First edition 2012

The publication of information concerning action taken in respect of international labour Conventions and Recommendations does not imply any expression of view by the International Labour Office on the legal status of the State having communicated such information (including the communication of a ratification or declaration), or on its authority over the areas or territories in respect of which such information is communicated; in certain cases this may present problems on which the ILO is not competent to express an opinion.

ILO publications can be obtained through major booksellers or ILO local offices in many countries, or direct from ILO Publications, International Labour Office, CH-1211 Geneva 22, Switzerland. A catalogue or list of new publications will be sent free of charge from the above address, or by email: pubvente@ilo.org.

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO member States. The annual report of the Committee of Experts covers numerous matters related to the application of ILO standards. The structure of the report, as modified in 2003, is divided into the following parts:

- (a) The Reader's note provides indications on the Committee of Experts and the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (their mandate, functioning and the institutional context in which they operate) (Part 1A, pages 1–4).
- (b) Part I: the General Report describes the manner in which the Committee of Experts undertakes its work and the extent to which member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards, and it draws the attention to issues of general interest arising out of the Committee's work (Part 1A, pages 5–41).
- (c) Part II: Observations concerning particular countries cover the sending of reports, the application of ratified Conventions (see section I), and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities (see section II) (Part 1A, pages 43–976).
- (d) Part III: General Survey, in which the Committee of Experts examines the state of the legislation and practice regarding a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations. This examination covers all member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the given Conventions. The General Survey is published as a separate volume (Report III (Part 1B)) and this year it concerns fundamental Conventions in light of the Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008 (Part 1B).

Finally, the Information document on ratifications and standards-related activities is prepared by the Office and supplements the information contained in the report of the Committee of Experts. This document primarily provides an overview of recent developments relating to international labour standards, the implementation of special supervisory procedures and technical cooperation in relation to international labour standards. It contains, in tabular form, information on the ratification of Conventions and Protocols, and “country profiles” (Part 2).

The report of the Committee of Experts is also available at: www.ilo.org/global/standards/lang--en/index.htm.

Overview of the ILO supervisory mechanisms

Since its creation in 1919, the mandate of the International Labour Organization (ILO) has included adopting international labour standards, promoting their ratification and application in its member States and the supervision of their application as a fundamental means of achieving its objectives. In order to monitor the progress of member States in the application of international labour standards, the ILO has developed supervisory mechanisms which are unique at the international level.¹

Under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, a number of obligations arise for member States upon the adoption of international labour standards, including the requirement to submit newly adopted standards to national competent authorities and the obligation to report at intervals on the measures taken to give effect to the provisions of unratified Conventions and Recommendations.

A number of supervisory mechanisms exist whereby the Organization examines the standards-related obligations of member States deriving from ratified Conventions. This supervision occurs both in the context of a regular procedure through annual reports (article 22 of the ILO Constitution),² as well as through special procedures based on complaints or representations to the Governing Body made by ILO constituents (articles 24 and 26 of the Constitution). Moreover, since 1950, a special procedure has existed whereby complaints relating to freedom of association are referred to the Committee on Freedom of Association of the Governing Body. The Committee on Freedom of Association may also examine complaints relating to member States that have not ratified the relevant freedom of association Conventions.

Role of employers' and workers' organizations

As a natural consequence of its tripartite structure, the ILO was the first international organization to associate the social partners directly in its activities. The participation of employers' and workers' organizations in the supervisory mechanism is recognized in the Constitution under article 23, paragraph 2, which provides that reports and information submitted by governments in accordance with articles 19 and 22 must be communicated to the representative organizations.

In practice, representative employers' and workers' organizations may submit to their governments comments on the reports concerning the implementation of ratified Conventions. They may, for instance, draw attention to a discrepancy in law or practice regarding a Convention and thus lead the Committee of Experts to request further information from the government. Furthermore, any employers' or workers' organization may submit comments on the application of Conventions directly to the Office. The Office will then forward these comments to the government concerned, which will have an opportunity to respond before the comments are examined by the Committee of Experts.

² Reports are requested every two years for the so-called fundamental Conventions and priority Conventions, and every five years for other Conventions. Reports have been due for groups of Conventions according to subject matter.

Origins of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

During the early years of the ILO, both the adoption of international labour standards and the regular supervisory work were undertaken within the framework of the plenary sitting of the annual International Labour Conference. However, the considerable increase in the number of ratifications of Conventions rapidly led to a similarly significant increase in the number of annual reports submitted. It soon became clear that the plenary of the Conference would not be able to examine all of these reports at the same time as adopting standards and discussing other important matters. In response, the Conference in 1926 adopted a resolution³ establishing on an annual basis a Conference Committee (subsequently named the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards) and requesting the Governing Body to appoint a technical committee (subsequently named the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations) which would be responsible for drawing up a report for the Conference. These two committees have become the two pillars of the ILO supervisory system.

Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

Composition

The Committee of Experts is composed of 20 members,⁴ who are outstanding legal experts at the national and international levels. The members of the Committee are appointed by the Governing Body upon the proposal of the Director-General. Appointments are made in a personal capacity from among completely impartial persons of competence and independent standing drawn from all regions of the world, in order to enable the Committee to have at its disposal first-hand experience of different legal, economic and social systems. The appointments are made for renewable periods of three years. In 2002, the Committee decided that there would be a limit of 15 years' service for all members, representing a maximum of four renewals after the first three-year appointment. At its 79th Session (November–December 2008), the Committee decided that its Chairperson would be elected for a period of three years, which would be renewable once for a further three years. At the start of each session, the Committee would also elect a Reporter.

Mandate

The Committee of Experts meets annually in November–December. In accordance with the mandate given by the Governing Body,⁵ the Committee is called upon to examine the following:

- the annual reports under article 22 of the Constitution on the measures taken by member States to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which they are parties;
- the information and reports concerning Conventions and Recommendations communicated by member States in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution;
- information and reports on the measures taken by member States in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution.⁶

The task of the Committee of Experts is to indicate the extent to which each member State's legislation and practice are in conformity with ratified Conventions and the extent to which member States have fulfilled their obligations under the ILO Constitution in relation to standards. In carrying out this task, the Committee adheres to its principles of independence, objectivity and impartiality.⁷

The comments of the Committee of Experts on the fulfilment by member States of their standards-related obligations take the form of either observations or direct requests. Observations contain comments on fundamental questions raised by the application of a particular Convention by a member State. These observations are reproduced in the annual report

³ Appendix VII, Record of Proceedings of the Eighth Session of the International Labour Conference, 1926, Vol. 1.

⁴ There are currently 17 experts appointed.

⁵ Terms of reference of the Committee of Experts, Minutes of the 103rd Session of the Governing Body (1947), Appendix XII, para. 37.

⁶ Article 35 covers the application of Conventions to non-metropolitan territories.

⁷ In its 1987 report, the Committee stated that in its evaluation of national law and practice in relation to the requirements of international labour Conventions: "... its function is to determine whether the requirements of a given Convention are being met, whatever the economic and social conditions existing in a given country. Subject only to any derogations, which are expressly permitted by the Convention itself, these requirements remain constant and uniform for all countries. In carrying out this work, the Committee is guided by the standards laid down in the Convention alone, mindful, however, of the fact that the modes of their implementation may be different in different States". Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, Report III (Part 4A), International Labour Conference, 73rd Session, 1987, para. 24.

of the Committee of Experts, which is then submitted to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June every year. Direct requests usually relate to questions of a more technical nature or of lesser importance. They are not published in the report of the Committee of Experts, but are communicated directly to the government concerned.⁸ In addition, the Committee of Experts examines, in the context of the General Survey, the state of the legislation and practice concerning a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations chosen by the Governing Body. The General Survey is based on the reports submitted in accordance with articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution, and it covers all member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the concerned Conventions. This year's General Survey covers fundamental Conventions. Pursuant to the decision taken by the Governing Body at its 307 Session (March 2010), the subjects of General Surveys have been aligned with the four strategic objectives of the ILO as set out in the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008 (the Social Justice Declaration).⁹

Report of the Committee of Experts

As a result of its work, the Committee produces an annual report. The report consists of two volumes. The first volume (Report III 1A)¹⁰ is divided into two parts:

- Part I: the General Report describes, on the one hand, the progress of the work of the Committee of Experts and specific matters relating to it that have been addressed by the Committee and, on the other hand, the extent to which member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards.
- Part II: Observations concerning particular countries on the fulfilment of obligations in respect of the submission of reports, the application of ratified Conventions grouped by subject matter and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities.

The second volume contains the General Survey (Report III (Part 1B)).¹¹

Furthermore, an Information document on ratifications and standards-related activities (Report III (Part 2)) accompanies the report of the Committee of Experts.¹²

Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference

Composition

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards is one of the two standing committees of the Conference. It is tripartite and therefore comprises representatives of governments, employers and workers. At each session, the Committee elects its Officers, which include a Chairperson (Government member), two Vice-Chairpersons (Employer member and Worker member) and a Reporter (Government member).

Mandate

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards meets annually at the June session of the Conference. Pursuant to article 7 of the Standing Orders of the Conference, the Committee shall consider:

- measures taken to give effect to ratified Conventions (article 22 of the Constitution);
- reports communicated in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution (General Surveys);
- measures taken in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution (non-metropolitan territories).

The Committee is required to present a report to the Conference.

Following the independent technical examination carried out by the Committee of Experts, the proceedings of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards provide an opportunity for the representatives of governments, ⁸ Observations and direct requests are accessible through the NORMLEX database accessible via <http://www.ilo.org>.

employers and workers to examine together the manner in which States are fulfilling their standards-related obligations, particularly with regard to ratified Conventions. Governments are able to elaborate on information previously supplied to the Committee of Experts, indicate any further measures taken or proposed since the last session of the Committee of Experts, draw attention to difficulties encountered in the fulfilment of obligations and seek guidance as to how to overcome such difficulties.

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards discusses the report and the General Survey of the Committee of Experts, and the documents submitted by governments. The work of the Conference Committee starts with a general discussion based essentially on the General Report of the Committee of Experts, and with a discussion on the General Survey. With regard to the alignment of the subject of General Surveys with the strategic objective discussed in the context of the recurrent report under the follow-up to the Social Justice Declaration, the outcome of the discussion of the Conference Committee concerning the General Survey is transmitted to the Conference Committee responsible for examining the recurrent report. Following its general discussion, the Conference Committee examines cases of serious failure to fulfil reporting and other standards-related obligations. Finally, the Conference Committee embarks upon its main task, which is to examine a number of individual cases concerning the application of ratified Conventions which have been the subject of observations by the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee invites the Government representatives concerned to attend one of its sittings to discuss the observations in question. After listening to the Government representatives, the members of the Conference Committee may ask questions or make comments. At the end of the discussion, the Conference Committee adopts conclusions on the case in question. Furthermore, in accordance with a resolution adopted by the Conference in 2000,¹³ the Conference Committee holds, at each of its sessions, a special sitting on the application by Myanmar of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29).

In its report¹⁴ submitted to the plenary sitting of the Conference for adoption, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards may invite the member State whose case has been discussed to accept a technical assistance mission by the International Labour Office to increase its capacity to fulfil its obligations, or may propose other types of missions. The Conference Committee may also request a government to submit additional information or address specific concerns in its next report to the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee also draws the attention of the Conference to certain cases, such as cases of progress and cases of serious failure to comply with ratified Conventions.

Relations between the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

In numerous reports, the Committee of Experts has emphasized the importance of the spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility that has always existed in relations between the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee. It has accordingly become the practice for the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts to attend the general discussion of the Conference Committee including the discussion on the General Survey as an observer, with the opportunity to address the Conference Committee at the opening of the general discussion and to make remarks at the end of the discussion on the General Survey. Similarly, the Employer and Worker Vice-Chairpersons of the Conference Committee are invited to meet the Committee of Experts during its sessions and discuss issues of common interest within the framework of a special session held for that purpose.

Part I. General Report

I. Introduction

1. The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, appointed by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office to examine the information and reports submitted under articles 19, 22 and 35 of the Constitution by member States of the International Labour Organization on the action taken with regard to Conventions and Recommendations, held its 82nd Session in Geneva from 24 November to 9 December 2011. The Committee has the honour to present its report to the Governing Body.

Composition of the Committee

2. The composition of the Committee is as follows: Mr Mario ACKERMAN (Argentina), Mr Denys BARROW, SC (Belize), Mr Lelio BENTES CORRÊA (Brazil), Mr James J. BRUDNEY (United States), Mr Halton CHEADLE (South Africa), Ms Laura COX, QC (United Kingdom), Ms Graciela Josefina DIXON CATON (Panama), Mr Rachid FILALI MEKNASSI (Morocco), Mr Abdul G. KOROMA (Sierra Leone), Mr Pierre LYON-CAEN (France), Ms Elena MACHULSKAYA (Russian Federation), Mr Vitit MUNTARBHORN (Thailand), Ms Rosemary OWENS (Australia), Ms Ruma PAL (India), Mr Paul-Gérard POUGOUÉ (Cameroon), Mr Raymond RANJEVA (Madagascar), Mr Yozo YOKOTA (Japan). Appendix I of the General Report contains brief biographies of all the Committee members.

3. The Committee notes with regret that Mr Anwar Ahmed Rashed AL-FUZAIE (Kuwait), who had been a member of the Committee since 1998, has submitted his resignation. The Committee expresses its great appreciation for the outstanding manner in which Mr Al-Fuzaie has carried out his duties during his 13 years of service on the Committee and, in particular, commends him warmly for the excellent way in which he has carried out his duty as Reporter for the last seven years.

4. During its session, the Committee welcomed Ms Dixon Caton, nominated by the Governing Body at its 309th Session (November 2010).

5. Mr Yokota continued its mandate as Chairperson of the Committee, and the Committee elected Mr Barrow as Reporter.

Working methods

6. The Committee has in recent years undertaken a thorough examination of its working methods. In order to guide this reflection on working methods efficiently, a subcommittee was set up in 2001. The mandate of the subcommittee includes examining the working methods of the Committee and any related subjects, in order to make appropriate recommendations to the Committee.¹ The subcommittee met on three occasions between 2002 to 2004.² During its sessions in 2005 and 2006, issues relating to its working methods were discussed by the Committee in plenary sitting.³ Since 2007, the subcommittee has met at each of the Committee's sessions.⁴

¹ The subcommittee is open to any member of the Committee wishing to participate.

⁴ See General Report, 78th Session (November–December 2007), paras 7–8; General Report, 79th Session (November–December 2008), paras 8–9; General Report, 80th Session (November–December 2009), paras 7–8; General Report, 81st Session (November–December 2010), paras 6–13.

7. This year, the subcommittee on working methods met under the guidance of Ms Pal, who was re-elected to this function. The subcommittee undertook a close examination of the comments made on specific aspects of the work of the Committee by members of the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011). Following consideration of the recommendations made by the subcommittee, the Committee agreed on the following issues.

8. With respect to the current procedure for briefing the new members of the Committee of Experts, the Committee recalls that all experts have to undergo a rigorous preparation, interview and selection process prior to joining the Committee. Before his or her arrival in Geneva, every new expert is provided with a wide range of documentation. Upon their arrival in Geneva, new experts are also given a thorough briefing, including on the interaction between the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards. In addition to the numerous substantive orientation measures that the ILO provides for new members on an individual basis, it should be noted that the Office holds a general briefing session for all experts and a mentoring programme for new experts.

9. With respect to the possibility for the Committee to add a specific section on governments' follow-up to the conclusions reached by the Conference Committee at its previous session, the Committee recalls that a similar approach was taken last year to highlight follow-up actions for the examination of articles 24 and 26 procedures. Therefore, the Committee has decided to create in this year's General Report a table showing the actions taken as follow-up to the conclusions reached by the Conference Committee at its previous session. This table will be preceded by an introductory paragraph which will reflect the information contained in the table.

10. With respect to the current procedure for taking into account the comments of the social partners, the Committee reaffirms that all views of the social partners are taken into consideration, so long as these communications are received prior to the established deadline. The Committee wishes to encourage the social partners to make full use of the possibility they have to submit their comments on the application of ratified Conventions under article 23 of the ILO Constitution and that these comments should reach the ILO by 1 September each year at the latest.

11. Regarding the particular issue of the right to strike, the Committee recalls that the right to strike was reflected in the 1994 General Survey on Freedom of Association and Collective Bargaining and has been dealt with in this year's General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, which clearly reflects the views of the social partners.

12. With respect to the possibility to better highlight in the General Report the cases where an observation was formulated for the failure to respond to comments of the Committee of Experts, the Committee recalls that a listing of this information already existed in a footnote of its General Report. In order to give greater visibility to this information, they have been presented in a summary table this year.

Relations with the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

13. A spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility has consistently prevailed in the Committee's relations with the International Labour Conference and its Committee on the Application of Standards. The Committee of Experts takes the proceedings of the Conference Committee into full consideration, not only in respect of general matters concerning standard-setting activities and supervisory procedures, but also with regard to specific matters concerning the way in which States fulfil their standards-related obligations. Moreover, the Committee pays close attention to the comments on its working methods that are made by the members of the Committee on the Application of Standards and the Governing Body, which it normally considers through its subcommittee, as it has done this year again.

14. In this context, the Committee once more welcomed the participation of Mr Yokota as an observer in the general discussion of the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011). It noted the decision by the Conference Committee to request the Director-General to renew this invitation for the 101st Session (June 2012) of the Conference. The Committee of Experts accepted this invitation.

15. The Chairperson of the Committee of Experts invited a representative of the Employers' group (Mr Chris Syder) and the Worker Vice-Chairperson (Mr Luc Cortebeeck) of the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) to participate in a special sitting of the Committee at its present session. They both accepted this invitation.

16. During this special sitting, a thorough exchange of views took place on matters of mutual interest. The discussion emphasized the importance of reinforcing the complementary relationship between the two Committees, in the interest of the effective application of international labour Conventions by member States. In line with the spirit of mutual respect governing their relationship, the discussion referred to possible improvements in the way that consideration is given by each Committee to the views expressed by the other, including how such consideration is reflected in their respective work.

17. The Worker Vice-Chairperson commented on the absence in the Committee of Experts' report of serious cases of non-compliance for certain countries, on the need to avoid information in the Committee's report being out of date and on the importance of highlighting cases of non-reporting for a number of years. He looked forward to seeing in the Committee's report comments on European countries where the economic and financial crisis was having a serious impact. He also noted that the General Survey on fundamental Conventions was a very complex document, and that the Committee of Experts' balanced and impartial approach and assessment of the responses it had received would be very useful to improve implementation of these Conventions. The representative of the Employers' group made comments on the role of, and the cooperation between the Conference Committee and the Committee of Experts, on the question of interpretations made by the Committee of Experts and on the development of a method for measuring progress in compliance with standards. The Employer representative emphasized that General Surveys should promote compliance with ILO standards and identify obstacles to ratification and implementation. In reply to some of the observations made by the Employer representative, the members of the Committee of Experts emphasized the independent, impartial and technical role that is required of them, as legal experts, in carrying out their work. The nature of that role and of the task they must perform is not always fully understood. The members therefore agreed that it would be helpful to find ways of improving even further the dialogue between the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee, to enable a fuller understanding of that role and of its impact on their work. They also indicated that they would welcome increased participation by workers' and employers' organizations, for example through comments on government reports, which would provide a real opportunity for the social partners to enhance the Committee's assessment of the application of ratified Conventions.

II. Compliance with obligations

Follow-up to cases of serious failure by member States to fulfil reporting and other standards-related obligations mentioned in the report of the Committee on the Application of Standards

18. The Committee recalls that, at the instigation of the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 93rd Session (June 2005) of the International Labour Conference, the two Committees, with the assistance of the Office, strengthened the follow-up given to cases of serious failure by member States to fulfil reporting and other standards-related obligations with a view to identifying more accurately the difficulties underlying these failures and helping the countries concerned to identify appropriate solutions to resolve them. As both Committees have recalled on numerous occasions, such failures hinder the functioning of the supervisory system, which is based primarily on the information provided by governments in their reports. Cases of failure to fulfil reporting obligations therefore have to be given the same level of attention as those relating to the application of ratified Conventions. The Committee also recalls that an assessment of the strengthened follow-up in cases of serious failure to comply with reporting obligations was submitted to the Governing Body at its 306th Session (November 2009).¹ The assessment emphasized that the systematic and strengthened technical assistance provided in the context of the follow-up on the basis of the comments of the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee has had a significant impact on the submission of reports.

19. The Committee notes that, during the general discussion of the Conference Committee at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) and the special sitting in which it examines these cases of serious failure, several members of the Conference Committee emphasized this positive impact. The Office was invited to continue and intensify technical assistance activities, and particularly to continue identifying the difficulties encountered by member States in compliance with their obligations with a view to resolving them. In the view of certain members, it is also necessary to continue the efforts made to lighten the workload relating to the submission of reports. They also emphasized that, in addition to causes that have their roots at the national level, cases of failure to comply with reporting obligations are related to the workload of governments in sending reports, which illustrates, on the one hand, the need for countries to evaluate their capacity to implement Conventions and to submit the corresponding reports before considering their ratification and, on the other, the need to continue the integration and simplification of ILO Conventions by focusing on essential rules. Finally, the Committee notes that certain members of the Conference Committee once again emphasized that it is essential to provide high-quality information, and that cases of failure to reply to the comments of the Committee of Experts should be addressed more effectively. Other members also expressed concern at the number of reports that arrive late.

20. The Committee was informed that, pursuant to the discussions of the Conference Committee, the Office had sent special letters to the 40 member States mentioned in the relevant paragraphs of the report of the Conference Committee concerning their failure to fulfil their obligations respecting the sending of reports (there were 39 such member States in 2010, 44 in 2009, 55 in 2008, 45 in 2007, 49 in 2006 and 53 in 2005).

21. The Committee welcomes the fact that four countries which had experienced persistent difficulties and which as such had been mentioned in several reports of both Committees have this year fulfilled all their constitutional obligations in terms of the submission of reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions.² The Committee notes that since the end of the session of the Conference, certain other member States, often with the assistance of the Office, have fulfilled part of their reporting and other standards-related obligations.³

22. The Committee reminds governments that they are required to comply with all the reporting and other standards-related obligations that they have accepted by becoming Members of the ILO. Compliance with these obligations is essential for dialogue between the supervisory bodies and member States on the effective implementation of ratified Conventions. Governments that request technical assistance may benefit from it, yet such assistance can only be useful and adapted to national circumstances if governments inform the Office of their specific difficulties and have the will to adopt lasting solutions. The Committee hopes that the Office will maintain the sustained technical assistance that it has been providing to member States as this is clearly an essential means for overcoming reporting difficulties effectively. Finally, the Committee welcomes the fruitful collaboration that it maintains with the Conference Committee on this matter of mutual interest, which is essential to the proper discharge of their respective tasks.

A. Reports on ratified Conventions (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

23. The Committee's principal task consists of the examination of the reports supplied by governments on Conventions that have been ratified by member States and that have been declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories.

Reporting arrangements

24. The Committee recalls that at its 306th Session (November 2009), the Governing Body decided to increase from two to three years the reporting cycle for the fundamental and governance Conventions and to maintain the cycle at five years for the other Conventions. This decision is implemented starting with the reports for 2012.

25. In addition to the reports requested according to the reporting cycle, the Committee also had before it reports especially requested from certain governments for one of the following reasons:

- (a) a first detailed report was due after ratification;
- (b) important discrepancies had previously been noted between national law or practice and the Conventions in question;
- (c) reports due for the previous period had not been received or did not contain the information requested;
- (d) reports were expressly requested by the Conference Committee.

The Committee also had before it a number of reports that it was unable to examine at its previous session.

26. In some cases, reports are not accompanied by copies of the relevant legislation, statistical data or other documentation necessary for their full examination. In cases where this material was not otherwise available, the Office, as requested by the Committee, has written to the governments concerned asking them to supply the necessary texts to enable the Committee to fulfil fully its task.

27. Appendix I to this report lists the reports received and not received, classified by country/territory and by Convention. Appendix II shows, for each year in which the Conference has met since 1932, the number and percentage of reports received by the prescribed date, by the date of the meeting of the Committee of Experts and by the date of the session of the International Labour Conference.

Reports requested and received

28. This year a total of 3,013 reports (under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution) were requested from governments on the application of Conventions ratified by member States, compared to 2,990 reports last year. At the end of the present session of the Committee, 2,084 reports had been received by the Office. This figure corresponds to 69.1 per cent of the reports requested. Last year, the Office received a total of 2,002 reports, representing 66.95 per cent.

29. In accordance with article 22 of the Constitution, 2,735 reports were requested from governments. Of these, 1,855 had been received by the Office by the end of the present session of the Committee. This figure corresponds to 67.82 per cent of the reports requested (compared to 67.98 per cent last year). The Committee wishes to express its gratitude to the 92 member States, which have submitted all the reports due this year.

30. In accordance with article 35 of the Constitution, 278 reports were requested on Conventions declared applicable with or without modifications to non-metropolitan territories. Of these, 229 reports, or 82.37 per cent, had been received by the end of the Committee's session (compared to 55.51 per cent last year).

² Central African Republic, Samoa, Singapore and United Kingdom (Bermuda).

³ Dominica, Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Netherlands (Aruba), Seychelles, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom (British Virgin Islands, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), St Helena), Vanuatu and Zambia.

Compliance with reporting obligations ⁴

31. Most of the governments from which reports were due on the application of ratified Conventions have supplied most or all of the reports requested (see Appendix I of this report). However, no reports due have been received for the past two or more years from the following 11 countries: Chad, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Kyrgyzstan, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Somalia and Yemen. The Committee examines compliance by each of these countries with their reporting obligations in the observations contained at the beginning of Part II (section I) of this report.

32. The Committee urges the governments of these countries to make every effort to supply the reports requested on ratified Conventions. As it emphasized in paragraph 19, the Committee is aware that where no reports have been sent for some time, it is likely that administrative or other problems are at the origin of the difficulties encountered by governments in fulfilling their constitutional obligations. In certain exceptional cases, the absence of reports is a result of more general difficulties related to the national situation, which often prevents the provision of any technical assistance by the Office. In such cases, it is important for governments to request assistance from the Office as soon as possible and for such assistance to be provided rapidly.

Late reports

33. The reports due on ratified Conventions should be sent to the Office between 1 June and 1 September of each year. Due consideration is given, when setting this date, to the time required to translate the reports and, where necessary, to conduct research into legislation and review other documents that are relevant to the examination of reports.

34. The Committee observes that by 1 September 2011 the proportion of reports received was 35.1 per cent, compared with 31.4 per cent at its previous session. The number of reports received on time this year has once again risen above 30 per cent, as it did in 2007, 2008 and 2010, following a significant decrease in 2009. The Committee is particularly grateful to the 38 countries which provided all the reports due within the time-limits with the information requested.⁵ It notes that the request it made last year to member States to make a particular effort to ensure that their reports were submitted in time this year has had a certain effect. Nevertheless, the Committee is bound to emphasize once again that the number of reports received on time remains low. A significant number of reports are received after 1 September, during a very short period, thereby disturbing the sound operation of the regular supervisory procedure.

35. Furthermore, the Committee notes that a number of countries sent some or all of the reports due by 1 September 2010 during the period between the end of the Committee's last session (November–December 2010) and the beginning of the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), or even during the Conference.⁶ The Committee emphasizes that this practice also disturbs the regular operation of the supervisory system and makes it more burdensome. As requested by the Conference Committee, the Committee notes that the countries which followed this practice over the indicated period are the following: Algeria, Angola, Armenia, Bahamas, Barbados, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Cambodia, Central African Republic, Congo, Cyprus, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Ethiopia, Fiji, France, France (French Southern and Antarctic Territories), Greece, Hungary, Islamic Republic of Iran, Italy, Kazakhstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malta, Mongolia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Slovakia, Slovenia, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom, United Kingdom (Bermuda, Gibraltar, Saint Helena), United States (Guam, Northern Mariana Islands), Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela.

36. In view of the high number of reports this year which do not include information in reply to its comments, the Committee requests all member States to pursue and strengthen their efforts with a view to ensuring that next year a larger number of reports are submitted within the time-limits and with all the required information. The Committee also requests the Office to intensify its technical assistance for this purpose. Finally, in line with the comments of the Conference Committee, the Committee hopes that the measures to streamline the sending and processing of information and reports, including the grouping of Conventions by strategic objective for reporting purposes and the lengthening of the reporting

⁴ In general, the Committee makes observations in the most serious and persistent cases of failure by member States to respect their reporting and other standards-related obligations based on the following criteria: the failure to send reports for two or more years, the failure to supply first reports for two or more years, and the absence of an indication in the reports received (or in the majority of them) of the representative employers' and workers' organizations to which copies of the reports and information are to be communicated. The Committee makes a direct request when a country has not sent the reports due, or the majority of reports due, in the current year.

⁵ Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia (Norfolk Island), Austria, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam, Cameroon, Central African Republic, China (Macau Special Administrative Region), Colombia, Cuba, Denmark (Faeroe Islands), El Salvador, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Israel, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Kuwait, Latvia, Lithuania, Netherlands (Sint Maarten), Nicaragua, Oman, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States (Guam, Northern Mariana Islands), Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela.

cycle for fundamental and governance Conventions, will facilitate the preparation and sending of reports by member States.

Supply of first reports

37. The Committee notes that 61 of the 105 first reports due on the application of ratified Conventions were received by the time the Committee's session ended, compared to last year when 76 of the 130 first reports due had been received. However, a number of countries have failed to supply first reports, some of which are more than a year overdue. Thus, certain first reports on ratified Conventions have not been received for a number of years from the following 11 member States:

Failure to submit first reports on the application of ratified Conventions
Bahamas	– since 2010: Convention No. 185
Equatorial Guinea	– since 1998: Conventions Nos 68, 92
Guinea-Bissau	– since 2010: Convention No. 182
Kazakhstan	– since 2010 : Convention No. 167
Kyrgyzstan	– since 1994: Convention No. 111 – since 2006: Conventions Nos 17, 184 – since 2009: Conventions Nos 131, 144 – since 2010: Conventions Nos 97, 157
Nigeria	– since 2010: Convention No. 185
Sao Tome and Principe	– since 2007: Convention No. 184
Seychelles	– since 2007: Conventions Nos 147, 161, 180
United Kingdom (St Helena)	– since 2010: Convention No. 182
Vanuatu	– since 2008: Conventions Nos 87, 98, 100, 111, 182 – since 2010: Convention No. 185
Yemen	– since 2010: Convention No. 185

38. The failure of these countries to send the first reports due is raised in observations at the beginning of Part II (section I) of the present report. In general, the Committee, like the Conference Committee, emphasizes the particular importance of first reports, which provide the basis on which the Committee makes its initial assessment of the application of the specific Conventions concerned and, in certain cases, of all the Conventions ratified by the country. The Committee urges the governments concerned to make a special effort to supply the first reports due. The Committee also requests the Office to provide appropriate technical assistance, particularly since first reports are detailed reports and as such need to be prepared in light of the report form approved by the Governing Body for each Convention.⁷

Replies to the comments of the supervisory bodies

39. Governments are requested to reply in their reports to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee, and the majority of governments have provided the replies requested. In accordance with the established practice, the Office has written to all the governments which failed to provide such replies requesting them to supply the necessary information. This year, only five of the governments which were contacted by the Office have provided the information requested.

⁷ Detailed reports have to be drawn up in accordance with the report form approved by the Governing Body for each Convention. Detailed reports are requested in the year following the entry into force of a Convention or when the Committee of Experts or the Conference Committee specifically requests such a report. Simplified reports are then requested on a regular basis. See the Governing Body's decisions in this respect (GB.282/LILS/5 (November 2001) and GB.283/LILS/6 (March 2002)).

40. This year, there were 537 cases in which no reply was received to comments (concerning 43 countries). There were 669 such cases (concerning 51 countries) last year.

41. The Committee has made observations to 13 of the countries concerned on compliance with their reporting and other standards-related obligations. These cases of comments to which replies have not been received may be classified as follows:

- (a) no reply has been received to all the reports requested from governments; or
- (b) the reports received contained no reply to most of the Committee's comments (observations and/or direct requests), and/or did not reply to the letters sent by the Office.

42. The Committee notes with concern that the number of comments to which replies have not been received remains significantly high. This has led the Conference Committee and the Committee, with the support of the Office, to pay more sustained attention to cases of failure to comply with the obligation to provide information in reply to the Committee's comments. Moreover, the Committee recalls that, for the past six years, with a view to helping the countries to provide the required information, it has made the requests addressed to them in this respect more visible in its comments. The Committee underlines that the value attached by ILO constituents to the dialogue with the supervisory bodies on the application of ratified Conventions is considerably diminished by the failure of governments to fulfil their obligations in this respect. The Committee urges the countries concerned to provide all the information due and to have recourse to the assistance of the Office where necessary. In this respect, it requests the Office to give the highest priority to reinforcing the measures already taken and to the provision of specific assistance to the countries concerned so that they can provide the information requested on the application of ratified Conventions.

B. Examination by the Committee of Experts of reports on ratified Conventions

43. In examining the reports received on ratified Conventions and Conventions declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories, in accordance with its normal practice, the Committee assigned to each of its members the initial responsibility for a group of Conventions. Reports received early enough are sent to the members concerned in advance of the Committee's session. The members submit their preliminary conclusions on the instruments for which they are responsible to the Committee in plenary sitting for discussion and approval. Decisions on comments are adopted by consensus.

Observations and direct requests

44. In certain cases, the Committee has found that no comment is called for regarding the manner in which a ratified Convention has been implemented.⁸ In other cases, however, the Committee has found it necessary to draw the attention of the governments concerned to the need to take further action to give effect to certain provisions of Conventions or to supply additional information on given points. As in previous years, its comments have been drawn up in the form of either “observations”, which are reproduced in the report of the Committee, or “direct requests”, which are not published in the Committee’s report, but are communicated directly to the governments concerned.⁹

45. The Committee’s observations appear in Part II of this report, together with a list under each Convention of any direct requests. An index of all observations and direct requests, classified by country, is provided in Appendix VII to the report.

Follow-up of procedures for the examination of representations under article 24 of the Constitution and complaints under article 26 of the Constitution

46. In accordance with the established practice, the Committee examines the measures taken by governments pursuant to the recommendations of tripartite committees (established to examine representations under article 24 of the Constitution) and commissions of inquiry (established to examine complaints under article 26 of the Constitution), after they have been approved (tripartite committees) or noted (commissions of inquiry) by the Governing Body. The corresponding information is examined by the Committee and forms an integral part of its dialogue with the governments concerned in the context of the examination of the reports submitted on the application of the respective Conventions, as well as any comments submitted by employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee considers it useful to indicate more clearly the cases in which it follows up on the effect given to the recommendations made under other constitutional supervisory procedures, as indicated in the following table.

Special notes

47. As in the past, the Committee has indicated by special notes at the end of the observations (traditionally known as footnotes) the cases in which, because of the nature of the problems encountered in the application of the Conventions concerned, it has seemed appropriate to ask the government to supply a report earlier than would otherwise have been the case and, in some instances, to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in June 2012.

48. In order to identify cases for which it inserts special notes, the Committee uses the basic criteria described below, while taking into account the following general considerations. First, the criteria are indicative. In exercising its discretion in the application of the criteria, the Committee may also have regard to the specific circumstances of the country and the length of the reporting cycle. Second, the criteria are applicable to cases in which an earlier report is requested, often referred to as a “single footnote”, as well as to cases in which the government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference, often referred to as a “double footnote”. The difference between these two categories is one of degree. Third, a serious case otherwise justifying a special note to provide full particulars to the Conference (double footnote) might only be given a special note to provide an early report (single footnote) when there has been a recent discussion of the case in the Conference Committee. Finally, the Committee wishes to point out that it exercises restraint in its recourse to “double footnotes” in deference to the Conference Committee’s decisions as to the cases it wishes to discuss.

49. The criteria to which the Committee has regard are the following:

- the seriousness of the problem; in this respect, the Committee emphasizes that an important consideration is the necessity to view the problem in the context of a particular Convention and to take into account matters involving fundamental rights, workers’ health, safety and well-being, as well as any adverse impact, including at the international level, on workers and other categories of protected persons;
- the persistence of the problem;
- the urgency of the situation; the evaluation of such urgency is necessarily case-specific, according to standard human rights criteria, such as life-threatening situations or problems where irreversible harm is foreseeable; and
- the quality and scope of the government’s response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.

50. In addition, the Committee wishes to emphasize that its decision not to double footnote a case which it has previously drawn to the attention of the Conference Committee in no way implies that it has considered progress to have been made therein.

51. At its 76th Session (November–December 2005), the Committee decided that the identification of cases in respect of which a government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference would be a two-stage process: first, the expert initially responsible for a particular group of Conventions recommends to the Committee the insertion of special notes; second, in light of all the recommendations made, the Committee will, after discussion, take a final, collegial decision once it has reviewed the application of all the Conventions.

52. This year, under the present reporting cycle the Committee has requested early reports after an interval of either one, two or three years, according to the circumstances, in the following cases:

Practical application

55. It is customary for the Committee to note the information contained in governments' reports allowing it to assess the application of Conventions in practice, such as information relating to judicial decisions, statistics and labour inspection. The supply of this information is requested in almost all report forms, as well as under the specific terms of some Conventions.

56. The Committee notes that 576 reports received this year contain information on the practical application of Conventions. Of these, 126 reports contain information on national jurisprudence. The Committee also notes that 450 of the reports contain information on statistics and labour inspection.

57. The Committee wishes to emphasize to governments the importance of submitting such information, which is indispensable to complete the examination of national legislation and to help the Committee to identify the issues arising from real problems of application in practice. The Committee also wishes to encourage employers' and workers' organizations to submit clear and up to date information on the application of Conventions in practice.

Cases of progress

58. Following its examination of the reports supplied by governments, and in accordance with its standard practice, the Committee refers in its comments to cases in which it expresses its satisfaction or interest at the progress achieved in the application of the respective Conventions.

59. At its 80th Session (November–December 2009) and at its present session, the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the identification of cases of progress:

- (1) The expression by the Committee of interest or satisfaction does not mean that it considers that the country in question is in general conformity with the Convention, and in the same comment the Committee may express its satisfaction or interest at a specific issue while also expressing regret concerning other important matters which, in its view, have not been addressed in a satisfactory manner.
- (2) The Committee wishes to emphasize that an indication of progress is limited to a specific issue related to the application of the Convention and the nature of the measure adopted by the government concerned.
- (3) The Committee exercises its discretion in noting progress, taking into account the particular nature of the Convention and the specific circumstances of the country.
- (4) The expression of progress can refer to different kinds of measures relating to national legislation, policy or practice.
- (5) If the satisfaction or interest relates to the adoption of legislation or to a draft legislation, the Committee may also consider appropriate follow-up measures for its practical application.
- (6) In identifying cases of progress, the Committee takes into account both the information provided by governments in their reports and the comments of employers' and workers' organizations.

60. Since first identifying cases of satisfaction in its report in 1964,¹⁰ the Committee has continued to follow the same general criteria. The Committee expresses satisfaction in cases in which, following comments it has made on a specific issue, governments have taken measures through either the adoption of new legislation, an amendment to the existing legislation or a significant change in the national policy or practice, thus achieving fuller compliance with their obligations under the respective Conventions. In expressing its satisfaction, the Committee indicates to governments and the social partners that it considers the specific matter resolved. The reason for identifying cases of satisfaction is twofold:

- to place on record the Committee's appreciation of the positive action taken by governments in response to its comments; and
- to provide an example to other governments and social partners which have to address similar issues.

61. Details concerning these cases of progress are to be found in Part II of this report and cover 72 instances in which measures of this kind have been taken in 54 countries. The full list is as follows:

62. Thus the total number of cases in which the Committee has been led to express its satisfaction at the progress achieved following its comments has risen to 2,875 since the Committee began listing them in its report.

63. Within cases of progress, the distinction between cases of satisfaction and cases of interest was formalized in 1979.¹¹ In general, cases of interest cover measures that are sufficiently advanced to justify the expectation that further progress would be achieved in the future and regarding which the Committee would want to continue its dialogue with the government and the social partners. In comparison to cases of satisfaction, cases of interest relate to progress, which is less significant. The Committee's practice has developed to such an extent that cases in which it expresses interest may encompass a variety of measures. The paramount consideration is that the measures contribute to the overall achievement of the objectives of a particular Convention. This may include:

- draft legislation that is before parliament, or other proposed legislative changes forwarded or available to the Committee;
- consultations within the government and with the social partners;
- new policies;
- the development and implementation of activities within the framework of a technical cooperation project or following technical assistance or advice from the Office;
- judicial decisions, according to the level of the court, the subject matter and the force of such decisions in a particular legal system, would normally be considered as cases of interest unless there is a compelling reason to note a particular judicial decision as a case of satisfaction; or
- the Committee may also note as cases of interest the progress made by a State, province or territory in the framework of a federal system.

64. Details concerning the cases in question are to be found either in Part II of this report or in the requests addressed directly to the governments concerned, and include 325 instances in which measures of this kind have been adopted in 130 countries. The full list is as follows:

Cases of good practice

65. In accordance with the decision taken at its 78th Session (November–December 2007), the Committee highlights cases of good practice to express its appreciation of the special efforts made in applying a Convention, and so that they might where appropriate serve as a model for other countries to assist in the implementation of ratified Conventions and the furtherance of social progress. At its 79th Session (November–December 2008), the Committee agreed on the general criteria that it would apply to identify cases of good practice. The Committee further agreed that it would continue to follow a two-stage process for the identification of cases of good practice: first, the expert initially responsible for a particular group of Conventions recommends to the Committee that a measure or measures should be identified as a case of good practice; second, in light of all the recommendations made, the Committee will, after discussion, take a final collegial decision once it has reviewed the application of all the Conventions.¹²

66. At its 80th Session (November–December 2009), the Committee focused, in particular, on clarifying the distinction between cases of good practice and cases of progress. In this respect, the Committee wishes to underline at the outset that cases of good practice are necessarily also cases of progress, although the reverse is not always true. The Committee wishes to point out that the identification of a case of good practice does not in any way imply additional obligations for member States under the Conventions that they have ratified. This identification also does not imply that the concerned member State is in conformity with other ratified Conventions. Moreover, mere compliance with the requirements of a Convention is not sufficient for the identification of a case of good practice, as compliance is a basic requirement deriving from ratification of the Convention. Cases of good practice are therefore of an informative rather than of a prescriptive nature. Their identification forms part of the ongoing dialogue with the government concerned on the application of a ratified Convention and can relate to any measure taken in national legislation, policy or practice. A certain caution must clearly be exercised in the identification of cases of good practice so as to minimize the possibility that such practices may with hindsight come to be viewed as unsatisfactory.

67. Bearing in mind these aspects, the Committee wishes to confirm the following three criteria, which were identified at its 79th Session (November–December 2008), on the understanding that they are indicative, but not exhaustive.

- (1) A case of good practice may consist of a new approach to achieving or improving compliance with the Convention and could therefore be useful as a model for other countries in implementing that Convention.
- (2) The practice may reflect an innovative or creative way of either implementing the Convention, or of addressing difficulties which arise in its application.

¹² It will be recalled that this two-stage process is also used for the so-called “double footnotes”: see para. 51 above.

- (3) Recognizing that Conventions lay down minimum standards, the practice may offer an example of a country extending the application or coverage of the Convention to enhance the achievement of its objectives, particularly in cases where the Convention contains flexibility clauses.

Cases in which the need for technical assistance has been highlighted

68. The combination of the work of the supervisory bodies and the practical guidance given to member States through technical cooperation and assistance has always been one of the key dimensions of the ILO supervisory system. Further, since 2005, at the initiative of the Conference Committee, heightened attention has been given to the complementarity between examination by the ILO supervisory bodies and the Office's technical assistance. As pointed out in paragraphs 18–22, this has led to enhanced follow-up of cases of serious failure by member States to fulfil reporting and other standards-related obligations. In addition, the Conference Committee has made more systematic references to technical assistance in its conclusions regarding individual cases concerning the application of ratified Conventions. The aim of this strengthened combination between the work of the supervisory bodies and the Office's technical assistance is to provide an effective framework to member States for full compliance with their standards-related obligations, including the implementation of the Conventions which they have ratified.

69. In this context, the Committee decided at its 79th Session (November–December 2008) to highlight the cases for which, in the Committee's view, technical assistance would be particularly useful in helping member States to address gaps in law and in practice in the implementation of ratified Conventions. These cases are highlighted in the following table and details can be found in Part II of the report of the Committee of Experts. The Committee also examined a certain number of cases in relation to which the Conference Committee emphasized the need for technical assistance at the last session of the Conference.

70. The Committee notes that since its last session, a certain number of countries from North Africa and the Middle East have started a transition process towards democracy. The Committee is of the view that such a process offers the opportunity to undertake necessary reforms in view to put the national legislation into conformity with ILO Conventions, and particularly with those relating to fundamental rights at work. In this regard, the Committee recalls that governments can avail themselves of ILO technical assistance.

Questions concerning the application of certain Conventions

71. The Committee notes the final report of the Tripartite Meeting of Experts to Examine the Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158), and the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166), held in Geneva from 18–21 April 2011. The purpose of the Meeting was to examine Convention No. 158 and Recommendation No. 166 and to identify obstacles to ratification and implementation as well as other relevant current trends in law and practice. The Committee also takes note of the background document prepared by the Office for the Meeting, the Way forward of the Tripartite Meeting of Experts of the Government and the Worker Experts and the Outcome of the Employer Experts, as well as of the discussions that took place in the LILS Section of the Governing Body and the decision made by the Governing Body (GB.312/LILS/PR, November 2011).

Comments made by employers' and workers' organizations

72. At each session, the Committee draws the attention of governments to the important role of employers' and workers' organizations in the application of Conventions and Recommendations. Moreover, it highlights the fact that numerous Conventions require consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, or their collaboration in a variety of measures. The Committee notes that almost all governments have indicated in the reports supplied under articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution the representative organizations of employers and workers to which, in accordance with article 23(2) of the Constitution, they have communicated copies of the reports supplied to the Office. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with the tripartite nature of the ILO, compliance with this constitutional obligation is intended to enable representative organizations of employers and workers to participate fully in supervision of the application of international labour standards. It should be recalled that if a government fails to comply with this obligation, these organizations are denied their opportunity to comment and an essential element of tripartism is lost. The Committee calls on all member States to discharge their obligation under article 23(2) of the Constitution. The Committee also requests governments to provide copies of reports to representative employers' and workers' organizations so that they have enough time to send any comments that they may wish to make.

73. Since its last session, the Committee has received 1,051 comments (compared to 794 last year), 129 of which (compared to 119 last year) were communicated by employers' organizations and 922 (compared to 675 last year) by workers' organizations. The Committee recalls the importance it attaches to this contribution by employers' and workers' organizations to the work of the supervisory bodies. This contribution is essential for the Committee's evaluation of the application of ratified Conventions in national law and in practice.

74. The majority of the comments received (798) relate to the application of ratified Conventions (see Appendix III).¹³ Some 506 of these comments relate to the application of fundamental Conventions, 81 relate to governance Conventions and 211 concern the application of other Conventions. Moreover, 253 comments concern reports provided under article 19 of the Constitution on fundamental Conventions.¹⁴

75. The Committee notes that, of the comments received this year, 738 were transmitted directly to the Office which, in accordance with the practice established by the Committee, referred them to the governments concerned for comment. The Committee emphasizes that comments submitted by employers' and workers' organizations should be received by the Office by 1 September at the latest to allow governments to have a reasonable time to respond, thereby enabling the Committee to examine the issues in question at its session in November the same year. Comments received later than 1 September will be examined by the Committee at its session the following year. In 313 cases, the governments transmitted the comments made by employers' and workers' organizations with their reports, sometimes adding their own comments.

76. The Committee also examined a number of other comments by employers' and workers' organizations, consideration of which had been postponed from its previous session because the comments of the organizations or the replies of the governments had arrived just before, during or just after the session. It again had to postpone until its next session the examination of a number of comments when they were received too close to or even during the Committee's present session.

77. The Committee notes that in general the employers' and workers' organizations concerned endeavoured to gather and present elements of law and fact on the application in practice of ratified Conventions. The Committee recalls that it is essential for the organizations, when referring specifically to the Convention or Conventions deemed relevant, to provide detailed information that has real additional value with regard to the information provided by governments and the issues addressed in the Committee's comments. Such information should help to update or renew the analysis of the application of Conventions and emphasize real problems concerning their application in practice. The Committee invites the organizations interested to request technical assistance from the Office to this end.

Treatment of comments received from employers' and workers' organizations in a non-reporting year

78. The Committee recalls that at its 77th Session (November–December 2006), it gave guidance to the Office as to the procedure to be followed in determining the treatment of comments received from employers' and workers' organizations concerning the application of a ratified Convention in a non-reporting year. At its 80th Session (November–December 2009), the Committee examined this procedure in light of the decision by the Governing Body to extend the cycle for the submission of reports from two to three years for the fundamental and governance Conventions. In this respect, the Committee is fully aware of the need to apply in a fair and judicious manner the decisions taken by the Governing Body to extend the reporting cycle and to ensure that employers' and workers' organizations comments may effectively draw its attention to areas of concern, even when no report on the Convention in question is due from the government that year.

79. The Committee confirms that, where the comments received from employers' and workers' organizations simply repeat comments made in previous years, or refer to matters already raised by the Committee, they will be examined in accordance with the normal cycle in the year when the government's report is due, and a report will not be requested from the government outside that cycle. This procedure may also be followed in the case of comments which provide additional information on law and practice concerning matters already raised by the Committee, or on minor legislative changes, although consideration may be given, depending on the specific circumstances, to requesting an advanced report in such cases.

80. However, where the comment raises more serious allegations of important acts of non-compliance with a particular Convention – as opposed to mere repetitions – the government will be requested to reply to these allegations outside the normal reporting cycle and the Committee will consider the comments in the year in which they are received, where the allegations go beyond mere declarations. Comments referring to important legislative changes, or to proposals which have a fundamental impact on the application of a Convention will be considered in the same manner, as will comments which refer to minor, new legislative proposals or draft laws not yet examined by the Committee, where their early examination may assist the government at the drafting stage.

81. The Committee emphasizes that the procedure set out above aims at giving effect to decisions taken by the Governing Body which have both extended the reporting cycle and provided for safeguards in that context to ensure that effective supervision of the application of ratified Conventions is maintained. One of these safeguards consists in giving due recognition to the possibility afforded to employers' and workers' organizations to draw the attention of the Committee to matters of particular concern arising from the application of ratified Conventions, even in a year when no report is due; in such cases, comments received directly by the Office are communicated to the governments concerned in a timely fashion so as to ensure respect for due process. The Committee will continue to give full and careful consideration to all the elements made available to it in order to ensure the effective, up to date and regular monitoring of the application of ratified Conventions in the context of the new extended reporting cycle for the fundamental and governance Conventions.

82. Part II of this report contains most of the observations made by the Committee on cases in which the comments raised matters relating to the application of ratified Conventions. Where appropriate, other comments are examined in requests addressed directly to governments.

C. Submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities (article 19, paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, of the Constitution)

83. In accordance with its terms of reference, the Committee this year examined the following information supplied by the governments of member States pursuant to article 19 of the Constitution of the Organization:

- (a) additional information on measures taken to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted by the Conference from 1967 (51st Session) to June 2010 (99th Session) (Conventions Nos 128 to 188, Recommendations Nos 132 to 200 and Protocols);
- (b) replies to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee at its 81st Session (November–December 2010).

84. Appendix IV of Part II of the report contains a summary indicating the competent authority to which the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th Session were submitted and the date of submission. In addition, Appendix IV summarizes the information supplied by governments with respect to earlier adopted instruments submitted to the competent authority in 2011.

85. Other statistical information is to be found in Appendices V and VI of Part II of the report. Appendix V, compiled from information sent by governments, shows where each member State stands in terms of its constitutional obligation of submission. Appendix VI shows the overall submission status of instruments adopted since the 51st Session (June 1967) of the Conference. The statistical data in Appendices V and VI are regularly updated by the competent branches of the Office and can be accessed via the Internet.

99th Session of the Conference

86. At its 99th Session in June 2010, the Conference adopted the HIV and AIDs Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200). The 12-month period for submission to the competent authorities of Recommendation No. 200 ended on 17 June 2010, and the 18-month period on 17 December 2010. In all, 31 governments out of the 183 member States have already submitted the Recommendation adopted at the 99th Session. At this session, the Committee examined new information on the steps taken regarding Recommendation No. 200 by the following governments: Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Barbados, Belgium, Cape Verde, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Estonia, Greece, Indonesia, Islamic Republic of Iran, Israel, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Swaziland, Tajikistan, Turkey, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Viet Nam.

Cases of progress

87. The Committee notes with interest the information sent in the course of the period concerned by the governments of the following countries: Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Kenya, Mongolia and Qatar. It welcomes the efforts made by these governments to recognize the significant delay in submission and to take important steps toward fulfilling their obligation to submit to their parliamentary bodies the instruments adopted by the Conference over a number of years.

Special problems

88. To facilitate the work of the Committee on the Application of Standards, this report only mentions those governments that have not submitted to the competent authorities the instruments adopted by the Conference for at least seven sessions. This time frame begins on the 90th (2002) Session and concludes on the 99th (2010) Session because the Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations during the 93rd (2005), 97th (2008) or 98th (2009) Session. Thus, this time frame was deemed long enough to warrant inviting the governments concerned to a special sitting of the Conference Committee so that they could account for the delays in submission.

89. The Committee notes that at the closure of its 82nd Session, on 9 December 2011, the following 39 countries were in this situation: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Cambodia, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Georgia, Guinea, Haiti, Iraq, Ireland, Kyrgyzstan, Libya, Mozambique, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Suriname, Tajikistan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Turkmenistan, Uganda and Uzbekistan.

90. The Committee is constantly aware of the exceptional circumstances that have affected some of these countries for years, as a result of which they have been deprived of the institutions needed to fulfil the obligation to submit instruments. At the 100th Session of the Conference (June 2011), the Government representatives of seven delegations supplied information explaining why their countries had been unable to meet the constitutional obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to national parliaments. As the Committee of Experts had done previously, the Conference Committee expressed great concern at the failure to respect this obligation. It pointed out that compliance with this constitutional obligation, which means submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference to national parliaments, is of the utmost importance in ensuring the effectiveness of the Organization's standards-related activities.

91. The abovementioned countries have been identified in observations published in this report, and the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols that have not been submitted are indicated in the statistical appendices. The Committee considers it worthwhile to alert the governments concerned so as to enable them immediately and as a matter of urgency to take appropriate steps to bring themselves up to date. This notice also allows the governments to benefit from the measures the Office is prepared to take, upon their request, to assist them in the steps required for the rapid submission to parliament of the pending instruments.

Comments of the Committee and replies from governments

92. As in its previous reports, the Committee makes individual observations in section II of Part II of this report on the points that should be brought to the special attention of governments. Observations are made in cases where there has been no information for five or more sessions of the Conference. Furthermore, requests for additional information on other points have been addressed directly to a number of countries (see the list of direct requests at the end of section II).

93. The Committee hopes that the 71 observations and the 81 direct requests that it is addressing this year to governments will enable them better to discharge their constitutional obligation of submission, thereby contributing to the promotion of the standards adopted by the Conference.

94. As the Committee has already pointed out, it is important that governments send the information and documents required by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum adopted by the Governing Body in March 2005. The Committee must receive for examination a summary or a copy of the documents submitting the instruments to the parliamentary bodies and be informed of the proposals made as to the action to be taken on them. The obligation of submission is discharged only once the instruments adopted by the Conference have been submitted to parliament and the competent authorities have taken a decision on them. The Office has to be informed of this decision, as well as of the submission of instruments to parliament.

95. The Committee hopes to be able to note progress in this matter in its next report. It again reminds governments that they may seek technical assistance from the ILO, particularly through the standards specialists in the field.

D. Instruments chosen for reports under article 19 of the Constitution

96. The Committee recalls that at its 303rd Session (November 2008), the Governing Body decided to align the subjects of General Surveys with those of the annual recurrent discussions in the Conference under the follow-up to the Social Justice Declaration. This year, in accordance with the decision taken by the Governing Body at its 307 Session (March 2010),¹⁵ governments were requested to supply reports under article 19 of the Constitution as a basis for the General Survey on the following instruments: the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), and the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

97. A total of 282 reports were requested from member States, under article 19 of the Constitution, on the fundamental Conventions. This figure includes 147 reports requested from the member States which have not yet ratified all the fundamental Conventions and 135 reports (mandatory section – questions 32 to 37 of the report form) to member States which have ratified all the fundamental Conventions. 160 reports were received and this represents 56.23 per cent of the reports requested.

98. The Committee notes with regret that, for the past five years, none of the reports on unratified Conventions and Recommendations requested under article 19 of the Constitution have been received from the following ten countries:

¹⁵ GB.304/LILS/5 and GB.304/9/2, para. 73.

Afghanistan, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Vanuatu.

99. The Committee once again urges governments to provide the reports requested so that its General Surveys can be as comprehensive as possible. It hopes that the Office will supply all the necessary technical assistance to this end.

100. Part III of this report (issued separately as Part 1B) contains the General Survey concerning fundamental Conventions.¹⁶ In accordance with the practice followed in previous years, the survey has been prepared on the basis of a preliminary examination by a working party comprising eight members of the Committee.

¹⁶ See Report III (Part 1B), International Labour Conference, 101st Session, Geneva, 20112.

III. Collaboration with other international organizations and functions relating to other international instruments

A. Cooperation with the United Nations in the field of standards

101. In the context of collaboration with other international organizations on questions concerning supervision of the application of international instruments relating to subjects of common interest, the United Nations, certain specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations with which the ILO has entered into special arrangements for this purpose, are asked whether they have information on how Conventions are being applied. The list of the Conventions concerned and the international organizations that were consulted is as follows:

- the Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957 (No. 107): United Nations (UN), Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and World Health Organization (WHO), Inter-American Indian Institute of the Organization of American States;
- the Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115): International Atomic Energy Agency;
- the Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117): UNFAO, OHCHR and UNESCO;
- the Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141): UN, OHCHR and UNFAO;
- the Prevention of Accidents (Seafarers) Convention, 1970 (No. 134) and Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147): International Maritime Organization;
- the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142): UNESCO;
- the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143): UN, OHCHR, UNESCO and WHO;
- the Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149): WHO;
- the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169): UNFAO, OHCHR, UNESCO, WHO and Inter-American Indian Institute of the Organization of American States.

102. The Committee also notes that the ILO has continued to develop its relations with the International Maritime Organization (IMO). The two organizations have complementary mandates in respect of merchant shipping: the ILO is responsible for social issues and those to do with labour, while the IMO addresses other aspects. The IMO has officially recognized the MLC, 2006 as the fourth pillar of international maritime law, alongside the three IMO Conventions for Safety of Life at Sea, Standards of Training, Certification and Watch keeping for Seafarers; and Prevention of Pollution from Ships. The IMO also encourages ratification of the MLC, 2006 by its States members. The ILO is also working together with the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) in respect of the drafting and implementation of the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), which provides that seafarers' identity documents must be in line with certain specifications established by the ICAO. Finally, the ILO is also contributing to the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of the Human Rights Council.

B. United Nations treaties concerning human rights

103. The Committee recalls that international labour standards and the provisions of the United Nations human rights treaties related to them are complementary and mutually reinforcing. Close cooperation between the ILO and the United Nations in relation to its human rights treaties is therefore an important strategy to enhance the influence of ILO standards and to ensure consistency and coherence within the United Nations system with regard to human rights at work.

104. The Committee welcomes the fact that the Office has continued to regularly submit reports to the different treaty bodies containing standards-related information regarding the countries examined by them. These ILO reports include information on the ratification of ILO Conventions relevant to the provisions of the respective United Nations human rights treaties, summaries of the findings and recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies and information on ILO technical assistance, as appropriate. In addition, Office representatives participate in the sessions of the treaty bodies and provide oral advice and information on specific countries or particular subjects. The Office also contributes to the general observations by these supervisory bodies concerning issues that come within the ILO's remit.

C. European Code of Social Security and its Protocol

105. In accordance with the supervisory procedure established under Article 74(4) of the European Code of Social Security, and the arrangements made between the ILO and the Council of Europe, the Committee of Experts examined 20 reports on the application of the Code and, as appropriate, its Protocol. The Committee's conclusions on these reports will be sent to the Council of Europe for examination by its Committee of Experts on Social Security. Once approved, the Committee's comments should lead to the adoption of resolutions by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on the application of the Code and the Protocol by the countries concerned.

106. With its dual responsibility for the application of the Code and for international labour Conventions relating to social security, the Committee is seeking to develop a coherent analysis of the application of European and international instruments and to coordinate the obligations of the States parties to these instruments. The Committee also draws attention to the national situations in which recourse to technical assistance from the Council of Europe and the Office may prove to be an effective means of improving the application of the Code.

107. Lastly, the Committee would like to express its appreciation for the invaluable assistance again rendered to it by the officials of the Office, whose competence and devotion to duty make it possible for the Committee to accomplish its increasingly voluminous and complex task in a limited period of time.

Part II. Observations concerning particular countries *

* In accordance with the decision taken at its 81st Session (November–December 2010), the Committee recalls that it follows a specific approach in identifying in its comments cases of progress. This approach is described in paragraphs 58 to 64, Part I (General Report) of the present report. In particular, the Committee recalls that the identification of a case of progress does not mean that it considers the country in question to be in general conformity with the Convention. Further, an indication of progress is limited to a specific issue related to the application of the Convention and the nature of the measure adopted by the government concerned.

I. Observations concerning reports on ratified Conventions (articles 22, 23, paragraph 2, and 35, paragraphs 6 and 8, of the Constitution)

General observation

The Committee recalls that the obligation to communicate copies of the reports on ratified Conventions to the representative organizations of employers and workers, set out in article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, is intended to enable these organizations to make their own comments on the application of ratified Conventions. The Committee emphasizes that communications received from employers' and workers' organizations attest to their participation in the reporting process and information from these sources has often resulted in a better knowledge and understanding of the difficulties experienced by countries. The Committee notes that none of the reports provided by the following countries indicates the employers' and workers' organizations to which copies of the reports have been communicated: Afghanistan (2010 and 2011), Comoros (2011), Côte d'Ivoire (2011), Gambia (2011), Qatar (2011), South Africa (2011) and United Kingdom (Gibraltar) (2011). In the case of the following countries, the Committee notes that a majority of the reports received do not indicate the representative organizations of employers and workers to which copies of the reports were communicated: Algeria (2011), Cambodia (2011), Iraq (2010 and 2011), Kazakhstan (2011), Pakistan (2010 and 2011) and United Kingdom (St Helena) (2011). The Committee requests these governments to fulfil this constitutional obligation without further delay.

General observations

Bahamas

The Committee notes that the majority of the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 12 reports are now due: a first report on the application of Convention No. 185 (since 2010) and 11 other reports (Conventions Nos 11, 87, 88, 95, 98, 100, 105, 111, 138, 144 and 182), most of which should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. The Committee further notes that an official of the Ministry of Labour and Social Development received training in 2009. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office informed the Government that it was ready to provide any necessary assistance. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit these reports, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Chad

The Committee notes that, for the second year in succession, the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 16 reports are now due (Conventions Nos 6, 11, 13, 26, 29, 81, 87, 95, 98, 100, 105, 111, 138, 144, 173 and 182), most of which should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office informed the Government that it was ready to provide further assistance as needed. The Committee requests the Government to take without delay the necessary measures to submit all the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Djibouti

The Committee notes that for the third year in succession, the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 43 reports are now due (Conventions Nos 1, 9, 11, 13, 16, 19, 22, 23, 26, 29, 38, 53, 55, 56, 63, 69, 71, 73, 77, 78, 81, 87, 88, 94, 95, 96, 98, 99, 100, 101, 105, 106, 108, 111, 115, 120, 122, 124, 125, 126, 138, 144 and 182) and should, for the most part, include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office informed the Government that it was ready to provide any assistance needed. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to submit all the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Equatorial Guinea

The Committee notes that for the fifth year in succession, apart from a report sent in 2008, the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 14 reports are now due: the first reports on the application of Conventions Nos 68 and 92 (due since 1998) and 12 other reports (Conventions Nos 1, 14, 29, 30, 87, 98, 100, 103, 105, 111, 138 and 182), most of which should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. It notes that, apart from a report submitted in 2008, the Government has not provided reports since 2006. The Committee is accordingly bound to express its deep concern that such a situation has persisted despite numerous initiatives taken by the Office to afford technical assistance. It urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay, including through further recourse to technical assistance (as mentioned in the Office's letter of 5 September 2011 further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2011), to submit the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Grenada

The Committee notes that for the second year in succession the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 17 reports are now due (Conventions Nos 11, 16, 26, 29, 81, 87, 94, 95, 98, 99, 100, 105, 108, 111, 138, 144 and 182) and should, for the most part, include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office informed the Government that it was ready to provide any assistance needed. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to submit all the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Guinea

The Committee notes with deep concern that for the fifth year in succession the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received, and that 48 reports are now due (Conventions Nos 3, 11, 13, 14, 16, 26, 29, 45, 62, 81, 87, 89, 90, 94, 95, 98, 99, 100, 105, 111, 113, 114, 115, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 144, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 156, 159 and 182) and should, for the most part, include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. The Office again drew the Government's attention to this worrying situation in the letter it wrote on 5 September 2011 further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011). In that letter, the Office also informed the Government that it was ready to provide any necessary assistance. The Committee again emphasizes that the Government received a scholarship for training in international labour standards in May 2010. It asks the Government without delay to take the necessary measures, including recourse to further technical assistance from the Office, to submit the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation. The Committee notes in this connection that, from 24 to 28 October 2011, Guinea received training in the drafting of reports for submission under article 22 and that some reports were thus drafted. It accordingly trusts that the Government will soon be in a position gradually to submit the 48 reports due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Guinea-Bissau

The Committee notes that the first report on the application of Convention No. 182, due since 2010, has not been received. While emphasizing the effort the Government made to send 26 reports this year out of the 29 requested, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit the abovementioned first report. It notes in this connection that the Government has asked the Office to provide technical assistance enabling the reports on the application of Conventions Nos 138 and 182 to be prepared in a tripartite and participatory manner. The Committee also notes that a three day workshop, devoted to the drafting of these two reports, took place in November this year. The Committee notes the Government's intention to send the two reports before the end of 2011 and hopes that it will soon submit all the reports due, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Guyana

The Committee notes with deep concern that for the fourth year in succession the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 36 reports are now due (Conventions Nos 2, 11, 12, 19, 29, 42, 45, 81, 87, 94, 95, 97, 98, 100, 105, 108, 111, 115, 129, 131, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 144, 149, 150, 151, 166, 172, 175 and 182), most of which should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. The Office again drew the Government's attention to this worrying situation in the letter it wrote on 5 September 2011 further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011). In the same letter, the Committee informed the Government that it was ready to provide all necessary assistance. The Committee points out that the officials responsible for preparing the reports received training in July 2010 and that, at the time, the Government stated its commitment to communicating the reports. The Committee notes with regret that, despite the Government's assurances and regular follow up by the Office, the communication of reports has not resumed. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to submit the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Ireland

The Committee notes that the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 36 reports are now due (Conventions Nos 6, 11, 12, 14, 19, 26, 27, 29, 62, 81, 87, 88, 96, 98, 99, 100, 102, 105, 111, 118, 121, 122, 124, 132, 138, 139, 142, 144, 155, 159, 160, 176, 177, 179, 180 and 182), most of which should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. While noting that reports and information were submitted in 2010, the Committee again points out that there is now a significant backlog of overdue reports. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office informed the Government that it was ready to provide all necessary assistance. The Committee takes due note of the explanations given in the Government's letter of 10 November 2011 to the effect that, in view of the limited resources available, it is difficult for the Ministry to meet its reporting obligations. The Committee also notes that the Government will endeavour to submit the reports due, as early in 2012 as is possible, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Kazakhstan

The Committee notes that the first report on the application of Convention No. 167 (due since 2010) and another on the application of Convention No. 185 have not been received. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office informed the Government that it was ready to provide any necessary assistance. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit these reports, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Kyrgyzstan

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the second year in succession, the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received. It notes that 42 reports are now due: the first reports on the application of Convention No. 111 (due since 1994), Conventions Nos 17 and 184 (due since 2006), Conventions Nos 131 and 144 (due since 2009), Conventions Nos 97 and 157 (due since 2010) as well as 35 other reports (Conventions Nos 11, 16, 23, 29, 69, 73, 77, 78, 79, 81, 87, 92, 95, 98, 100, 105, 108, 113, 115, 119, 120, 122, 124, 126, 133, 134, 138, 147, 148, 149, 150, 154, 159, 160 and 182), most of which should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office again informed the Government that it was ready to provide any necessary assistance. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will respond to that offer in order to clear the large backlog of reports. It urges the Government to take the necessary measures to submit all the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Libya

The Committee notes that Libya is now in a transitional phase following the changes that have taken place there. It is accordingly aware of the exceptional circumstances that are affecting the country and depriving it of the institutions necessary to the fulfilment of its reporting obligations under article 22 of the ILO Constitution. It has, therefore, decided to postpone until its next session the examination of the extent to which Libya applies the Conventions it has ratified and the reports on which are due for the period under consideration.

The Committee refers to the high-level discussion that the Office organized on “Challenges and Change in the Arab World” during the 310th Session of the Governing Body in March 2011, one aim of which was to highlight the role the ILO has in the renewal process in the interests of ensuring that the resulting changes respond to the fundamental concerns about decent work shared by governments, employers and workers, and by society as a whole. In that context the Office advocated strategies that seek, among other goals, to enhance social justice, to promote rights and in particular freedom of association and collective bargaining, and to reinforce democratic governance. Pointing out that the ILO affords support in these areas, the Committee encourages the Government to request technical assistance from the Office with that in mind

Netherlands

Netherlands Antilles

The Committee has been informed that the Government sent the Director-General a declaration indicating that, from 10 October 2010, the Netherlands Antilles would cease to exist as part of the Kingdom of the Netherlands. The declaration also indicated that from the same date, the Kingdom would consist of the Netherlands, Aruba, Curaçao and Sint Maarten. The other territories that likewise formed part of the Netherlands Antilles until 10 October 2010, namely Bonaire, Sint Eustatius and Saba, would be treated as the Caribbean part of the Netherlands.

The Committee has also been informed that on 2 September 2010, the Office sent a communication to the Government requesting further information on the applicability of Conventions ratified by the Netherlands to the territories concerned. In a communication of 4 March 2011, the Government specified that Curaçao and Sint Maarten would have the same internal autonomy as Aruba and that the Conventions declared applicable to the Netherlands Antilles would henceforth apply to these two non-metropolitan territories. Consequently, the Committee has this year examined the reports submitted.

The Committee has been informed that the Office has asked the Government to provide further information on the islands of Bonaire, Sint Eustatius and Saba.

Nigeria

The Committee notes that for the second year in succession the reports due on the application ratified Conventions have not been received and that 26 reports are now due: the first report on the application of Convention No. 185 (due since 2010), and 25 other reports (Conventions Nos 8, 11, 16, 19, 29, 32, 45, 81, 87, 88, 94, 97, 98, 100, 105, 111, 123, 133, 134, 138, 144, 155, 178, 179 and 182). Most of them should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. The Committee also notes that two officials of the Ministry of Labour received training in early 2011. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office again informed the Government that it was ready to provide any assistance needed. It requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to submit all the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Sao Tome and Principe

The Committee notes that the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 17 reports are now due: the first report on the application of Convention No. 184 (due since 2007) and 16 others (Conventions Nos 17, 18, 19, 29, 81, 87, 88, 98, 100, 105, 106, 111, 138, 144, 159 and 182). Some of these reports should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. It also notes that two officials of the Ministry of Labour received training in May 2010 at the ILO International Training Centre in Turin. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office informed the Government that it was ready to provide any necessary assistance. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit these reports, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Seychelles

The Committee notes that the first reports on the application of Conventions Nos 147, 161 and 180 (due since 2007) have not been received. While fully aware of the effort the Government made to send the first report on the application of Convention No. 73 (due since 2007), the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit the other first reports, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Sierra Leone

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the sixth year in succession, the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received. It notes that 26 reports are now due (Conventions Nos 8, 16, 17, 19, 22, 26, 29, 32, 45, 58, 59, 81, 87, 88, 94, 95, 98, 99, 100, 101, 105, 111, 119, 125, 126 and 144), most of which should include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. In its letter of 5 September 2011, further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Office informed the Government that it was ready to provide any necessary assistance. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures without delay to submit all the reports and information due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Somalia

The Committee is aware of the exceptional circumstances that affected this country and notes that, for the sixth year in succession, the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 13 reports are now due (Conventions Nos 16, 17, 19, 22, 23, 29, 45, 84, 85, 94, 95, 105 and 111). As the Office indicated in the letter of 5 September 2011 that it sent further to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), the Committee hopes that as soon as the situation in the country allows, the Office will be able to provide all necessary assistance to allow the Government to submit the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

United Kingdom

St Helena

The Committee notes that the first report on the application of Convention No. 182 (due since 2010) has not been received. While fully conscious of the effort the Government made to send 17 reports this year out of the 21 reports requested, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon send the abovementioned first report, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Vanuatu

The Committee notes that the majority of the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received and that 5 reports have been due since 2008 (Conventions Nos 87, 98, 100, 111 and 182), and one since 2010 (Convention No. 185). The Committee notes the effort the Government made to send the first reports on the application of Conventions Nos 29 and 105. It also notes that an official of the Ministry of Internal Affairs received training in May 2010 at the ILO International Training Centre in Turin. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit these reports, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Yemen

The Committee notes that, for the second year in succession, the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions have not been received. It notes that 17 reports are now due: the first report on the application of Convention No. 185 (due since 2010) and 16 other reports (Conventions Nos 16, 19, 29, 58, 81, 87, 98, 100, 105, 111, 122, 138, 144, 156, 158 and 182) and should, for the most part, include information in reply to comments made by the Committee. It notes the statement made by the Government representative to the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011), who pointed out that in view of the situation prevailing in the country and the absence of any specialized technical personnel, it was impossible to meet the reporting obligations. The Committee hopes that as soon as the situation in the country allows, the Office will be able to provide all necessary assistance to allow the Government to submit expeditiously the reports due on the application of ratified Conventions, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Barbados, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Comoros, Croatia, Denmark: Greenland, Eritrea, France: French Polynesia, Ghana, Greece, Haiti, Iceland, Kiribati, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mongolia, Nepal, Pakistan, Rwanda, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, United Republic of Tanzania: Tanganyika, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Uganda.

Afghanistan

Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that the Labour Code of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan has been enacted. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the new Code applies to the rural workers. The Committee observes, however, that section 1 of the Labour Code "regulates the obligations, rights, privileges and social needs of workers", and that section 3(2) of the Code defines workers as "government employees, workers and contractors". The Committee recalls that under Article 2(1) of the Convention the term "rural workers" means any person engaged in agriculture, handicrafts or a related occupation in a rural area, whether as a wage earner or as a self-employed person such as a tenant, sharecropper or small owner-occupier. The Committee therefore requests the Government to clarify whether self-employed workers in the agriculture sector enjoy the rights under the Convention.

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide statistical information concerning the number of rural workers' organizations in the country and to indicate the number of workers who are members of such organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, currently there are about 45,000 rural organizations working for the development and socio-economic uplift of local areas/their own communities, as well as dispute resolution through elected representatives. The Government indicates, however, that workers in rural areas as well as those in agriculture have not formed unions although they are allowed by law to do so. The Government adds that it is largely attributed to the peculiar situation confronting Afghanistan and, in particular, the security situation. In the light of this information, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any policy it had adopted or carried out and steps it had taken pursuant to Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention to eliminate obstacles to the establishment of an organization of rural workers, their growth and the pursuit of their lawful activities, as well as to promote the widest possible understanding of the need to further the development of rural workers' organisations and of the contribution they can make to improving employment opportunities and general conditions of work and life in rural areas, as well as to increasing the national income and achieving a better distribution thereof.

Albania

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the 2009 observations made by the Confederation of Trade Unions of Albania (CTUA). Furthermore, the Committee notes the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in its communication dated 4 August 2011 on matters already examined by the Committee.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of foreign citizens. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the required measures, where necessary through an amendment to the legislation, to ensure that all workers, including foreign workers without a residence permit, can exercise trade union rights, and particularly the right to join organizations which defend their interests as workers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Committee's recommendation will be taken into consideration when the Act on Foreigners will be reviewed. The Committee hopes that the Government's next report will contain information on the amendment of section 5(4) of the Act on Foreigners, in order to ensure that foreign workers enjoy the right to organize as required by Article 2 of the Convention.

Article 3. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee has been commenting for many years on the need to ensure that public servants who do not exercise authority in the name of the State are able to exercise the right to strike. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to a conceptual draft paper on the new Law "On civil service" in Albania stipulating that civil servants will be entitled to the right to strike but with a number of restrictions, which have to be clearly defined in the law. The Committee firmly expects that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the Act on the conditions of service of civil employees without further delay, so as to allow public servants who do not exercise authority in the name of the State to exercise the right to strike in conformity with Article 3 of the Convention. It requests the Government to submit copies of the revised legislation as soon as adopted.

In its previous observations, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to amend section 197/7(4) of the Labour Code, under the terms of which a sympathy strike is lawful if it is organized in support of a lawful strike against an employer who is actively supported by the employer of the sympathy strikers. The Committee recalled that workers should be able to stage sympathy strikes provided that the initial strike that they are supporting is itself lawful. The Committee notes that the Government again indicates that solidarity strikes will be defined in compliance with ILO recommendations when the Labour Code will be reviewed. The Committee firmly expects that the necessary action will be taken in the near future to amend section 197/7(4) of the Labour Code so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the 2009 comments made by the Confederation of Trade Unions of Albania (CTUA). Furthermore, the Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in its communication dated 4 August 2011.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection of workers against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee, noting the CTUA comments regarding cases of anti-union dismissals and related legislative shortcomings, reminded the Government that the Convention prescribes adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and invited the Government to join forces with the social partners to examine the matter of remedies for anti-union dismissals. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to several provisions of the Labour Code setting forth measures concerning protection of trade union rights. The Committee observes that section 146(3) of the Labour Code provides, in cases of anti-union discrimination, for compensation of up to the wage of one year, and section 202(1) for a fine of up to 50 times the minimum wage; that the termination of a union official requires the prior consent of the relevant workers' organization (section 181(4)); but that the remedy of reinstatement is only made available to public administration employees (section 146(3)). The Committee also notes that the ITUC reports that, according to the CTUA, anti-union behaviour is widespread and includes dismissals, transfers, demotions and wage cuts and the law does not allow the victims to obtain reinstatement in their jobs. While it is understood that systems providing for preventive measures (such as prior authorization), sufficiently dissuasive sanctions or reinstatement, are deemed to be compatible with the Convention, the Committee notes with regret that, although it had previously urged the Government to take all necessary steps without delay to establish the arbitration tribunal and labour court provided for in the Labour Code, the Government indicates that arbitration tribunals have not yet become operational in practice. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of Justice has planned to undertake the legal initiative of drafting the new law on arbitrage, which will be accompanied by the relevant procedures of the Civil Procedure Code, and that work has started for drafting this initiative. The Committee also notes that the ITUC reports that, according to Albanian trade unions, courts are overloaded and that it takes around three years to review cases of anti-union harassment. Recalling once again that the existence of general legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough unless they are accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice, and highlighting that justice delayed is justice denied, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to establish the arbitration tribunal and labour court provided for in the Labour Code without further delay so as to provide for expeditious means to protect against and effectively redress acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to supply information with regard to the status of the legal initiative concerning a new law on arbitrage as well as copies of the relevant text as soon as adopted.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Noting in its previous comments that under section 161 of the Labour Code, collective agreements may only be concluded at enterprise or branch level, and that according to the Government no collective agreements at national level had yet been concluded, the Committee had asked the Government to submit to the National Labour Council the matter of promoting collective bargaining in the public and private sectors, including the possibility of bargaining at national level, and to supply information on developments in collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes that in referring to collective bargaining at national level, the Government reiterates that no collective agreements have, as yet, been negotiated or entered into, but that a social memorandum of understanding was concluded in February 2011 between the Council of Ministers, the employers' and workers' organizations and the members of the National Labour Council (however, not all parties have yet signed, with the exception of the CTUA). The Committee requests the Government to continue to make efforts, as required by Article 4, to encourage and promote voluntary collective bargaining in the public and private sectors, including the possibility of bargaining at national level, in particular by mobilizing tripartite forums such as the National Labour Council. The Committee hopes that the Government's next report will contain information on positive developments in this respect.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance from the Office in dealing with all the points raised.

Algeria

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) which concerned the prosecution of members of teachers' trade unions for taking strike action. The Committee notes the ITUC's new observations, dated 4 August 2011, which address points already raised by the Committee and among other matters report instances of repression and harassment of strikers. It also notes the Government's indication in reply to these latter comments that in two cases police executed court orders of eviction. In this respect, the Committee recalls that police intervention to enforce the execution of a court decision affecting strikers should observe the elementary guarantees applicable in any system that respects civil rights and fundamental freedoms. The Committee considers that, in cases of strikes, the authorities should only resort to the use of force in exceptional circumstances and in situations of gravity where there is a serious threat of public disorder, and that such use of force must be proportionate to the circumstances. Governments should take measures to ensure that the competent authorities receive adequate instructions so as to avoid the danger of excessive use of force in trying to control demonstrations that might undermine public order.

The Committee also takes note of the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2701 (its June 2010 meeting) urging the Government to register without delay the National Union of Vocational Training Workers (SNTFP), whose application to register has been awaiting approval since 2002. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the application is being re-examined.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish trade unions. The Committee noted previously that section 6 of Act No. 90-14 of 2 June 1990 restricts the right to establish a trade union organization to persons who are Algerian by birth or who have had Algerian nationality for at least ten years. Pointing out that the right to organize must be guaranteed to workers and employers without distinction or discrimination whatsoever, with the exception of those categories specified in Article 9 of the Convention, and that foreign workers too must have the right to establish organizations, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 6 of Act No. 90-14 so as to grant all workers, without distinction as to nationality, the right to establish a trade union organization. The Committee notes that in its report, the Government states that foreign workers may join one of the existing trade unions, and are thus able to exercise the right to organize as soon as they become members. The Government confirms that they are able to participate in the trade union activities carried on by their organizations and may stand for election to executive office. Noting the amendment requested by the Committee, the Government replies that it will be undertaken in the context of the Labour Code reform. The Committee hopes that the legislative reform will be undertaken in the near future and requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard, particularly on any amendment of section 6 of Act No. 90-14 providing for all workers, without distinction as to nationality, the right to form a trade union organization.

Articles 2 and 5. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization and to establish federations and confederations. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take specific measures to amend the legislative provisions that prevent workers' organizations, irrespective of the sector to which they belong, from forming federations and confederations of their own choosing (sections 2 and 4 of Act No. 90-14). The Committee notes that the Government repeats its previous response, namely that it is aware of the need to word this provision more clearly so as to allow workers' organizations, irrespective of the sector to which they belong, to form federations and confederations. The Committee again urges the Government to report any developments regarding the amendment of section 4 of Act No. 90-14 so as to remove all obstacles preventing workers, regardless of the sector to which they belong, from establishing federations and confederations of their own choosing.

Article 3. Right of organizations to carry on their activities in full freedom and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments the Committee drew attention to section 43 of Act No. 90-02 under which strikes are forbidden not only essential services the interruption of which may endanger the life, personal safety or health of the population, but also where the strike "is liable to give rise to a serious economic crisis". The Committee requested the Government to take steps to amend the Act or to adopt a regulatory text that would clarify this point along the lines indicated by the Government, namely that the wording of section 43 should be similar to that used by the Committee, which refers to "strikes which, by reason of their scope and duration, are liable to cause an acute national crisis". The Committee notes that in its report, the Government repeats that the wording of section 43 allows no interpretation other than that of the Committee. In order to avoid all ambiguity, the Committee is bound once again to ask the Government to adopt a text amending section 43 of Act No. 90-02 or a regulatory text stating expressly that strikes are forbidden in essential services the interruption of which may endanger the life, personal safety or health of whole or part of the population, or where the strike, by reason of its scope and duration, is liable to cause an acute national or local crisis.

Lastly, the Committee commented previously on section 48 of Act No. 90-02 which empowers the Minister or the competent authority, where the strike persists and mediation has failed, or where imperative economic or social need so require, to refer the dispute to the National Arbitration Commission after consulting the employers' and workers' representatives. The Committee requested the Government to take measures without delay to ensure that the National Arbitration Commission may be called upon to end a collective labour dispute only at the request of both parties and/or in the event of a strike in essential services in the strict sense of the term, or in the event of a strike the scope and duration of which are liable to cause an acute national or local crisis, or in the event of a dispute in the public service involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes that in its report the Government provides further details of the arbitration procedure, indicating in particular that pursuant to section 11 of Executive Decree No. 90-148 of 22 December 1990, the application to the National Arbitration Commission must include a submission setting out the imperative economic and social needs requiring referral of the dispute, and it must also set out the arguments as to the advisability of referral put forward by the employer and the representatives of the workers concerned by the dispute. It further notes that in its last report, the Government states that the amendment to section 48 of Act No. 90-02 requested by the Committee will be dealt with in the context of the draft Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard, in particular on any amendments, introduced in the context of the planned legislative reform, to section 48 of Act No. 90-08 to ensure that recourse may be had to the National Arbitration Commission only in the instances set out above.

Angola

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee takes note of the Government's reply to the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the National Union of Angolan Workers – Trade Union Confederation (UNTA-CS) and the General Federation of Independent and Free Trade Unions of Angola (CGSILA). The Committee also notes the comments of the ITUC dated 4 August 2011 on matters already dealt with by the Committee, in particular those concerning restrictions on collective bargaining.

New Constitution. The Committee notes the adoption on 21 January 2010 of the new Constitution of the Republic, which recognizes: (1) freedom of assembly, demonstration and association of all citizens (sections 47 and 48); (2) freedom of occupational association of all workers in independent or liberal professions and all self-employed workers as a whole (section 49); and (3) workers' right to organize and strike (sections 50 and 51).

Legislative reforms. In its previous comments, the Committee noted new Bills to revise the Collective Bargaining Act No. 21-A/92, the Trade Union Act No. 21-C/92 and the Strike Act No. 23/91, which contained some of the amendments it had suggested and underlined as necessary. The Committee had requested the Government:

- to indicate whether the legislation guarantees the right to collective bargaining of public employees who are not engaged in the administration of the State and, if so, to indicate the relevant provisions. The Committee had also requested the Government to specify which public services were not organized in the form of an establishment whose employees were excluded from the scope of Act No. 20-A/92 by virtue of section 2 of this instrument. The Committee notes that, in its recent comment, the ITUC points out that collective bargaining is restricted in the public sector.
- to send information on the collective wage bargaining of public employees who were not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government stating that: (1) wages increases are negotiated within the Council for Social Dialogue which is a tripartite body; (2) there are difficulties in the area of collective bargaining in the country, and the Government has requested ILO technical assistance to cope with this problem. The Committee recalls that according to Article 4 of the Convention, all public servants other than those engaged in the administration of the State should enjoy the right to collective bargaining. The Committee hopes that the technical assistance requested will be provided in the near future and requests the Government to indicate whether the trade union organizations of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State have, under the new Constitution, the right to negotiate with their public employers on working conditions other than wages.
- to amend sections 20 and 28 of the Collective Bargaining Act No. 20-A/92 which provide that collective labour disputes in public utility enterprises may be settled through compulsory arbitration by the Ministry of Labour, Public Administration and Social Security after the parties have been heard. The Committee had noted that the list of public utility activities (section 1.3) was much broader than the concept of essential services in the strict sense of the term (namely, services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population). The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the adoption of the new Constitution has had an impact on the validity of the provisions of Act No. 20-A/92. If not, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend – within the framework of the technical assistance requested by the Government – sections 20 and 28 of the Act in question so that compulsory arbitration may be imposed only in cases involving essential services in the strict sense of the term.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will take account of all the comments made in order to bring the current legislation fully in line with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government once again to enclose a copy of the Bill revising the Collective Bargaining Act No. 20-A/92 with its next report, or the text that might have been adopted meanwhile.

Antigua and Barbuda

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 19 of the Industrial Court Act 1976, which permits the referral of a dispute to the court by the minister or at the request of one party with the consequent effect of prohibiting strike action. The Committee notes that, while the Government indicates that efforts will continue to bring the Industrial Court Act 1976 into conformity with the Convention, and that section 19 is being considered, it reiterates in its report that it has no intention to change its position as regards the power of the minister to refer a dispute to binding arbitration resulting in a ban on strike action. In this regard, the Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration resulting in a ban on strike action should be limited to strikes in essential services in the strict sense of the term, to public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or to cases of acute national or local crisis, or at the request of both parties. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 19 of the Industrial Court Act 1976 taking into account the abovementioned principles.

Prohibition of strikes. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 21 of the Industrial Court Act 1976 which permits injunctions against legal strikes when the national interest is threatened or affected. The Committee notes the Government's indication that efforts will continue to bring the Industrial Court Act 1976 into conformity with the Convention, and that the amendment of section 21 is being considered. In these circumstances, the Committee once again expresses the hope that measures will be taken to amend section 21 of the Industrial Court Act 1976 and requests the Government to communicate any developments in this regard.

Essential services. The Committee had also requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the overly broad list of essential services in the Labour Code, in particular with respect to the government printing office and the port authority. In this regard, it had noted the comments of the Government that the government printing office could be excluded from the list of essential services, and that strikes at the port should not be banned, but should be controlled. In this regard, the Committee had recalled that the implementation of a minimum service for workers at the port authority would be in conformity with the Convention. The Committee had further noted that the Government indicated that it had amended the list of essential services in the Labour Code. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its latest report that amendments to the Labour Code are still being considered by the Cabinet. The Committee expresses the hope that the announced amendments to the list of essential services will be adopted in the near future, so as to eliminate from this list the government printing office and the port authority, which are not essential services in the strict sense of the term, and requests the Government to provide, with its next report, details of these legislative amendments, as well as a copy of the current list of essential services.

Sanctions. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 20(3), (4) and (7) of the Industrial Court Act 1976 which provide for penalties of imprisonment ranging from three months to two years for participating in strikes or lock-outs declared unlawful under this section. The Committee recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and therefore measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. Nevertheless, even in the absence of violence, if the strike modalities had the effect of making the strike illegal, proportionate disciplinary sanctions may be imposed against strikers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that efforts are being made to amend section 20(3), (4) and (7) of the Industrial Court Act 1976. In this context, the Committee expresses the hope that measures will be taken to amend section 20(3), (4) and (7) of the Industrial Court Act 1976, taking into account the abovementioned principles.

Argentina

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and those of 31 August 2010 by the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA), which refer to legislative matters already raised by the Committee and which allege violations of trade union rights in practice (including the death of a demonstrator and an armed attack on the home of a trade union leader). The Committee notes the Government's reply to these comments but observes that it contains no mention of the alleged acts of violence. The Committee draws attention to the seriousness of the allegations and requests the Government to send its observations thereon.

The Committee also notes the comments of 31 August 2011 from the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), expressing the view that the legislation is not in breach of freedom of association.

The Committee recalls that in its last observation it noted the report of the mission undertaken in May 2010, which was exploratory in nature and which addressed pending issues pertaining to the application of the Convention.

Application by the CTA for "trade union status"

The Committee has been noting in its observations since 2005 that the CTA's application for "trade union status" (a status which confers certain exclusive rights such as the conclusion of collective agreements, protection of union officials, payment of trade union dues through deductions from wages by the employer, etc.) (filed in August 2004) is pending. On several occasions the Committee of Experts, in the same way as the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the Committee on Freedom of Association (in Case No. 2477), has urged the Government to secure a decision on this matter without delay. In its 2011 comments, the CTA states that the process has not advanced and that the Ministry of Labour is still undecided as regards the application for “trade union status”. The Committee notes from the report of the mission that visited the country in 2010, that draft resolutions have been submitted to the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate calling for “trade union status” to be granted to the CTA. The Committee notes that in its report the Government again indicates that there are doubts about what the law says regarding the possibility of the coexistence of trade union federations covering multiple sectors and that intervention in the proceedings by the Office of the Prosecutor General of the Ministry of Finance is being considered, and that these are complex situations in which a number of parties are involved and where, furthermore, there are many doubts as to whether the complainants’ claim is admissible, under the relevant legislation. While noting the fresh information sent by the Government, the Committee deplores the length of time that has elapsed (over seven years) without any decision from the administrative authority on the CTA’s application for “trade union status”. The Committee points out the importance of this matter and again urges the Government to ensure that an immediate decision is reached. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Act on trade union associations and its implementing Decree

For many years the Committee has been referring in its comments to certain provisions of the Act on Trade Union Associations No. 23551 of 1988 and its enabling regulations issued by Decree No. 467/88, which are not in conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates the information provided in previous reports and indicates that: (1) as pointed out to the exploratory technical assistance mission undertaken in the country in 2010, the complexity of the situation is an obstacle to progress in amending the legislation since views on the need for amendment are not unanimous or convergent; (2) the ILO Mission noted this complexity and the attendant difficulties and its advice was that any reform of the legislation on trade unions – including the issue of “trade union status”, on which the Committee of Experts has also commented – must fully observe the principle of tripartism and that, in particular, in-depth tripartite consultations should be held in order to reach agreed solutions as far as possible; (3) the Mission saw that all parties, and especially the Government, were predisposed to dialogue, but unfortunately, it has not as yet been possible to consult more thoroughly because of an internal institutional dispute within the CTA, which has been ongoing since the middle of last year, so that progress along the path proposed by the ILO Mission and shared by the Government has not been possible; and (4) consequently, the Government hopes that on conclusion of this episode, which has lasted since the middle of last year, it will be able to meet the social partners in order to seek agreed solutions as far as possible with all social partners involved.

While appreciating this information, the Committee points out that the issues it has addressed in its comments are the following:

“Trade union status”

- section 28 of the Act, under which, in order to challenge an association’s “trade unions status”, the petitioning association must have a “considerably larger” membership; and section 21 of implementing Decree No. 467/88, which qualifies the term “considerably larger” by laying down that the association claiming “trade union status” must have at least 10 per cent more dues-paying members than the organization which currently holds the status. The Committee points out that a requirement of a considerably larger membership, amounting to 10 per cent more members than the union currently holding most representative status, is unduly demanding and contrary to the Convention, since in practice it stands in the way of trade unions that are merely registered being able to claim “trade union status”;
- section 29 of the Act, under which an enterprise trade union may be granted “trade union status” only when no other organization with “trade union status” exists in the geographical area, occupation or category; and section 30 of the Act, under which, in order to be eligible for “trade union status”, unions representing a trade, occupation or category must show that they have different interests from the existing trade union or federation, and the latter’s status must not cover the workers concerned. The Committee considers that the requirements that unions representing enterprises, trades or categories have to meet in order to obtain “trade union status” are unduly demanding, and in practice restrict their access to “trade union status”, giving preferential treatment to existing organizations even where unions representing enterprises, trades or categories of workers are more representative, in accordance with section 28.

Benefits deriving from “trade union status”

- section 38 of the Act, under which the check-off of trade union dues is allowed only for associations with “trade union status”, and not for associations that are merely registered. The Committee points out that, as emphasized by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation, “most representative” status should not imply, for the union that obtains it, privileges other than priority of representation in collective bargaining, in consultations with the authorities and in the appointment of delegates to international bodies. The Committee therefore considers that this provision adversely affects and discriminates unduly against organizations that are merely registered;

- sections 48 and 52 of the Act which give special protection (trade union immunity) only to representatives of organizations that have “trade union status”. The Committee considers that sections 48 and 52 provide preferential treatment for representatives of organizations with “trade union status” in the event of acts of anti-union discrimination, and that this exceeds the privileges that may be granted to the most representative organizations by virtue of the principle set out in the previous paragraph.

Court rulings

In its previous observations the Committee noted that the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation found, in a number of different rulings, that sections 41(a) and 52 of the Act on Trade Union Associations to be unconstitutional, and that Chamber IV of the National Labour Appeal Court found section 29 of the same Act to be unconstitutional. The Committee notes with interest the final ruling of Chamber II of the National Labour Appeal Court in the case Ministry of Labour v. Association of Airline Pilots, finding section 29 of the Act on Trade Union Associations to be unconstitutional, and the ruling by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Province of Buenos Aires in the case Sandes, Hugo Raúl v. Subpga SA relating to compensation for dismissal, finding sections 48 and 52 of the Act on Trade Union Associations to be unconstitutional on the ground that they infringe the principle of freedom of association, enshrined in the Constitution.

The Committee notes that in its report the Government states that: (1) under the Constitution, any finding, even by the Supreme Court of Justice, that some rule (for example a provision of a law) is unconstitutional, applies solely to the specific instance or court case in which it was handed down, and on no account implies the repeal or invalidity of the rule itself, which will remain fully in force for as long as it is not repealed or amended either by the Legislature or by the Executive, whichever of the two is competent to do so; (2) in this way the system ensures observance of the principle of the separation of powers, so that the Judiciary does not impinge on the authority that the National Constitution confers on the other powers; (3) the two cases on which the Court ruled have no bearing on the observations made to the Argentine trade union system, because in the public administration – which is where both situations arose, it is established by Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security Resolution No. 255 that “trade union status” granted to representative associations in the public sector shall not replace pre-existing “trade union status” held by other associations.

The Committee welcomes the fact that the rulings handed down by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation and other national and provincial courts contribute to overcoming a significant part of the problems pending and trusts that they will be taken into account in the tripartite dialogue process that the Government plans to pursue. As it did in its previous observation, the Committee points out that it has been making comments for many years without any specific measures being taken to make the amendments requested. The Committee reminds the Government that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards asked the Government in 2007, together with all the social partners and with technical assistance from the ILO, to draft a bill to give full effect to the Convention. It firmly requests the Government, following a tripartite examination of the report of the Mission that visited the country in 2010 and taking account of the court rulings declaring unconstitutional a number of provisions of the Act on Trade Union Associations No. 23551, to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into line with the Convention, and trusts that in its next report the Government will provide information on progress made in this respect.

Determination of minimum services

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the CTA had referred to Decree No. 272/2006 issued under section 24 of Act No. 25877 on collective labour disputes, objecting specifically to the fact that, under section 2(b) of the Decree, the Guarantees Commission, which includes representation of workers’ and employers’ organizations and of other independent persons for the determination of minimum services, may act only in an advisory capacity, since the final decision on the determination of necessary minimum services lies with the Ministry of Labour where “the parties have not come to an agreement” or “when the agreements are inadequate”. The Committee noted in this connection Decree No. 362 of the National Executive Authority, establishing the Guarantees Commission and appointing its members (with representatives of the Argentine Industrial Union, the Argentine Federation of Law Societies, the National Inter-University Council, the Confederation of Workers of Argentina, the General Confederation of Labour of the Republic of Argentina and the Executive authority), and asked the Government to provide information on cases – in the period covered by the report – in which the Guarantees Commission has intervened regarding minimum services and whether the administrative authority has followed its recommendations in practice. The Committee notes that the Government states in this connection that the Guarantees Commission has intervened on two occasions: (1) in a collective dispute in the province of Mendoza involving the Association of Health Professionals of Mendoza; and (2) in a collective dispute in the province of Tierra del Fuego involving the Association of State Workers. The Committee takes note of this information.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Australia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes the comments of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) in a communication dated 31 August 2011, and of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 on the application of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates that from 1 January 2010, all states other than Western Australia referred their industrial relations powers to the Commonwealth, essentially creating a new national industrial relations system for the private sector known as the national system. Pursuant to the Fair Work Act 2009, the Fair Work Regulations 2009, the Fair Work (Registered Organizations) Act 2009 and the Fair Work (Registered Organizations) Regulations 2009, the national system covers constitutional corporations, the Commonwealth and its authorities, employers who employ flight crews, maritime employees or waterside workers in connection with interstate or overseas trade and commerce, all employers in Victoria, the Northern Territory and the Australian Capital Territory, private sector employers in New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia and Tasmania and local government employers in Tasmania. The Committee notes that the following employers are not covered by the Fair Work Act: (1) state public sector or local government employment or employment by non-constitutional corporations in the private sector in Western Australia; (2) state public sector and local government employment in New South Wales, Queensland and South Australia; and (3) state public sector employment in Tasmania.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In its previous observation, the Committee had noted the concerns raised by the ACTU that most of the restrictions in place under the Workplace Relations Act, 1996, (WR Act) remained in place in the Fair Work Act and had requested the Government to review the following provisions in consultation with the social partners concerned, so as to bring them into conformity with the Convention:

- (i) absence of protection for industrial action aimed at achieving:
 - multiple business agreements (section 413(2));
 - “pattern bargaining” (sections 409(4), 412, 422, 437(2));
 - secondary boycotts and general sympathy strikes (sections 408–411 and Trade Practices Act 1974);
- (ii) negotiations over “unlawful terms” including: to extend unfair dismissal benefits to workers not yet employed for the statutory period; to provide strike pay; to pay bargaining fees to a trade union; and to create a union right to entry for compliance purposes that are different or superior to those contained within the Act (sections 172, 194, 353, 409(1) and (3) and sections 470–475); and
- (iii) provisions which allow for restrictions or prohibitions of industrial action, including through the introduction of compulsory arbitration at the initiative of the Minister, when industrial action is threatening to cause harm to the Australian economy or the life, personal safety or health, or the welfare of the population or a third party (sections 423, 424, 426 and 431).

As regards pattern bargaining, the Government reaffirms that industrial action taken in support of pattern bargaining is not protected under the Fair Work Act but that making common claims across multiple workplaces is not considered to be pattern bargaining if the bargaining representative is genuinely trying to reach an agreement and is willing to negotiate claims at each enterprise (section 412); relevant considerations under section 412(3) include whether the bargaining representative is: (1) demonstrating a preparedness to take into account the individual circumstances of the particular employer; (2) bargaining in a manner consistent with the terms of the agreement being determined as far as possible by agreement between that employer and its employees, and; (3) meeting the good faith bargaining requirements.

As regards industrial action in support of claims for unlawful terms, the Committee takes note of the decisions by Fair Work Australia (FWA) to refuse an application for a protected action ballot order on grounds that it was satisfied that the union’s proposed agreement included an unlawful term, with the result that the proposed industrial action would not have been protected and which led to the issuance of an order terminating the proposed action. The Committee further notes that the Government reaffirms that it is unlawful, under the Fair Work Act, for an employer to pay, or an employee to demand or request, strike pay and that this provision is consistent with the general common law rule that employees are not entitled to receive payment for employment services they do not perform. The Government nevertheless indicates that the Federal Magistrates Court dismissed an employer’s claim that the union had impermissibly asked the employer to pay strike pay, on the basis that expressing a view that employees “should” be paid did not constitute a “demand” for payment in the circumstances.

In respect of the prohibition of secondary boycotts and sympathy strikes, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Competition and Consumer Act 2010 has replaced the Trade Practices Act 1974 but that the secondary boycott provisions have not been amended and that it is not contemplating making such amendments. Furthermore, the Committee had previously noted the need to amend sections 30J and 30K of the Crimes Act, 1914, which respectively prohibit industrial action threatening trade or commerce with other countries or among states and boycotts resulting in the obstruction or hindrance of the performance of services by the Australian Government or the transport of goods or persons in international trade. In addition, section 419 of the Fair Work Act requires FWA to suspend or terminate industrial action in non-national enterprises or by non-national employees, if the event will or would be likely to have the effect of causing substantial loss or damage to the business of a constitutional corporation. The Committee observes that the Government has taken note of its request to review sections 30J and 30K of the Crimes Act 1914 and further notes its indication that there has been one interim order made by FWA under section 419 of the Fair Work Act which was revoked shortly thereafter and no written decision has yet been published in relation to this matter. The Committee nevertheless notes with regret that the Government has not made any amendments to sections 30J and 30K of the Crimes Act 1914 and has maintained the prohibition of secondary boycotts in the Competition and Consumer Act 2010 despite the repeal of the Trade Practices Act 1974 and its long-standing comments in this regard.

As regards FWA authority to suspend or terminate protected industrial action where it causes or threatens to cause significant economic harm pursuant to section 423, the Committee notes the Government's indication that FWA must be satisfied that the threat of significant economic harm is imminent, that the industrial action is protracted and that the dispute will not be resolved in the reasonably foreseeable future as well as further factors listed in section 423(4). The Committee takes note that FWA has considered applications but had not, at the time of reporting, suspended or terminated protected industrial action under section 423 of the Fair Work Act. The Committee further notes that FWA declined to suspend or terminate a protected industrial action on the grounds that it was not convinced that the dispute would not be resolved in the foreseeable future and that FWA did not consider that an action which was causing considerable economic harm to the employer was significant enough in terms of it being exceptional in either its character or magnitude, and further considered that terminating the protected industrial action at that time would not assist in facilitating bargaining and resolving the dispute in the reasonably foreseeable future.

As regards FWA authority to suspend or terminate protected industrial action where it threatens to endanger the life, personal safety or health, or welfare, of the population or part of it or cause significant damage to the Australian economy or an important part of it under section 424 of the Fair Work Act, the Committee notes the Government's indication that applications have been received by FWA under this section and that, like under section 423, FWA has set a high threshold for ending industrial action on these grounds. The Committee however notes comments made by ACTU with regard to a decision of FWA, upheld in appeal, to suspend protected action for two weeks in the context of industrial action in the education sector, on the basis that a union ban on recording and transmitting exam results threatened the welfare of graduating students by prejudicing their ability to secure future employment. ACTU indicates that this decision was taken despite the union having taken steps to set up an exemptions committee to ensure that any student with a genuine need to obtain results could do so. The ACTU considers that a broad interpretation of section 424 unduly restricts the rights of workers to take industrial action. The Committee further notes that the Government indicates that FWA considered cases concerning actions causing damage to the Australian economy and started applying the decision of the High Court of Australia which ruled that there must be a rigorous basis for deciding that protected industrial action is causing significant damage to the Australian economy over and above "generalized predictions" as to the likely consequence of the industrial action in question.

As regards FWA authority to suspend protected industrial action where it is threatening to cause significant harm to a third party under section 426 of the Fair Work Act, the Committee notes the Government's indication that FWA may take into account the extent to which the protected action threatens to damage the ongoing viability of an enterprise carried on by a person, disrupt the supply of goods or services to an enterprise carried on by the person, reduce the person's capacity to fulfil a contractual obligation or cause other economic loss to the person. FWA must also be satisfied that the suspension is appropriate, taking into account whether the suspension would be contrary to the public interest or inconsistent with the objects of the Act. The Government indicates that section 426 was considered by FWA which concluded that the expression "significant harm" required the identification of harm that was exceptional in its character or magnitude, out of the ordinary and over and above harm of the sort that is commonly a consequence of protected industrial action.

The Committee takes due note of the detailed information provided by the Government concerning the limitations on the use of the abovementioned provisions. It also notes the Government's indications that it has not amended the abovementioned provisions as it considers that, overall, the industrial action provisions of the Fair Work Act strike the right balance between an employee's right to strike and the need to protect life and economic stability in a manner that is appropriate to Australia's national conditions and that FWA has set a high threshold for allowing for suspension or termination of protected industrial action in specific circumstances under sections 423, 424, 426 of the Fair Work Act.

The Committee further notes the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2698 (357th Report, paragraphs 213–229) concerning the abovementioned provisions. The Committee recalls that the right to strike is one of the essential means available to workers and their organizations for the promotion and protection of their economic and social interests. These interests not only have to do with better working conditions and pursuing collective demands of an occupational nature, but also with seeking solutions to economic and social policy questions and to labour problems of any kind which are of direct concern to the workers (General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 147). The Committee further recalls that the right to strike may only be restricted or prohibited: (1) in the public service only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; or (2) in essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee recalls that a broad range of legitimate strike action could be impeded by linking restrictions on strike action to interference with trade and commerce. While the economic impact of industrial action and its effect on trade and commerce may be regrettable, such consequences in and of themselves do not render a service “essential” and thus do not justify restrictions on the right to strike. The Committee requests once again the Government to take all appropriate measures, in the light of its previous comments and in consultation with the social partners, to review the abovementioned provisions of the Fair Work Act, the Competition and Consumer Act 2010 and the Crimes Act 1914 with a view to bringing them into full conformity with the Convention. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on the application of these provisions by the FWA.

Strike ballots. The Committee recalls the concerns raised by the ACTU that the ballot process could be used by employers to frustrate or delay the taking of protected industrial action. In this regard, the Committee recalls that under the Fair Work Act, industrial action must be authorized by a protected action ballot of employees except where employees are taking protected industrial action in response to industrial action taken by their employer. Section 459 of the Fair Work Act requires at least 50 per cent of employees on the roll of voters to vote, and of these, more than 50 per cent must approve the proposed action. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that for FWA to make a protected action ballot order where an application is made under section 437 it must be satisfied that each applicant has been, and is, genuinely trying to reach an agreement with an employer (section 443(1)). Whether an applicant has been genuinely trying to reach an agreement is a question of fact to be determined in the circumstances of the particular case. The Government further indicates that a substantial body of case law has developed about the meaning of “genuinely trying to reach an agreement” in the context of protected action ballot applications. The Committee takes note in particular of the general indicia set out by FWA including: (1) the length of negotiations, including the amount of explanation and detail exchanged between the applicant and other parties; (2) the extent of progress in negotiations and steps taken to try to reach an agreement; and (3) whether the applicant has articulated its claims and has provided responses to proposals made by other parties. The Committee further notes that the recent statistics provided by FWA indicate that in the December 2010 quarter, 189 protected application ballots were made and 184 granted and that in the March 2011 quarter, 134 applications were made and 115 granted.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to take steps to ensure that the exercise of the right to strike in practice is not restricted by unduly challenging and complicated strike ballot procedures and to continue providing statistics on the number of protected action ballots authorized out of a total number of applications, as well as to any important or excessive delays resulting from this procedure.

Access to the workplace. The Committee recalls that it previously raised the need to amend the restrictive conditions set for granting a permit allowing trade union representatives to have entry to the workplace in order to meet with workers. In its previous observation, the Committee had noted that, under the Fair Work Act, a union official must hold a permit provided by FWA in order to have the right of entry for a certain workplace. In determining whether to grant an entry permit, FWA will consider any matter it considers relevant, including whether the applicant has ever been convicted of violating an industrial law or convicted of a crime involving fraud, entry into premises, or intentional use of violence or destruction of property (section 513). The Committee had further noted that the Fair Work Act permits union officials to hold discussions with employees who are members, or eligible to be members, of a union and to enter workplaces to investigate suspected breaches of the Act or an instrument made under the Act and had requested the Government to provide information on the practical application of this provision, including statistics relating thereto.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it considers that the Fair Work Act retains a fair and balanced framework for right of entry for officials of organizations and empowers FWA to deal with abuses of rights by officials, unreasonable requests by employers and disputes. The Government further indicates that FWA has reported in its quarterly reports that 1,079 applications for a right of entry permit have been received since July 2010 and 866 have been granted. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the practical application and impact of these provisions concerning workers representatives’ access to the workplace in its next report, including on the delay in which entry permits are granted and the grounds provided for denying applications or revoking permits.

Building industry. The Committee recalls from previous comments that the Building and Construction Industry Improvement (BCII) Act of 2005: (i) renders virtually all forms of industrial action in the building and industrial sector unlawful (sections 36, 37 and 38 of the BCII Act refer to “unlawful industrial action” implying not simply liability in tort vis-à-vis the employer, but a wider responsibility towards third parties and an outright prohibition of industrial action); (ii) introduces severe financial penalties, injunctions and actions for uncapped damages in case of “unlawful industrial action” (sections 39, 40 and 48–50 of the BCII Act); (iii) gives the enforcement agency known as the Australian Building and Construction Commission (ABCC) wide-ranging coercive powers akin to an agency charged with investigating criminal matters, which have allegedly resulted in interference in the internal affairs of trade unions, including through the use of the power to impose a penalty of six months’ imprisonment for failure to comply with a notice to produce documents or give information (sections 52, 53, 55, 56 and 59 of the BCII Act); and (iv) grants the capacity to the Minister for Workplace Relations to regulate industrial affairs in the building and construction industry by ministerial decree through a device referred to as a building code which is inconsistent with the Convention on several points and is implicitly “enforced” through an “accreditation scheme” for contractors who wish to enter into contracts with the Commonwealth. The Committee recalls that it previously requested the Government to indicate any progress made concerning the adoption of new legislation in respect of the building and construction industry in full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the Building and Construction Industry Improvement Amendment (Transition to Fair Work) Bill 2009, introduced into the Parliament on 17 June 2009, was not adopted before the Parliament was prorogued when the 2010 Federal election was called, and has been placed on the legislative agenda to be reintroduced in the 2011 spring sitting of Parliament. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that in early 2011, the ABCC Commissioner conducted a review of the practice and procedure relating to the use of powers under section 52 of the BCII Act and has, where possible, voluntarily adopted the Wilcox report recommendations and put in place some safeguards which should be respected before issuing a notice under section 52 of the BCII Act. The Government further indicates that the Commonwealth Ombudsman will be invited to conduct its own investigation on each occasion where section 52 powers are used as well as asked to review the way in which the ABCC Commissioner intends to use these powers.

The Committee notes with regret that the abovementioned restrictions remain unchanged in the construction and building industry and observes with concern the allegations made by the ITUC and the ACTU respectively that ABCC inspectors continue to harass trade union members and officials in the construction sector, including by conducting secret interrogations of individual workers, and that the ABCC investigations and prosecutions show a strong bias in targeting trade unions and workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on the ITUC and the ACTU comments and to take all necessary measures to ensure that trade union members and officials in the construction sector are not victim of harassment and targeting by the ABCC. The Committee further expresses once again the firm hope that the legislative reform undertaken in the building and construction industry will soon be completed and will bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information in this respect in its next report, including information related to the use of section 52 powers by the ABCC and to related investigations conducted by the Commonwealth Ombudsman.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes the comments of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) in a communication dated 31 August 2011 and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 on the application of the Convention, in particular as regards: (1) the alleged intention of the Government of South Australia to unilaterally cut entitlements of public sector workers which had been agreed upon in good faith through collective agreements; and (2) the recommendations of the review of state industrial relations made by the Western Australian Government to give employers the power to insist their employees sign individual contracts and to remove unfair dismissal protections for employees in small businesses. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on these matters in its next report.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates that from 1 January 2010, all States other than Western Australia referred their industrial relations powers to the Commonwealth, essentially creating a new national industrial relations system for the private sector known as the national system. Pursuant to the Fair Work Act 2009, the Fair Work Regulations 2009, the Fair Work (Registered Organizations) Act 2009 and the Fair Work (Registered Organizations) Regulations 2009, the national system covers constitutional corporations, the Commonwealth and its authorities, employers who employ flight crews, maritime employees or waterside workers in connection with interstate or overseas trade and commerce, all employers in Victoria, the Northern Territory and the Australian Capital Territory, private sector employers in New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia and Tasmania and local government employers in Tasmania. The Committee notes that the following employers are not covered by the Fair Work Act: (1) State public sector or local government employment or employment by non-constitutional corporations in the private sector in Western Australia; (2) State public sector and local government employment in New South Wales, Queensland and South Australia; and (3) State public sector employment in Tasmania.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in respect of employment. In its previous comments, the Committee raised the need to ensure that workers are adequately protected against anti-union discrimination, especially against dismissals for industrial action taken in the context of negotiations of multiple business agreements and "pattern bargaining" (i.e. negotiations seeking common wages or conditions of employment for two or more proposed collective agreements with different employers or even different subsidiaries of the same parent company). Pursuant to sections 347 and 772 of the Fair Work Act, 2009, and to information provided by the Government, the Committee understood that protections against anti-union discrimination, including against dismissals, covered pattern bargaining to the extent that the parties were genuinely trying to reach an agreement. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the manner in which industrial action related to pattern bargaining was protected in practice, including any relevant decisions from Fair Work Australia. The Committee further requested the Government to indicate the steps taken or envisaged to ensure protection against anti-union dismissals related to actions taken in respect of multiple business agreements.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the industrial activity protection under Part 3-1 of the Fair Work Act only prohibits adverse action being taken against a person who engages in lawful activity and that industrial action related to pattern bargaining is not considered to be a lawful industrial activity under the Act unless the parties are genuinely trying to reach an agreement. As the Government has not provided any further information in relation to protection of industrial action related to pattern bargaining, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any relevant decisions emanating from FWA and the steps taken to ensure protection in relation to action aimed at achieving multiple business agreements.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee previously noted with satisfaction that individual statutory agreements were not part of the new system established under the Fair Work Act but that, in line with the Government's prior policy commitments, existing Australian Workplace Agreements (AWAs) would continue to apply until they are terminated. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice.

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the Fair Work Act does not allow for "employer greenfields agreements" and that the making of greenfields agreements between employers and relevant employee organizations is regulated by section 172(2)(b) of the Act. The Government indicates that as of 31 December 2010, greenfields agreements represented 6.1 per cent of all Fair Work Act agreements (551 out of 9,077) and reaffirmed that AWAs and Individual Transitional Employment Agreements (ITEAs) can no longer be made but AWAs lodged on or before 27 March 2008 and ITEAs lodged on or before 31 December 2009 continue to operate until they are terminated or replaced: they can be terminated by common agreement of the employer and employee at any time, or unilaterally when they reach their nominal expiry date and, once terminated, any new enterprise agreement that covers the employee will then apply. Unilateral conditional termination can also be made pending the making of a new enterprise agreement to enable the employee to participate in collective bargaining for an enterprise agreement.

The Committee draws the attention to the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No 2698 (357th Report, paragraphs 213–229) regarding the possibility for employers pursuant to the Fair Work Act to enter into agreements directly with employees, even where a union exists. The Committee underlines that the Committee on Freedom of Association recalled that direct negotiation between an undertaking and its employees, bypassing representative organizations where these exist, might, in certain cases, be detrimental to the principle that negotiation between employers and organizations of workers should be encouraged and promoted, and requested the Government to ensure respect for this principle and to provide detailed information on the application of section 172 of the Fair Work Act in practice. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application and impact of section 172 in practice, as well as, on the current situation with regard to AWAs and ITEAs, including further statistical data on the number of AWAs and ITEAs terminated since the entry into force of the Fair Work Act, the number of remaining AWAs and ITEAs applicable and their expected termination dates.

In several of its previous comments, the Committee had raised the need to repeal or amend sections 151(1)(h), 152, 331(1)(a)(ii) and 332(3) of the Workplace Relations Act so as to ensure that multiple business agreements were not subject to a requirement of prior authorization at the discretion of the employment advocate. The Committee had noted that section 186 of the Fair Work Act requires that any enterprise agreement be authorized by the FWA and that FWA may only approve multi-employer agreements if it is satisfied that no person coerced, or threatened to coerce, any of the employers to make the agreement. The Committee had further noted that the Fair Work Act allowed employers who wish to voluntarily bargain together for a multi-enterprise agreement to do so with no public interest test and no requirement of FWA approval but that, in this instance, employers and employees would not have access to protected industrial action.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that during the period of 1 July 2009 to 31 December 2010, 56 per cent of the agreements approved by FWA were multi-enterprise agreements. The Committee further notes that the FWA provides a special stream of bargaining for multi-enterprise agreements for low paid workers who have not historically participated in enterprise level bargaining: FWA must make a low paid authorization if it is satisfied that making the authorization is in the public interest pursuant to section 243 of the Fair Work Act. The Committee observes that the Government states that the first low paid authorization was made by FWA on 5 May 2011 and will cover aged care employees. As regards pattern bargaining, the Committee notes that the Government reaffirms that the Fair Work Act does not prevent employer and employee representatives from engaging in discussions at the industry level and provides examples of cases in which parties have been involved in discussions at the industry level including in universities and independent schools, in the offshore oil and gas industry as well as in the metal and in the construction and building industries. The Committee notes that FWA took into account the factors listed under section 412(3) to determine whether a bargaining representative was genuinely trying to reach an agreement and was willing to negotiate claims at each enterprise.

The Committee further draws the attention to the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2698 (357th Report, paragraphs 213–229) in this respect.

Finally, the Committee observes that the Government explains that the effect of terminating protected industrial action under sections 423, 424 or 431 is that bargaining representatives have a negotiating period of 21 days (extendable to 42 days by FWA) in which to resolve the matters at issue and that, if the parties are unable to reach agreement, FWA must make a binding industrial action related workplace determination which has effect as an enterprise agreement (sections 266–268 of Part 2–5 of Division 3 of the Fair Work Act). The Committee notes that no such determination has yet been made. The Committee further observes that under section 240 of the Act, a bargaining representative may request FWA to deal with a dispute about a proposed enterprise agreement if the bargaining representatives are unable to resolve the dispute and that the application may be made by one bargaining representative, whether or not the other bargaining representatives for the agreement have agreed to the making of the application if the proposed agreement is a single-enterprise agreement or a multi-enterprise agreement in relation to which a low-paid authorization is in operation. The Committee recalls that arbitration imposed by the authorities at the request of one party is generally contrary to the principle of the voluntary negotiation of collective agreements established under the Convention, and thus the autonomy of bargaining partners and that, based on the premise that a negotiated agreement, however unsatisfactory, is to be preferred to an imposed solution, the parties should always retain the option of returning voluntarily to the bargaining table (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraphs 257 and 259). The Committee requests the Government to clarify the role of FWA in case of continuing disagreement between the parties and whether the parties remain able to resume negotiations at any point.

Building industry. The Committee recalls that it previously requested the Government to: (i) revise section 64 of the Building and Construction Industry Improvement (BCII) Act to ensure that the determination of the bargaining level is left to the discretion of the parties and is not imposed by law or the decision of the administrative authority; and (ii) promote collective bargaining, especially by ensuring that there are no financial penalties or incentives linked to undue restrictions on collective bargaining. The Committee had previously noted with interest the Government's indication that it has introduced the Building and Construction Industry Improvement Amendment (Transition to Fair Work) Bill, 2009 in order to amend the BCII Act and it would: (i) repeal section 64 of the BCII Act with the effect that the level of bargaining would be determined in accordance with the Fair Work Act; and (ii) retain the capacity currently for the Minister to issue a Building Code though, to date, the Government has not issued a Building Code under section 27 of the BCII Act.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the Building and Construction Industry Improvement Amendment (Transition to Fair Work) Bill 2009, introduced into the Parliament on 17 June 2009, was not adopted before the Parliament was prorogued when the 2010 federal election was called, and has been placed on the legislative agenda to be reintroduced in the 2011 spring sitting of Parliament. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the ABC Commissioner is engaged with the social partners about the content and production of a Guide to Good Faith Collective Bargaining in the Building and Construction Industry to be published in 2011. The Committee takes note of the information and expresses once again the firm hope that the undertaken legislative reform in the building and construction industry will soon be completed in full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect in its next report as well as information on the progress made in the development of the Guide to Good Faith Collective Bargaining in the building and construction industry.

Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 281 of the Labour Code, which, according to the Government, prohibits strikes in the railway and air transport sectors, and section 233 of the Criminal Code, which penalizes strikes in public transport with penalties of up to three years of imprisonment, so as to ensure that workers of public transport, including those employed in air and railway transport, can exercise the right to strike, and to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged in this respect. The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that the consultations with the relevant state authorities and social partners resulted in the understanding that like the hospital sector, electricity and water supply services, transport and postal services are basic services where the right to strike can be restricted or even prohibited. The Committee recalls that, as an exception to the general principle of the right to strike, the essential services in which this principle may be entirely or partly waived should be defined restrictively. It considers that essential services are only those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee recalls that while the hospital sector, electricity and water supply services can indeed be considered essential, transport services in general, including air and railway transport, and postal services do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee considers, however, that in order to avoid damages which are irreversible or out of proportion to the occupational interests of the parties to the dispute, as well as damages to third parties, namely the users or consumers who suffer the economic effects of collective disputes, the authorities could establish a system of minimum service in other services which are of public utility rather than impose an outright ban on strikes, which should be limited to essential services in the strict sense of the term. In the view of the Committee, such a service should meet at least two requirements. Firstly, it must genuinely and exclusively be a minimum service, that is one which is limited to the operations which are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear. Secondly, since this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their economic and social interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities. It would be highly desirable for negotiations on the definition and organization of the minimum service not to be held during a labour dispute, so that all parties can examine the matter with the necessary objectivity and impartiality. The parties might also envisage the establishment of a joint or independent body responsible for examining rapidly and without formalities the difficulties raised by the definition and application of such a minimum service and empowered to issue enforceable decisions. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government's next report will contain information on measures taken or envisaged to amend section 281 of the Labour Code and section 233 of the Criminal Code so as to ensure that air and railway transport sector workers can exercise the right to strike, taking into account the principles described above.

The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that section 6(1) of the Act on Trade Unions, according to which "trade unions are prohibited from engaging in political activity, associating with political parties or carrying out joint activities, providing and receiving assistance or donations to/from political parties" was repealed in 2006. The Committee once again requests the Government to transmit with its next report a copy of the repealing instrument.

Articles 1 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 alleging that despite an adequate protection of trade union rights in law, trade union activities in multinational companies are often reprimanded in practice. The Committee recalls that it had previously noted similar comments made by the ITUC in 2007, which also alleged that employers often delayed negotiations and unions rarely participated in determining wage levels and were often bypassed in the conclusion of bilateral agreements between the Government and multinational enterprises. The Committee regrets that the Government's report contains no observations on the ITUC 2007 comments. Once again recalling that it is the responsibility of the Government to ensure the application of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to initiate an investigation into the ITUC's allegations and to provide information on the measures taken in this respect. It further requests the Government to provide its observations on the ITUC's allegations.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains information on the protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and the collective bargaining procedure.

In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the legislation made a distinction between a "collective agreement", concluded at the enterprise level following bipartite negotiations between workers and employers, and a "collective accord", concluded at industry, territorial or national levels following bipartite (between trade unions and the authorities) or tripartite (between trade unions, employers' organizations and the authorities of the appropriate level) negotiations. The Committee recalled that while tripartism was particularly appropriate for the regulation of questions of a larger scope (drafting of legislation, formulating labour policies), the principle of tripartism should not replace the principle of autonomy of workers' organizations and employers (or their organizations) in collective bargaining on conditions of employment. The Committee also recalled that, according to Article 4 of the Convention, free and voluntary bargaining with a view to the regulation of terms and conditions of employment should be conducted between workers' organizations and an employer or employers' organization and therefore requested the Government to take measures to amend its legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee regrets that no information has been provided by the Government in this respect. It therefore reiterates its previous requests and reminds the Government that ILO technical assistance remains at its disposal on the abovementioned issues.

Bahamas

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee recalls that in its previous direct request it noted that the Labour Relations Act does not apply to the prison service (section 3) and requested the Government to guarantee these workers the right to organize. The Committee noted the Government's statement that it was currently reviewing the provisions of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) with a view to address the right of prison staff to organize. The Committee expresses the hope that the IRA will be amended in the near future so as to formally and expressly recognize the right to organize to prison staff and asks the Government to provide a copy of the amended text as soon as it has been adopted.

Right of workers and employers to establish organizations without previous authorization. In its previous direct request, the Committee noted that, according to section 8(1)(e) of the IRA, the registrar shall refuse to register a trade union if he considers, after applying the rules for the registration of trade unions, that the union should not be registered. The rules for registration are provided in Schedule I. According to section 1 of the Schedule, in applying the rules of the registration of trade unions, the registrar shall exercise his discretion. The Committee noted the Government's statement that this provision is intended to ensure that there is no confusion or ambiguity regarding the rights of workers to certain information (finances and related matters) and that trade unions do not adopt names that are similar in nature and thereby confusing to the bargaining unit. As already stated, it is the Committee's view that provisions which confer on the competent authority a genuinely discretionary power to grant or reject a registration request, or to grant or withhold the approval required for the establishment and functioning of an organization, are tantamount to a requirement for previous authorization which is not compatible with Article 2 of the Convention (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 74). The Committee therefore asks the Government once again to take the necessary measures to ensure that no discretionary power is conferred to the registrar to refuse the registration of trade unions or employers' organizations and to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Article 3. Right of workers' and employers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules and to elect their representatives freely. The Committee noted, in its previous direct request, that section 20(2) of the IRA, according to which the secret ballot for election or removal of trade union officers and for amendment of the constitution of trade unions should be taken under the supervision of the registrar or a designated officer, was contrary to the principles of freedom of association. The Committee noted the Government's statement to the effect that it concurs with the Committee's view regarding this section and that recommendation for its amendment is in the process of being submitted to Cabinet for consideration. The Committee expresses the hope that concrete measures will be taken to amend section 20(2) of the IRA so as to ensure that trade unions could conduct a ballot without interference from the authorities. It requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee notes that the constitution of every trade union should provide that executive committees and officers of trade unions should be elected at intervals not exceeding three years (section 9(4)(1) of Schedule I). The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this section implies that trade union officers cannot be re-elected for a consecutive term.

The Committee notes that, according to section 9(4)(3) of Schedule I, the constitution of a trade union should include a provision to the effect that every officer must be a person who is legally entitled to be employed in the Bahamas in the industry, or as a member of the craft or category of employees, which the union represents. The Committee requests the Government to clarify the meaning of this provision and, in particular, to indicate whether only nationals of the Bahamas can be elected to the posts of trade union officers.

Right to strike. The Committee notes section 20(3) requiring a strike ballot to be taken under supervision by an officer of the ministry. If this section is not complied with, a strike is unlawful. The Committee considers that, with a view to ensuring freedom from any influence or pressure by the authorities, which might affect the exercise of the right to strike in practice, the legislation should not provide for supervision of a ballot by the authorities. The Committee requests the Government to amend section 20(3) accordingly to the above principle and to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee notes that, under the terms of section 73, the minister shall refer the dispute to the tribunal if the parties to the dispute, within non-essential services, failed to reach a settlement. It is unlawful to have recourse to strike action once the dispute is referred to the tribunal (section 77(1)). Furthermore, according to section 76(1), a strike which, in the opinion of the minister, affects or threatens the public interest, might be referred to the tribunal for settlement. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute and a strike is acceptable only if it is at the request of both parties involved in a dispute, or if the strike in question may be restricted, even banned, i.e. in the case of a dispute in the public service involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, in the event of an acute national emergency, or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely those services whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend its legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention and to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee notes that section 75 restricts the objective of a strike. It appears to the Committee that protest and sympathy strikes are illegal under the terms of section 75. In the view of the Committee, organizations responsible for defending workers' socio-economic and occupational interests should, in principle, be able to use strike action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed by major social and economic policy trends which have a direct impact on their members and on workers in general, in particular as regards employment, social protection and the standard of living. Furthermore, the Committee considers that a general prohibition on sympathy strikes could lead to abuse and that workers should be able to take such action, provided the initial strike they are supporting is itself lawful (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraphs 165 and 168). The Committee requests the Government to ensure the right of workers' organizations to recourse to this type of strike and to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee notes that, when a strike is organized or continued in violation of the abovementioned provisions, excessive sanctions, including imprisonment for up to two years are provided (sections 74(3), 75(3), 76(2)(b) and 77(2)). The Committee recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and therefore measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. Nevertheless, even in the absence of violence, if the strike modalities had the effect of making the strike illegitimate, proportionate disciplinary sanctions may be imposed against strikers. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to amend the Labour Relations Act so as to bring it into conformity with freedom of association principles on this point.

Article 5. Right of organizations to establish federations and confederations and to affiliate with international organizations. The Committee notes section 4 of Schedule I concerning the registration of federations, etc. The Committee asks the Government to explain how this provision is applied in practice.

The Committee notes section 39 concerning control of foreign connections of unions and federations. Under the terms of this section, it shall not be lawful for a trade union to be a member of any body constituted or organized outside the Bahamas without a licence from the minister, who has discretionary power to grant or refuse it and/or to accompany it with certain conditions. The Committee recalls that Article 5 of the Convention stipulates that first-level organizations, as well as federations and confederations, have the right to affiliate with international organizations of workers and employers. Legislation which restricts the right of international affiliation by requiring prior authorization by the public authorities, or by permitting it only in certain conditions established by law, poses serious difficulties with regard to the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend its legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

Finally, with reference to its previous direct request, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the situation with regard to the draft Trade Union and Labour Relations Act and the draft Industrial Tribunal and Trade Disputes Act.

The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the issues raised above in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation in a communication dated 4 August 2011, which refer to matters previously examined by the Committee.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which reads as follows:

Prison guards. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's statement to the effect that measures to allow for the organization of prison guards were currently under consideration and that it was envisaged to review the relevant provision. The Committee expressed the hope that, as the Government stated that amendments to the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) were under review, the future legislation would recognize prison guards' right to organize and to collective bargaining and asked the Government to inform it of developments in this regard.

Fire brigade workers. The Committee had further noted the Government's view that, as far as the fire brigade was concerned, it was not desirable that its members be allowed to organize in view of the fact that it consisted exclusively of police officers, that is members of a disciplined force, who doubled as trained firefighters. The Committee had requested the Government to clarify whether they were police agents which also had functions of firefighters or whether they were exclusively firefighters covered by police status.

Other questions. The Committee had also regretted to note that the Government had not replied to the questions raised in its previous comments concerning Article 2 of the Convention (acts of interference). The Committee had requested the Government to adopt legislative provisions to protect workers' and employers' organizations against acts of interference by each other or each other's agents, accompanied by effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. In a previous comment, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that provisions strengthening this protection were contained in the Trade Unions and Industrial Relations Bill, 2000, a copy of which would be sent to the ILO after its adoption by the Legislative Assembly. The Committee expressed the hope that the future legislation would guarantee an adequate protection against acts of interference and had requested the Government to keep it informed in this respect.

Representativeness for collective bargaining. The Committee had also taken note of the comments on the application of the Convention submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) criticizing the requirement for a trade union to represent 50 per cent of the workers plus one in a unit in order to be recognized for bargaining purposes and the fact that an employer may, after 12 months of unsuccessful negotiations, apply for a union's recognition to be revoked (with some employers deliberately dragging out negotiations for that purpose). The ITUC added that the Government had failed to honour industrial agreements. The Committee requested the Government to send its comments on the ITUC's observations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments submitted by the ITUC, dated 4 August 2011, which refer to matters previously examined by the Committee.

Bangladesh

Right of Association (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 11) (ratification: 1972)

In its previous comments, recalling that all those engaged in agriculture – including those not employed in the organized sector – enjoy the same rights of association and combination as industrial workers, the Committee requested the Government to provide concrete information on the number of existing trade unions in the agricultural sector and the number of collective agreements concluded.

The Committee notes that the Government provides statistics in its report regarding the number of existing trade unions in the agricultural sector (jute: 161; tobacco: 68; sugar: 17; fisheries: 6; rubber: 24; tea: 10) for a total of around 282,000 members. The Committee requests the Government to provide additional information in its next report on the number of collective agreements concluded in the agricultural sector.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1972)

Workers' and employers' organizations comments. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in previous years. With respect to ITUC allegations concerning acts of violence, physical assault and arrests of trade union leaders and trade unionists that participated in strikes in the garment sector, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) it is fully aware and committed to freedom of association free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind and that the labour situation has improved after lifting the state of emergency; (ii) some groups and persons were creating anarchy in industrial areas and were involved in criminal activities and in these circumstances, the police and intelligence agency have taken measures to maintain law and order situation and that people were arrested for criminal offences, not for taking part in trade union activities; (iii) to protect public properties and to clear the blockades organized in the garment sector, the law enforcement agencies had to interrogate some violence-creating persons, but they did not harass anyone, those actions were not aimed at harassing trade union leaders, nor to disrupt the trade union activities in the country and further, law enforcement agencies are performing their duties under directives and close supervision of the Ministry of Home Affairs; (iv) at that time, 350 women trade unionists, including the General Secretary of the Women's Committee of the Jatiya Sramik League, were arrested as they were in the crowd but they were released after a while and no charges were brought against them; and (v) it believes that the rights of workers' and employers' organizations can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind and that the laws do not allow any undue interference with trade union activities.

The Committee further notes the Bangladesh Employers' Federation's comments related to the ITUC's allegations of acts of violence and that it indicated in particular that: (i) in the garment sector, trade unions are affiliated to different political parties and they act according to the instigated instruction of those political parties; (ii) killing, assaults and arrests are not at all desirable in workplaces; (iii) the reason of such undesirable acts is unawareness on the part of trade unions about the principle of freedom of association and that, therefore, workers carry out acts of vandalism, damage and blockade of the roads and highways for the realization of demands instead of negotiation or bipartite discussions; (iv) in such situation, the law enforcement authority has to enforce the law; and (v) under such circumstances, the workers as well as employers of the garment sector need to be educated through a process of training and awareness raising, which should explain the benefits of freedom of association to the workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee understands that the Government is availing itself of ILO technical assistance to raise awareness of freedom of association rights in the sector, and expects that this assistance will promote the full realization of these rights in the sector.

With respect to its request to indicate the status of the court case concerning the Bangladesh Garments and Industrial Sramik Federation (BGIWF) registration, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Department of Labour submitted the case for the cancellation of the registration of the BGIWF for violation of its constitution and unfair labour practice to the labour court in 2008 (No. 51 of 2008), and that the next hearing date was fixed on 16 November 2011. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the status of the registration of the BGIWF.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments submitted by the ITUC on 4 and 31 August 2011, concerning allegations of killings and physical assaults of protesters and arrests, detention, harassment and violence against trade union leaders notably in the garment sector, the maritime sector, the shrimp cultivation and processing industry and export processing zones (EPZs) as well as the refusal by the Registrar of Trade Unions (RTU) to register new unions in the garment sector. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to carry out investigations concerning these serious allegations with a view to determining responsibilities and punishing those responsible, and to provide full particulars in this respect.

Right to organize in EPZs. The Committee had previously noted the ITUC's allegation that the Bangladesh Export Processing Zones Authority (BEPZA) continued to raise obstacles to the establishment of workers' associations in EPZs. The Committee notes that in its 2011 comments, the ITUC indicates that, although the EPZ Workers' Association and Industrial Relations Act (2004) provided for the formation of trade unions in the EPZs, an amendment of this law in 2010, only replaced the term "Workers' Association" by "Workers' Welfare Society", which means that the right to form trade unions in EPZs remains far off. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the BEPZA is doing its utmost to ensure that Workers' Welfare Societies are established in all enterprises within the shortest possible time. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide information and statistics on the number of workers' welfare societies established in the EPZs; and (ii) inform of all steps taken to amend legislation so that EPZ workers may fully exercise the rights guaranteed by the Convention.

The Committee further recalls that it had previously commented on the EPZ Workers' Associations and Industrial Relations Act 2004, which contains numerous and significant restrictions and delays in relation to the right to organize in EPZs. The Committee noted that according to the Government, the BEPZA was aware of the Committee's comments in this regard, which would be taken into consideration in the present review and amendment process of the EPZ Workers' Associations and Industrial Relations Act 2004. The Committee notes with deep regret that in August 2010, the Parliament passed the EPZ Workers' Welfare Society and Industrial Relations Act 2010 (EWWSIRA) without addressing any of its previous comments and that the EWWSIRA does not contain any real improvement in relation to the previous legislation.

In these circumstances, the Committee once again requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to bring the following provisions of the EWWSIRA into conformity with the Convention:

- section 16, which provides that the Workers' Welfare Society will not be allowed in industrial units established after the commencement of the Act until a period of three months has expired after the commencement of commercial production in the concerned unit;
- section 17(1), which provides that there can be no more than one Workers' Welfare Society per industrial unit;

- sections 6, 7, 9 and 12, which establish excessive and complicated minimum membership and referendum requirements for the establishment of Workers' Welfare Society (a Workers' Welfare Society may be formed only when a minimum of 30 per cent of the eligible workers of an industrial unit seek its formation, and this has been verified by the Executive Chairperson of the BEPZA, who shall then conduct a referendum on the basis of which the workers shall acquire the legitimate right to form an association under the Act, only if more than 50 per cent of the eligible workers cast their vote, and more than 50 per cent of the votes cast are in favour of the formation of the Workers' Welfare Society);
- section 9(2), which confers excessive powers to the Executive Chairperson of the BEPZA concerning the approval of the Constitution Drafting Committee;
- section 8, which prevents steps for the establishment of a Workers' Welfare Society in the workplace for a period of one year after a first attempt failed to gather sufficient support in a referendum;
- section 27, which permits the deregistration of a Workers' Welfare Society at the request of 30 per cent of the workers even if they are not members of the association and prevents the establishment of another Workers' Welfare Society for one year after the previous one was deregistered;
- sections 28(1)(c), (e)–(h) and 34(1)(a), which provide for the cancellation of the registration of a Workers' Welfare Society on grounds which do not appear to justify the severity of this sanction (such as contravention of any of the provisions of the association's constitution);
- section 46(3) and (4), which establishes a total prohibition of industrial action in EPZs until 31 October 2013 (section 81(1) and (2)) and provides for severe restrictions of strike action, once recognized (possibility to prohibit a strike if it continues for more than 15 days or even before this deadline, if the strike is considered as causing serious harm to productivity in the EPZ);
- section 10(2), which prevents a Workers' Welfare Society from obtaining or receiving any funds from any outside source without the prior approval of the Executive Chairperson of the BEPZA;
- section 24(1), which establishes an excessively high minimum number of associations to establish a higher level organization (more than 50 per cent of the Workers' Welfare Societies in an EPZ);
- section 24(3), which prohibits a federation from affiliating in any manner with federations in other EPZs and beyond EPZs; and
- sections 20(1), 21 and 24(4), which do not seem to afford guarantees against interference with the right of workers to elect their representatives in full freedom (e.g. the procedure of election is to be determined by the BEPZA).

The Committee also notes new subsection 4 of section 38 concerning check-off facilities which stipulates that “the executive council at the beginning of the calendar year shall, with the accounts statement of the previous year, submit for approval the current year's revenue budget containing income-expenditure to the Executive Chairman or to an officer authorized by him”. The Committee recalls that measures of supervision over the administration of trade unions may only be useful if they are employed to prevent abuses and to protect the members of the trade union themselves against mismanagement of their funds. Measures of this kind may, in certain cases, entail a danger of interference by the public authorities in the administration of trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the scope of application of this new subsection 4 of section 38 and its impact on check-off facilities.

Moreover, the Committee notes that under section 80 of the EWWSIRA, Workers' Welfare Societies are now prohibited from establishing any connection to any political parties or non-governmental organizations. The Committee recalls that provisions imposing a general prohibition on political activities by trade unions for the promotion of their specific objectives and provisions which restrict the freedom of trade unions to administer and utilize their funds as they wish for normal and lawful trade unions purposes are contrary to the principles of freedom of association. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal section 80 of the EWWSIRA.

The Committee further notes that a federation of the Workers' Welfare Societies cannot be legally formed until BEPZA has issued regulations. According to the ITUC's comments, to date, BEPZA has yet to issue these regulations, thus deliberately preventing the workers' associations to form a federation in EPZs. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to issue the regulations concerning the right of Workers' Welfare Societies to establish and join federations, in accordance with Article 5 of the Convention.

