cent) and the share of older workers in the labour force is far below the EU average. As regards other measures taken to ensure coordination between lifelong learning policies and prospective employment opportunities, the Committee notes that, by Resolution No. 382 of 25 April 2007, a Strategy of Lifelong Learning and Lifelong Counselling was established. The Committee asks the Government to include information in its next report on the impact of the measures taken in tackling regional disparities and long-term unemployment with specific reference to the measures implemented under the Strategy of Lifelong Learning and Lifelong Counselling in favour of young unemployed.

Roma minority. In reply to previous comments, the Government indicates that a number of pilot projects are being carried out to create employment opportunities for members of the Roma community through partnerships with regional governments, employers, Roma organizations, NGOs and public employment services. These measures include educational activities, financial support for the establishment of municipal social enterprises, and the provision of financial subsidies for job creation under the state budget. In this connection, the Government states that the objective to create job opportunities for the Roma minority and to offer education and training in line with the needs of the local labour market has been achieved to a modest extent. The Committee notes that a special focus has been placed on improving the level of educational attainment of the Roma minority with the adoption in 2008 of a new programme for upbringing and education of the Roma children and pupils, including promotion of their secondary and tertiary education. The Committee requests the Government to continue to report on the activities undertaken with a view to promoting productive employment of the Roma population, in particular with regard to the measures implemented to increase their success in achieving appropriate levels of qualifications and skills.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policies. The Government reiterates that the comments of social partners are duly taken into account in the elaboration of legislative and other measures to be taken in relation to employment policy, notably through consultations carried out at the national level within the tripartite Economic and Social Council. It states that representatives of disadvantaged groups, including the Roma minority, have been consulted on the implementation of employment-related measures designed for disadvantaged jobseekers. The Committee also understands that under the National Reform Programme for 2008–10 the Government intends to review the labour legislation and that consultations with the social partners are expected to play a key part in this process. The Committee again asks the Government to provide indications in its next report on the progress made in involving the social partners in the design and application of employment policies.

Spain

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1960)

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. Skills and training of employment service personnel. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009. The Government refers to the working of the Public Employment Services Information System implemented in May 2005 to collect information produced as a result of the management of the public employment services of the State and the autonomous communities. The Government also provides statistics on the mediation role played by the public employment services.

In February 2009, the Office sent the Government a communication from the Independent Federation of Civil Servants (CSI-F), which expressed concern at the lack of skills among staff responsible for occupational guidance in the Autonomous Community of Galicia. The CSI-F refers to the provisions of Article 9 of the Convention, and states that the Executive Council of Galicia, through the Labour Council, hired personnel who had no specific qualifications for guidance work. This, in the CSI-F's view, has serious consequences, such as the de-professionalization of the public service of Galicia, poor quality in the supply of these services to the public, and the demotivation of those who do have proper qualifications.

The Committee also notes the comments by the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Commissions (CC.OO.) of Andalucia, appended to the Government's report. This organization alleges failure to implement the agreements signed by the Government of Andalucia concerning the increase in staff for the offices of the Andalusian Employment Service and the lack of any provision to fill vacant posts, to the detriment of performance and quality of the services. In the view of the CC.OO. of Andalucia, poor human resources management and the lack of professionalism are causing great dissatisfaction among the users of employment offices because the quality of the public service is declining.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures that ensure the operation of employment offices sufficient in number to meet the needs of employers and workers in each of the autonomous communities. It furthermore invites the Government to include in the report precise information on the manner in which it is ensured that the staff of the employment services in the Autonomous Communities of Andalucia and Galicia have the necessary skills to perform the duties set forth in the Convention and that they have received adequate training. The Committee points out that the report form for the Convention requests the Government, under Article 9, to provide particulars of the arrangements made for subsequent training of employment service staff, and that this is particularly important in view of current circumstances in the labour market in Spain.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Sri Lanka

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1958)

In relation to the 2004 observation, the Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009 and the statement of the National Trade Union Federation (NTUF).

Part III of the Convention. Regulation of fee-charging employment agencies. The Committee notes with interest the National Labour Migration Policy for Sri Lanka, adopted in October 2008 and formulated by a Tripartite Steering Committee. The policy document was developed with the support of the ILO and articulates the State policy regarding Sri Lankans working overseas. The Government also continues to provide in its report detailed information on the system of licensing and supervision of domestic private employment agencies mediating Sri Lankan employees abroad. Besides a continuation of inspections in the countries where Sri Lankan employees are working, the Sri Lanka Bureau of Foreign Work endeavours to prevent illegal migration through protective and welfare schemes aimed at reducing irregularities and exploitation faced especially by women migrant workers. The Committee also notes with interest that, as indicated by the NTUF, Sri Lankan trade unions have signed agreements with Middle Eastern trade unions to protect and assist Sri Lankan housemaids working in the region. The Committee welcomes this approach and invites the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to implement the National Labour Migration Policy for Sri Lanka to effectively combat the illegal placement of nationals abroad (Article 10(d)). It further invites the Government to continue to communicate relevant information on the application of the Convention in practice, also in regard to private employment agencies acting domestically (Part V of the report form).

Revision of Convention No. 96. The Committee again draws the Government's attention to the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), which recognizes the role played by private employment agencies in the functioning of the labour market. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the ILO Governing Body invites member States that have ratified Convention No. 96 to contemplate ratifying, as appropriate, Convention No. 181, the ratification of which will, ipso jure, involve the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 96 (document GB.273/LILS/4(Rev.1), 273rd Session, Geneva, November 1998). The Committee invites the Government to include in its report information on any developments which, in consultation with the social partners, might occur in this regard.

Sudan

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1970)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Policies to promote employment and coordination with poverty reduction. The Committee notes the Government's report received in October 2008. In its 2005 observation, the Committee requested detailed information on the measures taken to ensure that employment, as a key element of poverty reduction, was central to macroeconomic and social policies. The Government refers to a strategy adopted for the period 2007–13, through which the Ministry of Labour intends to optimize the use of human resources within a framework of institutions and social justice, and which is aimed at realizing a solid legal framework in the country. According to the Government, the employment policy occupies a central axis in the five-year plan for 2007–11. In this context, a poverty reduction strategy and programmes were adopted for the employment of university graduates and rural workers. The Committee notes that, according to a Joint World Bank–UNDP evaluation, about 60–70 per cent of the population in the North and 90 per cent in the South of the country are estimated to be living below the poverty line, with incomes of less than US$1 per day. Persons living in rural areas, in particular women and internally displaced populations, are the hardest hit by poverty. Beyond the state of Khartoum, the infrastructure (roads, railways, power and water) is either non-existent or underdeveloped across the country. The Committee recalls that the UN adopted a policy for post-conflict employment creation, income generation and reintegration which stresses that, in post-conflict situations, employment is vital to short-term stability, reintegration, economic growth and sustainable peace. The Committee therefore invites the Government to report on the measures taken to develop and implement an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention, with the assistance of the ILO and other international agencies. The Government is also asked to provide information on how it intends to meet, in the context of the five-year plan for 2007–11, the employment needs of vulnerable categories of workers such as women, young persons, older workers and persons with disabilities.

Collection and use of employment data. The Government indicates that it carried out a population census in 2008 so as to compile information needed by planners and policy-makers. It further indicates that the results of this exercise would be released in 2009 and that this population data would lead to the preparation of a survey for the collection of data and information on the labour market. It further reports that, in September 2008, a workshop was held with the participation of experts, specialists and representatives of workers' and employers' organizations on data collection. The Committee also notes that the ILO was requested to provide technical assistance so as to carry out the labour market survey. The Committee invites the Government to provide an account of the progress made to improve the labour market information system and to include in its next report detailed statistics on the situation and trends in employment, specifying the manner in which the collected data has been used to determine and review employment policy measures.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in policy preparation and implementation. The Committee notes the Government's statement indicating that no decision is taken without the participation of employers and workers. The Committee can only emphasize once again the importance of giving full effect to Article 3, specifically for Sudan which experiences a very high and persistent unemployment. The Committee hopes that the next report will include information on the consultations held with the representatives of social partners in order to secure their cooperation in the formulation and implementation of employment policy programmes and measures.

Swaziland

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1981)

Revision of Convention No. 96. The Committee notes the Government's statement in the report received in September 2009 indicating that there has been no change in the legislation but that the Employment Bill will be re-tabled in Parliament. The Government is considering the proposal made by the Committee to denounce Convention No. 96 and consider ratification of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181). The Committee notes that the proposal will be discussed at the Labour Advisory Board and the Government will keep the Committee informed of developments in this regard. The Committee welcomes this approach and hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to communicate the Labour Advisory Board's recommendation regarding the ratification of Convention No. 181. The Committee invites the Government and the social partners to refer to its General Survey on employment (2010) which contains an overview of Convention No. 181 and makes an assessment of this Convention's provisions. The Committee recalls that the provisions of Convention No. 96 remain in force until the ratification of Convention No. 181 becomes effective.

Sweden

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending in June 2008 including replies provided to the 2007 direct request. It further notes the observations submitted by the Swedish Confederation of Professional Associations (SACO), the Swedish Trade Union Confederation (LO) and the Swedish Confederation of Professional Employees (TCO), which were forwarded to the Government in December 2008.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Active labour market policies. Consultation with the social partners. The Government recalls in its report that after a period of substantial economic growth, the international economy has been increasingly characterized by a turbulent financial market. In its autumn 2008 Budget Bill, the Government underlined the importance of conducting a responsible policy to cushion the negative effects expected in the wake of financial worries. According to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) figures, in 2007 the employment rate of the population aged between 16 and 64 stood at 75.7 per cent, an increase by 1.2 percentage points – equivalent to 111,000 persons – as compared to 2006. Similarly, the participation rates increased from 70.8 per cent in 2006 to 71.1 per cent in 2007, cumulating in a total of 4,892,000 persons in the first half of 2008. The Government reports that at the same time, the number of persons in social exclusion fell by 121,000. It states that this was the largest reduction in 40 years and had favourable effects on persons that, inter alia, had been unemployed, on sick leave and on subsistence allowance. It further indicates that the “Activity guarantee” was discontinued, labour market policy programmes had been sharply reduced and that the remaining programmes had been restructured. As part of the new policy programme, a new public employment service was created. This was aimed at improving opportunities for control and enhancing operational efficiency and focused especially on those who traditionally had most difficulties to enter into, or return to the labour market. The SACO saw some of the measures taken as counterproductive and questioned the competence of the public employment service for providing qualified services for skilled jobseekers. The Committee further notes that the new labour market policy allowed for fixed-term contracts and that the reduction of the income tax was an incentive to hire new employees. The policy further included an adjustment of the Swedish education system to meet the demand of the labour market. An additional part of this policy was a reform of the unemployment system through a raise of premiums, the reduction of benefits and the raise of the threshold for entering into the insurance system. The LO and the TCO criticized the Government of “making it more worthwhile to work” as having mainly been put in practice through the Government's reductions of spending in the welfare system. While the Government's strategy has been to reduce income taxes for those who are working, persons who do not work, such as pensioners and students, have not benefited from cuts in the income taxes. In addition, the LO and the TCO observed that making it easier and less costly to take on new employees was a strategy directed to employers, not to employees. The Committee refers to Article 1(1), which requires stimulating economic growth through active labour market policies. The Committee hopes that in its next report, the Government will outline how the difficulties that have been encountered in attaining the objectives of the Convention have been overcome. It further requests the Government to reflect in detail in its report how the views expressed by the social partners have been taken into account in formulating and enlisting support for the policies undertaken.

Youth, long-term unemployed, immigrants and workers with disabilities. The Government reports that despite the overall downward trend of unemployment rates, youth unemployment showed a slight increase and unemployment among foreign-born persons remained twice as high (11.9 per cent) as among persons born in Sweden. Employment of persons with disabilities is also significantly lower than in the rest of the population: only 50 per cent among women and 54 per cent among men of this group are employed. The new policy measures targeting these groups – such as the “New Start Jobs” programme aiming at the youth, the “Step-in Jobs” focusing on asylum seekers with residence permits, the “Job and development guarantee”, directed toward the long-term unemployed and the 2007 Spring Fiscal Bill appropriating incentives to hire workers with disabilities – have brought some improvements. The Committee notes that nearly 40,000 young persons, aged 16–24, and 34,000 persons born outside of Sweden benefited from the increase of employment in 2007. Furthermore, 18,000 workers between 55–74 years found employment in the reporting period. The TCO and the LO saw the reform of the unemployment benefits system as detrimental principally for young workers and for women, as these groups dominated the low-skilled labour market with its high fluctuation rate and temporary nature. The SACO further notes that the employment situation of immigrants still gave reason for concern. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing detailed information in its next report on the efforts made to improve the employment situation of youth, long-term unemployed, immigrant and workers with disabilities and how possible detrimental effects of the aforementioned measures observed by the workers' organizations are remedied.

Women. The Government reports that since 2006, employment has increased more rapidly among women than among men, yet also states that unemployment has declined more steeply for men than for women. While the overall labour force participation rate increased in 2007, the labour force participation rates for women as compared to men were 68.3 versus 73.9 per cent. The Government reported that it had expanded the “New Start Jobs” programme to better cater for women’s needs, which led to a 50 per cent participation rate in the public sector. However, the increase was slower in the private sector and stood at 36 per cent at the end of June 2008. The TCO and the LO observed that the Government did not sufficiently consider the specific needs of female workers, since in addition to the general detrimental aspects of the unemployment insurance system, this group was particularly affected by the exemption of parental leave. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved as a result of the measures adopted to promote female employment, particularly in regard to the “New Start Jobs” programme.

Thailand

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in April 2007. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee’s 2008 observation, which sets forth the following matters.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment policy and social protection. The Committee recalls that, as noted in its previous comments, an unemployment insurance scheme was launched in 2004. The Government’s report indicates that, between July 2004 and February 2007, out of a total of 403,403 persons registered under the scheme, 111,568 persons – representing 27 per cent of the beneficiaries were re-employed within six months following registration, and a remaining 722 persons were referred to further skills training. Research studies conducted during 2004–05 indicate that there are 15,500,000 workers in the informal economy that are not covered by any form of social protection. To address this, and as reflected in the Ninth National Economic and Social Development Plan (2002–06), workers from the informal economy receive benefits to the same extent as other insured persons upon registration. The Committee also notes a communication forwarded by the National Congress of Thai Labour in April 2007, which insists that there are many workers in the informal sector including the service industry as well as self-employed persons who are not covered by the social security system. In a communication received in October 2007, the Government indicates that concrete measures and plans will soon be introduced to better serve and protect workers in the informal economy. The Committee requests the Government to include in its next report information on the extent, terms and type of coverage reaching workers in the informal economy under the revised scheme as well as any other steps taken to coordinate the employment policy measures with unemployment benefits.

Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee notes that the Government established a policy on employment promotion to increase income, as shown by the priority given to three strategies in its development plan – development of human potential and social protection strategy, sustainable restructuring of rural and urban development strategy and upgrading national competitiveness strategy. The policies implemented under these strategies include job creation for self-employed persons as well as enabling small business ventures through skills training for unemployed persons and enhancing access to credit from cooperative funds. It also includes skills training to generate job opportunities in the informal sector, remote areas as well as to promote overseas employment. Furthermore, online labour market information systems have been set up to assist jobseekers. The Committee would appreciate receiving information on how the measures taken to promote employment under the three mentioned strategies operate within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. In this respect, the Ministry of Labour in cooperation with the Faculty of Economics of Chulalongkorn University, has conducted research on the impact of free trade agreements on labour in seven industrial sectors. According to these studies, labour standards are often compromised as a result of highly competitive practices associated with free trade agreements. The Ministry of Labour expects to improve the employment situation using the information and recommendations of research done in collaboration with the Faculty of Economics of Thammasat University. The Committee would welcome receiving information on labour market programmes implemented to match labour supply and demand.

Labour market and training policies. The Committee notes that the skills training offered by the Department of Skills Development (DSD) focuses on pre-employment training, upgrading training and retraining. Moreover, such programmes are designed based on the market needs. The DSD biannually surveys the needs of the public and private sectors at the provincial and national level and designs programmes accordingly. The Government’s report also provides that a quality assurance system was introduced in 2003 to ensure that skills development will be gradually expanded to cover all the regional institutes and provincial skill development centres by 2008. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved by the measures taken by the Ministry of Labour and the Ministry of Education to coordinate education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities.

Article 1, paragraph 2(c). Prevention of discrimination. Women. The Government indicates that employers were encouraged to appoint female labour advisers in their establishments. In addition, female workers have also been provided with equal opportunities to the same extent as male workers in accessing services of the DSD. In 2006, 102,990 trainees finished vocational skills training courses organized by the DSD; 100,141 were women, mostly employed in the clothing and textile industries and service sectors. The Ministry of Social Development and Human Security also provided courses for women and young female workers and to those at risk of being, or have been, laid off are unemployed or poor. In rural areas, a special project known as “Building New Life for Rural Women” has been organized with the aim of providing vocational training and increasing income. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information in its next report on the impact of the measures adopted to ensure that progress is achieved in raising the participation rate of women in the labour market. Please also indicate the gender distribution of trainees in the training courses of the DSD.

Persons with disabilities. According to the Government’s statistics, the relative number of persons with disabilities that have found job placements increased in 2006. Other interventions include providing vocational training courses for persons with disabilities; occupational development services to help those that have completed vocational training develop practical skills, as well as family and community welfare services to provide care and support for children with disabilities. The Committee would appreciate continuing to receive information on the impact of the training programmes for persons with disabilities, in particular, the number of people that completed the programme and were able to find employment in the open labour market.

Migrant workers. The Government indicates in its report that the registration of thousands of migrant workers has improved their situation. The Committee also notes the statistics for the period 2004–06 on the implementation of bilateral Memoranda of Understanding with neighbouring countries including Cambodia, Lao People’s Democratic Republic and Myanmar. It also notes the observation submitted by the National Congress of Thai Labour, which indicates that illegal foreign workers, especially from Myanmar, are increasing and are paid below minimum wage. In its reply, the Government indicates that irregular migrant workers tend to get lower wages than the minimum rates announced by the National Wages Committee because of their illegal status. On this important issue, the Committee refers again to the tripartite discussion that took place during the International Labour Conference in June 2006 on the application of the Convention by Thailand and asks the Government to continue to report in detail on the impact of the action taken within the framework of an active employment policy to prevent abuse in the recruitment of labour and the exploitation of migrant workers in Thailand.

Workers in the rural sector and the informal economy. The Government indicates that homeworkers in the informal sector can register at provincial employment offices to receive basic training to enhance their skills. It also initiated a project in 2006 to reach agricultural sector workers and improve working and living conditions and raise awareness of labour protection. The Committee requests the Government to also provide information in its next report on the implementation of rural employment policies and programmes and on any other measures it has taken to promote employment and improve the quantity and quality of employment opportunities for homeworkers. It also reiterates its interest in examining information on the measures taken to reduce the decent work deficit for men and women workers in the informal economy and to facilitate their absorption into the labour market.

Article 3. Consultations with representatives of the persons affected. The Committee notes that, in issuing policies on employment and labour protection, the Ministry of Labour has given opportunities for all parties concerned to participate. Draft copies of policies and regulations are open for public comment. In certain provinces, the Provincial Offices of Labour Protection and Welfare have collaborated with local government authorities, NGOs and foundations in order to access those migrant workers more easily and provide protection more efficiently. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on any recommendations made by the abovementioned mechanisms in relation to the formulation and implementation of employment measures.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Turkey

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1952)

Part III of the Convention. Regulation of fee-charging employment agencies. The Committee notes the detailed information contained in the Government’s report received in November 2008, in reply to its 2007 observation. The Government reports that, in April 2008, 230 private employment agencies were operating in the country on the basis of a licence granted by the Turkish Employment Agency (İŞKUR). Between the second half of 2004 and 2007, private employment agencies ensured the placement of 122,070 jobseekers. The results of the inspections carried out show that the activities of most of the private employment agencies were in accordance with the requirements set out in the 2003 Labour Act No. 4857 and the 2003 Turkish Employment Agency Law No. 4904. In reply to previous comments, the Government also refers to the outcomes of the “Operating and Auditing of Private Employment Offices Project” launched in 2005 by the Labour Inspection Board, with the cooperation of the European Union’s Administrative Cooperation Fund with a view to harmonizing the Turkish system of private employment agencies with European Union standards. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing in its next report information on the measures adopted by İŞKUR to supervise the activities of the agencies covered by the Convention, providing summaries of inspection reports and information on the number and nature of contraventions reported, and any other particulars bearing on the effective implementation of Part III of the Convention.

Revision of Convention No. 96. The Committee notes from the report provided on the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), that the Government intends to encourage the opening of private employment agencies and the diversification of their activities. It further notes that new legal and regulatory provisions governing private employment agencies including amendments to the Labour Act are under preparation. The Committee reiterates that Article 10(b) of the Convention provides for fee-charging employment agencies to be in possession of a yearly licence renewable at the discretion of the competent authority whereas section 17 of Chapter 5 of the Turkish Employment Agency Act provides that private employment agency permits are valid for a period of three years and may be renewed for further three-year periods. The Committee recalls that the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), in particular Article 3 thereof, provides more flexible provisions for the supervision of private employment agencies. The 273rd Session of the ILO Governing Body, held in November 1998, invited States parties to Convention No. 96 to contemplate ratifying, as appropriate, Convention No. 181, the ratification of which will involve the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 96. Accordingly, the Committee notes that, until such time as Convention No. 181 has been ratified, Convention No. 96 remains in force, and thus the Committee shall continue to examine the implementation of Part III of Convention No. 96 in national law and practice. The Committee invites the Government to report on any consultations that may have been held with social partners concerning the ratification of Convention No. 181.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in November 2008 including detailed contributions by the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) and the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TİSK).

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. In its 2007 observation, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the active employment policy measures implemented, in order to be able to examine the extent to which economic growth translated into better economic outcomes and poverty reduction. The Government reports that following Turkey's economic crisis of 2001, which caused a decrease in employment, the overall employment rate has progressively increased over the period 2004–06 and the unemployment rate decreased. The Committee notes from statistical data available in the ILO that the unemployment rate, which was slightly below 10 per cent in 2006, is envisaged to reach 15 per cent in 2009 while the employment rate is envisaged to decrease below 40 per cent. The Government indicates that a significant step towards increasing employment was made with the entry into force in May 2008 of Law No. 5763 containing an "Employment package" as part of a labour market reform programme entailing amendments to the Labour Law and other legislative acts. The measures to be implemented under the employment package include, among others, a reduction of the administrative and financial burden on employment to promote job creation, especially for women, young workers and persons with disabilities, and an increase in unemployment benefits. New active labour market policies will be developed by the Turkish Employment Agency (İŞKUR) and funded under the Unemployment Insurance Fund to help reduce the mismatch between skills on offer and in demand in the labour market. The Committee notes that the Government's Medium-Term Programme covering the period 2008–10 envisages to create employment for approximately 1.4 million people. The TÜRK-İŞ stresses the importance of speeding up the process for redesigning the education and training system so as to reflect labour market needs. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the results achieved and difficulties encountered in implementing the measures set out under the employment package to promote full employment and combat unemployment.

Women. The Committee notes that the female employment rate in Turkey is still low. In December 2008 the employment rate for women was around 21.3 per cent (as compared to 61.5 per cent for men). The Government indicates in its report that the new Employment Package places a special emphasis on the promotion of job opportunities for women through a reduction of the employers' social security contributions. A national action plan is being prepared by the general directorate on the status of women, which is to address gender issues in employment. Women have been granted wider access to active employment measures whereas social services, especially childcare, have been further developed. Support is also given to female entrepreneurship and access to micro credit. The Committee notes that the improvement of female employment is referred to as one of the decent work country priorities in a Memorandum of Understanding signed in February 2009 with the ILO. It further notes that the ILO, in cooperation with the İŞKUR, has launched a project on active labour market measures for enhancing employment for women to be carried out in three pilot provinces where female labour participation rates are low (Ankara, Gaziantep and Konya). The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information in its next report on the efforts made to improve the employment situation of women and the results achieved in terms of job creation as a result of the measures adopted.

Youth employment. The Committee notes that the high level of youth unemployment (19.6 per cent in 2007) continues to be a matter of concern for Turkey. The Government indicates that the employment package envisages a reduction of employers' social security contributions over a period of five years in order to increase employment opportunities for young workers. It further indicates that 71 per cent of the participants in the training courses regularly organized by the İŞKUR in 2006 and 2007 were young persons aged 15–29. In this regard, the TİSK observes that a national youth employment policy should be developed in collaboration with the social partners and other stakeholders. The Committee notes that the Memorandum of Understanding concluded with the ILO includes youth employment among the country's priorities. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information in its next report on the efforts made to improve the employment situation of young persons, and the results achieved in terms of job creation as a result of the measures adopted.

Small and medium-sized enterprises and the informal economy. The Government indicates in its report that one of the objectives of the employment package is decreasing informal employment. In this connection, the Committee notes that, based on funds provided by the Administration for the Development and Support for Small and Medium-sized Enterprises (KOSGEB), interest-free credit is granted to small and medium-sized enterprises which is proportional to the number of qualified workers or newly graduated young people that they hire, with a view to encouraging employment formalization. The employment of 25,146 workers has been supported by the KOSGEB over the period 2006–08. In their comments the TÜRK-İŞ and the TİSK emphasize the high level of unregistered employment. Out of the total 21.6 million employed persons in the country, almost half (46 per cent in 2007) is not registered. The Committee asks the Government to supply further information in its next report on the results of the measures adopted with a view to increasing employment opportunities in the non-declared economy and facilitating the gradual integration of its workers into the labour market.

Article 3. Participation of social partners in the formulation and application of policies. In reply to previous comments, the Government states that the efficiency of the national Economic and Social Council (EKOSOK) will be increased. The Government also indicates that under the new employment package, the labour market monitoring functions of the provincial employment boards operating under the İŞKUR, where the social partners are represented, have been redefined so as to cover vocational education and that the number of the board's members have been decreased to make them more efficient. The Committee notes with interest several projects jointly implemented by the social partners aimed at strengthening their involvement in the modernization of the vocational education and training system, developing the İŞKUR's institutional capacity and services as well as improving the efficiency of labour market monitoring mechanisms at provincial level. In its comments on the report for the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), the TİSK stresses the need to approve, without delay, the Bill on the new composition of the EKOSOK prepared in consultation with the social partners in order to ensure a participatory approach in the development of employment policies. In this connection, the TÜRK-İŞ observes that although under the existing legislation EKOSOK should meet every three months, it has held only one meeting over the period 2006–08. The TÜRK-İŞ also indicates that the composition of the provincial employment boards operating under the İŞKUR has been changed and that social partners have been excluded. The Committee asks the Government to provide in its next report further information on how social partners are involved in the formulation and implementation of active employment policies, particularly through such mechanisms as EKOSOK and other bodies operating at local level, so as to fully take into account their experiences and views.

Part V of the report form. ILO technical assistance. The Committee notes with interest the information included in the report on the programmes implemented by the ILO as part of its technical cooperation activities in Turkey. A pilot programme to strengthen social dialogue in order to combat unregistered employment is being implemented in the provinces of Çorum and Gaziantep. Under this programme the Government and the social partners have developed employment strategies targeted at specific local contexts and studies have been conducted to identify factors causing unregistered employment. A pilot project to improve employment services has been implemented in the province of Koçaeli to serve as a model for the entire country with the specific objective to increase the effectiveness of social dialogue through the İŞKUR's local employment committees. Labour market analyses are being carried out with the aim of developing appropriate labour market policies and the İŞKUR officials have been trained in restructuring, redundancy management and job counselling. Under an ILO–EU textile training project, workers and managers in factories supplying multinational enterprises in the textile and clothing sector have been trained on issues related to quality, productivity and workplace conditions with a focus on worker–management relations in order to raise awareness on the importance of social dialogue. The Committee would appreciate continuing to receive information on the employment policy measures implemented as a result of the ILO technical cooperation activities.

Uganda

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in June 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, including information in reply to the points raised in the Committee's 2008 observation, which sets forth the following matters:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee recalls that the draft National Employment Policy was to be submitted by the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare to Cabinet in July 2004 for consideration and adoption. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the measures taken to ensure that employment, as a key element of poverty reduction, is central to macroeconomic and social policies. It asks the Government to report on the status of the draft National Employment Policy and the Poverty Eradication Action Plan, as well as any evaluation on the impact of its programmes to combat unemployment focusing on university graduates.

The Committee emphasizes the importance of establishing a system for compilation of labour market data and requests the Government to report on any progress made in this field. It asks the Government to provide in its next report disaggregated data on trends in the labour market, including information on the situation, level and trends of employment, underemployment and unemployment throughout the country and the extent to which they affect the most vulnerable categories of workers (such as women, young persons and rural workers).

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Government indicated that during the development of the draft National Employment Policy, the views of all affected persons were taken into account through the various workshops held. The Committee recalls that Article 3 of the Convention requires consultations with representatives of all persons affected, and particularly representatives of employers and workers, in the formulation and implementation of employment policies. It is the joint responsibility of the Government and the representative organizations of employers and workers to ensure that representatives of the most vulnerable and marginalized groups of the active population are associated as closely as possible with the formulation and implementation of measures of which they should be the prime beneficiaries. The Committee would appreciate receiving information on the involvement of the social partners in the matters covered by the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Ukraine

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1968)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2008 generally referring to the measures taken in 2007 for the implementation of the main directives of the implementation of the state employment policy for the period up to 2009 and the regional programmes for the employment of the population. The priority tasks include: assisting regions facing unfavourable labour situations and promoting employment in mono-functional towns, coalmining regions and rural regions. In 2007, approximately 1.4 million persons were unemployed. According to the Government, the unemployment rate decreased from 6.8 per cent in 2006 to 6.4 per cent in 2007. New jobs were created for more than 1 million persons, two-thirds of which found jobs in the service sector and self-employment. The Committee notes the data supplemented by the ILO Subregional Office indicating that, during the reporting period, employment rates were higher in rural areas than those in urban areas, where the majority of the people live. The Committee notes that underemployment was notable in the agricultural sector where the average wage is less than half of those in the industrial and services sectors, and self-employed owners and contributing family members account for more than one third of the average wage in the industrial and service sectors. It further notes that the employment rate of young people was 36.5 per cent and that the unemployment rate for older workers was 61.8 per cent. The Committee recalls that in its 2007 observation it requested the Government to provide a report including information that will enable the Committee to examine the extent to which economic growth translates into improved labour market outcomes and poverty reduction. The Committee asks the Government to provide a report indicating the measures implemented as part of an active policy intended to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment (Article 1(1)).

The Committee recalls the other points raised in its 2007 observation, for which it again requests the Government to reply in detail on the following matters:

- training programmes and initiatives taken to promote the return of unemployed persons to employment;
- measures taken to coordinate education and training policies and prospective employment opportunities;
- measures taken to collect information on the labour market and on how the data was used in deciding on, and reviewing, employment policy measures;
- measures taken to ensure lasting employment to assist miners who were laid off as a result of the closure of mines;
- measures taken in the field of employment in favour of persons and regions affected by the accident in the nuclear plant of Chernobyl; and
- measures taken to consult the representatives of the social partners, including those working in the rural sector and the informal economy, in the formulation and implementation of the employment policy.

The Committee notes that the preparation of a detailed report, including the indications requested in this observation, will certainly provide the Government and the social partners with an opportunity to evaluate the achievement of the objectives of full and productive employment under the Convention. In this regard, the Government might wish to request technical assistance from the relevant units of the ILO to address gaps in the implementation of an active employment policy in the sense of the Convention.

United Kingdom

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Employment trends. The Committee notes the Government's comprehensive and detailed report received for the period ending May 2008, including information on the measures taken in Northern Ireland and Wales. In its 2005 observation, the Committee took note of a strong labour market situation with a high level of employment and record levels of unemployment. This trend was again noted in the 2007 direct request in which the Committee observed the new historic favourable conditions of the labour market. In its last report, received in September 2008, the Government indicated new unprecedented high levels of employment (in May 2008 the number of persons in employment was 29.59 million). The favourable employment trends, however, began to reverse towards the end of the reporting period. The United Kingdom economy experienced almost 16 years of unbroken gross domestic product (GDP) growth up to the second quarter of 2008, when the economy recorded negative growth. As indicated in May 2009 by the Office of National Statistics (ONS) in its analysis of the impact of the recession on the labour market, the unemployment rate was 7.1 per cent for the three months to March 2009; during this period, the number of unemployed persons increased by 244,000 over the quarter and 592,000 over the year, reaching 2.22 million. The West Midlands has been hardest hit by the recession, with high levels of redundancies combined with high unemployment and large decreases in vacancies. Men have been more affected by the recession than women. According to the analysis of the ONS, the discrepancy may be explained by the greater tendency for men to work in the private sector. Young persons have experienced the largest percentage point increase in unemployment compared with any other age group. The Committee notes the deterioration that has taken place in the employment situation since its last comments. It understands that the Government intends to support employment by stimulating growth. The Committee requests the Government to specify in its next report how, pursuant to Article 2 of the Convention, it keeps under review the measures and policies adopted according to the results achieved in pursuit of the objectives specified in Article 1. It recalls that an active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment should be pursued "as a major goal". As required by Article 3, the Committee hopes that the Government's report will also include information on consultations and cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations in the formulation and implementation of employment policies to address the current employment situation.

