The Committee takes due note of the adoption of Decree No. 9-2009 issuing the Act against sexual violence, exploitation and trafficking of persons. It notes that section 47 of Decree No. 9-2009 amends section 202 of the Penal Code and introduces section 202ter. Under this new provision, the crime of the trafficking of persons is punishable by a sentence of eight to 18 years of imprisonment. Furthermore, under the terms of section 202quater of the Penal Code, as amended by section 48 of Decree No. 9-2009, any person who offers or promises an economic benefit arising out of activities related to the trafficking of persons is liable to a sentence of six to eight years of imprisonment. The sentence is increased by two-thirds if the victim is under 14 years of age and is doubled if the victim is under 10 years of age. The Committee notes the statistics provided in the Government's report relating to the application in practice of these new provisions. It observes that 17 complaints were lodged in 2009 under section 202ter, of which 16 related to girls, and one complaint under section 202quater. However, according to the information provided in the Government's report, no sanctions appear to have been applied for the crime of trafficking of children between 2008 and 2009. In this respect, the Committee observes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 25 October 2010 on the third and fourth periodic reports of Guatemala (CRC/C/GTM/CO/3-4, paragraph 94), expressed concern that there have been no convictions for sexual exploitation since the adoption of the Act against sexual violence, exploitation and trafficking of persons, and at the tolerance of the competent authorities in relation to trafficking. The CRC also expressed concern once again at the increasing incidence of the sale and sexual exploitation of children (CRC/C/GTM/CO/3-4, paragraph 30). The Committee also notes that, according to a report on the trafficking of persons of 14 June 2010, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the presumed complicity and corruption of officials in activities related to the trafficking of persons is an obstacle to the application of the relevant provisions of the national legislation.

While observing that there are various provisions prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children, the Committee expresses concern at the information bearing witness to the persistence of the problem of the trafficking of children for their commercial sexual exploitation and at the allegations of the complicity between officials entrusted with the enforcement of the law and persons engaging in the trafficking of persons. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are conducted against persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age for commercial sexual exploitation and of officials who are complicit in such acts, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions under sections 202ter and 202quater of the Penal Code, as amended by Decree No. 9-2009 issuing the Act against sexual violence, exploitation and trafficking in persons.

Article 6. Programmes of action. National Plan of Action to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the National Plan of Action to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children was being revised. It requested the Government to provide information on the programmes of action developed as part of the implementation of the National Plan.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on this matter. However, the Committee observes that, in the Government's third and fourth periodic reports submitted to the CRC on 23 November 2009 (CRC/C/GTM/3-4, paragraphs 255–256), the Government indicated that the National Plan of Action to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children had been adopted as official policy by the Secretariat of Social Welfare, but that the Secretariat had not been able to implement the Plan and, in view of the inadequacy of the budget allocated, it was only able to implement programmes for the children of female sex workers in the area around the airport. The Committee therefore urges the Government to adopt immediate and effective measures to ensure the implementation of the National Plan of Action to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children. It requests the Government to provide information on this subject in its next report.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these forms of labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Guatemala is participating in an ILO–IPEC regional project “Stop the Exploitation: Contribution to the Prevention and Elimination of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children in Central America, Panama and the Dominican Republic”. The Committee also took due note of the adoption in 2007 of a public policy to combat the trafficking of persons and ensure the full protection of victims and a National Plan of Strategic Action (2007–17), with the objectives of the immediate and full protection of victims, namely medical and psychological care and reintegration into the family and society.

The Committee notes that the ILO–IPEC regional project on the prevention and elimination of the commercial sexual exploitation of children ended in April 2009. It observes that, according to the ILO–IPEC report of the project of July 2009, for the total duration of the project (November 2005–April 2009), 375 children benefited from services or were reintegrated into the formal or informal school system in Guatemala. Of this number, 187 children, a majority of whom were girls, were removed from commercial sexual exploitation or trafficking, and 188 children were prevented from being engaged in these worst forms of child labour.

However, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information on the measures adopted in the context of the implementation of the public policy to combat trafficking in persons and ensure the full protection of victims and on the National Plan of Strategic Action (2007–17). It also observes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 25 October 2010 on the third and fourth periodic reports of Guatemala (CRC/C/GTM/CO/3-4, paragraph 94) noted with concern that the competent authorities did not provide specialized or appropriate care for victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation and that the Government did not provide appropriate support to organizations working in this field. Noting that the ILO–IPEC regional project on the prevention and elimination of the commercial sexual exploitation of children has come to an end, the Committee urges the Government to adopt time-bound measures to: (a) prevent children from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation or trafficking for that purpose; and (b) provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to remove the child victims from these worst forms of child labour. It also once again, requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged as part of the implementation of the public policy to combat trafficking of persons and provide full protection for victims, and on the National Plan of Strategic Action (2007–17), with a view to ensuring the rehabilitation and social integration of the child victims removed from these worst forms of child labour.

2. Tourist activities. The Committee previously noted that the Guatemalan Institute of Tourism (INGUAT) had undertaken to promote at the national level a process of training and awareness raising for the tourist industry for the years 2007–10 with a view to preventing the formation of trafficking networks, particularly for commercial sexual exploitation, and identifying their activities. It also notes the enactment of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism in the country, as well the envisaged formulation in 2008 of the Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism with a view to the protection of children against commercial sexual exploitation.

The Committee takes due note of the awareness-raising activities carried out by INGUAT in 2009 and 2010 for children and young persons, actors in the tourist industry, the police and the Tourism Security Unit (USETUR) on the subject of the commercial sexual exploitation of children and young persons.

Article 8. International cooperation. Trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, in the context of the implementation of the public policy and National Plan of Action for Childhood (2004–15), the Government planned to adopt measures in collaboration with neighbouring countries with a view to bringing an end to the sale and trafficking of girls, boys and young persons for the purposes of sexual exploitation. It noted that a National Protocol for the repatriation of boys, girls and young persons who are victims of trafficking was adopted in 2007, as well as a document on regional initiatives for the special protection of returning boys, girls and young persons who have been victims of trafficking, the purpose of which is to promote cooperation between member countries of the Regional Conference on Migration. However, it observed that the CRC, in its concluding observations of July 2007 (CRC/C/OPSC/GTM/CO/1, paragraph 29), while recognizing the conclusion of memorandums of understanding with neighbouring countries of Guatemala, expressed concern at the fact that undocumented foreign children, including victims of trafficking, are subject to deportation and must leave the country within 72 hours.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a new Inter-institutional Protocol for the repatriation of victims of trafficking was adopted in December 2009. It observes that the Protocol is not yet implemented in practice. The Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the technical progress report of June 2010 on the ILO–IPEC project entitled “Elimination of Child Labour in Latin America (Phase III)”, the Protocol was drawn up with the support of ILO–IPEC and reviewed by the various cooperation agencies, including the International Organization for Migration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Inter-institutional Protocol for the repatriation of victims of trafficking. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of child victims removed from trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation in their country of origin.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Haiti

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2007)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. In its observations made under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the Committee noted that the Act of 2003 concerning the prohibition and elimination of all forms of abuse, violence, ill-treatment or inhuman treatment against children [Act of 2003] cited, among the situations involving ill-treatment, inhuman treatment or exploitation, the sale and trafficking of children and also the offering, procuring, transfer, accommodation, reception or use of children for sexual exploitation, prostitution or pornography. It also noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 18 March 2003, expressed deep concern at the number of cases of trafficking of children from Haiti to the Dominican Republic (CRC/C/15/Add.202, paragraph 60). The Committee also noted the September 2006 report on the fact-finding mission of the General Secretariat of the Organization of American States (OAS) relating to the trafficking of persons in Haiti, this trend stemming from the deterioration of the socio-economic and political situation in recent years, which has prevented an effective response to the primary needs of the population and paved the way for an increase in all forms of human exploitation and illicit economic activities.