Other discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. The Committee once again recalls that for many years it had been referring to serious discrepancies between the national legislation and the Convention. In previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of the Bangladesh Labour Act 2006 (the Labour Act), which replaced the Industrial Relations Ordinance of 1969, and noted with deep regret that the Labour Act did not contain any improvements in relation to the previous legislation and, in certain regards, contained even further restrictions which were contrary to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee took note of the Government's statement that a tripartite labour law review committee to identify the gaps and discrepancies in the Labour Act and suggest the necessary amendments had been constituted, as well as its indication that the workers excluded from the Labour Act's provisions were not covered by other legislation. The Committee notes the Government indicates in its report that the revision of the Labour Act with comments of all levels of stakeholders is under process and that a 22 member's high-power tripartite committee headed by the State Minister of Labour and Employment has been constituted. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any developments with regard to the review process referred to, including a copy of any relevant draft amendment, and expresses the firm hope that the Labour Act will soon be amended to remove the discrepancies previously identified, which it repeats as follows:

- the need to repeal provisions on the exclusion of managerial and administrative employees from the right to establish workers' organizations (section 2 XLIX and LXV of the Labour Act) as well as new restrictions of the right to organize of firefighting staff, telex operators, fax operators and cipher assistants (exclusion from the provisions of the Act based on section 175 of the Labour Act). The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the telex and fax operators are allowed to exercise their trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the legal provisions that grant trade union rights to the abovementioned workers;
- the need to either amend section 1(4) of the Labour Act or adopt new legislation so as to ensure that the workers in the following sectors, which have been excluded from the scope of application of the Act including its provisions on freedom of association, have the right to organize: offices of or under the Government (except workers in the Railway Department, Posts, Telegraph and Telephone Departments, Roads and Highways Department, Public Works Department and Public Health Engineering Department and the Bangladesh Government Press); the security printing press; establishments for the treatment or care of the sick, infirm, aged, destitute, mentally disabled, orphans, abandoned children, widows or deserted women, which are not run for profit or gains; shops or stalls in public exhibitions which deal in retail trade; shops in any public fair for religious or charitable purposes; educational, training and research institutions; agricultural farms with less than ten workers; domestic servants; and establishments run by the owner with the aid of members of the family;
- the need to repeal provisions which restrict membership in trade unions and participation in trade union elections to those workers who are currently employed in an establishment or group of establishments, including seafarers engaged in merchant shipping (section 2 LXV, 175 and 185(2) of the Labour Act);
- the need to repeal or amend new provisions which define as an unfair labour practice on the part of a worker or trade union, an act aimed at "intimidating" any person to become, continue to be or cease to be a trade union member or officer, or "inducing" any person to cease to be a member or officer of a trade union by conferring or offering to confer any advantage and the consequent penalty of imprisonment for such acts (sections 196(2)(a) and (b) and 291 of the Labour Act); the Committee considers that the terms "intimidating" or "inducing" are too general and do not sufficiently safeguard against interference in internal trade union affairs, since, for instance, a common activity of trade unions is to recruit members by offering advantages, including with regard to other trade unions;
- the need to repeal provisions which prevent workers from running for trade union office if they were previously convicted for compelling or attempting to compel the employer to sign a memorandum of settlement or to agree to any demand by using intimidation, pressure, threats, etc. (sections 196(2)(d) and 180(1)(a) of the Labour Act);
- the need to lower the minimum membership requirement of 30 per cent of the total number of workers employed in an establishment or group of establishments for initial and continued union registration, as well as the possibility of deregistration if the membership falls below this number (sections 179(2) and 190(f) of the Labour Act); the need to repeal provisions which provide that no more than three trade unions shall be registered in any establishment or group of establishments (section 179(5) of the Labour Act) and that only one trade union of seafarers shall be registered (section 185(3) of the Labour Act); finally, the need to repeal provisions prohibiting workers from joining more than one trade union and the consequent penalty of imprisonment in case of violation of this prohibition (sections 193 and 300 of the Labour Act);
- the need to repeal provisions denying the right of unregistered unions to collect funds (section 192 of the Labour Act) upon penalty of imprisonment (section 299 of the Labour Act);
- the need to lift several restrictions on the right to strike: requirement for three-quarters of the members of a workers' organization to consent to a strike (sections 211(1) and 227(c) of the Labour Act); possibility of prohibiting strikes which last more than 30 days (sections 211(3) and 227(c) of the Labour Act); possibility of prohibiting strikes at any time if a strike is considered prejudicial to the national interest (sections 211(3) and 227(c) of the Labour Act) or involves a public utility service including the generation, production, manufacture, or supply of gas and oil to the public, as well as railways, airways, road and river transport, ports and banking (sections 211(4) and 227(c) of the Labour Act); prohibition of strikes for a period of three years from the date of commencement of production in a new establishment, or an establishment owned by foreigners or established in collaboration with foreigners (sections 211(8) and 227(c) of the Labour Act); penalties of imprisonment for participation in – or instigation to take part in unlawful industrial action or go-slow (sections 196(2)(e), 291 and 294–296 of the Labour Act);
- the need to repeal provisions which provide that no person refusing to take part in an illegal strike shall be subject to expulsion or any other disciplinary measure by the trade union, so as to leave this matter to be determined in accordance with trade union rules (section 229 of the Labour Act);

- the need to amend new provisions which define as an unfair labour practice on the part of workers, an act of compelling or attempting to compel the employer to sign a memorandum of settlement or to accept or agree to any demand by using “intimidation”, “pressure”, “threat” so as to ensure that there is no interference with the right of trade unions to engage in activities like collective bargaining or strikes, and to repeal the consequent penalty of imprisonment for such acts (sections 196(d) and 291(2) of the Labour Act);
- the need to amend provisions which impose a penalty of imprisonment for failure to appear before the conciliator in the framework of settlement of industrial disputes (section 301 of the Labour Act).

The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether rule 10 of the Industrial Relations Rules 1977 (IRR), which previously granted the RTU overly broad authority to enter trade union offices, inspect documents, etc. without judicial review, had been repealed by the entry into force of the Labour Act 2006. The Committee noted that the Government stated, in this regard, that rule 10 of the IRR remains valid, and that – as its purpose was to maintain discipline in trade union administrations – it was not in favour of repealing the said provision. The Government further indicated that the workers’ representatives in the tripartite review process towards the enactment of the Labour Act had raised no objections to the RTU’s authority in these matters. In this respect, the Committee once again recalled that the right of workers’ and employers’ organizations to organize their administration without interference by the public authorities includes, in particular, autonomy and financial independence and the protection of the assets and property of these organizations. There is no violation of the Convention if such verification is limited to exceptional cases, for example in order to investigate a complaint, or if there have been allegations of embezzlement. Both the substance and the procedure of such verifications should however always be subject to review by the competent judicial authority affording every guarantee of impartiality and objectivity (see General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraphs 124–125). The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous comments in this regard. In these circumstances, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal rule 10 of the IRR or amend the latter so as to ensure that this provision granting the RTU authority to supervise trade union internal affairs is in line with the principles mentioned above.

The Committee takes due note once again of the Government’s statement that it is fully committed to ensuring compliance with the Convention and the promotion of freedom of association in the country. The Committee once again invites the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in respect of all the matters raised above.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on 4 and 31 August 2011, concerning the dismissal of more than 5,000 employees in the garment sector in 2010, in response to workers’ exercise of their trade union rights as well as several cases in which the leaders of worker welfare societies have been fired in retaliation for the exercise of trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the comments submitted by the National Level Trade Union Federation of Workers (NCCWE), sent along with the Government’s report, stating that there is a weak implementation of labour law in general, and more particularly an unwillingness of employers to recognize trade unions and collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that with all its capacity, it has been very much committed to implement the provision of the Labour Act, 2006, all over the country and that it has established a Department of Labour (MOLE) which looks after the trade unions aspects in the country and a Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE). The Committee further notes that the Government has started the implementation of a Better Work Programme, with the assistance of the ILO.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection of workers in export processing zones (EPZs) against anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the ITUC referred to numerous problems concerning the application of the Convention in the EPZ sector, particularly in the garment industry. The ITUC further stated that although the law provides for the establishment of an EPZ labour tribunal and an EPZ labour appellate, these two bodies had yet to be established, thus denying workers access to the judicial system for their grievances. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information in respect of these matters, including information on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination in the EPZ sector submitted to the competent authorities, as well as the outcomes of those complaints.

As concerns the establishment of an EPZ Labour Tribunal and an EPZ Labour Appellate, the Committee had previously noted that according to the Government, EPZ workers could seek judicial redress in cases of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had noted that the Government had decided to allow the existing labour courts of the country (established under the Labour Act, 2006) to dispose of EPZs industrial disputes and settle the workers’ complaints, by incorporating necessary modifications in sections 56 and 59 of the EPZ Workers Association and Industrial Relation Act 2004. The Committee notes that in August 2010, the Parliament passed the EPZ Workers’ Welfare Societies and Industrial Relations Act 2010 (EWSIRA) and that section 52 specifies that until the EPZ Labour Tribunal is established under section 48 and the EPZ Labour Appellate Tribunal is established under section 51, labour courts established under section 214 and the Labour Appellate Tribunal established under section 218 of the Bangladesh Labour Act, 2006 shall be deemed to be the EPZ Labour Tribunal and the EPZ Labour Appellate Tribunal respectively for carrying out the purposes of the Act. The Committee also notes that the Government indicates in its report that two separate orders will be published within very short time regarding the EPZ Labour Tribunal and EPZ Labour Appellate Tribunal. The Committee recalls the principle that the Government is responsible for preventing all acts of anti-union discrimination and must ensure that complaints of anti-union discrimination are examined in the framework of national procedures which should be prompt, impartial and considered as such by the parties concerned. The Committee requests the Government: (i) to provide statistics in its next report on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination presented by workers in the EPZs before the labour courts established under sections 214 and 218 of the Bangladesh Labour Act, 2006; and (ii) to indicate the progress made regarding the adoption of the two separate orders on the EPZ Labour Tribunal and EPZ Labour Appellate Tribunal and to provide a copy of those two orders when adopted.

The Committee further notes that the Government indicates in its report that the intervention of counsellors is well established in all EPZs to deal with employees' grievances (e.g. harassment, dismissal, violence) and that conciliators and arbitrators have the power to resolve disputes after counsellors, as per sections 40–45 of the EWWSIRA 2010. However, the Committee notes that according to the ITUC's 2011 comments, the Bangladesh Export Processing Zones Authority (BEPZA) has not yet appointed new conciliators (when the 2004 Act expired, the Government did not extend the tenure of the EPZ conciliator who was appointed under that act) as required under the EWWSIRA 2010 thus hampering industrial dispute resolution in the EPZs. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to appoint new conciliators in the very near future, as requested under the EWWSIRA 2010.

Article 2. Lack of legislative protection against acts of interference. The Committee had previously noted that the Labour Act 2006 did not contain a prohibition of acts of interference designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers or their organizations, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means with the object of placing them under the control of employers or their organizations, and had requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to adopt such a prohibition. The Committee noted the Government's indication that protective measures are laid down in the Labour Act, particularly in sections 195 and 196 concerning "unfair labour practice on the part of the employer", and that such act by the employer is an offence punishable under section 291 of the Labour Act, which provides for a prison term which may extend to two years or with a fine of up to 10,000 Bangladeshi taka (BDT), or both. The Committee further noted the Government's indication that the Tripartite Labour Law Review Committee (TLLRC) may consider adopting a more comprehensive prohibition, as requested by the Committee. Noting that no further information was provided by the Government in its present report, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken or contemplated so as to adopt a comprehensive prohibition that covers acts of financial control of trade unions or trade union leaders, as well as acts of interference in internal trade union affairs. The Committee hopes that as a first step, the TLLRC will include in its recommendations that a comprehensive prohibition covering acts of financial control of trade unions or trade union leaders, as well as acts of interference in internal trade union affairs should be adopted.

Article 4. Legal requirements for collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had referred to section 179(2) of the Labour Act, which provides that a trade union may only obtain registration if it represents 30 per cent of the workers in an establishment, as well as to section 202(15) of the Labour Act, which provides that if there is more than one trade union in an enterprise, the Director of Labour shall hold a secret ballot to determine the collective bargaining agent. The Committee recalled that the percentage requirements for registration of a trade union, and for the recognition of a collective bargaining agent set out in sections 179(2) and 202(15) of the Labour Act 2006, may impair in certain cases, in particular in respect of large enterprises, the development of free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the percentage requirement in section 202(15) has been repealed and that it is the trade union that secures the highest number of votes that is declared as the collective bargaining agent. The Committee notes this information with interest and requests the Government to provide the text of the new section 202 of the Labour Act, 2006.

The Committee further noted that according to NCCWE, collective bargaining is limited as there is no legal provision for collective bargaining at the industry, sector or national levels. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) sections 202 and 203 of the Labour Act, 2006 directly concerns collective bargaining; (ii) the settlement of disputes through bipartite negotiations is done at the industry level and that similarly, different issues are settled through bipartite negotiation or through conciliation at the sector level, such as tea sector, shrimp sector, etc.; (iii) collective bargaining was also done at the national level through consultation with the Workers' Federation but such practice no longer prevails; and (iv) there are currently 7,297 trade unions registered with the Department of Labour, 32 national federations, 112 industrial federations and 36 garments industries federations and a total of 11 collective bargaining agreements. The Committee requests the Government to amend sections 202 and 203 of the Labour Act, 2006 in order to provide clearly that collective bargaining is possible at the industry, sector and national levels. The Committee further requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded at the industry, sector and national levels respectively in its next report.

Promotion of collective bargaining in the EPZs. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the extent of collective bargaining in the EPZ sector, including statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded and the number of workers they cover. The Committee notes the Government's indication that 302 enterprises are eligible for workers' associations among 366 in operation and that workers' associations referendums were held in 205 enterprises – or 67.88 per cent of the total number of eligible enterprises. However, no information was provided by the Government concerning the conclusion of collective agreements in the EPZs. The Committee notes that according to the ITUC, while elected Workers' Welfare Societies (what substitutes for trade unions in the absence of a legal right to form one) in the EPZs have been established, employers have failed to take the next step and bargain collectively as required by the EWWSIRA Act 2010. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the extent of collective bargaining in the EPZ sector, including statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded since 2008, and the number of workers they cover.

The Committee further notes that according to the ITUC, there has been little progress on collective bargaining in the EPZs and that this is largely due to the BEPZA's insistence that there is no room for collective bargaining on any working conditions above the minimum standards already established in the 2004 Act and BEPZA Instructions 1 and 2. The ITUC adds that this largely eviscerates the bargaining provisions of the EWWSIRA 2010 and leaves no room for collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that excluding wages, working hours, rest periods, leave and conditions of works from the field of collective bargaining is not in harmony with Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that this principle is applied in practice in the EPZs and to provide a copy of BEPZA Instructions 1 and 2.

Tripartite wages commissions in the public sector. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments, it had requested the Government to take the necessary legislative or other measures to end the practice of determining wage rates and other conditions of employment in the public sector by means of government-appointed tripartite wages commissions (section 3 of Act No. X of 1974). The Committee noted that the Government indicated in its report that this system does not prevent free and voluntary collective bargaining. Nevertheless, the Committee, while recognizing the singularity of the public sector which allows special modalities, considered that simple consultation with unions of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State does not meet the requirements of Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government once again reiterates its position. The Committee underlines that the Government has not referred to any collective agreement in the public sector. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to end the practice of determining wage rates and other conditions of employment of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State by means of simple consultation in government-appointed tripartite wages commissions, so as to favour free and voluntary negotiations between workers' organizations and employers or their organizations. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate any measures taken or contemplated in this regard.

Barbados

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. The right of organizations freely to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that for numerous years it has advised the Government to amend section 4 of the Better Security Act, 1920, according to which any person who wilfully breaks a contract of service or hiring, knowing that this could endanger real or personal property, is liable to a fine or up to three months' imprisonment, so as to eliminate the possibility of employers invoking it in cases of strikes. The Committee notes that the Government indicated that the administrative authority has undertaken to move towards the drafting of an essential services legislation. The Committee recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account, including as regards strikes in essential services. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. Nevertheless, even in the absence of violence, if the strike modalities had the effect of making the strike illegitimate, proportionate disciplinary sanctions may be imposed against strikers. The Committee trusts that the Government will take duly into account the abovementioned principle when drafting the essential services legislation. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any developments in this respect and to provide a copy of the legislation once adopted. Moreover, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend section 4 of the Better Security Act, 1920, so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

Furthermore, the Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government since 1998 to provide information on developments in the process of reviewing legislation regarding trade union recognition to which the Government had referred, or to indicate whether the drafting legislation process concerning trade union recognition could be considered as abandoned. In its previous observation, the Committees had also noted that the Congress of Trade Unions and Staff Associations of Barbados indicated that the Government submitted an amended Trade Union Act Cap. 361 to trade unions for comment and review. The Committee had noted that the Government indicated that the drafting process regarding legislation or trade union recognition is ongoing. The Committee requests the Government to provide with its next report information on any development in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, as well as the comments submitted by the Barbados Workers' Union (BWU) in a communication dated 1 September 2011, on issues already raised by the Committee.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 indicating that the right to collective bargaining has still not been regulated by law, stripping the mechanism of its effectiveness and that legislation tolerating certain anti-union practices, such as dismissal for union activities, is also still in place. The Committee also notes the comments submitted by the Barbados Workers' Union (BWU) in a communication dated 1 September 2011 concerning issues already raised by the Committee. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore reiterate its previous points:

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee recalls that in previous observations, it had requested the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation provides adequate protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination, in taking up employment and throughout the course of employment, including at the time of termination, and covering all measures of anti-union discrimination (dismissals, demotions, transfers and other prejudicial acts) as well as adequate and dissuasive sanctions. The Committee also noted the comments made by the ITUC referring to the inadequacy of remedies for workers discharged for their union activity since courts may not reinstate dismissed workers. The Committee had noted that the Government indicates in its report that section 40A of the Trade Union Act, CAP 361 provides that any employer who dismisses a worker or adversely affects the employment or alters the position of a worker, or threatens to dismiss or to adversely affect or alter the position of a worker, because that worker is, or seeks to become, an officer, delegate or member of a trade union or takes part in trade union activities can be subject to a fine not exceeding US$1,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both. As regards the amount of the fines, the Committee recalls again the importance of making sanctions sufficiently dissuasive against acts of anti-union discrimination or interference. The Committee had previously noted with interest that the Government indicated that it was in the final stages of drafting a new employment rights legislation, which will, inter alia, make provisions for an employment rights tribunal to hear cases of unfair dismissals and to make awards where necessary. Given that it appears that the envisaged protection would only cover cases of unfair dismissals, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention as regards not only anti-union dismissals, but also other prejudicial acts perpetrated against union leaders and members because of their affiliation or trade union activities and in particular, to strengthen the amount of the legal fines and other relevant means which can be applied by the tribunal. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the new employment rights legislation once adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Belarus

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011 concerning the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). The Committee also notes the 361st Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association on the measures taken by the Government of the Republic of Belarus to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry.

The Committee further notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 detailing violations of the Convention, which the Committee had dealt with in its previous comments. It also notes the comments submitted by the Belarusian Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (CDTU) in a communication dated 30 August 2011.

The Committee notes that in its report, the Government reiterates its commitment to the social dialogue and cooperation with the ILO. It informs of its intention to organize, together with the ILO, a tripartite seminar in the country on the issue of social dialogue. The Government indicates that the situation of trade union rights in the country has stabilized. While there are still some contentious issues and some criticism from the trade union side, the Government considers this is a common feature of social dialogue. While noting this information, the Committee regrets that the Government provides very limited new information on the measures taken to implement the 2004 recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and this Committee's previous requests in respect to the application of the following Articles of the Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that in its previous observations it had urged the Government to take the necessary measures to amend Presidential Decree No. 2, its rules and regulations, so as to eliminate the obstacles to trade union registration (legal address and 10 per cent minimum membership requirements). The Committee notes that in its communication, the CDTU points out that there have been no concrete proposals to amend the Decree, which continues to create obstacles to trade union registration. In this respect, the CDTU alleges that Polotsk municipality denied registration to the Free Trade Union primary organization of “Self-employed workers at Polotsk outdoor collective farm market”. The Committee is once again bound to note with deep regret the absence of any tangible measures taken by the Government to amend the Decree despite the numerous requests by the ILO supervisory bodies. It therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to that effect in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure that the right to organize is effectively guaranteed. The Committee requests the Government to indicate all measures taken in this respect.

The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to provide its observations on the CDTU’s allegations of refusal to register the primary trade union organization of the Belarus Independent Trade Union (BITU) at the “Delta Style” enterprise and to provide a copy of the Supreme Court Decision in the case of refusal to register “Razam” organization. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the decision to deny registration to the BITU primary trade union organization at the “Delta Style” was due to the process of liquidation of the undertaking and its merger with the “Kupalinka” enterprise that occurred on 27 April 2011. The Committee considers that the restructuring of an enterprise, including by way of merger, should not preclude the right of workers to establish a trade union of their own choosing. The Committee also regrets that the Government failed to transmit the decision of the Supreme Court in the “Razam” case. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue cooperation with the social partners in addressing the issue of registration in practice and to indicate in its next report all progress made in this respect. It further requests the Government to indicate whether the BITU has applied for the registration of its primary trade union at the “Kupalinka” and if so, the outcome of the registration procedure.

Articles 3, 5 and 6. The Committee recalls that it had previously expressed its concern at the allegations of repeated refusals to authorize the CDTU, the BITU and the Radio and Electronic Workers’ Union (REWU) to hold demonstrations and meetings and requested the Government to conduct independent investigations into these allegations, as well as to bring the attention of the relevant authorities to the right of workers to participate in peaceful demonstrations to defend their occupational interests. The Committee once again notes with deep regret that no information has been provided by the Government in this respect. The Committee notes with concern that the CDTU alleged new cases of refusals to authorize the holding of demonstrations. Recalling that protests are protected by the principles of freedom of association and that public meetings and demonstrations should not be arbitrarily refused, the Committee urges the Government to indicate the measures taken to investigate the alleged cases of refusals to authorize the holding of demonstrations and meetings and to bring the attention of the relevant authorities to the right of workers to participate in peaceful demonstrations to defend their occupational interests.

The Committee recalls that it had previously noted with concern the CDTU’s allegation that following a refusal by the “Delta Style” company’s management to authorize a trade union meeting, the chairperson of the Soligorsk BITU regional organization met with several women workers (on their way to their workplaces) near the entrance. Following this event, the chairperson was detained by the police on 4 August 2010 and subsequently found guilty of committing administrative offence and fined. According to the CDTU, the court had decided that having met members of the union near the entrance gate of the company, the trade union leader had violated the Law on Mass Activities. The Committee had requested the Government to provide its observations on the facts alleged by the CDTU. The Committee regrets that the Government provides no information in this respect. The Committee notes with concern new allegations of arrests and detention of members of independent trade unions following their participation in public events, as detailed in the CDTU’s communication. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

In this connection, the Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to amend the Law on Mass Activities, which imposes restrictions on mass activities and provides for dissolution of an organization for a single breach of its provisions, while organizers may be charged with a violation of the Administrative Code and thus subject to administrative detention and regrets that no information has been provided by the Government on concrete measures taken in this respect. The Committee understands, however, that this piece of legislation has been recently amended so as to further restrict the right to organize public events. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of these amendments.

The Committee further regrets that the Government has not provided any information in relation to the measures taken to amend Presidential Decree No. 24 concerning the use of foreign gratuitous aid and sections 388, 390, 392 and 399 of the Labour Code, regarding the exercise of the right to strike. Recalling that the abovementioned legislative texts (Law on Mass Activities, Decree No. 24 and sections 388, 390, 392 and 399 of the Labour Code are not in conformity with the right of workers to organize their activities and programmes free from interference by the public authorities and their amendment had been requested by the Commission of Inquiry over seven years ago, the Committee reiterates its previous requests and asks the Government to indicate all concrete measures taken in this respect. The Committee understands that the Law on Public Association and the Criminal Code have been recently amended and that these amendments would have bearing on the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide copies of all relevant amendments to these legislative texts.

The Committee also once again requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that National Bank employees may have recourse to industrial action without penalty.

The Committee notes with deep regret that no progress has been made by the Government towards implementing the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and improving the application of this Convention in law and in practice during the reporting year. Indeed, the Government has not provided any information on steps taken to amend the legislative provisions in question, as previously requested by this Committee, the Conference Committee, the Commission of Inquiry and the Committee on Freedom of Association. In this respect, the Committee also notes the CDTU's indication that it was still awaiting to see an evidence and tangible progress with regard to the Government's commitment to ensure a friendly environment for independent trade union activity and social dialogue. The Committee regrets to note the alleged violations of civil liberties in Belarus submitted by the CDTU in its communication, including instances of interrogation of trade unionists and search of trade union premises. The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that freedom of association and respect for civil liberties is fully and effectively guaranteed in law and in practice and expresses the firm hope that the Government will intensify its cooperation with all the social partners in this regard.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1956)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government and the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011. The Committee also notes the 361st Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association on the measures taken by the Government of the Republic of Belarus to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry.

The Committee further notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 detailing violations of the Convention, which the Committee had already dealt with in its previous comments. It also notes the comments submitted by the Belarusian Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (CDTU) in a communication dated 30 August 2011.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee recalls that it had previously noted with concern the comments made by the CDTU on the discriminatory use of fixed-term contracts. The CDTU had alleged, in particular, that members of free and independent unions were forced to leave their unions under the threat of non-renewal of their contracts, and had provided detailed information on the impact of threats of non-renewal of fixed-term contracts on its affiliates at the following enterprises: "Grodno-Azot", "Belshina", "Polimir", Mozyr Oil Refinery, "Zenit", Brest Pedagogical University and Hydraulic Power Station in Novolukoml. The Committee had further noted with regret the case of Mr Aleksey Gabriel, dismissed leader of a primary-level organization of the Belarusian Free Trade Union (BFTU) at the Lukoml Power Station and the allegations of anti-union discrimination suffered by members affiliated to the Radio and Electronic Workers' Union (REWU), threats and interference in internal trade union affairs at "Mogilev ZIV" and "Avtopark No. 1". It further noted the allegations of pressure put on workers to leave their union at the Bobruisk Plant of Tractor Parts and Units (BFTU primary trade union), "Grodno-Azot" company, "Delta Style" company in Soligorsk, "Lavanstroï" construction company and Minsk Automated Lines company (all primary trade unions of the Belarusian Independent Trade Union (BITU)). The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all of the abovementioned allegations of anti-union discrimination and interference relating to the CDTU and REWU-affiliated trade unions and their members at all of the abovementioned enterprises, were brought to the attention of the Council for the Improvement of Legislation in the Social and Labour Sphere ("the Council") without further delay. It requested the Government to provide information on the outcome of the discussion and on any remedial measures taken should it be found that anti-union discrimination and interference have occurred.

The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that a fixed-term contract is concluded upon an agreement between an employer and a worker and that transfer from a permanent to contractual form of employment can take place only if there are organizational, structural or economic reasons, which can be disputed by a worker in court. The Government also indicates that the contractual form of employment provides employers with more flexible possibilities of human resource management. An employer's decision not to renew a contract cannot be qualified as dismissal upon an employer's initiative. The legislation in force does not require an employer to justify his or her decision not to renew a contract with a particular worker: expiry of a contract is the basis of its termination. Therefore, if an employer decides not to renew a contract upon its expiry, no justification is needed and the worker whose contract is not renewed has no legal means to raise the non-renewal in court. The Committee notes that with regard to the allegations concerning Mozyr Oil Refinery, the Government indicates that there are two primary trade unions at the enterprise: one is affiliated to the Federation of Trade Unions of Belarus (FTUB) and the other, to the BITU. According to the Government, sometimes workers change their affiliation from one union to the other, and in the period from 2009 to March 2011, 648 workers (some of whom were members of the BITU-affiliated union) left the enterprise for various reasons. With regard to the “Grodno Azot” company, the Government indicates that the allegations have been investigated by the Prosecutor’s office on two occasions and that the allegations of pressure have not been confirmed. With regard to Bobruisk Plant of Tractor Parts and Units and Minsk Automated Lines company, the Government indicates that both the BFTU and BITU primary trade unions are signatories to the respective enterprises’ collective agreements alongside the FTUB-affiliated unions.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with respect to the use of fixed-term contracts. In this respect, it notes with concern allegations contained in the 2011 CDTU communication to the effect that short-term contracts at the company level are used by employers to fight independent trade unions and that under this system, numerous trade union activists have been dismissed and that the courts consistently dismiss such cases. The Committee considers that not only dismissal, but also non-renewal of a contract, when imposed as a result of trade union membership or legitimate trade union activities, would be contrary to the principle that no person should be prejudiced in his or her employment by reason of trade union membership or activities.

The Committee regrets that the Government provides extremely limited information with regard to the alleged cases of anti-union discrimination and interference at the abovementioned enterprises, despite the Conference Committee’s explicit request to the Government to submit, after an independent and impartial investigation, detailed observations on the allegations of anti-union discrimination, including as regards the anti-union impact of fixed-term contracts and employer interference in workers’ organizations, as well as information on any proposed amendments to the legislation to the Committee of Experts. The Committee further notes with regret new allegations of attempts to dissolve the BITU’s primary trade union at Mozyr Oil Refinery through pressure on its members. The Committee recalls that it had previously noted with regret that according to the CDTU, the Government refused to use the tripartite working group created by the Council to discuss in substance the issue of trade union rights’ violation. The Committee notes with deep regret that in this regard, the Government has not referred to any discussions on the issue of anti-union dismissals, threats, interference and pressure which had taken place at the tripartite Council within the reporting year. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all of the abovementioned allegations of anti-union discrimination and interference at all of the abovementioned enterprises, are brought to the attention of the Council for the Improvement of Legislation in the Social and Labour Sphere without further delay. It requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the discussion and on any remedial measures taken should it be found that anti-union discrimination and interference have occurred. It further requests the Government to provide information on the employment status of Mr Aleksey Gabriel.

Furthermore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to ensure that enterprise managers do not interfere in the internal affairs of trade unions and instructions are given to the Prosecutor-General, Minister of Justice and court administrators that all complaints of interference and anti-union discrimination are thoroughly investigated. Should such complaints prove true, the necessary measures should be taken to put an end to such acts and punish those responsible.

Article 4. Right to collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to provide its observations on the CDTU’s allegations of refusal to bargain collectively with its affiliates at the “Naftan” and “Grodno-Azot” enterprises. In this respect, the Committee notes that in its most recent communication, the CDTU alleges that the employer at “Naftan” enterprise has excluded the primary BITU trade union from the collective bargaining process and the agreement for 2011 has been signed with the primary trade union of the FTUB. The CDTU indicates that the union’s appeals to the National Labour Arbitration and the State Labour Inspectorate and other bodies brought no results. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that while the agreement was signed by the FTUB-affiliated union, which is the most representative organization, it applies to all workers, regardless of their union membership. The Government indicates, however, that the CDTU appealed to the tripartite Council and this issue was discussed during the Council’s 1 November 2011 meeting. The Council has decided to refer this question to its tripartite working group. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the discussion in the tripartite working group concerning the case of “Naftan” enterprise, as well as on the situation at the “Grodno-Azot” with regard to the participation of the CDTU-affiliated union in the collective bargaining.

The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government in relation to the conclusion of a General Agreement for 2011–13, covering all employers’ and workers’ organizations in the country, signed on 30 December 2010. The Committee notes the Government’s intention to organize, together with the ILO, a tripartite seminar on the issue of social dialogue.

The Committee strongly encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure full implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry without delay, in close cooperation with all the social partners and with the assistance of the ILO. The Committee further expresses the firm hope that the Government and the social partners will continue the cooperation within the framework of the tripartite Council and that the latter will have a real impact on ensuring that the right to organize is effectively guaranteed in law and in practice.

Belgium

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1951)

Comments from trade union organizations. The Committee notes the comments dated 4 August 2011 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the implementation of the Convention, in particular the systematic recourse by employers to the judicial authority to ban trade unions from taking industrial action, especially from setting up strike pickets. The ITUC denounces the employers' failure to respect the "Gentlemen's Agreement" concluded by the social partners in 2002 on the peaceful settlement of industrial disputes. The Committee recalls that, in its previous observation, it had noted comments on this same point made by the Confederation of Christian Trade Unions (CSC), the General Labour Federation of Belgium (FGTB) and the General Confederation of Liberal Trade Unions of Belgium (CGSLB) dated 21 December 2009. The Committee notes that in its reply, the Government expresses its full recognition of the right to industrial action, such as the right to organize peaceful strike pickets, which it considers inherent in the binding nature of international treaties ratified by Belgium. The Government states that it regrets that certain employers abuse their right of recourse to the judicial authority but indicates that the number of appeals is limited. Recalling the wide network of institutions for sectoral dialogue, conciliation offices and a professional body of social conciliators put in place by the public authorities, the Government also states that it has requested the National Labour Council to examine compliance with the "Gentlemen's Agreement" signed in 2002 by the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to report on the findings of its examination on compliance with the "Gentlemen's Agreement" concerning the peaceful settlement of industrial disputes, as well as on any follow-up.

The Committee further recalls that in their communication dated 21 December 2009, the CSC, the FGTB and the CGSLB had also denounced a court decision restricting the autonomy of trade unions in the exercise of their disciplinary powers. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's reply that the ruling of first instance that had been criticized had been overturned by the Antwerp Court of Appeal, which considered that a trade union had the right to exclude a member in accordance with its own statutes and respect of the right of defence. The Committee notes this information.

The Committee notes that, in its communication of August 2011, the ITUC reported that the police had made 250 arrests at the Euro-demonstration in Brussels on 29 September 2010, which had been organized by European trade unions; 150 of these arrests had been carried out as a preventive measure, even before the demonstration was held. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in reply to the comments by the ITUC.

Belize

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 concerning problems in practice for the exercise of trade union rights in the banana plantations and in export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will be in a position to provide in its next report full particulars on ITUC's 2008 and 2011 comments.

Article 3 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend the Settlement of Disputes in Essential Services Act 1939 (SDESA), which empowers the authorities to refer a collective dispute to compulsory arbitration, to prohibit a strike or to terminate a strike in services that cannot be considered essential in the strict sense of the term, namely: the banking sector, civil aviation, port authority (pilots), postal services, social security scheme and the petroleum sector. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the Labour Advisory Board in its ongoing review of national labour legislation recommended that the Schedule to the SDESA be amended so as to exclude: (i) civil aviation and airport security services (AIPOAS); (ii) monetary and financial services (banks, treasury, Central Bank of Belize); (iii) the POA Authority (pilots and security services); (iv) postal services; (v) the Social Security Scheme administered by the Social Security Board; and (vi) services in which petroleum products are supplied, transported, conveyed, handled, loaded, unloaded or sold. The National Trade Union Congress of Belize (NTUCB) corroborated this information in its comments submitted on 12 November 2011. The Committee notes this information with interest and requests the Government to provide a copy of the new legislation once it is adopted.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, which refers to matters previously raised by the Committee. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In respect of the legal protection concerning anti-union discrimination, the Committee had previously noted that in its 2008 comments, the ITUC alleged that court procedures in cases of anti-union discrimination were too slow and cumbersome, while the fines imposed were extremely low. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Labour (Amendment) Act 2005 (No. 3 of 2011), adopted on 13 April 2011 which includes new sections on “unfair dismissal” providing for judicial reinstatement of workers or workers’ representatives dismissed because of their union membership or participation in union activities (section 42(1)(a) and (b) and section 205(1) and (2)).

In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the ITUC’s allegation that in practice violations occurred in the banana plantation sector and in export processing zones, where employers do not recognize unions, and had requested the Government to provide information on these matters. The Committee had noted the Government’s indication that the ITUC’s 2008 comments would be submitted to a tripartite body established under the provisions of the Trade Unions and Employers’ Organizations (Registration, Recognition and Status) Act (“the Act”) and appointed in August 2008. In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to the comments submitted by the National Trade Union Congress of Belize (NTUCB) on 12 November 2011, the 2008 ITUC comments have not been discussed before the Tripartite Body appointed in August 2008. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a discussion takes place before the Tripartite Body in this regard and requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the Tripartite Body’s deliberations on the matters raised by the ITUC.

Articles 3 and 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously recalled that, under the provisions of section 27(2) of the Act, a trade union could be certified as a bargaining agent if it received 51 per cent of the votes and that problems might arise from such a requirement of an absolute majority since, where this percentage was not attained, the majority union would be denied the possibility of bargaining. The Committee had noted the Government’s statement that section 27(2) of the Act had still not been amended, and that it will keep the Office informed of progress concerning the revision of the said law. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the Tripartite Body will be undertaking and coordinating discussions concerning the possible amendment of section 27(2) of the Act and prior to making a recommendation will meet with the Labour Advisory Board. The Committee expresses the hope that it will be in a position in the near future to note progress on the amendment of the Trade Unions and Employers’ Organizations (Registration, Recognition and Status) Act and requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

Benin

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, reporting restrictions on the right to strike and on the continuing difficulty for trade union organizations to obtain legal personality. The Committee recalls that, in 2009, the ITUC had denounced acts of intimidation against the leaders of the principal trade union federations which had called a general strike in 2008 to protest against the decline in purchasing power. The Committee also notes the comments of the General Confederation of the Workers of Benin (CGTB), dated December 2009, which reported the infringement to trade union rights, thereby discouraging the establishment and free functioning of trade union organizations in enterprises in the industrial processing zones. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in reply to the comments made by the ITUC in 2009 and 2011, and to the allegations of the CGTB.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish trade unions without previous authorization. The Committee has been requesting the Government for many years to take the necessary measures to amend section 83 of the Labour Code which requires the filing of trade union by-laws in order to obtain legal personality in particular from the Minister of the Interior, subject to a fine. In its previous observation, the Committee had noted the Government’s indication that its comments would be taken into account during the revision of the labour legislation. In its last report, while repeating its request for ILO technical assistance to help the social partners have a better understanding of the concept of freedom of association, the Government indicates that the process of revision of the Labour Code is still ongoing and that the requested amendments to the Code will be communicated in due time. Recalling that it has been making its comments for many years, the Committee trusts that the revision of the labour legislation, with the assistance of the Office, will be completed in the very near future. It expects the Government to indicate in its next report the amendments made in order to bring the legislation fully in line with the Convention with respect to establishing trade union organizations without previous authorization by removing the requirement to file their by-laws from the Ministry of the Interior, subject to a fine.

Right of workers without distinction whatsoever to establish trade unions. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to revise Ordinance No. 38 PR/MTPTPT of 18 June 1968 issuing the Merchant Navy Code, which gives seafarers neither the right to organize nor the right to strike and provides for prison sentences for breaches of labour discipline. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 2010-11 issuing the Maritime Code of the Republic of Benin by the National Assembly on 27 December 2010. Although the Committee observes that reference is made to the representation of seafarers within the framework of collective agreements (section 224 of the Code), it requests the Government to specify those provisions that expressly grant seafarers the right to organize and the right to strike; those dealing with sanctions for breaches of labour discipline; and, more generally, those granting seafarers all the guarantees of the Convention with respect to freedom of association.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes the comments on the application of the Convention submitted by the General Confederation of the Workers of Benin (CGTB) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC).

In its previous comments, the Committee had hoped that the new Merchant Shipping Code would explicitly recognize the right to collective bargaining of representative organizations of workers in merchant shipping. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 2010-11 issuing the Maritime Code of the Republic of Benin, by the National Assembly on 27 December 2010. The Committee notes this development with interest, and in particular that section 224 of the Code stipulates that: (i) collective agreements concluded between the qualified representatives of shipowners and seafarers may determine, within the framework of legal provisions, the reciprocal obligations of shipowners and seafarers; (ii) these agreements are deposited with the Director of the Merchant Navy; and (iii) they must be entered in the crew list and be available on board.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1965)

Comments of workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2009. The Committee notes the new comments of the ITUC of 4 August 2011, which refer to matters that are already under examination.

The Committee also notes the comments of the Confederation of Private Employers of Bolivia (CEPB), dated 18 August, concerning the position of the ILO Employers' group in relation to the right to strike (in this regard, see the General Survey on the fundamental Conventions in light of the 2008 Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, Part II "Freedom of association and collective bargaining").

Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been referring in its comments to the following matters:

- the exclusion of agricultural workers from the scope of the General Labour Act of 1942 (section 1 of the General Labour Act of 1942, and Regulatory Decree No. 224 of 23 August 1943, issued under the Act), which implies their exclusion from the guarantees afforded by the Convention. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the reference by the Government to various provisions which have gradually granted the guarantees set out in the Convention to agricultural workers and its indication that the Bill on agricultural and rural workers, establishing the conditions and rights of agricultural workers, was before the Senate of the National Congress. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that: (1) the Bolivian people of pluricultural composition has drawn inspiration from past struggles, from independence, from the peoples' fight for liberation, from indigenous, social and trade union protests, as well as the fight for lands, on the basis of which what is known as a new State has been constructed; and (2) this construction commences with the new Political Constitution of the State which provides that "all men and women workers shall have the right to organize in trade unions in accordance with the law" and "trade union organization shall be recognized and guaranteed as a means of defence, representation, assistance, education and culture for men and women workers in rural areas and the city; and men and women working on their own account shall have the right to organize for the defence of their interests". The Committee expresses the hope that, in the context of this legislative process to which the Government refers, which was initiated with the adoption of the new Political Constitution, the necessary measures will be taken to establish explicitly, in the context of the legislation giving effect to the new Constitution, the guarantees afforded by the Convention to all agricultural workers, whether they are employed or self-employed workers;
- the denial of the right to organize of public servants (section 104 of the General Labour Act). In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) the current Political Constitution provides in article 51(1) that men and women workers shall have the right to organize in accordance with the law; (2) as the Political Constitution has entered into force, it should be noted that the conditions of service of public officials contain provisions which envisage through regulations the right to organize of workers in health and education sectors, such as the Trade Union Confederation of Health Workers and the Confederation of Workers in Urban and Rural Education; and (3) it is the responsibility of the Government to adapt and amend the current conditions of service of public officials so that workers can be included in administrative careers and benefit from worthy and stable work in accordance with the current Political Constitution. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the amendments to the legislation to which the Government refers will be carried out in the very near future so that public officials enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their choosing without previous authorization for the promotion and defence of their interests;

- the excessive requirement of 50 per cent of the workers in an enterprise to establish a trade union, in the case of an industrial union (section 103 of the General Labour Act). In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with the current Political Constitution, it has to amend and adapt the General Labour Act and its Regulatory Decree, which date from 1942. The Committee trusts that these modifications will be introduced in the near future;
- the broad powers of supervision conferred on the labour inspectorate over trade union activities (section 101 of the General Labour Act, which provides that labour inspectors shall attend the deliberations of trade unions and monitor their activities). The Committee recalls that Article 3 of the Convention provides that workers' organizations shall enjoy the right to organize their administration and that the public authorities shall refrain from any interference which would restrict this right;
- the requirement that trade union officers must be of Bolivian nationality (section 138 of the Regulatory Decree of the General Labour Act) and permanent employees in the enterprise (sections 6(c) and 7 of Legislative Decree No. 2565 of June 1951). In the view of the Committee, national legislation should allow foreign workers to take up trade union office, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country, regardless of the acquisition of nationality (see the 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 118). Provisions which lay down the requirement to belong to an occupation or establishment in order to be a trade union officer are not consistent with the Convention, as they may infringe on the right of organizations to elect representatives in full freedom by preventing qualified persons, such as full-time union officers or pensioners, from carrying out union duties, or by depriving unions of the benefit of the experience of certain officers when they are unable to provide enough qualified persons from among their own ranks (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 117);
- the requirement of the majority of three-quarters of the workers in order to call a strike (section 114 of the General Labour Act and section 159 of the Regulatory Decree). The Committee recalls that the requirement of a decision by over half of all the workers involved in order to declare a strike is too high and could excessively hinder the possibility of calling a strike, particularly in a large enterprise. The Committee considers, for example, that it would be more appropriate to reduce the required majority to a simple majority of the votes cast;
- the illegality of general and sympathy strikes, subject to penal sanctions (sections 1 and 2 of Legislative Decree No. 2565 and section 234 of the Penal Code). The Committee recalls that the general prohibition of sympathy strikes could lead to abuse, especially where the initial strike is legal, and that these strikes, as well as general strikes, are means of action that should be available to workers. The Committee further recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and that therefore measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions should be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts;
- the illegality of strikes in the banking sector (section 1(c) of Supreme Decree No. 1958 of 1950). The Committee recalls that banking services are not regarded as essential services in the strict sense of the term (those services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population) in which strikes may be banned or restricted. However, the Committee recalls the possibility of establishing a negotiated minimum service in cases where, although the total prohibition of strike action is not justified, and without calling into question the right to strike of the great majority of workers, it is considered necessary to ensure that the basic needs of users are met;
- the possibility of imposing compulsory arbitration by decision of the executive authorities in order to bring an end to a strike, including in services other than those that are essential in the strict sense of the term (section 113 of the General Labour Act). The Committee recalls that a system of compulsory arbitration through the labour authorities, if a dispute is not settled by other means, can result in a considerable restriction of the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and may even indirectly involve an absolute prohibition of strikes, contrary to the principles of freedom of association. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute and strike situations is only acceptable if it is at the request of both parties involved in a dispute, or in cases where a strike may be restricted, or even banned, that is in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population;
- the possibility of dissolving trade union organizations by administrative authority (section 129 of the Regulatory Decree). The Committee recalls that measures of suspension or dissolution by administrative authority constitute serious infringements of the principles of freedom of association. The Committee further considers that, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, the dissolution of trade union organizations is a measure that only the judicial authorities should be able to order, and then only in extremely serious cases.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that in the context of the planned legislative reform, further to the adoption of the new Political Constitution, all of its comments will be taken into account. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect and recalls that, if it so wishes, it may have recourse to the technical assistance of the Office.

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2009. The Committee also notes the new comments of the ITUC, dated 4 August 2011, which relate to matters that are already under examination by the Committee.

Legislative matters. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been addressing the following matters in its comments:

- the need to adjust the amount of the fines (between 1,000 and 5,000 bolivianos (BOB)) envisaged in Act No. 38 of 7 February 1944 to make them sufficiently dissuasive against acts of anti-union discrimination or interference; and
- the need to guarantee the right to organize of public servants and agricultural workers and, hence, their right to collective bargaining.

In its previous observation, the Committee noted in relation to these matters the Government's indication that: (1) following the approval of the new Political Constitution, the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare would satisfy itself that the new draft Code of Labour Procedure is efficient and effective, allowing labour disputes or conflicts to be resolved more promptly; (2) the guarantees laid down in the Convention have been gradually extended to agricultural workers and the Chamber of Senators of the National Congress has before it a Bill on agricultural or rural workers, the aim of which is to establish conditions of work and rights for agricultural workers; and (3) the wording of the new Political Constitution drew on Convention No. 98; its application has to be regulated through statutory laws; and the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare is currently preparing a new Labour Bill which will take into account and incorporate the Committee's observations.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that it has taken note of the Committee's comments and that the draft reform of the Labour Code was replaced by the preliminary draft of the General Labour Act, which is currently being drawn up with a view to its approval. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the legislative process that is reported to have begun following the adoption of the new Political Constitution will be completed in the near future and that as a consequence: (1) the level of fines imposed for acts of anti-union discrimination or interference will be updated to ensure that they are sufficiently dissuasive; and (2) the guarantees laid down in the Convention will be granted to public officials who are not engaged in the administration of the State and to all agricultural workers, whether they are employed or work on their own account. The Committee reminds the Government that it can have recourse to ILO technical assistance if it so wishes.

Content of collective bargaining. Noting that for many years collective bargaining has in practice only covered wages, but not other terms and conditions of employment, the Committee requested the Government in its previous observation to take the necessary measures to encourage collective bargaining, including the bargaining of subjects other than wages, such as other conditions of employment, and to provide information in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the procedure for the negotiation of claims and its indication that: (1) collective bargaining does not solely cover wage matters and it is necessary to take into account the fact that sections 23 to 27 of the General Labour Act and sections 17 to 20 of its Regulatory Decree cover the collective contract of employment, which is understood as the agreement concluded between the employer and a workers' union, federation or confederation, with a view to determining general conditions of work or regulating them; (2) Supreme Decree No. 05051 of 1 October 1950 regulated aspects of the collective contract of employment; and (3) sections 106 to 113 of the General Labour Act and sections 149 to 158 of its Regulatory Decree regulate the process of conciliation and arbitration in the context of collective labour disputes. The Committee notes this information, but recalls that its comments on the subjects that are open to collective bargaining do not refer to the legislation (which undoubtedly authorizes them), but rather to practice.

The Committee also recalls that in its previous observation it noted that Article 49(2) of the new Constitution provides that "the law shall regulate labour relations respecting collective contracts and agreements; sectoral and general minimum wages and wage increases; reinstatement; paid rest and holidays; accounting of years of service, hours of work, overtime, supplements for night work, Sunday rates; the additional salary at the end of the year; bonuses or other schemes for participating in a company's profits; compensation and severance pay; maternity protection; training and vocational training and other social rights". The Committee requested the Government to explain the exact meaning of this provision and to indicate specifically whether its purpose is to establish minimum standards in the areas covered or to replace provisions concluded in the framework of collective bargaining. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with the Political Constitution, consideration will be given to the adoption of provisions governing the issues raised and that information will be provided in future reports on the progress achieved. The Committee notes this information.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to provide statistical data on the number of collective agreements in the public and private sectors, the subjects addressed and the number of workers covered. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it does not yet have processed data on the subjects covered and the number of workers covered, for which reason it notes the Committee's request and will provide information in later reports. The Committee expresses the hope that in the near future the Government will be able to collect the requested statistical data and requests it to provide such data as soon as it becomes available.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 concerning issues already raised by the Committee as well as matters related to the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), which will be examined in the framework of that Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Requirement of previous authorization for the establishment of employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend section 32 of the Act on the Associations and Foundations of Bosnia and Herzegovina which authorizes the Minister of Justice to accept or refuse request for registration of a trade union (paragraph 1) and provides that the request for registration shall be considered as rejected if the Minister does not adopt a decision within 30 days (paragraph 2). The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that more detailed instructions on how to complete the documentation required for registration of associations were issued in 2010 under the Regulations on Keeping of Registry of Associations and Foundations of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which will simplify the process and facilitate the understanding and application of the Act on Associations and Foundations of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Furthermore, the Committee notes with interest that the Government indicates that the draft Act on Amendments to the Act on Associations and Foundations of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which is currently before Parliament, proposes amendments in line with the suggestions and instructions of the Committee and that, in this regard, paragraph 2 of section 32 will be deleted. The Committee recalls that a provision whereby a minister may, at his or her discretion, approve or reject an application for the creation of a general confederation is not in conformity with the principles of freedom of association. More generally, a law providing that the right to association is subject to authorization granted by a government department purely in its discretion is incompatible with the principle of freedom of association. The Committee hopes that the draft Act will be adopted in the near future and ensure that section 32(1) and (2) are amended so as to take into account these principles and ensure that any undue delays in registration can be rapidly appealed to the courts. It requests the Government to supply information in its next report on any developments in this respect.

Registration of the Confederation of Independent Trade Unions of Bosnia and Herzegovina (SSSBiH). In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the unreasonable period which had elapsed since the filing of a registration request by the SSSBiH and had requested the Government to indicate the outcome of the appeal lodged by the SSSBiH before the Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina against the refusal of its registration. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) on 18 May 2011, the Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina decided to return the case to the first instance (the Ministry of Justice); (ii) the Ministry of Justice called on the SSSBiH to rearrange its 2002 registration request and attached documents in compliance with the relevant legislation and to submit them within 30 days of receipt of notice so as to enable the Ministry to implement the above ruling; and (iii) accordingly, the registration process of SSSBiH is under way. Recalling that almost ten years have elapsed since the filing of a registration request by this organization, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the SSSBiH will finally be registered without any further delay.

Republika Srpska. Article 3 of the Convention. Right of employers' and workers' organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Regulation on the registration of trade union organizations would be amended so as to allow trade union representatives not permanently employed by the employer to submit an application for inclusion in the register. The Committee notes from the Government's report that negotiations between the Government and the trade unions are still ongoing regarding the adoption of the new Regulations and that in its view it is unacceptable that persons who are not employed by the employer are presidents of unions at the enterprise level considering that the right to organize is guaranteed to workers and not to third parties without worker status and that unions are free to hire lawyers if need be. The Committee recalls that provisions which require all candidates for trade union office to belong to the respective occupation, enterprise or production unit infringe the organization's right to elect representatives in full freedom by preventing qualified persons, such as full-time union officers or pensioners, from carrying out union duties or by depriving unions of the benefit of the experience of certain officers when they are unable to provide enough qualified persons from among their own ranks. In order to bring such legislation into conformity with the Convention, it would be desirable to make it more flexible, either by admitting as candidates persons who have previously been employed in the occupation concerned, or by exempting from the occupational requirement a reasonable proportion of the officers of an organization (see 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 117). The Committee hopes that the abovementioned principles will be duly taken into account in the process of adoption of the new Regulations and requests the Government to transmit a copy of the text as soon as adopted.

Botswana

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, as well as the comments made by Education International (EI) in a communication dated 19 September 2011. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the comments made by Education International and the Botswana Teachers Union (BTU) concerning the Government's interference in the internal organization of the BTU. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to:

- amend section 48B(1) of the Trade Unions and Employers Organisations (Amendments), 2003 Act (TUEO Act), which grants certain facilities (access to an employer's premises for purposes of recruiting members, holding meetings or representing workers; the deduction of trade union dues from employees' wages, recognition by employers of trade union representatives in respect of grievances, discipline, and termination of employment) only to unions representing at least one third of the employees in an enterprise;
- amend section 10 of the TUEO Act, so as to afford industrial organizations the opportunity to rectify the absence of some of the formal registration requirements provided for in that section, and to repeal sections 11 and 15, which result in the automatic dissolution and banning of activities of non-registered organizations; and
- amend sections 9(1)(b), 13 and 14 of the Trade Disputes Act, which empower the Commissioner and the Minister to refer a dispute in essential services to arbitration, or to the Industrial Court for determination.

In this regard, the Government indicates in its report that it had noted the Committee's comments and that consultations with the social partners on amendments of all labour legislation are still ongoing. The Committee once again hopes that due account will be taken of its comments in the process of amending the relevant labour legislation. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information, in its next report, on any progress made in this regard. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office if it so wishes.

The Committee had also requested the Government to amend the list of essential services specified in the Schedule of the Trade Disputes Act, which includes, among others, the Bank of Botswana, railway services and the transport and telecommunications services necessary to the operation of all these services. The Committee was informed that the Government has adopted the Trade Disputes (Amendment of Schedule) Order 2011, on 15 July 2011, adding the veterinary services, teaching services and diamond sorting, cutting and selling services, and all support services in connection therewith to the existing essential services. The Committee once again recalls that essential services are only those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 159). The Committee considers that the new categories added to the Schedule do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term and therefore requests the Government to amend the Schedule accordingly.

Furthermore, in its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 43 of the TUEO Act, which provides for inspection of accounts, books and documents of a trade union by the Registrar at "any reasonable time". The Committee notes that according to the Government, section 43 does not authorize the Registrar of Trade Unions to inspect the books of accounts but should be read only as conferring the powers to inspect such books on the members of the union and not on the Registrar. Noting that according to the legislation, the books of accounts shall be open to inspection as many times as provided by the Registrar, the Committee recalls that the control by the public authorities (or by its decision) over trade union finances should, except when exercised on the basis of a complaint from a certain percentage of workers, normally not exceed the obligation to submit periodic reports. In these circumstances, the Committee once again requests the Government to take necessary measures to amend section 43 of the TUEO Act accordingly.

The Committee had also requested the Government to indicate the practical application of sections 49 and 50 of the TUEO Act which provide for the inspection by the minister of the financial affairs of a trade union "whenever he considers it necessary in the public interest", including the frequency with which these sections are invoked to inspect trade unions finances. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that these sections have never been invoked.

Employees in the prison service. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 2(1)(iv) of the TUEO Act and section 2(11)(iv) of the Trade Disputes Act, both of which specifically exclude employees of the prison service from their scope of application, as well as section 35 of the Prisons Act, which prohibits prison officers from becoming members of a trade union or any body affiliated to a trade union. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that prison services, in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution, are part of the disciplined forces and that these forces are not permitted to unionise and that the prison services are not only part of the justice system but they have also security responsibilities. The Committee recalls that while exclusion from the right to organize of the armed forces and the police is not contrary to the provisions of the Convention, the same cannot be said for prison staff and the functions exercised by the prison staff should not justify their exclusion from the right to organize on the basis of Article 9 of the Convention (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 56). In these circumstances, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend the abovementioned sections of the TUEO Act, the Trade Disputes Act and the Prison Act in order to grant to prison staff the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Unions Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011. The Committee also notes the comments made by Education International (EI) in a communication dated 19 September 2011 concerning the unilateral determination and changes of the terms and conditions of employment in the public sector (in matters that should be left to the parties), through the issuance of Statutory Instrument No. 50 of 2011 which revoked, without consultations with the representative organizations, the new Public Service Act and Status of the Bargaining Council and the Public Service Bargaining Council. The Committee recalls that while Article 6 of the Convention allows public servants engaged in the administration of the State to be excluded from its scope, other categories should enjoy the guarantees of the Convention and therefore be able to negotiate collectively their conditions of employment, including wages. In addition, in the case of negotiations in the public or semi-public sector, intervention by the authorities is compatible with the Convention in so far as it leaves a significant role to collective bargaining. Measures which unilaterally fix conditions of employment should be of an exceptional nature, be limited in time and include safeguards for the workers who are the most affected (see General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraphs 262 and 265). The Committee requests the Government to amend Statutory Instrument No. 50 of 2011 in accordance with this principle and in full consultation with the most representative organizations and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous points which read as follows:

Scope of the Convention. Application of the Convention to prison staff. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 2 of the Trade Disputes Act, section 2 of the Trade Union and Employers' Organizations (Amendment) Act 2003 (TUEO), and section 35 of the Prison Act, so as to ensure that prison staff are afforded all the guarantees provided under the Convention. The Committee had noted from the Government's report that it had no intention to grant prison staff the right to unionize since their staff association, as provided for in the Prison Act, supposedly caters adequately for the negotiations on their welfare, terms and conditions of employment. However, the Committee noted that according to section 35(3) of the Prison Act, a prison officer may only become a member of an association established by the minister and regulated in the manner prescribed; and that under section 35(4), any prison officer who becomes a member of a trade union or anybody affiliated to a trade union shall be liable to be dismissed from the service. The Committee recalls that all public service workers other than those engaged in the administration of the State should enjoy protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference and their union should enjoy bargaining rights. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend the Trade Disputes Act, the TUEO Act and the Prison Act to ensure to prison staff the rights enshrined in the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had further noted the Government's statement that consultation was ongoing concerning the ITUC's previous observation according to which if a trade union is not registered, union committee members are not protected against anti-union discrimination (e.g. article 23 of the Employment Act). Recalling that the Government is responsible for preventing all acts of anti-union discrimination in order to give effect to Article 1 of the Convention, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all union committee members, including those of unregistered trade unions, enjoy an adequate protection against anti-union discrimination.

Articles 2 and 4. Protection against acts of interference and promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the progress made with respect to the following legislative changes:

- the adoption of specific legislative provisions ensuring adequate protection against acts of interference by employers or employers' organizations in the establishment, functioning or administration of trade unions, coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions;
- the repeal of section 35(1)(b) of the Trade Disputes Act, which permits an employer or employers' organization to apply to the Commissioner to withdraw the recognition granted to a trade union on the grounds that the trade union refuses to negotiate in good faith with the employer; and
- the amendment of section 20(3) of the Trade Disputes Act, so as to ensure that compulsory arbitration of disputes of interest is permissible only in the following instances: (1) where the party requesting arbitration is a trade union seeking a first collective agreement; (2) disputes concerning public servants directly engaged in the administration of the State; and (3) disputes arising in essential services. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it has included in the National Development Plan 10 a project to establish an independent dispute resolution system.

The Committee noted that consultations with the social partners on all labour legislation were still ongoing. The Committee requests the Government to indicate, in its next report, any progress made on the abovementioned provisions and it hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future. The Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office if it so wishes.

ITUC's comments. The Committee noted the ITUC's comments concerning the necessity for a trade union to represent a significant proportion of the workforce in order to bargain collectively. The Committee noted the Government's indication that in terms of section 48 of the TUEO Act as read with section 32 of the Trade Dispute Act, the minimum threshold to be recognized by the employer is set at one third of the workforce of any organization. The Committee recalls that where, under a system for nominating an exclusive bargaining agent, there is no union representing the required percentage to be so designated, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all unions in this unit, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report information on the measures taken or contemplated so as to ensure that where no union represents one third of the employees in a bargaining unit, collective bargaining rights are granted to all unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 1997)

Article 1 of the Convention. In its previous observation, the Committee had noted that the Botswana prison service is excluded from the scope of the Public Service Act, the Trade Union and Employers' Organizations (Amendments) Act 2003 (TUEO) and the Trade Disputes Act. The Committee also noted the Government's statement that the Botswana prison service has been determined by national laws and regulations to be providing a security service. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that prison services, in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution, are part of the disciplined forces and that these forces are not permitted to unionise and reiterates that the prison services are not only part of the justice system but they have also security responsibilities. In this respect, the Committee once again recalls that under Article 1 of the Convention, only the police, the armed forces, high-level employees, whose functions are normally considered as policy-making or managerial, and employees whose duties are of a highly confidential nature, may be excluded from the scope of the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend section 2 of the TUEO Act, section 2 of the Trade Disputes Act and section 35 of the Prisons Act, so as to guarantee for the prison service the rights enshrined in the Convention.

Article 5. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the current legislation does not provide adequate protection to public employees' organizations from acts of interference by the public authorities in their establishment, functioning or administration. The Committee had noted that, according to the Government, the Public Service Act was being reviewed and that consideration would be given to the Committee's comments. Therefore, the Committee had requested the Government to ensure that draft legislation contains precise provisions providing adequate protection to public employees' organizations from acts of interference by the public authorities in their establishment, functioning or administration. Noting the Government's indication that consultation on the matter is still ongoing, the Committee once again hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future and invites the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard, if it so wishes.

Brazil

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the comments of the Union of Hotel, Bar and Allied Workers of São Paulo and Region (SINTHORESP) and the Confederation of Tourism Workers (CONTRATUH), dated 25 July 2011, alleging that trade unions were excluded from the process of negotiating the recruitment of workers with disabilities in an enterprise in the food sector. The Committee also notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, referring to matters already raised by the Committee, as well as allegations of anti-union dismissals and the murder of two trade union leaders and a trade union member. The Committee notes that the Government states, in reply to the ITUC comments, that it rejects any act of assault on the life and dignity of the worker and that, in this respect, the authorities responsible for the investigation of criminal acts carry out their duties in line with the principles of due process. The Committee notes this information and requests the Government to communicate the outcome of the judicial inquiries conducted in relation to the killings of the trade union leaders mentioned by the ITUC (as well as the alleged killings of 11 trade unionists between 1993 and 2009, denounced in 2009 by the Força Sindical, the Noca Central dos Trabalhadores do Brasil, the União Geral dos Trabalhadores, the Central Única dos Trabalhadores, the Central dos Trabalhadores e Trabalhadoras do Brasil and the Central General dos Trabalhadores do Brasil.

Article 4 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the Government's indication that: (1) under Constitutional Amendment No. 45 of 8 December 2004 (reform of the judiciary, amendment to Article 114), it was established that a collective dispute (dissídio coletivo) may only be determined with the agreement of both parties (the intervention of the judiciary can no longer be requested unilaterally); (2) Decree No. 186 was adopted, under which the parties may discuss, in the context of the Ministry of Labour and Employment, disputes which arise in relation to the registration of trade unions, thereby allowing the Ministry to act as a mediator in the dispute; and (3) the labour courts may only intervene in collective bargaining at the request of both parties to the dispute. The Committee requested the Government to indicate whether it is still possible "in practice" to impose "dissídio coletivo" through compulsory judicial arbitration at the request of only one party and to indicate in its next report the progress made with regard to the reported draft trade union reform. Observing that the Government does not refer specifically to this matter in its report, the Committee reiterates its request.

Right to collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been referring to the need, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, for public employees who are not engaged in the administration of the State to have the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, with regard to public officials, the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), was ratified in 2010 and that a working group was established with the social partners in the Ministry of Labour to formulate legislative proposals to be sent to the Office of the President of the Republic and that a Bill and a draft constitutional amendment would then be submitted. The Committee welcomes this information and expresses the hope that the Bill will grant public employees who are not engaged in the administration of the State the right to conclude collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress in this respect.

Subjection of collective agreements to financial and economic policy. The Committee recalls that in its previous observations it also referred to the need to repeal section 623 of the Consolidation of Labour Laws (CLT), under the terms of which the provisions of an agreement or accord that are in conflict with the orientations of the Government's economic and financial policy or the wage policy that is in force shall be declared null and void. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) in the past, with a view to the protection of wages, clauses were included in collective agreements providing for automatic adjustment when inflation reached a certain percentage; (2) it was common that, while a collective agreement was in force, economic measures were adopted, accompanied by a new wage policy, and that accordingly the wage adjustment measures became incompatible with the rules for adjustment during the inflationary period; (3) in 2008, the Supreme Federal Tribunal issued a binding decision ("sumula") prohibiting the use of the minimum wage as the index used as a basis for calculating the salaries of public officials or employees; and (4) in a socio-economic context that differs from the time when an agreement was concluded, it cannot be expected that a clause that is incompatible with the new situation remains in force. The Committee notes this new information provided by the Government and recalls once again that, except in exceptional circumstances required by economic stabilization policies, it is the parties to the collective bargaining process who are best placed to determine wages and they should be the ones to do so, and that it considers that the restriction contained in section 623 of the CLT affects the independence of the social partners during collective bargaining and, when it is of a permanent nature, it impedes the development of voluntary collective bargaining procedures between employers or their organizations and organizations of workers for the determination of terms and conditions of employment. The Committee once again requests the Government to take steps to repeal the legislative or constitutional provision that restricts the right to collective bargaining, and to provide information in its next report on any measure adopted in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the general information provided on the application of the Convention. However, the Committee observes that, the Government does not refer specifically in its report to the matters raised in its previous observations, which related to the following points:

- (a) the prohibition of establishing more than one trade union, whatever its level, to represent the same occupational or economic category at the same geographical area (article 8(II) of the Constitution and section 516 of the Consolidation of Labour Laws (CLT)). The Committee recalls that all workers, including rural workers, have the right to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization and that this implies the effective possibility to create, if the workers so choose, more than one workers' organization to represent the same occupational or economic category in the same geographical area. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any measure adopted in this respect;
- (b) the levying of compulsory union dues for all workers in a particular economic category (sections 578, 579 and 580 of the CLT). In this respect, the Committee recalls that questions concerning the financing of trade union organizations should be governed by the by-laws of the organizations and not imposed by law. Under these conditions, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the relevant legislative provisions and to provide information in its next report on any measures adopted in this respect.
- (c) the requirement of five lower level organizations to form federations (section 534 of the CLT). In this respect, the Committee recalls that, as in the present case of organizations in a single sector, the requirement of five organizations is too high and makes it difficult for trade unions to establish organizations at a higher level in full freedom, and is therefore contrary in particular to the provisions of the Convention respecting policies to facilitate the establishment and growth, on a voluntary basis, of strong and independent organizations of rural workers. Under these conditions, the Committee requests the Government to consider the amendment of section 534 of the CLT with a view to reducing the number of lower level organizations required to form a federation, and to provide information in its next report on any measures adopted in this respect.

Bulgaria

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2009. It further notes the comments made by the ITUC in a communication dated 4 August 2011. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to the issues raised by the Committee in its observation of 2010. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate the comments it has been making for several years.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of employers' and workers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules, to elect their representatives in full freedom and to organize their administration and activities. The Committee has highlighted on numerous occasions the need to amend the following provisions:

- section 11(2) of the Collective Labour Disputes Settlement Act, which provides that the decision to call a strike shall be taken by a simple majority of the workers in the enterprise or the unit concerned. The Committee had previously recalled that, with respect to a strike ballot, only the votes cast should be taken into account and the quorum fixed at a reasonable level;
- section 51 of the Railway Transport Act of 2000, which provides that, where industrial action is taken under the Act, the workers and employers must provide the population with satisfactory transport services corresponding to no less than 50 per cent of the volume of transportation that was provided before the strike. The Committee recalled previously that, as the establishment of too broad a minimum service restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their economic and social interests, workers' organizations should be able to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities; in cases where agreement is not possible, the issue should be referred to an independent body; and
- section 47 of the Civil Servant Act, which restricts the right to strike of public servants. The Committee had previously recalled that restrictions on the right to strike should be limited to public servants exercising authority in the name of the State.

In its previous observation, the Committee noted that the Government, in its report for the period ending May 2009: (i) with regard to the strike vote, reiterated its commitment to the tripartite consultations with a view to reaching a mutually acceptable solution that would address the recommendations of the Committee; (ii) on the issue of the right to strike in the railway transport sector, stressed its will to resolve this issue and achieve progress in the near future, and indicated that it had initiated internal expert discussions about a possible amendment of the Railway Transport Act; and (iii) concerning the right to strike of civil servants, stated that was ready to reopen the discussion with a view to finding a solution, welcomed ILO technical assistance, and indicated that a working group had been established to make proposals for legislative amendments to ensure compliance with the Convention. The Committee had welcomed the information provided by the Government and hoped that in the process of legislative amendments due note would be taken of its comments. In the absence of any new information in this regard, the Committee once again expresses its firm hope that, in the near future, its comments as well as the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2696 will be duly taken into account in the ongoing process of legislative amendments. The Committee trusts that the ILO will continue providing technical assistance as requested by the Government and requests the Government to transmit any new legislative text once adopted. The Committee once again requests the Government to supply the legal text which repealed the prohibition on strikes in the energy, communication and health sectors.

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 on matters being examined by the Committee. It requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to reiterate the issues raised in its previous observation.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection of workers against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its observations on earlier comments submitted by the ITUC and the Confederation of Independent Trade Unions in Bulgaria (CITUB) on the lengthiness of anti-union discrimination proceedings. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the Government's reference to section 310(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure, according to which claims of illegal dismissal, reinstatement and compensation are examined through summary procedure, and asked it to indicate the average length of anti-union discrimination proceedings in practice. The Committee notes that the ITUC indicates that the process of setting up specialized labour courts has continued with ILO assistance, that the legal proceedings for the reinstatement of dismissed workers can take a long time and sometimes even years, and that the sanctions against employers for unfair dismissal are too weak to be dissuasive. The Committee urges the Government to supply practical information regarding the average length of anti-union discrimination proceedings and the compensations paid or sanctions imposed in case of anti-union dismissals, and to indicate the status of the process of establishing specialized labour courts.

Article 2. Protection against acts of interference. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure adequate protection, including by means of dissuasive sanctions, against acts of interference by employers' organizations. The Committee had previously noted that the Government once again referred to section 33 of the Labour Code, which provides for the autonomy of workers' and employers' organizations in formulating their statutes, electing their representatives and adopting their programmes of action stating that it is not considered necessary to have an explicit ban on the acts of interference. In this respect, the Committee once again recalls that under Article 2 of the Convention, all acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers' organizations, or to support workers' organizations by financial means with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations, shall be deemed to constitute acts of interference. The Committee further recalls that legislation should explicitly prohibit all such acts of interference and make express provision for rapid appeals procedures, coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against acts of interference, in order to ensure the application in practice of Article 2 (see General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraph 232). Noting that national legislation does not provide full protection against acts of interference by employers or employers' organizations, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the legislative measures taken or envisaged to ensure adequate protection, including by means of dissuasive sanctions, against such acts of interference.

Article 4. Promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee had previously noted that sections 51(b)(1) and (2) of the Labour Code provided that collective agreements at the level of the branch or industry are concluded between the representative workers' and employers' organizations on the basis of an agreement between the national organizations to which they are respectively affiliated. It further noted, in this respect, the Government's statement that organizations not affiliated to a national representative organization cannot conclude collective agreements at the branch and sectoral levels, though they may do so at the enterprise level. Considering that requiring organizations to be affiliated with a national organization in order to be able to conclude sectoral and branch level agreements is incompatible with the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining established in Article 4 of the Convention, the Committee requested the Government to amend sections 51(b)(1) and (2) of the Labour Code. With reference to the Government's earlier commitment to conducting the necessary consultations with the aim of reaching a mutually acceptable decision on this matter, the Committee expects that the necessary legislative amendments will be adopted in the very near future and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comment, the Committee had taken note of the comments made by the ITUC and the CITUB on the denial of collective bargaining rights to public servants and requested the Government to take the steps necessary to amend the Civil Service Act. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indications that: (i) legislatively regulated issues could not be subject to collective bargaining; (ii) despite the absence of the right of collective bargaining in the narrow sense of the term, under section 44(3) of the Civil Service Act, trade unions are able to represent and defend the rights of civil servants on civil service and social security issues through proposals, requests, and participation in the drafting of relevant internal regulations and ordinances, as well as in the discussion of issues of economic and social interest; (iii) representatives of organizations of civil servants may take part in the competition commission for the selection of candidates to the civil service, as well as participate in the process for the appraisal of civil servants; and (iv) issues related to income and social security in the public service are discussed in the National Council for Tripartite Cooperation, in which all nationally representative employers' and workers' organizations are represented. The Committee recalls that all public service workers, other than those engaged in the administration of the State, should enjoy the right to collective bargaining. With reference to the Government's earlier commitment to conducting the necessary consultations with the aim of reaching a mutually acceptable decision on this matter, the Committee expects that the necessary legislative amendments will be adopted in the very near future and requests the Government to indicate any development in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future. It reminds the Government that it may continue to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in dealing with all the points raised.

Burkina Faso

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 24 August 2010 concerning the application of the Convention and reporting dismissals of trade union delegates and members for participation in strikes. The Committee requested the Government to provide its observations on these matters and on the ITUC's comments of 2009.

Article 3 of the Convention. Occupation of premises in the event of a strike. The Committee noted previously that, under section 386 of the Labour Code, the exercise of the right to strike shall on no account be accompanied by occupation of the workplace or its immediate surroundings, subject to the penal sanctions established in the legislation in force. In this respect, the Committee recalled that any restrictions on strike pickets and workplace occupations should be limited to cases where the action ceases to be peaceful or where observance of the freedom of non-strikers to work, or the right of management to enter the premises, are impeded. The Committee therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 386 of the Labour Code as indicated above so that the restrictions that it envisages only apply in cases in which a strike ceases to be peaceful or where observance of the freedom of non-strikers to work and the right of management to enter the premises are impeded.

Requisitioning of public employees. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled the need to amend sections 1 and 6 of Act No. 45-60/AN of 25 July 1960 under which, in order to ensure continuity of administration and the safety of persons and property, public servants may be required to perform their duties. The Committee pointed out that it would be advisable to restrict the powers of the public authorities to requisition workers to cases in which the right to strike may be limited or even prohibited. Noting the Government's statement that it was planning to revise Act No. 45-60/AN, the Committee requested the Government to indicate any amendment or repeal of sections 1 and 6 of that Act. Noting the absence of information in this respect, the Committee reiterated its request to the Government to indicate any measures taken to amend or repeal sections 1 and 6 of Act No. 45-60/AN to take into account the principles referred to above.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the comments from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 26 August 2009 and 24 August 2010 concerning anti-union practices, particularly dismissals and transfers. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations in this respect.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had hoped that the Government would soon be able to indicate the approximate number of workers and sectors covered by the collective agreements in force and had asked it to give an account of all measures to promote collective bargaining (including in the bakery, road transport and media sectors, in relation to which the Committee asked for information in its previous comments), particularly those taken by the Directorate of Labour Relations and Promotion of Social Dialogue (DRPPDS).

As regards the approximate number of workers and sectors covered by the collective agreements in force, the Committee noted the Government's indication that constraints due to the elections had prevented the compilation of the requested information. However, the Government indicated that it hoped that the elections would take place as soon as possible and would enable the numbers of workers covered by the collective agreements in force to be determined. The Committee requests the Government to send the requested information as soon as it is available.

As regards the measures to promote collective bargaining, particularly those taken by the DRPPDS, the Committee noted the Government's indication that: (1) the DRPPDS had held consultations with the social partners concerning the revision of the inter-occupational collective agreement; (2) during these consultations, the social partners expressed the wish focus on negotiations aimed at the conclusion or revision of sectoral agreements; (3) the DRPPDS had therefore identified the sectors of activity covered by previous agreements and those which are not covered, in order to encourage the social partners to engage in collective negotiations; and (4) training aimed at strengthening the capacity of the social partners for collective negotiations had been held and other training, in cooperation with the Programme of Social Dialogue in Francophone Africa (PRODIAF), was planned. The Committee also noted with regard to the media sector that the sectoral collective agreement was negotiated and signed on 6 January 2009 and dialogue was ongoing with respect to the bakery, road transport, banking and financial establishment sectors. The Committee requests the Government to send information on any developments in this sphere and indicate the collective agreements which have been concluded.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. As regards the public service advisory bodies, including the tripartite Public Service Advisory Council, which has competence for dialogue (section 51 of Act No. 013/98/AN of 28 April 1998 concerning the public service), the Committee previously noted the indication that the employees had not yet appointed their representatives and asked the Government to supply information on any new developments in this respect. The Committee also asked the Government to specify the categories of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State who enjoy the right to collective bargaining.

In this respect, the Committee noted the adoption of Act No. 019-2005/AN of 18 May 2005 amending Act No. 013/98/AN of 28 April 1998. It also noted the Government's indication that all public officials, with the exception of officials having the duties of director-general, technical director or departmental director who are engaged in the administration of the State, fully enjoy the right to collective bargaining. Noting that the Government's report does not contain any information concerning the representatives to the Public Service Advisory Council, the Committee requests the Government to: (1) indicate whether these representatives have been appointed and also any new developments in this area and; (2) send a copy of Act No. 019-2005/AN of 18 May 2005 amending Act No. 013/98/AN of 28 April 1998 in order to evaluate the application of the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments from the ITUC dated 4 August 2011 and requests the Government to send in observations in this respect.

Burundi

Right of Association (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 11) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls that for many years now its comments have referred to the need to amend Legislative Decree No. 1/90 of 25 August 1967 on rural associations which provides that, in the event of public subsidy, the Minister of Agriculture may establish rural associations (section 1), membership of which is compulsory (section 3) and that he determines their statutes (section 4). It also provides that the obligations of agricultural workers who are members of these associations include the provision of services for the common enterprise, the payment of a single or regular contribution, the provision of agricultural or livestock products and the observance of rules respecting cultural discipline and other matters (section 7), under penalty of the seizure of the member's property (section 10).

The Committee had noted the Government's indication that the Decree in question has not yet been repealed, but that its repeal will take place in the near future. The Committee strongly hopes that the Government will finally take effective measures to amend or repeal Legislative Decree No. 1/90 of 25 August 1967, and requests the Government to provide information in this respect in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee requests the Government to send its observations on the comments submitted in 2008 by the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU) and in 2009 and 2010 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), particularly the allegations regarding death threats to trade union officials and an assault on the Chairman of the Trade Union of Medical Doctors of Burundi (SYMEBU) and other acts of intimidation of trade unionists.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of public employees without distinction whatsoever to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee once again notes with regret the lack of the statutory provisions on the right to organize of magistrates and observes that this situation is the reason behind difficulties of registration of the Trade Union of Magistrates of Burundi (SYMABU). The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures without delay in order to adopt such statutory provisions so as to ensure and clearly define the right to organize of magistrates.

Right to organize of minors. For several years, the Committee has been raising the matter of the compatibility of section 271 of the Labour Code with the Convention, as this section provides that minors under the age of 18 may not join a trade union without the explicit permission of their parents or guardians. The Committee requests the Government to recognize the right to join trade unions of minors under 18 years of age who are engaged in an occupational activity without the permission of their parents or guardians being necessary.

Article 3. Right of workers' and employers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules, elect their representatives in full freedom, organize their administration and activities and formulate their programmes without interference by the public authorities. Election of trade union officers. The Committee recalls that its previous comments related to section 275 of the Labour Code which sets the following conditions for holding the position of trade union officer or administrator:

- Criminal record. Under section 275(3) of the Labour Code, holders of trade union office may not have been sentenced to imprisonment without suspension of sentence for more than six months. The Committee recalls that conviction for an act which, by its nature, does not call into question the integrity of the person and implies no real risk for the performance of trade union duties should not constitute grounds for exclusion from trade union office.
- Belonging to the occupation. Section 275(4) of the Labour Code requires trade union leaders to have belonged to the occupation or trade for at least one year. The Committee previously requested the Government to make the legislation more flexible by allowing persons who had previously worked in the occupation to stand for office or by lifting this requirement for a reasonable proportion of trade union officers.

The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 275(3) and (4) of the Labour Code, taking fully into account the principles recalled above.

Right to strike. In its previous comments, the Committee raised the matter of the succession of compulsory procedures to be followed before calling a strike (sections 191–210 of the Labour Code), which appear to authorize the Minister of Labour to prevent all strikes. Recalling that the right to strike is one of the essential means available to trade unions to further and defend the interests of their members, the Committee urges the Government to adopt and provide a copy of the text to be issued under the Labour Code on the modalities for the exercise of the right to strike, taking into account the principles recalled above.

The Committee also noted that, under section 213 of the Labour Code, strikes are lawful when they are called with the approval of a simple majority of the employees of the workplace or enterprise. The Committee recalled that, when voting on strikes, the ballot method, the quorum and the majority required should not be such that the exercise of the right to strike becomes very difficult in practice. If a member State sees fit to establish in its legislation provisions requiring a vote by workers before a strike can be held, it should ensure that account is taken only of the votes cast and that the required majority and quorum are fixed at a reasonable level (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 170). The Committee urges the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken to amend section 213 of the Labour Code in the light of the comments made above.

In its previous observation, the Committee noted that the Government had adopted a legislative decree prohibiting the exercise of the right to strike and to demonstrate throughout the national territory during the period of the elections. According to the Government, this legislative decree has not been used in practice. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this legislative decree was repealed following the elections.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that trade union organizations can exercise in full their right to organize their activities freely without interference from the public authorities.

The Committee notes that the Government has set up a tripartite committee responsible for rapidly proposing new provisions of the Labour Code which would take into account the claims of the social partners, the reports of the labour inspection and the comments of the Committee. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any progress made in revising the Labour Code and recalls that technical assistance of the Office is at its disposal.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Lastly, the Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the ITUC on the application of the Convention and requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee urges the Government to send its observations in response to the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU) concerning the application of the Convention.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Non-dissuasive nature of the sanctions established by the Labour Code for violations of Article 1 (protection of workers against acts of anti-union discrimination) and Article 2 (protection of employers' and workers' organizations against any acts of interference by each other) of the Convention. In its past comments, the Committee had noted that, according to the Government, the provisions in question would be amended with the collaboration of the social partners. The Committee regrets that no amendments have been made to the legislation and, recalling the need to establish sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, hopes that the Government will be able to make the necessary amendments to the legislation in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Article 4. Right of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee noted previously that there was only one collective agreement in Burundi. The Committee noted that, according to the Government, it is for the social partners to take the initiative to propose collective agreements and that in practice they limit themselves to concluding enterprise agreements of which there are many in para-public enterprises. The Committee recalls that, although nothing in the Convention places a duty on the Government to enforce collective bargaining by compulsory means with the social partners, this does not mean that governments should abstain from any measure whatsoever aiming to establish a collective bargaining mechanism. The Committee notes the launch of a capacity-building programme for the social partners and once again asks the Government to provide information on the precise measures adopted to promote collective bargaining, together with information of a practical nature on the situation with regard to collective bargaining and, in particular, to indicate the number of collective agreements concluded up to now and the sectors covered. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to indicate substantial progress in its next report.

Article 6. Right of collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes the shortcomings in social dialogue in the public service pointed out by the ITUC and the COSYBU. The Committee previously requested the Government to specify whether provisions that imply restrictions on the scope of collective bargaining for the public service as a whole are still in force in Burundi, particularly as regards the determination of wages, such as: (1) section 45 of Legislative Decree No. 1/23 of 26 July 1988, which provides that, following approval by the relevant ministry, the governing councils of public establishments set the level of remuneration for permanent and temporary posts and determine the conditions for appointment and dismissal; and (2) section 24 of Legislative Decree No. 1/24, which provides that governing councils of public establishments draw up staff regulations for personalized administrations subject to the approval of the competent minister. The Committee noted that, in its reply, the Government indicated that these provisions were still in force, but that, in practice, state employees participate in determining their terms and conditions of employment. According to the Government, they are aware of the right of collective bargaining, and this is the reason for the existence of agreements in the education and health sectors. In the case of public establishments and personalized administrations, the employees participate in the determination of remuneration as they are represented on the governing councils, and wage claims are submitted to the employer by enterprise councils or trade unions, with the competent minister only intervening to safeguard the general interest; in certain ministries, trade union organizations have obtained bonuses to supplement wages. The Committee once again asks the Government to take measures to align the legislation with practice and, in particular, to amend section 45 of Legislative Decree No. 1/23 and section 24 of Legislative Decree No. 1/24 so as to ensure that organizations of public servants and employees who are not engaged in the administration of the State can negotiate their wages and other terms and conditions of employment.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Cambodia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1999)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 and 31 August 2011, and by the Cambodian Labour Confederation (CLC) and Education International (EI), in two communications both dated 31 August 2011. The Committee notes that these comments refer to serious acts of violence and harassment against trade union leaders and members and other violations of the Convention, as well as concerns over the increase in use of fixed duration contracts which could undermine the enjoyment of freedom of association and collective bargaining rights. The Committee urges the Government to send its observations on all the issues raised by the ITUC, the CLC and EI, as well as on the 2010 comments by the ITUC and the Free Trade Union of Workers of the Kingdom of Cambodia (FTUWKC).

In addition, the Committee notes the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association concerning the murders of trade union leaders Chea Vichea, Ros Sovannareth and Hy Vuthy and the continuing repression of unionists (Case No. 2318). As regards the impunity prevailing in these three murders, the Committee noted, in its previous observation, that the convictions of Sok Sam Oeun and Born Samnang for the murder of Chea Vichea had been remanded to the Appeal Court by the Supreme Court and that they had been released on bail; that Thach Saveth who had been convicted for the murder of Ros Sovannareth had been awaiting a review of his conviction by the Supreme Court for several years; and that no information had been provided in relation to the murder of Hy Vuthy. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report, according to which: (1) an investigation was being conducted in the case of the murder of Chea Vichea, following which the case would be sent to the Appeal Court for re-processing; (2) the Supreme Court ordered on 2 March 2011 the provisional release of Thach Saveth on bail; and (3) the case of the murder of Hy Vuthy has been sent to the prosecutor of Phnom Penh Municipal Court on 2 September 2010 for processing. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the reopening of these three cases by the judiciary will allow full and independent investigations into the murders of the abovementioned Cambodian trade union leaders to be conducted so as to bring to justice the actual murderers and perpetrators of these heinous crimes as well as the instigators. Recalling its previous comments and the conclusions of the Committee on Freedom of Association concerning the total absence of due process in relation to the trials of Sok Sam Oeun, Born Samnang and Thach Saveth, the Committee requests the Government to provide information of any steps taken to compensate them for damages.

Finally, the Committee takes note of the discussions on Cambodia in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (June 2011). It notes in particular that the Conference Committee urged the Government to: (1) adopt without delay the proposed law on the status of judges and prosecutors and the law on the organization and functioning of the courts and ensure their full implementation; (2) provide information on the progress made in this regard, as well as in respect of the creation of labour courts; (3) intensify its efforts, in full consultation with the social partners and with the assistance of the ILO, to ensure that the final draft legislation on trade unions would be fully in conformity with the Convention; and (4) transmit the draft texts to the Committee of Experts so that it would be in a position to comment as to their conformity with the Convention.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. In its previous observations, the Committee urged the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the trade union rights of workers were fully respected and that trade unionists were able to engage in their activities in a climate free of intimidation and risk. The Committee takes note of the comments made by the ITUC and the CLC, concerning serious acts of violence and harassment against trade union leaders and members, such as a violent attack against the president of the FTUWKC or the arrest of another union leader, as well as of the discussion during the Conference Committee, regarding the persistent climate of violence and intimidation towards union members. The Committee is bound to recall, once again, that freedom of association can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind against leaders and members of workers' organizations and that detention of trade unionists for reasons connected with their activities in defence of the interests of workers, constitutes a serious interference with civil liberties in general and with trade union rights in particular. The Committee further recalls that workers have the right to participate in peaceful demonstrations to defend their occupational interests. In light of the above, the Committee once again urges the Government to take all the necessary measures, in the very near future, to ensure that trade union rights of workers are fully respected and that trade unionists are able to engage in their activities in a climate free of intimidation and risk to their personal security and their lives as well as that of their families, in accordance with the abovementioned principles.

Independence of the judiciary. In its previous observations, the Committee, noting the conclusions of the ILO direct contacts mission of April 2008, referring to serious problems of capacity and lack of independence of the judiciary, requested the Government to take concrete and tangible steps, as a matter of urgency, to ensure the independence and effectiveness of the judicial system, including capacity-building measures and the institution of safeguards against corruption. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that an anti-corruption law was adopted together with a five year strategic plan (2011–15) and that an anti-corruption institution has been established. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the composition and mandate of the anti-corruption institution and on its activities, together with a copy of the law, the strategic plan and any other relevant document.

With regard to the proposed laws on the Status of Judges and Prosecutors and on the Organization and Functioning of the Courts, in the absence of any further information, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether these laws have been adopted. If this is the case, it reiterates its request to the Government to provide a copy of these laws. If not, it urges the Government to adopt them without delay.

Furthermore, in the absence of any further information on the creation of labour courts, the Committee is bound to reiterate its request to the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The draft Trade Union Law. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that the Government indicated that it was working with the cooperation of the ILO on a draft Trade Union Law. The Committee notes that the ITUC, the CLC and EI, in their 2011 comments, express concerns over a number of provisions of the draft Trade Union Law, in particular in relation to the scope of application of the law, the requirements for a local union to be registered, the possibility for the Ministry of Labour to suspend the registration of a union, the qualifications imposed for trade union leadership, and the sanctions on trade union leaders and members for the commission of unfair labour practices. Moreover, the CLC indicates that in the course of the drafting process the Government only took into consideration comments from the employers' organizations. EI further indicates that the Cambodian Independent Teachers' Association had not been consulted. The Committee also notes that the Conference Committee trusted that the new legislation would ensure, in particular, that civil servants, teachers, air and maritime transport workers, judges and domestic workers are fully guaranteed the rights under the Convention. The Committee has also been informed that a draft of the Trade Union Law has been sent to the Office and that the Government has benefited from the Office's assistance on the draft law. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that full consultation with the social partners on the draft Trade Union Law take place. Furthermore, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the final draft legislation on trade unions will take into account all its comments and in particular that civil servants, teachers, air and maritime transport workers, judges and domestic workers will be fully guaranteed the rights under the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the Trade Union Law.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 and 31 August 2011, which refer, in particular, to serious and numerous acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee further notes the comments made by the Cambodian Labour Confederation (CLC) on 31 August 2011, indicating, in particular, that independent trade unions face many risks such as discrimination, and mostly dismissals, and that employers create "yellow unions" to interfere with the independent unions activities. Lastly, the Committee notes the comments made by Education International (EI) on 31 August 2011, indicating that teachers and civil servants were denied both the right to freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining. The Committee urges the Government to send its observations on all the issues raised by the ITUC, the CLC and IE.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous observation, the Committee had underlined the need to take steps without delay to adopt an appropriate legislative framework in full consultation with the social partners to ensure adequate protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination, dismissals and other prejudicial acts, including by means of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the Labour Law ensures the rights of unions and that when the Law on Trade Union will be enforced these rights will be further promoted. The Committee also notes that, in their comments, both the ITUC and the CLC report severe cases of anti-union discrimination and anti-union dismissals. Against this backdrop, the Committee urges the Government to ensure, in full consultation with the social partners, that adequate protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination, dismissals and other prejudicial acts, including by means of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, will be provided for in the Trade Union Law which will be adopted. It requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

Article 4. Recognition of trade unions for purposes of collective bargaining. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 1 of Prakas No. 13 of 2004, which provides that the Ministry of Social Affairs, Labour, Vocational Training and Youth Rehabilitation may refuse to grant most representative status to a trade union when an objection is put forward from a member of the Labour Advisory Committee, or from enterprises, institutions or a concerned third party. The Committee considered in this respect that permitting the objections of third parties as grounds for refusing a union most representative status ran counter to the principle of promoting collective bargaining expressed in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that when the Trade Union Law is promulgated, its provisions will apply in this respect. The Committee also notes that the ITUC, the CLC and the EI, in their 2011 comments, express concerns about a number of provisions of the draft Trade Union Law, in particular in relation to the modalities for designation of the most representative union. The Committee recalls that the determination of the most representative organizations must be based on objective, pre-established and precise criteria so as to avoid any possibility of bias or abuse (see General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraph 97). The Committee requests the Government to ensure, in the framework of the adoption of the Trade Union Law, that this principle will be upheld, and that the new legislation suppresses the possibility for third parties to put forward objections to the granting of the most representative status to a trade union. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants. The Committee had previously noted that according to section 1 of the Labour Law, certain categories of workers, which include persons appointed to a temporary or a permanent post in the public service, are not covered by this legislation. On numerous occasions, both the Committee on Freedom of Association (see Case No. 2222, 334th and 356th Reports) and the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the laws pertaining to all public sector workers, so as to ensure the right to collective bargaining for all public servants, with the sole exception of those engaged in the administration of the State. More particularly, the Committee urged the Government to immediately take the necessary measures to amend the Common Statute of Civil Servants so as to guarantee fully the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes from the information provided by the Government in its report that no progress have been made in this respect. Concerning the application of the Convention in practice, it notes with concern the comments made by the ITUC, the CLC and EI, recalling that civil servants' associations are not recognized as trade unions and do not enjoy collective bargaining rights. It further notes that the ITUC, the CLC and EI, express concerns about the scope of application of the draft Trade Union Law. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the right to collective bargaining of public servants is an issue addressed within the framework of the drafting of the Trade Union Law. If that is the case, it requests the Government to ensure that the final draft legislation on trade unions guarantees the right to collective bargaining for all public servants, including teachers, with the sole exception of those engaged in the administration of the State. If that is not the case, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the laws pertaining to all public sector workers, and more particularly the Common Statute of Civil Servants, so as to bring them in conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding any developments in this respect.

Consultations on the draft Trade Union Law. The Committee notes that the CLC indicates in its comments that in the course of the drafting process of the Trade Union Law the Government only took into consideration comments from the employers' organizations. EI further indicates that the Cambodian Independent Teachers' Association had not been consulted. The Committee has also been informed that a draft of the Trade Union Law has been sent to the Office and that the Government has benefited from the Office's assistance on the draft law. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that full consultation with the social partners on the draft Trade Union Law take place. In general, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure meaningful consultation with the social partners with respect to any labour law reform and to ensure their full and equal participation in all relevant social dialogue forums. Furthermore, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the final draft legislation on trade unions will take into account all its comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on these matters and in particular on the adoption of the Trade Union Law.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that 55 collective agreements have been registered and that these agreements are attached to its report. However, the Committee notes that the documents received as attachments to the Government's report are not collective bargaining agreements. Noting the comments made by the ITUC according to which collective bargaining is rare and difficult, the Committee expresses its concern about this information and reiterates its request to the Government to communicate in its next report statistics on the collective agreements (workers and sectors covered in the different regions, and number of genuine collective agreements).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cameroon

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011, as well as the Government's reply. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to the comments received in 2009 from the ITUC concerning the refusal to recognize the Trade Union Federation of the Public Sector (CSP), and particularly that it has not received the approval of the Ministry of Territorial Administration and Decentralization and that, consequently, the CSP has no legal existence, but that the envisaged reforms would provide a basis for resolving this problem. The Committee recalls that public servants, like all other workers, without distinction whatsoever, must benefit from the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing, without previous authorization, for the promotion and defence of their occupational interests. It hopes that the CSP will be registered in the near future.

The Committee further notes the comments of the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC), dated 20 September 2010 and 9 September 2011, and the Cameroon United Workers Confederation (CUWC), dated 20 October 2011. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on these comments in its next report.

Article 2 of the Convention. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to amend Act No. 68/LF/19 of 18 November 1968 (under the terms of which the existence in law of a trade union or occupational association of public servants is subject to prior approval by the Minister of Territorial Administration).

The Committee has also been requesting the Government for many years to take the necessary measures to amend section 6(2) of the Labour Code of 1992 (which provides that persons establishing a trade union which has not yet been registered and who act as if the said union has been registered shall be liable to prosecution) and section 166 of the Labour Code (establishing heavy fines for members of a union who commit this offence).

The Committee recalls the Government's indication in its previous report that the adoption of the amendments under consideration would replace the current system for the registration of trade unions, which is equivalent to a system of previous authorization, by a procedure of declaration and would not involve penal sanctions for violations of the law; moreover, the power to cancel the registration of an organization would lie solely with the judicial authorities, thereby bringing an end to the possibilities for the dissolution of organizations by administrative authority. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Ministry of Labour and Social Security has established a committee for the revision of the Labour Code and its implementing texts, and that the provisions respecting trade unions will be revised to bring them into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Government adds that the current revision of the Labour Code and the adoption of an Act on trade unions will, among other issues, resolve the problem of trade unions in the public sector. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its firm hope that, in the framework of the envisaged reforms, the Government will be in a position to indicate without further delay the progress achieved on all these points.

Article 5. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal section 19 of Decree No. 69/DF/7 of 6 January 1969 (under the terms of which trade unions or associations of public servants may not join a foreign occupational organization without obtaining prior authorization from the minister responsible for “supervising public freedoms”). Noting that on this matter the Government refers once again to the envisaged reforms, the Committee once again urges it to take the necessary measures without delay to amend the legislation with a view to removing the requirement for previous authorization for the affiliation of trade unions of public servants to an international organization.

The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the process of reforming the legislation will result in the near future in the legislation being brought into conformity with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide copies of all the legislative texts adopted in this connection.

The Committee takes note of the comments sent by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in communications dated 24 August 2010 and 4 August 2011, and the Government’s reply thereon. The Committee notes the comments of the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC), dated 20 September 2010 and 9 September 2011 and the comments of the Confederation of United Workers of Cameroon (CTUC), dated 20 October 2011. It requests the Government to provide its observations thereon in its next report.

Article 1 of the Convention. Sanctions against trade unionists. With regard to its request concerning the amendment of sections 6(2) and 166 of the Labour Code, which allow the imposition of fines ranging between 50,000 and 500,000 francs on members responsible for the administration or management of a non-registered trade union, who act as if the union had been registered, the Committee refers to its observation in the framework of the regular examination of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Article 4. Right of collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to reply to the comments made by the trade union organizations concerning the lack of genuine collective bargaining in the country since 1996. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that Cameroon has negotiated and signed 30 collective agreements and contracts, including seven enterprise agreements, covering millions of workers in the private sector.

Compliance with collective agreements. The Committee notes that, in its reply to the comments of the ITUC of 24 August 2010, the Government indicates that the problem of the application of collective agreements by enterprises is a priority and that it is endeavouring to extend and to make all collective agreements binding. Recalling the importance of guaranteeing compliance with collective agreements by the parties, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this respect.

Canada

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee takes note of the comments from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 which relate to a number of issues under examination, as well as the Government’s reply thereto.

The Committee takes note of the discussions which took place within the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010 on the implementation of the Convention by Canada. The Committee notes that in its recommendation, the Conference Committee noted that the issues that were pending related in particular to the exclusion of a variety of workers from the coverage of the labour relations legislation in a number of provinces. The Conference Committee stressed the importance of ensuring to all workers, without distinction whatsoever, the right to form and join the organization of their own choosing and, accordingly, expressed the firm hope that all necessary measures would be adopted in the near future to provide full guarantees of the rights set forth in the Convention to all workers.

The Committee takes note of the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in a number of cases concerning allegations of interference into the right to organize and carry out trade union activities, including collective bargaining, in various provinces of Canada (Case No. 2173, 357th Report, paragraphs 30–34; Case No. 2257, 358th Report, paragraphs 31–36; Case No. 2430, 358th Report, paragraphs 37–42; and Case No. 2654, 356th Report, paragraphs 313–384).

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of certain categories of workers. The Committee recalls that it has been expressing concern for many years on the exclusion of wide categories of workers from statutory protection of freedom of association and on the restrictions on the right to strike in several provinces.

Workers in agriculture and horticulture (Alberta and Ontario). The Committee recalls from its previous comments that workers in agriculture and horticulture in the Provinces of Alberta and Ontario are excluded from the coverage of the general labour relations legislation and thereby deprived of the same statutory protection of the right to organize afforded to other workers. The Committee notes from the report of the Government the indication that on 29 April 2011 the Supreme Court of Canada issued its decision in the matter of Ontario (Attorney General) v. Fraser, in which the constitutionality of Ontario's Agricultural Employees Protection Act, 2002 (AEPA) was challenged on the basis that it infringed farm workers rights under subsection 2(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which guarantees freedom of association, by failing to provide effective protection for the right to organize and bargain collectively. The Committee observes that in its ruling, the Supreme Court determined that the AEPA does provide a meaningful process for agricultural workers in Ontario to bargain collectively, and therefore upheld the AEPA as constitutional.

In this regard, the Committee notes with regret from the Government's report that the Government of Alberta has no plan for a legislative review following the Supreme Court's decision on Ontario's AEPA, although it is stated that the Government of the Province will continue to monitor the impacts of the Ontario (Attorney General) v. Fraser decision, particularly as other courts and tribunals may apply the decision in other cases.

As for Ontario, the Committee recalls that in its previous comments it noted that, although the AEPA gave agricultural employees the right to form or join an employees' association, it however maintained the exclusion of agricultural employees from the Labour Relations Act and did not provide a right to a statutory collective bargaining regime. The Committee observes from the Government's report that, pursuant to the Ontario (Attorney General) v. Fraser decision of the Supreme Court, the Province seems to consider that the rights of agricultural workers, under the AEPA, to form associations to represent and communicate their interests and exercise their constitutionally protected rights are adequate. While acknowledging the Supreme Court decision upholding the constitutionality of the AEPA, the Committee nevertheless notes with regret that the Government of Ontario is not considering any amendments to the AEPA aimed at ensuring sufficient guarantees for the full exercise of freedom of association rights by agricultural workers, particularly bearing in mind the obstacles to organizing that are inherent to the nature of this work, as well as the conditions necessary to enable these workers to have recourse to industrial actions without sanction.

The Committee is bound to recall once again that all workers without distinction whatsoever (with the sole possible exception of the armed forces and the police) shall have the right to organize under the Convention. Therefore, any provincial legislation that would deny or limit the full application of the Convention in relation to the freedom of association of agricultural workers should be amended. Consequently, the Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that the Governments of Alberta and Ontario take all necessary measures to amend their legislation so as to fully guarantee the right of agricultural workers to organize freely and to benefit from the necessary protection to ensure observance of the Convention. It requests the Government, in particular, to provide detailed information and statistics with its next report on the number and scope of coverage of trade unions in the agricultural sectors in Ontario and on any complaints as to the challenges in exercising their rights under this Convention in practice.

Domestic workers, architects, dentists, land surveyors, lawyers and doctors (Ontario, Alberta, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan). The Committee recalls that it has been raising for many years the need to ensure that a number of categories of workers in Ontario, who have been excluded from statutory protection of freedom of association under sections 1(3) and 3(a) of the Labour Relations Act, 1995 (domestic workers, architects, dentists, land surveyors, lawyers and doctors), enjoy the protection necessary, either through the Labour Relations Act, or by means of specific regulations, to establish and join organizations of their own choosing.

In its previous comments, the Committee also noted that legislative provisions in other provinces (Alberta, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan) contain similar exclusions of domestic workers, architects, dentists, land surveyors, lawyers, doctors and engineers from the scope of industrial relations law. Moreover, these workers might be excluded also in Newfoundland, Labrador and Saskatchewan if the employer has less than two or three employees, respectively.

The Committee notes the statement by the Government of New Brunswick according to which it continues to consult stakeholders on the potential for amendment of the Industrial Relations Act to remove the exclusion of domestic workers. It notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any information from the Governments of Ontario, Alberta and Prince Edward Island that legislative amendments are planned in respect of the exclusion of domestic workers from the industrial relations laws. With regard to Nova Scotia, the Committee notes that domestic workers are not excluded under the Trade union Act.

With regard to the other professionals, such as architects, dentists, land surveyors, lawyers, doctors and engineers, the Committee notes the statement of the Government of Nova Scotia which reiterates that these professionals in question are generally members of professional organizations that represent their interests, including through collective bargaining. Hence, they cannot be considered disadvantaged in the labour market. As for Saskatchewan, the Committee takes note of the Government's indication that the Trade Union Act does not explicitly exclude architects, dentists, land surveyors, lawyers and doctors but is designed to capture the relationship between employees and employers as per the definitions set in the Act. The Province of Saskatchewan has other pieces of legislation instituting those professions as associations for the purposes of acting collectively.

The Committee is bound to recall once again its view that the exclusion of these categories of workers from the labour relations law has had as a result that, although they can still exercise their right to associate under the common law, their associations are devoid of the higher statutory protection provided for in the labour relations law, and this can function as an impediment to their activities and discourage membership. Consequently, the Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that the Governments of Alberta, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Prince Edward Island take all necessary measures to remedy the exclusion of professionals, such as architects, dentists, land surveyors, lawyers, doctors and engineers, from the statutory protection of freedom of association and to amend their legislation or to adopt specific regulations so as to ensure that these professionals are allowed to establish and join organizations of their own choosing and that these organizations enjoy the same rights, prerogatives and means of recourse as other workers' organizations under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report whether, in the Province of Saskatchewan, these categories of professionals could form organizations of their own choosing under the Trade Union Act, and to indicate whether under the other pieces of legislation instituting these professions as associations for the purposes of acting collectively, the latter enjoying the same rights, prerogatives and means of recourse as other workers' organizations formed under the Trade Union Act.

Furthermore, the Committee expects that the next report of the Government will include information on concrete measures taken or contemplated by the Governments of Ontario, Alberta and Prince Edward Island to amend their legislation in respect of the exclusion of domestic workers from their labour relations law. The Committee expects that the next report of the Government will also include information on the outcome of discussions held on the amendment to the Industrial Relations Act to remove the exclusion of domestic workers and any measures taken thereon by the Government of the Province of New Brunswick.

Nurse practitioners (Alberta). The Committee had been noting for many years that nurse practitioners are deprived of the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing by the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act of the Province of Alberta. The Committee notes with regret from the Government's report that there are no planned reviews of the status of nurse practitioners. The Committee once again recalls that the expression "all workers and employers without distinction whatsoever" used in Article 2 of the Convention means that freedom of association should be guaranteed without discrimination of any kind. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the Government of the Province of Alberta takes all necessary measures to amend the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act so that nurse practitioners have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing.

Principals, vice-principals in educational establishments and community workers (Ontario). The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the need to ensure that principals and vice-principals in educational establishments as well as community workers have the right to organize, pursuant to the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 1951 and Case No. 1975.

The Committee notes from the Government's report that, in February 2010, the Ministry of Education released Policy/Program Memorandum No. 152, Terms and Conditions of Employment of Principals and Vice-Principals, the purpose of which was to set out provincial standards of practice to assist school boards in establishing terms and conditions of employment for principals and vice-principals. The Memorandum explicitly states that, when negotiating terms and conditions of employment, principals and vice-principals shall have the right to representation by their local principal and vice-principal association. The Government further indicates that all boards were required to implement the Memorandum by 31 March 2011. With regard to community workers, the Government indicates that the Ontario Ministry of Community and Social Services led a review of the ILO's comments regarding community placements, with consideration given to recent court decisions on related matters and in the context of the Ontario Works Program. According to the report, options identified during the review are being evaluated in light of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada, and will be brought forward for consideration by government decision-making bodies.

The Committee recalls its view that it is not necessarily incompatible with freedom of association principles to deny managerial or supervisory employees the right to belong to the same trade union as other workers. It also considers that such categories of workers should have the right to form their own associations to defend their interests and should not be defined so broadly as to weaken the organizations of other workers by depriving them of a substantial portion of their present or potential membership. Taking due note of the latest positive developments referred to by the Government with regard to the representation of principals and vice-principals by their association as well as the review made by the Ministry of Community and Social Services on the representation of community workers, the Committee expects that the next report of the Government will contain full particulars on progress made in law and practice in the Province of Ontario to guarantee to these categories of workers, the fundamental right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing for the defence of their professional interests.

Public colleges' part-time employees (Ontario). In its previous comments, the Committee took note with interest of the amended Colleges Collective Bargaining Act which would allow part-time academic and support staff workers in Ontario's colleges to fully enjoy the right to organize. The Committee takes note of the conclusions and recommendations reached in November 2010 by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2430 (see 358th Report, paragraphs 37–52), and observes that the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act (CCBA) came into effect in October 2008 and gave part-time academic staff and part-time support staff at Ontario's colleges the right to bargain collectively. However, the Act also provides for a process to change, establish or eliminate bargaining units, including the possibility for colleges to challenge the number of cards union members have signed, which they allegedly take advantage of to delay the certification process. In this regard, the Committee notes the indication that the Ontario Public Service Employees' Union had filed certification applications to represent both the part-time academic staff and part-time support staff units. In both cases, representation votes have been held and the ballot boxes have been sealed pending a decision by the Ontario Labour Relations Board (OLRB) concerning issues that remain in dispute between the parties. Ultimately, the complainant's allegations that mediation and costly litigation at the OLRB can take months or even years had not been answered by the Government. Recalling the importance that part-time academic and support staff in colleges of applied arts and technology in Ontario fully enjoy without delay the right to organize, as enjoyed by other workers, and the need to lift any obstacle in law and practice which would hinder these rights as provided in the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report any decision taken by the OLRB on the matters currently pending before it.

Education workers (Alberta). With regard to the right to organize of education workers in the Province of Alberta, the Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the need to amend provisions of the Post-secondary Learning Act which empower the board of a public post-secondary institution to designate categories of employees as academic staff members – who are allowed, by law, to establish and join a professional association for the defence of their interests. The Committee previously expressed its view that such provisions would allow for future designations to exclude faculty members and non-management administrative or planning personnel from membership of the staff associations whose purpose is to protect and defend the interests of these categories of workers. The Committee notes with regret that the Alberta Government states that it has no present plans to amend section 60(2) of the Post-secondary Learning Act. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the Government of the Province of Alberta takes all necessary measures with a view to ensuring that all university staffs are guaranteed the right to organize without any exceptions.

Article 2. Trade union monopoly established by law (Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Ontario). The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the specific reference to the trade union recognized as the bargaining agent in the law of Nova Scotia (Teaching Professions Act), Ontario (Education and Teaching Professions Act) and Prince Edward Island (Civil Service Act, 1983).

The Committee notes with regret from the Government's report that there are still no plans to amend the legislation in these three provinces. The Committee is bound to recall that, although it may consider a system in which a single bargaining agent can be accredited to represent workers in a given bargaining unit and bargain on their behalf to be compatible with the Convention, a trade union monopoly established or maintained by the specific designation of a trade union in the law is in violation of the Convention, thus suppressing any freedom of choice. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the Governments of Nova Scotia, Ontario and Prince Edward Island take all necessary measures to bring their legislation into full conformity with the standards of freedom of choice laid down in the Convention by removing the specific designation of individual trade unions as bargaining agents and replacing them with a neutral reference to the most representative organization.

Article 3. Right to strike of workers in the education sector. The Committee recalls from its previous comments that problems remain in several provinces with regard to the right to strike of workers in the education sector (British Columbia and Manitoba).

British Columbia. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the Skill Development and Labour Statutes Amendment Act (Bill No. 18), which declares education to be an essential service, and the need to adopt provisions ensuring that workers in the education sector may enjoy and exercise the right to strike pursuant to the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2173. The Committee also noted the information pertaining to measures undertaken to support and facilitate the bargaining process between teachers and school employers resulting in the parties achieving, through collective bargaining, a five-year collective agreement effective 1 July 2006.

The Committee notes from the Government's report that the settlement reached in the health-care sector following the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Health Services and Support – Facilities Subsector Bargaining Association v. British Columbia, 2007 SCC27 has indeed serve as an inspiration for the settlement of grievances prevailing in the education sector, since the Government of British Columbia is now in discussions with the British Columbia Teachers Federation (BCTF) over the repercussions of the B.C. Supreme Court decision pertaining to Bill 28 (the Public Education Flexibility and Choice Act). The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate any decision taken by the Labour Relations Board (LRB) with regard to the essential service level (minimum service) in the education sector and the factors taken into consideration in doing so. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the LRB has never been called upon to issue a decision setting minimum essential service levels in the education sector. The Government however specifies that the LRB has issued on July 2011 a decision involving the designation of essential services for students and eligible children under the School Act, setting essential service levels for what BCTF has characterized as "Phase 1" of its job action plan. This decision reflects an agreement that had been reached between the British Columbia Public School Employers' Association (BCPSEA) and the BCTF. The Government indicates that subsequent phases of the BCTF's job action plan may require further applications to the LRB, which may in turn require the LRB to set essential service levels in the education sector. Finally, the Committee takes due note of the indication of the Government according to which the provisions of the Skills Development and Labour Statutes Amendment Act that make education an essential service do not take away the right of teachers to enter into strike or to engage in other job action as part of the collective bargaining process. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the Government of the Province of British Columbia continues to provide information on any decision from the Labour Relations Board with regard to essential service levels in the education sector, and to indicate the outcome of discussions with the British Columbia Teachers Federation on the Public Education Flexibility and Choice Act.

Manitoba. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the need to amend section 110(1) of the Public School Act which prohibits teachers from engaging in strike action. The Committee once again notes with regret from the Government's report that there are no plans to make amendments to the Public Schools Act in the immediate future. The Committee is bound to recall that the right to strike should only be restricted for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and in essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that the Manitoba Government takes measures in order to amend the Public School Act so that schoolteachers, who do not provide essential services in the strict sense of the term and do not qualify as public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, may exercise the right to strike without undue restrictions. The Committee also suggests that the Manitoba Government give consideration to the establishment of a voluntary and effective dispute-settlement mechanism in this regard, on the basis of consultations with all organizations concerned.

Article 3. Right to strike of certain categories of employees in the health sector (Alberta). The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the prohibition on strikes for all employees within the regional health authorities, including various categories of labourers and gardeners under the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely reiterates that the Act in question does not take away the right to strike for the vast majority of gardeners and labourers in the health-care sector, and states that these employees were rather prohibited from striking as staff members of facilities on designated hospital lists prior to the enactment of the Act. The Committee, recalling its view that gardeners and labourers do not provide essential services in the strict sense of the term, urges the Government to ensure that the Government of the Province of Alberta takes all necessary measures in order to ensure that all workers in the health-care sector, who are not providing essential services in the strict sense of the term, are not deprived of the right to strike.

Article 3. Right to strike in the public sector (Quebec). The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned Act No. 43, which put a unilateral end to negotiations in the public sector by imposing collective agreements for a determined period, and depriving the workers concerned, including teachers, of the right to strike (the labour law in Quebec prohibits strikes during the term of a collective agreement). Furthermore, Act No. 43 provides for:

- severe and disproportionate sanctions in the event of an infringement of the provisions prohibiting recourse to strike action (suspension of the deduction of trade union dues merely by the employer declaring that there has been an infringement of the Act for a period of 12 weeks for each day or part of a day that the infringement is observed (section 30));
- the reduction of employees' salary by an amount equal to the salary they would have received for any period during which they infringe the Act, in addition to not being paid during that period – a measure applicable also to employees on trade union release during the period in question (section 32);
- the facilitation of class actions against an association of employees by reducing the conditions required by the Code of Civil Procedures for such an action (section 38); and
- severe penal sanctions (sections 39–40).

The Committee notes the Government's statement that this Act is still under appeal before the provincial courts, that the hearings before the Superior Court will begin in December 2011 and may last until spring 2012, and that the Government of Quebec is reserving his comments until the courts have made their judgments. The Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that the Government of the Province of Quebec takes all necessary measures with a view to: (i) ensuring that strikes may only be restricted or prohibited in essential services and, if so, adequate compensatory guarantees are afforded to the workers concerned, for example, conciliation and mediation procedures leading, in the event of deadlock, to arbitration machinery seen to be fully impartial and independent by the parties concerned and leading to binding awards which should be implemented rapidly and fully; (ii) reviewing the excessive sanctions provided for in the Act in order to ensure that they may be applied only in cases where the right to strike may be limited in accordance with the principles of freedom of association and that they are proportionate to the infringement committed. In this regard, the Committee recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and therefore measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. Nevertheless, even in the absence of violence, if the strike modalities had the effect of making the strike illegitimate, proportionate disciplinary sanctions may be imposed against strikers; and (iii) reviewing the provisions facilitating class actions against an association of employees, as there is no reason, in the Committee's view, to treat such actions differently from other class actions in the Code of Civil Procedures. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate the outcome of the appeal pending on Act No. 43 before the provincial courts.

Article 3. Arbitration imposed at the request of one party after 60 days of work stoppage (article 87.1(1) of the Labour Relations Act) (Manitoba). The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the need to amend article 87.1(1) of the Labour Relations Act which allowed a party to a collective dispute to make a unilateral application to the Labour Board so as to initiate the dispute-settlement process, where a work stoppage exceeded 60 days. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the Labour Management Review Committee (LMRC), an advisory body on labour matters to the Manitoba Government with equal representation from workers and employers, recently reviewed sections 87.1 to 87.3 of the Labour Relations Act concerning the settlement of subsequent agreements. The LMRC made no recommendations on these provisions, and therefore no legislative changes to these provisions are anticipated at this time. Although it notes the indication that, during the reporting period, the Manitoba Labour Board ordered an end to work stoppages and settled new collective agreements on only two occasions, in both instances at the request of the union, the Committee is bound to recall once again that provisions which allow for one of the parties to refer a dispute to compulsory arbitration seriously limit the means available to trade unions to further and defend the interests of their members as well as their right to organize their activities and formulate their programmes (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraphs 148 and 153). The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the Government of the Province of Manitoba takes all necessary measures to amend the Labour Relations Act so that an arbitration award may only be imposed in cases involving essential services in the strict sense of the term, of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or where both parties to the collective dispute agree.

Article 3. Compliance of the Public Service Essential Services Act and of the Act to amend the Trade Union Act of the Province of Saskatchewan. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of communications of September 2008 and August 2009 from the ITUC denouncing the Public Service Essential Services Act (Bill No. 5) and the Act to amend the Trade Union Act (Bill No. 6) which were proclaimed into law in May 2008 by the Government of the Province of Saskatchewan. The ITUC indicated that Bill No. 5 weakened the right of workers to organize, permitted employers to potentially designate every worker individually as providing an essential service without recourse to such potential avenues as binding arbitration, reducing the bargaining rights of workers. The ITUC further alleged that Bill No. 6 weakened the rights of workers and unions to organize into associations and it potentially permitted employers to use coercive means to prevent the creation of union associations, and punish workers for engaging in union activities.

The Committee further noted that the National Union of Public and General Employees (NUPGE) had presented in 2008 a complaint before the Committee on Freedom of Association in relation to Bills Nos 5 and 6. In this regard, the Committee notes the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association when it examined in March 2010 the complaint lodged by the NUPGE (Case No. 2654). The Committee notes in particular that its attention is drawn to a number of legislative amendments recommended by the Committee on Freedom of Association: (i) the provincial authorities are requested to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend the Public Service Essential Services Act so as to ensure that the Labour Relations Board may examine all aspects relating to the determination of an essential service, in particular, the determination of the sectors in question, classification, number and names of workers who must provide services and act rapidly in the event of a challenge arising in the midst of a broader labour dispute; (ii) the Public Service Essential Services Regulations, which set out a list of prescribed essential services, should be amended in consultation with the social partners; (iii) the provincial authorities are requested to take the necessary measures so that compensatory guarantees are made available to workers whose right to strike may be restricted or prohibited under the Public Service Essential Services Act; and (iv) the provincial authorities are requested to take the necessary measures to amend the Trade Union Act so as to lower the requirement, set at 45 per cent, for the minimum number of employees expressing support for a trade union in order to begin the process of a certification election.

The Committee previously noted that a number of national and provincial trade unions have filed in the provincial court in July 2008 to have Bills Nos 5 and 6 declared unconstitutional for violating, among other fundamental texts, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and international Conventions ratified by Canada. The Committee notes from the Government's report that this case is still before the courts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any decision reached by the courts in this regard, and on any follow-up given thereto. The Committee firmly hopes that the next report of the Government will include particulars on steps taken by the Government of the Province of Saskatchewan to give effect to the recommendations made in March 2010 by the Committee on Freedom of Association with regard to amendments to be made to the Public Service Essential Services Act, the Public Service Essential Services Regulations and the Trade Union Act.

Cape Verde

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1979)

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted comments from national trade union organizations concerning the limited number of collective agreements concluded, and the Government's confirmation that the total number of agreements remained low. The Committee had also noted the Government's request for technical assistance from the ILO Dakar Office to promote voluntary collective bargaining.

The Committee notes in this respect that a national workshop on collective bargaining was held in Praia on 9, 10 and 11 May 2011, resulting in a national Action Plan on collective bargaining. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the objectives of this workshop were to: (a) recall the major principles of collective bargaining; (b) enable the stakeholders to evaluate the level of collective bargaining in the country; (c) present to the social partners the methods and procedures of collective bargaining, as well as bargaining techniques; and (d) make recommendations with a view to improving the situation as regards the conclusion of collective agreements. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the priority objectives of the Action Plan are: (1) to consolidate the technical capabilities of the social partners; and (2) to create a national committee for the promotion of collective bargaining.

The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Deliberation of 17 June 2011 establishing the National Committee for the Promotion of Collective Bargaining.

Finally, the Committee notes that: (1) a collective labour agreement was concluded with TAP-Air Portugal and published in the Official Gazette of 16 October 2009; and (2) the collective labour agreement of the private insurance sector is in the process of being revised.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the area of collective bargaining as part of the Action Plan adopted in May 2011 and of the impact of the measures mentioned above on the number of collective agreements concluded. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the National Committee for the Promotion of Collective Bargaining.

Central African Republic

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee takes note of the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), referring to matters already raised by the Committee. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of comments by the ITUC reporting continuous breaches in social dialogue and the dismissal of the General Secretary of the Association of Teachers during the general strike of January 2008. The Committee once again requests the Government to send its observations on these comments.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report contains no information on the points raised in its previous observation and hopes that the next report will contain full information on the points in question.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations without previous authorization. The Committee notes that section 17 of the new Labour Code does not limit the right to join organizations on the basis of nationality, but it does, however, draw a distinction based on the criteria of legal residence (paragraph 1) accompanied by a condition of reciprocity (paragraph 2). It recalls that, under Article 2 of the Convention, workers, without distinction whatsoever, shall have the right to join organizations of their own choosing, with the sole exception of members of the armed forces and police. Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 17 of the Labour Code so as to guarantee all foreigners the right to join organizations which aim to defend their interests as workers.

The Committee observes that, under section 26 of the Labour Code, parents and guardians may oppose the right to organize of minors under 16 years of age. It recalls that the minimum age for joining a trade union in full freedom should be the same as that established by the Labour Code for admission to employment (14 years according to section 259 of the Code), without the permission of the parents or guardian being necessary. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 26 of the Labour Code in that regard.

Article 3. Right of workers to elect their representatives in full freedom and to organize their activities freely. The Committee observes that, under section 25 of the new Code, the following persons may not be trade union officers: (1) persons who have been convicted to a prison sentence, with the exception of convictions for negligence, except in the case of the concomitant offence of leaving the scene of an accident; and (2) persons with a criminal record or persons deprived under a court decision of their right of eligibility in accordance with the law authorizing such deprivation. The Committee holds the view that conviction for an act the nature of which is not such as to call into question the integrity of the person concerned and is not such as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties should not constitute grounds for disqualification from trade union office (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 120). In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 25 of the Labour Code taking into account the above principle.

On numerous occasions, the Committee has also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 11 of Order No. 81/028 concerning the Government's powers of requisition in the event of a strike when so required in the general interest so as to restrict powers of requisitioning to cases in which the right to strike may be limited, or even prohibited, that is in the public service in respect of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, in essential services in the strict sense of the term and in a situation of acute national crisis. Noting with regret that the Government has not provided information on this matter, the Committee requests it to take the necessary measures to amend this provision taking the above principle into account.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that, under section 381 of the Labour Code, during a strike, a compulsory minimum service shall be required for certain enterprises on account of their social utility or their distinctive nature. The list of enterprises concerned and the conditions for implementing the minimum service shall be determined by order of the minister responsible for labour, following consultation with the Permanent National Labour Council. The Committee recalls that the establishment of minimum services in the case of strike action should only be possible in: (1) services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (essential services in the strict sense of the term); (2) services which are not essential in the strict sense of the term but where the extent and duration of a strike might be such as to result in an acute national crisis endangering the normal living conditions of the population; and (3) in public services of fundamental importance. Furthermore, the determination of the minimum services and the minimum number of workers providing them should involve not only the public authorities, but also the relevant employers' and workers' organizations. This not only allows a careful exchange of viewpoints on what in a given situation can be considered to be the minimum services that are strictly necessary, but also contributes to guaranteeing that the scope of the minimum service does not result in the strike becoming ineffective in practice because of its limited impact, and to dissipating possible impressions in the trade union organizations that a strike has come to nothing because of overgenerous and unilaterally fixed minimum services. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the participation of employers' and workers' organizations in the determination of the minimum service and to provide a copy of the list of enterprises concerned.

Articles 5 and 6. Right of organizations to establish federations and confederations of their own choosing. Further to its previous comments concerning section 4 of Act No. 88/009 of 19 May 1988, which provided that occupational trade unions formed into federations and confederations could join together in a single central national organization, the Committee notes with interest the removal of the reference to the single trade union system in the drafting of the new Code. However, the Committee notes that, under section 49(3) of the Code, no central organization may be formed without first having the occupational federations and regional unions defined in paragraphs 1 and 2. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Convention does not merely recognize the right of organizations to establish bodies operating at the higher level; it gives to the latter the same rights as are accorded to the first-level organizations. Emphasizing the interest in forming groups at the occupational, interoccupational or geographical level, or all three at the same time, the Committee considers that the guarantees afforded to workers' and employers' organizations imply that they may group together in full freedom into federations and confederations without intervention from the public authorities (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraphs 189 and 194). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 49(3) of the Labour Code to guarantee in full the right of workers' organizations to establish federations and confederations of their own choosing, and to indicate any progress in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, reporting the blockage of wage bargaining in the public service and the ineffectiveness of labour inspection, which is almost non-existent. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on these matters.

Article 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under the terms of section 30(2) of the new Labour Code, the head of the enterprise or his or her representatives shall not use any means of pressure in favour of or against any specific trade union organization. The Committee considered that the above provision did not cover all the acts of interference envisaged in Article 2 of the Convention, and in particular acts which are intended to place workers' organizations under the financial or other types of control of an employer or of an employers' organization. The Committee requested the Government to take measures to extend the protection envisaged against acts of interference and to indicate the penalties applicable for violations of the current section 30(2). The Committee notes the Government's indication that regulations will be adopted to broaden the protection afforded against acts of interference to include all the acts of interference envisaged in Article 2 of the Convention, and that these texts will also establish the penalties applicable in the event of violations of section 30(2). The Committee notes with interest these formal commitments by the Government and expresses the firm hope that measures for the adoption of these regulations will be taken in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any information on the other points raised in its comments and it hopes that the Government's next report will contain full particulars on these points.

Article 4 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee indicated that the negotiation of collective agreements by professional groupings should only be possible where no trade union exists. It requested the Government to amend the legislation in this respect. The Committee notes with regret that, under the terms of sections 197 and 198 of the new Labour Code, the representatives of trade union organizations and professional groups of workers are placed on an equal footing and may engage in collective bargaining. While noting that, according to the Government, collective agreements and work agreements are, in practice, always negotiated by the representatives of workers' unions and of employers, the Committee notes with regret that the national authorities did not take the opportunity of the reform of the Labour Code to amend the legislation as indicated. Recalling that the Convention promotes collective bargaining between employers and trade union organizations, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the amendment of the legislation in the near future and to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6. On several occasions, the Committee requested the Government to provide its observations in reply to the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), according to which in the public sector wages are fixed by the Government after consulting the trade unions, but without any negotiation. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, measures relating to the implementing texts of the Labour Code, particularly on the question of wages, are currently being adopted. The Committee observes that the new Labour Code, in section 211, envisages the right to collective bargaining in public services, enterprises and establishments where their personnel are not governed by specific conditions of service. Recalling that the Convention also applies to public officials not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee requests the Government to provide clarification on the scope of the right to collective bargaining in the public sector in relation to public officials not engaged in the administration of the State and public officials who are not governed by specific conditions of service. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that all public officials, with the sole possible exception of public servants engaged in the administration of the State, the armed forces and the police, enjoy the right to collective bargaining. The Government is requested to indicate any progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee noted in its previous comments that, under section 294(3) of the Labour Code, parents or guardians may oppose the right to organize of young persons under 16 years of age. The Committee recalls once again that Article 2 guarantees all workers, without distinction whatsoever, the right to establish and join organizations. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that section 294(3) of the Labour Code will soon be amended to guarantee the right to organize to minors who have reached the legal minimum age (14 years) for access to the labour market, either as workers or apprentices, without parental or guardian authorization being necessary. The Committee urges the Government to provide information in its next report on all the measures adopted in this regard.

Article 3. Right of workers' and employers' organizations to organize their administration and activities in full freedom. The Committee has also noted on many occasions that, under section 307 of the Labour Code, the accounts and supporting documents relating to the financial transactions of trade unions must be submitted without delay to the labour inspector, when so requested. Recalling once again that the inspection by the public authorities of trade union finances should not go beyond the obligation of organizations to submit periodic reports, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend section 307 of the Labour Code taking into account the abovementioned principle. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the instructions issued by the Director of Labour and Social Security with regard to the inspection of the financial transactions of trade unions.

With regard to Act No. 008/PR/07 of 9 May 2007 regulating the right to strike in public services, the Committee notes that section 19 gives a broad definition of essential services and includes radio and television broadcasting services and abattoirs. The Committee points out that the principle whereby the right to strike may be limited or even prohibited in essential services would lose all meaning if national legislation defined these services in too broad a manner. As an exception to the general principle of the right to strike, the essential services in which this principle may be entirely or partly waived should be defined restrictively: the Committee therefore considers that essential services are only those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 159).

Furthermore, the Committee reiterates its comments on the following provisions of the Act:

- Section 11(3) of the Act, which imposes the obligation to declare the “possible” duration of a strike. The Committee recalls that, under section 13(1), non-compliance with this condition would result in a strike being declared illegal. Recalling that trade unions should be able to call strikes of unlimited duration and considering that the legislation should be amended to this effect, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted for this purpose.
- Sections 20 and 21, under which the public authorities (the Minister concerned) have the discretion to determine the minimum services and the number of officials and employees who will ensure that they are maintained in the event of a strike in the essential services enumerated in section 19. In this respect, the Committee recalls once again that such a service should nevertheless meet at least two requirements: (1) firstly, and this aspect is paramount, it must genuinely and exclusively be a minimum service, that is one which is limited to the operations that are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear; and (2) as this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their economic and social interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities. The parties might also envisage the establishment of a joint or independent body responsible for examining rapidly and without formalities the difficulties raised by the definition and application of such a minimum service and empowered to issue enforceable decisions (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraphs 160 and 161). The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to amend the legislation to ensure that the minimum service is limited to the operations that are strictly necessary to avoid jeopardizing the life or normal living conditions of all or part of the population, that the workers' organizations concerned are able to participate in defining such a service, along with the employers and the public authorities, and to indicate any progress achieved in this respect.

- Section 22(1) of the Act, which provides that any refusal by officials or employees to comply with requisition orders (sections 20 and 21) makes them liable to the penalties provided for in sections 100 and 101 of Act No. 017/PR/2001 issuing the general public service regulations. In this regard, the Committee recalls that these legislative provisions describe the degrees of disciplinary penalties to be imposed by order of gravity, but without indicating those which correspond to the different degrees of fault. The Committee once again requests the Government to clarify the scope of penalties for contraventions of legal provisions and also requests it to indicate any other penalties that can be imposed for violations of Act No. 008/PR/2007 regulating the exercise of the right to strike in public services.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the International Trade Union Confederation's (ITUC) comments of 4 August 2011 addressing legislative issues already raised by the Committee. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not sent any response to the comments of 2009 and requests it to do so.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received.

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, reporting obstacles to collective bargaining in the oil sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon. The Committee reiterates its previous observations concerning the effective inclusion of the Union of Trade Unions of Chad (UST) in social dialogue and requests the Government to provide any information on any measures adopted in this respect.

Chile

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the comments from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 concerning the application of the Convention and also the Government's reply, which indicates that its observation will be sent as soon as possible. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations in this respect, and also on the comments made in 2009 by the ITUC, the National Inter-Enterprise Union of Airport Workers of Chile and other unions in various sectors. The Committee also notes the comments from the Confederation of Production and Commerce (CPC) dated 10 August 2011 concerning the position of the Employers' group at the ILO regarding the right to strike. The Committee notes that the draft reform of the Constitutional Organic Act on municipalities, No. 18695, which dealt with the right to strike, was rejected in the Chamber of Deputies.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government for several years to amend or repeal various legislative provisions, or to take measures to ensure that certain workers are afforded the guarantees laid down in the Convention. Specifically, in its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take steps to:

- repeal section 11 of Act No. 12927 concerning the internal security of the State, which provides that any interruption or collective suspension, stoppage or strike in public services or public utilities, or in production, transport or commercial activities which is not in accordance with the law and is detrimental to public order or to compulsory legal functions or is damaging to any vital industries shall constitute an offence and be penalized with imprisonment or relegation;
- ensure that officials of the judiciary are afforded the guarantees set forth in the Convention;
- amend article 23 of the Political Constitution, which provides that the holding of trade union office is incompatible with active membership of a political party and that the law shall establish penalties for trade union officials who engage in political party activities;
- amend sections 372 and 373 of the Labour Code, under which an absolute majority of workers in the enterprise is required for a decision to strike;
- amend section 374 of the Labour Code, under which a strike must be carried out within three days of the decision to call it, otherwise the workers in the enterprise concerned shall be deemed to have refrained from going on strike and so accept the employer's final offer;
- amend section 379 of the Labour Code, which provides that at any time the group of workers concerned by the negotiations may be called upon to vote, by at least 20 per cent of them, for the purpose of taking a decision, by absolute majority, to censure the negotiating committee, in which case a new committee shall be elected forthwith;

- amend section 381 of the Labour Code containing a general prohibition on the replacement of striking workers but which provides for the possibility of such replacement subject to compliance by the employer with certain conditions in the final offer during the process of negotiation, and the requirement to pay a bond of four units of account (UF) for each worker hired as a replacement. The Committee notes that the Government recalls that the possibility of replacement of striking workers is generally prohibited, being an exceptional facility granted to the employer subject to compliance with strict conditions. The Committee recalls that the replacement of striking workers should be limited to cases in which strikes may be restricted or even prohibited, i.e. in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, in essential services in the strict sense of the term and in situations of acute national or local crisis, or in the event of non-compliance with a minimum service;
- amend section 384 of the Labour Code, which provides that strikes may not be called by workers in enterprises which provide public utility services, or services the interruption of which would seriously endanger the health, public supply, the national economy or national security (section 384(3) provides that, in such cases, if no agreement is reached between the parties to the bargaining, the matter shall be referred to compulsory arbitration). The Committee notes the Government's reference to Case No. 2649 examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) and its indication that the Comptroller-General of the Republic has stated that this restriction on the declaration of a strike would be justified in view of the fact that: (a) the employees work in certain entities whose operation must be ensured on a continuous basis for reasons of public interest and on account of the principle of the State's readiness for service referred to in article 1(3) of the Constitution, which obliges the State to promote the common good; (b) in order to apply this prohibition, since no distinctions are made regarding the conditions in which part of the work is to be executed, the respective entities have recourse to the subcontracting system; and (c) ILO Conventions Nos 87, 98 and 151 do not contain any statements or requirements specifically concerning the situation of strikes in entities that provide essential services for the public. While noting this information, the Committee recalls that the definition of services in which strikes may be prohibited, and also the list drawn up by the government authorities, is too broad and goes beyond services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population; and that the aforementioned list includes certain private port terminals which cannot be considered as essential services in the strict sense of the term;
- amend or repeal section 385 of the Labour Code, which provides that, in the event of a strike which by reason of its nature, timing or duration causes serious risk to health, the supply of goods or services to the population, the national economy or national security, the President of the Republic may order the resumption of work. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Directorate of Labour, which is responsible for defining the substance and scope of labour standards, stated in opinion No. 5062/093 of 26 November 2010 that the concept of "essential services" contained in section 380(1) of the Labour Code should be interpreted as "services the interruption of which could endanger the life, personal safety or health of all or part of the population". The Committee observes that the definition of services with respect to which the President of the Republic can order the resumption of work goes beyond that of essential services in the strict sense of the term;
- ensure in law and in practice that agricultural workers enjoy the right to strike;
- amend section 254 of the Penal Code, which provides for criminal penalties in the event of interruption of public services or public utilities or dereliction of duty by public employees;
- amend section 48 of Act No. 19296, which grants broad powers to the Directorate of Labour for the supervision of the accounts and financial and property transactions of associations.

While welcoming the Government's statement that it notes the Committee's observations and reiterates its willingness to incorporate into the relevant national legislation all the necessary provisions to ensure prompt alignment with the Convention, the Committee hopes that the Government will take all the necessary measures in the near future to amend the legislation to bring it into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any measures taken in this respect. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office if it so wishes.

Finally, the Committee has been informed of the preparation of a draft reform of the Political Constitution. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress made in this respect and on the possible inclusion of provisions in amended legislation on the reformed Political Constitution relating to trade union rights.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the comments from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 concerning the application of the Convention. With regard to the comments dated 24 March 2009 from the National Inter-Enterprise Union of Airport Workers of Chile and other unions in various sectors and the comments dated August 2009 from the ITUC, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it will send its observations as soon as possible. The Committee is awaiting to receive the Government's observations.

In its previous comments the Committee referred to the following provisions of the Labour Code which are not in conformity with the provisions of the Convention:

- section 1 of the Labour Code, which provides that the Code does not apply to officials of the National Congress or the judiciary, or to workers in state enterprises or institutions, or those in which the State contributes or in which it participates or is represented, provided that such officials or workers are subject by law to special regulations. The Committee notes that the Government welcomes this observation and expresses its willingness to take account of it in the forthcoming legislative discussions, and will provide information on any changes that occur in this matter;
- section 82 of the Labour Code, which provides that “the remuneration of apprentices may on no account be determined by means of collective agreements or accords or arbitration awards issued in the context of collective bargaining”, and section 305(1), which provides that workers governed by an apprenticeship contract and those engaged solely for a specific task or activity or for a specific period, may not engage in collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that although there are limitations on the participation of these workers in regulated collective bargaining, these workers are able to take part in unregulated collective bargaining resulting in the conclusion of collective labour agreements that have an effect identical to those of collective labour agreements signed in conformity with the provisions of regulated collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide examples of unregulated collective bargaining in which remuneration for apprentices is determined, indicating the number of apprentices covered by collective agreements in the country;
- section 304 of the Labour Code, which does not allow collective bargaining in state enterprises dependent on the Ministry of National Defence or which are connected to the Government through this Ministry and in enterprises in which it is prohibited by special laws, or in public or private enterprises or institutions in which the State has financed 50 per cent or more of the budget of either of the last two calendar years, either directly or through duties or taxes. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a legal reform of the collective bargaining system for entities which may not engage in collective bargaining is an issue of parliamentary debate of current and future relevance and various items of draft legislation are before the Congress with a view to amending the legal provisions in force in this area, and one of these drafts was rejected for lack of a quorum. The Committee notes a number of legal or constitutional difficulties relating to collective bargaining in the public sector which have been referred to in the discussions (according to the Government’s report), but it emphasizes that the Convention is compatible with special methods of application in the public service. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention, only the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State may be excluded from collective bargaining. The Committee therefore considers that the categories of workers referred to above should enjoy the right to collective bargaining in law and in practice;
- section 334(b), which provides that two or more unions of different enterprises, an inter-enterprise union or a federation or confederation may submit draft collective labour contracts on behalf of their members and the workers who agree to the contracts, but in order to do so it shall be necessary in the enterprise concerned for an absolute majority of the worker members who are entitled to engage in collective bargaining to confer representation on the trade union concerned in an assembly, by secret ballot and in the presence of a public notary. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that it will take account of these comments in future legal discussions;
- section 334bis, which provides that, for employers, bargaining with the inter-enterprise union shall be voluntary or optional and that where an employer refuses, the workers who are not members of the inter-enterprise union may submit draft collective contracts in accordance with the general rules set forth in Book IV (on collective bargaining). The Committee welcomes the Government’s statement that it will take account of these comments in due course. The Committee considers that these provisions do not, generally speaking, adequately promote collective bargaining with trade union organizations;
- sections 314bis and 315 of the Labour Code, which provide that groups of workers, even when there are unions, may submit draft collective agreements. In its previous comments the Committee noted a bill which contains various amendments to the current legislation on collective bargaining and will enable collective bargaining to be undertaken by groups of workers formed for this purpose solely in enterprises where there is no existing trade union;
- section 320 of the Labour Code, which places an obligation on employers to notify all workers in the enterprise of the submission of a draft collective accord so that they can propose draft texts or agree to the draft submitted. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the purpose of this provision is to promote and facilitate collective bargaining together with other provisions relating to the same subject, and to establish order and peace so that the enterprise is not exposed to repeated bargaining procedures which waste time and affect productivity at the levels of both management and workers; according to the Government, this provision does not affect voluntary collective bargaining and only applies to regulated collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that direct bargaining between an enterprise and its workers, over and above representative organizations where these exist, may be detrimental to the principle that collective bargaining between employers’ and workers’ organizations is to be encouraged and that groups of workers should be able to negotiate collective agreements or accords only in the absence of such organizations.

While noting the information supplied by the Government, the Committee emphasizes that significant restrictions have continued for years on the exercise of the rights established in the Convention. The Committee has noted certain draft reforms which had an impact on the application of the Convention (the reform relating to collective bargaining and the right to strike of public servants, which was rejected for lack of the constitutional quorum required for its adoption; the reform of the Constitutional Organic Act on municipalities, No. 18695, which was shelved following its rejection by the Chamber of Deputies; and the reforms relating to the collective bargaining system, which are at the first stage of the constitutional process).

The Committee underlines the importance of the pending issues and expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the legislation to bring it into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information in its next report on all specific measures taken in this respect.

China

Hong Kong Special Administrative Region

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (notification: 1997)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the 2009 International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) comments. The Committee further notes the comments submitted by the ITUC in communications dated 4 and 31 August 2011 on the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Article 2 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the proposals to implement article 23 of the Basic Law which, among others, would allow for the proscription of any local organization which was subordinate to a mainland organization, the operation of which had been prohibited on the grounds of protecting the security of the State. The Committee previously expressed the firm hope that any further action on proposed legislation to implement article 23 of the Basic Law would take fully into account the provisions of this Convention, in particular, the right of workers and employers to form and join the organization of their own choosing and to organize their administration and activities free from interference by the public authorities. The Committee had also noted the Government's indication that article 27 of the Basic Law guarantees that residents of the HKSAR shall have freedom of association and the right and freedom to form and join trade unions, while article 18(1) of the Hong Kong Bill of Rights, as set out in the Hong Kong Bill of Rights Ordinance, stipulates that "everyone shall have the right to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and join trade unions for the protection of his interests". The Committee had further noted the ITUC's indication that several substantive changes had been made to the draft text of article 23 but that there has not been an announced timetable for enactment of the bill and had requested the Government to include in its next report a copy of the draft bill for article 23 of the Basic Law and to indicate any progress made in the enactment of the bill. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that at present, it does not have a timetable to embark on the legislative works but when the legislative exercise is to be taken forward, the Government will fully consult the community in order to achieve a broad-based consensus on the legislative proposals. In these circumstances, the Committee once again requests the Government to include in its next report a copy of the draft bill for article 23 of the Basic Law and to indicate any progress made in the enactment of the bill.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (notification: 1997)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 concerning issues already raised by the Committee and the additional comments communicated by the ITUC and the Hong Kong Confederation of Trade Unions (HKCTU) dated 31 August 2011, referring notably to the deprivation of effective protection against anti-union discrimination in Hong Kong evidenced by the low number of complaints filed by the Labour Department and the even lower number of successful cases against employers – not more than two since 1997. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination. In several of its previous comments, the Committee referred to the need to provide further protection against anti-union discrimination and noted the Government's reference to the drafting of an amendment bill that would empower the Labour Tribunal to make an order of reinstatement/re-engagement in cases of unreasonable and unlawful dismissal without the need to secure the employer's consent. The Committee had further noted that the Government indicated that: (i) there was ongoing progress on amendments to introduce new provisions on mandatory reinstatement and re-engagement under the Employment Ordinance, Chapter 57; (ii) upon completion of the draft, it would be introduced into the Legislative Council; and (iii) it has committed to introduce a bill which criminalizes non-payment of labour tribunal awards. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the new bill will also include a provision of a further sum to be payable to the employee in case the employer fails to comply with the compulsory order of reinstatement or re-engagement. The Committee once again expresses the hope that this bill, which has been under examination since 1999, will soon be adopted so as to give legislative expression to the principle of adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this respect.