Role of employment services in employment promotion. The Government indicated in its report that there were two key features of its national active labour market policies, namely Jobcentre Plus and the New Deal programmes. Jobcentre Plus offices combined payment of benefits to customers on unemployment benefits with active labour market interventions. The New Deal programmes offer intensive individualized support, delivered through Jobcentre Plus personal advisers. These programmes are primarily directed at those who have been unemployed for long periods of time and offer a number of options. The Committee notes that the New Deal approach has been extended to groups further away from the labour market, including single parents and those on incapacity benefits. It further notes that the programme to roll out Jobcentre Plus across Great Britain was formally completed in July 2007. The Government indicated that, as a result of the programme, a Jobcentre Plus presence was established together with a network of around 800 modern jobcentres for customers seeking face-to-face services, a network of telephone contact centres and a network of benefit delivery centres. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the activities of the employment services, and how they contribute towards implementing active labour market policies.

Education and training policies. The Government indicated that it seeks to build a joined-up employment and skills system that offers flexible and responsive help which supports individuals in preparing for and securing sustained employment. The Committee notes that a Command Paper entitled "Work skills" was published in June 2008 which sets out proposals for: (a) a skills system shaped by employers that puts the individual in charge of their learning; (b) the extension of the principle of rights and responsibilities to those with skills needs that are preventing them from finding work, so that when they claim benefits they also sign up for skills provision; and (c) a skills system that is less top-heavy, ensuring that delivery systems work more closely together and are driven by those who know best how to shape services to meet local needs. The Committee also notes that Skills for Jobs seeks to help those out of work to gain sustainable employment and progress in both employment and learning. Skills for Jobs encompasses an employability skills programme, developed to enable Jobcentre Plus customers to gain, on a part-time or full-time basis, nationally approved literacy, language, numeracy and employability qualifications delivered in an employment-embedded context with the aim to help customers find a job and progress in work; and other projects run locally to help those out of work or economically inactive. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information in its next report on the policies and measures being implemented to improve skills levels and to coordinate education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities.

Youth employment. The Committee notes from the Office of National Statistics that, in the year to March 2009, unemployment rates for 18–24-year-olds increased by nearly 4 percentage points to 16.1 per cent. In this regard, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the New Deal for Young Persons, which is a mandatory programme for 18–24-year-olds who have been claiming job support allowance for at least six months. The programme aims to give participants the skills, confidence and motivation to help them find work. They further enter a "gateway" of intensive job search and specialist help to improve their job prospects. The Government is requested to continue to provide information on the measures taken to meet the needs of young people and on the effect such measures have had on increasing the access of young people to lasting employment.

Persons with disabilities. The Committee notes that the employment rate for persons with disabilities has increased by nine percentage points since 1998 from 39 per cent to 48 per cent in early 2008. The Government attributed this progress to active labour market policies, such as the New Deal for Disabled People and the Pathways to Work provision, alongside a strengthening of the legal rights of persons with disabilities. The Pathways to Work programme seeks to help persons with a disability or a health condition move towards work. The programme provides a series of interviews with a personal adviser, training programmes to increase skills, increase confidence or help to manage a health condition, support once in work and financial incentives to assist in the transition into work or to give a temporary increase in income during the first year in work. The Committee also notes the Work Preparation programme which provides for individually tailored assistance for persons with disabilities to address barriers associated with their disability and prepares them to access the labour market with the necessary confidence to achieve and sustain their job goals. The Work Preparation programme can also be used to help persons who are at risk of losing their job due to their disabilities by helping them overcome difficulties that are affecting their work. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the results of the implementation of the measures designed to address the needs of persons with disabilities.

Long-term unemployed. The Committee notes that the Local Employment Partnerships project aims to help priority group customers into work through a simple deal between the Government and employers, by which the Government prepares long-term jobseekers for work, while employers agree to give them a fair opportunity to find employment, inter alia, through measures such as guaranteed job interviews, work placements, monitoring, work trials and reviewing recruitment processes to be more inclusive. The Government indicated that the project seeks to integrate both employment and skills, and thus the Government seeks to ensure that people not only find sustained employment but also have opportunities to develop their skills during employment. The Government is requested to continue to provide information on the implementation of the Local Employment Partnerships project, and on the effects this has had on promoting the return of long-term unemployed persons to the labour market.

Uruguay

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report corresponding to the period ending in May 2008 and the information provided in relation to its 2007 observation.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an employment policy in the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. The Committee notes the increase in the activity and employment rates since March 2005 and the resulting reduction in the level of unemployment. According to the data published by the ILO in the 2008 Panorama Laboral, the economic growth was also reflected in positive movements in the main employment indicators. Unemployment continued to fall, both at the national level and in urban areas. During the first 11 months of 2008, the national unemployment rate stood at 7.7 per cent, while the urban rate stood at 8 per cent (1.6 and 1.8 percentage points lower than the figures recorded during a similar period in 2007 respectively). These results were due to a significant increase in labour demand (the national employment rate increased by 1 percentage point to reach 57.6 per cent), which contributed to a slight reduction in labour supply. There was a greater reduction in unemployment among women than among men, but unemployment among women continues to be double of that among men and stands at 10.6 per cent compared to 5.8 per cent for men. The Government is proposing structural reforms such as the reform of the State, the reform of the tax system and the adoption of economic policies aimed at boosting the "productive Uruguay" programme by increasing sources of work and improving workers' qualifications. In labour matters, the Government aims to promote entrepreneurship and business training, encourage the use of technological developments relating to innovation and quality, facilitate geographic decentralization, protect the environment and promote micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises. According to the Government, the financial balance, together with the benefits of international trade and the introduction of regulations and measures benefiting workers, such as the reintroduction of wage boards, have had an effect on working conditions and job creation.

In the context of the implementation of an active employment policy, the Government agreed with the ILO on a Decent Work Country Programme in February 2007. The objective of this Agenda is to facilitate the development of strategies and activities aimed at ensuring fundamental rights at work, in terms of both quantity and quality. One of the specific objectives of the Agenda is the creation of productive employment which includes high formal coverage, social protection and guarantees for the exercise of fundamental rights at work, with special consideration being given to gender equality, young persons and ethnic pluralism. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on how the measures taken under the Decent Work Country Programme have promoted the objective of full and productive employment under the Convention. Please also indicate whether the objectives of overcoming poverty, reducing social inequalities and ensuring sustainable development, as established under the Decent Work Agenda, have been achieved.

Workers in the informal economy. The Committee notes that, according to the National Institute of Statistics, informal employment, which is understood to mean employment not involving social security registration, stands at 33.4 per cent. The informal economy is a low-quality employment sector, which provides the Government and social partners with the challenge of devising and implementing policies and legal frameworks to facilitate the integration of these workers into the labour market in appropriate conditions. The Committee notes that the Government has adopted various approaches, including the Domestic Work Act which promotes the registration of workers, the Employment Objective Programme which grants benefits to companies registered under the social security system and the establishment of a committee on informal employment within the context of the National Commitment to Employment, Income and Responsibilities. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to gradually integrate persons working in the informal economy into the formal labour market. Please also provide information on the recommendations made by the Committee on informal employment relating to the integration of persons working in the informal economy into the labour market.

Cooperatives. The Committee notes with interest that in October 2008, Act No. 18407 on cooperatives was promulgated, which aims to regulate the establishment, organization and operation of cooperatives and the cooperative sector. The Act also creates the National Institute of Cooperatives (INACOOOP) to promote the economic, social and cultural development of the cooperative sector and its integration into the country's development. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress being made by INACOOOP to promote labour and social cooperatives, the objective of which is to achieve the social and labour market integration of the heads of households belonging to sectors in which basic needs are not being met, as well as young persons, persons with disabilities, ethnic minorities and any group in a situation of extreme social vulnerability.

Education policies and the supply of vocational training. The Committee notes the vocational training and labour market integration programmes implemented for young persons (PROJOVEN), rural workers, persons with disabilities (PROCLADIS), women (PROMUJER) and for the strengthening of micro- and small enterprises (FOPYMES), as well as the programme on the establishment of micro undertakings. It also notes the possibility available to companies of deducting their training expenditure from their business tax (IRAE) as a means of promoting ongoing training. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on training activities for active workers, the recently unemployed and the long-term unemployed.

Participation of the social partners in employment policies. The Committee notes that in 2007, agreement was reached on the terms of the Bill creating the National Institute of Employment and Vocational Training. According to the Government, the Bill marks substantive progress with regard to the institutional framework and tasks of this tripartite body, includes public funds equal to those contributed by employers and workers and establishes various levels of management at the sectoral level (sectoral employment committees) and at the territorial level (departmental and local employment committees), providing the departmental committees with infrastructure and financial support for their management. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress made in strengthening the mechanisms which allow the development and implementation, in consultation with the social partners, of the employment policy measures required by the Convention.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 2 (Kenya, Morocco); Convention No. 88 (France, Iraq, Kenya, Republic of Korea, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Lithuania, Mauritius, Republic of Moldova, Mozambique, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Romania, Serbia, Sierra Leone, Suriname, United Republic of Tanzania: Tanganyika, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 96 (Bolivia, Djibouti, France, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malta, Mexico); Convention No. 122 (Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark: Greenland, Djibouti, France, Georgia, Islamic Republic of Iran, Italy, Jamaica, Kazakhstan, Republic of Korea, Latvia, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Netherlands: Netherlands Antilles, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Romania, Slovenia, Suriname, Tunisia, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 159 (Guinea, Kyrgyzstan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Paraguay, Sao Tome and Principe, Turkey, Uganda, Uruguay, Zambia, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 181 (Ethiopia, Georgia, Japan, Lithuania, Republic of Moldova, Morocco, Netherlands, Spain, Suriname).

Vocational guidance and training

Argentina

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1978)

Implementation of policies and programmes of vocational guidance and training. The Committee notes the report received in September 2008 providing information on the various vocational guidance and training programmes, including detailed information on the employment and training insurance scheme. In reply to the direct request of 2003, the Government indicates that in 2004, an employment and training insurance scheme was created to help the beneficiaries of the Heads of Households Programme and to implement active employment policies which offer support to unemployed workers in searching for employment, by updating their vocational skills and helping them enter the labour market. Between April 2006 and July 2008, a total of 97,405 persons had joined the employment and training insurance scheme. Those interested in the scheme sign a Personal Membership Agreement in which they undertake to attend the Municipal Employment Office regularly to draw up a job-search plan and participate in guidance, training and work experience activities, as well as in other services which help them to improve their job prospects. Furthermore, the beneficiaries undertake to accept job offers that are in line with their experience and vocational skills. The General Employment Promotion Plan (More and Better Work) promotes adaptability to new productive processes by means of ongoing vocational training and technical assistance. Under the Plan, a consensus was reached on the analysis of the employment situation and on measures to improve the employability of unemployed workers and the quality of employment of active workers. Under the Building a future with decent work programme, the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Labour are developing labour strategies and tools to incorporate the content of the fundamental principles and rights at work and the concept of decent work into the curriculum of secondary schools. The Government also highlights in its report the international cooperation with the Government of Italy and implemented by the ILO in seven regions of the country. The Committee observes the innovative approaches adopted in implementing an employment and training insurance scheme and developing tools to incorporate the fundamental principles and rights at work into the secondary education curriculum. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information and statistics in its next report to allow an examination of the results achieved under the various programmes and plans implemented relating to the vocational training and guidance given and the integration of the beneficiaries into the labour market. The Committee would also like to know how the social partners have collaborated in the implementation of programmes created by the Ministry of Labour relating to human resources development.

Guinea

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2004 and 2008 observations, which read as follows:

Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. In reply to its previous comments, the Government indicates that there are no coordination structures linking the three ministries responsible for the implementation of vocational guidance and training policies and programmes. The Government's report received in June 2004 enumerates the technical and vocational training institutions that exist. It also provides information concerning the implementation of the "employment" component of the Poverty Reduction Strategy approved in 2002. The Committee refers, in this respect, to the comments on the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and asks the Government to indicate the manner in which the measures adopted or envisaged in the context of the Poverty Reduction Strategy reinforce the links between education, training and employment, particularly through the employment services. It asks the Government to provide information in its next report on the efforts being made to secure coordination among the various institutions responsible for developing comprehensive and coordinated policies and programmes of vocational guidance and vocational training. It draws attention once more to the importance of social dialogue in preparing, implementing and reviewing a national human resources development, education and training policy. It would be grateful if the Government would also provide practical information on levels of instruction, qualifications and training activities so that it can assess the application of all the provisions of the Convention in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Japan

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1986)

Article 1 of the Convention. Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report, including the comments provided by the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO), received in October 2008. The Government indicates that it is promoting vocational guidance policies in line with the employment policies set out in the “Basic Principles of Employment Policies” established in February 2008. The Basic Principles of Employment Policies set out the Government’s economic objectives and determine the mid-term policies for the realization of these objectives. The Government indicates that vocational guidance policies are formulated and implemented with due consideration of the employment needs, opportunities and problems. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that its vocational guidance policies are promoted in line with domestic conditions and in a coordinated manner which allows for mutual adjustability with other policies, such as social security policies, industrial policies, educational policies and measures to address declining birth rates. In its comments, JTUC–RENGO expresses its concern over ongoing discussions in the country over the continued existence of the Employment and Human Resources Development Organization, a core agency which implements measures for the development of occupational skills. JTUC–RENGO considers that the abolition of the Organization might have a serious impact on the application and enforcement of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the outcome of deliberations regarding the Employment and Human Resources Development Organization, and on the operation of the machinery in place for the development and implementation of comprehensive and coordinated policies and programmes of vocational guidance and vocational training. The Government might also take into account the relevant comments provided on the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122).

Article 3. Vocational guidance policy. The Government indicates that the Public Employment Security Offices (PESO) provide vocational guidance with a view to supporting the identification of problems that prevent employment, through conducting individual consultations, seminars, career consultations and counselling, in order to solve such problems. Similarly, the PESO provides support to jobseekers, who do not face particular problems in finding employment or in selecting an appropriate job. The Government also indicates that it implements specialized vocational guidance and vocational orientation services in accordance with the conditions of jobseekers, and provides employment information and vocational guidance for new graduates, in cooperation with schools. In particular, the Government and JTUC–RENGO also make reference to the introduction of a “Job Card Scheme” in April 2008 which is aimed at improving the opportunities for disadvantaged persons to take advantage of human resources development measures; and to promote the transition of such persons to sustainable employment. The Committee wishes to receive further details on the operation of the “Job Card Scheme”. The Government is invited to include any statistics or data available on the effectiveness of vocational guidance provided through the PESO.

Article 4. Vocational training systems for women. The Government indicates that it established, in 2006, “Mothers’ Hello work” in the PESOs which provides employment support to women who seek employment while raising children. Efforts have been made to improve vocational guidance by providing vocational consultations which are tailored to the needs of jobseekers, and to provide child-rearing information in coordination with local governments. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information, including statistical data, on the impact such measures have had on promoting access of women to education, training and lifelong learning.

Article 5. Cooperation with social partners. The Government indicates that the Basic Principles of Employment Policies, which includes policies for vocational guidance and training, was established in accordance with the conclusions of the subcommittee on Employment Security of the Council on Labour Policy. The Committee would appreciate receiving information on the means by which the cooperation of employers’ and workers’ organizations is ensured, including the subcommittee on Employment Security, in the formulation and implementation of vocational guidance and vocational training policies and programmes.

Lithuania

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1994)

Implementation of education and training policies and programmes. The Committee notes the comprehensive information provided in the Government’s report received in September 2008, including replies to the 2004 direct request. The Government reports that new provisions were incorporated into the law on vocational training which came into force in 2008. These new provisions change the concept of vocational training, contributing to the implementation of lifelong learning, and ensuring compliance of qualifications with labour market needs and involvement of the social partners in the management of vocational training. They also establish the Lithuanian Vocational Training Council as an advisory board for consideration of strategic vocational training issues. The Committee also notes that nearly 30,000 persons undergo training in training centres every year, of which about 14,000 are unemployed. Territorial services provide vocational information and counselling for adults, vocational and psychological counselling, elaborate programmes for integration of workers into the labour market, career planning, social adaptation, and vocational and personal development. In 2007, 12 labour market informal vocational training programmes were conducted for older workers. The Government also reported on several vocational programmes and measures targeting women offenders, women aged 55 and older, women returning from a career break and young mothers. The Committee would like to continue to receive information on the vocational training and programmes executed by the training centres and territorial services, and invites the Government to provide in its next report further information on the effective coordination established between the measures implemented by the Vocational Training Council and public employment service (Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention). The Committee also asks the Government to indicate the measures taken with a view to encouraging and enabling women and other vulnerable categories of workers to develop and use their capabilities for work in their own best interests and in accordance with their own aspirations (Article 1, paragraph 5).

Article 2. Education, training and lifelong learning. The Government additionally reports that it elaborated upon and applied more than 50 active job search and occupational skills development programmes. These programmes are divided into groups by the following counselling objectives: professional and self-determination training; development of capacities and skills in order to successfully compete in the labour market; and development of self-awareness, confidence in own capacities and opportunities in the labour market. The Committee invites the Government to supply further information in its next report on the impact of these new programmes on the establishment of open, flexible and complementary systems of general, technical and vocational education, educational and vocational guidance and vocational training. The Government reports that it trained 295,600 pupils of 11–16 years of age in 2005, and that this number decreased to 281,000 in 2006, and to 264,100 in 2007. The Government also reports that the number of students trained in higher education rose from 193,900 in 2005 to 195,600 in 2006, and to 200,500 in 2007, of which 80,500 were men and 120,000 were women. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information, disaggregated by gender and age, concerning education, training and lifelong learning.

Netherlands

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1979)

Articles 1–5 of the Convention. Formulation and implementation of education and training policies and cooperation with social partners. The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending June 2008, and the comments provided by the Trade Union Confederation of Middle and Higher Level Employers' Union (MHP), received in August 2008. The Committee notes that a Working and Learning Project Department was established in March 2005 with a view to increase lifelong learning and to improve matching education with the demand of the labour market. In particular, the Department was established to provide training, retraining and further training for employees and jobseekers. In 2005–07, the Working and Learning Project Department focused on the creation of 15,000 combined working and learning courses, 20,000 Accreditation of Prior Learning trajectories and an infrastructure to facilitate lifelong learning through the establishment of Working and Learning Desks. In order to boost the levels of qualification and, as a corollary, the rate of labour market participation, the tenure of the Project Department was extended until 2011, so as to concentrate on establishing 90,000 working and learning trajectories, with a special focus on young working people with no basic qualifications and jobseekers who are difficult to place. The Project Department will also consider longer term developments in lifelong learning through a specially appointed think tank, a conference on lifelong learning and discussions on training with the social partners. In this regard, the Committee notes the comments from MHP in which it indicates that the Government has been planning to ask the Social and Economic Council for recommendations on lifelong learning for some time. Furthermore, the Government indicates that the Institute for Employee Benefit Schemes (UWV) is making use of a training protocol, which is a series of guidelines indicating when training should be considered for UWV clients. MHP also refers to the consultations held to discuss the preparation of a "training manifesto". Finally, the Government indicates that the incentive scheme to encourage vacancies to be filled by the unemployed and workers threatened with unemployment (SVWW) has been discontinued. In this regard, MHP regrets that this scheme has not been replaced by a similar demand-driven scheme. The Committee asks the Government to provide in its next report information on the activities of the Working and Learning Project Department, and other machinery for the development of comprehensive and coordinated policies and programmes of vocational guidance and training indicating, in particular, the way in which effective coordination is assured and the manner in which the policies and programmes are linked with employment and the public employment service. The Committee also asks the Government to include information on the development of the "training manifesto" and on other means by which the cooperation of employers' and workers' organizations is ensured, including through the Social and Economic Council, in the formulation and implementation of vocational guidance and vocational training policies and programmes.

Switzerland

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1977)

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Vocational training programmes. Cooperation with the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009 containing replies to the 2008 direct request, as well as to the comments made by the Swiss Federation of Trade Unions (USS/SGB). In its communication transmitted in September 2008, the USS/SGB referred to the establishment in five cantons of vocational training funds as being an effective tool to promote the creation of training opportunities. The USS/SGB expressed its concern over the federal authorities' lack of support for the creation of other such funds at cantonal level. The Government indicates in its reply that it opposed the initiative for the establishment of a federal vocational training fund, because the fund-raising as well as the allocation of funds were not demand-driven. The Government recalls that pursuant to section 60 of the Federal Law on Vocational Training, professional organizations may establish sector-specific funds.

As concerns the difficulties encountered by students coming out of compulsory education in entering the vocational training system, which were pointed out in the USS/SGB's comments, the Government indicates that many students do not begin basic vocational training because they still need to fill gaps in their theoretical knowledge, whereas others prefer waiting for apprenticeship opportunities to become available in the field of their choice. In these cases, cantons ensure that students find an appropriate temporary solution. As concerns the measures taken to facilitate the transition from school to the labour market, the Committee notes that the federal and cantonal authorities together with the professional organizations have further developed support tools for low-performance students, namely coaching and mentoring projects, the use of apprenticeship promoters at cantonal level to encourage companies to provide apprenticeship opportunities, as well as measures to help vulnerable young persons find an apprenticeship (case management vocational education).

Finally, the USS/SGB emphasized the need to implement the right to continuous training, as provided under section 64a of the Federal Constitution, to cope with the increasing training needs and to provide greater access to vulnerable categories of workers, such as low-skilled and migrant workers. In this respect, the Government recalls that measures for the implementation of the constitutional provision are presently under discussion. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report further information on the consultations held with social partners in order to obtain their cooperation in the formulation and implementation of human resources development policies and programmes, with specific reference to the measures envisaged to implement section 64a of the Federal Constitution on continuous training.

Article 3. Vocational guidance. In reply to previous comments, the Government reiterates that under the Federal Law on vocational training, the cantons provide well-developed vocational guidance and career orientation services, including an online service. The Committee reiterates its interest in receiving information on the measures taken by cantons to ensure that information and guidance in accordance with the terms of the Convention are made available to all persons concerned.

United Republic of Tanzania

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1983)

Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2009, indicating that the development of human capital is considered as one of the strategic areas for enhancing the employability of the labour force under the 2008 National Employment Policy. The Policy leads for the Government, employers' and workers' organizations and the private sector in developing and implement mechanisms for skills development and encourages investment in education and skills training programmes. The Committee notes that the competence-based education and training (CBET) approach has been adopted as a tool for implementing demand-driven training. The Committee welcomes this approach and invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the impact of the action taken to promote skills under the National Employment Policy. It also asks the Government to provide information on the existing methods for developing comprehensive and coordinated policies and programmes of vocational guidance and vocational training, indicating, in particular, the manner in which the Vocational Education and Training Authority (VETA) contributes to the effective coordination of policies and programmes, and the manner in which they are linked to employment and to public employment services.

Article 3. Coverage by the vocational training system of vulnerable groups. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the increased participation levels in secondary schools and higher learning institutions, particularly the increase in secondary school enrolment from 524,325 in 2005 to 1,222,403 in 2008. It observes, however, that the female participation ratio decreased from 47 to 44.4 per cent in secondary schools, and from 68 to 65 per cent in higher education. The Government indicates that the vocational training policy takes into account the training needs of all groups of workers; however, it refers to difficulties in balancing training provision, especially in the informal sector and between rural and urban areas. The Government also indicates that a skills training programme has been implemented by the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Youth Development, in collaboration with local government authorities, in 111 rural districts. The Committee notes that, among the specific objectives of the National Employment Policy, there is the promotion of equal access to employment opportunities for vulnerable groups, such as women, young persons and persons with disabilities, as well as the enhancement of skills and competencies of workers in the informal sector, especially in rural areas. It further notes that the Decent Work Country Programme 2006–10 includes among its priorities poverty reduction through the creation of employment opportunities with a focus on youth employment issues. The Committee invites the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to increase gender-balanced access to education and training and to encourage women to develop and use their professional abilities in all branches of economic activity and at all levels of skill and responsibility. Please also indicate the measures taken to promote access to education, training and lifelong learning for persons with specific needs, such as young persons, rural workers, workers in the informal economy, and the other categories of vulnerable persons identified in Paragraph 5(h) of the Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195).

Article 5. Cooperation with the social partners. The Government indicates that the development of policies and programmes of vocational training is achieved in cooperation with all stakeholders. The social partners, together with the Government and the civil society, are represented in the National Vocational Education and Training Board, which is responsible for the development, supervision and implementation of policies at national level. Regional vocational education and training boards, with similar composition, set vocational training priorities and monitor their implementation at regional level. The Committee notes that a Thematic Working Group on Employment was established in 2008 within the National Strategy for Economic Growth and Reduction of Poverty (NEGRP, “MKUKUTA”), which is led by the Ministry of Labour and includes the social partners, other relevant ministries (finance, industry, agriculture, community development and education), the private sector, civil society organizations, and the partners in development under the leadership of the ILO. The working group will facilitate cooperation between development partners and national stakeholders to support the Government’s effort to enhance employment opportunities and achieve decent work for all. The Committee asks the Government to continue supplying information on the measures adopted to ensure the collaboration of the social partners and other interested bodies in formulating and implementing education and training policies and programmes.

Turkey

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1993)

Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. The Committee notes the Government’s report received in November 2008 as well as the comprehensive contributions made by the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) and the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TİŞK). The Committee notes the information, including detailed statistics, provided by the Government in reply to the 2004 observation concerning the activities of training centres, the training of apprentices, and the rehabilitation programmes for persons with disabilities. The Government indicates that the implementation of measures promoting human resources development is under way. In this connection, it refers to the establishment of a Vocational Qualifications Authority (MYK) by Law No 5544 of 21 September 2006, which provides for activities relating to the supervision and certification of occupational standards. The new Authority will build up a national system of vocational qualifications in line with the European Union standards in collaboration with the Ministry of Education, the Higher Education Council, representatives of the social partners and of other professional organizations. The Committee notes that the Ministry of Education has undertaken studies conducted under the project for strengthening the vocational education and training system in Turkey (MEGEP) supported by the European Commission. As a result of these studies, modular education programmes have been introduced in all vocational and technical secondary schools and institutions since the education year 2006–07 and vocational education and training information centres have been established. The TÜRK-İŞ expresses its concern over the low level of general education and training of the labour force in Turkey, emphasizing that the development of the education and training system is a primary means of eliminating regional differences and preventing poverty and social exclusion. The Committee also notes the TİŞK’s indication that a draft action plan for vocational and technical education for the 2008–12 period has been prepared by the Ministry of Education which is to be implemented in cooperation with all the parties concerned. The Committee asks the Government to provide in its next report information on the systems of general, technical and vocational education, educational and vocational guidance and vocational training. The Committee would appreciate receiving information on how effective coordination has been ensured between employment policy objectives and the policies and programmes of vocational guidance and training taking account of the factors mentioned in Article 1(2)–(4), of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing copies of reports, studies and surveys, statistical data, etc., on policies and programmes intended to promote access to education, training and lifelong learning for persons with special needs, such as women, young persons, low-skilled people, persons with disabilities, migrant workers, and also for workers in small and medium-sized enterprises in the informal economy, in the rural sector and in self-employment (Paragraph 5(h) of the Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195)).

Article 5. Cooperation with the social partners. The Committee notes that the social partners contribute to the definition of vocational qualifications in accordance with labour market needs within the Vocational Qualifications Authority. The Committee further notes that, under the 2008 Employment Package the provincial employment boards operating under the Turkish Employment Agency (İŞKUR), which are responsible for defining employment policies and conducting labour market research at the local level, have been restructured to include competences in the area of vocational education and training policies. The Committee invites the Government to continue reporting on the measures adopted to ensure the collaboration of employers and workers and other interested bodies, in the formulation and implementation of vocational guidance and vocational training policies and programmes at the national and local levels so as to fully take into account their experiences and views.

Ukraine

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1979)

Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2008 referring to measures taken to establish a flexible system of professional guidance which is responsive to the changing requirements of the labour market. The Government indicates that an Interdepartmental Council on Professional and Technical Education under the Cabinet of Ministers was established, including representatives of the social partners and the educational establishments. It further reports that more than 1,000 State vocational and technical establishments existed in Ukraine which provided education to about half a million persons per annum. More than 900 higher educational institutions provided education to some 3 million persons of whom 1.5 million were full-time students. The Government also refers to round tables, business meetings, extended workshops, national and regional conferences and debates held with the social partners on vocational training and vocational guidance. The Committee refers to its 2009 observation on the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), in which it asks the Government to report on training programmes and initiatives taken to promote the return of unemployed persons to employment, as well as on measures taken to coordinate education and training policies and prospective employment opportunities. In this respect, the Committee refers to Article 1(1), of Convention No. 142 which requires that Members shall adopt and develop comprehensive and coordinated policies and programmes of vocational guidance and vocational training, closely linked with employment, in particular through public employment services. The Committee invites the Government to communicate any extracts from reports, studies, inquiries or statistical data which will allow an examination of the results achieved by the policies, programmes and measures adopted to give effect to Convention No. 142.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 140 (Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Belize, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Chile, Czech Republic, Finland, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, Iraq, Montenegro, Netherlands: Aruba, Nicaragua, Poland, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Sweden, United Republic of Tanzania, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: Jersey, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 142 (Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Central African Republic, Egypt, Georgia, Guyana, Hungary, Iraq, Kenya, Republic of Korea, Latvia, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Mexico, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Netherlands: Aruba, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Poland, Serbia, Tajikistan, Tunisia).

Employment security

Australia

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report received in September 2009, including information provided by the states and territories, and their replies to the matters raised in its previous observation. The Committee also notes the comments received from the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) and the Government's response to these comments. In its report, the Government indicates that the Fair Work Act which came into force on 1 July 2009, and which repeals and replaces the Workplace Relations Act, contains provisions relevant to the application of the Convention. The Committee also notes the creation of Fair Work Australia, the national workplace relations tribunal.

The Committee recalls its 2007 observation noting that the Workplace Relations Amendment (Work Choices) Act 2005, exempted businesses employing 100 or less employees from the remedies for unfair dismissal and was therefore inconsistent with the Convention. The Committee notes with interest that the 100 employee exemption has been removed under the Fair Work Act. The Committee also notes that the ACTU has welcomed the Fair Work Act's restoration of unfair dismissal rights to most workers in the federal system. Furthermore, the Government indicates that, due to the relatively short time since the coming into force of the Fair Work Act, it is not yet possible to provide an accurate assessment of law and practice associated with it. The Committee notes with satisfaction the information provided by the Government and invites the Government to provide updated information on the application of the Convention in practice and examples of court rulings concerning questions of principle relating to the Convention.

Article 2, paragraph 2(b), of the Convention. Workers serving a qualifying period of employment. The Government indicates that in order to lodge an unfair dismissal application under the Fair Work Act, employees must have served a minimum period of employment. In businesses with 15 or more employees, the minimum employment period required is six months, whereas in small businesses, defined in the Act as employing fewer than 15 employees, the minimum employment period is 12 months. The ACTU indicates that this 12-month qualifying period for workers in small businesses will exclude some small business employees from claiming unfair dismissal and will mostly affect young persons. In response to the concerns raised by the ACTU, the Government indicates that the Fair Work Act provisions balance the need for strong protections against unfair dismissals, while recognizing the special circumstances of small businesses. The Government further indicates that while employees in small businesses are subject to a longer qualifying period, they are nevertheless covered by the unfair dismissal protections from the Fair Work Act. The Committee invites the Government to provide information concerning the effects of these legislative changes on small businesses with regard to unfair dismissal claims.

Article 4. Valid reasons for dismissal. The Committee recalls that under the Workplace Relations Act, a claim could be made by an employee of a business with more than 100 employees. However, if the dismissal took place due to "genuine operational reasons", the dismissal was not deemed to be unfair. Under the Fair Work Act, "genuine operational reasons" is no longer a defence from an unfair dismissal claim. Nevertheless, section 385(d) of the Fair Work Act provides that employers can dismiss employees in cases of genuine redundancy. The Government indicates that, in order to satisfy the requirements of genuine redundancy, the Fair Work Act obliges employers to attempt to redeploy an employee and comply with any relevant consultation obligations under an industrial instrument. The ACTU indicates that the Fair Work Act does not require Fair Work Australia to be satisfied that the individuals selected for redundancy are fairly chosen. The ACTU also indicates that there is a risk that employers will be able to unfairly select individuals for redundancy. In response to the concerns raised by the ACTU, the Government indicates that employees who are genuinely made redundant may not make an unfair dismissal claim but a general protections claim in case the reason for which they were considered as being redundant contravenes the general protections. These reasons include prohibited reasons for termination, including the choice to join or not join a union, or to participate in industrial actions. The Committee asks the Government to provide information concerning this provision of the Convention, including information on current cases of terminations of employment which satisfy the requirements for genuine redundancy.

Article 7. Procedure prior to or at the time of termination. The Committee notes that the Small Business Fair Dismissal Code, which came into operation on 1 July 2009, is also relevant to the application of the Convention. The Code contains the basic principles that a small business employer with less than 15 full-time equivalent employees needs to follow in order to ensure that Fair Work Australia considers a dismissal to be fair. These principles include providing the employee with a warning and an opportunity to rectify their behaviour, and guidance on when summary dismissal for serious misconduct is warranted. If a small business employer can prove to Fair Work Australia that they complied with the Code, a dismissal will be found to be fair. The ACTU is concerned that the Code does not ensure that employees in small businesses are treated fairly. For example, the Code suggests that an employer may summarily dismiss an employee if they believe that the employee has engaged in a single act of theft, fraud, or violence. The Government indicates that the Small Business Fair Dismissal Code does not take away unfair dismissal protection – its purpose is to facilitate a fair dismissal process. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the application of the Small Business Fair Dismissal Code with regard to workers' opportunity to defend themselves against the allegations made prior to termination.