The Committee noted that, even though section 2(1) of the Act of 2003 prohibits abuse and violence with regard to children and also such exploitation as the sale and trafficking of children, this law does not establish penalties for violations of its provisions. However, it noted with interest the Government's information concerning the preparation and adoption of preliminary draft legislation concerning the trafficking of persons. It observes that, under this bill, the procuring, enlistment, transfer, transportation, accommodation or reception of a child for the purposes of exploitation are considered as trafficking and constitute a violation of the law. Under section 5, the term “child” means any person under 18 years of age. Moreover, section 13 of the bill states that the trafficking of children constitutes an aggravating circumstance liable to incur the maximum penalty established by the Act (section 14), namely nine years' imprisonment. However, the Committee observed that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of 10 February 2009, expressed concern at the fact that, despite the alarmingly high number of women victims of trafficking in Haiti, specific legislation criminalizing trafficking is still in draft form and has not yet been submitted to Parliament (CEDAW/C/HTI/CO/7, paragraph 26). The CEDAW also observed that this situation may result in insufficient investigations into cases of trafficking in women and girls and, consequently, lead to impunity for perpetrators.

The Committee also noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, its causes and consequences (A/HRC/12/21/Add.1, paragraph 19, 4 September 2009) [report of the Special Rapporteur], a new trend has been observed in recent years with regard to the employment of children as domestic workers (designated by the Creole term restavek), namely the emergence of persons who recruit children from rural areas to work as domestic servants in urban families and outside the home in markets. The Special Rapporteur noted that this new trend has caused many stakeholders to describe the phenomenon as trafficking since parents are now handing their children over to strangers, whereas previously they entrusted the children to relatives. Moreover, the Committee observes that, according to a UNICEF press release of 15 October 2010, the number of child victims of trafficking has increased since the earthquake of January 2010, traffickers having taken advantage of the resulting chaos to prey on children who were lost or separated from their parents. The Committee therefore expresses the hope that the bill on the trafficking of children will be adopted as a matter of urgency and requests the Government to send information on all new developments in this respect. It also requests the Government to take immediate and effective steps to ensure thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of the perpetrators of the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age are carried out.

Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work Child domestic labour. In its observations under Convention No. 29, the Committee has been commenting for many years on the situation of hundreds of thousands of restavek children who are often exploited under conditions that qualify as forced labour. It noted that in practice many of these children, some of them only 4 or 5 years old, are the victims of exploitation, are obliged to work long hours without pay, face all kinds of discrimination and bullying, receive poor lodging and food and are often subjected to physical, psychological and sexual abuse. In addition, very few of them attend school. The Committee also noted the repeal of Chapter IX of Title V of the Labour Code, relating to children in service, by the Act of 2003. It noted that the prohibition established by section 2(1) of the Act of 2003 covers the exploitation of children, including servitude, forced or compulsory labour, forced service and also work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children. It further noted that the repealed provisions include section 341 of the Labour Code, which allowed a child aged 12 or over to be entrusted to a family for employment in domestic work.

The Committee observed, however, that section 3 of the Act of 2003 states that a child may be entrusted to a host family in the context of a relationship of assistance and solidarity. It notes that the Special Rapporteur expressed deep concern in her report at the vagueness of the concept of assistance and solidarity and considered that the provisions of the Act of 2003 allow the practice of restavek to be perpetuated.

According to the report of the Special Rapporteur, the number of restavek children is between 150,000 and 500,000 (paragraph 17), and this represents about one in ten children in Haiti (paragraph 23). As a result of interviews with restavek children, the Special Rapporteur ascertained that all of them were given heavy workloads by their host families, which was often incompatible with their full physical and mental development (paragraph 25). Moreover, the Special Rapporteur was told that these children are often ill-treated and subjected to physical, psychological and sexual abuse (paragraph 35). Representatives of the Government and civil society pointed out that cases of children being beaten and burned were routinely reported (paragraph 37). The Committee noted that, in view of these findings, the Special Rapporteur described the restavek system as a contemporary form of slavery. The Committee expressed its deep concern at the exploitation of the domestic work of children under 18 years of age performed under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions. It reminded the Government that, under Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, work done by, or the employment of, children under 18 years of age under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions belongs to the worst forms of child labour and, under the terms of Article 1, must be eliminated as a matter of urgency. The Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure, in law and in practice, that children under 18 years of age may not be employed as domestic servants under conditions equivalent to slavery or under hazardous conditions, taking account of the special situation of girls. It requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who subject children under 18 years of age to forced or hazardous domestic labour are carried out and to ensure the imposition in practice of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties.