Article 4. Measures to promote collective bargaining. Several of the Committee's previous comments concerned the need to strengthen the collective bargaining framework, in particular with respect to the low levels of coverage of collective agreements which were not binding on the employer (see Committee on Freedom of Association, Case No. 1942), and the absence of an institutional framework for trade union recognition and collective bargaining. The Committee previously requested the Government to continue to provide information on measures adopted or contemplated for the promotion of new bipartite collective agreements through the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiation between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations and to indicate any further sectors covered by collective agreements, as well as the level of coverage (number of collective agreements and workers covered). In addition, the Committee previously requested the Government to take all the necessary measures to continue to promote voluntary bipartite negotiations in the private sector and to provide additional information concerning new sectors in which collective agreements have been concluded. The Committee had previously noted that the Government referred to promotional materials, seminars, and operational activities between workers' and employers' representatives and indicated that collective agreements had been negotiated in the food processing and security services. The Committee appreciates the Government's indication in its report that during the reporting period, collective agreements in the pig-slaughtering, property management and some other public transport services trades were noted. In its previous comments, the Committee had also noted that the Government stated that: (i) it would continue to use tripartite committees as one of the useful channels for promoting bipartite voluntary negotiation at the industry level; (ii) it had been promoting direct and voluntary negotiations between employers' and workers' organizations; and (iii) it had taken measures appropriate to local conditions to promote voluntary and direct negotiations between employers and employees or their respective organizations. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates these affirmations in its report. Taking into account that the ITUC refers to a collective bargaining coverage of only 1 per cent of the population, the Committee once again requests the Government to continue to promote collective bargaining and to provide information in this regard.

Article 6. Measures to promote collective bargaining for civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate the different categories and functions of the civil servants so as to identify which of them are in the administration of the State and which are not. The Committee had noted that, according to the ITUC, all employees in the public sector are deprived of the right to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee once again notes that the Government again reports that all civil servants in Hong Kong, i.e. persons employed to work in government bureaux/departments, are engaged in the administration of the State as they are responsible for, among others, formulating policies and strategies and performing law enforcement and regulatory functions. Noting that it follows from the Government's report that in the public sector there are consultations but not collective bargaining, the Committee recalls that, according to Article 4, civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State should enjoy not only the right to be consulted on their conditions of employment but also the right to bargain collectively and once again requests the Government to ensure this right. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the different categories and functions of the civil servants so as to identify which of them are engaged in the administration of the State and which are not. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate any agreement concluded in the public sector.

Colombia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1976)

Comments from workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the comments of the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC), dated 30 August 2010 and 29 August 2011; the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 31 August 2010 and 4 August 2011; Education International (EI), dated 7 October 2010; and the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), dated 1 September 2011. The Committee notes that these comments refer in general to matters that are already under examination by the Committee, and particularly to acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, including murders and other acts of violence, as well as the impunity in relation to many acts of violence.

The Committee also notes the comments of the National Employers' Association (ANDI), dated 31 August 2011.

The Committee notes the Government's various communications related to these comments.

Technical assistance missions. The Committee notes that, at the request of the Government, preliminary contact missions were undertaken in 2010 in relation to the various cases before the Committee of Freedom of Association. The Committee observes that these missions provided an opportunity for the parties to reach agreements and request the withdrawal of several complaints.

The Committee takes due note of the fact that the Government invited a high-level tripartite mission, which visited the country from 14 to 18 February 2011. The Committee notes the report of the mission and particularly its conclusions addressing issues related to the strengthening of social dialogue, measures to combat violence and impunity, the employment mediation carried out by associated work cooperatives and the obstacles to freedom of association which may arise from such cooperatives, the need to strengthen labour inspection and certain pending legislative issues.

The Committee notes with interest the indication by the Government that the following measures have been adopted further to the conclusions of the high-level tripartite mission: (1) in relation to labour inspection, through Decree No. 1128 of 15 April 2011, 100 new labour inspectorates were established with a view to continuing to strengthen the inspection system and increasing the numbers of inspectors to 524; (2) with reference to the strengthening of the Special Committee for the Handling of Conflicts Referred to the ILO (CETCOIT), it has been agreed to establish departmental branches, with clear rules being established on their operation and gradual establishment through pilot programmes; the statutes of the CETCOIT were approved and, in February 2011, a letter of intent was signed under which the Government is providing US$300,000 for the strengthening of the CETCOIT and the promotion of international standards; (3) in relation to measures to combat violence and impunity, the Government adopted Decision No. 716, of 6 April 2011, of the Ministry of the Interior and of Justice “issuing instructions on the scope of the position of trade union leader and activist”. Through this text, not only is protection provided to trade union leaders, but also to trade union activists and to workers who have not been able to establish a union due to the threats received. An emergency plan was implemented to update pending applications relating to risk levels, with only 17 pending applications. Directive No. 013 of 19 April 2011 was adopted establishing a plan for 100 police officers to combat impunity in relation to crimes affecting trade unionists. The Office of the Public Prosecutor is promoting action for the training of investigators and prosecutors, with such action envisaging visits to regions, which will include roundtable meetings with trade union organizations. The National Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law Unit is in the process of being strengthened, in accordance with Decree No. 2248 of 28 January 2011, under which changes are being made to the personnel of the Office of the Public Prosecutor of the Nation, with 60 new specialized prosecutors, reaching a total of 162 prosecutors at the national level from the month of January 2012. In accordance with these commitments, the Office of the Public Prosecutor has continued its investigations in the context of Cases Nos 1787 and 2761 (submitted to the Committee on Freedom of Association concerning acts of violence), with a current total of 415 guilty verdicts and 567 persons convicted, thereby clearly showing the increase in the number of convictions from one in 2001 to 415 in 2011. By decision of the Public Prosecutor of the Nation, cases involving violence against trade unionists have been assigned to the Human Rights Sub-Unit, and the Government allocated a budget to the Office of the Public Prosecutor of US$20 million; (4) the Congress of the Republic has approved Act No. 1444 of 2011 establishing the Ministry of Labour, with the technical assistance of the ILO being provided with a view to giving effect to the Act; and (5) regional dialogue machinery has been strengthened with the support and the establishment of departmental wage and labour policy dialogue subcommittees, and a significant campaign has been launched for the training of the social partners.

Tripartite Agreement on Freedom of Association and Democracy. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that in May 2011 the Government, workers and employers renewed the Tripartite Agreement on Freedom of Association and Democracy which they had concluded in 2006. With the signature of this Agreement, the State confirmed its commitment to continue promoting and deepening dialogue on social and labour matters in the country. The Government observes that it is of great importance to extend and deepen cooperation with the ILO in various fields, including with regard to associated work cooperatives, temporary employment agencies and regulations respecting collective agreements. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, with a view to ensuring greater efficiency in this broad range of activities and cooperation, it may be appropriate to establish an ILO mission in the country, of which the principal task would be the coordination of the various fields of assistance.

Finally, the Committee notes that the Colombian Government and the Government of the United States agreed, on 7 April 2011, on a plan of action for the period up to 2013, which includes the following subjects: the reform of the criminal justice system, associated work cooperatives, temporary work agencies, collective agreements, essential services and protection programmes.

Trade union rights and civil and political liberties

The Committee recalls that for many years it has been examining allegations of violence against trade unionists and the situation of impunity, which have been submitted to the Committee of Freedom of Association in Cases Nos 1787 and 2761. The Committee notes with concern that the ITUC, the CUT, the CTC and EI allege that 51 trade unionists were murdered in 2010 and 20 between 1 January and August 2011, and that the situation of impunity in relation to crimes against trade unionists has not changed in view of the low number of convictions, the slowness of investigation processes and the high number of murders which are not investigated. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, there were 48 murders of trade unionists between 1 January 2010 and the month of June 2011, and that between 2001 and 2011 there were 354 convictions, and 88 between 1 January 2010 and June 2011, with 483 persons being convicted and 355 sentenced to imprisonment. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that the programme for the protection of trade union leaders is continuing and has a budget of US$19,498,000 for the protection of 1,454 trade union leaders.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, it is necessary to examine the context in which acts of violence occur to determine whether they are related to the general climate of violence or were committed for reasons relating to trade union activities. The Committee also notes the indication by the ANDI that it undertook a study of court decisions relating to crimes against trade unionists and that a reading and analysis of the rulings does not show in any way that the murders of trade unions are due to a policy of the State or of employers, and that in general it may be concluded that the violence affecting trade unionists has decreased in recent years. In this respect, as affirmed by the mission which visited Colombia in 2009, with a view to providing support for investigations into acts of violence against the trade union movement, the Committee considers that a tripartite analysis could be undertaken, in the context of the Dialogue Commission on Wage and Labour Policies, of the criteria for sorting the information that is to be referred to investigation bodies and it hopes that this will provide a basis for the compilation of harmonized statistics on violence for anti-trade union reasons.

The Committee welcomes the adoption of the Act respecting victims and the restitution of lands (Act No. 1448 of 10 June 2011), the objective of which is to compensate, restore and indemnify victims of the armed conflict in Colombia.

The Committee deplores the murders and acts of violence against trade unionists which have been occurring for years. The Committee notes the divergences in the statistics concerning the violence affecting the trade union movement. The Committee recalls that the rights of workers' and employers' organizations can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind against the leaders and members of these organizations, and that it is for governments to ensure that this principle is respected. Although it is aware of the gravity of the situation, the Committee welcomes all the measures, of a practical and legislative nature that the Government has been adopting to combat violence in general and against the trade union movement, as well as the significant increase in convictions. The Committee wishes to point out, along the lines of the high-level tripartite mission, that it continues to be deeply concerned at the situation and hopes that the Government will continue to take the necessary effective measures combating the serious violence against trade union leaders and members and convicting those responsible for these acts.

Pending legislative and practical issues

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Associated work cooperatives. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to consider the possibility of an independent expert undertaking a national study on the application of the Act respecting cooperatives, and the use of cooperatives in the area of industrial relations, and also to clarify the issue of whether or not workers in cooperatives can organize. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Decree No. 2025 of 8 June 2011, further to the conclusions of the high-level tripartite mission of 2011 which, among other provisions, establishes that no worker may be recruited without the labour rights and guarantees established in the Political Constitution and the law, including workers who are members of cooperatives. The Committee also notes that the updating of the 2006 Tripartite Agreement proposes as one of its objectives measures to combat all forms of intermediate employment which disregard the labour rights of workers, by regulating the activities of associated work cooperatives and pre-cooperatives and increasing the penalties when they engage in intermediate employment activities.

Articles 3 and 6. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. Restrictions imposed on the activities of federations and confederations. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been referring to the need to take measures to amend the legislation in relation to:

- the prohibition of strikes, not only in essential services in the strict sense of the term, but also in a very broad range of services that are not necessarily essential (section 430(b), (d), (f), (g) and (h); section 450(1)(a) of the Labour Code, Tax Act No. 633/00 and Decrees Nos 414 and 437 of 1952, 1543 of 1955, 1593 of 1959, 1167 of 1963 and 57 and 534 of 1967);
- the possibility to dismiss workers who have intervened or participated in an unlawful strike (section 450(2) of the Labour Code), even where the unlawful nature of the strike is a result of requirements that are contrary to the principles of freedom of association; and
- the prohibition of the calling of strikes by federations and confederations (section 417(i) of the Labour Code).

In this regard, in its previous observation the Committee noted that, under the terms of Act No. 1210, the legality or unlawful nature of a collective work suspension or stoppage shall be determined by the judicial authorities in a priority procedure and that it is for the judicial authorities to determine when a service is essential. Taking into account the fact that the updating of the 2006 Tripartite Agreement envisages further cooperation with the ILO and that the plan of action agreed with the Government of the United States envisages addressing issues relating to essential services, the Committee trusts that the Government will undertake a tripartite analysis of the legislative provisions referred to above which will take into account the rulings of the Supreme Court and of the Constitutional Court in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any measures adopted in this context.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1976)

Comments from workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the comments from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) and the Confederation of Retirees of Colombia (CPC) dated 3 June and 30 August 2010 and 29 August 2011; from Education International (EI), dated 7 October 2010; from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011; and from the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), dated 1 September 2011, referring to issues examined by the Committee and also to acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee also notes the comments from the National Association of Telephone, Communication and Allied Technicians (ATELCA), dated 4 and 10 November 2010, which refer to matters under examination by the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2434). The Committee further notes the comments from the National Association of Employers of Colombia (ANDI), dated 31 August 2011. Finally, the Committee notes various communications from the Government relating to these comments.

Tripartite Agreement on Freedom of Association and Democracy. The Committee notes the Government's statement that in May 2011 the Government, workers and employers renewed the Tripartite Agreement on Freedom of Association and Democracy which they had signed in 2006. The Government asserts that the signature of this Agreement reaffirms its commitment to continue promoting and extending social and labour dialogue in the country, and that it is of vital importance to increase and deepen cooperation with the ILO in various fields, including with regard to the regulation of collective accords with non-unionized workers.

The Committee notes that the Government of Colombia and the Government of the United States also agreed, on 7 April 2011, on a plan of action lasting until 2013, which provides, inter alia, for the promotion of collective agreements and the establishment of a solid system of application.

High-Level Tripartite Mission. In its observation relating to the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Committee notes the visit of the High-Level Tripartite Mission to the country from 14 to 18 February 2011, and also its conclusions, which, as regards the Convention, cover issues related to acts of anti-union discrimination and the strengthening of social dialogue and collective bargaining.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that it remains fully available to continue with social dialogue and create the space needed to contribute to the building of trust and the search for joint solutions enabling continued progress on labour-related matters. The Committee notes that departmental sub-commissions were set up towards this end for consultation on wage and labour policies which are receiving technical assistance as regards fundamental rights at work, the settlement of labour disputes, state policies for decent work, protection for vulnerable groups of workers and dissemination of fundamental rights at work. The Committee also observes that, according to the Government, the 32 sub-commissions which have been set up have dialogue plans designed to tackle specific labour issues in each department and a total of 428 meetings were held from 2009 to 2011. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a major training campaign has been undertaken for the benefit of the social partners with training provided for a total of 13,444 trade union officials and the creation of a diploma in negotiation, mediation and dispute settlement with the participation of trade unionists, labour inspectors and employers.

Article 4 of the Convention. Collective bargaining in the public sector. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. Decree No. 535 of 24 February 2009. In its previous observation the Committee noted with satisfaction the adoption of Decree No. 535 of 24 February 2009 concerning collective bargaining in the public sector, while also indicating that it was aware that the Decree is very short, can be improved and establishes principles which probably require further regulation to comply more effectively with its objectives and to extend in practice collective agreements in the various institutions. The Committee asked the Government to continue dialogue with trade union organizations with a view to improving the Decree that had already been adopted and to provide information in this respect. The Committee notes the Government's statement that: (1) in the context of meetings of the Sectoral Commission for the Public Sector, which comprises various Government entities and representatives of the CUT, CGT, CTC and the National Federation of State Workers (FENALTRASE), meetings have been held since February 2011 to conduct consultations on amendments to Decree No. 535 of 2009; and (2) in May 2011 the members of the Commission agreed on a preliminary draft of work for amendments to Decree No. 535 of 2009 "regulating section 416 of the Labour Code". The Committee notes that the abovementioned trade unions indicate that only the Government's signature is lacking from the agreement on the preliminary draft of work for amendments to Decree No. 535 of 2009 and this should come into force as soon as possible. The Committee welcomes this information and reminds the Government that, if it wishes, it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in relation to the draft decree for amendments to Decree No. 535 of 2009. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any further developments in this respect.

Collective accords with non-unionized workers. In its previous observation the Committee referred to the need to ensure that collective accords are not used to undermine the position of trade union organizations and to the need to ensure the possibility in practice of concluding collective agreements with them. It also asked the Government to provide information on the total number of collective agreements and collective accords and the respective numbers of workers covered by them. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, with a view to discouraging the conclusion of collective accords in which better conditions are granted to non-unionized workers, Act No. 1453 of 2011 was passed, amending section 200 of Act No. 599 of 2000 and establishing the penalty of imprisonment (one to two years) and/or fines (100 to 300 times the legal monthly minimum wage in force) in the event of the conclusion of collective accords in which, overall, better conditions are granted to non-unionized workers by comparison with the conditions agreed on in collective agreements with unionized workers at the same enterprise. The Committee nevertheless underlines that when there is a trade union at the enterprise, collective agreements should not be concluded with non-unionized workers. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's statement that collective bargaining is developing in Colombia and that 279 collective agreements and 166 collective accords were concluded between January and July 2011. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply statistics in this regard and state whether any trade union organizations exist in the enterprises where collective accords have been concluded with non-unionized workers.

Comoros

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1978)

Article 2 of the Convention. Anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes that the Workers' Confederation of Comoros (CTC) reports numerous dismissals of trade union members and leaders in the para-public and port sectors in a communication dated 31 August 2011. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in this respect.

Article 4. Right of collective bargaining. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. For several years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take measures to promote collective bargaining in the public and private sectors. The Committee had previously noted the Government's expression of regret that there had not been substantial progress in this respect and its reiterated desire to receive technical assistance to help the partners concerned gain a better understanding of the socio-economic importance of collective bargaining. The Committee had noted in this respect the comments made by the Employers' Organization of Comoros (OPACO), according to which collective agreements in the pharmaceutical and bakeries sectors, which had been under negotiation for several years, had still not been concluded and that negotiations in the press sector were currently under way. The Committee had noted with regret that, according to OPACO, the Government had not taken any measures to promote collective bargaining in either the public or the private sectors.

The Committee once again regrets the absence of progress in the collective bargaining that is being undertaken and expresses the firm hope that the negotiations will be completed in the near future. The Committee notes that, according to the CTC, there has still not been progress in collective bargaining and that it is not structured and has no framework at any level. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that ILO technical assistance will be provided in the very near future and it requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to promote collective bargaining in both the private and the public sectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Congo

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the arrest of a number of trade union representatives on 27 October 2005. The Committee also notes the new comments from the ITUC dated 4 August 2011 concerning points already raised by the Committee.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to conduct their activities in freedom and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to amend the legislation on the minimum service organized by the employer to be maintained in the public service that is indispensable for safeguarding the general interest (section 248-15 of the Labour Code), in order to limit the minimum service to operations which are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population, within the framework of a negotiated minimum service. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the work of revising the Labour Code, which had been suspended in 2008, resumed in 2010 and the adoption of the revised Code is envisaged for the second quarter of 2012. The Committee notes the timetable for the execution of the work, included in the Government's report, according to which a draft revised Labour Code was due to be produced in the first quarter of 2011, on the basis of which the ministries concerned, the social partners and the ILO were due to be consulted. The Committee also notes the Government's undertaking to take account, in the context of this revision, of the principles which it recalled in its previous comments, namely that since the definition of a minimum service restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their economic and social interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities (see 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 161). The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress of the work to revise the Labour Code and reminds the Government of the possibility of seeking technical assistance from the International Labour Office as part of this work.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Costa Rica

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the Government's report and its reply to the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of August 2011 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the report of the high-level technical assistance mission which visited San José in May 2011 in the context of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. Prohibition upon foreigners from holding office or exercising authority in trade unions (article 60, second paragraph, of the Constitution and section 345(e) of the Labour Code). The Committee observed previously that Bill No. 13475 amends section 345(e) of the Labour Code so that it no longer provides that the members of the executive board of a trade union must be of Costa Rican nationality or of Central American origin, or foreign nationals married to a Costa Rican woman and having completed five years of permanent residence in the country. Nevertheless, the Bill provides that the bodies of trade unions have to comply with the provisions of article 60 of the Constitution, which provides that "foreign nationals shall be barred from positions of management or authority in trade unions". The Committee noted previously that a draft reform of the Constitution, prepared with the assistance of the ILO along the lines requested by the ILO, had been submitted to the Legislative Assembly in 1998, but was shelved in 2009.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, on 30 July 2010, a group of deputies once again submitted a Bill to amend article 60 of the Constitution, along the lines requested by the Committee, and that if it is approved it would involve the amendment of section 345 of the Labour Code, to guarantee equality of conditions for foreign nationals in access to trade union office. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the new Bill to reform the Constitution will be adopted in the very near future and it requests the Government to provide information in that regard.

Obligation for the trade union assembly to appoint the executive board each year (section 346(a) of the Labour Code). The Committee noted previously that Bill No. 13475 no longer establishes the requirement for the executive board to be appointed each year. The Committee notes the Government's repeated indication that in practice the Ministry of Labour ensures the full autonomy of organizations to determine the duration of the mandates of their executive boards. The Government adds that, in view of the examination of another Bill (to reform labour procedures) by the Legislative Assembly, Bill No. 13475 has not become law. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to amend section 346(a) of the Labour Code so as to adapt it to the practice followed by the authorities, and to provide information in this respect.

Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom. Restrictions on the right to strike: (i) requirement of "60 per cent of persons who work in the enterprise, workplace or establishment concerned" – section 373(c) of the Labour Code; and (ii) prohibition of the right to strike for "workers engaged in rail, maritime and air transport enterprises" and "workers engaged in loading and unloading on docks and quays" – section 373(c) of the Labour Code.

The Committee noted previously the Government's indication that the Bill to reform labour procedures, which benefited from ILO technical assistance, had been submitted to the Legislative Assembly, was supported by the trade unions and employers' associations, with the exception of certain provisions, and took into account the recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies. The Committee observed that the Bill:

- proposes 40 per cent of the workers of the enterprise in order to call a strike (the employers' associations rejected this percentage, citing the principle of democratic participation);
- the right to strike is restricted only in essential services in the strict sense of the term, although these include the loading and unloading of perishable goods in ports; transport is considered an essential service as long as the journey has not been completed;
- strikes may no longer be deemed unlawful before they have occurred (the Government emphasizes that this is already established by jurisprudence, and that trade unions are now heard during judicial procedures);
- arbitration is introduced for disputes in essential services and in the public sector (in this respect, the Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration is only admissible in relation to public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and in essential services the interruption of which would endanger life, personal safety or health);
- a special very short summary procedure is introduced for workers with trade union immunity; and
- the maximum limit for strikes is set at 45 calendar days (following which arbitration is compulsory).

The Committee emphasizes that, despite the improvements introduced in the Bill in relation to the legislation that is currently in force, it would be necessary to make certain additional modifications to achieve full conformity with the Convention.

Also with regard to the right to strike, the Committee noted previously that a magistrate of the Supreme Court of Justice had indicated that of the 600 or so strikes that had occurred over the past 20 or 30 years, no more than ten had been declared unlawful. Furthermore, according to the trade union confederations, the procedure to set a strike in motion could last around three years.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that 234 amendments were submitted in 2011 to the Bill to reform labour procedures due to differences of views in the Legislative Assembly and that the achievement of consensus always requires time. The Committee notes that the report of the ILO mission undertaken in May 2011 in Costa Rica in the context of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), indicates that the mission promoted the Bill in the official meetings of the Legal Affairs Commission of the Legislative Assembly.

The Committee regrets to observe once again that the Bills submitted to the Legislative Assembly to achieve greater conformity between the legislation and the Convention on very important matters that are not meeting with success. The Committee requests the Government to continue promoting the Bill to reform labour procedures and to provide information on this subject.

Articles 2 and 4. The need for Bill No. 13475, in amending section 344 of the Labour Code, to establish a specific and short period during which the administrative authority is to reach a decision on the registration of trade unions and after which, in the absence of a decision, legal personality is deemed to have been obtained. The Government reiterates in its latest report that in practice registration procedures are carried out without any delay and that, if applications fall short of the legal documentary requirements, applicants are asked to remedy the defects and are entitled to appeal. The legal time limits are 15 days for the Department of Trade Union Organizations and, if it issues a favourable opinion within that period, the Ministry of Labour issues its decision as soon as possible thereafter, and in any event within one month of the report being issued. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the issue raised by the Committee, in addition to being superseded in practice, is no longer valid in relation to the law, as the General Act of the public administration provides that, where the statutory time limits are not respected, those concerned may appeal to the respective higher authority. The Committee previously invited the Government to have these deadlines set out explicitly in Bill No. 13475. The Committee observes once again that the Bill is before the Legislative Assembly, but is not being examined, and it requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Submission of legislative matters to a joint commission in the Legislative Assembly. Taking into account the differences of views in the Legislative Assembly on the content of the future Act to reform labour procedures (Bill No. 15990 and the other bills relating to trade union rights), the Committee once again requests the Government to promote a joint commission in the Legislative Assembly with representation of trade unions and employers, as proposed by the Higher Labour Council (a tripartite body) to the Legislative Assembly, to address controversial matters. The Committee reminds the Government that ILO technical assistance is at its disposal in this process with a view to contributing to bringing the legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

Taking into account the various ILO missions which have visited the country over the years and the gravity of the problems, the Committee, while expressing disappointment at the lack of results in relation to the pending issues, also expresses the hope that it will be in a position to note substantial progress in the near future in both law and practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect in its next report.

Comments by trade union organizations. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide official statistical data on the number of trade unions and higher level organizations (in the public and private sectors) and the number of trade union members (the ITUC had indicated that trade unions were practically non-existent in the private sector). The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the unionization rate has risen from 8.3 per cent (2007) to 10.3 per cent (2010), representing a total of 195,950 union members (of which 72,382 are in the private sector). According to the Government's statistics, there are 281 unions, of which 127 are active in the private sector.

Finally, the Committee requested the Government to provide its observations on the ITUC's communication, dated 26 August 2009, and particularly on: (1) its allegation that in the event of a strike the unions are required to provide the names of the strikers; (2) the alleged unlawful arrest of a trade union leader in the construction sector; and (3) the violation of the Act which prohibits trade union activities by solidarist associations in certain banana and pineapple ranches.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the (temporary) arrest of the person mentioned by the ITUC is not related to his trade union activities, but to his unlawful migrant status in the country; the refusal of his application for a residence permit had been notified to him in October 2004. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has requested comments from enterprises in the banana and pineapple sector so that they can reply to the ITUC's allegations, which it considers to be unfounded, as details are not provided of the alleged violations of trade union rights. The Committee awaits this information and the Government's reply to the ITUC's allegation that in the event of a strike the unions are required to provide the names of the strikers.

The Committee notes the comments of the Union of Medical Science Professionals of the Costa Rican Social Security Fund (SIPROMECA) of July 2011 and the Government's reply. The Committee also notes the comments of the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) of 31 August 2011 and those of the ITUC of August 2011 and requests the Government to provide its replies.

In its previous observation, the Committee had noted the report of the high-level mission which visited the country in October 2006, as well as Cases Nos 2490 and 2518, examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association, which confirmed that a large number of trade unionists had been dismissed. The Committee notes the comments on the application of the Convention made by the Union of Medical Science Professionals of the Costa Rican Social Security Fund and Related Institutions (SIPROMECA) (April 2010), the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) (4 August 2011) and the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) (31 August 2011). The Committee notes the Government's indications in its reports, which cover part of the problems raised in those comments, as well as the discussion on the application of the Convention in the June 2010 session by the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference. The Committee notes the report of the ILO technical assistance mission which visited the country from 16 to 20 May 2011, which was conducted in a climate of full cooperation. The Committee welcomes the fact that the new Minister of Labour has reactivated tripartite dialogue in the country, as indicated in the mission report.

Slowness and ineffectiveness of proceedings regarding complaints and compensation in the event of anti-union acts. The Committee noted previously that, according to the high-level mission that visited the country in 2006, the proceedings in cases of anti-union discrimination are so slow that it takes at least four years to obtain a final ruling. The Committee noted that, in its comments, the ITUC indicated that the problem still exists. The employers' organization UCCAEP indicated that legislative and judicial treatment of anti-union discrimination is satisfactory and pointed out that the criticism of Costa Rican law has mostly been levelled at the slow proceedings to overturn the dismissal of trade union leaders, and that action has been taken to improve matters in this respect, particularly through a Bill to reform labour procedures that is currently on the agenda of the Legislative Assembly.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (1) a Bill to reform labour procedures was being discussed in the Legislative Assembly, of which the Legal Affairs Commission benefited from the participation of three deputies, the President of Chamber II of the Supreme Court of Justice, a representative of the Ministry of Labour and representatives of employers' and workers' organizations; (2) the Bill, the promotion of which was also decided upon by the Higher Labour Council (a national tripartite body), introduces oral hearings and strengthens protection against anti-union acts, is the outcome of ILO technical assistance and is an absolute priority for the Government, even though 234 amendments were submitted to it in 2011 due to divergences of views and lack of consensus among the deputies; (3) however, Bill No. 13475 to reform various sections of the Labour Code, Act No. 2 of 27 August 1943 and sections 10, 15, 16, 17 and 18 of Decree No. 832 of 4 November 1949, as amended, which is on the agenda of the Legislative Plenary, is intended to strengthen trade union activity in the country through reforms to the Labour Code intended to contribute to the establishment of unions in private enterprises and compliance with ILO standards; and (4) the executive authorities have given priority in the agenda of the Plenary to the Bill to reform labour procedures, as it is broader and more inclusive than the provisions of Bill No. 13475. The Government adds, with a view to quantifying appropriately the problem of the slowness of judicial procedures, that cases of the violation of trade union rights numbered 23 in 2007 and seven in 2010.

The Committee notes the efforts and improvements referred to by the Government at the institutional level to strengthen administrative procedures to penalize anti-union acts, and specifically: (1) a legislative initiative so that the labour inspectorate can impose administrative fines and does not have to refer cases to the judicial authorities to do so; (2) the Protocol of Good Inspection Practices for the Labour Inspectorate in Costa Rica, which includes a procedure for "cases of the reestablishment of rights", especially for victims of unfair labour practices, which therefore prejudice the exercise of freedom of association, which was issued by Administrative Directive No. 15 (May 2011) and included in the Manual of Procedures for the Labour Inspectorate; the Protocol includes a section on freedom of association and collective bargaining, encompassing interviews with and the protection of unions during inspections; (3) the establishment of an electronic network in 28 of the 31 regional, provincial and cantonal offices; and (4) the implementation in 2008, 2009 and 2010 of the programme of joint inter-institutional action in the construction and agricultural sectors, involving the National Insurance Institute, the Costa Rican Social Security Fund and the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, through the National Directorate of the General Labour Inspectorate, etc.

The Committee notes a series of initiatives to make judicial labour procedures more rapid and effective, which are detailed by the Government and were explained precisely by the Supreme Court to the 2011 ILO mission. The Committee nevertheless emphasizes that an essential aspect of the problem of the slowness of judicial procedures in cases of anti-union acts is related to the successive judicial appeals that are possible and the lodging of claims for amparo (the protection of constitutional rights).

The Committee however emphasizes that the Government has not conducted an evaluation of the impact of the general improvements in the administration of justice on proceedings relating to anti-union acts, where the principal problem lies in the appeals and claims for amparo which may delay sentencing for years. Nor has it provided information on the number of cases in which sanctions have been applied for breaches of the labour legislation in relation to trade union rights and on the sentences handed down in this respect which have become final, with an indication of the duration of the proceedings.

The Committee notes the conclusions of the ILO mission in 2011 concerning the issue of the slowness of proceedings in cases of anti-union acts:

With regard to the issue of the slowness and ineffectiveness of proceedings relating to anti-union discrimination and interference, the mission draws the attention of the Committee of Experts to the significant Bill to reform labour procedures (which is intended to speed up labour procedures, including those relating to acts of anti-union discrimination or interference, and in practice establishes a special expeditious procedure for matters relating to trade union rights). The Bill is being promoted by the Government, trade union confederations and the UCCAEP, and is under examination in the Legislative Assembly, where it is favoured by the majority of the groups, according to the understanding gained by the mission from its meetings with the heads of groups and the Legal Affairs Commission of the Legislative Assembly. If the Bill is finally adopted, it could give effect to the comments of the Committee of Experts on the need for expeditious and efficient justice and effective procedures to punish cases of acts of anti-union discrimination or interference. Certain authorities and trade union confederations agree that there was a fear of dismissal when wishing to establish or join a union, for which reason the Bill is of the greatest importance. The Bill also deals with other matters relating to the application of Convention No. 87. The mission draws the attention of the Committee of Experts to other measures referred to by the Government and the judicial authorities to combat delays in judicial proceedings.

The Committee regrets that, despite the visit by the ILO mission in May 2011, the Bill to reform labour procedures has still not been adopted, and firmly hopes that it will be adopted in the near future, and it requests the Government to provide the text of the future Act as soon as it is adopted. The Committee also regrets to note that Bill No. 13475 to amend various sections of the Labour Code and other legislative texts has been postponed in the Legislative Assembly and requests the Government to take measures to promote the examination of the Bill, and to provide information on that subject. The Committee expresses the firm hope that in the very near future the Government will be able to provide information on legislative progress relating to proceedings in cases of anti-union acts.

Submission of collective bargaining to criteria of proportionality and rationality (in its case law, the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice had ruled unconstitutional a significant number of clauses in collective agreements in the public sector, at the instigation of the public authorities (the Citizens' Ombudsperson, the General Prosecutor of the Republic) or one or other political party).

The Committee notes that the trade union organizations emphasized the gravity of the problem of collective bargaining in the public sector and the requirements imposed by the Negotiating Policies Commission on public employers, and that the CTRN and the other confederations in the country considered that the long delay in the adoption of the bills to amend the legislation and the ratification of the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), and the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154) (which resulted from a tripartite agreement), demonstrate the lack of interest in moving forward.

The Committee observes that the Government indicated in previous reports that: (1) the Government possesses the full will and commitment to resolve the problems raised by the Committee of Experts; (2) it has requested the ILO's technical assistance and trusts that this will enable it to overcome the problems raised; (3) the Government's efforts (many of them supported by tripartite agreement) to resolve these problems have included the submission of legislative proposals to the Legislative Assembly and their reactivation: a draft Constitutional amendment to Article 192, a Bill on collective bargaining in the public sector and the addition of subsection 5 to section 112 of the General Act on Public Administration (the three initiatives are intended to strengthen collective bargaining in the public sector); a draft amendment to the chapter of the Labour Code on freedom of association; approval of ILO Conventions Nos 151 and 154; (4) the Government's efforts have also included other types of initiatives, such as intervention as an interested party (to defend collective agreements) in legal actions for unconstitutionality brought in order to annul specific clauses in collective agreements; (5) the present Government has the will to reactivate the respective draft legislation and has maintained contact with the executive authorities, including the Ministry of the Presidency, the legislative authorities, deputies from the various groups, including the leaders of the main opposition party, which also supports the reforms requested by the ILO. The Government indicates that it has sent reports to the judicial authorities forwarding the observations and positions of the Committee of Experts. The Government lays emphasis on the follow-up meetings held by the Minister of Labour and Social Security, on occasion with the technical assistance of the ILO Subregional Office, with this assistance including the gathering of information on matters relating to Conventions Nos 151 and 154 on collective bargaining. The Government adds that meetings have been held and activities undertaken to promote the Bills referred to above and that contacts have been established for that purpose with the Subregional Office in San José.

The Minister of Labour summarized the situation to the ILO mission in the following terms: with regard to the legal actions of unconstitutionality against clauses of collective agreements in the public sector, these are not now promoted by the public authorities; over the past four years, there have only been three legal actions for unconstitutionality; in practice, very few clauses have been struck down; and there are now changes in the position of the Constitutional Chamber along the lines called for by the ILO.

The Committee wishes to refer to the report of the ILO mission of 2011, which in its conclusions indicates as follows:

With regard to the judicial removal of clauses of collective agreements through legal actions for unconstitutionality, in which the irrationality or lack of proportionality of certain clauses is invoked, the mission wishes to indicate that the new Attorney-General and the new Citizens' Ombudsperson have a good understanding of ILO principles and that legal actions for unconstitutionality have not been initiated, which is very positive. The statistics provided by the Government appear to indicate that the scope of the problem has diminished in recent years. More specifically, the Government provided statistics (for the period 2008–11) on the rulings on the legal actions challenging the constitutionality of certain clauses in collective agreements. Of 17 rulings, only two found that the challenges had merit, with a total of three clauses being removed. According to the Government, the number of legal challenges currently before the courts is five.

The mission adds that in the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court three of the seven magistrates align themselves with the ILO principles indicated by the Committee of Experts, and it is believed that the other magistrates have a better understanding of the meaning of the comments by the Committee of Experts. It is therefore necessary for the Committee of Experts to continue following developments on this matter, particularly taking into account the fact that in the past one political party filed certain of these legal actions for unconstitutionality.

The mission also welcomes the training provided for members of the three State authorities and the social partners, to which the Government refers, and in particular appreciates the forthcoming workshop on collective bargaining.

The mission recalls that, although there may be cases of serious breaches of constitutional rights in certain clauses of agreements, it is normal and customary for collective agreements to contain provisions that favour trade union members, particularly because many of these agreements are concluded in the framework of a collective dispute in which both parties frequently make concessions, and nothing prevents non-members from becoming members of one or other trade union if they wish to obtain more favourable treatment. In any case, collective bargaining as an instrument of social peace cannot be submitted to recurrent scrutiny of its constitutionality without losing its prestige and enormous value. In other words, it is necessary to endeavour to prevent the abuse of legal actions for unconstitutionality.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court will take into account the principles of the Convention in its rulings on the five pending legal actions and once again requests the Government to do everything in its power to ensure that the Bills to strengthen the right to collective bargaining in the public sector, including those relating to the ratification of Conventions Nos 151 and 154, are examined and, it is to be hoped, adopted by the Legislative Assembly.

Operation of the Commission on Collective Bargaining Policies in the Public Sector. The Committee notes that the national trade union confederations allege that the Commission on Collective Bargaining Policies has a very negative effect on collective bargaining in the public sector. In its report, the ILO mission of 2011 indicates as follows:

The Deputy Minister of Finance indicated that the role of the Commission on Collective Bargaining Policies in the Public Sector does not relate to matters of substance, but to criteria of a fiscal nature so that public expenditure is not increased in an irrational manner. The trade unions engage in negotiations and consultations each year with the central Government for the negotiation of wages. Sometimes, they are increased above the inflation rate. Normally they are around the past inflation rate, but now the claim is to calculate the increase based on future inflation forecasts.

The Commission on Collective Bargaining Policies in the Public Sector does not challenge clauses of collective agreements that do not have a budgetary impact, and authorizes clauses with a budgetary impact, although in practice wage rises and clauses which breach the legislation have not been permitted (for example, if the recommendations in relation to dismissals by a joint commission envisaged in a collective agreement are binding for the management of the institution concerned). Wage negotiations are held throughout the public sector with the participation of trade union representatives and are undertaken within the framework of the projection of the level of future budgets of the State or of the decentralized institution concerned.

The Committee welcomes that the Minister of Labour, taking up a suggestion by the 2011 mission, indicated that with a view to examining improvements in the operation of the Commission on Collective Bargaining Policies in the Public Sector, the Commission would be invited to meet with the Higher Labour Council (a tripartite body). She was also in agreement to undertake workshops and activities to promote and develop collective bargaining with trade union organizations, including training activities to improve knowledge of comparative law, and to strengthen the content of collective agreements. The question of the ratification of Conventions Nos 151 and 154 concerning participation and negotiation machinery for public employees, which at one time had tripartite consensus, would be re-examined.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the meetings held between the Higher Labour Council (a tripartite body) and the Commission for Collective Bargaining Policies in the Public Sector and expresses the firm hope that in its next report the Government will be in a position to report significant progress in relation to the matters raised above.

Direct agreements with non-unionized workers. With regard to the tripartite evaluation requested by the Committee of Experts concerning the large number of direct agreements with non-unionized workers in comparison with collective agreements (the Committee had requested that the evaluation should be undertaken in light of the report of an independent technical expert on that subject), the ITUC had emphasized that the majority of direct agreements are promoted by employers and that this has resulted in the number of collective agreements in the private sector being reduced to a minimum. The employers' organization UCCAEP had previously indicated that all parties had drawn attention to the importance of standing workers' committees and the protection afforded them pursuant to the Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135), ratified by Costa Rica. The UCCAEP added that it was clear that this is a reality in Costa Rica which has acted as a means of guaranteeing freedom, democracy and social peace and that to eliminate standing workers' committees or direct agreements is to overlook and prejudice the right of workers to associate freely and settle their disputes peacefully and through dialogue. The Government recalled that only collective bargaining has constitutional rank and that an administrative directive of 4 May 1991 prohibits the labour inspectorate from looking into the content of a direct agreement when there is an established union, so that when there is such a union the direct agreement must be rejected outright.

The Committee recalls that an independent expert appointed by the ILO pointed out in 2007 that there were 74 direct agreements in force, whereas only 13 collective agreements remained.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, although it may be deduced that there are very different reasons which promote the existence of more direct agreements than collective agreements in the private sector, as noted by the ILO supervisory bodies, it is certain that both have their origin in the Labour Code and can be freely chosen by the labour market parties. The right to collective bargaining in positive law in Costa Rica and in national practice, in addition to being an outstanding collective instrument, benefits from a higher level of protection due to its constitutional rank.

The Government adds that in 2010 the ILO selected the national territory as the location for a seminar on “Good practices in collective bargaining in Costa Rica”, in the context of the social dialogue project. The seminar benefited from the participation of representatives of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, employers and workers and offered a good opportunity to promote social dialogue on the subject. Three enterprises and their respective trade union representatives participated to puncture myths relating to the results of collective bargaining in the private sector. It is a means of resolving collective disputes, with the sole intervention of the parties, or of some other agreeable party. For that purpose, workers can establish standing workers’ committees, which are responsible for raising their complaints and claims with employers or their representatives, orally or in writing. It is clear that the legal purpose of such standing committees is to represent workers, only under the circumstances indicated above, and on the understanding that their functions do not extend to activities which are recognized in the country as being the exclusive prerogative of the unions. In this respect, the Government adds, it may be considered that direct agreements are another alternative, through which collective bargaining is promoted as a means of achieving a peaceful and agreed solution to disputes between employers and workers. The fact that these agreements are not negotiated by members of trade unions is a direct consequence of one of the two possible dimensions of the right to freedom of association, which also implies that there is no requirement of membership. For this reason, the Government notes with prudence the terms in which the study on direct agreements was drawn up, as prepared by the independent specialist appointed by the ILO in 2007, as the analyses focus principally on the agricultural sector, which is then used as a basis for general conclusions covering the whole of the productive economy of the country in both the public and private sectors.

The Committee wishes to refer to the conclusions of the ILO mission of May 2011 on this subject, which are as follows:

With regard to the problem of direct agreements with non-unionized workers, the Committee of Experts had noted in its observation the enormous imbalance between their members and those of collective agreements in the private sector (there cannot be direct agreements in the public sector). The mission highly appreciated the transparency and openness of the UCCAEP (employers) and the Minister of Labour to discuss this matter with trade unions in the context of the Higher Labour Council (a tripartite body), including the report drawn up in 2007 by an ILO expert.

The mission emphasized that the proportion of direct agreements concluded by standing committees of non-unionized workers had grown worse in relation to the number of collective agreements.

The Minister of Labour accepted the proposal made by the mission to carry out activities, in collaboration with the ILO Subregional Office, to promote collective bargaining with trade unions in both the public and private sectors, including training activities. The mission recalled that Convention No. 98 establishes the principle of the promotion of collective agreements with trade union organizations and that such collective agreements have constitutional rank in Costa Rica.

The mission wishes to note that, at the end of its session, there were before the Legislative Assembly draft amendments of differing content during the examination of the Bill to reform labour procedures: some sought to abolish direct agreements, and others to promote them, others to make them possible in the public sector and others to leave the regulations as they are at present. The mission wishes to point out that the problems raised by the Committee of Experts may be either aggravated or overcome depending on the final decision taken by the Legislative Assembly.

According to the data provided by the Government, there are 298 active unions (with 195,950 members and 1,195 trade union leaders) and six confederations. The unionization rate is 10.3 per cent (8.3 per cent in 2007). The number of members in the public sector is 123,568 and in the private sector 72,382. Seven cases of anti-union persecution were reported in 2010.

With regard to collective agreements, according to the Government, in May 2011 there were 70 collective agreements covering 50,600 workers in the public sector. In the private sector, there are 15 collective agreements in force concluded by trade union organizations and 159 direct agreements concluded by standing committees of (non-unionized) workers. The mission emphasizes that the Government has not yet provided data on the coverage (number of workers covered) of collective agreements and direct agreements in the private sector. The trade union confederations allege that the Government is pursuing in practice a policy of promoting direct agreements with non-unionized workers. The Government asserts that it is the workers who choose between the forms of association that exist in the country, although in the view of the mission the situation is not so clear. Based on all of its meetings, and particularly those with various authorities and certain magistrates in the Supreme Court, it is clear that the expansion of direct agreements is being promoted in the country.

The Committee concludes that the imbalance between the number of collective agreements and that of direct agreements with non-unionized workers has worsened since 2007 to a worrying extent, and the current figures (a total of 15 collective agreements in the private sector concluded by trade unions and 159 direct agreements concluded by standing committees of non-unionized workers) show that effect is not being given to the requirement to promote collective bargaining in the private sector (Article 4 of the Convention), particularly when it is considered that the 15 collective agreements are not sectoral and that the Government has not provided information on the number of workers covered. The Committee notes with concern the conclusion of the mission report that the expansion of direct agreements is being promoted in the country.

The Committee welcomes the decision of the UCCAEP and the Minister of Labour to discuss this matter with trade unions in the context of the Higher Labour Council, including discussion of the report prepared by the ILO expert in 2007.

The Committee welcomes the decision by the Minister of Labour to carry out activities in collaboration with the ILO Subregional Office to promote collective bargaining, including training activities.

The Committee awaits tripartite developments concerning the problem of direct agreements with non-unionized workers in light of the report prepared by the expert on this subject, as well as any satisfactory solution that is proposed, including programmes in all sectors and effective measures to promote collective bargaining with existing trade unions, to prevent the promotion of direct agreements and their use for anti-union purposes. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on a significant increase in the number of collective agreements.

In general terms, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report of its full disposal and will to resolve the problems raised. The Committee notes the initiatives of the high-level mission to promote the Bills submitted to the Legislative Assembly on the various matters raised by the Committee of Experts. The Committee once again deeply regrets that these Bills still have not been adopted even though they have been under examination and have had tripartite consensus for years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this respect.

The Committee emphasizes once again that the pending issues raise important problems relating to the application of the Convention. Taking into account the various ILO missions which have visited the country over the years and the gravity of the problems, it hopes to be in a position to note substantial progress in the near future in both law and practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee recalls that in its previous observation it requested the Government to supplement the administrative directive issued by the Ministry of Labour on 18 January 1999 with a text that sets out more clearly the right of trade union representatives to have access to farms and plantations and to meet with workers. In this respect, the Committee noted the Government's undertaking to consider the Committee's recommendations and it urged the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee the right of trade union representatives to have access to farms and plantations and to meet with workers. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that: (1) the administrative directive referred to was issued further to the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of Case No. 1966 and on that occasion the Ministry of Labour and Social Security directly instructed the National Directorate of Inspection and the Directorate of Labour Affairs to engage in out-of-court conciliation action or, failing that, to undertake administrative investigations; (2) accordingly, the instruction was reiterated to the competent directorates to comply with the ruling of the Constitutional Chamber with a view to guaranteeing the application of the administrative settlement of cases of anti-union persecution or discrimination; (3) the content of the administrative directive referred to does not encompass all the existing provisions on trade union freedoms, but consists of a specific instruction issued in relation to a particular situation; (4) Costa Rica has a comprehensive system for the protection of workers' trade union rights at the national level, encompassing all sectors of the economy, for which reason it is not currently necessary to amplify the provisions contained in the directive; (5) the protection of trade union rights is a priority of the State as they consist of rights that are understood and acknowledged to be fundamental (the Government refers to the provisions of the Constitution and of the law guaranteeing trade union rights and affording protection against their violation); (6) with regard to the matters raised in the comments, labour inspectors have the right to visit workplaces, of whatever nature, at the various hours of the day and even the night, with a view to carrying out inspections, and the Manual of Procedures of the Labour Inspectorate (the 2008 Directive) establishes the procedure for cases of unfair labour practices. The Committee notes this information.

The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the complaints received and/or reported by the Ministry of Labour relating to violations of trade union rights in the agricultural sector, and particularly with regard to the question of the access of trade union leaders to farms and plantations. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that there are no records of denunciations relating to these matters to the labour inspectorate, but that the Electronic Case System (SEC) established in the National Directorate of Labour Inspection and in regional inspection offices is currently being tested and inspectors are at the training stage. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that in the near future it will be possible to provide more detailed information on the nature of violations of labour provisions, and to generate more statistical data. The Committee hopes that once the SEC comes into operation, the Government will be able to provide the information requested.

Côte d'Ivoire

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

In its previous comments the Committee noted comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning: (1) threats of sanctions against primary school teachers on strike (MIDD); (2) the violent repression of striking public officials in the north of the country, and particularly the members of the Movement of Redeployed Public Officials of Côte d'Ivoire (MOFORCI); (3) the unwarranted arrest of leaders of the Union of Communal Employees of Côte d'Ivoire (SYNAPECO-CI) and the National Union of Municipal Police Officers of Côte d'Ivoire (SYNAPOMU-CI); and (4) intimidation by the authorities and their interference in the activities of the National Union of Middle and Higher Level Health Officials of Côte d'Ivoire (SYNACASS-CI). The Committee notes the Government's replies to the questions raised. In the case of the MIDD, the Government states that this is now a legally constituted union and that the wages seized following the strike of the MIDD have been returned in full and without counting the strike days. In the cases of MOFORCI, SYNAPECO-CI, SYNAPOMU-CI and SYNACASS-CI, the Committee notes the Government's general comment that some of the events occurred in areas under the influence of the rebellion that were outside its control. The Government adds that it was entitled to require a minimum service during the doctors' strike and that it has agreed to all the claims made by SYNACASS-CI, and has released all the prisoners in provisional custody and paid their wages in full and without counting the days not worked because of the strike.

The Committee also notes the ITUC's comments of 4 and 31 August 2011 reporting a climate of insecurity in the country and referring in particular to the abduction, torture and detention, from April to July 2011, by the police of Mr Basile Mahan Gahé, General Secretary of the Dignité confederation without any charges being brought against him. Following a mission by the ITUC, charges were brought and Mr Mahan Gahé was transferred to Boundiali prison in harsh conditions on 9 July 2011. The ITUC indicates that it has had no news of the trade unionist and fears for his physical integrity. The Committee points out that the arrest and detention, even for short periods, of trade union leaders and members engaged in their legitimate trade union activities, without any charges being brought and without a warrant, constitute a grave violation of the principle of freedom of association and that a genuinely free and independent trade union movement can develop only if fundamental human rights are respected. Furthermore, the guarantees set out in international labour Conventions, particularly those relating to freedom of association, can be effective only if the civil and political rights enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international instruments, in particular the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, are genuinely recognized (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraphs 31 and 43). The Committee urges the Government to send its observations on the ITUC's comments, to state the charges brought against Mr Gahé and to indicate whether he has been released pending trial.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of employers' and workers' organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee notes that section 51.5 of the Labour Code provides that officers of professional trade unions must have Ivorian nationality but that foreign members of unions who have lived in Côte d'Ivoire for three years may take up administrative and management functions in the union provided that their countries grant the same right to Ivorian nationals. The Committee points out that provisions on nationality that are too strict could deprive some workers of the right to elect their representatives, for example migrant workers in sectors in which they account for a significant share of the workforce. The legislation should accordingly be made more flexible so as to allow organizations to elect their officers freely and without impediment and to allow foreign workers to take up trade union office, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 118). Although the length of residence established in section 51.5 appears reasonable, the Committee considers that the reciprocity requirement is excessive and ought to be removed. The Committee requests the Government in its next report to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to amend section 51.5 of the Labour Code along these lines.

Croatia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to reiterate the issues raised by the Committee in its previous observation.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of employers' and workers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules, to elect their representatives in full freedom and to organize their administration and activities. In its previous comments, the Committee had recalled that since 1996, it has been commenting over the issue of the distribution of trade union assets and urged the Government to determine the criteria for the division of trade union assets in consultation with workers' organizations and to fix a specific time frame for completing the division of the property. The Committee had noted the Government's indication that: (i) for the division of trade union assets to be addressed, it was first necessary to establish the criteria for determining the representativeness of trade unions; and (ii) the Minister of the Economy, Labour and Entrepreneurship issued a decision specifying the names of the associations meeting the requirements laid down in section 2 of the Act on the Method of Determining the Representation of Trade Union Associations of a Higher Level in Tripartite Bodies at the National Level (OG 18/99) and the number of trade unions affiliated to these associations. In these circumstances, given that the representativeness criteria have already been defined, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures in the very near future to address the issue of the distribution of trade union assets and requests the Government to provide information thereon in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 on matters being examined by the Committee.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection of workers against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee, referring to allegations of excessive court delays in dealing with cases of anti-union discrimination, had noted that a comprehensive process of reform had been initiated to enhance the efficiency of the judicial process and reduce the backlog of cases and that a pilot project on mediation in courts showed positive results. The Committee notes that, according to the ITUC, in spite of some improvements, law enforcement through the judicial system remains slow and labour inspection capacities remain weak. The Committee requests the Government once again to provide information in its next report on the progress made with respect to the measures aimed at improving the efficiency of the legal protection, as well as a copy of the instruments adopted as a result of the reform process.

Articles 4 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous observation, the Committee had requested the Government to comment upon the 2010 observations made by the Trade Union of State and Local Government Employees (TUSLGE) alleging that the Local and Regional Self-Government Wage Act of 19 February 2010 restricts the right to organize and to bargain collectively of employees of local and regional self-government units, in particular the right of employees of financially weaker local and regional self-government units (i.e. where aids exceed 10 per cent of the unit income) to bargain collectively over the wage formation basis. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's comments in relation to these observations, the Act on Civil Servants and Civil Service Employees in Local and Regional Self-Government specifies that salaries of civil servants in local and regional self-government units are adjusted to salaries of civil servants at the State level (the Committee understands that the salaries at the State level are determined after consultations and negotiations with the most representative workers' organizations in the public sector). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the adjustment of salaries of civil servants in local and regional self-government units to the salaries of civil servants at State level.

Furthermore, the Committee had noted the allegations that the Act on the realization of the Government's budget of 1993 allows the Government to modify the substance of a collective agreement in the public sector for financial reasons. It had requested the Government to provide a copy of the legislative provisions allowing the Government to modify the substance of collective agreements in the public service and information on their application in practice. Recalling that, in general, a legal provision which allows one party to modify unilaterally the content of signed collective agreements is contrary to the principles of collective bargaining, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide, with its next report, a copy of the said legislative provisions, as well as information on their application in practice.

Cuba

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the comments of 13 August 2011 by the Independent Trade Union Coalition of Cuba (CSIC) – which the Government does not recognize as a union – referring to acts of repression against trade unionists. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to these comments.

Trade union rights and civil liberties

In its previous comments the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary steps for the immediate release of trade union members and leaders sentenced to harsh terms of imprisonment, to investigate the allegations made by the Independent National Confederation of Workers of Cuba (CONIC) in 2009 and, if they were found to be true, to punish those who committed such acts. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its assertion that the individuals mentioned in CONIC's communication were not punished unfairly. The charges against them were duly proved in full observance of due process. The persons concerned committed offences defined in the law and were accordingly tried and convicted by the courts of justice. No one was tried or convicted for the exercise or defence of trade union rights. The persons concerned were not sentenced by the Government but tried and convicted by competent and independent courts in full observance of due process. The Committee notes that the Government regrets that account was not taken of the replies it submitted, and repeats its assertions made in earlier reports. It emphasizes that in Cuba no trade unionists have been imprisoned, persecuted or threatened because of trade union membership, nor have any premises or assets belonging to trade union organizations been confiscated.

The Committee notes with concern that the CSIC – which was constituted on 30 March 2011 and whose status as a trade union confederation is denied by the Government – refers in its comments to the application of the Convention and to allegations of arrests and threats against leaders and members of CONIC, the Independent Confederation of Cuban Workers (CTIC) and the Single Council of Cuban Workers (CUTC), as well as harassment by the State Security. The Committee also notes that, according to the ITUC, up to November 2010 there had been 1,224 arrests on political grounds, which is a disincentive to the establishment of independent trade unions. The Committee notes that in response to these comments, the Government states that: (1) the ITUC's allegations are not new but a repetition of unfounded arguments put forward in the past, and they raise other issues which only go to show that the ITUC is either unacquainted with the real situation in Cuba or is seeking to distort it; (2) the allegations are unsubstantiated and stem from fabricated information; and (3) no reference is made to the source of the information on the alleged 1,224 arrests, but it can be assumed that the figure was obtained from information already published in the press and produced on the basis of false reports. The list of alleged arrests include persons who are deceased or who have emigrated or who have simply not been arrested on any grounds.

In response to the comments of the CSIC, the Government indicates that: (1) it rejects the allegations of the so-called CSIC and rebuts its arguments; (2) the CSIC is not a trade union organization nor does it consist of Cuban workers. Its so-called membership amounts to no more than 25 members and only three of these have a labour relationship; (3) the persons concerned, now grouped together in what they allege to be a new coalition, have devoted themselves in the past to fabricating and submitting to international bodies false allegations on violations of the rights laid down in ILO Conventions with the intent of misinforming trade unionists the world over about an alleged division among Cuban workers; (4) they falsify membership figures and have no credibility whatsoever in Cuba; (5) it is untrue that in Cuba there is a climate of violence: no one is under duress or threat, and assertions of acts of violence or repression, such as those made by the CSIC, are likewise unfounded; (6) in Cuba there are no arrests of trade unionists or trade union leaders, several of the persons alleged by the CSIC to be trade unionists are common criminals (according to the Government some were not in the country at the time when the alleged acts of violence have been committed); and (7) the Government has time and again submitted replies on these cases and will pursue its work to strengthen international cooperation in defence of labour and trade union rights as well as international cooperation in the framework of the ILO which is necessary to universal attainment of the goals of decent work.

The Committee reminds the Government that freedom of industrial association is but one aspect of freedom of association in general, which must itself form part of the whole range of fundamental liberties, which are all independent and complementary to one another and which the Conference explicitly listed in its resolution of 1970 and which consist in particular of: (a) the right to freedom and security of person and freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention; (b) freedom of opinion and expression and in particular freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers; (c) freedom of assembly; (d) the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal; and (e) the right to protection of the property of trade union organizations. In these circumstances, the Committee recalls that trade union rights are an important aspect of human rights and points out that the rights of workers' organizations can be exercised only in a climate of respect for all human rights and one which is free of violence, pressure, fear and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations, and reminds the Government that it has a duty to ensure observance of this principle.

Lastly, the Committee again asks the Government to send copies of the court rulings referred to in its last report in connection with the comments made on 28 August 2007 by the ITUC, which referred to other specific cases of arrests of workers belonging to CONIC, persecution and threats of imprisonment against delegates of the Light Industry Workers' Union (SITIL), and the confiscation of equipment and humanitarian aid sent from abroad to the CUTC.

Legislative issues

In previous observations the Committee noted information from the Government to the effect that the process of revising the Labour Code was ongoing. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government again states that a new Labour Code is in preparation and that it has not been sent to the Office because the requisite consultations have not been completed. The Committee expresses the hope that the revision of the Labour Code will be completed in the near future and that account will be taken of the comments the Committee has been making for many years on the application of the Convention and which are addressed below. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office and asks it to send a copy of the draft Labour Code.

Articles 2, 5 and 6 of the Convention. Trade union monopoly. For many years the Committee has been referring to the need to delete the reference to the Confederation of Workers of Cuba (CTC) from sections 15 and 16 of the Labour Code of 1985. The Committee notes that in its report the Government states that: (1) the legislation in force and everyday practice in all work units guarantee the full exercise of trade union activities and the broadest application of the right to organize; (2) the representation of workers is exercised at different levels and in different decision-making bodies by national sectoral unions and the Confederation which, by decision of the workers themselves, as adopted in their assemblies, constitutes the expression of the desire for unity of the Cuban trade union movement; (3) the existence of a single trade union confederation was not imposed by the Government, nor does it correspond to any provision that is not the expression of the sovereign will of Cuban workers; (4) the struggle for unity of the trade union movement has a long and deep-seated tradition; in 1939 the Confederation of Cuban Workers was constituted by a decision taken freely by the workers themselves and one year later became the CTC as it now is; the unity of the workers' movement has been decisive in the success of their struggle and their claims and in defending their power as now exercised; and (5) the application in practice of the Convention is guaranteed by legal provisions establishing that "all workers, both manual and intellectual, shall be entitled, without previous authorization, to organize voluntarily and to establish trade unions"; these rights are guaranteed in practice by the existence of 18 national sectoral unions with their municipal and provincial structures which bring together some 110,000 trade union chapters and first-level unions. In each labour unit there are one or more trade union chapters. Their leaders are elected by the workers themselves. The Committee notes that the Government adds that neither the Labour Code in force nor the supplementary legislation provides for restrictions on the establishment of trade unions and that all Cuban workers have the right to establish trade union organizations and are free to join them without prior authorization. While noting this information, the Committee again stresses that trade union pluralism must remain possible in all cases and that the law must not institutionalize a factual monopoly by referring to a specific trade union confederation; even in a situation where at some point all workers have preferred to unify the trade union movement, they should still remain free to choose to set up unions outside the established structures should they so wish and to join the organization of their own choosing (see General Survey of 1994 on Freedom of Association and Collective Bargaining, paragraph 96). In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all workers, without distinction whatsoever, are able to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to amend the above sections of the Labour Code and to provide information in its next report on any measures adopted in this respect.

Article 3. For several years the Committee has been referring to the need to amend section 61 of Legislative Decree No. 67 of 1983, which confers on the CTC the monopoly to represent the workers on government bodies. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is examining the legal provisions that organize the functions of the highest government bodies. The Committee expresses the firm hope that in the process of examining those provisions, the Committee will in the near future amend section 61 of Legislative Decree No. 67 of 1983 so as to guarantee trade union pluralism, for example by replacing the reference to the CTC with the expression "by the most representative organization or organizations".

Right to strike

For years the Committee has referred to the absence of recognition of the right to strike in the legislation and the prohibition of its exercise in practice, and has requested the Government to take measures to ensure that no one suffers discrimination or prejudice in their employment for having peacefully exercised this right, and to keep it informed in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's statement that: (1) Cuban legislation contains no prohibition whatever on the right to strike, nor does the criminal law establish any penalties for the exercise of such rights, and that any decisions on this matter are the prerogative of the trade union organizations; (2) should Cuban workers at some time decide to resort to a strike, there is nothing to prevent them from doing so; (3) in industrial relations as practised in the country, more effective mechanisms exist and are applied for the exercise of rights, and workers systematically use them through their multiple forms of effective participation and by exercising their real power to decide on matters that affect them, which cannot be considered a limitation or prohibition of the right to strike; and (4) in the various institutionalized forms of participation by workers and their representatives in the settlement of disputes and in decision making, trade union representatives enjoy broad capacities and mandates. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government and again invites it, in the interests of safeguarding legal certainty for workers who decide to resort to strike action, to consider, in the context of the current legislative reform (amendment of the Labour Code) to which the Government refers, adopting provisions that expressly recognize the right to strike and the fundamental principles indicated by the Committee.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), referring to matters already under examination. It also notes the Government's reply.

The Committee further notes the comments of the Central Organization of Workers of Cuba (CTC), forwarded with the Government's report, and the comments of 13 August 2011 by the Independent Trade Union Coalition of Cuba (whose trade union status is contested by the Government) referring to matters that pertain to application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Article 4 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to the need either to repeal or to amend the following provisions to bring them into line with the Convention:

- section 14 of Legislative Decree No. 229 should be amended along the lines of the amendment made to section 8 of the new implementing regulations of the abovementioned Legislative Decree, so as to avoid any confusion and to ensure that the text of the Decree itself likewise establishes that any disputes arising in the process of drafting a collective agreement may be settled with intervention by the authorities and the CTC, only if both parties to the dispute so request;
- section 17 of Legislative Decree No. 229 has not been amended. This provision establishes the following: "Any disputes that arise during the process of formulating, amending or revising the collective labour agreement and while it is in force, about the interpretation of its provisions or failure to comply with its clauses, shall be referred, once the conciliation procedure described above has been exhausted, to the National Labour Inspection Office for arbitration, with the participation of the Confederation of Workers of Cuba and the parties concerned. The final decision shall be binding” (the Government notified the repeal of sections 9, 10 and 11 of the implementing regulations to Legislative Decree No. 229, but not of section 17). The Committee again reminded the Government that, except in the public service and in essential services in the strict sense of the term, compulsory arbitration by the authorities is contrary to the principle of the voluntary negotiation of collective agreements laid down in Convention No. 98 and, hence, contrary to the autonomy of the parties to the bargaining. The Committee also expressed the view that legislation which sets a requirement of referral to the administrative authority of disputes relating to collective bargaining, and which moreover provides for the participation of the Confederation of Workers of Cuba, also raises problems of incompatibility with the Convention. The Committee asked the Government to take measures to secure the amendment of section 17 of Legislative Decree No. 229 in order to ensure that, where disputes arise between the parties in the process of collective bargaining, the interference or intervention of the authorities and the CTC is not imposed as an obligation and that, except in the public service and in essential services in the strict sense of the term, recourse to binding arbitration is possible only with the agreement of all the parties to the negotiations;

- section 11 of Legislative Decree No. 229, which provides that “discussion of the draft collective labour agreement at a general assembly of workers shall proceed in accordance with the methodology determined for that purpose by the Confederation of Workers of Cuba”. In its previous observation, the Committee noted in this connection the Government’s statement that, in accordance with the principle of the independence and autonomy of trade union organizations, the Government may not prevent trade union organizations from adopting such decisions as they deem fit. The Government referred the Committee to comments sent by the CTC to the effect that the workers, far from considering the participation of the CTC and its methodology in bargaining and dispute settlement processes as undesirable interference, perceive it as a benefit. The CTC further stated that it is the workers who immediately refer matters to the CTC through its various bodies to obtain the necessary support and guidance for their claims and interests, which does not prejudice the will of the parties, but ensures the necessary guidance without undermining the principal role played by the first-level unions in negotiations. As to the methodology itself, the CTC stated that it consists of the application of the law which assists the national trade union organization to guide and instruct its affiliates, who account for 95 per cent of the workers in the country. Furthermore, the methodology and the other instruments guiding such action are not imposed, but are analysed and discussed in the various bodies of the trade union movement at both the central and sectoral levels, and in many cases by the workers themselves. The Committee nonetheless considered that, in the context of the monopoly trade union system of the CTC as set out in the legislation (see the observation on Convention No. 87), section 11 imposes on all trade union organizations a methodology for the discussion of draft collective agreements established by the CTC which, when combined with the existence of overly detailed provisions on the manner in which negotiations are to be held, does not adequately promote free and voluntary negotiations within the meaning of Article 4 of the Convention. Consequently, the Committee again asks the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 11 of Legislative Decree No. 229 by deleting the express reference to the Central Organization of Workers and ensuring the autonomy of the parties to collective bargaining;
- section 5 of Legislative Decree No. 229, which provides that the National Labour Inspection Office shall approve the conclusion of collective labour agreements in the units provided for in the budget and in the production and service activities of bodies, sectors, branches or activities that share the same characteristics, when so agreed and requested by the head of the body and the general secretary of the corresponding federation.

The Committee recalled that in an earlier report, the Government had indicated that the provision applied to units in the budget with similar characteristics, such as bakeries, schools, hairdressers, service centres and polyclinics. The Committee pointed out that the law subjects the conclusion of collective agreements in a broad sector of activities to approval by the National Labour Inspection Office. More specifically, the text of section 5 provides that “the units provided for in the budget and the production and service activities of bodies, sectors, branches and activities that share the same characteristics may, on an exceptional basis, conclude collective labour agreements when this is advisable in view of the likeness or similarity of the working conditions, where so agreed by the head of the body and the corresponding national union, with the prior approval of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security”. The Committee considered that such a situation is contrary to the principle of free and voluntary negotiation and once again requested the Government to take the necessary steps to repeal section 5 of Legislative Decree No. 229 so as to ensure that full effect is given to the principle of free and voluntary negotiation.

The Committee notes that, in reply to all its comments, the Government states that a new Labour Code is being prepared and that it is to include the substantive and procedural provisions of Legislative Decree No. 229, this process affording an opportunity for a tripartite evaluation of the questions raised.

The Committee further notes the Government’s response to the effect that: (1) the voluntary nature of, and the total autonomy of the parties to, the process of consultation, amendment or revision of collective labour agreements in the search for solutions to any disagreement that arises, clearly require that a mechanism be adopted by agreement between the parties and not by a decision of only one party; it also points out that the new wording “the parties may ...” eliminates the possibility of interpreting the provision as binding, as was the case with the wording of Resolution 27 of 2002, now repealed; (2) the provision does not have the general scope that the Committee attributes to it but, as stated in section 5, it is exceptional in nature and applies only when the head of the body and the corresponding trade union so agree; it does not apply to all sectors or to all the entities in a single sector, but to small local service units with the same or similar characteristics in relation to working conditions; the procedure is not legally binding, but it is a possibility that is allowed when it is assessed by common agreement, and in exceptional cases requested by the parties; (3) the procedure respects the independence and autonomy of trade union organizations that adopt such decisions as they see fit to organize trade union activities in accordance with their objectives; and (4) the collective bargaining process is driven, guided and controlled by the trade unions and the CTC, which propose relevant legal amendments to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the process to draft the new Labour Code and assess these provisions of Legislative Decree No. 229 in a tripartite framework will be concluded in the near future, and will take account of the observations the Committee has made on several occasions. It requests the Government to provide information on any amendments and hopes that it will be able to note progress in the near future. It requests the Government to provide copies of the legislative texts once they have been adopted.

Czech Republic

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 and by the Czech–Moravian Confederation of Trade Unions (CMKOS) on the application of the Convention, as well as the Government’s reply thereon. Moreover, the Committee notes that, in response to previous comments made by the ITUC concerning negotiations on pay in the public sector and collective bargaining in the health-care service, the Government indicates that intensive collective bargaining takes place before finalizing the draft state budget; the Government also provides information on the results of labour inspections which have been conducted in 2010, including in the health-care sector.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to provide an overall assessment of the effectiveness of the system of protection against anti-union discrimination and interference, in consultation with the most representative employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the State Labour Inspection Office and its eight regional labour inspectorates employ a total of 333 inspectors. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that from 1 September 2009 to 20 June 2011, labour inspection did not register any provable case of anti-union discrimination. The Committee would first observe that the absence of proven cases of anti-union discrimination does not necessarily imply that such acts do not actually occur. Moreover, given the divergence between the information provided by the Government and the comments made by workers’ organizations alleging anti-union discrimination, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government provides in its next report an overall assessment of the effectiveness of the system of protection against anti-union discrimination and interference, in consultation with the most representative employers’ and workers’ organizations, including data on the number of complaints brought to the labour inspection and the courts, as well as the duration of proceedings and their outcome.

Article 4. Collective bargaining. In its previous observation, noting that the Constitutional Court had rendered a sentence (No. 116/2008 Coll) which repealed certain provisions of the Labour Code, more particularly, provisions that afforded the right of trade unions to supervise the compliance with the legislation and collective agreements, the Committee requested the Government to indicate if the trade unions still had the right to denounce to the authorities cases of non-compliance with the legislation and collective agreements. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Constitutional Court did not touch upon the right of trade unions to carry out inspections of the state of occupational safety and health in the enterprise. The Committee further notes that the Government indicates that trade unions can still make suggestions to labour inspection authorities. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether trade unions have the right to denounce to the labour inspection authorities cases of non-compliance with the legislation.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on the application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee likewise noted the ITUC comments referring, among other matters, to the arrest of trade unionists and their torture and ill-treatment while in custody and to acts of interference in trade union activities. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations without delay in reply to the ITUC’s comments.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 1 of the Labour Code excludes from the Code's coverage magistrates, career officials in the state public services governed by the General Conditions of Service and career employees and officials of the state public services governed by specific conditions of services. It asked the Government to provide further information on the trade union rights of these categories of state employees. The Committee also noted that under section 56 of Act No. 81-003 of 17 July 1981 issuing the conditions of service of career members of state public services, public officials and employees were affiliated automatically to the then Union of Workers of Zaire (UNTZA). However, pending amendment of these conditions of service, the Ministry of the Public Service issued Order No. CAB.MIN/F.P./105/94 of 13 January 1994 issuing provisional regulations on trade union activities in the public administration, which was amended by Order No. CAB.MIN/F.P./0174/96 of 13 September 1996. The Committee noted the Government's statement in its report that the reform of the public administration was still under way and that the draft revised conditions of service of career members of the state public services would shortly be submitted to Parliament. The Committee further noted the statement in the report that trade union pluralism was applied in the public administration and that the rights of public officials were protected by a joint committee composed of representatives of trade unions and the Government. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government indicates that the revised conditions of service of career members of the state public services has still not been promulgated. In these circumstances, the Committee urges the Government: (i) to take the necessary steps to ensure that the reform of the public administration and the revision of the conditions of service of career members of the public services enable the guarantees set forth in the Convention to be enforced promptly for all state employees; and (ii) to indicate in its next report any new developments in this respect, including the repeal of section 56 of Act No. 81-003.

With regard to magistrates, the Committee noted in its previous comments that according to the Government, freedom of association is recognized for magistrates, that they are governed by special regulations and that there are unions in this sector. The Committee asked the Government in its next report to provide information on the instruments governing the special regulations and trade union rights of magistrates. The Committee notes that Basic Act No. 06/020 of 10 October 2006 issuing the magistrates' regulations deals with the specific conditions of service. The Committee observes, however, that nothing in the abovementioned Act addresses the trade union rights of magistrates. It therefore once again asks the Government to indicate in its next report the instrument that safeguards the trade union rights of magistrates.

Article 3. In its previous observation the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps to facilitate the organization of trade union elections in various sectors and to provide specific information on the results of such elections. It noted the Government's statement that by means of Circular No. 1 of 20 May 2008 it organized trade union elections for "enterprises and establishments of all kinds", which were held between October 2008 and July 2009. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the results were published by Order No. 0038/CAB/PVPM/ETPS/2010 of 30 August 2010 pertaining to publication of the results of the trade union elections of the 2008–11 fifth edition organized in enterprises and establishments of all kinds for the 2010–13 term of office. The Committee further notes that, according to the ITUC, in September 2010 the National Union of Congolese Workers (UNTC) and the Democratic Confederation of Labour (CDT) contested the results of the union elections in the private sector. The Committee requests the Government in its next report to include its observations on the challenge to the union elections by the UNTC and the CDT.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 4 August 2011 which report, among other matters, the dismissal of many trade unionists and the refusal of employers to give effect to court orders for their reinstatement and rehabilitation. The Committee requests the Government to provide without delay its observations thereon.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted with interest the Government's indication that it intended to give effect to the Committee's recommendation to conduct an independent investigation in order to clarify the questions raised by the ITUC and the Trade Union Confederation of the Congo (CSC) in 2007 concerning: (1) acts of discrimination and anti-union interference in private enterprises (including threats of dismissal against union members, despite the fact that section 234 of the Labour Code prohibits acts of anti-union discrimination); (2) the existence of many unions established and financed by employers; and (3) the failure to comply with collective agreements. The Committee requested the Government to indicate any developments and the conclusions of the independent investigation. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that it has not identified acts of discrimination in private enterprises, nor the existence of unions established and financed by employers or failure to comply with collective agreements, as indicated by the ITUC and the CSC, and that it is for these unions to provide proof of their allegations. The Committee understands from the Government's reply that the investigation that it conducted did not include the participation of trade unions. The Committee recalls that complaints against acts of anti-union discrimination should normally be examined by national machinery which, in addition to being speedy, should not only be impartial, but also be seen to be such by the parties concerned, who should participate in the procedure in an appropriate and constructive manner. Under these conditions, the Committee requests the Government to conduct a new independent investigation and to ensure that all the parties can be heard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee noted previously that, according to the Government, the National Labour Council has not yet adopted the draft Order prohibiting acts of interference. The Committee recalled that, although section 235 of the new Labour Code prohibits all acts of interference by organizations of employers and workers in each other's affairs, section 236 provides that acts of interference must be defined more precisely. The Committee noted the Government's reply to the effect that the National Labour Council has not yet taken a decision on the draft Order prohibiting acts of interference. To that end, the Committee noted that the Government undertook to provide a copy of the Order once it had been adopted. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the Order has still not been adopted. Under these conditions, the Committee hopes that the Order referred to above will be adopted in the very near future and requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard.

Article 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. With regard to practice, the CSC indicated previously the existence of measures allowing the establishment of mechanisms for the promotion of collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee noted the information provided by the Government concerning the right of public employees not engaged in the administration of the State to engage in collective bargaining, and particularly: (1) the agreement of 11 September 1999 on basic wages concluded between the Government and the unions of the public administration at a meeting of the joint committee; (2) the "social contract for innovation" of 12 February 2004 concluded between the Government and the unions of the public administration; and (3) the agreement concluded between the Government and the unions of the public administration following a strike by unions in the education sector in 2005. The Committee concluded that, in practice, there were wage negotiations and agreements in the public sector.

With regard to the legislative texts respecting the right to collective bargaining in the public sector, the Committee observed previously that the Government had sent the text of Ministerial Order No. 12/CAB.MIN/ TPS/ar/NK/054 of 12 October 2004 establishing the procedures for the representation and recourse to elections of workers in enterprises or establishments of all types. The Committee also noted the will expressed by the Government to regulate the salaries of public servants set by negotiated agreements in the context of the imminent reform of the public administration. In this regard, the Committee noted the comments by the ITUC that the staff of decentralized entities (towns, territories and sectors), who comprise a subcategory of public servants, do not enjoy the right to bargain. The Committee also noted that section 1 of the Labour Code explicitly excludes from the Code career members of the State public services who are governed by the general conditions of service (Act No. 81-003 of 17 July 1981 issuing the conditions of service of career members of State public services and explicitly providing for the establishment of institutions ensuring the representation of the personnel) and career employees and officials of State public services who are governed by specific conditions of service.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the categories of workers envisaged in Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention are governed by the Labour Code and that collective bargaining is possible through the joint committee. The Committee however observes that the text of section 1 of the Labour Code appears to exclude from its scope of application broad categories of public employees and officials. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to take steps to ensure that the legislation clearly guarantees the right to collective bargaining of all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, as provided in Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention, and once again requests the Government to indicate any progress achieved in the reform of the public administration.

Denmark

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1951)

The Committee notes the comments made by the Danish Confederation of Trade Unions (LO) enclosed in the Government's report. It requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to join organizations. In several of its previous observations, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that Danish trade unions may represent all their members – residents and non-residents employed on ships sailing under the Danish flag – without any interference from the public authorities, and whether, in particular, these unions may freely represent seafarers who are not Danish residents in respect of their individual grievances. The Committee had noted with satisfaction the Government's indication that the Danish International Ships Register (DIS) agreement states that seafarers not resident in Denmark working on board DIS ships have the right to be members of several trade unions (i.e. both a Danish trade union, and a trade union in their home country) and enables the seafarers' organizations to represent a seafarer who is not domiciled in Denmark or a foreign trade union in matters relating to the Danish legislation and to assist seafarers without a Danish residence in relation to the Danish public authorities. The Committee notes that the current DIS agreement supplied by the Government, which has been concluded in August 2009 between the Danish shipowners' associations and the Danish seafarers' organizations with the exception of one organization, allows seafarers not resident in Denmark working on board DIS ships who are employed according to a collective agreement (section 7 of the DIS agreement) to be a member of a Danish trade union.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Djibouti

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with deep concern the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 and 31 August 2011 concerning the application of the Convention, in particular the allegations concerning the obstacles preventing the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) from developing its activities. The ITUC also denounces the fact that in October 2009 the preparatory work for the 4th UDT Congress was disrupted by the police who sent all the participants away and arrested several members of the UDT Executive, subjecting them to interrogation. Postponed to a later date, the UDT Congress was finally held quietly on 17–18 January 2010 at the actual headquarters of the UDT. The ITUC also recalls that the passport of the UDT Secretary-General has been confiscated since December 2010, which prevents him from fulfilling his commitments of representation at both regional and international levels; that the UDT has been broken into on numerous occasions; that its bank account has been frozen and then cancelled; and that its letter box is still confiscated. The ITUC points out moreover that interference in the organization of trade union activities not only affects the UDT in its capacity as a national confederation, but also many grass-roots trade unions, such as the dockers' union whose attempts to hold congresses have been violently repressed. Given that the Government has still not provided any observations on the comments made by the ITUC and in the light of their serious nature, the Committee draws the Government's attention once again to the fact that the exercise of trade union rights can only take place in a climate free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind and that the prohibition imposed on a trade union federation to develop its activities constitutes a direct violation of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide, without delay, its observations on the comments made by the ITUC. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government once again to provide its observations on the comments made by the ITUC in August 2009 and August 2010 denouncing persistent actions of harassment and anti-union discrimination, as well as the violent repression of strikes.

The Committee notes that most of the facts reported in the communications of the ITUC, dated August 2011, are the subject of a complaint being examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2753).

The Committee notes with profound regret that the Government's report has not been received for the second consecutive year. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the following matters.

Legislative problems. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the provisions of Act No. 133/AN/05/5th L of 28 January 2006 issuing the Labour Code. This Act was denounced by the ITUC and also by the UDT and the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGDT) as challenging fundamental rights relating to freedom of association. The Committee had noted that, according to the report of the direct contacts mission undertaken in January 2008, the Government had reaffirmed that all the social partners were consulted in the process of preparation of the Labour Code. However, the Committee notes that the Government held working meetings with the mission to consider the points of divergence between the national legislation and the Conventions in order to rectify them and that it undertook to bring the recommended solutions to the attention of a tripartite National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training (CNTEFP), which was due to be constituted. The Committee had noted that, in its report of May 2008, the Government had reiterated its commitment to reviewing certain provisions of the legislation in order to bring them into conformity with the Convention and bring them to the attention of the CNTEFP. In this respect, the Committee notes the warning contained in the report of the direct contacts mission regarding any excessive delay in constituting the CNTEFP and the impact thereof on the adoption of the necessary legislative amendments. It also notes the mission's recommendation that, in a context where the representativeness of workers' organizations has not yet been established in a clear and objective manner, no representation from the trade union movement of Djibouti should be discarded from the work of the CNTEFP. The Committee further notes that, in its recent examination of a case concerning Djibouti, the Committee on Freedom of Association has noted the Government's indication that the CNTEFP has been constituted pursuant to Presidential Decree No. 2008-0023/PR/MESN and is chaired by the Minister of Employment, that its secretariat is provided by the Directorate of Labour and Relations with the social partners and that, in addition to its tripartite composition, the CNTEFP also includes a representation of the Parliament (Case No. 2450, 359th Report, paragraph 392). The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information concerning the current composition of the CNTEFP and its functioning, in particular the manner in which it is consulted on legislative matters and matters affecting the interests of representative employers' and workers' organizations.

With regard to its previous comments concerning points of divergence between the Labour Code and the Convention, the Committee has been informed of the adoption of Act No. 109/AN/10/6th L concerning the partial amendment of the provisions of sections 41, 214 and 215 of Act No. 133/AN/05/5th L of 28 January 2006 concerning the Labour Code. The Committee notes with interest that the relevant Act amends sections 41, 214 and 215 in line with the recommendations it has been making for many years. The Committee trusts that the Government will rapidly take the necessary measures to revise and amend the other legislative provisions taking into account the comments reiterated hereafter:

- Section 5 of the Act on Associations. This provision, which requires organizations to obtain authorization prior to their establishment as trade unions, is contrary to Article 2 of the Convention.
- Section 23 of Decree No. 83-099/PR/FP of 10 September 1983. This provision, which confers upon the President of the Republic broad powers to requisition public servants who are indispensable to the life of the nation and the proper operation of essential public services, should be amended in order to restrict the power of requisition to public servants who exercise authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the comments contained in the communications from the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT), the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGDT) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received between 2005–07, which denounced dismissals, acts of discrimination and anti-union interference in the postal and other sectors. In this respect, the Committee had requested the Government to order without delay an independent inquiry into the alleged acts. It had noted that in its report of 2008, the Government had indicated that the matter had been the subject of in-depth discussions with the direct contacts mission visiting Djibouti in 2008, which had encouraged all the parties to bring an end to the disputes. The Government had further stated that it would provide information on developments in the situation. The Committee had also noted the comments of the ITUC, dated 26 August 2009, indicating that the ILO Mission to Djibouti had offered some hope of an opening, but that the commitments made on that occasion by the Government, including those relating to the reinstatement of workers and trade unionists who suffered abusive dismissal, have not been given effect. The ITUC also denounced the pressure exerted on the Postal Union, which had had to establish a new executive committee. However, the management had interrupted the check-off of workers' trade union dues, thereby preventing the union from defending the rights of postal workers. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the points raised for many years by the UDT, UGDT and ITUC. The Committee once again urges the Government to provide its observations in reply to the comments on the situation in the postal and other sectors and to specify any cases in which penalties established by the law have been imposed following violations of the rights set out in the Convention.

The Committee notes the comments of the ITUC, dated 31 August 2011, denouncing once again acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The ITUC also denounces the fact that in October 2009, the preparatory work for the fourth UDT Congress was disrupted by the police who sent all the participants away and arrested a number of members of the UDT Executive, subjecting them to interrogation. Apart from these acts of interference, the ITUC also denounces the fact that the passport of the UDT Secretary-General has still not been returned after it was confiscated in December 2010, which prevents him from fulfilling his commitments of representation at regional and international levels; that the UDT headquarters has been broken into on numerous occasions; that its bank account was frozen and then cancelled; and that its letter box is still confiscated. The Committee notes that most of the facts reported in the ITUC's communication are contained in a complaint being examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2753).

The Committee notes with concern that the trade union situation seems to be deteriorating and firmly recalls the obligation under the Convention to guarantee workers adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination (Article 1 of the Convention) and to ensure adequate protection to workers' and employers' organizations against any acts of interference (Article 2). The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in reply to the communication from the ITUC, and to take measures to ensure the trade union rights of the UDT and its officials.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the Decree envisaged under section 282 of the Labour Code, establishing the structure and procedures of the National Joint Committee on Collective Agreements and Wages, and any other relevant information on its work.

Dominica

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that it has been referring, for a number of years, to the need to take the necessary measures so as to exclude the banana, citrus and coconut industries as well as the port authority, from the schedule of essential services annexed to Act No. 18 of 1986 on industrial relations, which makes it possible to stop a strike in these sectors by compulsory arbitration. The Committee recalled that the right to strike may be restricted or prohibited only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term (that is, services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population). Nevertheless, the Committee recalled that in order to avoid damages which are irreversible or out of proportion to the occupational interests of the parties to the dispute, as well as damages to third parties, namely the users or consumers who suffer the economic effects of collective disputes, the authorities could establish a system of minimum service in services which are of public utility rather than impose an outright ban on strikes, which should be limited to essential services in the strict sense of the term (see General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraph 160).

The Committee had also requested the Government to amend sections 59(1)(b) and 61(1)(c) of the Act that empowers the minister to refer disputes to compulsory arbitration if they concerned serious issues in his or her opinion. The Committee recalled that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute and a strike is acceptable only if it is at the request of both parties involved in a dispute, or if the strike in question may be restricted or prohibited (as mentioned above, that is, for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term).

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that there has been no change in the legislation since its last report. The Government further indicates that the Committee's comments have been discussed by the Industrial Relations Advisory Committee and that the latter is in the process of formulating its decision and reporting its recommendations to the Minister of Labour.

The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the principles of freedom of association and requests it to provide information on developments in this regard.

Dominican Republic

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, on the application of the Convention. The Committee also notes the comments of the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD), dated 31 August 2011, on matters that are already under examination and concerning allegations relating to the refusal to register various trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in this regard.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication in its report of the adoption of a new Constitution of the Dominican Republic, on 26 January 2010, which enshrines in article 62(3), (4), (5) and (6) the right to freedom of association and collective bargaining. In this respect, taking into account the constitutional provisions and the stimulus that they can give to achieving greater conformity with the provisions of the Convention, the Committee invites the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary measures to amend the following legislative provisions on which it has been commenting for many years, to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish and join organizations without previous authorization. Section 84(I) of the Regulations adopted under the Civil Service and Administrative Careers Act (Decree No. 523-09), which maintains the requirement for organizations of civil servants to obtain 40 per cent of the total number of employees in the institution concerned with the right to organize.

Article 3. Right to formulate their programmes. Section 407(3) of the Labour Code, which requires a majority of 51 per cent of workers' votes in the enterprise in order to call a strike.

Article 5. Right to establish federations and confederations. Section 383 of the Labour Code of 1992, which requires federations to obtain the votes of two-thirds of their members to be able to establish confederations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any measure adopted with a view to amending the legislation.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee takes note of the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD), referring to a lack of effective sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination in various enterprises, restrictions on the freedom of association of public employees and the requirement that a union must represent an absolute majority of the workers in order to be able to bargain collectively. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations thereon.

The Committee also notes the adoption of a new Constitution, proclaimed on 26 January 2010, which guarantees freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining.

Lengthy proceedings in the event of violation of trade union rights. The Committee notes the ITUC's comments referring to matters already under examination, and to the length of court proceedings, which last for some 18 months or more, and reporting that collective agreements have been negotiated in only four enterprises in the export processing zones (EPZs). While noting that, according to the Government, the length of court proceedings has been shortened to less than one year, the Committee requests the Government to send its observations thereon.

Article 2 of the Convention. Insufficiently dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to carry out a full investigation into the ITUC's allegations of 31 August 2005 regarding the lack of effective penalties against acts of anti-union discrimination, anti-union dismissals of leaders in sugar cane plantations, the drawing up of black lists of trade unionists in the EPZs and the dismissal of all the founding members of a trade union which the administrative authority had refused to register. The ITUC raises this question again in its 2009 comments. The Committee previously asked the Government in particular to provide further details on the absence of effective penalties for acts of anti-union discrimination. In its 2009 comments, the ITUC pointed out that penalties are not sufficiently dissuasive. While observing that the Government has not sent any specific information in reply to the ITUC's allegations of 2005, the Committee notes the Government's statement that information and guidance are provided on an ongoing basis to workers who report violations of their trade union rights. Furthermore, in 2007 and 2008 numerous inspections were carried out (12 of them in EPZs) in response to requests made by union federations or the unions themselves, and where violations of freedom of association were demonstrated, reports of the infringements were drawn up and submitted to the courts for appropriate penalties to be determined. Nine reports of infringements were thus dealt with in 2007 and seven in 2008. Recalling once again that investigations should be carried out without delay in cases where acts of anti-union discrimination are reported, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will hold a thorough investigation of these alleged cases without delay that will enable it to identify those responsible and, as the case may be, impose sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the specific penalties that may be imposed by law on persons found guilty of anti-union acts.

Article 4. Requisite majorities for collective bargaining. The Committee points out that for many years it has referred in its comments to the fact that, in order to engage in collective bargaining, a trade union must represent an absolute majority of the workers in an enterprise or a branch of activity (sections 109 and 110 of the Labour Code). The Committee observes that the Government has not sent its comments on this point and recalls that in its previous observation it noted that the Labour Advisory Committee had held a meeting with a view to obtaining proposals agreed by the social partners and the Government for amending the legislation. The Committee recalls that in cases where the law provides that in order to be recognized as a bargaining agent, a trade union must obtain the support of 50 per cent of the members of a particular bargaining unit, problems may arise since a majority union that fails to secure this absolute majority is thus denied the possibility of bargaining. The Committee considers that under such a system, if no union covers more than 50 per cent of the workers, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in this unit, at least on behalf of their own members (see General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraph 241). The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to amend sections 109 and 110 of the Labour Code in order to bring them into conformity with the provisions requiring the promotion of collective bargaining.

Articles 2, 4 and 6. Application of the Convention in the public sector. The Committee notes the promulgation, on 16 January 2008, of the Public Service Act, No. 41-08, and its implementing regulations (Decree No. 523-09). The Committee notes that the Act establishes the right to organize of public servants, including in federations and confederations, and that it applies to those employed in the service of the State, municipalities and autonomous entities, guaranteeing special protection (organizational immunity) for the founders of organizations and some members of their executive committees. Violation of this protection is subject to penalties, including even discharge from duties. The Committee expresses the hope that the protection established in the new legislation on the public service will be extended to acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of hiring and in the course of employment, prohibiting any discrimination based on union membership or participation in legitimate union activities. The Committee also requests the Government to establish for organizations specific protection from acts of interference by the employer such as interference in or control – whether financial or otherwise – of the association's activities. The Committee also requests the Government to establish sufficiently dissuasive penalties against such acts of discrimination and interference.

Articles 4 and 6. With regard to the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, who, under the terms of Article 6 of the Convention should enjoy the right to collective bargaining through their organizations, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether under article 62 of the new Constitution, associations of public servants now enjoy the right to collective bargaining.

Article 4. Right to collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the authorities have implemented measures such as the dissemination of laws and regulations, training workshops for trade unions, workers and employers and guidance provided at the request of any interested party. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that in 2007, 15 new agreements were registered and in 2008, 14 collective labour agreements were deposited, which, in this last instance, benefited 7,420 workers. The Committee observes that there has been a drop in the number of agreements and of workers covered and that it is not clear from the information supplied by the Government whether it refers to the private sector or the public sector or both. While pointing out that Article 4 requires the Government to encourage and promote the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiation between employers and workers, the Committee requests the Government to take specific measures in this area and to send statistical information on collective agreements concluded in the public and private sectors, including in the EPZs, indicating the number of workers covered by them.

Ecuador

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on the application of the Convention. It requests the Government to send its observations thereon, and on the serious allegations made by the ITUC in 2009 concerning repression by the police and the army of a demonstration organized by the trade union federations in 2006, that led to serious injuries and arrests, and on the alleged threats and acts of intimidation against leaders of the Workers Confederation of Ecuador (CTE) and the United Confederation of Workers of Ecuador (CEDOCUT).

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the International Organisation of Employers' (IOE) comments of 2009. It also notes the comments of 1 September 2011 from the National Federation of Chambers of Industry of Ecuador, concerning the position of the ILO Employers' group regarding the right to strike.

The Committee also notes the report of the technical cooperation mission carried out in Quito from 15 to 18 February 2011 during which there was an examination of the matters raised by the National Federation of the Enterprise Petróleos del Ecuador (FETRAPEC) on 24 August 2009, and the arguments submitted by FETRAPEC to the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2684. The Committee notes the information gathered during the abovementioned mission, and in particular the information provided by the Government to the effect that a process has begun to reform the Labour Code and the Government has undertaken to consult the ILO in the course of that process.

New Constitution

In its previous observation, the Committee noted that some provisions of the new Constitution raise problems of compatibility with the Convention. Specifically:

- article 326(8), which provides that “the State shall encourage the creation of organizations of men and women workers and of men and women employers, in accordance with the law; and shall promote democracy, participation and transparency in their running and alternation in their leadership”. The Committee notes the Government's statement that: (1) interference in the internal affairs of organizations, whether of employers or of workers, cannot be inferred from the Constitution, since such organizations have the right to elect their representatives in full freedom and the right to organize their own administration; and (2) changeover of leadership will secure for organizations a future marked by participation, transparency and democracy. In this respect, the Committee once again points out that according to Article 3 of the Convention, decisions as to the alternation of members of executive committees should lie solely with the organizations of workers and employers and their members. While noting the information sent by the Government, the Committee requests it to take the necessary measures to repeal or amend this provision so as to allow a right to re-election for officials of workers' and employers' organizations;
- article 326(12), which establishes that collective labour disputes shall, in all instances, be referred to courts of conciliation and arbitration. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute or a strike is acceptable only where requested by both parties to the dispute and where the strike may be restricted or prohibited, namely in disputes in the public service involving public servants who exercise authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal or amend this provision so as to ensure that compulsory arbitration is possible only in the instances cited above;
- article 326(15), which prohibits suspension of public services in education, social security, the production and processing of hydrocarbons and the transportation and distribution of fuel, and provides that the law shall set limits to ensure the running of such services. The Committee recalls that the right to strike may be restricted or prohibited only: (1) for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (2) in essential services in the strict sense of the term (i.e. services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population); or (3) in the event of an acute national or local crisis. The Committee further recalls that in order to avoid damage that is irreversible or out of all proportion to the occupational interests of the parties to the dispute, and in order to avoid damages to third parties, i.e. the users or consumers who suffer the economic effects of collective disputes, the authorities could establish a system of minimum service in other services which are of public utility. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend article 326(15) to ensure that the right to strike may be exercised in these services, with the possibility of minimum services being established.

Pending legislative issues

The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to repeal or amend the following provisions of the law:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish organizations without prior authorization.

- sections 450, 459 and 466 of the Labour Code establishing a minimum requirement of 30 workers for the creation of associations, works committees or assemblies to organize works committees;

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom.

- section 466(4) of the Labour Code requiring Ecuadorian nationality to become a trade union officer.

Right of organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes.

- section 26(g) of the Codification of the Framework Act on the Civil Service and Administrative Careers and the Unification and Standardization of Public Sector Remuneration, which prohibits work stoppages on any grounds in public services which may not be deemed essential in the strict sense of the term (education, social security, hydrocarbon production, fuel processing, transportation and distribution, and public transport) and provides for dismissal for failure to observe the prohibition;
- section 522, second paragraph, of the Labour Code regarding the determination of minimum services by the Minister of Labour in case of disagreement between the parties in the event of a strike;
- section 505 of the Labour Code which implicitly denies federations and confederations the right to strike;
- Decree No. 105 of 7 June 1967 establishing the imposition of prison sentences for participation in unlawful work stoppages and strikes.

The Committee hopes that in the process now under way to reform the Labour Code – for which technical assistance was provided by the Office – the Government will take account of all the comments the Committee has been making for years and requests the Government in its next report to provide information on all developments in this regard. The Committee also once again requests to the Government to take all necessary measures to amend section 26(g) of the Codification of the Framework Act of the Civil Service and Administrative Careers and the Unification and Standardization of Public Sector Remuneration, and Decree No. 105 of 7 June 1967.

The Committee is raising other points regarding the public sector legislation recently adopted in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee takes note of the comments dated 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on the application of the Convention. It requests the Government to send its observations thereon and on the ITUC's comments dated 26 and 28 August 2009, referring to serious anti-union practices and the absence of sufficiently dissuasive penalties in the law to punish breaches of labour and trade union legislation.

With regard to the comments of the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL) alleging the use of “blacklists” in one province, the Committee points out that the practice of blacklisting trade union officials or trade unionists is a serious threat to the free exercise of trade union rights. It again requests the Government to hold an inquiry and, if the allegation of blacklisting is confirmed, to take the necessary steps to ensure that the practice is punishable by sufficiently dissuasive penalties.

New Constitution

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that in the context of the adoption of the New Constitution of Ecuador, the Constituent Assembly passed a number of “constituent resolutions” which are mandatory decisions of a “supraconstitutional” nature and are not subject to oversight or challenge by any other authority (including judicial review). The Committee observed that the Committee on Freedom of Association examined the consistency of these resolutions with the provisions of the Convention in Case No. 2684 and criticized the unilateral review of collective agreements deemed to be improper by the administrative authority in the petroleum and health sectors. The Committee notes in this connection the report of the Technical Cooperation Mission carried out in Quito from 15 to 18 February 2011, in the course of which the issue of constituent resolutions was examined. The Committee notes that on that occasion the Government stated that: (1) the constituent resolutions are lawful since they were issued after several public consultations which yielded a high percentage of favourable votes; and (2) Constituent Resolution No. 23 provides that such resolutions may be amended through the procedure applying to the adoption of ordinary laws. The Committee nonetheless observes that in its report the Government states that constituent resolutions are not subject to amendment because they were issued by means of a nationwide consultation in which the Ecuadorean public responded to the call of the Constituent Assembly. The Committee stresses the need to amend the provisions that are inconsistent with the Convention, namely:

- Constituent Resolutions Nos 002 and 004, which place a ceiling on public-sector pay, compensation for unfair dismissal and other grounds of termination of the employment relationship, and ban supplementary private pension funds that involve input from state funds (Executive Decree No.1406 provides that no state resources shall be contributed to supplementary funds). The Committee considers that these provisions, which apply even when public-sector enterprises have sufficient income, impose permanent limitations on collective bargaining that are incompatible with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to remove these limitations and to reinstate the right to collective bargaining on all subjects that affect the working and living conditions of workers.
- Constituent Resolution No. 008 provides that it is necessary to revise clauses in public-sector contracts that contain undue and disproportionate privileges and benefits, and Ministerial Order No. 00080 and Order No. 00155A lay down administrative procedures for the automatic adjustment and revision of work contracts that include such clauses. The Committee points out in this connection that the checking of clauses in public-sector agreements for possible flaws should be done not by the administrative authority – which in the public sector is both judge and party – but by the judicial authority, and only in extremely serious cases. The Committee considers that regulations that allow the administrative authority unilaterally to cancel or cut clauses in collective agreements are contrary to the principle of free and voluntary bargaining. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal or amend Ministerial Order No. 00080 and Order No. 00155A and to indicate whether Constituent Resolution No. 008 is compatible with judicial review of certain clauses in public-sector collective agreements that may be flawed.

Pending legislative issues

The Committee again points out that for several years it has been commenting on the following matters:

- the need to include in the legislation provisions that ensure protection against acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment;
- the need to amend section 229, second paragraph, of the Labour Code respecting the submission of the draft collective agreement, so that minority trade union organizations with a membership amounting to no more than 50 per cent of the workers subject to the Labour Code may, on their own or jointly (when there is no majority union representing all the workers), negotiate on behalf of their own members;
- the need for teachers and heads of education establishments in the public sector and for staff performing technical and vocational duties in the education sector who are governed by the Higher Education Act (Act No. 2000-16) and the Act on Educational Careers and Posts in the Public Teaching Sector (Act No. 94 of 1990) to enjoy the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes in this connection that the Government refers to articles 96 et seq. of the new Constitution of Ecuador which deal with the right to organize and dispute settlement. It requests the Government to indicate whether these workers may conclude collective agreements through their organizations.

Noting the Government's statement that the National Assembly is in the process of amending the Labour Code, the Committee hopes that in the course of this work – to which the Office provided technical assistance – the Government will take account of all the comments the Committee has been making for years regarding protection against anti-union discrimination and interference and collective bargaining, and requests it in its next report to provide information on all developments in these areas.

Laws adopted in the public sector

Article 6. Exclusion of certain public employees from the guarantees laid down in the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee took note of two bills under debate by the National Assembly, namely: the Basic Bill on Public Enterprises and the Basic Public Service Bill. The Committee notes that they were enacted into law on 24 July 2009 and 6 October 2010, respectively. The Committee notes in this connection that the Basic Act on Public Enterprises states, in section 26, that “in public enterprises or entities established under private law in which public resources account for the majority share, collective bargaining is not open to human resources that are not deemed to be workers as defined in the law, namely public servants who can be freely appointed and removed and, in general, persons holding executive office or positions as directors, senior representatives, managers, advisers, positions of trust, general representatives, consultants and career public servants”. The Committee considers that Article 6 allows exclusion from the Convention's scope only for public servants engaged in the administration of the State (particularly those who are employed in government ministries and other comparable bodies, as well as ancillary staff) (see General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraph 262), and that the list of public servants excluded from the scope of application of the abovementioned legislation goes beyond the exclusions allowed by Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention, public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State enjoy the right to collective bargaining.

Egypt

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011, which refer to a number of matters which are already examined by the Committee, as well as allegations concerning numerous cases of violence against workers and trade union members involved in strikes, and to the repeated and often violent interventions of the Egyptian security forces to disperse labour protests. The Committee notes the Government's reply on these matters and requests it to submit these allegations to a tripartite committee for their examination and provide information in this respect.

The Committee recalls that for several years it has been commenting upon the discrepancies between the Convention and the national legislation, namely Trade Union Act No. 35 of 1976, as amended by Act No. 12 of 1995, and Labour Code No. 12 of 2003, with regard to the following points:

- the institutionalization of a single trade union system under Act No. 35 of 1976 (as amended by Act No. 12 of 1995), and in particular sections 7, 13, 14, 17 and 52;
- the control granted by law to higher level trade union organizations, and particularly the Confederation of Trade Unions, over the nomination and election procedures to the executive committees of trade unions, under the terms of sections 41, 42 and 43 of Act No. 35 (as amended by Act No. 12);
- the control exercised by the Confederation of Trade Unions over the financial management of trade unions, by virtue of sections 62 and 65 of Act No. 35 (as amended by Act No. 12);
- the removal from office of the executive committee of a trade union which has provoked work stoppages or absenteeism in a public service or community services (section 70(2)(b) of Act No. 35 of 1976);
- the requirement of the prior approval of the Confederation of Trade Unions for the organization of strike action, under section 14(i) of the same Act;
- restrictions on the right to strike and recourse to compulsory arbitration in services which are not essential in the strict sense of the term (sections 179, 187, 193 and 194 of the Labour Code); and
- penalties for breaches of section 194 of the Labour Code (section 69(9) of the Code).

The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that a new bill on trade union freedoms has been drafted by a committee responsible for the review of the provisions of the Labour Code No. 12 of 2003 and the Trade Unions Act No. 35 of 1976 pursuant to Order No. 60 of 2011 so as to reconcile national legislation with international labour Conventions ratified by Egypt, including this Convention. The Government indicates that it has informed this committee of the comments made by the Committee with regard to legislative amendments required so as to bring national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Government also indicates that the new bill was sent to representative organizations of employers and workers so as to solicit their views before its promulgation. In its latest report, the Government informs that the draft freedom of association law was passed by the Egyptian Cabinet on 2 November 2011 and is with the Supreme Council of Armed Forces for approval. The Committee expresses the hope that the draft law will be adopted in the very near future and will be fully in conformity with the Convention. While noting that the draft freedom of association law will annul any contrary provision in other legislation, the Committee further expects the Government to introduce amendments to the Labour Code No. 12 of 2003 taking full account of its outstanding comments and so as to bring the Code into alignment with the freedom of association law. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress made in this regard and to supply the new freedom of association law as adopted and any consequential amendments proposed or adopted to the Labour Code.

The Committee further notes with interest the indications in the Government's report that the Constitutional Declaration of March 2011, which has repealed the 1971 Constitution, will be in force until the promulgation of a new Constitution. The Committee observes that article 4 of the Constitutional Declaration provides that "citizens have the right to form associations, unions, syndicates, and parties, according to the law ..." and article 16 provides for the right to assembly, including that "public meetings, processions and gatherings are permitted within the confines of the law".

The Committee further takes note of the Decree of Law No. 34 (2011) adopted on 12 April 2011 by the President of the Supreme Council of Armed Forces which provides for sanctions, including of imprisonment, against any person who "during the prevalence of the state of emergency, makes a stand or undertakes an activity that results in the prevention of, obstruction, or hindering a State's institution or a public authority or a public or private working organization from performing its work" or who "incites, invites or promotes [such activity]". The Committee observes with concern that this Decree could effectively amount to a general prohibition of strikes if enforced against workers protesting for the defence of their labour rights and interests. While it is conceivable that the exercise of some civil liberties, such as the right to public assembly or the right to hold street demonstrations might be limited, suspended and even prohibited when a state of emergency is invoked, the Committee recalls that the freedom of association Conventions contain no provisions allowing the invocation of a state of emergency to justify exemption from the obligations arising under the Conventions or any suspension of their application. Such a pretext cannot be used to justify restrictions on the civil liberties that are essential to the proper exercise of trade union rights except in circumstances of extreme gravity and on condition that any measures affecting the application of the Conventions are limited in scope and duration to what is strictly necessary to deal with the situation in question (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 41). While noting that the Government indicates that the recent legislation establishes that the right to strike will be gradually acquired, taking into account that the exercise of this right will not harm the employer's interest or the public interest, the Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report whether the Decree of Law No. 34 (2011) adopted on 12 April 2011 by the President of the Supreme Council of Armed Forces is applicable to strikes carried out by workers, to provide detailed information on its use and to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to abrogate this Decree or limit its scope and duration.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1954)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011, which refer to matters already examined by the Committee, as well as allegations concerning numerous cases of retaliatory measures, including dismissals, taken against workers and trade union officials for exercising legitimate trade union activities. The ITUC further refers to the complete breakdown of collective negotiation mechanisms at the national level as well as in the industrial sectors and the work sites and states that the absence of a bona fide national trade union centre makes it very difficult for workers to settle disputes through bargaining hence leading to an increased tendency to resort to protest and strike action. The Committee takes note of the Government's reply to these comments and requests the Government to submit all those allegations before a tripartite commission for their examination and to provide information in this respect.

Article 4 of the Convention. In its previous observation, the Committee had recalled that it has been making comments for a number of years on various provisions of the Labour Code, as follows:

- as regards section 154 of the Labour Code, under which any clause of a collective agreement contrary to the law on public order or general ethics shall be null and void, the Committee had asked the Government to provide information on the scope of this section and the impact the broad wording of this section might have on the application of the principle of voluntary negotiation, it had also requested the Government to indicate the specific cases in which use had been made in practice of section 154;
- as regards sections 148 and 153 of the Labour Code, the Committee had asked the Government to take the necessary steps to repeal these sections, as they enable higher level organizations to interfere in the negotiation process conducted by lower level organizations;
- as regards sections 179 and 187, in conjunction with sections 156 and 163 of the Labour Code, the Committee had asked the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the Labour Code so that the parties could have recourse to arbitration only by mutual agreement.

The Committee had accordingly requested the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal sections 148 and 153 of the Labour Code and to amend sections 179 and 187, in conjunction with sections 156 and 163 of the Labour Code, so that compulsory arbitration can only be possible for public servants engaged in the administration of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term.

The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that a new bill on trade union freedoms has been drafted by a committee responsible for the review of the provisions of the Labour Code No. 12 of 2003 and the Trade Unions Act No. 35 of 1976 pursuant to Order No. 60 of 2011, so as to reconcile national legislation with international labour Conventions ratified by Egypt, including the present Convention. The Committee observes that the Government informed this committee of the Committee's suggestions with regard to legislative amendments required so as to bring national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Government indicates that the new bill was sent to representative organizations of employers and workers so as to solicit their views before its promulgation and, in its latest report, informs that the draft freedom of association law was passed by the Cabinet on 2 November 2011 and is with the Supreme Council of Armed Forces for approval. The Committee expresses the hope that the draft law will be adopted in the very near future and will be fully in conformity with the Convention. While noting that the draft freedom of association law will annul any contrary provision in other legislation, the Committee further expects the Government to introduce amendments to the Labour Code No. 12 of 2003 taking full account of its outstanding comments and so as to bring the Code into alignment with the freedom of association law. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress made in this regard and to supply the new freedom of association law as adopted and any consequential amendments proposed or adopted to the Labour Code.

El Salvador

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed reply to the comments from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 2008 and 2009. The Committee also notes the recent comment from the ITUC, dated 4 August 2011, referring to anti-union practices and dismissals. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations thereon.

The Committee also notes the technical assistance given in 2009 to the constituents of the country, concerning training and practice relating to Convention No. 98, and the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151).

Article 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 205 of the Labour Code and section 247 of the Penal Code provide for protection against certain acts of interference and asked the Government to take the necessary steps, in the context of the process to revise labour law, to provide explicitly in the legislation for a prohibition on all acts of interference referred to in Article 2 of the Convention, in particular acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers or employers' organizations, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of the employers or employers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in the context of the process to revise labour standards as mentioned in its previous report, to complete the existing provisions providing protection against acts of interference, together with penalties that constitute sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

Article 4. Collective bargaining. In its previous comments the Committee noted that under sections 270 of the Labour Code (concerning the conclusion of the first collective agreement in an enterprise or establishment) and 106 and 123 of the Civil Service Act, a trade union must have as members no less than 50 per cent of the workers of the enterprise, establishment or institution, in order to be able to initiate the collective agreement or to engage in collective bargaining. It asked the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the abovementioned sections to ensure that when there is no union that covers more than 50 per cent of the workers, all the unions are granted the right to engage in collective bargaining, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 270 of the Labour Code and also sections 106 and 123 of the Civil Service Act are not being reformed and that it will send notification of any changes in this respect. The Committee also notes that the Government adds that section 271(2) of the Labour Code provides that if two or more trade unions have members in the same enterprise or establishment but neither of them has at least 51 per cent of the total number of workers, either of the enterprise or of the establishment, these unions may unite with a view to achieving the aforementioned percentage, in which case the employer shall be obliged to negotiate and conclude a collective agreement with the united unions, if the latter make a joint request to this effect. While noting the possibility for two trade unions in the same enterprise to unite with a view to achieving the minimum percentage of representation to engage in collective bargaining, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend sections 270 and 271 of the Labour Code and sections 106 and 123 of the Civil Service Act in such a way that when no union covers more than 50 per cent of the workers, all unions are given the right to engage in collective bargaining, at least on behalf of their own members.

Revision of collective agreements. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 276(3) of the Labour Code provides that "if the economic conditions in the country or enterprise should change significantly, either party may request the revision of the collective labour agreement, provided that the agreement has been force for at least one year" and asked the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 276(3) of the Labour Code in order to ensure that the renegotiation of existing collective agreements shall be possible only at the request of the parties concerned. The Committee notes the Government's indication that to date there are no plans to reform section 276 of the Labour Code and that it will send any information in due course on any changes in this respect. The Committee recalls that to impose by law the renegotiation of existing agreements is in principle contrary to the principles of free and voluntary collective bargaining laid down in the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to take the necessary measures to amend section 276(3) of the Labour Code, in order to ensure that the renegotiation of existing collective agreements shall be possible only at the request of the parties concerned.

Registration of collective agreements. In its previous comments, referring to section 279 of the Labour Code – which provides that a decision by the Director-General of Labour to deny registration of a collective agreement is not open to judicial review –, the Committee noted the Government's explanation that the prohibition on challenging the Director-General's decision in section 279 refers only to administrative channels, meaning that administrative remedies have been exhausted and judicial channels of appeal are open, in accordance with section 7(a) of the Act concerning the settlement of administrative disputes. The Committee considered that, in order to avoid any confusion, it would be advisable to amend section 279 to make it plain that the Director-General's decision may be challenged before the judicial authority. The Committee once again requests the Government to consider the possibility of amending section 279 of the Labour Code in order to expressly provide in the legislation that the Director-General's decision may be challenged before the judicial authority. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any further developments in this respect.

Approval of collective agreements concluded with a public institution. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, under sections 287 of the Labour Code and 119 of the Civil Service Act, in order to be valid, collective agreements require the approval of the relevant ministry and the prior opinion of the Ministry of Finance. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 287 of the Labour Code and section 119 of the Civil Service Act in order to remove the requirement of prior ministerial approval for collective agreements to be able to come into force. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the planned reform of section 287 of the Labour Code as proposed does not contemplate the removal of that request but seeks to modify the time in which the Ministry of Finance is able to reply and, should it fail to do so, the resulting administrative silence shall be construed as positive with a view to expediting the procedure for the registration of collective agreements of autonomous official institutions. As regards the amendment of section 119 of the Civil Service Act, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it will provide information in due course on any further developments in this respect. The Committee recalls that the requirement of ministerial approval to enable a collective agreement to enter into force is not fully consistent with the principles of voluntary bargaining laid down in the Convention: however, there is nothing to prevent the budgetary authority, prior to the conclusion of the collective agreement, from informing the employer of the situation and of the budget that is available. The Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 287 of the Labour Code and section 119 of the Civil Service Act so as to abolish the requirement for prior ministerial approval in order for collective agreements to take effect. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any measures taken in this regard.

Article 6. Exclusion of certain public employees from the guarantees of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, under section 4(1) of the Civil Service Act, as amended by Legislative Decree No. 78 of August 2006, numerous public sector workers are excluded from the administrative career and hence from the guarantees of the Convention (collectors, treasurers, cashiers, administrators, warehouse security staff, warehouse personnel and auditors in any public institution department) and requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State enjoy the guarantees provided for in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 4(1) of the Civil Service Act is not being reformed and that it will provide information on any changes in this respect. The Committee recalls that the only possible exceptions to the guarantees laid down in the Convention refer to the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Articles 5 and 6). The Committee requests the Government once again to take the necessary steps to amend section 4(1) of the Civil Service Act in order that public servants not working in the administration of the State enjoy the guarantees provided by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any measures taken.

Right to collective bargaining of teachers. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 2 of the Civil Service Act provides that, because of the nature of their duties, members of the teaching profession are governed by a special act – which, in this specific case, does not contain any provisions on collective bargaining –, without prejudice to the social rights laid down in the Civil Service Act, which shall apply to them. The Committee also noted the Government's confirmation that, in addition to the right to association, teachers also enjoy the right to collective bargaining and requested the Government to indicate the date of the most recent collective agreements concluded with teachers in the public sector. The Committee notes the Government's statement that to date no collective labour agreement has been concluded with teachers in the public sector. The Committee, recalling that all teachers, including those in the public sector, are covered by the scope of the Convention's provisions, requests the Government to promote the right to collective bargaining of teachers in the public sector and to provide information on any further developments in this respect.

Equatorial Guinea

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with regret to note that the Government's report has not been received. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee again recalls that it has been asking the Government for a number of years to: (i) amend section 5 of Act No. 12/1992, which provides that employees' organizations may be occupational or sectoral – so that workers may, if they so desire, establish enterprise trade unions; (ii) amend section 10 of Act No. 12/1992, which provides that for an occupational association to obtain legal personality it must, inter alia, have a minimum of 50 employees – so as to reduce the number of workers required to a reasonable level; (iii) confirm that, as a result of a revision of the Fundamental Act in 1995 (Act No. 1 of 1995), the right to strike is recognized in public utilities and is exercised under the conditions laid down by law; (iv) provide information on the services deemed to be essential, and on how the minimum services to be ensured are determined, as provided for in section 37 of Act No. 12/1992; (v) state whether public servants who do not exercise authority in the name of the State enjoy the right to strike (section 58 of the Fundamental Act).

The Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation in order to bring it into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention and to send information in its next report on any measures taken or contemplated in this respect. The Committee expresses the strong hope that the Government will take all possible steps without delay to resume a constructive dialogue with the ILO.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, on the application of the Convention and the persistent refusal to register various trade unions, namely the Trade Union of Workers of Equatorial Guinea (UST), the Independent Services Union (SIS), the Teachers' Trade Union Association (ASD) and the Agricultural Workers' Organization (OTC). The Committee recalls once again that the discretionary power of the competent authority to grant or reject a registration request is tantamount to the requirement for previous authorization, which is not compatible with Article 2 of the Convention (see the 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 74). Under these conditions, the Committee once again urges the Government to register without delay those trade unions which have fulfilled the legal requirements and to provide information in this respect in its next report.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore recall the points it raised in its previous observation.

Article 4 of the Convention. Collective bargaining. The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), on the repeated refusal to recognize a number of trade unions, namely the Workers' Union of Equatorial Guinea (UST), the Independent Service Union (SIS), the Teachers' Trade Union Association (ASD) and the Rural Workers' Organization (OTC), and the lack of a legal framework for the development of collective bargaining. The Committee again stresses that the existence of trade unions established freely by workers is a prerequisite for the application of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government once again to adopt the necessary measures without delay to create appropriate conditions for the establishment of trade unions that are able to engage in collective bargaining with a view to regulating conditions of employment.

Article 6. Right of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee notes that, according to ITUC's comments, the right of workers in the public administration to establish trade unions has still not been recognized in law, despite the fact that section 6 of the Act on Trade Unions and Collective Labour Relations, No. 12/1992, provides that the right to organize of employees in the public administration shall be regulated by a special law. The Committee notes that the ITUC also indicates that the legal framework for collective bargaining is deficient and ambiguous. The Committee urges the Government to indicate whether a special law has been adopted and whether it establishes the right to organize and to collective bargaining of workers in the public administration, and asks it to send detailed information on the application of the Convention to public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance on this matter from the Office, and expresses the firm hope that it will take without delay all measures within its reach to resume constructive dialogue with the ILO.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee asks the Government to send statistics of the number of employers' and workers' organizations, the number of collective agreements concluded with these organizations and the number of workers and the sectors covered.

Eritrea

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on 4 August 2011 on the application of the Convention as well as the Government's reply.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had taken note that section 28(3) of the Labour Proclamation provides for the reinstatement of trade union leaders in cases of unjustified dismissal, but did not contemplate neither the protection against other prejudicial acts nor the protection of anti-union discrimination acts against workers affiliated to a trade union. It has requested the Government to broaden the protection against anti-union discrimination to cover recruitment and all prejudicial acts during the course of employment, including dismissal, transfer, relocation, demotion, deprivation and restrictions of all kinds and requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard. The Committee had noted that the Government indicated that it had envisaged broadening the protection to protect workers against anti-union discrimination. Therefore, the Committee reiterates its previous conclusion and hopes that the Labour Proclamation will be amended accordingly in the near future.

Sanctions applicable in cases of anti-union discrimination or acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had recalled that a fine of 1,200 Eritrean nakfa (ERN), set out in section 156 of the Labour Proclamation, to punish those guilty of anti-union discrimination or acts of interference, did not constitute an adequate protection and had noted the Government's indication that section 692 of the Transitional Penal Code became applicable in cases where an offence was considered severe or repeated. The Committee had requested the Government to indicate the sanctions applicable and to provide copies of penal sentences regarding cases of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Government indicated that the labour courts had not come across sentences regarding cases of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Government also pointed out that section 691 sanctions “petty offenses” when, by an act or omission, a person infringes the mandatory or prohibitive provisions of a regulation, order or decree lawfully issued by a competent authority. The Committee had noted, however, that this penal provision does not cover specifically the cases of anti-union discrimination acts and interference. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures to amend section 156 of the Labour Proclamation in order to provide higher and more dissuasive sanctions to sanction those guilty of anti-union discrimination or acts of interference and requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to communicate copies of any penal sentences regarding anti-union discrimination or acts of interference as soon as rendered in the future.

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6. Domestic workers. Previously, the Committee had expressed the strong hope that the Ministry of Labour and Human Welfare would issue a regulation in the near future that ensured that domestic employees were entitled to exercise their trade union rights, guaranteed under Conventions Nos 87 and 98. The Committee had noted the Government’s statement that domestic employees like all other categories of workers, are entitled to the right to organize and collective bargaining since the promulgation of the Labour Proclamation and that one association of domestic workers has been established. The Committee further noted that according to the Government, the Ministry of Labour and Human Welfare, under its power provided in section 40 of the Labour Proclamation, would not refrain from including the rights mentioned in the Convention in the upcoming regulation applicable to domestic employees. In this regard, the Committee once again expresses the firm hope that this regulation will be issued in the near future and will explicitly recognize to domestic workers the rights enshrined in the Convention.

Article 6. Right to collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide specific information concerning the status of the draft Civil Service Proclamation. The Committee had noted that according to the Government, the Civil Service Administration had been working on the draft Civil Service Proclamation through a process of participation and interaction and that relevant and salient comments of the participants were being integrated in the final draft. The Committee had noted that the Government once again reiterated that the drafting of the legal text concerning public servants, which would guarantee the right to organize to civil servants, reached its final stage and would be communicated to the ILO once adopted. In this regard, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to improve its legislation on public servants in respect of the rights enshrined in the Convention including the right to collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State and requests it to transmit copies of the relevant legislative acts upon their adoption.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Estonia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, which refer to matters previously raised by the Committee.

The Committee recalls that for a number of years it had been raising the issue of the prohibition of the right to strike in the public service. In this respect, the Committee had previously noted that a draft Public Service Act had been approved by the Government. It had also noted the Government’s indication that the draft legislation retained the prohibition on the right to strike of public servants, although by narrowly defining the term “public servant”, the legislation would ensure that 45 per cent of the current public servants would gain the right to strike. The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that although the draft legislation had been successfully submitted to Parliament, due to the election that took place in 2011 the new Government would have to resubmit a new, slightly modified draft, to Parliament in August 2011. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the right to strike is guaranteed to all public servants, with the only possible exception of those exercising authority in the name of the State, and requests the Government to provide a copy of the Public Service Act once it is adopted.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate the progress achieved in respect of the adoption of the list of services where the right to strike will be restricted (through a minimum service) as referred to in section 23(3) and (4) of the Collective Labour Dispute Resolution Act. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it continues to evaluate national industrial relations legislation. The Committee reiterates its previous request and expresses the hope that the Government’s next report will contain progress achieved in this respect.

Ethiopia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in communications dated 4 and 31 August 2011, and the comments submitted by Education International (EI) in a communication dated 31 August 2011, referring to issues pending before this Committee and the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in Case No. 2516 (exclusion of various categories of workers, primarily in the public sector, from the right to form and join trade unions, lack of independent investigations of serious violations of trade union rights) and alleging the Government's failure to implement the recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to the previous comments of the ITUC and EI. The Committee further notes the conclusions and recommendations of the CFA of November 2011 in Case No. 2516.

Teachers' associations. In its previous comments, the Committee had urged the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the National Association of Ethiopian Teachers (NTA) is registered without delay. The Committee notes that the Government indicates, in its report, that the NTA submitted its application for registration to the Charities and Societies Agency (CSA) and that the CSA refused in writing its registration and requested the NTA to revise its application in accordance with the Charities and Societies Proclamation (No. 621/2009) and the Charities and Societies Regulations (No. 168/2009). In particular, the Government indicates that according to article 69/4 of the Proclamation and article 5/1 of the Regulation, the CSA shall refuse the registration if the name proposed for registration is similar to the name of another charity or society or any other institution. The Government indicates that the CSA pointed out that all the names suggested by the NTA were similar to the names of already registered organizations. The Government indicates that the Agency had therefore requested the NTA to change its name. The Government further indicates that according to article 15/2 and articles 55 and 57 of the Proclamation, charities or societies may be established either for charitable purposes or for the promotion of the rights and interests of its members. The Government indicates that the NTA's rules enabled it to function as charity and society at the same time, and that the CSA had therefore requested the NTA to correct its rules. The Government further indicates that instead of resubmitting an application accordingly, the NTA submitted a complaint to the Institute of Ombudsperson (IO) alleging refusal of registration by the Ministry of Justice. It also indicates that this complaint is still pending, NTA having failed to appear at the office of the IO to follow the case.

The Committee notes contradictory information in EI's communication, which indicates that NTA's registration has been denied verbally by the Agency and that, despite the repeated requests from the NTA's representative and contrary to article 3(3) of the Regulation, the Agency did not respond in writing to the refusal to register, which prevents the NTA from appealing the refusal. EI further indicates that since the initial meeting with the Ombudsperson in January 2009, when the Vice Commissioner guaranteed that she will discuss the issue with the concerned colleagues in the IO, and despite the various reminder visits of the NTA's representatives, the Ombudsperson has been completely silent.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that teachers of public schools are enjoying their rights by being members of the Ethiopian Teachers Association (ETA). In this respect, the Committee recalls that workers and employers have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing and that an organization in a specific occupation should not constitute an obstacle to the establishment of another organization, if the workers so wish.

The Committee deeply regrets that three years after the NTA's request for registration, this organization is still not registered. It recalls that the right to official recognition through legal registration is an essential facet of the right to organize since that is the first step that workers' or employers' organizations must take in order to be able to function efficiently, and represent their members adequately. The Committee draws the Government's attention to its responsibilities in ensuring that this right is respected in law and in practice. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the NTA is registered without further delay so that teachers may fully exercise their right to form organizations for furthering and defending teachers' occupational interest and to provide information on the progress made in this respect.

With regard to the Charities and Societies Proclamation, the Committee recalls that it has previously noted with concern that the Proclamation organizes an ongoing and close monitoring of the organizations established on its basis and gives governmental authorities, in particular through the establishment of the CSA, great discretionary powers to interfere in the right to organize of workers and employers, in particular in the registration, internal administration and dissolution of the concerned organizations with respect to those falling within its scope, which appear to encompass civil servants, including teachers in public schools. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that the Proclamation is not applicable to workers' and employers' organizations and that such organizations are ensured effective recognition through legislation which is in full conformity with the Convention. The Committee regrets that the Government's report contains no information on the measures taken to this effect. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report and reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this respect.

Civil servants. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Civil Servant Proclamation, so as to ensure that the freedom of association rights of civil servants, including teachers in public schools, are fully guaranteed. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous statement that the right of workers, including civil servants, to form association is enshrined under article 42 of the Constitution. The Government further indicates that the country is under a comprehensive civil service reform programme designed to provide efficient and effective services to the public and that civil servants, as part and parcel of the executing body, have a key role to play in implementing the reform. The Government also indicates that the reform will have a significant role in strengthening democracy, ensuring good governance and guaranteeing the rights of all citizens in the country; and that, within this process, it commits itself to ensure all the benefits of civil servants. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government's next report will contain full information of the measures taken to amend the Civil Servant Proclamation, including in the framework of the reform referred to by the Government, so as to guarantee the right of civil servants, including teachers in public schools, to establish and join organizations of their own choosing for the promotion and defence of their occupational interests.

Labour proclamation (2003). In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to ensure the right to organize of the following categories of workers who were excluded, by section 3, from the scope of application of the Labour Proclamation.

Concerning workers whose employment relations arise out of a contract concluded for the purpose of upbringing, treatment, care, rehabilitation, education, training (other than apprenticeship), the Committee notes the Government's indication that such workers are not in a relationship for employment purposes but in a relationship focusing on how the individual is brought up, treated or rehabilitated, and that the relationship that exists between such two parties is not considered as a proper employer–employee relationship. The Government indicates that for this reason, the abovementioned category of workers is excluded from the scope of the Proclamation. The Government also indicates its intention to undertake further examination that will enable it to take appropriate measures in this respect. The Committee takes note of the Government's desire to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this process. The Committee recalls that all workers, without distinction whatsoever, including without discrimination in regard to occupation, should have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will be taken by the Government to ensure that the abovementioned categories of workers enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention, and that the necessary technical assistance of the Office, requested by the Government, will be provided in the near future.

Concerning the right to organize of workers under contract of personal service for non-profit-making purposes, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Proclamation provides in article 3, sub-article 3/C that the Council of Ministers shall issue a regulation governing the condition of work applicable to personal services, including the right to organize. The Government's report adds that the newly adopted ILO instrument on domestic workers will help the country with the drafting of this regulation. The Committee expresses the hope that the new regulation will be issued without further delay so as to ensure that workers under contract of personal service for non-profit-making purposes have the right to organize in law and in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect and to transmit a copy of this regulation once it is adopted.

In relation to the right to organize of managerial employees, the Committee notes the Government's indication that their exclusion is explained by the fact that they have different interests of those of other employees. The Government also indicates that managerial employees are those working in the interest and on behalf of the employer and can, therefore, conclude a contract of employment to protect their conditions of employment in accordance with the Ethiopian Civil Code and can form an association for lawful purposes based on the Constitution. It further indicates that this matter will be studied and that the experiences of other countries on the matter will be explored. The Committee recalls that Article 2 of the Convention makes no distinction based on the nature of the functions or the hierarchical level of workers, who should all enjoy the right to organize, including managerial and executive staff. The Committee considers that provisions which prohibit workers in this category from joining trade unions in which other workers are represented are not necessarily incompatible with the Convention, provided they have the right to establish their own organizations and that the right to belong to those organizations was restricted to persons performing senior managerial or decision-making functions. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure that the right of managerial employees to establish and join organizations of their own choosing for furthering and defending their interests is fully guaranteed. It requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken in this respect.

In relation to the right to organize of judges and prosecutors, the Committee takes note of the Government's indication that the Constitution guarantees the right to organize for any lawful purposes or causes and that, accordingly, judges and prosecutors are able to form associations of their own. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the existing organizations of judges and prosecutors.

Concerning the right to organize of employees of state administration, the Committee regrets that no information has been provided by the Government on the measures taken to ensure their right to organize. Recalling that the only exceptions authorized by Convention No. 87 are the members of the police and armed forces, the Committee once again urges the Government to take all the necessary measures, without further delay, to ensure that employees of state administration have the right to organize, and to provide information in its next report on the progress made in this respect.

In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to delete air transport and urban bus services from the list of essential services in which strike action is prohibited (section 136(2)). The Committee notes the Government's indication that these services are essentials for Ethiopia since the private sector for these services has not been developed yet; and that, since the Government is subsidizing the sector, the removal of these services would affect the poor part of the population who is benefiting from them. The Government indicates that for this reason, the interruption of these services would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population directly or indirectly. Recalling once again that these services do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term, the Committee suggests, once again, that the Government give consideration to the establishment of a system of minimum service in these services of public utility, rather than impose an outright ban on strikes, which should be limited to essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee once again requests the Government to delete the abovementioned services from the list of essential services and to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend its sections 143(2) and 160(1) so as to ensure that, except in situations concerning essential services in the strict sense of the term, acute national or local crisis and public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, recourse to compulsory arbitration is allowed only upon request of both parties. It notes the Government's indication that the majority of cases submitted to the Labour Relations Board were in accordance with the collective agreements signed between employers and trade unions. The Committee once again recalls that in cases of disputes of interest, a provision which permits either party unilaterally to request the intervention of the labour authority to resolve a dispute may undermine effectively the right of workers to call a strike. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend its legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention and to provide information concerning the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 158(3) which provides that the strike vote should be taken by the majority of the workers concerned in a meeting in which at least two-thirds of the members of the trade union are present. The Government indicates that the requirement of two-thirds of the members of the union is not to decide on the action but to give the chance to the majority of members to attend and discuss the issue, to prevent unnecessary strike action and to protect the interests of most of the employees who could be affected by the action. The Committee recalls that, if the legislation requires a vote by workers before a strike can be held, it should be ensured that account is taken only of the votes cast, and that the required quorum and majority are fixed at a reasonable level. The Committee also recalls that the observance of a quorum of two-thirds of the members of a trade union may be difficult to reach especially where the trade unions have large numbers of members covering a large area. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to amend section 158(3) of the Labour Proclamation so as to lower the quorum required for a strike ballot and to provide information in its next report on the progress made in this respect.

The Committee once again requests the Government to ensure that the provisions of the Labour Proclamation which, as noted above, restrict the right of workers to organize their activities, are not invoked to cancel an organization's registration pursuant to section 120(c) until they have been brought into conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to bring the legislation and practice into full conformity with the Convention, and to provide detailed information in its next report on the progress made thereon, as well as on the time frame for such action.

The Committee notes the comments submitted by Education International (EI) in communications dated 24 August 2010 and 31 August 2011 alleging violations of the Convention in the education sector. The Committee recalls that, in its previous observations, it had urged the Government to conduct a full and independent inquiry into similar allegations submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and EI. The Committee notes the Government's observations thereon as well as the June 2010 and November 2011 conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in case No. 2516 (see 357th and 362nd Reports, respectively), addressing the same issue. With regard to the teachers' right to organize, the Committee refers to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee notes the comments submitted by the ITUC in a communication dated 4 August 2011 in which it alleges dismissals of unionists, interference and violation of collective bargaining rights in private undertakings. It requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Labour Proclamation (2003). The Committee had previously noted that the national legislation, in particular the Labour Proclamation, provided inadequate protection of the rights afforded by the Convention. Noting the Government's indication that amendments to the legislation were on the agenda of the Ethiopian labour law reform committee, the Committee expressed the hope that the Labour Proclamation will be amended so as to ensure its full conformity with the Convention, in particular by addressing the following points.

Scope of application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to ensure that the following categories of workers who were excluded by section 3 from the scope of application of the Labour Proclamation enjoyed the rights afforded by the Convention: (1) workers whose employment relations arise out of a contract concluded for the purpose of upbringing, treatment, care, rehabilitation, education, training (other than apprenticeship); (2) managerial employees; and (3) workers under contract of personal service for non-profit-making purposes.

The Committee notes that in its report the Government indicates that the first category of workers is not in a relationship for employment purposes but in a relationship focusing on how the individual is brought up, treated or rehabilitated, and that the relationship that exists between such two parties is not considered as a proper employer-employee relationship. The Government indicates that, for this reason, such workers are excluded from the scope of the Proclamation. The Government also indicates its intention to undertake further examination that will enable it to take appropriate measures in this respect. The Committee takes note of the Government's desire to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this process. Concerning the right to organize of managerial employees, the Committee notes the Government's indication that their exclusion is explained by the fact that they have different interests of those of other employees. The Government also indicates that managerial employees are those working in the interest and on behalf of the employer and can, therefore, conclude a contract of employment to protect their conditions of employment in accordance with the Ethiopian Civil Code and can form an association for lawful purposes based on the Constitution. It further indicates that this matter will be studied and that the experiences of other countries on the matter will be explored. Referring to its comments under Convention No. 87, the Committee expresses the hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the abovementioned categories of workers enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention, and trusts that the necessary technical assistance of the Office requested by the Government will be provided in the near future.

Concerning the right to organize of workers under contract of personal service for non-profit-making purposes, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Proclamation provides in article 3, sub-article 3/C that the Council of Ministers shall issue a regulation governing the conditions of work applicable to personal services, including the right to organize. The Government's report adds that the newly adopted ILO instrument on domestic workers will help the country with the drafting of this regulation. The Committee trusts that the new regulation will be issued without further delay so as to ensure that workers under contract of personal service for non-profit-making purposes have the right to organize in law and in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect and to transmit a copy of this regulation.

Absence of adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee recalls that it has repeatedly requested the Government to amend its legislation by adopting specific provisions coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions providing for protection of organizations of employers and workers against acts of interference by each other's agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration so as to give full effect to Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, while the Labour Proclamation protects individual employees from any act of interference by an employer, it contains no provision to protect workers' and employers' organizations against acts of interference by each other. The Government indicates that it has taken note of the comments of the Committee for further consideration. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will adopt in the near future the necessary provisions, coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, so as to ensure that workers' and employers' organizations are protected against acts of interference by each other's agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration, in conformity with Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 4. Collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 130(6) of the Labour Proclamation, as amended by Proclamation No. 494/2006, which provides that, if the negotiation to modify or replace a collective agreement is not finalized within three months from the expiry date of the collective agreement, the provisions of the collective agreement relating to wages and other benefits shall cease to be effective. The Committee notes with regret that no information has been provided by the Government in this regard. The Committee reiterates that the abovementioned provision does not take into account the reasons behind a failure to finalize a new agreement nor the eventual responsibility of one or the other party for this failure and is not conducive to promoting collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that it is up to the parties to decide on the moment when the collective agreement becomes inapplicable after the date of its expiration. It expresses the hope that the Government's next report will contain full information on the measures taken to amend the Labour Proclamation so as to guarantee its full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had requested the Government to amend article 4 of the draft regulation concerning employment relations established by religious or charity organizations, which provided that "religious or charity organizations employing persons for administrative or charity work shall not be obliged to enter into collective bargaining concerning salary increment, fringe benefits, bonus and similar other benefits which may incur financial expense upon the organization". In this respect, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the draft regulation would be replaced by a new draft regulation. The Committee regrets that the Government provides no information in this respect. The Committee therefore once again recalls that collective bargaining should be promoted also in respect of these categories of workers and that no restrictions on the scope of bargaining should be imposed on workers by religious or charity institutions. The Committee expresses the hope that the new regulation will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to transmit a copy thereof.

Articles 4 and 6. Civil Servants Proclamation (2002). The Committee recalls that it had previously urged the Government to amend the Civil Servants Proclamation so as to ensure the right of civil servants, including public teachers, to defend their occupational interests through collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the country is under a comprehensive civil service reform programme designed to provide efficient and effective services to the public and that civil servants, as part and parcel of the executing body, have a key role to play in implementing the reform. The Government also indicates that the reform will have a significant role in strengthening democracy, ensuring good governance and guaranteeing the rights of all citizens in the country; and that, within this process, it commits itself to ensure the benefits of civil servants. The Committee once again urges the Government to provide, with its next report, full information on the measures taken to amend the Civil Servants Proclamation so as to ensure that civil servants, including teachers in the public sector, have the right to negotiate their conditions of employment through collective bargaining.

Fiji

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 and 31 August 2011, as well as the comments made by Education International (EI) dated 30 August 2010 and 31 August 2011. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon. The Committee also notes the comments made by the Fiji Mineworkers Union dated 1 December 2009 and 22 August 2011 concerning matters presently examined by the Committee in the framework of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

The Committee also notes the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the framework of Case No. 2723 concerning, inter alia, acts of assault, harassment, intimidation and arrest of trade unionists, in particular that it draws the Governing Body's attention to the extreme seriousness and urgency of the issues involved in this case and urges the Government to accept an ILO direct contacts mission to clarify the facts and assist the Government and the social partners in finding appropriate solutions in conformity with freedom of association principles.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee notes with great concern the ITUC and EI allegations concerning: (i) the arrest of the General Secretary of the National Farmers Union and five other union members on 1 October 2010 due to lack of permit for a public meeting; (ii) threats and questioning of Mr Felix Anthony, National Secretary of the Fiji Trade Union Congress (FTUC) and General Secretary of the Fiji Sugar Workers, on 12 February 2011 by military officers; (iii) repeated physical and verbal assault of the FTUC National Secretary and two other union officials on 18 February 2011 by military officials leading to physical injuries which required medical attention; (iv) threats against the FTUC National Secretary on 1 April 2011 by military officer; (v) on 22 June 2011, physical assault by military officers of Mr Mohammed Khalil, President of the Fiji Sugar and General Workers Union – Ba Branch, in retaliation for the statements made by the FTUC National Secretary at the International Labour Conference (ILC); and (vi) detention and police questioning on 3 August 2011 of Mr Daniel Urai, FTUC President and General Secretary of the National Union of Hospitality, Catering and Tourism Industries Employees (NUHCTIE), and Mr Nitin Goundar, NUHCTIE member, subsequent filing of charges for “unlawful assembly” for having met with and advised union members and release on bail on 4 August, with a hearing date set for 31 October 2011. Moreover, the Committee notes from recent allegations submitted by the ITUC in the framework of Case No. 2723 that: (i) on 29 October, Mr Urai was arrested again, upon his return from the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in Perth, Australia, where he spoke out against human and trade union rights violations in Fiji although he has not yet been charged with any offence; and (ii) on 4 November 2011, Mr Felix Anthony, the FTUC National Secretary, was arrested and his home and the union office searched by police. Thereafter, both have been released. The Committee also notes that, in reply to the 2008 and 2009 comments made by the ITUC concerning in particular police disruption of the National Union of Public Workers annual meeting and of the brief detention of its general secretary and his lawyer, the Government indicates that, since the union had never obtained a permit to hold its meeting as required by the Public Emergency Regulations, the police was obliged to order the union members to disperse and asked the general secretary and his lawyer to go to the police station where they were never detained but rather warned of consequences should they fail to obtain a permit in the future.

The Committee expresses its deep concern at the numerous acts of assault, harassment, intimidation and arrest of trade union leaders and members for their exercise of the right to freedom of association reported by the ITUC and EI, in particular the recent recurring acts of physical assault and harassment of the FTUC National Secretary. The Committee recalls that the resolution concerning trade union rights and their relation to civil liberties, adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 54th Session in 1970, lists as first among the liberties essential for the normal exercise of trade union rights the right “to freedom and security of person” since this fundamental right is crucial to the effective exercise of all other liberties, in particular freedom of association. The Committee recalls that, when disorders have occurred involving serious injury, the setting up of an independent judicial inquiry is a particularly appropriate method of fully ascertaining the facts, determining responsibilities, punishing those responsible and preventing the repetition of such actions. Judicial inquiries of this kind should be conducted as promptly and speedily as possible, since otherwise there is a risk of de facto impunity, which can only reinforce a climate of fear and uncertainty highly detrimental to the exercise of trade union rights. The Committee also recalls that the arrest and detention, even for short periods, of trade union leaders and members, without any charges being brought and without a warrant, for exercising legitimate activities in relation with their right of association constitutes a violation of the principles of freedom of association. It further reiterates that searches of trade union offices and of the private homes of trade unionists should only be made when a warrant has been issued by the regular judicial authority (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraphs 28, 29, 31 and 40). The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures without delay to ensure the full respect of the above principles. It requests the Government to conduct without delay an independent investigation into the acts of violence alleged above transmitting detailed information with regard to its findings and the action taken as a result. With particular regard to the arrested trade unionists, while the Committee understands that they have been released from custody, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no charges are brought against the FTUC National Secretary and that all charges previously brought against the FTUC President and the NUHCTIE member are immediately dropped, and to provide information on any developments in this regard. Concerning the alleged search by police of the FTUC National Secretary's home and the union office, the Committee request the Government to provide its observations on this allegation.