Articles 8 and 9. Procedure of appeal against termination. Under the Fair Work Act, if a dismissed employee believes the dismissal was harsh, unjust or unreasonable, they may submit an unfair dismissal application for remedy to Fair Work Australia. With regard to summary dismissals in small businesses, the ACTU indicates that it is unclear whether Fair Work Australia will be able to inquire into the reasonableness of the employer's opinion in cases concerning possible theft, fraud, or violence. In response to these concerns, the Government indicates that when an employee in a small business submits an unfair dismissal claim, Fair Work Australia will first determine compliance with the Code. The Code requires that in cases of summary dismissal for serious misconduct, it is sufficient that the employer has reported the misconduct to the police. However, the Code requires that the employer must have reasonable grounds for reporting the misconduct to the police. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the effect given to these provisions of the Convention, more specifically, with regard to workers in small businesses.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Cameroon

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1988)

Articles 12, 13 and 14 of the Convention. Severance allowance. Collective dismissals. The Committee previously noted a communication of the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC), forwarded to the Government in October 2008, in which the UGTC referred to the dismissal of 215 workers in a shipyard enterprise without consultation. The Government indicates that the restructuring process of the reorganized or liquidated state enterprises has led to the creation of several committees in which representatives of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security participated. At the end of this process, a total of 22,553,594,820 Communauté Financière Africaine francs (XAF) was paid to 13,310 former employees of 49 companies. The Committee notes Decision No. 06/1438/CF of 10 July 2006 on the creation, organization and operation of the tripartite committee set up to assess the balance of social rights of the former employees of the liquidated or restructured state companies. The severance allowances of the workers dismissed from the liquidated or restructured state companies were assessed by a tripartite committee. Once that work had been completed, the Committee sent a report to the minister responsible for finance and the procedure for the settlement of those entitlements is now under way. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report whether the dismissed workers are paid their severance allowance and to provide information on the measures taken to mitigate the adverse effects of dismissals, such as those envisaged in Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166).

Article 4. Determination of valid reasons for termination of employment. The Government indicates that full effect is given to the provisions of Article 4 through the relevant provisions of the Labour Code, which are reproduced in collective agreements. The Committee notes several court decisions handed down by the High Court in which the reasons given were not regarded as valid reasons, namely:

- termination of employment for early retirement which is not based on the worker's will or a negotiated agreement;
- termination of the employment of a staff representative without requesting the opinion of the joint managers and without the authorization of the competent labour inspector; and
- termination of employment not justified by professional misconduct on the part of the worker.

The Committee requests the Government to continue providing up to date examples of court decisions on cases of wrongful dismissal.

Article 5(c) and (d). Invalid reasons for termination. The Government indicates that the reasons set out in section 39 of the Labour Code are not exhaustive and that paragraph 2 of that section provides that the competent court may rule that a dismissal was wrongful following an investigation into the causes and circumstances of the termination of the employment contract and that the reasons which may be mentioned in the court decision include race, colour, sex and marital status. The Government also indicates that sections 9 and 10 of Act No. 2005/006 of 29 July 2005 on the status of refugees in Cameroon strengthens the protection of refugees against termination of employment. The Committee recalls that the filing of a complaint or the participation in proceedings against an employer involving alleged violation of laws or regulations or recourse to competent administrative authorities (Article 5(c)), as well as race, colour, sex, marital status, family responsibilities, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin of the worker (Article 5(d)) do not constitute valid reasons for termination. The Committee requests the Government to provide examples of court decisions relating to invalid reasons for termination.

Article 7. Defence procedure prior to termination of employment. The Committee notes the extracts of the collective agreements applicable to certain categories of workers, such as those working in insurance, road transport and pharmacies, in which workers are given the right to justify themselves before termination of their employment. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how it is ensured that all workers, particularly those not covered by collective agreements, have the possibility of defending themselves against allegations made against them with regard to their conduct or performance before their employment is terminated.

Article 8, paragraph 3. Time limits for the appeal procedure. The Government once again indicates that any appeal against unjustified or wrongful termination automatically results in a claim for wages or damages for breach of contract. The Committee notes that section 74(1) of the Labour Code stipulates a limitation of three years for an action to recover wages or compensation for breach of contract. The Committee asks the Government to communicate the judicial decisions ensuring that the time limit for the appeal procedure against an unjustified dismissal is three years.

Articles 11 and 12, paragraph 3. Definition of serious misconduct. The Government indicates that it does not currently have the material resources to make inquiries to the competent courts to obtain the court decisions handed down relating to termination of employment for serious misconduct. A collection of the leading judgements in labour case law is in the process of being produced under the programme to support the implementation of the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work (PAMODEC). The Committee observes that the principal manner in which these important provisions of the Convention are made effective is by means of court decisions. The Committee hopes that progress will be made with the assistance of the ILO and that the Government will be able to provide up to date information on the application of the Convention in practice (particularly court decisions), as well as statistics on the number of terminations for economic reasons, the number of appeals against terminations and the compensation granted (Part V of the report form).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2011.]

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government has not provided information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in June 2002. The Committee understands that the Labour Code was adopted in October 2002. Major changes have occurred in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In recent years, the Democratic Republic of the Congo has received technical assistance from the ILO and has been a recipient of aid from international financial institutions and other international partners in assisting in the country's transitional process towards political and economic stability. The Committee asks the Government to provide up to date and detailed information on the application of the Convention, including court decisions relating to the Convention, available statistics on the activities of bodies of appeal and information on the number of terminations for economic or similar reasons in the context of the current economic reforms.

Article 12 of the Convention. Severance allowance and other income protection. The Committee recalls its 2002 direct request and notes that the 2002 Labour Code does not provide any indication as to the amount of severance to be paid to workers. The Committee recalls that Article 12 provides that a worker whose employment has been terminated is entitled to a severance allowance or any other form of income protection or benefit. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide information on how it gives effect to this provision of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the preparation of a detailed report, including the indications requested in this observation, will certainly provide the Government and the social partners with an opportunity to ensure protection against unfair dismissal as provided by the Convention. In this regard, the Government might wish to request further technical assistance from the relevant units of the ILO to address obstacles in reporting on compliance with the Convention.

Lesotho

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in November 2008 including detailed replies to its previous comments. It notes with interest the judgements by the labour courts of Lesotho on the matters covered by the Convention.

Article 2, paragraphs 4–6. Categories of employed persons excluded from the scope of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government did not list any categories of worker contemplated in subparagraphs (4) and (5) in its first report. Accordingly, as the Government itself indicates in its latest report, no categories of worker have been excluded from the reach of the Convention. The Committee notes that section 2(1) of the Labour Code applies to all employees except those listed in section 2(2) which refers to the members of the army, the police force, or any other "disciplined force". It also refers to categories of "public officer" specifically exempted by the minister. The Committee notes that since 2001 it has requested the Government to supply it with information confirming that these categories are provided with the requisite protection afforded by the Convention. In its recent report, it states that there are no provisions giving protection against unfair termination in respect of these categories of employees. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps as a matter of urgency to ensure that these categories of worker are afforded the protections guaranteed by the Convention. The Government is requested to inform in its next report of any such steps taken.

Papua New Guinea

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in June 2009 in reply to the 2007 observation. The Government indicates that the new Industrial Relations Act, now in its fifth draft, is before the National Tripartite Consultative Council for approval and will be referred to the National Executive Council for adoption, and will afterwards be submitted to Parliament for promulgation. The National Tripartite Consultative Council meeting was scheduled for August 2009. The Government further indicates that the provisions of the Convention will feature comprehensively in the new Industrial Relations Act and will be considered in the review of the Employment Act. The Committee hopes that in its next report, due in 2011, the Government will report on the enactment of the new Industrial Relations Act in order to ensure the full and effective application of each provision of the Convention. As soon as the new legislation is enacted, please provide a copy of its text to the ILO.

Turkey

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2007 observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending May 2006, which included observations from the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) and the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TİSK). It would appreciate receiving in the Government's next report copies of relevant updated legislation which gives effect to the provisions of the Convention as well as relevant decisions issued by the courts on the matters covered by the Convention (Parts I and II, IV and V of the report form).

Follow-up to a representation submitted under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee recalls the conclusions adopted in 2000 by the committee set up by the Governing Body to examine a representation made by the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) alleging non-observance by Turkey of Convention No. 158, which concluded that sections 14(1) and 16 of the Maritime Labour Act (No. 854) and section 6 of the Journalists Labour Act (No. 5953) do not require a valid reason for dismissal. TÜRK-İŞ reiterates that these categories of workers are still not able to benefit from the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that several provisions, in particular section 18 of the new Labour Act No. 4857 on valid grounds for dismissal are applicable by analogy to journalists. It further notes that the provisions of the Maritime Labour Act (No. 854) on dismissal were not modified. The Committee thus asks the Government to provide further information on the manner in which it is ensured in practice that workers who are subject to the Maritime Labour Act (No. 854) are not dismissed without a valid reason, as required by the Convention.

Article 2, paragraphs 2 and 3, of the Convention. Adequate safeguards against recourse to contracts of employment for a specified period of time. TÜRK-İŞ indicates that workers on fixed-term contracts of employment or in temporary or seasonal employment, and those with less than six months' service at a workplace do not benefit from the provisions of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to indicate what safeguards have been provided against recourse to contracts of employment for a specified period of time, the aim of which is to avoid protection resulting from the Convention.

Article 2, paragraphs 4–6. Undertakings excluded from the Convention. In reply to previous comments, the Government refers to section 18 of the new Labour Act No. 4857 of 2003 which provides that dismissal must be based on a valid reason only when the worker is employed in an establishment with 30 or more workers. The Government also refers to Article 2(5) of the Convention, and indicates that establishments with fewer than 30 workers are excluded from the application of the Convention. TİSK indicates that this exclusion is based on the premise that these businesses would not be able to afford the burden of "job security" provisions and a lengthy termination procedure. TİSK also indicates that the limit of 30 workers is very low and is preventing the improvement of employment, as businesses in labour-intensive sectors of industry try not to exceed 30 workers as they do not want to fall within the scope of the "job security" provisions for employees. The Committee observes that the categories of workers that may be excluded pursuant to Article 2(5) must be identified and listed by the member State ratifying the Convention in its first report submitted under article 22 of the ILO Constitution following ratification, in accordance with Article 2(5)(6). It notes in this respect that the Government's first report received in December 1997 contained no indication that workers employed in establishments with fewer than 30 workers were to be excluded from the application of the Convention under the terms of Article 2(5). The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate how workers employed in establishments with fewer than 30 workers are covered by the protection afforded by Article 4 of the Convention.

Other categories of workers excluded. The Committee also notes that several provisions of the new Labour Act do not apply to employers' representatives and their assistants authorized to manage the entire enterprise and those who are also authorized to recruit and terminate the employment of employees (last paragraph of section 18 of the Labour Act). The Committee asks the Government to indicate the manner in which the protection afforded by the provisions of the Convention is ensured in respect of employers' representatives and their assistants.

Article 4. Valid reason for termination. TÜRK-İŞ indicates that it is not clear what type of conduct or lack of capacity would constitute a valid reason for termination or what requirements of the workplace or the business would be regarded as sufficient ground for termination of employment. TİSK indicates that, although the employer is free to determine the content and objectives of its operational decisions, it has to demonstrate that the termination of employment had become necessary as a consequence of the operational decision. Referring to section 25 of the Labour Act respecting termination of employment due to "a situation incompatible with good will or the code of ethics or other similar situations", TİSK indicates that the worker will be entitled neither to seniority pay nor to unemployment benefits. The Committee asks the Government to provide details on relevant court decisions which give effect to Article 4, which constitutes the "cornerstone" of the Convention (paragraph 76 of the 1995 General Survey on protection against unjustified dismissal). It reiterates its interest in being informed about the manner in which a "situation incompatible with good will or the code of ethics or other similar situations" is considered by the courts as a valid reason for termination of employment.

Article 10. Remedies in case of invalid termination. TÜRK-İŞ indicates that court decisions do not result in the reinstatement of workers as the employer has the right to choose reinstatement or the payment of compensation. TÜRK-İŞ also indicates that these difficulties arise because the worker does not have the right to choose between reinstatement or compensation. In this respect, TISK notes that due to the backlog of judicial cases which are taking a year to conclude, an establishment which dismisses a worker may be compelled by a court decision to re-employ the worker a year later and that establishments which do not want to do so face paying large sums in compensation. TISK refers to section 21 of the Labour Act and indicates that it is not possible to waive or to change the amount of compensation or other entitlements specified in that section, either to the detriment or the benefit of the employee. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the effect given in practice to Article 10 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1990)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its report received in June 2004, which indicated that the draft Employment Bill which, according to the Government, would give effect to the Convention, had still not been adopted. The Committee understands that the Employment Act was adopted and came into force in 2006. In this context, the Committee considers it particularly regrettable that the Government has still not provided the relevant information on the application of the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will be in a position to provide a detailed report containing full particulars on the application of each of the provisions of the Convention in both law and practice.

[The Government is invited to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1985)

In reply to the previous observation, the Government indicates, in a report received in September 2009, that since 2001 workers engaged in managerial functions do not enjoy the special protection against dismissal (inamovilidad laboral especial) applicable for men and women workers earning up to three times the minimum wage. The Committee once again draws the attention of the Government to the fact that the Convention applies to “all employed persons” including managers. It once again invites the Government to indicate the measures adopted to ensure that managerial workers are covered by the protection afforded by the Convention.

Legislative reforms. The Venezuelan Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production (FEDECAMARAS), in a communication forwarded to the Government in September 2009, once again refers to the protection against dismissal decrees and maintains that the policy of labour stability is in violation of the Convention. The Government indicates in its report that during the course of 2008 a total of 39,807 applications for re-employment were filed with labour inspectors at the national level. These applications gave rise to 11,498 requests for the reintegration, while 2,123 applications were declared to be unfounded. The Committee recalls that the Convention reflects a well-constructed balance between the interests of the employer and those of the worker, particularly in relation to dismissals for reasons relating to the operational needs of the enterprise (general observation for Convention No. 158). The Committee reiterates its conviction that, also with regard to the important issues covered by the Convention, the Government and the social partners should make a commitment to promoting and reinforcing tripartism and social dialogue. The Committee reiterates its interest in examining the legislative texts that have been adopted in relation to the termination of the employment relationship. The Committee also requests the inclusion of relevant and updated information on the activities of the bodies of appeal (such as the number of appeals against unjustified termination, the outcome of such appeals, the nature of the remedy awarded and the average time taken for an appeal to be decided) and on the number of terminations for economic or similar reasons (Part V of the report form). The Committee hopes that the Government will also provide examples of recent court rulings handed down in relation to the definition of justified reasons for dismissal (Part IV of the report form).

Wages

General observation

The ongoing global economic crisis is gravely affecting the job and income security of millions of workers around the world. This economic downturn is a forceful reminder of the critical importance of those international labour standards that seek to ensure decent minimum wage levels, prevent the accumulation of wage arrears, grant preferential treatment of wage claims in the event of the employer's insolvency or avoid the risk of social dumping in public procurement operations. In this context, the Committee wishes to refer to the note included in its General Report regarding the "Relevance and application of ILO wages-related standards in the context of the global economic crisis" (pages 32–35), in which it highlighted the importance of the ILO Conventions on minimum wage fixing, protection of wages – including in the case of the employer's insolvency – and labour clauses in public procurement contracts for setting the legal framework within which appropriate crisis responses can be formulated.

The Committee considers it very significant that the Global Jobs Pact, adopted by the International Labour Conference in June 2009, places particular emphasis on the need to strengthen respect for international labour standards and expressly identifies ILO instruments on wages and labour conditions on public contracts as being relevant in order to prevent a downward spiral in labour conditions and build recovery (paragraph 14). It further suggests that "governments should consider options such as minimum wages that can reduce poverty and inequity, increase demand and contribute to economic stability" (paragraph 23) and points out that "in order to avoid deflationary wage spirals, ... minimum wages should be regularly reviewed and adapted" (paragraph 12). In the same spirit, the ILO Director-General in his Report to the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference entitled Tackling the global jobs crisis – Recovery through decent work policies expressed the view that "the different elements of the way forward are to be found in the international labour standards adopted, promoted and supervised by the ILO" (paragraph 42). More concretely, he stressed that "avoiding wage deflation and providing a proper anchor, in the form of effective minimum wages, will support global demand and reduce trade tensions" (paragraph 116).

The Committee trusts that the crisis responses adopted or envisaged by the governments in the field of income security will be fully consonant with the principles underlying the relevant ILO Conventions and with the output of the ILO supervisory bodies. The Committee draws particular attention to:

- The Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which establishes that determining minimum wage levels within an institutionalized framework of tripartite consultations or negotiations is key to establishing a safety net for the workers at the bottom of the wage scale while periodic review and adjustment of minimum wage rates is an absolute prerequisite to the meaningful operation of any minimum wage system. This, in turn, underlines the importance of independent sources of up to date and reliable statistical information.
- The Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95), which seeks to prevent wage arrears that not only deprive workers of cash and therefore lower consumption but also imply poor tax revenues and reduced public spending thus leading to a vicious circle that affects the entire economic and social tissue of the society. In view of complexity of issues, progress may only be made through cooperation with social partners. Implementing reforms and reaching compromise solutions in a crisis environment needs constant and genuine social dialogue. Drastic measures also call for strict monitoring and enhanced enforcement, which in turn implies reinforced labour inspection services and a system of truly dissuasive and effective sanctions.
- The Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Convention, 1992 (No. 173), which focuses on modern solutions for protecting workers' income in the event of enterprise closure, such as the setting up of wage guarantee funds based on compulsory employers' contributions, which require appropriate changes in the bankruptcy and wage legislation.
- The Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94), which responds to the challenge of how to prevent public authorities from entering into contracts involving the employment of workers at conditions below an acceptable level of social protection and how to encourage public authorities to raise the bar and act as model employers.

To enable the Committee to discharge its functions in monitoring the application of ratified Conventions and also permit the Office to facilitate the exchange of good practices, tested policies and innovative solutions, the Committee would be grateful if the governments concerned would collect and transmit together with their regular reports detailed information on any wage policy measures taken or planned in connection with the current economic crisis which would have an impact on relevant Conventions, especially with reference to: (i) readjustment of minimum wage rates; (ii) prevention of large-scale phenomena of wage arrears; (iii) protection of workers' claims in bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings; and (iv) inclusion of labour clauses in stimulus packages focusing on public works projects.

Algeria

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1962)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the adoption of Presidential Decree No. 08-338 of 26 October 2008, section 14 of which amends section 50 of Presidential Decree No. 02-250 of 24 July 2002 on public procurement regulations to add “the labour clauses ensuring the observance of labour legislation” among the contractual provisions which need to be mentioned in every public contract. While noting that a reference to labour clauses is made for the first time in the public procurement legislation, the Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention to the following: first, as currently worded, section 14 of the Presidential Decree of 2008 refers generally to clauses guaranteeing respect for labour legislation but fails to give effect to the core requirement of the Convention which is the insertion of labour clauses expressly providing for wages, hours of work and other working conditions of the workers concerned that need to be aligned, as a minimum, to best local standards established through collective bargaining, arbitration or legislation – whichever is the most favourable. The Committee refers, in this respect, to paragraph 41 of the General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts in which it emphasized that the general applicability of national labour law to work done in the execution of public contracts is not the focus of the Convention since there would be very little meaning in adopting a Convention that would simply affirm that work for public contracts must comply with relevant labour legislation. It also refers to paragraph 103 of the same General Survey in which it pointed out that conditions not less favourable than the three alternatives offered by the Convention (i.e. collective agreement, arbitration award, legislation) would in practice, in most instances, imply the best conditions of the three.

Second, the terms of the labour clauses to be included in public contracts and any variations must be determined after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, as required by Article 2(3) of the Convention. Third, the Convention requires specific measures for the enforcement of the provisions of the labour clauses, including the posting of notices in conspicuous places at the workplaces concerned with a view to informing the workers of the conditions applicable to them (Article 4) and adequate sanctions such as the withholding of contracts or the withholding of payments (Article 5).

In light of the preceding observations, the Committee hopes that the Government will take additional steps to ensure the effective implementation of the Convention. It recalls, in this respect, that such steps do not necessarily imply legislative enactment but may entail administrative instructions or circulars and asks the Government to provide supplementary information, including copies of any newly adopted texts, on measures taken or envisaged in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee would also appreciate receiving sample copies of any recently awarded public contracts which have incorporated labour clauses in accordance with section 50 of Presidential Decree No. 02-250 of 2002, as amended by section 14 of Presidential Decree No. 08-338 of 2008.

Finally, the Committee attaches herewith a copy of the Practical Guide on Convention No. 94 which was prepared by the Office in September 2008 based on the conclusions of the aforementioned General Survey to help better understand the requirements of the Convention and ultimately improve their application in law and practice.

Argentina

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1950)

Article 3 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee notes the Government’s detailed replies to the comments made by the Confederation of Argentinean Workers (CTA), dated 4 July 2008 and 21 October 2009, as well as the documentation attached to its report. It also notes the comments made by the CTA dated 31 August 2008 which mainly repeat those sent in August 2007.

With regard to the operation of the National Council for Employment, Productivity and the Minimum Adjustable Wage (CNEPySMVM), the CTA previously indicated that the Council, which meets only on the initiative of the Government, had dwindled in importance as a forum for social dialogue for defining the priorities and steps to be taken with regard to wage policy. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that section 2 of Resolution No. 617 of the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security, of 2 September 2004, authorizes the social partners to convene the Council on the proposal of at least 14 advisers, including eight members from the sector requesting that the Council be convened and six members from the other sector. However, according to the Government, this option has not been used to date. It also notes Resolution No. 1/2009 of 22 July 2009, under which the Council was convened for a plenary session, and Resolution No. 642/2009 of 27 July 2009 appointing the employers’ and workers’ representatives for that session.

With regard to the determination of the basic shopping basket (canasta básica total), the CTA previously commented that, because of the way in which the Council operates, it was not possible to determine the basic basket to serve as a reference for setting the amount of the minimum wage. The Government indicates that this matter was presented to the Council's productivity committee in 2004, but no agreement was reached with the employer sector. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the current minimum wage for the first time covers nearly 100 per cent of the amount of the basic shopping basket (compared to only 80 per cent in 2005 and 43 per cent in 2001).

Furthermore, the CTA asserted that government policy on wages only benefited workers in the formal economy, who account for only 57.2 per cent of employees. In this regard, the Government indicates that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security is making considerable efforts to combat informal labour, particularly with regard to domestic workers, by launching the "declared labour" (Trabajo en Blanco) campaign in order to increase the percentage of domestic workers declared by their employer and benefiting from social protection and a minimum wage. The Government adds that in 2004 the Council attempted to reach a consensus on this matter, but without success.

Finally, with regard to the method for determining the minimum adjustable wage (SMVM), the CTA previously indicated that, because of shortcomings in the Council's procedures, there were no objective rules to determine the amount of the minimum wage, the wage policy agreed between the social partners was not implemented, and the amount of the minimum wage was fixed at the discretion of the Government. The Government indicates that, since the Council was convened in August 2004, the readjustment of the minimum adjustable wage has been discussed within the committee on the minimum adjustable wage and employment benefits on four occasions between 2004 and 2007. Following these meetings, the plenary adopted the decisions proposed by a two-thirds majority in accordance with the provisions of the regulations on the operation of the Council. The Committee also notes Resolution No. 2/2009 of 30 July 2009 adjusting the minimum wage, which currently stands at 1,440 pesos per month (approximately US$378). Finally, it notes that on 1 January 2010 the minimum wage will be increased to 1,500 pesos per month (approximately US$393). The Committee notes with interest the major developments and progress made in recent years with regard to the operation of the system for determining the minimum wage and the regular readjustment of its rate. It hopes that the Government will continue its efforts in this regard in full and constant consultation with the social partners and requests it to provide information in its next reports on any relevant developments. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would provide copies of collective agreements determining the minimum wage rate by sector or branch of the economy, copies of studies or other official documents, such as activity reports of the CNEPySMVM, on the operation of the minimum wage system and, in particular, extracts from the reports of the inspection services indicating the violations reported and penalties imposed with regard to the payment of the minimum wage rate in force.

Furthermore, the Committee takes this opportunity to draw the Government's attention to the conclusions adopted by the ILO Governing Body on the basis of the recommendations of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards (document GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 19 and 40). The Governing Body considered that Convention No. 26 was among those instruments which were no longer fully up to date, even if it remains relevant in certain respects. The Committee therefore suggests that the Government should consider the possibility of ratifying the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which marks certain advances compared to older instruments on minimum wage fixing by providing, for example, a broader scope of application, the introduction of a generalized minimum wage system and, finally, the adoption of criteria for determining minimum wage levels. The ratification of Convention No. 131 would be all the more appropriate given that the legislation of Argentina actually establishes a comprehensive minimum wage system and appears to be in conformity with the requirements of that Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decisions taken or envisaged on this matter.

Bolivia

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1977)

Articles 4, 6, 7, 8 and 12 of the Convention. Abusive practices in the payment of the wages of indigenous agricultural workers. Further to its previous comment concerning the allegations of abuses in the payment of wages to agricultural workers, as well as to the study entitled Enganche y Servidumbre por Deudas en Bolivia ("The trap of debt bondage in Bolivia"), published by the Office in January 2005, which reported practices resulting in tens of thousands of indigenous workers being in a situation of debt bondage, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the legislative provisions relating to the prohibition of forced labour and slavery contained in: (i) the new national Constitution adopted on 7 February 2009 (articles 15(V) and 46(II)); (ii) Supreme Decree No. 29894 of 7 February 2009 (sections 86(f) and 87(f)); and (iii) the Penal Code (sections 291 and 293). It recalls that the recommendations of the above study included the ratification of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), which was ratified by Bolivia on 31 May 2005. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to refer to the comments sent to it in 2009 under Convention No. 29.

With regard to the formulation of a national plan of action to eradicate and combat forced labour in all its forms, the Committee notes that the Government provides no information on this point. It refers to paragraph 356 of the Global Report under the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work (Report I(B)), submitted to the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference 2009, in which it is emphasized that forced labour can only be eradicated "through integrated policies and programmes, mixing law enforcement with proactive measures of prevention and protection, and empowering those at risk of forced labour to defend their own rights". The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide concrete and detailed information on any progress made with regard to the current situation of agricultural workers, as well as on any initiative, current or future, designed to eradicate forced labour and ensure the regular payment of a suitable wage to the workers concerned. Furthermore, noting the Government's indication that a new general Labour Act is in the process of being drawn up, the Committee hopes that the Government will also take into account the comments sent to it in 2009 under the Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117), and the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1, paragraphs 2 and 3, of the Convention. Scope of application. Further to its previous comments on the exclusion of certain categories of workers from the coverage of the minimum wage legislation, the Committee notes the Government's statement in its 2004 report that by Act No. 1715 of 18 October 1996 on agrarian reform, agricultural wage workers had come within the scope of application of the General Labour Act and that a draft Supreme Decree was expected to regulate agricultural wage work and guarantee the general application of the national minimum wage to those workers. The Committee recalls, however, that in some earlier reports the Government had stated that only sugar cane and cotton workers were not excluded from the minimum wage system and that efforts were being made to extend its application to rubber, forestry and Brazil nut workers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to clarify the situation in this regard, and to transmit a copy of the Decree on agricultural wage workers as soon as it is formally adopted.

Article 3. Determination of minimum wage level. The Committee notes that the minimum wage was last revised in 2003 by Supreme Decree No. 27048 and is presently fixed at 440 bolivianos. According to the information supplied by the Government in its last report, this amount is renegotiated every year and increases proportionately to the evolution of the consumer price index. The Government added that the national minimum wage was used for the calculation of various pay supplements and social security benefits, for instance seniority bonus and maternity allowance, and therefore had an impact on the income of most workers. In this connection, the Committee reminds the Government that the primary function of the minimum wage system envisaged in the Convention is to serve as a measure of social protection and to overcome poverty by ensuring decent minimum levels of wages especially for the low-paid, unskilled workers. Therefore, minimum rates of pay that represent only a fraction of the real needs of workers and their families, whatever their subsidiary importance in calculating certain benefits may be, can hardly fit the concept and the rationale of a minimum wage as this arises from the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures it intends to take to ensure that the national minimum wage fulfils a meaningful role in social policy, which implies that it should not be allowed to fall below a socially acceptable "subsistence level" and that it should maintain its purchasing power in relation to a basic basket of essential consumer goods.

Article 4, paragraph 2. Consultations with social partners. The Committee has been requesting the Government for many years to provide tangible evidence of full consultations held with the social partners with respect to fixing or readjusting minimum wage rates, as required by the provisions of the Convention. In its 2004 report, the Government indicated that no consultations with the Bolivian Labour Federation (COB) had been possible that year due to persistent claims of that organization linked to the participation of the President of the Republic in these consultations. However, negotiations had been held with different organizations at the branch level resulting in wage increases of 3 per cent in several sectors. As regards discussions on minimum wages with employers' representatives, the Government stated that it could not enter into any such discussions with the Confederation of Private Employers of Bolivia (CEPB) since section 8 of the statutes of this organization prevented it from negotiating matters related to wages. While taking due note of these indications, the Committee wishes to emphasize once again the fundamental character of the principle of full consultation of the social partners at all stages of the minimum wage fixing procedure. According to the letter and the spirit of the Convention, the process of consultation must precede any decision-making and must be effective, that is to say it must afford the social partners a genuine opportunity to express their views and have some influence on the decisions pertaining to the matters that are the subject of consultation. While recalling that "consultation" should be kept distinct from "co-determination" or mere "information", the Committee considers that the Government is under the obligation to create and maintain conditions permitting the full consultation and direct participation of the most representative employers' and workers' organizations in all circumstances. It therefore urges the Government to take appropriate action to ensure that the requirement for meaningful consultations set forth in this Article of the Convention is effectively applied, preferably in a well-defined, commonly agreed and institutionalized form. It accordingly asks the Government to provide information on any developments concerning the establishment of the National Council on Labour Relations.

Article 5. Enforcement measures. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's indications in its report of 2004, it intended to amend section 121 of the General Labour Act to provide for the periodic readjustment of the amount of fine to be imposed in the event of infringement of the minimum wage rates in force. The Committee requests the Government to supply up to date information in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Brazil

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes that the Government referred to Technical Note No. 0138/2002 and reiterated the view that there was no need to insert labour clauses into public contracts because the workers' rights were protected by the general labour legislation, by the terms of the individual contracts and by the monitoring activities of the labour inspection services. The Committee would appreciate receiving a copy of the above technical note.

In view of the Government's continued failure to implement the basic requirements of the Convention, the Committee wishes once again to draw attention to the following: (i) the rationale of the Convention is to ensure – through the insertion of specific labour clauses in all public contracts – that workers engaged in the execution of public contracts enjoy wage and other working conditions not less favourable than those established by law, collective agreement or arbitration award for work of the same nature in the same district; (ii) since labour laws and regulations normally set out minimum standards which are susceptible to being improved through collective bargaining, it is evident that the mere fact that the general labour legislation applies also to public contracts is not sufficient in itself to ensure the most advantageous pay and working conditions to the workers concerned; and (iii) to ensure compliance with the terms of labour clauses, the Convention requires concrete measures for adequate publicity (posting of notices) and an adequate system of sanctions (withholding of contracts or withholding of payments) that go beyond the enforcement measures often provided for in the general labour legislation.

The Committee has been pointing out that, even though the public procurement legislation, especially section 44 of Act No. 8666 of 1993 on public tendering and Normative Instruction No. 8 of 1994, may be considered to give partial effect to the requirements of the Convention, i.e. as regards the level of wages of the workers employed by public contractors, additional measures are needed in order to attain full legislative conformity with all the provisions of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance and expert advice of the Office should it so wish with a view to addressing the concerns outlined above.

Moreover, the Committee notes that the Government has not supplied in recent years any information of a practical nature concerning the application of the Convention. It therefore asks the Government to make every possible effort to collect and transmit, in accordance with Part V of the report form, up to date information on the average number of public contracts granted annually and the approximate number of workers engaged in their execution, inspection results showing the number and nature of contraventions observed, extracts from official documents or studies – such as activity reports of the Department of Logistics and General Services or of the Inspector of Contracts (fiscal de contrato) – addressing issues connected with the social dimensions of public procurement, as well as any other particulars which would enable the Committee to have a clear understanding of the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice.

Finally, the Committee takes this opportunity to refer to its 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts which contains an overview of public procurement practices and procedures in so far as labour conditions are concerned and makes a global assessment of the impact and present-day relevance of Convention No. 94.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Bulgaria

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1955)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes with regret to note that the Government is still not in a position to report any concrete progress in giving effect to the principal obligation of the Convention, i.e. the insertion of the labour clause prescribed by Article 2 in all public contracts falling within its scope. The Government refers to three different provisions of the Public Procurement Act (SG No. 28/06.04.2004) which transpose corresponding provisions of the EU public procurement directive 2004/18/EC but which bear no or little relationship to the specific requirements of the Convention. More concretely, sections 16c and 26 of the Public Procurement Act deal with situations where States may use procurement operations as a means to pursue broader public policy objectives such as environmental protection or the promotion of employment of vulnerable groups (e.g. persons with disabilities), whereas section 56 of the same Act requires tenderers to declare that in drawing up their offer they have taken into account existing regulations concerning minimum wage levels. As the Committee has pointed out in paragraphs 242 and 248 of its 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts, even though there is no contradiction between the requirements of ILO Convention No. 94 and the principles set out in the two EU public procurement directives, these directives do not specify a level of employment protection or the working conditions required in the performance of a contract as the Convention does. The Committee further refers to paragraph 46 of the same General Survey in which it observed that Convention No. 94 calls for the insertion of labour clauses of a very specific content which should not be confused with clauses related to equal remuneration and gender equality, such as those including affirmative action measures (e.g. measures to promote the employment of women or addressing discrimination through a system of quotas), or yet other clauses requiring compliance with core labour standards (e.g. those aimed at preventing the use of child labour and anti-union practices).

In view of the Government's continued failure to implement the basic requirement of the Convention, the Committee wishes once again to draw attention to the following: (i) the rationale of the Convention is to ensure – through the insertion of specific labour clauses in all public contracts – that workers engaged in the execution of public contracts enjoy the most advantageous wage and other working conditions among those established by law, collective agreement or arbitration award for work of the same nature in the same district; (ii) since labour laws and regulations normally set out minimum standards which are susceptible of being improved through collective bargaining, it is evident that the mere fact that the general labour legislation applies also to public contracts is not sufficient in itself to ensure to the workers concerned the most advantageous pay and working conditions established for work of the same character in the district concerned; (iii) to ensure compliance with the terms of labour clauses, the Convention requires concrete measures for adequate publicity (posting of notices) and an adequate system of sanctions (withholding of contracts or withholding of payments) that go beyond the enforcement measures often provided for in the general labour legislation. The Committee therefore urges the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures in order to give full effect to the requirements of the Convention and recalls that the Government may draw upon the advisory services of the Office to this effect.

Moreover, while noting the statistical information provided by the Government concerning the number of public contracts awarded in the period 2006–08, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to communicate up to date information regarding the practical application of the Convention, including statistical data on the number of public contracts awarded during the reporting period, the approximate number of workers involved in their execution, copies of standard bidding documents, official documents such as annual activity reports of the Public Procurement Agency, etc.

Finally, the Committee attaches herewith a copy of the Practical Guide on Convention No. 94 which was prepared by the Office in September 2008 based on the conclusions of the aforementioned General Survey to help better understand the requirements of the Convention and ultimately improve their application in law and practice.

Cameroon

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1962)

Article 2 of the Convention. Labour clauses. Referring to its previous observation and to the comments made in 2006 by the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC), the Committee notes that the Government merely indicates that the failure by employers to comply strictly with the provisions of collective agreements is a recurring problem and that labour inspectors monitor the application of regulations and agreements in enterprises or on site and, if necessary, impose penalties on recalcitrant employers. With regard to the social security coverage of workers engaged in the execution of public contracts, the Government indicates that it has initiated a process of modernization of the social security system and that a draft Public Contracts Code is in the process of being drawn up.

The Committee recalls that for many years it has been commenting on legislation, such as Decree No. 86/903 of 1986 governing public contracts, Decree No. 95/101 of 1995 regulating public contracts and, more recently, Decree No. 2004/275 of 2004 issuing the Public Contracts Code, which do not give effect to Article 2 of the Convention that requires the inclusion of clauses ensuring to workers in enterprises involved in public contracts the same working conditions as those established for work of the same character in the trade or industry concerned in the district where the work is carried on. Furthermore, referring to the Public Contracts Code of 2004, the Committee requested the Government to take prompt action to ensure that full effect is given to the provisions of Article 4(a)(iii) (notices in workplaces) and Article 5 (withholding of contracts or of payments) of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to finally bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention. It also requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments relating to the drafting of the new Public Contracts Code.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the report sent by the Government in response to observations made by the General Confederation of Labour-Liberty of Cameroon (CGTL). It notes with regret, however, that the Government's replies are very brief and contain no fresh information about the measures taken to ensure implementation of the Convention.

Article 8, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Deductions from wages. The Committee refers to its previous comments regarding section 75(1) of Act No. 92/007 of 14 August 1992 issuing the Labour Code and section 4 of Decree No. 94/197/PM of 9 May 1994 regarding deductions from wages, under which such deductions, known as “deposits”, may be prescribed in collective agreements or individual labour contracts. It reminds the Government that according to Article 8(1) of the Convention, such deductions may be permitted only under the conditions and to the extent prescribed by national laws or regulations or fixed by collective agreement or arbitration award. Consequently, they may not be prescribed by a mere individual work contract. The Committee notes that in its 2008 report, the Government stated it expected the National Labour Advisory Board to examine the relevant legal texts. It notes that in reply to CGTL's observations on this matter, in its last report the Government invites the above organization to make proposals for consideration by the National Labour Advisory Board. The Committee stresses that social dialogue is of fundamental importance to the implementation of international labour standards, and points out that responsibility for alignment of the national legislation with the Convention ultimately rests with the Government. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to send all relevant information on measures taken to bring the legislation into line with the Convention on this matter. The Government is asked to send the Office a copy of any draft amendments to section 75(1) of the Labour Code and section 4 of Decree No. 94/197/PM of 9 May 1994 that may have been submitted to the National Labour Advisory Board for consideration.

Article 12, paragraph 1. Payment of wages at regular intervals. In the absence of any information on this matter in the Government's last report, the Committee again asks the Government to supply detailed information on the operation of the special commission set up to calculate and settle wage entitlements and arrears of former employees of state and semi-public enterprises which are being wound up because of the economic crisis, to which the Government referred in its report for 2008, together with details of the results obtained by the commission. The Government is also asked to provide information on the extent of the wage arrears problem in the various sectors of the economy and on the measures taken to remedy it.

The Committee furthermore notes that Decree 2008/099 of 7 March 2008 to raise the basic monthly pay of civilian and military personnel, increased the pay of these persons by 15 per cent as from 1 April 2008. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the financial implications of this measure, especially as far as the overall wage debt is concerned.

With regard to the education sector, the Committee notes from the information in the report sent by the Government in 2008 that private sector employers have made efforts to reduce, and even eliminate, wage arrears. The Committee asks the Government to provide particulars of the measures taken to this end by the employers concerned.

Lastly, with regard to education establishments in the public sector, the Committee notes that in its report for 2008, the Government stated its intention of pursuing the operation to issue contracts to teaching staff, who are paid immediately out of HIPC (heavily indebted poor country) funds. It notes that the HIPC initiative, launched under the auspices of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, seeks to combat poverty by securing financing for the social sectors out of funds that were initially to be paid to the country's donors. The Committee understands that a large number of teachers have been recruited under such contracts since 2007 and asks the Government to provide further information on the implementation of the HIPC initiative and on any results it may have made possible in terms of reducing wage arrears.

Colombia

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1963)

Articles 11 and 12 of the Convention. Protection of wage claims in the event of bankruptcy and the payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee notes that, once again, trade union organizations have brought to its attention problems relating to the preferential treatment of workers' wage claims in the event of the bankruptcy of the employer, as well as problems relating to the payment of wages at regular intervals. More specifically, the Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments of the Colombian Association of Airline Pilots (ACDAC), dated 25 May 2007. The ACDAC previously drew attention to the alarming situation of the Airline Pilots' Provident Fund (CAXDAC) and its growing deficit which is due to the fact that, for many years, the Government has not prevented airline companies which have not paid their contributions from filing for bankruptcy without having first paid all outstanding contributions to the Fund. In its reply of 6 March 2008, the Government indicates that, after requesting information from the various regional directorates concerning the investigations carried out for non-payment of contributions due to the CAXDAC, it was found that no investigation is under way at the administrative level with regard to the events alleged by the ACDAC. The Government also indicates that it is awaiting further information from the supervisory authority for ports and transport. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of its further actions and any developments in this regard and to provide the above information as soon as possible.

The Committee also notes the comments submitted by the Union of Maritime and Inland Water Transport Workers (UNIMAR) dated 14 April 2008 and sent to the Government on 7 August 2008. UNIMAR once again refers to the liquidation process of the Merchant Navy Investment Company SA (formally the Grand Colombian Merchant Navy SA) and emphasizes that the liquidator's advisory board, with the authorization of the Supervisory Authority for Companies, gave the order not to pay the 18 sailors whose employment contracts had been suspended since September 1997, the wages, social benefits and compensation owed to them. UNIMAR adds that 16 final court decisions have ordered that the illegally suspended employment contracts be restored and that the related wages and social benefits be paid, with an order to attach the accounts of the enterprise, which no longer contain any funds allowing the payment of the workers' claims. The Supervisory Authority for Companies and the former liquidator had assured the Constitutional Court that the rights of the workers would be respected, ordering the payment of wages and social benefits for 2003. UNIMAR indicates that the Government, instead of executing the court decisions, dismissed the workers without paying them the wages and social benefits owed to them. In this regard, the Committee notes the information provided by the Supervisory Authority for Companies and transmitted by the Government in a communication dated 30 April 2009. With regard to the above final court decisions, the Supervisory Authority for Companies indicates that the proceedings are pending before the national courts and that the legal rulings handed down by the magistrates responsible for the enforcement of sentences have been transmitted, firstly, to the magistrate responsible for the liquidation and, secondly, to the liquidator so that the payment of the wages, social benefits and compensation can be made, in accordance with the principle of proportionality. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this regard, and in particular to indicate whether the payments have been made and whether the dispute has been resolved.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the comments made by the National Union of Workers of the Enterprise Administradora de Seguridad Limitada (SINTRACONSEGURIDAD) received on 15 August 2008 and recalls that it has already issued an opinion on this point, as raised by the Government in its reply dated 4 November 2008. In so far as the former workers of the company CONSEGURIDAD have exhausted all the legal remedies available, they have to comply with court decisions which have the effect of res judicata. The Committee once again recalls that it has no power to intervene in the operation of the national judicial authorities, particularly in the manner in which they have adjudicated.

Finally, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any new information concerning the settlement of the wages owed to the employees of the public hospital San Juan de Dios following the comments made in March 2006 by the National Association of Health, Social Security and Allied Service Workers and Public Employees (ANTHOC). The Committee once again requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any settlement of the dispute or any progress made to that end.

Comoros

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1978)

Article 3 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing. The Committee notes with regret that no progress has been achieved for the past nine years in relation to the readjustment of the guaranteed interoccupational minimum wage (SMIG). The Government once again refers in its report to the meeting of the Higher Council of Labour and Employment (CSTE), held in 2001, which resulted in a compromise to establish the rate of the SMIG at 35,000 KMF (approximately US$90) a month. While noting that the SMIG has been made official in the public sector, the Committee notes with regret that the draft Decree issuing the rate of the SMIG for the private sector, agreed upon in 2001, has not yet been made official. The Committee is bound to observe that, in the current circumstances, the Convention is not given effect in either law or practice. It therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures without delay to determine and implement the rate of the SMIG, in full consultation with the CSTE, so as to ensure that the minimum wage responds adequately to the current needs of workers and their families.

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1978)

Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the Government's explanations that confirm that no progress has been made either with respect to the promulgation of the decree fixing the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage (SMIG) at 35,000 KMF (approximately US$110) per month or as regards the reactivation of the Higher Council of Labour and Employment (CSTE). The Government indicates that the draft decree establishing the SMIG rate for the entire private sector, including agriculture, has not yet received the final approval of the President and that the Ministry of Labour is currently taking steps to successfully complete this process. The Government also indicates that tripartite consultations within the CSTE are expected to resume after the adoption of the revised Labour Code which, in turn, is scheduled to be discussed at the next ordinary session of the National Assembly. Regrettably, the Committee is once again obliged to observe that the Convention is presently not applied in either law or practice. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary action without further delay with a view to: (i) establishing and implementing the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage rate; and (ii) initiating tripartite consultations within the CSTE on its periodic review and adjustment. It also asks the Government to transmit a copy of the revised Labour Code as soon as it is adopted.

Finally, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the conclusions of the ILO Governing Body as regards the relevance of the Convention following the recommendations of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards (GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 19 and 40). In fact, the Governing Body has decided that Conventions Nos 26 and 99 are among those instruments which may no longer be fully up to date but remain relevant in certain respects. The Committee therefore suggests that the Government should consider the possibility of ratifying the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which contains certain improvements compared to older instruments on minimum wage fixing, for instance, as regards its broader scope of application, the requirement for a comprehensive minimum wage system and the enumeration of the criteria for the determination of minimum wage levels. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision taken or envisaged in this regard.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Congo

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 12, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee has been commenting for some time on the problem of accumulated wage arrears in the public sector and the need to put an end to practices of delayed payment of wages that clearly contravene the letter and the spirit of the Convention. According to information provided in 2004, the wage debt was estimated at 187.6 billion Communauté Financière Africaine francs (approximately US$440 million) corresponding to the wage bill of 23 months. The Committee subsequently asked for detailed and documented information on the evolution of the situation but no report was submitted for three consecutive years. Regrettably, in its last report, the Government does not communicate any updated figures on the progress made regarding the settlement of outstanding payments but limits itself to enumerating the provisions of the Labour Code that ensure legislative conformity with the Convention. The Committee understands that problems of unpaid wages persist, for instance in public education, and that in certain cases wage arrears hinder the Government's privatization programme in the energy, oil, banking, agricultural, forestry, transport and hotel sectors. The Committee therefore once again asks the Government to give a detailed account of the current situation regarding the payment of wages to public employees on time and in full and also to describe any new measures taken with a view to resolving the wage crisis that continues to affect a large number of them.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Costa Rica

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1960)

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government makes no reference to any progress made with regard to bringing its legislation into line with the provisions of the Convention. It regrets this in particular because in 2006 it supplied the additional explanations which the Government had requested with regard to Executive Directive No. 34 of 8 February 2002, as well as specific information on a possible formulation which would be in conformity with the Convention based on the draft Decree of 1980 drawn up following an ILO direct contacts mission that year. Noting that the situation remains practically unchanged since then, the Committee reiterates that clauses in public contracts which merely recall the applicability and binding nature of the national legislation, particularly with regard to wages, hours of work and other working conditions, are not sufficient to ensure conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee refers to paragraph 44 of the General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts, in which it emphasizes that the Convention seeks to ensure that public contracts are executed under conditions of labour which are not less favourable than those established by collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations for work of the same character in the trade or industry concerned in the region where the work is carried out. This obliges the contractor to apply the most advantageous pay rates, including overtime pay, and other working conditions, such as work hour limits and holiday entitlement, established in the industrial sector and geographical region in question.

The Committee attaches a copy of the Practical Guide prepared by the Office in September 2008, based principally on the conclusions of the abovementioned General Survey, which contains an analysis of national law and practice in this field and also legislative examples giving full effect to the requirements of the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to draw on the information contained in both the General Survey and the Practical Guide and that it will soon be in a position to report on progress made in this area.

Finally, with regard to the comments of 17 May 2008 made by the Union of Workers of the Ministry of Finance and the National Customs Service (SITRAHSAN) – previously called the Union of Customs Workers – the Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments under the Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Articles 6 and 9 of the Convention. Prohibition on limiting the freedom of workers to dispose of their wages. Prohibition on any deduction from wages for the purpose of obtaining or retaining employment. The Committee notes the comments from the Union of Workers of the Ministry of Finance and the National Customs Service (SITRAHSAN) – previously called the Union of Customs Workers dated 17 May 2008 and also the Government's reply received on 29 April 2009. SITRAHSAN alleged that the Government, represented by the Ministry of Finance, and the Directorate-General of Customs breached the provisions of Articles 6 and 9 of the Convention inasmuch as the workers of SITRAHSAN, aware that their jobs were at risk, had been obliged to take out an insurance policy (poliza de fidelidad) vis-à-vis the State in order to retain them. SITRAHSAN underlined the fact that the insurance policy in question should have been taken out by the employer and not by the workers themselves, as provided for by the Act on cooperative associations in Costa Rica and as done by all private enterprises.

The Government states in its reply that the Ministry of Finance adopted Directive DAF-01-2008 concerning the obligations of officials of the Ministry of Finance. This directive was the subject of an appeal to have it quashed before the civil court, which rejected the appeal. The Government adds that this was not an unfounded unilateral decision on the part of the Ministry aimed at reducing officials' salaries but a decision taken in strict application of the national legislation in force. The abovementioned Directive was adopted pursuant to section 13 of Act No. 8131 concerning financial administration and public budgets and section 21 of Act No. 8422 against corruption and unlawful enrichment. The Committee notes that section 13 of Act No. 8131 provides that any official responsible for collecting or managing public funds must pay a security out of his own pocket to the public treasury in order to ensure the full discharge of his duties and obligations. Section 21 of Act No. 8422 establishes the list of persons who are obliged to make a sworn declaration concerning their financial situation, and these include customs employees.

The Committee also understands that a number of public institutions – especially the Electricity Board of Costa Rica, Editorial Costa Rica and the National Council for Scientific and Technological Research – have issued regulations pursuant to section 13 of Act No. 8131 governing the guarantees to be provided by officials, namely the insurance policy which the latter must take out with the National Insurance Institute.

While noting that these provisions aim to prevent any risk of corruption in the public administration, the Committee recalls that Article 6 of the Convention prohibits the employer from limiting in any manner the freedom of the worker to dispose of his wages, and is concerned by the question of whether the obligation to pay an insurance premium out of his own pocket might contravene this provision of the Convention. The Committee refers to paragraph 178 of its General Survey of 2003 on protection of wages, in which it considers that the pressures exerted on workers to make contributions to certain funds are of a nature to restrict the freedom of workers to dispose of their wages. Similarly, Article 9 of the Convention prohibits any deduction on wages for the purpose of obtaining or retaining employment. In the present case, the Committee expresses its concern whether, even if there is not an actual deduction from wages, the obligation to take out an insurance means loss of employment for any person failing to take out the insurance and retention of employment for persons who take out insurance.

In order to have a better understanding of the scope of the provisions in question and to evaluate their compatibility with the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information, stating in particular: (i) whether the obligation to take out an insurance policy forms part of the contractual requirements of which officials are informed at the time the offer of employment is made; (ii) the number of officials who have taken out, or refused to take out, an insurance policy; (iii) the consequences of any refusal by officials to take out the said insurance policy; and (iv) whether all officials are obliged to take out an insurance policy even in the absence of specific regulations adopted by the institution which employs them, pursuant to section 13 of Act No. 8131 concerning financial administration and public budgets.

The Committee also refers once again to its previous observations and requests the Government to provide the necessary explanations with regard to the application of Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention (payment of wages in legal tender and value attributed to allowances in kind) – in relation to the draft amendments to sections 165 and 166 of the Labour Code – and also of Articles 8 and 12 (deductions from wages and regular payment of wages), which have been the subject of comments by the Committee for a number of years.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes with regret that, despite the observations that it has been making on this matter since 1991, legislation has still not been adopted to give full effect to the Convention.

The Committee recalls in this respect that the essential purpose of the Convention is to ensure that, through the insertion of appropriate labour clauses in public contracts, the workers employed by a contractor and paid indirectly out of public funds enjoy wages and conditions of labour which are at least as satisfactory as the wages and conditions of labour normally established for the type of work concerned, whether they are established by collective agreement or otherwise. Such protection is deemed to be necessary because this category of workers may not be covered by collective agreements and other measures regulating wages, and is often more exposed than others because of the competition between firms tendering for public contracts. Furthermore, the Committee deems it important to emphasize that the protection provided through labour clauses in public contracts cannot normally be ensured through the application of the general labour legislation only. This is due first of all to the fact that there are many countries in which the minimum standards fixed by law are improved upon by means of collective bargaining or otherwise. Thus, even where fairly extensive labour legislation exists and is properly applied, the inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts can serve a very useful purpose in ensuring fair wages and conditions of labour for the workers concerned. Secondly, it is due to the fact that the provision of penalties, such as the withholding of contracts, as envisaged in the Convention, makes it possible to impose sanctions in case of violations of the labour clauses in the public contracts which may be more directly effective than those applicable for infringements of the general labour legislation.

The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention and reminds it of the possibility of seeking the technical assistance of the International Labour Office for this purpose.

Finally, the Committee refers to its 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts which contains an overview of public procurement practices and procedures in so far as labour conditions are concerned and makes a global assessment of the impact and present-day relevance of Convention No. 94. It also refers to the Practical Guide, prepared by the Office principally on the basis of the abovementioned General Survey, to help better understand the requirements of the Convention and ultimately improve its application in law and practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Djibouti

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Establishment of minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its previous comments on the abolition of the system of the guaranteed interoccupational minimum wage (SMIG), the Committee notes the Government's explanations to the effect that this decision was taken under pressure from the International Monetary Fund (IMF), which required the Government to adopt a raft of measures, including liberalization of the labour market, to be the beneficiary of a Structural Adjustment Programme (SAP). The Government adds that it made the choice of deregulation rather than leave the SMIG in place, since the balance of public finances would have been seriously jeopardized and wages would not have been guaranteed, thereby threatening the social peace and stability of the country. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the establishment of minimum wage fixing machinery outside the system of collective bargaining is essential for ensuring effective social protection for workers who are not covered by the rules of collective agreements, and that the Government must take the necessary steps to ensure that collectively agreed minimum wage rates are binding and the application thereof is linked to a system of supervision and effective penalties.

The Committee therefore concludes that the situation remains unchanged. Apart from the Government's indication that the matter would be studied by the new National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training (CNT), the Convention is no longer applied either in law or in practice. The CNT was set up pursuant to Decree No. 2008-0023/PR/MESN of 20 January 2008 as a tripartite structure to enable the Government and the social partners to exchange ideas in a free and open manner. In this regard, the Government points out that there is increasing talk of the possibility of reintroducing the SMIG for each branch of economic activity. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the planned meeting of the CNT and any decisions regarding the reintroduction of the national minimum wage rate. It also requests the Government to send its comments in reply to the observations made by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) sent to the Government in September 2007.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous observations, the Committee notes with regret that the Government is still not in a position to report any meaningful progress in putting in place the appropriate legal framework for the implementation of the Convention. The Committee notes that for over ten years, the Government has been stating that it is planning to examine the necessary measures to give effect to the Convention in the overall context of the forthcoming revision of labour laws and regulations which it hopes to undertake with the Office's assistance as soon as the conditions have been fulfilled for the organization of a national tripartite consultation. Despite those reassurances, however, the Committee observes that major legislative exercises, such as the adoption of the new Labour Code of 2006, have been completed without any effort having been made to address the issue of labour clauses in public contracts. Moreover, the Committee understands that the Government is involved in a public procurement reform project initiated by the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA) with a view to improving public procurement practices and harmonizing rules and procedures at the regional level.

The Committee recalls that the Government may draw upon the advisory services of the Office, should it so wish, for the purpose of revising its public procurement legislation and aligning it with the requirements of the Convention, and urges the Government to take long overdue action in order to ensure conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in the preparation of new procurement laws and regulations under COMESA's public procurement reform project and transmit copies of any new texts as soon as they are adopted.

The Committee also notes the observations made in 2007 by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) concerning the application of the Convention. According to the UGTD, the absence of legislation implementing the Convention creates a legal vacuum which is prejudicial to the workers employed under public contracts. In this connection, the UGTD hopes that the National Commission of Labour, Employment and Vocational Training will soon be established so that it can take measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to transmit its comments in reply to the points raised by the UGTD.

Finally, the Committee refers to its 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts which contains an overview of national laws and practice concerning the social dimensions of public procurement and a global assessment of the impact and present-day relevance of Convention No. 94. It also refers to the Practical Guide, prepared by the Office principally on the basis of the abovementioned General Survey, to help better understand the requirements of the Convention and ultimately improve its application in law and practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 8 and 12 of the Convention. Wage deductions and regular payment of wages. The Committee has been commenting for a certain number of years on the provision of the Labour Code permitting wage deductions on the basis of individual agreement and also on difficulties experienced in the public sector concerning the timely payment of wages. The Committee requests the Government to provide up to date information on both issues, in the light of the provisions of the new Labour Code (Act No. 133/AN/05/5èmeL).

Moreover, the Committee notes the communication of the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) received on 23 August 2007 concerning the application of the Convention. The UGTD states that whereas Chapter IV of the Labour Code, in particular section 152, provides for the protection of wages in the strict sense of the word, the absence of wage guarantees such as the guaranteed minimum inter-professional wage (SMIG), which was abolished in September 1997, has deprived the workforce of real income protection. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of the UGTD.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Ecuador

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1970)

Article 4, paragraphs 2 and 3, of the Convention. Full consultation and direct participation of the social partners in the establishment and operation of the minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee notes the comments made by the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) dated 30 August 2009. The IOE indicates that a new constitutional text was drawn up and adopted by referendum on 28 September 2008 without the effective participation of the main actors in the world of work, which prevented an objective analysis of the matters to be regulated at the constitutional level. The IOE adds that section 328(2), as well as Transitional Provision No. 25 of the new constitutional text, which provide for the annual revision of the minimum wage on a gradual basis in order to cover the cost of the shopping basket (canasta familiar), do not take into account the direct participation of the employers and workers concerned, as required by this provision of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in reply to the observations submitted by the IOE.

Furthermore, referring to its previous observation concerning the minimum wage rate currently in force and its ability to offer workers a decent standard of living, the Committee hopes that the Government will take all the necessary steps to ensure the application of sufficient minimum wage rates to enable workers to meet their essential needs and those of their families, and once again requests it to provide a copy of the legal text establishing this rate and to provide detailed information on the consultations held within the National Wage Council (CONADES).

Egypt

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1960)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee has been in receipt of General Circular No. 8 of the Minister of Finance dated 23 June 2008. It notes with interest that the Government has for the first time taken concrete steps to give effect to the core requirement of the Convention. According to the terms of the Circular, two new bidding terms are to be added to the provisions of the Public Tenders Law No. 89/1998: (i) workers engaged in the execution of the contract must receive wages and bonuses not lower than those received by workers carrying out similar work in the same governorate; and (ii) they must enjoy the hours of work and working conditions prevailing in the region, according to a general agreement or according to custom. In addition, the Circular draws the attention of all bodies concerned to the necessity to include in detail the above two bidding terms in public contracts and indicates that the Ministry of Manpower and Migration will be responsible for the implementation of the new provisions.

The Committee welcomes the adoption of General Circular No. 8/2008 of the Minister of Finance and understands that the Government has made use of the Office's advisory services in this respect. However, it wishes to draw the Government's attention to the following: first, in its current wording, the Circular does not make it sufficiently clear that the wages, hours of work and other working conditions of the workers concerned have to be aligned, as a minimum, to best local standards established through collective bargaining, arbitration or legislation – whichever is the most advantageous. The Committee refers, in this respect, to paragraph 103 of the General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts in which it pointed out that conditions not less favourable than the three alternatives offered by the Convention (i.e. collective agreement, arbitration award, legislation) would in practice, in most instances, imply the best conditions of the three. Second, the terms of the labour clauses to be included in public contracts and any variations must be determined after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, as required by Article 2(3) of the Convention, and the Committee has not received any indication whether any such consultations were held before the adoption of General Circular No. 8/2008. Third, the Convention requires specific measures for the enforcement of the provisions of the labour clauses, including the posting of notices in conspicuous places at the workplaces concerned with a view to informing the workers of the conditions applicable to them (Article 4) and adequate sanctions such as the withholding of contracts or the withholding of payments (Article 5). The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will take additional steps to ensure the effective implementation of the Convention with regard to the points raised above. It also asks the Government to provide supplementary information, including copies of any newly adopted texts, on the measures taken by the Ministry of Manpower and Migration for the practical application of General Circular No. 8/2008. Moreover, the Committee would appreciate receiving sample copies of any recently issued tender documents or public contracts which have incorporated the new bidding terms provided for in the General Circular.

Finally, the Committee attaches herewith a copy of the Practical Guide on Convention No. 94 which was prepared by the Office in September 2008 based on the conclusions of the aforementioned General Survey to help better understand the requirements of the Convention and ultimately improve their application in law and practice.

Guinea

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Introduction of a minimum wage and consultation of the social partners. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the information contained in its last report, the Government is maintaining its decision not to introduce the guaranteed interoccupational minimum wage (SMIG) at the present time in view of the economic situation of the country. It also notes that, as acknowledged by the Government, the introduction of a minimum wage is an important claim of national trade union organizations. The Committee notes in this respect that in November 2005 a 48-hour general strike was called by the National Confederation of Workers of Guinea (CNTG), and that the claims included the establishment of a minimum wage. In this context, it notes with concern that the inflation rate in Guinea appears to be particularly high (in the order of 30 per cent in the second half of 2005), which makes it all the more necessary to ensure workers a minimum wage permitting them and their families to benefit from a satisfactory standard of living.

The Committee deplores the fact that, despite its repeated comments on the subject, the Government has still not been able to adopt the decree determining the minimum guaranteed wage rate for one hour of work, as provided for in section 211 of the Labour Code. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay to give effect to the provisions of the Convention by adopting the implementing decree for section 211 of the Labour Code. The Committee would also be grateful to be provided with more detailed information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure effective consultations with the social partners on equal terms in all the stages of the process of fixing minimum wages, as required by the Convention.

Collective agreements. The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government in its last report, the minimum wage rates in the various sectors are determined in collective agreements. In this respect, it is bound to recall that the fixing of minimum wages by collective agreements is only permitted under certain conditions: the minimum wages must have the force of law, not be subject to abatement and failure to apply them shall make the person or persons concerned liable to appropriate penal or other sanctions (see paragraphs 99–101 of the 1992 General Survey on minimum wages). The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the manner in which compliance with these principles is ensured in the context of the system for fixing minimum wages by collective bargaining. It requests the Government to provide copies of these sectoral collective agreements containing provisions relating to the minimum wage and to indicate the number of men and women, and of adults and young persons, covered by such provisions.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's last report contained no reply to its previous comments but essentially reproduced information already submitted in earlier reports which the Committee had considered to be strictly irrelevant to the scope and content of the Convention. The Committee is once again led to conclude that for the last 40 years there has been practically no progress in implementing the provisions of the Convention in either law or practice. The Committee expresses its deep disappointment about the Government's continued failure to apply the Convention despite the technical assistance provided by the Office in 1981 and the numerous commitments made by the Government, ever since, as regards the drafting and adoption of specific regulations or legislation concerning public contracts. Under the circumstances, the Committee hopes that the Government will make a sincere effort to maintain a meaningful dialogue with the ILO supervisory bodies and once more urges the Government to take all necessary measures without further delay in order to bring its national law and practice into conformity with the clear terms and objectives of the Convention.

Finally, the Committee refers once again to its 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts which contains an overview of public procurement practices and procedures in so far as labour conditions are concerned and makes a global assessment of the impact and present-day relevance of Convention No. 94. It also refers to the Practical Guide, prepared by the Office principally on the basis of the abovementioned General Survey, to help better understand the requirements of the Convention and ultimately improve its application in law and practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1966)

Article 3 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee notes with regret that the report on the application of the Convention has not been received and requests the Government to refer to the comments made under Convention No. 26.

Islamic Republic of Iran

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1972)

Article 12 of the Convention. Payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the implementation of the Convention and, in particular, alleged problems of accumulated wage debts. According to the ITUC, wage arrears constitute a serious problem in the Islamic Republic of Iran and are one of the major roots of labour unrest. The ITUC provides a list of incidents of wage arrears affecting thousands of workers mainly in the sugar cane, metal and textile industries with delays in the payment of wages ranging from two to 12 months. The Committee recalls, in this connection, its previous observation in which it expressed concern about the extent of the problem of unpaid wages and also the fact that the situation was inadequately monitored. As the Government's reply was received on 2 December 2009, the Committee intends to examine the matters raised in the observations of the ITUC at its next session.

Iraq

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1986)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the Government's report and the attached "Instructions on Implementation of Government Contracts", which were issued by the Ministry of Planning and Development Cooperation in 2008. It observes that, as indicated in the Government's report, these instructions aim principally at ensuring fairness and transparency in all bidding procedures but bear little relevance to the core requirement of the Convention which is the pay and other working conditions applicable to workers engaged in the execution of public contracts. The Committee is therefore bound to conclude that no progress has been made with respect to the revision of procurement laws and regulations in order to give effect to the requirements of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the object and purpose of this Convention is not to promote fair, open and corruption-free public bidding procedures but rather to ensure that, by virtue of standard labour clauses inserted in public contracts, workers are entitled to wages, hours of work and other labour conditions at least as good as those normally observed for the kind of work in question in the area where the contract is executed, and that higher local standards, if any, apply. The Committee hopes that in the ongoing amendment process of the Labour Code, and following the recommendations of the Tripartite Consultation Committee, the Government will not fail to take the necessary steps in order to bring the national legislation at last into conformity with the Convention.

Jamaica

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee has been commenting for a number of years on the absence of any laws or regulations implementing the provisions of the Convention. In its last report, the Government refers to new Contracts and Standard Bidding Documents and Procurement Regulations which are soon to be issued and which are expected to cover labour aspects of public procurement operations. The Committee would appreciate receiving a copy of these documents as soon as they are finalized.