With particular regard to the reported act of assault against a union leader in retaliation for statements made by his colleague at the 2011 International Labour Conference, the Committee considers that the functioning of the Conference would risk being considerably hampered and the freedom of speech of the workers' and employers' delegates paralysed if the relevant delegates or their associates were victims of assault or arrest due to the expression of views at the Conference. It requests the Government to provide its observations in this regard.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the ITUC and EI allegations that: (i) as a result of the monthly renewed Public Emergency Regulations in force since April 2009, it has become difficult for trade unions to convene public activities; all union activities such as seminars, workshops and meetings, require a permit, which in practice is often refused or revoked or granted under strict conditions (including military officers attending the meetings, listening to the deliberations, approving the meeting agenda and even selecting the persons who may speak or attend); in this context, EI signals an attack on the freedom of movement of the President, the Vice-President and the accountant of the Fijian Teachers' Association (FTA) by preventing them on 9 July 2010 from boarding a plane to attend a union meeting; and (ii) heavy media censorship continues to be experienced in Fiji, and trade union statements have been prohibited from being printed or aired. In view of the above, the Committee wishes to emphasize that the freedom of association Conventions contain no provisions allowing the invocation of a state of emergency to justify exemption from the obligations arising under the Convention, or any suspension of their application, and that the right of assembly, freedom of opinion and expression and, in particular, freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, constitute civil liberties which are essential for the normal exercise of trade union rights (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraphs 35, 37, 38 and 41). The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on these allegations.

Lastly, the Committee notes that the Government has issued the State Services Decree No. 6 of 14 April 2009, the Administration of Justice Decree No. 9 of 16 April 2009 as amended and the Employment Relations Amendment Decree No. 21 of 16 May 2011, which collectively eliminate the access of workers in the public service to the judicial or administrative review of any executive decision concerning the public service (including on terms and conditions of employment of public servants) and other selected sectors; and terminate any pending or ongoing judicial or administrative proceedings in this regard filed by any individual or organization against the State (according to EI, this entailed e.g. the termination of the proceedings against the suspension of the FTA President from the civil service on the grounds of his public comments). The Committee notes that the ITUC and EI claim that these decrees violate due process and have been promulgated without any prior consultation with the relevant trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on these issues.

Legislative issues. Article 2. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations. Public service. The Committee notes from the ITUC comments that the Government has issued the Employment Relations Amendment Decree No. 21 dated 16 May 2011, which excludes 15,000 public service workers from the coverage of the Employment Relations Act 2007 (ERA) thus leading to workers in the public service including in public entities losing overnight their fundamental and other trade union rights. The Committee recalls that the standards contained in the Convention apply to all workers "without distinction whatsoever", and are therefore applicable to public employees; it was indeed considered inequitable to draw any distinction, as regards freedom of association, between wage-earners in private industry and officials in the public service, since persons in either category should be permitted to defend their interests by becoming organized (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 48). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that public servants enjoy the guarantees enshrined in the Convention.

Prisons and correction services. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 3(2) of the Employment Relations Act No. 36 of 2007 (ERA) so that prison guards enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. In this respect, the Committee notes that the Government states that the disciplined forces including police and prisons and correction services are not covered by the ERA due to the nature of their responsibilities in providing national security in all its facets, and that the prisons and correction services are governed by separate legislation and enjoy similar privileges in regard to terms and conditions of employment except for the right to strike or access to the institutions under the ERA. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that on 29 November 2006, the Parliament had committed to undertaking a revision of section 3 of the ERA to also include the correctional authorities (including workers in the prisons and correction services), that as of 6 December 2006 the military Government had taken over the realm of running the Government, that the next parliamentary election was scheduled for 2014 and that it would be left to the next parliamentary government to decide on the change. The Committee must once again recall that the only admissible exceptions to the right to organize are those explicitly provided for under Article 9 of the Convention, i.e. the armed forces and the police. All other categories of workers, without distinction whatsoever, should enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee considers that the functions exercised by prison guards are different from the regular functions of the army and the police and do not justify their exclusion from the right to organize (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 56). The Committee hopes that section 3(2) of the ERA will soon be reviewed to ensure that prison guards enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing and requests the Government to indicate the progress made in that regard in its next report.

Right of workers and employers to establish organizations without previous authorization. Previously, the Committee had asked the Government to amend section 122(1)(c) of the ERA, which grants the Registrar the power to determine whether a trade union name is “undesirable” and refuse the organization’s registration until an alteration has been made. In this respect the Committee notes the Government’s statement that: (i) the term “undesirable” can only be determined by the Registrar in consideration of the reservations made by certain organizations like religious, political, ethnic etc. on the name used, which may be offensive or insulting, can incite racial detestation and would contravene the Government’s People Charter for Change, Peace and Progress; and (ii) the Registrar does not have sole discretionary powers in refusing the union’s registration, as the organization may appeal that decision before the Employment Relations Tribunal.

Furthermore, the Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information as to the manner in which the principal objectives of the persons seeking registration were determined and evaluated by the Registrar, who under section 125(1)(a) of the ERA may refuse registration if the principal objectives of the persons seeking registration are not in accordance with those set out in the definition of a trade union. The Committee notes that the Government confines itself to indicating that the Registrar exercises that discretion on the basis of objective criteria and that the aggrieved trade union is at liberty to seek redress through the Employment Relations Tribunal to determine whether the refusal of registration is based on objective criteria. The Committee considers, in this respect, that section 125(1)(a) of the ERA confers upon the authorities wide discretionary powers in deciding whether or not an organization meets all the conditions for registration. In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to amend section 125(1)(a) of the ERA, by ensuring, for instance, that refusals to register an organization under the said section are determined on the basis of objective criteria.

Right of workers and employers to join organizations of their own choosing. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 119(2) of the ERA, in order to enable workers exercising more than one occupational activity in different occupations or sectors to join the corresponding trade unions as full members. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, section 119(2) states that “the application for registration must be made to the registrar in the prescribed form and signed by more than six members of the trade union applying for registration provided that those members that signed the prescribed form do not belong to more than one trade union covering the same occupational activity”. The Government explains that this provision only restricts workers from joining two rival trade unions covering the same occupational activity. However, the Committee notes that section 119(2) provides that “an application for registration as a trade union must be made to the Registrar in the prescribed form and signed by more than 6 members of the trade union applying for registration provided that no member shall belong to more than one trade union.” The Committee understands that the restriction applies in case of any union regardless of the occupational activity it covers, and considers that demanding that workers belong to no more than one union in order to sign an application for registration may unduly infringe upon the right of workers to join organizations of their choosing. Accordingly, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 119(2) of the ERA so as to allow workers who engage in more than one occupational activity in different occupations or sectors to join corresponding trade unions.

Article 3. Right of employers’ and workers’ organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules, to elect their representatives in full freedom and to organize their administration and activities. Right to elect their representatives in full freedom. Previously, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 127 of the ERA, which provides that officers of a registered trade union must have been engaged or occupied for a period of not less than six months in an industry, trade or occupation with which the union is directly concerned; and 127(d) of the ERA, which forbids non citizens of the Fiji Islands to be trade union officers. The Committee notes that the Government stresses that section 127(2) allows the full-time positions of General Secretary and Treasurer to be filled with persons who have not been engaged in the industry, trade or occupation concerned; and that it would not be practicable for unions to engage full-time professionals and non-citizens as officers, due to their limited funds (77 per cent have less than 500 members) and the need for officers to appreciate diverse traditions, cultures and laws. Observing that it should be left to the unions themselves to decide on the practicalities of recruiting professionals or non-citizens, the Committee recalls that the requirement of membership of an occupation or establishment as a condition of eligibility for union office is not consistent with the right of workers to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee expects that section 127 of the ERA will soon be amended so as to allow for a certain proportion of the officers to come from outside the particular profession, and to allow non-citizens to run for trade union office at least after a reasonable period of residence in the country.

Right to draw up constitutions and rules. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 184 of the ERA, which entitled the courts to decide the sanctions against trade union members for refusal to participate in a strike, so as to grant this power to the trade unions themselves. The Committee notes the Government's view that, while sanctions against union members for refusal to participate in a lawful strike rests with the unions, sanctions against union members for refusal to participate in an unlawful strike would be unethical and the Government cannot encourage the participation in illegal activities. The Committee notes the Government's view but considers that the expulsion of members, regardless of the invoked reasons, should be the prerogative of the trade unions. The Committee therefore expects that section 184 of the ERA will be amended to ensure that the issue of the expulsion from the trade union of members for refusal to participate in a strike is left to trade union constitutions and rules.

Right of workers' and employers' organizations to organize their administration. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 128 of the ERA, which provides that the account books and other related documents must be open to inspection during normal business hours by the Registrar, and that the Registrar may request detailed and certified accounts from the treasurer and also provides for fines or imprisonment in case a person obstructs or impedes the Registrar in carrying out an inspection. The Committee takes note of the Government's statement that trade unions are accountable to their members to avoid abuse of power leading to misuse of funds; that there is an increase in complaints to the Ministry of Labour from union members of fraudulent and corrupt practices within trade unions including the non-payment of union pensions and redundancy payments due to unlawful use of the money by executives; and that the matter will nonetheless be referred to the Employment Relations Advisory Board for consideration of the proposed amendment to set a certain percentage of union members filing complaints to give rise to an inspection of that union's accounts. In these circumstances, the Committee expresses the firm hope that section 128 of the ERA will soon be amended so as to ensure that the power of the Registrar to examine trade union accounts is explicitly limited to cases where a complaint from a certain percentage of members needs to be investigated, and requests the Government to indicate the results of the Employment Relations Advisory Board's deliberations.

Strike ballot. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend section 175(3)(b) of the ERA, which provides that each issue on which a strike mandate is sought must be supported in a strike ballot by more than 50 per cent of all members entitled to vote. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in a strike mandate, the casting of votes is not conducted during a union meeting where the required quorum and majority are fixed in the union's constitution but rather at each individual workplace; and that, since union members are advised in advance of the dates, time and place of the ballot, they do avail themselves of those dates to cast their votes so that the percentages of the votes cast are mostly within the 90 per cent to 100 per cent bracket. In these circumstances, the Committee must once again recall that although a ballot requirement does not, in principle, raise problems of compatibility with the Convention, the quorum and the majority required should not be such that the exercise of the right to strike becomes very difficult, or even impossible in practice. If a member State deems it appropriate to establish in its legislation provisions which require a vote by workers before a strike can be held, it should ensure that account is taken only of the votes cast and that the required quorum and majority are fixed at a reasonable level (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 170). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 175(3)(b) of the ERA so as to ensure that, regardless as to whether the strike ballot is conducted during a union meeting or at each individual workplace, only a simple majority of the votes cast in a secret ballot is required.

Declaration of a strike as unlawful. Previously, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 180 of the ERA, which allowed the Government to declare the illegality of a strike, in order to grant that power to an independent body, which has the confidence of the parties involved. It notes from the Government's report that the Minister declares the strike unlawful and states in the Order the legal provisions that have been breached, which gives the union the opportunity to assess the validity of the Order and seek redress by way of an appeal under section 241, and that it is the court that has the mandatory power to order discontinuance of the strike and impose penalties in case of disregard. The Committee notes that, in the Government's view, this arrangement provides for more means of redress than if the court both declared the strike unlawful and ordered its discontinuance. The Committee considers that the responsibility for declaring a strike illegal should not lie with the Government and that the existence of a right to appeal to the courts does not in itself constitute a sufficient guarantee. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 180 of the ERA, so that responsibility for declaring a strike illegal lies with an independent body which has the confidence of the parties involved.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend sections 169 and 170 of the ERA, which enable each party to a dispute to refer it to the Permanent Secretary, who must refer it to mediation, and sections 181(c) and 191(1)(c) of the ERA, which enable the Minister to apply to the Court for an injunction to discontinue a strike if satisfied that the strike is not in the public interest or will jeopardize or is likely to jeopardize, inter alia, the economy. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that, prior to asking for third-party intervention, the parties to the dispute have already exhausted the means of trying to resolve the matter internally; that unresolved disputes escalate confrontational attitudes, lead to illegal strikes and lockouts and are counterproductive for the entire country; and that when requesting discontinuance of the strike the Minister must show proof to the court that its continuance is likely to jeopardize the economy or public safety. In this regard, the Committee observes that strikes are by nature disruptive and costly. It recalls once again that a prohibition of strikes may result in practice from the cumulative effect of the provisions relating to collective labour disputes under which, at the request of one of the parties or at the discretion of the public authorities, disputes must be referred to a compulsory arbitration procedure leading to a final award which is binding on the parties concerned. These systems make it possible to prohibit virtually all strikes or to end them quickly: such a prohibition seriously limits the means available to trade unions to further and defend the interests of their members, as well as their right to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes, and is not compatible with Article 3 of the Convention (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 153). Accordingly, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend sections 169, 170, 181(c) and 191(1)(c) of the ERA so as to ensure that compulsory arbitration can only be imposed at the request of both parties to a dispute, or in essential services in the strict sense of the term or for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State.

Penalties for staging an unlawful strike. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 256(a) of the ERA, which, when read with section 250 of the ERA, provides for a possible penalty of imprisonment in case of the staging of an unlawful strike. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the imposition of a fine or term of imprisonment is targeted at offences of individual employers, and that the offence of workers having participated in an illegal strike under section 250(5) has been included in section 256(a) only with regard to the fine (max. US$10,000 for individuals and US$50,000 for unions). While noting the intention behind section 256(a) as described by the Government, the Committee considers that this provision, as presently drafted, allows for penal sanctions to be applied to workers having staged an unlawful but peaceful strike. The Committee has continually emphasized that no penal sanctions should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike, and therefore that measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property, or other serious infringements of penal law have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts, such as the Penal Code (for example, in the case of failure to assist a person in danger or damage caused to property). The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 256(a) read in conjunction with section 250(5) of the ERA.

New legislation. The Committee notes the promulgation of the Essential National Industries (Employment) Decree on 29 July 2011 (ENI) as well as the recent amendment to the Public Service Act. It notes that, in the view of the ITUC and EI, the new legislation violates the Convention in numerous ways and their implementation will virtually destroy the independent trade union movement. Recalling that, in the framework of Case No. 2723, the Committee on Freedom of Association has concluded that this Decree gives rise to a number of violations of Conventions Nos 87 and 98, has deeply regretted the issuance on 8 September 2011 of its implementing regulations and has urged the Government to amend its provisions without delay so as to bring it into conformity with Conventions Nos 87 and 98. The Committee considers that the following provisions are not in conformity with the Convention:

- Section 6 of the ENI, under which all existing trade union registrations in essential national industries are effectively cancelled; in order to operate, unions are required to re-register under the Act. The Committee considers that legislation which accords the administrative authority the complete discretionary power to order the cancellation of the registration of a trade union without any right of appeal to the courts is contrary to Article 2.
- Sections 10 to 12 of the ENI, under which a union must apply to the Prime Minister in writing to be (re-)elected as representative of the bargaining unit, the Prime Minister determines the composition and scope of a bargaining unit for the purposes of conducting elections for its representative, and the Registrar conducts and supervises elections in the bargaining unit. The Committee considers that legislative provisions conferring on the competent authority a genuinely discretionary power to grant or reject a registration request are tantamount to a requirement for previous authorization which is not compatible with Article 2. Moreover, the autonomy of workers' organizations can be effectively guaranteed only if their members have the right to elect their representatives in full freedom; the public authorities should therefore refrain from any interference as regards the holding of trade union elections which might restrict the exercise of this right (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraphs 74 and 112).
- Section 14 of the ENI, according to which the figure 50 per cent plus one is the percentage necessary for a union to be registered. The Committee recalls that, although a minimum membership requirement is not in itself incompatible with the Convention, the number should be fixed in a reasonable manner so that the establishment of organizations is not hindered; it may vary according to the particular conditions in which a restriction is imposed. The Committee underlines that a minimum proportion, which in practice precludes the establishment of more than one trade union in each occupation or enterprise, would restrict the right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraphs 81 and 82). The Committee considers that a provision imposing a minimum membership of 50 per cent would not be in line with Article 2.
- Section 7 of the ENI provides that union officials must, subject to severe civil and penal sanctions, be employees of the designated corporations they represent. The Committee recalls that provisions of this type infringe the organization's right to elect representatives in full freedom as enshrined in Article 3 by preventing qualified persons from carrying out union duties or by depriving unions of the benefit of the experience of certain officers (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 117).
- Section 27 of the ENI, which provides that: (i) strikes are prohibited in essential national industries in case of disputes to obtain registration, to influence the outcome of bargaining, in the course of negotiations or over the interpretation or application of a collective agreement; (ii) the bargaining unit may only go on strike if the parties failed to reach a collective agreement after three years of bargaining, subject to a 28-day notice period and prior written approval from the Government; (iii) the Prime Minister may declare any strike or lockout in any essential national industry unlawful; and (iv) non-compliance with the above provisions is subject to severe civil and penal sanctions including imprisonment of up to ten years. The Committee further notes that, according to the implementing Regulations issued under the ENI, the following sectors are currently considered as “essential national industries”: financial industry (including customs), telecommunications industry, civil aviation industry, and public utilities industry (including electricity and water). The Committee recalls that the right to strike is one of the essential means available to workers and their organizations for the promotion and protection of their economic and social interests, and that it may only be restricted or prohibited: (1) in the public service only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; or (2) in essential services in the strict sense of the term (that is, services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population). Accordingly, electricity services, water supply services and the telephone service may be deemed to be essential services, and the prohibition of the right to strike of customs officers who are public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, is not contrary to the principles of freedom of association. However, the Committee considers that radio and television, banking and transport generally do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term where the right to strike could be restricted or prohibited. It further wishes to emphasize that responsibility for declaring a strike illegal should not lie with the government, but with an independent body, which has the confidence of the parties involved. Moreover, sanctions for strike action should be possible only where the strike prohibitions are themselves in conformity with the principles of freedom of association. As regards penal sanctions for staging a peaceful strike, the Committee refers to its comments under the ERA.

- Section 26 of the ENI, under which disputes over discipline and discharge, and the interpretation or application of a collective agreement must be settled internally or by the employer's designated reviewing officer without recourse to a judicial or quasi-judicial body; disputes involving an issue of over US$2.78 million which remained unresolved may be referred to the Prime Minister for a final and binding determination. The Committee considers that all disputes relating to a question of right (e.g. the termination of a worker), regardless of the amount of money involved, should be fully appealable to the courts; in the first instance, they could be arbitrated. In this regard, the Committee stresses that arbitration imposed by the authorities at the request of one party could effectively undermine the right of workers to call a strike, and that compulsory arbitration is acceptable if it is at the request of both parties involved in a dispute, in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the state or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely those services whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population.
- Section 24(4) of the Essential National Industries Decree and the alleged amendment in August 2011 of the Public Service Act 1999, which prohibit automatic dues deduction for workers in “essential national industries” and for all public service workers. The Committee underlines that the withdrawal of the check-off facility, which could lead to financial difficulties for trade union organizations, is not conducive to the development of harmonious industrial relations.

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the provisions of the Essential National Industries (Employment) Decree 2011 without delay, in full consultation with the social partners, so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the check-off facility continues to be granted in the abovementioned sectors.

Recalling the recommendation made by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the framework of Case No. 2723 that the Government accept an ILO direct contacts mission to clarify the facts and assist the Government and the social partners in finding appropriate solutions in conformity with freedom of association principles, the Committee hopes that such direct contacts mission will be able to take place in the near future with a view to finding solutions to the issues raised.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 101st Session and to reply in details to the present comments in 2012.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1974)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on 4 August 2011 denouncing severe restrictions on collective bargaining in the public sector and pressure on civil servants to choose between their job and their role in the trade union, and on 31 August 2011 focusing on the Essential National Industries (Employment) Decree 2011 (ENI). The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

The Committee also notes the serious comments made by Education International (EI) dated 31 August 2011 concerning, inter alia, the suspension from the civil service of the President of the Fijian Teachers Association on the grounds of his public comments. Observing that the Committee on Freedom of Association has recommended his reinstatement in the framework of Case No. 2723, the Committee requests the Government to comply with this recommendation and to provide its observations on the remaining comments submitted by EI.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. With reference to the dispute in the Vatukoula Mining Company (concerning the refusal to recognize a union and the dismissal of striking workers 15 years ago), the Committee had previously taken note of the Government's statement that there has been a change of ownership in the mines, that a significant number of these strikers have been employed by the new employer in the mines and that the Government has also provided those still unemployed with alternative means of livelihood through a small business scheme subsidized by the Government since the beginning of 2007. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to various measures with regard to the redundant miners of the Vatukoula Mining Company including the striking workers of the Fiji Mine Workers Union (FMWU), in particular important amounts of money granted for the purpose of rehabilitation or social assistance, training packages, re-employment by the new owner, relocation of squatting miners and purchase of residential blocks at the expense of the Government, and establishment in 2010 of a multi-sectoral committee to discuss solutions to the issue. The Committee notes however the comments made by the FMWU dated 1 December 2009, 15 November 2010 and 22 August 2011, in particular that the information provided by the Government concerning inter alia the re-employment of many strikers and a subsidized business scheme for the unemployed is simply not true and that there has been no improvement in the situation. The Committee notes with concern the contradictory views of the Government and the FMWU, with progress being reported on the one hand and the deterioration of the situation being denounced on the other. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the FMWU comments and to engage in exploratory talks with FMWU representatives with a view to reaching, without any further delay, a mutually satisfactory settlement for assistance to help the remaining workers re-establish themselves.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the ENI was promulgated on 29 July 2011, that the ITUC and EI severely criticize its provisions with respect to the Convention, and that the ENI has been submitted to the Committee on Freedom of Association in the framework of Case No. 2723.

Elected representatives. The Committee notes that Part 3 in conjunction with section 2 of the ENI seek to establish the role of representatives – union or not – as collective bargaining agents. The Committee understands that the term “representative” may include a union delegate or an elected workers’ representative. In this regard, it recalls that, where there exist in the same undertaking both trade union representatives and elected representatives, appropriate measures are to be taken to ensure that the existence of elected representatives is not used to undermine the position of the trade unions concerned. The Committee also recalls that direct negotiation between the undertaking and its employees, bypassing representative organizations where these exist, is detrimental to the principle that negotiation between employers and organizations of workers should be encouraged and promoted. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that the application of the legislation will be in full conformity with the above principles.

Annulment of collective agreements. According to section 8 of the ENI, all existing collective agreements are null and void 60 days after the ENI enters into force, and new agreements are to be negotiated by the parties before the expiry of the 60 days; otherwise, the company may unilaterally implement new terms and conditions through a new collective agreement or individual contracts. The Committee emphasizes that legislation which annuls freely negotiated collective agreements in force and requires their renegotiation is contrary to the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining enshrined in the Convention. In addition, the Committee observes that the Government has provided no clear and imperative reasons concerning any need for economic stabilization in a specific context, and that the legislation has effect on whole sectors without any reference to specific provisions that cannot be implemented in the framework of an acute national crisis. Considering that the abrogation of collective agreements as well as the unilateral imposition of conditions of employment failing agreement is contrary to the obligation to encourage and promote collective bargaining, and that section 8 of the ENI constitutes a direct violation of Article 4 of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to abrogate this provision.

Renegotiation of collective agreements in case of financial distress. The Committee notes that section 23 of the ENI provides that employers may renegotiate all their collective agreements if they are considered to be in financial distress; if bargaining fails to result in a new collective agreement, the employer may submit its proposals for a new or amended collective agreement to the Prime Minister for review and the Prime Minister shall make a decision on the new terms and conditions of the new or amended collective agreement. With reference to the principles enounced above in the context of the annulment and renegotiation of collective agreements, the Committee considers that section 23 of the ENI amounts to compulsory arbitration by public authorities at the request of one of the parties. Considering that section 23 of the ENI violates the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining enshrined in the Convention, the Committee therefore requests the Government to abrogate this provision.

Restriction of the right to collective bargaining. Previously, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated so as to amend section 10 of the Counter-Inflation (Remuneration) Act which envisages, if need be, the restriction or regulation of remuneration of any kind by order of the Prices and Incomes Boards and stipulates that any agreement or arrangement which does not respect these limitations will be illegal and deemed to be an offence. The Committee notes from the Government's report that: (i) section 10 is dormant, has not been used since 24 years and can only be activated in extreme situations of economic crisis bordering insolvency; (ii) in its efforts to promote collective bargaining, the Government has developed a Code of Good Faith Collective Bargaining as guidance for the social partners; and (iii) the Government's commitment to the right of workers and employers to bargain freely is evidenced by the fact that section 10 was not activated during the global financial crisis in 2008 and the numerous cyclones hitting Fiji at the same time. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that, in the framework of the review of outdated laws, the Government is exploring, in light of the recently adopted commercial legislation, the need of retaining the Counter-Inflation (Remuneration) Act and the possibility to merge the Price and Incomes Boards with the Commerce Commission. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to abrogate section 10 of the Counter-Inflation (Remuneration) Act and to provide information on any developments in the framework of the above reform.

In general, the Committee expresses deep concern at the serious violations of the Convention that have been brought to its attention. Recalling the recommendation made by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the framework of Case No. 2723 that the Government accepts an ILO direct contacts mission to clarify the facts and assist the Government and the social partners in finding appropriate solutions in conformity with freedom of association principles, the Committee hopes that such direct contacts mission will be able to take place in the near future with a view to finding solutions to the issues raised.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Observations received from trade unions. The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 concerning restrictions on the right to strike in the public sector and also problems with exercising trade union rights in the education sector. The Committee also notes the communication of 31 August 2011 from Education International (EI), which denounces the adoption of various regulatory instruments which, it claims, have been making the exercise of union activities in the education sector more and more difficult since 2009. In its communication EI denounces in particular the circular of 4 April 2011 from the Director of the Estuaire Provincial Academy prohibiting trade unions from conducting any activities in educational establishments, i.e. the teachers' workplace. The Committee recalls that freedom of association implies for workers' organizations the right to organize their activities in full freedom aimed at defending the occupational interests of their members, including the right of workers' representatives to have access to all workplaces where such access is necessary to enable them to perform their representative duties. However, access for workers' representatives to workplaces must of course not be used to the detriment of the efficient functioning of the administration or public institutions concerned. For this reason the workers' organizations concerned and the employer must seek to reach agreements in such a way that access to the workplace during and outside working hours is recognized for the workers' organizations without jeopardizing the operation of the administration or public institution concerned. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations on the comments from the ITUC and EI and take the necessary steps in the meantime to ensure that trade union representatives have the possibility of access to teachers in educational establishments, in accordance with the legislation in force.

Furthermore, in its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the designation of the most representative trade union confederations in the country is not the result of a unilateral decision by the Government, but the outcome of an agreement concluded on 27 March 2007 among six trade union confederations (COSYGA, CGSL, USAP, UTG, CONSINEQ and Intersyndicale), which designated the four most representative organizations to participate in the consultative bodies envisaged by the Labour Code, prior to their subsequent determination through trade union elections. The Committee notes the Government's confirmation in its latest report that the 2007 agreement still remains in force today and, recognizing that the problem of the representativeness of the trade union confederations persists, repeats its request for assistance from the Office in the organization of occupational elections. Recalling once again that the determination of the most representative organizations must be based on objective, pre-established and precise criteria so as to avoid any possibility of bias or abuse (see the 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 97), the Committee expects that the Government will take the necessary measures to resolve the problem of the representativeness of trade union organizations and hopes that it will be able to avail itself of ILO technical assistance. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any progress achieved in this respect in its next report.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

Scope of the Convention. Civil servants, prison officers and domestic workers. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to guarantee that the rights afforded by the Convention were ensured for prison officers, domestic workers and civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee noted with regret that the new Labour Act did not apply to the abovementioned categories of workers (section 3(2)). The Committee recalled that only the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State can be excluded from the guarantees of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the right to collective bargaining under Part XIII of the Labour Act is a communal right guaranteed to all workers. The Committee observes that although prison officers, domestic workers and civil servant are excluded from the application of the Labour Act, section 3(3) entitles the Secretary of State to extend the Act's application by an order published in the gazette, to any excluded category of workers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate if the excluded employees under section 3(2) of the Labour Act are afforded the rights to collective bargaining under Part XIII of the Labour Act as a result of an order published in the gazette by the Secretary of State and if so, to provide a copy of the said Order. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate how these categories of workers are afforded adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, in accordance with Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention.

Article 4. Measures to encourage and promote the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiation between employers or their organizations and workers' organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that according to section 130 of the Act, in order to be recognized as a sole bargaining agent, a trade union should represent a certain percentage of employees under a contract of service (30 per cent in the case of a single union and at least 45 per cent if the establishment in question employs at least 100 people; in this case, the bargaining agent could be composed of two or more trade unions). The Committee recalled that where, under a system for nominating an exclusive bargaining agent, there is no union representing the required percentage to be so designated, collective bargaining rights should not be denied to other unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee further noted that section 131 of the Act provides that an employer may, if he or she wishes, organize a secret ballot to establish a sole bargaining agent. The Committee recalled that the organization of a ballot for determining representativeness should be carried out by the authorities or an independent party upon a request presented by a union. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention in accordance with the abovementioned principles. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Department of Labour is in consultation with the Central Government for amendments to be tabled before Parliament for approval. The Committee trusts that these amendments will take into account the abovementioned principles and requests the Government to provide information on any development in this regard.

Georgia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the Georgian Trade Union Confederation (GTUC) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in communications dated 3 September 2010 and 4 August 2011, respectively, concerning restrictions on the right to strike and other matters examined by the Committee below. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments of the ITUC.

Law on Trade Unions. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 2(9) of the Law so as to lower the minimum trade union membership requirement set at 100 and to indicate the impact of this provision on the establishment of trade unions at the branch or sectoral levels, including information on the number of such trade unions and their respective membership. The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that the Law on Trade Unions was adopted in 1997, prior to the ratification of the Convention; thus, by virtue of article 6 of the Constitution, according to which, ratified international conventions are part of national legislation and prevail over other legal acts, Convention No. 87 prevails over the Law on Trade Unions. The Government further indicates that according to the Civil Code, trade unions are non-commercial organizations and there are no restrictions as to the number of their members for the purpose of registration. According to the Government, in practice, there are numerous trade unions with the membership of lower than 100 persons. The Government lists in this respect the following examples: Ministry of Culture, Monument Protection and Sport – 80 trade union members, Ministry of Economic Development – 80 trade union members, and JSC Bank of Georgia – 80 trade union members. The Government further asserts that in practice, there are no cases of refusals to register a trade union by the National Registry Agency. Finally, the Government argues that it is not aware of any ILO document which sets up a minimum trade union membership requirement. The Committee recalls that a high minimum membership requirement restricts the right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization and is incompatible with Article 2 of the Convention. It further recalls that it had always considered that the minimum requirement of 100 workers to establish unions by branch of activity, occupation or for various occupations is too high and should be reduced. While taking note of the examples provided by the Government, the Committee understands that they appear to refer not to the number of members of a particular trade union, but rather to a number of trade unions members at a particular entity (organization or undertaking). Furthermore, while taking due note of the Government's indication that the Convention prevails over the Law on Trade Unions, the Committee stresses that it is the Government's responsibility to ensure the application of the Convention in law and in practice. It therefore trusts that the Government's next report will contain information on the measures taken or envisaged to amend section 2(9) of the Law on Trade Unions so as to lower the minimum trade union membership requirement.

Labour Code. The Committee had previously noted section 49(5) of the Code providing that, after the warning strike, the parties shall participate in the amicable settlement procedures pursuant to the Labour Code. The Committee had noted, however, that the Labour Code did not provide for such a procedure and requested the Government to give consideration to appropriate mechanisms of conciliation, mediation or voluntary arbitration instead. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that amicable settlement procedures are regulated by section 48 of the Code in sufficient detail. The Committee once again notes that, under this section, such procedures involve: (1) a written notice of commencement of the amicable procedure reflecting the grounds of dispute and claims by one party; (2) a review of the notice by the other party and its reply; and (3) written decision by the representatives of the parties, which would become a part of the existing contract of employment. Furthermore, if no agreement has been reached within 14 days, the “other party is entitled to apply to court or arbitration” (section 48(5)). The Committee understands that this section, while describes the process, does not provide for a specific mechanism (procedure) to facilitate dispute settlement between the parties. The Committee recalls that dispute settlement procedure usually involves a neutral and independent third party, in whom the parties have confidence, and who could facilitate breaking a stalemate which the parties are unable to resolve themselves. The Committee notes that the Government, on the one hand, recognizes the need to develop mechanisms of conciliation and mediation to help reduce the incidence of disputes and, on the other, indicates that a special tripartite Working Group of the Tripartite Social Partnership Commission is empowered to mediate labour disputes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the work of the tripartite Working Group as to the dispute mediation, including on the number of labour disputes it had conciliated and/or mediated. It recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in respect of the developing and strengthening collective labour disputes conciliation and mediation mechanisms if it so wishes.

With regard to section 48(5) of the Code, according to which, if an agreement is not reached within 14 days, one of the parties is entitled to submit the dispute to the court or arbitration, the Committee had recalled that a provision which permitted either party unilaterally to submit the dispute for compulsory arbitration effectively undermined the right of workers to call a strike. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend this provision so as to ensure that recourse to arbitration is limited only to situations where the right to strike can be restricted or banned, that is in: (1) essential services in the strict sense of the term (that is, services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population); (2) the public services only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; or (3) in the event of an acute national or local emergency. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that recourse to the arbitration is not compulsory and that a strike can be declared regardless of whether an appeal to court or arbitration had been filed. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that parties can refer the dispute to the arbitration only upon mutual consent and that an arbitration decision is final only if there is a preliminary consent of both parties to this effect. At the same time, the Government explains that pursuant to section 48(5), if in the course of the dispute, an agreement has not been reached within 14 days or if a party has avoided to participate in the amicable settlement, the other party is entitled to apply to court or arbitration and/or continue to exercise the right to strike. The Committee notes that the latter explanation of the Government appears to confirm that one of the parties can submit the dispute to the court or arbitration if the conditions set forth by section 48(5), as mentioned above, are satisfied. The Committee therefore reiterates its previous request and asks the Government to indicate measures taken or envisaged to amend section 48(5) of the Code so as to ensure that recourse to arbitration by one party to the dispute is limited to the abovementioned cases.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to repeal section 49(8) of the Code, which provides that a strike could not continue for more than 90 calendar days. The Committee notes that in the Government’s opinion, this provision is in conformity with the Convention, as the latter does not prohibit limitations on the duration of the strike. While noting the Government’s indication that after the expiration of 90 days, another strike can be declared by the union with regard to the same issue, the Committee considers that a legislation limiting duration of the strike to 90 days seriously undermines one of the essential means through which workers and their organizations may promote and defend their economic and social interests. The Committee considers that the right to strike should not be restricted through predetermined limitation on the duration imposed by the legislation and requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal this provision.

The Committee had further requested the Government to amend section 51(2) of the Code, which prohibits strikes in sectors where “work is impossible to suspend due to the technological mode of work”. Instead of prohibition of strikes in such services, the Committee suggested establishing a system of minimum services. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that section 51(2) sets the minimum services requirement. The Committee points out, however, that this provision refers to the prohibition of strikes, without any reference to the system of minimum services and conditions thereof. The Committee notes, nevertheless, the Government’s indication that it will discuss the possibility of amending this section in the framework of the Tripartite Social Partnership Commission. The Committee trusts that the Government’s next report will contain information on the measures taken or envisaged to amend section 51(2) of the Code.

Finally, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 51(4) and (5) of the Code providing that a strike by employees informed about termination of their contract before the dispute arises is illegal and that, if the right to strike arises before the termination of the time-based contract, the strike is considered illegal after the expiration of the term of the contract. The Committee notes that the Government while indicating that strike shall not serve as a ground for termination of labour relations (section 49(10) of the Labour Code), confirms that after the termination of the labour contract the strike is indeed considered illegal. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend section 51(4) and (5) of the Code and to indicate measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by Education International (EI) in communications dated 30 August 2010 and 31 August 2011, which concern issues pending before the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in Case No. 2678, concerning interference in activities of the Educators & Scientists Free Trade Union of Georgia (ESFTUG) and dismissals of trade unionists and the Government's reply thereon. In this respect, the Committee also notes the November 2011 conclusions and recommendations of the CFA (see 361st Report). The Committee also notes the comments made by the Georgian Trade Union Confederation (GTUC) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in communications dated 3 September 2010, and 4 August and 10 October 2011, respectively, alleging numerous cases of anti-union discrimination, employers' interference in trade union affairs and violation of collective bargaining rights. The Committee notes that some of their allegations refer to the issues pending before the CFA in Case No. 2663. In this respect, the Committee notes the March 2010 CFA conclusions and recommendations (see 356th Report). The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments of the ITUC.

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010. It further notes that, on that occasion, the Conference Committee welcomed the steps taken by the Government to institutionalize social dialogue in the country through the establishment of the Tripartite Social Partnership Commission (TSPC), whose statutes were adopted and secretariat established in March and May 2010, respectively.

The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that in the period from January 2010 to July 2011, the TSPC has met approximately ten times and its tripartite Working Group has held 24 meetings. The Government explains that before each meeting the secretariat of the TSPC elaborates the agenda and transmits it to the social partners for comments. It points out that the main issues discussed by the TSPC are related to the allegations provided by the GTUC regarding cases of violation of trade union rights. The Government further indicates that, in line with the ILO supervisory bodies' recommendations that violations of trade union rights should be investigated by the Government, it had made a decision that such cases should be reviewed in the framework of the TSPC to ensure involvement of all interested parties. For this purpose, the TSPC was empowered to conciliate and mediate labour disputes. The Government informs that the following allegations by the GTUC, ITUC and EI on cases of anti-union discrimination have been discussed by the TSPC: LTD Poti Sea Port case; LTD BTM Textile case; LTD Georgian Railway case; and the ESFTUG case. The Committee welcomes this information. It recalls, however, that in addition to noting the alleged cases of violation of the Convention in practice, it had also raised issues relating to an insufficiency in the legislative framework of an effective and adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and meaningful promotion of collective bargaining. In this respect, it had noted that the abovementioned TSPC tripartite Working Group had been charged with reviewing and analysing the conformity of the national legislation with the findings and recommendations of the Committee of Experts and to propose the necessary amendments. The Committee expressed the hope that any proposed amendments would take into account its comments, which concerned the following issues.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously noted that section 11(6) of the Law on Trade Unions and section 2(3) of the Labour Code which prohibited, in very general terms, anti-union discrimination, did not appear to constitute sufficient protection against anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment of workers and at the time of termination of their employment. In particular, the Committee had noted that, pursuant to section 5(8) of the Labour Code, an employer was not required to substantiate his/her decision for not recruiting an applicant and considered that the application of this section in practice might result in placing on a worker an insurmountable obstacle when proving that he/she was not recruited because of his/her trade union activities. The Committee had also noted that, according to sections 37(d) and 38(3) of the Labour Code, the employer has a right to terminate a contract at his/her initiative with an employee, provided that the employee is given one month's pay, unless otherwise is envisaged by the contract. The Committee considered that, in light of the absence of explicit provisions banning dismissals by reason of union membership or participating in union activities, the Labour Code did not offer sufficient protection against anti-union dismissals. The Committee therefore trusted that the necessary measures would be taken to amend the abovementioned provisions of the Labour Code so as to ensure an adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. It further requested the Government to indicate the form of compensation available to workers, victims of acts of anti-union discrimination, including dismissals, transfers, downgrading, etc.

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates the information it had previously provided by referring to the general prohibition of anti-union discrimination enshrined in the Constitution (articles 14 and 26), the Law on Trade Unions (section 11(6)), the Labour Code (section 2(3)) and the Criminal Code (section 142). The Government considers that the legislation clearly prohibits any type of discrimination, including anti-union dismissals, and sufficiently protects against violations of these rights and is therefore in compliance with the Convention. The Government adds that no application has been submitted to the relevant governmental agencies for the past several years regarding restrictions of trade union rights. With regard to section 5(8) of the Labour Code, the Government indicates that, in practice, an employee becomes a trade union member after recruitment and that there have been no cases of a person not being recruited because of his/her trade union membership; it therefore considers that this provision is in conformity with the Convention. With regard to section 37(9) of the Labour Code, the Government indicates that this provision does not stipulate that an employer can dismiss a worker without any reason; but rather that one of the grounds for suspending labour relations is the termination of a labour contract, which is possible upon the initiative of one of the parties or on the grounds stipulated by the contract. If a dismissed worker appeals to the court, the employer is obliged to provide arguments and reasons for the dismissal to the court. Furthermore, the Government points out that, according to the Code, in case of termination of employment, an employer is obliged to give at least one-month's pay if higher payment is not envisaged by the agreement between the parties. As to the compensation available to workers, victims of acts of anti-union discrimination, including dismissals, transfers and downgrading, the Government indicates that such workers have the right to request compensation by appealing to the court and indicating the amount of compensation desired; the court makes a final decision regarding compensation and its amount. The Government concludes by indicating that it does not see the need for initiating amendments to the Labour Code.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government. It notes, in particular, that on the one hand, the Government indicates that there have been no complaints of restrictions of trade union rights, and on the other, that the allegations of violations of trade union rights pending before the ILO supervisory bodies are being examined by the TSPC. It further notes new allegations of dismissals of trade union officers and founding members submitted by the ITUC in its communication dated 10 October 2011. The Committee recalls that, in terms of Article 1 of the Convention, workers shall enjoy adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in respect of their employment. The Committee recalls that such protection should cover hiring, dismissals and discriminatory measures during employment. With regard to the protection at the time of recruitment, the Committee recalls that workers may face many practical difficulties in proving the real nature of denial of employment, especially when seen in the context of blacklisting of trade union members, which is a practice whose very strength lies in its secrecy. Since it may often be difficult, if not impossible, for a worker to prove that he/she has been the victim of an act of anti-union discrimination, legislation could provide ways to remedy these difficulties, for instance by stipulating that grounds for the decision of non-recruitment should be made available upon request. With regard to the termination of employment, the Committee considers that legislation which allows the employer in practice to terminate the employment of a worker on condition that he/she pays the compensation provided for by law in all cases of unjustified dismissal, without any specific protection aimed at preventing anti-union discrimination, is insufficient under the terms of Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee underlines that while there exists a variety of systems affording an "adequate" protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, it is essential that the system in place is an efficient one. Thus, would be compatible with the Convention a system establishing preventive machinery by requiring that a dismissal is authorized by an independent body or public authority (labour inspectorate or courts); a system which provides for the reinstatement of an unfairly dismissed worker; or a system providing for compensation for the prejudice suffered as a result of an act of anti-union discrimination and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions imposed on employers found guilty of anti-union discrimination, which also act as an effective deterrent to prevent in practice anti-union dismissals. While noting that general provisions prohibiting discrimination exist in the legislation, in the light of the numerous alleged cases of anti-union discrimination, the Committee considers that the system currently in place in Georgia does not afford an adequate protection. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to revise sections 5(8), 37(d) and 38(3) of the Labour Code in consultation with the social partners, so as to ensure that the Labour Code provides for an adequate protection against anti-union discrimination taking into account the principles above. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect. The Committee further asks the Government to provide detailed information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistics on the number of confirmed cases of anti-union discrimination, the remedies provided and sanctions imposed, as requested by the June 2010 Conference Committee.

Article 4. Collective bargaining. The Committee had previously noted that sections 41–43 of the Labour Code seem to put in the same position collective agreements concluded with trade union organizations and agreements between an employer and non-unionized workers, including as few as two workers. Considering that direct negotiations between an undertaking and its employees, bypassing representative organizations where these exist, run counter to the principle that negotiations between employers and organizations of workers should be encouraged and promoted, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend its legislation so as to ensure that the position of trade unions is not undermined by the existence of other employees' representatives or discriminatory situations in favour of the non-unionized staff.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that labour legislation aims at empowering workers to conclude labour agreements to provide for better working conditions and that this Convention has the same objective; accordingly, legislation is in compliance with the Convention. The Government considers that, while the Convention provides for the possibility to carry out collective bargaining between an employer and a trade union, it does not prohibit collective bargaining between an employer and non-unionized workers, even when a trade union exists at the particular undertaking. Consequently, adds the Government, collective agreements concluded with trade unions and agreements between an employer and non-unionized workers enjoy, under the national legislation in force, an equal standing. The Government points out, however, that unionized workers have several privileges over non-unionized workers. For example, an employer is obliged to bargain collectively with a trade union upon the initiative of the latter, but is not obliged to do so with non-unionized workers; trade unions enjoy certain facilities (premises, check-off facilities, etc), which non-unionized workers do not have. The Government further indicates that it promotes collective bargaining in practice and that the biggest companies in Georgia have collective agreements with the respective trade unions. As for the promotion of collective bargaining under Article 4 of the Convention, the Government considers that such “promotion” does not necessarily imply legislative measures. The Government further indicates that the Labour Code and the Law on Trade Unions in no way restrict promotion of collective bargaining, but to the contrary, contain the relevant rules, conditions and procedures. The Government concludes by emphasizing that, according to the Labour Code, the right to collectively bargain belongs not only to trade unions, which organize only about 12 per cent of the labour force (2008), but also to other unions or groups of employees. This regulation puts non-unionized workers and those organized in trade unions under equal conditions and thus excludes the discrimination based on trade union membership.

The Committee notes the arguments put forward by the Government, but finds it difficult to reconcile the equal status given in law to collective labour agreements concluded with trade union organizations and agreements concluded with a group of non-unionized workers with the ILO principles on collective bargaining, according to which the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiation between employers or employers’ organizations and workers’ organizations should be encouraged and promoted with a view to the regulation of terms and conditions of employment by means of collective agreements. If, in the course of collective bargaining with the trade union, the enterprise offers better working conditions to non-unionized workers under individual agreements, there is a serious risk that this might undermine the negotiating capacity of the trade union and give rise to discriminatory situations in favour of the non-unionized staff; furthermore, it might encourage unionized workers to withdraw from the union. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend its legislation so as to ensure that the position of trade unions is not undermined by the existence of other employees’ representatives or discriminatory situations in favour of the non-unionized staff and to promote collective bargaining with trade union organizations. It requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate the number of collective agreements concluded in the country and to provide relevant statistics in relation to the private sector. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, while it does not have official statistics regarding collective agreements, the top 20 companies in the country have collective agreements with trade unions and provides, in this respect, examples of five companies. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide all relevant information in this respect.

Germany

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 on the application of the Convention as well as the Government’s observations thereon.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their administration and activities. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting for a number of years the adoption of measures so as to recognize the right of public servants (Beamte including postal workers, railway employees and teachers among others) who are not exercising authority in the name of the State, to have recourse to strike action.

The Committee notes from the ITUC observations that the Düsseldorf Administrative Court handed down a ruling dated 15 December 2010 setting aside the disciplinary punishment of a teacher with civil servant status (Beamte) who had participated in a strike. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest that, in its ruling, the Düsseldorf Administration Court held that, since the general strike prohibition for civil servants in Germany is probably contrary to international law (in particular to the European Convention on Human Rights), the imposition of disciplinary measures for participation in a strike is unacceptable when the relevant civil servant – such as, in the present case, the teacher – does not pertain to the administration of the State (“principle of friendly interpretation towards international law”). The Committee also notes that the Government states in its report that this decision only relates to an individual case and does not advocate a right to strike for civil servants in general. The Government also stresses that it stands by the strike ban for all civil servants (Beamte), which constitutes a traditional principle of the civil servants under article 33(5) of the Basic Law and derives from the civil servants’ duty of allegiance and obligation to fulfil their duties as a permanent function (i.e. without interruption) enshrined in article 33(4). According to the Government’s report, the right to strike in the public service depends on the status group – employees in the public service (Arbeitnehmer des öffentlichen Dienstes) do enjoy the full right to strike whereas civil servants do not have the right to strike on constitutional grounds. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that, since the Basic Law does not specify which tasks are to be entrusted to civil servants (Beamte), the Government has a certain constitutional leeway in the delegation of the tasks and prefers to use civil servants where the State interferes in the rights of individuals for the public good.

The Committee once again recalls that it has always considered that the right to strike is one of the essential means available to workers and their organizations for the promotion and protection of their economic and social interests. While accepting that the right to strike may be restricted or even prohibited in the public service, the Committee has clearly established that such a limitation may be applied only in the case of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Committee is of the view that teachers, postal workers and railway employees with the status of civil servant (Beamte) do not exercise authority in the name of the State and should therefore be allowed, without prejudice to the possibility of establishing a minimum service, to exercise the right to strike, which the Committee understands is available to private sector teachers, postal workers and railway employees as well as to teachers with the status of employee in the public sector (Arbeitnehmer des öffentlichen Dienstes). The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report any concrete measures taken or envisaged, in the light of the abovementioned ruling of the Düsseldorf Administrative Court, to ensure that all public servants who do not exercise authority in the name of the State can have recourse to strike action in defence of their economic, social and occupational interests.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1956)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 on the application of the Convention as well as the Government's observations thereon.

Article 4 of the Convention. Right to collective bargaining with respect to conditions of employment of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers. The Committee notes that, in response to its previous comments, the Government states that excluding civil servants (Beamte) from collective bargaining is in accordance with the Convention, since the position of public servants is explicitly excluded under Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee further notes that, according to the Government's report, employees in the public service (Arbeitnehmer des öffentlichen Dienstes), e.g. teachers employed under collective agreements in the education services of the Länder, do enjoy the right to bargain collectively, whereas civil servants (Beamte) do not have the right to bargain collectively because the legislative regulation of the civil service is a constitutionally endowed traditional principle of the civil service under article 33(5) of the Basic Law and because civil servants (Beamte) have the duty to exercise their functions lawfully, impartially and altruistically. The Government stresses that, even for particular groups of civil servants (Beamte), collective bargaining which is aimed at concluding collective agreements is incompatible with the principle of the legislative regulation of the civil service, and that this remains valid regardless of the outcome of wage negotiations by employees in the public service (Arbeitnehmer des öffentlichen Dienstes). The Committee also notes the Government's indication that to compensate for the inability to enter into collective negotiations, the umbrella organizations of the civil servants' unions take part in the initial preparation of the general regulations pertaining to civil servant law, pursuant to section 118 of the Federal Law on Civil Servants (Bundesbeamtengesetz (BBG)) and section 53 of the Law on the Status of Civil Servants (Beamtenstatusgesetz). The Government considers that the current system of trade union involvement sufficiently protects the interests of civil servants (Beamte) so that no changes in this respect are necessary.

The Committee understands that the position of the Government concerning the right to collective bargaining of civil servants (Beamte) is conditioned by the wording of the constitutional provisions. The Committee reiterates that negotiations need not necessarily lead to legally binding instruments so long as account is taken in good faith of the results of the negotiations in question. The Committee also observes that the Government indicates that, contrary to teachers with the status of civil servant (Beamte), teachers with the status of employee in the public sector (Arbeitnehmer des öffentlichen Dienstes) enjoy the right to collective bargaining (which the Committee understands is also available to private sector teachers). In this regard, the Committee wishes to underline that, pursuant to Article 6, the Convention "does not deal with the position of public servants engaged in the administration of the State", and therefore covers all public service workers other than those engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee thus considers that a distinction must be drawn between, on the one hand, public servants who by their functions are directly engaged in the administration of the State (that is, civil servants employed in government ministries and other comparable bodies) as well as officials acting as supporting elements in these activities and, on the other hand, persons employed by the government, by public undertakings or by autonomous public institutions; only the former category can be excluded from the scope of the Convention.

Recalling that, according to Article 6 of the Convention, public service workers who are not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers, should enjoy the right to collective bargaining, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken or envisaged to explore, together with the trade union organizations concerned, ways in which the current system could be developed so as to give full effect to the principles enounced above.

Ghana

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011, particularly concerning a 2008 decision of the Accra High Court to the effect that employers could hire and fire without giving any reasons for the termination of employment and that some employers are using this ruling to get rid of unionists. The Committee had also previously noted the comments made by the ITUC in 2009 concerning the persistent refusal of some employers to the unionization of their employees in export processing zones, a current dispute concerning unionization in the export processing zones pending before the National Labour Commission and instances of anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to respond to all these comments of the ITUC.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which reads as follows:

Prison staff. In several of its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that prison service staff enjoys the right to organize and bargain collectively. The Committee noted that the Government indicated that the Ghana Prison Service is a state agency classified under the security and intelligence agencies which derived its mandate from the Security and Intelligence Agencies Act, 1996 (Act 526). The Committee further noted that the Government indicated that the concerns raised by the Committee had been communicated to the competent authorities. Recalling once again that the Convention's guarantees apply to prison service staff, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Labour Act, so as to ensure that prison service staff expressly enjoy the right to organize and to collective bargaining, and to provide information on any measures taken or contemplated in this regard.

Collective bargaining certification. The Committee had previously noted that sections 99–100 of the Labour Act, 2003, regulate the issue of trade union recognition for collective bargaining purposes by providing that the Chief Labour Officer shall issue, upon request by a trade union, a certificate appointing that trade union as the appropriate representative to conduct negotiations on behalf of the class of workers specified in the collective bargaining certificate. The Committee further noted that under section 99(4), the Chief Labour Officer appeared to have full discretion to decide which trade union to grant recognition to, in situations where more than one trade union existed at the workplace, and that the criteria upon which this decision should be based were not specified. The Committee also noted that the Government indicated that in this situation, the Chief Labour Officer would consult with both trade unions to undertake verification to determine which union is to be issued a bargaining certificate. In these circumstances, the Committee once again recalled that when national legislation provides for a compulsory procedure for recognizing unions as exclusive bargaining agents, certain safeguards should be attached, such as: (a) the certification to be made by an independent body; (b) the representative organization to be chosen by a majority vote of the employees in the unit concerned; (c) the right of an organization, which in a previous trade union election failed to secure a sufficiently large number of votes, to request a new election after a stipulated period; and (d) the right of any new organization other than the certified organization to demand a new election after a reasonable period has elapsed (see the General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraph 240). The Committee once again requests the Government to take measures to adopt the appropriate regulations establishing procedures and objective criteria concerning the Chief Labour Officer's competence to determine which union shall hold a collective bargaining certificate, in keeping with the abovementioned principle, and to provide information on developments in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Greece

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee takes note of the comments made under article 23 of the ILO Constitution by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in communications dated 29 July 2010 and 28 July 2011, as well as the Government's reply to GSEE's first communication dated 16 May 2011.

The Committee also takes note of the discussion that took place at the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) with regard to the application of Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). It notes that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it was working on arrangements with the ILO for the visit of a high-level mission (HLM) proposed by the Committee of Experts to facilitate a comprehensive understanding of the issues raised by the GSEE in its comments concerning the application of 12 Conventions ratified by Greece. The Conference Committee also considered that contact with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union would assist the mission in its understanding of the situation [Provisional Record No. 18, Part II, pages 68–72]. The Committee takes note of the report of the HLM which visited the country from 19 to 23 September 2011 and held further meetings with the European Commission (EC) and the IMF in Brussels and Washington, DC, in October 2011.

The Committee observes that the majority of the issues raised in the HLM report concern Convention No. 98 and would refer to its comments under that Convention for its general consideration and a more detailed analysis of the situation.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programme. The Committee observes the concerns raised by the GSEE in its comments in relation to certain legislative changes or legislative intervention which has effectively restricted the right to strike in the country. The GSEE refers in particular to: (1) the uncertainty of the legality of strike action related to non-wage matters when an arbitral award has been issued on the basic wage; and (2) the renewed use by the Government of civil mobilisation orders to bring an end to legitimate strike action in the maritime sector.

As regards the first point, the Committee observes the following information provided by the Organization for Mediation and Arbitration (OMED) to the HLM:

In case of arbitration, the right to strike was suspended for 10 days. ... In reply to questions raised by the HLM, the OMED indicated that certain questions of interpretation had been left open in the text of the law. For instance, it was not clear whether arbitrators could issue awards on wages as well as allowances. It was also not clear whether in case an employer had recourse to arbitration on the issue of wages, a strike could nevertheless be staged on non-wage matters which were previously part of the collective agreement and over which negotiations had reached a standstill.

While fully recognizing that the right to strike may be suspended for a restricted period of time during which mediation, conciliation or voluntary arbitration procedures are engaged in, the Committee requests the Government to provide clarification as to whether workers may engage in industrial action despite an arbitral award on wages where the parties are at a deadlock in respect of negotiations on non-wage matters.

As regards the use of civil mobilization orders to curtail industrial action in the maritime sector, the Committee observes that this matter was recently dealt with by the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2838). The Committee, like the Committee on Freedom of Association, requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the civil mobilization order is no longer in force so that seafarers may have recourse to industrial action when they arrive at an impasse in negotiations and to ensure that, in the future, the decision to suspend a strike on the grounds of national security or public health is made by an independent body.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee takes note of the comments made under article 23 of the ILO Constitution by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in communications dated 29 July 2010, and 28 July and 18 November 2011, as well as the Government's reply to GSEE's first communication, dated 16 May 2011. The Committee further notes the comments made by the Greek Federation of Bank Employee Unions (OTOE), dated 28 September 2011 and the Hellenic Federation of Enterprises (SEV) dated 23 September 2011.

The Committee takes note of the discussion that took place at the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) with regard to the application of this Convention. It notes that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it was working on arrangements with the ILO for the visit of a high-level mission (HLM) proposed by the Committee of Experts to facilitate a comprehensive understanding of the issues raised by the GSEE in its comments concerning the application of 12 Conventions ratified by Greece. The Conference Committee also considered that contact with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union would assist the mission in its understanding of the situation (Provisional Record No. 18, Part II, pages 68–72). The Committee takes note of the report of the HLM which visited the country from 19 to 23 September 2011 and held further meetings with the European Commission (EC) and the IMF in Brussels and Washington, DC, in October 2011.

The Committee wishes first to emphasize that the concerns expressed below have been made with a full understanding of the very difficult, challenging and exceptional circumstances which the country has had to face over the last few years. Having reviewed the HLM report, the Committee observes that all parties have made extraordinary efforts to address these difficulties with the highest consideration for ratified international labour Conventions and most especially for those concerning freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee deeply appreciates these efforts and expresses the firm hope that the Government and the social partners will be able to review all of its comments below in the constructive vein in which they are intended, with the aim of jointly developing a common platform to advance the country in a manner which fully respects organizational rights and the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining that can be responsive to the current urgencies.

Similarly, the Committee welcomes the opportunity that the HLM was given to discuss with the EC and the IMF, as well as the reported openness of these institutions to ILO assistance, in the areas of its mandate, in finding avenues for the advancement of the country that would be in conformity with relevant ratified Conventions. The Committee trusts that the Government will be in a position to request relevant assistance from the ILO in the very near future.

Article 4 of the Convention. Binding nature of collective agreements and their extension. The Committee recalls that the 2010 comments of the GSEE criticized, in particular, section 2(7) of Act No. 3845/2010 (Measures for the application of the support mechanism for the Greek economy by euro area Member States and the IMF) which provided that: "Professional and enterprise collective agreements' clauses can (from now on) deviate from the relevant clauses of sectoral and general national agreements, as well as sectoral collective agreements' clauses can deviate from the relevant clauses of national general collective agreements. All relevant details for the application of this provision can be defined by Ministerial Decision." The GSEE states that this provision paves the way for the dismantling of a solid machinery of collective bargaining which had been functioning smoothly and effectively in the country for 20 years as a result of a "Social Pact" endorsed in 1990.

The Committee observes that the Government refers to the financial crisis and the measures found necessary to tackle it based on certain conditionalities set out in the Memoranda of Economic and Financial Policies and of Understanding on Specific Economic Policy Conditionality. The Government underlines that, for reasons of general public interest, it was necessary to undertake a partial restructuring of the free collective bargaining system, focusing mainly on the expansion of the levels of collective bargaining and the thorough consideration of its issues, so that the core of the trade union freedom and of collective bargaining might not be affected, but rather safeguarded and indeed extended to cases where it was not applicable until now. In this regard, the Government referred to Act No. 3899/2010 enabling "special enterprise-level collective agreements".

The Committee will not develop an analysis of the "special enterprise-level collective agreements" as it understands from the HLM report and the latest communication of the GSEE that these agreements have now been superseded by Act No. 4024 /2011 which, according to the GSEE, has consolidated further the deconstruction of an industrial relations' system that was working effectively to set minimum standards of work for all workers through collective agreements concluded after free negotiations in the private and the wider public sector. In particular, the GSEE contests the abolition of the fundamental protective principle of favourability and the new legislative framework which, it claims, will give rise to the prevalence of firm-level agreements less favourable than the uniform standard of pay and working conditions provided in binding sectoral agreements. In addition, the new legislation eliminates the extension of the scope of sectoral collective agreements and introduces legislative intervention to fully abolish binding collective labour agreements in force in public utility enterprises. Moreover, the GSEE condemns the extension of bargaining rights in this legislation to non-elected "associations of persons" which have no permanent mandate nor the protections afforded to trade unions or even to lawfully elected representatives of workers. The GSEE adds that such associations are not restricted to small enterprises but may also be formed in enterprises with more than 20 workers provided there is no union. The GSEE contends that this new legislation further disempowers the institutional role of the trade union movement and its sectoral federations and weakens their bargaining power in setting minimum protective standards of work uniform to all workers. The GSEE asserts that this framework concedes the dominating role of the employers' managerial prerogative in a labour market that, while greatly flexible, is unprotected and increasingly deprived of binding principles and rules that hitherto ensured the right to decent work. Under the new paradigm, sectoral and occupational collective agreements are binding only on the signatory employer who may, at his or her discretion, leave their sectoral organizations and opt out from the binding effect of the agreement giving rise to unfair competition and the discouragement of workers in exercising their organizational rights. Finally, the GSEE asserts that it is entirely untrue that it and the other social partners were invited to participate in social dialogue related to these measures.

While having not yet received the Government's observations with respect to these latest measures, the Committee observes the serious concern raised on this matter in the conclusions of the HLM report:

While the Government had clearly made great efforts over the last year to ensure that alterations to the industrial relations framework would respect the practices and traditions of the relations between the social partners, the HLM must express its deep concern at the further developments in this area which took place after its visit, and in particular the provisions of Act No. 4024 of 27 October 2011, empowering associations of persons to conclude collective agreements at enterprise level. The HLM understands that association of persons are not trade unions, nor are they regulated by any of the guarantees necessary for their independence. The HLM is deeply concerned that the conclusion of 'collective agreements' in such conditions would have a detrimental impact on collective bargaining and the capacity of the trade union movement to respond to the concerns of its members at all levels, on existing employers' organizations, and for that matter on any firm basis on which social dialogue may take place in the country in the future.

At the outset, the Committee observes with deep concern that these changes, aimed at permitting deviations from higher level agreements through "negotiations" with non-unionized structures, are likely to have a significant – and potentially devastating – impact on the industrial relations system in the country. The Committee understands that the Government was given little choice in the current discussions with the lending institutions but to adopt these changes in response to calls for greater flexibility and improved competitiveness of the labour market. The Committee deeply regrets however that such far-reaching changes were made without full and thorough discussions with all the social partners concerned with a view to determining the appropriate flexibility to be afforded without wholly risking to undermining the long-established industrial relations in the country. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government and the social partners will be in a position to come together in the very near future to review these measures and elaborate a system that will be relevant to Greece and its traditions. In this regard, the Committee also trusts that the social partners will be fully involved in the determination of any further alterations within the framework of the agreements with the EC, the IMF and the European Central Bank (ECB) that touch upon such aspects which go to the heart of labour relations, social dialogue and social peace, and that their views will be taken fully into account.

The Committee emphasizes that Article 4 of the Convention refers to the encouragement and promotion of the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiation between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations, with a view to the regulation of terms and conditions of employment by means of collective agreements. The Committee considers that collective bargaining with representatives of non-unionized workers should only be possible where there are no trade unions at the respective level. The Committee understands from the HLM report that the provision of collective bargaining rights for associations of persons was aimed at filling a void in small enterprises of fewer than 20 workers where enterprise-level unions could not legally be formed given the minimum membership requirement to form a union (20). It nevertheless considers that granting collective bargaining rights to other types of workers' representation which are not afforded the guarantees of independence that apply to the structure and formation of trade unions and the protection of its officers and members is likely to seriously undermine the position of trade unions as the representative voice of the workers in the collective bargaining process. In the current framework, the fact that associations of persons can only be constituted in enterprises where there are no unions provides no guarantees for workers' choice of representation given that unions cannot legally be formed in enterprises of fewer than 20 workers. Given the prevalence of small enterprises in the Greek labour market (approximately 90 per cent of the workforce), as noted by the HLM report, the Committee fears that the entire foundation of collective bargaining in the country may be vulnerable to collapse under this new framework. This is a particular risk given that the abolition of the favourability principle set out first in Act No. 3845/2010 and given concrete application in Act No. 4024 /2011 has the effect of nullifying the binding nature of collective agreements. The Committee recalls in this regard the general principle enunciated in Paragraph 3(1) of the Collective Agreements Recommendation, 1951 (No. 91), that collective agreements should bind the signatories thereto and those on whose behalf the agreement is concluded. Employers and workers bound by a collective agreement should not be able to include in contracts of employment stipulations contrary to those contained in the collective agreement. The Committee considers that this recognition of the principle of favourability should apply, according to the circumstances, to lower level collective agreements, unless the same parties are involved in the negotiations.

As regards the elimination of the extension of sectoral or occupational collective agreements however, the Committee, while observing that Paragraph 5 of Recommendation No. 91 further refers to the utility of extending of collective agreements, such determinations are clearly a matter for public policy determination, where appropriate and suited to the conditions of each country. The temporary abolition of extension provisions cannot therefore be considered to be in contravention of the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee requests the Government to review Act No. 4024 /2011 and article 2(7) of Act No. 3845 /2010 with the social partners concerned so as to bring the collective bargaining framework into line with its comments above both as regards the question of associations of persons and as regards the binding nature of freely concluded collective agreements and to provide detailed information on the steps taken in this regard in its next report.

The Committee further requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of associations of persons constituted in the country, the number of agreements concluded by them and their coverage, as well as the number of first-level agreements in contravention with the abovementioned favourability principle.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee notes the comments provided by the SEV in relation to the mechanism for compulsory arbitration in the country. The SEV refers in particular to Act No. 3899/2010 which maintains the possibility of unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration. While the legislation now enables the employer to also have recourse to compulsory arbitration which previously was only permissible for workers' organizations, the SEV contends that the possibility of unilateral recourse remains contrary to the Convention even though either party may now invoke it. According to the SEV, the arbitrator may determine the basic wage in the domain concerned (enterprise, branch, sector, inter-professional or even national). The SEV adds that this has a considerable impact on other benefits, many of which are calculated on the basic wage. Finally, while the text of the law states that all other matters may continue to be the subject of negotiations for the parties, the SEV claims that a tendency to breach this rule has already been demonstrated by the inclusion in arbitral awards of a clause maintaining the previous provisions of the agreement even though these are beyond the competence of the arbitrator. An evaluation of the system with the social partners after three years is envisaged by section 15 of the Act.

For its part, the GSEE also raises issues concerning Act No. 3899 and the changes to the Organization for Mediation and Arbitration (OMED). The GSEE particularly contests the suppression of the previous obligation to accept the mediation proposal before having the right to have recourse to arbitration. In the new system, a party can therefore request arbitration without any proof that they had undertaken the mediation process in good faith; they simply need to participate. The GSEE further contests the restricted competence of the arbitrator to deal only with the basic salary and daily wage determinations and the universal prohibition for trade unions to undertake strike action during the arbitration process. As regards the "retainability clause" – which provides that all the terms included in previous collective agreements and/or arbitration awards of the same legal value in so far as they have not been abolished or amended, shall remain in force and effect and constitute an entirety – the GSEE contends that this is simply aimed at ensuring stability in conditions of work related to crucial issues such as health and safety, working time, elimination of gender discrimination at work, educational leave, trade union contributions, as well as matters relating to the procedure and the terms of collective bargaining, mediation and arbitration. Finally, the GSEE contests the legislative restrictions on the arbitrator which limits any increase that may be made to the basic wage to no more than the base annual rate of European inflation.

The Committee observes from the HLM report that:

The OMED informed the HLM that its basic purpose was to promote and safeguard free and voluntary collective bargaining ... The mediators and arbitrators were independent. In rendering decisions, arbitrators had to take into account among other things, economic conditions and the competitiveness of the sector concerned. Training would be provided to enable them to take into account economic developments ... Recourse to mediation and arbitration was left to the discretion of employers' and workers' organizations. There was no obligation to bring a dispute to the OMED. The prerequisite was to have commenced direct negotiations and to have reached an impasse. Recourse to arbitration could take place either through agreement of the parties or unilaterally, under the following conditions, established in Act No. 3899/2010: (i) any party could resort to arbitration if the other party had refused mediation; (ii) any party could resort to arbitration immediately after the decision of the mediator was issued. The latter provision extended to both parties a facility which had been available only to workers under the previous law. Arbitration could only take place on wages and until 2012, the awards could not exceed the limits set by article 51 of Act No. 3871/2010, i.e. the average EU inflation rate. In case non-wage issues had been regulated by an older collective agreement, they would have to be settled through negotiations.

In the light of the information before it, the Committee understands that the unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration is limited to the determination of the basic wage at national or sectoral/occupational level following a failed negotiation and an inconclusive mediation process. The Committee further understands that this mechanism is available in a system whereby there is not at present any machinery for minimum-wage fixing, a matter which could be determined by national legislation, following full consultation of the social partners concerned. The Committee therefore considers that the possibility of recourse to compulsory arbitration in relation to the basic wage as set out in Act No. 3899 would appear not to infringe the provisions of the Convention. The Committee further considers that the restrictions placed on the arbitrators in relation to the maximum increase of the basic wage is also a matter that may be determined by the Government in the absence of a common agreement among the parties concerned, especially in the current circumstances of extreme austerity, as an exceptional measure and not exceeding a reasonable period.

As regards the use of a "retainability" clause with respect to non-wage matters, the Committee observes that this is a common principle in certain regions and practised by several countries. The Committee considers that the use of such a clause to ensure continuity with respect to the terms and conditions of employment of individual workers and to avoid a legal vacuum does not pose a problem of compatibility with the Convention. On the other hand, the Committee is of the view that the elements of the collective agreement that concern the relation between employers or their organizations and a workers' organization or workers' organizations should be subject to renegotiation so as to avoid an obligatory and automatic perpetuation of worker representation that may not reflect an evolution in the workers' free and independent choice in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the "retainability" clause is used in the case of unilateral requests for arbitration in accordance with this principle.

Intervention in freely concluded collective agreements. The Committee further notes the communication of the OTOE which follows up the recommendations made by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in Case No. 2502. In its last examination of this case, the CFA, having referred the legislative aspects of the case to this Committee, had urged the Government to hold further full and frank consultations on the future of the supplementary pension funds of bank employees and of their assets so that these matters would be determined by mutual agreement of the parties to the collective agreements by which these funds were set up, and to which only they contributed, and to amend Act No. 3371/2005 to reflect the agreement of the parties. The OTOE also transmits a copy of a letter from UNI Europa to the EC, the ECB and the IMF in which UNI Europa strongly opposes the condition set out in the Memoranda of government intervention to eliminate bank employees' premiums which had been the subject of sectoral collective agreements since 1984 and represent part of the fixed salary of ordinary workers in the banking sector. According to UNI Europa, this would translate into a unilateral reduction of bank employees' salaries by 3.4 per cent while increasing bank profits approximately €80 million.

The Committee recalls that the first issue raised by the OTOE – which occurred well before the financial crisis in the country – has already been fully examined by the CFA which, recalling the voluntary nature of collective bargaining, strongly urged the Government to amend Act No. 3371 which enabled unilateral denunciation of the collective agreements in the banking sector on supplementary pension funds and to provide the space for renewed negotiations between the social partners concerned so as to determine the future of these funds. The Committee similarly requests the Government to bring the parties together with a view to achieving a mutually acceptable agreement.

The Committee notes that the Memorandum of Understanding on Specific Economic Policy Conditionality and the Memorandum of Economic and Financial Policy provide: "To support banks in their effort to restructure operations, Government takes steps to limit bonuses and eliminate the so-called 'balance-sheet' premium or other equivalent measures." The Committee recalls, as it did in its previous comment that, if, as part of its stabilization policy, a government considers that wage rates cannot be settled freely through collective bargaining, such a restriction should be imposed as an exceptional measure and only to the extent that it is necessary, without exceeding a reasonable period, and it should be accompanied by adequate safeguards to protect workers' living standards. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any steps taken to eliminate the premiums referred to, the extent to which consideration was given to the protection of workers' basic living standards and the duration of the restriction.

Similarly, the GSEE refers to unilateral interventions in freely concluded collective agreements through: the perpetuation of a general wage freeze with Public Utility Enterprises (DEKO); the general abolition of collective labour agreements setting out the terms of pay and work in all enterprises of the wider public sector to be replaced by the public sector pay regime regardless of their entirely different existing pay structures; the abolition of collective agreements in the Hellenic Railways Organization and the Athens Urban Transportations and; the reduction in wages for young workers below the applicable collective agreement. Recalling the abovementioned principles with respect to the need to take exceptional measures as part of a stabilization policy, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken to ensure that the above measures are accompanied by adequate safeguards to protect workers' living standards and to carry out a review with the social partners concerned as to their continuing necessity after a determined period of time.

Articles 1 and 3. Protection against anti-union dismissal. More generally, the GSEE refers to a series of measures introducing flexible forms of work which render workers more vulnerable to abusive practices and unfair dismissal (e.g. flexibility in the management prerogative to breach full-time work contracts and unilateral imposition of reduced-term rotation work, extended duration of permissible use of temporary agency work, increased probationary period and extension of the maximum period for fixed-term contracts, etc.). The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on the comments made by the GSEE in this regard and to provide all relevant information, including comparative statistics relating to complaints of anti-union discrimination and any remedial action taken, with its next report.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee takes note of the comments made under article 23 of the ILO Constitution by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in communications dated 29 July 2010 and 28 July 2011, as well as the Government's reply to the GSEE's first communication, dated 16 May 2011.

The Committee takes note of the discussion that took place at the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) with regard to the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). It notes that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it was working on arrangements with the ILO for the visit of a high-level mission (HLM) proposed by the Committee of Experts to facilitate a comprehensive understanding of the issues raised by the GSEE in its comments concerning the application of 12 Conventions ratified by Greece. The Conference Committee also considered that contact with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union would assist the mission in its understanding of the situation (Provisional Record No. 18, Part II, pages 68–72). The Committee takes note of the report of the HLM which visited the country from 19 to 23 September 2011 and held further meetings with the European Commission (EC) and the IMF in Brussels and Washington, DC, in October 2011.

The Committee observes that the majority of the issues raised in the HLM report concern Convention No. 98, and would refer to its comments under that Convention for its general considerations and a more detailed analysis of the situation.

Article 5 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee observes that the GSEE refers in its comments to the following steps taken in response to the call for austerity measures which it considers to violate the aim of the Convention to ensure the promotion of collective bargaining progressively extended to all workers, including those in the public service: the imposition of a temporary freeze in career advancement premiums; the imposition of a "labour reserve" concealing collective dismissals of thousands of workers in the public and broader public sector without any negotiation; the imposition of unilateral wage and salary reductions through the establishment of a special solidarity contribution of 2 per cent on regular pay to combat unemployment.

While bearing in mind the very particular circumstances of the recent interventions, the Committee recalls that the authorities should give preference as far as possible to collective bargaining in determining the conditions of employment of public servants and, where circumstances rule this out, measures of this kind should be limited in time and protect the standard of living of the workers who are the most affected (see 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 264). The Committee requests the Government to reply to the latest comments from the GSEE and to indicate the measures taken to ensure the protection of the standards of living of the workers most affected by these interventions. It further firmly hopes that the Government and the social partners concerned will be in a position in the near future to fully discuss the time limitations of the measures imposed and to consider any further measures that may need to be taken in relation to the wages of public servants or the imposition of labour reserves in a manner so as to privilege as far as possible the determination of such matters through collective bargaining.

Guatemala

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1952)

Follow-up to the Conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the Government's report, the discussion in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011 and the 13 cases before the Committee on Freedom of Association (Cases Nos 2203, 2361, 2445, 2609, 2673, 2708, 2709, 2768, 2811, 2840, 2859, 2869 and 2872). The Committee also notes the comments on the application of Convention made by the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA), the General Confederation of Workers of Guatemala (CGTG) and the Trade Union Unity of Guatemala (CUSG) (29 August 2011), and the comments of the Indigenous and Rural Workers' Trade Union Movement of Guatemala for the Defence of Workers' Rights (MSICG) (30 August 2011). The Committee also notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011. The Committee requests the Government to submit the matters raised by these organizations to the National Tripartite Commission and to the other trade union confederations and to provide information in this respect, particularly on the decisions that are taken. The Committee notes the report of the mission requested by the Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010, involving the visit of an important and internationally recognized personality with high-level ILO support to examine outstanding issues and make recommendations, which took place from 9 to 14 May 2011.

Acts of violence against trade unionists and situation of impunity

The Committee recalls that for several years it has been noting in its observations serious acts of violence against trade unionists which have gone unpunished and has requested the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

The Committee notes that in its comments the ITUC, in the same way as the national trade union confederations, continue to highlight serious acts of violence against trade union leaders and members in recent years, including in 2011, and describe a climate of fear and intimidation with a view to undermining existing trade unions and preventing the establishment of new ones. The organizations also emphasized the deficiencies in labour inspection and the crisis in the judicial system. The Committee previously expressed the hope that, in the context of the tripartite agreement concluded during the high-level mission of 2009, all the matters raised with the ILO by national and international federations would be examined and addressed in a tripartite context by the Government and the social partners within the framework of the Tripartite Commission on International Labour Affairs, as well as the Legal Reform Subcommission and the Mechanism for Rapid Intervention in Cases.

The Committee has been noting in recent years the occurrence of numerous acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, ranging from murders, death threats and acts of intimidation to abductions, torture and armed assault using firearms or knives. There have also been cases of unauthorized entry into the homes of trade unionists and trade union premises. According to the trade unions, in certain cases the State has not provided the security measures requested by those under threat and the Office of the Public Prosecutor is not investigating all of the cases indicated, as some complaints have not even been entered into its database. The issue has also been raised of cases of obstacles or administrative hurdles to the establishment or operation of trade unions, and of unions being destroyed when they are in the process of being established. Over 20,000 workers in the public sector have no employment relationship, but instead a civil contract for professional services, and therefore are without trade union rights. Furthermore, according to the trade unions, trade union activity is being criminalized, with penal action being taken against trade unionists for engaging in peaceful demonstrations, and attacks are made on trade unions in anti-union publications and through smear campaigns. They add that the authorities have promoted workers' organizations under their control in parallel to those already existing, and they provide the representatives who participate in the Tripartite Commission, even though they have little claim to being representative. With regard to legal action, they emphasize that the slowness of proceedings and the long delays continue to be a problem. Finally, they indicate that the anti-union climate is reflected in the unionization rate (2.2 per cent of the economically active population, of which the public sector accounts for 87.5 per cent).

The Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association has noted with concern that the allegations presented in the cases before it are extremely serious and include numerous murders of trade union leaders and members, one disappearance, acts of violence (sometimes also against the families of trade union members), threats, physical harassment, intimidation, the rape of a family member of a trade unionist, obstacles to granting legal personality to unions, the dissolution of a union, criminal proceedings for carrying out trade union activities, and major institutional failings with regard to labour inspection and the functioning of the judicial authorities, which have created a situation of impunity in labour matters (for example, excessive delays, lack of independence, failure to comply with reinstatement orders issued by the courts) and in criminal matters (for example, Case No. 2445 and two more recent Cases Nos 2609 and 2859) relating to numerous acts of anti-union violence presented to the Committee on Freedom of Association.

The Committee wishes to refer to the conclusions of the high-level mission which visited Guatemala from 9 to 14 May 2011, which read as follows:

- The mission wishes to recall that the problems of violence referred to by the CEACR are the following:
- Alleged murders of trade union leaders and members over the past five years:
2007: 12;
2008: 12;
2009: 16;
2010: 10; and
2011: two up to the month of May (a few days after the mission, a trade union leader of the SITRABI was murdered).
 - Death threats, abductions, raids, etc., alleged over the past four years:
2008: eight death threats, two attacks against the homes of trade union leaders, a raid against trade union premises and a raid against the home of a trade union leader, and two attempted murders of trade union leaders;
2009: 17 death threats against trade union leaders and executive committees, eight cases of physical assault against trade union leaders and members; an attack against trade union premises and an attack against the home of a trade union leader; and a temporary abduction of a trade union leader; and 2010: four death threats, an attempted murder of a trade union leader, an abduction, involving torture and the rape of a trade union leader, an attack against trade union premises, an attack against the home of a trade union leader, and physical assault against a trade union leader.

The mission emphasized to all those with whom it spoke the gravity of the allegations and the figures referred to above, and recalled during its meetings the relevant principles of the supervisory bodies, and particularly that trade union rights can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, and it sought solutions to the matters raised by the Committee. The mission also emphasized that the killing or serious injury of trade union leaders and trade unionists requires the institution of independent and expeditious judicial inquiries in order to shed full light, at the earliest date, on the facts and circumstances in which such actions occurred and in this way, to the extent possible, to determine where responsibilities lie, punish the guilty parties and prevent the repetition of similar events.

The mission observed that the situation of violence is generalized, affects trade unionists, employers and other categories and results in around 10,000 violent murders a year (according to data provided by the Presidential Coordinating Commission for Executive Policy in the Field of Human Rights (COPREDEH)) in a country of 11,237,196 inhabitants (according to data provided by the Ministry of Labour). The murder figures for trade union leaders over the past five years show that they are a particularly vulnerable category, although at the present time the most affected sector is that of bus drivers and passengers (on the last day of its work, the mission was able to observe this directly by witnessing an attack with firearms on a bus in which five persons died). The mission was informed by various sources that the main perpetrators of acts of violence are related to common crime, organized crime and, recently, drug trafficking, a crime that has been spreading particularly rapidly in recent years in Guatemala and other Central American countries. The mission was able to observe that a large number of people in the country carry weapons.

The trade union confederations and the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF) emphasized the weakness of the security services and the judicial system, their concern at the level of violence and their desire to contribute to the eradication of violence and the restoration of the rule of law.

In this context, at the beginning of its work, the mission found that the authorities were only in a position to provide information on investigations concerning a small number of the trade union leaders and members who had been murdered. In various meetings, including those held with certain magistrates and other authorities, the mission was informed that certain murders might be of an anti-union nature. The mission observed that only once investigations have been conducted and those responsible for carrying out, planning and instigating the acts of violence against trade union leaders and members could their anti-union nature be ascertained, and that for that reason it is urgent to conduct expeditious and exhaustive investigations in all cases. The lack of full and up-to-date information on developments in the investigations concerning trade unionists was a matter of concern for the mission, as was the lack of coordination between State services following up these crimes.

For this purpose, the Tripartite Commission on Labour Affairs called for the restoration of the specialized prosecution service for crimes against trade unionists and asked the mission to express its concern to the Office of the Attorney-General in relation to this situation. Sharing these concerns, the mission requested the Public Prosecutor to establish a special prosecution service responsible for investigating these crimes and for an acceleration of the investigations of the 52 murders denounced. The Public Prosecutor appointed a few months ago, with a background in the field of human rights, welcomed these proposals, although the proposals for the restoration of the specialized prosecution service was subject to the outcome of the budget discussions in the Congress. The mission also called on the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) to collaborate with the Office of the Public Prosecutor to investigate and shed light on these cases. The mission is pleased to note that it received an affirmative response from both parties and the undertaking to carry out these investigations.

The mission indicated to the authorities the importance that these investigations were undertaken taking duly into account the alleged anti-union nature of the cases, as in recent years there has been a certain tendency in investigations to give priority to other motives, and particularly those based “passion”. The Public Prosecutor expressed great interest in the possibility of concluding a cooperation agreement with the ILO, which would include activities to provide training to prosecutors on typical contexts of anti-union violence and the factors which give rise to such violence (the Public Prosecutor will soon contact the ILO for this purpose). The mission also suggested that representatives of the Office of the Attorney-General should participate regularly in the meetings of the Tripartite Commission on Labour Affairs with a view to providing information on progress in the investigation of cases of murders of trade union leaders and members. The Office of the Attorney-General and the Tripartite Commission on Labour Affairs welcomed the proposal.

The mission noted the urgent call by society, including employers’ and workers’ organizations, to address more decisively the impunity and corruption existing in the country and considers that the authorities need to devote much higher levels of resources and take effective measures to eradicate the corruption that permeates the administration of justice. At present, the impunity rate is 98 per cent, according to official sources. The CACIF and the trade unions agree on the need for criminal and labour court procedures concerning anti-union practices to be expeditious and effective.

The Committee also notes with deep concern that, according to the ITUC, since the visit by the mission, four more trade union leaders were murdered between July and September 2011.

The Committee notes the conclusions of the Conference Committee in 2011, noting that this is an important case that has been under discussion for many years and that the Government has received numerous technical assistance missions on the various pending issues, and observing with deep concern the persistent climate of violence in the country and the growing degree of impunity, and that the figure for trade union leaders and members murdered in recent years shows that they are a particularly vulnerable group. The Conference Committee emphasized the need for further steps to strengthen the judicial authorities, the police and the labour inspection services, and to provide them with greater human and financial resources. The Conference Committee drew attention to the need for a reform with a view to reinforcing the rule of law and the institutions responsible for justice, as well as their independence. The Conference Committee expressed its serious concern at the situation and noted the lack of clear and effective political will of the Government. The Conference Committee considered that all measures needed to be taken on an urgent basis and in tripartite consultation to address the issues of violence and impunity in full coordination with the State authorities concerned and with ILO technical assistance.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report, with reference to the pending matters relating to the application of the Convention, that the Tripartite Commission on International Labour Affairs has held various meetings in which ideas have been exchanged and agreements made between representatives of the three sectors of which the Commission is composed. The subjects addressed include in particular the serious acts of violence, the deficiencies of the labour inspectorate and the crisis of the judicial system. The Government adds that the possibility was discussed of providing training to the staff of the Office of the Attorney-General on labour law so as to ensure a better follow-up of cases of crimes against trade unionists, but that with regard to the recruitment of 100 new labour inspectors, it is still necessary for the Ministry of Labour to meet the President of the Republic for the necessary budgetary allocations. The Government indicates that emphasis has also been placed on the reactivation of the Subcommissions on Labour, Legal Reform, Employment Generation Policies, Mechanisms for Rapid Intervention in Cases, the Tripartite Council of the General Labour Inspectorate with a view to following up the various subjects covered by each of the Subcommissions.

With regard to the protection of trade unionists who have received death threats, the Government indicates that, as observed by the high-level mission in 2011, the situation of violence is generalized and that it affects trade unionists, employers and other categories. The figures for the murders of trade union leaders over the past five years demonstrate that they are a particularly vulnerable category, even though at the current time the most affected sector is bus drivers and passengers. The mission was informed that the main sources of violence include common delinquency, organized crime and, recently, drug trafficking, a crime which has been expanding particularly rapidly in recent years, especially in Guatemala and other Central American countries. As a result, the provision of individual protection to trade union leaders is becoming a difficult task both from the viewpoint of financial and logistical resources. Nevertheless, the Government wishes to show its concern for the physical protection of trade union leaders. This is carried out through the Department for the Assessment of Assaults on Human Rights Defenders, composed of the Office of the Attorney-General, the Ministry of Government, COPREDE, the Office of the High Commissioner of the United Nations, the General Directorate of Civil Intelligence (DIGICI), the Investigation Unit for Human Rights Defenders and the Unit for the Protection of Personnel of the Ministry of Government.

With reference to the issue of the slowness and ineffectiveness of the judicial system and the need to shed light on murders and crimes committed against trade unionists, the Government indicates that the Supreme Court of Justice has reiterated the undertaking of the judicial authorities to comply with their constitutional mandate to impart justice with independence, guaranteeing the access of the population to an effective judicial system.

With regard to the Committee's request for the murders of trade unionists to be investigated, the Government indicates that, giving effect to the requests of the ILO high-level technical mission, on 23 May 2011, the Tripartite Commission on International Labour Affairs held a meeting in the Office of the Attorney-General with the Prosecutor General and the Adviser to the Attorney-General, following which, on 26 May 2011, Decision No. 49-2011 of the Office of the Public Prosecutor of the Office of the Attorney-General was issued reactivating the Special Investigation Unit into Crimes against Trade Unionists, which will be composed of an investigator responsible for the Unit, three deputy investigators and one official. The Office of the Prosecutor General referred to the conclusion of an agreement with the ILO for the training of prosecutors. The Government adds that on 27 July a hearing was requested with the Prosecutor General to finalize the agreement for ILO technical assistance, establish a mechanism for the participation of the Office of the Attorney-General in the meetings of the Tripartite Commission, seek information on the establishment of the Support and Follow-up Commission for the Investigating Unit into Crimes against Trade Unionists and request a contact point for the exchange of information on the various cases of violence against trade unionists. This hearing is still awaited.

With regard to the criminal investigations into crimes against trade unionists and the situation of impunity, the Government indicates that the Supreme Court of Justice addressed the matter of the alarming increase in murders and crimes against trade unionists and the lack of progress in the investigations of crimes committed against them, and that the Supreme Court of Justice took measures, within the field of its competence, in response to the generalized violence which not only affects trade unions, but the whole of the country. These measures are: (1) the Supreme Court of Justice, through its Penal Chamber, has taken measures relating to the access to justice of victims, implementing coordination measures between the judicial authorities and a series of support services for victims, through a training programme including municipal victim assistance centres, as well as trained judicial facilitators supported by the judicial authorities; (2) the creation of courts to try high-risk crimes, as magistrates and investigators are particularly vulnerable to threats and other forms of coercion with a view to influencing them, and the ordinary criminal courts are inadequate to confront the situation: high-impact criminal courts have therefore been established to try high-risk crimes as the best means of responding to the situation of generalized violence in the country and accordingly combating impunity; and (3) with regard to crimes against trade unionists, it is envisaged to entrust one of the existing criminal courts with the specific competence to try crimes against trade unions, with the magistrates and ancillary staff being trained and their awareness raised concerning the function of trade union activity in the country. Similarly, since November 2010, six judicial bodies have been in operation that are specialized in murders and violence against women, including violence occurring at the workplace.

The Committee notes all of the measures, initiatives and ideas of the authorities and particularly welcomes the reactivation of the former Special Investigation Unit into Crimes against Trade Unionists and its strengthening, as well as the will of the Government to develop with the Public Prosecutor a coordination mechanism between the Tripartite Commission and the Office of the Public Prosecutor and that the Supreme Court of Justice, including entrusting one court with specific competence to try crimes against trade unionists, with the provision of training on the motives for anti-union action, in accordance with ILO recommendations, so as to draw a distinction with other situations deriving from the generalized situation of violence affecting the country. The Committee notes the other measures adopted by the Government for institutional coordination to combat anti-union violence, as well as the agreement to establish a commission composed of the Office of the Attorney-General and trade unions to follow-up criminal cases relating to trade unionists.

The Committee is nevertheless bound to emphasize that in recent years the action by the Government to combat anti-union violence has not up to now resulted in decisive and effective improvements. Indeed, the Committee notes, for example, that the ITUC has reported four more murders of trade union leaders since the ILO mission in May 2011. Moreover, the action taken by the Government has not resulted in the compilation of information to be provided to the Committee concerning all of the criminal investigations into the 56 murders of trade union leaders committed since 2007 (information has only been provided on a limited number of cases), as well as the numerous cases of death threats and acts of intimidation. The Committee notes with deep concern the gravity of the situation of anti-union violence which has persisted even following successive ILO technical assistance missions and the emphasis placed by the high-level mission on the weakness of the security services and the judiciary, which moreover is permeated by corruption, and an impunity rate of 98 per cent for which there are no prosecutions or effective convictions. The Committee considers that the current penal situation once again confirms the conclusion of the Conference Committee concerning the lack of clear and effective political will of the Government.

The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the principle that a genuinely free and independent trade union movement cannot develop in a climate of violence and uncertainty; freedom of association can only be exercised in conditions in which fundamental human rights, in particular those relating to human life and personal safety, are fully respected and guaranteed; the rights of workers' and employers' organizations can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind against the leaders and members of these organizations, and it is for governments to ensure that this principle is respected. The Committee also recalls that excessively slow proceedings and the absence of judgements against the guilty parties creates, in practice, a situation of impunity, which reinforces the climate of violence and insecurity and which is extremely damaging to the exercise of trade union rights and incompatible with the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee once again deplores the murders of trade unionists and other acts of anti-union violence and once again firmly requests the Government to: (1) ensure the protection of trade unionists under threat of death; (2) convey to the Public Prosecutor and the Supreme Court of Justice its deep concern at the slowness and inefficiency of the justice system and its recommendations concerning the need to elucidate murders and crimes committed against trade unionists so as to punish the perpetrators; (3) ensure the allocation of sufficient resources to these objectives with the consequent increase in human and material resources, and ensure effective coordination between the various state bodies which may be called upon to intervene in the judicial system, and to provide training for investigators; and (4) to give absolute priority to these matters in Government policy. The Committee invites the Government to undertake a programme of technical cooperation with the ILO with a view to resolving the serious problem of anti-union violence and criminal impunity in relation to crimes against trade unionists.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take all the necessary measures to guarantee full respect for the human rights of trade unionists and that it will continue to apply the protection machinery to all trade unionists who so request. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that appropriate investigations are conducted by the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the judicial authorities to identify those responsible for acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, and to prosecute and punish them in accordance with the law. The Committee requests the Government to report on all developments in this regard and deplores the fact that up to now the Government has not indicated the stage reached by the investigations into the majority of murder cases. Observing that the Government's information only exceptionally refers to cases in which those responsible have been identified and punished, the Committee expresses concern in this respect and insists that the Government should reinforce the criminal justice system considerably.

Finally, the Committee emphasizes the importance of the Government giving effect to the recommendations of the Committee on the Application of Standards, which were reproduced above.

Legislative problems

The Committee recalls that for several years it has been commenting on the following provisions, which raise problems of consistency with the Convention:

- restrictions on the establishment of organizations (the need, under section 215(c) of the Labour Code, to have 50 per cent plus one of those working in the occupation to establish industry trade unions) and delays in the registration of trade unions or the refusal to register them;
- restrictions on the right to elect trade union leaders in full freedom (they need to be of Guatemalan origin and to work in the enterprise or economic activity in order to be elected as trade union leaders, under sections 220 and 223 of the Labour Code);
- restrictions on the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities freely (under section 241 of the Labour Code, strikes are not declared by the majority of those casting votes, but by a majority of the workers); the possibility of imposing compulsory arbitration in the event of a dispute in the public transport sector and in services related to fuel, and the need to determine whether strikes for the purpose of inter-union solidarity are still prohibited (section 4(d), (e) and (g) of Decree No. 71-86, as amended by Legislative Decree No. 35-96 of 27 March 1996); and labour, civil and penal sanctions applicable to strikes involving public officials or workers in specific enterprises (sections 390(2) and 430 of the Penal Code and Decree No. 71-86);
- the Civil Service Bill; in its previous observation the Committee noted a Civil Service Bill which, according to UNSITRAGUA and the National Federation of State Workers' Unions (FENASTEG), requires a percentage that is too high to establish unions and restricts the right to strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Bill was withdrawn and that in July 2008 an inter-sectoral consultation committee was established to prepare a Bill that is consistent with the needs of the sectors involved; and
- the situation of many workers in the public sector who do not benefit from trade union rights. These workers, who are under contract under item 029 and others of the budget, should have been recruited for specific or temporary tasks, but are engaged in ordinary and permanent functions and often do not benefit from trade union rights or employment benefits other than wages, and are not covered by social security or by collective bargaining, where it exists. The Committee notes that the members of the Supreme Court of Justice indicated to the high-level mission that, in accordance with the jurisprudence, these workers enjoy the right to organize. Nevertheless, this jurisprudence has not been given effect in national practice, according to technical assistance reports and the comments of the MSICG.

With regard to these matters, the Committee noted previously that, at the proposal of a high-level mission (2008), the Tripartite Commission approved an agreement to modernize the legislation and give better effect to Conventions Nos 87 and 98, and that this agreement provides for "an examination of the dysfunctions of the current system of industrial relations" (excessive delays and breach of due process, failure to enforce the law and sentences, etc.) and particularly of the machinery for the protection of the right to collective bargaining and the rights of workers' and employers' organizations and their members, as laid down in Conventions Nos 87 and 98, in the light of technical considerations and the comments of a substantive and procedural nature of the Committee. The Committee observed in 2010 that there had been various ILO technical assistance missions.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the authorities decided, after holding meetings with the trade unions in the public sector, to re-examine in the Congress of the Republic the reform of the Civil Service Act.

The Committee notes the comments of the CACIF challenging its competence in relation to strikes and its principles. The Committee refers to the explanations provided in the 2011 General Survey on fundamental labour rights.

The Committee notes the conclusions of the 2011 high-level mission, which are as follows:

The mission regrets to note that no progress has been achieved since the previous year in relation to the legislative reforms requested by the CEACR and that the Tripartite Commission on Labour Affairs has not submitted any draft legislation to Congress. The mission reiterated the importance of bringing the legislation into full conformity with the Conventions on freedom of association. The mission forwarded the comments of the CEACR to the Labour Commission of the Congress. The Labour Commission of the Congress expressed the wish that the Tripartite Commission on Labour Affairs should enter into contact with it regularly to address these matters and the Tripartite Commission concerned. The mission suggested the possibility to the Labour Commission of the Congress to conclude an agreement with the ILO in relation to training on international labour standards and to improve their application; this proposal was received with great interest and it was indicated that the matter would be submitted in the near future to the competent authorities of the Congress.

With regard to the situation of the many workers in the public sector engaged under contracts under items 029 and others of the budget, the mission noted that, according to the Supreme Court of Justice, the case law recognizes the right of these workers to organize. The mission also noted that in practice these workers join organizations and in certain State institutions represent 70 per cent of the staff. The mission suggested that the authorities, by means of a circular or a resolution, should remove any doubt on the right to organize of workers engaged under contracts under item 029 of the budget. However, the Minister of Labour expressed reservations for economic and legal reasons.

The Committee notes that the Government has recently established an inter-institutional commission for the preparation of a Bill respecting the outstanding legislative matters, but emphasizes once again that nothing in the Government's report indicates that progress has been achieved in legislative matters. The trade union confederations also indicate that there has been no progress.

The Committee notes that, in its conclusions in 2011, the Conference Committee expressed the hope that the Government would be in a position to report substantial progress in the very near future. The Committee regrets to note that, despite requesting improvements in the legislation for many years, there has not been significant progress in the legislative reforms requested and it considers that much more effort will need to be made. The Committee firmly hopes that, with ILO technical assistance, the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on positive developments in relation to the various matters referred to and that tangible progress will be achieved in the near future.

Registration of trade unions. The Committee wishes to refer to the conclusions of the 2011 high-level mission concerning the alleged obstacles to the registration of trade unions, which read as follows:

The Committee of Experts received allegations concerning the obstacles to the registration of 20 trade unions. The workers' sector of the Tripartite Commission on Labour Affairs indicated that 200 applications had been awaiting registration for some time and continued to be pending. The authorities denied this figure and explained that the delay with certain files was related to the negligence of one official for a year and that another person is now responsible for registrations. According to the authorities, 84 applications for registration were lodged in 2011, of which 34 have already been registered, four are in the process of registration and 11 more were signed by the Minister during the week of the mission's visit. The mission emphasized to the Government the need for a rapid solution concerning the registration of the remaining organizations. The mission also suggested the establishment of a proactive registration procedure enabling trade unions with the authorization of their assembly to correct directly in the Ministry legal problems arising during the registration process. According to the General Directorate of Labour, this already happens in practice.

The Committee however observes that in their comments the trade union organizations indicate that in practice there exist significant obstacles to the registration of trade unions and it therefore invites the Government to discuss this matter in the Tripartite Commission with a view to adopting an approach that allows the rapid resolution with those establishing trade unions of any substantive and formal problems which may arise and facilitates in so far as possible the registration of trade unions.

Other matters

The maquila sector. For years, the Committee has been noting the comments of trade unions concerning serious problems in the application of the Convention in relation to trade union rights in the maquilas.

The Committee previously noted the comments of the ITUC that it is impossible to exercise the right to organize in export processing zones due to the determined opposition of employers. In the 200 maquilas that exist, unions have only been established in three of them and the labour authorities are incapable of exercising control over breaches of the law or the failure to give effect to it in this sector. According to the MSICG, the fact that it is impossible to establish organizations in maquilas is a result of anti-union practices.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its latest report that there are seven unions active in maquila and textile enterprises, and a collective contract approved for the period 2008–10.

According to the Government, the total number of denunciations in relation to freedom of association and the protection of the right to organize in the maquila and other sectors covered by the General Labour Inspectorate in 2009 was 30, most of which are under examination; the number of denunciations relating to freedom of association examined by the General Labour Inspectorate in 2010 was seven, all of which are under examination. The Committee concludes that the general procedures for administrative investigations are too slow and ineffective. The trade union confederations indicate that the total number of denunciations for violations of trade union rights is 129 in 2011.

The Government indicates in relation to trade union rights in maquilas that on 24 November 2010, the Inter-institutional Framework Agreement for the Exchange of Information between the Ministry of the Economy and the Ministry of Labour and Welfare was signed within the framework of Decree No. 29-89 of the Congress of the Republic of Guatemala, with the following outcomes: (1) the General Labour Inspectorate has a unified register which forms part of the comprehensive labour system of all entities which benefit from the advantages granted to the enterprises concerned (particularly in relation to taxation) under Decree No. 29-89 of the Congress of the Republic of Guatemala, the Act to promote and develop export activities and the maquila; and (2) the Directorate of Commercial Services and Investment of the Ministry of the Economy has a register of cases of entities covered by denunciations to the General Labour Inspectorate. In the Government's view, this allows the cross-checking of information, which makes viable monitoring by the General Labour Inspectorate of compliance by enterprises with labour legislation, which is in turn reinforced by the action of the Directorate of Commercial Services and Investment through its Industrial Policy Department to ascertain that enterprises are making the correct use of the advantages granted by the Ministry of the Economy.

The Committee notes the conclusions of the 2011 high-level mission, according to which:

With regard to the situation of trade unions in the maquila, the mission noted the indication by the authorities that there are 740 enterprises in the sector, six unions and three collective contracts covering 4,600 workers out of a total of 110,000 workers. The mission notes that the number of workers in the maquila has fallen considerably in relation to previous years (around 300,000). The mission also notes the indication by the authorities that it is a sector which has been subject to special attention to verify compliance with labour rights and that there is a special unit of the Labour Inspectorate that is particularly active in addressing problems in the maquila. The mission considers, based on meetings with trade union federations, which are very concerned at the low level of unionization in the maquila, that training activities on freedom of association and collective bargaining should be intensified in the maquila sector and it encourages the Government to have recourse to ILO technical assistance in this respect.

The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the exercise in practice of trade union rights in maquilas (number of trade unions, their membership, number of collective agreements and their coverage, complaints of violations of trade union rights, decisions taken by the authorities and number of inspections). The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will continue benefitting from ILO technical assistance so that full effect is given to the Convention in the maquilas and it requests the Government to provide information on this subject. The Committee requests the Government to refer problems relating to the exercise of trade union rights in the maquila sector regularly to the National Tripartite Commission and to provide information in this regard.

National Tripartite Commission. The Committee noted in 2010 that problems have arisen in this Commission in relation to the recognition by all concerned of the workers' representatives, due solely to a division in UNSITRAGUA.

The Committee wishes to refer to the conclusions of the 2009 high-level mission, which read as follows:

It should firstly be noted that in recent times the trade union map has changed significantly. UNSITRAGUA has been divided into two groups. The mission obtained information from the Trade Union Federation UNSITRAGUA, registered by the Ministry of Labour, which is composed of eight or nine unions affiliated to the historical UNSITRAGUA (not registered, but which groups together around 100 unions), and from the administrative authorities. This information appears in the section of this report dedicated to interviews and will be forwarded to the Committee on Freedom of Association, which is currently examining a complaint, and the Government had requested technical assistance on this matter. The mission noted that the historical UNSITRAGUA (not registered) does not oppose the registration of the Trade Union Federation UNSITRAGUA and that, according to certain authorities in the Ministry of Labour, the application for the registration of the historical UNSITRAGUA is still pending (this is also the belief of the organization). However, the Minister of Labour indicated that, as one year had elapsed since the filing of the application and that there had been no change in the file, it was considered that the process needed to be started again from zero with a view to resolving the legal issues identified (principally the name of the organization and the possibility of the direct membership of workers, and not only of unions).

An important sector of the trade union movement, consisting of the CUSG, CGT and the historical UNSITRAGUA, which are affiliated or close to the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), is currently not represented on the Tripartite Commission on Labour Affairs. The mission drew the attention of the authorities to the need to include these organizations in the Commission on Labour Affairs, as tripartite dialogue cannot be undertaken effectively without an essential sector of the trade union movement. The employers' representatives, represented by CACIF, indicated to the mission that they were not opposed to this.

The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the composition of the workers' representation on the Tripartite Commission is based on strict criteria of representivity and requests the Government to take the necessary measures for that purpose. The Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association at its session in November 2011 requested the Government to include the historical UNSITRAGUA in the National Tripartite Commission and to ensure that this organization is registered without obstacles. The Committee concurs with this recommendation.

Statistics and other matters. The Committee notes that the report of the ILO high-level mission in May 2011, indicates that it would be useful for the Government to provide clear statistics confined to trade unions that are in operation, and not those that have ceased to operate, and making a distinction between the public and private sectors, with a view to indicating the level of trade union membership and the coverage of collective bargaining in both sectors.

The Committee shares the views of the ILO mission and requests the Government to produce statistics on the unionization rate and the coverage of collective bargaining and other aspects of trade union activities.

The Committee also notes the mission's indication that, as a follow-up to the recommendations of previous missions, part of the workers' representatives and the employers' representatives of the Tripartite Commission on Labour Affairs submitted a draft legislative text to the Congress for the establishment of an Economic and Social Council, which is under examination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 101st Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee recalls that for many years it has been referring to the following problems of serious restrictions on the exercise of trade union rights in practice:

- the excessive delays in procedures for the reinstatement of trade unionists in accordance with rulings by judicial bodies and the utilization of amparo proceedings (for the protection of constitutional rights); this is a general problem and the Committee has received information concerning an average of three years between the preliminary hearing and the trial, which may last for between six and seven years;
- the failure to comply with orders for the reinstatement of dismissed trade unionists;
- the slowness and ineffectiveness of procedures to impose penalties for breaches of labour legislation;

- the need to promote collective bargaining, especially in the maquilas sector.

The Committee previously also requested information on the Bill on Civil Service Reform (this question is now dealt with in the context of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)).

With reference to these matters, in its previous observation, the Committee noted that, under the auspices of the high-level mission in 2008, the Tripartite Commission concluded an agreement to modernize the legislation and give better effect to Conventions Nos 87 and 98, with the agreement calling for an examination to be carried out of the dysfunctions of the current labour relations system (excessive delays and procedural abuses, lack of effective application of the law and of penalties, etc.), and in particular of the machinery for the protection of the right to collective bargaining and the rights of workers' and employers' organizations and their members, as set forth in Conventions Nos 87 and 98 in the light of the technical considerations and substantive and procedural comments of the Committee of Experts.

The Committee also notes the comments on the application of the Convention made by the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA), the General Confederation of Workers of Guatemala (CGTG) and the Trade Union Unity of Guatemala (CUSG) in a communication dated 29 August 2011 (in relation to which, the Government's reply refers to imprecise and false indications) and on the trade union membership of certain alleged victims, as well as the comments of the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala for the Defence of Workers' Rights (MSICG) in a communication dated 30 August 2011. The Committee further notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, which emphasizes that violations of the Convention occur in both the public and private sectors and include pressure to renounce trade union membership and dismissals as a result of the establishment of unions.

The Committee notes that the communications of the ITUC and the MSICG confirm that the problems referred to above continue at the present time. The Committee observes that the communications of the trade union confederations referred to above emphasize the lack of political will by the Government to resolve the outstanding problems despite the many ILO missions and the fact that year after year the Government is called upon to appear before the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, where backward steps are noted, as they are in many cases by the Committee on Freedom of Association. The trade union confederations emphasize that the supervisory bodies have indicated that the situation with regard to trade union rights continues to be serious and a cause for concern, and that judicial delays have increased despite the rise in the number of tribunals. They add that non-compliance with court reinstatement orders continues and that the courts do not discharge their functions adequately in relation to the exercise of the right to collective bargaining when trade unions bring legal action. The national trade union confederations provide details of hundreds of cases of anti-union dismissals, as well as many cases of court reinstatement orders which are not given effect. The ITUC links these problems with the climate of violence suffered by trade union leaders.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the matters raised by the Committee have been discussed in the National Tripartite Commission for years and that tripartite consensus has been reached on some of them, including with regard to certain reforms. Moreover, according to the Government's indications, the Tripartite Commission has reactivated subcommissions to follow-up the various pending issues. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the subject of legal reforms is currently under analysis with a view to reactivating the relevant proposals, and for this purpose an integrated commission is operating under the terms of Government Decisions Nos 158-2011 and 246-2011.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the labour and social welfare tribunals and chambers discharge the functions assigned to them by Decree No. 1441 issuing the Labour Code (statistical data are attached). With regard to the Committee's comments concerning the "abuse of amparo and appeal procedures", the Government indicates that the use made of both procedures is at the exclusive discretion of the parties to procedures relating to labour and social welfare disputes, and that the judiciary cannot deny the constitutional procedure of amparo as, in accordance with the corresponding constitutional provisions, "no subjects may not be covered by amparo". With regard to the failure to comply with orders to reinstate dismissed trade unionists, the Government indicates that in such cases those concerned have to inform and take action in the labour courts to claim the appropriate legal remedies. With reference to the slowness and ineffectiveness of procedures relating to sanctions for violations of labour legislation, the Government indicates that the General Labour Inspectorate, through the Legal Advisory Section, during the course of 2010 and within the time limits set out by law, filed 1,848 charges with labour and social welfare tribunals against individuals or associations as a result of labour inspections, in which there were found to be certain violations of the legal provisions in force in the country, both in terms of domestic law and those relating to international Conventions, with the total amount of fines imposed for such violations amounting to 2,378,761.63 quetzales. The Government adds that the practice of referring cases of non-compliance to the labour and social welfare tribunals is linked to the fact that in 2004 the Constitutional Court found it unconstitutional for the General Labour Inspectorate to impose administrative financial sanctions on all employers who were in breach of legal provisions. This lack of legal means of enforcement removed from the General Labour Inspectorate its power to enforce compliance with the law, for which reason it is now necessary to pursue violations through judicial procedures. The Committee indicates that in 2011 there were 57 administrative complaints of violations of freedom of association and collective bargaining (there were 55 in 2010 and 145 in 2008). The Committee regrets that the Government has not provided statistical data on the duration of legal procedures and the sanctions applied for anti-union acts. It requests the Government to provide specific information on these matters. With regard to the need to promote collective bargaining, especially in the maquila sector, the Government indicates that there has been a rise, based on the guarantees of freedom of association set out in the Constitution, in the application of ILO Conventions on freedom of association and collective bargaining and that there are currently 11 unions in the maquila sector.

The Committee expresses concern at the various cases that are before the Committee on Freedom of Association in relation to these matters and also at the very high number of allegations of anti-union dismissals (hundreds in many public institutions and certain private enterprises, according to the trade union confederations) and acts contrary to the right to collective bargaining referred to by the ITUC and MSICG.

Recalling once again that all of the problems raised are very serious, the successive ILO high-level missions, including the most recent in May 2011, the Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the most representative organizations of workers and employers, to undertake the necessary procedural and substantive reforms to: (1) resolve cases of anti-union discrimination and the slowness of the labour courts (including more effective and rapid proceedings and more dissuasive penalties); (2) promote collective bargaining in view of the worrying figures for the collective accords that are in force (according to the Government, 58 collective accords were concluded between 2008 and 2009, as in Guatemala collective bargaining tends to take place at the level of the enterprise or public institution); and (3) adopt additional measures to improve labour inspection (since, according to the Government, it has not been possible to appoint all of the envisaged new inspectors) and to enable the courts to enforce rulings without delay. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard and hopes to be able to note significant progress in the near future.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that 64 new unions and 33 new collective labour accords have recently been registered. Taking into account the lower number of collective accords in the private sector, the Committee requests the Government to promote collective bargaining and to continue to provide information on the number of unions and collective accords, the number of members and of complaints submitted in 2010 and 2011 to the labour inspection services concerning violations of trade union rights. The Committee also requests the Government to provide its observation on the allegations by the MSICG that 444 unions do not currently have a collective accord.

In view of the delicate situation relating to the application of the Convention, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government and the authorities in general will include compliance with the Convention among their highest priorities.

Guinea

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls that in its previous comments the Committee raised a number of points about the national legislation as follows:

- the need for measures to set up an independent body that has the trust of the parties and is able to rule promptly on difficulties encountered in defining the minimum service where the parties are unable to agree as to the minimum service in transport and communications (which are not deemed essential in the strict sense of the term); and
- the need for measures to ensure that compulsory arbitration (established in sections 342, 350 and 351 of the Labour Code) is restricted to cases where the two parties agree to request it, in essential services in the strict sense of the term, or in the event of acute national crisis.

The Committee trusts that the Government will take the measures requested very shortly, in consultation with the representative organizations of employers and workers concerned, and asks it to provide information on any developments in the situation.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance from the Office, if it so wishes.

The Committee recalls that the 2008 International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) comments reported assaults, by the security forces, on demonstrators and strikers, as a result of which around 40 people died and nearly 300 others were injured, arrests of trade unionists and the destruction of the headquarters of the National Confederation of Workers of Guinea (CNTG). The Committee recalls that a climate of violence in which murders and disappearances of trade union leaders go unpunished, constitutes a serious obstacle to the exercise of trade union rights and that such acts require severe measures to be taken by the authorities. When disorders have occurred involving loss of human life or serious injury, the setting up of an independent judicial inquiry is a particularly appropriate method of fully ascertaining the facts, determining responsibilities, punishing those responsible and preventing the repetition of such acts (see 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 29).

Finally, the Committee noted the comments made by the ITUC, dated 24 August 2010, on the application of the Convention, in particular, the allegations concerning the search of the home of the General Secretary of the CNTG by military forces. The Committee recalls that any search of unionists' homes without a court order constitutes an extremely serious infringement of freedom of association. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on all the comments made by the ITUC.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments submitted by the ITUC, dated 4 August 2011, which refer to matters previously raised by the Committee.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Need to include in the national legislation specific provisions: (a) to protect all workers, and not only trade union delegates as provided in the Labour Code, against acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment and during employment; (b) to provide expressly for appeal procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference; (c) to provide for rapid appeal procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions for violations of section 3 of the draft new Labour Code, which provides that no employer may take into consideration membership of a trade union and trade union activities of workers in making decisions about recruitment, performance and distribution of work, termination of the employment contract, etc.

Article 2. Need to include in the draft Labour Code specific provisions on protection against acts of interference in the internal affairs of workers' and employers' organizations, accompanied by efficient and expeditious procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary steps to ensure that the provisions of the new Labour Code, which have been under preparation for many years, are fully consistent with Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate all progress towards this end in its next report.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and requests the Government to provide its reply.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guinea-Bissau

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) referring to wage bargaining under the National Tripartite Council for Social Consultation and to the inadequate provisions in the General Labour Act regarding protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee also notes the comments of 30 August 2011 by the National Workers Union of Guinea (UNTG-CS) referring to the need to strengthen the capacity of the general labour inspectorate and the courts to enforce the labour legislation. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations thereon.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Agricultural workers and dockworkers. The Committee noted previously the Government's intention to pursue revision of the General Labour Act, Title XI of which contains provisions on collective bargaining and the adoption of measures to guarantee agricultural workers and dockworkers the rights laid down in the Convention. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government states that the revision of the legislation is still in process. The Committee noted previously the Government's statement that the draft Labour Code provided for adaptation of the application of its provisions to the specific characteristics of the work performed by agricultural workers and dockworkers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the status of the draft legislation and trusts that it will guarantee for agricultural workers and dockworkers the rights laid down in the Convention.

The Committee notes that in its report the Government states that there is no specific legislation on this subject, which is dealt with in bodies created for the purpose such as the Standing Committee on Social Consultation. The Committee reminds the Government that it requested information on measures taken to adopt the special legislation which, under section 2(2) of Act No. 8/41 on freedom of association, was to regulate the right to collective bargaining of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee once again requests the Government to send information on this matter.

Lastly, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the promotion of collective bargaining in the public and private sectors (training and information activities, seminars with the social partners, etc.), and to provide statistics on the collective agreements concluded (by sector) and the number of workers they cover. The Committee notes that the ITUC's comments show that the collective bargaining situation is not very satisfactory. It again reminds the Government that Article 4 of the Convention provides that "measures appropriate to national conditions shall be taken, where necessary, to encourage and promote the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiations between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations, with a view to the regulation of terms and conditions of employment by means of collective agreement". The Committee requests the Government to take specific measures to promote greater use in practice of collective bargaining in the private and public sectors, and to report any developments in the situation, indicating the number of new agreements concluded and the number of workers covered. The Committee hopes that the Government's next report will contain full information on the matters raised and on the ITUC's comments.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance from the Office should it so wish, and expresses the firm hope that it will take without delay all measures within its reach to resume constructive dialogue with the ILO.

Guyana

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

- The Committee recalls that its previous observation referred to the following questions:
- the need to amend the Public Utility Undertakings and Public Health Services Arbitration Act (Chapter 54:01) in respect to: (1) conferring on the Minister broad powers to refer a dispute in the services listed in the schedule to a tribunal for compulsory arbitration and the sanction (fine or imprisonment) imposed on workers who take part in an illegal strike (section 19); (2) the schedule listing the essential services (which may be revised at the discretion of the Minister) that contains some services that go beyond those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (dockage, wharfage, discharging, loading or unloading of vessels, the services provided by the Transport and Harbours Department and the National Drainage and Irrigation Board cannot be considered essential services in the strict sense of the term). The Committee recalled that the authorities may establish, with the participation of workers' and employers' organizations, a system of minimum service in those services considered to be of public utility; and
 - section 19 of the Public Utility Undertakings and Public Health Services Arbitration (Amendment) Bill 2006 that sets higher fines than those provided for in the previous Act and maintains the imprisonment for those workers who take part in an illegal strike.

The Committee had noted the Government's statement to the effect that there is no restriction on the right to strike and that workers who choose to strike are protected by the law. The Committee once again reminds the Government that, by conferring on the Minister broad powers to refer to compulsory arbitration disputes in services, not all of which are essential, and by providing for sanctions (fine or imprisonment) in the event of an illegal strike, the Public Utility Undertakings and Public Health Services Arbitration Act and the Bill introduced to amend it compromise the workers' right to strike which the Committee considers to be one of the essential means available to them to protect their interests.

The Committee expresses the hope that necessary measures will be taken to amend the legislation so as to bring it in conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report any progress made in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

In its previous observation, the Committee referred to the recognition of only those unions claiming 40 per cent support of the workers, as set out in the Trade Union Recognition Act. The Committee takes note of the Government's statement that, at the request of the Trades Union Congress, the Trade Union Recognition Act provided for the recognition of unions that were recognized prior to the Act without having to prove that they had majority support (section 32). All unions benefited from this provision which the Government says is no longer applicable as all certificates applicable under this section have been issued. Given that the representativeness of unions might change, the Committee recalls once again that, if no union covers more than 40 per cent of the workers in the bargaining unit, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their members (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 241). The Committee hopes that significant progress respecting this issue will be made in the near future and requests the Government to provide information on the results of the consultative process.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Haiti

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, which refer to matters that have already been raised, as well as to acts of violence by the forces of order against demonstrators and the murder of two trade unionists in the transport sector. In general terms, the Committee recalls that the guarantees set out in international labour Conventions, in particular those relating to freedom of association, can only be effective if the civil and political rights enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international instruments, notably the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, are genuinely recognized and protected (see the 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 43). The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on the matters raised by the ITUC in 2010 and 2011.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to reiterate its previous observation, which read as follows:

Amendment of the legislation. The Committee recalls that it has been asking the Government for many years to amend the national legislation to bring it into conformity with the requirements of the Convention through:

- the amendment of section 34 of the Decree of 4 November 1983 which gives the Government broad powers of supervision over trade unions;
- the amendment of sections 185, 190, 199, 200 and 206 of the Labour Code, which allow for compulsory arbitration at the request of only one party to a labour dispute;
- the amendment of sections 233 and 239 of the Labour Code so as to remove the impediments to the right of association of minors and to allow foreign workers to have access to trade union office, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the country; and
- the repeal or amendment of section 236 of the Penal Code, under which government consent is required for the establishment of an association of over 20 members. In this regard, the Committee previously recalled that, under Article 2 of the Convention, workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, shall have the right to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. Consequently, any legislation which requires prior approval at the discretion of the authorities of the statutes and by-laws of representative organizations of workers or employers is incompatible with the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee noted previously that the Government had reported the establishment of a committee to consider the reform of the Labour Code with a view to amending the legal framework. The Government also indicated that the revision of the Labour Code would take into account the Committee's comments on the various matters raised and that, to that end, it was already benefiting from technical assistance from the Office. While aware of the difficulties currently facing the country, the Committee trusts that the Government's next report will indicate real progress in the revision of the national legislation to bring it into full conformity with the Convention on all the points raised. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to benefit from the technical assistance of the Office in this regard and requests it to send a copy of any new text adopted.

The Committee previously requested the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that domestic workers and rural workers explicitly benefit from the right to organize. The Government indicated that workers in the agricultural sector benefit from the same trade union rights as those in the commercial sector and in industry under section 383 of the Labour Code. With regard to domestic workers, a law on the improvement of the living conditions of this category of workers has already been approved by Parliament and would be promulgated soon. The Committee notes this information and requests the Government to send a copy of the new Act respecting domestic workers, once promulgated, and to indicate the provisions which recognize the trade union rights that these workers exercise in accordance with the Convention.

Finally, the Committee repeats its request to the Government to provide a copy of the Decree of 17 July 2005 amending the 1982 Act issuing the conditions of service in the public service.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011, which emphasize the serious consequences of the earthquake of 12 January 2010 on the exercise of trade union rights and refer to issues already raised by the Committee in its previous observations. Indeed, the Committee noted previously the ITUC's comments, which related, among other matters, to acts of discrimination against trade unionists and interference by certain enterprises in trade union activities – acts which have not been penalized – and reiterated the necessity to carry out legislative reforms. The Committee also noted the comments of the ITUC concerning the weakness of the labour inspectorate and the judicial system with regard to violations of trade union rights. The Committee noted the Government's confirmation of this weakness in stating that the administrative examination of cases may take several weeks owing to the large number of cases and the lack of resources within the administration. However, the Government indicated that no formal complaints related the violations of trade union rights had been lodged with the labour administration. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the cases of violations of trade union rights mentioned by the ITUC and to examine with the social partners the measures to be taken with a view to the adoption of rapid and effective mechanisms for the protection of trade union rights.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to reiterate its previous observation, which read as follows:

Articles 1, 2 and 4 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to indicate any developments concerning: (i) the adoption of a specific provision establishing protection against anti-union discrimination in hiring practices; (ii) the adoption of provisions generally affording adequate protection to workers against acts of anti-union discrimination (on the basis of union membership or activity), accompanied by effective and expeditious procedures and sufficiently dissuasive penalties; and (iii) the revision of section 34 of the Decree of 4 November 1983 empowering the Social Organizations Branch of the Department of Labour and Social Welfare to intervene in the drafting of collective agreements, without specifying the nature of such intervention or the cases concerned. The Committee trusts that these issues will be taken into account in the context of the work of the "think-tank" for the reform of the Labour Code relating to a new legal framework and the judicial reform mentioned by the Government, and trusts that the Government will refer in its next report to real progress made in the adoption of national legislation which is in full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee previously asked the Government to supply information on the number of collective agreements in force for rural workers, workers in the informal economy, self-employed workers and domestic workers, and also the coverage provided by these agreements. The Committee noted the Government's reply that no collective agreements exist in the abovementioned sectors. The Committee requests the Government to examine, in conjunction with the social partners concerned, ways of promoting collective bargaining for rural workers, self-employed workers, domestic workers and workers in the informal economy. The Committee requests the Government to supply information in this respect.

The Committee is aware of the difficulties faced by the country and trusts that the Government will continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office with regard to all the matters raised.

Honduras

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Comments from workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) referring to pending legislative issues and to the killing and shooting of trade unionists. The Committee recalls that in 2009, the ITUC referred to the murder of the General Secretary and another official of the Workers' Central Union of Honduras (CTH) on 24 April 2008, the murder of an official of the National Peasant Farmers' Association of Honduras (ANACH) in May 2008, and armed attacks against the President and Vice-President of the AFL Workers' Union of Honduras (SITRAFLH) and the raiding of the headquarters of the Single Confederation of Workers of Honduras (CUTH) in September 2008. The Committee deplores these serious allegations relating to acts of violence against trade unionists and notes with regret that the Government has not sent comments on these serious allegations and points out that freedom of association can be exercised only in a situation in which fundamental rights are respected and fully guaranteed, particularly those pertaining to human life and safety, and that where there have been attacks on physical or psychological integrity, an independent judicial inquiry should be conducted without delay, as this is a particularly suitable method for fully determining the facts, apportioning responsibility, penalizing the perpetrators and preventing the repetition of such acts. The Committee asks the Government without delay to send its observations on these comments, and on the comments of 6 October 2009 from the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP).

Furthermore, the Committee notes the comments made by the Workers' General Central Union (CGT), the Single Confederation of Workers of Honduras (CUTH) and the Workers' Central Union of Honduras (CTH), dated 30 March and 22 August 2011, objecting to the national programme on hourly employment which, in the view of these organizations, has adverse consequences for freedom of association, collective bargaining, employment, wages and weekly rest. Lastly, the Committee notes the comments of 30 September 2011 from the CUTH on the application of the Convention. The Committee takes note of the Government's reply in relation to these allegations. The Committee observes that these matters are already examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association.

Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been referring to the need to amend several provisions of the Labour Code so as to bring the Code into conformity with the Convention. The Committee's comments referred to:

- the exclusion from the scope of the Labour Code, and consequently from the rights and guarantees of the Convention, of workers in agricultural and stock-raising enterprises which do not permanently employ more than ten workers (section 2(1) of the Labour Code);
- the prohibition of more than one trade union in a single enterprise, institution or establishment (section 472 of the Labour Code);
- the requirement of more than 30 workers to establish a trade union (section 475 of the Labour Code);
- the requirement that the officers of a trade union, federation or confederation must be of Honduran nationality (sections 510(a) and 541(a) of the Labour Code), be engaged in the corresponding activity (sections 510(c) and 541(c) of the Labour Code) and be able to read and write (sections 510(d) and 541(d) of the Labour Code);
- the following restrictions on the right to strike:
 - the ban on strikes being called by federations and confederations (section 537 of the Labour Code);
 - the requirement of a two-thirds majority of the votes of the total membership of the trade union organization in order to call a strike (sections 495 and 563 of the Labour Code);
 - the power of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to end disputes in oil production, refining, transport and distribution services (section 555(2) of the Labour Code);
 - the need for Government authorization or a six-month period of notice for any suspension or stoppage of work in public services that do not depend directly or indirectly on the State (section 558 of the Labour Code);
 - the submission to compulsory arbitration, without the possibility of calling a strike for as long as the arbitration award is in force (two years), of collective disputes in public services that are not essential in the strict sense of the term, that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (sections 554(2) and (7), 820 and 826 of the Labour Code).

The Committee notes the Government's response to all these issues to the effect that: (1) section 472 of the Labour Code allows the existence of two or more unions provided that they are not of the same category; (2) the literacy requirement for membership of the executive body of a union does not apply at the time of communicating changes in executive bodies; (3) there are no initiatives to amend the legislative provisions mentioned by the Committee; and (4) in order to promote collective bargaining and freedom of association, the Secretariat of State for Labour and Social Security has been conducting workshops and publishing handbooks on collective bargaining techniques, along with guidelines on the exercise of freedom of association.

The Committee notes with regret that the initiatives to amend the law mentioned by the Government in its previous report (preparation of a bill to reform the Labour Code that included several amendments requested by the Committee) have not been pursued. The Committee hopes that the Government will take all necessary steps to bring the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention and trusts that all the points raised by the Committee will be taken into account. It asks the Government in its next report to provide information on any measures taken to this end and reminds it that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Comments from workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), referring to pending legislative issues already raised, and in particular the lengthy procedures to secure the reinstatement of workers dismissed for carrying out trade union activities. The Committee, underlining the seriousness of these issues, requests the Government to send its observations thereon and on the ITUC's comments of 2009 regarding the preparation of a draft Act which might result in collective bargaining being permitted only for unions that represent more than 50 per cent of the total number of employees in the enterprise, as well as the allegations of: (1) anti-union practices in the export processing zones and in various enterprises in the cement and bakery industries; (2) the slow judicial proceedings in cases of anti-union practices; (3) failure to comply with court orders to reinstate trade unionists; and (4) the setting up of parallel organizations by employers.

The Committee also notes the comments from the General Confederation of Workers (CGT), the Single Confederation of Workers of Honduras (CUTH) and the Confederation of Workers of Honduras (CTH), dated 30 March and 22 August 2011, objecting to Decree No. 230-2010 setting out the national programme of hourly employment, which, in the view of these organizations, has a negative impact on freedom of association, collective bargaining, employment, wages and weekly rest. The Committee further notes the comments of 30 September 2011 by the CUTH on the application of the Convention. Lastly, the Committee notes the Government's reply to these comments by communications dated 9 and 22 November 2011.

In addition, the Committee recalls that the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP) submitted comments on the application of the Convention in 2009. The Committee requests once again the Government to send its observations thereon.

Legislative issues. Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of discrimination and interference. The Committee points out that for many years it has referred in its comments to:

- the lack of adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, since the penalties established in section 469 of the Labour Code for persons who interfere with the right to freedom of association, ranging from 200 to 10,000 lempiras (200 lempiras being roughly equivalent to US$12), are clearly inadequate and a mere token. The Committee notes that in its report the Government states that protection against any act of discrimination liable to undermine freedom of association in the sphere of employment is guaranteed by the provisions of: (1) article 128(14) of the Constitution of the Republic, which confers the right to freedom of association both on employers and on workers; (2) section 517 of the Labour Code, which grants special state protection to workers when they notify to their employers their intention of forming a union and which provides that, from the date of such notification and until receipt of the notice of legal personality, none of the notifying workers may be dismissed or transferred or suffer any impairment of their working conditions without due cause as defined previously by the competent authority; and (3) by the provisions of the Code that impose the penalties indicated by the Committee. The Committee recalls that in its previous observation it noted that section 321 of Decree No. 191-96 of 31 October 1996 establishes penalties for cases of discrimination, but it has received no reply. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate specific cases in which this provision has been used to impose penalties for acts of anti-union discrimination. It makes this request because, where criminal law sets evidentiary requirements that are demanding, this often results in the non-application of penalties in cases of anti-union discrimination. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend the penalties laid down in section 469 of the Labour Code so as to make them dissuasive; and
- the lack of adequate and full protection against all acts of interference, and of sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions against such acts. The Committee notes that in reply the Government's states that the legislation does contain provisions to provide workers' organizations with adequate protection against all acts of interference by employers, citing as an example section 511 of the Labour Code which bars from membership of executive committees of enterprise unions or first-level unions or from appointment to trade union office members who, on account of their duties in the enterprise, represent the employer or hold management posts or positions of trust or who are able easily to exercise undue pressure on their colleagues. The Committee points out in this connection that the protection afforded by Article 2 of the Convention is broader than that of section 511 of the Labour Code and that, in order to ensure that effect is given to Article 2 of the Convention in practice, the legislation must make express provision for sufficiently dissuasive remedies and sanctions against acts of interference by employers against workers and their organizations. The Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary steps in this regard.

Article 6. Right of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State to bargain collectively. The Committee noted in its previous comments the Government's statement that public servants have duties that are limited by law (section 534 of the Labour Code), including the right to submit "respectful statements" containing requests of interest to all members in general, and that section 536 of the Code states that unions of public employees may not submit lists of claims or sign collective agreements but that other official workers' unions are on a par with any others in terms of powers and the filing of claims. The Committee again points out that a system in which public employees may only submit to the authorities "respectful statements" which shall not be the subject of any negotiation, particularly with regard to conditions of employment, is not consistent with the Convention. It points out that, although Article 6 of the Convention allows public servants engaged in the administration of the State to be excluded from the Convention's scope, other categories of workers must be able to enjoy the guarantees laid down in the Convention and hence to undertake collective bargaining for their conditions of employment, including pay. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation to take account of the abovementioned principles.

Lastly, the Committee notes the Government's statement that: (1) in order for the Convention to be applied effectively, the country needs to devise and implement a national strategy for the promotion and dissemination of the rights laid down in the Convention, so as to advocate respect for fundamental principles; (2) improved dialogue between the main players in industrial relations is of vital importance to reaching the necessary agreements for harmonizing the national legislation with the standards of the Convention; and (3) the Secretariat of State for Labour and Social Security has been holding workshops and producing handbooks on collective bargaining techniques for workers belonging to trade unions and the public at large in order to promote collective bargaining and freedom of association. The Committee emphasizes in this connection that the problems referred to have persisted for many years and suggests to the Government that it seek technical assistance from the Office in aligning its legislation with the Convention.

Hungary

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 on the application of the Convention, referring in particular to a number of specific acts of anti-union discrimination. It requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

The Committee also notes that, at the request of six national trade union confederations, the Office has commented on the draft of the upcoming new Labour Code, in particular concerning the need to prohibit acts of interference and to provide for rapid appeal procedures and dissuasive sanctions in case of acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to bring the draft Code into conformity with the Convention and to supply a copy of the new Labour Code once adopted.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Acts of interference. In previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated so as to adopt specific legislative provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates in its report that it considers that the legislation in force, namely the Labour Code and Act No. CXXV of 2003 on equal treatment and the promotion of equal opportunities, set out sufficiently detailed provisions on the prohibition of all acts of interference. In this respect, the Committee notes that section 32 of the Labour Code affords a protection for certain acts of interference, stipulating that only a trade union or an employers' organization that is independent from the other is entitled to conclude a collective agreement. The Committee recalls that legislation should make express provision for rapid appeal procedures, coupled with effective and dissuasive sanctions against acts of interference in order to ensure the application in practice of Article 2 of the Convention. Moreover, to ensure that these measures receive the necessary publicity and are effective in practice, the relevant legislation should explicitly lay down these substantive provisions, as well as appeals and sanctions in order to guarantee their application (see the 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 232). In order to give effect to Article 2 of the Convention, the Committee recalls the need to adopt specific legislative provisions prohibiting acts of interference (in particular, those designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers or employers' organizations, or to place workers' organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations through financial or other means), and establishing rapid appeal procedures, coupled with effective and dissuasive sanctions against such acts.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that no particular legislative amendment is planned concerning protection against interference, although an expert examination was initiated in 2009 as to opportunities in finding alternative solutions for the settlement of disputes, which may, depending on the outcome of the tripartite consultations, result in a legislative act that could notably afford a better protection against acts of interference. In these circumstances, the Committee, recalling its abovementioned comments, also requests the Government to keep it informed of any development concerning the abovementioned expert examination and to provide a copy of any legislation adopted in this respect.

Article 4. Representativeness for the conclusion of collective agreements. The Committee had previously requested information on the system of bargaining agent certification at the sectoral and national levels. The Committee notes that the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), in its comments submitted on 24 August 2009, and the Workers side of the National ILO Council (including the National Federation of Autonomous Trade Unions, the Trade Union Group of Intellectuals, the Democratic League of Independent Trade Unions, the National Confederation of Hungarian Trade Unions, the National Federation of Workers' Councils and the Co-operation Forum of Trade Unions) in its comments sent along with the Government's report on 24 November 2009, both indicate that trade unions need to represent 65 per cent of the workforce (for a single union), a threshold which can hardly be achieved under a plural trade union structure, in order to be able to engage in collective bargaining (section 33(5) of the Labour Code), amend or renegotiate the collective agreement (section 37(1) and (2) of the Labour Code). The Committee further notes the Government's indication that: (i) the provisions cited above require a relatively high rate of employees for the conclusion of the collective bargaining agreement, as several representative trade unions are unable to enter into one jointly in a given case; (ii) in such a case, the lack of consensus among the trade unions necessitates the observation of the rules according to which the trade union with the highest rate support will be entitled to enter into the collective bargaining agreement, reaching about two-thirds (65 per cent) share mentioned above; and (iii) as amendments have been made recently to the Act on the legal status of public servants (subsection 4 of section 12/A of Act No. XXXIII of 1992 on the legal status of public servants), according to which a trade union having at least a 50 per cent support may conclude the collective bargaining agreement in a similar case, the Government would be ready to discuss an amendment to section 33(5) of the Labour Code. The Committee recalls that high percentage requirements for the recognition of a collective bargaining agent may impair the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining. In addition, the Committee recalls that where, under a system for nominating an exclusive bargaining agent, there is no union representing the required percentage to be so designated, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all unions in this unit, at least on behalf of their own members (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 241). The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate in its next report any measures taken or contemplated so as to lower the 65 per cent requirement in section 33(5) of the Labour Code, as well as any measure taken or envisaged in order to ensure that where no union represents 65 per cent of the employees in a bargaining unit, collective bargaining rights are granted to all unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members.

Finally, the Committee had also requested information on developments concerning a draft Bill pertaining to certain aspects of social dialogue. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, Act No. LXXIII of 2009, on the National Council for the Reconciliation of Interests ("NCRI Act"), and Act No. LXXIV of 2009, on the Sectoral Dialogue Committees and certain issues of the medium-level social dialogue ("SDC Act"), entered into force on 20 August 2009. The Committee will provide its observations on these two Acts in its next report, once translated by the Office.

Iceland

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 4 of the Convention. Collective Bargaining. The Committee recalls that several of its previous comments concerned the issue of compulsory arbitration which has been repeatedly imposed through legislative intervention (Acts Nos 10/1998 and 34/2001) into the collective bargaining process for the determination of the terms and conditions of employment of fishermen. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that this was incompatible with the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining set out in Article 4 of the Convention and requested the Government: (i) to avoid having recourse to legislative intervention to impose on the parties a solution which should be the result of free and voluntary collective bargaining; and (ii) noting the Government's indications that it would consult the social partners on actions to be taken, to take concrete steps so as to re-examine thoroughly its current machinery and procedures. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report any measures taken or contemplated in this regard.

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the renegotiation of the collective agreements which come up for review in 2007 and 2008, including in the fishing sector. The Committee again recalls that the Conference Committee had expressed the hope in June 2004 that the Government would carry out, in full consultation with the social partners concerned, a review of the implementation in practice in the fishing sector of the mechanisms and procedures in the area of collective bargaining in order to improve those mechanisms. The Committee noted that the Government indicated that the collective agreements originally reached in the fishing sector in October 2004 were renewed in December 2008 and will be in effect until 1 January 2011. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue to provide information on any progress made in adopting measures, in consultation with the social partners concerned, with a view to improving the current machinery and procedures for collective bargaining so as to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining and ensure that the introduction of compulsory arbitration is avoided in the future.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

India

Right of Association (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 11) (ratification: 1923)

In its previous observation, the Committee had requested the Government to supply information concerning the number of self-employed workers engaged in agriculture who are trade union members and to provide statistics more generally on the number of agricultural unions registered under the Trade Union (Amendment) Act, 2001. The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that: (1) the number of agricultural workers employed in the central sphere is negligible and the enforcement in agricultural sectors rests with the State Government; and (2) according to the statistics available from trade unions in India, 2006 (Labour Bureau), there were 274 unions representing 1,311,424 members submitting returns under agriculture, hunting and forestry in 2006.

Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141) (ratification: 1977)

Muster assistants (workers that provide water and medical facilities at worksites) employed through the Employment Guarantee Scheme. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the possibility of the muster assistants' workers to form strong and independent organizations to improve their working conditions and the measures envisaged by the Government to facilitate this objective. The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that this information is still awaited from the State Government of Maharashtra and will be provided once available. The Committee reiterates its previous request and hopes that this information will be provided with the Government's next report.

"Integrated Child Development Scheme" (ICDS). In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to keep it informed of the contribution made by the associations of anganwadis (pre-school nurseries) workers to improve employment opportunities for women and conditions of work and life in rural areas. The Committee notes the Government's indication that nearly one million anganwadi centres function all over the country. The Government further indicates that All India Federation of Anganwadi Workers and Helpers (AIFAWH) was formed by the Centre of Indian Trade Unions (CITU) at the national convention in Delhi in 1989. The AIFAWH has been making efforts to rally the support of the beneficiaries of the ICDS – the hundreds of thousands of women and children belonging to poor peasants', agricultural workers' and unorganized sector workers' families. The AIFAWH and its affiliated unions in 23 states have not only helped in achieving some benefits for the anganwadi employees, but have also created self confidence among these the hundreds of thousands of women workers, most of them working in the villages, hills and urban slums. They have also led to increased awareness about the importance of the ICDS in ensuring the right to food, education and health of children. Members of the AIFAWH actively participate in the joint trade union campaigns and struggles for the improvement of conditions of workers in different sectors, including agricultural workers, peasants and women. The Committee notes this information with interest.

Forest and brick-making workers. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide any statistics available in respect of the number of organizations of forest and brick-making workers, the number of workers covered, and any collective agreements which may have been concluded in these sectors. The Committee notes that according to the Government, there are 274 unions in the agriculture, hunting and forestry sector, representing 1,311,424 members. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the brick-making workers, like forest workers, are covered under the general labour laws, and that the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC), the central trade unions, Bachpan Bachao Andolan (BBA), brick-kiln workers' unions, etc. work to improve labour conditions of the brick-making workers in various ways. Some of these workers are represented by such unions as the Lal Jhanda Klin Workers Union (CITU), the IFTU Brick Klin Workers' Union, the Int Bhatta Majdoor Union (Brick Klin Workers' Union) and others. While noting this information with interest, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide copies of any collective agreements which may have been concluded in the abovementioned sectors.