The Committee notes that the Revised Handbook of Public Sector Procurement Procedures (RHPP) was issued in December 2008 and has been in use for an interim period pending formal approval by the Cabinet. It notes, however, that the RHPP does not address working conditions of workers employed under public contracts, except for subsection No. S-2120, which provides that deviations from the bidding requirements, including non-compliance with local regulations relating to labour, import taxes and duties, which do not appear at first sight to provide immediate grounds for bid rejection, may be considered further in the evaluation process. Noting that the Government is still not in a position to report any concrete progress as regards the application of the Convention, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraphs 40 and 44 of its General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts, in which it indicated that the purpose of the Convention is to ensure that the workers employed for the execution of public contracts enjoy wages and other working conditions at least as satisfactory as those normally established for the type of work concerned, whether they are established by collective agreement or otherwise, in the locality where the work is done. The Convention requires that this be done through the insertion of appropriate labour clauses in public contracts. This has the effect of setting as minimum conditions for the contract standards that are already established within the locality. The further aim is that local standards higher than those of general application (this in practice means the most advantageous labour conditions) should be applied, where they exist. In fact, the type of labour clauses prescribed by this Article of the Convention seek to oblige the contractor to apply the most advantageous pay rates, including overtime pay, and other working conditions, such as work hour limits and holiday entitlement, established in the industrial sector and geographical region in question. The concrete terms of this obligation incumbent on the selected bidder and any subcontractors, are to be reflected in a standard contractual clause which has to be effectively enforced notably through a system of specific sanctions.

Finally, with a view to assisting the Government in its efforts to give effect to the Convention, the Committee attaches herewith a copy of the Practical Guide on the Convention prepared by the Office in September 2008 and based principally on the findings of the abovementioned General Survey. It hopes that the Government will take the necessary action without further delay in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention and recalls that the Government may draw on the expert advice of the Office to this effect.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1971)

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Review and adjustment of the minimum wage. The Committee has been raising questions in recent years concerning the operation of the minimum wage fixing machinery, the periodicity of adjustment of the minimum wage and the criteria used for such adjustment. Following the establishment of the Wages Board in 2006 and the Decision of the General People's Committee in 2007 to set the national minimum wage at 250 dinars (approximately US$208 per month, the Committee has requested the Government to provide more detailed information on the operation of the Wages Board, the eventual revision of the national minimum wage as well as the enforcement of the minimum wage legislation in practice. In its last report, the Government makes renewed reference to the ILO technical assistance mission that visited the country in July 2007 and emphasizes its willingness to improve conditions of workers in order to achieve full employment and social welfare. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide in its next report full particulars on the effect given to the requirements of Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention, especially the manner in which the basic needs of workers and their families are taken into account in fixing the minimum wage level, including any surveys or studies of national economic conditions. Moreover, recalling that under Decision No. 613/2006 of the Secretary of the General People's Committee for Manpower, Training and Employment, the Wages Board holds regular meetings once every three months and may initiate the procedure for the revision of the minimum wage whenever it considers it necessary, the Committee asks the Government to provide all available information on the Board's most recent meetings and any decision taken or envisaged concerning the review of the minimum wage rate currently in force. Finally, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide in its next report up to date information on measures to ensure compliance with the national minimum wage or any difficulties experienced in this respect, in particular, the number of labour inspection visits carried out and violations reported, with special reference to migrant workers who constitute half of the total workforce.

Mauritius

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1969)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Scope of application of minimum wage rates. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it had noted the comments made by the Private Sector Workers' Front (FTSP) concerning the alleged abuses and overexploitation of workers in four economic sectors not yet covered neither by a wage Order nor by a collective agreement, namely the information and communication technology sector, the financial and other services sector, the seafood sector and the travel agents and tour operators sector. In its reply, the Government explains that with respect to the information and communication technology sector and the financial sector (including banks), it is not deemed necessary to have any (Remuneration Order) regulations since the wages prevailing in those sectors are not considered to be exceptionally low, and accordingly invokes the latitude afforded by Article 2 of the Convention to determine which trades or parts of trades should be covered by minimum wage legislation. As regards the sea food hub sector (fishing and processing), the Government indicates that the workers involved in fishing activities are either covered by the Banks Fisherman and Frigo Workers (Remuneration Order) Regulations of 1997 while workers employed by the processing plants are covered by either the Factory Employees (Remuneration Order) regulations or the Export Enterprises (Remuneration Order) Regulations, as the case may be. Finally, the Government indicates that upon the recommendation of the National Remuneration Board (NRB), draft (Remuneration Order) Regulations have been prepared for the travel agents and tour operator sector and they have been submitted to the State Law Office for vetting. Noting the Government's detailed explanations, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would transmit a copy of the new regulations once they are issued.

Moreover, the Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Employment Relations Act No. 32 of 2008 which repeals the Industrial Relations Act and which expressly provides in section 90(2) for the equal representation of employers' and workers' organizations in the operation of the tripartite National Remuneration Board – a point on which the Committee has been commenting for a number of years.

Morocco

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1956)

Article 2 of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government essentially repeats the same explanations provided in its previous report and places emphasis on section 20(4) of Decree No. 2-99-1087 of 4 May 2000 approving the general administrative conditions applicable to contracts for work executed on behalf of the State, which provides that the wage paid to manual workers shall not be lower, for each category of worker, than the statutory minimum wage. The Government also refers to sections 25 and 26 of Decree No. 2-98-482 of 30 December 1998 which requires: (i) the registration of the bidder with the National Social Security Fund and the regular provision of wage declarations to the Fund; and (ii) the presentation of documentation issued by the Fund certifying that the bidder has complied with its requirements in relation to the Fund for his participation in the call for tenders.

In this respect, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraphs 40 and 44 of its General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts, in which it emphasizes that the purpose of Article 2 of the Convention is to ensure that the workers employed by a contractor and paid indirectly out of public funds enjoy wages and conditions of labour which are at least as satisfactory as the wages and conditions of labour normally established for the type of work concerned, whether by collective agreement or otherwise, in the locality where the work is done. Labour costs are thus removed from competition between bidders and local standards are applied where they are higher than those of general application. This, in practice, means the most advantageous labour conditions for the workers concerned, including pay rates, overtime pay, and other working conditions, such as work hour limits and holiday entitlement, established in the industrial sector and geographical region in question. The concrete terms of this obligation incumbent on the selected bidder and any subcontractors are to be reflected in a standard contractual clause which has to be effectively enforced, notably through a system of specific sanctions.

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to paragraph 118 of the same General Survey, in which it observes that obtaining labour clearance certificates before being allowed to tender for public contracts is not sufficient for compliance with the requirements of the Convention. In this respect, the Committee has consistently taken the view that the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts under the Convention goes beyond the aims of simple certification, as its purpose is to eliminate the negative effects of competitive tendering on the workers' labour conditions. Certification offers some proof about tenderers' past performance and law-abiding conduct, but carries no binding commitment with regard to prospective operations as labour clauses do. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure that full effect is given to the Convention by requiring the inclusion of the labour clauses envisaged by the Convention in all public contracts to which it is applicable.

Finally, with a view to assisting the Government in its efforts to give effect to the provisions of the Convention, the Committee attaches a copy of the Practical Guide on the Convention drawn up by the Office and based principally on the conclusions of the abovementioned General Survey. It also reminds the Government that it may, if it so wishes, seek the Office's technical assistance.

Myanmar

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1954)

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee notes that the Government's report essentially reproduces information already communicated previously and does not reply to the specific points that the Committee has been raising over the past ten years, namely the extension of minimum wage protection to industrial sectors other than the rice-milling and cigar- and cheroot-rolling industries, the revision of the minimum wage rates in force, the evolution of minimum wage rates as compared to the evolution of economic indicators such as the inflation rate in recent years, and the enforcement of the minimum wage legislation in practice. The Committee notes with regret that, whereas the Government indicated earlier that the extension of the minimum wage fixing machinery to other industries such as the printing, oil-milling and garment industries was under consideration and that the minimum wage rates applicable to the rice-milling and the cigar- and cheroot-rolling industries were no longer in line with market wages and needed to be adjusted, its last report remains completely silent on these matters. The Committee further notes that the labour inspection statistics provided by the Government refer only to the number of inspection visits carried out in 2007–08 but give no indication as to the results obtained in terms of violations observed, sanctions imposed or amounts of wages recovered. The Committee therefore asks the Government to make every possible effort to collect and provide up to date information on the application of the Convention in law and practice and also to indicate the concrete measures it intends to take for the extension of minimum wage coverage to sectors other than rice-milling and cigar- and cheroot-rolling and the readjustment of existing minimum wage rates.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Norway

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1996)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Norwegian Business and Industry (NHO) concerning the impact of recent legislative developments on the application of the Convention. More concretely, the NHO expresses its opposition to the terms of the new clause on wages and working conditions that came into effect in March 2008 and which is now applicable to all tenders both of central and municipal authorities. According to the employers' Confederation, there are overlapping – and even contradictory – rules in the area of wages and working conditions applicable to foreign workers, including the Immigration Act, the regulations on posted workers, and the Act relating to general application of wage agreements, and the new regulations on labour conditions in public contracts can only create additional uncertainty as to which requirements are really applicable. The NHO adds that as a result it will be very difficult to interpret and apply the new clause in practice. The Committee requests the Government to communicate any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of the NHO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Panama

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1971)

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government's report merely repeats information that was sent previously and does not refer to any progress made with regard to bringing the national legislation into line with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee previously noted the reference made by the Government to two communications, No. DM.359.2008 of 5 May 2008 and No. DM.374.2008 of 7 May 2008, sent by the Ministry of Work and Labour Development (MITRADEL) to the Ministry of Economic and Financial Affairs (MEF) and the Directorate-General of Public Procurement, respectively. Noting that the situation remains unchanged, the Committee reiterates that clauses in public contracts which merely recall the applicability and binding nature of national labour legislation, in particular with regard to wages, working hours and other conditions of work, do not comply with the provisions of the Convention.

Moreover, the Committee understands that the Directorate-General of Public Procurement, with the assistance of the World Bank, has developed a strategic plan to modernize the public procurement system and give it greater transparency and effectiveness. The plan comprises six tiers, including one concerned with ensuring the uniformity of tendering procedures and the preparation of standard documents. In this regard, the Committee considers that the Government might take this opportunity to adopt legislative provisions which would finally make it possible to bring the legislation into line with the provisions of the Convention. While reminding the Government that it can avail itself of technical assistance from the Office if it so desires, the Committee urges it to take the necessary steps to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and requests it to keep the Office informed of any developments, particularly in the legislative field.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1970)

Article 12 of the Convention. Regular payment of wages. Referring to its previous comment concerning the payment of the 13th month's wage to public sector employees, in the light of the observations made by the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprise Workers (FENASEP), the Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 19 of 2 March 2009 which establishes the right to payment of the 13th month's wages not paid between 1989 and 1991. It recalls that, according to FENASEP, the payment of the 13th month's wage was suspended between October 1989 and August 1991, representing an amount of around US$88 million owed to hundreds of thousands of public sector employees. The Committee notes that, under section 2 of Act No. 19 of 2 March 2009, the Government will proceed with payment of the amounts due as soon as public revenue permits. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on any steps taken under the abovementioned Act.

Paraguay

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1966)

Articles 3, 4, 6, 7 and 12 of the Convention. Debt bondage. Further to its previous comment concerning the problem of debt bondage affecting numerous indigenous workers in agricultural undertakings in the Paraguayan Chaco, the Committee notes the Government's indications that a regional labour directorate has been created in the town of Teniente Irala Fernández (Central Chaco) in order, in particular, to supervise and prevent situations of forced labour, and inspections have been carried out in the context of the decent work programme in the agricultural sector. The Committee also notes the adoption of Resolution No. 230 of 27 March 2009 creating the Committee on Fundamental Rights at Work and the Prevention of Forced Labour, and Decree No. 1945 of 30 April 2009 approving the National Programme for Indigenous Peoples (PRONAPI). Furthermore, the Committee notes that the eradication of forced labour is one of the major components of the Decent Work Country Programme concluded with the ILO in February 2009. It recalls that, even if the legislative provisions exist, they still have to be applied effectively. In this regard, the Committee refers to paragraph 356 of the Global Report under the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work (Report I(B)), submitted to the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference, 2009, in which it is emphasized that forced labour can only be eradicated "through integrated policies and programmes, mixing law enforcement with proactive measures of prevention and protection, and empowering those at risk of forced labour to defend their own rights". The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide detailed information on the impact of the above measures on the working conditions of the workers concerned, in particular with regard to the application of Article 3 (payment of wages in legal tender), Article 4 (partial payment of wages in kind), Article 6 (freedom of workers to dispose of their wages), Article 7 (work stores) and Article 12 (payment of wages at regular intervals) of Convention No. 95.

Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Poland

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1954)

Article 12 of the Convention. The wage arrears situation. The Committee notes the detailed statistical information provided by the Government on labour inspection results for the period 2005–07. During this period, in addition to 57,700 routine inspections, 3,079 thematic inspections were carried out covering 2,971 employers and 381,300 workers employed in manufacturing, trade and repairs, construction, real estate and renting, transport storage, health care and other branches. According to the Government's report, the controls revealed a considerable decline in the percentage of employers who breach the legislation on wage protection (55.7 per cent in 2005 as compared to 25.7 per cent in 2007), the most frequently observed infringement being the non-payment of holiday pay, overtime or other allowances. The percentage of affected employees (expressed as a ratio to all the employees of controlled companies) also declined from 76 per cent in 2005 to 49.2 per cent in 2007.

The Government further indicates that the total amount of unpaid wages decreased from 199 million zloty (PLN) (approximately 48.5 million euros) in 2005 to 83 million (approximately 20.2 million euros) in 2007 and, accordingly, the number of warnings issued by labour inspectors also decreased from 45,331 warnings in 2005 to 31,426 in 2007. The reason mostly invoked for failure to comply with wage legislation is bad economic circumstances and lack of funds although the Government states that this argument may be overused as it has been observed that workers' pay is sometimes withheld to fund other activities.

Despite the positive developments described by the Government, the Committee considers that the problem of non-payment or delayed payment of wages persists, affecting according to the latest statistics provided by the Government, as many as half of all the employees of inspected companies. The Committee would therefore appreciate if the Government would continue to provide up to date information on any additional measures taken or envisaged, in order to prevent and punish unlawful practices such as the accumulation of wage arrears, and also to settle in an expeditious manner all outstanding wage debts.

The wage crisis in the health-care sector. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government concerning the progress made in settling accumulated wage debts in the health-care sector for the period 2005–07 (approximately PLN229 million in 2005, PLN133 million in 2006 and PLN102 million in 2007 or 55.5, 32.4 and 24.8 million euros respectively). With respect to the implementation of the Act of 15 April 2005 on public aid and restructuring of public health-care institutions, the Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that 99.99 per cent of all liabilities arising from the so-called "203 Act" have now been met. It also notes the labour inspection results covering the period 2005–08, according to which 1,109 payment orders were issued and, as a result, PLN25.2 million (approximately 6.1 million euros) were recovered on behalf of 39,486 employees.

In this connection, the Committee notes the “Green Paper” of the Ministry of Health entitled “Financing health in Poland” and published in November 2008, in particular the indications in Chapter V about the increasing debts of public health establishments despite the financial restructuring. In light of this report, the Committee would appreciate if the Government would clarify whether independently from past claims arising out of the “203 Act”, health-care employees in the public sector experience new problems with respect to the regular payment of their wages and, if so, indicate any measures taken to remedy this situation.

Romania

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes the comments made by the Federation of National Education (FEN) concerning the alleged failure of the Government to implement pay increases for teaching staff in the State education system. More concretely, FEN indicates that in October 2008 the Chamber of Deputies of the National Parliament adopted Act No. 221/2008 awarding a 50 per cent pay rise to all teaching staff but the Government has systematically refused to apply the new legislation. The FEN adds that the Government first took the matter to the Constitutional Court and, when its challenge was dismissed, it decided to block the implementation of Act No. 221/2008 by making abusive use of the Prime Minister’s power to issue emergency ordinances. The first such ordinance was Emergency Ordinance No. 136/2008, which repealed Act No. 221/2008, but was later struck down by the Constitutional Court. According to the FEN’s detailed account, the Government has deliberately created through political manoeuvring and delaying tactics a confusing situation for the sole purpose of not honouring the wage entitlements of the employees concerned.

The Committee recalls that in its previous observation – following similar comments received from the Confederation of Democratic Trade Unions of Romania (CSDR) and the Free Trade Union Federation in Education (FSLI) – it expressed concern about the ongoing controversy over pay conditions of education personnel. Noting that the Government’s reply has not yet been received, the Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to submit in response to the allegations of the FEN.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 issuing labour regulations. It also notes that, according to the Government’s report, sections 42–46 of this Act establish the labour clauses required by the Convention. However, these provisions regulate subcontracting, in which the head of an industrial or commercial enterprise assigns the execution of work or services to a contractor who in turn recruits the necessary workforce, and do not regulate contracts concluded with a public authority. The Committee notes with regret that, despite the comments which it has been making for many years, the recent General Survey and the Practical Guide – copies of which were sent to the Government – the Government still does not appear to fully understand the actual concept of public contracts which is the subject of the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat that a public contract pursuant to Article 1(1) of the Convention is a contract: (i) concluded by a public authority; (ii) involving the expenditure of funds by a public authority and the employment of workers by the other party to the contract; and (iii) relating to the execution of public works, the manufacture of materials or the provision of services. It is therefore clear that subcontracting in the form of the specific labour contract governed by the provisions of Chapter II, Title II, of the new Labour Code bears little relevance to public contracts and even less to the labour clauses which such contracts ought to contain.

Moreover, with regard to the 2007 Public Procurement Act, the Committee recalls that the mere fact that the general legislation applies to workers responsible for the execution of public contracts, as laid down by section 96 of this Act, is not sufficient to ensure the observance of the provisions of the Convention. The Convention seeks to ensure that public contracts are executed under conditions of labour which are not less favourable than those established by collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations for work of the same character in the trade or industry concerned in the region where the work is carried out. This in practice means the most advantageous labour conditions for the workers concerned, including pay rates, overtime pay, and other working conditions, such as work hour limits and holiday entitlement, established in the industrial sector and geographical region in question. The concrete terms of this obligation incumbent on the selected bidder and any subcontractors are to be reflected in a standard contractual clause which has to be effectively enforced, notably through a system of specific penalties. Moreover, the Committee recalls that the Convention does not only apply to construction contracts but also to contracts for supplies and services. In the light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps without delay to bring national law and practice into conformity with the Convention and requests it to keep the Office informed of any developments on these matters. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office, if it so desires, in order to draw up the legislative or other provisions giving effect to the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 16 of the Convention. Full information on legislative amendments. The Committee notes the Government's earlier statement to the effect that, when the new Employment Act enters into force, it would give full effect to Articles 6, 7, 8, 13 and 15(a) of the Convention. While recalling that the Government has been referring for the last ten years to the imminent adoption of new labour legislation and also recalling that draft amendments had been prepared with the assistance of the Office more than 20 years ago in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary steps without further delay to enact the new law and reminds the Government of the availability of further ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1965)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee has been commenting on the Government's persistent failure to give effect to the provisions of the Convention in either law or practice. The Committee has also been requesting clarification as to whether the Executive Resolution of 10 June 1952 providing for the inclusion of fair wages clauses in government contracts, which previously gave effect to the provisions of the Convention, is still in force. In its last report, the Government indicates that it is currently reviewing the requirements of the Convention and that the Committee's concerns are duly noted. In addition, the Government refers to the "Tripartite Advisory on Responsible Outsourcing Practices" which was adopted in 2008 by the tripartite committee on work-related benefits for low-wage workers and which seeks to ensure compliance with national employment laws by end-user companies when they outsource their business functions and buy services from third-party contractors. The Committee is bound to observe, in this connection, that this initiative bears little relevance to the Convention as it does not refer to public procurement contracts awarded through competitive bidding.

To help better understand the requirements of the Convention, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraphs 40 and 41 of its General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts in which it explained that the essential purpose of the Convention is to ensure that the workers employed by a contractor and paid indirectly out of public funds enjoy wages and conditions of labour which are at least as satisfactory as those normally established for the type of work concerned, whether they are established by collective agreement or otherwise, in the locality where the work is done. The Convention requires that this be done through the insertion of appropriate labour clauses in public contracts. The intention is that labour costs are removed from competition between bidders and also that local standards higher than those of general application should be applied, where they exist. Accordingly, clauses within public contracts that merely restate the applicability and binding nature of national employment or labour laws – such as for instance the clause included in the Public Sector Standard Conditions of Contract (PSSCOC) formulated by the Building and Construction Authority – are not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Convention.

Along the same line of thought, in paragraphs 44 and 103 of the General Survey, the Committee observed that conditions not less favourable than the three alternatives offered by the Convention (i.e. collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations) in practice, in most instances, imply the best conditions of the three. In fact, the type of labour clauses prescribed by Article 2 of the Convention seek to ensure that the contractor applies the most advantageous pay rates, including overtime pay, and other working conditions, such as work hour limits and holiday entitlement, established in the industrial sector and geographical region in question. The concrete terms of this obligation incumbent on the selected bidder and any subcontractors, are to be reflected in a standard contractual clause which has to be effectively enforced notably through a system of specific sanctions. In light of the preceding observations, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps without further delay in order to effectively implement the Convention and asks it to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard.

Finally, with a view to assisting the Government in its efforts to give effect to the Convention, the Committee attaches herewith a copy of the Practical Guide on the Convention prepared by the Office in September 2008 and based principally on the findings of the abovementioned General Survey. It also recalls that the Government may draw upon the advisory services of the Office if it so wishes.

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1957)

Article 3, paragraph 2(2), of the Convention. Consultation and participation of employers and workers. The Committee has been commenting for many years on section 4 of the Wages and Conditions of Employment Tribunals Act of 1976 which, contrary to the Wages Tribunal Ordinance of 1952, does not provide for equal representation of employers' and workers' organizations in the wages tribunals. The Government has indicated on several occasions that, in practice, employers' and workers' representatives have always participated in equal numbers in the operation of minimum wage fixing bodies but gave assurances that the relevant provision in the legislation would still be amended to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee wishes to stress that the requirement for genuine and effective consultations with employers' and workers' organizations and their participation in equal numbers and on equal terms in the minimum wage fixing process is a key element of the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide in its next report full particulars on the effect given to the requirements of Article 3 of the Convention, in law and practice.

In addition, the Committee notes with regret that the information contained in the Government's reports is often fragmentary, undocumented and fails to give a comprehensive picture of the minimum wage system in the country. The Committee understands that minimum wage rates are fixed: (i) at the national level under the Minimum Wage Act of 1974, as amended, for enterprises employing more than ten employees; (ii) by wages tribunals under the Wages and Conditions of Employment Tribunals Act of 1976 for specific categories of workers; and (iii) through collective bargaining. The Committee also understands that the national monthly minimum wage was set at 200 Sudanese pounds (approximately US$100) in 2006 against 162.5 Sudanese pounds (approximately US$81) in 2005 and 125 (approximately US$62) in 2004. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would specify in its next report whether the different minimum wage fixing methods mentioned above are still in effect, and also provide copies of all relevant legal instruments establishing minimum wage rates currently in force.

Finally, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the conclusions of the ILO Governing Body on the continued relevance of the Convention based on the recommendations of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards (GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 19 and 40). In fact, the Governing Body has decided that Convention No. 26 is among those instruments which may no longer be fully up to date but remain relevant in certain respects. The Committee therefore suggests that the Government should consider the possibility of ratifying the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which marks certain advances compared to older instruments on minimum wage fixing, for instance, as regards its broader scope of application, the requirement for a comprehensive minimum wage system, and the enumeration of the criteria for the determination of minimum wage levels. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision taken or envisaged in this regard.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1970)

Articles 4, 6, 8, 10, 13 and 14 of the Convention. Revision of the labour legislation. The Committee has been commenting for some years on numerous divergences that persist between the Labour Act 1997 currently in force and certain provisions of the Convention. In its last report, the Government confined itself to reiterating that a tripartite committee had been set up to prepare a new consolidated draft Labour Code and that technical assistance had already been received from the Office to this effect. The Committee asks the Government to keep the Office informed of the revision process and to transmit a copy of the new draft Labour Act, once it has been finalized. In particular, the Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the new labour legislation is expected to extend its coverage to agricultural and other categories of workers currently excluded, and how it is intended to give effect to the specific requirements of Articles 4 (partial payment of wages in kind), 6 (freedom of workers to dispose of their wages), 8 (deductions from wages based on individual agreement), 10 (conditions and limits of attachment of wages), 13 (place of wage payment) and 14 (notification of wage conditions and statement of earnings) of the Convention.

The Committee recalls, in this connection, that the General Survey of 2003 on the protection of wages contains documented information and practical guidance as to how legislative conformity with the Convention may be attained. It also recalls that the Government may continue to draw upon the technical advice and expertise of the Office on these matters, if it so wishes. The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to provide in its next report a detailed response to all the points raised above.

Suriname

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1976)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted with regret that the Government has – for the last 35 years – not been in a position to report any concrete progress in ensuring legislative conformity and full implementation of the requirements of the Convention.

In this connection, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraph 304 of its General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts in which it noted that the Convention was adopted 60 years ago with a view to ensuring that substantial public investment in public works and the purchase of goods and services did not have the effect of depressing working conditions elsewhere in the economy. Yet today, the risk remains essentially the same, namely that the winning tender might well be the one which pays the lowest wages, fails to provide safety equipment or coverage for accidents, and which has the largest proportion of informal workers, for whom no tax or social security was paid, and who are not covered in practice by any legal or social protection. In fact, there is a persistent concern that international competition pushes bidding enterprises to compress labour costs affecting standards on wages, working hours, sanitation, accommodation and welfare facilities. It was in this sense that the Committee reaffirmed the continuing relevance of the Convention in a context where public investment via public contracts continues to represent a high proportion of formal economic activity in both developed and developing countries.

Moreover, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to paragraphs 41 and 169 of the same General Survey, in which reference is made to those countries which are bound by the Convention but have not as yet taken measures to give effect to its main requirement, that is the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts, considering that the mere fact that the general labour legislation applies without distinction to all workers suffices to absolve them from their obligation of incorporating appropriate labour clauses into all public contracts for works, supplies or services.

In addition, the Committee understands that with the assistance of the Inter-American Development Bank, the Government has been implementing since March 2006 a four-year Public Sector Management Strengthening Programme (PSMSP) that contains activities related to the procurement regulatory framework, including legislation review and the drafting of a new comprehensive procurement law. In the light of the foregoing observations, the Committee believes that the PSMSP offers a real opportunity for bringing at last the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee trusts that in preparing the new public procurement legislation in the framework of the PSMSP, the Government will not fail to take into consideration the points raised by the Committee in its previous comments and asks it to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this respect.

Finally, with a view to assisting the Government in its effort to give effect to the Convention, the Committee attaches herewith a copy of the Practical Guide on the Convention prepared by the Office in September 2008 and based principally on the findings of the abovementioned General Survey. It also recalls that the Government may draw upon the advisory services of the Office to this effect.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee trusts that the Government will supply detailed information in its next report on the application of all the provisions of the Convention in the light of the Employment Act, 2006. The Committee also requests the Government to reply to its previous observation and in particular to send available data concerning changes in the minimum wage and the rate of inflation, and also the average wage by branch of activity and occupation.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Ukraine

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1961)

Article 12, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Regular payment of wages. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not provide up to date information on the wage arrears situation on which the Committee has been commenting for a number of years. Unlike previous years, no statistical or other indications are given concerning the accumulated wage debt, any new legislative measures or relevant inspection results. The Government merely refers to its intention to elaborate a legal mechanism in order to protect workers' wage claims in the event of the employer's insolvency through a wage guarantee fund. To enable the Committee to effectively evaluate compliance with the Convention in law and practice, the Government is once again requested to transmit detailed information on any persistent problems with regard to the regular payment of wages, including the sector(s) concerned and the number of workers and enterprises affected, the total amount of outstanding payments, the average delay in the payment of wages and any negotiated schedule for the settlement of accumulated wage debts. In the absence of such a schedule, the Government is asked to initiate negotiations to this end.

In addition, the Committee continues to receive voluminous communications concerning the ongoing problem of unpaid wages in the Nikanor-Nova mine. By letters dated 5 and 30 May 2008, the Workers' Union of the Nikanor-Nova Coal Mine (NPG) denounced the extensive problems of non-payment of wages and also complained about the deteriorating living conditions of miners, especially in the town of Zorinsk. In its reply, dated 11 September 2008, the Government indicates that there is currently a one-month delay in the payment of wages at the Nikanor-Nova mine with the total wage debt amounting to 197,200 hryvna (UAH) (approximately €16,500). The Government further indicates that all mine workers, including those at the Nikanor-Nova mine, have been transferred as from 1 April 2008 to the new wage and salary scales based on a minimum monthly wage of UAH525 (approximately 43.5 euros). With respect to allowances intended to improve the living conditions of miners, the Government refers to the new Act on enhancing the prestige image of coalminers' labour adopted on 2 September 2008, which amends the Mining Act and introduces an allowance for electricity, gas and central heating for workers employed in mining enterprises. Finally, the Government indicates that in the first seven months of 2008 the Nikanor-Nova mine spent UAH1.5 million (approximately 124,000 euros) on improvement of the occupational safety and health standards while the Ministry of Coal Industry is planning the acquisition of new protective equipment.

While noting the Government's explanations, the Committee observes that in a new communication received in November 2008, the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of the Lugansk Region (KSPLO) refers to a resolution adopted in the KSPLO Congress of October 2008 which alleges continued failure of executive authorities to pay adequate wages punctually and calls upon public authorities to make every effort to rectify the situation. In another communication received in February 2009, the NPG complains about violations of labour legislation, in particular the delayed payment or non-payment of wages, and provides statistical information on the sums owed to the pension fund at the Nikanor-Nova mine.

Moreover, the Committee notes the communication of the NPG, dated 23 July 2009, and a similar communication of the KSPLO, dated 26 August 2009, by which the two workers' organizations transmitted copies of recent correspondence with the labour inspectorate of the Ministry of Labour and of Social Policy, the Ministry of Coal Industry, and the management of the state enterprise "Luganskugol" pointing at the following facts: (i) in accordance with applicable collective agreements, the minimum guaranteed remuneration as from 1 July 2009 should be not lower than UAH786 (approximately 65 euros) (605 x 1.3 adjustment factor) for workers engaged in underground work and UAH726 (approximately 60 euros) (605 x 1.2) for all others; (ii) the management of the state enterprise "Luganskugol" has admitted that it is unable to pay workers at the new minimum wage rate (i.e. UAH786) for lack of sufficient financial resources; (iii) in accordance with section 3 of the Act on enhancing the prestige image of coalminers' labour, the salary scales of coalminers must be established on the basis of a rate of the worker of category 1 which exceeds the statutory level of the minimum wage by at least 30 per cent; and (iv) the labour inspectorate last visited the state enterprise "Luganskugol" on 23 February 2009, and found that the enterprise is in violation of labour legislation for non-observance of the applicable minimum wage levels. It also observed that even though at the time of inspection no wage arrears were found, wages were paid irregularly, there were accumulated liabilities to the pension fund, and the compensation for the delay in payment was not always paid on the day of settling the wage arrears. In light of the foregoing considerations, the two workers' organizations denounce a deliberate and systematic failure of the state enterprise "Luganskugol" (and other state-owned coal production enterprises such as "Donbassantratsit" and "Sverdlovatratsit") to comply with state social guarantees in the field of remuneration thus depriving coalminers of a decent standard of living.

By letter, dated 8 October 2009, the Deputy Minister of Labour and Social Policy replied to the latest communication of the NPG indicating that the Territorial State Labour Inspection in the Lugansk region carried out in 2009 inspections at the coalmine Nikanor-Nova and at the state enterprise "Luganskugol". As a result, it was found that the minimum guarantees of labour remuneration were not observed and that the wage rate of workers was fixed without taking into account the provisions of the general and sectoral collective agreements. The Deputy Minister indicates that disciplinary action was taken against the managers of the enterprises concerned in accordance with section 188-6 of the Code of Administrative Offences, while the inspection results were forwarded to law enforcement bodies as provided for in section 95 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

As pointed out in previous comments, the Committee is of the view that the wage situation in the Nikanor-Nova mine is not an isolated phenomenon but rather symptomatic of the difficulties of the Ukrainian coalmining industry as a whole, that is high unemployment, low profitability and poor safety record. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to communicate full particulars on the employment and working conditions prevailing in the mining sector – including the several hundred illegal mines reportedly operating in the country – and the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the regular payment of wages in the coalmining industry in accordance with applicable collective agreements.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 99th Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

United Kingdom

British Virgin Islands

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes with regret that the Government is still unable to report substantive progress concerning the adoption of legislation giving effect to the provisions of the Convention. While noting the Government's indication that the draft bill to amend the Labour Code Ordinance, Cap. 293 is under review and should be resubmitted to the Legislative Council, the Committee recalls that the Government has been stating for the last 28 years that the enactment of appropriate legislation for the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts is under consideration.

The Committee wishes to point out that the principal obligation for a government arising out of the ratification of an international labour Convention is to take such action as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of the ratified Convention, and to continue to ensure its application for as long as it does not decide to denounce it. The Committee therefore strongly suggests that the new legislation designed to implement the Convention should be adopted without delay and asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect.

Finally, the Committee refers to its 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts which contains an overview of public procurement practices and procedures in so far as labour conditions are concerned and makes a global assessment of the impact and present-day relevance of Convention No. 94. It also refers to the Practical Guide, prepared by the Office principally on the basis of the abovementioned General Survey, to help better understand the requirements of the Convention and ultimately improve its application in law and practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1944)

The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report, and particularly the adoption of Decree No. 6.052 of 29 April 2008, setting the level of the minimum wage as from 1 May 2008 at 799.23 bolivars (bolívars fuertes) (or around US$372) for all workers, urban or rural, in the private and public sectors, and domestic workers, and at 599.43 bolivars (or around US$279) for apprentices.