Indonesia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the response of the Government to the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2009. It also notes that in a communication dated 4 August 2011, the ITUC submits new comments which relate to a number of matters already raised by the Committee, as well as violations of the Convention, in particular violence against striking workers and acts of intimidation against union leaders. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. In its previous comments, recalling that legitimate trade union activities should not be used as a pretext for arbitrary arrest or detention, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on measures taken, including specific instructions given to the police, so as to ensure that the danger of excessive violence in trying to control demonstrations is avoided, that arrests are made only where serious violence or other criminal acts have been committed, and that the police are called in a strike situation only where there is a genuine and imminent threat to public order. It further requested the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal or amend sections 160 and 335 of the Penal Code, respectively on "instigation" and "unpleasant acts", so as to ensure that these provisions cannot be used abusively as a pretext for the arbitrary arrest and detention of trade unionists. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that, in the case of a legal strike, it is only in case of anarchy that the police have the right to perform actions according to the legislation. The Government further indicates that in the absence of anarchy the police have no right of action (arrest or detention) even if the strike is unlawful. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that it is conducting a review of the Penal Code. The Committee further notes that the allegations contained in the comments submitted by ITUC indicate that excessive violence and arrests in relation to demonstrations and police involvement in strike situations occurred in the country in 2010. In this context, the Committee hopes that, in the framework of the review of the Penal Code, sections 160 and 335 will be repealed or amended. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard, as well as on other measures taken, including specific instructions given to the police, so as to ensure that the use of excessive power in trying to control demonstrations is avoided, that arrests are made only where serious violence or other criminal acts have been committed, and that the police are called in a strike situation only where there is a genuine and imminent threat to public order.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of civil servants. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the hope that the Government would adopt an Act guaranteeing the exercise of the right to organize to civil servants, pursuant to section 4 of Act No. 21 of 2000, which proclaims that civil servants shall enjoy freedom of association and that the implementation of this right shall be regulated in a separate act, so as to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are no developments with regard to the adoption of such a regulation, but that, in practice, both private and public school teachers formed the Teachers' Association of the Republic of Indonesia (PGRI). The Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will adopt an Act guaranteeing the exercise of the right to organize to all civil servants, pursuant to section 4 of Act No. 21 of 2000, and requests the Government to indicate in its next report any progress made in this regard.

Right to organize of employers. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to specify whether employers' organizations could be established independently of the Indonesian Chamber of Commerce and Industry (KADIN). The Committee notes that the Government indicates that, while there is no organization outside KADIN, no stipulation in regulation proscribes employers from establishing organizations other than KADIN, which is the parent organization of employers' organizations. The Government also indicates that APINDO (Indonesian Employers Association), which is affiliated to KADIN, is the employers' organization which is given the authority in the field of industrial relations. The Committee recalls that the designation by its name of a workers' or employers' organization in the legislation for the purpose of consultation or other benefits should be avoided in order to ensure the free exercise of freedom of association and that it would be preferable to make reference to the most representative organization of the concerned sector. The Committee intends to address this issue in depth once Act No. 1/1987 concerning KADIN is fully translated into an ILO official language.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes without interference by the public authorities. Conditions for the exercise of the right to strike. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 4 of Ministerial Decree No. KEP.232/MEN/2003, so that a finding as to whether negotiations have failed, which is a condition for the lawful staging of strikes, can be made either by an independent body or be left to the unilateral determination of the parties to the dispute. The Committee notes the Government's comments that section 4 of Ministerial Decree No. KEP.232/MEN/2003 is in accordance with the conditions of employment in Indonesia and that it did not see any difficulties in performing the procedure on strikes. The Committee once again requests the Government to amend section 4 of Ministerial Decree No. KEP.232/MEN/2003, so that a finding as to whether negotiations have failed can be made either by an independent body or be left to the unilateral determination of the parties to the dispute.

Exhaustion of mediation/conciliation procedures. The Committee had noted that the time period accorded to mediation/conciliation procedures, as provided for in the Industrial Relations Dispute Settlement Act No. 2 of 2004, could be more than 60 days. It had requested the Government to ensure that this time period would be reduced if the exhaustion of mediation/conciliation was a condition for the lawful exercise of the right to strike. The Committee recalls that conciliation, mediation and voluntary arbitration should have the sole purpose of facilitating bargaining and should not be so complex or slow that a lawful strike becomes impossible in practice or loses its effectiveness. Noting the Government's information that it is conducting a review of Act No. 2 of 2004 and that currently many strikes have occurred without waiting on the exhaustion of these procedures, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

Objectives of strikes. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps so as to allow trade union federations and confederations to engage in industrial action linked to questions of general social and economic policy. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it has not made arrangements concerning strikes related to issues of social and economic policies and that it believes that such strikes are categorized as demonstrations regulated in Act No. 9 of 1998 on Freedom of Expression in Public. The Committee recalls that organizations responsible for defending workers' socio-economic and occupational interests should, in principle, be able to use strike action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed to major social and economic policy trends which have a direct impact on their members and on workers in general, in particular as regards employment, social protection and the standard of living. The Committee requests the Government provide with its next report a copy of Act No. 9 of 1998.

Restrictions on the right to strike in the railway service. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate steps taken or contemplated to ensure that the only railway workers encompassed by section 139 of Manpower Act No. 13 of 2003, and so with a limited right to strike, are railway intersection workers. The Committee notes that the Government confirms that the explanatory note on section 139 of the Manpower Act No. 13 of 2003 provides that only railway intersection officers are included among the workers that relate to public safety since they have specific duties which differ from those of other railway workers.

Sanctions for strike action. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend its legislation to ensure that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and therefore measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. Nevertheless, even in the absence of violence, if the strike modalities had the effect of making the strike illegitimate, proportionate disciplinary sanctions may be imposed against strikers. The Committee notes that section 186 of the Manpower Act regulates criminal conviction for violation of sections 137 and 138(1) of the Manpower Act which make provisions in relation to the right to strike. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 186 of the Manpower Act so as to bring it into conformity with the above principle in accordance with the Convention.

Recalling that section 6(2) and (3) of Ministerial Decree No. KEP.232/MEN/2003 results in the situation that striking workers were considered to resign by virtue of not having responded to back-to-work orders from employers, prior to a finding by an independent body that the strike in question is illegal, the Committee requested the Government to amend this section to ensure that employers can only issue back-to-work orders to workers after an independent body has determined that the strike is illegal. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it is conducting a review of Ministerial Decree No. KEP.232/MEN/2003. The Committee requests the Government, in the framework of this review, to ensure that section 6(2) and (3) of Ministerial Decree No. KEP.232/MEN/2003 is amended to ensure that employers can only issue back-to-work orders to workers after an independent body has determined that the strike is illegal. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

Article 4. Dissolution and suspension of organizations by administrative authority. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that if trade union officials violate either sections 21 or 31 of the Trade Union/Labour Union Act No. 21 of 2000 – by either failing to inform the Government of any changes in the union’s constitution or by laws within 30 days or failing to report any financial assistance coming from overseas sources – serious sanctions can be imposed under section 42 of the Trade Union/Labour Union Act, namely, the revocation and loss of trade union rights or suspension. Considering that such sanctions are disproportionate, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated so as to repeal the reference to sections 21 and 31 in section 42 of the Trade Union/Labour Union Act. The Committee also requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated so as to ensure that organizations affected by measures of dissolution or suspension by the administrative authority have a right of appeal to an independent and impartial judicial body, and that such administrative decisions do not take effect until that body issues a final decision. Noting the Government’s indication that it is conducting a review of the Trade Union/Labour Union Act No. 21 of 2000, the Committee expresses the hope that, in the framework of this review, the Government will fully take into account the Committee’s comments. It requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, in relation to the issues raised in these comments.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and employer interference. The Committee’s previous comments concerned the need to ensure effective and rapid protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and employer interference in practice. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that three types of measures can be taken by the Labour Inspector to ensure protection against discrimination: (1) education measures (including counselling); (2) investigation and report on cases; and (3) if the employer does not act upon the conclusions of a report of the Labour Inspector, the latter may issue investigation minutes. The Government further indicates that these measures are carried out in accordance with Decree No. 03 of 1984 of the Minister of Manpower, concerning integrated monitoring, which is currently under review.

Moreover, the Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, concerning in particular anti-union dismissals of union leaders and members, as well as the creation of yellow unions.

It further notes the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2737, 358th Report, November 2010), in which the Committee recalls: (1) that on a number of occasions it examined complaints of anti-union discrimination in Indonesia and has considered that the prohibition against anti-union discrimination in Act No. 21 of 2000 is insufficient; and (2) that while the Act contains a general prohibition in article 28 accompanied by dissuasive sanctions in article 43, it does not provide any procedure by which workers can seek redress. The Committee on Freedom of Association urged the Government to take steps, in full consultation with the social partners concerned, to amend its legislation to ensure comprehensive protection against anti-union discrimination in the future, providing for swift recourse to mechanisms that may impose sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts.

The Committee concludes, from the Government's report, that existing measures to ensure effective and rapid protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and employer interference in practice only consist in investigations conducted by an administrative authority. Moreover, the Government does not indicate in its report that dissuasive sanctions against such acts may be imposed.

Noting that in its report submitted under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Government indicates that it is conducting a review of the Trade Union/Labour Union Act No. 21 of 2000, the Committee requests the Government to take steps, in full consultation with the social partners concerned, to amend its legislation to ensure comprehensive protection against anti-union discrimination in the future, providing for swift recourse to mechanisms that may impose sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts. It requests the Government to provide information on steps taken in this regard. It also once again requests the Government to provide data on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination filed with the labour inspectorate and the courts, and the steps taken to investigate these complaints and impose remedies where appropriate, as well as the average duration of proceedings. It further requests the Government to provide a copy of Decree No. 03 of 1984 of the Minister of Manpower. The Committee invites the Government to make full use of ILO technical assistance in these regards, as well as in order to provide training for the authorities competent to deal with cases of anti-union discrimination and employer interference.

Article 2. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee's previous comments concerned the need to amend section 122 of the Manpower Act so as to discontinue the presence of the employer during a voting procedure held in order to determine which trade union shall have the right to represent the workers in an enterprise. The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates that employers and the Government are present only as witnesses during voting and have no effect on the voting by trade unions and workers and that it has therefore not given any consideration to a possible amendment of section 122 of the Manpower Act. Recalling the need to ensure adequate protection against acts of interference in practice, the Committee reiterates its previous comments and requests the Government to indicate in its next report the steps taken to amend section 122 of the Manpower Act so as to suppress the presence of the employer during voting procedures.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend sections 5, 14 and 25 of Act No. 2 of 2004 concerning industrial relations dispute settlement, which enables either of the parties to an industrial dispute to file a legal petition to the Industrial Relations Court for final settlement of the dispute if conciliation or mediation failed. The Committee notes that the Government considers that Act No. 2 of 2004 only defines the existence of voluntary arbitration, rather than compulsory arbitration. The Committee observes, however, that Act No. 2 of 2004 refers both to voluntary arbitration and, in sections 5, 14 and 25, to compulsory arbitration by allowing one of the parties to a dispute to file a petition to the Industrial Relations Court. Noting that the ability of one or other of the parties to a dispute, including when there is no arbitration request from the parties, to refer the dispute to the Court constitutes compulsory arbitration, the Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration at the initiative of one party to the dispute cannot be considered to promote voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken or contemplated to amend sections 5, 14 and 25 of Act No. 2 of 2004 concerning industrial relations dispute settlement so as to ensure that, except in the case of essential services in the strict sense of the term, compulsory arbitration may be imposed only where it is agreed upon by both parties to the dispute.

Requirements for the exercise of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 119 of the Manpower Act, in order to negotiate a collective agreement, a union must have membership equal to more than 50 per cent of the total workforce in the enterprise or receive more than 50 per cent support in a vote of all the enterprise's workers on its demands. The Committee noted that unions not attaining 50 per cent support in such a vote could only engage in collective bargaining after a period of six months is passed since the vote. The Committee notes the Government's indication that this issue is under review. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate that it considers that these provisions render the exercise of collective bargaining difficult for these unions and once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal the requirement for a delay of six months before which minority unions may bargain collectively.

The Committee also notes that the Government indicates that collective agreements must be concluded within 30 days after the beginning of negotiations. In this regard, the Committee wishes to recall that the parties should be able to continue the negotiation of a collective agreement, if they so wish, even after this delay has expired. Furthermore, in case a collective agreement already exists, the parties should be able to start the negotiations of a future agreement as early as they wish before the end of the current one. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that these principles concerning the free and voluntary exercise of collective bargaining are applied and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Federations and confederations. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide data concerning the number and type of current collective agreements that were signed by federations or confederations of trade unions. The Committee notes that, while the Government confirms that there is no rule or regulation prohibiting federations and confederations from engaging in collective bargaining, it indicates that there has been no report of federations and confederations having signed collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that information concerning collective agreements signed by federations or confederations of trade unions is publically available, and to continue to provide information in this regard.

Export processing zones (EPZs). In its previous observation, the Committee had requested the Government, pursuant to allegations of violent intimidation and assault of union organizers, and dismissals of union activists in the EPZs, to provide information on the number of collective agreements in force in the EPZs and the percentage of workers covered, as well as on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination and employer interference in EPZs and the relevant investigation and remediation measures. While noting the Government's indication that it shall coordinate with local governmental entities in order to be able to provide such information, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided the requested information. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide in its next report data concerning the number of collective agreements and workers covered by collective bargaining in EPZs, as well as on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination and employer interference in EPZs and the relevant investigation and remediation measures.

Iraq

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, which refers to matters previously raised by the Committee, as well as to an order issued by the Ministry of Electricity on 20 July 2010 to prohibit trade union activities of the Electricity Workers' Union, close all its offices, and take control of the union's assets and properties following protests in June which were supported by the Union before being violently put down by the police. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Violence against trade unionists. Previously the Committee, noting the ITUC's 2008 and 2009 comments on the persistence of serious violations of freedom of association, had requested the Government to provide information on the ITUC's allegations of arrests, detentions and acts of violence committed against trade unionists. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates in general terms in its report that there are no violations of trade union freedoms; that trade unionists have never been threatened by a government authority and that, despite the tremendous efforts of the security authorities to protect the population, all citizens are exposed to threats of violence and not only trade unionists. The Committee has stressed on many occasions the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights, emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate of respect for fundamental human rights (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 26) and that the exercise of freedom of association is not compatible with a climate of violence, pressure, fear and threats. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that it will be possible in the near future for trade union rights and the right to collective bargaining to be exercised normally and in observance of fundamental rights, and in a climate free from violence, duress, fear and any kind of threat.

Articles 1, 3 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the Government, a draft Labour Code had been referred to the Consultative Council (Majlis Al-Shura) so that Parliament could examine and adopt the said legislation. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the new Labour Code is still in draft form and under discussion and shall be reviewed during the different phases of its preparation.

The Committee observes that revised versions of the draft Labour Code were prepared in 2010 and 2011 and takes note of the ILO assistance provided to the Government. The Committee further notes that the rewording of some provisions concerning trade unions has been recommended by the State Council and that all provisions related to trade unions were removed from the 2011 draft Labour Code in order to be included in a special law on trade unions. Taking note of section 22(3) of the Iraqi Constitution which provides that "the State shall guarantee the right to form and join unions and professional associations, and this shall be regulated by law", the Committee recalls the necessity to complete as soon as possible the ongoing process in order to ensure effective respect for the right to organize and collective bargaining. The Committee also recalls that employers' organizations should be granted the same rights as workers' organizations in the legislation. Noting the information provided by the Government, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the ongoing legislative reform will take into account all comments made in previous observations and will soon be completed in full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report information on progress made in this respect.

Anti-union discrimination. In its previous observation, the Committee had noted that the guarantees laid down in the draft Labour Code for protection against acts of anti-union discrimination applied to trade union founders and chairpersons and to trade union officers but not to trade union members; nor did the draft establish adequate guarantees against discrimination at the time of recruitment. The Committee also noted that, although it covered anti-union dismissals, the draft did not address other adverse measures affecting trade union membership or activities. The Committee had pointed out that protection against acts of anti-union discrimination must apply to trade union members as well as union officers, and must cover not only dismissal but any other measure amounting to anti-union discrimination (transfer, demotion and other measures that have adverse effects). Furthermore, the protection provided for by the Convention applied upon recruitment, in the course of employment and at the time of separation. The Committee had also recalled that general provisions of the law prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination were not enough if they were not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice; protection against acts of anti-union discrimination should therefore be ensured by various means adapted to national law and practice that prevent or effectively redress such acts, in particular through sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee had previously noted with interest the Government's statement that its comments concerning adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination had been addressed in the draft Labour Code's chapter concerning trade union organizations. While noting that provisions concerning trade unions have been removed from the 2011 draft and will be reviewed either in the ongoing legislative reform of the Labour Code or in the framework of a future special law on trade unions, the Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure adequate protection for members of trade unions and trade union officers against acts of anti-union discrimination in accordance with the principles noted above.

Recognition of trade unions for the purposes of collective bargaining. Previously the Committee had noted that section 142 of the draft Labour Code established a duty to bargain in good faith when a request to open collective negotiations had been submitted by a registered union representing no less than 50 per cent of the workers employed at the establishment or enterprise, or where such a request had been submitted jointly by several registered unions representing no less than 50 per cent of the workers to whom the collective agreement was to apply. The Committee had pointed out that problems may arise where it was established by law that a trade union must receive the support of 50 per cent of the members of a bargaining unit to be recognized as a bargaining agent: a union that would fail to secure this absolute majority would thus be denied the possibility of bargaining. The Committee had underlined that if no union – or group of unions, as provided for in section 142 – covered more than 50 per cent of the workers, collective bargaining rights should not be denied to the unions in the unit concerned, at least on behalf of their own members, and had requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 142 of the draft Labour Code accordingly. The Committee had noted with interest the Government's statement that section 142 of the draft Labour Code had been amended to bring it into conformity with the Convention and that a new section 143 had been included to address the Committee's comments on minimum membership requirements for the acquisition of bargaining agent status.

The Committee notes that the Government does not provide specific information in this respect in its report but indicates that the new Labour Code is still in draft form and consequently may be re-examined during the legislative process. The Committee reiterates its previous comments and expects that the future Labour Code will be in full conformity with the principles above.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously referred to the absence, in Act No. 52 of 1987 on trade union organizations, of any provisions to promote collective bargaining and thus give effect to Article 4 of the Convention. The Government had indicated in this regard that the draft Labour Code would provide for the repeal of Act No. 52 of 1987 on trade union organizations. The Government had further stated that section 147 of the draft Labour Code defined a collective labour contract as an agreement between the trade union, on behalf of the workers of the occupations and industries it represents, and the employers concerned. The Committee had requested the Government to confirm whether collective bargaining at the enterprise level was also recognized in the draft Labour Code and had further invited the Government to take appropriate measures to promote collective bargaining, through publications, seminars and other activities designed to increase awareness of its utility.

The Committee notes that the Government confirms in its report that, under the draft Labour Code, collective bargaining at the enterprise level is also recognized for all workers covered by the provisions of the Labour Code. The Government further indicates that the promotion of collective bargaining will be done after the adoption of the Code when a wide mass media campaign will be launched to make the public aware of the Labour Code. The Committee takes note of this information and invites the Government to start promoting collective bargaining without waiting for the adoption of the Code. It requests the Government to send information on developments in this respect in its next report.

Articles 1, 4 and 6. The Committee had been noting for many years that Act No. 150 of 1987 on public servants, which the Government was planning to repeal, contained no provisions affording the guarantees established in the Convention to public servants and public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State, and had further observed that the draft Labour Code excluded employees of the public service from its scope. The Committee had previously noted that the Government, in consultation with the social partners and experts from the Office, was drafting a recommendation with a view to including in the new Labour Code provisions on the trade union rights of public sector workers, which would give them the rights provided for in Articles 1, 3 and 6 of the Convention. The Committee previously noted with interest the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code would repeal Act No. 150 of 1987 on public servants, so that public servants would be covered by its provisions.

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that section 155 of the new draft Labour Code provides for the repeal of Act No. 150 of 1987. The Committee takes note that section 3 of the draft Labour Code specifies that its provisions apply to "workers recruited in the staff of workers in government departments and public sector", "contractual workers with government departments and public sector" but excludes "employees of governmental departments and public sector". The Committee requests the Government to take measures to amend this provision in order to fully guarantee to all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee underlines that the right to organize, which is a preliminary condition for the development of collective bargaining, is applicable to all public servants with the sole possible exception of the armed forces and the police. In this connection, the Committee notes with concern that, according to the ITUC comments, public sector workers are banned from trade unions and oil unions are technically illegal in Iraq. The Committee hopes that the abovementioned fundamental rights at work will be recognized for public sector workers in the very near future.

Trade union monopoly and interference in trade union activities. The Committee had previously noted that the Trade Union Organization Act No. 52 of 1987, while not applied anymore, established a de facto monopoly of the Confederation of Iraqi Workers' Unions by forbidding the establishment of other unions or federations, and that decision No. 8750 of 2005 had been used by the Government to freeze the assets of trade unions. Taking into account that texts which have not yet been formally repealed such as Decision No. 8750 can generate uncertainty in law and hinder the development of collective bargaining within the meaning of the Convention and of other trade union activities, the Committee had trusted the Government to formally repeal Act No. 52 and Decision No. 8750. In this regard, the Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code would repeal this Act, and that the repeal of the decision would be considered once workers' elections have been held and the financial liability for keeping the assets of the Confederation defined.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that after the changes which were made, and as a result of the developments made in respect of rights and freedoms in Iraq, it would re-examine the Trade Union Organization Act No. 52 and Decision No. 8750, as well as other decisions which conflict with trade union rights and freedoms. The Committee observes however that the 2011 draft Labour Code does not provide for the repeal of Act No. 52, whereas the 2010 draft Labour Code expressly did so in section 168. In these circumstances, the Committee requests once again the Government to urgently take the necessary measures to repeal Act No. 52 as well as Decision No. 8750 of 2005 so as to ensure trade union multiplicity, and requests the Government to indicate in its next report any developments in this regard.

Jamaica

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), in two communications dated 30 September 2009 and 4 August 2011, which mainly refer to matters already raised by the Committee.

Article 3 of the Convention. The right of organizations freely to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that in its previous observations it referred to the extensive power of the minister to refer an industrial dispute to arbitration (sections 9, 10, and 11(A) of the Labour Relations and Industrial Disputes Act). The Committee notes that the Government reiterates in its report that it is seriously considering the ILO's request to amend these sections and that it hopes that a positive response can be given in its next report. In these circumstances, the Committee reiterates its hope that sections 9, 10 and 11(A) of the Labour Relations and Industrial Disputes Act will be amended, taking into account that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute is acceptable only at the request of both parties or in instances where a strike may be restricted or even banned, i.e. in the event of a dispute in the public service involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely services the interruption of which could endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the Government's observations in relation to the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2008 concerning trade unions rights in export processing zones (EPZs), and in particular that the areas once regarded as EPZs have ceased activity. The Committee further notes the comments submitted by the ITUC, in a communication dated 4 August 2011, which mainly refers to matters already raised by the Committee.

Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that several of its previous comments referred to the following matters:

- the denial of the right to negotiate collectively in the case of workers in a bargaining unit when these workers do not amount to more than 40 per cent of the workers in the unit or when, if the former condition is satisfied, a single union that is engaged in the procedure of obtaining recognition does not obtain 50 per cent of the votes of the workers in a ballot that the minister has caused to be taken (section 5(5) of Act No. 14 of 1975 and section 3(1)(d) of its regulations); and

- the need to take measures to amend the legislation so that a ballot is made possible when one or more trade unions are already established as bargaining agents and another trade union claims that it has more affiliated members in the bargaining unit than the other trade unions, and therefore invokes its most representative status in the unit in order to be considered as a bargaining agent.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates that, while it has not yet taken steps to amend its legislation regarding these two matters, it will endeavour to pursue the early amendment of the legislation. The Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will take the necessary measures in the very near future to amend its legislation, lowering the percentage mentioned and allowing a ballot in cases of disputes concerning representativeness, so as to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report any developments in this regard.

Japan

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011, ZENTOITSU (All United) Workers' Union on 7 October 2010, the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN) dated 21 September 2011, and the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) dated 30 August 2011 with regard to the issues previously raised by the Committee.

Denial of the right to organize of firefighting personnel and prison officers. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments concerning the need to recognize the right to organize for firefighting personnel.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that a committee on the right to organize of fire defence personnel was established within the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications in January 2010 to study the right to organize of firefighting personnel in view of both respect for basic labour rights and assurance of reliability and safety for the people. The Government also indicates that, following consultations, this committee released its report in December 2010; the report ascertained that no practical obstacles in terms of fire service operations could be identified which might arise as a result of granting the right to organize and considered five different methods of restoring the right to organize as well as the option of improving the current Fire Defense Personnel Committee System. The Committee observes the Government's indication that there was no agreement within the committee on the restoration of the right to organize and that a final decision on this issue is yet to be made by the government after further examination based on the state of the civil service reform in consideration of calls for a national debate and the mission of the fire service to protect lives, people and property so as to provide improvement to government services and retain the trust of the population. The necessary examination will be carried out in the future with the basic direction of granting it, in conjunction with the examination of the basic labour rights of local public service employees.

In respect of prison officers, the Committee notes that, while JTUC-RENGO indicates that the Government has not initiated any specific examination on the issue of granting the right to organize to prison officers, the Government states that it has re-examined the right and concluded not to include it in the Reform Bills. The Government reiterated that prison officers are considered to be included in the police and are therefore denied the right to organize in accordance with Article 9 of the Convention. The Committee recalls once again that the functions exercised by prison officers should not justify their exclusion from the right to organize.

The Committee draws the attention to the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Cases Nos 2177 and 2183 (357th Report, paragraphs 727–730) in respect of the right to organize of firefighting personnel and prison officers. It recalls once again the importance it attaches to the right of all workers, including firefighters and prison officers, to form and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee takes note of the measures contemplated by the Government with a view to granting the right to organize to firefighting personnel, as well as the developments in relation to the Basic Concept of the Labour–Employer Relations System of Local Public Service Employees and it trusts that the Government will supply in its next report the additional legislative measures taken or contemplated in order to ensure the right to organize to firefighting personnel, as well as any new developments in respect of prison officers, and, in the meantime, requests the Government to permit the de facto organization of firefighting personnel without penalty.

Prohibition of the right to strike of public servants. The Committee takes note of the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Cases Nos 2177 and 2183 (357th Report, paragraph 730) to the effect that public sector employees, like their private sector counterparts, should enjoy the right to strike, with the possible exceptions of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and workers employed in essential services in the strict sense of the term. Moreover, public employees who may be deprived of this right should be afforded appropriate compensatory guarantees.

The Committee notes that the Government states in its report that an “Advisory Group on Basic Labour Rights (Right to Strike) of National Public Service Employees” was set up in November 2010 under the Minister of Civil Service Reform and issued its report in December 2010. The Committee observes that, according to JTUC-RENGO, the report presents mechanisms that, while preserving the public interest, encourage autonomous settlement as much as possible even when negotiations fail, including through: (1) the introduction of private labour laws such as the prohibition of strikes in security facilities; (2) the establishment of a framework for public utilities utilizing special mechanisms such as notification of strikes and compulsory arbitration; and (3) introduction of compulsory arbitration mechanisms applied only to the cases critical for the preservation of public interest. The Government further indicates that, in the context of the civil service reform and pursuant to the four civil service reform related bills (“the Reform Bills”) submitted to the Diet on 3 June 2011, an autonomous labour–employer relations system will be introduced granting to national public service employees in the non-operational sector the right to negotiate working conditions and to conclude collective agreements. The Committee observes that the Reform Bills do not recognize the right to strike of public servants and takes note that Supplementary Provision 11 of the Draft Act on Labour Relations of National Public Service Employees, submitted to the Diet on 3 June 2011 as part of the Reform Bills, provides that “taking into consideration the status of enforcement of this Act including the status of operation of collective bargaining and the status of operation of the system for conciliation, mediation and arbitration, and the status of public opinion on the implementation of the autonomous labour–employer relations system, the Government shall examine the right to strike of national public service employees. And then, necessary measures are to be taken based on the outcome of the examination.”

The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that under the new labour relations system, the existing compensatory mechanisms for the denial of the right to conclude collective agreements and the right to strike will be abolished as the right to conclude collective agreements will be granted. While the Reform Bills provide for the suppression of the recommendations functions of National Personnel Authority at the national level, the Basic Concept of the Labour–Employer Relations System of Local Public Service Employees proposes the equivalent suppression of the Personnel Commission recommendation functions at the local level. The Committee further notes that ZENROREN considers that the provision of the bill concerning compulsory arbitration providing that “arbitration procedure shall begin upon the request of the Minister, the Board of Audit or the Prime Minister” would set an obstacle to good labour-management negotiations under a labour relations system that denies the employees’ right to strike.

The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in reviewing the question of the right to strike and to indicate in its next report the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that public servants who are not exercising authority in the name of the State and workers who are not working in essential services in the strict sense of the term may exercise this right without sanction, and that those whose right to strike may be restricted (e.g. hospital workers) benefit from sufficient compensatory guarantees in order to safeguard their interests namely, adequate, impartial and speedy conciliation and arbitration procedures, in which the parties have confidence and can participate at all stages, and in which the awards, once made, are binding and fully and promptly implemented. The Committee further asks the government to provide detailed information on the compensatory guarantees available to those civil servants who may be deprived of the right to strike under the new labour relations framework being contemplated for the public service.

The Committee further notes the Government’s response to the ITUC regarding the restrictions to the labour rights of employees of state-run companies, private companies considered to have “high social responsibility” (such as electricity and coal mining businesses), public welfare undertakings (including transportation, postal and communications services, water, electricity and gas, medical and public health, etc.) and Specified Independent Administrative Institutions. The Committee recalls that the prohibition of the right to strike in the public service should be limited to public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and to employees of essential services in the strict sense of the term and that in borderline cases, one solution might be not to impose a total prohibition of strikes, but rather to provide for the maintaining by a defined and limited category of staff of a negotiated minimum service when a total and prolonged stoppage might result in serious consequences for the public (see the 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 158). The Committee requests the Government to provide, in its next report, further information on the basic labour rights of employees of state-run companies, private companies with “high social responsibility” and public welfare undertakings and any measures taken or contemplated by the Government to minimize the restrictions on their rights, such as a negotiated minimum service.

Reform of the civil service. The Committee notes that in Cases Nos 2177 and 2183 the Committee on Freedom of Association requested that the Government continue to take steps to ensure without delay the promotion of full social dialogue aimed at effectively addressing the measures necessary for the implementation of the freedom of association principles embodied in Convention No. 87 and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

The Committee notes that the present Government has taken the following steps since it came into power in September 2009: (1) establishment of an Employee–Employer Relation System Examining Committee composed of academic experts, labour representatives and employer representatives; this committee finalized a report entitled: “Toward measures for an autonomous labour–employer relations system” on 15 December 2009 which compiled findings of case studies of systems where public service employees in the non-operational sector are granted the right to conclude collective agreements in order to provide materials for the Government’s consideration of a new system; (2) the Government submitted to the Diet the “Amendment Bill for the National Public Service Employees Law” on 19 February 2010 which provided for the establishment of central control of personnel affairs of executive public service employees and, in a supplementary provision, for the establishment of “an institution with the powers and responsibilities needed to implement a transparent and autonomous labour–employer relations system” (the deliberation of the Bill was not completed during the session of the Diet and was dropped in June 2010); (3) the Government adopted on 5 April 2011 the “whole picture of the reform based on the Civil Service Reform Law, etc.” which is a package of government policies on detailed measures and the schedule for the realization of all the reforms specified in the Civil Service Reform Law, including the introduction of the autonomous labour–employer relations system; (4) the Government drafted four civil service reform related bills (“the Reform Bills”) on the basis of the whole picture: the Amendment Bill for the National Public Service Employees Law, the Draft Act on Labour Relations of National Public Service Employees, the Draft Act for Establishment of the Civil Service Office and the Draft Act on Arrangement of relevant Acts Incidental to Enforcement of the Amendment Bill for the National Public Service Employees Law were all submitted to the Diet on 3 June 2011; and (5) on 2 June 2011, the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications released its Basic Concept of the Labour–Employer Relations System for Local Public Service Employees.

The Committee notes that, throughout the abovementioned process, the Government held consultations with employees’ organizations including JTUC–RENGO, RENGO–PSLC, ZENROREN and the National Public Service Employee’s Unions (KOKKOROREN) at various levels. The Committee also observes that ZENROREN has expressed its lack of satisfaction with the consultation process and its outcome.

The Committee further notes that, according to the Government, once the Reform Bills are adopted by the Diet, a new framework will be established in the national public service where both parties of labour–employer relations negotiate and determine autonomously the issue of working conditions and promote reform of the personnel management and remuneration system, responding to changing circumstances and new political issues. The Committee particularly notes that this new framework includes granting the right to conclude collective agreements to national public service employees in the non-operational sector, establishing a Civil Service Office and suppressing the National Personnel Authority and its recommendation functions, treatment of the right to strike of national public service employees and basic labour rights of local public service employees. While taking due note of this information and of the progress made by the Government in moving forward the civil service reform process, the Committee observes that, according to JTUC–RENGO, the Reform Bills were not brought under deliberation during the 177th ordinary session of the Diet which ended at the end of August 2011.

Further noting the efforts of the Government to hold systematic consultations with interested parties, including the social partners, the Committee wishes to stress once again that the reform process which will establish the legislative framework of industrial relations in the public sector for many years to come is a particularly appropriate opportunity to hold full, frank and meaningful consultations with all interested parties on all the issues which create difficulties with the application of the Convention and whose legal and practical problems have been raised by workers’ organizations over the years. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will vigorously pursue its efforts to complete the ongoing civil service reform in a continuing spirit of social dialogue in order to find mutually acceptable solutions to all the issues raised and to bring the law and practice into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in its next report and to supply relevant laws upon adoption by the Diet.

The Committee takes note of the observations made by the ITUC concerning the large number of atypical workers in Japan and the practical obstacles to their right to organize and bargain collectively. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest the information provided by JTUC–RENGO concerning a judgment in April 2011 by the Supreme Court which links the categorization of workers to the actual conditions of work. The Committee trusts that the criteria laid out in this judgment will ensure that the guarantees afforded under this Convention fully apply to all workers, including those who are formally working as subcontract workers or contract labourers.

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011, ZENTOITSU (All United) Workers’ Union on 7 October 2010, and the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN) dated 21 September 2011. It further notes the comments made by the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO) dated 30 August 2011 and communicated with the Government’s report, which touch on issues previously raised by the Committee and highlights recent jurisprudential and policy developments.

Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee had previously noted the long-standing dispute and court proceedings arising out of the privatization of the Japanese National Railways (JNR), which were taken over by the Japan Railway Companies (JR). The dispute concerned in particular the decision of the JR not to rehire workers belonging to certain organizations which opposed the privatization plan. The Committee had noted that the last major pending issue concerned outstanding claims for the reinstatement of the 1,047 KOKURO workers and had requested the Government to communicate any judicial determination on this issue. Recalling that this issue is being dealt within the framework of Case No. 1991 before the Committee on Freedom of Association, the Committee notes that the ITUC indicates that, while some workers did not achieve full settlement of their claims, in particular as regards reinstatement, the dispute was finally settled by the Supreme Court on 28 June 2010 with the JR agreeing to pay a total of ¥20 billion in settlement money to 904 workers (¥22 million per worker). The Committee notes with satisfaction the information provided by the Government within the framework of Case No. 1991 and to which it refers in its report which sets out the details of the final settlement of this long outstanding case. The Committee expresses its deep appreciation to all those who spared no effort to achieve this result and in some cases accepted compromise solutions in the interest of moving forward in greater harmony.

Article 4. Collective bargaining rights of public service employees not engaged in the administration of the State in the context of the civil service reform. The Committee's previous comments concerned the need for measures to ensure the promotion of collective bargaining for public employees who are not engaged in the administration of the State in the framework of ongoing consultations on the reform of the civil service.

The Committee takes note of the different steps taken by the Government to establish an autonomous labour–employer relations system, in particular the submission to the Diet on 3 June 2011 of four civil service reform related bills (“the Reform Bills”). The Government indicates that upon the adoption of these bills, a new framework will be established in the national public service where both parties to labour–employer relations negotiate and determine autonomously the issue of working conditions and promote reform of the personnel management and remuneration system, responding to changing circumstances and new political issues. In particular, the Committee notes that the Bill on Labour Relations of National Public Service Employees will grant the right to national public service employees in the non-operational sector to conclude collective agreements if approved by the Diet.

The Committee further notes the following Government's indications with regard to the modalities of the exercise of the right to collective bargaining in the non-operational sector of the national public service: (1) exclusion of administrative vice-ministers, director-generals of agencies and director-generals of bureaus of ministries, as well as police officials and officials working for the Japan Coast Guard and penal institutions – the latter three categories will benefit from appropriate compensatory measures; (2) certification of unions for the purpose of collective bargaining by the Central Labour Relations Commission subject to national public service employees representing the majority of all labour union members; (3) prohibition of unfair labour practices and examination of allegations by the Central Labour Relations Commission; (4) conciliation, mediation and arbitration to be conducted by the Central Labour Relations Commission (including compulsory arbitration); and (5) when a collective agreement entered into requires legislative reform, the Cabinet shall be obliged to submit relevant bills to the Diet or enact or revise relevant cabinet orders. The Committee notes that the Government also indicates that the Bill for Establishment of the Civil Service Office aims at centralizing the personnel administration functions by creating a civil service office responsible for the overall management of personnel and the remuneration system as well as for undertaking negotiations with labour unions as the employer. Another bill was introduced to suppress the National Personnel Authority and its recommendation functions. The Committee notes that, throughout the abovementioned process, the Government held consultations with employees' organizations including JTUC–RENGO, RENGO–PSLC, ZENROREN and the National Public Service Employee's Unions (KOKKOROREN) at various levels.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that a similar framework has been proposed for local public service employees in the Basic concept of the Labour–Employer Relations System for Local Public Service Employees released by the Cabinet on 2 June 2011 with the following adjustments: (1) exclusion of personnel with restrictions on the right to organize, personnel making important administrative decisions, and personnel working at local public enterprises, etc.; (2) certification by the Prefectural Labour Relations Commission requires that the majority of the members of the union are local public service personnel belonging to the same local government; and (3) relief system overseen by the Prefectural Labour Relations Commission against unfair labour practices shall be established and the Personnel Commission recommendation functions shall be abolished.

The Committee observes that, according to JTUC–RENGO, although the Reform Bills were not brought under deliberation during the 177th ordinary session of the Diet, which ended at the end of August 2011, the Government's reaction is a historical step towards opening the possibility of restoring fundamental workers' rights and has important significance in pushing toward problem-solving. JTUC–RENGO also indicates that the bills regarding local public service employees are expected to be submitted to the Diet as early as possible in order to implement them simultaneously with those for national public service employees and to promote smooth deliberation of all bills. The Committee further observes that ZENROREN has expressed its lack of satisfaction with the consultation process and finds the bills unsatisfactory, in particular the requirement for prior certification of trade unions, exclusion of control and management matters from the subjects for collective bargaining and requirement for the approval of the collective agreement by the Cabinet Council prior to its signing and also that it calls for a more binding system of redress for unfair labour practices taking into account that anti-union discrimination has been persistent in the civil service for over 30 years.

The Committee expects that the necessary steps will be taken in the very near future so as to ensure collective bargaining rights in the national and local public service with the possible exceptions of public servants engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will be in a position to report on concrete progress made in this respect in its next report and requests the Government to provide copies of the bills and indicate their status in its next report.

While taking into account ZENROREN's claim that the Government unilaterally presented a bill on the reduction of state personnel expenditure allowing it to reduce the salaries of civil servants beyond the NPA recommendations despite the opposition of some employee's organizations, the Committee notes that the Government states in its report that, for the period until the realization of an autonomous labour-employer relations system, measures for reducing personnel expenses will be examined and bills will be submitted taking into consideration the severe financial national situation. The Government indicates that the Great East Japan Earthquake on 11 March 2011 pressed the Government to further reduce annual expenditures because of the necessity to respond for recovery efforts and the Government decided to introduce, at the same time as the Reforms Bills, a Bill of Temporary Special Provisions on Remuneration for National Public Service reducing the remuneration of national public service employees as a special temporary measure to cut expenses until the new labour relations framework is operational. The Government further indicates that due to the exceptional character of the measure, negotiations were held with the Liaison Conference of National Public Service Employees' Unions ("Liaison Conference") affiliated with JTUC-RENGO, and KOKKOROREN, but agreement was only reached with the Liaison Conference. The Committee observes that JTUC-RENGO states that sincere consultations were held with the Government and the Alliance of Public Service Workers Unions (APU) regarding a new system of revision of wages of national public service employees through negotiation, which was included in the Reform Bills. Although the Committee understands that many of the measures taken by the Government were intended to remedy the consequences of the earthquake, the Committee expects that, until the new legislation is adopted and implemented, the Government will refrain from taking unilateral measures affecting negatively the remuneration and working conditions of public employees and will continue to examine measures in the context of the current dialogue over the civil service reform, aimed at giving a primary role to collective bargaining so that workers and their organizations may be able to participate fully and meaningfully in designing the overall bargaining framework.

Article 6. Application of the Convention to public servants. Taking note that, according to JTUC-RENGO, the translation of Article 6 of the Convention into Japanese is problematic as "public servants engaged in the administration of the State" was translated by komuin (public servants), the Committee recalls that it has adopted a restrictive approach with regard to the exclusion by the Convention of some categories of public servants from its scope. The distinction must be drawn between, on the one hand, public servants who by their functions are directly employed in the administration of the State (for example, in some countries, civil servants employed in Government ministries and other comparable bodies as well as ancillary staff who may be excluded from the scope of the Convention) and, on the other hand, all other persons employed by the Government, by public enterprises or by autonomous public institutions who should benefit from the guarantees provided for in the Convention and therefore be able to negotiate collectively their conditions of employment including wages (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraphs 199, 200 and 262). The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take appropriate measures to ensure that all public servants except those engaged in the administration of the State can effectively exercise their rights under the Convention.

Jordan

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, which refer to matters previously raised by the Committee and matters concerning the trade union rights of teachers and migrant workers, as well as the observations provided by the Government in a communication dated 28 November 2011.

Scope of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee had referred to the exclusion of migrant workers, domestic workers and certain classes of agricultural workers from the provisions of the Labour Code, and had noted with interest the Government's statement that it had formulated amendments to the Jordanian Labour Code so as to include migrant workers, domestic workers, and all categories of agricultural workers within the scope of the Labour Code's provisions, and that the draft amendments had been referred to the Council of Ministers in order to initiate the process of adoption. In this respect, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that amendments to the Labour Code of 1996 were adopted in Law No. 26 of 2010. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that all workers are now covered by the Labour Code with respect to freedom of association as the amendments authorized non-Jordanian workers to affiliate to trade unions.

In respect of foreign workers, the Committee notes with interest that section 25 of Law No. 26 of 2010 no longer requires Jordanian nationality for membership in trade unions and employers' associations. However, this section maintains the requirement that founding members should be Jordanian nationals. The Committee concludes that, under this new legislation, the right to organize of foreign workers does not seem fully guaranteed as they are not authorized to participate in the establishment of a trade union or an employers' association as founding members or maybe even as leaders. The Committee requests the Government to provide clarification in this respect in its next report and, if necessary, to take measures to amend this provision in order to fully guarantee the right of foreign workers to be founding members and leaders of trade unions and employers' associations.

The Committee also observes that section 3 of the Labour Code which excludes domestic workers and some agricultural workers – many of them being foreigners – from coverage does not seem to have been amended by Law

No. 26 of 2010 and that no provisions extending the guarantees of the Convention to domestic workers and agricultural workers could be identified in this law. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in response to the ITUC comments, that domestic workers, cooks, gardeners and their dependents as well as agriculture workers were included in the scope of application of the Labour Code pursuant to section 3(b) of Act No. 48 of 2008 amending the Labour Code and the Laws Nos 89 and 90 of 2009, as well as that specific instructions were issued to strengthen the protection of the rights of these workers, including foreign workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide clarification in its next report in this regard and to provide the relevant legislation, including the 2008 amendments of the Labour Code.

The Committee further notes that the new section 98(f) of the Labour Code, introduced by Law No. 26 of 2010 specifies that "(f) To apply for membership in a trade union, the applicant shall be at least 18 years of age". The Committee considers that this provision restricts the trade union rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to ensure the right to organize to minors, either as workers or trainees, and to provide information on measures contemplated or adopted in this respect in its next report.

Article 2. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to adopt legislative provisions providing for rapid appeal procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against acts of interference. The Government indicates, in this regard, that this matter has been taken into consideration in the Labour Code's amendments which include a clear text on prohibiting workers' and employers' organizations' interference by each other directly or indirectly, in their establishment, functioning or administration as well as sufficient dissuasive sanctions.

The Committee takes notes with interest of this information and observes that section 97(c) of the Labour Code as amended by Law No. 11 of 2004 effectively prohibits acts of interference. It further observes, however, that sanctions in cases of infringement are fines between 50 and 100 Jordanian dinar (JOD) (US$70–140) as provided under section 139 of the Labour Code of 1996. The Committee considers that the amount of the fines does not have a dissuasive effect and requests the Government to take measures in full consultation with the most representative organizations of workers and of employers in order to strengthen these sanctions.

Article 6. Right to collective bargaining. Finally taking into account the ITUC comments, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legal provisions concerning the right to collective bargaining in the public sector, including in the public service.

Kazakhstan

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend its legislation so as to ensure the right to organize of judges (article 23(2) of the Constitution and section 11(4) of the Law on Public Associations). The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that under article 23(1) of the Constitution, judges, like other citizens, have the right to freely associate for the purpose of exercising and defending their collective interests, provided that they do not use such associations to influence the administration of justice or for political purposes. The Government argues that the prohibition under article 23(2) of the Constitution, which prevents judges from forming political parties and trade unions, does not restrict the right of judges to join public non-commercial associations. It refers, in particular, to the existence of the Union of Judges of the Republic of Kazakhstan. The Committee notes from the information available to it that this organization pursues such objectives as: strengthening of the judicial independence; provision of social security system and development of judicial self-administration; participation in discussions on court practice and improvement of legislation, etc. The Committee considers that while the Union of Judges acts for the purpose of protection of interests of the judicial community, it is not a workers' organization in the sense of Convention No. 87. The Committee once again recalls that the only exceptions authorized by the Convention are the members of the police and armed forces and that the functions exercised by judges shall not justify their exclusion from the right to organize. It therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend its legislation so as to ensure that judges, like other workers, can establish organizations for furthering and defending their interests in line with the Convention and to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to specify the categories of workers covered by the term "law enforcement bodies" whose right to organize is restricted under article 23(2) of the Constitution. The Committee had also requested the Government to ensure that fire service personnel and prison staff enjoy the right to organize. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the term "law enforcement bodies" includes employees of home affairs bodies, the criminal justice system, financial police, the state fire service, customs and the Public Prosecution's Office. The Government clarifies, however, that civilians working in the law enforcement bodies enjoy all the rights guaranteed by the Convention. While noting this information, the Committee once again recalls that firefighters and prison staff should enjoy the right to organize. It therefore once again requests the Government to ensure that these categories of workers are guaranteed the right to establish and join organizations for furthering and defending their interests and requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Right to establish organizations without previous authorization. The Committee had previously noted that pursuant to section 10(1) of the Law on Public Associations, applicable to employers' organizations, a minimum of ten persons is required to establish an employers' organization, and had requested the Government to amend its legislation so as to lower this requirement. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that a public association may be established at the initiative of no less than ten citizens. It therefore once again requests the Government to indicate measures taken or envisaged to amend its legislation so as to lower this minimum membership requirement in as far as it applies to employers' organizations.

With regard to the Committee's previous request to provide observations on comments of the International Trade Union Confederation referring to the allegedly high trade union registration cost, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the cost of registration of a trade union in 2010 was 9,184 tenge (KZT) (US$62).

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend section 289 of the Labour Code so as to ensure the right of trade unions to submit claims to employers without their prior approval by a general meeting of workers. It further requested the Government to amend section 298(2) of the Code (according to which, a decision to call a strike was taken by a meeting (conference) of workers (their representatives) gathering not less than half the total workforce, and the decision was adopted if not less than two-thirds of those present at the meeting (conference) had voted for it) so as to lower the majority required to call a strike. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report provides no information in this respect. It therefore reiterates its previous requests and expresses the hope that the Government will provide in its next report information on all measures taken or envisaged to amend the above sections of the Labour Code. The Committee also once again requests the Government to indicate whether under section 299(2)(2) of the Code, workers or their organizations can declare a strike for an indefinite period of time.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures, including through amendment of the relevant legislative provisions, in order to ensure that the prohibition of the right to strike is limited only to civil servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government provides clarification on the distinction between "civil service" ("civil servant") and "public service" ("public employee"). Pursuant to the Law on Civil Service, civil servants are employees of state bodies who exercise their official powers for the purpose of implementing the tasks and functions of the State. The Government adds that under section 10(6) of the Law on Civil Service, civil servants may not take part in activities that would hinder the normal functioning of the State, including strike action. Public service, on the other hand, in accordance with section 1 of the Labour Code, is the professional activity of public employees in the exercise of their official powers for the purpose of implementing the tasks and functions of state enterprises and establishments, and providing technical services. The Government adds that while under section 23 of the Labour Code, public employees do not have the right to participate in activities which impede the normal functioning of the public service, this provision does not impose a prohibition of strikes on public servants. The Government emphasizes that the prohibition of strikes applies only to civil servants and not to public servants. The Committee notes that the Law on Civil Service makes a distinction between "political" civil servants and "administrative" civil servants. Recalling that the prohibition of the right to strike should be limited to civil servants exercising authority in the name of the State, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether "administrative" civil servants can exercise the right to strike.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report contains no information on organizations carrying out "dangerous industrial activities" pursuant to section 303(1) of the Labour Code and the categories of workers whose right to strike is restricted accordingly. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to indicate which organizations fall into this category of organizations by providing concrete examples. It further once again requests the Government to indicate all other categories of workers whose right to strike can be restricted by other legislative texts, as stipulated in section 303(5) of the Labour Code, and to provide copies thereof.

With regard to rail and public transport, the Committee had previously noted that according to section 303(2) of the Labour Code, a strike may be held if the necessary range of services, as determined on the basis of a prior agreement with the local executive authorities, is maintained so as the users' basic needs were met or that facilities operated safely or without interruption. In this respect, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 303(2) of the Labour Code so as to ensure that any minimum service is a genuinely and exclusively minimum one and that workers' organizations could participate in its definition. The Committee regrets that the Government's report contains no information in this respect. It therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend section 303(2) of the Labour Code so as to ensure the application of this principle and to indicate in its next report all measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Article 5. Right of organizations to establish federations and confederations and to affiliate with international organizations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take steps to amend section 106 of the Civil Code, as well as article 5 of the Constitution, so as to lift the ban on financial assistance to national trade unions by an international organization. The Committee notes that according to the Government, political parties and trade unions are associations which have a capacity to influence political opinion of the public and state policy in various areas of public life. The Government argues that for this reason, article 5(4) of the Constitution prohibits foreign persons, including international organizations, from funding political parties and trade unions. The Government considers that this provision guards the State's interest's values and security. The Committee recalls that legislation prohibiting the acceptance by a national trade union of financial assistance from an international organization of workers to which it is affiliated infringes the principles concerning the right to affiliate with international organizations of workers, and that all national organizations of workers and employers should have the right to receive financial assistance from international organizations of workers and employers, respectively, whether they are affiliated or not to the latter. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 106 of the Civil Code, as well as article 5 of the Constitution, so as to lift this prohibition, and to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2001)

Scope of the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to specify the categories of workers covered by the term "law enforcement bodies" whose right to organize is restricted under article 23(2) of the Constitution. The Committee had also requested the Government to ensure that fire service personnel and prison staff enjoy the right to organize. The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that the term "law enforcement bodies" includes employees of home affairs bodies, the criminal justice system, financial police, state fire service, customs and the Public Prosecution Office. The Government clarifies, however, that civilians working in the law enforcement bodies enjoy all the rights contained in the Convention. While noting this information, the Committee once again recalls that firefighters and prison staff should enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to ensure that these categories of workers are guaranteed the right to organize and to bargain collectively and requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Article 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee had previously requested the Government to clarify whether sections 150 and 151 of the Criminal Code, providing that cases of interference in the activities of social organizations and interference in the legitimate activities of workers' representatives which are punishable by a penalty equivalent to up to five times monthly wage or imprisonment, applied both the public and private sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that sections 150 and 151 of the Code, apply to both sectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of abovementioned legislative provisions in practice, including copies of the relevant court decisions.

Article 4. Right to collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 282(2) of the Labour Code, regulating collective bargaining procedure at the enterprise level, stipulates that "employees who are not members of a trade union have the right to be represented by either a trade union body or other representatives" and that "when several employees' representatives exist at the undertaking, they may establish a joint representative body" for the purpose of collective bargaining. The Committee requested the Government to amend its legislation so as to ensure that where there exist in the same undertaking both a trade union representative and another representative elected by workers who are not members of any trade union, the existence of the latter is not used to undermine the position of the union in the collective bargaining process. The Committee notes the Government's indication that collective agreements are negotiated by a negotiating commission. The Government explains that worker members of such commissions are designated by a decision of a trade union committee or a meeting (conference) of workers when they are represented by other workers' representatives. The Committee therefore recalls that allowing other workers' representatives to bargain collectively, when there is a representative trade union in the undertaking, could not only undermine the position of the trade union concerned, but also infringe upon the rights guaranteed under Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee reiterates its previous request and expresses the hope that the Government's next report will contain information on the measures taken in this respect.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 91 of the Code on Administrative Breaches (2001), under which, unfounded refusal to conclude a collective agreement is punished by a fine. The Committee notes that the Government confirms that this legislative provision is in force. Recalling that legislation, which imposes an obligation to achieve a result, particularly when sanctions are used in order to ensure that an agreement is concluded, is contrary to the principle of free and voluntary negotiation, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 91 of the Code in practice.

Kiribati

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted with interest that the Kiribati Tripartite Committee drafted, with the assistance of the ILO, several amendments to national labour laws in order to give effect to the Committee's previous comments. The Committee noted, in particular that, upon adoption of the Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations Amendment Bill, section 21 of the Trade Union and Employers' Organizations Act, will be amended by introducing a comprehensive guarantee of the right to organize for all workers and employers. Moreover, upon adoption of the Industrial Relations Code Amendment Bill, section 39 of the Industrial Relations Code will be amended so that a strike decision can be adopted upon approval by a majority of employees who voted in the ballot. These amendments have been recently approved in the first reading by Parliament. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of progress made in the adoption of these amendments to section 21 of the Trade Union and Employers' Organizations Act and section 39 of the Industrial Relations Code.

The Committee also noted, however, that certain issues have not been addressed yet or are still under consideration.

Article 2 of the Convention. Minimum membership requirement. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 7 of the Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations Act so as to lower the minimum membership requirement for the registration of an employers' organization which is set at seven members. The Committee noted, from the Government's report, that due note has been taken of this comment, which is currently under review by the Ministry of Labour, the Kiribati Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Kiribati Trade Union Congress; the Government will inform the Committee on the outcome and measures taken as a result of these discussions. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the outcome of consultations and to indicate in its next report any measures taken or contemplated with a view to amending section 7 of the Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations Act so as to lower the minimum membership requirement for the registration of an employers' organization.

Right of public employees to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee had previously noted that section L.1 of the National Conditions of Service provides that all employees are free to join a "recognized" staff association or union and had requested the Government to amend this section, given that there is no provision in the law relating to the recognition of trade unions. The Committee noted the Government's indication that due note has been taken of this comment which is currently under review with the social partners and the Committee will be kept informed of the outcome and measures taken as a result of these discussions. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the outcome of consultations and to indicate in its next report any measures taken or contemplated with a view to amending section L.1 of the National Conditions of Service so as to remove the reference to "recognized" staff associations or unions.

Article 3. Right of employers' and workers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules, elect their representatives in full freedom, organize their administration and activities and formulate their programmes. Right to elect representatives freely. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that there is no provision in the law regarding the right of workers and employers to elect their representatives. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the current practice in which workers and employers elect their representatives, on the basis of their freely drawn constitution, is in line with the Convention. The Government added that it has taken due note of the Committee's comment which is currently under review by the social partners and the Committee will be kept informed of the outcome and measures taken as a result of these discussions. The Committee took due note of this information.

Compulsory arbitration. In a previous direct request, the Committee had requested the Government to amend sections 8(1)(d), 12, 27 and 28 of the Industrial Relations Code so as to limit the possibility of prohibiting strikes and imposing compulsory arbitration only to those cases which would be in conformity with the Convention. The Committee noted from the Government's report that section 12 will be amended upon adoption of the draft Industrial Relations Amendment Bill through addition of a new section 12(A)(1) according to which the registrar may only refer a trade dispute to an arbitration tribunal if: (a) all the parties to the dispute request such referral; (b) the dispute is in the public services involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (c) industrial action has been protracted or is tending to endanger or has endangered the personal health, safety or welfare of the community or part of it; (d) conciliation has failed and the parties are unlikely to resolve the dispute.

In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that compulsory arbitration is acceptable under the Convention only at the request of both parties to the dispute, in essential services in the strict sense of the term, and for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The existence of protracted disputes (subsection(c)) and the failure of conciliation (subsection (d)) are not per se elements which justify the introduction of compulsory arbitration. Furthermore, the word "welfare" introduced in relation to essential services (subsection (c)) may include issues which go beyond the health and safety of the population in a strict sense and, in that case, would be contrary to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to amend the Draft Industrial Relations Amendment Bill so as to remove subsection (d) from draft section 12(A)(1)(d), as well as the reference to protracted industrial action and the "welfare of the community" from draft section 12(A)(1)(c) with a view to ensuring that compulsory arbitration is possible only where this is in conformity with the Convention.

Furthermore, concerning the conciliation and mediation machinery, the Committee considers that it should have the sole purpose of facilitating bargaining: it should not be so complex or slow that a lawful strike becomes impossible in practice or loses its effectiveness (see General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraph 171). The Committee observes in this regard that there are no specific time limits in the Industrial Relations Code for the exhaustion of conciliation proceedings and that sections 8(1)(a), (b), (c) and 9(1)(a) give the Registrar and the Minister the power to prolong the negotiation, conciliation and settlement procedure at their discretion, without any fixed time limits, while according to section 27(1), a strike which takes place before the exhaustion of procedures prescribed for the settlement of trade disputes, shall be unlawful. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated to ensure that specific time limits are introduced in the Industrial Relations Code so that the mediation and conciliation procedure is not so complex or slow that a lawful strike becomes impossible in practice.

Sanctions for strike action/essential services. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to lift the provision in section 37 of the Industrial Relations Code which has the effect of prohibiting industrial action and imposing heavy penalties including imprisonment in cases where a strike might "expose valuable property to the risk of destruction". The Committee notes with interest that the draft Industrial Relations Amendment Bill will amend section 37 of the Industrial Relations Code so as to lift this provision. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the adoption of the Draft Industrial Relations Amendment Bill with a view to removing the provision of section 37 of the Industrial Relations Code which imposes heavy penalties including imprisonment for strikes in case they "expose valuable property to the risk of destruction".

The Committee also recalls that in its previous comments, it had requested the Government to amend section 37 of the Industrial Relations Code which imposes penalties of imprisonment and heavy fines for strikes in essential services. The Committee noted from the Government's report that the draft Industrial Relations Amendment Bill will amend section 37 of the Industrial Relations Code so as to increase the relevant fines from $100 to $1,000 for strikes in essential services and from $500 to $2,000 for inciting others to participate in a strike in essential services; at the same time, the prison sentences of one year and 18 months, respectively, for strikes in essential services and incitement to participate, therein, have apparently not been amended.

The Committee further recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend section 30 of the Industrial Relations Code, which imposes sanctions of imprisonment and heavy fines against unlawful strikes in general. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the prison sentences have been lifted in the draft Industrial Relations Amendment Bill but that the applicable fines have been increased to $1,000 from $100 in case of participation in an unlawful strike and have remained at $2,000 in case of incitement to participate in an unlawful strike.

In this respect, the Committee recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and therefore, measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. Nevertheless, even in the absence of violence, if the strike modalities had the effect of making the strike illegitimate, proportionate disciplinary sanctions may be imposed against strikers. The Committee requests the Government to review the draft Industrial Relations Amendment Bill so as to amend sections 30 and 37 of the Industrial Relations Code in the manner indicated above.

Articles 5 and 6. Right to establish and join federations and confederations and to affiliate with international organizations of workers and employers. In its previous comments, the Committee requested information on the provisions which guarantee the right of workers' and employers' organizations to join federations and confederations of their own choice and to affiliate with international organizations of workers and employers. The Committee noted from the Government's report that the draft Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations Amendment Bill will amend section 21(2) of the Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations Act, 1998, so as to provide that workers' and employers' organizations shall have the right to join a federation of trade unions or a federation of employers' organizations and to affiliate with and participate in the affairs of any international workers' organization and to contribute to or receive financial assistance from those organizations. The Committee considers that the term "international workers' and employers' organizations" would be more appropriate than "international workers' organizations" given that the right to affiliate with international organizations should be guaranteed not only to workers' but also to employers' organizations. It, therefore, requests the Government to amend the draft Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations Amendment Bill and to keep it informed of progress made in the adoption of the Bill with a view to introducing provisions guaranteeing the right of employers' and workers' organizations to establish federations and to affiliate with international organizations of their own choosing.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted with interest from the Government's report that the Kiribati tripartite committee drafted, with the assistance of the ILO, several amendments to national labour laws in order to give effect to the Committee's previous comments. The Committee also noted, however, that certain issues had not yet been addressed in the draft or are still under consideration.

Application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 3 of the Industrial Relations Code excludes prison officers from the application of the provision concerning collective labour disputes and reminded the Government that prison officers should enjoy the rights and guarantees enshrined in the Convention. The Committee noted from the Government's report that due note had been taken of this comment which is currently under review by the Ministry of Labour, the Kiribati Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Kiribati Trade Union Congress. The Government will inform the Committee on the outcome and measures taken as a result of these discussions. The Committee hopes that the discussions will lead to the amendment of section 3 of the Industrial Relations Code so that prison officers are not excluded from the rights and guarantees enshrined in the Convention.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that protection against acts of anti-union discrimination existed only at the time of hiring, and requested the Government to take measures to amend the legislation so as to ensure comprehensive protection against such acts during the employment relationship and at the time of dismissal. The Committee had also requested the Government to take measures so that the legislation includes express provisions for appeals and establishes sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination for membership or participation in the activities of a trade union.

The Committee noted from the text of the draft Act to Amend the Trade Unions and Employer Organisations Act, 1998, that section 21 of the Trade Unions and Employer Organisations Act is to be amended by adding a subsection (3) according to which "nothing contained in any law shall prohibit any worker from being or becoming a member of any trade union, or cause a worker to be dismissed or otherwise prejudiced by reason of that worker's membership or participation in the activities of a trade union". Furthermore, according to subsection (4) no employer shall make it a condition of employment of any worker to neither be nor become a member of a trade union and any such condition in any contract of employment shall be void. The Committee also noted that according to subsection (5), "[a]ny employer who contravenes subsection (4) ... shall be liable to a fine not exceeding US$1,000 and to a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months". The Committee noted that, whereas sufficiently dissuasive sanctions were provided for in relation to subsection (4), no sanctions were established in relation to a violation of subsection (3). The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken in order to modify the provisions of the draft Act to Amend the Trade Unions and Employer Organisations Act, 1998, so that sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are imposed where a worker is dismissed or otherwise prejudiced because of his or her trade union membership or participation in the activities of a trade union.

Articles 2 and 3. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, in the national legislation, no specific legal provisions dealt with the issue of mutual interference between employers' and workers' organizations and that there were no rapid procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against acts of interference by employers against workers and workers' organizations. The Committee noted from the Government's report that due note had been taken of this comment which is currently under review by the Ministry of Labour, the Kiribati Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Kiribati Trade Union Congress. The Government will inform the Committee on the outcome and measures taken as a result of these discussions. The Committee hopes that the review currently under way will lead to measures to modify the draft Act to Amend the Trade Unions and Employer Organisations Act, 1998, so as to introduce provisions which ensure adequate protection against acts of interference in the establishment and functioning of trade unions as well as rapid procedures and dissuasive sanctions in this respect, in accordance with Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention.

Article 4. The Committee noted with interest, that upon adoption of the Trade Unions and Employer Organisations Amendment Bill, section 41 of the Industrial Relations Code would be amended by introducing a comprehensive guarantee of the right to engage in collective bargaining over wages, terms and conditions of employment, the relations between the parties and other matters of mutual interest; this guarantee will apply to every trade union or group of trade unions and also cover public servants under the national conditions of service. Moreover, the amendment provides that regulations may be made generally for the effective exercise of the right to collective bargaining, recognition of most representative organizations and the regulation of collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the progress made in the adoption of the draft amendment to section 41 of the Industrial Relations Code. It further requests the Government to specify the provisions which guarantee this right to federations and confederations and to indicate in the future any regulations adopted to promote the effective exercise of the right to collective bargaining.

Furthermore, the Committee's previous comments concerned sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 14 and 19 of the Industrial Relations Code, which allow referral of any trade dispute to compulsory arbitration at the request of one party or by decision of the authorities. The Committee is addressing this issue under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Liberia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in communications dated 29 August 2008 and 24 August 2010 concerning the application of the Convention and, more particularly, allegations of serious violence against strikers and the closure of a trade union radio station. Noting that in previous comments, the ITUC had already referred to threats, arrest and prosecution of strikers, the Committee recalls that all appropriate measures should be taken by the Government to guarantee that trade union rights can be exercised in safe and secure conditions and in a climate free of violence, pressure, fear and threats of any kind. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in reply to all the abovementioned allegations of the ITUC in its next report.

In its previous observation, the Committee had recalled that, for many years, it had been asking the Government to take the necessary steps to amend or repeal the following provisions, which were inconsistent with Articles 2, 3, 5 and 10 of the Convention:

- Section 4601-A of the Labour Practices Law prohibiting agricultural workers from joining industrial workers' organizations;
- Section 4102, subsections 10 and 11, of the Labour Practices Law providing for the supervision of trade union elections by the Labour Practices Review Board; and
- Section 4506 of the Labour Practices Law prohibiting workers in state enterprises and the public service from establishing trade unions.

The Committee had also noted that Decree No. 12 of 30 June 1980 prohibiting strikes had been repealed. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that a new Labour Code – titled Decent Work Bill (2009) – has been drafted but still needs to be finalized and that a copy of it will be attached to the next report. More particularly, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) Chapter 9, Part Two of the Decent Work Bill attempts to fully address the issues surrounding strikes and lockouts; and (ii) issues arising under sections 4506 and 4601-A of the Labour Practices Law are addressed in Chapter 2 (section 6(a)) of the Decent Work Bill which provides that "all employers and workers, without distinction whatsoever, may establish and join organizations of their own choosing without prior authorization, and subject only to the rules of the organization concerned". The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Decent Work Bill will be enacted in the very near future and will repeal all the provisions of the legislation that had previously been identified as in violation of ILO Conventions, including section 4102 of the Labour Practices Law.

The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report information on any development in this respect, as well as a copy of the Decent Work Bill once adopted and of the law which repealed Decree No. 12 of 30 June 1980 prohibiting strikes.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), in a communication dated 24 August 2010, on the application of the Convention, in particular as regards the failure to implement a collective agreement on the living and working conditions of workers in rubber plantations and other issues previously raised by the Committee. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon in its next report.

In its previous observation, the Committee, noting that a new Labour Code – entitled the Decent Work Bill – was being finalized, had expressed the hope that this reform process would take into full consideration the matters it had been commenting upon for many years, which concern the need for:

- legislation guaranteeing to workers adequate protection against anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment and during the employment relationship, accompanied by sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions;
- legislation guaranteeing to workers' organizations adequate protection against acts of interference by employers and their organizations, including sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions; and
- legislation guaranteeing the right to collective bargaining to employees in state-owned enterprises and public servants who are not public officials engaged in the administration of the State.

In its previous observation, the Committee had noted that, according to the Government, the Decent Work Bill will fully protect the workers and their organizations against anti-union discrimination both at the time of recruitment and during the employment relationship, as well as against acts of interference by the employers and their organizations, and will also ensure the right to collective bargaining of state-owned enterprise employees. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Decent Work Bill will give full effect to the Convention in line with its comments abovementioned, including that concerning the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, and requests the Government to provide a copy of the Decent Work Bill once adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Malawi

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), dated 4 August 2011.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under sections 45(3) and 47 of the Labour Relations (Amendment) Bill, 2006 (LRA 2006), in cases of strikes or lockouts, the parties may at any time apply to the Industrial Relations Court for a determination as to whether a threatened or actual strike or lockout involves an essential service. In this respect, the Government indicated that the social partners considered that a clear list of what should be considered an essential service under the Labour Relations Act (LRA) should be established and that a provision had been included in the LRA 2006 for the establishment of a subcommittee of the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council mandated to determine a list of essential services under the LRA. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on any development concerning the establishment and composition of the subcommittee and the advancement of its work. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that consultations with the social partners regarding the establishment of the subcommittee and the start of its work are in progress. The Committee requests the Government to transmit the final version of the LRA 2006 with its next report as well as detailed information on any development concerning the establishment of the subcommittee of the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council and the start of its work.

Mali

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes the comments dated 4 August 2011 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning, in particular, the matters examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) (Case No. 2756). It notes the conclusions and recommendations of the CFA relating to this case (see 359th Report), especially the recommendation requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to allow the Confederation of Workers' Union of Mali (CSTM) to participate in those tripartite consultation bodies in which it has expressed interest and the recommendation requesting the Government to organize as soon as possible the occupational elections provided for in the Labour Code, taking into account the principles of freedom of association.

The Committee endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association. Underlining the importance of these issues, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any further developments in this regard.

Malta

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide any new information in respect of its previous observation.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under section 74(1) and (3) of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act 2002 (EIRA), where disputes have been referred to conciliation to promote an amicable settlement of a trade dispute and conciliation has not resulted in a settlement, one of the parties may notify the Minister and the Minister shall refer the dispute to the Tribunal for settlement.

The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute is only accepted if it is at the request of both parties involved in a dispute, or in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely those services whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. In this respect, the Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 74(1) and (3) of the EIRA to ensure the respect of these principles. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard and to indicate in its next report any measures taken to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide information on the specific issues raised. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to indicate the procedures applicable for the examination of allegations of anti-union dismissals by public officers, port workers and public transport workers given that those categories are excluded from the jurisdiction of the industrial tribunal pursuant to section 75(1) of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act 2002 (EIRA). The Committee had noted from the Government's report that public officers have the right to appeal to the Public Service Commission, an independent body (the members are appointed by the President of Malta acting on the advice of the Prime Minister given after a consultation with the Leader of the Opposition and they cannot be removed except for inability or misbehaviour causes) established under section 109 of the Constitution of Malta. The Committee also notes from the Government's report that the Public Service Commission's primary role is to ensure that disciplinary action taken against public officers is fair, prompt and effective. The Committee requests the Government to indicate, with regard to cases of anti-union dismissal, whether the Public Service Commission is empowered to grant such compensatory relief – including reinstatement and back pay awards – as to constitute sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee also once again requests the Government to indicate the procedures applicable for the examination of allegations of anti-union dismissals of port workers and public transport workers.

Articles 2 and 3. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated so as to introduce in the legislation an explicit prohibition of acts of interference, as well as sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts given that the EIRA does not expressly protect employers' and workers' organizations from acts of interference by one another, in each other's affairs. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate in its next report, the measures taken or contemplated so as to introduce in the legislation an explicit prohibition of acts of interference, as well as sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts.

Article 4. Collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated with a view to amending section 6 of the National Holidays and Other Public Holidays Act, so as to ensure that this provision: (i) does not render automatically null and void any provisions in existing collective agreements which grant workers the right to recover public holidays falling on a Saturday or Sunday; and (ii) does not preclude voluntary negotiations in the future over the issue of granting workers the right to recover national or public holidays which fall on a Saturday or Sunday on the basis of a collective agreement (see 342nd Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association, Case No. 2447, paragraph 752). The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or contemplated with a view to amending section 6 of the National Holidays and Other Public Holidays Act.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Myanmar

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1955)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 31 August 2011.

The Committee further notes the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards of June 2011. The Committee notes, in particular, that the Conference Committee noted with great concern the continued failure by the Government, over several years, to eliminate serious discrepancies in the application of the Convention. The Committee further observes that an article 26 of the ILO Constitution complaint in relation to the application of this Convention is pending for decision before the Governing Body.

Legislative framework. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled the issues it has been raising over the years with respect to the complete absence of a legislative framework in which the rights under the Convention can be exercised. The Committee recalls that it had not only urged the Government to adopt legislation which would enable workers to freely establish the organization of their own choosing, but had also emphasized the urgent need to repeal a number of legal texts, which continue to seriously impinge upon the freedom of association rights in the country.

The Committee notes with interest from the Government's report that, following advice from the ILO, the Labour Organizations Law was adopted by the Parliament (Hluttaw) on 16 September 2011 and signed and enacted by the President on 11 October 2011. The Committee observes that the Law contains provisions on the establishment of labour organizations, their functions and duties, rights and responsibilities, including the right to strike. Moreover, it notes with interest that the law provides for the repeal of the 1926 Trade Union Act. It further understands that a Bill proposing the repeal of the 1964 Law Defining the Fundamental Rights and Responsibilities of the People's Workers is before the Parliament.

The Committee expresses the firm expectation that the Labour Organizations Law will come into force immediately and be applied in practice so as to ensure to all workers in the country the long-awaited legal framework in which they may exercise the rights set out in the Convention.

As regards the provisions of the new legislation, recalling that, under Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention, trade union diversity must remain possible in all cases (General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, 1994, paragraphs 91–93), the Committee observes with concern that the English translation of the legislation appears to refer to a single labour confederation (sections 6, 7, 11, 12, and 14). The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether more than one confederation may indeed be formed and recognized under the new Labour Organizations Law.

The Committee further observes with concern that section 40(b) appears to enable the exercise of strike action only following the approval from “the relevant labour federation”. The Committee considers that the right to strike should not be subjected to legislative restrictions which would place the authority to permit strike action with higher-level workers' organizations regardless of the rules of the organizations concerned or the affiliation of the lower-level organization. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken to amend this section so as to ensure the right of all workers' organizations, including at the basic level, to organize their activities and formulate their programmes in full freedom.

In addition, the Committee observes with concern that section 26 provides that the basic labour organization shall allocate monthly contributions to the higher labour organizations, federations and confederation as prescribed by the relevant labour federation. Recalling that Article 3 of the Convention protects the right of workers' and employers' organizations to organize their administration without interference by the public authorities includes in particular their autonomy and financial independence and the protection of their assets and property, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend this section so as to ensure that the transmission of funds to a higher-level worker's organization is a matter wholly for determination by the organizations themselves and without any legislative or other intervention on the part of the Government.

The Committee will address the new Labour Organizations Law in more detail at its next meeting when it expects further information to be provided by the Government in its report due on the manner in which the Law is implemented in practice and on the adoption of any relevant regulations or instructions.

The Committee further recalls its previous comments in relation to the broad exclusionary clause of article 354 of the Constitution which subjects the exercise of freedom of association rights “to the laws enacted for State security, prevalence of law and order, community peace and tranquillity or public order and morality”. The Committee expresses the firm expectation that with the entering into force of the Labour Organizations Law the Government will take all necessary steps to ensure that this article is not used to permit restrictions on the rights consecrated in the Convention and requests the Government to provide all relevant information on the practical application of the Labour Organizations Law.

Finally, the Committee recalls its previous comments with respect to the following legal texts: (i) Order No. 6/88 of 30 September 1988 which provides that “organizations shall apply for permission to form to the Ministry of Home and Religious Affairs” (section 3(a)), and states that any person found guilty of being a member of, or aiding and abetting, or using the paraphernalia of, organizations that are not permitted, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years (section 7); (ii) Order No. 2/88 which prohibits the gathering, walking or marching in procession by a group of five or more people regardless of whether the act is with the intention of creating a disturbance or of committing a crime; (iii) the Unlawful Association Act of 1908 which provides that whoever is a member of an unlawful association, or takes part in meetings of any such association, or contributes or receives or solicits any contribution for the purpose of any such association, or in any way assists the operations of any such association, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which shall not be less than two years and more than three years and shall also be liable to a fine (section 17.1); and (iv) the 1929 Trade Disputes Act which contains numerous prohibitions of the right to strike and empowers the President to refer trade disputes to courts of inquiry or to industrial courts.

In its previous comment, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the Hluttaw would take the necessary measures, after the 2010 elections, to repeal Orders Nos 2/88 and 6/88, the Unlawful Association Act, as well as Declaration No. 1/2006. The Committee observes, however, that, in its latest report, while recalling that these matters are being discussed in the Hluttaw, the Government states that the Orders are important in ensuring law and order and community peace and tranquillity and that the Unlawful Association Act is necessary in protecting against illegal armed forces. The Committee recalls in this regard the serious concerns that it has raised for many years in respect of these texts and their use to imprison workers for their relations with trade unions as observed in complaints before the Committee on Freedom of Association (see Case No. 2591, 349th Report). Further noting the Government's indication before the November 2011 Governing Body that these texts will be repealed once the Bill on Peaceful Assembly and Procession which is before the Parliament is promulgated, the Committee urges the Government to take without delay the necessary measures for the repeal of Orders Nos 2/88 and 6/88 as well as the Unlawful Association Act and Declaration No. 1/2006, so that they may no longer be applied in a manner that would infringe upon the rights of workers' and employers' organizations, and to provide a copy of the Law on Peaceful Assembly and Procession as soon as it is adopted.

Civil liberties. As in its previous observations, the Committee once again notes the shared concern of the Conference Committee concerning the continued imprisonment of many people due to their exercise of freedom of expression and of association, despite repeated calls for their release. The Committee recalls in this regard the Conference Committee's urgent call to the Government to put an end to the practice of persecuting workers or other persons for having contact with workers' organizations and to ensure the immediate release of Thurein Aung, Wai Lin, Nyi Nyi Zaw, Kyaw Kyaw, Kyaw Win and Myo Min, as well as all other persons detained for exercising their basic civil liberties and freedom of association rights. The Committee deeply regrets that the Government only reiterates the information provided in its previous reports that these persons were not workers and states that these persons continue to serve their prison sentence.

The Committee welcomes however the latest information provided by the Government that Myo Aung Thant has been released after serving 13 years in prison for having maintained contacts with the Federation of Trade Unions of Burma (FTUB). The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government that Tin Hla has been provided medical treatment for tuberculosis in Insein Central Prison and is in good health.

The Committee, however, notes with regret that the Government has not provided the information requested in its previous observation in relation to the other persons alleged to be serving sentences for their exercise of freedom of association (Khin Maung Cho (aka Pho Toke), Nyo Win, Kan Myint, Thein Win, Tin Oo, Kyi Thein, Chaw Su Hlaing, U Aung Thein, Khin Maung Win, Ma Khin Mar Soe, Ma Thein Thein Aye, U Aung Moe, and Naw Bey Bey).

The Committee recalls that respect for the right to life and other civil liberties is a fundamental prerequisite for the exercise of the rights contained in the Convention and workers and employers should be able to exercise their freedom of association rights in a climate of complete freedom and security, free from violence and threats. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that while trade unions are expected under Article 8 of the Convention to respect the law of the land, "[t]he law of the land shall not be such as to impair, nor shall it be so applied as to impair, the guarantees provided for in this Convention", the authorities should not interfere with legitimate trade union activities through arbitrary arrest or detention and allegations of criminal conduct should not be used to harass trade unionists by reason of their union membership or activities.

The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to secure the immediate release of Thurein Aung, Wai Lin, Nyi Nyi Zaw, Kyaw Kyaw, Kyaw Win, Myo Min, and all those who have been imprisoned for the exercise of their basic civil liberties and freedom of association rights and to provide detailed information on the steps taken in this regard in its next report and on the whereabouts and health status of all the abovementioned detained workers.

Extension of ILO mandate. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee has once again suggested that the Government accept an extension of ILO presence to cover the matters relating to the Convention. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication in its latest report that an extension of the ILO presence to cover the matters related to the Convention was still not required given that the Labour Organizations Law has been approved and the formation of workers' organizations will proceed from that. The Committee considers however that it is precisely within this new configuration that the Government will be in most need of assistance to effectively ensure that all parties understand the new framework of rights and responsibilities and implement it in the true spirit of the Convention. The Committee therefore once again expresses the firm hope that the Government will be in a position to accept such an extension in the very near future and requests it to provide information on any developments in this respect.

The Committee requests the Government to furnish a detailed report on all concrete measures taken, with the full and genuine participation of workers and employers from all sectors of society regardless of their political views, to implement the Labour Organizations Law and enact any additional measures necessary so that all workers and employers may fully and effectively exercise their rights under the Convention without interference from the public authorities.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)

Article 3 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had asked the Government to amend or repeal section 374(a)–(c) of the Penal Code and section 82 of Ordinance No. 159 of 1964, which prohibited the right to strike by public employees under threat of imprisonment.

The Committee had noted that, in the Government's opinion, the abovementioned provisions are in conformity with the Convention, as they do not prohibit public employees from striking. According to the Government, section 374(a) of the Penal Code refers to imprisonment or fine of a public official in the case when he or she, while performing his or her duties, acts with the aim to cause stagnation or to permit the continuation of stagnation, neglects or refuses to perform labour corresponding to his or her inherent duties as a public official. The Government further indicated that section 82(2) of Ordinance No. 159, which states that punishment may be exacted on public employees who neglect or refuse to perform labour as any good public official is expected to perform is aimed at an individual's refusal to perform his or her duties, and not at collective or individual strikes. The Government further indicated that the Penal Code will not be affected by a revision of the labour legislation as the Penal Code falls under the competency of the Ministry of Justice. However, the Code is currently under evaluation by a special committee established in March 2003. It is estimated that its work will be completed in approximately two years. After the evaluation period, the work on the suggested amendments will commence.

The Committee recalled that, in its 1992 report, the Government acknowledged that strikes by public employees, including teachers in the public sector, were forbidden by law (section 347(a)–(c) of the Penal Code and section 82 of Ordinance No. 159 of 1964), although in practice public employees had resorted to strikes on several occasions and that the local courts had considered such strikes to be legal on condition that they were justified. The Committee recalled that the principle whereby the right to strike may be limited or prohibited in the public service or in essential services would become meaningless if legislation defined the public services or essential services too broadly. The Committee considers that the prohibition should be limited to public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or to services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. Noting that the Government does not provide any information on this issue in its report, the Committee, recalling that in its previous observation, it had noted that the Penal Code was currently under evaluation, once again hopes that the Code, as well as section 82 of Ordinance No. 159, will be reviewed in accordance with the Committee's comments and asks the Government to indicate any progress in this respect. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office if it so wishes.

Nicaragua

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes the comments of 30 August 2011 from the Confederation Trade Union Unification (CUS) of Nicaragua, referring to the dismissal of 1,664 trade union officials in breach of trade union immunity, the elimination of 128 trade union organizations in various government ministries and a prohibition barring some trade union officials from entering public institutions in order to carry on their activities. The Committee requests the Government to send it observations on these matters in its next report.

Niger

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention. Scope of application. Public servants. The Committee notes that magistrates, lecturers and researchers in universities and similar institutions, staff of administrations, services and public establishments of the State that are industrial or commercial in nature, staff of the customs, water and forestry services, and staff of the National Academy of Administration and Magistracy, territorial communities and the parliamentary administration are excluded from the scope of Act No. 2007-26 of 23 July 2007 issuing the General Public Service Regulations (section 41), as amended by Act No. 2008-47 of 24 November 2008. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the legislative provisions which guarantee the application of the provisions of the Convention to these categories of public servants.

Articles 2 and 3. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference against public servants. The Committee notes that section 14 of the General Public Service Regulations provides that public service employees enjoy the rights and freedoms recognized by the Constitution and that they may establish and join professional trade unions and hold office therein under the conditions laid down by the regulations in force. The Committee notes that neither the General Public Service Regulations nor Decree No. 2008-244/PRN/MFP/T of 31 July 2008, implementing Act No. 2007-26 of 23 July 2007 issuing the General Public Service Regulations, contains any provisions which explicitly prohibit acts of anti-union discrimination or interference or which ensure adequate protection for workers' organizations against acts of anti-union discrimination or interference by means of prompt and effective penalties and procedures. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether any regulations are in force which ensure such protection for public servants.

Article 6. Collective bargaining right for public servants. The Committee notes that section 33 of the General Public Service Regulations provides for the existence of a public service advisory council which has competence for examining all general issues relating to the public service. The Committee further notes that, under section 329 of Decree No. 2008-244/PRN/MFP/T of 31 July 2008 implementing the Act issuing the General Public Service Regulations, pending the appointment of the most representative professional organizations of established and contractual public servants, the staff representatives within the public service advisory council, the boards for the promotion and establishment of officials and the disciplinary council are appointed by the minister responsible for the public service in accordance with the relevant provisions relating to branch, category and/or grade. The Committee considers that the determination of the most representative organizations for the purposes of consultation must be undertaken according to precise and objective criteria pre-established in the legislation since such an appraisal should not be left to the discretion of governments so as to avoid any possibility of bias or abuse. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures as soon as possible, by legislative or other means, to ensure that the determination of the representativeness of public service trade unions for consultation purposes is undertaken according to criteria which are in conformity with the principles of freedom of association.

However, the Committee recalls that all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State should not only be consulted in the context of joint committees but also enjoy the right to collective bargaining with respect to their conditions of employment. The Committee requests the Government to take steps to guarantee the right to collective bargaining to these public servants and to provide information on any measures taken towards this end.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 on the application of the Convention, referring in particular to violence against and arrest of union members in the oil and health sectors, as well as police repression of workers participating in meetings and dismissals of strikers. The Committee recalls that the arrest, even if only briefly, of trade union leaders and trade unionists, and of the leaders of employers' organizations, for exercising legitimate activities in relation with their right of association constitutes a violation of the principles of freedom of association. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in this respect, as well as on the 2008 and 2009 ITUC comments.

The Committee further notes the Government's reply to the 2010 comments made by the ITUC, in particular that eight suspects were arrested in connection with the assassination of the Lagos Zonal Chairman of the National Union of Road Transport Workers, that the Government concludes from the police report that the assassination has been carried out as a result of internal squabbles within the trade union leadership and that update on the case will be provided as soon as possible. The Committee requests the Government to provide the updated information referred to as well as detailed information on the results of the investigations being carried out with respect to the serious allegations of violence against trade unionists and on the results of any judicial proceedings in this regard, and, in case of conviction, to ensure that any sentence imposed on the perpetrators is implemented.

The Committee notes the debate which took place within the Conference Committee in June 2011, in particular the request for ILO technical assistance made by the Government representative, and expresses the hope that such assistance will occur in the near future so as to enable the Government to take appropriate measures, in full consultation with the social partners, for the rapid adoption of the necessary legislation to bring the law and practice – including as regards export processing zones (EPZs) – into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has failed to provide the information requested by the Conference Committee on the steps taken in this regard and the legislation adopted.

Article 2 of the Convention. Legislatively imposed trade union monopoly. In its previous comments, the Committee had raised its concern over the legislatively imposed trade union monopoly and in this respect, it requested the Government to amend section 3(2) of the Trade Union Act, which restricts the possibility of other trade unions from being registered where a trade union already exists. The Committee notes that the Government states in its report that the Trade Union (Amendment) Act 2005 has addressed this concern by, inter alia, stating in section 2 that "... membership of a trade union by employees shall be voluntary and no employee shall be forced to join any trade union or be victimized for refusing to join or remain a member", and that union membership is therefore voluntary including in national practice backed by jurisprudence. Observing that section 3(2) of the Trade Union Act has not been amended by the language of the 2005 Trade Union (Amendment) Act, the Committee considers that the maintenance of the restriction in section 3(2) contradicts the voluntary union membership stipulated in section 12(4) of that Act. The Committee reiterates that under Article 2 of the Convention, workers have the right to establish and to join organizations of their own choosing without distinction whatsoever (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 45), and that it is important for workers to be able to establish a new trade union for reasons of independence, effectiveness or ideological choice. It therefore once again requests the Government to amend section 3(2) of the principal Trade Union Act taking into account the aforementioned principles.

Organizing in export processing zones (EPZs). In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's statement that the Federal Ministry of Labour and Productivity is still in discussion with the EPZ authority on the issues of unionization and entry for inspection in the EPZs. The Committee had also noted the ITUC's comments, according to which section 13(1) of the EPZ Authority Decree 1992 makes it difficult for workers to form or join trade unions as it is almost impossible for worker representatives to gain free access to the EPZs. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the Export Processing Zone Act does not preclude unionization and all workers in the EPZs are free to join trade unions and to bargain collectively; (ii) the Government has been in discussion with the EPZs on the issue of accessibility of EPZs to trade union leadership, inter alia at the Oil and Gas Sector Stakeholders Forum held in March 2010 where the EPZs affirmed the intention not to impede trade unionism in the EPZs; and (iii) the Government's desire to eventually nullify the negative impression of an unprotected workforce in the EPZs is captured in Part 111 of the Guidelines on Labour Administration Issues in Contract Staffing/Outsourcing in the Oil and Gas Sector recently published by the Federal Ministry of Labour and Productivity. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest the Government representative's statement before the Conference Committee that the recently issued Ministerial Guidelines seeks to prevent anti-union discrimination against any worker in the EPZs and will remain in force until the Export Processing Zone Law is amended. Taking due note of the efforts made and the commitment of the Government to tackle the issue, the Committee requests the Government to transmit a copy of the abovementioned Ministerial Guidelines and to continue taking the necessary steps, including by amending relevant EPZ legislation, to ensure in the near future that EPZ workers enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing, as provided by the Convention. It further requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that representatives of workers' organizations are granted reasonable access to EPZs.

Organizing in various government departments and services. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 11 of the Trade Union Act, which denied the right to organize to employees in the Customs and Excise Department, the Immigration Department, the Prison Services, the Nigerian Security Printing and Minting Company Limited, the Central Bank of Nigeria, and Nigeria Telecommunications. The Committee noted that this section was not amended by the Trade Union (Amendment) Act. The Committee had noted that according to the Government's statement, the Collective Labour Relations Bill, pending before the lower chamber of Parliament would address this issue. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's Report, section 11 is retained in the interest of the nation, but there currently exist Joint Consultative Committees functioning in similar and correlative capacities as trade unions, and, in a further effort to address the issue, the Collective Labour Relations Bill which is in its final stage of being passed into law would concisely proffer local remedy for the concern. The Committee cannot but regret the Government's intention to retain section 11 of the Trade Union Act "in the interest of the nation". The Committee once again recalls that workers, without distinction whatsoever, shall have the right to establish and to join organizations of their choosing and that the only exceptions authorized by the Convention are members of the police and armed forces, who should be defined in a restrictive manner and should not include, for example, civilian workers in the manufacturing establishments of the armed forces. Furthermore, the functions exercised by employees of customs and excise, immigration, prisons and preventive services should not justify their exclusion from the right to organize on the basis of Article 9 of the Convention (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraphs 55 and 56). The Committee therefore urges the Government to reconsider its position and take the necessary measures to amend section 11 of the Trade Union Act, so as to ensure conformity with the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to send a copy of the Collective Labour Relations Act, once it is adopted.

Minimum membership requirement. The Committee had previously expressed its concern over section 3(1) of the Trade Union Act requiring 50 workers to establish a trade union. The Committee considered that even though this minimum membership would be permissible for industry trade unions, it could have the effect of hindering the establishment of enterprise organizations, particularly in small enterprises. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 3(1)(a) applies to the registration of national unions, and that at the enterprise level, there is no limit to the number of people to establish a trade union. Taking note of this information, the Committee requests the Government, for the purpose of clarification, to take measures to amend section 3(1) to ensure that this requirement does not apply to the establishment of trade unions at the enterprise level.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate programmes without interference from the public authorities. Export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that workers in EPZs have the right to freely organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes without interference by the public authorities, including through the exercise of industrial action. The Committee notes that the Government confines itself to restating its earlier position that the EPZ authority is not opposed to trade union activities and that the Federal Ministry of Labour and Productivity is still in discussion on this issue. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its previous request and expects that the necessary measures will be taken without delay so as to ensure that workers in EPZs enjoy the rights under the Convention.

Administration of organizations. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it had requested the Government to amend sections 39 and 40 of the Trade Union Act in order to limit the broad powers of the registrar to supervise the union accounts at any time and to ensure that such a power was limited to the obligation of submitting periodic financial reports, or in order to investigate a complaint. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the provisions of the new labour legislation on this issue will be made available when passed into law. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Collective Labour Relations Act will fully take into account its comments and will be adopted without delay.

Right to strike. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee had noted that section 30, as amended by subsection (6)(d) of the Trade Union (Amendment) Act, continues to rely on the Trade Disputes Act to restrict strike action through the imposition of a compulsory arbitration procedure leading to a final award. Furthermore, the Committee noted the ITUC comments, according to which section 4(e) of the EPZ Authority Decree 1992 impedes trade unions from handling the resolution of disputes between employers and employees by granting this responsibility to the authorities managing these zones. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report: (i) the right to strike is not inhibited as arbitration is only one of the steps in the dispute resolution machinery; (ii) the award by the Industrial Arbitration Panel is not absolute but can be appealed according to the law by any party to the dispute and thus subjected to further adjudication by referral to the National Industrial Court; and (iii) that there is currently a widespread national interest in alternative dispute resolution. The Committee recalls that arbitration imposed by the authorities at the request of one party is generally contrary to the principle of the voluntary negotiation of collective agreements, and thus the autonomy of bargaining partners (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 257). The Committee points out that compulsory arbitration leading to a binding award amounts, even if the award is appealable, to a prohibition to exercise the right to strike, which seriously limits the means available to trade unions to further and defend the interests of their members. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 7 of Decree No. 7 of 1976, amending the Trade Disputes Act in order to limit the possibility of imposing compulsory arbitration to only essential services in the strict sense of the term, public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in the case of acute national or local crisis. Also, the Committee requests the Government to amend section 4(e) of the EPZ Authority Decree 1992 in order to guarantee the autonomy of the bargaining partners without giving the right to the authorities to impose compulsory arbitration.

Majority required to declare a strike. The Committee had noted that section 6 of the Trade Union (Amendment) Act amends section 30 of the principal Act by inserting subsection (6)(e), which requires the observance of a simple majority of all registered trade union members for the calling of a strike. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that section 30(6)(e) is an effort to ensure the democratization of trade union activities. The Committee considers that if a member State deems it appropriate to establish in its legislation provisions which require a vote by workers before a strike can be held, it should ensure that account is taken only of the votes cast (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 170). It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the new section 30(6)(e) accordingly, so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

Restrictions relating to essential services. The Committee had noted with concern that section 6 of the Trade Union (Amendment) Act relies on the definition of "essential services" provided for in the Trade Disputes Act (1990) to restrict participation in a strike. Specifically, the Trade Disputes Act defines "essential services" in an overly broad manner so as to include, among others, services for or in connection with: the Central Bank of Nigeria, the Nigerian Security Printing and Minting Company Limited, any corporate body licensed to carry out banking business under the Banking Act, the postal service, sound broadcasting, maintaining ports, harbours, docks or aerodromes, transportation of persons, goods or livestock by road, rail, sea or river, road cleaning, and refuse collection. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it has taken note of the Committee's comment especially concerning the need to establish minimum services in such services considered as providing public utilities in the event of industrial action. The Committee recalls that essential services are only those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 159). It once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to amend the Trade Disputes Act's definition of "essential services", without prejudice to the possibility of establishing a system of minimum service in services which are of public utility.

Restrictions relating to the objectives of a strike. The Committee had noted with concern section 30 of the Trade Union Act as amended by section 6(d) of the Trade Union (Amendment) Act, limiting legal strikes to disputes constituting a “dispute of rights”, defined as “a labour dispute arising from the negotiation, application, interpretation of a contract of employment or collective agreement under the Act or any other enactment or law governing matters relating to terms and conditions of employment”, as well as to a dispute arising from a collective and fundamental breach of contract of employment or collective agreement on the part of the employee, trade union or employer. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that although a distinction is made between a dispute of right and a dispute of interest in national practice, trade unions have been known to embark on industrial actions on issues considered as dispute of interests without Government taking any action against them. The Committee considers that the practice described by the Government conflicts with the legislation, which excludes any possibility of a legitimate strike action to secure collective bargaining agreements or to protest against the Government’s social and economic policy affecting workers’ interests. The Committee recalls that organizations responsible for defending workers’ socio-economic and occupational interests should, in principle, be able to use strike action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed by major social and economic policy trends which have a direct impact on their members and on workers in general, in particular as regards employment, social protection, and the standard of living (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 165). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to align section 6(d) of the Trade Union (Amendment) Act with national practice, so as to ensure that workers enjoy the full right to strike and, in particular, that workers’ organizations may have recourse to protest strikes aimed at securing collective bargaining agreements or criticizing the Government’s economic and social policies without sanctions.

Other restrictions. The Committee had noted that section 42(1)(B) of the Trade Union Act, as amended, requires that “no trade union or registered federation of trade unions or any member thereof shall in the course of any action compel any person who is not a member of its union to join and strike or in any manner whatsoever, prevent aircraft from flying or obstruct public highways, institutions or premises of any kind for the purpose of giving effect to the strike”. The Committee observed that this section appears to provide for two prohibitions: firstly, with regard to compelling non-union members to participate in a strike action and, secondly, the prohibition to obstruct public highways, institutions or premises of any kind for the purpose of giving effect to the strike. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the Government has nothing against peaceful picketing which is lawful under section 42 of the Trade Union Act but cannot accept attempts to coerce non-willing workers and the general public because of the possible negative implications of such acts (e.g. breakdown of law and order). The Committee takes note of the information supplied concerning the first prohibition. The Committee considers however, with regard to the second prohibition, that the broad wording of this section could potentially outlaw any gathering or strike picket. The Committee recalls that the conditions that have to be fulfilled under the law in order to render a strike lawful should be reasonable and, in any event, not such as to place substantial limitation on the means of action open to trade union organizations. In addition, given that aircraft-related services, with the exception of air traffic controllers, are not in themselves considered to be essential services in the strict sense of the term, a strike of workers in that sector or related services should not be the subject of an overall ban, as could be implied from the wording of this section. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 42(1)(B) so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention and the above principles, so as to ensure that any restrictions placed on strike actions aimed at guaranteeing the maintenance of public order are not such as to render any such action relatively impossible or ban it for certain workers beyond those in essential services in the strict sense of the term.

Sanctions against strikes. The Committee had noted that section 30 of the Trade Union Act, as amended by section 6(d) of the Trade Union (Amendment) Act 2005, makes strikers liable to the possibility of both paying a fine and being imprisoned up to six months, which might lead to a penalty which is disproportionate to the seriousness of the violation. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the sanctions imposed by section 6(d) are not targeted at the strike action or any other form of industrial action per se; that the section was enacted to ensure that due processes are followed before a strike is declared and to provide for opportunities and time for the exhaustion of other optional trade dispute resolution machinery before calling a strike; and that in practice, the Government has often safeguarded the interest of the workers after industrial actions by incorporating in the terms of settlement that no workers shall be victimized for any reason connected with acts or omissions committed during the course of industrial action. While taking note of the information supplied by the Government concerning the intention of the provision and normal practice, the Committee considers that, under section 6(d), participants in a peaceful but illegal strike could still be sentenced to a prison term. In this regard, the Committee recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and therefore measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. Nevertheless, even in the absence of violence, if the strike modalities had the effect of making the strike illegitimate, proportionate disciplinary sanctions may be imposed against strikers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend its legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the principle above.

Article 4. Dissolution by administrative authority. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 7(9) of the Trade Union Act by repealing the broad authority of the Minister to cancel the registration of workers’ and employers’ organizations, as the possibility of administrative dissolution under this provision involved a serious risk of interference by the public authority in the very existence of organizations. The Committee notes that the Government confines itself to reiterating its earlier position that the issue has been addressed by the Collective Labour Relations Bill which is currently before the National Assembly. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Collective Labour Relations Act will be enacted without further delay and adequately address the issue.

Articles 5 and 6. Right of organizations to establish federations and confederations and to affiliate with international organizations. The Committee had noted that section 8(a)(1)(b) and (g) of the Trade Unions (Amendment) Act 2005 requires federations to consist of 12 or more trade unions in order to be registered and had requested practical information. The Committee notes from the Government's report that there are currently, two national-level federations of trade unions, namely the Trade Union Congress and the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC) with certificates issued by the Government accordingly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the provisions of Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention to federations and confederations of employers' and workers' organizations.

Noting the Government representative's statement before the Conference Committee that five Labour Bills had been drafted with the technical assistance of the ILO, the Committee expresses the firm hope that appropriate measures will be taken to ensure that the necessary amendments to the laws referred to above are adopted in the very near future in order to bring them into full conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to accept an ILO mission in order to tackle the pending issues. In the meantime, the Committee urges the Government to conduct an independent investigation into the allegations made by the ITUC in the previous years and to provide information on its outcome.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011 on the application of the Convention, referring in particular to specific acts of anti-union discrimination, in particular dismissals, in the oil sector and in the education services and of anti-union interference on the part of Government authorities in the health and education sectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon, as well as on the comments submitted by the ITUC in 2010 which referred to anti-union practices in the oil sector and in financial institutions, including non-union contract clauses.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the comments on the application of the Convention made by the ITUC in a communication dated 26 August 2009. The ITUC states that in the private sector collective bargaining rights are restricted by the requirement of government approval: collective agreements on wages must be registered with the Ministry of Labour, which decides whether the agreement becomes binding according to the Wages Board and Industrial Councils Act. The ITUC also refers to acts of anti-union discrimination, including threats of dismissal made to trade unionists in several companies in the banking sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations respecting these matters.

The Committee noted the comments submitted by the ITUC in a communication dated 29 August 2008, concerning refusals to negotiate with trade unions, acts of interference by employers, anti-union practices against workers' representatives, including dismissals. The Committee requests the Government to submit its observations thereon and to reply to the matters raised by the Committee's previous comment.

Bill on collective labour relations. The Committee noted the Government's statement, according to which the National Assembly has not yet passed the bill on collective labour relations. The Committee recalls that ILO technical assistance has been provided to the authorities and hopes that the future legislation will be in full conformity with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to send the new law once adopted.

Comments made by the Organization of African Trade Union Unity (OATUU) and the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU) (now ITUC) on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the comments, which concerned in particular the fact that: (1) certain categories of workers are denied the right to organize (such as employees of the Customs and Excise Department, the Immigration Department, the Nigerian Security Printing and Mining Company Limited, the prison service and the Central Bank of Nigeria) and therefore are deprived of the right to collective bargaining; (2) only unskilled workers are protected by the Labour Act against anti-union discrimination by their employer; (3) every agreement on wages must be registered with the Ministry of Labour, which decides whether the agreement becomes binding according to the Wages Board and Industrial Council Acts according to the Trade Dispute Act (it is an offence for an employer to grant a general or percentage increase in wages without the approval of the Minister); (4) section 4(e) of the 1992 Decree on Export Processing Zones states that "employer-employee" disputes are not matters to be handled by trade unions but rather by the authorities managing these zones; and (5) section 3(1) of the same Decree makes it very difficult for workers to form or join trade unions as it is almost impossible for worker representatives to gain free access to the export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee requests the Government to send its reply on these comments.

Concerning the abovementioned point (1), the Committee observed that the Committee on Freedom of Association had underlined that the functions exercised by employees of customs and excise, immigration, prisons and preventive services should not justify their exclusion from the right to organize on the basis of Article 9 of Convention No. 87 (see 343rd Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association, paragraph 1027). The Committee requests the Government to amend section 11 of the Trade Union Act (1973) so that these categories of workers are granted the right to organize and to bargain collectively, as well as for all public employees not engaged in the administration of the State.

The Committee underlines the seriousness of the matters previously raised.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee requests the Government to accept an ILO mission in order to tackle the pending issues. In the meantime, the Committee urges the Government to conduct an independent investigation into the allegations made by the ITUC in the previous years and to provide information on its outcome.

Pakistan

Right of Association (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 11) (ratification: 1923)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the comments made by the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF) in a communication dated 30 July 2010, reporting that agricultural workers have no right to freedom of association.

In its previous observations, the Committee observed that small agricultural holdings which do not run an establishment, or farmers working on their own or with their family, appeared to be excluded from the Industrial Relations Ordinance (IRO) 2002 and therefore from the provisions on freedom of association. The Committee noted that the 2008 Industrial Relations Act (IRA), which amended the 2002 IRO, was an interim law due to lapse on 30 April 2010. The Committee also noted that a tripartite conference had to be held to draft a new legislation in consultation with all stakeholders.

The Committee had noted that the Government indicated that the 2002 IRO did not expressly exclude agricultural undertakings from its application and that there are no restrictions whatsoever on the workers employed in agriculture to form a trade union and that although no trade union of agricultural workers was registered, there were numerous agricultural workers' associations in place to safeguard their interests. The Committee also had noted that the Government enacted the 18th Constitutional Amendment, which transferred responsibility for labour issues from the federal to the provincial governments. The Committee further noted that on 18 June 2010, the High Court of Sindh (Karachi), referring to the 18th Constitutional Amendment, confirmed that the 2008 IRA stood repealed and concluded that the 1969 IRO was now once again in force. The Committee recalls in this respect that it had previously noted that while agriculture was not expressly excluded from the IRO 1969, it was not expressly included and that the definitions given in the IRO could be interpreted as excluding small agricultural workers like self-employed farmers, sharecroppers, tenants and smallholders, from its application.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that new legislation will be adopted in the very near future in full consultation with the social partners concerned. The Committee further hopes that any adopted legislation will be in full conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the relevant legislative texts once they have been adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1951)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011. It notes, in particular, that the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide to the Committee of Experts, for its examination this year, detailed information on the progress made in bringing the national legislation and practice into full conformity with freedom of association principles as well as all provincial laws relevant to the application of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received.

Comments of trade union organizations.

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on 4 August 2011 alleging acts of violence (attacks, kidnapping, torture, killings) against trade unionists. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments, it had noted the 2010 comments submitted by the All Pakistan Federation of United Trade Unions (APFUTU) regarding the difficulties in registering trade unions for the industries established in the City of Sialkot, as well as the comments submitted by the ITUC alleging acts of violence against protesters, night-time raids, arrests and harassment of trade union leaders and members, as well as other violations of the Convention. The Committee noted in particular the ITUC's comments concerning the requirement that any gathering of more than four people be subject to police authorization and its impact on trade union activities, as well as the denial of the right to strike to workers in export processing zones (EPZs) and the possibility to impose penalties of imprisonment against illegal strikes, go-slows and picketing activities. The Committee regrets that the Government provided no observations thereon. It therefore once again recalls that freedom of association can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind against leaders and members of workers' organizations, and that workers have the right to participate in peaceful demonstrations to defend their occupational interests. The Committee urges the Government to conduct an independent investigation into all of the abovementioned serious allegations of violence against trade unionists and to report on the outcome and the measure taken to punish those found responsible.

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the Pakistan Workers Confederation (PWC) in a communication dated 21 November 2011 referring to the legislative issues raised by the Committee below.

Legislative issues

The Committee recalls that in its previous observation, it had noted that the Industrial Relations Act (IRA), 2008 (which was an interim legislation) had lapsed and that the Government had enacted the 18th Amendment to the Constitution whereby the matters relating to industrial relations and trade unions were devolved to the provinces. In this respect, the Committee expressed the hope that any new legislation, whether at the provincial or national levels would be adopted in full consultation with the social partners concerned and that such instruments would be in full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the November 2011 conclusions of the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in Case No. 2799 (362nd Report) where the latter noted that a new Industrial Relations Ordinance (IRO) was promulgated by the President of Pakistan in July 2011 following tripartite consultations. The CFA also noted the Government's indication that on 12 October 2011, the IRO was introduced to the National Assembly in order to make it into an Act of Parliament.

The Committee notes that the IRO, 2011, regulates industrial relations and registration of trade unions and federation of trade unions in the Islamabad Capital Territory and in the establishments which cover more than one province (section 1(2) and (3)). It notes with regret that most of its previous comments on the IRA, 2008, have not been addressed by the promulgation of the IRO, 2011.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee notes that the IRO excludes the following categories of workers from its scope of application:

- workers employed in services or installations exclusively connected with, or incidental to the armed forces of Pakistan, including the Factory Ordinance maintained by the federal Government (section 1(3)(a));
- workers employed in the administration of the State other than those employed as workmen (section 1(3)(b)) ;
- members of the security staff of Pakistan International Airlines Corporation (PIAC) or drawing wages in pay group not lower than Group V in the PIAC establishment (section 1(3)(c));
- workers employed by the Pakistan Security Printing Corporation or the Security Papers Limited (section 1(3)(d));
- workers employed by an establishment or institution for the treatment or care of sick, infirm, destitute and mentally unfit persons excluding those run on a commercial basis (section 1(3)(e));
- agricultural workers (section 1(3) read together with section 2(x) and (xvii));
- workers of charitable organizations (section 1(3) read together with section 2(x) and (xvii)).

The Committee recalls that by virtue of Article 2 of the Convention, workers, without distinction whatsoever shall have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure that the legislation guarantees the abovementioned categories of employees the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing to further and defend their social, economic and occupational interests.

Managerial employees. The Committee also notes that, pursuant to section 31(2) of the IRO, an employer may require that a person, upon his or her appointment or promotion to a managerial position, shall cease to be and shall be disqualified from being a member or an officer of a trade union. The Committee considers that such restriction is compatible with freedom of association provided that two conditions are met: first, that the persons concerned have the right to establish their own organizations to defend their interests; and second, that the category of managerial staff is not so broadly defined as to weaken the organization of other workers in the enterprise or branch of activity by depriving them of a substantial proportion of their actual or potential membership. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the abovementioned provision is not applied in practice in a manner contrary to the principle above.

Rights of workers and employers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee notes that section 8(2)(a) of the IRO provides that only trade unions of workers engaged or employed in the same industry may be registered. The Committee recalls that such restrictions may be applied to first-level organizations, on condition that these organizations are free to establish inter-professional organizations, and to join federations and confederations in the form and manner deemed most appropriate by the workers or employers concerned (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 84). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that trade unions affiliating workers of different professions and/or enterprises could establish inter-professional organizations of workers and affiliate with federations and confederation of their own choosing.

The Committee further notes that section 62(3) of the IRO provides that after the certification of a collective bargaining unit, no trade union shall be registered in respect of that unit except for the whole of such a unit. The Committee considers that while a provision requiring certification of a collective bargaining agent for a corresponding bargaining unit is not contrary to the Convention, workers' right to establish and join trade union organizations of their own choosing implies the possibility to create – if the workers so choose – more than one organization per bargaining unit.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend this provision so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes that pursuant to section 8(2)(b) of the IRO, no other trade union is entitled to registration if there are already two or more registered trade unions in the establishment, group of establishments or industry with which that trade union is connected, unless it has, as members, not less than 20 per cent of the workers employed in that establishment, group of establishments or industry. Considering that this minimum membership requirement is too high, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that it is reduced to a reasonable level and that no distinction as to the minimum membership requirement is made between the first two or more registered trade unions and the newly created unions.

The Committee notes that under the new IRO, the right to represent workers in any proceedings, the right to check-off facilities and the right to call a strike are granted only to collective bargaining agents, i.e. the most representative trade unions (sections 20(b) and (c), 22, 33, 35 and 65(1)). The Committee considers that workers' freedom of choice would be jeopardized if the distinction between most representative and minority unions results, in law or in practice, in the granting of privileges extending beyond that of priority in representation for such purposes as collective bargaining or consultation by the Government or for the purpose of nominating delegations to international bodies. In other words, this distinction should not have the effect of unduly influencing the choice of organization by workers and of depriving those trade unions that are not recognized as being among the most representative of the essential means for defending the occupational interests of their members. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the IRO so as to ensure that the abovementioned rights are extended to all trade unions.

Article 3. Right to elect representatives freely. The Committee notes that the IRO contains several sections concerning disqualification from holding a trade union office. First, under section 18, a person who has been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for two years or more for an offence involving moral turpitude under the Pakistan Penal Code shall be disqualified from being elected as, or from being an officer of a trade union, unless a period of five years has elapsed after the completion of the sentence. The Committee recalls in this respect that conviction for an act, the nature of which is not such as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties, should not constitute grounds for disqualification from trade union office (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 120). Second, under section 44(10), the National Industrial Relations Commission ("Commission") has the power to disqualify a trade union office bearer from holding any trade union office for the unexpired term of his or her office and for the term immediately following, for violation of its order to stop a strike (this point is further discussed below). Third, the same sanction is also provided for in section 67(5) of the IRO for committing an unfair labour practice under section 32(1)(a)–(c) and (e). The Committee notes that section 32 lists a wide range of actions, which include acts by a worker to persuade other workers to join or refrain from joining a trade union during working hours; induce any person to refrain from becoming members or officers of a trade union by conferring or offering to confer any advantage for such persons; commence, continue, instigate or incite others to take part in, or expend or supply money to, or otherwise act in furtherance or support of, an illegal strike or a work slowdown, etc. The Committee recalls that legislation which establishes excessively broad ineligibility criteria by means of a long list, including acts which have no real connection with the qualities of integrity required for the exercise of trade union office, is incompatible with the Convention (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 120). In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the IRO so as to bring it into accordance with the principles above.

In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 27-B of the Banking Companies Ordinance of 1962, which restricted the possibility of becoming an officer of a bank union only to employees of the bank in question, under penalty of up to three years' imprisonment, either by exempting from the occupational requirement a reasonable proportion of the officers of an organization, or by admitting, as candidates, persons who have been previously employed in the banking company. The Committee had noted the Government's statement that a bill to repeal section 27-B of the Banking Companies Ordinance of 1962 had been submitted to the Senate. The Committee notes the Government's statement to the Conference Committee that the Federal Cabinet at its meeting held on 1 May 2010 approved the repeal of this provision and that the final legislation is under preparation. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the relevant amendment will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to transmit a copy thereof.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and to formulate their programmes. The Committee notes that section 8 of the IRO regulates in detail the internal functioning of trade unions. Specifically, its subsection 1(j) provides that the constitution of a union should provide for a term for which a trade union officer may be elected and specifies that it should not exceed two years; and subsection 1(l) provides for the frequency of meetings of a union's executive and general body. The Committee further notes that under section 48(2) of the IRO, the Commission has a power to order a person who has been expelled from a trade union to be restored to its membership or to order that he or she be paid out of the union funds such sum by way of compensation or damages as the Commission thinks just. The Committee considers that all of these matters should be left for an organization to decide and regulate. It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend the IRO in this respect.

The Committee notes that section 5(d) of the IRO confers on the Registrar the power to inspect the accounts and records of a registered trade union, or investigate or hold such inquiry into the affairs of a trade union as he or she deems fit. The Committee considers that problems of compatibility with the Convention arise when the administrative authority has the power to audit the trade union's accounts, to inspect such accounts and records and demand information at any time (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 126). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure that the supervision of internal administration of organizations is limited to the obligation of submitting annual financial reports or if there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or the law, which itself should not infringe the principles of freedom of association.

The Committee notes that section 65(2) and (3) of the IRO provides that "no party to an industrial dispute should be entitled to be represented by a legal practitioner in any conciliation proceedings under this Ordinance" and that representation is possible in the proceedings before the Commission, or arbitrator, only with the permission of the Commission or the arbitrator, as the case may be. The Committee considers that legislation which prevents workers' and/or employers' organizations from using the services of experts such as lawyers and agents to represent them in administrative or judicial proceedings is not in conformity with Article 3 of the Convention. It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the IRO so as to ensure that workers and employers' organizations are allowed to be represented by lawyers in administrative or judicial proceedings should they so desire.

Right to strike. Types of strike action. The Committee notes that under section 32(1)(e) of the IRO, a go-slow appears to be an unfair labour practice. The Committee is of the opinion that restrictions as to the forms of strike action (including go-slow) can only be justified if the action ceases to be peaceful (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 173). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend the IRO so as to ensure that a peaceful work slowdown is not considered to be a prohibited unfair labour practice.

Prohibition of strikes. The Committee notes that section 42(3) of the IRO provides that, where a strike lasts for more than 30 days, the Government may, by an order, prohibit such a strike, provided that a strike can also be prohibited at any time before the expiry of 30 days if it "is satisfied that the continuance of such a strike is causing serious hardship to the community or is prejudicial to the national interests". The Committee further notes that under section 45 of the IRO, the Government can prohibit a strike related to an industrial dispute of national importance (subsection (1)(a)), or in respect of any public utility services (subsection (1)(b)), at any time before or after its commencement. A strike carried out in contravention of an order made under this section, as well as section 42 noted above, is deemed illegal by virtue of section 43(1)(c). The Committee notes that Schedule I, setting out the list of public utility services includes services such as oil production, postal services, railways and airways. The Committee recalls that the prohibition of strikes can only be justified: (1) in the public services only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (2) in the event of an acute national or local emergency; or (3) in the essential services in the strict sense of the term (that is, services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population). The Committee considers that the wording of sections 42(3) and 45(1) (a) is too broad and vague to be limited to such cases and that the abovementioned services listed in Schedule I cannot be considered essential in the strict sense of the term. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend the IRO so as to ensure that any prohibition or restriction imposed on the right to strike is in conformity with the principles above.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee notes that following a prohibition of the strike by the Government pursuant to the above-noted sections 42 and 45 of the IRO, the dispute is referred to the Commission for adjudication. The Committee further notes that section 42(2) of the IRO authorizes a "party raising a dispute", either before or after the commencement of a strike, to apply to the Commission for adjudication of the dispute. Pending adjudication, the Commission can prohibit the continuation of the existing strike action (section 61). The Committee recalls that a provision, which permits public authorities or either party to unilaterally request the settlement of a dispute through compulsory arbitration leading to a final award, effectively undermines the right to strike by making it possible to prohibit virtually all strikes or to end them quickly. Such a system seriously limits the means available to trade unions to further and defend the interests of their members as well as their right to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes and is not compatible with Article 3 of the Convention (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 153). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the IRO so as to ensure that recourse to compulsory arbitration is possible only in cases where the exercise of the strike can be restricted or even prohibited or at the request of both parties to the dispute.

Sanctions. The Committee notes that under section 32(1)(e) of the IRO, commencing, continuing, instigating others to take part in, or expending or supplying money to, or otherwise acting in furtherance or support of an illegal strike or a go-slow is an unfair labour practice punishable by a fine of up to 30,000 rupees and/or imprisonment which may extend to 30 days. When the person convicted of such an offence is a trade union office bearer, he or she can be disqualified from holding a trade union office for the unexpired and immediately following terms, in addition to any other punishment which the court might award (section 67(4) and (5)). The Committee further notes that section 44(10) of the IRO provides for the following sanctions for contravening a Commission's order to call off a strike: dismissal of the striking workers; cancellation of the registration of a trade union; and debarring of trade union officers from holding a trade union office for the unexpired and immediately following terms. The Committee emphasizes that sanctions for strike action can be imposed only if the prohibitions or restrictions on the right to strike are in conformity with the principles of freedom of association. The Committee further considers that the use of extremely serious measures, such as dismissal of workers and cancellation of trade union registration implies a grave risk of abuse and constitutes a violation of freedom of association. With regard to penal sanctions, the Committee recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and on no account should measures of imprisonment be imposed. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend its legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the principles above.

Article 4. Dissolution of organizations. The Committee notes with concern the numerous cases where a registration of union may be cancelled under the IRO. In particular, the Committee notes that the registration of a trade union shall be cancelled if the Commission so directs, following a complaint made by the Registrar that the trade union has contravened the provisions of the Ordinance or its constitution, or failed to submit its annual returns to the Registrar, or obtained less than 10 percent of total votes polled in an election for determination of a collective bargaining agent (section 11(1)(a), (d), (e), (f) and (g) of the IRO). The Committee also notes that under section 16(5) of the IRO, if the statement of expenditure of a union is found incorrect following an audit of annual return, the Registrar shall initiate before the Commission the proceeding for the cancellation of the union registration. The Committee further notes that under section 44(10) of the IRO, the registration of a trade union can be cancelled for contravening the Commission's order to call off a strike. Furthermore, the Committee notes that under section 11(5) of the IRO, if a person who is disqualified under section 18 a person who has been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for two years or more for committing an offence involving moral turpitude under the Pakistan Penal Code) is elected to be an officer of a registered trade union, the registration of such a union shall be cancelled if the Commission so directs. The Committee recalls that the cancellation of a registration of an organization and its dissolution in view of its serious and far-reaching consequences is a measure which should occur only in extremely serious cases. With regard to section 11(5), the Committee furthermore considers that, although the conviction for an act, the nature of which calls into question the integrity of the person concerned may represent grounds for disqualification for trade union office, that should not constitute a reason for cancellation of trade union registration, which is tantamount to dissolution of the union. To deprive workers of their trade union organization because of illegal activities previously carried out by one of its leaders is, in the Committee's opinion, a disproportionate sanction which violates the rights of workers to organize under Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the IRO so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention taking into account the principles above.

The Committee notes that under the IRO, the Commissions' decision directing the Registrar to cancel the registration of a union cannot be appealed in court (section 59 of the IRO). The Committee recalls that cancellation of a trade unions' registration should only be possible through judicial channels and that measures of suspension or dissolution by the administrative authority constitute serious infringements of the principles of freedom of association. The Committee further emphasizes that judges should be able to deal with the substance of a case to enable them to decide whether or not the measure of dissolution would not be in violation of the rights accorded to occupational organizations by Convention No. 87. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the IRO so as to ensure that any decision to cancel trade union registration can be appealed in court.

Export processing zones (EPZs). With regard to the right to organize in EPZs, the Committee recalls that it had previously noted the Government's statement that the Export Processing Zones (Employment and Service Conditions) Rules, 2009, had been finalized in consultation with the stakeholders and would be submitted to the Cabinet for approval. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made in adopting the Export Processing Zones (Employment and Service Conditions) Rules, 2009, or a copy thereof if they have been adopted.

The Committee expects that all necessary measures will be taken rapidly to bring its national legislation into full conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken or envisaged in this respect. It further requests the Government to provide with its next report copies of all other provincial laws regulating industrial relations and trade union rights at the provincial level.

The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to indicate whether Presidential Ordinance No. IV of 1999, which amended the Anti-Terrorism Act by penalizing illegal strikes or slowdowns with up to seven years of imprisonment, had been repealed. The Committee notes the Government's statement in the Conference Committee that the Ordinance is no longer in force.

The Committee notes the Punjab Industrial Relations Act (PIRA), 2010. The Committee regrets that this legislation appears to restrict the rights of workers to organize by excluding several categories of workers from its scope of application, and restricting the rights of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization and their right to strike. The Committee will examine the PIRA, 2010, in detail in the framework of the next reporting cycle.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, referring to the similar issues as raised in its 2010 communication and in particular, the allegations of anti-union dismissals and acts of interference in trade union internal affairs by employers (intimidation, non-recognition and blacklisting of trade unions and its members), as well as denial of collective bargaining in export processing zones (EPZs). Noting that no observations have been provided by the Government thereon, the Committee recalls that it is the Government's responsibility to ensure the application of the Convention in law and in practice. It therefore once again requests the Government to provide its observations on the ITUC allegations.

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the Pakistan Workers Confederation (PWC) in a communication dated 21 November 2011 referring to the legislative issues raised by the Committee below.

The Committee recalls that in its previous observation, it had noted that the Industrial Relations Act (IRA), 2008 (which was an interim legislation), had lapsed and that the Government had enacted the 18th Amendment to the Constitution whereby the matters relating to industrial relations and trade unions were devolved to the provinces. It had further noted that in line with the June 2010 decision of the High Court of Sindh (Karachi), the Industrial Relations Ordinance (IRO) of 1969 was back in force. In this respect, the Committee recalled that it had previously commented upon on a number of significant restrictions on the right to organize under the IRO 1969 and expressed the hope that any new legislation, whether at the provincial or national levels would be adopted in full consultation with the social partners concerned and that such instruments would be in full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that the provinces were in the process of adopting their labour laws. The Government also indicates that the Federal Government will ensure through the Council of Common Interests that all provincial laws are in conformity with the Constitution and ratified ILO Conventions. The Committee notes the Punjab Industrial Relations Act (PIRA), 2010. The Committee regrets that this legislation appears to restrict the right of workers to organize by excluding several categories of workers from its scope of application, and restricting workers' collective bargaining rights. The Committee will examine the PIRA 2010 in detail in the framework of the next reporting cycle. The Committee requests the Government to provide with its next report copies of all other provincial laws regulating industrial relations and trade union rights at the provincial level.

The Committee notes the November 2011 conclusions of the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in Case No. 2799 (362nd Report) where the latter noted that a new Industrial Relations Ordinance (IRO) was promulgated by the President of Pakistan in July 2011 following tripartite consultations. The CFA also noted the Government's indication that on 12 October 2011, the IRO was introduced in the National Assembly in order to make it into an Act of Parliament.

The Committee notes that the IRO 2011 regulates industrial relations and registration of trade unions and federation of trade unions in the Islamabad Capital Territory and in the establishments which cover more than one province (section 1(2)(3)). It regrets that most of its previous comments on the IRA 2008 have not been addressed by the promulgation of the IRO 2011.

Scope of application of the Convention.

IRO 2011. The Committee notes that by virtue of its section 1(3), the IRO maintains the same exclusion from its scope of application as previously existed under the IRO 2002 and IRA 2008 (agricultural workers, workers of charitable organizations, workers employed by the Pakistan Security Printing Corporation or the Security Papers Limited, etc.), as examined in detail by the Committee in its observation on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee recalls that the only categories of workers which can be excluded from the application of the Convention are the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend the IRO so as to ensure that all workers, with the only possible exception of the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State, enjoy the rights enshrined in the Convention.

With regard to the latter category of workers, the Committee notes that the IRO does not apply to workers employed in the administration of the State other than those employed as workmen (section 1(3)(b)). The Committee requests the Government to specify and provide examples of categories of workers employed in the administration of the State excluded from the scope of application of the IRO.

Export processing zones (EPZs). With regard to the right to organize in EPZs, the Committee recalls that it had previously noted the Government's statement that the Export Processing Zones (Employment and Service Conditions) draft Rules, 2009, had been finalized in consultation with the stakeholders and will be submitted to the Cabinet for approval. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made in adopting the Export Processing Zones (Employment and Service Conditions) Rules, 2009, or a copy thereof if they have been adopted.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Banking sector. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 27-B of the Banking Companies Ordinance of 1962, imposing sanctions of imprisonment and/or fines on the grounds of the exercise of trade union activities during office hours. In its report, the Government indicates that the Federal Cabinet at its meeting held on 1 May 2010 approved the repeal of this provision and that the final legislation is under preparation. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the relevant amendment will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to transmit a copy thereof.

Autonomous bodies and corporations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 2A of the Services Tribunal Act so as to ensure that workers engaged in autonomous bodies and corporations such as the Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority (WAPDA), railway, telecommunication, gas, banks, the Pakistan Agricultural Storage and Supply Corporation (PASSCO), etc. could redress their grievances in labour courts, labour appellate tribunals and the National Industrial Relations Commission (NIRC) in cases of unfair labour practices committed by the employer, and to provide copy of the amendment once adopted. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 2A of the Services Tribunal Act has been repealed and these workers can approach the labour courts in cases mentioned above. The Committee notes with satisfaction, from a copy of the text of the amendment available to it, that section 2A of the Act has been repealed.

Article 4. Collective bargaining. The Committee notes that it results from section 19(1) of the IRO that if a trade union is the only trade union at the enterprise, but it does not have at least one third of the employees as its members, no collective bargaining is possible at the given establishment. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend similar sections which existed under the IRO 2002 and IRA 2008. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure that if there is no union representing the required percentage to be designated as a collective bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights are granted to the existing union, at least on behalf of its own members.

The Committee notes Chapter IV of the IRO concerning "participation of workers". It notes, in particular, that under section 23, shop stewards are either nominated (by a collective bargaining agent) or elected (in the absence of a collective bargaining agent) in every undertaking employing over 25 workers to act as a link between the workers and the employer, to assist in the improvement of arrangements for the physical working conditions, etc. (section 24). Furthermore, section 25 provides for the works councils (bipartite bodies), which are established in every undertaking employing over 50 workers. Section 25 lists the functions of such councils and further provides that the management shall not take any decision relating to working conditions, as specified in subsection (5), without the corresponding advice from workers' representatives, which could be nominated (by a collective bargaining agent) or be elected by workers employed by the enterprise in question (in the absence of a collective bargaining agent). Finally, section 28 provides for the joint management boards to look after the fixation of job and piece-rate, planned regrouping or transfer of workers, laying down the principles of remuneration and introduction of remuneration methods, etc. The worker representatives in such boards are nominated by a collective bargaining agent if there are one or more trade unions at the enterprise, or are chosen from amongst workers of the relevant undertaking, if there is no collective bargaining agent. In the light of the abovementioned provision contained in section 19 of the IRO, the Committee considers that the position of a single trade union not enlisting over one third of workers employed at the relevant establishment or group of establishments (and therefore, as indicated above, not enjoying collective bargaining rights) may be undermined in practice by other worker representatives represented at the above mentioned bodies, the functions of which have an impact upon the regulation of terms and conditions of employment. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend its legislation so as to ensure that the position of such trade unions is not undermined by the existence of other workers' representatives.

Panama

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1958)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 24 August 2010 (concerning allegations in the context of Cases Nos 2677 and 2706 examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA), and the comments from the National Council of Private Enterprise (CONEP) dated 29 May 2009 (concerning allegations made in the context of Case No. 1931 examined by the CFA).

Moreover, the Committee notes the comments from the General Autonomous Confederation of Workers of Panama (CGTP) and the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprise Workers (FENASEP) dated 17 August 2011, concerning issues which are already the subject of examination by the Committee and by the CFA, as well as the detailed response of the Government in this respect. The Committee also notes the comments from the National Confederation of United Independent Unions (CONUSI) dated 14 October 2011, in connection with the Government's report.

The Committee notes the discussion that took place within the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference in June 2011, and also the fact that in its conclusions it urged the Government to draw up, as a matter of urgency and with ILO technical assistance and stepping up social dialogue in this regard, a draft of specific provisions to amend the legislation and bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government accepted the visit of a technical assistance mission and hopes that this will go ahead in the near future.

The Committee recalls that it has been making comments for many years on the following issues:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers without distinction whatsoever to establish and join organizations.

- Sections 179 and 182 of the Single Text of Act No. 9, as amended by Act No. 43 of 31 July 2009, establishing, respectively, that there may not be more than one association in an institution, and that associations may have provincial or regional chapters, but not more than one chapter per province. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Directorate for Administrative Careers, attached to the Ministry of the Presidency, has established a commission for reform of the Act governing administrative careers, with a view to aligning the latter to the ratified Conventions and that these amendments will be submitted to the executive body for examination and consideration. The Committee notes that CONUSI states that the trade union movement is not certain that a bill is being drawn up to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee hopes that any draft reform of the legislation will be the subject of consultations with the social partners and requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any developments in this respect.
- The requirement of too large a membership (ten) for the establishment of an employers' organization and an even larger membership (40) for the establishment of a workers' organization at the enterprise level, by virtue of section 41 of Act No. 44 of 1995 (amending section 344 of the Labour Code), and the requirement of a large number (40) of public servants to establish an organization of public servants under section 182 of the Single Text of Act No. 9. The Committee notes the Government's statement that: (1) the figures mentioned are accepted by the principal workers' confederations and federations in the country, which have considered that any reduction thereof would result in the creation of parallel trade unions, which goes against the principle of trade union representativeness; (2) the number of ten members for establishing a professional employers' organization is a figure favoured by representatives of the employers; (3) in order to modify these figures there must be tripartite consensus and to date no interest has been shown in reducing these figures but it will be a subject for discussion in the context of the tripartite social dialogue to be launched by the Government with the Labour Foundation (FUNTRAB); and (4) as regards public servants, the commission for reform of the Act governing administrative careers is also tasked with amending section 182 of the Single Text of Act No. 9 and the proposed amendments will be submitted to the executive body for study and consideration. The Committee hopes that, in the context of the announced tripartite dialogue, the Government will take every possible measure to reduce the minimum number of members required so that workers, employers and public servants are able to establish their organizations, and requests the Government to keep it informed of any further developments in this respect.
- The denial to public servants (non-career public servants, as well as those holding appointments governed by the Constitution and those who are elected and serving) of the right to establish unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the commission on reform of the Act governing administrative careers also intends to amend section 179 of the Single Text of Act No. 9 and that the amendments will be submitted to the executive body for examination and consideration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any further developments in this respect.

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom.

- The requirement to be of Panamanian nationality in order to serve on the executive board of a trade union. The Committee notes that the Government repeats its indication that to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, it would be necessary to amend the Political Constitution, and that foreign workers enjoy all benefits resulting from the collective agreements of the enterprises where they work and may participate as members in unions respecting the rights which may derive from their employment relationship. In the Committee's view, the national legislation should allow foreign workers to take up trade union office at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country (see the 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 118). Since this is a case of unjustifiable discrimination, the Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to make the required amendments taking into account the principle referred to above.
- The right of organizations to organize their administration. In its previous comments the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 180-A of Act No. 24 of 2 July 2007 amending Act No. 9 on administrative careers, so as to abolish the requirement for public servants who are not affiliated to associations to pay ordinary trade union dues for the benefits derived from the collective agreement, with the possibility of providing instead for the payment of a lesser amount than the ordinary trade union contribution for the benefits derived from collective bargaining. In this regard, the Committee notes with satisfaction that section 180-A became section 187 of the Single Text of 29 August 2008, which was, in turn, repealed by Act No. 43 of 31 July 2009.

Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom.

- Denial of the right to strike in export processing zones (section 49B of Act No. 25 of 1992) and denial of the right to strike in enterprises of less than two years' standing (section 12 of Act No. 8 of 1981). In its previous observation the Committee noted that the Ministry of Labour and Employment Development (MITRADEL), together with the Ministry of Trade and Industry (MICI), had been working to formulate amendments on this subject, resulting in the formulation of a preliminary draft bill to amend section 49 of Act No. 25 of 1992 and to repeal section 12 of Act No. 8 of 1981. The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's reference to the adoption of Act No. 32 of 5 April 2011, which repeals section 12 of Act No. 8 of 1981 and amends section 49B of Act No. 25 of 1992 in such a way that workers or their respective organization in export processing zones are permitted to exercise the right to strike once the conciliation process has been completed (section 55 of Act No. 32 of 5 April 2011).
- Denial of the right to strike for public servants not exercising authority in the name of the State. In its previous observation the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the right to strike of public servants who do not exercise authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes the Government's indication that both the Constitution (article 69) and the Single Text of 29 August 2009 (section 137) guarantee the right to strike of public servants.
- The ban on federations and confederations from calling strikes and on strikes against the Government's economic and social policy, and the unlawfulness of strikes that are unrelated to an enterprise collective agreement. The Committee notes the Government's statement that: (1) federations and confederations participate in public demonstrations relating to economic and social policies of the Government and it is common practice for the workers to exert means of pressure, such as strikes, when they are opposed to any measures affecting their sector; and (2) the workers and the employers have not raised the possibility of amending the legislation on these subjects, nor is there any consensus between the social partners. The Committee recalls that federations and confederations should have the right to strike and that organizations responsible for defending workers' socio-economic and occupational interests should, as a rule, be able to use strike action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed by major social and economic trends which have a direct impact on their members and on workers in general, in particular as regards employment, social protection and the standard of living (see the General Survey, op cit., paragraph 165). The Committee underlines the importance of the legislation being clearly aligned to the practice which, according to the Government, exists in the country and requests the Government to provide information on any further developments in this matter.
- The authority of the Regional or General Labour Directorate to refer labour disputes to compulsory arbitration in order to stop a strike in private transport enterprises (sections 452 and 486 of the Labour Code). The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) forced or compulsory arbitration in the transport sector is a measure to which the State may have recourse in urgent situations of possible disruption to public order as the only alternative for serving and mediating in the resolution of a collective labour dispute; and (2) the intention of section 452 is to prevent the interruption, as a result of the negotiations held by the parties to the dispute, of the State's constitutional right to provide citizens with the most important public services which must be guaranteed by law, and so arbitration to avoid strike action is a mechanism for dialogue which prevents the public from suffering economic losses. However, the Committee observes that the legislation provides for the maintenance of a minimum service in the event of a transport strike. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute or a strike is acceptable if it is at the request of both the parties involved in the dispute or in cases where the strike in question may be restricted or even prohibited, i.e. in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely those services whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation so as to provide that compulsory arbitration in collective disputes in the transport sector is only possible at the request of both parties or under the abovementioned circumstances.
- The obligation to provide minimum services with 50 per cent of the staff in the transport sector, and the penalty of summary dismissal of public servants for failure to comply with minimum services in the event of a strike (sections 155 and 192 of the Single Text of 29 August 2008, amended by Act No. 43 of 31 July 2009). The Committee notes the Government's statement that the abovementioned provisions do not, in principle, affect the exercise of the right to strike since: (1) summary dismissal is possible in the event of banned or illegal strikes; and (2) the obligation to provide minimum services with 50 per cent of the staff applies to "essential public services", such as food provision, water and electricity, transport, etc. The Committee recalls that transport is not an essential service in the strict sense of the term; nevertheless, it is a public service of fundamental importance and in the event of a strike the imposition of a minimum service could be justified. However, given that the 50 per cent figure provided for in the legislation might be excessive, the Committee recalls that minimum services should be limited to activities that are strictly necessary to cover the basic needs of the population or to satisfy the minimum requirements of the service, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear, and that since this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their economic and social interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service; in the event of any disagreement as to the number and duties in relation to the minimum service, such disagreement should be settled by an independent body enjoying the confidence of the parties. Observing that a number of the abovementioned services cannot be defined as essential services in the strict sense of the term, the Committee again requests the Government, taking into account the principles described above, to take the necessary steps to ensure the respective legislative amendments and to provide information in its next report on any further developments in this respect.

- Legislation interfering with the activities of employers' and workers' organizations (sections 452.2, 493.4 and 494 of the Labour Code) (closure of the enterprise in the event of a strike and prohibition of entry to non-striking workers). The Committee observes that section 493.4 of the Labour Code, as amended by Act No. 68 of 26 October 2010, does not provide in the event of a strike for free entry for non-striking workers. The Committee notes the Government's indication of its intention to examine the standard with a view to analysing the points raised and to consider in what manner the abovementioned provisions may be amended. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any further developments in this respect.
- The obligation for non-members to pay a solidarity contribution in recognition of the benefits derived from collective bargaining. In its previous observation the Committee noted that section 2 of Act No. 68, amending section 405 of the Labour Code, provides that "the collective agreement shall apply to all persons who work in the categories covered by the agreement, in the enterprise, commerce or establishment, even though they are not members of the union. Non-unionized workers who benefit from the collective agreement shall be obliged, during the period covered by the collective agreement, to pay the ordinary and extraordinary dues agreed by the union, and the employer shall be obliged to check such dues off from wages and forward them to the union." The Committee considered that "solidarity" dues in view of the benefits derived from collective bargaining by workers who are not members of the unions concluding a collective agreement are not contrary to the provisions of the Convention; nevertheless, such dues should be set at an amount which does not prejudice the right of workers to join the trade union organization of their choosing. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it shares the opinion that legislation should be adopted establishing that these dues should be set at an amount which enables workers to join the trade union organization of their choosing and the reform resulting from section 2 of Act No. 68 should be subject to tripartite revision. The Committee emphasizes that in a previous paragraph it noted with satisfaction the legislative changes in the public sector relating to solidarity dues and considers that the same system should apply to the private sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any further developments in this matter.
- The automatic intervention of the police in the event of a strike. In its previous observation the Committee noted that section 3 of Act No. 68 amends section 493(1) of the Labour Code, which provides, in its amended form, that "once the strike has commenced, the Regional or General Labour Inspectorate or Directorate shall immediately give orders for the police authorities to duly guarantee or protect persons and property". The Committee considered, in cases of strike movements, that the authorities should resort to the use of the public forces only in grave situations or those in which public order is seriously threatened. The Committee notes the Government's statement that in reality the public forces are used or the police units are ordered to appear only in cases where strikes assume a non-peaceful appearance in which the integrity of persons, property of the enterprise or public order are affected, and not with the aim of suspending the strike or in cases where strikes assume a peaceful form. The Committee therefore requests the Government to consider the possibility of amending the legislation in such a way that, in conformity with the practice indicated by the Government, the public forces may only intervene in cases where strikes lose their peaceful character. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any further developments in this respect.

Philippines

Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned section 241(c) and (p) of the Labor Code which requires unions to organize members into locals and chapters, and to hold elections of local and national officers directly and by secret ballot, under penalty of dissolution or officer expulsion. The Committee further recalls that since 1999, the Government has been indicating its intention to review the Labor Code with a view to bringing it into conformity with the principles of freedom of association.

The Committee notes that in its report, the Government indicates that the Department of Labor and Employment is initiating a review of labour laws and legislation, including section 241(c) and (p) of the Labor Code, so as to align them with the ILO Conventions ratified by the Philippines. It further notes the Government's indication that this process is on the priority agenda of the Department of Labor and Employment aimed to respond to the labour market realities through policy reforms. The Committee expresses the hope that section 241(c) and (p) of the Labor Code will be amended in the near future so as to allow rural workers' organizations the right to choose the organizational structure they deem appropriate and requests the Government to transmit a copy of the amendments.

Romania

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1958)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the debate which took place within the Conference Committee in June 2011 and welcomes the Government's commitment to continue to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee also notes the Government's reply to the 2010 comments made by the Block of National Trade Unions (BNS) concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee also notes the comments made by the BNS and the National Trade Union Confederation (CNS CARTEL ALFA) received on 10 June 2011 and the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011, as well as the Government's observations on both communications.

In its previous comments, the Committee had noted from the Government's report that the legal framework on labour and social dialogue was under review. In this regard, the Committee notes from the information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee that Act No. 53/2003 (Labour Code) has been substantially amended by Act No. 40/2011, and that Act No. 62 concerning social dialogue was adopted on 10 May 2011. The Committee observes that Act No. 62 of 10 May 2011 concerning social dialogue abrogates the following pieces of legislation: (i) Act 54/2003 on trade unions; (ii) Act No. 130/1996 on collective agreements (except its sections 26–39, which will be abrogated on the date of issuance of the Order to be adopted under section 177 of the Social Dialogue Act); and (iii) Act No. 168/1999 on the settlement of labour conflicts.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the ITUC, sanctions for anti-union activities are rarely imposed in practice due to loopholes in the Penal Code. The Committee had further noted the indications of the ITUC that the procedure for lodging a complaint appears to be too complicated and the authorities do not prioritize the trade unions' complaints, and that the labour inspectorates do not always respect the confidentiality of the complaints. The Committee notes that the ITUC reiterates its comments as regards the non-application of sanctions in practice. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide in its next report, taking into account the new legislation, statistical information or at least the maximum information available on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination brought to the competent authorities, the average duration of proceedings and their outcome, as well as the sanctions and remedial measures applied.

Furthermore, in its previous comments, the Committee had noted from the ITUC comments that in recent years, certain employers have made employment conditional upon the worker agreeing not to create or join a union. The Committee had requested the Government to discuss this situation with the most representative organizations of workers and employers. The Committee notes that the BNS also denounces that some employers require documents that are officially published and seriously obstruct the right to organize, and that the ITUC alleges that a number of anti-union dismissals have occurred in the media sector. The Committee has noted from the oral information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee the Government's commitment to organizing a meeting with the social partners on the subject of anti-union discrimination after the Conference. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the tripartite meeting has been postponed due to the appointment of the new Minister of Labour. The Committee welcomes the Government's formal commitment to initiate tripartite discussions in this regard, trusts that the meeting will be organized in the very near future and requests the Government to provide information on its outcome and on any agreed follow-up measures.

Regarding the legal framework of the protection against acts of interference, the Committee notes that, in the context of sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination, the Government refers to section 220(1) and (2) of the Labour Code (according to which union officials are protected by law against any form of constraint or limitation in the exercise of their functions and cannot be dismissed during their term of office for reasons related to their mandate) and section 218 of the Social Dialogue Act (according to which the constraint or limitation of union officials in the exercise of their functions is punished with a prison term of three months to two years or with a fine; the remaining paragraphs deal with acts of constraint in the context of strike action). The Committee further notes that section 10 of Act No. 62 of 10 May 2011 concerning social dialogue prohibits the modification or termination of employment on the ground of union membership or activity. The Committee observes that the new legislation does not seem to foresee sanctions in the case of violation of section 10 of the Social Dialogue Act and section 220(2) of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to clarify this point. Should it be confirmed that the new legislation does not provide for sanctions for the violation of section 10 of the Social Dialogue Act and section 220(2) of the Labour Code, the Committee wishes to recall that the existence of general legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough if they are not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee full protection against acts of anti-union discrimination including by imposing sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

Concerning protection against acts of interference, the Committee had requested, in its previous comments, information on the penalties against acts of interference which were prohibited under sections 221(2) and 235(3) of Act No. 53/2003 and Act No. 54/2003. The Committee had noted from the Government's report that under Act No. 54/2003, such acts were punished with imprisonment from six months to two years or a fine between RON2,000 and RON5,000 (approximately US$600 to US$1,600). Considering that these fines might, in some cases, not be sufficiently dissuasive, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to increase the amount of the existing sanctions so that they constitute a sufficient deterrent against all acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes with satisfaction that acts of interference are now prohibited by section 218 of Act No. 53/2003 (Labour Code) as amended and section 7(2) of Act No. 62 of 10 May 2011 concerning social dialogue, and that under section 217(1)(a) of the Social Dialogue Act, acts of interference by public authorities or employers and employers' organizations are punished with a fine between RON15,000 and RON20,000 (approximately US$4,700–$6,300).

Article 4. Right to collective bargaining. Bargaining level. The Committee notes that the BNS and the CNS CARTEL ALFA deplore that the labour law reform has caused the national-level collective agreement and the branch-level collective agreement to disappear and allege that section 128(1) of the new Social Dialogue Act, according to which collective agreements may be negotiated at enterprise level, at the level of a group of enterprises and at the level of sector of activity (an entity to be determined by the Government according to section 1(r)), is contrary to the Convention. The Committee notes from the Government's reply that, the bargaining levels have been laid down by law, taking into consideration the legitimacy of the bargaining parties as conferred by the criteria of representativity, in the absence of other practical arrangements and due to fears expressed by the social partners as regards the negative impact of a lack of regulation in the field; and that, following discussions with the social partners, it was decided that the sectors of activity will be determined exclusively by the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the new legal provisions allow the parties, if they so wish, to negotiate and conclude, in addition to sectoral agreements, collective agreements at the national level. The Committee also requests the Government to communicate comparative statistics for the period 2008–12 on the coverage of collective bargaining.

Criteria of representativity. The Committee notes that the BNS criticizes that the criteria for being deemed representative set forth in section 51 of the new Social Dialogue Act are arbitrary and in breach of the free will of the parties, highlighting the representativity criteria at national level (cumulating membership of at least 5 per cent of the labour force and territorial structures in more than half of the national municipalities) and at enterprise level (membership of at least 50 per cent plus one of the workers of the enterprise). The Committee notes from the Government's reply that the representativity criteria at national and sectoral levels have not been revised but have remained the same. It also notes the Government's indication that the representativity criteria at enterprise level have been amended (the Committee understands that previously the membership requirement was of at least one third of the workers of the enterprise) in order to: (i) comply with the principle of application erga omnes of the clauses of the collective agreement; (ii) ensure the legitimacy of the trade union to negotiate and represent the interests of all the workers of the enterprise; and (iii) to avoid the frequent conflicts arising under the old legislation among unions contesting the representativity established by the tribunal – the resolution of these conflicts, of which one had been previously reported by the BNS, had in some cases exceeded the competence and level of training of the local authorities. Recalling that, under a system where the law stipulates that a trade union must receive the support of 50 per cent of the members of a bargaining unit to be recognized as a bargaining agent, if no union secures this absolute majority, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in this unit, at least on behalf of their own members, the Committee requests the Government to amend the legislation in order to guarantee the application of this principle.

Moreover, the Committee notes that, according to section 135(1)(i), in enterprises without a trade union meeting the representativity criteria, if an enterprise-level union exists and is affiliated to a federation meeting the representativity criteria in the relevant sector of activity, the negotiation of a collective agreement will be carried out by the representatives of that federation together with the elected workers' representatives. The Committee considers that this provision could infringe upon the principle of the free and voluntary collective negotiation and therefore the autonomy of the bargaining partners. It requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 135 in practice.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining. Collective bargaining with public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted from the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Cases Nos 2611 and 2632 that in the public budget sector which covers all public employees, including those who are not engaged in the administration of the State (e.g. teachers), the following subjects are excluded from the scope of collective bargaining: base salaries, pay increases, allowances, bonuses and other staff entitlements which are fixed by law. The Committee had noted from the Government's report that the salary rights in the budget sector were settled by Act No. 330/2009 on Unitary Salaries of the Staff Paid from Public Funds which stipulates that the fixation of salaries is exclusively by law and that it cannot be negotiated. The Committee previously recalled that all public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State should enjoy the guarantees provided for in Article 4 of the Convention with regard to the promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had further recalled that if, as part of its stabilization policy, a government considers that wage rates cannot be settled freely through collective bargaining, such a restriction should be imposed as an exceptional measure and only to the extent that is necessary, without exceeding a reasonable period, and it should be accompanied by adequate safeguards to protect workers' living standards. Therefore, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate in its next report if Act No. 330/2009 on Unitary Salaries of the Staff Paid from Public Funds is considered as an exceptional measure within the context of an economic stabilization policy, if adequate safeguards were established in order to protect workers' living standards and if it provides for a limited length of application.

The Committee notes from the information provided by the Government the adoption of Act No. 284/2010 on Unitary Salaries of the Staff Paid from Public Funds, which abrogated Act No. 330/2009 and entered into force on 1 January 2011. The Committee notes that Act No. 284/2010 continues to stipulate that the fixation of salaries in the public budget sector is exclusively by law (section 3(b)) and that no salaries or other pecuniary entitlements exceeding the provisions of this law can be negotiated through collective agreements (section 37(1)). The Committee notes that the Government highlights section 32 of Act No. 284/2010, which provides that the level of hierarchy coefficients for the categories of wages provided in this law will be revised periodically depending on the evolution of the wages existing in the Romanian labour market, so that public sector wages can be set at a competitive level, within the limits of financial sustainability. The Committee further notes the Government's indications that the conditions of work and employment in the public budget sector have never been excluded from the scope of collective bargaining; that the system of unitary salaries for staff paid from public funds was established in common accord with the trade unions in order to correct the serious budgetary imbalance and deficit that irresponsible collective negotiations of salaries at the level of each public institution had generated; and that no constitutional, European or international requirements could oblige governments to pay to staff paid from public funds salaries – whether negotiated or not – that exceed the financial sustainability of the state budget.

The Committee observes with concern that Act No. 284/2010, which replaces Act No. 330/2009, continues to globally preclude collective bargaining on salary rights and pecuniary entitlements in the public budget sector. While taking into consideration the Government's statement on the need to ensure the financial sustainability of the state budget, the Committee underlines that the Convention does not impose an obligation on the Government to regularly achieve results as regards the negotiation of salary and economic clauses of collective agreements in the public sector. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate that, while Article 6 of the Convention allows public servants engaged in the administration of the State to be excluded from its scope, all other categories of public servants should enjoy the guarantees of the Convention and therefore be able to negotiate collectively their conditions of employment, including wages and pecuniary entitlements. The Committee takes full account of the serious financial and budgetary difficulties facing governments, particularly during periods of prolonged and widespread economic stagnation. However, it considers that the authorities should give preference as far as possible to collective bargaining in determining the conditions of employment of public servants; where the circumstances rule this out, measures of this kind should be limited in time and protect the standard of living of the workers who are the most affected. In other words, a fair and reasonable compromise should be sought between the need to preserve as far as possible the autonomy of the parties to bargaining, on the one hand, and measures which must be taken by governments to overcome their budgetary difficulties, on the other. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that legislative provisions which allow Parliament or the competent budgetary authority to set upper and lower limits for wage negotiations or to establish an overall "budgetary package" within which the parties may negotiate monetary or standard-setting clauses or those which give the financial authorities the right to participate in collective bargaining alongside the direct employer would be compatible with the Convention, provided they leave a significant role to collective bargaining (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 264). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in full consultation with the social partners and, if necessary, with technical assistance from the Office, to bring national law and practice into conformity with Article 4 of the Convention and the abovementioned principles, so as to ensure that wages and pecuniary entitlements are included in the scope of collective bargaining for the public service workers covered by the Convention, and recalls that this collective bargaining of salaries in the public service could take place prior to the discussion of the budget legislation and could be global and not necessarily at the level of each public institution.

Information on the impact of the new legislation. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information and statistics relating to the impact of the recent legislative changes on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government states that this evaluation will only be possible at the end of 2012 so that the Government could only report on the impact of the new legislation in its report due in 2013. The Committee trusts that the Government will submit the requested information in its next report.

Rwanda

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore reiterate its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations of their own choosing. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that: (1) articles 11, 33, 35, 36, 38 and 39 of the Constitution of 4 June 2003 guarantee freedom of expression and association for state employees, as for all other citizens; (2) Law No. 22/2002 of 9 July 2002, on the General Statute for the Rwanda public service, is silent on the right of public servants to organize and to collective bargaining, although section 73 of the Law provides that public servants and the staff of public enterprises enjoy rights and freedoms on the same basis as other citizens; (3) the procedures for the implementation of section 73 of Law No. 22/2002 are still to be determined, and the scope of the relevant provisions of the Labour Code respecting occupational organizations need to be extended to state officials; and (4) although the Government indicated that there are unions of public servants in Rwanda, the legal void as regards the right to organize of this category of workers could give rise to problems in practice. The Committee noted that, under the terms of section 3 of the new Labour Code, “every person employed under the general statutes for the Rwanda public service or every person under specific statutes shall not be subject to the provisions of this law, except for matters that may be provided for by Prime Minister’s orders”. It further noted that, according to the Government’s report, the process is under way of revising the General Statute governing public civil servants. The Committee recalls that public servants shall enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing to further and defend their interests. The Committee trusts that the revision of the General Statute governing public civil servants will be completed in the near future and that it will take duly into account the above principle so as to ensure that public servants enjoy the guarantees laid down in the Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the Law once it has been adopted.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom. The Committee noted that section 155(2) of the new Labour Code refers to an order of the Minister responsible for labour to determine “indispensable services” and the conditions of exercising the right to strike in these services. In its report, the Government had indicated that the order is prepared following consultations with the National Labour Council and that the text is still at the draft stage. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the order once it has been adopted.

The Committee noted that, under the terms of section 124 of the Labour Code, any organization requesting recognition as the most representative organization has to authorize the labour administration to check the register of its members and property. In this respect, the Committee recalls that the control exercised by the public authorities over trade union finances should not go beyond the requirement for the organizations to submit periodic reports. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend section 124 of the Labour Code taking into account the above principle.

The Committee notes the comments of 24 August 2010 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and asks the Government to provide its observations thereon.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary steps in the near future.

Lastly, the Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the ITUC which refer to matters already raised by the Committee.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee asked the Government to take steps to establish sufficiently dissuasive penalties for acts of anti-union interference and discrimination. The Committee noted that, according to the provisions of section 114 of the new Labour Code, any act which infringes the provisions providing protection against acts of discrimination and interference shall constitute an offence and incur the payment of damages. The Committee noted that the amount of damages has not been fixed, except for wrongful termination of an unemployment contract, as laid down by section 33 of the Code. In the latter case, the damages vary from three to six months’ wages, and may amount to as much as nine months’ pay where the worker has more than ten years’ service with the same employer, or where staff delegates or union representatives are concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the amount of damages applicable for acts of discrimination against trade union members or officials, other than the dismissal of trade union representatives.

Article 4. With reference to its previous comments concerning compulsory arbitration in the context of collective bargaining, the Committee noted with regret that the collective dispute settlement procedure provided for in section 143 ff. of the new Code culminates, in cases of non-conciliation, in referral to an arbitration committee whose decisions may be the subject of an appeal to the competent jurisdiction, whose decision shall be binding. The Committee recalls that, except for the cases of public servants engaged in the administration of the State and essential services in the strict sense of the term, arbitration imposed by the authorities or at the request of one party is generally contrary to the principle of the voluntary negotiation of collective agreements established by the Convention, and thus the autonomy of bargaining partners (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 257). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation in such a way that, except in the circumstances referred to above, a collective labour dispute in the context of collective bargaining may be submitted to the competent legal authority only with the agreement of both parties.

Moreover, with reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 121 of the Code provides that, at the request of a representative organization of workers or employers, the collective agreement shall be negotiated within a joint committee convened by the Minister of Labour or his delegate or the competent labour inspector. The Committee recalls that such a provision may well restrict the principle of free and voluntary negotiation of the parties within the meaning of the Convention, and even of being applied where one party wishes to have a new collective agreement even before the existing agreement has expired. The Committee requests the Government to take steps to amend section 121 of the Labour Code so that recourse to a joint committee for negotiating a collective agreement is possible only with the agreement of both parties.

With regard to the question of the extension of collective agreements, the Committee noted that, under section 133 of the Labour Code, at the request of a representative workers’ or employers’ organization, whether or not it is a party to the agreement or on its own initiative, the Minister of Labour may make all or some of the provisions of a collective agreement binding on all employers and workers covered by the occupational and territorial scope of the agreement. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation so that the extension of collective agreements is the subject of in-depth tripartite consultations (even where provision is made, as is the case in section 136 of the Code, for the parties affected by the application of an extended collective agreement to file a request for an exemption with the Minister of Labour).

Article 6. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 3 of the Code, any person governed by the general or individual public service regulations is not subject to the provisions of the Code other than for matters determined by an Order of the Prime Minister. The Committee regrets that the national authorities have not taken the opportunity afforded by the reform of the Labour Code to guarantee the right to collective bargaining for public servants covered by the Convention and requests the Government to indicate any measures taken or contemplated to this end.

Finally, the Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on the activities of the National Labour Council with regard to collective bargaining, on the number of collective agreements concluded, and on the sectors and numbers of workers covered.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finally, the Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, which refer to matters previously raised by the Committee, as well as mass dismissals in the tobacco sector. It requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Samoa

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its first report that tripartite partners have drafted a new Labour and Employment Relations Bill (2010) (“the draft Bill”) to address all issues related to the Convention. The Committee notes that the draft bill is still in the process of being developed and has benefited from ILO technical assistance. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the legislative reform will take into account all comments made below and will soon be completed in consultation with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in its next report and to supply the new law once adopted.

Articles 1–6 of the Convention. While observing that the draft Bill contains provisions which in general are in conformity with the Convention, the Committee notes that the protection afforded is not complete in all points. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the draft Bill includes:

- the prohibition of all acts of anti-union discrimination (in taking up employment, during employment, and at the time of termination of employment) and effective and expeditious procedures of redress and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions;
- the prohibition of all acts of interference by workers’ and employers’ organizations or each other’s agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration, including in particular acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers’ organizations under the domination of employers or employers’ organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers or employers’ organizations; and effective and expeditious procedures of redress and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions;
- the recognition of the right to collective bargaining of workers’ and employers’ organizations to all workers with the sole possible exception being the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State; and
- the recognition of the principles of voluntary and free collective bargaining and the related prohibition of compulsory arbitration except in the public service (in respect of public servants engaged in the administration of the State) and in essential services in the strict sense of the term, that is services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population.

Sao Tome and Principe

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that it has been commenting for a number of years on the need for the Government to take steps to amend the provisions of Act No. 4/92, which refer to the following issues:

- the majority required for calling a strike is too high (section 4 of Act No. 4/92);
- with regard to minimum services, it is important, in the event of disagreement in determining such services, that the matter be settled by an independent body and not by the employer (section 10(4) of Act No. 4/92);
- the hiring of workers without consultation with the trade unions concerned to perform services essential to maintain the economic and financial viability of the enterprise should it be seriously threatened by a strike (section 9 of Act No. 4/92); and
- compulsory arbitration for services which are not essential in the strict sense (services whose interruption might endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population) (postal, banking and loan services; section 11 of Act No. 4/92).

The Committee asks the Government to take steps to amend the abovementioned legislative provisions so as to bring the legislation into line with the Convention and to indicate, in its next report, any measures adopted in this respect. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate whether federations and confederations are able to exercise the right to strike.

Finally, noting that Law No. 4-2002 of 30 December 2002, allows requisition of workers in cases of strikes in non-essential services, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to modify the legislation so as to guarantee that the requisition of workers is only possible in the essential services in the strict sense of the terms.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. In its previous comment the Committee asked the Government to indicate what sanctions may be imposed against acts of discrimination that undermine freedom of association and acts of interference by employers and their organizations in workers' organizations and vice versa. The Committee noted the Government's indication that there is no legislation that lays down penalties for acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to take the necessary steps to adopt appropriate legislation which imposes sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference committed by employers against trade union organizations, in conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether specific legal protection exists for trade union members should they be subjected to acts of anti-union discrimination on the basis of their participation in legitimate trade union activities.

Article 4. The Committee notes the Government's statement concerning the adoption of a new Constitution, a copy of which will be sent to the Office. The Committee observes that the right to collective bargaining is recognized in Act No. 5/92 of 28 May 1992 concerning trade unions but is not itself governed by legislation. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that collective bargaining does not apply to the public service. The Committee notes the Government's indication in various reports on the bill concerning the legal framework of collective bargaining that this bill has still not been adopted. In these circumstances, the Committee reiterates the importance of the bill being adopted as soon as possible and of the right to collective negotiation of their conditions of work and employment being secured to all workers in the public and private sectors, including public servants. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the progress of the legislative procedures relating to the adoption of the bill and to take all possible steps to ensure its adoption in the very near future, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers.

Application in practice. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's statement that no collective agreements currently exist in the country owing to geographical factors. The Committee requests the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the ILO to resolve this major issue.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Labour Directorate of the Ministry of Labour might act as an intermediary between the parties to collective bargaining, including in order to ensure the effectiveness of the agreement. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the role of the Labour Directorate in the collective bargaining process.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sierra Leone

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Need to adopt specific provisions accompanied by sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions for the protection of workers and workers' organizations against acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. The Committee had previously noted that the revision of the labour laws, prepared with ILO technical assistance, had already been submitted to tripartite meetings, that the comments of the tripartite body had been received and that the document had just been forwarded to the Law Officers' Department. The Committee had asked the Government to keep it informed of any further progress made in the preparation of the final draft document and to provide a copy of the revised legislation as soon as it had been adopted. Noting that, according to the information previously sent by the Government, the revision of the labour laws was submitted to the Law Officers' Department in 1995, the Committee requests the Government once again to make every effort to take the necessary action for the adoption of the new legislation in the very near future and to indicate the progress made in this regard.

Article 4. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the collective agreements in force in the education sector and in other sectors.

The Committee notes that, since 1992 when a draft Industrial Relations Act was under discussion, the Government only provided a report in 2004. The Committee therefore requests the Government to furnish a detailed report on the application of the Convention, accompanied by copies of any legal texts concerning freedom of association adopted since 1992.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Swaziland

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1978)

Trade union comments. The Committee notes the communication dated 4 August 2011 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the issues under examination, as well as allegations of continued repression of trade union activities in various sectors as well as police brutality against trade unionists. The Committee recalls that rights of workers' and employers' organizations can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind against the leaders and members of these organizations. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that this principle is respected and requests it to provide its reply to the ITUC communication.

With regard to comments from the ITUC previously noted by the Committee that the Public Service Bill infringed upon the organizational rights of public sector workers, the Committee notes the communication dated 31 August 2011 from the Swaziland Federation of Trade Unions (SFTU) alleging the lack of political will to solve a number of issues under examination, including the fact that the Public Service Bill is continuing its legislative framework without being referred back to the Social Dialogue Committee as advised by the ILO. The Committee also notes from the Government's report that the Bill is presently being debated by the House of Senate, after the social partners were given the opportunity to lobby the Senate on July 2011, and the assistance of an ILO expert which gave a presentation at the request of the Senators. The Government adds that, once the Bill is passed and promulgated into law, the parties would still have the possibility to propose amendments. The Committee expects that the Public Service Bill will be in full conformity with the provisions of the Convention with regard to the rights of public service workers. The Committee requests the Government to transmit a copy of the Bill once it is promulgated into law.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in the Conference Committee in June 2011. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee took note of a number of steps taken by the Government following the high-level tripartite mission which visited the country in October 2010. However, the Conference Committee firmly called upon the Government to intensify its efforts to institutionalize social dialogue and anchor genuine social dialogue through durable institutions at various levels of the Government, which could only be assured in a climate where democracy reigned and fundamental human rights were fully guaranteed. It urged the Government, in full consultation with the social partners and with the ongoing technical assistance of the ILO, to establish time frames for addressing all issues on an expedited basis. In this regard, the Conference Committee requested the Government to elaborate a roadmap for the implementation of the long-called-for measures.

Legislative issues. The Committee takes due note of the adoption and promulgation of the Industrial Relations (Amendment) Act of 2010 (Act No. 6 of 2010), a copy of which was transmitted by the Government. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Act amends a number of provisions of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA), upon which it has been commenting for many years. In particular, the Committee observes that the new Act:

- provides for the right to organize for domestic workers, by including domestic service in a household or a private house within the definition of “undertaking” (section 2(b) and (c) of the Act);
- removes the restrictions on the nomination and eligibility of candidates for trade union office in section 29(1)(i) of the IRA (section 3 of the Act);
- shortens the compulsory dispute settlement procedures provided in section 85(4) of the IRA by limiting the period for arbitration to 21 days (section 5 of the Act); and
- ensures that the supervision of strike ballots by the Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration Commission (CMAC) provided for in section 86 of the IRA may only occur upon request by an organization in terms of its statute or constitution (section 6 of the Act).

Other legal issues still pending. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government for many years to amend the IRA to recognize the right to strike in sanitary services, and establish only a minimum service with the participation of workers and employers in the definition of such a service. The Committee previously noted that the Essential Services Committee had engaged in discussion with the trade union and the Staff Association on the determination of the minimum service that should be provided with respect to sanitary services. It observes from the latest report of the Government that Act No. 6 of 2010 provides for a clear definition of “sanitary services” in its section 2. The Committee requests once again the Government to provide information on the discussions held and the final outcome with respect to the determination of the minimum service to be afforded for sanitary services.

The Committee recalls that its previous comments requested information on the effect given in practice to section 40 of the IRA with regard to the civil liability of trade union leaders and, in particular, the charges that may be brought under section 40(13), as well as the effect given to section 97(1) (criminal liability of trade union leaders) of the IRA by ensuring that penalties applying to strikers do not in practice impair the right to strike. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the proposal to amend section 40 (civil liability of trade union leaders) and section 97(1)

(criminal liability of trade union leaders) of the IRA would be brought before the Labour Advisory Board before 31 March 2012. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on all progress made in this regard.

As regards the need to take measures to amend the legislation so as to guarantee for prison staff the right to organize in defence of their economic and social interests, the Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had noted that a Supreme Court judgment in relation to the organizational rights of the Correctional Services Union referred to the possibility of adopting appropriate legislation for these workers to enjoy their rights under the Convention, with the exception of the right to strike. The Committee notes from the Government's latest report that the zero draft of the Correctional Services Bill was yet to be finalized by the Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs with a view to being submitted to the Social Dialogue Committee. The Government adds that it requested the assistance of the ILO to give advice on best practices in the region. While expressing its firm hope that the assistance of the ILO will be provided rapidly, the Committee expects the Government to propose the necessary legislative amendments without further delay.

Finally, the Committee recalls that its previous comments referred to the following legal acts and proclamation which gave rise to practices contrary to the provisions of the Convention:

- The 1973 Proclamation and its implementing regulations. The Committee recalls that it previously took note of the information provided by the Government in relation to the status of this Proclamation and, in particular, the "Attorney-General's Opinion", which stated that "on the coming into force of the Constitution, the Proclamation died a natural death". The Committee however noted from the 2010 high-level tripartite mission report that, despite assurances of the Government to the contrary, the social partners considered that there remained a certain ambiguity and uncertainty in respect of the residual existence of the Proclamation. The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary steps to clarify that all provisions of the 1973 Proclamation are now null and void.
- The 1963 Public Order Act. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Act so as to ensure that it could not be used to repress lawful and peaceful strike action. The Committee previously noted from the conclusions of the 2010 high-level tripartite mission that, despite the provisions exempting trade union meetings from the scope of the Act, it appeared that the Act was resorted to in respect of trade union activities if it was considered that these activities included matters relating to broader calls for democratic reforms of interest to trade union members. In this respect, the Committee observed that the ban on displaying any flag, banner or other emblem signifying association with a political organization or with the promotion of a political object, which was added to the Act in 1968, apparently has affected the right of trade unions to carry out peaceful protest actions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken to ensure that the 1963 Public Order Act is not used in practice to repress lawful and peaceful strike action, including any police guidelines or other instructions that may be elaborated to this end, as well as to indicate the measures taken to amend the Act where its provisions may have given rise to undue interference in trade union meetings or protest actions.

The Committee takes note of the statement of the Government according to which consultation with the ILO technical assistance is ongoing to find a way forward. The Committee is informed of the ongoing technical assistance of the ILO and proposed recommendations on the various issues under examination. It also takes due note of the proposed roadmap which runs until 31 March 2012 endorsed by the Government to meet the recommendations of the Conference Committee. While acknowledging the Government's openness and commitment, the Committee cannot but firmly hope that the Government will pursue its efforts in this regard, and expects it to take all necessary steps to address all remaining issues in line with the Committee's previous request and in full consultation with the social partners and to provide information on the concrete progress made in this regard in its next report.

Report on the death in custody of a participant to the 2010 May Day demonstration. In its previous observation, the Committee noted with grave concern from the Conference Committee discussion and the high-level tripartite mission report the serious disruption of the 2010 May Day demonstrations, the series of arrests, and finally the death in custody of a participant in the demonstrations who had been arrested for wearing a t-shirt with the name of a political organization proscribed under the 2008 Suppression of Terrorism Act. The Committee notes from the Government's report with regard to the death of the detainee that the conclusion in the coroner's report is that the death was due to suicide; furthermore, the Committee notes the indication that the hearing was made public and that the family were allowed to use their own pathologist and legal representative throughout the hearing.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Trinidad and Tobago

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1963)

Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee has been referring for a number of years to the need to amend section 24(3) of the Civil Service Act that affords a privileged position to already registered associations, without providing objective and pre-established criteria for determining the most representative association in the civil service.

The Committee had noted that the Government indicated that the Civil Service Act review has been in progress but is not yet complete. However, after consultation with employers' and workers' representative organizations, the Government has considered that the amendment of section 24(3) was not possible because of the presence of more than one association representing the seven existing classes in the civil service for the purposes of consultations and negotiation could place the employer in a difficult position. The Committee had recalled, however, that where there exists a trade union which enjoys preferential or exclusive bargaining rights, as in the current system, decisions concerning the most representative organization should be made by virtue of objective and pre-established criteria instead of simply giving priority to the one which was registered earlier in time, so as to avoid any opportunities for partiality or abuse. Noting that no information was provided in this regard, the Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the legislation will be modified in the near future, including section 24(3), so as to bring it into conformity with the principles of the Convention, and once again requests the Government to indicate any developments thereon.

In its previous comments, the Committee referred to the need to amend section 34 of the Industrial Relations Act in order to ensure that, in cases in which no trade union represents the majority of workers, the minority unions can negotiate jointly a collective agreement applicable in the negotiating unit, or at least conclude a collective agreement on behalf of their own members. The Committee had noted that the Government reiterated that the Standing Tripartite Committee on Labour Matters (a consultative body) had not been reconstituted after the expiration of its term in December 2006. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that it is considering amendments to the Industrial Relations Act, Chapter 88:01, to increase the rights of workers who are currently not recognized for the purpose of collective bargaining under the Act. The Committee expresses the hope that additional concrete measures will be taken in the near future to amend the legislation so as to allow minority unions in the unit to bargain collectively, at least on behalf of their own members when there is no union that represents the majority of workers. The Committee trusts that the Government will communicate progress on these issues in its next report and recalls that it can avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office if it so wishes.

ITUC comments. The Committee had noted the comments from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 24 August 2010 indicating that: (i) although the law states that workers can form and join trade unions, in practice, everyone working in "essential services", which include domestic workers, drivers, gardeners and others, are not recognized as workers under the law and therefore cannot legally join trade unions; (ii) many unions had their collective bargaining blocked by employers' delaying tactics; and (iii) the state authorities have repeatedly refused to negotiate collective agreements with the public sector unions. Noting that no information was provided in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide its observation thereon.

Tunisia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the comments dated 4 August 2011 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the application of the Convention.

The Committee is also informed of the establishment of the Tunisian General Confederation of Labour (CGTT), for which it had been requesting recognition, as did the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2672), for several years.

The Committee also notes that a constituent assembly was elected on 23 October 2011 with the mandate, inter alia, to draw up a new Constitution. In this context, the Committee hopes that, as part of the legislative reform movement which should accompany the adoption of a new Constitution, the issues which have been the subject of its comments for many years will be taken into account in order to ensure that the Tunisian legislation is in full conformity with the Convention.

In this regard, the Committee recalls that these questions concerned the following points.

Article 2 of the Convention:

- the need to ensure that magistrates enjoy the guarantees afforded by the Convention;
- the need to amend section 242 of the Labour Code in order to guarantee that the minimum age for joining a trade union is the same as the age for admission to employment as determined in the Labour Code (16 years in accordance with section 53 of the Labour Code).

Article 3:

- the question of determining the representativeness of trade unions in the higher education sector;
- the need to amend section 251 of the Labour Code so as to ensure that workers' organizations have the right to elect their representatives in full freedom, including from among foreign workers, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the country;

- the need to repeal section 376bis of the Labour Code so as to guarantee that workers' organizations, irrespective of their level, can organize their activities in full freedom with a view to furthering and defending the interests of their members;
- the need to amend section 376ter of the Labour Code so as to remove any legal requirement to specify the duration of a strike so as to guarantee that workers' organizations can call a strike of unlimited duration if they so wish;
- the possibility of deleting the last subsection of section 381ter of the Labour Code, which provides that the list of essential services shall be fixed by decree; the Committee considers that it would not be desirable – or even possible – to attempt to draw up a complete and fixed list of services which can be considered as essential (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 159);
- the need to amend section 387 of the Labour Code taking account of the principle whereby sanctions for strike action should be possible only where the prohibitions breached are in conformity with the Convention (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 177); however, the requirement to obtain the approval of the trade union federation before declaring a strike, under the terms of section 376bis of the Labour Code, is not in conformity with Article 3 of the Convention;
- the need to review the penalties laid down by section 388 of the Labour Code, under which any person who has participated in an unlawful strike is liable to a sentence of imprisonment; in this regard, the Committee recalls that no criminal penalty should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and, therefore, measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account; that such penalties can be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious criminal offences of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts, especially the Penal Code.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on progress made with regard to bringing the national legislation, especially the Labour Code, into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. It reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office with regard to these issues.

Turkey

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1993)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011, Education International (EI) in a communication dated 31 August 2011, and the Turkish Union of Public Employees in the Education, Training and Science Services (EGITIM SEN) in a communication dated 12 September 2011. The Committee notes the observations provided by the Government on the 2010 comments of the Confederation of Public Employees' Trade Unions (KESK), ITUC and EI, as well as on the 2011 ITUC comments. The Committee recalls that in its previous observation it had also noted the comments submitted by the Independent Confederation of Public Servants' Trade Unions (BASK) in a communication dated 11 October 2010. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon as well as on the 2011 EI comments.

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the 2011 Conference Committee on the Application of Standards.

Civil liberties. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been commenting upon the situation of civil liberties in Turkey. It further recalls that in its previous observation, while taking note of the information provided by the Government on the steps taken to avoid police violence and undue interference, the Committee observed with concern the allegations of important restrictions placed on freedom of speech and assembly of trade unionists, including numerous cases of arrests of trade unionists contained in the above-noted ITUC, KESK and EI communications. The Committee notes the Government's observations thereon. The Committee notes, in particular, that the Government, referring to the alleged cases of arrests of trade unionists, points out that while the mentioned trade union leaders have been arrested and detained, such measures were taken against them not because of their trade union activities, but rather because of their membership in a terrorist organization. The Committee notes in this respect that EI indicated that by accusing trade unionists of being a member of an armed and illegal organization, the State effectively stigmatized and delegitimized the trade union movement in Turkey. With regard to the EI allegation relating to the assaults committed by the riot police which used tear gas against members of the EGITIM SEN during a march organized on 5 June 2009, the Government indicates that the security forces intervened by gradually using gas, in a controlled manner, in order to disintegrate the group of people who forced the barricades. The Government provided similar explanation with regard to interventions by the security forces in other strikes and demonstrations. The Government considers that the security forces acted in accordance with the regulations and exerted force accordingly. The Committee notes with concern new allegations of restrictions placed on freedom of association and assembly of trade unionists. The Committee, as did the Conference Committee, once again recalls that respect for civil liberties is an essential prerequisite to freedom of association and urges the Government to continue to take all the necessary measures to ensure a climate free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind so that workers and employers could fully and freely exercise their rights under the Convention. The Committee also urges the Government to review, in full consultation with the social partners, any legislation that might be applied in practice in a manner contrary to this fundamental principle and to consider any necessary amendments or abrogation. It requests the Government to indicate in its next report all measures taken in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to carry out an investigation into the new allegations concerning all the cases of use of violence during police or other security force interventions and to provide information on its outcome in its next report.

Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it had been commenting on several provisions of Act No. 2821 on trade unions, Act No. 2822 on collective labour agreements, strikes and lockouts and Act No. 4688 on public employees' trade unions. The Committee further recalls that in its previous observation, the Committee had noted the draft Act on Trade Unions amending Acts Nos 2821 and 2822. In this respect, the Committee noted that in general, the draft provisions concerning internal functioning of unions and their activities appeared to be less detailed than corresponding provisions of Acts Nos 2821 and 2822, which previously gave rise to repeated interference by the authorities. The Committee had further noted several other improvements concerning, among others, the procedure for establishment of a trade union. The Committee noted, however, that the draft did not deal with all issues previously raised by the Committee and that no amendments to Act No. 4688 have been proposed. It therefore expressed the hope that the necessary measures aimed at the rapid adoption of the necessary amendments to Acts Nos 2821, 2822 and 4688 will be taken without further delay.

The Committee notes the Government's statement before the 2011 Conference Committee to the effect that more time was needed for revising the legislation regarding the industrial relations system and that the harmonization process of the legislation had not been fully completed. The Committee further notes that the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide detailed and complete information on all progress made in this respect to the Committee of Experts for its 2011 session. While observing with regret the absence of the Government's report, the Committee notes the Government's communication dated 30 November 2011 by which it informs that a draft Act on Collective Labour Relations had been prepared by the Tripartite Consultation Board. The Government expects that this draft, which aims at bringing the Turkish legislation into conformity with the Convention, will be enacted by Parliament in the first half of 2012. The Committee expresses the hope that the new legislation amending Acts Nos 2821, 2822 and 4688 will be adopted without further delay and that it will take into account the following points raised by the Committee in its previous observations.

Article 2 of the Convention:

- The need to ensure that self-employed workers, homeworkers and apprentices enjoy the right to organize. In this respect, the Committee notes that section 2 of the draft Law refers to the definition of “worker” provided for in the Labour Law (No. 4857), according to which, an “employee is a real person working under an employment contract” and recalls that section 18 of Act No. 3308 (Apprenticeship and vocational training) leads to the exclusion either explicitly or in practice of these categories of workers.
- The need to guarantee the right to organize to public employees, such as senior public employees, magistrates, civilian personnel in military institutions and prison guards (section 15 of Act No. 4688).
- The need to ensure that persons who have been unemployed for over one year or those retired can retain their trade union membership, subject only to the by-laws of the relevant trade union (section 18 of the draft Law on trade unions).

Article 3. Election of representatives:

- The need to ensure that the decision regarding the suspension of a trade union officer's mandate in cases where he/she becomes a candidate in local or general elections and its termination in case of election belongs to the relevant trade union (sections 22(3) and 27(3) of the draft Law on trade unions).
- The need to repeal section 10(8) of Act No. 4688, which provides for the removal of union executive bodies in case of non-respect of requirements concerning meetings and decisions of general assemblies set out in the law.
- The need to repeal section 16 of Act No. 4688 providing for a mandatory termination of trade union membership and duties by reason of resignation and exclusion from the public services or transfer to another branch of activity, so as to ensure the right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom.
- The need to ensure that procedures and principles related to the acquisition and termination of membership are regulated by trade unions' internal regulations or by-laws and not by the authorities (section 18(10) of the draft Law on trade unions).

Limitations on the right to strike:

- The need to ensure that cases in which strikes may be restricted or even prohibited are limited to those involving: (i) public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; and (ii) essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely those services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. With regard to the public service, the Committee recalls that section 35 of Act No. 4688, which provides for the determination and settlement of disputes by the conciliation board, makes no mention of the circumstances in which strike action may be exercised in the public service. With regard to other services, the Committee notes that, on the one hand, the draft Law on trade unions proposes to repeal sections 29–34 of Act No. 2822, which impose important limitations on the right to strike, including banning strikes in specified categories of services and, on the other, it proposes to add section 29, pursuant to which strikes may be fully or partially, permanently or temporarily prohibited by a ruling of the competent court if the strike is deemed contrary to public order or public health (section 42 of the draft Law on trade unions). The Committee considers that the term “public order” is too broad to fall within a strict definition of what may constitute an essential service.

- The need to amend section 52 of Act No. 2822, which provides for compulsory arbitration by the High Court of Arbitration at the request of one party in disputes concerning activities and establishments where strike is prohibited and where parties have failed to come to an agreement. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute and a strike is only acceptable if it is at the request of both parties involved in a dispute, or if the strike in question may be restricted, even banned, that is in the case of disputes in essential services in the strict sense of the term.
- The need to reduce the excessively long waiting period before a strike can be called (section 27 – referring to section 23 – and section 35 of Act No. 2822).
- The need to ensure that workers’ and employers’ associations are involved in the determination of minimum services and, in cases of disagreement, the question should be settled by an independent body (section 40 of Act No. 2822).
- The need to repeal severe limitations on picketing (section 48 of Act No. 2822).
- The need to ensure that no penal sanction could be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and that on no account measures of imprisonment could be imposed, except in cases where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed (sections 70, 71, 72, 73 (except for paragraph 3 repealed by the Constitutional Court), 77 and 79 of Act No. 2822, imposing heavy sanctions, including imprisonment for participating in unlawful strikes).

Supervision of organizations’ accounts (Associations Act No. 5253). The Committee had previously observed that section 35 of the Associations Act of 4 November 2004 provides that certain specific sections of this Act apply to trade unions, employers’ organizations, as well as federations and confederations, if there are no specific provisions in special laws concerning these organizations. In this respect, section 19 enables the Minister of Internal Affairs or the civil administration authority to examine the books and other documents of an organization, conduct an investigation and demand information at any time, with 24-hours’ notice. Once again, the Committee recalls that the supervision of accounts should be limited to the obligation of submitting periodic financial reports or to cases where serious grounds exist for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or the law (which should be in conformity with the Convention), or if there is a need to investigate a complaint by a certain percentage of the members of the employers’ or workers’ organizations; both the substance and the procedure of such verifications should be subject to review by the competent judicial authority affording every guarantee of impartiality and objectivity (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 125). The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken or contemplated to amend sections 19 and 35 of Act No. 5253 of 2004 so as to exclude workers’ and employers’ organizations from the scope of application of these provisions or ensure that verification of trade union accounts beyond the submission of periodic financial reports takes place only where there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or the law (which should be in conformity with the Convention) or in order to investigate a complaint by a certain percentage of members.

The Committee urges the Government to engage in ongoing assistance with the ILO in order to ensure the rapid adoption of the necessary amendments to Acts Nos 2821, 2822, 4688 and 5253 and expresses the hope that the final texts will take fully into account its comments above.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the comments made by the Turkish Union of Public Employees in the Education, Training and Science Services (EGITIM SEN) in a communication dated 17 December 2010 and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 alleging violations of collective bargaining rights and numerous cases of anti-union dismissals. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon in its next report. The Committee further notes the comments submitted by the International Metalworkers’ Federation (IMF) in a communication dated 31 August 2011 alleging anti-union dismissals that have taken place at two enterprises, and the Government’s observations thereon. The Committee examines the comments submitted by Education International (EI) in the framework of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

The Committee recalls that in its previous observation it had noted the draft Act on Trade Unions amending Acts Nos 2821 (Trade Unions Act) and 2822 (Collective Agreements, Strikes and Lock-outs Act). In this respect, the Committee notes the discussion that took place in the June 2011 Conference Committee on the Application of Standards regarding the application of Convention No. 87 in Turkey and, in particular, the Government’s statement that more time was needed for revising the legislation regarding the industrial relations system and that the harmonization process of the legislation had not been fully completed. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures aimed at the rapid adoption of the necessary amendments to Acts Nos 2821, 2822 and 4688 (Public Servants Trade Unions Act) will be taken without further delay and that any new legislation will take into account the following points raised by the two Committees.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee recalls that in its previous observation, while taking due note of legislative provisions introducing dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination (sections 118 and 135 of the Penal Code No. 5237, and section 18(2) of Act No. 4688), it observed that the ITUC referred to the widespread incidences of acts of anti-union discrimination in the public and private sectors, such as transfers of public employees who are trade union members or officers, interference in the activities of public sector trade unions by the Government as employer, and blacklisting and pressure to quit the union in the private sector. The Committee noted that similar allegations were submitted by the Public Employees' Trade Unions (KESK). The Committee requested the Government to indicate the procedure that applies for the examination of complaints of anti-union discrimination in the public sector and to provide statistical data showing progress made in addressing effectively allegations of acts of anti-union discrimination and interference both in the public and private sectors (number of cases brought to the competent bodies, average duration of proceedings and remedies imposed). The Committee notes the observations provided by the Government on the ITUC and KESK comments. The Government indicates, in particular, that in addition to the abovementioned legislative provisions which, in its view provide for sufficient protection against all types of discrimination, the necessary warnings have been issued by the Government and four circulars have been published by the Office of the Prime Minister on the unacceptability of interference in trade union activities of public employees. The Committee further notes that, in its report, the Government indicates that no statistical database regarding complaints of anti-union discrimination is kept by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. It further explains that, as regards the public sector, public servants have the right to make written or verbal complaints to their supervisors requesting to investigate cases of trade union discrimination. If the alleged cases are not resolved following this procedure, administrative proceedings can be initiated. The Government informs that the State Personnel Administration possesses statistical information and documents submitted to it by the relevant institutions regarding claims relating to cases of anti-union discrimination in the public sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide this statistical data. The Committee notes that in its latest communication, the ITUC refers to cases of reinstatement ordered by the court. Noting, however, that no information has been provided by the Government with regard to the private sector and noting that some of the ITUC allegations concern the private sector, the Committee reiterates its previous request for information and expresses the firm hope that the Government will take all necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Convention are effectively applied.

Remedies and compensation. The Committee had previously requested the Government to update the sanctions provided for under sections 59(2) (non-reinstatement of trade union officers) and 59(3) (anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment) of Act No. 2821 and to ensure that the compensation afforded to a trade union officer who wishes to return to his/her post and is not reinstated for anti-union reasons has a dissuasive effect. The Committee notes in this respect that section 24 of the draft Law on Trade Unions would appear to address the issue previously raised by the Committee with regard to adequate compensation for acts of anti-union discrimination as it proposes to provide, in addition to the compensation provided for under the Labour Law (No. 4857), for a compensation of not less than the worker's annual wage. With regard to the non-reinstatement of a trade union officer who wishes to return to his/her post, section 22 of the draft merely indicates that, while calculating the compensation, the employment period in the workplace shall be taken into consideration, as well as the wage and other rights enjoyed by the worker prior to termination. The Committee considers that compensation established solely pursuant to this criterion would not constitute a sufficiently dissuasive sanction against an employer. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to review the draft Law on Trade Unions so as to further amend the relevant sections of Act No. 2821.

Article 4. Free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that it had previously expressed the hope that the Government would take the necessary measures to amend section 12 of Act No. 2822 so as to ensure that, where no union meets the 50 per cent membership criterion, the existing unions at the workplace or enterprise may bargain at least on behalf of their own members regardless of whether they are affiliated to a confederation or not. The Committee notes that, while section 39 of the new draft Law on Trade Unions, amending section 12 of Act No. 2822, proposes to abolish the requirement of affiliation to a major confederation in order for a union to be able to engage in collective bargaining at the workplace level, the proposed amendment maintains the requirement that unions should represent the majority of workers in a workplace (50 per cent plus one) in order to enter into negotiations with the employer with a view to concluding a collective agreement. The Committee once again recalls that in such systems, if no single union covers more than 50 per cent of the workers, collective bargaining rights should be granted to the existing unions in the workplace, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to review the draft Law on Trade Unions so as to further amend section 12 of Act No. 2822.

Collective bargaining in the public service. The Committee recalls that it had previously noted that Law No. 5982 of 2010 repealed several provisions of the Constitution which previously restricted collective bargaining rights and granted, by virtue of its article 53, the right to conclude collective agreements to public servants and other public employees. The Committee had also taken note of the Government's indication that the constitutional amendment would be followed by the relevant legislative amendments and trusted that Act No. 4688 would be soon amended so as to ensure that public servants enjoy full collective bargaining rights and not just the right to hold "collective consultative talks" as currently established. The Committee therefore once again trusts that Act No. 4688 would be soon amended so as to bring it into conformity with the newly amended Constitution and the Convention by addressing the following points raised previously: (i) if the legislation is to provide for the direct employer to participate in genuine negotiations with trade unions representing public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the need to ensure that a significant role is left to collective bargaining between the parties; (ii) the need to guarantee clearly within the legislation that negotiations cover not only financial questions but also other conditions of employment; (iii) the need to clearly guarantee that the legislation does not give the authorities, in particular the Council of Ministers, the power to modify or reject collective agreements in the public sector; and (iv) the need for the parties to be able to hold full and meaningful negotiations over a period of time longer than that currently provided for (currently 15 days under section 34).

The Committee notes that in its statement before the Conference Committee, the Government referred to the adoption in February 2011 of an Act providing for a collective agreement premium for members of public servant trade unions and to the abrogation of a criticized provision concerning contract personnel in the public sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy thereof.

The Committee further once again recalls that an additional issue to be overcome in order to allow for free and voluntary collective bargaining in the public sector is the recognition of the right to organize to a large number of categories of public employees not engaged in the administration of the State who are excluded from this right and, therefore, from the right to be represented in negotiations (as addressed in the comments on the application of Convention No. 87).

The Committee urges the Government to engage in ongoing assistance with the ILO in order to ensure the rapid adoption of the necessary amendments to Acts Nos 2821, 2822 and 4688, and expresses the firm hope that the final texts will take fully into account its comments above. It requests the Government to transmit the relevant legislative texts or proposed drafts thereof with its next report.

Uganda

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that, according to the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), collective bargaining in the public service sector is not allowed by the legislation. The Committee requests the Government to take measures in order to recognize the right to collective bargaining to all public employees and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee noted that section 7 of the Labour Unions Act (LUA) sets forth the lawful purposes for which trade union federations may be established. The said purposes include, inter alia: the formulation of policy relating to the proper management of labour unions and the general welfare of employees; the planning and administration of workers' education programmes; and consulting on all matters relating to labour union affairs. Noting that the lawful purposes delineated under section 7 of the LUA does not include collective bargaining, the Committee recalls that the right to collective bargaining should also be granted to federations and confederations of trade unions (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 249). In this connection, the Committee requests the Government to confirm whether the right of trade union federations to engage in collective bargaining is assured, in the LUA or in other legislation.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee noted that, under section 5(3) of the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act of 2006, in cases where a labour dispute reported to a labour officer is not referred to the Industrial Court within eight weeks from the time the report is made, any of the parties or both the parties to the dispute may refer the dispute to the Industrial Court. Section 27 of the Act, the Committee further notes, empowers the minister to refer disputes to the Industrial Court where one or both parties to a dispute refuse to comply with the recommendations of the report issued by a board of inquiry. In this connection, the Committee recalls that recourse to compulsory arbitration is acceptable only for: (1) workers in essential services, in the strict sense of the term; and (2) public employees engaged in the administration of the State. Otherwise, provisions that permit the authorities to impose compulsory arbitration, or allow one party unilaterally to submit a dispute to the authorities for arbitration, run counter to the principle of the voluntary negotiation of collective agreements enshrined in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to amend the above legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

Article 2 of the Convention. Protection against employer's interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged to protect against any possible employer intimidation or interference in respect of union certification or decertification. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that in addition to doubling the number of Labour Relations Officers, the Department of Labour and Training continues to work with all of its social partners to proactively protect against employer intimidation and/or interference in respect of union certification and decertification. In addition, the Labour Advisory Council, which is chaired by the minister responsible for labour, meets quarterly and provides an opportunity and a forum for the Labour Relations Officers, the unions and/or the employers to discuss any concerns or issues. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any measures taken by the Labour Advisory Council to further protect against any possible employer intimidation or interference in respect of union certification or decertification.

Article 4. Coverage of management personnel. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged to include management personnel within the scope of the Trade Union Act so as to guarantee them the rights established by the Convention, in particular the right to collective bargaining. The Committee observes that according to the Government: (i) every worker has a right to belong to a union as prescribed by article 10(1) of the Constitution, therefore including management personnel; (ii) management personnel can be placed within a specific bargaining unit if there is agreement between the parties that collective bargaining agreement representation be installed; (iii) if a union has historically represented management personnel in an organization, then unless there are exceptional circumstances why recognition should be denied, then the Department of Labour and Training should use the weight of their department to facilitate the employer recognizing the union; (iv) the Labour Advisory Council agreed to this way forward, wherein the Department of Labour and Training will “cause” employers to recognize unions where it is appropriate to do so; and (v) the Department of Labour and Training will facilitate the process already in place for rights to recognition, in a way that is inclusive of management personnel. The Committee takes due note of this information.

British Virgin Islands

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

The Committee notes the adoption of a new Labour Code in 2010 (Act No. 4 of 2010).

Article 1 of Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the new Labour Code provides for protection against anti-union discrimination (sections 44, 82(1) and (2), 85 and 86), providing even reinstatement and other dissuasive sanctions.

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1954)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 4 August 2011, alleging acts of anti-union discrimination and obstacles to collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations on this matter.

The Committee notes the discussion that took place within the Committee on the Application of Standards at the International Labour Conference at its June 2011 session, particularly that in its conclusions: (1) it noted the widespread exercise of trade union rights in the country and the respect for human rights; (2) it welcomed the fact that negotiations on the matters under examination had continued during the Conference and that an ILO mission would visit Uruguay in relation to these issues; and (3) it trusted that this mission would be able to note tangible progress and that, with the objective of bringing the legislation fully into conformity with the Convention, the necessary measures would be taken without delay to prepare a bill that reflected the comments of the supervisory bodies.

The Committee noted that an ILO mission visited the country in August 2011 and that during this mission, the Government and the social partners reached an agreement setting in motion a new stage of dialogue on the matters under examination.

Article 4 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Act No. 18566 of September 2009 concerning collective bargaining, and the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2699, which raised problems of conformity of the abovementioned Act with the Convention (see 356th Report, paragraph 1389). These were referred to in the following conclusions:

- I. With respect to the exchange of information necessary to allow the normal conduct of the process of collective bargaining and that in the case of confidential information, its communication carries the implicit obligation of secrecy, and breach thereof would give rise to civil liability of those who are in breach (section 4), the Committee considers that all the parties to the negotiation, whether or not they have legal personality, must be liable for any breaches of the right to secrecy of the information which they receive in the framework of collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that this principle is respected.
- II. As regards the composition of the Higher Tripartite Council (section 8), the Committee considers that an equal number of members could be taken into account for each of the three sectors, and also the appointment of an independent chairperson, preferably nominated by the workers' and employers' organizations jointly, who could break the deadlock in the event of a vote. The Committee requests the Government to hold discussions with the social partners on the modification of the law so as to arrive at a negotiated solution to the number of members of the Council.
- III. With respect to the powers of the Higher Tripartite Council and in particular considering and pronouncing on questions related to the tripartite and bipartite bargaining levels (section 10(d)), the Committee has emphasized on many occasions that "the determination of the bargaining level is essentially a matter to be left to the discretion of the parties" (see Digest of the decisions and principles of the Freedom of Association Committee, fifth (revised) edition, 2006, paragraph 989). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures including the amendment of existing legislation to ensure that the bargaining level is established by the parties and is not subject to voting in a tripartite body.
- IV. As regards the possibility of wages councils establishing conditions of work for each case to be agreed by the employers' and workers' delegates in the respective wage group (section 12), the Committee recalls, firstly, that under ILO standards, the fixing of minimum wages may be subject to decisions by tripartite bodies. On the other hand, recalling that it is up to the legislative authority to determine the legal minimum standards for conditions of work and that Article 4 of the Convention seeks to promote bipartite bargaining to fix conditions of work, the Committee hopes that in application of those principles, any collective agreement on fixing of conditions of employment will be the result of an agreement between the parties, as the section in question appears to envisage.
The Committee had noted in this connection the Government's statement in its report that the competence of the wages councils was aligned with the provisions of section 83 of Act No. 16002 of 25 November 1988, covering conditions of work, but extended to the latter only when there was agreement between the social partners, which meant that a tripartite body may not vote on matters pertaining to conditions of work, but does have a vote when it comes to determining minimum wages by category. (The Committee understands that these matters have been cleared up between the parties.)
- V. With respect to the subject of bipartite collective bargaining and, in particular, that in company collective bargaining where there is no workers' organization, bargaining authorities should pass to the representative higher level organization (section 14, last sentence), the Committee observes that the complainant organizations consider that the absence of a trade union does not mean the absence of collective relations in the company. The Committee considers, on the one hand, that bargaining with the most representative higher trade union-level organization should only take place if it had a number of members in the company in accordance with the national legislation of each country. The Committee recalls, on the other hand, that the Collective Agreements Recommendation, 1951 (No. 91), gives pre-eminence to workers' organizations as one of the parties to collective bargaining, and refers to representatives of non-organized workers only in the case of absence of such organizations. In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that future legislation takes these principles fully into account.
- VI. As regards the effects of the collective agreement and, in particular, that the collective agreement by sector of activity concluded by the most representative organizations is of mandatory application to all employers and workers at the respective bargaining level once it has been registered and published by the Executive Power (section 16), the Committee, taking into account the concern expressed by the complainant organizations, requests the Government to ensure that the process of registration and publication of the collective agreement only involves checks on compliance with the legal minima and questions of form, such as, for example, the determination of the parties and the beneficiaries of the agreement with sufficient precision and the duration of the agreement.
- VII. As regards the duration of collective agreements and, in particular, the maintenance in force of all the clauses of the agreement which have expired until a new agreement replaces it, unless the parties have agreed otherwise (section 17, second paragraph), the Committee recalls that the duration of collective agreements is primarily a matter for the parties involved, but if government action is being considered any legislation should reflect tripartite agreement (see Digest, op. cit., paragraph 1047). In these circumstances, taking into account that the complainant organizations have expressed disagreement with the whole idea of automatic continuing effect of collective agreements, the Committee invites the Government to discuss with the social partners on amendments to the legislation in order to find a solution acceptable to both parties.

The Committee is pleased to note in the Government's report that: (1) in the framework of the ILO's mission to the country in August 2011, a tripartite agreement was drawn up between the Ministry of Labour and Social Security and representatives of the workers' sector Inter-Union Assembly of Workers – Workers' National Convention (PIT–CNT) and the employers' sector (National Chamber of Commerce and Services of Uruguay), thereby setting in motion a new dialogue on the comments made by the Committee on Freedom of Association, the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards; and (2) the dialogue process, which is the result of a tripartite agreement, was due to start on 10 October 2011 and the Government will send a progress report or draft legislation envisaging possible amendments to Act No. 18566 to the International Labour Standards Department so that it might make comments. The Committee notes with interest that the Government has indicated in a recent communication that following the dispositions provided for in the tripartite agreement abovementioned, it has invited the social partners to a meeting on 28 October 2011 in order to continue the work as planned by the tripartite agreement and it has presented to the social partners a modification proposal to Act No. 18566 in accordance with the conclusions of the Committee on Freedom of Association. (The Government has also sent the employers' sector's contribution and the comments from the workers as regards the said proposal.) The Committee trusts that, in the course of the tripartite dialogue initiated, the necessary measures will be taken, taking into account the comments of the Committee on Freedom of Association and of this Committee on Act No. 18566 and the matter relating to the occupation of workplaces, to ensure that law and practice is in full conformity with this Convention. The Committee stresses the importance of the parties reaching an agreement as rapidly as possible on the matters pending, given that it is vital that the regulations governing labour relations should be shared by the social partners with a view to future action. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed on the matter in its next report.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee had noted the comments submitted by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in its communication dated 24 August 2010 referring mostly to issues already raised by the Committee as well as violations of trade union rights of foreign workers and the cancellation of the registration of a trade union in the transport sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Article 2 of the Convention. The Law on Trade Unions (2002). In its previous comments, the Committee had indicated that the reference to the General Federation of Trade Unions of Yemen (GFTUY) made in sections 2 (definition of "General Federation"), 20 and 21, indicating that "All the general trade unions establish a General Federation entitled the General Federation of Trade Unions of Yemen" could result in making it impossible to establish a second federation to represent workers' interests. The Committee had noted that the Government indicated that: (i) it has never imposed any prohibition on trade-union activities; (ii) the law does not stipulate that affiliation to GFTUY is obligatory and there are many other general trade unions which are not in this federation, such as the Trade Union of Doctors, Trade Union of Pharmacists, Education Professions' Trade Unions, Journalists' Trade Union and Lawyers' Trade Union; (iii) there is no monopoly in representation since, in the framework of social dialogue, the interlocutor is the most representative trade union; and (iv) at the moment, the GFTUY is the most representative association of workers. While noting that the Government does not refer to the possibility of the general trade unions to form a federation different than the GFTUY, the Committee recalls that unification of the trade union movement imposed through state intervention by legislative means runs counter to the principle embodied in Articles 2 and 11 of the Convention. In these circumstances, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Law on Trade Union so as to repeal specific reference to the GFTUY, allowing workers and their organizations to establish and join the federation of their own choosing and to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this regard in its next report.

Furthermore, the Committee had noted the exclusion from the scope of the Law of employees of high-level public authorities and Cabinets of Ministers (section 4). The Committee had recalled that senior public officials should be entitled to establish their own organizations and that the legislation should limit this category to persons exercising senior managerial or policy-making responsibilities (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 57), and had requested the Government to indicate whether the categories of workers referred to in section 4 of the Law enjoy the right to establish and join trade unions. In the absence of the Government's reply thereon, the Committee must once again reiterate the abovementioned request.

Article 3. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 40(b) provides that a trade union organization can organize a strike in coordination with a trade union organization of the highest level. The Committee had recalled that a legislative provision which requires that a decision by the first-level trade union to call a strike at the local level should be approved by a higher level trade union body, is not in conformity with the right of trade unions to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee had requested the Government to clarify whether, section 40(b) requires an authorization from the higher level trade union for a strike to be organized and if that is the case, to take the necessary measures in order to amend the legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. In the absence of the Government's reply thereon, the Committee must once again reiterate the abovementioned request.

The draft Labour Code. The Committee recalls that in its previous observations it had noted that a draft Labour Code was under discussion and that several of its provisions were not in conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that with the active participation of the ILO, it is working on the enactment of the new Labour Code and that the draft Code has been referred to the Ministry of Legal Affairs, and will consequently be referred by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour to the Council of Ministers and afterwards to Parliament.

In this respect, the Committee must once again recall its comments concerning the draft Labour Code which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee recalled that in its previous observation, it had requested the Government to ensure that domestic workers, the magistracy and the diplomatic corporations, excluded from the draft Labour Code (section 3B(2) and (4)), may fully benefit from the rights set out in the Convention and to transmit the texts of any legislation or regulations ensuring their right to organize. The Committee had further requested the Government to consider revising section 173(2) of the draft Code so to ensure that minors between the ages of 16 and 18 may join trade unions without parental authorization and noted with interest the Government's intention to do so. The Committee had noted that the Government, in its previous report, indicated that the Committee's observations with regard to sections 3B and 173(2) of the draft Code have been taken into consideration. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any developments in this respect.

In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that foreign persons holding diplomatic passports and those working in Yemen on the basis of political visas were excluded from the scope of the draft Code under section 3B(6) and that this category of workers was covered by the specific legislation, regulations and agreements on reciprocal treatment. The Committee had therefore requested the Government to indicate whether this category of foreign workers could in practice establish and join organizations of their own choosing. In the light that no new information was provided by the Government, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Article 3. With regard to the Committee's previous request to provide a list of essential services referred to in section 219(3) of the draft Code, which empowers the Minister to submit disputes to compulsory arbitration, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the Council of Ministers will issue such a list once the Labour Code is promulgated. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any developments in this respect.

Concerning section 211 of the draft Labour Code, which provides that strike notice must include an indication as to the duration of a strike, the Committee had noted that the Government reiterates that it is willing to take into account the previous observation of the Committee to the effect that such a requirement unduly restricts the effectiveness of an essential means for furthering and defending workers' occupational interests. It requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this regard.

Articles 5 and 6. The Committee had previously noted that section 172 of the draft Labour Code would appear to prohibit the right of workers' organizations to affiliate with international workers' organizations and that the Government had concurred that this section contradicted section 66 of the Law on Trade Unions, which ensures the right to affiliate with international organizations and the current practice. The Committee therefore expressed the hope that the Government would take the necessary measures to withdraw section 172 from the draft Labour Code. The Committee had noted the Government's indication referring to the Law on Trade Unions which allows workers' organizations to affiliate with the Arab, regional and international trade union federations and to contribute to their establishment. According to the Government, this Law leaves no room for any other text that might contradict its provisions. The Committee therefore once again expresses the firm hope that section 172 will be withdrawn from the draft Labour Code and requests the Government to keep it informed in this respect.

The Committee trusts that the present legislative reform will bring the national legislation into full conformity with the Convention, in accordance with the comments abovementioned, and once again requests the Government to indicate any development in this regard in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the comments on a serious situation submitted by ITUC in August 2011 and requests the Government to provide as a matter of urgency its reply in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). The Committee notes the comments submitted by the ITUC in its communication dated 24 August 2010. The Committee requests the Government to communicate its observations thereon.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union practices. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it had been requesting the Government to ensure that effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions that guarantee the protection of workers' organizations against acts of interference by employers or their organizations in trade union activities are expressly provided for in the national legislation. In its last observation, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that: (i) the process of formulating the new draft legislative amendments to the Labour Code was under way and that it would endeavour to add provisions on penal responsibility of employers committing acts of anti-union discrimination and interference in trade union affairs in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention; and (ii) the Committee's observation would be taken into account when making amendments to the Law on Trade Unions and supplementing the Penal Code. However, no information regarding the amendments to the Law on Trade Unions or Penal Code was provided in the Government's report. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the progress made in this respect and to provide a copy of the amended legislative texts aimed at ensuring full respect for the rights covered under the Convention as soon as they have been adopted.

Article 4. Power granted to the Ministry of Labour to refuse registration of a collective agreement on the basis of consideration of "economic interests of the country". The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code so as to ensure that refusal to register a collective agreement is only possible due to a procedural flaw or because it does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by the labour legislation and not on the basis of consideration of “the economic interests of the country”. The Committee had previously noted: (i) that the Government reiterates that it has adopted the Committee’s proposal with regard to the amendment of the abovementioned section of the Labour Code; and (ii) that the Labour Code was being revised by the Ministry of Legal Affairs before being submitted to the Council of Ministers and to the Parliament. The Committee notes that the Government once again reiterates that the Labour Code is currently being revised by the Ministry of Legal Affairs before being submitted to the Council of Ministers and to the Parliament. The Committee trusts that the legislative amendments requested in its previous observations will be fully reflected in the new legislation and once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the draft Labour Code as soon as the final version of it is available.

Collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide statistics on the number of workers covered by collective agreements in comparison with the total number of workers in the country and it had noted the Government’s indication that the requested statistics on collective bargaining were available and would be sent in its subsequent reports. While noting that according to the Government, trade unions exist in the public sector and that in the private sector, trade unions have been recently established in certain institutions, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will provide the statistics requested together with its next report or at least the information available.

The Committee notes that the Government denies the ITUC’s assertion according to which the Ministry of Labour revokes collective agreements and that according to the Government, there is not the slightest evidence given for it.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee notes the ITUC comments on a serious situation of 4 August 2011 and requests the Government to provide its reply as a matter of urgency.

Zambia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1996)

In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Industrial and Labour Relations (Amendment) Act No. 8 of 2008 (ILRA) had been adopted. The Committee, however, noted that most of the proposed amendments still remain unattended to and were not taken into account during the process of the labour law review. The Committee further noted that, according to the Government’s report, the concerns expressed by trade unions and employers’ associations, some of which were presented before the Parliamentary Committee on Economic, Social and Labour Affairs, had been referred to the Government for consideration. Finally, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that its previous comments would be taken into account in the future review of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that there is a moratorium on the discussion of the ILRA as there are matters before the courts of law arising from a petition by the Federation of Free Trade Unions of Zambia. The Committee further notes that the Government indicates that in spite of the aforesaid, it is willing to review the Committee’s concerns through the tripartite structures once the matters are disposed of by the courts of law.

In these circumstances, the Committee must once again recall its comments and in particular that measures should be taken to bring the following provisions of the ILRA, into conformity with the Convention:

Article 2 of the Convention:

- Section 2(e), which excludes from the scope of the Act, and therefore from the guarantees afforded by the Convention, workers in the prison service, judges, registrars of the court, magistrates and local court justices, and section 2(2), which accords the Minister discretionary power to exclude certain categories of workers from the scope of the Act.
- Section 5(b) that provides that an employee can only become a member of “a trade union within the sector, trade, undertaking, establishment or industry in which the employee is engaged” since it limits trade union membership to workers in the same occupation or branch of activity. In this respect, the Committee recalls that such conditions may be applied to first-level organizations, on condition that these organizations are free to establish inter-professional organizations, and to join federations and confederations in the form and manner deemed most appropriate by the workers concerned.
- Section 9(3) in order to shorten the period of registration of a trade union which is currently at a maximum of six months, constituting a serious obstacle to the establishment of organizations and amounts to denial of the right of workers to establish organizations without previous authorizations.

Article 3 of the Convention:

- Section 7(3) that allows a labour commissioner to prohibit a trade union officer from holding office in any trade union for a period of one year if, following the commissioner’s refusal to register the union, this union is not dissolved within six months. In this respect, the Committee recalls that having committed an act, the nature of which is not such as to call into question the integrity of the person concerned and is not such as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties, should not constitute grounds for disqualification from trade union office.

- Section 21(5)(6) which confers to the Commissioner the power to suspend and appoint an interim executive board of a trade union, as well as to dissolve the board and call for a fresh election. In this respect, the Committee recalls that any removal or suspension of trade union officers, which is not the result of an internal decision of the trade union, a vote by members or normal judicial proceedings, seriously interferes in the exercise of the trade union office to which the officers have been freely elected by the members of their trade unions. Provisions which permit the suspension and removal of trade union officers by the administrative authorities or under the provisions of legislation are incompatible with the Convention. Measures of this kind should be solely directed towards protecting the members of organizations and should only be possible through judicial proceedings. The law should lay down sufficiently precise criteria to enable the judicial authority to determine whether a trade union officer has committed acts warranting his suspension or removal; provisions, which are too vague or fail to comply with the principles of the Convention, do not constitute an adequate guarantee. The persons concerned should also enjoy all the guarantees of normal judicial procedures (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraphs 122 and 123).
- Sections 18(1)(b) and 43(1)(a), under which a person, having been an officer of an employers' or workers' organization whose certificate of registration has been cancelled, may be disqualified from being an officer of a trade union if that person fails to satisfy the commissioner that she or he did not contribute to the circumstances leading to such cancellation.
- Section 78(4), which limits the maximum duration of a strike to 14 days, after which, if the dispute remains unsolved, is referred to the court. The Committee considers that such a restriction would seriously limit the means available to trade unions to further and defend the interests of their members, as well as their right to organize their activities and formulate their programmes and is not compatible with Article 3 of the Convention.
- Section 78(6)–(8), under which a strike can be discontinued if it is found by the court not to be “in the public interest”.
- Section 78(1), under which, as interpreted by a decision of the Industrial Relations Court, either party may take an industrial dispute to court.
- Section 107, which prohibits strikes in essential services, defined too broadly, and empowers the Minister to add other services to the list of essential services, in consultation with the Tripartite Consultative Labour Council.
- Section 107, which empowers a police officer to arrest, without any possibility of bail, a person who is believed to be striking in an essential service and which imposes a fine and up to six months' imprisonment. The Committee recalls that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and therefore measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where during a strike, violence against persons or property or other serious infringements of rights have been committed, and can be imposed pursuant to legislation punishing such acts. Nevertheless, even in the absence of violence, if the strike modalities had the effect of making the strike illegitimate, proportionate disciplinary sanctions may be imposed against strikers.

The Committee hopes that the future amendments will take into account the comments that it has been making for many years and that they will be adopted in the very near future following full and frank consultations with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect and hopes that the amendments to the Act will be in full conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

ITUC comments. Finally, the Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011 concerning issues already raised by the Committee and indicating that the Zambia Revenue Authority (ZRA) has consistently used delaying tactics to effectively deny recognition to the Zambia Union of Financial Institutions and Allied Workers (ZUFIAW). The Committee had also previously noted the comments made by the ITUC in 2008 and 2010, on the application of the Convention and in particular concerning the intimidation of strikers through police intervention. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on all of these ITUC comments.

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication dated 4 August 2011.

Situation of the revision of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act (as amended by the Industrial and Labour Relations (Amendment) Act, 2008) (ILRA). In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Industrial and Labour Relations (Amendment) Act No. 8 of 2008 (ILRA) had been adopted. The Committee, however, noted that according to the Government's report, most of the amendments it has previously proposed, still remain unattended to, and were not taken into account during the process of the labour law review. The Committee further noted that according to the Government's report, the concerns expressed by trade unions and employers' associations, some of which were presented before the Parliamentary Committee on Economic, Social and Labour Affairs, had been referred to the Government for consideration, although since 1997, the said provisions have not been used against workers or employers. The Committee noted the Government's indication that its previous comments have been noted and would be taken into account in the future review of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that there is a moratorium on the discussion of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act (as amended by the Industrial and Labour Relations (Amendment) Act, 2008) (ILRA), as there are matters before the courts of law arising from a petition by the Federation of Free Trade Unions of Zambia (FFTUZ). The Committee welcomes the Government's commitment and hopes that the revision will be in full conformity with the Convention, according to this commitment.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerning the Industrial and Labour Relations Act (as amended by the Industrial and Labour Relations (Amendment) Act, 2008) (ILRA), were the following:

- Section 78(1)(a) and (c) and (4) of the ILRA, as amended, allows, in certain cases, either party to refer the dispute to a court or arbitration. The Committee recalls that arbitration imposed by the legislation, or at the request of one party in the services which are neither essential in the strict sense of term, nor involving civil servants engaged in the administration of the State, is contrary to the principle of the voluntary negotiation of collective agreements. The Committee therefore requests the Government to give consideration to amending the above provisions so as to ensure that arbitration in services other than those mentioned above, can take place only at the request of both parties involved in the dispute.
- Section 85(3) of the ILRA, as amended, provides that the court shall dispose of the matter before it (including disputes between an employer and an employee, as well as the matters affecting trade unions and collective bargaining rights) within a period of one year from the day on which the complaint or application is presented to it. The Committee understands that, under section 85, the court has jurisdiction over the complaints of anti-union discrimination and trade union interference and recalls that when allegations of violations of trade union rights are concerned, both the administrative bodies and the competent judges should be empowered to give a ruling rapidly. The Committee therefore requests the Government to shorten the maximum period within which a court should consider the matter and issue its ruling thereon.

The Committee once again emphasizes the importance that should be attached to full and frank consultations taking place on any questions or proposed legislation affecting trade union rights. The Committee hopes that the envisaged amendments will be adopted in the very near future following full and frank consultations with the social partners. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect and once again hopes that the amendments to the Act will be in full conformity with the provisions of the Convention and its comments above.

Zimbabwe

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2003)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

Follow-up of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee recalls that the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the ILO Constitution to examine the observance by the Government of Convention No. 87 and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) recommended that: the relevant legislative texts be brought in line with Conventions Nos 87 and 98; all anti-union practices – arrests, detentions, violence, torture, intimidation and harassment, interference and anti-union discrimination – cease with immediate effect; national institutions continue the process the Commission had started whereby people can be heard, in particular referring to the Human Rights Commission and the Organ for National Healing and Reconciliation (ONHR); training on freedom of association and collective bargaining, civil liberties and human rights be given to key personnel in the country; the rule of law and the role of the courts reinforced; social dialogue strengthened in recognition of its importance in the maintenance of democracy; and ILO technical assistance to the country continued.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government and the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011. The Committee further notes the comments made by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ITUC) on the application of the Convention in its communication dated 4 August 2011.

The Committee notes with interest that the ILO technical assistance to support the Government and the social partners in implementing the above recommendations continued throughout 2011 and in this respect, notes the following activities carried out during the reporting period: (i) a workshop on legislative and institutional support framework for social dialogue systems; (ii) a high-level roundtable on international labour standards and national law and practice; (iii) a two workshops on freedom of association and collective bargaining rights in the public sector; (iv) a training course on international labour standards for members of the national employment councils; (v) a training course on human and trade union rights for police, security forces and Attorney-General's Office; (vi) a training course on freedom of association for members of the Attorney-General's Office and officers of the Ministry of Labour; (vii) a training course on international labour standards, judicial independence and ethics for judges, magistrates, arbitrators and lawyers; (viii) a training course for conciliators and mediators; and (ix) a workshop on international labour standards for the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU). The Committee understands that further promotional activities are scheduled to take place before the end of the year.

The Committee recalls that it had previously noted the allegations submitted by the ZCTU, which related to the forced exile of the General Secretary of the General Agriculture and Plantation Workers Union of Zimbabwe (GAPWUZ) and instances of banning of trade union activities (workshop, commemoration events, processions and May Day celebration), and requested the Government to provide its observations thereon. The Committee notes that the ITUC 2011 communication also contains allegations referring to the same issues. The Committee notes that with regard to the allegations of forced exile of the GAPWUZ General Secretary (Ms Hambira), the Government indicates in its report that in order to ascertain the legitimacy of the complaint and reply to the allegation, it needs more information from the complainant in view of the fact that it is possible for people to submit unfounded allegations in pursuance of their own goals. The Government indicates that in respect of the GAPWUZ leader exile, it has no case to answer: Ms. Hambira has no case pending before the police or the courts and is free to return to live in Zimbabwe. The Committee recalls that the ZCTU alleged that in February 2010, the GAPWUZ offices were raided and Ms Hambira and members of her team were questioned at the Harare Central Police station following a documentary and a report produced by the union on violations of workers' rights in the agricultural sector. The ZCTU and ITUC allege that Ms Hambira, who had already been previously threatened and beaten by the security forces and the police on several occasions, felt forced to go into exile after the police investigation had found that she had contravened section 31 of the Criminal Law, which makes it an offence to publish or communicate false statements prejudicial to the State. The Committee regrets that the Government provides no observations on these detailed allegations. Noting that the Government indicates that Ms Hambira can return to the country, the Committee, like the Conference Committee, requests the Government to indicate all measures taken or envisaged to ensure her safety if she decides to return to the country.

With regard to the allegation of banning trade union activities, the Committee notes that the Government submits that this aspect should be considered in the context of the delayed implementation of the Government's initiatives to improve its compliance with Conventions Nos 87 and 98 and the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry. In this respect, the Government explains that the information sharing with the law enforcement agencies commenced only in July 2011. The Government expects the situation to improve once a significant number of the targeted groups is reached. The Government also indicates that the Ministry of Labour was entrusted to liaise with the law enforcement bodies with a view to ensuring that in practice, trade union meetings are not subjected to the Public Order and Security Act (POSA). The Committee expects that the Government will intensify its efforts in this respect so as to ensure that the POSA is not used to infringe upon legitimate trade union rights, including the right of workers' organizations to express their views on the Government's economic and social policy. It also expects that the Government will take the necessary steps to ensure that trainings on human and trade union rights for the police and security forces continue. The Committee notes that the 2011 Conference Committee requested the Government to carry out, together with the social partners, a full review of the application of the POSA in practice, and considered that concrete steps should be taken to enable the elaboration and promulgation of clear lines of conduct for the police and security forces with regard to human and trade union rights. The Committee regrets that no information has been provided by the Government on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect. The Committee therefore requests the Government to carry out, together with the social partners, a full review of the application of the POSA in practice and to provide details on its outcome. It expects that lines of conduct for the police and security forces will be elaborated and promulgated in the very near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Further in this connection, the Committee recalls that the Commission of Inquiry recommended that the POSA be brought into line with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the POSA, notwithstanding its non-application to trade union meetings, is being amended. The Committee notes in this respect, copies of two sets of amendments proposed back in 2009. It requests the Government to clarify the status of these amendments, particularly in the light of the fact that in the framework of the Universal Periodic Review process of the United Nations Human Rights Council, the Government of Zimbabwe has clearly indicated that it did not support the recommendations calling for the amendment of the POSA (see A/HRC/19/14, Human Rights Council, 12th session, 3–14 October 2011).

The Committee further recalls the Commission of Inquiry's recommendation that steps be taken by the authorities to bring all outstanding cases of trade unionists arrested under the POSA to an end. It recalls that in its previous observation it had noted the Government's indication that all such cases had been identified and requested the Government to indicate the steps taken to ensure that these cases were withdrawn. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour has been liaising with the Attorney-General's Office and that the latter has been following up with the concerned courts throughout the country and compiling information regarding the cases that have either been concluded or withdrawn. The Committee deeply regrets that almost two years after the Commission of Inquiry's specific recommendation, the Government appears to be still at the information gathering stage. The Committee, as did the 2011 Conference Committee, urges the Government to ensure that cases of trade unionists arrested under the POSA are withdrawn without further delay and to provide detailed information in this respect.

The Committee had previously taken note of the initiated labour law reform and harmonization process and on that occasion expressed the firm hope that the relevant legislative texts will be brought in line with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that together with the social partners it has been holding consultations aimed at developing of principles for the harmonization and labour law reform taking into account all the legislative recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and the comments of the Committee of Experts. The Government further indicates that on 12 September 2011, these principles were presented by the tripartite technical working group to the principals of the Tripartite Negotiating Forum. The Government indicates that while there was a consensus on the draft principles arising from the recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, the social partners have requested for additional time to consult over three additional principles which arose during the consultative process (unlinked to the comments of the Committee). Representatives of workers in the public sector also requested additional time for bipartite discussions on the nature of the harmonization with the relevant governmental bodies, their respective employers. Such consultations were due to take place during October 2011. It is the Government's hope that the amendment Bill will be discussed in Parliament in 2012. The Committee takes due note of a copy of the draft Principles for the Harmonization and Review of Labour Laws in Zimbabwe and the information provided by the Government on the specific sections of the Labour Law which it intends to amend in the framework of the reform. The Committee notes with interest that the revision of the labour legislation envisages taking into account its previous comments and welcomes the fact that this process involves all social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments and progress made in revising and harmonizing the Labour Act, Public Service Act and all other relevant laws and regulations.

The Committee notes that in its 2011 communication, the ITUC alleged several cases of suspension and mass dismissals of workers following their participation in protests and strikes. The Committee recalls that suspending or dismissing workers for having participated in a strike or protest implies a serious risk of abuse and constitutes a violation of freedom of association. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on the matters raised by the ITUC.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the law and practice will be brought fully in line with the Convention in the very near future. It encourages the Government to continue cooperating with the ILO and the social partners in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the outcome of the activities carried out under the technical assistance package and on all other measures taken to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry. It considers that priority should be given to addressing all concerns related to civil liberties and all human rights violations, including those relating to trade union rights, which should be included in the review to be carried out by the Human Rights Commission. In this respect, the Committee notes with concern that in the framework of the Universal Periodic Review process, the Government of Zimbabwe has indicated that it did not support the recommendation requesting the Government to take the necessary measures so that all allegations of human rights violations are duly investigated and that the perpetrators are brought to justice. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on the steps taken to ensure that the Human Rights Commission and the ONHR can adequately contribute to the defence of trade union and human rights.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 11 (Australia, Bangladesh, Brazil, Kyrgyzstan, Mauritius, Montenegro, New Zealand, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, Turkey); Convention No. 87 (Angola, Armenia, Australia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Congo, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Hungary, Indonesia, Israel, Kyrgyzstan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands: Aruba, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Timor-Leste, Uganda); Convention No. 98 (Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Barbados, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Cambodia, Central African Republic, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Colombia, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Estonia, Gabon, Ireland, Kyrgyzstan, Malawi, Russian Federation, Senegal, Timor-Leste, Tunisia, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands); Convention No. 135 (Armenia, Burundi, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Slovakia); Convention No. 141 (Belize, Burkina Faso); Convention No. 151 (Armenia, Colombia, Gabon, Seychelles); Convention No. 154 (Armenia, Colombia, Kyrgyzstan, Morocco, Slovakia, Uganda).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 11 (Azerbaijan, Morocco, Tajikistan, Uganda); Convention No. 87 (France); Convention No. 98 (Algeria, Singapore, United Kingdom: Anguilla); Convention No. 141 (Albania, Guatemala, Mali).

Forced labour

Algeria

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1962)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Civil service. For a number of years the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the incompatibility with the Convention of sections 32, 33, 34 and 38 of Act No. 84-10 of 11 February 1984 concerning civil service, as amended and supplemented by Act No. 86-11 of 19 August 1986 and by Act No. 06-15 of 14 November 2006, under which it is possible to require persons who have completed a course of higher education or training to perform a period of civil service ranging from one to four years before being able to exercise an occupation or obtain employment.

The Committee also previously noted that, under sections 32 and 38 of the Act, any refusal to perform civil service and the resignation of the person concerned without valid reason results in the prohibition on their exercising an activity on their own account, and that any infringement will incur the penalties laid down in section 243 of the Penal Code (imprisonment ranging from three months to two years and/or a fine of between 500 and 5,000 dinars). Similarly, under sections 33 and 34 of the Act, all private employers are required to satisfy themselves before engaging any workers that applicants are not subject to civil service or can produce documentation proving that they have completed it. Furthermore, any private employer who knowingly employs a citizen who has evaded civil service is liable to imprisonment and a fine. Hence, even though persons liable to civil service enjoy conditions of work (remuneration, seniority, promotion, retirement, etc.) similar to those of regular public sector workers, they perform this service under threat since, in the event of any refusal, they are denied access to any self-employed occupational activity or employment in the private sector. This means that civil service falls within the concept of compulsory labour within the meaning of Article 2(1) of the Convention. Moreover, since it consists of a contribution by the persons concerned to the economic development of the country, this compulsory service is also incompatible with Article 1(b) of the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), which has also been ratified by Algeria.

The Committee further noted that under section 2 of Ordinance No. 06-06 of 15 July 2006, civil service may be performed in private-sector health establishments in accordance with arrangements set forth by regulation. The Committee reminds the Government that, according to Paragraph 3(3) of the Special Youth Schemes Recommendation, 1970 (No. 136), the services of participants should not be used for the advantage of private persons or enterprises.

In its last report the Government indicates that civil service concerns only doctors specializing in public health and that this was established in response to the need to bring essential specialists' care to the populations of isolated regions who have no access to it. Moreover, the Government indicates that, at the National Conference on Hospital Reform Policy (February 2011), discussions were held concerning the abolition of civil service for these doctors, and that the ultimate goal would be to leave them free to choose whether to exercise their profession in the public, private or semi-public sector.

While noting this information, the Committee expresses the strong hope that the necessary measures will be taken to repeal or amend the provisions of Act No. 84-10 of 11 February 1984 concerning civil service in the light of Conventions Nos 29 and 105, and that the Government will soon be in a position to report on the measures adopted in this respect.

Referring to Ordinance No. 06-06 of 15 July 2006, amending and complementing Act No. 84-10 of 11 February 1984 concerning civil service, the Committee reiterates the hope that the necessary measures will be taken to repeal or amend the provisions imposing civil service on specialized doctors. Pending such legislative amendments, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of persons and establishments concerned with regard to civil service, the length of service, and the conditions of work of the persons concerned.

Article 2(2)(a). National service. For a number of years the Committee has been referring to Ordinance No. 74-103 of 15 November 1974 issuing the National Service Code and the Order of 1 July 1987, under which conscripts are required to take part in the running of various sectors of the economy and administration. The Committee observed that they are further required to perform civil service for a period ranging from one to four years, as referred to above. The Committee recalled that, under the terms of Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention, compulsory military service is excluded from the scope of the Convention only where conscripts are assigned to work of a purely military character.

The Committee noted the Government's indication in its previous report that the civil modality of national service had not been used since 2001. The Government explained that this de facto suspension would be reflected in law as soon as the reform of the National Service Code was placed on the agenda. As the Government has not provided any information on this point, the Committee hopes that it will be in a position to send information in its next report on any developments in this matter showing that national law has been aligned with practice and hence with the provisions of the Convention, and to provide copies of the relevant texts.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Argentina

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1950)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons for sexual and labour exploitation. In its previous comments the Committee emphasized that the trafficking in persons for labour and sexual exploitation calls for robust and effective action in proportion to the gravity and extent of this practice, and asked the Government to take the necessary measures to eliminate this practice, which constitutes a serious violation of the Convention. It referred to the observations received from a number of national trade union organizations and from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), and also to a report published by the International Organization for Migration (IOM), documenting specific situations of trafficking from which it emerges that Argentina is a country of destination, transit and departure of trafficked persons; women and girls originating from the Dominican Republic, Paraguay and Brazil are victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation; Argentinian women and girls, mostly originating from the provinces of Misiones, Tucumán, La Rioja, Chaco et Buenos Aires, are also subjected to sexual exploitation abroad, mainly in Spain and Brazil, including through abductions perpetrated by gangs; and, finally, migrant workers mostly originating from the Plurinational State of Bolivia are victims of trafficking in the textiles and clothing sector.

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government in its last report and its appendices, the observations made by the General Confederation of Workers (CGT-RA) on the application of the Convention, received in November 2010, and also the report of May 2011 of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, particularly women and children, further to her visit to Argentina in September 2010 (A/HRC/17/35/Add.4). The Committee proposes to analyse all this information by examining the legal and institutional framework, the penalties imposed and the protection given to victims.

(a) Legal and institutional framework. The Committee recalls that Act No. 26.364 of 9 April 2008 concerning the prevention and suppression of trafficking in persons and the provision of assistance for victims defines in detail the elements that constitute trafficking in persons, for labour and sexual exploitation, and establishes the penalty of imprisonment for offenders ranging from three to six years (with more severe penalties in cases where the victims are minors). The Committee is aware that a bill to amend the Act of 2008 is under discussion. The objectives of the bill include increasing penalties, making the consent of the victim irrelevant as regards defining the crime of trafficking, expanding protection for victims and improving cooperation between the various parties involved in taking action against trafficking. The Committee hopes that the bill amending the Act concerning the prevention and suppression of trafficking in persons will be adopted shortly and requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which it will contribute towards strengthening action against trafficking in persons.

Action of the General Prosecution Service. The Committee observes that, inasmuch as the crime of trafficking in persons comes within the competence of the federal courts, the General Prosecution Service of the Nation plays a crucial role in the prosecution of perpetrators. It notes the information provided by the Government on the action taken by the General Prosecution Service of the Nation, including the issuing of a publication in collaboration with the IOM containing a toolkit to help prosecuting perpetrators and protecting victims and, in particular, documents indicating the legal interpretation given to the concept of “trafficking in persons and related offences”. The Committee also notes the action taken by the unit within the General Prosecution Service of the Nation responsible for providing assistance for the victims of abduction for the purposes of ransom and human trafficking (UFASE), whose role is to assist the various prosecution services in the country. Such assistance is provided at the request of the prosecutors concerned and covers the stages of examination of the evidence and preparation of the case, as well as the relevant hearings. UFASE also coordinates training activities and is in charge of establishing a database relating to abductions and trafficking in persons. The Committee notes that this unit publishes an annual report which serves as a basis for the Attorney-General of the Nation to adopt resolutions aimed at tackling the problems faced by the prosecution authorities. Resolutions adopted include Resolution No. PGN-39-10, which contains recommendations for the prosecution services with regard to conducting thorough investigations in cases involving procuring in order to ensure that no trafficking of persons is involved, and Resolution No. PGN-46-11, which lays down guidelines for procedures and criteria to identify and investigate cases involving trafficking for labour exploitation purposes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to tackle the problems emphasized by UFASE in its annual reports with regard to the identification of situations involving trafficking in persons, for both sexual and labour exploitation, and the launching of prosecution proceedings at federal level.

Action by the police forces and allegations of corruption. In its previous comments the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the investigations conducted and the measures taken further to allegations of corruption within the police forces and of direct participation of police officials in criminal activities connected with trafficking in persons. The Government referred to the establishment of specific units within the four national security forces, whose task is to prevent and investigate the crime of trafficking in persons, and to develop an intelligence service for that purpose (Resolution No. 1679/2008). The Committee asked the Government to indicate to what extent the establishment of the specific units had contributed towards combating corruption in the police forces and the participation of officials in activities linked to the trafficking in persons.

The Committee observes that this problem was also emphasized by the United Nations Special Rapporteur, who, in the report referred to above, raises the sensitive issue of corruption of certain members of the police and other security forces directly involved in the implementation of measures to combat trafficking adopted by the Government, especially at the provincial level. According to the report, these officers receive bribes and act in complicity with the traffickers, who are thus able to evade arrest and prosecution. The Special Rapporteur recommends that the Government should adopt a zero-tolerance policy with regard to corruption and should ensure that the officials involved in the crime of trafficking are prosecuted and severely punished.

The Committee recalls that the victims of trafficking are in a vulnerable situation in which it is particularly difficult for them to assert their rights. It is therefore essential that police officers are appropriately trained in the subject of trafficking in persons in order to be able to identify victims, and it is also essential that the victims feel they can trust the police and prosecution authorities when they have recourse to them. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that investigations are duly expedited in cases of corruption and complicity on the part of law enforcement officials, and that adequate penalties are imposed on them. The Government is also requested to continue to supply information on the measures taken to strengthen the capacities of these authorities with respect to identification of the perpetrators of trafficking in persons and their victims.

Action by the labour inspectorate. As regards forced labour imposed on Bolivian migrant workers who are the victims of trafficking in the textiles and clothing sector, the Committee highlighted the large number of unauthorized workshops and asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, particularly with regard to strengthening the labour inspectorate. In its last report, the Government supplies data from the labour inspectorate concerning the number of inspections conducted in unauthorized garment manufacturing workshops for 2005–10, indicating the percentage of undeclared workers (ranging from 17.6 to 37.27 per cent). The labour inspectorate explains that, further to these inspections, a number of workshops and establishments were closed and legal action was initiated. The Committee duly notes this information. Recalling that the labour inspectorate performs an essential role in combating trafficking in persons for labour exploitation, the Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the action taken by the labour inspectorate, and also on the measures taken to ensure that the labour inspectorate has sufficient human and material capacity to carry out its work effectively throughout the territory. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which cases of forced labour involving migrant workers are handled by the labour inspectorate and how the inspectorate cooperates with the General Prosecution Service of the Nation so that reported violations give rise to prosecution proceedings.

(b) Article 25. Application of effective criminal penalties. In its last report the Government indicates that, between April 2008 (date of entry into force of the Act) and the end of July 2010, a total of 590 searches were conducted, 583 persons were arrested and 921 victims were assisted. Ten court cases were thus concluded with the conviction and sentencing of 15 persons to imprisonment ranging from four to 15 years for the trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation. The Committee notes two court decisions communicated by the Government and notes with interest the elements taken into account by the judges in defining what constitutes a “situation of vulnerability” to which the victims were exposed, and thereby invalidating the consent given. Furthermore, the Committee observes that, between 2008 and 2010, no case of trafficking in persons for labour exploitation was brought before the courts. According to the UFASE website, the first conviction for trafficking in persons for labour exploitation was handed down in August 2011 by the Federal Criminal Court of San Martín. It therefore appears that gathering enough evidence to bring offenders before the courts is even more difficult where trafficking in persons involves labour exploitation. Moreover, according to Government statistics, the total number of convictions for trafficking in persons remains low if compared with the number of victims assisted and persons arrested. The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the importance of imposing terms of imprisonment that constitute an effective deterrent on persons who exploit other persons’ labour, and hopes that the Government will be in a position in its next report to provide information on new prosecutions resulting in an adequate number of convictions.

(c) Assistance for victims. The Committee notes that the Bureau for Assistance and Support for Trafficking Victims was established in 2008. The Government indicates that this Bureau centralizes activities for the prevention and elimination of trafficking and the provision of psychological, medical and legal support and assistance for victims, and that a branch office has been established in the province of Salta. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the activities of this Bureau as regards the identification and protection of victims (number of centres for the reception, support and rehabilitation of victims) and on the measures taken to continue to extend the capacity for intervention of this Bureau to the whole of the national territory. The Government is also requested to indicate the measures taken to provide legal assistance to victims in such a way that they can assert their rights and be compensated for the material and general damage suffered.

The developments described above show that the numerous measures taken by the Government to strengthen its legal and institutional framework with a view to combating the trafficking in persons for labour and sexual exploitation, bear witness to its commitment in this sphere. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts and requests it to indicate the measures taken to strengthen coordination between the various actors involved in combating trafficking in persons – especially the labour inspectorate and the General Prosecution Service of the Nation – as well as coordination between the state, provinces and municipalities, especially in view of the fact that the crime of trafficking lies within the competence of the federal courts.

Australia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1932)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of temporary migrant workers and measures taken to protect them from exploitation. The Committee previously noted the comments on the application of the Convention submitted by the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) in a communication dated 1 September 2008, in which the ACTU expressed concern about the vulnerable situation of temporary overseas skilled workers, who were not adequately protected from exploitation and sometimes subjected to forced labour. According to the allegations, there were reported cases in which workers on temporary visas (under “the 457 visa scheme”) had been denied wages or had their wages illegally reduced to pay for recruitment or migration agent fees and airfares, had been forced to work long hours without adequate meals or rest breaks, in unsafe workplaces and had been threatened with deportation if they sought to enforce their rights. The Committee has also noted two supplementary communications by the ACTU on the above subject, dated 31 August and 25 October 2010 respectively, as well as the Government’s response received on 30 September 2010.

The Committee notes from the Government’s response that, on 1 April 2009, it announced a package of measures to improve the integrity, transparency and flexibility of the temporary business (“subclass 457”) programme. The Government indicates that the key labour market measures which address the concerns raised by the ACTU, include, inter alia, the development of a market salary framework to ensure “subclass 457” workers are not exploited and local wages and conditions of work are not undermined. This framework is consistent with Australian workplace law and practice which requires all sponsored “subclass 457” and other temporary visa holders with a work right to be engaged in accordance with Australian standards (including awards, agreements, workers’ compensation, occupational safety and health) and receive the same level of protection (in terms of investigation of claims of underpayment or exploitation) as Australian workers. The Government also indicates that, in addition to the Migration Legislation Amendment (Worker Protection) Act 2008, which provides for increased information exchange and cooperation between relevant departments in relation to sponsored temporary visa holders, the Minister for Immigration and Citizenship has announced the appointment of an independent legal expert to provide options for strengthening the employer sanctions legislation. The Government further indicates that in addition to investigation of complaints relating to “subclass 457” and other temporary visa holders, the government departments and agencies (including the Fair Work Ombudsman) have issued fact sheets to increase visa holders’ awareness of their rights.

In its communication dated 31 August 2010 referred to above, the ACTU noted that, since their first submission in 2008, “the 457 visa scheme” had been subject to extensive reform, which was aiming at preventing further exploitation of workers on temporary visas and included strengthening the powers of the relevant authorities to monitor, investigate and penalize non-compliance of employers with “the 457 visa” requirements, as well as the removal of the former inequitable minimum salary level wage rate system applicable to such workers. The ACTU also noted that the Federal Government had consulted with the social partners and the community throughout “the 457 visa scheme” reform process. While welcoming the reform process, the ACTU considered it important to continue to monitor the operation of the new laws and regulations in practice, so as to ensure that they adequately protect the rights of temporary migrant workers in Australia.

The Committee notes this information and hopes that the Government will continue to describe, in its future reports, the measures taken, both in legislation and in practice, to improve the protection of temporary migrant workers. Please provide, in particular, information on the results of the measures taken with a view to strengthening the employer sanctions legislation, to which reference has been made in the Government’s report.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and (2)(c). Privatization of prisons and prison labour. Work of prisoners for private companies. In comments it has been making for a number of years, the Committee pointed out that the privatization of prison labour falls outside the express conditions provided in Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention for exempting compulsory prison labour from the scope of the Convention. The Committee recalled that compulsory work or service exacted from any person as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law is compatible with the Convention only if two conditions are met, namely: that the said work or service is carried out under the supervision and control of a public authority and that the said person is not hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations. The two conditions set forth in Article 2(2)(c) are equally important and apply cumulatively: the fact that the prisoner remains at all times under the supervision and control of a public authority does not in itself dispense the government from fulfilling the second condition, namely that the person is not hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations. If either of the two conditions is not observed, the situation is not excluded from the scope of the Convention, and compulsory labour exacted from convicted persons under these circumstances is prohibited in virtue of Article 1(1) of the Convention. The Committee asked the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure observance of the Convention, such as, for example, to provide that any prisoners working for private enterprises offer themselves voluntarily without being subjected to pressure or the menace of any penalty and, given their conditions of captive labour, subject to guarantees as to wages and other conditions of employment approximating a free employment relationship. In such a situation, work of prisoners for private companies does not come under the scope of the Convention, since no compulsion is involved.

The Committee previously noted that private prisons existed in Victoria, New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia and Western Australia, while there were no prisons administered by private concerns under the Tasmanian, Northern Territory and Australian Capital Territory jurisdictions. It appears, from the Government's report, that there has been little change in national legislation and practice with regard to the work of prisoners in private prison facilities during the reporting period. The Government reiterates its view that its law and practice comply with the Convention, given that prisoners accommodated in privately operated facilities remain under the supervision and control of public authorities, as required by the exemption in Article 2(2)(c), and that the private sector has no rights to determine for itself the conditions for the work of prison inmates, such conditions being established by the public authorities. The Government therefore considers that prisoners are not "hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations", since the "legal custody" of prisoners has not been transferred to a private provider of prison services, and sentenced prisoners remain in the legal custody of the Secretary to the Department of Justice (Victoria) or the Chief Executive of the Department of Correctional services (South Australia) until they are released from prison.

The Committee draws the Government's attention once again to the explanations concerning the scope of the terms "hired to or placed at the disposal of" contained in paragraphs 56–58 and 109–111 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour and observes that these terms cover not only situations where prisoners are "employed" by the private company or placed in a position of servitude in relation to the private company, but also situations where the companies do not have absolute discretion over the type of work they can request the prisoner to do, since they are limited by the rules set by the public authority. The Committee recalls, referring also to paragraph 106 of the above General Survey, that the prohibition for prisoners to be placed at the disposal of private parties is absolute and not limited to work outside penitentiary establishments, but applies equally to workshops operated by private undertakings inside prisons; consequently, it applies to all work organized by privately run prisons.

As the Committee repeatedly pointed out, work by prisoners for private companies can be held compatible with the explicit prohibition of the Convention only where the necessary safeguards exist to ensure that the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily, without being subjected to pressure or the menace of any penalty, as required by Article 2(1) of the Convention. The Committee has considered that, taking into account their captive circumstances, it is necessary to obtain the prisoners' formal consent to work for private enterprises in state-run prisons or in privatized prisons and that it should be given in writing. Further, given that such consent is required in a context of lack of freedom with limited options, there should be indicators which authenticate or satisfy the giving of the free and informed consent. The Committee recalls that the most reliable indicator of the voluntariness of labour is the work performed under conditions approximating a free labour relationship, which include wage levels (leaving room for deductions and attachments), social security and occupational safety and health (see the explanations provided in paragraphs 59–60 and 114–120 of its 2007 General Survey referred to above).

The Committee notes from the Government's report that no Australian jurisdiction is currently considering amending its law and practice. However, the Committee previously noted some positive trends relating to the practical application of existing legislation in certain Australian jurisdictions referred to above. Thus, as regards the question of voluntariness, it noted that, in New South Wales, employment of inmates in correctional centres is voluntary on the part of the inmate and there are no incidents of forced labour. The Government indicates in its latest report that, in order to ensure that "informed" consent of prisoners to work for private companies is achieved, the following measures are in place in the privately operated correctional centres (Juncie and Parklea): an inmate wishing to apply for work must complete a form, sign it and present it to the Industry Manager; if an inmate believes that he or she has been forced to work, the inmate may raise the matter with his/her immediate supervisor or the Inmate Development Committee, or lodge a formal complaint to the General Manager of the centre or to the Ombudsman's Office. The Government also states that the privately operated correctional centres in New South Wales are obliged to abide by the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29). The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that, in South Australia, where prison labour is compulsory both inside and outside the correctional institution under section 29(1) of the Correctional Services Act, 1982, prisoners at Mt Gambier Prison (South Australia's only privately operated prison) apply in writing to undertake work programmes. The Government indicates in its latest report that prisoners in the Adelaide Pre-Release Centre are allowed to apply for outside employment with private enterprises, and any outside work undertaken by prisoners is voluntary. In Queensland, where prison labour is compulsory under section 66 of the Corrective Services Act, 2006, prisoners are not forced to participate in approved work activities: the Government indicates that, though no formal consent of prisoners is required, the work programme is a voluntary initiative that provides prisoners with the meaningful work projects to develop practical skills in order to assist their reintegration into the community; there are no consequences for a prisoner for refusal to participate in a work programme. As regards Western Australia, where prison labour is compulsory under section 95(4) of the Prisons Act, the Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the relevant provision had not been enforced, and the prisoners were not forced to participate in work programmes, even in privately run prisons. The Government indicates in its latest report that there are currently six prisoner work camps established in regional Western Australia for the purposes of prisoners' rehabilitation. Such work camp placement is voluntary and is initiated by the prisoner making a formal written application.

While noting with interest these developments in the positive trends of practical application of existing legislation in the Australian jurisdictions referred to above, the Committee expresses its hope that the necessary measures will be taken, both in law and in practice, to ensure that formal, freely given and informed consent is required for the work of prisoners in privately operated prisons, as well as for all work of prisoners for private companies, both inside and outside prison premises, so that such consent is free from the menace of any penalty in the wide sense of Article 2(1) of the Convention, such as loss of privileges or an unfavourable assessment of behaviour taken into account for reduction of sentence. Furthermore, in the context of a captive labour force having no alternative access to the free labour market, such “free” and “informed” consent needs to be authenticated by the conditions of work approximating a free labour relationship, as regards wage levels (leaving room for deductions and attachments), social security and occupational safety and health. The Committee trusts that such measures will be taken in all Australian jurisdictions, both in law and in practice, in order to grant prisoners working in privately operated facilities and other prisoners working for private enterprises a legal status with rights and conditions of employment that are compatible with this basic human rights instrument, and that the Government will soon be in a position to report the progress made in this regard.

The Committee also hopes that the Government will not fail to provide information on the practical impact of the recommendation of the Australasian Correctional Industries Association’s code of practice to establish an independent consultative body which includes representatives of industry, unions and the community to monitor the development and operation of correctional industries, which was referred to by the Government in its previous report, as well as information on any other measures taken or envisaged to ensure compliance with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Austria

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Work of prisoners for private enterprises. In comments made for a number of years on law and practice in Austria, the Committee examined the situation of prisoners who are obliged to work, without their consent, in workshops run by private enterprises within state prisons. It referred in this connection to section 46, paragraph 3, of the Law on the execution of sentences, as amended by Act No. 799/1993, under which prisoners may be hired to enterprises of the private sector, which may use their labour in privately run workshops and workplaces both inside and outside prisons. The Committee pointed out on numerous occasions (see e.g. the 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, paragraph 109 and footnote 272) that the practice followed in this regard in Austria corresponds in all respects to what is expressly prohibited by Article 2(2)(c), namely, that a person is “hired to” private contractors. It noted, in particular, that it is in the very nature of such hiring agreements to include mutual obligations between the prisons administration and the private enterprise. The fact that prisoners remain at all times under the authority and control of the prison administration does not detract from the fact that they are “hired to” a private enterprise – a practice which is incompatible with this fundamental human rights instrument.

In its report, the Government reiterates its view that private enterprise’s employees perform only a technical supervisory role in respect of prisoners, but do not have any disciplinary powers, which remain with the prison’s administration, and therefore do not exercise any compulsion over them. The Government concludes that the prisoners are not at the disposal of the private enterprise, supervision being carried out by the prison staff.

While having noted these views, the Committee draws the Government’s attention once again to the explanations concerning the scope of the terms “hired to or placed at the disposal of” in paragraphs 56–58 and 109–111 of the Committee’s 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour and observes that these terms cover not only situations where prisoners are “employed” by the private company or placed in a position of servitude in relation to the private company, but also situations where the companies do not have absolute discretion over the type of work they can request the prisoner to do, since they are limited by the rules set by the public authority. The Committee also refers in this connection to paragraph 106 of its 2007 General Survey, where it considered that the prohibition for prisoners to be hired to private parties is absolute and not limited to work outside penitentiary establishments, but applies equally to workshops operated by private undertakings inside prisons.

However, the Committee has considered in paragraphs 59–60 and 114–120 of its 2007 General Survey referred to above that work of prisoners for private companies can be held compatible with the explicit prohibition of the Convention only where the necessary safeguards exist to ensure that the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily, without being subjected to pressure or the menace of any penalty, as required by Article 2(1) of the Convention. In such a situation, work of prisoners for private companies does not come under the scope of the Convention, since no compulsion is involved. The Committee has therefore considered that, taking into account their captive circumstances, it is necessary to obtain prisoners’ formal, free and informed consent to work for private enterprises both inside and outside prisons. The Committee recalls that, in the prison context, the most reliable indicator of the voluntariness of labour is the work performed under conditions approximating a free labour relationship, which include wage levels (leaving room for deductions and attachments), social security and occupational safety and health.

The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government's latest report, no steps have been taken with a view to amending the existing legislation governing the work of prisoners, and no measures aimed at obtaining the free, formal and informed consent of convicts to work for private enterprise workshops inside prisons has been introduced. As the Committee noted previously, national legislation requires such consent only for work outside prison premises.

The Committee notes the Government's indications in its report concerning the rise in the prisoners' wages in January 2010, in accordance with the 25.69 per cent increase in the wages index above the level of 1 March 2000. It also notes the information on prisoners' conditions of work, including guarantees concerning prisoners' hours of work, occupational safety and health, their entitlement to medical treatment and social security coverage. However, the Committee points out once again that, in the absence of the consent requirement, the general scope of protective legislation cannot be regarded as an indicator of a freely accepted labour relationship. Taking into account the statistical data communicated by the Government, according to which in the 27 penal institutions in Austria there are about 50 different kinds of employment and business activity, the Committee expresses its concern that, more than 50 years after the ratification of this fundamental human rights instrument, a significant number of prisoners in Austria is hired to private enterprises without evidence of their consent, which is incompatible with the Convention.

The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will at last be taken to grant prisoners working for private enterprises a legal status with rights and conditions of employment that are compatible with this fundamental human rights instrument. In particular, the Committee expresses the firm hope that measures will be taken to ensure that free, formal and informed consent is required for the work of prisoners in private enterprise workshops inside prison premises, so that such consent is free from the menace of any penalty and authenticated by the conditions of work approximating a free labour relationship.

Bahamas

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. For many years, the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the 1976 Merchant Shipping Act, under which various breaches of labour discipline are punishable with imprisonment (involving an obligation to work, under section 10 of the Prisons Act and rules 76 and 95 of the Prison Rules) and deserting seafarers from ships registered in another country may be forcibly conveyed on board the ship. The Committee has noted the Government's indications in its earlier reports that some amendments to the Merchant Shipping Act have been made. It notes, however, that under sections 129(b) and (c) and 131(a) and (b) of the updated text of the Merchant Shipping Act, which it has consulted on the Government's website, penalties of imprisonment may still be imposed for breaches of discipline such as disobedience to lawful command, neglect of duty, desertion and absence without leave, and section 135 of the Act still provides for the forcible conveyance of deserting seafarers to ships registered in another country, where it appears to the minister that reciprocal arrangements will be made in that country.

The Committee recalls that Article 1(c) expressly prohibits the use of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline. As the Committee repeatedly pointed out, only acts which endanger the ship or the life or health of persons are excluded from the scope of the Convention (see, for example, paragraphs 179–181 of the General Survey of 2007 on the eradication of forced labour). The Committee therefore reiterates its hope that the necessary measures will at last be taken with a view to amending the above provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, either by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour or by restricting their application to the situations where the ship or the life or health of persons are endangered (as is the case, e.g. in section 128 of the same Act). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 1(d). Punishment for having participated in strikes. Over a number of years, the Committee has been referring to section 73 of the 1970 Industrial Relations Act, as amended, under which the minister may refer a dispute in non-essential services to the tribunal for settlement, if he considers that a public interest so requires; the recourse to strike action in this situation is prohibited, violation being punishable with penalties of imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour, as explained above) under sections 74(3) and 77(2)(a) of the same Act. The Committee has further noted that, according to section 76(1), a strike which, in the opinion of the minister, affects or threatens the public interest, might also be referred to the tribunal for settlement, failure to discontinue the participation in such a strike being punishable with imprisonment under section 76(2)(b).

The Committee previously noted the Government's indications in its earlier report that the proposed Trade Unions and Industrial Relations Bill had been tabled in the House of Assembly, and that it contained no provisions imposing sanctions of imprisonment for breach of the legislation, which may be punished only with fines. The Committee also noted the Government's repeated statement that the above provisions of the Industrial Relations Act had never been applied in practice, and that the legislation would be amended when a consensus is achieved after further consultation with the social partners.

While having noted these indications, the Committee reiterates the firm hope that the review of the Act announced by the Government for a number of years will soon result in the amendment of the above provisions, so that no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the mere fact of participating in a peaceful strike, in order to bring legislation into conformity with the Convention. Referring also to its comments made in 2007 under Convention No. 87, likewise ratified by the Bahamas, the Committee asks the Government to supply a copy of the new legislation, as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bangladesh

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1972)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Restrictions on freedom of workers to terminate employment. Over a number of years the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the Essential Services (Maintenance) Act No. LIII, 1952, and the Essential Services (Second) Ordinance No. XLI, 1958, which imposed restrictions on termination of employment by any person employed by the central Government and in essential services, punishable with sanctions of imprisonment.

The Committee notes from the Government's report that section 27 of the Labour Act (BLA 42/06) ensures to all workers freedom to terminate their employment with notice. It also notes the Government's statement that the Labour Law Commission has specifically recommended to repeal the Essential Services (Maintenance) Act No. LIII, 1952, which is no longer applied in practice. As regards the Essential Services (Second) Ordinance No. XLI, 1958, the Committee notes the Government's repeated statement that such Ordinance is no longer applied in practice and that it will be repealed in the occasion of a legislative reform.

While noting these indications, the Committee trusts that the necessary measures will soon be taken to repeal the Essential Services (Maintenance) Act No. LIII, 1952, and the Essential Services (Second) Ordinance No. XLI, 1958, in order to bring legislation into conformity with the Convention and the national practice.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25. Trafficking in persons. Law enforcement. The Committee previously noted the Government's indications concerning various measures taken by different ministries, human rights organizations and law enforcement agencies to combat trafficking in persons, including awareness-raising and prevention measures. In its latest report, the Government indicates that awareness-raising programmes are still in progress throughout the country and that it continues to take measures to combat trafficking with the assistance of the police, law enforcement agents and NGOs.

While noting these indications, the Committee notes the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, presented on 4 February 2011 (doc. CEDAW/C/BGD/CO/7), in which the UN Committee expresses concern about the continuing prevalence of trafficking in women and girls in Bangladesh, particularly for sexual exploitation. It observes that, despite the ratification by the country of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) Convention on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Women and Children for Prostitution in July 2002, its provisions have not yet been incorporated into domestic laws, no extradition treaties with neighbouring countries have been signed to address trafficking and sexual exploitation and only a few traffickers have been arrested and convicted. Finally, the UN Committee expresses its concern at the limited gender sensitization trainings for border police and law enforcement personnel.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen its law enforcement mechanisms in order to effectively investigate and prosecute cases of trafficking in persons, both for sexual and labour exploitation. Please continue to provide information on court decisions concerning trafficking cases, as well as information regarding any difficulties encountered by the competent authorities in identifying victims and in initiating legal proceedings. Finally, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number of trafficking offences reported, the number of prosecutions initiated and the number of convictions obtained, indicating penalties imposed.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1972)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For many years, the Committee has been referring to sections 16–20 of the Special Powers Act (No. XIV of 1974), under which penalties of imprisonment may be imposed on people who publish prejudicial reports or contravene orders for prior scrutiny and approval of certain publications or for the suspension or dissolution of certain associations. The Committee noted that penalties of imprisonment may involve an obligation to perform prison labour by virtue of section 53 of the Penal Code and section 3(26) of the General Clauses Act.

The Committee notes the Government's view expressed in the report that the provisions in the Special Powers Act are not related to employment relationships, but established to improve the administrative system. The Committee recalls, in this regard, referring also to paragraphs 152–166 of its General Survey of 2007 on the eradication of forced labour, that any penal sanctions involving an obligation to perform prison labour are contrary to the Convention when imposed on people convicted for expressing political views or views opposed to the established political system, or having contravened a widely discretionary administrative decision depriving them of the right to publish their views or suspending or dissolving certain associations. The Committee reiterates the firm hope that the necessary measures will soon be taken or envisaged to repeal or amend sections 16–20 of the Special Powers Act (No. XIV of 1974), so as to ensure the observance of the Convention. Pending the amendment, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice, supplying copies of the court decisions and indicating the penalties imposed.

Article 1(c). Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline. For many years, the Committee has been referring to the following provisions under which various breaches of labour discipline are punishable with imprisonment, which may involve compulsory labour under section 3(26) of the General Clauses Act:

- Control of Employment Ordinance, No. XXXII of 1965, sections 5(2)(h) and (i), 6(3) and 13(1) (prohibiting people employed or engaged in “essential work” from leaving their work or absenting themselves from duty or slowing down or otherwise impeding their output, essential work being defined in section 2(3) as any work relating to the manufacture, production, maintenance or repair of arms, ammunition and equipment or other supplies and any other work which the Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare to be essential work for the purposes of this Ordinance);
- Post Office Act, No. VI of 1898, section 50 (penalties applicable to postal employees who withdraw from the duties of their office without one month’s previous notice in writing).

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Control of Employment Ordinance, 1965, has been promulgated during an exceptional period of war and therefore is no longer applicable in practice. It further notes the Government’s statement that the provisions in the Post Office Act, 1898, are not related to employment relationships, but established to improve the administrative system. While duly noting this information, the Committee observes that the above provisions permit the imposition of compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline within the meaning of Article 1(c) of the Convention. The Committee considers that such breaches may be made punishable by other kinds of sanctions (e.g. fines or other punishment not involving compulsory labour), which lie outside the scope of the Convention. The Committee therefore reiterates the firm hope that the necessary measures will soon be taken to repeal or amend the above provisions of the Control of Employment Ordinance, 1965, and of the Post Office Act, 1898, in order to bring them into conformity with the Convention and the indicated practice.

The Committee previously noted that sections 292 and 293 of the new Bangladesh Labour Act, 2006, which repealed and replaced the Industrial Relations Ordinance, 1969, contain provisions similar to those in sections 54 and 55 of the repealed Ordinance (failure to implement, or breach of, any settlement, award or decision), punishable with sanctions of imprisonment, which may involve compulsory labour. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Labour Act, 2006, is currently under review and that amendment proposals are being finalized. The Committee hopes that, in the course of the revision, sections 292 and 293 will be brought into conformity with the Convention, so that no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline. It asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to sections 198 and 199 of the Merchant Shipping Ordinance (No. XXVI of 1983), which provide for the forcible conveyance of seafarers on board ship to perform their duties, and sections 196, 197 and 200(iii), (iv), (v) and (vi) of the same Ordinance, which provide for penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) for various disciplinary offences.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a technical committee has been established to review the existing legal framework in the maritime sector, including the Merchant Shipping Ordinance, 1983. It further notes the Government’s statement that the legislative revision process would take into account the need to align national legislation with the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, (MLC, 2006), which Bangladesh intends to ratify. The Committee therefore trusts that the necessary amendments will be made to the Merchant Shipping Ordinance in the near future in order to ensure that breaches of labour discipline which do not endanger the safety of the vessel or the life or health of persons are not enforceable with sanctions of imprisonment involving compulsory labour, and that seafarers would not be forcibly conveyed on-board ship to perform their duties. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 1(d). Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes. The Committee previously noted with regret that the Bangladesh Labour Act, adopted in 2006, does not contain any improvements as compared to the previous legislation in regard to the matters falling within the scope of the Convention. It noted, in particular, that sections 211(3) and (4) and 227(1)(c) of the Bangladesh Labour Act, 2006, which repealed and replaced the Industrial Relations Ordinance, 1969, provide for several restrictions on the right to strike which are similar to those contained in the repealed Ordinance, such restrictions being enforceable with sanctions of imprisonment, which may involve compulsory labour (section 196(2)(e) read in conjunction with section 291(2), and section 294(1)), contrary to the provisions of the Convention.

While noting the Government’s repeated statement that such restrictions on the right to strike, which have been maintained in the Labour Act, 2006, are justified in the present socio-economic context of the country, the Committee recalls that Article 1(d) of the Convention prohibits the use of any form of forced or compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, as a punishment for having participated in strikes. Noting also the Government’s indication that the Labour Act, 2006 is currently under review and that amendment proposals are being finalized, the Committee reiterates the firm hope, referring to its comments addressed to the Government under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), likewise ratified by Bangladesh, that the necessary measures will at last be taken to ensure the observance of the Convention both in law and in practice, either by removing the above restrictions on the right to strike, or by removing the penalties through which these restrictions are enforced and which may involve compulsory labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is addressing other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Belize

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1983)

Article 1(c) and (d) of the Convention. Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline or for having participated in strikes. For many years, the Committee has been referring to section 35(2) of the Trade Unions Act, under which a penalty of imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour, by virtue of section 66 of the Prison Rules) may be imposed on any person employed by the Government, municipal authority or any employer in charge of supplying electricity, water, railway, health, sanitary or medical services or communications or any other service that may, by proclamation, be declared by the Governor to be a public service, if such person wilfully and maliciously breaks a contract of service, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences will be to cause injury or danger or grave inconvenience to the community. The Committee has also noted that section 2 of the Settlement of Disputes (Essential Services) Act, Statutory Instrument No. 92 of 1981, declared the national fire service, postal service, monetary and financial services (banks, treasury, monetary authority), airports (civil aviation and airport security services) and the port authority (pilots and security services) to be essential services, and Statutory Instrument No. 51 of 1988 declared the social security scheme administered by the Social Security Branch an essential service.

The Committee has recalled in this respect that the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline or for having participated in strikes is incompatible with the Convention. It has noted that section 35(2) of the Trade Union Act refers not only to injury or danger but, alternatively, to grave inconvenience to the community, and applies not only to essential services, but also to other services, such as most employment under the Government or a municipal authority and most banking, postal and transport services.

The Government indicates in its report that one of the main tasks of the newly revived Labour Advisory Board is the revision of the national legislation, and that the Board has regrouped the legislation under revision into six topics, including trade unions' rights. The Government also states that, although trade unions' legislation has not yet been covered, the intention is to revise it in order to bring it into conformity with the international labour Conventions, and that the Committee's concern regarding section 35(2) of the Trade Unions Act will definitely be taken into consideration.

While taking due note of this information, the Committee trusts that the process of the revision of the Trade Unions Act will be completed in the near future, so as to ensure that no sanctions involving compulsory labour could be imposed as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline or for peaceful participation in strikes.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1990)

Incidence of compulsory prison labour on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government in its report only concerns the arrangements for the performance of work undertaken by convicts, whether in the context of sentences of imprisonment ("presidio" or "reclusión") or in the framework of sentences to work of general interest. The Committee wishes to recall that work imposed on persons as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law does not in most cases have an incidence on the application of this Convention. However, if a person is compelled to work, for example in the form of prison labour, for expressing certain political views, opposing the established political, social or economic system or participating in a strike, such compulsory labour falls within the scope of the Convention. Accordingly, prison sentences, when they involve compulsory labour, as is the case in the Plurinational State of Bolivia under the terms of section 48 of the Penal Code and sections 181 et seq. of Act No. 2298 of 2001 on the enforcement of sentences, lie within the scope of the Convention when they are imposed as punishment for violating the prohibition to express views or opposition or participate in a strike.

Article 1(d) of the Convention. Punishment for having participated in strikes. In its previous comments the Committee referred to section 234 of the Penal Code, under which advocacy of lockouts, strikes or stoppages declared illegal by the labour authorities is punishable by imprisonment of from one to five years, as well as sections 2, 9 and 10 of Legislative Decree No. 2565 of 6 June 1951 establishing penal sanctions for participation in general strikes and sympathy strikes. The Committee also observed that the legislation respecting strikes establishes a number of restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike, including the requirement for a majority of three-quarters of the workers of the enterprise to call a strike (section 114 of the General Labour Act and section 159 of its Regulations), and the possibility to impose compulsory arbitration by decision of the executive authorities (section 113 of the General Labour Act). The Committee emphasized that excessive restrictions imposed on the exercise of the right to strike have an impact on the application of the Convention insofar as they result in a strike being declared illegal and those who participate in a strike that has been declared illegal being liable to penal sanctions, under which they are subject to compulsory labour.

The Committee once again hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that penalties involving compulsory labour cannot be imposed for participation in strikes and that, for that purpose, the provisions referred to above of Legislative Decree No. 2565 and section 234 of the Penal Code, which provide for this type of penal sanction, will be amended or repealed. As the Government indicated previously that these provisions are not applied in practice, the Committee trusts that the legislation will be brought into conformity with the Convention and with existing practice in the very near future.

Brazil

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. “Slave labour”. In the comments it has been addressing to the Government for a number of years on the issue of “slave labour”, the Committee has noted several measures which have been taken by the Government in order to reinforce its legislative and institutional framework to combat this practice, under which many workers continue to be victims of inhuman and degrading conditions, debt bondage or internal trafficking for purposes of labour exploitation. The Committee emphasized, in particular, the adaptation of the legislation to national circumstances through section 149 of the Penal Code, which defines the elements that constitute the crime of “reducing a person to a condition akin to that of slavery”; the activities undertaken by specialized institutions to combat this phenomenon, such as the National Commission to Eradicate Slave Labour and the Special Mobile Inspection Group; and the action of Labour Courts, which have sanctioned persons engaged in these forms of exploitation with fines and have provided for substantial compensation. Noting that all of these actions have failed to be sufficiently dissuasive to prevent certain employers from having recourse to this practice, which remains lucrative, the Committee requested the Government to continue taking action without respite against persons who exact forced labour by adopting measures in the fields of legislation, labour inspection and the judicial authorities. The Committee notes that, following her visit to the country, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, addressed recommendations to the Government that are consistent with those made by the Committee in its observations (A/HRC/15/20/Add.4).

(a) Strengthening of the legal framework. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the hope that the Government would take every measure to expedite the adoption of certain Bills aimed at guaranteeing greater legal security through measures targeting the economic and financial interests of those who exploit slave labour. The Committee noted, in particular, the draft amendment to article 243 of the Constitution (PEC No. 438/2001), authorizing the expropriation, without compensation, of establishments in which the use of slave labour has been identified (the expropriated lands will be consigned to the agrarian reform). It also referred to the draft Law (PLS No. 487/03), which provides a legal basis for the prohibition of persons recognized to have used slave labour from obtaining fiscal benefits and credits, and from participating in public contracts; and Bills (PLS No. 9/04 and PL No. 5.016/5) increasing the penalties applicable to the crime of reducing a person to a condition akin to slavery. The Committee notes that none of these initiatives have yet been adopted and that the Government simply refers to the establishment of a Joint Parliamentary Front, in March 2010, to accelerate the adoption of the constitutional amendment. The Committee therefore reiterates its firm hope that the Government will take all the necessary measures to expedite the adoption of the Bills referred to above and, in particular, those intended to guarantee greater legal security, with a view to increasing the penalties applicable to the crime of reducing a person to a condition akin to slavery.

The Committee recalls that, since 2003, the Ministry of Labour and Employment has established a list to include the names of individuals or entities which have been found responsible, by a definitive administrative decision, for exploiting workers under conditions akin to slavery (“dirty list”). The list, which is updated every six months, is sent to various public administrative services and to banks administering constitutional and regional financing funds so that no financial assistance, grants or public credits are granted to those included on the list (Decree No. 540 of the Ministry of Labour and Employment of 15 October 2004). The Committee noted with concern that the lawfulness and constitutional nature of the list had been contested, and that the courts had upheld appeals by certain employers demanding the removal of their names from the list while awaiting a final decision. While noting that the Government once again indicates in its report that the prevailing jurisprudence in regional labour courts recognizes the legality of the list, the Committee notes that it no longer refers to the Bill to strengthen the legal status of the list. The Committee also notes that the total of persons or entities included on the list in July 2011 was 251, which represents an increase in comparison to July 2009 (175 names) and July 2007 (192 names).

The Committee further notes that the Government has not provided information on the expropriation measures taken by the President of the Republic in relation to establishments that do not fulfil their social purpose and, therefore, would be eligible for agrarian reform (their presence on the list is a factor taken into account for this purpose). The Committee also notes that the Federal Supreme Court has still not ruled on the appeal lodged against the expropriation Decree signed in 2004 by the President of the Republic concerning a property which was declared of social interest for agrarian reform on those grounds.

The Committee considers that the establishment of the “dirty list” and the resulting measures constitute effective tools in combating slave labour, in so far as they are targeted at the economic interests of those who impose forced labour.

The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to guarantee that the legal status of the list is strengthened in order to avoid any questioning on its legality by offenders. Please also specify the number of cases brought before the courts aiming at the exclusion from the list, as well as the court decisions handed down. The Committee once again emphasizes the importance of adopting the proposed amendment to the Constitution (PEC No. 438/2001) authorizing the expropriation, without compensation, of establishments in which the use of slave labour has been identified.

(b) Strengthening of the labour inspectorate. The Committee emphasizes, once again, the central role of labour inspection, and particularly of the Special Mobile Inspection Group (GEFM), in combating slave labour, as well as the need to guarantee that adequate human and material resources are provided to allow labour inspectorates to move quickly, efficiently and safely throughout the country. The Government indicates in its last report that, in 2009, the GEFM consisted of eight teams specialized in slave labour working throughout the entire country, compared with five teams in July 2010. It also refers to the organization, in 2010, of a new public competition to fill 234 vacancies in the labour inspection services across the country and that 82 labour inspectors recruited in 2006–07 have been assigned to Mato Grosso, one of the regions most affected by slave labour. The Committee notes this information as well as the number of inspections conducted by the GEFM, which have remained stable (143 interventions in 2010, compared with 156 in 2009). While observing that the Government has been regularly organizing competitions to increase the number of labour inspectors, the Committee notes with concern the considerable reduction on the number of GEFM teams. The Committee recalls that the inspections carried out by the GEFM result not only in the release of workers from situations of forced labour, but also provide evidence for civil and criminal action against perpetrators. Taking into consideration the significant geographical area to be covered by labour inspection, as well as the absence of information indicating any decrease in the use of slave labour in the country, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the GEFM has at its disposal adequate trained personnel and material resources allowing it to carry out its activities effectively.

(c) Imposition of effective penalties. The Committee recalls that the effective imposition of penalties for violations of labour legislation is an essential element in combating forced labour, as it is characterized by the concurrence of a number of violations of labour legislation which must be punished as such. Moreover, taken as a whole, these violations constitute the criminal offence provided for in the Penal Code of “reduction of a person to a condition akin to slavery”, which in itself gives rise to specific penalties.

Administrative sanctions. In its previous comments the Committee has noted the complementary role played by labour inspection, labour prosecutors and labour courts, resulting in the imposition of substantial administrative penalties on those who make use of forced labour. It noted, in particular, the fines imposed, the reinstatement of the rights of released workers and the conviction of perpetrators to pay compensation for the material damages suffered by workers and for “collective moral damages” caused to the society as a whole. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to reinforce the means of action available to the authorities responsible for imposing such sanctions in order to ensure that fines and compensation are effectively collected. Please also provide information on the measures taken with a view to continuing to exert economic pressure on those who impose forced labour, including the imposition of dissuasive fines and compensation, the removal of access to public subsidies and financing, and, particularly, the expropriation of lands where forced labour is found.

Penal sanctions. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, by confirming the competence of federal courts to prosecute those found guilty of reducing a person to a condition akin to slavery (article 149 of the Penal Code), the Federal Supreme Court (STF) brought an end to the conflicts concerning jurisdiction, which had prevented or delayed the trial of many perpetrators. The Committee expressed the hope that this decision, as well as the practice followed by the Office of the Attorney-General of the Republic of bringing those cases before the competent jurisdiction, would lead to the conviction of those responsible for such crimes.

In its report, the Government refers once again to two court decisions of 2008 imposing prison sanctions. It indicates that the Office of the Attorney-General of the Republic has initiated prosecutions against 103 persons in 2007 and 31 in 2008. The Committee notes with regret the lack of information in the Government’s report on the number of criminal proceedings accepted by the federal criminal courts, as well as the number of convictions resulting therein. The Committee observes that, according to statistics available on the website of the Office of the Attorney-General of the Republic, the number of final convictions listed is very low (nine rulings and 15 convicted persons between 2001 and 2010). It notes, for example, that in the State of Mato Grosso, 71 criminal proceedings were initiated between 2001 and 2010, yet only one conviction was obtained. The Committee observes nevertheless that, as a result of action undertaken by the GEFM, 39,180 workers found in a situation akin to slavery were released between 1995 and 2010, and that new names have been regularly incorporated into the “dirty list” (the July 2011 list contains over 200 names). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that those found in violation of section 149 of the Penal Code, are promptly prosecuted. Please also indicate the difficulties which are preventing the conviction by federal criminal courts of persons who subject workers to conditions akin to slavery, as well as the measures taken to overcome them. The Committee recalls in this regard that, according to Article 25 of the Convention, really effective penalties should be imposed on those who have imposed forced labour.

(d) Reintegration of victims. The Committee previously highlighted the importance of providing material and financial support to victims in order to prevent them from returning to a situation of vulnerability in which they would be prone to be exploited under forced labour conditions. It notes that, in its report, the Government again refers to the same measures and programmes to promote the integration of released workers: the granting of unemployment benefit for a limited period of time (three months); the priority inclusion of these workers in the federal programme for the income redistribution (Bolsa Família) and access to the literacy programme (Brasil alfabetizado). Moreover, a pilot project for the promotion of employment in rural areas particularly affected by slave labour was set up, within the context of the national employment system. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures adopted for the reintegration of victims of forced labour and the results achieved. Please also provide information on the measures adopted to raise the awareness of workers from the regions most affected by forced labour on the risks and consequences of such practice.

Burundi

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1963)

Referring to its previous comments on the need to amend sections 340 and 341 of the Penal Code, pursuant to which, in the event of begging or vagrancy, a person may be placed at the Government's disposal for a certain period and be forced to perform work in a prison institution, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the new Penal Code, adopted in 2009, no longer contains a provision criminalizing and penalizing begging and vagrancy.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. 1. Compulsory community development work. For many years, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the need to bring Legislative Decree No. 1/16 of 29 May 1979 – establishing the obligation to carry out community development work under penalty of sanctions (one month of penal labour performed on one half day a week) – in conformity with the Convention. The Government previously indicated that this Legislative Decree had been repealed and that Act No. 1/016 of 20 April 2005 organizing municipal administration provided for voluntary participation in municipal development activities within the framework of national reconstruction.

In its previous observation, however, the Committee pointed out that the Act of 2005 did not explicitly provide for the voluntary nature of this work. The Act specifies that, with a view to promoting the economic and social development of municipalities – not only on an individual but also on a collective and unified basis – municipalities may cooperate through a system of inter-municipality. It also states that it is up to the municipal council to establish the community development programme, monitor its implementation and carry out the evaluation thereof. A regulatory text determines the organization, mechanisms and rules of procedure of inter-municipality. The Committee therefore requested the Government to indicate whether the text implementing the Act organizing municipal administration had been adopted and to provide information on the type and duration of the community work carried out and the number of persons concerned. It also asked the Government to specify whether persons who evade community labour are liable to penalties.

The Committee notes that, in its last report, the Government confirms that Decree No. 1/16 of 1979 has been replaced by the Act organizing municipal administration of 2005 and that the latter does not provide for penalties to be imposed on persons who fail to carry out community work. The Committee also notes that the Government has not made any comment on the observations sent in 2008 by the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), stating that community work is decided upon without popular consultation and that the Government bans the movement of persons throughout the duration of this work.

The Committee notes that, although the principle of community work has been upheld in the 2005 Act organizing municipal administration, the rules for participation in this work do not seem to have been established under the legislation because, on the one hand, no text implementing the Act has been adopted and, on the other hand, according to the Government, the Decree of 1979 has been repealed. The Committee points out however that, according to information available on the Internet site of the Government and the National Assembly, community work seems to be organized on a weekly basis and includes work of reforestation, cleaning and the construction of economic and social infrastructure such as schools, colleges and health centres. Taking into account this information, the observations from the COSYBU and the legal void apparently existent with respect to the conditions for organization and participation in community work, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to adopt the text applying the Act of 2005 and that this text will explicitly refer to the voluntary nature of participation in this work.

Compulsory agricultural work. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to bring a number of texts providing for the compulsory participation in certain types of agricultural work into line with the Convention. It had stressed the need to set out in the legislation the voluntary nature of agricultural work resulting from obligations relating to the conservation and utilization of the land and the obligation to create and maintain minimum areas of fruit crops (Ordinances Nos 710/275 and 710/276 of 25 October 1979), as well as the need to formally repeal certain texts on compulsory cultivation, portage and public works (Decree of 14 July 1952, Ordinance No. 1286 of 10 July 1953 and the Decree of 10 May 1957). In its last report, the Government indicates that these texts, which dated from the colonial period, have been repealed, and that the voluntary nature of agriculture work has now been set out in the legislation. The Committee takes due note of this information and requests the Government to send a copy of the texts that repeal the abovementioned legislation and set out the voluntary nature of agricultural work.

The Committee is raising other points in a request that it is addressed directly to the Government.

Cameroon

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Hiring of prison labour to private entities. For many years, the Committee has been referring to Decree No. 92-052 of 27 March 1992 issuing the prison regulations, which authorizes the hiring of prison labour to private enterprises and individuals (sections 51–56), and to Order No. 213/A/MINAT/DAPEN of 28 July 1988, which establishes a number of conditions concerning the use of prison labour and fixes the rates for their hiring. Noting that neither of these texts requires the formal and informed consent of the prisoners who are to be hired to private enterprises and/or individuals, the Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to supplement the legislation through the inclusion of the requirement for the consent of prisoners working for private entities.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its latest report that the Ministry of Territorial Administration and Decentralization is undertaking the revision of the implementing texts of the Decree issuing the prison regulations so as to establish the requirement for the formal, free and informed consent of prisoners for any work performed for private enterprises and to ensure them conditions of work approximating those of a free labour relationship.

In this respect, the Committee notes that, in its comments on the application of the Convention received on 31 October 2011, the Confederation of United Workers of Cameroon (CTUC) refers to the evasive nature of the Government's reply in relation to the date of adoption of the implementing texts and emphasizes the importance of taking urgent measures in this regard with a view to giving effect to the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee recalls that, in a setting of captivity, it is necessary to obtain the free, formal and informed consent of prisoners for work in cases where such work is performed for private individuals, enterprises or associations. The Committee further considers that certain factors are required in order to authenticate or confirm the giving of such consent, and that the most reliable indicator of the voluntary nature of labour is that the work is performed under conditions which approximate to a free labour relationship. The Committee trusts that, as it has undertaken to do, the Government will take the necessary measures to adopt the implementing texts of the Decree of 1992 issuing the prison regulations, and that these texts will establish the explicit requirement that free, formal and informed consent is to be given by convicts for work for private entities, and that they benefit from conditions of labour which approximate a free labour relationship in terms of wages, hours of work and occupational safety and health. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the possibility of availing itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1962)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of sentences of imprisonment involving the obligation to work as punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, under section 24 of the Penal Code, as amended by Act No. 90-61 of 19 December 1990, and section 49 of Decree No. 92-052 establishing the prison system, sentences of imprisonment involve the obligation to work. It emphasized that where an individual is, in any manner whatsoever, compelled to perform prison labour as punishment for expressing certain political views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system, this falls within the scope of the Convention. In order to be sure that certain provisions of national law are not used as the basis for imposing prison sentences on persons who, express certain political views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice, including copies of court decisions issued on the basis thereof. The following provisions are concerned:

- section 113 of the Penal Code, under which any person issuing or propagating false information that may be detrimental to the public authorities or national unity shall be liable to imprisonment of three months to three years;
- section 154(2) of the Penal Code, under which any person guilty of incitement, whether in speech or in writings intended for the public, to revolt against the Government and the institutions of the Republic shall be liable to imprisonment of three months to three years;
- section 157(1)(a) of the Penal Code, under which any person guilty of incitement to obstruct the enforcement of any law, regulation or lawfully issued order of the public authority shall be liable to imprisonment of three months to four years;
- section 33(1) and (3) of Act No. 90-53 concerning freedom of association, under which board members or founders of an association which continues operations or which is re-established unlawfully after a judgment or decision has been issued for its dissolution, and persons who have encouraged the assembly of members of the dissolved association by allowing continued use of the association's premises, shall be liable to imprisonment of three months to one year. Section 4 of the Act declares that associations founded in support of a cause or for a purpose contrary to the Constitution, or associations whose purpose is to undermine, inter alia, security, territorial integrity, national unity, national integration or the republican nature of the State, shall be null and void. Furthermore, section 14 provides that the dissolution of an association does not prevent any legal proceedings from being instituted against the officials of such an association.

The Government indicates in its latest report that the Penal Code is being reformed and that, since the adoption of the Freedom of Association Act in 1990, cases involving offences relating to the expression of certain views are no longer taken to court. The Committee duly notes this information. It also points out that both the Human Rights Committee (HRC) and the Committee against Torture (CAT), in their concluding observations in 2010 with respect to Cameroon, express their concern regarding the large number of journalists who have been imprisoned or are facing prosecution. The HRC “reiterates its concern about provisions in the Penal Code which render it a criminal offence to spread false news and about how journalists in a number of cases have been prosecuted for this or related crimes, such as the crime of defamation, as a consequence of their reporting”. The HRC also expresses its concern at the low number of accredited NGOs and asks Cameroon to ensure that any restriction on freedom of association is strictly compatible with international standards (CCPR/C/CMR/CO/4, paragraphs 25–26, and CAT/C/CMR/CO/4, paragraph 18).

In view of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to send copies of any court decisions issued on the basis of the abovementioned provisions of the Penal Code and the Freedom of Association Act. The Committee hopes that during the revision of the Penal Code, to which the Government refers in its report, the explanations provided by the Committee on the scope of the protection afforded by the Convention will be taken into account in such a way that no prison sentence (which in Cameroon entails compulsory labour) can be imposed on persons who, without using or advocating violence, express certain political views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system.

Central African Republic

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Idleness, active population and compulsory activities. For many years the Committee has been asking the Government to take the necessary steps to formally repeal the following provisions of the national legislation, which are contrary to the Convention inasmuch as they constitute a direct or indirect compulsion to work:

- Ordinance No. 66/004 of 8 January 1966 concerning the suppression of idleness, as amended by Ordinance No. 72/083 of 18 October 1972, under which any able-bodied person aged between 18 and 55 years who cannot prove that he or she is engaged in a normal activity providing for his or her subsistence or engaged in studies shall be considered to be idle and shall be liable to imprisonment of one to three years;
- Ordinance No. 66/038 of June 1966 concerning the supervision of the active population, under which any person aged between 18 and 55 years who cannot prove that he or she belongs to one of the eight categories of the active population shall be called up to cultivate land designated by the administrative authorities and shall also be considered a vagabond if apprehended outside his or her subprefecture of origin and shall be liable to imprisonment;
- Ordinance No. 75/005 of 5 January 1975 obliging all citizens to provide proof of the exercise of a commercial, agricultural or pastoral activity and rendering any person in breach of this provision liable to the most severe penalties; and
- section 28 of Act No. 60/109 of 27 June 1960 concerning the development of the rural economy, under which minimum areas for cultivation are to be established for each rural community.

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates in its latest report that the abovementioned provisions of national law have fallen into disuse. The Government also indicates that an inter-ministerial meeting is due to be held in the very near future, and this should result in specific proposals for the repeal of these legislative texts which are contrary to the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government has reported in recent years on various initiatives aimed at repealing the abovementioned provisions of the legislation which are contrary to the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the inter-ministerial meeting to which it refers can actually take place and result in specific proposals for the repeal of the abovementioned provisions, in order to avoid any legal uncertainty.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1964)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of imprisonment involving an obligation to work as a penalty for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social and economic system. In its previous comments the Committee drew the Government’s attention to the need to amend or repeal the provisions of Act No. 60/169 of 12 December 1960 concerning the dissemination of prohibited publications liable to prejudice the development of the Central African nation and Order No. 3-MI of 25 April 1969 concerning the dissemination of periodicals or news of foreign origin not approved by the censorship authority, which permitted the imposition of terms of imprisonment involving compulsory labour for various press offences.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its last report that Act No. 60/169 of 1960 and Order No. 3-MI of 1969 have become obsolete and fallen into disuse and are considered to be contrary to Ordinance No. 05-002 of 22 February 2005 concerning the freedom of communication in the Central African Republic, which decriminalizes press offences.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that Ordinance No. 05-002 does not impose terms of imprisonment for press offences, including defamation, slander or the publication of misinformation. It also notes that, under section 123 of the Ordinance, all previously existing contrary provisions are repealed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work in the general interest imposed in the context of compulsory military service. The Committee previously noted Ordinance No. 001/PCE/CEDNACVG/91 organizing the armed forces, according to which military service is compulsory for every citizen of Chad. Under section 14 of the Ordinance, conscripts who are fit for service are classified into two categories: the first, the size of which is determined each year by decree, is incorporated and compelled to perform active service; the second remains at the disposal of the military authorities for two years and may be called up to perform work in the general interest by order of the Government. The Committee noted that similar provisions were contained in Ordinance No. 2 of 1961 on the organization and recruitment of the armed forces of the Republic, on which it commented for many years. Indeed, such provisions are not compatible with Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention under which, to be excluded from the scope of the Convention, any work or service exacted in virtue of compulsory military service laws must be of a purely military character. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to bring the provisions of section 14 of the Ordinance of 1991 reorganizing the armed forces and, as appropriate, any decrees issued thereunder, into conformity with the Convention.

Article 2(2)(c). For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend or repeal section 2 of Act No. 14 of 13 November 1959 authorizing the Government to take administrative measures for the relocation, internment or expulsion of persons whose activities constitute a danger for public order and security, under which persons convicted of penal offences involving prohibition of residence may be used for work in the public interest for a period, the duration of which is to be determined by order of the Prime Minister. This provision would allow the administrative authorities to impose work on persons subject to a prohibition of residence once they have completed their sentence. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures without further delay to amend or repeal section 2 of Act No. 14 of 13 November 1959 referred to above.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Congo

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. 1. Work exacted under compulsory military service laws. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that section 1 of Act No. 16 of 27 August 1981 establishing compulsory military service is not in conformity with the Convention. Under this provision, national service is instituted for the purpose of enabling every citizen to participate in the defence and construction of the nation and has two components: military service and civic service. The Committee has stressed that work exacted from recruits as part of compulsory national service, including work related to national development, is not purely military in nature and is therefore contrary to Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates once again in its report that it is committed to repealing the abovementioned law and that it will provide information on any changes in this respect. The Committee firmly hopes that the necessary steps will be taken to amend or repeal the Act establishing compulsory military service so as to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention.