Article 3 of the Convention. Consultations with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee notes the observations made by the Venezuelan Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production (FEDECAMARAS), which were received on 27 August 2008 and 27 August 2009 and forwarded to the Government on 4 September 2008 and 7 September 2009, respectively, and the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), received on 31 August 2009 and forwarded to the Government on 16 September 2009. These organizations indicate that the Government is not holding the consultations provided for by law for the determination of the minimum wage. More specifically, FEDECAMARAS denounces the fact that the Government has not convened the National Tripartite Commission responsible for making recommendations on the adjustment of the minimum wage for the past nine years and recalls that the minimum wage fixing machinery shall, in accordance with section 167 of the Basic Labour Act, be the outcome of tripartite dialogue between the Government and employers' and workers' organizations. FEDECAMARAS also indicates that wage increases have been determined by Presidential Decree without consultation, as invitations to the consultations were issued very late or even after the date of publication of the Decree. The Committee further notes that the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), to the observations of which there has, as yet, been no reply, had raised similar issues. In this respect, the Committee wishes once again to recall that Article 3 of the Convention requires the full and effective consultation of employers' and workers' organizations and their participation on an equal footing in the operation of minimum wage fixing machinery. As the Government's reply was received on 8 December 2009, the Committee intends to examine in detail the matters raised in the above observations at its next session.

Finally, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the conclusions adopted by the ILO Governing Body in relation to the relevance of the present Convention, based on the recommendations of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards (GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 19 and 40). The Governing Body decided to classify Convention No. 26 among those instruments that may no longer be fully up to date but which nevertheless remain relevant in certain respects. The Committee therefore suggests that the Government might consider the possibility of ratifying the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which contains certain advances compared to older instruments on minimum wage fixing, for instance in terms of its broader scope of application, the requirement for a comprehensive minimum wage system and the obligation to determine criteria for fixing and adjusting minimum wage rates. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision adopted or envisaged in this respect.

Yemen

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1969)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 23 of 14 August 2007 on bidding, outbidding and government warehouses which replaces Act No. 3 of 1997 on the same. The new Act regulates, in particular, the award, execution and supervision by the Supreme Commission for Tenders of all public tenders on the basis of equality of treatment and transparency. However, the Committee notes with regret to note that, contrary to the indications of the Government, the new Act does not provide for the insertion of labour clauses as prescribed by this Article of the Convention. In this connection, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraphs 176–177 of its General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts in which it pointed out that “the Convention has a very simple structure, all its provisions being articulated around and directly linked to the core requirement of Article 2(1), that is the insertion of labour clauses ensuring favourable wages and other working conditions to the workers concerned. As a result, in case the national legislation makes no provision for the specific type of labour clause and in the specific terms set out in Article 2(1) of the Convention, the application of the remaining Articles 3, 4 and 5 becomes without object and thus cannot be considered separately.” The Committee went on to observe that “by aligning contract standards to the highest prevailing standards, by excluding the lowering of those standards through subcontracting, and by incorporating those principles into the standard clauses of each and every public contract falling within its scope, the Convention guarantees that public procurement is not a terrain for socially unhealthy competition and can never be associated with poor working and wage conditions.” The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps without further delay in order to ensure the application of the basic requirement of the Convention and recalls that it may draw on the expert advice of the Office to this effect.

Finally, the Committee attaches herewith a copy of the Practical Guide on Convention No. 94 which was prepared by the Office in September 2008 based on the conclusions of the aforementioned General Survey to help better understand the requirements of the Convention and ultimately improve their application in law and practice.

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1976)

Article 4 of the Convention. Full consultation and direct participation of employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted that, even though the minimum wage set for public employees (20,000 rials or approximately US$100 per month) may also apply to workers of the private sector in accordance with section 55(1) of the Labour Code, there is no institutionalized mechanism for fixing and revising minimum wages through a consultative process sufficiently representative of employers’ and workers’ interests. In its last report, the Government indicates that the implementation of the national strategy on wages has been postponed due to the current economic situation. The Government also states that the establishment of the tripartite Labour Council, which is provided for in section 11(1) of the Labour Code, has been deferred in view of the proposed amendment of the Labour Code. Accordingly, the Committee notes with regret that no progress has been made as regards the implementation of the Convention, either in law or in practice. The Committee urges the Government to take, without further delay, all necessary measures in order to set up a minimum wage fixing mechanism based on effective and genuine tripartite consultations. It asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments concerning the reactivation of the national strategy on wages, the eventual establishment of the Labour Council and the announced amendment of the Labour Code.

Zambia

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1979)

Article 12, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Regular payment of wages. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government’s statement that it has redoubled its efforts to ensure that all accrued wages and salary arrears for public employees in local councils are settled, and, at present, there is a reasonably low level of outstanding wage arrears. It further notes that according to the Government, no other sector of economic activity is currently experiencing problems of deferred payment of wages. The Committee understands, however, that serious problems of accumulated wage debts persist, for instance, council workers in Mufumbwe have reportedly not been paid for 30 months, workers at the country’s largest coal mine recently undertook industrial action for payment of four months of salary arrears, while the national air carrier, now in receivership, owes its employees 3.4 billion kwacha (approximately US$750,000) in salary arrears. The Committee recalls the need for strong commitment and rigorous action on the part of state authorities in addressing the three crucial parameters of the problem, namely tight supervision, severe sanctions and appropriate compensation to workers for the loss incurred. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts for the settlement of outstanding wage arrears and to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard.

Zimbabwe

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee notes the observations of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) dated 21 September 2009 concerning the application of the Convention. According to the ZCTU, the Minister of Labour and Social Services has been ignoring the recommendations of the tripartite Wages and Salaries Advisory Board for the past two years. The minimum wage for domestic workers and unclassified workers was last set in 2007, and, as a result, these categories of workers are now subject to poor remuneration and exploitation. The Committee would appreciate receiving any comments the Government may wish to make in response to the observations of the ZCTU.

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery for the agricultural sector. The Committee notes the observations made by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) on the application of the Convention. According to the ZCTU, the Government has failed to ensure that workers' income is adequately protected in terms of guaranteeing a fair remuneration sufficient to provide a decent living. The ZCTU indicates that, in the context of the current hyper-inflationary economy, prices of basic commodities change at an hourly rate and minimum wage rates become rapidly irrelevant, thus calling into question the practicality of maintaining a system where an amount fixed today would be next to nothing by the end of the week. The Committee understands that, according to official data published by the Central Statistical Office, the annual inflation rate stood at 231 million per cent in 2008, while no official data have been released by the Central Statistical Office for 2009. In light of the aggravating socio-economic situation, the Committee asks the Government to clarify the role and function of the National Employment Council for the Agricultural Industry (NEC) and, in particular, the practical significance of the annual review of minimum pay rates by NEC subcommittees responsible for cost of living adjustment. It also requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of the ZCTU.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 26 (Albania, Armenia, Barbados, Fiji, Malawi, Paraguay, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Togo, United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, United Kingdom: Montserrat); Convention No. 94 (Nigeria, Norway, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Uganda, United Kingdom: Anguilla); Convention No. 95 (Barbados, Bolivia, Dominica, Guinea, Iraq, Paraguay, Solomon Islands, Tajikistan, Uganda, United Kingdom: Montserrat); Convention No. 99 (Malawi, Paraguay, Sierra Leone, United Kingdom: Anguilla); Convention No. 131 (Albania, Australia: Norfolk Island, Cameroon, Iraq, Ukraine); Convention No. 173 (Albania, Ukraine, Zambia).

Working time

Australia

Forty-Hour Week Convention, 1935 (No. 47) (ratification: 1970)

Article 1 of the Convention. Forty-hour week. The Committee notes the comments of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) dated 1 September 2008 on the application of the Convention. According to these comments, excessively long working hours are causing numerous problems for workers. Based on three different sources of information, the ACTU maintains that Australian workers increasingly work in excess of the statutory limit of 38 hours per week. First, according to data published by the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) in 2007, the male average full-time working week was 45 hours and the female average full-time working week was 42 hours. In addition, the Australian Work and Life Index 2008, based on survey research undertaken by academics at the University of South Australia, reported that 22.5 per cent of respondents worked 48 hours or more, including 31.7 per cent of male respondents and 11.9 per cent of female respondents. Finally, a survey conducted in 2007 by the Workplace Research Centre of the University of Sydney, found that 39 per cent of workers were working longer than standard hours while 23 per cent of workers were working for 50 hours or more a week. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of the ACTU.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Belgium

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No.1) (ratification: 1926)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Working hours – Annualized averaging. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the Government's statement that no amendment is envisaged to the Act of 17 March 1987 on the introduction of new work regimes in enterprises. It recalls that the purpose of the Act is very broad, namely to enable the extension or adaptation of operating time in the enterprise and promote employment. It also notes that, under such regimes, hours of work may be increased to 12 a day with no absolute weekly limit (other than the 84 hours corresponding to seven days of 12 hours), and that average weekly hours of work over a period of reference of up to one year may not exceed 40. Lastly, the Committee points out that the new work regimes, which allow major exemptions from the normal rules on hours of work, may be established by collective agreement but also, where there is no union representation in the enterprise, by amendment of the work regulations. The Committee is bound to reiterate its concern at the extent of the flexibility afforded by the abovementioned provisions, particularly in small enterprises with no trade union representation. The Committee recalls that, in its General Survey of 2005 on hours of work (paragraph 227), it pointed out that, in order to be compatible with the Convention, annualized working-hour arrangements must satisfy simultaneously the following three conditions: "(i) the arrangement is introduced in an 'exceptional case' where it is recognized that the eight-hour and 48-hour limits cannot be applied; (ii) the arrangement is introduced through an agreement between workers' and employers' organizations transformed into regulations by the government, to which this agreement is submitted; (iii) the average number of hours worked per week over the number of weeks covered by any such agreement does not exceed 48". The Committee requests the Government to take steps to reduce the authorized daily working hours and to set a reasonable cap on weekly hours of work in the context of the new work regimes.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivia

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1973)

Article 6, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention. Permanent exceptions – intermittent work. The Committee notes the adoption of the new National Constitution on 7 February 2009 which implies amending numerous legislative texts, including the General Labour Act which is in the process of being formulated. Further to its previous comments on intermittent work, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, section 46 of the General Labour Act and its implementing Decree, No. 244 of 1943, list exhaustively the permanent exceptions to daily working hours, which apply to persons holding management positions, positions of trust and supervisory posts, as well as persons whose work is discontinuous. The Committee notes that the Government provides no information on the types of job concerned by this exception which are deemed to be intermittent within the meaning of Article 6(1)(a) of the Convention. While recalling that, under this provision of the Convention, regulations made by public authority shall determine by industry or occupation the permanent exceptions that may be allowed in preparatory or complementary work (i.e. work which must necessarily be carried on outside the limits laid down for the general working of an establishment) or for certain classes of workers whose work is essentially intermittent, and the number of additional hours authorized and the rate of pay for overtime, the Committee again asks the Government to state the types of work that are covered by this exception.

Articles 3 and 6, paragraph 1(b). Overtime. The Committee notes that the Government provides no information on the limiting of overtime to the instances specifically listed at section 37 of Decree No. 244 of 1943. The Committee hopes that the Government will take account of its comments in formulating the new General Labour Act, in particular by amending section 50 of the General Labour Act, as the Committee has been requesting for many years, and that it will limit the possibility of overtime work to the instances allowed by the Convention, namely: (i) in case of accident, actual or threatened; (ii) in case of urgent work to be done to machinery or plant; (iii) in case of force majeure, but only so far as may be necessary to avoid serious interference with the ordinary working of the undertaking; and (iv) to enable establishments to deal with exceptional cases of pressure of work. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in the preparation of the new General Labour Act and to provide a copy of the text as soon as it has been finalized. It reminds the Government that, should it so wish, it may seek technical assistance from the ILO through its Regional Office in Lima, in making the necessary legislative amendments to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention.

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1954)

Article 5 of the Convention. Compensatory rest. Further to its previous comments concerning section 31 of Decree No. 244 of 1943 regulating the General Labour Act, which applies to all workers except agricultural workers, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments concerning Article 8(3) of the Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106).

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1973)

Article 7, paragraph 1(a), of the Convention. Permanent exceptions – intermittent work. The Committee notes the adoption of the new national Constitution on 7 February 2009, which implies the modification of many legislative texts, including the General Labour Act, which is under preparation. Further to its previous comment concerning intermittent work, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, under the terms of section 46 of the General Labour Act and its implementing Decree No. 244 of 1943, permanent exceptions to daily hours of work include, listed exhaustively, persons engaged in positions of direction, trust or supervision, as well as persons engaged in discontinuous work. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any indication of the types of work concerned by this exception and which are considered to be intermittent within the meaning of Article 7(1)(a) of the Convention. While recalling that, under the terms of this Article of the Convention, regulations made by the public authority shall determine the permanent exceptions which may be allowed for (i) certain classes of persons whose work is intermittent (such as caretakers and persons employed to look after working premises and warehouses), and (ii) classes of persons directly engaged in preparatory or complementary work (which must necessarily be carried on outside the limits laid down for the hours work of the rest of the persons employed in the establishment), the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the types of work covered by this exception.

Article 7, paragraph 2. Additional hours of work. Further to its previous comments concerning the possibility of working additional hours under section 37 of Decree No. 244 of 1943, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on this point. It recalls in this respect that the Convention only allows the granting of temporary exceptions to rules on working hours in specific cases, namely, in unforeseen cases, to prevent accidents or for the urgent repair of machinery; to prevent the loss of perishable goods or avoid endangering the technical results of the work; to allow for special work; or to enable establishments to deal with cases of abnormal pressure of work due to special circumstances. The Committee hopes that the Government will take its comments into account in the process of preparing the new General Labour Act, particularly by amending section 50 of the General Labour Act, as the Committee has been requesting it to do for many years, and that it will confine the possibility of working additional hours to the cases envisaged by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in the preparation of the new General Labour Act and to provide a copy of the text once it has been finalized. It recalls that the Government may, if it so wishes, avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO, through its Regional Office in Lima, with regard to the necessary legislative amendments for the full application of the provisions of the Convention.

Night Work (Women) Convention (Revised), 1948 (No. 89) (ratification: 1973)

Article 3 of the Convention. Prohibition of night work of women. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that Convention No. 89 is widely criticized as being contrary to the overriding principle of gender equality and restricting the individual worker's freedom of choice on working time solely on the basis of sex. For this reason, the International Labour Conference decided to partially revise the Convention by adopting the 1990 Protocol to Convention No. 89, and also adopted a new Night Work Convention, 1990 (No. 171), which no longer applies to a specific category of workers and sector of economic activity but to all night workers irrespective of gender in all branches and occupations. For the same reasons, the Committee has been inviting States parties to the Convention to ratify either the Protocol if they considered that women's protection from the harmful effects and risks of night work was still relevant, or the new Night Work Convention if they were prepared to eliminate all restrictions on night work for women.

The Committee recalls, in this connection, paragraphs 168–169 of its 2001 General Survey on the night work of women in industry, in which it noted that the full realization of the principle of non-discrimination requires the repealing of all laws and regulations which apply different legal prescriptions to men and women, except for those related to pregnancy and maternity. The Committee further recalled that member States are under an obligation to review periodically their protective legislation in light of scientific and technological knowledge with a view to revising all gender-specific provisions and discriminatory constraints. This obligation stems from Article 11(3) of the 1979 UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (to which parenthetically Bolivia is a party since June 1990), as later reaffirmed in point 5(b) of the 1985 ILO resolution on equal opportunities and equal treatment for men and women in employment.

In its last report, the Government indicates that the new Constitution, which was promulgated on 7 February 2009, establishes a new hierarchy among legal norms placing international treaties before national laws, statutes and decrees. The Government adds that in preparing the new General Labour Act, the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Protection will consider the suggestions of the Committee. The review of the content and scope of each of the two instruments adopted in 1990 would clarify fundamental options of the new General Labour Act that is currently being drafted. In light of these observations, the Committee invites the Government in consultation with the social partners, to consider the possibility of ratifying the Night Work Convention, 1990 (No. 171), which applies to all night workers in all branches and occupations. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision taken or envisaged in this regard.

Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106) (ratification: 1973)

Article 8, paragraph 3 of the Convention. Compensatory rest. Further to its numerous comments on this matter, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, following the adoption of the new Constitution on 7 February 2009, the Government intends to adopt and amend numerous laws, in particular, the General Labour Act (LGT). For more than 30 years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that section 31 of Regulatory Decree No. 244 of 1943, which allows the employer, in the event of work being carried out on the Sunday rest day, to grant the worker compensatory rest or compensatory pay of more than 100 per cent of the worker's basic pay, is inconsistent with Article 8(3) of the Convention which requires compensatory rest regardless of any cash compensation which may be granted. In this regard, it recalls that offering only monetary compensation for weekly rest worked is contrary to the objective of the Convention of ensuring a minimum rest period for workers in order to protect their health and well-being. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that the drafting of the new Labour Code, for which the Office has offered assistance between 1988 and 1990, has not yet been completed. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps as soon as possible to finally bring its legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention and to provide a copy of the relevant legislative or regulatory text as soon as it has been adopted.

Canada

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1935)

Further to its previous comments, the Committee again expresses concern at the many discrepancies between the Canada Labour Code and the provincial legislation on hours of work, and the provisions of the Convention. It draws the Government's attention to the main areas where there are problems in applying the Convention, after a brief overview of the applicable legislative framework.

Articles 2, 5 and 6, paragraph 1(b), of the Convention. Daily and weekly hours of work. Federal legislation. The Committee notes that according to section 169(1) of the Canada Labour Code, standard hours of work are eight per day and 40 per week. It notes that in certain circumstances, hours of work may be averaged over a period of two weeks or more. It further notes that section 171 of the Canada Labour Code allows workers to be employed in excess of the standard hours of work provided that the number of hours they work in a week does not exceed 48 or a lower number established by the regulations of the establishment concerned and which may likewise be averaged over a period of two weeks or more under section 172. The Committee also notes that section 175 of the Code allows the Governor in Council to make regulations establishing different hours of work provisions for certain classes of employees. Lastly, it notes that section 176 of the Code allows the Minister of Labour to grant exceptions under which, for a certain class of employees, the maximum hours of work may be exceeded.

Provincial legislation – Alberta. The Committee notes that section 16(1) of the Employment Standards Code limits the length of the working day to 12 hours, but sets no limit for weekly hours of work. It further notes that section 20 of the Code makes provision for recourse to a compressed work week, in which hours of work may not exceed 12 per day and 44 per week. Lastly, it notes that according to section 20(2)(d), if the compressed work week is part of a cycle (system of averaging hours), the weekly limit of 44 hours is not absolute but applies on average over the cycle.

British Columbia. The Committee notes that section 35 of the Employment Standards Act limits standard working hours to eight a day and 40 a week, but that section 37 allows this rule to be waived if an agreement is reached to average the hours of work. It notes that such an agreement may be concluded for a period ranging from one to four weeks. In such cases, the average weekly hours of work may not exceed 40 and the normal daily hours of work may not exceed 12, any hours worked beyond these limits being payable at overtime rates.

Prince Edward Island. The Committee notes that section 15(1) of the Employment Standards Act establishes a standard work week of 48 hours. It notes that section 15(2) allows the Standards Board to exempt specific employees or industries from this rule and to substitute other limits.

Manitoba. The Committee notes that section 10 of the Employment Standards Code establishes a standard work week of 40 hours or any greater number of hours per week prescribed by regulation or permitted by the Employment Standards Director, who issues a permit authorizing the hours to be increased pursuant to section 13. It notes that where such a permit is issued, hours of work may be spread over a number of weeks (for example, 120 hours over three weeks). The Committee further notes that according to section 14(2) and (3) of the Employment Standards Code, such permits are valid for not more than three years and that before issuing them, the Director must consider a number of factors, including any effect the permit could have on the safety, health or welfare of the public or the employees concerned. Furthermore, the Committee notes that pursuant to section 10 of the same Code, the standard daily hours of work are eight hours or any greater number of hours per day provided for in a collective agreement applying to the worker concerned, or by regulation or authorization by the Director by means of a permit.

New Brunswick. The Committee notes that section 14 of the Employment Standards Act provides that subject to the provisions on weekly rest and children and to any other Act, there is no limit on the number of hours an employee may work during any daily, weekly or monthly period. It notes that sections 15(1) and 16 of the Act allow the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to prescribe the maximum number of hours beyond which a higher wage rate must be applied, without, however, limiting hours of work. It notes in this connection from information in the Government's report that the authorities of the province do not intend to amend the legislation.

Nova Scotia. The Committee notes that the Labour Standards Code contains no provision limiting daily or weekly hours of work, other than section 66, which provides that workers are as a rule entitled to 24 consecutive hours of weekly rest. It notes that section 40(4) of the Code merely imposes payment of an overtime rate equal to at least 50 per cent more than the normal rate to employees who are required to work in excess of 48 hours a week. The Committee further notes that section 2(4A) of the General Labour Standards Code Regulations excludes from the application of this rule workers to whom the Minimum Wage Order (Construction and Property Maintenance) applies. Lastly, it notes that section 6 of the abovementioned Order sets a maximum work period of 110 hours within two consecutive weeks for employees to whom the Order applies.

Ontario. The Committee notes that according to section 17(1) of the Employment Standards Act, an employee may not work more than eight hours a day or than the number of hours in the employee's regular work day if that number is more than eight hours, or than 48 hours a week. It observes, however, that according to section 17(2), the daily limit may be exceeded if the employee and employer so agree. Furthermore, section 17(3) allows the 48-hour weekly limit to be exceeded provided that employee and employer so agree and that the employer has the approval of the Employment Standards Director pursuant to section 17.1 of the Act. It notes that according to section 17.1(14), such approval allows the employee to work more than 60 hours in a week, but its validity is limited to one year. As to the limitation of daily hours of work, the Committee notes that daily rest may not be less than 11 hours other than for an employee who is on call. The Committee infers from all the foregoing that the length of the working hours may be up to 13 hours per day and may exceed 60 hours per week, subject to the payment of a higher rate of pay for hours worked in excess of 44 a week (or the grant of compensatory rest), as provided in section 22 of the Employment Standards Act.

Quebec. The Committee notes that section 52 of the Labour Standards Act establishes a standard working week of 40 hours, but observes that this limit is merely a threshold that triggers payment of overtime rates which confers the right to increased rate of pay of the workers concerned. It also notes that section 53 of the Act introduces the system of averaging of weekly hours of work, which may be established either by the employer with authorization from the Labour Standards Committee, or by collective agreement or decree. The Committee further notes that according to section 59.0.1 of the Act, other than in exceptional circumstances or in force majeure, employees may refuse to work more than four hours beyond their normal daily hours of work or more than 14 hours in every 24-hour period, whichever is the shorter, or more than 12 hours per period of 24 hours in the case of employees whose daily hours of work are variable or non-continuous.

Saskatchewan. The Committee notes that section 6(1) of the Labour Standards Act as a rule limits working hours to eight a day and 40 a week. It notes, however, that under section 6(2), these limits may be exceeded provided that the worker concerned is paid at a higher rate of at least 50 per cent for each hour worked in excess of the eight hours. The Committee also notes the exceptions to the requirement to pay overtime rates in the context of the compressed work week provided for in section 7 of the Act, and in the averaging of hours of work allowed by section 9. Lastly, the Committee notes that under section 12(1), an employer must obtain consent of his/her employees for them to work more than 44 hours a week, other than in emergency circumstances.

Newfoundland and Labrador. The Committee notes that according to section 5 of the Labour Standards Regulations, the standard hours of work beyond which overtime rates apply pursuant to section 25 of the Labour Standards Act, is 48 hours a week. It notes, however, that the only limitation on working hours contained in the Labour Standards Act is to be found in section 23, which requires daily rest of eight consecutive hours except in the case of an emergency that constitutes a hazard to life or property. The Committee infers that outside the case of an emergency, the length of the working day is up to 16 hours and that the law sets no weekly limit. Lastly, section 26(c) of the Act provides that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may fix the maximum number of hours in specified undertakings.

Fixing limits to daily and weekly hours of work. The Committee recalls that according to Article 2 of the Convention, standard working hours are to be limited to eight a day and 48 a week. It notes, however, that the Employment Standards Act of New Brunswick sets no limit either on daily or on weekly hours of work. In addition, the Employment Standards Act of Prince Edward Island does not regulate daily working hours. The Employment Standards Code of Manitoba sets a standard working day of eight hours, allowing to fix a different limit by collective agreement, regulation or by permission of the Employment Standards Director. It also notes that the legislation of Ontario allows to set by collective agreement a working day of up to 13 hours and, subject to administrative authorization, a working week in excess of 60 hours. Lastly, the Committee notes that the legislation of Nova Scotia sets standard working time at 110 hours over a two-week period in the construction sector.

Compressed work week. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that Article 2(b) of the Convention allows weekly hours of work to be spread unevenly, for example in the context of a compressed working week, but only if the length of the working day does not exceed nine hours. It notes in this connection that the Employment Standards Code of Alberta allows recourse to a compressed work week which allows a working day of up to 12 hours.

Averaging of hours of work. The Committee recalls that Article 5 of the Convention allows averaging of work hours only in exceptional cases where it is recognized that the normal limit of eight hours a day and 48 hours a week cannot be applied. It notes, however, that a number of legislative texts allow working hour arrangements to be introduced with no provision for ensuring compliance with these conditions. The Committee notes in this connection that the Canada Labour Code allows averaging of hours of work without setting any maximum limit to the periods for which they may be applied, the only condition being the consent of the union concerned or the approval of at least 70 per cent of the employees concerned. It notes in this connection the report "Fairness at Work: Federal Labour Standards for the 21st Century", published in October 2006 by the Federal Labour Standards Review Commission. It notes in particular Recommendation 7.6, which seeks to provide a framework for the introduction of averaging arrangements. The Committee also notes that averaging is authorized by the legislation of Alberta and Manitoba with no particular restrictions. It also observes that working time arrangements of this kind are also allowed by the Labour Standards Act of Quebec, and by the legislation of Saskatchewan and British Columbia – in the latter province the period of reference may be of up to four weeks.

Overtime. The Committee wishes to underline that overtime work, in the context of temporary exceptions, is authorized only in the circumstances listed exhaustively in the Convention: in case of accident, actual or threatened, or in case of urgent work to be done to machinery or plant, or in case of force majeure (Article 3) or to enable an establishment to deal with an exceptional case of pressure of work (Article 6(1)(b)). It notes, however, that the limits placed on hours of work by the legislation of Nova Scotia, Quebec and Saskatchewan are merely a threshold beyond which the hours worked must be paid at a higher rate, with no specification as to the circumstances in which overtime work is authorized. It further notes that a similar provision is to be found in the Labour Standards Act and Regulations of Newfoundland and Labrador, which set a maximum working day of 16 hours.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that federal and provincial laws and regulations are brought into conformity with the provisions of the Convention on these matters. It asks the Government in particular to keep the Office informed of any decisions it may take with a view to implementing the recommendations in the report "Fairness at Work: Federal Labour Standards for the 21st Century".

The Government is also asked to provide copies of any regulations adopted pursuant to section 175 of the Canada Labour Code, section 10 of the Employment Standards Code of Manitoba, or section 26(c) of the Labour Standards Act of Newfoundland and Labrador with a view to setting specific rules on hours of work for certain categories of workers. The Government is also asked to provide information on any exceptions to the standard rules on hours of work that have been granted pursuant to the following provisions: section 176 of the Canada Labour Code; section 15(2) of the Employment Standards Act of Prince Edward Island.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Chad

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not include any new information in reply to its previous comments and is confined for the fourth consecutive year to reiterating the information provided previously. It therefore requests the Government to provide concrete explanations in its next report on the points on which it has been commenting for several years.

Article 5 of the Convention. Compensatory rest. Further to its previous comments relating to section 209 of the Labour Code and sections 9 and 10 of Decree No. 56/PR-MTJS-TMOPS of 8 February 1969, which envisage exceptions to the weekly rest scheme without compensatory periods of rest, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the fact that Article 5 of the Convention provides that provision shall be made, as far as possible, for compensatory periods of rest to be granted in the event of exceptions to the normal weekly rest scheme. The granting of compensation in cash or in the form of higher rates of pay for the hours worked on the weekly rest day do not correspond to the objective of the Convention, which is to ensure that workers benefit from a minimum period of rest with a view to preserving their health and giving them access to leisure activities. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to indicate all the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that compensatory rest periods are granted in these cases and to indicate any agreements or customs established in these matters which ensure the application of the Convention.

Moreover, with regard to workers in the oil industry, who are entitled to a period of two weeks of rest in respect of each period of four weeks of uninterrupted work, the Committee emphasizes that, while the Convention does not establish a precise time limit for granting the compensatory rest period, compliance with the spirit of the Convention requires this to be within a reasonably short period. If this were not the case, the Convention would risk becoming bereft of all meaning.

Article 7. Information on implementation measures. The Committee understands the difficulties faced by the Government in the field of labour inspection, which are preventing it from providing the information requested previously concerning the application in practice of section 17 of Decree No. 56/PR-MTJS-DTMOPS of 8 February 1969 respecting workers' information in relation to weekly rest arrangements (Article 7). The Committee nevertheless hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to provide this information and requests it to supply any other information available which would allow the Committee to assess the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice in the country.

Finally, the Committee takes this opportunity to recall that, based on the conclusions and proposals of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards, the ILO Governing Body has decided that the ratification of up to date Conventions, including the Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14), and the Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106), should be encouraged because they continue to respond to current needs (see GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paras 17–18). The Committee therefore invites the Government to envisage ratifying Convention No. 106 and to keep the Office informed of any decision taken or envisaged in this respect.

Chile

Night Work (Bakeries) Convention, 1925 (No. 20) (ratification: 1933)

Article 1 of the Convention. Prohibition of night work in bakeries. The Committee notes the Government's report, in which it indicates that the legislation that is in force does not contain specific regulations governing night work – unlike the repealed legislation. It notes the Government's view concerning the importance of ensuring through the national legislation the protection of persons who are engaged in night work and that it is envisaging favourably the ratification of the Night Work Convention, 1990 (No. 171).

The Committee recalls once again that the ILO Governing Body decided to shelve Convention No. 20, considering that this is an obsolete Convention which no longer meets current needs. Therefore, its ratification is no longer encouraged by the Office and reports on its application are no longer requested on a regular basis. The Committee also recalls that the ratification of Convention No. 171 does not ipso jure imply the denunciation of Convention No. 20 and that, in accordance with Article 11, the latter Convention may be denounced at any time provided that there have been full consultations with the representative organizations of employers and workers. It further recalls in this respect that the Government followed the same procedure in 1976 in relation to the denunciation of the Night Work (Women) Convention, 1919 (No. 4), which has also been declared obsolete and shelved.

The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to give favourable consideration to the comments that it has been making for nearly ten years concerning the denunciation of Convention No. 20 and the ratification of Convention No. 171, which is advisable. It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this field and reminds it that, if it so wishes, it may call on the Office for technical assistance in relation to the legislative amendments that are necessary as a result of the possible ratification of the Night Work Convention, 1990 (No. 171).

Colombia

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1933)

The Committee notes the information received from the Government on 10 February 2009 in reply to the observations made by the General Confederation of Labour (CGT). It notes that the Government refers to the preamble of Act No. 789 of 2002, which was the subject of the above observations, and particularly to the objective of the Act, namely to enable job creation without imposing an excessively heavy burden on enterprises. The Committee wishes to raise the following points with regard to the application of the Convention.

Article 2(b) of the Convention. Irregular distribution of weekly hours of work. The Committee notes that section 161 of the Labour Code provides that normal working hours must not exceed eight hours per day or 48 hours per week, except in the case of the listed exceptions. It notes that section 161(d), which was introduced by section 51 of Act No. 789, permits the conclusion of an agreement between the employer and worker under the terms of which weekly working hours will be distributed unevenly in the context of “flexible working days”. In this case, the week must include at least one rest day, and daily hours of work may vary between four and ten hours. The worker is not entitled to a higher rate of pay for the additional hours as long as the weekly working time does not exceed an average of 48 hours worked during the day time (between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.). The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that, under Article 2(b), of the Convention, a system involving the irregular distribution of weekly hours of work requires the approval of the competent national authority or the conclusion of an agreement between employers’ and workers’ organizations. A simple individual working agreement is not sufficient, in view of the risk of possible abuse, particularly where it enables an employer to vary his employees’ work schedules unilaterally. Furthermore, the Committee notes that, in ruling No. C-038/04 of 27 January 2004, the Constitutional Court considered that this provision was not contrary to the requirements of Convention No. 1. However, the Court did not refer to Article 2(b) of this Convention but to Article 4 of the Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30), which provides for a ten-hour limit on daily working hours in cases involving the uneven distribution of weekly working hours. With regard to Convention No. 1, the Court merely quoted Article 2(c) of this instrument, which allows the limits of eight hours per day and 48 hours per week to be exceeded in the specific context of shift work. However, the scope of section 161(d) of the Labour Code is not clearly restricted to shift work. Outside this specific context, the conditions laid down by Article 2(b) of the Convention, which only permits daily hours of work to be extended by one hour in cases where weekly working time is unevenly distributed, must be observed. Under this hypothesis, maximum daily working time is nine hours, and not ten hours as permitted by section 161(d) of the Labour Code. The Committee therefore requests the Government to amend this provision, in order to ensure that schemes involving the irregular distribution of weekly working hours can only be set up in a given establishment with the approval of the competent authorities or further to the conclusion of an agreement on this subject between the representative employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned. This could be done, for instance, in the context of the work of the Committee for the Monitoring and Inspection of Job Creation Policies referred to in sections 45 and 46 of Act No. 789 of 2002. The Committee also requests the Government to reduce the maximum daily working time permitted under such schemes to nine hours. Finally, in view of the fact that the last sentence of section 161(d) of the Labour Code refers to an average of 48 hours of work per week, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether this provision also permits the irregular distribution of hours of work over a period longer than a week.