2. Youth brigades and workshops. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the Government, Act No. 31-80 of 16 December 1980 on guidance for youth had fallen into disuse since 1991. Under this Act, the party and mass organizations were supposed to create, over time, all the conditions for establishing youth brigades and organizing youth workshops (type of tasks performed, number of persons involved, duration and conditions of their participation, etc.). The Committee notes that, in its last report, the Government states that it is committed to repeal the law to bring national legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee hopes that the necessary measures will be taken to formally repeal Act No. 31-80 of 16 December 1980 on guidance for youth.

Article 2(2)(d). Requisitioning of persons to perform community work in instances other than emergencies. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that Act No. 24-60 of 11 May 1960 is incompatible with the Convention in that it allows the requisitioning of persons to perform community work in instances other than the emergencies provided for under Article 2(2)(d) of the Convention, and provides that persons requisitioned who refuse to work are liable to a prison sentence ranging from one month to a year.

The Committee notes that the Government confirms, in its last report, that this Act has fallen into disuse and may be considered as repealed, in view of the subsequent adoption of the Labour Code, especially section 4 which bans forced labour. The Government stipulates that, to avoid any legal ambiguity, it will include a provision stating the voluntary nature of this work in the Labour Code at present being revised. It also refers to the adoption of a text enabling a distinction to be made between work of public interest and forced labour. Taking account of this information, the Committee trusts that the Government will be in a position to announce, in its next report, the formal repeal of Act No. 24-60 of 11 May 1960 on community work.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the concise report provided by the Government on 9 June 2011 and also the discussion which took place within the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards concerning the application of the Convention by the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It also notes the observations from the Confederation of Trade Unions of Congo (CSC) received at the Office on 21 September and forwarded to the Government on 26 September 2011.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Forced labour and sexual slavery in the context of armed conflict. In its previous observation the Committee referred to the various reports of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and of the Special Rapporteurs on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. These reports underlined the gravity of the human rights situation in the country – both in the zones where hostilities have resumed and in areas that have not been affected by the conflict – and referred to violations committed by the state security forces and other armed groups, including cases of forced labour and sexual slavery. In the second joint report of seven United Nations experts on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the experts noted that the mines in the Kivu provinces continued to be exploited by armed groups, especially the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC) and expressed their concern at “reports that civilians are still subjected to forced labour, extortion and illegal taxation, and that sexual exploitation of women and girls is rife in these mining areas”. This report also emphasize that “women and girls have been abducted and held as sexual slaves both by FARDC members and other armed actors, and have been subject to collective rapes for weeks and months, often accompanied by additional atrocities” (A/HRC/13/63 of 8 March 2010).

In its report, received in June 2011, the Government indicates that it has noted the Committee’s observations and that urgent measures are being taken to put a stop to these serious violations. It adds that a bill for the eradication of forced labour is under examination in Parliament.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, further to its examination of this case, “noted with concern the information provided which bore witness to the gravity of the situation and the climate of violence, insecurity and the violation of human rights which prevailed in the country, especially in North Kivu. This information confirmed that cases of abduction of women and children, with a view to their use as sexual slaves and the exaction of forced labour, particularly in the form of domestic work, were frequent and continued to occur. Moreover, in mines, the workers were hostages of conflicts for the exploitation of natural resources and victims of exploitation and abusive practices, some of which amounted to forced labour. The Committee observed that failure to comply with the rule of law, legal insecurity, the climate of impunity and the difficulties faced by victims in gaining access to justice favoured all of these practices. (...) The Committee (...) appealed to the Government to take urgent and concerted measures to bring such violations to an immediate end (...)”.

The Committee regrets that, further to this discussion, the Government has neither supplied detailed information on the measures taken to put a stop to these violations, nor replied to the observations from the CSC, which confirm the practices of abduction of women and girls and, to a lesser degree, of men and boys with a view to being used for forced labour and sexual slavery by the armed groups. Elderly women are also being abducted for domestic work. The trade union confederation refers to specific cases of abductions and indicates that the worst affected areas are Walikale, Rutshuru, Masisi and North Kivu.

In view of the gravity of the situation described above, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to put an immediate stop to these practices which constitute a serious violation of the Convention and to guarantee a climate of stability and legal security in which recourse to forced labour cannot be legitimized or go unpunished. The Government is also requested to provide information on the prosecution proceedings instituted against perpetrators and the criminal penalties imposed therein.

Article 25. Criminal penalties. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, under section 323 of the Labour Code, any infringement of section 2.3, which prohibits the use of forced or compulsory labour, shall incur the penalty of a maximum of six months' imprisonment and/or a fine, without prejudice to criminal legislation laying down more severe penalties. Emphasizing that the penalties laid down in the Labour Code do not constitute an effective deterrent, the Committee asked the Government to specify the penal provisions which prohibit and sanctions recourse to forced labour. The Committee notes the Government's confirmation that the Penal Code of 1940 (as amended up to 2006) does not establish any penalties for persons who impose forced labour. The Government explains that the bill for the eradication of forced labour which is under examination in Parliament provides for effective criminal penalties. The Committee trusts that the Government will be in a position to announce in its next report the adoption of the Act for the eradication of forced labour and that the latter will establish criminal penalties that constitute an effective deterrent, in accordance with Article 25 of the Convention.

Repeal of legislation allowing for the exaction of work for national development purposes, as a means of levying taxes and by persons in preventive detention. For a number of years the Committee has been asking the Government to amend or repeal the following legislative texts and regulations, which are contrary to the Convention:

- Act No. 76-011 of 21 May 1976 concerning national development efforts and its implementing order, Departmental Order No. 00748/BCE/AGRI/76 of 11 June 1976 concerning the performance of civic tasks in the context of the national food production programme: these legal texts, which aim to increase productivity in all sectors of national life, require, subject to criminal penalties, every able-bodied adult person who is not already considered to be making his contribution by reason of his employment (political representatives, employees and apprentices, public servants, traders, members of the liberal professions, the clergy, students and pupils) to carry out agricultural and other development work as decided by the Government;
- Legislative Ordinance No. 71/087 of 14 September 1971 concerning the minimum personal contribution, sections 18 to 21 which provide for imprisonment involving compulsory labour, upon decision of the chief of the local community or the area commissioner, of taxpayers who have defaulted on their minimum personal contributions;
- Ordinance No. 15/APAJ of 20 January 1938 concerning the prison system in indigenous districts, which allows work to be exacted from persons in preventive detention (this Ordinance not being on the list of legal texts repealed by Ordinance No. 344 of 15 September 1965 concerning prison labour).

The Government previously indicated that these legal texts were obsolete and were therefore, de facto, repealed. Furthermore, replying to the Committee's request to repeal these texts formally in order to guarantee legal certainty, the Government indicated that legal certainty was not compromised by the lack of any formal repeal of these texts. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report of June 2011 that the promulgation of the Act for the eradication of forced labour will provide an answer to the concerns of the Committee as regards the repeal of Act No. 76-011 concerning the national development effort and its implementing order, as well as Ordinance No. 15/APAJ of 20 January 1938 concerning the prison system in indigenous districts. The Committee hopes that, on the occasion of the adoption of the Act for the eradication of forced labour, the legal texts to which it has been referring for many years and which the Government indicates are obsolete and, de facto, repealed, will finally be repealed formally.

Dominica

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1983)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1), (2)(a) and (d) of the Convention. National service obligations. Over a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to repeal or amend the National Service Act, 1977, under which persons between the ages of 18 and 21 years are required to perform service with the national service, including participation in development and self-help projects concerning housing, school, construction, agriculture and road building, failure to do so being punishable with a fine and imprisonment (section 35(2)). The Committee observed that, contrary to the Government's repeated statement that the national service was created to respond to national disasters, the Act contained no reference to natural disasters, but specified the objectives of the national service, which "shall be to mobilize the energies of the people of Dominica to the fullest possible level of efficiency, to shape and direct those energies to promoting the growth and economic development of the State". The Committee pointed out that the above provisions are not in conformity with the present Convention and the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), which specifically prohibits the use of forced or compulsory labour "as a means of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development".

The Government indicates in its report that the item concerning the amendment of the legislation has been included in the Decent Work Agenda, and that the necessary measures will be taken to address the requests in relation to compliance with the Conventions with the technical assistance of the ILO. While having noted the Government's indications in its earlier reports that the National Service Act, 1977, has been omitted from the Revised Laws of Dominica, 1990, and that section 35(2) of the Act has not been applied in practice, the Committee trusts that appropriate measures will be taken in the near future in order to formally repeal the above Act, so as to bring national legislation into conformity with Conventions Nos 29 and 105 and that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ecuador

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1962)

Article 1(d) of the Convention. Sanctions of imprisonment involving compulsory labour as a punishment for participation in strikes. 1. Decree No. 105 of 7 June 1967. In the comments that it has been making for many years, the Committee has referred to Decree No. 105 of 7 June 1967, which allows a prison sentence of two to five years to be imposed on any person fomenting or taking a leading part in a collective work stoppage. The penalty laid down in the Decree for anyone who participates in such a stoppage without fomenting or taking a leading part in it is correctional imprisonment of three months to one year. For the purposes of this provision, “there is a work stoppage when there is a collective stoppage of work or the imposition of a lockout except in the cases permitted by law, the paralysing of the means of communication and similar antisocial acts”. Noting that prison sentences involve compulsory labour under sections 55 and 66 of the Penal Code, the Committee recalled that, in accordance with the Convention, prison sentences involving compulsory labour should not be imposed for peaceful participation in strikes.

The Committee notes that the Government previously indicated that the Decree No. 105 of 7 June 1967 was no longer applicable in practice, without, however, mentioning that it has been formally repealed. In its latest report, the Government refers to a current process of rationalization of the legislation. The Committee observes that Decree No. 105 of 7 June 1967 was not included among the legislation that was repealed in 2010 by Derogatory Law No. 1. The Committee expresses the firm hope, referring also to its comments addressed to the Government under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), likewise ratified by Ecuador, that, in the course of the process of rationalization of the legislation, the Government will take the necessary measures to formally repeal Decree No. 105 of 7 June 1967, so as to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the mere fact of a peaceful participation in strikes, thereby bringing the national legislation into conformity with the Convention and the indicated practice.

2. Article 326(15) of the 2008 Constitution. The Committee previously noted with regret that, despite the comments it had been addressing to the Government on this point, the Constitution promulgated in 2008 contains a provision prohibiting the stoppage of public services which are not essential services in the strict sense of the term, such as education, transport, processing, public transport and the postal services (article 326(15)). It also noted that penalties applicable in the case of a stoppage in public services are those set out in the Penal Code. The Committee requested the Government to review the situation in the light of both Conventions Nos 87 and No. 105.

Noting that the Government’s report contains no information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to repeal or amend article 326(15) of the Constitution, in order to bring the above provision into compliance with Convention No. 105, which prohibits the imposition of prison sentences involving compulsory labour as a punishment for peaceful participation in strikes.

Article 1(c). Sentence of imprisonment imposed as a means of labour discipline. The Committee previously noted that under section 165 of the Maritime Police Code, crew members are prohibited from disembarking in a port other than the port of embarkation, except with the agreement of the ship’s master. Section 165 further provides that crew members who desert shall forfeit their pay and belongings to the vessel and, if recaptured, shall pay the cost of arrest and be punished in accordance with the naval regulations in force. While noting the Government’s indication concerning a process of rationalization of the legislation, the Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will not fail to take the necessary measures to repeal or amend section 165 of the Maritime Police Code, in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention on this point, and that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 1(a). Sanctions of imprisonment involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political views. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the following sections of the Penal Code, in order to ascertain the scope of these provisions in relation to Article 1(a) of the Convention: sections 230 and 231 (disrespect or insult towards public officials); sections 130, 133, 134, 148, 153 and 155 (internal security of the State). The Committee recalled that provisions restricting the right to express peacefully a political opinion that is contrary to the established political system, if enforced with sanctions involving compulsory labour, fall within the scope of the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report contains no information in this regard. It further notes that title VII of the Penal Code (Crimes Against Honour) also contains provisions punishing with imprisonment various forms of “insults”, including defamation and “defamatory accusations against an authority” (section 493). It draws the Government’s attention to the explanations contained in paragraphs 152–166 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, in which it has considered that the range of activities which must be protected under Article 1(a) of the Convention comprises the freedom to express political or ideological views, which may be exercised orally and through the press and other communications media, as well as various other generally recognized rights, such as the right of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views and the adoption of policies and laws reflecting them, and which also may be affected by measures of political coercion.

The Committee notes, in this connection, the press release from the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (R104/11 – 21 September 2011), in which the Office of the Special Rapporteur expresses its concern regarding the existence and application of laws that criminalize the expression of views opposed to the established political system. Referring in particular to a recent court decision which sentenced journalists to three years of imprisonment for the crime of aggravated defamation, the Office of the Special Rapporteur observes that the self-censorship that results from these types of decisions impacts not only journalists and the authorities themselves, but all of Ecuadorian society. Finally, it calls on the Government to bring its normative framework and institutional practices into compliance with the internationally recognized standards in the area of freedom of expression.

While noting the above information, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures so as to ensure that prison sentences involving compulsory labour are not imposed for the expression of views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide copies of court decisions handed down under the above provisions of the Penal Code, indicating the penalties imposed.

Germany

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1956)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Work of prisoners for private enterprises. In comments made for many years on law and practice in Germany, the Committee referred to the situation of prisoners who are obliged to work, without their consent, in workshops run by private enterprises within state prisons, in conditions bearing no resemblance whatsoever to the free labour market. The Committee pointed out on numerous occasions (see e.g. the 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, paragraph 109 and footnote 272) that the practice followed in this regard in Germany corresponds exactly to the description of the “special contract system”, a system in which the labour of prisoners is hired to private contractors. The fact that prisoners remain at all times under the authority and control of the prison administration does not detract from the fact that they are “hired to” a private enterprise – a practice designated in Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention as being incompatible with this fundamental human rights instrument.

The Committee recalled, referring also to the explanations in paragraphs 59–60 and 114–120 of the General Survey referred to above, that work by prisoners for private enterprises can be held compatible with the explicit prohibition of the Convention only where the necessary safeguards exist to ensure that the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily, without being subjected to pressure or the menace of any penalty, by giving their formal, free and informed consent to work for private enterprises. In such a situation, work of prisoners for private parties would not come under the scope of the Convention, since no compulsion is involved. The Committee has considered that, in the prison context, the most reliable indicator of the voluntariness of labour is the work performed under conditions which approximate a free labour relationship, including wages (leaving room for deductions and attachments), social security and occupational safety and health.

In this connection, the Committee previously noted with regret that the requirement of the prisoner’s formal consent to be employed in a workshop run by a private enterprise, laid down in section 41(3) of the Act on the execution of sentences of 1976, had been suspended by the Second Act to improve the budget structure, of 22 December 1981, and had remained a dead letter since that time. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government’s latest report, no steps have been taken to bring this provision into force, and the Länder are not prepared to lay down legislation on the obligation to obtain such consent of the prisoners concerned. No steps have been taken, either by the Federal Government or by the Länder, to include prisoners in the health insurance and old-age pension schemes, since the budgetary situation of the Länder has not changed. However, the proportion of the prisoners working for private enterprises in Germany is still significant: the Government indicates that, throughout the Federal territory, an average of 12.57 per cent of all prisoners worked for private enterprises in 2008, though figures for the Länder ranged from 3 up to 19 per cent. The Government also reiterates its previous statement that the work situation in prisons is characterized by a job shortage, and the prison authorities are therefore trying to get more jobs from private companies in prisons in order to bring down the level of unemployment in penitentiary institutions.

While having noted these indications, the Committee once again expresses its concern that a significant number of the prisoners in Germany is hired to private enterprises which use their labour without their consent and in conditions bearing no resemblance whatsoever to the free labour market, in violation of this fundamental human rights Convention. While having noted the Government’s repeated statement in its reports that the Federal Constitutional Court has ruled that compulsory work of prisoners for private companies is compatible with the Basic Law, the Committee points out once again that, as explained above, the situation is still not in conformity with the Convention, both in legislation and in practice.

The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, both at the federal and at the Länder levels, to ensure that formal, free and informed consent is required for the work of prisoners in private enterprise workshops inside prison premises, so that such consent is free from the menace of any penalty and authenticated by the conditions of work approximating a free labour relationship. In this connection, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the provision for the consent of prisoners to work in private workshops, already made in section 41(3) of the 1976 Act referred to above, will at last be brought into operation, together with the provisions regarding their contribution to the old-age pension scheme, as foreseen by section 191 et seq. of the same Act, and that the Government will soon be in a position to report the progress made in this regard.

Ghana

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(a), (c) and (d) of the Convention. 1. In comments made for a considerable number of years, the Committee has referred to provisions of the Criminal Code, the Newspaper Licensing Decree, 1973, the Merchant Shipping Act, 1963, the Protection of Property (Trade Disputes) Ordinance and the Industrial Relations Act, 1965, under which imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour) may be imposed as a punishment for non-observance of restrictions imposed by discretionary decision of the executive on the publication of newspapers and the carrying on of associations, for various breaches of discipline in the merchant marine and for participation in certain forms of strikes. Having requested the Government to adopt the necessary measures in regard to these provisions to ensure that no form of forced or compulsory labour (including compulsory prison labour) might be exacted in circumstances falling within Article 1(a), (c) or (d) of the Convention, the Committee noted the Government's statement that the National Advisory Committee on Labour was discussing the comments of the Committee of Experts and that it was the wish of the Government to bring the legislation concerned into conformity with the Convention. The Government also indicated in its report received in 1996 that the National Advisory Committee on Labour concluded discussions on the Committee of Experts' comments and submitted recommendations to the Minister in March 1994 designed to bring domestic legislation into conformity with ILO standards, and the comments of the Committee of Experts had been submitted to the Attorney-General for a closer study and expert comments.

The Government has previously indicated that the action of the Attorney-General to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention in accordance with the recommendations of the National Advisory Committee on Labour has been halted in view of the proposed review and codification of the labour laws. It has also indicated that the tripartite National Forum that includes representatives of the Attorney-General's Office, the National Advisory Committee on Labour and the employers' and workers' organizations, would consider the comments made by the Committee of Experts regarding the application of the Convention.

The Government indicates in its latest report that the National Forum has already codified all the country's labour laws into a single labour bill, which is being considered by the Cabinet and will be forwarded to Parliament to be passed into law. The Committee expresses firm hope that the necessary action will at last be taken on the various points which are once again recalled in detail in a request addressed directly to the Government.

2. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Political Parties Law, 1992, the Emergency Powers Act, 1994, and the Public Order Act, 1994, which gave rise to a number of questions under the Convention that are also reiterated in the request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Greece

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1962)

Voluntary nature of labour performed by convicted persons. In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to certain provisions of the Code of Public Maritime Law, 1973, as amended, under which various breaches of labour discipline by seafarers are punishable with sanctions of imprisonment. It also referred to the provisions allowing the imposition of restrictions on freedom of assembly and expression, enforceable with sanctions of deprivation of liberty, in the circumstances covered by the Convention.

The Committee has noted the provisions of the Penitentiary Code, as amended by Act No. 2776/1999, as well as the Government's explanations concerning their application in practice. It has noted, in particular, that, under section 40(1) of the Code, the labour and employment of prisoners shall not be compulsory. It also notes the Government's indication in the report that prisoners wishing to be engaged in a specific work must submit an application to the Prisoners' Labour Council, which is a competent body for the selection of prisoners wishing to work, as well as for the work distribution and supervision of prisoners' conditions of work (section 41(3) and (4) of the Code). The decisions of the Council are taken after consultation with the prisoners concerned. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, under the legislation in force, there is no obligation for convicted prisoners to work, and they perform labour voluntarily.

As regards the sanction of community service, which is an alternative to imprisonment, the Committee notes that, under section 64 of the Code, it is performed following a relevant application or acceptance by the convicted person.

Guatemala

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1959)

Article 1(a), (c) and (d) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour imposed for expressing political views, for breaches of labour discipline and for participation in strikes. For many years, the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the Penal Code that may affect the application of the Convention. Under these provisions, prison sentences involving compulsory labour (under section 47 of the Penal Code) can be imposed, in breach of the Convention, as a punishment for the expression of certain political opinions, as a means of labour discipline or for participation in a strike. The provisions in question are the following: section 396, under which “any person who seeks to organize or operate, or who participates in, associations which act in collaboration with, or in obedience to, international bodies that promote the communist ideology or advocate any other totalitarian system, or associations whose purposes offend against the law, shall be punished with imprisonment of from two to six years”; section 419, which stipulates that “any public servant or employee who fails or refuses to carry out, or delays carrying out, any duty pertaining to his position or office, shall be punished with imprisonment of from one to three years”; section 390(2), under which “anyone committing an act intended to paralyse or disrupt an enterprise that contributes to the economic development of the country shall be punished with imprisonment of from one to five years”; and, finally, section 430, which stipulates that “public servants, public employees and other employees or members of the staff of public service enterprises who collectively abandon their jobs, work or service, shall be punished with imprisonment of from six months to two years. The penalty shall be doubled where such stoppage harms the public interest, and in the case of leaders, promoters or organizers of a collective stoppage”.

The Committee notes with interest that the Act against Organized Crime (Decree No. 21-2006 of 10 August 2006) repealed section 396 of the abovementioned Penal Code. It notes moreover that, according to the Government, a tripartite commission was appointed in 2008 to examine the legislative reforms to be made in follow-up to the comments of the Committee, which included the amendment of sections 390(2) and 430 of the Penal Code. The Government points out that these proposals were drafted with ILO technical assistance and that they are backed by the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs. In this respect, the Committee notes that the high-level mission that went to Guatemala in 2011 at the request of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference, in the context of the examination of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), stressed the lack of progress made with respect to the legislative reforms recommended by the Committee of Experts – the provisions of sections 390(2) and 430 were also the subject of comments under Convention No. 87. The mission pointed out that no bill had been submitted to Congress by the tripartite commission of international affairs.

The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to indicate in its next report that the provisions of sections 419, 390(2) and 430 of the Penal Code have been modified or repealed, taking into account the comments it has been making for many years, to ensure that nobody taking part in a strike or breaching labour discipline may be penalized by a prison sentence involving compulsory prison labour. Meanwhile, the Committee requests the Government to send information on the application of these provisions in practice, including copies of any rulings handed down under these provisions. The Committee also refers to the comments it makes under Convention No. 87.

Guyana

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to observations received from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), which contained allegations that there was evidence of trafficking for forced prostitution and for child prostitution in cities and remote gold mining areas.

The Committee has noted the adoption of the Combating of Trafficking in Persons Act, 2005, as well as the Government’s indication in the report that 300 volunteers have been trained to identify cases of trafficking. The Committee would appreciate it if the Government would provide information on the following matters:

- the activities of the task force to develop and implement a national plan for the prevention of trafficking in persons, to which reference is made in section 30 of the above Act, supplying copies of any relevant reports, studies and inquiries, as well as a copy of the National Plan;
- statistical data on trafficking which is collected and published by the Ministry of Home Affairs in virtue of section 31 of the Act;
- any legal proceedings which have been instituted as a consequence of the application of section 3(1) of the 2005 Act on penalties, supplying copies of the relevant court decisions and indicating the penalties imposed, as well as the information on measures taken to ensure that this provision is strictly enforced against perpetrators, as required by Article 25 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

India

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1954)

The Committee notes a communication dated 16 March 2010, received from the Dakshini Rajasthan Majdoor Union (DRMU), which contains observations on the application of the Convention by India and, in particular, allegations concerning the situation of migrant workers, especially children, who are subject to compulsory labour practices in cotton production in India. The Committee notes that this communication was sent to the Government in June 2010 for any comments it might wish to make on the matters raised therein. The Committee requests the Government to provide, in its next report, information in this regard.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Bonded labour. Magnitude of the problem. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication in its 2008 report that since the enactment of the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, 1976 (BLSA), 287,555 bonded labourers had been identified, of whom 267,593 had been rehabilitated. It also noted from an International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) communication received in 2008 that, despite the Government's efforts in combating forced and bonded labour, findings from research studies showed that bonded labour in agriculture and in industries like mining, brick kilns, silk and cotton production, and bidi making was likely to be affecting millions of workers across the country.

The Committee has noted the Government's repeated indication in its reports that statistical tools or methodologies used to collect macro or aggregated data are inappropriate for a survey of bonded labour. The Government reiterates that it had provided grants to state governments for conducting district-level surveys of bonded labour, and that a large number of such surveys had been conducted by the state governments. The Committee also notes a detailed report on the survey conducted in the State of Gujarat, supplied by the Government. Finally, the Committee notes that the Government, in cooperation with the ILO, will be undertaking a detailed survey on the vulnerable groups of workers who often become victims of bonded labour.

While taking due note of the above information, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will soon be in a position to undertake a national survey on bonded labour, in cooperation with the ILO and with the involvement of the social partners, using any statistical methods it considers appropriate and, as far as practicable, the existing data from all the district-level surveys referred to above. The Committee asks the Government to provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide copies of all available reports of the district-level surveys conducted by state governments.

Vigilance committees

In its earlier comments, the Committee expressed concern about the effectiveness of the vigilance committees established under the BLSA. The Committee has noted the Government's repeated statement in its reports that all state governments have confirmed that vigilance committees have been constituted at the district and subdivisional levels and that the meetings are being held regularly. The Government also indicates that sensitization workshops have been organized in the states by the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) in collaboration with the Ministry of Labour and Employment. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will continue to take the necessary measures to ensure the proper functioning and effectiveness of the vigilance committees, and that it will provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard, including copies of any relevant reports, studies and inquiries.

Release and rehabilitation

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that a special group chaired by the Union Labour and Employment Secretary has continued to monitor the implementation of the BLSA and has held 18 region-level meetings with state government participation so far. The Government also indicates that the NHRC has been involved in the supervision of the implementation of the BLSA and the Centrally Sponsored Scheme (CSS) for rehabilitation of bonded labour victims, and that Special Rapporteurs have been appointed in order to make periodic visits to districts to assess the situation on the ground. The Special Rapporteurs' reports are studied by the NHRC and follow-up action has been initiated. Finally, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government as regards recent statistics on identification, release and rehabilitation of bonded labourers under the CSS up to 31 March 2010.

While noting this information, the Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts towards the release and rehabilitation of bonded labourers and to provide, in its future reports, updated information on the measures taken to effectively implement release and rehabilitation programmes at the state level, including statistical information on the identification, release and rehabilitation of bonded labourers.

Measures to reduce vulnerability of workers to bondage situations

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government as regards the measures it has been adopting with the objective of reducing vulnerability to bondage. It notes, in particular, the information regarding the project "Reducing Vulnerability to Bondage in India through Promotion of Decent Work", which has been prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Employment, with the assistance of the ILO Special Action Programme to Combat Forced Labour (SAP-FL). The overall objective of the project is to reduce vulnerability of workers to bondage situations in the brick manufacturing and rice mill sectors in Tamil Nadu by achieving a significant improvement in living and working conditions for women and men workers and their family members. In addition to Tamil Nadu where the pilot project has been operational since July 2008, the project is currently supporting the States of Andhra Pradesh and Orissa to develop and implement their state plans of action. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the project establishes close collaboration with the federal Government, state governments, trade unions and employers of the concerned sectors in order to develop and implement a "convergence-based" approach for the prevention and reduction of vulnerability to bonded labour.

The Committee finally notes the detailed information provided by the Government as regards the Task Force established by the Ministry of Labour and Employment and composed of members of the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, the NHRC and the ILO, in order to consider various issues related to bonded labour. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to provide information on the measures taken to reduce workers' vulnerability to bondage, including information on the implementation and impact of the above project carried out with ILO assistance.

Law enforcement

With regard to the issue of enforcement of the penalty provisions of the BLSA, the Committee notes the Government's brief indication that the NHRC has been receiving information from state governments and has been monitoring issues related to the prosecution and conviction under the above Acts. While noting the Government's statement that further information on prosecutions and convictions is available at the NHRC, the Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will provide, in its next report, information concerning the numbers of prosecutions and convictions, as well as specific criminal penalties which have actually been imposed on employers of bonded labourers convicted under the BLSA, supplying copies of the relevant court decisions.

Child labour

With regard to the implementation of the Child Labour (Prohibition and Regulation) Act, 1986 (CLPRA), the Committee notes the Government's indication that, on the advice of the Technical Advisory Committee on Child Labour, the Act was amended in 2008 to include one additional occupation and eight additional processes where employment of children is prohibited. It also notes the Government's indications that it has carried out awareness-raising meetings and media campaigns on the effective implementation of the CLPRA. The Committee further notes the statistical information provided by the Government as regards inspections, prosecutions and convictions. It notes, in particular, the Government's indication that, in the period between 1997 and 2008, from a total of 23,223 convictions under the CLPRA, imprisonment sanctions have been imposed on employers in five cases, while fines have been imposed in the remaining cases.

While noting the above information with interest, the Committee hopes that the Government will continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen its law enforcement mechanisms in order to effectively implement the CLPRA. It also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the specific penalties imposed in cases of convictions under the Act, including copies of the relevant court decisions. The Committee requests the Government once again to provide information on the status of the Draft Offences against Children Bill, 2006.

The Committee notes the information concerning the implementation of the National Child Labour Project (NCLP) provided by the Government. It also notes the adoption of the Right to Education Act, 2009, which entitles children to have the right to education enforced as a fundamental right. The Government states in its report that, through this Act, it is expected that the constitutional obligation of educating children, combined with social schemes like midday meals in schools and rural employment guarantee schemes, will have a positive impact on combating the root causes of child labour. The Committee further notes the Government's indication as regards the launching of a convergence project, in cooperation with ILO-IPEC, on the educational rehabilitation of victims of child labour and the economic rehabilitation of their families. The Committee hopes that, in its next report, the Government will provide more detailed information concerning this project and its implementation.

Prostitution and commercial sexual exploitation

The Committee notes the Government's indication in the report that the Immoral Traffic Prevention Bill, 2006, which has been drafted to amend the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956 (ITPA), is still under consideration with a view to widening its scope and providing for more stringent punishments for trafficking in persons, including children. It also notes the Government's indication that a number of measures are being taken by the Ministry of Labour and Employment in order to rescue, repatriate and rehabilitate child victims of trafficking and a detailed protocol has been issued as a guideline to be followed by state governments on this issue. The Committee reiterates its hope that the Bill amending the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956 (ITPA), will soon be adopted and that the Government will supply a copy of the new legislation, as soon as it is promulgated.

With regard to the Ujjawala federal scheme on prevention of trafficking and rescue, rehabilitation and reintegration of victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, the Committee notes the Government's indication that 58 rehabilitation homes, with capacity for 2,900 victims, have been set up under the scheme. The Government also provides information on the organization of the Central Advisory Committee (CAC) for preventing and combating trafficking of women and children for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to provide, in its future reports, information about the work of the CAC and nodal authorities, including any official reports assessing the effectiveness of their work and its impact in practice on trafficking in women and children for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation. Please also continue to provide information on the implementation and impact of the Ujjawala federal scheme.

Indonesia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1950)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the task forces required to be set up under section 58(2) and (3) of Law No. 21/2007 to implement policies, programmes, and activities to prevent trafficking in persons, particularly at the regional (provincial and district) and municipal levels of government. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report concerning Presidential Decree No. 69/2008 on a Task Force to Prevent and Address the Criminal Act of Trafficking in Persons. It notes, in particular, the Government's indication that, under Decree No. 69/2008, the Task Force has established an Integrated Service Centre for Empowering Women and Children Victims of Trafficking. The Committee also notes the information on various measures taken to protect victims of trafficking. Finally, the Committee notes the statistics provided in the Government's report on trafficking cases between 2004 and 2009. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to provide information on the measures taken to prevent trafficking in persons, including, in particular, information about the operation and functioning of the task forces set up under Law No. 21/2007, especially at the regional (provincial and district) and municipal level of government. Please also continue to provide information on the judicial proceedings instituted under Law No. 21/2007, supplying copies of the relevant court decisions and indicating the penalties imposed. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the annual report which the Witness and Victim Protection Institution (LPSK) is required to submit to the House of Representatives under section 13(2) of Law No. 13/2006.

Vulnerable situation of Indonesian migrant workers with regard to the exaction of forced labour. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report as regards measures taken to improve the protection of Indonesian migrant workers against forced labour exploitation, including statistical information on returning migrants. In this connection, the Committee notes the information and statistics provided by the Government on the Crisis Centre in Indonesia, which has been established with the objective of addressing migrant workers' issues. The Committee also notes from the Government's report that, in order to provide training to migrant workers, a Social Basis Practice Group (KBBM) has been established in sub-district level. It further notes the Government's indication that services are also provided at Indonesian diplomatic missions overseas with the objective of protecting Indonesian workers and their rights in destination countries. Finally, the Committee notes the information regarding the adoption of Regulation PER-07/MEN/V/2010 of the Ministry of Manpower and Transmigration on Insurance for Indonesian Migrant Workers, as well as Regulation PER 03/KA/II/2010 on the Standard of Services for the Protection of Migrant Workers. While noting the above information with interest, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application in practice of the provisions adopted to implement Law No. 39/2004 on the Placement and Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers, including information about inter-sector and intergovernmental coordination and cooperation, as well as difficulties encountered. Please also provide information on the measures being taken or contemplated to protect migrant workers by way of controlling the exploitative aspects of activities of private recruitment agencies, including their fee-charging practices.

As regards, more particularly, migrant domestic workers, the Committee notes the Government's indication in the report that Moratoria on placing Indonesian domestic workers have been enacted with Jordan (2008), Malaysia (2009) and Kuwait (2010), prohibiting the migration of Indonesian domestic workers to these countries. The Committee further notes that the Moratorium for Malaysia has been lifted as a result of a "letter of intent", which was signed between the two countries in May 2010 and which amends the Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) of 2006, stipulating that Indonesian domestic workers have the right to retain their passports while in Malaysia, shall be entitled to one rest day a week, and shall have their wages commensurate with the market. The Committee requests the Government to indicate, in its next report, whether there are plans to include similar guarantees in other bilateral agreements referred to by the Government in its report, in particular as regards measures to prevent and respond to cases of abuse of migrant workers, providing also information on the implementation of such agreements in practice.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Use of compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that under sections 107(a), 107(d) and 107(e) of Law No. 27 of 1999 on the Revision of the Criminal Code in relation to crimes against state security, sentences of imprisonment (which involve compulsory prison labour under sections 14 and 19 of the Criminal Code and sections 57(1) and 59(2) of the Prisons Regulations) may be imposed upon any person who disseminates or develops the teachings of "Communism/Marxism-Leninism" orally, in writing or through any media, or establishes an organization based on such teachings, or establishes relations with such an organization, with a view to replacing Pancasila as the State's foundation. The Government confirms in its report that, by virtue of the above sections of Law No. 27 of 1999, any person who jeopardizes national stability may be punished with a sentence of imprisonment, which involves the obligation to work. The Government states, however, that such work has the objective of rehabilitating, rather than punishing convicts.

While noting these indications, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the explanations provided in paragraph 154 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, where it observed that the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour of persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence. But sanctions involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention where they enforce a prohibition of the peaceful expression of views or of opposition to the established political, social or economic system. Considering that sections 14 and 19 of the Criminal Code and sections 57(1) and 59(2) of the Prisons Regulations, provide for the obligation to work in prison, prison sentences imposed on persons who express views ideologically opposed to the established system will have an impact on the application of the Convention. The Committee therefore trusts that the necessary measures will be taken in the near future to bring sections 107(a), 107(d) and 107(e) of Law No. 27/1999 into conformity with the Convention, so that persons who peacefully express ideological opposition to the established political, social or economic system cannot be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which includes the obligation to work.

In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that Law No. 9 1998 on the Freedom of Expression in Public imposes certain restrictions on the expression of ideas in public during public gatherings, demonstrations, parades, etc., and that sections 15, 16 and 17 of the Law provide for the enforcement of those restrictions with penal sanctions “in accordance with the applicable legislation”. The Committee requested the Government to clarify the sanctions applicable in case of non-compliance with Law No. 9/1998, as referred to in the above sections. Noting that the Government’s latest report contains no information on this issue, the Committee hopes that the Government will not fail to provide, in its next report, the information requested.

In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that the Constitutional Court, in its ruling on Case No. 6/PUU-V/2007, found sections 154 and 155 of the Criminal Code to be contrary to the Constitution of 1945. These sections establish the penalty of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) for up to seven years and four and a half years, respectively, for a person who publicly gives expression to feelings of hostility, hatred or contempt against the Government (section 154) or who disseminates, openly demonstrates or puts up a writing containing such feelings, with the intent to give publicity to the contents or to enhance the publicity thereof (section 155). The Committee further noted that, in ruling No. 013 022/PUU IV/2006, the Constitutional Court found that it was inappropriate for Indonesia to maintain sections 134, 136bis and 137 of the Criminal Code (respecting deliberate insults against the President or the Vice President), since they negate the principle of equality before the law, diminish freedom of expression and opinion, freedom of information and the principle of legal certainty. Accordingly, in the view of the Constitutional Court, the new draft text of the Criminal Code must also exclude provisions that are identical or similar to those of sections 134, 136bis and 137 of the Criminal Code. Furthermore, the Committee noted the cases of several persons convicted to heavy sentences of imprisonment, involving compulsory labour, for the peaceful expression of their political opinions, under the above provisions of the Criminal Code.

While noting the Government’s statement in its report that the draft revision of the Criminal Code is still not concluded, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take into account the above rulings of the Constitutional Court in the context of the adoption of the new Criminal Code. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the new Code as soon as it has been adopted. In the meantime, it requests the Government once again to indicate the manner in which sections 134, 136bis and 137 of the Criminal Code are applied in practice, supplying copies of any court decisions handed down under these provisions.

Article 1(d). Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes. In its earlier comments, the Committee requested the Government to take appropriate measures to amend sections 139 and 185 of the Manpower Act so as to limit their scope to essential services in the strict sense of the term and to ensure that no penalty involving compulsory labour can be imposed on persons participating in strikes, as required by the Convention. Noting that the Government’s latest report contains no information in this regard, the Committee recalls, referring also to the explanations contained in paragraph 189 of its 2007 General Survey, that no penalties of imprisonment should be imposed against a worker for having participated peacefully in a strike. Referring also to its comments addressed to the Government under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take measures without further delay to amend sections 139 and 185 of the Manpower Act so as to ensure that no penalty involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the mere fact of a peaceful participation in strikes. Pending the amendment, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the effect given in practice to sections 139 and 185, including copies of the relevant court decisions.

Kenya

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Compulsory labour in connection with the conservation of natural resources. For many years, the Committee has been referring to sections 13–18 of the Chief’s Authority Act (Cap. 128), as amended by Act No. 10 of 1997, according to which able-bodied male persons between 18 and 50 years of age may be required to perform any work or service in connection with the conservation of natural resources for up to 60 days in any year. The Committee has noted the Government’s repeated indication that the Chief’s Authority Act will be replaced by the Administrative Authority Act. The Government also stated in its last report that sections 13–18 of the Chief's Authority Act referred to above have never been enforced and undertakes to supply a copy of the new Act, as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Administrative Authority Act, which is intended to replace the Chief's Authority Act, will soon be adopted and that the legislation will be brought into conformity with the Convention and the indicated practice. It asks the Government to supply a copy of the Administrative Authority Act, as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views. For many years, the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the Penal Code, the Public Order Act and the Prohibited Publications Order, 1968, under which sentences of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) may be imposed as a punishment for participating in certain meetings and gatherings, for the display of emblems or the distribution of publications signifying association with a political object or political organization. The Committee has noted the Government's repeated statement in its reports that it is committed to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. It notes from the Government's latest report that the issues raised by the Committee have been brought to the attention of the relevant authorities. The Committee trusts that the provisions of the Penal Code, the Public Order Act and the Prohibited Publications Order referred to above will be brought into conformity with the Convention and that the Government will soon be in a position to report the progress made in this regard. It also asks the Government to provide information on various points raised in a more detailed request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Kuwait

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1968)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers. Freedom of domestic workers to terminate employment. The Committee previously noted that the new Labour Code (Law No. 6, 2010) excludes domestic workers from its scope (section 5), and that the rules governing the relationship between domestic workers and their employers are specified by a decision issued by the competent Minister.

The Government indicates in its report that the Minister of Interior Resolution No. 1182/2010, which amends some provisions of the previous Ministerial Decision No. 617/1992 on the rules and procedures for obtaining licenses for the agencies supplying domestic workers and similar workers, provides for certain guarantees for these categories of workers, such as the minimum wage, the maximum number of working hours, the right to weekly holidays and annual paid leave, as well as compensation for occupational injuries. The Committee notes that the model contract for recruiting domestic workers, annexed to the Ministerial Decision No. 617/1992, provides that the contract between the employer ("the sponsor") and the domestic worker must be concluded for a number of years specified in the contract and is renewable for similar periods, unless one of the parties notifies the other of its intention not to renew the contract. Such notification should be made at least two months before the expiration of the contract (section 4).

Regarding the freedom of domestic workers to terminate employment, the Committee notes from the report of the International Organization for Migration (IOM) on "Labour migration from Indonesia. An overview of Indonesian migration to selected destinations in Asia and the Middle East" (2010) that all migrant workers, including domestic workers, are legally allowed to take up employment only with the "sponsor" who issues a residence visa under his authority, and cannot easily transfer from one employer to another without permission of the initial "sponsor".

The Committee also notes that the situation of foreign workers, especially domestic workers, was discussed during the ILO technical assistance mission which visited the country in February 2010. Furthermore, following the discussion by the United Nations Human Rights Council of the Universal Periodic Review of Kuwait in September 2010, the Government reiterated its acceptance "to revoke the sponsorship system and replace it with regulations in accordance with international standards" (A/HRC/15/15/Add.1).

The Committee further understands that steps are being taken to draft a domestic workers bill, which, in addition to the mandatory model contract and other measures taken to support migrant domestic workers, could further improve domestic workers' rights.

Referring to its comments addressed to the Government under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Committee highlights the importance of taking effective action to ensure that the system of employment of migrant workers, including migrant domestic workers, does not place the workers concerned in a situation of increased vulnerability, particularly when they are confronted with employment policies such as the visas "sponsorship" system and subjected to abusive employer practices, such as retention of passports, non-payment of wages, deprivation of liberty, and physical and sexual abuses. Such practices could turn their employment into situations that could amount to forced labour.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the domestic workers bill referred to above will soon be adopted, and that it will provide for a protective framework of employment relations that is specifically tailored to the difficult circumstances faced by migrant domestic workers. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that domestic workers are not prevented from exercising their right to freely terminate their employment and that they are fully protected from abusive practices and conditions that amount to the exaction of forced labour. Furthermore, the Committee hopes that, in its next report, the Government will provide information on the measures adopted to protect migrant workers, in particular from abuses that may arise from the visa “sponsorship” system.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25. Trafficking in persons. Referring to its earlier comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Bill on combating trafficking in persons still has to be adopted by Parliament and approved by the Emir, in accordance with the relevant constitutional procedures. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the bill on combating trafficking in persons will be adopted in the near future and that the Government will provide a copy, once it has been promulgated. Please supply information on the activities of the national committee for combating human trafficking, which shall be set up under section 15 of the bill. Pending the adoption of the bill, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 138 and 173 of the Penal Code, to which the Government referred in its previous report in relation to the punishment of human trafficking.

Article 25. Penal sanctions for the exaction of forced or compulsory labour. In its earlier comments, the Committee observed that the national legislation does not contain any specific provisions under which the illegal exaction of forced or compulsory labour is punishable as a penal offence, and invited the Government to take the necessary measures, for example by introducing a new provision to that effect in the legislation. It noted that the Government referred in this regard to various penal provisions (such as sections 49 and 57 of Law No. 31 of 1970 on the amendment of the Penal Code, or section 121 of the Penal Code) prohibiting public officials or employees to force a worker to perform a job for the State or for any public body, as well as to section 173 of the Penal Code, which provides for the imposition of penalties on anyone who threatens another person physically or with damage to his reputation or property with a view to forcing the victim to do something or to refrain from doing something.

The Committee recalls, that under Article 25 of the Convention, the exaction of forced or compulsory labour shall be punishable as a penal offence, and the penalties imposed by law must be really adequate and strictly enforced. Noting that the Government’s report contains no information regarding this issue the Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken in order to give full effect to Article 25 of the Convention. Pending the adoption of such measures, the Committee again requests the Government to communicate, in its next report, information on the application of the above penal provisions in practice, supplying copies of the court decisions and indicating the penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1961)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Punishment for expressing political views. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that Legislative Decree No. 65 of 1979, which imposed certain restrictions on the organization of public meetings and gatherings enforceable with penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour), was declared unconstitutional by the Constitutional Court in 2006. It also noted that a new law concerning public meetings and gatherings was drafted in 2008.

In its latest report, the Government indicates that the draft law referred to above has not yet been adopted. The Committee reiterates its hope that the law concerning public meetings and gatherings will be adopted in the near future and that the Government will communicate a copy for the examination by the Committee.

Article 1(c) and (d). Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. Over a number of years, the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of Legislative Decree No. 31 of 1980 regarding security, order and discipline on board ship, under which various breaches of discipline (unauthorized absence, repeated disobedience, failure to return to the vessel) committed by common agreement by three persons may be punished by imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour). The Committee recalled that penalties imposed for violations of labour discipline or punishment for having participated in a strike do not come within the scope of the Convention only if such acts endanger the safety of the vessel or the life or health of persons. The Committee observed that sections 11, 12 and 13 of the above Legislative Decree do not appear to limit the application of the penalties to such acts.

The Committee notes the Government’s commitment expressed in the report to bring legislation into conformity with the Convention, and in particular, the Government’s indication that the necessary measures are being taken to amend the abovementioned Decree. The Committee trusts that the Legislative Decree No. 31 of 1980 will be amended in the near future, for example by clearly indicating that the imposition of penalties involving compulsory labour is strictly limited to acts endangering the vessel or the life or health of persons. Pending the amendment, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Legislative Decree in practice, supplying copies of court decisions and indicating the penalties imposed.

Lao People's Democratic Republic

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the amended Labour Law, 2006, has repealed and replaced the Labour Law of 1994, which contained a provision (section 4) exempting from the prohibition of forced labour any work performed in accordance with a resolution adopted by local authorities, where such work constituted an obligation on all citizens in the common interest of the nation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lebanon

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of migrant domestic workers with regard to the illegal exaction of forced labour. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the National Steering Committee has drafted a Bill on the regulation of the work of domestic workers, which is to be reviewed by the House of Deputies. It also noted the preparation of a Guiding Manual for migrant female domestic workers, as well as the promulgation by the Minister of Labour of Order No. 38/1 of 16 March 2009, relating to the implementation of a consolidated labour contract for domestic workers and Order No. 52/1 of 28 April 2009, extending the coverage of social security to all foreign workers in Lebanon, including domestic workers.

The Government also indicated that a working team has been established by Order No. 8/1 of 20 January 2009, whose task is to monitor the work of employment agencies which bring in migrant domestic workers, to examine requests to establish new agencies for bringing in workers and to investigate the complaints against such employment agencies, as well as complaints filed by domestic workers against employers. In this regard, the Minister of Labour issued Memorandum No. 21/1 of 20 February 2009, which regulates the work of the team, in particular examining and investigating the complaints filed against the employment agencies which bring in female domestic workers. Furthermore, the Minister of Labour promulgated Order No. 13/1 of 22 January 2009, regulating the employment agencies which bring in migrant female domestic workers.

While noting this information, the Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the Bill on the regulation of the work of domestic workers referred to above, once it has been adopted by the House of Deputies. Please also continue to provide information on the activities of the National Steering Committee and on the various measures taken, both in legislation and in practice, to protect migrant domestic workers with a view to the complete elimination of the exaction of forced labour from this category of workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Liberia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1931)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Forced labour and captivity practices as a consequence of the armed conflict. In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to the allegations concerning forced labour and captivity practices which took place in the south-eastern part of the country in connection with armed conflict, where children were allegedly held hostage by adults and used as a source of forced and captive labour. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication in its report that the special investigation committee sent by the Government to investigate the alleged forced labour practices in the south-eastern region recommended that a national committee be established to trace and reunite displaced women and children taken captive during the war and that, in order to enhance the National Reconciliation and Reunification Programmes, "local authorities should be directed to encourage their citizens to report any acts of alleged forced labour, intimidation, harassment, maltreatment for appropriate investigation and corrective measures".

While having noted that the south-eastern part of the country was in a grave humanitarian crisis and an extreme state of poverty and that any reported situations of forced labour exploitation were due to the consequences of the war, the Committee expressed the hope that the Government would encourage joint efforts and cooperation between governmental bodies and non-governmental organizations at all levels with a view to the effective elimination of all forms of compulsory labour, including that of children, and requested the Government to supply full information on measures taken to this end.

The Committee noted the Government's brief indication in its report supplied in May 2008 that a tripartite national committee is being considered to investigate the complaints of forced labour and hostage situation in the south-eastern region, that consultations for this investigation have already begun and the committee is expected to start its work in the near future. The Committee reiterates the firm hope that the Government will provide, in its next report, full information on the activities of the abovementioned tripartite national committee and on the specific action taken to investigate the situation in the South-East as regards the alleged practices of forced labour, as well as on the measures taken to eliminate such practices. The Committee also hopes that the Government will supply information on the results achieved in this regard by the Liberian Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC), which was set up to investigate human rights violations and was empowered to recommend for prosecution the most serious offenders, as well as information on the progress achieved in the establishment of an Independent National Human Rights Commission and drawing up of a national human rights action plan.

Recalling also that, under Article 25 of the Convention, the illegal exaction of forced labour shall be punishable as a penal offence and it shall be an obligation of the State to ensure that the penalties imposed are really adequate and are strictly enforced, the Committee hopes that the necessary action to give effect to this Article will be taken in the near future, by imposing penal sanctions on persons convicted of having exacted forced labour, and that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on any legal proceedings which have been instituted for that purpose and on any penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of prison sentences involving the obligation to work as a punishment for expressing political views. In its earlier comments, the Committee observed that prison sentences (involving an obligation to work by virtue of Chapter 34, section 34-14, paragraph 1, of the Liberian Code of Laws) might be imposed in circumstances falling within Article 1(a) of the Convention under section 52(1)(b) of the Penal Law, punishing certain forms of criticism of the Government. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate whether section 52(1)(b) of the Penal Law is still in force and, if so, to indicate the measures taken with a view to ensuring observance of the Convention.

Article 1(c). Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that, under section 347(1) and (2) of the Maritime Law, local authorities shall apprehend and deliver a seafarer who deserts from a vessel with the intention of not returning to duty and who remains unlawfully in a foreign country. Referring to paragraph 171 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, the Committee pointed out that measures to ensure the due performance by a worker of his service under compulsion of law (in the form of physical constraint or the menace of a penalty) constitute forced or compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline and are thus incompatible with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that section 347 has not been repealed, but due consideration is being given to this section. The Committee trusts that section 347(1) and (2) of the Maritime Law will soon be repealed and that the Government will supply, in its next report, information on the measures taken to this end.

The Committee also noted that under section 348 of the Maritime Law various other offences against labour discipline by seafarers such as incitement to neglect duty, assembling with others in a tumultuous manner, may be punished with imprisonment of up to five years (involving an obligation to work). The Committee referred to paragraph 179 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour where it pointed out that sanctions relating to acts tending to endanger the ship or the life or health of persons on board do not fall within the scope of the Convention. However, as regards more generally breaches of labour discipline, such as desertion, absence without leave or disobedience, all sanctions involving compulsory labour should be abolished under the Convention. In a great number of maritime nations, similar penal provisions have been repealed, restricted in scope to cases involving a danger to the ship or the life or health of persons, or otherwise amended so as to provide for a fine or some other penalty not falling within the scope of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that section 348 has not been repealed, but due consideration is being given to this section. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that measures will soon be taken to bring section 348 of the Maritime Law into conformity with the Convention, and that the Government will provide information on the action taken to this end.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Mauritius

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1969)

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Merchant Shipping Act, No. 26 of 2007, which had repealed the Merchant Shipping Act of 1986. The Committee noted, in particular, that under section 217(8)(n) of the Act, refusal to obey the master's order or neglect of duty by a seafarer is punishable with imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour). Referring to the explanations in paragraphs 179–181 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, the Committee recalls that, in order to be compatible with the Convention, provisions imposing penalties of imprisonment on seafarers for breaches of labour discipline should be restricted to actions that endanger the safety of the ship or the life or health of persons.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Government has drawn the attention of the competent ministry that the above provision is not compatible with the Convention, and the ministry concerned has undertaken to initiate action towards the amendment of this provision in order to bring it into line with the Convention. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will soon be taken to amend section 217(8)(n) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 2007, e.g. by limiting its scope to situations where the safety of the ship or the life or health of persons is endangered, so as to bring this provision into conformity with the Convention, and that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

Republic of Moldova

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Law No. 277-XVI of 18 December 2008 has repealed section 358(1) of the Criminal Code which imposed sanctions of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) for the organization of or active participation in group actions breaking violently public order and resulting in disturbances of operation of transport or work of enterprises, institutions or organizations. The Committee also notes with satisfaction that the same Law has amended section 285 of the Criminal Code (“Mass disorders”) by limiting the application of sanctions of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) to acts of violence against persons, use of firearms and violent or armed resistance to representatives of authorities.

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Mobilizing of labour for purposes of economic development. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted a communication received in February 2004 from the Confederation of Trade Unions of the Republic of Moldova (CSRM), which referred, in particular, to certain provisions of the Law on mobilization, No. 1192-XV of 4 July 2002, the Law on the requisitioning of goods and services in the public interest, No. 1352-XV of 11 October 2002, and the government decision to approve regulations on the mobilization at the workplace, No. 751 of 24 June 2003, under which the central and local authorities, as well as military bodies, can exact compulsory labour from the population under certain conditions as a means of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of the development of the national economy.

In its report, the Government expresses the view that both the punishment in form of community service work in the interest of society and the provisions of section 3(b) of Law No. 1352-XV of 11 October 2002 on the requisition of assets and performance of labour duty in the interest of society, does not represent forced or compulsory labour under ILO Convention No. 105, but falls within the exceptions allowed by Article 2(2) of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29).

The Committee refers in this connection to the explanations provided in paragraph 144 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, in which it has considered that in the great majority of cases, labour imposed on persons as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law will have no relevance to the application of Convention No. 105, such as in the cases of the exaction of compulsory labour from common offenders convicted, for example, of robbery, kidnapping, bombing or other acts of violence or acts or omissions that have endangered the life or health of others, or numerous other offences. However, if a person has to perform compulsory prison labour because she or he holds or has expressed particular political views, has committed a breach of labour discipline or has participated in a strike, the situation is covered by this Convention, which prohibits the use “of any form” of forced or compulsory labour as a sanction, as a means of coercion, education or discipline, or as a punishment in respect of the persons within the meaning of Article 1(a), (c) and (d).

The Committee also recalls that Article 1(b) requires the abolition of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a means of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development. The Committee previously noted in this regard that section 3(b) of the Law on the requisitioning of goods and services in the public interest referred to above stipulates that one of the aims of such requisitioning is to create conditions for the good functioning of the national economy and public institutions. As regards the exceptions allowed under Article 2(2)(d) of Convention No. 29, the Committee draws the Government’s attention to paragraphs 62–64 of its 2007 General Survey, in which it has considered that in order to respect the limits of the exception provided for in the Convention, the power to call up labour should be confined to genuine cases of emergency, or force majeure. The Committee has noted that the wording of section 3(b) of the above Law does not seem to be limited to such circumstances.

The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken to bring the above provisions of the Law on mobilization, No. 1192-XV of 4 July 2002, the Law on the requisitioning of goods and services in the public interest, No. 1352-XV of 11 October 2002, and the Government decision to approve regulation on the mobilization at the workplace, No. 751 of 24 June 2003, into conformity with the Convention. It asks the Government to provide in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Myanmar

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1955)

Follow-up to the recommendations made by the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

Historical background

In its earlier comments, the Committee has discussed in detail the history of this extremely serious case, which has involved the Government’s gross, long-standing and persistent non-observance of the Convention, as well as the failure by the Government to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, appointed by the Governing Body in March 1997 under article 26 of the Constitution.

The Committee recalls that the Commission of Inquiry concluded that the obligation under the Convention to suppress the use of forced or compulsory labour was violated in national law and in practice in a widespread and systematic manner. In its recommendations, the Commission urged the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure:

- that the relevant legislative texts, in particular the Village Act and the Towns Act, be brought into line with the Convention;

- that in actual practice, no more forced or compulsory labour be imposed by the authorities, in particular the military; and
- that the penalties which may be imposed under section 374 of the Penal Code for the exaction of forced or compulsory labour be strictly enforced, which required thorough investigation, prosecution and adequate punishment of those found guilty.

The Commission of Inquiry emphasized that, besides amending the legislation, concrete action needed to be taken immediately to bring an end to the exaction of forced labour in practice, to be accomplished through public acts of the Executive promulgated and made known to all levels of the military and to the whole population. The Committee of Experts has identified four areas in which “concrete action” should be taken by the Government to fulfil the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry. In particular, the Committee indicated the following measures:

- issuing specific and concrete instructions to the civilian and military authorities;
- ensuring that the prohibition of forced labour is given wide publicity;
- providing for the budgeting of adequate means for the replacement of forced or unpaid labour; and
- ensuring the enforcement of the prohibition of forced labour.

Developments since the Committee's previous observation

There have been a number of discussions and conclusions by ILO bodies, as well as further documentation received by the ILO, which has been considered by the Committee. In particular, the Committee notes the following information:

- The report of the ILO Liaison Officer submitted to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2011, as well as the discussions and conclusions of that Committee (ILC, 100th Session, Provisional Record No. 18, Part Three (A) and Doc. D.5(C)).
- The documents submitted to the Governing Body at its 310th and 312th Sessions (March and November 2011), as well as the discussions and conclusions of the Governing Body during those sessions.
- The communication made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received in August 2011, with appendices.
- The communication made by the Federation of Trade Unions Kawthoolei (FTUK) received in October 2011, with appendices.
- The reports of the Government of Myanmar received on 9 December 2010, 16 February, 4 April, 2 and 27 June, 31 August, 27 September, 14 October and 18 November of 2011.

The Supplementary Understanding of 26 February 2007 – extension of the complaints mechanism

In its earlier comments, the Committee discussed the significance of the Supplementary Understanding (SU) of 26 February 2007 between the Government and the ILO, which supplemented the earlier Understanding of 19 March 2002 concerning the appointment of an ILO Liaison Officer in Myanmar. The Committee noted, in particular, that the SU set out a complaints mechanism, which had as its object “to formally offer the possibility to victims of forced labour to channel their complaints through the services of the Liaison Officer to the competent authorities with a view to seeking remedies available under the relevant legislation and in accordance with the Convention”. The Committee notes that the Supplementary Understanding was extended for the fourth time, on 23 February 2011, for a further 12-month period from 26 February 2011 until 25 February 2012 (ILC, 100th Session, Provisional Record No. 18, Part Three, Doc. D.5.F). The Committee further discusses the information on the functioning of the SU below, in the context of its comments on the other documentation, discussions and conclusions regarding this case.

Discussion and conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

The Committee on the Application of Standards once again discussed this case in a special sitting during the 100th Session of the Conference in June 2011. The Conference Committee took note of certain steps taken by the Government, such as: the further extension of the SU for another year; certain awareness raising activities, including in ethnic minority regions; allocation of funds for the purpose of alleviating the chances of unpaid labour on the part of the Government; and certain improvements in dealing with under-age recruitment by the military, including release of children and disciplinary action taken against military personnel, as well as dismissal of some officers and the imposition of penal sentences in certain cases. However, the Conference Committee regretted to note that there had been no substantive progress achieved towards complying with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and strongly urged the Government to fully implement, without delay, these recommendations, as well as the comments and observations of the Committee of Experts, and in particular, to submit the draft proposals for amendment of the relevant legislative texts to the ILO for comment and advice aimed at ensuring their full conformity with the Convention, and ensure their early adoption into law and application in practice; to take all necessary measures to prevent, suppress and punish the full range of forced labour practices, including the recruitment of children into the armed forces, forced conscription into fire brigade and militia reservist units, portering, construction, maintenance and servicing of military camps, agricultural work and human trafficking for forced labour, that are still persistent and widespread; to strictly ensure that perpetrators of forced labour, whether civil or military, are prosecuted under the Penal Code and that sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are applied; to release immediately complainants and other persons associated with the use of the complaints mechanism who are currently detained, etc. The Conference Committee also called for the strengthening of the capacity available to the ILO Liaison Officer to assist the Government in addressing all of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, and to ensure the effectiveness of the operation of the complaints mechanism.

Discussions in the Governing Body

The Governing Body continued its discussions of this case during its 310th and 312th Sessions in March and November 2011 (GB.310/5, GB.312/INS/6). The Committee notes that, following the discussion in November 2011, the Governing Body welcomed the positive developments in Myanmar since March 2011 but remained concerned that serious problems in the use of forced labour persisted. It called for the continuation of strengthened resolute and proactive action for the full implementation of the recommendations of the 1998 Commission of Inquiry. The Governing Body noted that legislation prohibiting the use of forced labour in all its forms and repealing both the Village Act and the Towns Act of 1907 is before Parliament; it urged the early adoption and coming into force of that legislation. The Governing Body urged that the practice of the imposition of forced labour on prisoners, particularly as porters in conflict areas, cease immediately and again invited the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in the review of the Jail Manual. The Governing Body welcomed the commencement of direct discussion with the Tatmadaw (armed forces) and looked forward to further substantive policy and behavioural change for the elimination of forced labour and ending impunity. It also welcomed the commencement of direct discussion with the Ministries of Finance and Planning and looked forward to confirmation that planning and financial management processes sufficiently provide for the payment of wages in government operational and project activities. While welcoming the release of a number of labour activists, the Governing Body strongly urged the early release of other labour activists remaining in detention. The Governing Body stressed again the critical importance of a comprehensive proactive approach encompassing not only the continuation of awareness-raising activities and the management of the complaints mechanism but also the effective prosecution of forced labour perpetrators, military and civilian, under the Penal Code. While welcoming the expanded awareness-raising activities being undertaken, including the production and distribution of the information brochure in Shan language, the Governing Body encouraged the continuation of this partnership activity and its expansion into other languages. Whilst recalling all of its previous conclusions and recommendations, the Governing Body encouraged the ILO and the Government in their continuing positive collaboration within the framework of the Understanding and its Supplementary Understanding, which should be further extended in February 2012. Finally, in the light of the above, the Governing Body considered it essential to strengthen the capacity of the Liaison Office and reiterated its repeated calls on the Government to issue without delay the visas necessary to that effect.

Communication received from workers' organizations

The Committee notes the comments made by the ITUC in its communication received in August 2011. In these comments, the ITUC refers to several recent reports which contain detailed allegations about the continued use of forced labour, largely for portering, but also for road construction, collection and provision of bamboo and leaves to military camps, etc., which have occurred in the Karen, Shan and Arakan States. Appended to this communication was a report which contained allegations about the forced labour practices by civil and military authorities in North Arakan State/North Rakhine State over the nine months period which followed the national elections in November 2010. The report noted the observers' estimate that 35–40 per cent of forced labourers were children, some as young as ten years old. The report attributed the increase in forced labour to construction and repair of the border fence between Myanmar and Bangladesh, but noted that forced labour was also used for large scale road construction projects, construction of bridges, portering, military camp maintenance, patrol duties, collection of logs and bamboo poles and plantation work. The Committee also notes the comments made by the FTUC in its communication received in October 2011, which contained a report including translated copies of 207 Order documents issued by military and civilian officials to village heads in eastern Myanmar between March 2008 and July 2011. The tasks and services demanded according to these documents involved, inter alia, portering for the military; bridge construction and repair; production and delivery of thatch, bamboo and other materials; attendance at meetings; provision of money and food; forced recruitment into armed ceasefire groups; provision of information on individuals, households and non-state armed groups; etc. The report states that, in almost all cases, demands were uncompensated and backed by implicit or explicit threats of violence or other punishments for non-compliance. Copies of the above communications by the ITUC and the FTUC with annexes were transmitted to the Government, in September and October 2011 respectively, for its comments.

The Government's reports

The Committee notes the Government's reports referred to above, which include replies to the Committee's previous observation. It notes, in particular, the Government's indications concerning its continued cooperation with the various functions of the ILO Liaison Officer, including monitoring and investigating the forced labour situation, discussion on the follow-up to the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference and the operation of the SU complaints mechanism. As regards the amendment of the legislation, the Government indicates that draft legislation prohibiting the use of forced labour in all its forms and repealing both the Village Act and the Towns Act of 1907 has been submitted to Parliament. However, no action has been taken or contemplated to amend section 359 of the Constitution. The Committee notes the Government's ongoing efforts in the field of the awareness-raising and training activities on forced labour, including the joint ILO–Ministry of Labour (MOL) Awareness Raising Workshop held in Chin State in May 2011 and the distribution of booklets on the SU and informative simply worded brochures on forced labour. The Committee also notes the Government's indications concerning measures taken to prevent recruitment of under-aged children and to release newly recruited under-aged soldiers, disciplinary action taken against military personnel, as well as dismissal of some officers and the imposition of penal sentences in certain cases. However, the Committee notes that the Government has not yet supplied its comments on the numerous specific allegations contained in the communications from the ITUC of August 2011 and the FTUK of October 2011 referred to above, as well as in the previous communication by the ITUC received in August 2010. The Committee urges the Government to respond in detail in its next report to the numerous specific allegations of continued imposition of forced or compulsory labour by military and civil authorities, which are documented in the above communications from the ITUC and FTUK, making particular reference to the "Order documents", which provide evidence of the systematic imposition of forced labour throughout the country.

Assessment of the situation

Assessment of the information available on the situation of forced labour in Myanmar in 2011 and in relation to the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and compliance with the Convention by the Government will be discussed in three parts, dealing with: (i) amendment of legislation; (ii) measures to stop the exaction of forced or compulsory labour in practice; and (iii) enforcement of penalties prescribed under the Penal Code and other relevant provisions of law.

(i) Amendment of legislation

The Committee notes from the discussions in the Governing Body in November 2011, as well as from the Government's reports referred to above, that draft legislation prohibiting the use of forced labour in all its forms and repealing both the Village Act and the Towns Act of 1907 has been submitted to Parliament. While noting these positive developments, the Committee trusts that legislation prohibiting the use of forced labour in all its forms and repealing the Village Act and the Towns Act of 1907 will be adopted without delay in order to ensure compliance with the Convention, and that the Government will communicate to the ILO a copy of the new legislation, as soon as it is adopted.

In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to section 359 of the Constitution (Chapter VIII – Citizenship, Fundamental Rights and Duties of Citizens), which excepts from a prohibition of forced labour "duties assigned by the Union in accordance with the law in the interest of the public". The Committee observed that the exception encompasses permissible forms of forced labour that exceed the scope of the specifically defined exceptions in Article 2(2) of the Convention and could be interpreted in such a way as to allow a generalized exaction of forced labour from the population. The Committee notes with regret the Government's repeated statement in its reports that it is impossible to amend the 2008 Constitution, since it has been approved by 92.48 per cent of citizens' votes. The Committee expresses the firm hope that, following the legislative amendment referred to above, the necessary measures will be taken with a view to amending section 359 of Chapter VIII of the Constitution, in order to bring it into conformity with the Convention.

(ii) Measures to stop the exaction of forced or compulsory labour in practice

Information available on current practice

The Committee notes that the communications received from the ITUC and the FTUK referred to above contain well-documented allegations that forced and compulsory labour continued to be exacted from local villagers in 2010–11 by military and civil authorities in some of the country's States. The information in the appendices refers to specific dates, locations and circumstances of the occurrences, as well as to specific civil bodies, military units and individual officials responsible for them. According to these reports, forced labour has been exacted both by military and civil authorities; it has taken a wide variety of forms and involved a variety of tasks.

The Committee notes from the report of the ILO Liaison Officer to the Conference Committee in June 2011 (Doc. D.5.C) that, notwithstanding the awareness raising and training activities, complaints alleging the use of forced labour by both military and civilian authorities continue to be received (paragraphs 12–14). A considerable number of forced labour complaints have been lodged by farmers in Magway Region; they refer to the actions of the military in support of their commercial projects and self-sufficiency policy (paragraph 19). The ILO Liaison Officer also states that the generally positive responses from the Adjutant-General's Office in respect of under-age military recruitment and associated complaints is in contrast to the continuing difficulty in reaching satisfactory conclusions regarding complaints that allege the use of forced labour by the military. The ILO Liaison Officer further states that "non-verifiable evidence continues to suggest that the use of forced labour by the civilian authorities has been reduced, at least in some parts of the country" and suggests to verify this trend in a proposed labour force survey (paragraph 15). An increasing number of complaints under the SU mechanism continue to be received, which may be also seen as a sign of greater awareness among the public of their right under the law to complain and their increased confidence in seeking redress through the use of the complaints mechanism (paragraph 10). However, according to the Governing Body document submitted to its 312th Session in November 2011, “Whilst recognizing the progress made in respect of civilian authorities, the Governing Body and the Conference called on the Government to provide for meaningful consultations between the ILO and the Ministry of Defence and senior army representatives to address both the policy and behavioural practices driving the use of forced labour by the military, including, in particular: the recruitment of children into the armed forces; forced conscription into the armed forces, fire brigade and militia reservist units; portering; construction, maintenance and servicing of military camps; and forced agricultural work” (GB.312/INS/6, paragraph 28). In response to this call, the Working Group for the Elimination of Forced Labour facilitated the first direct meeting between the ILO and the Tatmadaw (armed forces) Committee on ILO Affairs, at which all the issues and practices indicated above were discussed, and further meetings to clarify these issues were scheduled (GB.312/INS/6, paragraph 29). Regarding the under-age recruitment, the Committee notes that, since March 2011, 33 victims of under-age recruitment have been released or discharged from the military in response to complaints launched under the SU; the total number of under-age recruits released or discharged under the SU since February 2007 was 208 (GB.312/INS/6, paragraph 31).

Issuing specific and concrete instructions to the civilian and military authorities

In its earlier comments, the Committee emphasized that specific, effectively conveyed instructions to civil and military authorities, and to the population at large, were required to identify each and every field of forced labour and to explain concretely for each field the means and manner by which the tasks or services involved are to be carried out without recourse to forced labour. The Committee previously noted the Government’s statement in its June 2009 report that “the various levels of administrative authority are well aware of the orders and instructions related to forced labour prohibition issued by the higher levels”. However, the Committee notes once again that no new information has been provided by the Government in its subsequent reports on this important issue. Given the continued dearth of information regarding this issue, the Committee remains unable to ascertain that clear instructions have been effectively conveyed to all civil authorities and military units, and that bona fide effect has been given to such instructions. It therefore reiterates the need for concrete instructions to be issued to all levels of the military and to the whole population, which identify all fields and practices of forced labour and provide concrete guidance as to the means and manner by which tasks or services in each field are to be carried out, and for steps taken to ensure that such instructions are fully publicized and effectively supervised. Considering that measures to issue instructions to civilian and military authorities on the prohibitions of forced and compulsory labour are vital and need to be intensified, the Committee reiterates the firm hope that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on the measures taken in this regard, including translated copies of the instructions which have been issued reconfirming the prohibition of forced labour.

Ensuring that the prohibition of forced labour is given wide publicity

In relation to ensuring that the prohibition of forced labour is given wide publicity, and noting, in particular, that the Governing Body and the Conference called for the continuing expansion of awareness-raising activities at community level, the Committee notes from the report of the ILO Liaison Officer referred to above, from the documents submitted to the Governing Body and to the Conference Committee, as well as from the Government’s reports, that a number of awareness-raising activities concerning the forced labour situation, the legal prohibitions of forced labour and existing avenues of recourse for victims were carried out in 2011. These included, inter alia, a joint ILO–MOL awareness-raising seminar in Chin State for local authority personnel (military, police, judges and civilian authorities); two presentations on the law and practice concerning forced labour to senior police, immigration and Ministry of Home Affairs personnel, and to the Myanmar Women’s Affairs Federation; and six training seminars/workshops (one of them on a regular two-months basis) for journalists, various NGO’s and community-based organizations. The Government’s translation of the information brochure in the Shan language (the most widely used of the national languages after the Myanmar language) was in the process of printing and distribution, and the brochure in the official Myanmar language was widely distributed in every State and region by the Government and the ILO with support from NGO’s and community-based organizations (GB.312/INS/6, paragraphs 22–24). Considering that the awareness-raising activities are of crucial importance in helping to ensure that the prohibition of forced labour is widely known and applied in practice, the Committee expresses the firm hope that such activities will continue and be expanded, both at State and community level.

Noting also from the report of the ILO Liaison Officer to the Conference Committee in June 2011 referred to above that complaints alleging the use of forced labour by both military and civilian authorities continue to be received, the Committee reiterates its view that the complaints mechanism under the SU provides in itself an opportunity for the authorities to demonstrate that continued recourse to forced labour practices is illegal and would be punished as a penal offence, as required by the Convention. The Committee therefore reiterates its hope that the Government will continue to use the SU complaints mechanism as an important modality of awareness raising, and that it will provide, in its next report, the information on the impact the awareness-raising activities are having on the enforcement of criminal penalties against perpetrators of forced labour and on the imposition in actual practice of forced or compulsory labour, particularly by the military.

Making adequate budgetary provisions for the replacement of forced or unpaid labour

In its earlier comments, the Committee observed that budgeting of adequate means for the replacement of forced labour, which tends also to be unpaid, is necessary if recourse to the practice is to end. The Committee recalled in this regard that, in its recommendations, the Commission of Inquiry stated that “action must not be limited to the issue of wage payment; it must ensure that nobody is compelled to work against his or her will. Nonetheless, the budgeting of adequate means to hire free wage labour for the public activities which are today based on forced and unpaid labour is also required.” Recalling also that both the Governing Body and the Conference have consistently called for the Government to facilitate ILO meetings with the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Planning towards ensuring that adequate budgetary allocations are made so that workers may be freely contracted and adequately remunerated, the Committee notes from the Governing Body document submitted to its November 2011 session (GB.312/INS/6) that the first meetings of the ILO with the above Ministries took place in 2011, during which the budget formulation procedure and the basic procedures for pre-allocation planning were explained, and it was clarified that, under the new administration, financial policy was in the process of being reformed in accordance with the new Constitution. It was also recognized that the potential for forced labour arose particularly at municipal level when the demand for infrastructure or repairs and maintenance outstripped budgeted allocations, and it was expected that such matters would be addressed under new governance and accountability structures (paragraphs 35–40). The Committee notes that the Government’s reports referred to above contain no new information on this issue, and that the Government merely repeats, in its report received on 2 June 2011, its previous indication that the budget allotments including the expense of labour costs for all ministries have been allocated to implement their projects. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will provide, in its next report, detailed and precise information on the measures taken to budget adequate means for the replacement of forced or unpaid labour, as well as the information on the impact of the financial policy reform on these issues.

(iii) Ensuring the enforcement of the prohibition of forced labour

In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to section 374 of the Penal Code, which provides for the punishment, by a term of imprisonment of up to one year, of anyone who unlawfully compels any person to labour against his or her will. It recalls that, following the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, both the Governing Body and the Conference have sought to ensure that perpetrators of forced labour, whether civil or military, are prosecuted under the Penal Code and that sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are applied. The Committee notes from the Governing Body document submitted to its 312th Session in November 2011 (GB.312/INS/6) that, in respect of military personnel deemed responsible for the recruitment of minors, action under the military disciplinary code is now routinely taken, punishments ranging from a formal reprimand to a monetary penalty, the loss of service entitlements for pension and promotion, discharge and imprisonment (paragraph 42). The Government indicates in its reports received on 2 June and 31 August 2011 that, in the under-age recruitment cases, action was taken against 20 military officials and 110 other ranks for breaching the rules, five officials and five other ranks were dismissed and imprisoned. However, in respect of cases concerning forced labour exacted by the military, the ILO has received no information concerning the prosecution of any perpetrator under the abovementioned provision of the Penal Code. As regards the exaction of forced labour by civilian authorities, the Committee previously expressed concern that the only prosecution of perpetrators under the Penal Code in response to complaints submitted had been reported in respect of a case in 2007 already noted by the Committee in its earlier comments. The ILO has been advised that another prosecution has been initiated under the Penal Code in respect of a civilian accused of being a party to the exaction of forced labour, though no information has yet been received as to the outcome of this prosecution (GB.312/INS/6, paragraph 42).

The Committee regrets to note once again that no new information has been provided by the Government in its 2011 reports about any prosecutions against perpetrators of forced labour being pursued under section 374 of the Penal Code. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take measures to ensure that penalties imposed by law for the illegal exaction of forced or compulsory labour are adequate and strictly enforced, as required by Article 25 of the Convention, and expresses the firm hope that appropriate measures will be taken in the near future in order to ensure that perpetrators of the exaction of forced labour are prosecuted and punished with penal sanctions under section 374 of the Penal Code. The Committee asks the Government to provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

Concluding remarks

The Committee fully endorses the conclusions concerning Myanmar made by the Conference Committee and the Governing Body, as well as the general evaluation of the forced labour situation by the ILO Liaison Officer. The Committee welcomes the positive developments, such as submission to Parliament of the draft legislation repealing the Towns Act and the Village Act of 1907; the expanded awareness-raising activities; the improvements in dealing with under-age recruitment by the military, including release of children and imposition of disciplinary and penal sanctions on military personnel; cooperation in the functioning of the SU complaints mechanism and its further extension for another year. However, the Committee observes that, in spite of the efforts made towards the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, the Government has not yet fully implemented these recommendations. Besides the steps taken towards the amendment of the legislation, the Government still has to ensure that, in actual practice, forced labour is no longer imposed by the authorities, in particular by the military; and it still has to ensure that penalties for the exaction of forced labour under the Penal Code are strictly enforced against civil and military authorities. While noting the positive developments referred to above, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts towards the full implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, by implementing the concrete practical requests addressed by the Committee to the Government. It expresses the firm hope that all the necessary measures will be taken without delay to achieve full compliance with the Convention, both in law and in practice, so as to ensure that all use of forced or compulsory labour in Myanmar is completely eliminated.

Nigeria

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views. In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to the Public Order Act, Cap. 382, Laws of the Federation of Nigeria, 1990, which contains provisions imposing certain restrictions on the organization of public assemblies, meetings and processions (sections 1–4), offences being punishable with imprisonment (sections 3 and 4(5)), which involves compulsory prison labour. The Committee recalled that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits the use of forced or compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system.

The Committee also refers in this connection to paragraphs 154 and 162 of its General Survey of 2007 on the eradication of forced labour, where it observed that the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour of persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence. But sanctions involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention where they enforce a prohibition of the peaceful expression of views or of opposition to the established political, social or economic system. Since opinions and views opposed to the established system are often expressed at various kinds of meetings and assemblies, restrictions affecting the organization of such meetings and assemblies may give rise to similar problems of the application of the Convention, if such restrictions are enforceable with penalties involving compulsory labour.

While noting the Government's statement that the Public Order Act, Cap. 382, does not impose restrictions on the organization of public assemblies by workers for trade union activities and there is therefore no conviction for violation, the Committee observes, however, that the above Act still imposes restrictions on the freedom of expression enforceable with sanctions involving compulsory labour, which is incompatible with the Convention.

The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken in order to bring the provisions of the Public Order Act into conformity with the Convention. While having noted the Government's indication in its previous report that there was no record of the violation of the provisions of the Act, the Committee reiterates its hope that, pending the amendment, the Government will continue to provide information on its application in practice, including information on convictions for violation of its provisions and on penalties imposed.

In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to the Nigerian Press Council (Amendment) Act, 2002, which imposes certain restrictions on journalists' activities enforceable with penalties of imprisonment (section 19(1) and (5)(a)), which involves compulsory prison labour. While having noted the Government's repeated indication in its reports that no conviction has been made under the Act, and referring also to the explanations in point 1 of this observation, the Committee reiterates its hope that measures will be taken to repeal or amend these provisions in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention and the indicated practice. Pending the amendment, the Government is requested to continue to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice, indicating, in particular, any convictions under the above Act and penalties imposed.

Article 1(c) and (d). Punishment for breaches of labour discipline and for participation in strikes. In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to the following provisions enforceable with sanctions of imprisonment (which involves compulsory prison labour):

- section 81(1)(b) and (c) of the Labour Decree, 1974, under which a court may direct fulfilment of a contract of employment and posting of security for the due performance of so much of the contract as remains unperformed, and a person failing to comply with such direction may be committed to prison;
- section 117(b), (c) and (e) of the Merchant Shipping Act, under which seafarers are liable to imprisonment for breaches of labour discipline even in the absence of a danger to the safety of the ship or of persons;
- section 17(2)(a) of the Trade Disputes Act, Cap. 432, of 1990, under which participation in strikes may be punished with imprisonment.

The Committee previously noted the Government's indications that all these provisions were under consideration by the National Labour Advisory Council. It also noted the Government's indication in its 2005 report that the review of the labour laws had been completed and submitted to the federal Government for further action. In its latest report, the Government states that the provisions referred to above have been addressed in the Collective Labour Relations Bill. The Committee expresses the firm hope that all of the legislative provisions referred to above will soon be amended, so as to bring legislation into conformity with the Convention, and that the Government will indicate, in its next report, the progress achieved in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Pakistan

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes a communication dated 21 November 2011, received from the Pakistan Workers Confederation (PWC), which contains observations on the application of the Convention by Pakistan. It notes that this communication was sent to the Government in December 2011 for any comments it might wish to make on the matters raised therein. The Committee hopes that the Government's comments will be supplied in its next report, so as to enable the Committee to examine them at its next session.

The Committee also notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention

A. Debt bondage

Comments from workers' organizations. In its comments made for a number of years, the Committee has noted the difficulties in the implementation of the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act (BLSA), 1992. The Committee referred in this connection to the comments made by the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU), the All Pakistan Trade Union Federation (APTUF) and the International Trade Unions Confederation (ITUC). In its latest communication dated 29 August 2008, the ITUC observed that, some 15 years after the adoption of the BLSA and six years after the approval of the National Action Plan (2001), bonded and forced labour was still commonly used in many industries across Pakistan. The ITUC referred in this connection to the rapid assessments commissioned by the Ministry of Labour in collaboration with the ILO, which were carried out in nine sectors (brick kilns, agriculture, carpet industry, mining, glass bangle making, tanneries, construction, domestic work and begging). The ITUC considered that the BLSA had not been properly applied and those who used bonded labour had been able to do it with impunity. The Pakistan Institute for Labour Education and Research (PILER) had only been able to document the release of some 8,530 people between 1990 and 2005; of these, 5,166 were released through judicial intervention, in combination with non-governmental organizations and local state officials, only 563 were released solely through state intervention. According to the ITUC views, the vigilance committees set up under the BLSA had not performed their functions of identifying and releasing bonded labourers and had not been restructured as envisaged in the National Action Plan. The lack of adequate labour inspection machinery was another key reason why bonded labourers were not being identified and released.

The Committee further notes that, in the communication received from the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF) on 30 July 2010, the PWF observes that no effective measures have been taken by the Government to eliminate bonded labour and rehabilitate workers.

Implementation of National Policy and Plan of Action for the Abolition of Bonded Labour. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted a number of initiatives undertaken by the Government within the framework of its 2001 National Policy and Plan of Action for the Abolition of Bonded Labour and Rehabilitation of Freed Bonded Labourers, including, inter alia, the organization of training workshops for key district government officials, and other concerned stakeholders, to enhance their capacity and enable them to draw up district-level plans to identify bonded labourers and activate the district vigilance committees; the incorporation of the issue of bonded labour into the syllabi of judicial, police and civil service academies, in order to help sensitize judicial, law enforcement and civil service officials to the problem; and conducting of capacity-building seminars. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that, under the BLSA, inspection functions in the area of bonded labour had been assigned to the regular labour inspectorate, as well as to local government heads/officials and police departments. In its latest report, the Government refers to a number of studies undertaken with the technical assistance of the ILO with regard to bonded labour in various sectors in Pakistan.

While having noted the Government's initiatives to combat bonded labour, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will pursue its efforts with vigour in order to ensure the effective implementation of the 2001 National Policy and Plan of Action and will provide detailed information on progress made and practical results achieved, including copies of relevant reports on all of the activities, projects, institutions and mandates referred to in the action plan. The Committee asks the Government to provide, in particular, information on the activities of the National Committee for the Abolition of Bonded Labour and Rehabilitation of Bonded Labourers which had to be established to coordinate the implementation of the plan and to review the implementation of the BLSA, including copies of monitoring/evaluation reports concerning the functioning of the vigilance committees. Please also provide information on the activities of the fund established under the BLSA rules, to which the Government referred in its 2005 report. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to assess and address the causes of debt bondage.

Debt bondage. Data-gathering measures to ascertain the current nature and scope of the problem. The Committee previously noted a report entitled "Rapid assessment studies of bonded labour in different sectors in Pakistan", which contained findings and conclusions from a series of rapid assessment studies conducted at the initiative of the Ministry of Labour and the ILO by teams of social scientists and researchers under the auspices of the Bonded Labour Research Forum (BLRF), with a view to exploring the existence and nature of bonded labour in ten sectors (agriculture, construction, carpet weaving, brick making, marine fisheries, mining, glass bangles, tanneries, domestic work, and begging). The project represented the first phase of a larger research programme and was intended to lay the groundwork for detailed sector studies and a national survey to determine the incidence of bonded labour across the country, as foreseen in the Government's National Plan of Action. However, no such national survey has yet been carried out and the Government refers in this connection to the existing difficulties in the identification of bonded labourers.

While noting this indication, the Committee points out once again that accurate data are a vital step in both the development of the most effective systems to combat bonded labour and providing a true base for the assessment of effectiveness of those systems. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the Government, as a follow-up to the preliminary part of the research programme noted above, and in accordance with the mandate of its 2001 National Policy and Plan of Action, will undertake a statistical survey on bonded labour throughout the country, using a valid methodology in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations and with human rights organizations and institutions, and that it will supply information on the progress achieved in this connection.

B. Trafficking in persons

The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance, 2002 (PCHTO). It also noted that, in accordance with the report of the International Organisation for Migration (IOM) entitled "Data and research on human trafficking: A global survey", Pakistan continued to be a major destination country for trafficked women, as well as a major transit country of persons trafficked from Bangladesh to Middle Eastern countries, where women are subject to sexual exploitation. The report emphasized that there was an urgent need to carry out comprehensive national baseline surveys with the aim of developing a South Asian database on trafficking in persons.

The Committee reiterates its hope that the Government will undertake a national baseline survey on trafficking in persons, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations, as well as other organizations and institutions concerned, and that it will supply information on the progress achieved in this connection. Please also provide information on the application in practice of the Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance (2002) referred to above, as well as, more generally, on the policies and measures aiming at the effective elimination of trafficking in persons, including copies of the relevant policy documents and available statistics.

C. Restrictions on voluntary termination of employment

The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that an amendment to the Essential Services (Maintenance) Act, 1952, under which government employees who unilaterally terminate their employment without consent of the employer are subject to a term of imprisonment, was to be considered by the tripartite commission on the consolidation, simplification and rationalization of labour laws. The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will be taken in order to bring the federal and provincial essential services Acts into conformity with the Convention and that the Government will report on the progress achieved in this regard.

Article 25. Penalties for the illegal exaction of forced or compulsory labour

The Committee previously noted the Government's indications concerning the number of the trafficking-related complaints registered under the Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance (2002), the number of investigations and the number of convictions obtained during the period 2007–09. It also noted the Government's indication concerning the penalties imposed on perpetrators.

The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide updated information on the enforcement of the 2002 Ordinance, communicating the numbers of trafficking-related complaints registered, court proceedings initiated, convictions obtained and the penalties imposed, including sample copies of the relevant court decisions, indicating the minimum penalties imposed. Recalling also that Article 25 of the Convention provides that the illegal exaction of forced or compulsory labour shall be punishable by penalties that are really adequate and strictly enforced, the Committee once again requests information on any legal actions taken against employers of bonded labourers under the BLSA, including copies of any court decisions in order to demonstrate the effectiveness of its provisions and to indicate the penalties imposed.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(c) and (d) of the Convention. Work imposed as a means of labour discipline and as a punishment for having participated in strikes. For a number of years, the Committee has been commenting on certain provisions of the Pakistan Essential Services (Maintenance) Act, 1952, and corresponding provincial Acts, under which employees are prohibited from leaving their employment without the consent of the employer or from striking, subject to penalties of imprisonment that may involve compulsory labour. The Committee previously noted the comments made under the Convention by the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU), in which it stated that the provisions of the Essential Services Act apply, inter alia, to workers employed in various public utilities such as WAPDA, Railway, Telecommunication, Karachi Port Trust, Sui Gas, etc., and these workers cannot resign from their service and cannot go on strike. In its comments supplied in 2005, the APFTU reiterated its earlier statement that the Essential Services (Maintenance) Act continues to restrict the right to strike even in non-essential services. This view has been shared by the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF) in its communication received in 2008.

The Committee previously noted the Government's repeated statement in its reports that the application of the 1952 Act has been made very restrictive and it is extended only in cases of extreme nature, when peaceful and uninterrupted supply of goods and services to the general public appears to be disturbed. While having noted this indication, the Committee points out once again that all the workers concerned – whether in any employment under the federal and provincial governments and local authorities or in public utilities, including essential services – must remain free to terminate their employment by reasonable notice; otherwise a contractual relationship based on the will of the parties may be changed into service by compulsion of law, which is incompatible with both the present Convention and the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), likewise ratified by Pakistan. The Committee also recalls that, in its comments addressed to the Government under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), it has observed that no penal sanction should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike, and therefore penalties of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account.

Referring to the explanations provided in paragraph 189 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, the Committee trusts that the Pakistan Essential Services Act and corresponding provincial Acts will be either repealed or amended in the near future, so as to ensure that, in conformity with the Convention, no penal sanction involving compulsory labour can be imposed against workers for peaceful participation in a strike, and that the Government will report the progress achieved in this regard.

Penal sanctions applicable to seafarers for various breaches of labour discipline. For many years, the Committee has been referring to the provisions of the legislation concerning merchant shipping (Merchant Shipping Act, 1923, which was repealed and replaced by the Pakistan Merchant Shipping Ordinance, 2001 (No. LII of 2001)), under which penalties involving compulsory labour may be imposed in relation to various breaches of labour discipline by seafarers, and seafarers may be forcibly returned on board ship to perform their duties. It noted, in particular, that under sections 204, 206, 207 and 208 of the Pakistan Merchant Shipping Ordinance, 2001, penalties of imprisonment, which may involve compulsory labour by virtue, inter alia, of section 3(26) of the General Clauses Act, 1897, may be imposed in respect of various breaches of labour discipline, such as absence without leave, wilful disobedience, or combining with the crew in "neglect" of duty, and seafarers may be forcibly conveyed on board ship.

While noting the Government's statement in the report that penalties of imprisonment may only be awarded by a competent court of law after a trial, the Committee refers to the explanations in paragraph 144 of its 2007 General Survey, where it pointed out that, in the great majority of cases, labour imposed on persons as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law will have no relevance to the application of the Convention (such as in the cases of the exaction of labour from common offenders convicted, for example, of robbery, kidnapping, acts of violence or various acts or omissions that have endangered the life or health of others). But if a person has to perform compulsory prison labour because that person holds or has expressed particular political views, has committed a breach of labour discipline or has participated in a strike, the situation is covered by the Convention, which prohibits the use “of any form” of forced or compulsory labour as a means of coercion, education or punishment for violation of labour discipline.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that, after several decades of comments addressed to the Government on this point, the necessary measures will at last be taken to repeal or amend these provisions of the 2001 Merchant Shipping Ordinance which prescribe penalties of imprisonment for breaches of labour discipline (e.g. by limiting their scope to offences committed in circumstances endangering the safety of the ship or the life or health of persons) and to repeal the provisions under which seafarers may be forcibly returned on board ship to perform their duties. The Committee asks the Government to provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 1(a). Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views. In comments made for many years, the Committee has referred to certain provisions in the Security of Pakistan Act, 1952 (sections 10–13), the Political Parties Act, 1962 (sections 2 and 7) and the West Pakistan Press and Publications Ordinance, 1963, which gave the authorities wide discretionary powers to prohibit the publication of views and to order the dissolution of associations, subject to penalties of imprisonment which may involve compulsory labour.

The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Press, Newspapers, News Agencies and Books Registration Ordinance, 2002, which had repealed the West Pakistan Press and Publications Ordinance, 1963. It noted, in particular, the provisions of sections 5 and 28 of the 2002 Ordinance, under which a person who edits, prints, or publishes a newspaper in contravention of the Ordinance (for instance, without having made a declaration or without having a declaration authenticated by the District Coordination Officer) is liable to penalties of imprisonment (which may involve compulsory labour) for a term of up to six months.

The Committee hopes that the necessary measures will be taken with a view to bringing these provisions of the Press, Newspapers, News Agencies and Books Registration Ordinance, 2002, into conformity with Article 1(a) of the Convention, so that no penalty of imprisonment involving compulsory labour can be imposed as a punishment for expressing political views. Pending the adoption of such measures, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application of sections 5 and 28 in practice, indicating the penalties imposed and supplying sample copies of the relevant court decisions. Please also communicate a copy of any rules issued under section 44 of the 2002 Ordinance.

As regards the Security of Pakistan Act, 1952, and the Political Parties Act, 1962, referred to above, the Committee previously noted that the Government’s Law and Justice Commission, in response to a Supreme Court ruling, had drafted legislative proposals for certain amendments to be made to the Security of Pakistan Act, 1952, and that proposals to amend other laws, including the Political Parties Act, 1962, were under consideration. Noting that the Government’s latest report contains no new information on this subject, the Committee reiterates its hope that the Committee’s concerns will be taken into account by the Law and Justice Commission and that the necessary measures will soon be taken to bring the abovementioned provisions of the Security of Pakistan Act, 1952, and the Political Parties Act, 1962, into conformity with the Convention. Pending the adoption of such measures, the Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of these provisions, indicating the number of convictions and supplying sample copies of the relevant court decisions.

Article 1(e). Penalties involving compulsory labour as a means of religious discrimination. In its earlier comments, the Committee referred to sections 298B(1) and (2) and 298C of the Penal Code, inserted by the Anti-Islamic Activities of Quadiani Group, Lahori Group and Ahmadis (Prohibition and Punishment) Ordinance, No. XX of 1984, under which any person of these groups who uses Islamic epithets, nomenclature and titles is punishable with penalties of imprisonment (which may involve compulsory labour) for a term of up to three years. The Committee previously noted the Government’s repeated statement in its reports that religious discrimination does not exist and is forbidden under the Constitution, which guarantees equal citizenship and fundamental rights to minorities living in the country. The Government also stated that the Penal Code imposes equal obligations on all citizens, whatever their religion, to respect the religious sentiments of others, and an act that impinges upon the religious sentiments of other citizens is punishable under the Penal Code. The Government further indicated that religious rituals referred to in Ordinance No. XX are prohibited only if exercised in public, whereas if they are performed in private without causing provocation to others, they do not fall under the prohibition.

While noting these indications, the Committee points out once again, referring to the explanations provided in paragraphs 154 and 190 of its 2007 General Survey, that the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour of persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence. But where punishment involving compulsory labour is aimed at the peaceful expression of religious views, or where such punishment (for whatever offence) is meted out more severely, or even exclusively, to certain groups defined in social or religious terms, this falls within the scope of the Convention. The Committee reiterates the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken in relation to sections 298B and 298C of the Penal Code, so as to ensure the observance of the Convention. Pending the adoption of such measures, the Committee again requests the Government to provide, in its next report, information on the application of these provisions in practice, including sample copies of the court decisions and indicating the penalties imposed.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Papua New Guinea

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1976)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee notes a communication dated 31 August 2011, received from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), which contains allegations concerning cases of trafficking in persons for sexual and labour exploitation. It notes that this communication was sent to the Government, on 13 September 2011, for such comments as it may wish to make on the matters raised therein. According to the allegations, there are cases where women and girls, especially from the tribal areas, are forced into prostitution or domestic servitude, and men are forced into labour in logging camps and mines. The ITUC alleges that there have been no investigations, prosecutions or convictions for trafficking in persons.

The Committee refers in this connection to its observation addressed to the Government under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), in which it noted the report of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees on trafficking in persons in Papua New Guinea (“Trafficking Report”), which states that trafficking is a significant problem in the country. According to the report, women and children are trafficked within the country for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation and domestic servitude, and women and children from China, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand are trafficked to Papua New Guinea for forced prostitution. In this observation, the Committee expressed its deep concern that comprehensive legislation prohibiting all forms of trafficking has yet to be adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures, in the near future, in order to prevent, suppress and punish trafficking in persons. In particular, the Committee hopes that measures will be taken with a view to adopting comprehensive anti-trafficking legislation and that perpetrators of human trafficking will be prosecuted and punished with adequate penal sanctions, as required by Article 25 of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1976)

Article 1(c) and (d) of the Convention. Penal sanctions applicable to seafarers for various breaches of labour discipline. Since many years, the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the Seamen (Foreign) Act, 1952, under which a seafarer belonging to a foreign ship who deserts or commits certain other disciplinary offences is liable to imprisonment (which involves an obligation to perform labour) (section 2(1), (3), (4) and (5)). The Committee has been also referring to section 1 of the same Act and section 161 of the revised Merchant Shipping Act (Chapter 242) (consolidated to No. 67 of 1996), which stipulate that foreign seafarers deserting their ship may be forcibly returned on board ship to perform their duties.

Referring to the explanations contained in paragraph 179 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, the Committee pointed out that sanctions of imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour) would only be compatible with the Convention where they are clearly limited to acts endangering the safety of the ship or the life or health of persons; but provisions imposing such sanctions which relate more generally to breaches of labour discipline (such as desertion, absence without leave or disobedience), often supplemented by provisions under which seafarers may be forcibly returned on board ship, are incompatible with the Convention.

The Committee has noted the Government's repeated indication in its reports that requests concerning the Committee's comments had been communicated to the Department of Transport, which is responsible for administering and applying the above legislation, with a view to amending these provisions. The Government indicates in its latest report that, according to the information received from the Department of Transport, update and reviewing of all transportation laws and regulations has commenced, and the provisions of the Convention will be taken into account in the course of the revision of the above legislation. The Government has renewed its commitment to review national provisions in order to ensure compliance with the Convention.

While noting this information, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the above provisions of the Seamen (Foreign) Act and the Merchant Shipping Act will soon be brought into conformity with the Convention and that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

Senegal

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1961)

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Imposition of sentences of imprisonment involving an obligation to work for breaches of labour discipline. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized the need to amend sections 624, 643 and 645 of the Merchant Shipping Code (Act No. 2002-22 of 16 August 2002). Under the terms of these provisions, unapproved absence from the vessel, verbal insults, gestures or threats towards a superior and a formal refusal to obey a service order are punishable by imprisonment, which involves compulsory prison labour in accordance with section 692 of the Code of Penal Procedure and section 32 of Decree No. 2001-362 of 4 May 2001 concerning the implementation and organization of penal sanctions. In view of the fact that the scope of these provisions of the Merchant Shipping Code is not confined to cases in which the breach of discipline would endanger the ship or the persons on board, the Committee has considered these provisions to be contrary to the Convention, which prohibits recourse to forced labour, including in the form of compulsory prison labour, as a means of labour discipline.

In this respect, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the merchant navy had itself considered excessive the penalties provided for and the violations penalized and that, for this reason, in practice penal sanctions were always disregarded in cases of breaches of discipline. In its latest report, the Government indicates that the question of the amendment of sections 642, 643 and 654 is still under examination and that measures will be taken to ensure that the legislation reflects established practice and is in conformity with the Convention.

The Committee recalls that it has been commenting on this matter for over 40 years. It also noted with regret that the Government did not take the opportunity of the adoption of the new Merchant Shipping Code in 2002 to amend the provisions on which it had been commenting. In these circumstances, the Committee trusts that the Government will be able to indicate in its next report the amendment of sections 624, 643 and 645 of the new Merchant Shipping Code so as to ensure that breaches of labour which do not endanger the ship or the persons on board cannot be punished with prison sentences.

Article 1(d). Imposition of prison sentences involving an obligation to work as punishment for participation in strikes. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to section L.276 of the Labour Code, which allows the administrative authority to requisition workers from private enterprises and public services and establishments who are engaged in jobs that are essential for the security of persons and property, the maintenance of public order, the continuity of public services and the satisfaction of the essential needs of the nation. Any worker who does not comply with the requisition order is liable to a fine and a sentence of imprisonment ranging from three months to one year, or only one of these two penalties (section L.279(m)). The Committee also noted that the Decree implementing section L.276 which was to establish the list of jobs concerned was in the process of being adopted and that, in the meantime, Decree No. 72-017 of 11 March 1972, establishing the list of posts, jobs and functions of which the occupants may be requisitioned which continued to apply. It also noted that, in its comments in 2006, the National Confederation of Workers of Senegal (CNTS) indicated that the requisitioning of certain workers sometimes amounted to abuse of authority intended to break strikes called by workers, and that certain employers in the private sector used this process to force workers to remain in their posts when this was not justified by necessity.

In this context, the Committee referred to the comments that it has been making concerning the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), in which it has recalled that the power to requisition workers in the event of a strike must be limited to the workers required to maintain essential services in the strict sense of the term. In so far as the power to requisition workers may be exercised in respect of workers whose post, job or functions do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term and that workers who do not comply with a requisition order are liable to imprisonment involving the obligation to work (section L.279(m)) of the Labour Code), the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Decree implementing section L.276 of the Labour Code, which is in the process of being adopted, is in conformity with the Convention.

In its latest report, the Government confirms that the necessary measures will be adopted for this purpose. It adds that a study has recently been undertaken to identify cases of non-conformity of the national legislation with the ILO's fundamental Conventions ratified by Senegal, and the solutions which could be adopted in the context of the reform of the Labour Code and certain of its implementing texts. The Government emphasizes that this reform will take time, but that it is committed to comply with its international obligations. The Committee takes due note of this commitment and hopes that all measures will be taken to ensure that the new decree implementing section L.276 of the Labour Code will be adopted in the very near future and that it will limit the list of posts, jobs or functions in which workers may be subject to a requisition order to the posts, jobs or functions that are strictly necessary to ensure the operation of essential services in the strict sense of the term. Furthermore, as the Committee emphasized in paragraph 189 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, in all cases and regardless of the legality of the strike action in question, any sanctions imposed should not be disproportionate to the seriousness of the violations committed, and the authorities should refrain from applying sentences of imprisonment against those who peacefully organize or participate in a strike.

Finally, the Committee recalls that it emphasized the need to amend the last paragraph of section L.276 of the Labour Code, under the terms of which the exercise of the right to strike may not be accompanied by the occupation of the workplace or its immediate surroundings, under penalty of the sanctions set out in sections L.275 and L.279, with the latter envisaging a sentence of imprisonment ranging from three months to one year and a fine, or one of these penalties. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to indicate in its next report that sections L.276, last paragraph, and L.279 of the Labour Code have been amended so as to ensure that striking workers who peacefully occupy the workplace or its immediate surroundings are not liable to prison sentences involving the obligation to work.

Sierra Leone

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Compulsory agricultural work. Over many years, the Committee has been referring to section 8(h) of the Chiefdom Councils Act (Cap. 61), under which compulsory cultivation may be imposed on "natives". On numerous occasions, it requested the Government to repeal or amend this provision. The Committee also noted the Government's statement that the abovementioned section is not in conformity with article 9 of the Constitution and would be held unenforceable. The Committee takes due note of the Government's repeated indication that section 8(h) is not applicable in practice and that information on any amendment of this section would be communicated to the ILO in the near future. As the Government has repeatedly indicated since 1964 that this legislation would be amended, the Committee reiterates firm hope that the necessary measures will at last be taken in order to bring section 8(h) of the Chiefdom Councils Act into conformity with the Convention and the indicated practice. It requests the Government to provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Singapore

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1965)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Legislation concerning destitute persons. For many years the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the Destitute Persons Act, 1989, under which destitute persons may be required, subject to penal sanctions, to reside in a welfare home (sections 3 and 16) and to engage in any suitable work for which the medical officer of the home certifies them to be capable, either with a view to fitting them for employment outside the welfare home or with a view to contributing to their maintenance in the welfare home (section 13).

The Committee has pointed out that the imposition of labour under the Destitute Persons Act, 1989, comes under the definition of “forced or compulsory labour” in Article 2(1) of the Convention, and that the Convention makes no exception for labour imposed “in the context of rehabilitation” of destitute persons. While noting the Government’s repeated indications in its reports that, in practice, no coercion is involved, since residents in the welfare home perform work with their consent and receive payment for the work done, the Committee asked the Government to bring the legislative provisions into conformity with the Convention, so as to ensure compliance both in law and in practice.

The Committee previously noted the Government’s intention expressed in its 2006 report to amend the Act in order to better articulate the voluntary nature of the activity. However, the Committee notes that the Government’s latest report contains no information on any developments of this kind. The Committee trusts that section 13 of the Destitute Persons Act will at last be amended so as to provide clearly that any work in a welfare home should be carried out voluntarily, thus bringing the abovementioned legislation into conformity with the Convention and the indicated practice, and that the Government will soon be in a position to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

Swaziland

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1978)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Legislation concerning compulsory public works or services. The Committee previously noted that the Swazi Administration Order No. 6 of 1998 (which provided for the duty of Swazis to obey orders requiring participation in compulsory works, such as e.g. compulsory cultivation, anti-soil erosion works and the making, maintenance and protection of roads, enforceable with severe penalties for non-compliance), had been declared null and void by the High Court of Swaziland (Case No. 2823/2000). The Committee asked the Government to provide information on the practical consequences of this decision.

The Government indicates in its report that the above Order is null and void, and there have been no reported cases of forced labour. It also states that Swazi citizens and the international community are encouraged to report the incidents of forced labour to the courts.

The Committee notes, however, that in a communication dated 30 August 2011 received from the Swaziland Federation of Trade Unions (SFTU), the SFTU alleges that the High Court’s nullification of the Order has never assisted in any manner in halting forced labour practices, which are rooted in the well established and institutionalized customary law through cultural activities which are largely unregulated. According to the allegations, the customary practice of “Kuhlehla” (rendering services to the local Chief or King) is still practiced and enforced with punitive measures for refusal to attend.

The Committee notes that this communication was sent to the Government, on 26 September 2011, for such comments as it may wish to make on the matters raised therein. The Committee hopes that the Government will supply such comments in its next report, as well as the information on measures taken or envisaged to ensure the observance of the Convention.

Syrian Arab Republic

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Freedom of persons in the service of the State to leave their employment. For many years, the Committee has been referring to section 364 of the Penal Code (as amended by Legislative Decree No. 46 of 23 July 1974), under which a term of imprisonment from three to five years may be imposed for leaving or interrupting work as a member of the staff of any public administration, establishment or body, or any authority of the public or mixed sector before resignation has been formally accepted by the competent authority; or evading obligations to serve the same authorities, whether the obligation derives from a mission, a scholarship or a study leave.

The Committee previously noted the Government’s repeated indication that, in practice, a worker’s right to submit a request for resignation at any time is fully respected, and the competent authority is bound to accept the resignation, provided the continuity of the service is ensured. The Government also stated in its earlier reports that the Committee’s comments had been taken into account in the course of elaboration of the amendment to the Penal Code, in order to ensure conformity with the Convention.

The Government indicates in its latest report that a competent specialized committee is examining the amendments to the above provisions of the Penal Code. Taking into account the existing practice, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to adopt, without delay, the amendments to the Penal Code and that legislation will thereby be brought into conformity with the Convention. It asks the Government to supply a copy of the amendments, as soon as they are adopted.

Legislation on vagrancy. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to section 597 of the Penal Code, which provides for the punishment of any person who is reduced to seeking public assistance or charity as a result of idleness, drunkenness or gambling. The Committee referred in this connection to the explanations in paragraph 88 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, where it pointed out that provisions concerning vagrancy and similar offences, if defined in an unduly extensive manner, are liable to become a means of compulsion to work.

The Committee previously noted the Government's indication in its earlier report that the proposed amendments to the Penal Code would accommodate the Committee's request. Since the Government's latest report contains no information on this point, the Committee trusts that the necessary measures will soon be taken, in the context of the revision of the Penal Code, with a view to clearly excluding from the legislation any possibility of compulsion to work.

Article 2(2)(d). Work or services exacted in cases of emergency. In its earlier comments, the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of Decree No. 133 of 1952, under which compulsory labour could be exacted from the population in circumstances that go beyond the exception authorized by the Convention. The Committee notes that Legislative Decree No. 15 of 11 May 1971 concerning local administration, supplied by the Government with its report, has repealed the above mentioned Decree No. 133 of 1952. The Committee also notes that, under Legislative Decree No. 15 of 11 May 1971, certain kinds of work or services (national defence work, social services, road work) may be exacted only in the event of war, emergencies or natural disasters (section 23-Z).

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1958)

Article 1(a), (c) and (d) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views, for breaches of labour discipline and for participation in strikes. Over a number of years, the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the Economic Penal Code, the Penal Code, the Agricultural Labour Code and the Press Act, under which prison sentences involving compulsory labour can be imposed as a means of political coercion or as a punishment for expressing views opposed to the established political system, and as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline and for the participation in strikes. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that it endeavours to resolve the problems identified in the Committee's comments by way of the adoption of the new Penal Code, which was going through various legal channels and phases of adoption.

The Committee expresses its deep concern regarding the current human rights situation in the country and recalls that restrictions on fundamental rights and liberties may have a bearing on the application of the Convention, if such measures are enforced by sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee notes, in this regard, the statement of the President of the UN Security Council of 3 August 2011 (6598th Meeting), in which the Security Council expressed its grave concern at the deteriorating situation in the Syrian Arab Republic, condemned the widespread violations of human rights and the use of force against the peaceful protesters, and stressed that the only solution to the crisis was through a political process that addressed the legitimate concerns of the population and allowed the exercise of the freedoms of expression and assembly.

The Committee recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits the use of forced or compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, and that sanctions involving compulsory labour are incompatible with the Convention if they enforce a prohibition of the peaceful expression of views that are critical of Government policy and the established political system, whether the prohibition is imposed by law or by an administrative decision (see General Survey of 2007 on the eradication of forced labour, paragraph 154). The Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that persons who express views or an opposition to the established political, social or economic system, benefit from the protection accorded by the Convention and that in any case penal sanctions involving compulsory labour could not be imposed on them. In this connection the Committee expresses the firm hope that, a new Penal Code will be adopted without delay and that persons convicted for activities coming under the purview of the Convention, and, in particular, persons convicted under the provisions referred to of the Economic Penal Code, the Penal Code, the Agricultural Labour Code and the Press Act, would no longer be under an obligation to perform labour, and the legislation and practice will be brought into conformity with the Convention.

Thailand

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the observations submitted on 30 December 2010 by the National Congress of Thai Labour (NCTL) on the application of the Convention by Thailand. In its comments, the NCTL observes that, despite the Government's significant effort in combating trafficking in persons, statistics have shown that the number of arrests and prosecutions related to trafficking is still low if compared to the number of offenders. The NCTL also expresses concern about the lack of participation of employers' and workers' organizations in the implementation of the Convention in the country. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide information on these observations with its next report.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. Prevention and protection measures, law enforcement. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the new Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act B.E. 2551 (2008), which repeals the Measures in Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Women and Children Act B.E. 2540 (1997) and provides for a broad definition of "exploitation" to cover sexual exploitation, production and distribution of pornography, other forms of sexual exploitation, slavery, forced begging, forced labour, or other similar forms of exploitation. The Committee notes, in particular, the information on the mechanisms and special procedures developed by the Government, under the new Act, to ensure the effective prevention of human trafficking as well as protection of victims noting, in particular, the establishment of the Operational Guidelines on the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking for Labour Purposes, and Assistance and Protection for Trafficked Persons. The Committee further notes that under the new Act, victims may claim compensation from the offenders for the damages caused by human trafficking.

The Committee also notes the statistics provided by the Government on the number of cases related to human trafficking during the period of June 2009 and June 2010, as well as the information on the activities of the Anti-Human Trafficking Division (AHTD), which has been established within the Royal Thai police and is, since 2009, the main body responsible for the prevention and investigation of human trafficking crimes. Finally, the Committee notes the information on the activities of the Centre against International Trafficking under the Office of the Attorney-General.

Noting the detailed information provided by the Government, which demonstrates its significant effort to combat trafficking, the Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information, in particular on the application in practice of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act B.E. 2551 (2008), providing copies of further court decisions concerning trafficking and forced labour cases, as well as information on any difficulties encountered by the competent authorities in identifying victims and in initiating legal proceedings.

Trafficking in persons for the purpose of exploitation. Migrant workers. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted the observations on the application of the Convention by Thailand, made by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU) – now the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). In its communication dated 31 August 2006, the ICFTU expressed its concern about the persistence of trafficking in persons from and into Thailand and referred to a report published by the UN Office on Drugs and Crime (April 2006), in which Thailand had been listed in the group of countries which had a very high level of trafficking, as a country of destination, origin and transit. According to the report, Cambodian and Lao women and girls were trafficked into Thailand for factory and domestic work and the sex trade; Burmese, Cambodian and Lao men were trafficked into Thailand for forced labour in such sectors as construction, agriculture and in particular the fishing industry.

In its reply to the observations submitted by the ICFTU, the Government indicates that the new Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act B.E. 2551 (2008) addresses both female, child and male victims equally, providing for heavier penalties on offenders involved in human trafficking, as well as victim protection and a fund to be established to support the prevention and suppression of human trafficking. As regards bonded and forced labour in particular, the Government indicates that, together with the new Act, provisions of the Labour Protection Act (B.E. 2541) concerning overtime work and minimum wages (such as sections 70, 90, 24, 25 and 144) can also serve as tools to prevent bonded and forced labour.

The Government further indicates that, as regards trafficking and forced labour, its practices on labour inspection and labour protection include coordination with relevant government agencies, NGOs, international organizations and Thai embassies overseas to ensure victims' protection, recovery and reintegration to prevent them from being re-trafficked. Finally, it informs that repatriation programmes have been arranged with Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and the Yunnan Province of China in order to develop effective and safe repatriation procedures.

As regards statistics and documentation on the problems of trafficking and exploitation for forced labour of workers from Myanmar on board Thai vessels and in Thai ports, the Government informs that during the fiscal year 2005–06, 15 complaints concerning workers on board Thai fishing vessels were submitted to the Department of Labour Protection and Welfare (DLPW), two of which were categorized as forced labour cases.

The Committee notes the addendum to the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants, presented at the 17th Session of the UN Human Rights Council on 17 May 2011 (document A/HRC/17/33/Add.1), which contains communications to and from governments. In the communications addressed to the Government of Thailand, the Special Rapporteur expresses its concern regarding violations of the human rights of migrants in the country, in particular as regards the negative impact of the National Verification (NV) registration process for migrant workers. The Committee notes that, according to the report, approximately 300,000 migrant workers who failed to enter the NV process by the extended deadline of 31 March 2010 and an estimated 1 million unregistered migrant workers who were ineligible for the NV process are deemed as migrants with irregular status and particularly vulnerable to arbitrary arrest, violence and exploitation. According to the report, unregistered migrant workers may be asked to pay bribes ranging from 200 to 8,000 baht (THB) or more to the police in exchange for their freedom, either when stopped by the police or when in police custody.

The Committee further notes the information in the report concerning the Prime Minister's order of 2 June 2010, issued to set up a Special Centre to Suppress, Arrest and Prosecute Alien Workers Who Are Working Underground (No. 125/1223), according to which the Centre is mandated to suppress, arrest and prosecute alien workers who illegally enter the country. The Special Rapporteur expresses particular concern about the pattern of arbitrary arrest, violence and exploitation of migrants, which was exacerbated by the mentioned order and notes that an increasing number of cases of systematic abuse of official powers have been reported, "including the 'sale' of irregular migrants to various brokers who then transfer the migrants back to their worksites for fees or who 'resell' or traffic the individuals to various employers in the fishing and domestic industries". Finally, the Special Rapporteur expresses concern about information received suggesting that arrested migrant workers from Myanmar were deported to their country of origin by boat through informal checkpoints controlled by the Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA) and that the DKBA demanded fees from the deportees in exchange of their freedom. According to the report, migrants who cannot afford the fees imposed are subject to beating and forced labour.

Corroborating the communications of the UN Special Rapporteur, the Committee notes the report of the International Organization for Migration (IOM) on Trafficking of Fishermen in Thailand (14 January 2011), which refers to violations on the human rights of migrant workers in Thailand, in particular in the fishing sector. In its report the IOM expresses concern about the conditions under which migrant workers are hired to work in the Thai fishing industry, with labour recruitment processes that remain largely informal, mostly on the basis of verbal agreements, often leading to abuse and fostering human trafficking. In addition, the IOM draws attention to the fact that many fishermen are "sold" to fishing boat owners by brokers, having to work for long periods without receiving any wages in order to repay their debts. The IOM further notes that, despite the degrading working conditions, fishermen often have no alternative but being subject to them, since fishing boats tend to be offshore for long periods of time, preventing workers to leave or escape. According to the report, migrant fishermen, who are usually undocumented and unregistered, are often held on boats indefinitely, working and being forcibly transferred between fishing boats in case one boat needs to return to shore, under threats of being reported to immigration authorities.

While noting this information, and considering the seriousness of the facts abovementioned, the Committee recalls that, despite the Government's efforts in preventing, combating and suppressing trafficking in persons, the uncertainty surrounding the legal status of migrant workers, in particular those employed in the fishing sector, put them in an extremely vulnerable situation. Such vulnerability could lead to abuse and practices likely to undermine the protection provided by the Convention. Moreover, the itinerant nature of this type of work and the long periods of time spent away from shore hampers the identification of migrant fishermen victims of trafficking and working under forced labour conditions.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take effective measures to protect migrant workers, particularly those in the fishing industry, with a view to the complete elimination of the exaction of forced labour from this category of workers. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to further strengthen its law enforcement mechanisms, including measures to enforce anti-trafficking laws against those who target migrant fishermen and that such measures address the problems identified in the abovementioned reports. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide, in its next report, detailed information about the progress of such measures, including not only numbers of prosecutions and convictions, but the specific criminal penalties which have actually been imposed on employers of migrant fishermen convicted under the new Anti-Trafficking Act. Please also provide information on the application in practice of the above Prime Minister's order of 2 June 2010, issued to set up a Special Centre to Suppress, Arrest and Prosecute Alien Workers Who Are Working Underground (No. 125/1223). In this connection and bearing in mind the seriousness of the situation, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to prevent the exploitation of migrant workers and to ensure protection of their rights, regardless of their legal status.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline. The Committee previously noted that sections 131–133 of the Labour Relations Act BE 2518 (1975), under which penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) may be imposed on any employee who violates or fails to comply with an agreement on terms of employment or a decision on a labour dispute under sections 18, 22–24, 29 and 35(4) of the Labour Relations Act, were incompatible with the Convention. The Government states that the Ministry of Labour (MOL) is trying its best to take the necessary measures to bring the Labour Relations Act into closer conformity with the Convention. To this end, the Government indicates that its Committee on Revision of Labour Relations Laws in conformity with the principles of the ILO Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), will take into consideration the provisions of the Labour Relations Act BE 2518 that are in contravention of Convention No. 105. The Committee notes in particular the Government's indications concerning an analysis to be conducted by the above Committee on the conformity of the Act with the Convention.

The Committee reiterates the firm hope that the necessary measures will soon be taken with a view to bringing the above provisions of the Labour Relations Act into conformity with the Convention, either by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour or by limiting their scope to acts endangering the life or health of persons. It asks the Government to provide a copy of any proposed amendments to the Labour Relations Act elaborated to this end.

Article 1(d). Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes. The Committee has previously referred to the following provisions of the Labour Relations Act BE 2518 (1975), under which penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) may be imposed for participation in strikes:

- section 140 read in conjunction with section 35(2): if the minister orders the strikers to return to work, being of the opinion that the strike may affect the national economy or cause hardship to the public or endanger national security or be contrary to public order;
- section 139 read in conjunction with section 34(5): if the matter is awaiting the decision of the Labour Relations Committee or a decision has been given by the minister under section 23(1), (2), (6) or (8) or by the Labour Relations Committee under section 24.

While noting the Government's intention to bring these provisions into account of the Committee on Revision of Labour Relations Laws referred to above, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken in the near future with a view to bringing the above provisions of the Labour Relations Act into conformity with the Convention, by ensuring that no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the mere fact of a peaceful participation in a strike.

Previously, the Committee had referred to the State Enterprise Labour Relations Act BE 2543 (2000) (SELRA), which prohibits strikes in state enterprises (section 33), violation of this prohibition being punishable with imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) for a term of up to one year; this penalty is doubled in the case of a person who instigates this offence (section 77). The Committee notes the Government's indications in its report that the Committee on Revision of Labour Relations Laws referred to above is going to take into account the feasibility of revising the SELRA to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will soon be taken with a view to amending the above provisions of the SELRA in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, by providing that no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the mere fact of a peaceful participation in a strike. It asks the Government to provide, in its next report, information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Trinidad and Tobago

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1963)

Article 1(c) and (d) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour for breaches of labour discipline and participation in strikes. For many years, the Committee has been referring to sections 157 and 158 of the Shipping Act, 1987, section 8(1) of the Trade Disputes and Protection of Property Act and section 69(1)(d) and (2) of the Industrial Relations Act, under which penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour under the Prisons Rules) may be imposed for various breaches of labour discipline and participation in strikes in circumstances where the life, personal safety or health of persons are not endangered. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication in its reports that efforts were under way to amend the provisions mentioned above and that no sanctions had been imposed under these provisions in practice.

The Government indicates in its latest report that no amendments have been made to the above legislation, and that it is not anticipated that amendments would be made to section 8(1) of the Trade Disputes and Protection of Property Act and section 69(1) and (2) of the Industrial Relations Act in 2011–12. As regards the Shipping Act, 1987, the Government indicates that a policy document with respect to its amendment is under preparation, and that the Maritime Service Division shall give due consideration to the provisions of the Convention while determining whether further amendments to the Act are required.

While noting this information, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will soon be taken in order to amend the abovementioned provisions with a view to bringing legislation into conformity with the Convention. Recalling that the legislative amendments required have been under consideration for many years, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in the revision of the Shipping Act, as well as the Industrial Relations Act and the Trade Disputes and Protection of Property Act, in order to ensure compliance with the Convention.

Uganda

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1963)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. 1. Legislation concerning compulsory placement of unemployed persons on agricultural enterprises in rural areas. For many years, the Committee has been referring to section 2(1) of the Community Farm Settlement Decree, 1975, under which any unemployed able-bodied person may be settled on any farm settlement and required to render service. Section 15 of the Decree makes it an offence punishable with a fine and imprisonment for any person who fails or refuses to live on any farm settlement or who deserts or leaves such settlement without authorization. The Government indicated in its earlier report that the abovementioned Decree was in the process of being repealed. The Committee also noted the statement of the Government representative before the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2006, that the 1975 Decree was a “dead law” which was no longer applied in practice, and that it should be repealed. Noting that the Government's report contains no new information on this issue, the Committee calls on the Government to formally repeal the Community Farm Settlement Decree, 1975, and that legislation will be brought into conformity with the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to supply a copy of the repealing text, as soon as it is adopted.

2. Freedom of career military officers to leave their service. The Committee previously noted a provision of section 28(1) of the Uganda Peoples' Defence Forces (Conditions of Service) (Officers) Regulations, under which the Board may permit officers to resign their commission in writing at any stage during their service. The Committee previously noted the Government's repeated indication in its reports that the officer applying for the resignation must give his/her reasons for it, and the Board will consider these reasons and, if it finds them fit, will grant a permission to resign.

The Committee observed that, under section 28(1) of the above Regulations, the application to resign may be either accepted or refused. Referring also to the explanations provided in paragraphs 46 and 96–97 of its 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, the Committee pointed out that career military servicemen who have voluntarily entered into an engagement cannot be deprived of the right to leave the service in peacetime within a reasonable period, either at specified intervals, or with previous notice, subject to the conditions which may normally be required to ensure the continuity of the service. The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will at last be taken with a view to amending section 28(1) of the above Regulations, so as to ensure conformity with the Convention. Pending the amendment, the Committee requests the Government once again to provide information on the application of section 28(1) in practice, indicating in particular the criteria applied by the Board in accepting or rejecting a resignation, as well as the number of resignations accepted and refused.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to the following legislation:

- the Public Order and Security Act, No. 20 of 1967, empowering the executive to restrict an individual's association or communication with others, independently of the commission of any offence and subject to penalties involving compulsory labour;
- sections 54(2)(c), 55, 56 and 56A of the Penal Code, empowering the minister to declare any combination of two or more people an unlawful society and thus render any speech, publication or activity on behalf of, or in support of, such combination illegal and punishable with imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour).

As the Committee repeatedly pointed out, any penal sanctions involving an obligation to perform prison labour are contrary to the Convention when imposed on persons convicted for expressing political views or views opposed to the established political system, or having contravened a widely discretionary administrative decision depriving them of the right to publish their views or suspending or dissolving certain associations (see, for example, paragraphs 152–166 of its General Survey of 2007 on the eradication of forced labour).

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will at last be taken to repeal or amend the abovementioned provisions of the Public Order and Security Act, No. 20 of 1967, and of the Penal Code, in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, and that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

United Kingdom

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1931)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and (2)(c) of the Convention. Privatization of prisons and prison labour. Work of prisoners for private companies. For a number of years, the Committee has been making comments on the privatization of prisons and work of prisoners for private companies in the United Kingdom. The Committee recalls that Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention expressly prohibits that convicted prisoners are hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations. It clearly follows from the wording of this provision that the exception of compulsory prison labour from the scope of the Convention does not extend to work of prisoners for private parties (including privatized prisons and prison workshops), even under public supervision and control. The Committee therefore asked the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure that, with regard to contracted-out prisons and prison industries, any work by prisoners for private companies be performed under the conditions of a freely consented upon labour relationship, without the menace of any penalty and, given their conditions of captive labour, subject to guarantees as to wages and other conditions of employment approximating a free labour relationship.

The Committee notes with concern that there has been no change in the Government's position and in national law and practice since the Government's previous report. The Government reiterates that the United Kingdom continues to have in place a robust set of rules and regulations to ensure that prison labour is not abused, and that both public and private sector prisons and workshops are subject to rigorous independent inspections, both domestically and internationally. The Government also takes the view that, if it accepts the interpretation of the Convention by the Committee of Experts, working of prisoners in a number of prisons in the United Kingdom would no longer be viable, and therefore, compliance with the Committee's views would be highly damaging for prisoners and their rehabilitation.

While noting these views and comments, the Committee points out once again that the privatization of prison labour falls outside the express conditions provided in Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention for exempting compulsory prison labour from the scope of the Convention. However, the Committee has considered that the work of prisoners for private companies may be held compatible with the Convention where it does not involve compulsory labour, which requires the formal, freely given and informed consent of the persons concerned. Such voluntary consent, since it is given in the context of a captive labour force having no alternative access to the free labour market, should be authenticated by the conditions of work approximating a free labour relationship, which is the most reliable indicator of the voluntariness of labour and which include wage levels (leaving room for deductions and attachments), social security and occupational safety and health (see paragraphs 59–60 and 114–120 of the Committee's 2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour).

As the Committee repeatedly pointed out, in spite of the express prohibition for prisoners to be hired to or placed at the disposal of private parties under the terms of the Convention, it is fully possible for ratifying States to apply the Convention when designing or implementing a system of privatized prison labour, once the abovementioned requirements are complied with. The Committee draws the Government's attention once again to paragraphs 61 and 122 of its 2007 General Survey where it observed that a certain number of countries have made progress towards full compliance with the Convention by taking measures, both in law and in practice, so that conditions of the private employment of prisoners progressively approach those of free workers.

While noting the Government's indication in the report that it is currently exploring possible models for increased work in prisons, as well as the Government's commitment to have regard to the relevant ILO Conventions in developing these models, the Committee trusts that measures will be taken to ensure that formal, freely given and informed consent is required for the work of prisoners in privately operated prisons, as well as for all work of prisoners for private companies, both inside and outside prison premises, such consent being authenticated by the conditions of work approximating those of a free labour relationship, as regards wage levels (leaving room for deductions and attachments), social security and occupational safety and health. The Committee expresses the firm hope that such measures will be taken both in law and in practice, in order to grant prisoners working in privately operated facilities and other prisoners working for private enterprises a legal status with rights and conditions of employment that are compatible with this basic human rights instrument ratified by the United Kingdom more than 80 years ago, and that the Government will soon be in a position to report the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uzbekistan

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1997)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Mobilization and use of labour for purposes of economic development in agriculture (cotton production). In its earlier comments, the Committee noted the allegations made in 2008 and 2009 by the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the systematic and persistent use of forced labour, including forced child labour, in the cotton fields of Uzbekistan. The Committee recalled that similar allegations were made in 2004 by the Council of the Trade Unions Federation of Uzbekistan, which referred to practices of a mobilization and use of labour for purposes of economic development in cotton production, in which public sector workers, schoolchildren and university students were involved.

As regards practices of forcible involvement of schoolchildren in the cotton harvest, the Committee previously asked the Government to refer to its comments on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), likewise ratified by Uzbekistan.

However, as the Committee previously noted from the above allegations made by employers' and workers' organizations, not only children but also adults were subject to forced labour during the cotton harvest. The ITUC asserted, in particular, that, despite the existence of the legal framework against the use of forced labour, local administration employees, teachers, factory workers and doctors were commonly forced to leave their jobs for weeks at a time and pick cotton with no additional compensation; in some instances refusal to cooperate could lead to dismissal from work; even elderly people and mothers of young babies had been reportedly ordered by local government officials to pick cotton or lose their pensions or child benefits.

The Committee previously noted that, in its reply to the above communications by the IOE and the ITUC, the Government denied the allegations about coercion of large numbers of people to participate in agricultural works and reiterated that under no circumstances employers may use compulsory labour for the production or harvesting of agricultural products in Uzbekistan, the exaction of forced labour being punishable with penal and administrative sanctions and employers being liable for violation of labour legislation. The Government further indicates in its reply to the Committee's comments received in May 2011 that, according to the legislation in force, public sector workers and university students may participate in the cotton harvest, if such work is performed under the labour contract concluded between an employer and a worker under section 72 of the Labour Code, any other exaction of labour from these categories without payment being considered as compulsion to work, which involves responsibility and punishment of perpetrators in accordance with the legislation. The Government also adds in its 2011 report that the State Legal Labour Inspection intervenes upon every revealed fact of the exaction of forced labour and applies appropriate legal measures, while informing the competent bodies of the detected violations of labour legislation. It further recalls the recent legislative measures aiming at improving the legal framework for the abolition of forced labour, such as the adoption of the Law on Measures to Combat Trafficking in Persons and respective amendments to the Criminal Code.

The Committee refers, however, to its comments addressed to the Government under Convention No. 182, in which it noted the ITUC observations under that Convention received in 2010, and in particular, the ITUC assertion that, despite the Government's denial, sources in the country confirm the widespread mobilization of forced labour (particularly of children) in the 2009 cotton harvest in a number of Uzbekistan's regions.

The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on concrete measures taken, including through labour inspection, in order to eliminate any possibility of using compulsory labour of public sector workers and university students in cotton production, so as to ensure the observance of the Convention, which prohibits the use of compulsory labour for purposes of economic development. Noting also the general statistical data concerning a number of violations of the labour legislation detected in 2010 and a number of cases in which administrative penalties (fines) have been imposed on responsible public officials for such violations, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide statistics on the number of cases of forced labour detected by the State Legal Labour Inspection, to which reference is made in the Government's report, indicating in particular, whether judicial proceedings have been instituted in such cases and indicating the penalties imposed on perpetrators.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 29 (Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, France: French Polynesia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, India, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritius, Republic of Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Nepal, Nigeria, Oman, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Serbia, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: Montserrat, United Kingdom: St Helena, Uzbekistan, Yemen); Convention No. 105 (Albania, Angola, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Comoros, Congo, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Fiji, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Italy, Kenya, Kiribati, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Republic of Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Nepal, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, Uzbekistan, Yemen).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 105 (The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Kingdom).

Elimination of child labour and protection of children and young persons

Algeria

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 6) (ratification: 1962)

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Period during which night work is prohibited. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 27 of Act No. 90-11 of 21 April 1990 respecting conditions of employment, the term “night work” means any work performed between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m. It also noted that section 28 of the Act respecting conditions of employment prohibits the employment in night work of workers of either sex, aged under 19 years. The Committee noted that the Act respecting conditions of employment reiterated the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of Act No. 91-03 of 21 February 1981, on which it had been commenting for many years, as the prohibition of night work for children did not cover a period of at least 11 consecutive hours. The Government indicated that the revision of the labour legislation and the preparation of a new Labour Code would provide an opportunity to remedy the legal shortcomings noted in relation to night work. In this respect, the Committee reminded the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(1) of the Convention, the term “night” signifies a period of at least 11 consecutive hours, including the interval between 10 p.m. in the evening and 5 a.m. in the morning. It observed that the provisions of section 27 of the Act respecting conditions of employment, although complying with the interval provided for by this provision of the Convention (between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m.), does not specify the period during which night work is prohibited, namely for 11 consecutive hours.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the concerns raised by the Committee are taken into account in a draft text of the new Labour Code, which is currently being finalized. Observing that the Government has been indicating since 1990 that it would take into account the Committee’s comments, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to give full effect to Article 3(1) of the Convention, and accordingly to ensure that the prohibition of night work for children covers in all cases a period of at least 11 consecutive hours, including the interval between 10 p.m. in the evening and 5 a.m. in the morning. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect as soon as possible.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1984)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, in the context of a project on the National Strategy for Children, the administrative department responsible for the family had organized a strategic planning workshop on the protection of children in February 2007 in collaboration with UNICEF, following which recommendations were formulated on child protection. The Committee also noted that the Government had launched a Bill on the protection of children and requested it to provide a copy once it had been adopted.

The Committee takes due note that a National Plan of Action for Children in Algeria was formulated under the aegis of the ministry responsible for the family and the situation of women, with the participation of the national institutions concerned (20 ministerial departments, ten national institutions), civil society, an advisory group of children and young persons, and UNICEF. This Plan of Action, officially launched on 25 December 2008 under the heading “Algeria worthy of children”, is to be implemented over the period 2008–15 and covers four main areas, namely: (1) the rights of the child; (2) the promotion of a healthy life and a better existence; (3) the quality of education; and (4) the protection of the child. The Committee notes, among other aspects, that the fourth field of action relating to the protection of the child, includes a section on child labour. In this respect, the Plan of Action calls for the development and updating of the legislation on the protection of the child, as well as the strengthening and development of mechanisms for the application of the legislation that is in force. However, the Committee notes that in its concluding observations of 7 June 2010, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed its concern about the high rate of child labour in Algeria “with estimates of approximately 300,000 children under 16 years of age who are working” (E/C.12/DZA/CO/4, paragraph 17). Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government still does not appear to have adopted the Act on the protection of children, which it initiated in 2007. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of the Act on the protection of children and to provide a copy once it has been adopted. It also strongly encourages the Government to renew its efforts to combat child labour. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide detailed information on the impact of the Plan of Action on the elimination of work by children under 16 years of age.

Article 2(1) and Part V of the report form. Scope of application and effect given to the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Act No. 90-11 respecting conditions of work of 21 April 1990 does not apply to employment relations which are not governed by a contract, such as work done by children on their own account, since persons working on their own account are covered by other regulations, which determine the minimum age of admission to non-wage work. In this respect, the Government indicated that, by virtue of section 40 of Ordinance No. 75-58 of 26 September 1975 issuing the Civil Code, the age of majority is 19 years, and that section 5 of Ordinance

No. 75-59 of 26 September 1975 issuing the Code of Commerce provides that any emancipated minor of either sex, aged 18 or above, who wishes to engage in a commercial activity, may not commence commercial operations or be considered of majority age with regard to any commitments she/he enters into for commercial purposes, unless the said minor has received prior authorization from her/his father or mother or, in the absence of the father and mother, through a decision of the family council approved by a court of law. The Government added that, under section 5 of the Code of Commerce, regulations respecting admission to employment are of a general nature and apply to all forms of employment, whether waged or own account. The Committee noted that the provisions of the Code of Commerce regulate the possibility for emancipated minors of either sex, aged 18 or above, to engage in a commercial activity in the formal economy. The Committee however observed that the provisions of the Code of Commerce do not regulate all the economic activities that a child under 16 years of age may carry on in the informal economy or on her or his own account and which are covered by the Convention, for example in the agricultural and domestic sectors, where the economic exploitation of children is more frequent.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2009, the labour inspectorate filed reports of 21 violations relating to the employment of 49 children under the age for admission to work (16 years). However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government's report is silent on the issue of children working on their own account or in the informal economy, and on the application of section 5 of the Code of Commerce. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen and adapt the labour inspection services with a view to ensuring that the protection afforded by the Convention is guaranteed for children who work on their own account or in the informal economy. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations involving children under 16 years of age who work on their own account or in the informal economy.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of these types of work. The Committee previously noted that a revision of the national labour legislation was in progress and that the question of prohibiting the employment of persons under 18 years of age in hazardous types of work would be taken into account. It noted that a list of prohibited types of work was to be established by regulation. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that the adoption of specific provisions that would clarify any ambiguity on these matters was envisaged in the future Labour Code.

The Committee once again recalls that Article 3(2) of the Convention envisages that hazardous types of employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. Recalling that it has been raising this matter for several years, and noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of the relevant legislation respecting the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. It also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the revision of the Labour Code is completed in the near future and that provisions giving full effect to Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention are adopted as soon as possible. In this respect, it expresses the firm hope that these provisions will ensure that the minimum age for admission to all hazardous types of employment or work is not lower than 18 years and these types of employment or work are determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect in its next report.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and sanctions applied. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that sections 343 and 344 of the Penal Code prohibit the trafficking of persons, including children under 18 years of age, for the purposes of prostitution. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to improve the protection of young persons under 18 years of age against trafficking, for both economic and sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 303bis(4) of Act No. 09-01 of 25 February 2009 amending and supplementing Ordinance No. 66-156 of 8 June 1966 issuing the Penal Code provides that the following shall be considered as trafficking of persons: "the procuring, transport, transfer, hosting or reception of one or more persons, under the threat of or use of force or other forms of constraint, abduction, fraud, deceit, abuse of authority or of a situation of vulnerability, or the offer or acceptance of payment or benefits, in order to obtain the consent of a person exercising authority over another for the purposes of exploitation. Exploitation shall include exploitation of the prostitution of another person, through begging, forced labour or services, slavery or similar practices, servitude or the removal of organs. [...] Where trafficking is exercised in respect of a person whose situation of vulnerability is a result of her or his age [...], the sentence shall be imprisonment of from five to 15 years and a fine of from DZD500,000 to DZD1,500,000." Furthermore, section 303bis(5) provides that trafficking of persons shall be punished with a sentence of imprisonment of from ten to 20 years and a fine of from DZD1 million to DZD2 million where the offence is committed under certain specific circumstances, including in cases where the perpetrator "exercises authority over the victim". The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 303bis(4) and 303bis(5) of Act No. 09-01, including the number of prosecutions, convictions and the sanctions imposed.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of October 2005 (CRC/C/15/Add.269, paragraph 78), noted with deep concern that child prostitution is on the increase in the country, and that not only girls but also boys who are working as traders, messengers or domestic servants are particularly at risk of sexual exploitation. The Committee noted that sections 342 and 343 of the Penal Code prohibit and punish the procuring or offering of persons, particularly children, for prostitution. It requested the Government to provide information on the effect given to these provisions in practice. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report once again does not contain any information on this subject. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that in-depth investigations and effective prosecutions are conducted of persons who engage in the sexual exploitation of children under 18 years of age for commercial purposes. It also urges the Government to provide information in its next report on the effect given in practice to sections 342 and 343 of the Penal Code including, for example, statistics on the number and nature of the infringements reported, investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions and the penal sanctions applied. To the extent possible, the information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Clauses (b) and (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that no legislative provision prohibits these worst forms of child labour and it requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to resolve this matter. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any further information on this subject. The Committee reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(b) and (c) of the Convention, the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, as well as for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, constitute worst forms of child labour. Furthermore, under the terms of Article 1, immediate and effective measures shall be taken to secure the prohibition of these worst forms of child labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure, in law and practice, the prohibition of the use, procuring or offering of a child under the age of 18 years for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, as well as for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, and to provide for sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress achieved in this respect.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Children working on their own account. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that Act No. 90/11 respecting conditions of work of 21 April 1990 applies to individual and collective employment relations, but does not cover to children working on their own account. The Committee notes with regret that once again the Government's report is silent on the issue of children working on their own account and performing hazardous work types for work. With reference to its comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the protection of children working on their own account and engaged in hazardous types of work, for example by reinforcing and adapting the labour inspection services so as to ensure that such children are covered by the protection afforded by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect in its next report.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the issue of determining hazardous types of work had been taken into account in the context of the new Labour Code that was being prepared. It noted that a list of prohibited types of work was to be set out by regulation. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any further information on this subject. It reminds the Government that under the terms of Article 4(1) of the Convention, hazardous types of work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, and that under Article 1 immediate and effective measures shall be taken as a matter of urgency to secure the prohibition of these worst forms of child labour. With reference to its comments under Convention No. 138, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of legislation on the types of hazardous work that are prohibited for children, as a matter of urgency. It urges the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Antigua and Barbuda

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1983)

Article 2(1) and (3) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment and age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously requested the Government to prohibit the employment of persons under 16 years of age, in conformity with the minimum age for admission to employment specified by the Government when ratifying the Convention.

In this regard, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the Education Act of 2008 (Act No. 21 of 2008) prohibits employing a child of school age during the school year (pursuant to section 47(1)) and specifies that education is compulsory for all persons under 16 years of age (pursuant to section 27(1)). The Committee also notes that section 47 of Act No. 21 of 2008 establishes a penalty of a fine not exceeding $2,000 for any person or corporation who employs a child of compulsory school age (of 16 years), as well as every director and officer of such a corporation who authorizes, permits or acquiesces in such contravention. Moreover, the Committee notes that Act No. 21 of 2008 provides that, pursuant to section 37, it shall be the duty of every parent to cause a child of compulsory school age to receive an education by regular attendance in school, and pursuant to section 46, any parent who neglects or refuses this duty commits an offence and is liable to a fine not exceeding $1,000. The Committee further notes that section 39 of Act No. 21 of 2008 provides for the designation of school attendance counsellors to assist with the enforcement of the compulsory attendance provisions of the Act. In this respect, the Committee notes that, pursuant to section 41 of Act No. 21 of 2008, school attendance counsellors may enter premises where it is believed that a child of compulsory school age is employed in contravention of the Act. Pursuant to section 43, a school attendance counsellor may apprehend and deliver to school a child of compulsory school going age who is absent from school.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of these types of work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that consultations were held with the unions and employers' federation regarding the activities and occupations to be prohibited to persons below 18 years. The Committee noted that though a recommendation was made, it was not taken before the National Labour Board, as it was the Government's aim to revamp the occupational health and safety legislation.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that proposed amendments to the section of the Labour Code on occupational health and safety provisions have been circulated to Cabinet, but have not yet been adopted. The Government also indicates that technical assistance is being sought in consideration for new and separate occupational health and safety legislation. The Committee further notes that members of the Department of Labour attended a training workshop in June 2011, organized within the framework of the Occupational Safety and Health and Environment Programmes in the Caribbean. The Committee once again reminds the Government that Article 3(1) of the Convention provides that the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work, which by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of young persons, shall not be less than 18 years. It also reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a list of activities and occupations prohibited for persons below 18 years of age is adopted in the near future, in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. It encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in this regard through amendments to the occupational health and safety legislation, and to continue to provide information on progress made. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide a copy of the amendments to the occupational health and safety legislation once adopted.

Article 4(2). Exclusion of limited categories of employment or work. The Committee previously noted that, in the Government's first report, it excluded from the application of the scope of the Convention limited categories of employment or work, pursuant to Article 4(2) of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee noted that section E3 of the Labour Code provides that the prohibition upon the employment or work of children, does not apply to any undertaking or ship on which only members of the same family are employed, to members of a recognized youth organization who are engaged collectively in such employment for the purposes of fund raising for such an organization, nor to a child who is working together with adult members of his/her family on the same work and at the same time and place. The Committee requested the Government to indicate any changes in law and practice in respect of these excluded categories. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's statement that there are no new legislative or other measures affecting the application of the Convention.