Article 6, paragraphs 1(b) and 2. Additional hours – temporary exceptions. The Committee notes that under section 162(2) of the Labour Code, normal hours of work can only be extended with the authorization of the Ministry of Labour and in conformity with ratified international labour Conventions – apart from in a limited number of exceptional cases, for example managerial staff. However, it notes that the Code does not contain any provision stating the cases in which overtime work is authorized, and considers that a mere reference to ILO Conventions is not sufficient in this respect. Apart from certain particular cases, such as shift work and non-stop factory work, or indeed urgent work or situations of force majeure, which are the subject of specific regulations in the Labour Code in line with the provisions of the Convention, overtime work in the context of temporary exceptions is only authorized to enable establishments to deal with exceptional cases of pressure of work. Moreover, such exceptions necessitate the adoption of regulations from the national authority, by a given industry or profession, after consultation of the employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned and stating the conditions under which they are authorized. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the authorization from the Ministry of Labour provided for in section 162(2) of the Labour Code is of an individual character or whether these are more general regulations establishing conditions in which overtime work is authorized in the sector of activity concerned. If the latter is the case, the Government is also requested to indicate whether the Ministry of Labour issues its decision after consultation of the employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned. As regards the circumstances justifying overtime work, the Committee requests the Government to take steps to ensure that, apart from in the particular cases listed above (force majeure, shift work, etc.), this possibility is only given to enable employers to deal with exceptional cases of pressure of work.

Limits on the number of additional hours. The Committee notes that section 22 of Act No. 50 of 1990 introduces a new section into the Labour Code (unnumbered and inserted between sections 167 and 168 of the Code), under the terms of which the number of overtime hours may not exceed two per day or 12 per week, and overtime work is not authorized where daily working time is ten hours under an agreement concluded between the employer and worker. The Committee reminds the Government that, even though the Convention only imposes a limit on the number of authorized additional hours of work in each case by means of regulations adopted by the competent national authority after consultation of the employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned, without establishing a specific ceiling in this regard, the limit to be established at national level must remain reasonable. As the Committee emphasized in its General Survey of 2005 on hours of work (paragraph 144), “such limits must be ‘reasonable’ and they must be prescribed in line with the general goal [of the Convention], namely to establish the eight-hour day and 48-hour week as a legal standard of hours of work in order to provide protection against undue fatigue and to ensure reasonable leisure and opportunities for recreation and social life”. However, the possibility of working 12 additional hours per week, if not accompanied by a monthly or annual limit, would amount to an authorization of hundreds of hours of overtime work per year. In the abovementioned General Survey (footnote 89, paragraph 144), the Committee recalls that it was concluded from the preparatory work for the Convention that the limits considered to be permissible amounted to 150 hours per year in the case of temporary exceptions or 100 hours per year for non-seasonal activities. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to establish a reasonable monthly or annual limit on the number of additional hours which may be worked in the context of temporary exceptions.

Comoros

Holidays with Pay Convention, 1936 (No. 52) (ratification: 1978)

Article 2, paragraphs 1 and 4, of the Convention. Deferral of the annual paid holiday. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the Government’s explanations that in the context of the current process of revision of the Labour Code, a new draft provision is being considered which would continue to allow for the accumulation of the annual holidays for two consecutive years, provided that at least six working days of the accumulated period of holidays are taken each year. The Committee hopes that the revised Labour Code will give full effect to the requirements of the Convention with respect to the postponement of holidays on which the Committee has been commenting for the past 20 years. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the new text as soon as it is adopted.

Article 2, paragraph 3(b). Interruptions of attendance at work due to sickness not to be included in the annual leave. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the revised Labour Code is expected to include a new section which will expressly provide that absences for sickness duly certified by an approved doctor may not be deducted from the number of days of annual holidays granted to the worker. The Committee hopes that the revised Labour Code will effectively align the national legislation with the Convention on this point on which the Committee formulates comments since 1987. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the new text as soon as it is adopted.

Costa Rica

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1982)

Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention. Daily hours of work and overtime. Further to its previous comments relating to sections 136, 139 and 140 of the Labour Code, and Bill No. 16.030, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Bill is still under discussion by the Human Rights Commission of the Legislative Assembly. It notes that the discussions addressed the issues of the effects of the globalization of the economy and the current situation in which there is a trend towards ever greater flexibility of working time. The Committee also notes that the discussions focused on the provisions of article 58 of the Constitution which, while limiting hours of work to eight in the day and 48 in the week, allows in exceptional cases the adoption of different working time arrangements by law. The Committee also notes the indication that, in view of the needs arising out of the globalized economy, it is necessary to promote social dialogue with a view to adapting working time to the needs of enterprises and workers, while respecting international standards and ILO principles.

Furthermore, with regard to the comments made by the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) that Bill No. 16.030 proposes amendments to the Labour Code which are in total contradiction to the provisions of the Convention and would be prejudicial to the professional, social and economic interests of workers, the Committee notes the Government’s reply that the Bill is intended to introduce new forms of the organization of working time in clearly defined exceptional cases and in accordance with provisions of the Constitution, with a view to adapting industrial relations to the new dynamics of the labour market, which impose almost continuous working. The Government adds that the trade union provides no evidence or legal provisions in support of its allegations and that, as the Bill is still under discussion, the Labour Code has not yet been reformed and it is not possible at this stage to foresee the impact of Bill No. 16.030 in practice. In this respect, the Committee wishes to recall, as it noted previously, that although the Bill is intended to improve conditions of work and protect the rights of workers, the amendments proposed are nevertheless contrary to the provisions of the Convention.

In this respect, the Committee notes the formal request for technical assistance made by the Government to the Subregional Office in San José on 28 May 2009 with a view to bringing the provisions of Bill No 16.030 into conformity with those of the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will take into account the numerous comments that it has made previously, particularly with regard to maximum daily hours of work and overtime hours. It also trusts that the Office will offer its services through the preparation of detailed technical comments on any draft legislation that the Government may wish to refer to it for examination. Finally, it hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to report progress in the adoption of new legislation respecting the arrangement of working time that is fully in conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1984)

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Total or partial exceptions. The Committee requests the Government to refer to the comments made in relation to Articles 7 and 8 of the Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106).

Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106) (ratification: 1959)

Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention. Permanent and temporary exemptions. Further to its numerous comments concerning section 152 of the Labour Code – which does not give full effect to the provisions of the Convention regarding exemptions relating to weekly rest – the Committee notes the Government's statement that in the case of trading establishments required to constantly provide their services to the public, the competent authorities recommend that enterprises increase their workforce and introduce a system of rotation so that all workers can enjoy a weekly rest day, since Sunday is no longer considered as the sole day of rest. It also notes that workers who are subjected to any infringement have the possibility, through implementing regulations, of reporting it to the labour inspection services. The Committee also notes that the Government has formally requested technical assistance from the ILO Subregional Office in San José in order to designate a specialist for the drawing up of draft legislation which would enable the national legislation to be harmonized with the practice and provisions of the Convention regarding exemptions relating to weekly rest.

In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Convention is based on three basic principles, namely: regularity (a rest period of 24 hours in each seven-day period), continuity (a rest period of at least 24 consecutive hours) and uniformity (the same rest day, in principle, for everyone). It stresses that the Convention only authorizes exemptions in exhaustively-listed circumstances, which are clearly regulated by the competent authority and which do not allow the relinquishment of weekly rest or an agreement between employer and employee to forgo such rest. However, the situation that the Government describes in its report suggests an increasing relaxation of the rules concerning weekly rest which is not in line with the three principles mentioned above. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to report on progress in this area and requests it to send copies to the Office of any legislative texts adopted in connection with section 152 of the Labour Code and the exemptions relating to weekly rest granted to workers.

Dominican Republic

Night Work Convention, 1990 (No. 171) (ratification: 1993)

Article 3 of the Convention. Minimum protection measures for night workers. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any new information concerning the points that it has been raising for many years. Indeed, since the ratification of the Convention in 1993, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the absence of tangible measures to give effect to the provisions of Articles 4 (free medical assessment), 6 (workers certified as unfit for night work), 7 (maternity protection), 9 (social services) and 10 (consultation of workers' representatives) of the Convention, which lay down a number of measures that need to be taken as a minimum for the protection of night workers. In this respect, the Committee has always recalled that the provisions of the Convention, even though they may be applied progressively, are not however optional and therefore remain binding. Accordingly, indicating that the social partners consider that there is no divergence between the national legislation and the requirements of the Convention calling for any amendment of the laws in force, does not absolve the Government from its obligation to give effect to all of the provisions of the Convention in law and practice. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take all necessary measures to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention and to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Equatorial Guinea

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 6 of the Convention. Permanent and temporary exceptions. In reply to the comments the Committee has been making since 1994, the Government indicated that the regulations applying section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 were still being examined with the parties concerned, particularly in the oil sector. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in this matter. The Government is also invited to communicate information on the organizations of employers and workers consulted in the preparation of the abovementioned regulations. Pending the latter's adoption, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the manner in which effect is given, in practice, to the provisions of section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 on overtime.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 7 of the Convention. Permanent and temporary exceptions. In reply to comments that the Committee has been making since 1994, the Government indicated that the regulations to implement section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 are still being examined with the parties concerned, particularly in the oil sector. It requests the Government to report on progress in this process. The Government is also asked to provide information on the employers' and workers' organizations consulted in the preparation of these regulations. Pending the latter's adoption, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the way in which the provisions of section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 on overtime are applied in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Ethiopia

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any information in reply to its previous comments and is confined to indicating that there have been no changes in law or practice affecting the application of the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound to draw the Government's attention once again to the following points.

Article 1, paragraph 1(d), of the Convention. Scope of application – workers in the transport sector. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information concerning the comprehensive study that it proposed to undertake with a view to the adoption of a directive by the Minister of Labour under section 72(2) of Labour Proclamation No. 377 of 2003, with a view to providing for the special application of the weekly rest provisions to workers directly engaged in the carriage of passengers and goods. The Committee once again requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect and to provide a copy of any new legal text that might be adopted on this matter.

Article 2, paragraph 1, and Articles 4 and 5. Exemption of persons holding managerial positions. The Committee notes the adoption of Proclamation No. 494/2006, amending section 3(2)(c) of the Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003, which continues to exclude persons holding managerial positions from the scope of the Proclamation, and accordingly from the provisions respecting weekly rest. While noting the Government's previous indications that in practice the weekly rest period is granted to those holding managerial positions in the same way as to other workers, the Committee recalls that this entitlement should be guaranteed by a legislative provision. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to Article 2(1) of the Convention, in relation to the persons concerned, in both law and practice.

Article 7, paragraphs (a) and (b). Posting of notices. In the absence of information on this point, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged concerning the obligation of employers to notify workers of days and hours of rest by means of notices or rosters, in accordance with this Article of the Convention.

Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any information in reply to its previous comments and is confined to indicating that there have been no changes in law or practice affecting the application of the Convention. The Committee is therefore once again bound to draw the Government's attention to the following points.

Article 3 of the Convention. Scope of application – establishments, institutions and administrative services providing personal services. The Committee notes the adoption of Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 repealing Labour Proclamation No. 42/1993. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the regulations governing conditions of work applicable to personal services, envisaged in section 3(3)(c) of Proclamation No. 377/2003, have still not been issued by the Council of Ministers. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of these regulations and to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Post and telecommunications services, newspaper undertakings, theatres and places of public entertainment. The Committee notes that section 70(1) and (2) of Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 provides for the establishment of special schemes for activities that are similar or identical to those referred to in Article 3(1)(b)–(d) of the Convention, thereby ensuring the application of the Convention in establishments engaged in these activities. It recalls that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the Government may, at any time, communicate to the Director-General of the International Labour Office a declaration accepting the obligations of the Convention in respect of post and telecommunications services, newspaper undertakings and theatres and places of public entertainment. The Committee once again invites the Government to communicate such a declaration to the Office.

Commercial representatives. The Committee notes that section 72(1) of Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 excludes commercial representatives from the scope of application of the provisions respecting the weekly rest period. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the weekly rest period of the workers concerned is ensured.

France

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1926)

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Total or partial exceptions. The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Labour–Force ouvrière (CGT–FO) on the application of the Convention, in which it regrets the lack of reliable statistical data on the nature and extent of the exemptions from Sunday rest that are granted by the labour inspectorate and stresses that the number of such exemptions has substantially increased between 2006 and 2007. On a more general note, the CGT–FO points out that the absence of precise data on the results of labour inspection supervisory activities does not allow for an assessment of the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in response to the observations of the CGT–FO, and to communicate up to date statistical information on the number of enterprises and approximate number of workers in the industry concerned by such exceptions, the types and number of exemptions granted per year, as well as extracts from reports of the labour inspection services showing the number of infringements observed and sanctions imposed, copies of relevant collective agreements, etc.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106) (ratification: 1971)

Article 7 of the Convention. Permanent exemptions – Sunday work. The Committee notes the comments of the General Confederation of Labour–Force ouvrière (CGT–FO) received on 4 June, 20 August and 7 September 2009 concerning the application of the Convention.

The CGT–FO denounces the progressive extension of exemptions to weekly rest on Sunday, particularly in the commercial sector, and refers, on the one hand, to their incompatibility with the provisions of the Convention and, on the other, to the negative impact on workers by challenging a principle which has contributed to the division between private and working life since 1906. It observes that successive modifications of the Sunday rest scheme are opening the way to the generalization of Sunday work and the avoidance of consultations with workers' organizations on the subject.

In its three communications, the CGT–FO emphasizes the non-compliance of the measures adopted successively in 2008 and 2009 with the Convention. It indicates that the previous extensions of exemptions from Sunday rest were reinforced by Act No. 2008-3 of 3 January 2008 and by the subsequent recodification of the Labour Code. The first reform added “retail furniture stores” to the list of establishments authorized to introduce exemptions from Sunday rest. The recodification resulted in an extension of the scope of exemptions through the introduction of the new concept of “public needs” and by providing that the list of establishments allowed to introduce exemptions from the Sunday rest shall be determined by regulations. Section L.3132-12 of the Labour Code provides in this respect that “certain establishments the operation or opening of which is rendered necessary by production constraints, the activities or needs of the public, shall be entitled to introduce exemptions to the Sunday rest rule and shall attribute rest days on a Sunday on a rota basis. A decree issued by the Council of State shall determine the categories of establishments concerned”.

As regards the second reform, Act No. 2009-974, adopted by Parliament on 22 July 2009, modified the scheme of exemptions from Sunday rest in tourist towns and areas (section L.3132-25) and replaced the previous restrictions relating to the areas concerned, the issuance of permits and the period concerned by a scheme under which the exemption is automatically acquired – permanent and generalized – thereby, de facto, resulting in the generalization of Sunday work in towns and areas classified as touristic by decision of the Prefect, at the proposal of the mayors concerned. The same trend for the extension of exemptions concerns retail outlets in towns with over 1 million inhabitants, through the introduction of the authorization of automatic opening on Sundays for a period of five years in “areas of exceptional consumption” (PUCE) characterized “by customary Sunday consumption, the significance of the volume of customers concerned and their distance from the said area”.

The CGT–FO considers that these exemptions, which only retain the voluntary nature of Sunday work and the compulsory compensatory benefits in the case of PUCE, are clearly far removed from those envisaged in the Convention and are based on criteria that are difficult to verify in practice, such as “the significance of the volume of customers concerned” and consumption “needs”. It underlines the weakness of statistical data to assess the impact of these exemptions. It further emphasizes the importance that is attached to the interpretation of the Convention to prevent trends that are contrary to its spirit.

In its reply, received on 4 September 2009, the Government recalls that the labour legislation fully complies with the requirement of Article 6(3) of the Convention by stipulating that, in the employees' interest, the weekly rest is granted on Sunday (section L.3132-3 of the Labour Code) and indicates that it even exceeds the minimum standard prescribed by the Convention by providing for a weekly rest of 35 hours (section L.3132-2 of the Labour Code). Concerning the specific arguments put forward by the CGT-FO, the Government maintains that:

- (i) the re-codification of the text of the Labour Code did not aim at extending the permanent exemptions to the Sunday rest rule but simply to restate the criteria which had already been used for such exemptions and which are the constraints of the production and the needs of the public;
- (ii) the notion of needs of the public is not contrary to the provisions of Article 7 of the Convention since the "nature of the service performed by the establishment", referred to in this Article, conveys the same idea. Besides, the Convention requires regard to be paid to all proper social and economic considerations, which may include the evolution of the needs of the public;
- (iii) Act No. 2008-3 of 3 January 2008 aims at promoting competition in the consumer's interest. It was noted that due to changes in lifestyle, especially in big cities, there is a high demand for visiting retail furniture stores on weekends, hence the necessity to authorize these establishments to open on Sundays;
- (iv) no consultations were held prior to introducing the exemption with respect to retail furniture stores for reasons connected with the legislative process but also because the sector concerned is covered by a collective agreement that provides for specific compensations in case of Sunday work;
- (v) Act No. 2009-974 of 10 August 2009 was adopted following the recommendations of the Economic, Social and Environmental Council contained in two reports prepared in 2007. As these reports concluded, Sunday no longer constitutes only a day of collective rest but also a moment of cultural enjoyment or leisure and suitable for shopping either as a family or individually;
- (vi) the new exemption concerning the tourist towns and areas builds on an existing exemption simply extending its scope with a view to promoting tourism. It will affect, at the maximum, an estimated 150,000 persons to be compared with 6.5 million persons who are habitually or occasionally required to work on Sundays;
- (vii) the establishment of PUCÉ, or areas of exceptional consumption in urban areas of at least 1 million inhabitants, is meant to respond to existing practices of Sunday consumption. It will be subject to the authorization of the Prefect upon the prior request of the municipal council and on condition that a collective agreement fixes the compensations to be granted to the employees deprived of their Sunday rest. Approximately 20 areas are expected to be established affecting 15,000 persons. Authorizations are limited to five years which demonstrates the exceptional character of the new measures while a six-member parliamentary committee will present a report within a year as from the publication of the new legislation in the Official Gazette.

The Committee notes the observations of the CGT-FO and the Government's reply which relate to legislative developments impacting on the application of Articles 6(3), 7(1) and (4), of the Convention. The Committee wishes to recall at the outset that for the determination of weekly rest the Convention is articulated around three basic principles, i.e. continuity (a period of weekly rest comprising at least 24 consecutive hours), regularity (weekly rest to be enjoyed in every period of seven days), and uniformity (weekly rest to be granted, wherever possible, simultaneously to all the persons concerned of an establishment and to coincide, wherever possible, with the traditional day of rest). These principles are reflected in sections of the Labour Code and there seems to be little disagreement between the CGT-FO and the Government that the principle of Sunday rest is a time-sanctioned and firmly grounded principle of the French labour legislation. It is commonly accepted that a certain flexibility is indispensable in applying this principle in view of the fact that in some cases there is an imperative need to maintain certain units of production operating around the clock, and in some others there is a manifest public interest in receiving certain services on Sunday. The Committee is therefore of the view that the different questions raised in the communications of the CGT-FO ultimately concern the exact scope and conditions of application of the permanent exemptions permitted under Article 7 of the Convention.

The Committee recalls that Article 7 permits special weekly rest schemes, including the granting of weekly rest on another weekday on a rotation basis when the nature of work, the nature of the service performed by the establishment, the size of the population to be served, or the number of persons employed is such that the normal weekly rest scheme provided for in Article 6 cannot be applied. In this connection, the Committee refers to paragraphs 110–123 of the 1964 General Survey on weekly rest in which it concluded that "an examination of the establishments covered by special schemes shows that they are governed by three main criteria, i.e. the need to cater for certain everyday consumer needs; the need to keep certain establishments operating; and the need to make special weekly rest arrangements for particular places or districts". More concretely, the Committee referred to: (i) first, establishments engaged in work which cannot be interrupted owing to the nature of the needs for which they cater or the harm which any stoppage would cause to the public interest, including industries, businesses and services indispensable to the daily maintenance of health, food supplies, safety and essential consumer needs generally, such as hospitals and similar establishments, hotels, restaurants, certain wholesale and retail commercial establishments, fire-fighting services, newspaper, information and entertainment establishments, public utilities (water, gas and electricity) and transport; (ii) secondly, industries which for technical reasons must operate continuously if they are to maintain their efficiency, including manufacture of foodstuffs for immediate consumption, occupations in which any interruption of the work would entail the loss or deterioration of the raw materials, or industries using certain specialized techniques (ovens, blast furnaces, gas works, etc.); and (iii) thirdly, establishments which operate only for part of the year or which depend on natural energy or other variable circumstances (e.g. establishments using water or wind as their sole motive power, occupations which are carried on in the open air and in which work may be held up by bad weather), including certain establishments in bathing and tourist resorts or watering places.

More specifically, in so far as retailing is concerned, the Committee noted that this is one of the branches of employment most frequently subjected to special weekly rest schemes, and that some countries specified the items which may be sold on the compulsory weekly rest day. It also noted that this had the advantage of making it clear that exceptions to the normal weekly rest schemes were warranted only when they met a very definite need (General Survey of 1964 on weekly rest, paragraph 113). More recently, in its 1984 General Survey on working time, the Committee indicated that in certain sectors such as commerce there is a trend which could lead to the establishment of special schemes that do not necessarily correspond to the standards prescribed by the Convention (paragraph 166).

The Committee recalls, in this regard, that it has raised similar questions in the direct requests it addressed in 2005 and 2008 concerning the application of the Convention in New Caledonia with respect to exemption of hardware and do-it-yourself stores. In these comments, the Committee also referred to relevant jurisprudence, including 19 decisions of the Administrative Court of Paris rendered in November 1993 and a decision of the Conseil d'Etat of July 1983, which ruled that do-it-yourself stores did not meet the conditions for granting an exception to the Sunday rest rule. In this connection, the Committee notes the existence of recent court decisions ordering on pain of fine retail stores, in particular hardware and do-it-yourself stores, to remain closed on Sundays.

The Committee understands that the question of Sunday work has been the subject of serious controversy in France which has led the Parliament to defer on several occasions the debate on the topic prior to the adoption of Act No. 2009-974. It also understands that this debate is stirred principally by the evolution in people's preferences and patterns of consumption. The Committee further notes the regret expressed by the CGT-FO concerning the lack of statistical data on these situations and on the probable impact of the reforms. There are also significant divergencies between the fears that it expresses concerning the generalization of Sunday work and the Government's estimates, which indicate that some 15,000 persons are concerned in tourist areas, compared to 6.5 million persons who are normally affected by Sunday work. An accurate assessment of the situation is in this context a prerequisite to evaluating the impact of the legislative measures. The Committee would therefore appreciate it if the Government and the social partners would provide supplementary documented information on the following: the results of any opinion surveys carried out among the workers concerned; the measures taken to ensure the voluntary character of Sunday work; the compensatory measures taken in favour of employees working on Sundays in application of the new legislative provisions, including copies of relevant collective agreements; any developments concerning the delimitation of tourist areas, the determination of tourist towns and the establishment of PUCE; copy of official studies that may have been conducted following the legislative developments of 2008 and 2009 or new reports that may have been published by the Economic, Social and Environmental Council on this matter; copy of the report which will be prepared by the parliamentary committee referred to in Act No. 2009-974.

The Committee would also be grateful to the Government for replying to the following additional questions: (i) did Act No. 2009-974 reflect the proposals contained in the 2007 report of the Economic, Social and Environmental Council? (ii) were any consultations held with the social partners during the period from 2007 when the report was prepared and July 2009 when the Act was adopted, and if so, what was the nature and outcome of these consultations? (iii) what are the consultation procedures used when legislative measures touch on labour questions? (iv) what was the special procedure used by the Government in this case and why was it chosen?

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Georgia

Holidays with Pay Convention, 1936 (No. 52) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention. Right to annual holidays with pay. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations made by the Georgian Trade Unions Confederation (GTUC), alleging widespread violations of the workers' right to annual paid leave. It notes with regret that the Government confines itself to restating the relevant provisions of the Labour Code without however giving any useful indications as to the extent of infringements in the enjoyment of the right to annual leave or the actions taken or envisaged to enhance conformity with the Convention. The Committee recalls that formal legislative conformity alone is not sufficient to constitute satisfactory compliance with the Convention, when the relevant laws and regulations are not enforced in practice. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will take all necessary measures to fully implement and effectively enforce the Convention and requests it to take due account of all the points raised in its previous comments.

Guatemala

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1988)

Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention. Work in excess of normal hours of work – Overtime hours. Further to its previous comments relating to the observations made by the Trade Union of Operators of Plants and Wells, Guards of the Municipal Water Company and its Annexes (SITOPGEMA), the Committee notes the Government's indications concerning the nature, scope and conditions governing the adoption of the internal rules for the work in an enterprise. It also notes the indications that the Municipal Water Company of the City of Guatemala (EMPAGUA) is an enterprise which has to provide an essential service on a continuous basis and that it is therefore necessary to ensure the presence of the personnel responsible for the production, maintenance and distribution of water. Noting that the rules were adopted by consensus between the employer and the workers, the Committee nevertheless notes that the rules provide for a working day of 24 hours followed by 48 hours of rest for career workers not subject to limitations on the ordinary working day, which means a working week that may be as long as 72 hours. The Committee is bound to recall once again that the Convention establishes a double cumulative limit, namely eight hours in the day and 48 hours in the week. It only allows exemptions from these maximum limits in restricted and well-defined circumstances, namely: (i) the distribution of hours of work over the week (Article 2(b)); (ii) the averaging of hours of work over a period of three weeks in the case of shift work (Article 2(c)); (iii) processes that are necessarily carried on continuously within the limit of 56 hours in the week (Article 4); (iv) the averaging of hours of work in exceptional cases (Article 5); and (v) permanent exceptions (preparatory, complementary or intermittent work) and temporary exceptions (exceptional cases of pressure of work) (Article 6). The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay to ensure that hours in excess of normal hours of work are limited to the cases envisaged by the Convention. It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect and recalls that it may, if it so wishes, avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO, through its Subregional Office in San José, in relation to the measures to be envisaged to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention.

Furthermore, with regard to the observations made previously by the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA) concerning daily hours of work, which may be in excess of 12 hours in certain enterprises that set productions targets but do not increase wages accordingly, the Committee notes the Government's explanations according to which, on the one hand, the only sector which sets production targets is the textile sector which, in addition to applying the minimum wage, provides for an increase in the wage of 50 per cent where hours of work are in excess of those set out in the contract and, on the other, no complaint has been made on this subject to the labour inspectorate. Furthermore, with regard to the allegation that in certain industrial enterprises the staff responsible for security may alternate between periods of 24 hours of work and of rest and that the Minister of Labour authorizes collective agreements accepting these conditions, the Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the Ministry of Labour may not in any event authorize such irregular conditions, and that a procedure exists (Government Decision No. 221-94 of 13 May 1994) for the negotiation, registration and denunciation of collective agreements relating to conditions of work in specific enterprises.

Finally, with regard to the amendments to be made to section 122 of the Labour Code, which provides that the working day including overtime hours may not exceed 12 hours, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in the context of the current draft legislative reform, the possibility of amending section 122 has not been addressed, but a discussion is envisaged on this matter in the Tripartite Commission for International Labour Affairs. The Committee therefore requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the outcome of these discussions and recalls that the employment of a worker for four additional hours in the day without any restriction (such as a monthly or annual limit) greatly exceeds the exemptions authorized by the Convention.

Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to refer to the comment that it is making under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29).

India

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1921)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report, and the observations made by the Centre of Indian Trade Unions (CITU) concerning the application of the Convention, which were received on 25 August 2008, and those of the Bharatiya Mazdoor Sangh (BMS) union, which were attached to the Government's report. It notes the allegations by the BMS of violations of the legislation on hours of work in certain sectors, such as information technology, and in special economic zones. The Committee further notes the CITU's indication that the provisions of the Factories Act establishing the 48-hour working week are amongst those most frequently violated. It also notes that, according to the CITU, the Government is reported to have the intention of raising hours of work to 12 hours a day and 60 hours a week. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in reply to the observations made by these two trade union organizations.

Article 6 of the Convention. Permanent exceptions – Essentially intermittent work – Railways. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of the Railway Servants (Hours of Work and Period of Rest) Rules, 2005, the provisions of which reflect the recommendations of the Railway Labour Tribunal, 1969, a copy of which was attached to the Government's report. It notes that Rule 7(3) establishes the criteria under which work may be classified as "essentially intermittent". It also notes that Rule 3(1) provides that the power to declare employment essentially intermittent is vested in the Head of the Railway Administration and that, in accordance with Rule 3(4), any railway servant aggrieved by such a decision may appeal to the Regional Labour Commissioner, and then to the Ministry of Labour. The Committee further notes that, under the terms of Rule 8, the standard hours of duty for these employees are 48 hours a week with the possibility of 12 or 24 additional hours, according to the type of work, as well as three hours of preparatory or complementary work, making an absolute maximum of 75 hours a week, as established in section 132 of the Railways Act, 1989.

Temporary exceptions – Railways. The Committee notes that Rule 9 of the Railway Servants (Hours of Work and Period of Rest) Rules, 2005, empowers the head of a railway administration to make temporary exceptions from the provisions of the Railways Act, 1989, in respect of hours of work for an employee or class of employees in the railways in the cases envisaged in sections 132(4) and 133(3) of the Railways Act, 1989. It notes that these sections authorize such exceptions where they are considered necessary to avoid serious interference with the ordinary working of the railway or in cases of accident, actual or threatened, or when urgent work is required to be done, or in any emergency which could not have been foreseen or prevented, or in other cases of exceptional pressure of work.

The Committee observes that the Government has not replied to its previous comment concerning any consultations held with employers' and workers' organizations concerning the introduction of the permanent and temporary exceptions described above. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide fuller information on any consultations held with the organizations of employers and workers concerned prior to the adoption of the Railway Servants (Hours of Work and Period of Rest) Rules, 2005, as required by Article 6 of the Convention when permanent or temporary exceptions are made to the normal rules respecting hours of work.

Article 10. Special provisions applicable to India. As the clause set out in this Article was adopted prior to India's independence, and with reference to the Government's express desire to accept the principle of the 48-hour working week, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will consider favourably the possibility of making a declaration accepting the application of all of the provisions of the Convention. Such an initiative would be particularly desirable since the normal working week in factories and mines has already been set at 48 hours. It would be grateful if the Government would indicate its intentions in this regard.

Part IV of the report form. Court decisions. The Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the Government's report, the prosecutions against M/S Shital Traders are not related to failure to comply with the legal provisions relating to hours of work. With regard to the case against M/S Model Construction (P) Ltd, Goa, it notes the Government's indications that the case is in its final stages. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the court's ruling when it is handed down. The Government is also requested to provide, where appropriate, copies of other court decisions involving questions of principle relating to the application of the Convention. In this respect, the Committee notes that a number of seminars have been organized jointly by high courts and the International Labour Office on the theme of promoting social justice through international labour standards. It hopes that the development of this type of activity will facilitate the application of ILO standards, including Convention No. 1, by the national courts.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1965)

Article 6(2) of the Convention. Maximum limits on additional hours of work. The Committee has been commenting for a number of years on section 63(2)(b) of the Labour Code of 1987 which provides for the possibility of working up to four additional hours per day in preparatory and supplementary work in industry or in order to meet extraordinary work demands. Despite the Government's indications in its reports of 1992 and 1998 that legislative measures had been taken to determine an annual limit on the number of additional hours and that the relevant text would be supplied as soon as it was published, the Committee notes with regret that the new draft Labour Code of 2007, which is in the process of finalization and is currently examined by the State Consultative Council, maintains the same provision in identical terms (draft section 63.6(b)). As the Committee has pointed out in previous comments, the single reference to a daily limit of overtime – without determining the maximum number of hours of overtime which may be permitted in the year – might give rise to too many weekly, monthly or annual working hours which could be inconsistent with the spirit in which this Convention was drafted.

In this regard, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraph 144 of its 2005 General Survey on hours of work in which it noted that even though the establishment of specific limits to the total number of additional hours is left to the competent authorities, it does not consider that such authorities have unlimited discretion in this regard. Such limits must be reasonable and they must be prescribed in line with the general goal of Conventions Nos 1 and 30, namely to establish the eight-hour day and 48-hour week as a legal standard of hours of work in order to provide protection against undue fatigue and to ensure reasonable leisure and opportunities for recreation and social life. The Committee hopes that in the ongoing process of revising the Labour Code, the Government will take all necessary measures to establish, within reasonable limits, the maximum number of additional hours which may be allowed in the year in respect of permanent exceptions, in conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of all future developments in this regard and to transmit a copy of the new legislation once it has been adopted.

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1962)

Article 7, paragraph 3, of the Convention. Maximum limits on additional hours of work. The Committee has been commenting for a number of years on section 63(2)(c) of the Labour Code of 1987 which provides for the possibility of working up to four additional hours in a day in non-industrial activities. Despite the Government's indications in its reports of 1992 and 1998 that legislative measures had been taken to determine an annual limit on the number of additional hours and that the relevant text would be supplied as soon as it was published, the Committee notes with regret that the new draft Labour Code of 2007, which is in the process of finalization and is currently examined by the State Consultative Council, maintains the same provision in identical terms (draft section 63.6(c)). As the Committee has pointed out in previous comments, the single reference to a daily limit of overtime – without determining the maximum number of hours of overtime which may be permitted in the year – can imply weekly or annual working hours that are far too high and which could be contrary to the spirit of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraph 144 of its 2005 General Survey on hours of work in which it noted that even though the establishment of specific limits to the total number of additional hours is left to the competent authorities, this does not mean that such authorities have unlimited discretion in this regard. Such limits must be reasonable and they must be prescribed in line with the general goal of Conventions Nos 1 and 30, namely to establish the eight-hour day and 48-hour week as a legal standard of hours of work in order to provide protection against undue fatigue and to ensure reasonable leisure and opportunities for recreation and social life. The Committee hopes that in the ongoing process of revising the Labour Code, the Government will take all necessary measures to establish, within reasonable limits, the maximum number of additional hours which may be allowed in the year in respect of temporary exceptions, as required by this Article of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of all future developments in this regard and to transmit a copy of the new legislation once it has been adopted.

Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132) (ratification: 1974)

Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Scope of application – Employees in the public service. The Committee welcomes the fact that, after nine years of interruption, the Government is once again in a position to take up its dialogue with the Organization's supervisory bodies. It recalls that for 20 years it has been drawing the Government's attention to the amendments to be made to the provisions of Act No. 24 of 1960 respecting the public service which are contrary to Articles 9 (postponement and accumulation of part of the annual holiday) and 11 (proportional period of holiday with pay in the event of the termination of the employment relationship) of the Convention. The Committee once again recalls that the Convention applies to all employed persons, with the exception of seafarers, and therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures without further ado to bring Act No. 24 of 1960 respecting the public service, and particularly sections 43(3), 45(1), 48(10) and 49, into conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

Article 6, paragraph 1. Exclusion of public and customary holidays from being counted as part of the minimum annual holiday with pay. With reference to the Labour Code that is currently in force (Act No. 71 of 1987), the Committee recalls its previous comments in which it drew the Government's attention to the absence of a provision establishing that public and customary holidays shall not be counted as part of the annual holiday with pay. In this respect, the Committee understands that a draft new Labour Code is currently at an advanced stage of consultation and is being finalized. It notes that section 66(4) of the draft Labour Code of 2007, a copy of which was communicated to the Office, provides that public holidays that coincide with the worker's leave shall not be deducted from the annual holiday. The Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 6(1) of the Convention, public and customary holidays shall not be counted as part of the minimum annual holiday with pay. The Committee hopes that the Government will take its comments into account when examining possible amendments to the draft Labour Code and once again requests it to take the necessary measures in order to bring the existing Labour Code into conformity with the Convention.

Article 8, paragraph 2. Division of the annual holiday with pay. The Committee notes with interest that Act No. 17 of 2000 amends section 69 of the Labour Code, on which it had commented for several years. It notes that section 9 of the above Act provides that, where the annual holiday is divided, one of the parts shall consist of at least 14 uninterrupted days, in accordance with Article 8(2) of the Convention.

Article 9, paragraph 1. Time at which parts of the holiday are to be taken and postponement of the holiday. The Committee refers to its previous comments and notes that the Government has not reported any progress on this point. It recalls that the possibility for the worker to claim compensation in the event of the deferral of part of the holiday under the conditions set out in section 73(3) of the Labour Code is contrary to this provision of the Convention. However, it notes that section 69(2) of the draft Labour Code of 2007, referred to above, would give effect to this provision. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will take its comments into account when examining any amendments to the draft Labour Code and once again requests it to take the necessary measures in order to bring the existing Labour Code into conformity with the Convention. The Committee further requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments relating to the adoption of the draft Labour Code.

Jordan

Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106) (ratification: 1979)

Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention. Accumulation of weekly rest – Special weekly rest schemes. The Committee has been commenting for many years on section 60(2) of the Labour Code of 1996 which permits the accumulation of weekly rest days for a period of up to one month. While fully understanding the intention to provide workers employed at distant or isolated sites with an opportunity to be with their families less often but for longer periods, as explained by the Government in earlier reports, the Committee has drawn attention to the fact that, as it currently reads, the Labour Code does not limit the accumulation or deferral of weekly rest only to workers employed in distant or isolated regions and is therefore possibly open to abuse. The Committee has further drawn attention to Article 7 of the Convention which precisely offers the possibility under certain well-circumscribed conditions of establishing special weekly rest schemes where the nature of the work, the size of the population to be served or the number of persons employed is such that the normal weekly rest scheme cannot be applied. The Committee notes with regret that in its last report the Government gives no indication of any progress made in this regard and confines itself to reiterating that the national legislation is in conformity with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee is therefore obliged once again to ask the Government to take all necessary action in order to amend section 60(2) of the Labour Code, with a view to specifying the conditions under which, and the limits within which, the accumulation or postponing of weekly rest days may be authorized, and possibly limiting to three weeks the period over which workers covered by such special weekly rest scheme may accumulate weekly rest days, as indicated in Paragraph 3(a) of the Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Recommendation, 1957 (No. 103).

Articles 7, paragraph 2, and 8, paragraph 3. Permanent and temporary exemptions – Compensatory rest. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to section 59(2) of the Labour Code which is not in conformity with the Convention since it provides for cash compensation and not compensatory rest as prescribed by Articles 7(2) and 8(3) of the Convention. The Committee recalls once more that the Convention requires compensatory rest of a total duration at least equivalent to 24 hours in all cases where a worker performs work on the day of weekly rest, irrespective of any higher remuneration paid on this occasion and even if the work has been carried out with the worker's consent. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take without further delay all appropriate steps in order to bring section 59(2) of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Kenya

Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132) (ratification: 1979)

Articles 5, 6, 7, 10 and 12 of the Convention. Scope and conditions of annual leave entitlement. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention – practically since the ratification of the Convention – to the need to effect certain amendments to the national legislation in order to ensure full compliance with the requirements of the Convention. The Government has, on numerous occasions, admitted that appropriate legislative measures are necessary and recently indicated that the revision process of the Employment Act (Cap. 226) has given the opportunity to address the concerns raised by the Committee. However, the Committee notes that the new Employment Act 2007 fails to introduce the necessary amendments with the sole exception of section 28(2)–(4), which regulates the possibility of dividing the annual paid leave into parts and guarantees uninterrupted holiday of two weeks, as prescribed by Article 8(2) of the Convention. The Committee is, therefore, once again obliged to observe that several additional provisions would be needed before legislative conformity with the Convention could be attained, in particular regarding the following points: justified absence from work to be counted as part of the qualifying period of service (Article 5(4)); public holidays and periods of incapacity due to sickness or injury not to be counted as part of minimum annual holiday (Article 6); payment of holiday pay in advance (Article 7(2)); considerations to be taken into account when fixing the timing of holidays (Article 10); prohibition of agreements to relinquish the right to annual holiday or forego such holiday for compensation (Article 12). In addition, the Committee draws the Government's attention to section 28(1)(a) of the new Employment Act which requires twelve months of service for entitlement to any holiday with pay, and therefore is inconsistent with Article 5(2) of the Convention which limits the length of any qualifying period to six months. The Committee hopes that the Government will take active steps without further delay in order to bring its legislation into line with the requirements of the Convention. It also hopes that the Government will not hesitate to avail itself of any technical assistance or advice the Office might be able to offer in the preparation of the necessary amendments to legislation.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Kuwait

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is making every possible effort to adopt the new Labour Code currently being examined within the Majlis El-Ummah (legislative authority), which has already considered several parts of the draft. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to provide concrete information concerning the finalization of this text, which has been at the draft stage since 1994, and requests it to provide a copy of the new legislative text as soon as it has been adopted.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. Further to its previous observations concerning the categories of workers not covered by the provisions of the Labour Code, such as casual workers engaged in seasonal work not exceeding six months and the owners of small non-mechanical enterprises employing fewer than five workers, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information concerning compliance with the provisions of the Convention in respect of those persons, as well as a copy of the legislative texts applicable to them.

Article 6, paragraphs 1(b) and 2. Temporary exceptions – Public sector. Further to its numerous comments relating to sections 3 and 4 of Ministerial Order No. 34/77 concerning overtime in the public sector, the Committee notes that no progress has been made with regard to the determination of the maximum number of additional hours which may be authorized in the case of temporary exceptions to the hours of work in the public industrial sector, as well as the conditions in which these additional hours are authorized. The Committee is bound to recall once again that Article 2 of the Convention stipulates that the provisions of the Convention are applicable to undertakings in both the public and private sectors and requests the Government to take the appropriate measures to adopt regulations similar to Order No. 104/94 applicable to public sector undertakings. Finally, the Committee notes the request for technical assistance made by the Government and invites it to contact the ILO office in Beirut to draw up an action plan and a timetable for the technical assistance requested.

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments under the Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1).

Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106) (ratification: 1961)

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee notes with satisfaction the amendment of section 2 of the Labour Code of 1964 for the private sector so as to extend its coverage to temporary workers employed for a period of not more than six months and workers at enterprises employing less than five persons, which also constitutes a positive follow-up to the points raised by the Committee on this point for several years. The Committee also notes the Government's explanations concerning the categories of workers who are currently excluded from the application of the Labour Code, such as seafarers and workers in the oil industry, since they are covered by specific legislation. In this connection, the Committee notes the Government's reference to consolidated labour contracts recently prepared for domestic workers. The Committee would appreciate if the Government would provide additional information on the rules applicable to domestic workers with relation to weekly rest and also transmit copies of the consolidated labour contracts applicable to them.

Article 11. List of exceptions. The Committee requests the Government to provide a list of all authorized exemptions (permanent or temporary) to the normal weekly rest scheme set out in section 35 of the Labour Code which gives rise to compensatory rest pursuant to section 1 of Ministerial Order No. 54 of 1982 on weekly rest.

Finally, the Committee takes this opportunity to recall that, based on the conclusions and proposals of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards, the ILO Governing Body has decided that the ratification of up to date Conventions, including the Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14), and the Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106), should be encouraged because these instruments continue to respond to current needs (see GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 17–18). Noting that the national legislation giving effect to this Convention applies to all sectors and to all branches of economic activity without distinction, the Committee accordingly invites the Government to contemplate ratifying Convention No. 14 and to keep the Office informed of any decision taken or envisaged in this respect.

Kyrgyzstan

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1992)

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to weekly rest. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received for the tenth consecutive year. It hopes that a report will be supplied for the examination of the Committee at its next session and that it will contain detailed information on the application of all the provisions of the Convention, in particular as regards the conditions for granting compensatory rest, which the Committee has also raised in its comments under the Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106).

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1971)

Article 6, paragraph 2. Maximum limits on additional hours of work. The Committee has been commenting for more than 25 years on section 87 of the Labour Code which permits a worker to be employed for four additional hours per day without setting any weekly, monthly or annual limit. The Committee has been pointing out that this provision goes far beyond the exceptions provided for in the Convention, i.e. permanent or temporary exceptions to the general standard of eight hours in the day and 48 hours in the week which are permissible only in the following cases: (a) for preparatory or complementary work, which must be carried on outside the limits laid down for the general working of an establishment, or for certain categories of workers whose work is essentially intermittent; and (b) so that undertakings may deal with exceptional cases of pressure of work.

The Committee has also been recalling that the Convention requires payment of all overtime at not less than one and one-quarter times the regular rate. In its last report, the Government maintains that workers who agree to work hours in excess of the prescribed amount are not entitled to overtime pay in order not to be tempted by financial gain and adds that the four additional hours of daily work were introduced in the early 1970s because of the first social and economic development plan of the 1969 Fateh Revolution which had a strong focus on infrastructure and housing construction. Moreover, contrary to reassurances given in earlier reports that legislative amendments were under preparation with a view to bringing the Labour Code into full conformity with the Convention, the Government in its last two reports no longer makes any reference to the process of revision of the general labour legislation.

In this regard, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraph 144 of its 2005 General Survey on hours of work in which it noted that even though the establishment of specific limits to the total number of additional hours is left to the competent authorities, this does not mean that such authorities have unlimited discretion in this regard. Such limits must be reasonable and they must be prescribed in line with the general goal of Conventions Nos 1 and 30, which is to establish the eight-hour day and 48-hour week as a legal standard of hours of work in order to provide protection against undue fatigue and to ensure reasonable leisure and opportunities for recreation and social life. The Committee asks the Government to take without further delay all necessary measures in order to amend section 87 of the Labour Code so as to (i) ensure that overtime is only allowed in the cases provided for in the Convention, (ii) establish, within reasonable limits, the maximum number of hours of overtime work which may be allowed in the year, and (iii) ensure that overtime work performed in either the public or the private sector in the case of temporary exceptions, is paid at least at the higher rate prescribed by Article 6(2) of the Convention.

Holidays with Pay Convention, 1936 (No. 52) (ratification: 1962)

Article 2, paragraph 3(b) of the Convention. Period of sickness not to be counted in annual leave. The Committee notes the Government's reply that section 38 of the Labour Code provides expressly that a period during which the capacity of the worker is affected by sickness or by injury must not be included in his/her holiday with pay, and that in practice, the worker submits to his/her employer a certificate of leave prepared by his/her physician, hospital or sanatorium. The Committee recalls in this connection its previous comments and the Government's replies referring to the forthcoming adoption of a legislative reform which, in particular, would include explicitly in the Labour Code the exclusion of a period of sickness from annual leave. Based on the Government's last report, the Committee understands that no progress has been made in this regard. Accordingly, the Committee reiterates its hope that the reform will be concluded shortly to give full effect to this Article of the Convention, and requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any new developments on this matter.

Finally, while noting the Government's statement that it will consider in the light of the legislation in force the ratification of the Holiday with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132), the Committee wishes to observe that the ratification of Convention No. 132 would be all the more appropriate as the legislation of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya – which provides for 30 days of annual leave, and even 45 days for those aged at least 50 or with 20 years of service – appears to be in substantial conformity with the requirements of that Convention.

Malaysia

Sarawak

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1964)

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Labour Ordinance Sarawak (Cap. 76), on which the Committee has been formulating comments since 1967, was amended by the Labour Ordinance (Sarawak Cap. 76) (Amendment) 2005 (Act A1237) and that the possibility of contracting out of the right to weekly rest, which was allowed under former section 105 of the Labour Ordinance Sarawak, has now been removed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mauritius

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1969)

Article 2 of the Convention. Workers' right to weekly rest. The Committee notes the comments made by the Confederation of Private Sector Workers (CTSP) according to which following the entry into force of the Employment Rights Act 2008, all workers of the private sector are compelled to work on two Sundays in a period of one month. The CTSP indicates that since Sunday is considered as a public holiday and as such any work performed on a Sunday should be remunerated at double the regular rate, it is now an obligation for the workers of the private sector to perform overtime by working on two Sundays in a month.

In its reply, the Government refutes as unfounded the argument of the CTSP that overtime in the form of Sunday work has become compulsory. It indicates that section 14(5) of the Employment Rights Act, which specifies that every worker is entitled to a rest day of at least 24 consecutive hours in every period of seven consecutive days, and that the rest day must at least twice a month be a Sunday, or any other day agreed upon between the worker and the employer, is consistent with Article 2(3) of the Convention which requires that the weekly rest, wherever possible, be fixed so as to coincide with the days already established by tradition or custom. The Government adds that the introduction of some form of flexibility as regards the rest period was meant to cater for an increasing number of enterprises which by nature of their operational requirements need to work on a seven day basis.

While noting the Government's explanations, the Committee is bound to observe that contrary to the Government's declared intention, section 14(5) of the Employment Rights Act does not merely introduce another exception designed to respond to the needs of the specified types of industrial undertakings such as those for instance that for technical reasons must operate continuously if they are to maintain their efficiency, but introduces a permanent exemption of general application so that in reality the basic standard of Sunday weekly rest is for all practical purposes removed from the national legislation. The Committee wishes to recall that the Convention is articulated around three basic principles, i.e. continuity (a period of weekly rest comprising at least 24 consecutive hours), regularity (weekly rest to be enjoyed in every period of seven days), and uniformity (weekly rest to be granted, wherever possible, simultaneously to all the persons concerned and to coincide, wherever possible, with the traditional day of rest). Noting that section 14(5) of the Employment Rights Act 2008 does not fully reflect these principles, the Committee hopes that the Government will re-examine on the next suitable occasion, the relevant provisions of the Employment Rights Act with a view to bringing them into line with the letter and the spirit of the Convention, in full consultation with the representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned.

Netherlands

Part-Time Work Convention, 1994 (No. 175) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Exclusion of part-time domestic workers. The Committee notes the explanations provided by the Government concerning the process of consultations that preceded the amendment of the regulation on service provision in the home. Following the amendment, employees who usually perform exclusively or virtually exclusively household services less than four days per week – as opposed to three days per week previously – for the natural person by whom they are employed, are excluded from the scope of the Convention. In this connection, the Committee notes the observations made by the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV), the Trade Union Federation of Middle and Higher Level Employees Unions (MHP) and the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV), according to which the Government's report does not accurately capture the essence of the consultations as it does not refer to the fact that the social partners opposed the proposed amendment and that employers' and workers' organizations jointly submitted an alternative proposal to the Council for Work and income (RWI). The Committee requests the Government to explain the reasons for broadening the exclusion of part-time domestic workers, and describe the particular problems of a substantial nature that the application of the Convention to this category of workers would have raised, as required under this Article of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of the CNV, the MHP and the FNV.

Article 9, paragraph 2(c). Access to part-time work for specific groups. The Committee notes the comments of the MHP which criticizes the Government's current policy not to encourage part-time work. According to the MHP, people who are severely disengaged from the labour market must be gradually directed towards paid work and part-time work can be an excellent part of this strategy and would be even necessary to persuade those who are currently not working and are only prepared to do part-time work to actually take a paid job. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of the MHP.

New Zealand

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1938)

Article 2 of the Convention. Workers' right to weekly rest. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the Government's explanations that, under the Health and Safety in Employment Act 1992, as amended, employers have a duty to prevent harm occurring to employees while at work, including the effects arising from excessive work hours or insufficient rest periods, even where hours of work and weekly rest periods are not explicitly regulated. The Government states that, in the absence of prescriptive legislation, New Zealand's approach to occupational safety and health is a comprehensive, principles-based and performance-based framework which recognizes the diversity and complexity of modern workplaces and work. The Government adds that the Health and Safety in Employment Act is a comprehensive and integrated code which sets out general duties that can be supplemented by regulations, approved codes of practice and guidelines. This framework guarantees that there are strong inducements in place to ensure that workers receive a weekly rest period while employers are required to take all practicable steps to guarantee the safety of employees while at work.

In addition, the Committee notes the comments made by Business New Zealand (BNZ) according to which daily rest periods are specified in collective or individual employment agreements while the requirement for at least 24 hours of weekly rest is implicit in the obligation to specify hours of work. According to the BNZ, these protective standards are likely to prove far more effective than the provision of a statutory 24-hour weekly rest period, which might be more honoured in the breach than the observance.

While taking due note of these explanations, the Committee feels obliged to observe that the provisions of the Health and Safety in Employment Act in relation to weekly rest are general and overly permissive and therefore fail to give effect to specific requirements of the Convention. The Committee wishes to recall that the scope and purpose of Article 2 of the Convention are clear; workers must be granted an uninterrupted weekly rest period comprising not less than 24 hours in the course of each period of seven days, and this rest period should, to the extent possible, be the same for all and should coincide with the day already designated by tradition or custom as day of weekly rest. The Convention is thus articulated around three basic principles: regularity (rest to be taken at seven-day intervals); continuity (rest of at least 24 consecutive hours); and uniformity (weekly break to be taken simultaneously by all workers). These are minimum standards, which governments are bound to apply and enforce, either through national laws or regulations, or by ensuring that collective agreements contain at least as favourable provisions. The Convention permits, of course, total or partial exceptions (including suspensions or diminutions) from the general weekly rest standard set out in Article 2, especially when the inherent need to keep certain establishments in operation (e.g. continuous processes, transport, hospitals, hotels, newspapers, etc.) or exceptional conditions (e.g. accidents, force majeure or urgent work to premises or equipment) so require. It seeks to guarantee, however, that total or partial exceptions to the normal weekly rest are authorized on as limited grounds as possible, and in any case only after due consideration having been given to all social and economic implications and needs.

The Committee considers that the workers' right to a minimum period of weekly rest and leisure as prescribed by the Convention is of such cardinal importance for their health and well-being that needs to be regulated in a well-circumscribed and thus binding form and cannot be left to the mere persuasion power of codes of practice and guidelines. As for BNZ's comment referring to the Committee's apparent inability to recognize that this is a Convention dating from 1921 and that overall industrial relations protections have moved markedly since then, the Committee recalls that the principles and objectives pursued by Convention No. 14 have been reaffirmed and strengthened by another ILO Convention (No. 106) concerning weekly rest in commerce and offices, which was adopted in 1957 and which has received to date 63 ratifications. In the light of the preceding observations, the Committee hopes that the Government will take all necessary steps in order to bring its legislation into conformity with the basic requirements of the Convention by giving specific legislative expression to the workers' entitlement to 24 consecutive hours of rest every week.

Moreover, the Committee notes the comments made by the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) concerning the problem of driver fatigue in the road transport sector principally due to existing legislation that allows up to 70 hours of work per week. The NZCTU acknowledges that government agencies work to address the issue, for instance, by developing a strategy to combat the issue of driver fatigue, announced in December 2007, but indicates that cumulative tiredness and stress from excessively long hours may not be resolved by short breaks. The Committee would appreciate receiving any comments the Government may wish to make in response to the observations of the NZCTU.

Finally, the Committee takes this opportunity to recall that, based on the conclusions and proposals of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards, the ILO Governing Body has decided that the ratification of up to date Conventions, including the Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14), and the Weekly Rest (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1957 (No. 106), should be encouraged because these instruments continue to respond to current needs (see GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 17–18). The Committee accordingly invites the Government to contemplate ratifying Convention No. 106 and to keep the Office informed of any decisions taken or envisaged in this respect.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2010.]

Forty-Hour Week Convention, 1935 (No. 47) (ratification: 1938)

Article 1 of the Convention. Forty-hour week. The Committee notes that, in its observations on the application of the Convention, Business New Zealand (BNZ) confirmed the information contained in the Government's report with regard to respect for the principle of the 40-hour week, as well as the validity of the statistical methods used. The organization concerned also noted, based on the statistics provided by the Government, that the number of employees working long hours has fallen substantially since 2001.

The Committee also notes the observations made by the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU), in which it repeats its comments made in 2003 concerning the discrepancy between the principle of the 40-hour week established in New Zealand and the reality that a significant proportion of employees regularly work more than 40 hours per week. The NZCTU recalls that section 11B of the Minimum Wage Act 1983, which provides that the hours of work shall not normally exceed 40 hours per week, excluding overtime, also provides that the parties may agree to set the working week at more than 40 hours. It emphasizes that this provision does not prevent employers from setting a working week of more than 40 hours as a condition of accepting a job. The NZCTU also mentions the issue of workload which causes employees to work unpaid overtime and the issue of low wages which oblige them to maintain two jobs at the same time. Furthermore, the NZCTU mentions a study carried out by the Victoria University of Wellington, according to which 33 per cent of collective agreements in the mining sector provide for a working week of more than 40 hours, while no hours of work are set in 64 per cent of collective agreements in the agricultural sector, in 64 per cent of agreements in the education sector, and in 75 per cent of agreements in the food retail sector. According to the NZCTU, since 2000, around 40 per cent of employees have been working Monday to Sunday, in particular those employed in agriculture, retail and hospitality, as well as some service sector employees. With regard to the public sector, the NZCTU refers to the Career Progression and Development Survey carried out in 2005 by the State Services Commission, according to which 68 per cent of public servants surveyed indicated that their actual hours of work were higher than the number of hours provided for in their employment contract, although this rate has dropped since 2000, when it stood at 76 per cent. The NZCTU welcomes a number of positive developments, in particular its collaboration with the Government on several initiatives, such as the "work-life balance" project and the adoption of the Act on flexible working arrangements with a view to easing the financial pressure pushing some employees to work long hours and sometimes maintain two jobs to meet their essential needs. However, the NZCTU maintains that there is still considerable work to be done before the principle of the 40-hour week becomes a reality for all workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in reply to the observations of the NZCTU.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Norway

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1953)

Article 8 of the Convention. Consultations with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not reply to earlier observations made by the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO) alleging lack of consultations with the social partners prior to the adoption of the new regulations on overtime. It therefore again requests the Government to specify whether the provisions of the new Working Environment Act (WEA) of 2005 on overtime regulations have been the subject of full and genuine tripartite consultations. It also requests the Government to discuss in the future with employers' and workers' organizations any problems arising out of Chapter 10 of the WEA on working hours and take the steps which may appear necessary to this end.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Panama

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1959)

Article 7, paragraphs 2 and 3, of the Convention. Temporary exceptions – annual limit to the number of additional hours. The Committee notes with regret that, in reply to its previous comments, the Government merely indicates once again that it is currently unable to amend section 36(4) of the Labour Code in order to bring it into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. It notes that the Government refers, as an additional argument, to the elections which took place in the country in May 2009 in order to justify a further postponement of the adoption of the necessary measures in this area. The Committee reiterates that, although social dialogue is of course essential and the ideal is to find solutions on which a tripartite consensus has been reached, the Government bears the ultimate responsibility for the fulfilment of its international obligations, including the implementation of the ILO Conventions ratified by Panama. The Committee therefore urges the Government to amend section 36(4) of the Labour Code in order to fix a reasonable annual limit to the number of additional hours authorized in the context of temporary exceptions and thereby bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention on this point.

Furthermore, in reply to a point raised by the Committee concerning daily and annual limits on overtime applicable in the public sector, the Government refers to Executive Decree No. 222 of 12 September 1997 implementing Act No. 9 of 20 June 1994 regulating the administrative career service, which authorizes under the sole condition of obtaining the authorization of the responsible chief, the accumulation of 40 additional hours per month and 25 per cent of legal daily working time. However, Article 7(2) of the Convention only authorizes temporary exceptions to the normal limits on hours of work in a number of specific cases and in cases of abnormal pressure of work due to special circumstances, in so far as the employer cannot ordinarily be expected to resort to other measures. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to limit, in conformity with the Convention, the cases in which public service employees are authorized to work additional hours.

In addition, Article 7(3) of the Convention prescribes the setting of an annual limit on the number of additional hours authorized. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps in order to introduce such a limit and to keep the Office informed of developments in this area.

Finally, the Committee notes that, under the terms of section 122 of Executive Decree No. 222 of 12 September 1997, additional hours are paid only on condition that they have been previously authorized by the responsible chief. It notes that section 217 of Act No. 51 of 11 December 2007 fixing the general State budget for 2008 reaffirms this limitation concerning the remuneration of additional hours and states that the latter may not exceed 50 per cent of the normal monthly salary of the official concerned. The Committee emphasizes that, except for cases of accident and force majeure, additional hours must be paid at not less than one and a quarter times the regular rate, regardless of whether any compensatory rest is granted. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the rates of pay applicable in cases of additional hours of work in the public service.

Peru

Hours of Work and Rest Periods (Road Transport) Convention, 1939 (No. 67) (ratification: 1962)

Article 3 of the Convention. Owners of vehicles. The Committee notes the legislative amendments which have occurred in the field of transport, particularly the abrogation of Supreme Decree No. 005-95-MTC and Supreme Decree No. 040-2001-MTC, which have been replaced by Supreme Decree No. 009-2004-MTC issuing national regulations for transport administration. Further to its previous comments concerning the legislation applicable to owners of vehicles and members of their families, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there is no specific legislation in this field. Recalling that the exclusion of owners of vehicles and the members of their families from the application of the provisions of the Convention is subject to precise conditions, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated to ensure the protection in law and in practice of owners of vehicles and the members of their families with regard to hours of work. Moreover, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has never replied to the comments from the Single Union of Public Service Drivers in Lima alleging that workers employed in road transport work more than 16 hours a day, whether as owners of their vehicles or as employees of a transport company.

Article 7. Daily hours of work. Further to its previous comments regarding the provisions of Supreme Decree No. 005-95-MTC, which has now been repealed, the Committee notes section 121 of Supreme Decree No. 009-2004-MTC, which states that drivers of vehicles in the transport service may not drive for more than five consecutive hours during the day or four consecutive hours at night. It also notes that section 121(3) of the same Decree imposes a daily limit of 12 hours of work in each 24-hour period. The Committee reminds the Government that daily hours of work can only be extended under certain conditions, namely: (i) where the hours of work on one or more days of the week are less than eight and by no more than one hour per day (Article 7(2)); (ii) in respect of persons whose weekly hours of work do not exceed 48 in any week, or whose hours of work average 48 (Article 7(3)(a)); (iii) in respect of persons who ordinarily do a considerable amount of subsidiary work or whose work is frequently interrupted by periods of mere attendance (Article 7(3)(b)); (iv) in cases where lost time is made up (Article 9); (v) in cases where there is a shortage of skilled labour (Article 10); (vi) in the event of accident or other urgent necessity (Article 11); (vii) in cases of indispensable work in order to meet exceptional requirements in respect of the transport of passengers between hotel and station and also transport affected by funeral undertakings (Article 12); and (viii) in cases of overtime work (Article 13). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken or contemplated in order to bring its legislation into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention on this point.

Article 15. Daily rest. The Committee notes the reference made by the Government to section 122(u) of Decree No. 009-2004-MTC, which requires the presence of two drivers for long journeys, thereby limiting the hours of driving. The Committee emphasizes that this provision does not in itself give effect to Article 15 of the Convention, which states that a rest period of at least 12 consecutive hours shall be granted in every 24-hour period. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate the steps taken or contemplated in order to bring its legislation into conformity with this provision of the Convention.

Article 16, paragraph 1. Weekly rest. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government does not supply any new information concerning the legislative provisions granting workers in both the private and public sectors a weekly rest period of at least 30 consecutive hours for each seven-day period. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to ensure that drivers are granted the weekly rest period prescribed by this provision of the Convention.

Article 18, paragraph 3. Individual control book. The Committee notes section 6 of Directive No. 6653-2006-MTC/15, which states that a book shall be used by the driver to record information in respect of each journey relating to the route, start and finish times of the journey and also rest periods. It also notes that the use of this book is only prescribed for drivers in the inter-provincial passenger transport service. Moreover, section 120 of Supreme Decree No. 009-2004-MTC, which provides for the use of a journey log containing information on hours of driving and rest periods, only applies to drivers in the regular inter-provincial passenger transport service. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the legislative provisions prescribing the keeping of an individual control book for workers not covered by the provisions of Directive No. 6653-2006-MTC/15 and Supreme Decree No. 009-2004-MTC.

Finally, the Committee again recalls the decision of the ILO Governing Body, which considered that Convention No. 67 is outdated and invited the States parties to this Convention to contemplate the possibility of ratifying the Hours of Work and Rest Periods (Road Transport) Convention, 1979 (No. 153) (see GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraph 12). The ratification of Convention No. 153 by a State party to Convention No. 67 entails ipso jure the immediate denunciation of the latter. The Committee recalls that only three countries now remain bound by this Convention and encourages the Government to contemplate the possibility of ratifying the Hours of Work and Rest Periods (Road Transport) Convention, 1979 (No. 153). The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision taken or contemplated in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sierra Leone

Holidays with Pay (Agriculture) Convention, 1952 (No. 101) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 8 of the Convention. Right to annual holidays with pay. The Committee notes the statement in the Government's last report that section 63(6) of the Draft Employment Act would provide that any agreement to relinquish the right to minimum annual holiday would be null and void. The Committee hopes that the Act will be adopted in the near future, bringing section 12(a) of Government Notice No. 888, which it has repeatedly highlighted as being in need of amendment, into conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the full text of the revised legislation as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee also takes this opportunity to recall that, on proposal of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards, the ILO Governing Body has decided that Convention No. 101 is outdated and has invited States parties to that Convention to contemplate ratifying the Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132), which is not deemed to be fully up to date but remains relevant in certain respects (see GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraph 12). Acceptance of the obligations of Convention No. 132 in respect of persons employed in agriculture by a State party to Convention No. 101 involves the immediate denunciation of the latter. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision it may take in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132) (ratification: 1991)

Articles 3 and 12 of the Convention. Length of annual holidays and prohibition of agreements to relinquish or forego the right to annual paid leave. The Committee notes the observations of the Federation of Trade Unions of Macedonia (CCM), which were dated 2 October 2008 and transmitted to the Government on 11 November 2008. The CCM alleges that Decree No. 07-3614/1 of 26 August 2008 modifying and supplementing the Labour Relations Law of 1995, which entered into effect on 4 September 2008, was adopted without any consultations and contravenes several ratified ILO Conventions including the Convention on annual holidays with pay. More concretely, the CCM indicates that, following the amendment of the Labour Relations Law, the annual leave entitlement was lowered from 26 to 20 days and, most importantly, employers have been given the right to dispense with workers' right to annual leave and replace it with minimal cash compensation. To date, the Government has not communicated any reply to the matters raised by the CCM.

The Committee requests the Government to provide any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of the CCM.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.