Azerbaijan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1992)

Follow-up of the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report as well as the discussions that took place at the 100th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011.

Article 2(1) of the Convention and Part V of the report form. 1. Scope of application and the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously observed that the provisions relating to the minimum age of admission to employment or work in the Labour Code did not appear to apply to work performed without an employment agreement, including self-employment or work in the informal sector. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that, according to section 308 of the Labour Code, the Office of the Public Prosecutor, as well as the State Labour Inspectorate, exercise control over the strict application of the Labour Code. However, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 17 March 2006 (CRC/C/AZE/CO/2, paragraphs 61–62), expressed concern at the high number of working children in Azerbaijan, especially in rural areas, and that the regulations protecting children from exploitative and hazardous work were not consistently applied and respected. It further noted that according to a survey conducted by the State Statistical Committee of the Republic of Azerbaijan in cooperation with ILO–IPEC, entitled Working children in Azerbaijan – The analysis of child labour and labouring children survey, 2005 more than 156,000 children aged between 5 and 17 years are estimated to be engaged in some form of economic activity, out of which 84.4 per cent work in the agricultural sector, and about 67.6 per cent of working children are estimated to be engaged in hazardous work. This survey also indicated that the majority of working children (about 65 per cent) are employed as unpaid family workers, while 25.1 per cent of children work on their own account and less than 10 per cent are wage workers.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that, pursuant to section 1 of the Labour Code, labour legislation in the Republic of Azerbaijan shall include international agreements ratified by the Government. In this regard, the Government indicates that the Convention constitutes part of the labour legislation in the country, and must therefore be implemented by all employers and private individuals. The Government also indicates that the Convention applies to all forms of child labour, including hired labour and labour contracted under civil law, as well as illegal labour. The Committee notes the Government's statement during the discussions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards that, as of January 2011, 20,000 children were working in agriculture, out of which 5,000 were self-employed. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report that official orders are issued to employers, based on the findings from the State Labour Inspectorate, in order to eliminate the exploitation of child labour and violations related to the employment of women. The Government indicates that 34 such orders were issued in 2004, 62 such orders in 2008 and 23 orders in 2010. However, the Committee observes that it is not indicated whether such orders concerned both the formal and the informal economies.

The Committee notes the conclusions of the Conference Committee stating that there was an absence of information on the practical measures taken to apply the Convention to children working outside of an employment relationship, which constituted the majority of working children. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take concrete measures to ensure that the protection envisaged by the Convention was provided to children who work on their own account or in the informal economy. Recalling that the Convention applies to all forms of work or employment, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to expand the reach and strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate to better monitor children carrying out an economic activity in the informal economy, on their own account or on an unpaid basis. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard, as well as the results achieved. Lastly, it requests the Government to take measures to ensure that up-to-date statistical information on the economic activities of children and young persons is made available, including the number of children working under the minimum age, and to provide this information in its next report.

2. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee previously noted that, upon ratification of the Convention, the minimum age of 16 was specified under Article 2(1) of the Convention. However, it noted that section 42(3) of the Labour Code allows a person who has reached the age of 15 to be part of an employment contract and section 249(1) specifies that "persons who are under the age of 15 shall not be employed under any circumstances". Observing that the minimum age specified in the Labour Code was below that specified by the Government upon ratification, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no child under the age of 16 years is permitted to work, except for light work as permitted under Article 7 of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards recalled that the fundamental objective of the Convention consisted of progressively raising the minimum age for admission to employment and did not permit the lowering of the minimum age from the age specified upon ratification. The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards urged the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that national legislation was amended to establish a minimum age of 16 years, for admission to employment or work in all sectors.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that work is underway, with support from the ILO, to improve the labour legislation to provide that persons aged 15–16 can engage in light work. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest that, pursuant to technical assistance from the ILO, a draft has been developed entitled "On amendments and adjustments to some legal acts of the Republic of Azerbaijan to give effect to the implementation of ILO Convention No. 138 on Minimum Age for Admission to Employment". This draft proposes to amend section 249.1 of the Labour Code to raise the minimum age for admission to employment from 15 years to 16 years of age. Taking due note of the quick action taken by the Government to address this issue, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the adoption, in the near future, of the draft entitled "On amendments and adjustments to some legal acts of the Republic of Azerbaijan to give effect to the implementation of ILO Convention No. 138 on Minimum Age for Admission to Employment", so as to raise the minimum age for admission to employment from 15 to 16 years of age.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that a list of arduous and hazardous industries or occupations had been approved, and it requested a copy of the relevant legislation.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the detailed list of industries and jobs with arduous and hazardous conditions prohibited to persons under 18, established pursuant to Decision No. 58 of the Cabinet of Ministers of the Republic of Azerbaijan on 24 March 2000. The Committee notes that this list contains over 200 prohibited tasks for persons under the age of 18, in 35 fields of work, including in mining and underground activities; metallurgy; electrical repair; oil drilling and production; oil, gas and coal processing; chemical production; the production and preparation of biological materials; mechanical engineering; shipbuilding and ship repair; manufacturing and repairing aircraft parts; producing electronic appliances; some activities in construction; installation and repair work; ceramic production; glass production; woodworking; cotton and textile processing; food production; transportation; agriculture; and utility services.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee had previously noted that section 249(2) of the Labour Code allows youths who have reached the age of 14 to work after school hours in light duty work, which poses no hazard to their health, and upon the written consent of their parents. The Committee requested the Government to supply further information on the types of permissible light work.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the Labour Code was amended in 2009 to remove section 249 (2), which had permitted light work to be performed from the age of 14. The Committee also notes that the draft "On amendments and adjustments to some legal acts of the Republic of Azerbaijan to give effect to the implementation of ILO Convention No. 138 on Minimum Age for Admission to Employment" proposes to amend paragraph 2 of section 249 of the Labour Code to state that persons between 15 and 16 years of age are allowed to do light work that does not affect their health and development, school attendance in compulsory secondary education, vocational guidance and other training programmes, or the opportunity to benefit there from. Light work tasks identified in this draft include lifting, carrying and delivering goods weighing less than 5 kilograms; the sale of knick-knacks, souvenirs and other small scale commodities; and the watering of trees and flowers, gathering fruit and vegetables and other farming activities. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption, in the near future, of the draft text entitled "On amendments and adjustments to some legal acts of the Republic of Azerbaijan to give effect to the implementation of ILO Convention No. 138 on Minimum Age for Admission to Employment", to determine the types of light work permissible to persons between the ages of 15 and 16.

Article 9(1). Penalties. The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate the provisions establishing penalties for the breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention.

The Committee notes with interest that section 53.9 of the Code on Administrative Offences provides that persons who employ persons under the age of 15 shall be punished with a fine of between a AZN1,000–1500 (approximately US$1,271–1,907) and legal entities shall be fined between AZN3,000–5,000 (approximately US$3,815–6,358). Section 53.10 of the Code of Administrative Offences states that a person who employs children in activities which threaten their life, health and morality, shall be fined between AZN3,000–5,000, while legal entities shall be fined between AZN10,000 and AZN13,000 (approximately US$12,717–16,533).

Bangladesh

Minimum Age (Industry) Convention (Revised), 1937 (No. 59) (ratification: 1972)

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee had previously noted that, the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) signed by the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA), the ILO and UNICEF had led to the withdrawal of more than 27,000 children from work. It had also noted that, according to the Baseline survey on child workers in welding establishments, conducted by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics in December 2003, with regard to 39,000 children working in welding establishments, 52 per cent had never been to school and 95.6 per cent were not studying at the time the survey was conducted. Similar records existed for children working in the battery recharging/recycling sector ("Baseline survey on child workers in the battery recharging/recycling sector", Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, February 2004, page 57) and for children working in automobile establishments ("Baseline survey on child workers in automobile establishments", Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, November 2003, page 81). Observing that the practice was inconsistent with the legislation and the Convention, and recalling that the Convention sets forth the minimum age of 15 years for any public or private undertaking, with the exception of family undertakings and work done in technical schools, the Committee had strongly encouraged the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the situation. It had also requested the Government to supply statistical information on the practical application of the Convention, such as extracts from the reports of inspection services and information on the number and nature of contraventions reported, and school enrolment or attendance rates.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Parliamentary Standing Committee of the Ministry of Labour and Employment is currently working for the restructuring and strengthening of the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE). It notes the Government's information that it has recently taken measures to strengthen the inspection services by increasing the number of labour inspectors, and by establishing district level labour offices all over the country. The Government also states that the fines imposed under section 284 of the Bangladesh Labour Law for employing children and young persons in contravention of the provisions of the Labour Law amounted to 90,000 taka (approximately US$1,197), in 2006.

The Committee further notes with interest the following policies and measures taken by the Government to reduce child labour, as indicated in the Government's report:

- A National Child Labour Elimination Policy has been formulated by the Government in 2010, with a National Plan of Action being developed for the elimination of child labour. Within this framework, the Government has taken initiatives to establish national/district/sub-district level monitoring committees as well as a National Child Labour Welfare Council to assess the child labour situation as well as to coordinate all promotional activities carried out by the Government, NGOs and international organizations.
- A National Education Policy of 2010 has been adopted which aims to ensure compulsory and free primary education for every child up to grade eight (14 years).
- The Ministry of Labour and Employment started implementing the third phase of the project entitled “Eradication of Hazardous Child Labour in Bangladesh” targeting the withdrawal of 50,000 children working in hazardous sectors through non-formal education and skills development training.
- Basic Education for the Hard-To-Reach Urban Working Children which has reached its second phase aims to achieve quality life skills-based quality education, livelihood education, and advocacy for improved environment for working in six divisional cities in Bangladesh. This project targets 200,000 working children of ages between ten and 14 years for basic education through establishing 8,000 learning centres, and targets 20,000 children of over 13 years for livelihood education.
- The Child Labour Unit (CLU) under the ILO–IPEC Time-bound Programme towards the elimination of the worst forms of child labour (TBP–UIE), which compiles and disseminates child labour-related issues, has developed a child labour management information system (CLMIS) and a website was launched on 29 June 2011.

The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that net primary enrolment rates increased significantly from 61 per cent in 1990 to 94 per cent in 2009, and the primary school completion rate increased from 43 per cent to 55 per cent from 1990 to 2008. According to the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey –Bangladesh, 2006, 76.9 per cent of children were attending school. It further notes the information from the ILO–IPEC – Bangladesh Child Labour Data-Country Brief, that according to the results of Bangladesh Child Labour Survey of 2002–03, 13.4 per cent of all children aged 5-14 years were working, of which 62 per cent were in the agricultural sector, 23.3 per cent in the services, and 14.7 per cent were in the industrial sector. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to improve the situation of child labour in the country. It requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the National Child Labour Elimination Policy and National Education Policy in eliminating child labour, particularly in the industrial sector. The Committee further requests the Government to provide updated statistical information on the extent of child labour in the country, as well as on the practical application of the Convention, including reports of inspection services, number and nature of violations reported and penalties applied.

Benin

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 6) (ratification: 1960)

Articles 2(2), 4 and 7 of the Convention. Non-application of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 153(1) of the Labour Code prohibits night work by young persons under the age of 18 years. It nonetheless observed that section 153(2) of the Code allows exemptions from such prohibition to be granted by decree issued by the Council of Ministers. It accordingly asked the Government to indicate whether Order No. 233 of 11 September 1978 issuing a corrigendum to Order No. 1781 of 12 July 1954, adopted pursuant to the Labour Code of 1952 and providing for exemptions from the prohibition on night work for children, is still in force.

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government to the effect that the provisions of Order No. 233 of 11 September 1978 may be used for all relevant purposes. In this regard, the Committee observes that, under section 5 of the abovementioned Order, the prohibition on night work by children over 16 years of age may be lifted, temporarily and by a mere advance notice, for the purpose of preventing or remedying accidents in the industries cited in Article 2(2) of the Convention. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 5 of Order No. 233 is consistent with the provisions of the Convention.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77) (ratification: 1973)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Medical examination for fitness for employment. The Committee previously noted Decision No. 001 of 11 May 2004, issued by the Ministers of Labour and of Health and Sports (SEDES), section 1 of which provides that the Ministry of Health and Sports, through its ministries and municipal authorities, shall allocate the necessary and adequate medical personnel so that, in coordination with Ministry of Labour, free medical examinations are carried out of boys, girls and young persons who are working in the industrial and agricultural sectors and who work on their own account in urban or rural areas, under the terms of section 137(1)(b) of the Code on Boys, Girls and Young Persons of 1999. In this respect, the Committee noted section 137(1)(b) of the Code, under the terms of which young persons engaged in work shall periodically undergo medical examination. It observed that the expression “medical examinations” contained in section 1 of Decision No. 001 of 11 May 2004 only appears to refer to the periodical medical examinations that young persons have to undergo during employment, but not the thorough medical examination of their fitness for work. Observing that the Ministry of Labour, with the technical assistance of the Bolivian Standardization and Quality Institute (IBNORCA) had drawn up regulations under the General Occupational Safety, Health and Welfare Act, covering work by children in industry, commerce, mining and agriculture, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in terms of the establishment of a thorough medical examination before admission to employment in the framework of the implementation of these regulations.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the regulations under the General Occupational Safety, Health and Welfare Act, which address work by children in industry, commerce, mines and agriculture, have not been approved. However, the Government indicates in its report that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare is preparing a new Bill on occupational safety and health. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Bill on occupational safety and health will be adopted in the very near future and that it will contain provisions to the effect that children and young persons under 18 years of age may not be admitted to employment in an industrial enterprise unless they have been found fit for the employment in which they will be engaged following a thorough medical examination. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

With regard to the frequency of the periodical medical examinations (Article 3(2) and (3)), the medical examinations required until the age of at least 21 years in occupations which involve high health risks (Article 4) and the adoption of appropriate measures for the vocational guidance and physical and vocational rehabilitation of children and young workers found by medical examination to be unsuited to certain types of work or to have physical handicaps or limitations (Article 6), the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Bill on occupational safety and health will be adopted in the near future so as to guarantee compliance with these provisions of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, due to economic constraints, there are certain shortcomings in the application of the Convention, particularly in the capitals of remote departments, such as Cobija and Trinidad, and in rural areas. Nevertheless, it noted that the Government has adopted measures, in accordance with the possibilities available to it, so that all young persons who work in the country will progressively be covered by the protection afforded by the Convention.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare has registered three cases of children aged between 10 and 14 years who underwent a medical examination during the course of 2009. The Committee encourages the Government to continue providing information on the progress achieved in relation to the application of the Convention in practice, including through the provision, insofar as the available capacity so allows, of statistical data on the number of children and young persons who are engaged in work and have undergone the periodical medical examinations envisaged in the Convention, as well as extracts from the reports of the inspection services relating to the infringements reported and the penalties imposed.

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 78) (ratification: 1973)

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Supervision of the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare is preparing a new Bill on occupational safety and health. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Bill on occupational safety and health will be adopted in the near future and that it will contain provisions determining the measures of identification to ensure the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents in itinerant trading or in any other occupation carried on in the streets or in places to which the public have access, as well as the other methods of supervision to be adopted for ensuring the strict enforcement of the Convention, in accordance with Article 7(2). In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to take into account the indications contained in the Medical Examination of Young Persons Recommendation, 1946 (No. 79), and particularly in Paragraph 14 on methods of supervision.

The Committee also invites the Government to refer to its comments concerning the Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77).

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 124) (ratification: 1977)

In its previous comments the Committee noted that the Ministry of Labour, with the technical assistance of the Bolivian Standardization and Quality Institute (IBNORCA), had drafted the implementing regulations for the General Act concerning occupational safety, health and welfare, in relation to the work of young persons in industry, commerce, mining and agriculture. It requested the Government to provide information on the progress made with regard to the adoption of this legal text.

The Committee notes the information supplied in the Government's report concerning the Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77), according to which the implementing regulations for the General Act concerning occupational health, safety and welfare have not been approved. However, the Government indicates in its report that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare is drafting a new bill concerning occupational safety and health. Observing that the Plurinational State of Bolivia ratified the Convention more than 30 years ago, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the bill concerning occupational safety and health will be adopted in the near future in order to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress made in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare presented, on 22 August 2011, the child labour inspection system (SITI), which will make it possible to obtain information on the number of children and young persons working in the country. It notes that this inspection system is based on a standard questionnaire which seeks to evaluate the conditions of work of these children and young persons and which is particularly concerned with the issue of the medical examination concerning fitness for employment. Further to the introduction of the new child labour inspection system, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the number of children and young persons covered by the Convention and also extracts from the reports of the inspection services.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1997)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government on the various measures adopted in the framework of the National Plan for the Gradual Elimination of Child Labour (2000–10) (PNEPTI (2000–10)) and the Three-year Plan (2006–08), adopted following the mid-term review of the PNEPTI (2000–10). It observes that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare has been providing training since 2003 on the subject of child labour, particularly for judges. It notes that the experience acquired during these training courses has been set down in two manuals intended for the staff of the labour inspection services. The Government adds that training workshops on the standards applicable in the field of child labour have been undertaken by the labour inspectorate, with the participation in 2009 of around 700 employers, workers and young persons. In addition, in 2009 labour inspectors undertook over 90 technical inspections in various sectors of the economy, such as the sugar-cane harvest and work in mines. Finally, the Committee notes that the final evaluation of the PNEPTI (2000–10) and of the Three-year Plan (2006–08) is currently being carried out and that the Government envisages formulating a new five-year plan based on the results of this evaluation.

The Committee notes the study on the extent and characteristics of child labour in Bolivia, contained in the 2008 national report published by ILO-IPEC in 2010 based on the results of the child labour survey carried out by the National Statistical Institute (INS) in collaboration with the ILO-IPEC Statistical Information and Monitoring Programme on Child Labour (SIMPOC) during the last quarter of 2008. According to the results of the survey, nearly 23 per cent of children aged between 5 and 14 years, or 491,000 children, are engaged in economic activity in the country. This phenomenon is particularly common in rural areas, where nearly 60 per cent of children aged 5–14 years are engaged in an economic activity, with the rate being higher among boys than girls. The Committee also notes with concern that over 14 per cent of children under 14 years of age, or 437,000 children, are engaged in hazardous work. While taking due note of the efforts made by the Government to combat child labour, the Committee observes that a significant number of children below the minimum age are engaged in work, including in hazardous conditions, and it therefore urges the Government to renew its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, paying particular attention to children living in rural areas and engaged in hazardous types of work. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the implementation of the new five-year plan. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistics on the employment of children under 14 years of age and extracts from the reports of the inspection services.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous types of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the information provided in the ILO-IPEC report of December 2007 concerning the project "Eradicating child labour in Latin America (Phase III)", a process was initiated in 2007 for the determination of a list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare has submitted a draft Presidential Decree to determine the list of hazardous types of work. It notes that this draft text is currently being examined by the Political and Economic Review Unit. The Committee once again expresses the hope that the list of the types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age will be adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect and on the consultations that are held with employers' and workers' organizations for the determination of these types of work.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under sections 28 and 58 of the General Labour Act, children under 14 years of age may work as apprentices with or without pay. It also noted that sections 137 and 138 of the Code of Children and Adolescents, 1999 (the 1999 Code), regulate apprenticeship, but do not specify the minimum age required for admission to apprenticeship. The Government indicates in its report that labour inspectors are responsible for implementing measures to ensure that children under 14 years of age are not engaged in apprenticeships. The Committee acknowledged that measures to reinforce the labour inspection services are essential to combat child labour. However, it noted that labour inspectors need a basis in law consistent with the Convention to enable them to ensure that children are protected against conditions of work liable to jeopardize their health or development. Moreover, it observed that the provisions of the national legislation regulating the age of admission to apprenticeship are not consistent with the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not provide information on this matter. However, it notes that, according to the information contained in the ILO-IPEC report of July 2010 on the project entitled "Eradicating child labour in Latin America (Phase III)", the National Commission for the Elimination of Child Labour has worked on a proposed reform of the 1999 Code with the support of UNICEF and the ILO. In this respect, the Committee reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 6 of the Convention, the latter does not apply to work done by persons at least 14 years of age in undertakings, where such work is carried out as part of a course of education or a programme of training or guidance, in accordance with conditions prescribed by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. Observing that the Plurinational State of Bolivia ratified the Convention over ten years ago, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the provisions of the national legislation into conformity with Article 6 of the Convention by establishing a minimum age for admission to apprenticeship of 14 years. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in the adoption of a draft reform of the Code of Children and Adolescents of 1999.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the national legislation does not contain provisions giving effect to the obligation of the employer to keep registers. The Government indicated that a ministerial resolution was being drafted requiring employers to keep a register of children under 18 years of age who work for them.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide information concerning the adoption of the ministerial resolution. Observing that this matter has been raised for many years, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the ministerial resolution will be adopted in the very near future and that it will contain provisions giving full effect to Article 9(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Debt bondage and forced or compulsory labour. Child labour in sugar cane and Brazil nut harvesting. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a communication from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) indicating that over 10,000 children work with their parents in the sugar harvest in the country. The tasks performed by children vary: boys work with the men in cutting sugar cane, and girls and young children work with the women in gathering, stripping and bundling the cane. They work very long hours, suffer from respiratory ailments and sustain injuries through the use of machetes. The ITUC added that, in the case of the Brazil nut harvest, children start at the age of 7 helping their parents in plantations, assisting with picking and processing the fruit. The work they do is hazardous because they use machetes to crack the nuts and extract the kernels, and they have to walk for hours to find the fruit-bearing trees and work begins in the middle of the night. According to the ITUC, child labour in the sugar industry and in the nut harvest is a practice similar to slavery because the children have no alternative but to work with their parents. They therefore have joint liability with their parents for the debt and are compelled to work to help their parents repay it. The Committee also noted the study entitled Enganche y Servidumbre por Deudas en Bolivia (Entrapment and debt bondage in Bolivia), published by the Office in January 2005, which reports that tens of thousands of indigenous agricultural workers are in a situation of debt bondage in the country, certain of whom are subject to permanent or semi-permanent forced labour in the Chaco region, as well as in the areas of Santa Cruz and Tarija (sugar harvesting) and the northern Amazon (Brazil nut harvesting).

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report that, following an assessment of the situation carried out in 2007 by the NGO Cedla at the request of the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare, with the support of UNICEF, on the situation of children and their families working in the sugar cane and Brazil nut harvest in the departments of Beni and Pando (frontier regions with Brazil), it was found that, of the 16,957 workers identified in total, 4,671 were under 18 years of age and worked under conditions of exploitation. The Committee, however, notes that the Government's report does not provide information on the number of investigations conducted and prosecutions initiated following this assessment.

The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 16 October 2009 on the Government's fourth periodic report (CRC/C/BOL/CO/4, paragraph 73), expressed particular concern at the situation of the Guarani children living in conditions of servitude, who are victims of forced labour and abuses in the Chaco region. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons using the labour of children under 18 years of age in the sugar cane and Brazil nut harvesting industry in conditions of debt bondage or forced labour are prosecuted and that effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied to them. It once again requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the effect given in practice to the provisions of the national legislation respecting these worst forms of child labour, including statistics on the number and nature of the offences reported, the investigations undertaken, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

Article 3(d). Hazardous work. Children working in mines. The Committee previously noted ITUC's indications that over 3,800 children work in the tin, zinc, silver and gold mines in the departments of Ururo, Potosí and La Paz. Children who work in the rivers of gold mines are engaged in extracting and washing gold deposits. However, the rivers are contaminated with mercury, sulphur and other chemicals used in mining. Furthermore, because of their small size, children aged 8 to 12 years are sent into certain narrow parts of the mine where an adult would not be able to pass. Children also work on extracting ore and preparing and exploding dynamite. Sometimes, in mines where there are no wagons to shift heavy ore, the children have to carry it on their shoulders to the ore processing area. In the first step of processing, the children have to handle a tool – a very heavy stone that can weigh up to 60 kilos, which they balance with the help of a metal plank on smaller stones. In the second phase, they have to recover the remaining ore, which is mixed with chemicals, and are in danger of suffering burns and inhaling toxic gases. The Committee notes that section 134 of the Code on Children and Adolescents contains a detailed list of the types of hazardous work prohibited for young people, some of which are related to the work carried out by children in mines, including the transport of heavy loads, the handling or inhaling of toxic substances and the handling of dangerous tools or explosives. It requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the national legislation.

The Committee observes that the Government's report does not provide information in this regard. It notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 16 October 2009 on the Government's fourth periodic report (CRC/C/BOL/CO/4, paragraph 73), expressed particular concern at the situation of children engaged in hazardous work in mining. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures in law and practice to protect children under 18 years of age from hazardous work in mining. In that respect, it requests it to take the necessary steps to ensure that in-depth investigations and effective prosecutions are carried out against persons who employ children under 18 years of age in hazardous work in mines and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied to them. It once again requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the effect given in practice to the provisions of the national legislation.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare now has four labour inspectors specialized in child labour. These inspectors are located in the departments of Santa Cruz, Tarija, Potosí and Beni. According to the Government, 90 technical inspections were carried out in 2009 in the sugar cane industry in Santa Cruz and Bermejo, in the Brazil nut harvest in Riberalta and in the mining sector in Potosí. These inspections showed that the use of children under 14 years of age for work was only found in 5 per cent of cases. The Committee, nevertheless, notes that, according to the information contained in a report on the worst forms of child labour of 15 December 2010, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, labour inspectors carry out inspections in response to complaints, but not surprise inspections, due to the lack of resources. Moreover, inspectors encounter difficulties in gaining access to plantations in the Chaco region. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspection services and to ensure that regular inspections, including unscheduled inspections, are carried out with a view to improving the surveillance of child labour, particularly in sugar cane and Brazil nut harvesting, as well as in the mining sector. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved through these inspections.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour and providing assistance for their removal from such labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Debt bondage and forced and compulsory labour. Child labour in the sugar cane and Brazil nut harvesting industry. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that an education strategy had been put into effect by the Ministry of Labour and the Fundación Hombres Nuevos, in collaboration with UNICEF, in ten municipalities in the sugar cane area of Santa Cruz. Over 3,000 girls and boys and their families, and 60 teachers from education units, were to benefit from the strategy. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the results achieved.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide information on this matter. However, it notes the indication that the Government is envisaging the formulation of a new five-year plan based on the results of the final evaluation of the National Plan for the Gradual Elimination of Child Labour (2000–10) (PNEPTI (2000–10)) and the Three-Year Plan for the Progressive Elimination of Child Labour (2006–08) (Three-Year Plan (2006–08)). The Committee strongly encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts and requests it to take effective time-bound measures in the context of the five-year plan to prevent children becoming victims of debt bondage or forced labour in the sugar cane and Brazil nut harvesting industry and to remove child victims from these worst forms of child labour and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the measures adopted in this respect and the results achieved.

2. Child labour in mines. The Committee previously noted the awareness-raising and educational measures and the economic alternatives offered to the families of children working in mines. It noted with interest that 20 per cent of the children who participated in the vocational training programme stopped working in mines and that the remaining 80 per cent reduced their hours of work. Finally, it noted that the Three-Year Plan (2006–08) and the PNEPTI (2000–10) had both set the objective of the elimination of child labour in mining.

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report that the Inter-Institutional Commission for the Elimination of Child Labour (CIEPTI), in collaboration with the NGO Care, has been implementing, since May 2009 a project entitled Oportunidades Educativas para adolescentes en Distritos Mineros del Cerro Rico de Potosí (Educational opportunities for young persons in the mining areas of the Cerro Rico de Potosí). The primary objective of the project is to prevent young persons working in mines through the provision of vocational training programmes. It also notes that awareness-raising and educational measures have continued in two mining districts, Llallagua and Potosí, with the participation of 167 students in 2009. Finally, the Committee notes that the Government envisages the adoption of a new five-year plan as a follow up to the PNEPTI (2000–10) and the Three-Year Plan (2006–08). The Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts and requests it to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged in the context of the five-year plan to: (a) prevent children under 18 years of age from being engaged in hazardous types of work in mines; and (b) provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from this worst form of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in terms of the number of children and young persons benefiting from these measures.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Indigenous children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that in the large estates of the Chaco region, families of the Guarani community are subject to debt bondage, as a result of which the children of these families are in the same situation. It noted that a national plan of action for the elimination of forced labour was to be adopted, which would take into account the problem of Guarani families in a situation of debt bondage and include special measures for the children of these families.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the CIEPTI held consultations in 2009 with 80 Quechua and Guarani communities concerning their views and position with regard to the issue of child labour. The final objective of this consultation process is the formulation of public policies on the matter. The Government's report adds that the NGO Dya, in collaboration with the CIEPTI, has been implementing a three-year project (October 2007 – January 2011) in the department of Santa Cruz, with the objective of offering educational opportunities to 5,800 indigenous children and young persons who are engaged, or are liable to be engaged in agricultural work, domestic service, agro-industry, trading and forced labour.

The Committee nevertheless notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 16 October 2009 on the Government's fourth periodic report (CRC/C/BOL/CO/4, paragraph 73), expressed particular concern at the persistence of the economic exploitation of indigenous children. Observing that the children of indigenous peoples are often the victims of exploitation, which takes on very diverse forms, and are a population at risk of being subject to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures adopted, particularly in the context of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Forced Labour, to prevent these children from being in a situation of debt bondage or forced labour and from being recruited to carry out hazardous work in mines.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the study on the extent and characteristics of child labour in Bolivia, contained in the 2008 national report published by the ILO–IPEC in 2010 and based on the results of the child labour survey carried out by the National Statistical Institute (INS) in collaboration with the ILO–IPEC Statistical Information and Monitoring Programme on Child Labour (SIMPOC) during the last quarter of 2008. According to the survey, 848,000 children, or nearly 28 per cent of children and young persons in the country between the ages of 5 and 17 years, are engaged in a paid or unpaid economic activity. Most of them work in agriculture and mining and are unpaid family workers. The Committee also notes that the great majority of these children perform hazardous types of work (746,000 children and young persons between 5 and 17 years of age). This is particularly the case for indigenous children and young persons in rural areas (between 78 and 80 per cent of the total population of indigenous girls and boys in rural areas). The Committee nevertheless observes that, with regard to the worst forms of child labour, only statistics concerning hazardous types of work were captured in the 2008 survey. Expressing grave concern at the number of children and young persons performing hazardous types of work, and particularly indigenous children in rural areas, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in the country. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, particularly in the agricultural and mining sectors. To the extent possible, all information should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Botswana

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that most sexual offence provisions in the Penal Code referred only to girls, and that there did not appear to be any similar provisions protecting boys. However, the Committee noted the information in a report entitled “Discussion document on child labour in Botswana”, released by the Ministry of Social Security in conjunction with the ILO in 2006, that some boys, as well as girls, were victims of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee requested the Government to take measures immediately to secure the prohibition of the use, procuring or offering of both boys and girls for the purpose of prostitution.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that sections 57(1) and 57(3) of the Children’s Act of 2009 (adopted on 16 June 2009) penalizes any person who induces, coerces or encourages any child to engage in prostitution, or who induces, coerces or encourages any person to prostitute or cause the prostitution of any child, and that section 2 of the Act defines a child as any person under 18 years of age. The Committee also notes that such an offence is subject to a fine and imprisonment, pursuant to section 57 of the Children’s Act of 2009.

Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that section 58(1) of the Children’s Act of 2009 prohibits the involvement of a child in the making of pornographic materials. The Committee also notes that such an offence is subject to a fine and imprisonment, pursuant to section 116 of the Children’s Act of 2009.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously observed an absence of legislative provisions prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. In this regard, the Committee notes with satisfaction that section 60 of the Children’s Act of 2009 prohibits the use of a child in the production or trafficking of narcotic or intoxicating drugs. The Committee also notes that such an offence is subject to a fine and imprisonment, pursuant to section 63 of the Children’s Act of 2009.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to section 108 of the Employment Act, the Commissioner may notify any employer that the kind of work in which a young person (defined as a person between 15 and 18) is employed is harmful to his health and development, dangerous, immoral or otherwise unsuitable and that “every employer who is so notified shall immediately cease to employ the young person concerned”. The Committee noted that Commissioner had not yet determined the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age, although consultations with social partners were ongoing on this issue.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the list of hazardous types of work has been considered by the Tripartite Labour Advisory Board. In this regard, the Committee notes the information in the ILO–IPEC report for Phase II of the project entitled “Towards the elimination of the worst forms of child labour” (TECL) of September 2010 that this list will be undergoing another review before its endorsement and subsequent presentation to the Minister for Labour, to be gazetted as an official legal document. This ILO–IPEC report also indicates that the Department of Labour has circulated a cabinet memorandum to all the relevant ministries accompanied by this draft list for their endorsement. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the adoption, in the near future, of the list determining the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to supply a copy of this list, once it has been adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour. Child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s statement that prevention and withdrawal efforts related to child commercial sexual exploitation are ongoing, and that two implementing agencies have been engaged to work in this area. In this regard, the Committee notes the information in the ILO–IPEC Outline Summary for the action programme entitled “Contributing to the elimination of worst forms of child labour in Botswana with special emphasis on agriculture and the commercial sexual exploitation of children” of March 2010 that this action programme seeks to prevent 28 boys and 86 girls from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation, as well as removing two boys and seven girls from this worst form of child labour. This ILO–IPEC document indicates that children withdrawn from commercial sexual exploitation will be referred to a counsellor for psychosocial support and, as necessary, referred to social workers for linkage with social services, hospitals for medical check-ups and the police. The Committee welcomes this initiative, especially in view of the fact that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, in its concluding observations of 26 March 2010, expressed concern that women and girls in Botswana are entering prostitution to support themselves and their families as a result of poverty (CEDAW/C/BOT/CO/3, paragraph 27). The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts, in collaboration with ILO–IPEC, to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, including through poverty reduction measures. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of children removed from commercial sexual exploitation and who have benefited from rehabilitative services through the effective and time-bound measures taken.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Brazil

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ILO–IPEC information that the operation of a Time-bound Programme, as well as other programmes of action, had created a favourable environment for combating child labour in the country. It also noted that the federal Government, as well as the state and municipal governments, have been collaborating with ILO–IPEC since March 2008, to strengthen the national policy for the elimination of child labour and the worst forms thereof and that a subcommittee of the National Council for the Elimination of Child Labour (CONAETI) was established to review the National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and Protection of Young Workers. Lastly, the Committee noted that, within the context of the Bahia Decent Work Agenda, the Brazilian authorities and ILO–IPEC had begun implementing a project to make Bahia the first state in the country without child labour.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the subcommittee finalized the new National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and Protection of Young Workers and that this National Plan was approved by CONAETI in April 2010, and by the National Council for Children’s Rights (CONANDA) in May 2010. The Government indicates that the new version is awaiting signature by the Ministers of State concerned by the Plan prior to publication. The Committee notes the information in the ILO–IPEC report on the project “Eliminating the worst forms of child labour in Brazil – Support for the Time-bound Programme on the elimination of the WFCL (Addendum)” of August 2010 that the revised National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and Protection of Young Workers sets up time-bound targets and assigns national institutions specific responsibilities for implementing programmes and activities. The Committee also notes the information in the Government’s report that it has a specific inspection scheme regarding the elimination of child labour, which is part of the Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour (under the direction of the Ministry of Social Development and Combating Hunger). The Government indicates that, between 2003 and the first half of 2010, a total of 56,460 young persons have been reached through labour inspections. In 2007 and 2009, labour inspections resulted in the regularization of 18,776 children and young persons, who were removed from premature employment and placed under the Child and Youth Protection Network, which includes the possibility of participating in income transfer initiatives, such as the Bolsa Família programme. The Government indicates that, although it has steadily increased the number of labour inspections carried out (from 981 inspections in 2007 to 1,109 in 2008 and 1,240 in 2009), the number of working children detected has decreased, as a result in the overall decline in the number of working children.

With regard to initiatives in Bahia, the Committee notes the information in the ILO–IPEC report for the project “Support to national efforts towards a child labour-free state, Bahia” of September 2010 that the Ministry for the Social Development and Combating Hunger and the Labour Prosecutor’s Office are jointly implementing a mechanism that actively searches and monitors potential child labourers. Measures have also been taken to raise awareness among key partners and to train identification agents in municipalities where the active identification of children in child labour is necessary. This ILO–IPEC report indicates also that 11,993 children in child labour have been identified thus far, and the project has reached 172 per cent more beneficiaries than initially targeted for withdrawal, including 6.02 per cent of all the child labourers in the state of Bahia.

Lastly, the Committee notes the detailed statistical information provided in the Government’s report from the 2008 National Household Sample Survey, conducted by the Brazilian Geographical and Statistical Institute. The Committee notes with interest that child labour has declined steadily in recent years. Between 1992 and 2008, the rate of child labour dropped from 3.6 per cent to 0.9 per cent for children between the ages of 5 and 9 years, and from 21.9 per cent to 9.6 per cent for children between the ages of ten and 15 years. In this respect, the Committee welcomes the measures taken by the Government to abolish child labour, which it considers to be an affirmation of its political will to develop strategies to combat this problem. However, despite the significant progress achieved, the Committee observes that important challenges remain. For example, in 2008, approximately 2,144,770 children aged 5–15 continued to be engaged in child labour (1,447,750 boys and 697,020 girls). The 2008 Household Sample Survey also indicates that, while the percentage of working girls decreased by 25 per cent between 2006 and 2008, the percentage of working boys decreased more slowly (by 18.6 per cent) over this same period. In this regard, the Committee notes that 67.5 per cent of working children in Brazil are boys. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to combat child labour in Brazil. It also encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to make Bahia the first state in Brazil without child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, as well to continue to provide statistical information on the results achieved, particularly with regard to decreasing the number of boys working under the minimum age. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide a copy of the National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and Protection of Young Workers, once published.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. Work performed in streets and public places. The Committee previously noted that section 405(2) of the Consolidated Labour Act states that work performed by a minor between 14 and 18 years of age in streets and other public places must be subject to prior authorization by a juvenile court. The Committee observed that this appeared to permit work in streets or other public places from the age of 14, although the specified minimum age for admission to employment or work is 16 years. It requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that no minor under 16 years of age is admitted to employment or work in the streets or other public places.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's statement that, as work on the street or other public places is identified on the List of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (Decree No. 6.481 of 12 June 2008), the minimum age for this type of work is 18 years. In this regard, the Committee notes that item 73 of Decree No. 6.481 prohibits persons under 18 from working in the streets or other public places, listing the examples of street vendors, car attendants, tour guides and work involving the transportation of persons or animals.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children for economic and sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that although the national legislation prohibits the sale and trafficking of children, it continued to be a problem in practice. It noted the information in a 2006 ILO-IPEC report that Brazil is a country of transit, origin and destination for the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of prostitution. Girls and boys are also victims of internal trafficking, particularly for economic exploitation in agriculture, mining and charcoal production. The Committee welcomed the adoption of a National Policy to Combat the Trafficking of Persons in 2006 and the adoption of a National Plan to Combat the Trafficking of Persons in 2008, but expressed concern at the persistence of the problem on a substantial scale in the country.

The Committee notes the information in the ILO-IPEC report for the project "Support to national efforts towards a child labour-free state, Bahia" of September 2010 that, as part of the National Plan to Combat the Trafficking of Persons, the Ministry of Justice is currently monitoring initiatives aimed at combating trafficking in the states of Acre, Bahia, Ceará, Goiás, Pará, Pernambuco and Rio de Janeiro. The Ministry of Justice is conducting technical visits to assess the results achieved through the US$1 million invested (since 2008) to combat this crime. However, the Committee notes the statement in a 2008 report of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) entitled "Brazil National Conference: Challenges to the Implementation of the National Plan to Combat the Trafficking of Persons" that, in addition to the increased susceptibility of children to exploitation of trafficking, the growing phenomenon of sex tourism also increased the number of trafficked children and lowered the age at which they are exploited. The Committee also notes the information in a January 2010 report of the Government entitled "Enfrentamento ao Tráfico de Pessoas – Relatório do Plano Nacional" (Facing the Trafficking in Persons – Report of the National Plan) available on the UNODC website, that 38 persons were convicted of trafficking in 2006, 38 in 2007 and 28 in 2008. The Committee further notes the indication in this report that the trafficking of children continues to be reported and that the National Hotline for the Denunciation of Sexual Abuse and Exploitation of Children received 381 reports of cases of child trafficking from February 2005 to 2009. Lastly, the Committee notes the statement in a report of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), for the World Trade Organization General Council on the trade policies of Brazil of 9–11 March 2009, entitled "Internationally recognized core labour standards in Brazil" that, despite the legal prohibition on trafficking, the trafficking of women and children for the purpose of sexual exploitation is common in Brazil, both domestically and internationally. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts to combat the trafficking of children for sexual and labour exploitation. It requests the Government to provide, in its next report, information on the concrete measures taken to this end and on the results achieved. In this regard, it requests the Government to supply information on the application in practice of the provisions of national legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of persons under 18 years of age, including, in particular, statistics relating to the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that an information system on locations of child labour (SITI) had been established, containing detailed information on locations where child labour, including the worst forms of child labour, occurs, including information concerning the commercial sexual exploitation of children. This information system contributed to the planning of actions by the labour inspectorate, particularly by the regional superintendencies for labour and employment.

The Committee notes the statement in the Government's report that the SITI continues to report on locations where child labour occurs, contributing to the planning of inspections and the combating of the worst forms of child labour. The Government also indicates that, in July 2009, the Secretariat of Labour Inspection (SIT) decided that actions to eliminate child labour should, as a priority, target activities related to the worst forms of child labour. However, the Committee notes an absence of information in the Government's report on any specific measures taken to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken, including by the SIT, to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and on the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and assistance for their removal from these worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the time-bound measures taken, within the context of the National Policy and the National Plan to Combat the Trafficking of Persons.

The Committee notes the information from ILO-IPEC that its project entitled “Integrated action to combat trafficking of girls and boys for commercial sexual exploitation in Brazil” came to an end in September 2008, and that the ILO-IPEC project entitled “Combating trafficking in persons in Brazil” came to an end in October 2008. The Committee also notes the information in the ILO-IPEC report for the project entitled “Support to national efforts towards a child labour-free state, Bahia” of September 2010 that, as part of the National Plan to Combat the Trafficking of Persons, the Ministry of Justice has undertaken activities to provide training to persons who work with victims of this worst form of child labour. The Committee further notes the information in the Government’s report of January 2010 available on the UNODC website, entitled “Facing the trafficking in persons – Report of the National Plan” that, as part of the National Plan to Combat the Trafficking of Persons, a survey was conducted in 2007 and 2008 on the best practices and experiences of services aimed at preventing the trafficking of children, in partnership with the ILO. This report also indicates that, in September and October 2009, a survey was conducted on special social protection service units, by the Ministry of Social Development and Combating Hunger, to determine which units provide services to persons at risk of trafficking or sexual exploitation, and which units provide services to child and adolescent victims of these worst forms of child labour. In addition, the Committee also notes the information from the International Organization for Migration (IOM) that it is operating a regional project which provides assistance to victims of trafficking in the tri-border area of Argentina, Brazil and Paraguay. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of the National Plan to Combating the Trafficking of Persons, to prevent children from becoming victims of trafficking, and to provide rehabilitation services to children removed from this worst forms of child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the results achieved, including the number of children who have received appropriate services for their rehabilitation and social reintegration.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Child domestic workers. The Committee previously noted the indication from the ITUC that, according to the 2004 ILO-IPEC study, there were over 500,000 child domestic workers in Brazil, many vulnerable to exploitation and working under conditions prohibited by the Convention. These children, particularly girls, do not attend school, and over 88 per cent of them begin well before the minimum age for admission to employment, normally at five or six years of age. However, the Committee noted that the List of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (Decree No. 6.481 of 12 June 2008) included child domestic work as one of the types of activities prohibited to any person under 18 years of age. It also noted that, according to the 2008 ILO-IPEC report on the Time-bound Programme, a sectoral plan on domestic workers (PLANSEQ) was being implemented to support this category of workers and inform them of their rights.

Referring to its 2010 comments made under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Committee notes the continued implementation of the PLANSEQ. The Committee also notes the Government’s statement that, under section 6 of the Normative Instruction 77/2009 of the SIT, the inspectorate combats child domestic work by advising the general public in the course of their duties and forwarding complaints to the competent authorities, in addition to awareness-raising measures. The Committee further notes the information in the ILO-IPEC report for the project “Support to national efforts towards a child labour-free state, Bahia” of September 2010 that initiatives regarding child domestic workers are ongoing in Bahia. Lastly, the Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that, according to the 2008 National Household Sample Survey, 15.1 per cent of child labourers in the 5–13 year age group are domestic workers (approximately 192,050 child domestic workers between the ages of 5 and 13). Noting that a significant number of children are engaged in domestic work, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that persons under 18 are not involved in this prohibited type of work, in conformity with Decree No. 6.481 of 12 June 2008. It requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the specific measures taken in this regard, including through the PLANSEQ, particularly with regard to the number of child domestic labourers under 18 years of age removed from this type of work.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Burkina Faso

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3, clause (a), and Article 7(1), of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children and sanctions. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there is a high level of trafficking of children for labour exploitation both within the country and as a source of child labour for other countries. The Committee also noted with interest that, since the adoption and implementation of Act No. 038-2003/AN of 27 May 2003 defining and repressing the trafficking of children (Act

No. 038-2003/AN of 27 May 2003), 31 cases of trafficking had been prosecuted in the 19 higher courts and 18 individuals had been sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from one to three years.

The Committee noted with interest the adoption of Decree No. 2008-332/PRES of 19 June 2008 promulgating Act No. 029-2008/AN of 15 May 2008 on combating trafficking in persons and similar practices (Act on combating trafficking in persons and similar practices). Under section 26 of this Act, Act No. 038-2003/AN of 27 May 2003 is repealed. The Committee took due note that sections 3 and 4 of the Act on combating trafficking in persons and similar practices provides for terms of imprisonment ranging from five to 20 years.

The Committee noted the information provided by the Government that it has continued and stepped up its efforts to combat the trafficking of children. It also noted the several court decisions handed down by the High Court between 2004 and 2007. The Committee noted that the individuals who have been prosecuted for the trafficking of children were found guilty and sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from two to 24 months, sometimes accompanied by a fine, and were ordered to pay costs. The Committee noted, however, that of the seven prison sentences handed down, six were suspended; one person was sentenced to two months' imprisonment and another to a fine of 50,000 CFA francs. The Committee reminded the Government that the trafficking of children is a serious crime and that, under Article 7(1), of the Convention, the Government is obliged to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect the Convention, including the application of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penal sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the penalties imposed on individuals found guilty of trafficking of children are sufficiently effective and dissuasive and that they are applied in practice. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the application in practice of the Act on combating trafficking in persons and similar practices, including in particular, statistics on the number and nature of violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of labour. 1. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously took due note of the information provided concerning the implementation in the country of the ILO–IPEC Programme on Combating Trafficking in Children for Labour Exploitation in West and Central Africa (LUTRENA) and noted, in particular, that 632 children had benefited from the project and from educational support. It requested the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in the context of the implementation of the LUTRENA programme. The Committee noted with interest the information provided by the Government that 716 children have been intercepted and returned to their families with the support of the social, technical and financial partners, including the vigilance committees. It also noted the Government's indication that, to ensure better care for victims of trafficking and their reintegration into their families, transit centres have been equipped with facilities in the three provinces of Fada, Pama and Diapaga. The Committee also noted that financial assistance is given to families of child victims of trafficking for income-generating activities and the children are placed in workshops and various vocational training centres or reintegrated into the school system. Furthermore, the Wend Zoodo reception centre has been renovated and four literacy centres have been equipped with facilities. Finally, the Committee noted that the country is participating in phase V of the LUTRENA programme. The Committee took due note of the measures taken by the Government to remove children from sale and trafficking and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, which it regards as a manifestation of its political will to eliminate this worst form of child labour. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts and requests it to provide information on the time-bound measures taken in the context of the implementation of phase V of the LUTRENA programme to remove child victims from sale and trafficking by indicating, in particular, the number of children who have actually been removed from this worst form of labour, and on the specific rehabilitation and social integration measures taken for these children.

2. Project for small-scale gold mines in West Africa. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Burkina Faso is participating in the ILO–IPEC project entitled "Prevention and elimination of child labour in artisanal gold mining in West Africa (2005-2008)" (the ILO–IPEC project on artisanal gold mining), the objective of which is to remove children from gold mines, while establishing structures to prevent child labour and to support local activities, particularly those aimed at enhancing the safety and boosting the income of adults working in the mines. The Committee noted that, according to the information contained in the 2007 ILO–IPEC activity report on the project in small-scale gold mines, more than 240 children had been prevented from being employed in hazardous work in gold mines and were receiving a school education.

The Committee noted with interest the detailed information provided by the Government concerning the ILO–IPEC project on artisanal gold mining which has been implemented on the gold-bearing site of Gorol Kadjè in Séno and the gold-bearing site of Zinguima in Bam. It noted, in particular, that two small schooling programmes have been implemented which have allowed the schooling of 248 children, including 130 girls, namely 93 children on the Zinguima site in Bam by the NGO Coalition in Burkina Faso for Children's Rights (COBUFADE) and 155 children on the Gorol Kadjè site in Séno by the NGO Action for the Promotion of Children's Rights in Burkina Faso (APRODEB). Overall, 657 children have been removed from the worst forms of labour in gold washing and have benefited from pre-school and school services, support in the form of school equipment, school clothing and afternoon snacks, and medical care. Furthermore, 16 groups of villagers have been created for income-generating activities in animal fattening, trading, dyeing and soap manufacture, including six groups of women and two groups of girls.

The Committee noted that two ILO–IPEC programmes are currently being implemented in the country, namely a programme on the rehabilitation and integration of child gold washers on the gold-bearing site of Gorol Kadjè through education and vocational training, and another which concerns support for the schooling of 310 children and the integration of 90 child workers, the protection of 120 child workers in the context of three young person clubs, support for income-generating activities for 90 mothers of gold-washing children and the mobilization of the community on the Zinguima site. Finally, the Committee noted that a basic study on child labour in gold washing in Zinguima and Gorol Kadjè is being carried out in the country. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to remove children from the worst forms of child labour in small-scale gold mines. It also requests it to continue providing information on the time-bound measures taken, particularly in the context of the implementation of the two ILO–IPEC programmes currently under way in the country, to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from this worst form of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the basic study on child labour in gold washing in Zinguima and Gorol Kadjè as soon as it has been completed.

Clause (e). Taking account of the special situation of girls. The Committee previously noted that, according to ILO–IPEC information on the LUTRENA programme, internal trafficking, which accounts for 70 per cent of cases, mainly concerns girls who are engaged in domestic labour or working as street vendors in the country's major cities. It noted that girls, particularly those employed in domestic work, are often victims of exploitation, which takes on very diverse forms, and it is difficult to monitor their conditions of employment because of the unauthorized nature of this work. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken in the context of the LUTRENA programme to protect girls against labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee noted the information provided by the Government concerning the measures it has taken in the context of the ILO-IPEC project on artisanal gold mining to take into account the situation of girls, in particular through financial assistance for income-generating activities and their insertion into training centres to learn a trade or their reintegration into the school system. The Committee noted, however, that no information is provided with regard to the measures taken in the context of the LUTRENA programme. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the time-bound measures taken in the context of the implementation of phase V of the LUTRENA programme to protect girls from the worst forms of child labour, including, in particular, the number of girl victims of sale and trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation who have actually been removed from this worst form.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. 1. Regional cooperation. The Committee previously noted that the Government has signed bilateral cooperation agreements on the cross-border trafficking of children with the Republic of Mali and multilateral cooperation agreements on combating the trafficking of children in West Africa. It requested the Government to provide information on the implementation of these agreements. The Committee noted the Government's indication that statistics will be provided as soon as they are available. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will be able to provide information in its next report and once again requests it to indicate whether the information exchanges with the other signatory countries have made it possible to: (1) apprehend and arrest persons operating in networks engaged in the trafficking of children; and (2) detect and intercept child victims of trafficking in the border areas.

2. Poverty elimination. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the draft Decent Work Country Programme for Burkina Faso. It noted that the problems connected with child labour form part of the priorities of this country programme, including child labour in rural areas and in mines, and that the Government intends to take measures aimed at eliminating child labour in the context of poverty reduction. The Committee noted that the Government does not provide any information on this matter. Noting once again that poverty reduction programmes contribute to breaking the poverty cycle, which is essential for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in the context of the implementation of the Decent Work Country Programme to eliminate the worst forms of child labour, particularly as regards the actual reduction of poverty among child victims of sale and trafficking and those who carry out hazardous work in mines and quarries.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Burundi

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that child labour constitutes a serious problem in Burundi, particularly in agriculture and informal activities in urban areas. It also noted the statement by the Government that the socio-political crisis experienced by the country had aggravated the situation of children, some of whom were obliged to perform work "illegally" to support their families, very frequently in the informal economy and in agriculture. The Committee noted that section 3 of the Labour Code, in conjunction with section 14, prohibits work by young persons under 16 years of age in public and private enterprises, including farms, where such work is carried out on behalf of and under the supervision of an employer.

In its report, the Government confirmed that the country's regulations did not apply to the informal sector, which consequently escapes any control. Nevertheless, the question of extending the application of the labour legislation to this sector was to be discussed in a tripartite context on the occasion of the revision of the Labour Code and its implementing texts. The Committee reminded the Government that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment and work, whether or not there is a contractual employment relationship, including own-account work. It once again expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to extend the scope of application of the Convention to work performed outside an employment relationship, particularly in the informal economy and in agriculture. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indications that the war had weakened the education system due to the destruction of many schools and the death or abduction of a large number of teachers. According to the ITUC, the school attendance rate is lower and the illiteracy rate higher for girls. The Committee further noted that, according to a report of the International Bureau of Education (UNESCO) of 2004 relating to data on education, Legislative Decree No. 1/025 of 13 July 1989 reorganizing education in Burundi does not provide for free and compulsory primary education. Entry into primary education is around the age of 7 or 8 years and lasts six years. Children therefore complete primary education around the age of 13 or 14 years and then have to pass a competition to enter secondary education. The Committee further noted that in 1996 the Government had prepared a Global Plan of Action for Education designed to improve the education system, among other measures, by reducing inequalities and disparities in access to education and achieving a gross school attendance rate of 100 per cent by the year 2010.

The Committee duly noted the information provided by the Government in its report with regard to the various measures adopted in the field of education. It noted that, under article 53(2) of the Constitution of 2005, the State is under the obligation to organize public education and promote access to such education. It further noted that basic education is free of charge and that the number of children attending school tripled during the 2006 school year. In 2007, primary schools would be constructed and other mobile and temporary schools would be established. Furthermore, coordination units for girls' education had been established and over 1,000 teachers recruited. The Committee once again encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in the field of education and to provide information on the impact of the above measures in terms of increasing the school attendance rate and reducing the drop-out rate, with special attention to the situation of girls. It also requests the Government to indicate the age of completion of compulsory schooling and the provisions of the national legislation which determine this age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the Government's report and the detailed discussion held during the 99th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010.

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with concern the use of children by the armed forces of the State as soldiers or helpers in camps, or to obtain information, as well as the low minimum age for recruitment into the armed forces. It noted that the Penal Code had been amended to provide improved protection for children against war crimes and that it now provides that the recruitment of children under 16 years of age in armed conflicts constitutes a war crime. It therefore requested the Government to take measures as a matter of urgency to amend the national legislation and prohibit the forced recruitment of young persons under 18 for use in armed conflict. The Committee also noted that, considering the relative calm experienced over most of the national territory since the Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement of August 2000 and the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement, the Government had launched the implementation of a vast programme for the demobilization and reintegration of former combatants through three organizations, namely the National Commission for Demobilization, Reinsertion and Reintegration (CNDRR), the National Structure for Child Soldiers (SEN), and the ILO-IPEC project on "Prevention and reintegration of children involved in armed conflicts: An inter-regional programme".

The Committee notes with satisfaction that in his Report on children and armed conflict of 13 April 2010, the Secretary-General of the United Nations indicated that the revised Penal Code adopted by the National Assembly on 22 April 2009 now prohibits the recruitment of children into the national defence forces and lays down that 18 years is the minimum age for conscription (A/64/742-S/2010/181, paragraph 38). In addition, the Secretary-General of the United Nations also indicates that eight focal points from Agathon Rwasa's Forces nationales de libération (FNL) were named as being responsible for facilitating the separation of children associated with FNL combatants (A/64/742-S/2010/181, paragraph 17). On 10 April 2010, the remaining 228 children were released from five FNL pre-assembly areas. On 8 June 2010, 40 children associated with alleged FNL dissidents in the Randa and Buramata assembly areas were also released. The Committee notes with interest that, according to the report of the Secretary-General, it has been confirmed that the FNL has ceased to recruit children, and that since June 2010, no reported new cases of the recruitment or use of children by the FNL have been recorded (A/64/742-S/2010/181, paragraph 54). Consequently, Burundi has been removed from the list of countries monitored in accordance with Security Council Resolution No. 1612 (2005).

However, the Committee notes that the Secretary-General of the United Nations expressed concern at reports of militant activities by youth groups allegedly associated with certain political parties that are generating fear and suspicion (A/64/742-S/2010/181, paragraph 56). Furthermore, in his Seventh Report on the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi of 30 November 2010, the Secretary-General of the United Nations adds that, owing to the heightened tensions that surrounded the general elections in 2010, there is a considerable risk that children and young people will be recruited, which therefore requires continued monitoring and preventive action (S/2010/608, paragraph 47).

In this respect, the Committee refers to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards which, in its conclusions, requested the Government to ensure that the perpetrators of the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed groups and the rebel forces were prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties were applied. Observing that the situation in Burundi remains fragile and that there is still a risk of child soldiers being recruited, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the protection of children under 18 years of age against forced recruitment for use in armed conflict, by ensuring thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution. The Committee previously noted that, in its communication, the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU) had indicated that the extreme poverty of the population encourages parents to allow their children to engage in prostitution. It noted that, although the national legislation prohibits this worst form of child labour, the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution remains a problem in practice.

The Committee notes with interest that, under the terms of sections 512 and 519 of Act No. 1/05 of 22 April 2009 revising the Penal Code, the fact of using, procuring or offering a child under 18 years of age for prostitution remains a penal offence in Burundi, which may be punished by a sentence of penal servitude of three to five years and a fine of between 100,000 to 500,000 francs. However, the Committee notes that, according to the information contained in a 2009 report on the worst forms of child labour in Burundi, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the sexual exploitation of children for economic purposes still occurs. Sometimes women initially offer accommodation to girls, and then force them to engage in prostitution to pay their expenses.

The Committee notes the conclusion of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards that, although the law prohibits the commercial sexual exploitation of children, it remains an issue of serious concern in practice. The Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures on an urgent basis to ensure that persons who use, procure or offer a child under 18 years of age for prostitution are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations reported and penal sanctions applied.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of children for illicit activities. Street children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication by COSYBU that the extreme poverty of the population drives parents to allow their children to engage in begging. The Committee expressed grave concern at the increase in street children who are exposed to numerous risks, including being used or recruited for armed conflict or other illicit activities. It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to protect street children and to prohibit, in the national legislation, the use, procuring or offering of children for illicit activities.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 518 of the Penal Code provides that it is prohibited “to induce, directly, a child to commit an unlawful act or an act that is liable to harm her or his health, morals or development” and that, under the terms of section 512 of the Penal Code, the term “child” means any person under 18 years of age.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these worst forms and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Child soldiers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, in the framework of the ILO–IPEC inter-regional project, the United Nations programme for demobilization, reintegration and prevention and the National Structure for Child Soldiers, thousands of children had been demobilized and socially reintegrated. The Committee noted that, according to the Government, all the children had been demobilized, except for those used by the armed movement FNL, which had not yet laid down its arms.

The Committee takes due note of the Government’s indication that all the children who had been enrolled in the FNL have been reintegrated into civilian life and that many of them have returned to school. In this respect, in his Seventh Report on the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi of 30 November 2010, the Secretary-General of the United Nations indicates that the reintegration of 626 children formerly associated with armed groups was successfully concluded on 31 July 2010 (S/2010/608, paragraph 48). Of these 626 children, over 104 have returned to school in their original communities and the others have been engaged in vocational training or income-generating activities.

However, the Committee notes that the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards indicated that combating poverty in Burundi was the basic problem preventing the successful social reintegration of demobilized child soldiers. With reference to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue adopting effective time-bound measures for the rehabilitation and social integration of children previously involved in armed conflict.

2. Commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures for the removal of children under 18 years of age from prostitution and for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee notes that, in the context of the National Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (PAN), prepared in collaboration with ILO–IPEC for the period 2010–15, one of the objectives is to reduce the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labour through the implementation of community development programmes including, among other elements, education and socio-economic reintegration of children engaged in or removed from the worst forms of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation who have, in practice, been removed from this situation and provided with rehabilitation and social integration, particularly following the implementation of the PAN.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Street children. The Committee noted previously that, in its report of 23 September 2005, the United Nations independent expert on the situation of human rights in Burundi had indicated that, according to some estimates, there were over 3,000 street children in the country (E/CN.4/2006/109, paragraph 55). It also noted that, in the report of 19 September 2006 of the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Burundi, the Secretary-General of the United Nations had indicated that the numbers of street children were on the rise in Bujumbura (A/61/360, paragraph 79).

The Committee notes that the PAN has to be implemented so as to provide protection in particular for children in a situation of vulnerability. The Committee also notes that, in its concluding observations of 20 October 2010, the Committee on the Rights of the Child noted the efforts made by Burundi to address the widespread phenomenon of children in street situations through, inter alia, the establishment of centres for care, protection and reintegration of children in street situations (CRC/C/BDI/CO/2, paragraph 72). However, the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern at the high number of children in street situations identified in the main towns, who are predominately children living in poverty and HIV/AIDS orphans.

In this regard, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards also expressed its serious concern that the number of children working on the streets remained high and that these children were exposed to various forms of exploitation. Recalling that street children are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to protect them from the worst forms of child labour, to remove children from work in the streets and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the PAN in this regard, as well as on the number of street children who are in practice removed from that situation and socially reintegrated through the action of protection and reintegration centres for street children.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cambodia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2006)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work. Child domestic labour. The Committee previously noted that section 15 of the Labour Code of 1997 (Labour Code) states that forced or compulsory labour is forbidden, including for domestics or household servants. It also noted that section 177(2) of the Labour Code prohibits children under 18 years from any kind of employment or work which, by its nature, could be hazardous to their health, safety or morality. Yet, the Committee noted that children are employed as domestic servants, and that most child domestics are girls aged 14–17 years, although it is not uncommon to find workers as young as 6 or 7 years. The child domestic workers typically work 12–16 hours a day, seven days a week.

The Committee notes that, according to the Child Domestic Worker Survey conducted in Phnom Penh in 2003 with ILO–IPEC collaboration, an estimated 27,950 children aged 7–17 years (9.6 per cent) in Phnom Penh work as domestic employees. According to this survey, many of these child domestic workers suffer hardship and abuse in the workplace. Furthermore, in its concluding observations of 20 June 2011, the Committee on the Rights of the Child still expresses serious concern that thousands of children work as domestics, mainly in the capital Phnom Penh, in slavery-like conditions (CRC/C/KHM/CO/2, paragraph 67).

The Committee expresses its serious concern at the exploitation of young persons under 18 years of age employed in domestic work under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions. It reminds the Government that, under Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, work done by young persons under 18 years of age under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and, under the terms of Article 1, should be eliminated as a matter of urgency. The Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective steps to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who subject children under 18 years of age to forced or hazardous domestic labour are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penal sanctions applied.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously noted that Cambodian national legislation does not appear to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee requested the Government to indicate whether there are legislative provisions that prohibit this worst form of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of Social Works, Veterans and Youth Rehabilitation has drafted the Law on Juvenile Justice and that this draft law has been submitted to the Council of Ministers. The Committee expresses the firm hope that this draft law provides for the prohibition of the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Law on Juvenile Justice is adopted as a matter of urgency, and to communicate a copy of it as soon as it is adopted.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Self-employed workers. The Committee previously noted that the Labour Code appears to only apply to those with an employment relationship. In this regard, it noted that the Labour Code does not cover many areas of informal sector work such as family businesses and farms, begging, scavenging, hauling and day labour, where the most serious child labour problems exist. The Committee brought the Government's attention to the fact that the Convention applies not only to work under an employment contract, but to all types of work or employment. It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that self-employed workers under 18 years of age are protected from hazardous work. Noting that the Government refers to the draft Law on Juvenile Justice, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this draft law provides for the protection of self-employed children from hazardous work, and to communicate a copy of it as soon as it is adopted.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. The police. The Committee previously noted that local police are responsible for enforcing laws against child trafficking and prostitution. It had noted that, although the Government has increased arrests and prosecutions of traffickers, anti-trafficking efforts continue to be hampered by reported corruption and a weak judicial system.

The Committee notes the Government's information that an inter-ministerial mechanism to combat the trafficking of women and children, led by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of the Interior, is in charge of trafficking issues. In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to a report on findings on the worst forms of child labour in Cambodia of 2009, available on the website of the High Commissioner for Refugees (WFCL report of 2009), the Prime Minister signed a sub-decree forming a single policy-making entity called the National Committee on Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labour and Sexual Exploitation. This National Committee includes representatives from all 18 ministries and is chaired by the Ministries of Women's Affairs, Social Affairs, Justice, and Labour and Vocational Training. Furthermore, the WFCL report of 2009 indicates that laws against trafficking, child sexual exploitation, and illicit activities are enforced by the Ministry of the Interior and 24 municipal and provincial anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection offices. Moreover, the Government partnered with NGOs to train over 4,000 police, social workers, court officials, and other employees on human trafficking. The WFCL report of 2009 also indicates that there are approximately 200 anti-human trafficking police officers at the national level and about 312 officers at the municipal and provincial levels. Cambodian police investigated 72 human trafficking cases from April through December 2009, arresting 112 perpetrators, and rescuing 473 victims, 105 of which were children.

The Committee notes, however, the particular concern expressed by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) in its concluding observations of 12 June 2009, about the low number of prosecutions and convictions of traffickers, a concern that is shared by the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in its concluding observations of 20 June 2011 (CRC/C/KHM/CO/2, paragraph 73). While duly noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out, particularly by strengthening the capacity of the authorities responsible for the enforcement of the law. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard, as well as on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic workers. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that one of the sectors of targeted interventions of the Time-bound Programme (TBP) is child domestic workers in Phnom Penh. Moreover, one of the prioritized sectors of intervention of the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2008–12) (NPA–WFCL) is also that of children in domestic labour. The Committee encourages the Government to redouble its efforts in order to protect child domestic workers from hazardous work. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of child domestic workers who were prevented from performing hazardous work, or withdrawn from hazardous work and rehabilitated and socially integrated, as a result of the implementation of the TBP–Phase II and of the NPA–WFCL, in its next report.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 20 June 2011, the CRC expresses concern that over 1.5 million children are still economically active in Cambodia and that around 250,000 are engaged in the worst forms of child labour (CRC/C/KHM/CO/2, paragraph 67). The Committee also notes the Government's statement that it is collaborating with ILO–IPEC to conduct a survey, within the framework of the TBP–Phase II, on the situation of child labour in Cambodia, and especially its worst forms, for 2011. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the high number of children involved in the worst forms of child labour, and accordingly urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure in practice the protection of children from these worst forms. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the results of the survey on child labour in Cambodia, once it is finalized. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by age and sex.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cameroon

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77) (ratification: 1970)

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted that Order No. 15 of 15 October 1979 on the organization and running of the occupational medical services, which gives effect to some provisions of the Convention, has remained in force following the adoption of Act No. 92/007 of 14 August 1992, issuing the Labour Code. In addition to the abovementioned Order and the Labour Code, the Committee noted that Order No. 17 of 27 May 1969 on child labour continues to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. It further noted the information supplied by the Government to the effect that the commission responsible for evaluating and following up implementation of ILO Conventions had met and examined this Convention among others, and that its report would be sent to the Office. The Government also indicated that neither statistical data nor labour inspection reports were available but that measures had been taken to set up a database on child labour.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no new information. It observes, however, that the Government has sent the Office the annual inspection report for 2008 with its report submitted under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81). According to the inspection report, labour inspectors are responsible for monitoring, inter alia, the implementation of the Labour Code and Order No. 15 of 15 October 1979 on the organization and running of occupational medical services. The Committee notes that in the area of occupational health and medicine, 79 infringements were reported, and that 64 observations and ten warnings were issued in this connection. As regards children's working conditions, five infringements were reported, giving rise to five observations and one warning. The Committee notes that only 20 children and young persons working in the hotel and catering sector were monitored, whereas 13,132 men and 4,054 women in 1,125 establishments were inspected. However, in its comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Committee observed that, according to statistics communicated by the Government and compiled by the National Report on Child Labour in Cameroon published in December 2008, 41 per cent of children aged from 5–17 years, i.e. 2,441,181, worked in Cameroon in 2007. The Committee must therefore express its concern at the weak application of the provisions giving effect to the Convention. It urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Labour Code, Order No. 15 of 15 October 1979 on the organization and running of the occupational medical services and Order No. 17 of 27 May 1969 on child labour that gave effect to the Convention, are applied in practice, in particular by strengthening the capacity of labour inspectors. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end and on the results achieved. It again requests the Government to send as soon as possible the report of the commission responsible for the evaluation and follow-up of the implementation of ILO Conventions.

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 78) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee takes note of the communication of 9 September 2011 from the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC) and the Government's report.

In its previous comments the Committee noted with regret that despite repeated promptings the Government had still not taken legislative measures to give effect to the provisions of the Convention, and expressed the firm hope that the Government would take such measures. Noting once again that the Government provides no new information in its report, the Committee can but reiterate its hope that the Government will take measures at an early date to give effect to the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there were no provisions in the national legislation allowing the Convention to be applied to children and young persons working on their own account, employees and apprentices being covered by the provisions of Order No. 17 of 27 May 1969 and the Labour Code. It also noted that the Government had indicated once again that medical examinations for young persons were to be extended, inter alia, to young persons engaged in own-account activities in the informal economy and that some municipalities had done this for a category of workers. The Committee further noted comments from the UGTC to the effect that although provision was made for systematic inspections in the formal sector, no measures had been taken for young persons in the informal economy despite the efforts undertaken for young people in the context of combating HIV/AIDS. The Government said in this connection that it was very difficult to get young persons in the informal economy to undergo a medical examination for fitness for employment insofar as it was unable to exercise any control over employers in the informal sector. The Committee nonetheless noted the information sent by the Government to the effect that some young persons in the informal economy do undergo medical examinations for example unregistered street vendors operating in the sales areas made available by the public services. The Committee expressed the hope that the Government would take the necessary steps, with assistance from the ILO, to ensure the application of the Convention.

The Committee notes that in its report submitted under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Government provides some statistics from the National Report on Child Labour in Cameroon produced by the National Statistics Institute in cooperation with ILO-IPEC and published in December 2008. The results of this survey show that in 2007, 41 per cent of children aged from 5 to 17 years (2,441,181 children) work in Cameroon. Of these economically active 5 to 17 year-olds, 85.2 per cent are used in agriculture, fisheries, forestry and crop picking, and 4.4 per cent are affected by hazardous work. Furthermore, 79.3 per cent of the children are engaged in unpaid work as family workers. Noting once again that the provisions of the national legislation on medical examination for fitness for employment are applied only to young workers in the formal sector and reminding the Government once again that children employed on their own account are automatically covered by the Convention (Article 1(1)), the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Convention is applied in law and in practice to all young workers covered by the Convention, including those working in the informal sector. In view of the significant number of children who work in the informal economy, some of them on their own account, the Committee can only express once again the firm hope that, in its next report, the Government will give an account of progress made in this regard.

Central African Republic

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the Government's report. It also notes the detailed discussions that took place within the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 99th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2010.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, according to UNICEF statistics for 2007, 57 per cent of children between five and 14 years of age are engaged in work in the Central African Republic (44 per cent of boys and 49 per cent of girls). It noted the Government's indication that, in the context of the adoption of new Act No. 09.004 issuing the Labour Code of the Central African Republic in January 2009 (Labour Code of 2009), the Labour Department has worked on the preparation of texts to implement the Code. The Government indicated that a national policy aimed at progressively abolishing child labour and increasing the minimum age for admission to employment or work will be prepared once the implementing texts have been issued.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the National Council for the Protection of Children (CNPT) has been established under the direction of the Prime Minister with the task of assisting the Government in relation to coordination, support, advice and evaluation of policies and strategies concerning the protection of children. This Council is composed of various representatives of government ministries, members of development partnerships and members of NGOs. The Committee also notes that a study financed by UNICEF on violence connected with child labour, highlighting the different sectors of activity in which children are involved, has been published recently. However, the Committee notes that the implementing regulations for the Labour Code have still not been published and that consequently the national policy aimed at the progressive abolition of child labour has not been adopted to date.

While noting the establishment of the CNPT, the Committee expresses its deep concern at the considerable number of children under 14 years of age engaged in economic activity, and also at the lack of a national policy designed to combat this phenomenon. Observing that the Government has been referring to the adoption of a national policy aimed at the effective abolition of child labour for many years, the Committee endorses the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and urges the Government to take the necessary measures to implement such a policy as soon as possible. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the UNICEF study on violence connected with child labour with its next report.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and minimum age for admission to employment or work. Self-employment. The Committee previously noted that most children work in sectors of the informal economy, such as diamond workshops, portage, or diving in search of diamonds. The Committee noted that the Labour Code of 2009 is not applicable to self-employed workers (section 2) but only governs professional relationships between workers and employers deriving from employment contracts (section 1). Noting the Government's indication that the juvenile courts and the Children's Parliament ensure the application of the protection envisaged by the Convention in respect of children who work on their own account, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the manner in which the aforementioned bodies guarantee such protection.

The Committee observes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this respect. However, it notes the Government's indication that it is planning to take measures to adapt and strengthen the inspection services in such a way as to ensure protection for children working outside an employment relationship. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, in its conclusions, noted with deep concern that an increasingly large number of children under 14 years of age are working in the informal economy and are often employed in hazardous work. Referring to the comments of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspection services in such a way as to guarantee the protection laid down in the Convention for children who work on a self-employed basis. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted the adoption in 2005 of the Plan of Action on Education for All (NPA-EFA), the objective of which is to increase the school attendance rate, reduce the school drop-out rate and ensure the completion of the full cycle of primary education by all children. The Committee observed that, according to UNICEF statistics for 2007, the net school enrolment rate for primary education was a source of deep concern, amounting to barely 53 per cent for boys and 38 per cent for girls. It asked the Government to supply information on the results achieved in the context of the NPA-EFA.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information on this matter. It observes that, according to UNESCO statistics for 2009, the net school enrolment rate for primary education appears to have increased slightly despite the fact that it remains relatively low, especially for girls (57 per cent for girls compared with 77 per cent for boys). However, the Committee notes that the proportion of children of primary school age (6–15 years) who do not attend school still remains substantial (33 per cent), as does the repetition rate in primary education, which stands at 24 per cent. Considering that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to continue its efforts to improve the operation of the education system in order to guarantee access to compulsory basic education for children under 14 years of age, especially girls. It again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in the context of the NPA-EFA.

Article 3(2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous types of work and determination of these types of work. The Committee previously noted that section 263 of the Labour Code of 2009 prohibits work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children under 18 years of age. It also noted that section 261 of the Labour Code of 2009 provides that a joint order of the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Public Health, issued further to the opinion of the Standing National Labour Council, shall determine the nature of the types of work and the categories of enterprises prohibited for children and the age limit up to which this prohibition applies.

The Committee notes that the Government undertakes to adopt measures in the near future to determine the list of types of employment or work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age. Recalling that, under Article 3(2) of the Convention, hazardous types of work must be determined in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, the Committee endorses the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and expresses the firm hope that the list of types of employment or work prohibited for children and young persons under 18 years of age will be adopted as soon as possible. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers by employers. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, under section 331 of the Labour Code of 2009, the employer must always keep an up-to-date employment register containing the personal details and types of contract of all workers engaged in the enterprise. The employment register must be kept at the disposal of labour inspectors, who may require it to be produced at any time. However, the Committee noted that section 331 also provides that certain enterprises or establishments, as well as certain categories of enterprises or establishments, may be exempted from the obligation to keep an employment register by reason of their situation, their small size or the nature of their activity, by order of the Ministry of Labour further to an opinion of the Standing National Labour Council. The Committee reminded the Government that Article 9(3) of the Convention did not envisage such exemptions.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it undertakes to take account of these observations when adopting the implementing regulations for the Labour Code of 2009. Referring to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation is in conformity with the Convention, ensuring that no employer may be exempted from the obligation to keep a register of persons under 18 years of age employed by them or working for them.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with satisfaction that new Act No. 09.004 issuing the Labour Code of the Central African Republic (Labour Code of 2009), adopted in January 2009, prohibits the forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict throughout the territory of the Central African Republic and establishes fines and terms of imprisonment for violations.

The Committee notes the report of 13 April 2011, of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in the Central African Republic (S/2011/241), for the reporting period December 2008 to December 2010. It notes that, according to the information in the report (paragraphs 43–45), the Government of the Central African Republic signed the N'Djamena Declaration of 9 June 2010, in which it undertook to stop the use of children within the armed forces and to adopt specific institutional measures to ensure the release and reintegration of children associated with armed groups. The Government also participated in the African Union ministerial meeting of 13 and 14 October 2010 concerning the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), further to which the participating States undertook, inter alia, to set up a joint operations centre and conduct joint patrols along the borders of the countries affected by LRA attacks.

However, the Committee observes that the United Nations Secretary-General noted in his report that the recruitment of children by armed groups remains a source of serious concern, especially in the north-east and east of the country (paragraph 15). The report reveals that children are still among the ranks and continue to engage in combat with the various armed groups, namely, the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la République et de la démocratie (APRD), the Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR), the Convention des patriotes pour la justice et la paix (CPJP), the Mouvement des libérateurs centrafricains pour la justice (MLJC) and the Front démocratique du peuple centrafricain (FDPC) (paragraphs 16–19). The Committee notes that these various groups, with the exception of the CPJP, all signed the 2008 Libreville Comprehensive Peace Agreement (paragraphs 3 and 4). The presence of children in the ranks of local self-defence groups, supported by the local authorities to provide protection for civilians in the absence of national defence and security forces, also remains a source of serious concern, especially in the areas affected by the LRA (paragraph 51). Moreover, the Secretary-General's report indicates that the LRA continues to abduct and forcibly recruit children for use as fighters, spies, domestic servants, sexual slaves and porters. Finally, the Committee notes that murders of children and rapes and other forms of aggression committed against children by armed groups remain a source of deep concern (paragraphs 20–24).

The Committee notes that despite the adoption of the Labour Code of 2009, which prohibits the forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for their use in armed conflict throughout the territory of the Central African Republic and the signature of the 2008 Libreville Comprehensive Peace Agreement, children are still present in the ranks of the various armed groups and local self-defence militia. The Committee, therefore, expresses its deep concern at the persistence of this practice, especially as it results in other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to eliminate in practice the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed groups and local self-defence militia supported by the local authorities, especially in the north-east and east of the country. Referring to Security Council resolution 1998 of 12 July 2011, which recalls “the responsibilities of States to end impunity and to prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other egregious crimes perpetrated against children”, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the thorough investigation and robust prosecution of persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict and to ensure that adequate penalties constituting an effective deterrent are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to supply information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions brought and convictions handed down pursuant to the provisions of the Labour Code of 2009.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (b) and (c). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and to ensure their access to free basic education and, wherever possible and appropriate, to vocational training. Child soldiers. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided in the report of 13 April 2011 of the United Nations Secretary-General (S/2011/241, paragraphs 52–58), according to which UNICEF is responsible for coordinating the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process of children in the Central African Republic. In 2009 and 2010, a total of 525 children, including 37 girls, were demobilized from the ranks of the APRD by UNICEF and its implementing partners. The Committee notes that all these children were reintegrated into their families and communities and received assistance with rehabilitation and social integration. The report also reveals that between 2007 and 2010 a total of 1,300 children were demobilized from the APRD. Moreover, in 2010, a total of 95,797 vulnerable children (62 per cent boys and 38 per cent girls), including children associated with the armed groups and armed forces, benefited from educational and vocational training activities, income-generating packages, psychological and social support, counselling and access to health services. The Committee also notes that four transit centres were built in 2009 and 2010 to receive and provide care for children affected by armed conflict. The report reveals, nevertheless, that various problems continue to arise with regard to catering for children previously associated with the armed groups. A particular issue is that these children are reintegrated into communities which have limited access to basic services and few possibilities for subsistence, with the result that some of them rejoin the ranks of the armed groups in order to receive the benefits provided in the context of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process or engage in economic activity, especially in the mines. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to provide appropriate direct assistance for the removal of child victims of forced recruitment from the armed groups and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration so as to guarantee the long-term definitive demobilization of these children. It expresses the strong hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to facilitate the establishment and implementation of plans of action by the armed groups to stop the recruitment and use of children in their ranks. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 14 of Ordinance No. 01/PCE/CEDNACVG of 16 January 1991 reorganizing the armed forces of Chad [Ordinance No. 1 of 16 January 1991], the age of recruitment is 18 years for volunteers and 20 years for conscripts.

The Committee noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General of 7 August 2008 on children and armed conflict in Chad (S/2008/532, for the period July 2007–June 2008), the political, military and security situation in the country remains highly volatile, owing to the continuation of armed conflict between the Chad armed forces and armed rebel groups, the presence in eastern Chad of foreign rebel groups, cross-border raids by the Janjaweed militia and continuing inter-ethnic tensions. The Committee noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report, the Government of Chad and the three main rebel groups, namely the Union des forces pour la démocratie et le développement (UFDD), the Rassemblement des forces pour le changement (RFC) and the Concorde nationale tchadienne (CNT), signed a peace agreement on 25 October 2007 which provided for an immediate ceasefire. However, despite the signature of this agreement, fighting has continued and all the parties concerned have continued to recruit and use children in the conflict.

The Committee noted that the Secretary-General's report showed that the forced recruitment and use of child soldiers in the conflict in Chad is related to the regional dimension of the conflict. The Toroboro or Sudanese armed groups allied with the Government of Chad are recruiting children from two refugee camps, at Tréguine and Bredjing, during the rainy season. Furthermore, heavy recruitment also occurs on the basis of needs in Darfur. The Sudanese rebel movement Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) continues to recruit in and around refugee camps, notably Oure Cassoni (Bahai). According to information in the Secretary-General's report, between 7,000 and 10,000 children are associated with the armed forces and armed groups. The Committee noted that the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, in its conclusions of December 2008 (S/AC.51/2008/15), expressed grave concern that all parties to the conflict continue to recruit and use children and called for measures to be taken to prosecute the perpetrators and put an end to impunity.

The Committee noted that the situation in Chad has been unstable for many years and that it remains fragile. The Committee also noted that, despite the fact that Ordinance No. 1 of 16 January 1991 provides that the age of recruitment is 18 years for volunteers and 20 years for conscripts, the recruitment of children for use in armed conflict is continuing in practice. In this regard, it noted that no penalties are laid down for violations of this prohibition. The Committee expressed deep concern at the current situation, especially as the persistence of the worst forms of child labour leads to other violations of the rights of the child, such as abduction, death and sexual violence. It reminded the Government that under Article 3(a) of the Convention, the forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under Article 1 of the Convention, members States must take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to stop in practice the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed forces and groups and immediately undertake the full demobilization of all children. With reference to Security Council resolution 1612 of 26 July 2005, which recalls the “responsibilities of States to end impunity and to prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other egregious crimes perpetrated against children”, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate steps to ensure that perpetrators are investigated and prosecuted and that penalties which are sufficiently effective and dissuasive are imposed on persons found guilty of recruiting and using children under 18 years of age in armed conflict. It requests the Government to supply information in this respect.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (b) and (c). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration, including access to free basic education and vocational training. Children who have been enlisted and used in armed conflict. Further to its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General of 7 August 2008 on children and armed conflict in Chad (S/2008/532), the Government of Chad signed an agreement with UNICEF on 9 May 2007 to ensure the release and sustainable reintegration of all child soldiers associated with armed forces and groups in the country. According to the Secretary-General's report, since the agreement was signed, 512 child soldiers have been released to UNICEF, which has provided support at five transit centres. So far 265 children have voluntarily returned to or been reunited with their families, and 220 have been placed in schools and 85 in professional activities. Most of the demobilized children were associated with non-governmental armed groups. Very few children associated with the Chadian armed forces have been released. According to the Secretary-General's report, negotiations are under way for placing the demobilized children in vocational training institutions and providing them with gainful employment. Some NGOs which are partners of UNICEF are currently working on the reintegration programme. Moreover, the encouraging start of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration activities in Chad is likely to lead to the release of another estimated 2,500 children associated with armed forces and groups.

The Committee also noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report, Chad undertook to release as a matter of priority children associated with armed groups held in detention. Moreover, it decided that an inter-ministerial task force would be established to coordinate and ensure effective reintegration of children. The Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of February 2009 (CRC/C/TDC/CO/2, paragraph 71), urged the Government to take the necessary measures immediately to facilitate contact between armed groups operating in Chad and the United Nations in order to promote the demobilization of children and prevent the recruitment of children, particularly in refugee camps. In this regard, the Committee on the Rights of the Child urges the Government to extend the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, placing particular emphasis on the demobilization and reintegration of girls.

The Committee noted the measures taken by the Government to demobilize and reintegrate child soldiers, particularly through collaboration with UNICEF. It noted, however, that the current situation in the country remains a source of concern. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts and continue its collaboration with UNICEF and other organizations in order to improve the situation of child victims of forced recruitment for use in armed conflict. Moreover, the Committee requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure that child soldiers removed from armed forces and groups receive adequate assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration, including reintegration into the school system or vocational training, wherever possible and appropriate. It requests the Government to supply information in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Chile

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 6) (ratification: 1925)

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Period during which it is prohibited to work at night. In its previous comments the Committee noted that even though section 18 of the Labour Code prohibits young persons under 18 years of age from performing any night work between 10 p.m. and 7 a.m. in industrial establishments, this section is not in conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention since it does not stipulate a period of 11 consecutive hours at night during which it is prohibited for any young person under 18 years of age to work. The Committee noted, however, that a reform of the Labour Code was under way and that the comments made would be taken into consideration.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the reform of the Labour Code has been approved by the Chamber of Deputies and is due to be adopted by the Senate. It also notes with interest that the draft reform amends section 18 of the Labour Code to the effect that young persons under 18 years of age may not work at night in industrial and commercial establishments for a period of at least 11 consecutive hours, including the interval between 10 p.m. and 7 a.m. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft reform of the Labour Code will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to send a copy of it in its next report.

Colombia

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 6) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the comments from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) dated 30 August 2011, and the comments from the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) dated 1 September 2011.

Articles 2(1) and (2), and 3(1) of the Convention. Period during which night work is prohibited and exceptions from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, under the terms of section 2(6.6) of Decision No. 04448 of 2 December 2005, night work between 8 p.m. and 6 a.m. is prohibited to children and young persons under 16 years.

The Committee notes the observation from the CTC and the CUT to the effect that the Convention is not applied in practice and many children work at night in the country. It also notes that, according to the CGT's allegations, child labour increased significantly between 2007 and 2009.

The Committee notes the adoption of Decision No. 01677 of 16 May 2008, section 3 of which lays down the conditions of work prohibited for children and young persons under the age of 18 years on account of the possible risks to their health and safety. It notes with interest that under section 3(6.6), work is prohibited for children and young persons under 18 years of age between 8 p.m. and 6 a.m. However, the Committee notes that pursuant to Article 3(1) of the Convention, the term "night" signifies a period of at least 11 consecutive hours, including the interval between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m. In this regard, the Committee notes that the period provided for in section 3(6.6) of Decision No. 01677 is ten consecutive hours. In addition, the Committee notes that under section 4 of Decision No. 01677, young persons between 15 and 17 years of age who have obtained a technical training qualification from the National Apprenticeship Service (SENA) or institutes accredited for that purpose can be authorized to work in an activity for which they have been trained and may exercise freely this profession, art or occupation, on condition that the contractor respects the provisions of Decrees Nos 1295 of 1994 and 933 of 2003, Decisions Nos 1016 of 1989 and 2346 of 2007, and also Decision No. 584 of 2004 of the Andean Committee for Occupational Safety and Health Authorizations. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the prohibition on night work for children and young persons under 18 years of age covers a period of at least 11 consecutive hours in conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether, under section 4 of Decision No. 01677, young persons between 15 and 17 years of age may be authorized to work at night. If so, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether such authorizations only apply in the exceptional cases provided for in Article 2(2) of the Convention.

Comoros

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 78) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes the comments made by the Workers Confederation of Comoros (CTC) dated 31 August 2011, as well as of the Government's report.

Articles 1(1) and 7 of the Convention. Scope of application and medical certificates of fitness for employment. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that, in the context of the revision of the national labour legislation, all the necessary measures would be examined in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee takes note of the CTC's observation that the Government has still not honoured its commitments to bring its labour legislation into line with the Convention. The CTC also points out that non-industrial occupations are outside the scope of the labour inspectorate's supervision. In its report, the Government indicates that the bill revising the Labour Code will be submitted to the National Assembly for adoption. Noting that the Government has been referring to bringing its national legislation into line with the Convention for many years, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the bill revising the Labour Code will be adopted in the very near future and that its provisions will give effect to Articles 1(1) and 7 of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to send information on any progress made in this respect.

Article 6. Physical and vocational rehabilitation of children and young persons determined unfit for work. In its comments made under the Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77), the Committee noted the Government's intention to take measures, within the framework of the revision of the Labour Code, to ensure that a text or statutory texts complying with the provisions of Article 6 of the Convention were adopted. Noting that the bill to revise the Labour Code has still not been adopted, the Committee expresses the firm hope that, as part of the revision of the national legislation, the necessary measures will be taken with a view to adopting a statutory text that complies with the provisions of Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

Congo

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that, according to ILO statistics for 2000, more than 960,000 children between 10 and 14 years of age (510,000 boys and 450,000 girls) were involved in economic activity. The Committee therefore asked the Government to take steps to improve this situation, especially by the adoption of a national policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report still does not contain any information on the adoption of a national policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. It notes the Government's indication that there are no inspection reports which provide any information on the presumed or actual employment of children in enterprises in Congo during the reporting period. However, the Committee notes that UNICEF statistics for 2005–09 reveal that 25 per cent of Congolese children are involved in child labour. Moreover, the Committee notes that, according to the information on the website of the National Centre for Statistics and Economic Studies (CNSEE), a national household survey (ECOM2) was conducted from February to May 2011. Expressing its concern at the large number of children working below the minimum age in the country, and given the lack of a national policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the adoption and implementation of such a policy as soon as possible. It requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the measures taken in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of ECOM2.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous types of work. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 4 of Order No. 2224 of 24 October 1953, which establishes employment exemptions for young workers, determines the nature of the work and the categories of enterprises prohibited for young persons and sets the age limit of the prohibition, prohibits the employment of young persons under 18 years in certain types of hazardous work and includes a list of such types of work. The Committee drew the Government's attention to the provisions of Paragraph 10(2) of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146), which invites the Government to re-examine periodically and revise as necessary the list of the types of employment or work to which Article 3 of the Convention applies, particularly in the light of advancing scientific and technological knowledge.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is aware of the need to re-examine periodically and revise as necessary the list of the types of employment or work to which Article 3 of the Convention applies. Observing that Order No. 2224 was adopted more than 50 years ago, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether it plans to take measures in the near future to revise the list of types of hazardous work established by Order No. 2224. It requests the Government to provide detailed information in this respect.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, under section 5 of Order No. 2224, the employment of young workers under the age of 16 years in certain hazardous types of work is prohibited. In addition, under the terms of section 7 of the Order, labour and social legislation inspectors may require young workers to undergo a medical examination in order to determine whether the work in which they are employed exceeds their capacities. When it has been proven that the young worker is physically unfit for the work in which he is employed, he must be transferred to a post corresponding to his physical capacities or made redundant without any blame being attached to him. The Committee noted that the condition laid down by Article 3(3) of the Convention to the effect that the health, safety and morals of young persons aged between 16 and 18 years authorized to carry out hazardous work shall be protected, is met by the abovementioned provisions. However, it reminded the Government that Article 3(3) of the Convention also requires that young persons aged between 16 and 18 years shall receive specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee therefore requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to comply with this requirement.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that young persons between 16 and 18 years of age are never permitted to perform hazardous work in enterprises. However, the Committee observes that section 5 of Order No. 2224 prohibits certain hazardous types of work for children under 16 years of age, which implies that such work is permitted for young persons over 16 years of age. The Committee therefore requests the Government to clarify whether Order No. 2224 is still in force. If so, it urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that young persons between 16 and 18 years of age, who are permitted to perform hazardous work, receive specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or similar practices. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's statement that there is child trafficking between Benin and the Congo for the purpose of forcing children to work in Pointe-Noire in trading and domestic work. According to the Government, the children are forced to work all day in harsh conditions by their host families, and are subjected to all kinds of hardships. The Committee noted that sections 345, 354 and 356 of the Penal Code lay down penalties for anyone found guilty of the forcible or fraudulent abduction of persons including young persons under 18 years of age. It requested the Government to indicate to what extent sections 345, 354 and 356 of the Penal Code have been implemented in practice. The Committee requests the Government once again to supply information on the application of sections 345, 354 and 356 of the Penal Code in practice, including, in particular, statistics on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous observations, the Committee noted the Government's statement acknowledging that the trafficking of children between Benin and the Congo for the purpose of forcing children to work in Pointe-Noire in trading and domestic work is contrary to human rights. It also noted that the Government has taken certain measures to curb child trafficking, including: (a) the repatriation by the Consulate of Benin of children who have either been picked up by the national police or removed from families; and (b) the requirement at borders (airport) for minors (young person under 18 years of age) to have administrative authorization to leave the territory of Benin. The Committee asked the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken with regard to the rehabilitation and social integration of children following their withdrawal from labour. It noted that the Government's report does not contain any information on this subject. The Committee requests the Government once again to supply information on the time-bound measures taken to remove young persons under 18 years of age from this worst form of child labour and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to supply information on the impact of these measures.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee noted that, according to the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on the initial report of the Congo of October 2006 (CRC/C/COG/CO/1, paragraph 85), a study of the root causes and repercussions of trafficking is due to be conducted in the country. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the results of this study and to supply a copy of it once it has been prepared.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Night Work of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 79) (ratification: 1954)

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Period during which night work is prohibited. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, even though section 15 of Decision No. 8/2005 of 1 March 2005 issuing the general regulations on labour relations prohibits night work for young persons under 18 years of age, there is no provision that specifies the period during which night work is prohibited.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the prohibition of night work for children and young persons under 18 years of age applies to all types of night work and does not involve a set period of time. However, the Committee again reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(1) of the Convention, young persons under 18 years of age must have a rest period at night of at least 12 consecutive hours, which shall include the interval between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, by prohibiting night work for young persons under 18 years of age for a period of at least 12 consecutive hours, including the interval between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. It requests the Government to keep it informed of any progress made in this respect.

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention (Revised), 1948 (No. 90) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the Government's report. It requests the Government to refer to its comments on the Night Work of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 79).

Cyprus

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention (Revised), 1948 (No. 90) (ratification: 1965)

Articles 3(2) and 4(2) of the Convention. Exemptions from the prohibition on night work for persons of 16 and 18 years. The Committee had previously noted that section 13(1) of the Protection of Young Persons at Work Law No. 48(1) of 2001 provides that work by young persons is prohibited between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m., irrespective of the nature of work. It had noted that subsection (2) of the same provision permits a young person to work between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. for the purposes and under the conditions determined by regulation. Under the terms of section 2 of the Law, the term young person means any person of 15 years of age but under 18 years.

Moreover, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that regulations permitting night work by young persons were under preparation. The Government had acknowledged that the Convention allows work at night only for young persons over 16 years of age. In this regard, the Committee had noted the Government's statement that the Law

No. 48(1) of 2001 was under consideration for amendment and that it would make sure that this issue would be taken into account.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that Law No. 48 (1) of 2001 is being amended and that the Regulations which provide for the conditions under which night work is allowed for young persons is pending before the House of Representatives. The Committee notes the Government's statement that according to the amending Law, section 13(2) will be applicable to young persons of 16 years of age but under 18 years. Observing that the Government has been referring to the proposed regulation and amendment since 2006, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Law amending section 13(2) of the Law No. 48(1) of 2001 and the Regulations prescribing conditions for night work by persons of 16 years of age will be adopted in the near future. It also requests the Government to supply a copy of the Law amending Law No. 48(1) of 2001 and its Regulations as soon as it has been adopted.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously observed that the national legislation only prohibited the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of sexual exploitation, and not for the purpose of labour exploitation. However, the Committee noted the enactment of the Combating of Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons and the Protection of Victims Law of 2007 (Law No. 87(I)/2007), and requested the Government to provide a copy this legislation.

The Committee notes the copy of Law No. 87(I)/2007 submitted with the Government's report. It notes that section 6 prohibits recruiting, transporting, transferring, harbouring or receiving a child (defined in section 2 as all persons under the age of 18) with the intention of his/her exploitation. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 2 of Law No. 87(I)/2007 defines "exploitation" as being the exploitation of labour or services of a person, including forced or compulsory labour or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, including pornography and, in the case of children, the worst forms of child labour according to Convention No. 182.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee previously noted that the relevant national legislation (particularly the Children Law (Cap. 352)) did not protect girls aged 16 to 18 and boys under 18 from being used, procured or offered for prostitution. However, it noted the Government's indication that a reform of the Children Law was ongoing. The Government indicated that the new draft Children Law provides for severe penalties for persons found guilty of causing or encouraging seduction or the sexual exploitation of children (defined in the draft law as boys or girls under the age of 18 years).

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Children Law is in the final stages of being adopted. Observing that the Committee has been raising this issue since 2004, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the revised Children Law will be adopted in the very near future and that it will prohibit the use, procuring and offering of all boys and girls under the age of 18 for the purpose of prostitution. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the Children Law, once adopted.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs was not expressly prohibited. However, it noted the Government's indication that the Anti-Drug Council was promoting a new bill unifying all the legislation related to the prohibition of the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that this legislation has not yet been adopted. In this regard, the Committee recalls that under Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour, as a matter of urgency. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the adoption, in the near future, of legislation prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or similar practices. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 187 of Act No. 09/001 of 10 January 2009 establishes a penalty of penal servitude of ten to 20 years for the enrolment or use of children under 18 years of age in the armed forces and groups and the police. The Committee noted that, according to the report of 9 July 2010 of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (S/2010/369, paragraphs 17–41), 1,593 cases of recruitment of children were reported between October 2008 and December 2009, including 1,235 in 2009. The report of the United Nations Secretary-General also indicated that 42 per cent of the total number of cases of recruitment reported have been attributed to the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC). The Committee also noted with concern that, according to the Secretary-General's report, the number of incidents involving the killing and maiming of children had increased. In addition, a significant increase in the number of abductions of children was also observed over the period covered by the Secretary-General's report, mainly carried out by the Lords' Resistance Army (LRA) but in some cases by the FARDC. The Committee also observed that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 10 February 2009 (CRC/C/COD/CO/2, paragraph 67), expressed grave concern that the State, through its armed forces, bears direct responsibility for violations of the rights of the child and that it had failed to protect children and prevent such violations.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that children under 18 years of age are not recruited into the armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Nevertheless, the Committee notes that, according to the report of 23 April 2011 of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict (A/65/820-S/2011/250, paragraph 27), many children continue to be recruited and remain associated with FARDC units, particularly within former units of the Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP) incorporated into the FARDC. The report also indicates that, of the 1,656 children in the armed forces or groups who escaped or were released in 2010, a large proportion had been recruited to the FARDC (21 per cent) (paragraph 37). Moreover, despite the drop in the number of cases of children recruited into armed forces and groups in 2010, the report points out that former CNDP elements continue to recruit or to threaten to recruit children under 18 years of age from schools in North Kivu (paragraph 85). The Committee also notes that no judicial action has been initiated against the suspected perpetrators of forced recruitment of children, some of whom remain in the command structure of the FARDC (paragraph 88).

Furthermore, physical and sexual violence committed against children by the FARDC, the Congolese National Police and various armed groups continued to be a source of serious concern in 2010. The Committee notes in particular that in 2010, of the 26 recorded cases of killing of children, 13 were attributed to the FARDC. In addition, seven cases of maiming of children and 67 cases of sexual violence against children are alleged to have been perpetrated by FARDC elements during the same period (paragraph 87).

The Committee observes that despite the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 066 of 9 June 2000, concerning the demobilization and reintegration of vulnerable groups present within the fighting forces, and of Act 09/001 of 10 January 2009, which prohibits and penalizes the enrolment and use of children under 18 years of age in armed forces and groups and the police (sections 71 and 187), children under 18 years of age continue to be recruited and forced to join the regular armed forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and armed groups. The Committee expresses deep concern at this situation, especially as the persistence of this worst form of child labour results in other violations of children's rights, such as murder and sexual violence. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children in the ranks of the FARDC and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed groups. With reference to Security Council resolution 1998 of 12 July 2011, which recalls "the responsibilities of States to end impunity and to prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity and other egregious crimes perpetrated against children", the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of any persons, including officers in the regular armed forces, who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict, are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice, pursuant to Act No. 09/001 of 10 January 2009. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions brought and convictions handed down against such persons in its next report.

Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work. Child labour in mines. In its previous comments the Committee noted the statement by the Confederation of Trade Unions of the Congo (CSC) that young persons under 18 years of age are employed in mineral quarries in the provinces of Katanga and East Kasai. It noted that the United Nations Special Rapporteur, in her report of April 2003 on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (E/CN.4/2003/43, paragraph 59), noted that military units are recruiting children for forced labour, especially for the extraction of natural resources. The Committee observed that, although the legislation is in conformity with the Convention on this point, child labour in mines is a problem in practice and it, therefore, asked the Government to supply information on the measures which would be taken by the labour inspectorate to prohibit hazardous work by children in mines.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that action to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspectorate is planned in the context of the formulation and implementation of the National Plan of Action (PAN) for the elimination of child labour by 2020. The report also indicates that the Government has launched consultations with a view to gathering statistics on the application, in practice, of legislation relating to the prohibition on hazardous work in mines for children under 18 years of age. However, the Committee notes the UNICEF statistics included in the Government's report, which indicate that nearly 50,000 children are working in mines in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including 20,000 in the province of Katanga (south-east), 12,000 in Ituri (north-east) and some 11,800 in Kasai (centre). Moreover, the Committee observes that, according to the information in the 2011 report on trafficking in persons, armed groups and the FARDC are recruiting men and children and subjecting them to forced labour for the extraction of minerals. According to the same document, the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO) report of January 2011 reports that a commander of one of the FARDC battalions makes use of the forced labour of children in mines in North Kivu. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the allegations that children under 18 years of age are used, especially by certain elements of FARDC, for the extraction of minerals in conditions similar to slavery and in hazardous conditions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures, as a matter of urgency, to eliminate the forced or hazardous labour of children under 18 years of age in mines. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed on them in practice. The Government is also requested to provide statistics on the application of the legislation in practice and also requests it to provide information on action to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspectorate planned in the context of the PAN.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from such work and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration.

1. Child soldiers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General of 9 July 2010, the number of children released in 2009 more than tripled in comparison with 2008, particularly in the province of North Kivu (S/2010/369, paragraphs 30 and 51–58). Between October 2008 and the end of 2009, a total of 3,180 children (3,004 boys and 176 girls) left the ranks of the armed forces and groups or fled and were admitted to reintegration programmes. However, the Committee noted with concern that on many occasions the FARDC denied access to the camps to child protection institutions seeking to verify the presence of children in FARDC units and that the commanders refused to release children. The Committee also observed that there were many obstacles to effective reintegration, such as the constant insecurity and the continuing presence of former recruiters in the same region. The Committee further noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 10 February 2009 (CRC/C/COD/CO/2, paragraph 72), expressed concern at the fact that no provision has been made to assist several thousand child victims recruited or used in hostilities with rehabilitation and reintegration and that some of these children have been re-recruited for want of alternatives or assistance with demobilization. According to the report of the Secretary-General of 9 July 2010, girls associated with the armed forces and groups (around 15 per cent of the total number of children) rarely have access to reintegration programmes, with only 7 per cent receiving assistance through national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the results achieved regarding the demobilization of child soldiers by the new structure of the Unit for the Implementation of the National Programme for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (UE-PNDDR). It observes that more than 30,000 children have been separated from the armed forces and groups since the launch of the programme in 2004, including nearly 3,000 in 2009 and 2010. Moreover, 6,704 children removed from the armed forces and groups (1,940 girls and 4,764 boys) received support in 2010. However, the Committee observes that, according to the report of 23 April 2011 of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, only 1,656 children recruited to the armed forces or groups escaped or were released in 2010 (A/65/820-S/2011/250, paragraph 37). Of these, the vast majority fled and only a small minority were released by child protection institutions (paragraph 38). The Committee also notes with regret that, according to the aforementioned report, the Government has not been forthcoming in engaging with the United Nations on an action plan to end the recruitment and use of children by the FARDC (paragraph 27). The Committee further observes that, although more than 50 screening attempts were carried out by MONUSCO aimed at demobilizing children under 18 years of age who had been recruited to the FARDC, only five children were demobilized owing to the fact that FARDC troops were not made available for screening by MONUSCO. The Committee also notes that a large number of children released in 2010 stated that they had been recruited several times (paragraph 27) and that some 80 children who had been reunited with their families returned to the transit centres alone in North Kivu during November 2010 for fear of being re-recruited (paragraph 85). The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts and take effective, time-bound measures to remove children from armed groups and forces and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, giving special attention to the demobilization of girls. It expresses the firm hope that the Government will adopt a time-bound plan of action in the very near future, in collaboration with MONUSCO, to put a stop to the recruitment of children under 18 years of age into the regular armed forces and to ensure their demobilization and reintegration. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of child soldiers removed from armed forces and groups and reintegrated through appropriate assistance with rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on this matter in its next report.

2. Children working in mines. The Committee previously noted that a number of projects for the prevention of child labour in mines and the reintegration of these children through education were being implemented, aimed at covering a total of 12,000 children, of whom 4,000 were to be covered by prevention measures and 8,000 were to be removed from labour with a view to their reintegration through vocational training.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that efforts are being made to remove children working in mines from this worst form of child labour. The Government also indicates in its report that more than 13,000 children have been removed from three mining and quarrying locations in Katanga, East Kasai and Ituri as part of the work of the NGOs Save the Children and Solidarity Centre. These children were then placed in formal and non-formal education structures and also in apprenticeship programmes. However, the report also indicates that, in view of the persistence of the problem, much work remains to be done. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts to prevent children under 18 years of age from working in mines and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal from these worst forms of child labour and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or contemplated in the context of the PAN and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Dominica

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1983)

Article 2(1) and (3) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment and age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously requested the Government to prohibit the employment of persons under 15 years of age, in conformity with the minimum age for admission to employment specified by the Government upon ratification of the Convention.

In this regard, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the Education Act (No. 11) provides for a minimum age for admission to work of 16 years of age: this Act prohibits employing a child of school age during the school year (pursuant to section 46(1)) and defines compulsory school age as 5 to 16 years of age (pursuant to section 1). The Committee also notes that section 46 of the Education Act of 1997 establishes a penalty of a fine not exceeding $2,000 for any person or corporation who employs a child of compulsory school age, as well as every director and officer of such a corporation who authorizes, permits or acquiesces in such contravention. Pursuant to section 45, any parent who neglects or refuses to cause a child of compulsory school age to attend school commits an offence and is liable to a fine not exceeding $1,000. The Committee further notes that the Education Act of 1997 provides for the designation of school attendance counsellors to assist with the enforcement of compulsory attendance (section 38), and that these counsellors may enter premises where it is believed that a child of compulsory school age is employed in contravention of the Act (section 40).

Article 2(2). Raising the initially specified age for admission to employment or work. Noting that the Government initially specified a minimum age of 15 years upon ratification, the Committee observes that the Education Act of 1997 provides for a minimum age for admission to work of 16 years of age. In this regard, the Committee takes the opportunity to draw the Government's attention to the provisions of Article 2(2) of the Convention which provides that any Member having ratified this Convention may subsequently notify the Director-General of the International Labour Office, by a new declaration, that it has raised the minimum age that it had previously specified. This allows the age fixed by the national legislation to be harmonized with that provided for at the international level. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would consider sending a declaration of this nature to the Office.

Article 3(1). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, according to section 7(1) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act, no young person (under 18) shall be employed or work during the night in any public or private industrial undertaking, other than an undertaking in which only members of the same family are employed. However, the Committee observes that there is no other provision which prohibits the employment of young persons in work which is likely to jeopardize their health, safety or morals. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the performance of hazardous work is prohibited for all persons under 18 years of age.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report submitted under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), in 2009 that the social partners will be consulted for the determination of the list of types of hazardous work. Recalling that, pursuant to Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made with regard to the determination of the list of types of hazardous work to be prohibited for persons under 18 years.

Article 7(1). Light work. Minimum age for admission to light work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that, while the Education Act of 1997 prohibits the employment of persons under 16 during the school year, section 46 (3) permits the employment of a student over 14 years of age during vacation periods of the school year. The Committee observes that this minimum age of 14 years for admission to light work activities is in conformity with Article 7(1).

Article 7(3). Determination of types of light work. The Committee notes that while section 46(3) permits children from the age of 14 to be employed during school vacations (i.e. in light work), but observes that there does not appear to be a determination of the types of light work permitted for these children. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine what is light work and shall prescribe the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to determine the hours during which and the conditions in which light work may be undertaken by children above the age of 14 during vacations from school, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee previously noted that section 8(1) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Ordinance provided for the keeping of registers or lists by the employer of all persons employed who are less than 16 years of age. In this regard, the Committee recalled that Article 9(3) of the Convention requires the keeping of such registers for all persons who are less than 18 years of age. Noting an absence of information on this point in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that registers be kept and made available by the employer in respect of all children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report submitted under Convention No. 182 in 2009 that measures will be taken to broaden the existing mandate of the national inspectorate in order to cover child labour issues, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts from the reports of inspections services and information on the number and nature of violations detected involving children and young persons.

The Committee encourages the Government to take into consideration the Committee's comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to consider technical assistance from the ILO to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

Dominican Republic

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comment. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2(1) and 3(1) of the Convention. Thorough medical supervision up to the age of 18 years. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 248 of Act No. 16-92 of 31 May 1992, approving the Labour Code (hereinafter the Labour Code), provides that any minor under 16 years of age wishing to carry out any kind of work must undergo a thorough medical examination. It also noted that sections 52 and 53 of Regulation No. 258-93 of 12 October 1993 issuing regulations under the Labour Code (hereinafter, Regulation No. 258-93 of 12 October 1993), provide that working minors shall be under medical supervision until they reach the age of 16 years, as envisaged in section 17 of the Labour Code. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to raise the age set out in the Labour Code and in Regulation No. 258-93 of 12 October 1993 from 16 to 18 years so that the above texts are brought into harmony with the provisions of the Convention.

With regard to the Labour Code, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government according to which a report by a consultant has concluded that the age established by the Labour Code should be raised. With reference to Regulation No. 258-93 of 12 October 1993, it noted the Government's indication that a resolution has already raised the age from 16 to 18 years. The Committee reminded the Government that, under the terms of Articles 2(1) and 3(1) of the Convention, children and young persons under 18 years of age may not be admitted to employment by an industrial enterprise unless they have been found to be fit for the work on which they are to be employed by a thorough medical examination. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to bring the Labour Code and Regulation No. 258-93 of 12 October 1993 into conformity with the Convention and to raise from 16 to 18 years the age established for thorough medical supervision. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the resolution which is reported to have raised the age established for thorough medical supervision from 16 to 18 years.

Article 4(1). Medical examinations and re-examinations for fitness for employment until at least the age of 21 years. The Committee noted previously that, under the terms of section 53 of Regulation No. 258-93 of 12 October 1993, the medical examination only applies to those under 16 years of age and has to be renewed annually or every three months where the work involves high risks for the health of the young person. The Committee recalled that, by virtue of Article 4(1) of the Convention, in occupations which involve high health risks for children or young persons, the medical examination and re-examination for fitness for employment shall be required until at least the age of 21 years. The Committee noted that the Government did not provide any information on this subject. It therefore once again requests it to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation so as to provide that, where the work performed by young persons involves high health risks, medical supervision shall be required until at least the age of 21 years.

Article 4(2). Specification of the occupations in which a medical examination for fitness for employment shall be required until at least the age of 21 years. The Committee noted that the Government did not provide any information on this point. It therefore once again requests it to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to specify the occupations or categories of occupations in which a medical examination for fitness for employment shall be required until at least the age of 21 years, or to empower an appropriate authority to specify such occupations.

Article 6(2). Determination of the measures for vocational guidance and physical and vocational rehabilitation of children and young persons found to be unsuited to work. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report on this point, the Committee reminded the Government that, under the terms of Article 6(2), of the Convention, cooperation shall be established between the labour, health, educational and social services concerned, and effective liaison shall be maintained between the services. It once again requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

Article 6(3). Work permits or medical certificates. The Committee noted the model certificate of fitness for employment for minors provided by the Government. It requests the Government to indicate whether this model is also used for children and young persons whose fitness for employment is not clearly determined and who have to either: (a) work for a limited period at the expiration of which the young worker will be required to undergo re-examination; or (b) work under special conditions of employment.

Article 7. Keeping the medical certificate available to labour inspectors. In its previous comments, the Committee reminded the Government that, under the terms of this Article of the Convention, the employer is required to file and keep available to labour inspectors either the medical certificate for fitness for employment or the work permit or workbook. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests it to indicate the measures taken to give effect to this provision of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide general information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice including, for instance, extracts from the reports of the inspection services and information concerning the number and nature of the infringements reported.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

El Salvador

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1996)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that 42,770 children benefited from Phase I of the Time-bound Programme (TBP) between September 2001 and September 2006. Of these, 12,967 were removed from child labour and 29,803 were prevented from working. These children also benefited from various services, including formal and non-formal schooling and vocational training, and their parents had access to income-generating activities. Phase II of the TBP commenced in October 2006. The objective of the second Phase was to implement programmes of action to eliminate child labour, including its worst forms, for example in the sugar cane and fishing industries and hazardous types of work in markets. The Committee also noted the results of the survey conducted by the General Directorate of Statistics and Census in 2006 according to which 205,009 children aged between 5 and 17 years were engaged in work.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that Phase II of the TBP ended in December 2009. In total, 13,012 children and young persons benefited from the second Phase of the programme. Of the beneficiaries, 3,489 were removed from child labour and 9,523 were prevented from being engaged in work. The Committee also noted the adoption by the Government, in collaboration with ILO-IPEC, of a “roadmap” to free El Salvador from child labour and its worst forms. The roadmap constitutes a national strategic framework based on the achievement of the objective set out in Decent work in the Americas: An agenda for the Hemisphere, namely the elimination of the worst forms of child labour by 2015 and the eradication of child labour in all its forms by 2020.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that labour inspections carried out between 2009 and June 2010 resulted in the removal of 171 children from their work and the guarantee that they do not return to work through the implementation of a system of regular monitoring. It also notes the detailed results of the household survey of 2008 and 2009 conducted by the General Directorate of Statistics and Census, which were provided in the Government's report. According to the results obtained in 2008, a total of 190,525 children between the ages of 5 and 17 worked in the country, of whom 71.8 per cent were boys and 28.2 per cent were girls. According to the results of the 2009 survey, child labour fell by 0.9 per cent and now concerns a total of 188,884 children and young persons between 5 and 17 years of age. Children aged between 5 and 14 years represent 50 per cent of the total number of working children. The great majority of them work in rural areas, in agriculture, trade and domestic services, and are not paid.

The Committee welcomes the progress achieved and the efforts made by the Government for the abolition of child labour. Nevertheless, it observes that, even though the number of children and young persons working in the country has fallen in recent years, half of the children who work in the country are below the minimum age for admission to employment, namely 14 years. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to combat child labour and requests it to continue providing information on the measures adopted and the results achieved in the context of the implementation of the Decent Work Country Programme and the roadmap with a view to ensuring the progressive elimination of child labour. It also invites the Government to continue providing detailed information on the application of the Convention in practice including, for example, statistical data on the employment of children and young persons under the minimum age for admission to employment, disaggregated by sex and age group, as well as extracts from the reports of the inspection services.

Article 2(3). Compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted the detailed information provided by the Government on the programmes of action implemented by the Ministry of Education in the context of the Plan 2021. It noted that these programmes included the adoption of various measures to improve the quality of education and increase school attendance rates, particularly for marginalized children or those from very poor families in rural and urban areas. Moreover, measures were also taken to promote equality of opportunity in access to education, not only between the sexes, but also for those who require specialized education or who have a disability. It noted that, according to the Government, these programmes benefited over 1,857,246 students in 2007.

The Committee notes the Government's indication concerning the implementation of the Social Education Plan 2009–14. According to the Government, the Plan is intended to encourage the participation of children in primary and secondary education and addresses, among others, children engaged in work. In this respect, the Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that children engaged in work are exempt from enrolment fees when they participate in catch up courses. It also notes that the issue of child labour has been included in the national teaching programme for primary and secondary school with a view to raising the awareness of schoolchildren to this problem.

The Committee further notes that, in its periodic report submitted to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) (CRC/C/SLV/3–4, paragraph 240, 23 July 2009), the Government refers to the implementation of the Accelerated Elementary Education Programme, which caters to children living in marginal rural and urban areas. According to the information contained in the periodic report, 3,175 students from grades 2–6 of elementary education (8–12 years) are reported to have benefited from the programme in 2006.

The Committee notes that, according to the 2008 statistics of the UNESCO Institute for Statistics, the net school attendance rate in primary school (7–12 years) rose slightly over the past ten years to achieve 95 per cent for girls and 94 per cent for boys. Nevertheless, although the net school attendance rate also increased for secondary school (13–18 years), only 56 per cent of girls and 54 per cent of boys were enrolled in secondary education in 2008, despite the fact that the transition rate from primary to secondary education is 92 per cent. The Committee also notes that, according to the UNESCO 2010 Education for All Global Monitoring Report, entitled Reaching the marginalized, El Salvador is in an intermediate position in relation to the achievement of the objective of Education for All, particularly due to the low school survival rate in the country. It also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 17 February 2010 (CRC/C/SLV/CO/3–4, paragraph 68), expressed concern at the low rate of school attendance of adolescents in secondary education, as well as the high level of school drop-outs.

While noting the increase in the net school attendance rates at the primary and secondary levels in recent years, and the programmes of action implemented by the Ministry of Education to raise school attendance rates, the Committee observes that the school enrolment rate at the secondary level is still low. Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee once again encourages the Government to renew its efforts to improve the education system in the country and requests it to continue taking measures with a view to raising the school attendance rate and reducing the drop-out rate, particularly in secondary education. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress achieved in this respect and on the results achieved in the context of Plan 2021 and the Social Education Plan 2009–14.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the formulation of a preliminary draft of a Bill on apprenticeship by the National Labour Modernization Commission (CONAMOL), which is composed of Government bodies, employers' and workers' organizations, representatives of universities and NGOs. It noted that, under the terms of section 3 of the draft Bill, the age for entry into apprenticeship is 14 years and that the performance of hazardous types of work in the context of apprenticeship is prohibited. Furthermore, according to the information provided by the Government concerning the conditions of apprenticeship, apprentices will have to be paid and benefit from social security, and apprenticeship should not interfere with compulsory schooling.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report according to which the CONAMOL was abolished on 31 May 2009. It also notes that the draft Bill on apprenticeship was rejected by the legislative committee responsible for examining the Bill before its submission to the Legislative Assembly. Nevertheless, the Committee observes that an Act on the comprehensive protection of children and young persons was adopted on 26 March 2009. It notes with satisfaction that, under the terms of section 59 of the Act, the minimum age for admission to employment or work is set at 14 years, including for apprentices. The Act also provides that the hours of work of apprentices shall take into account the attendance of apprentices at school or in training centres and that the activities performed shall be compatible with the physical, psychological, moral and cultural development of young persons (section 62). Section 63 also provides that apprentices shall benefit from the social protection and social security system.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that the provisions of the national legislation did not prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for illicit activities. In this respect, it noted that, in the context of the implementation of the National Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2006–09), the principal texts of the national legislation applicable to the worst forms of child labour would be revised so as to reinforce the protection of children in this field.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that, in accordance with Decree No. 459 of 20 October 2010 amending section 345 of the Penal Code, the procurement of minors for criminal purposes in groups, associations or organizations, or the use of minors as instruments to break the law, is punishable by a sentence of between 15 and 20 years imprisonment.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1). Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children for sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication by the Inter-Union Commission of El Salvador that increasing numbers of boys and girls are sexually exploited in El Salvador. It also noted the indication by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU), now the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), that the trafficking of persons for sexual exploitation, particularly in forced prostitution rings involving children, is a serious problem in the country, with child victims being brought from Mexico, Guatemala and other countries in the region for prostitution. The ITUC also indicated that an internal trafficking network exists. The Committee further noted the amendments made to sections 169, 170 and 367-B of the Penal Code. It noted with interest the detailed information on the surveys conducted and the sanctions applied in relation to the sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation between August 2006 and December 2007. The Committee noted that persons found guilty of the sale and trafficking of children for sexual exploitation were sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from 14 to 26 years.

The Committee notes the statistics provided in the Government's report on the investigations conducted and the convictions obtained in relation to the sale and trafficking of persons. It notes that, between 2008 and 30 April 2010, 21 cases of trafficking of persons were under investigation, six cases were examined by the courts and public hearings were held in three cases. However, the Committee observes that the Government does not provide statistics disaggregated according to whether the victims are adults or under 18 years of age. The Government, nevertheless, provides two examples in its report of cases of the sale and trafficking of minors, in relation to which those persons found to be guilty were convicted to sentences of four and 15 years imprisonment, respectively.

The Committee notes the statistics provided in the Government's written reply of 7 February 2009 to the list of issues raised by the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in relation to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (CRC/C/OPSC/SLV/Q/1/Add.1, pages 5–6). It observes that, between 2007 and 2009, 220 children and young persons who were victims of trafficking were intercepted at the frontiers of El Salvador, the great majority of whom were young women (213), of whom 190 were aged between 12 and 18 years. However, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 17 February 2010 on the third and fourth periodic reports of El Salvador (CRC/C/SLV/CO/3-4, paragraph 82), expressed concern at the low level of prosecutions and convictions for trafficking-related crimes vis-à-vis the reported cases. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons engaged in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age for sexual exploitation are carried out. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide information on the application of the provisions regarding this worst form of child labour, including statistics on the number of convictions and penal sanctions applied in cases of the sale and trafficking of persons under 18 years of age. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from such labour. Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children for that purpose. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the detailed information provided in the Government's report on the activities and results achieved in the context of the National Plan to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (2006–09) and the Strategic Plan to Combat the Trafficking of Persons (2008–12). It notes in particular the awareness raising and information activities carried out among young persons and the population in general, the training programmes intended to strengthen the capacities of the police and security forces, the inter institutional coordination measures and the measures for the protection of victims. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Institute for the Development of Children and Young Persons (ISNA) is entrusted with the coordination of the Regional Centre for Sheltering Victims of Trafficking. With a view to the rehabilitation and social integration of victims, the Regional Centre offers the services of a legal officer, a psychologist, a social worker, three educators and a teacher. In addition, the capacity of the Centre has been increased from 15 to 30 persons. According to the statistics provided in the Government's report, 131 children and young persons under 18 years of age who were victims of trafficking received shelter in the Regional Centre between 2008 and September 2009. The Committee also notes that, according to the final ILO–IPEC report of March 2010 on the implementation of Phase II of the Time-bound Programme (TBP), over the total duration of the project (30 September 2006 – 31 December 2009), 400 children, including 234 girls and 166 boys, were prevented from being engaged in commercial sexual exploitation and benefited from educational services. However, the Committee observes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 12 February 2010 on the application of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (CRC/C/OPSC/SLV/CO/1, paragraph 10), noted with concern that the time-frame for the implementation of the strategic plan against the commercial sexual exploitation of children had expired and had not yet been renewed. Furthermore, no specific budget has been allocated to carry out the plan, nor any monitoring or evaluation system established. Noting that the National Plan to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children ended in 2009, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to protect persons under 18 years of age from commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims removed from this situation and the number of those who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration pursuant to the implementation of the National Plan to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (2006–09) and the Strategic Plan to Combat the Trafficking of Persons (2008–12). It also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the National Plan to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic workers. The Committee previously noted the indication by the Inter-Union Commission of El Salvador that ever-increasing numbers of boys and girls were becoming victims of hazardous working conditions. It also indicated that the practice of “handing over” boys and girls to families still exists in the country. These children are then used as domestic servants and work long hours without adequate remuneration and without attending school. It noted the rapid assessment study on domestic work done by children which was published by ILO-IPEC in February 2002, according to which 93.6 per cent of children working in domestic service are girls.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Act for the comprehensive protection of children and young persons (LEPINA), adopted on 26 March 2009, provides for protection measures which apply, among others, to children working in domestic service. Section 64 of the LEPINA provides that only persons over 16 years of age may work in domestic service. However, the Committee notes that, according to the information contained in a report on the worst forms of child labour in El Salvador of 15 December 2010, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, over 16,000 children work in domestic service in the country, of whom 15 per cent are reported to have begun before the age of 15 years. It also observes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 17 February 2010 on the third and fourth periodic reports of El Salvador (CRC/C/SLV/CO/3-4, paragraph 76), expressed concern that girls are often employed informally in domestic work under very difficult and degrading conditions. Considering that children working in domestic service are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour, paying particular attention to girls. It requests the Government to take specific measures for the provision of the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of these children from hazardous forms of work and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. Finally, it requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures adopted in this respect and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ethiopia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the data from the 2001 National Child Labour Survey indicating that 15.5 million children (84.5 per cent of the child population) were engaged in economic activities, and 12.6 million of these children (81.2 per cent) were under the age of 15. The Committee also noted the information in National Labour Force Survey of 2004–05 (NLFS) that 46.4 per cent of boys and 35 per cent of girls in rural areas, between the ages of 5 and 14, did not attend school and were engaged only in economic activity. The Committee further noted that the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 1 November 2006, expressed deep concern at the prevalence of child labour among young children including those as young as five (CRC/C/ETH/CO/3, paragraph 71). Nonetheless, the Committee noted that one of the six main components of the Government’s “National Plan of Action for Children 2003–10 and beyond” (NPA for Children) was to reduce child labour.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that, pursuant to the NPA for Children, a draft “National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2010–14” (NPA on WFCL) was prepared. The Government indicates that procedures, protocols and guidelines were developed to ensure the practical applicability of the NPA on WFCL, and that this has been tested through a pilot project. The Government states that these two NPA’s provide a framework to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that the celebration of both Children’s Day and the World Day against Child Labour served to raise awareness on child labour issues. The Committee further notes the Government’s statement that, as the number of children attending school (both in rural and urban areas) is increasing, the likelihood of children under 14 being engaged in economic activities is decreasing. The Government also states that it is implementing the Convention to the extent that its capacity permits. Lastly, the Committee notes the information in the ILO Decent Work Country Programme for Ethiopia (2009–12) that this Programme includes technical support for the drafting of sectoral child labour action plans as part of ongoing technical cooperation programmes, in addition to providing support to the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs and social partners to develop a national child labour policy. While noting the constraints faced by the Government, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat child labour through the effective implementation of the NPA on Children and the NPA on WFCL. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken within the framework of these two NPA’s, to ensure that, in practice, children under the minimum age of 14 do not work. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, particularly with regard to reducing the number of working children under the minimum age.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. The Committee previously observed that the provisions of Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 do not cover work performed outside of an employment relationship. It also noted the information from the NLFS that approximately 1.57 per cent of economically active children (approximately 139,404 children between the ages of 5 and 14) were self-employed. The Committee further noted the Government’s acknowledgement that the labour legislation did not cover children who work on their own account, but that measures would be taken in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the various social measures it has taken which target children are meant to contribute towards the reduction of children engaged in work on a self-employed basis. The Government indicates that, in addition to the NPA on Children, it is implementing an Orphan and Vulnerable Children Programme, a poverty reduction programme and that it is providing educational, health and sanitation services. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that it is committed to improving the lives of children, including those working on their own account, and that ILO support is important in this regard. While taking due note of this information, the Committee observes the information in the Decent Work Country Programme (2009–12) that the majority of working children work in agriculture and in various sectors of the urban informal economy. The Committee also notes the information from the NLFS, that only 2.14 per cent of working children are in formal labour relationships. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and that it covers all types of employment or work, whether under a labour relationship or not, and whether it is remunerated or not. It therefore requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that children working on their own account, in agriculture and in the urban informal economy benefit from the protection of the Convention. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that the CRC, in its 1 November 2006 concluding observations, expressed serious concern that primary education in Ethiopia was neither free nor compulsory, and that net enrolment remained very low (CRC/C/ETH/CO/3, paragraph 63). The Committee also noted that, according to the NLFS, 36.3 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 14 engaged only in economic activity and did not attend school. However, the Committee also noted the Government's indication that primary school drop-out rates had been reduced and that there had been an increase in enrolment rates at the primary and secondary levels.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has given priority to improving the education system, and has increased the funding to this sector from 16.7 per cent of its total budgetary allocation (in 2004–05) to 22.8 per cent (in 2008–09). The Government also indicates that it has significantly increased the number of schools at the primary and secondary levels between 2003 and 2009, in addition to reducing the primary pupil-to-teacher ratio. The Government further indicates that the net enrolment rate for primary education has increased from 68.5 per cent (in 2004–05) to 83.4 per cent (in 2007–08). Moreover, the Committee notes the information from UNESCO's Education for All Global Monitoring Report of 2011 that the total number of out-of-school children of primary school age has decreased significantly from 6,481,000 children in 1999 to 2,732,000 children in 2008. However, the Committee notes the Government's statement that, while primary education is free of charge, the age of completion of compulsory schooling will be determined by the level of development in the country.

While taking due note of the Government's efforts to strengthen the functioning of the education system, the Committee notes the Government's indication that while education is free at the primary level, it is not compulsory. In this regard, the Committee observes that there remain a significant number of children under the minimum age who are not attending, or who have dropped out of school. Recalling that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee encourages the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of its efforts to strengthen the education system, to provide for compulsory education up to the minimum age of admission to employment of 14 years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 3. Hazardous work. The Committee previously observed that the decree issued by the Minister of Labour and Social Affairs of 2 September 1997 concerning the prohibition of work for young workers, (and containing a list of types of prohibited hazardous work) did not apply to persons who carry out such activities in the course of professional education in vocational centres. It also noted that, while section 89(4) of Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 prohibits young workers (persons between 14 and 18 years) from engaging in work which endangers their life or health, section 89(5) thereof specifies that this prohibition does not apply to young workers following courses in vocational schools. The Committee therefore observed that workers between the ages of 14 and 18 were not prohibited from engaging in hazardous work while they were following courses in vocational schools.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it plans to consult with its social partners and other stakeholders to review the directive concerning the prohibition of work for young workers. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to Article 3(1) of the Convention, which states that the minimum age of admission to hazardous work shall not be less than 18 years. Additionally, the Committee reminds the Government that the exception outlined in Article 3(3) of the Convention provides that national laws or regulations may authorize hazardous work for young persons over the age of 16 (following consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned) provided that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee therefore urges the Government to consider Article 3(1) and (3) of the Convention during its upcoming review of the directive concerning the prohibition of work for young persons. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the review of the directive results in a prohibition on young persons under 18 years of age who are following courses in vocational schools (or under 16 years under the specific conditions set forth in Article 3(3)) from carrying out hazardous work.

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Medical examination for fitness for employment. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 3(1) and (3), of Decision No. 266 of 17 April 1998, concerning a number of social measures, provided that children over 14 years of age who worked should undergo a medical examination with an occupational physician before being hired or, at the latest, before the end of the trial period following hiring. The Committee also noted that section 24(1) of Decision No. 50/CP of 10 May 1989 on occupational medicine provided that all employees should undergo a medical examination before being hired or, at the latest, before the end of the trial period following hiring. In its report, the Government indicated that all employees were required to undergo a medical examination before being hired. However, in order to maintain a certain flexibility, particularly because of constraints in respect of availability of the Occupational Inter-Enterprise Service (SMIT), established under the Social Protection Fund of New Caledonia (CAFAT), this examination may be carried out right up until the end of the trial period. In this regard, the Government indicated that, since the workers involved were young persons between 14 and 16 years of age who could only be employed during school holidays, the trial period could not exceed a period of one day per week, or, for a two-month contract, eight days. According to the Government, the shortness of this trial period, together with the labour inspectorate's verification that the working conditions of the young employee complied with the constraints imposed by the regulations in respect of the type of work he might perform, gives full effect to the medical examination requirement. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application of Decision No. 266 and Decision No. 50 to determine whether the possibility of carrying out the medical examination for fitness for employment at the latest before the end of the trial period following hiring, occurs frequently in practice.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it does not have any information on the activity of the SMIT concerning the medical examination of young persons. Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children and young persons under 18 years of age shall not be admitted to employment by an industrial undertaking unless they have been found fit for the work by a thorough medical examination before being hired, in accordance with Article 2(1) of the Convention, and not after they have been hired as apparently authorized by the national legislation. It requests the Government to send information on the measures taken in this respect in its next report.

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 78)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Medical examination. See under the Medical Examination of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1946 (No. 77).

Article 7(2)(a). Children engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the national legislation included no specific provisions for the application of the system of medical examinations for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents in itinerant trading or any other occupation carried out in the streets or in a public place.

The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government's report, no development has occurred or is envisaged in this area. The Committee reminds the Government once again that, pursuant to Article 7(2)(a) of the Convention, measures of identification should be adopted to ensure the application of system of medical examinations for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents in itinerant trading or in any other occupation carried out in the streets or in places to which the public have access (the person concerned must, for instance, be in possession of a document mentioning the medical examination). Noting that it has been raising this issue for a number of years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as soon as possible, to determine the measures of identification to ensure the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents in itinerant trading or in any other occupation carried in the streets or in a public place, as well as on other methods of monitoring applied to ensure a strict application of the Convention, in accordance with Article 7(2) of the Convention.

Gabon

Minimum Age (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 123) (ratification: 1968)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that Gabon ratified the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), on 25 October 2010 and set a minimum age for admission to employment or work of 16 years, or an age that is lower than the one specified in the Convention for any types of employment or work which by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of young persons. The Committee however notes with satisfaction that, under the terms of section 177 of the Labour Code, as amended by Ordinance No. 018/PR/2010 of 25 February 2010, the types of work considered to be the worst forms of child labour, including work performed underground or in confined spaces, are prohibited for children and young persons under 18 years of age. The Committee accordingly draws the Government's attention to the fact that a formal declaration specifying the application of Article 3 of Convention No. 138 to underground work would result in the immediate denunciation of the present Convention. In view of the above, the Committee encourages the Government to envisage the possibility of communicating a declaration specifying that Article 3 of Convention No. 138 applies to underground work, thereby resulting in the denunciation of the present Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 124) (ratification: 1968)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under the terms of section 207 of the Labour Code, the initial medical examination prior to recruitment was only compulsory for children under 18 years of age and not, as envisaged by the Convention, for persons under 21 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that it undertakes to take into account the requirement to make the initial medical examination prior to recruitment compulsory for workers under 21 years of age in the framework of the adoption of a draft Decree to update Order No. 3773 of 25 March 1954 on the organization and operation of medical services. It also notes that, under the terms of section 178 of the Labour Code, as amended by Ordinance No. 018/PR/2010 of 25 February 2010, labour inspectors may require a medical examination for fitness for employment of children and young persons up to the age of 18 years and up to the age of 21 years for types of work which involve high health risks. The Committee nevertheless observes that the medical examination prior to recruitment for young persons of 21 years of age is still not compulsory. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the draft Decree will be adopted in the near future so as to give full effect to this provision of the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Article 3(2). X-ray film of the lungs. The Committee has been emphasizing for a number of years that the national legislation in Gabon does not contain any provision requiring an X-ray film of the lungs on the occasion of the initial medical examination and it expressed the hope that the Government would envisage the inclusion in the national legislation of a provision to this effect.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft Decree to update Order No. 3773 of 25 March 1954 on the organization and operation of medical services will take into account the requirement of an X-ray film of the lungs during the initial medical examination and also, if that is considered necessary from a medical point of view, during re-examinations. Observing that it has been raising this matter for many years, the Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that an X-ray film of the lungs is required during the initial medical examination of any person under 21 years of age with a view to their employment or work in underground mines, as well as, if considered necessary from the medical point of view, during subsequent re-examinations. In this respect, it expresses the firm hope that the draft Decree will be adopted in the near future and it requests the Government to continue providing information in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guatemala

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1990)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the study entitled Understanding child labour in Guatemala, carried out in 2000 by the National Statistical Institute, around 507,000 boys and girls aged between 7 and 14 years were engaged in work in Guatemala. The agricultural sector was the branch of economic activity with the most child workers (62 per cent), followed by commerce (16.1 per cent), manufacturing (10.7 per cent), services (6.1 per cent) and construction (3.1 per cent). It noted that the Special Labour Inspectors Unit of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare formulated a project in 2006 with a view to monitoring the application of the provisions of the Labour Code and the Act on the comprehensive protection of children and young persons of 2003. It also noted that a public policy for the full protection of children and young persons and an Action Plan on Children and Young Persons (2004–15) had been adopted.

The Committee notes the results of the study on living conditions in Guatemala in 2006 provided in the Government's report. According to the results of this survey, it is estimated that 528,000 children between the ages of 7 and 14 years were engaged in work in the country in 2006. In addition, of the 966,361 children and young persons between 5 and 17 years of age engaged in an economic activity, 7.7 per cent were between 5 and 9 years of age and 47 per cent between 10 and 14. Accordingly, nearly two-thirds of the children and young persons under 17 years of age who work in the country are between 5 and 14 years of age. Most of these children are indigenous boys from rural areas of the country. The economic sectors most affected by child labour are agriculture, stock-raising, hunting, forestry and fishing, the commercial sector and manufacturing. The great majority of children are unpaid (95 per cent of 5–9 year olds and 76.6 per cent of 10–14 year olds) and work more than 20 hours a week. Furthermore, nearly 20 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 9 years who work and 30 per cent of those aged 10–14 do not go to school.

The Committee also notes the statistics provided in the Government's report concerning the cases of child labour detected by labour inspectors in 2009 and 2010. It observes that the labour inspection services identified three children under 14 years of age engaged in work during inspections during 2009, and none in 2010. Nevertheless, the Committee notes that, according to the information contained in a report on the worst forms of child labour in Guatemala of 15 December 2010, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, only eight of the 250 existing labour inspectors in the country have received training on child labour.

The Committee however notes that, according to the information provided in the Government's report, Guatemala has formulated, in collaboration with ILO–IPEC, a “roadmap” to ensure that Guatemala is a country free from child labour and its worst forms. The roadmap constitutes a strategic national framework based on the achievement of the objectives set out in Decent work in the Americas: An agenda for the Hemisphere, namely the elimination of the worst forms of child labour by 2015 and the eradication of child labour in all its forms by 2020. It also notes that, according to the information contained in the ILO–IPEC report of June 2010 on the project entitled “Elimination of Child Labour in Latin America (Phase III)”, the 2010–12 programme for the implementation of the roadmap has been prepared and is awaiting approval. The Committee also notes the establishment by the Government of Guatemala of the programme *Mi Familia Progres*a with a view to promoting education as a means of contributing to the eradication of child labour through the provision of cash benefits conditional upon the school attendance of children. The strategic document for the implementation of the roadmap envisages extending the coverage of this programme with a view to covering 800,000 children between the ages of 6 and 15 years by 2015.

The Committee takes due note of the measures adopted by the Government for the abolition of child labour. However, it observes that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 25 October 2010 on the third and fourth periodic reports of Guatemala (CRC/C/GTM/CO/3–4, paragraph 19), regretted that the implementation of the various initiatives to address violations of children's rights is insufficient and suffers from a lack of adequate evaluation due to institutional weaknesses and the inadequate allocation of resources. Once again expressing concern at the number and situation of children under 14 years of age who work in Guatemala, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. In this respect, it requests the Government to envisage the possibility of adopting all possible measures including adapting and strengthening the labour inspection services so as to ensure the protection set out in the Convention for children and young persons under 14 years of age. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted and the results achieved in the context of the implementation of the roadmap with a view to the abolition of child labour by 2020. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of the Convention in practice including, for instance, statistics on the employment of children and young persons disaggregated by sex and age, extracts from the reports of the inspection services and information on the number and nature of the violations reported and the penalties imposed.

Article 3(1). Age of admission to hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 148(a) of the Labour Code prohibits work by minors in unhealthy and dangerous workplaces. However, it observed that the Labour Code does not define the term minor and that it is therefore impossible to determine the minimum age from which a minor may be admitted to perform hazardous work. In this respect, the Government indicated that the Tripartite Subcommission on Judicial Reforms will examine the Office's proposals during the course of the work of reforming the Labour Code. The Committee also noted that section 32 of Government Agreement No. 112-2006 of 7 March 2005 issuing Regulations on the protection of children and young persons at work prohibits work by children and young persons under 18 years of age in various types of hazardous work.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft reform of the Labour Code has not yet been adopted. However, it notes with interest that section 4 of the draft reform of the Labour Code (Initiative No. 4205), available on the Internet site of the Congress of the Republic of Guatemala envisages the revision of section 148(a) so as to prohibit the engagement of young persons under 18 years of age in various types of hazardous work. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft reform of the Labour Code will be adopted in the very near future so that the national legislation is in conformity with the Convention on this point. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress achieved in this regard.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. Age of admission to apprenticeship. The Committee noted previously that section 171 of the Labour Code does not establish a minimum age for admission to apprenticeship. It also noted that, by virtue of section 150 of the Labour Code, the General Labour Inspectorate can issue written authorization allowing daily work by minors under 14 years of age. This authorization must state that the minor will be working as an apprentice. The Committee also pointed out that a reading of section 24 of the Regulations on the protection of children and young persons at work and section 2 of Decree No. 27-2003 issuing the Act on the comprehensive protection of children and young persons suggests that the age of admission to apprenticeship is 13 years. For its part, the Government indicated that the Special Labour Inspectors Unit provides the basis for the application of Article 6 of the Convention by providing that no minor under 14 years of age may be a party to an apprenticeship contract. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the Tripartite Committee on International Labour Affairs had started a review of the national labour legislation and that the issue of the minimum age for admission to apprenticeship would be brought to its attention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that no progress relating to the reform of the national labour legislation on the issue of the age of admission to apprenticeship has been reported. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to harmonize the provisions of the national legislation with Article 6 of the Convention so as to establish a minimum age for admission to apprenticeship of 14 years. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress achieved in this respect in its next report.

Article 3. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the national legislation does not prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. It noted that the Congress of the Republic was examining a Bill to reform the Penal Code.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that under the terms of section 40 of Decree No. 9-2009 issuing the Act against sexual violence, exploitation and trafficking of persons, which contains amendments to section 194 of the Penal Code, any person who produces, manufactures or prepares pornography using persons under 18 years of age shall be liable to a sentence of six to ten years of imprisonment.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1). Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and the penalties applied. The Committee noted previously that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations on the Government's initial report on the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography of July 2007 (CRC/C/OPSC/GTM/CO/1, paragraphs 8, 12 and 22), expressed concern at the increasing incidence of the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the high number of victims in the country, estimated at 15,000. The CRC also noted reports that child victims are penalized and institutionalized for long periods until decisions are made on their case. The Committee noted that the Trafficking of Persons Unit had conducted a number of investigations relating to commercial sexual exploitation. It also noted that an initiative for the adoption of a law against violence, exploitation and trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation was submitted to the Congress of the Republic in August 2008. It further noted that one person was reported to have been convicted for the trafficking of children and that 16 cases were under investigation.