Article 6. Programme of action for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour. The Committee noted the Government's indication that a national protection plan was validated in 2006. It noted that the plan targets ten categories of vulnerable children who need protection, including child domestic workers and child victims of trafficking. The Government also indicated that, further to the ratification of the Convention, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (MAST) has considered it necessary to review the national protection plan and include thematic time-bound programmes of action in it. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the time-bound measures taken as part of the thematic programmes of action and the national protection plan for the child victims of trafficking and child domestic workers. It also requests the Government to send a copy of the national plan.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking. The Committee noted that, according to the February 2009 UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, no system exists for providing the victims of trafficking with care or assistance, nor are there any reception centres for accommodating the victims of trafficking. It also noted that the CEDAW, in its concluding observations of 10 February 2009 (CEDAW/C/HTI/CO/7, paragraph 26), expressed concern at the lack of reception centres for women and girls who are the victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to take effective measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from sale and trafficking and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken towards this end.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Restavek children. In its observations of 2009 made under Convention No. 29, the Committee noted the existence of programmes for the rehabilitation of restavek children established by the Social Welfare and Research Institute (IBESR) in cooperation with various international and non-governmental organizations. It noted that these programmes focus on reintegration in the family setting in order to promote the social and psychological development of the children concerned.

The Committee observed that the Government's report does not contain any information in this respect. It noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations, expressed deep concern at the situation of restavek children placed in domestic service and recommended that the Government take urgent steps to ensure that restavek children are provided with services offering physical and psychological rehabilitation and social reintegration (CRC/C/15/Add.202, 18 March 2003, paragraphs 56–57). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that restavek children are provided with services offering physical and psychological rehabilitation and social reintegration as part of rehabilitation programmes designed for them. It requests the Government to supply information on the specific results achieved in terms of the number of children who have benefited from these measures.

Article 8. International cooperation. Sale and trafficking of children. In its observations of 2009 made under Convention No. 29, the Committee noted that the MAST, in cooperation with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, is studying the problem of the exploitation of persons in sugar cane plantations in the Dominican Republic and the involvement of children in begging in the same country, and is due to conduct bilateral negotiations with a view to resolving the situation. It also observed that the CEDAW, in its concluding observations of 10 February 2009 (CEDAW/C/HTI/CO/7, paragraph 27), encouraged the Government "to conduct research on the root causes of trafficking and to enhance bilateral and multilateral cooperation with neighbouring countries, in particular the Dominican Republic, to prevent trafficking and bring perpetrators to justice".

The Committee noted that the Government's report does not contain any information in this regard. It requests the Government to supply information on the progress of negotiations aimed at the adoption of a bilateral agreement with the Dominican Republic.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Honduras

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 78) (ratification: 1960)

Article 4 of the Convention. Medical examination until the age of 21 years. In its previous comments the Committee noted that there were no provisions in the national legislation requiring young persons between the ages of 18 and 21 years who are authorized to carry out unhealthy or hazardous work to undergo regular medical examination for fitness for employment.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that a draft of a revised Labour Code is in the process of adoption. Observing that Honduras ratified the Convention over 50 years ago, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, including in the context of the Labour Code reform, to ensure that the national legislation sets out a requirement that young persons between 18 and 21 years of age in occupations that involve high health risks undergo medical examination and regular re-examinations for employment.

Article 7(2) and Part V of the report form. Ensuring the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents, and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that section 126 of the Code of Childhood and Adolescence requires employers to keep a register of all minors employed. It noted, however, that neither the abovementioned Code nor the Labour Code make any provision for measures of identification to ensure the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents in itinerant trading or in any other occupation carried on in the streets or in places to which the public has access. The Government stated that child labour had been incorporated in the duties of the General Labour Inspectorate for the purpose of applying this provision of the Convention and that it had examined the possibility of extending application of the national legislation to the informal sector.

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government to the effect that the national legislation prohibits work by children and young persons under 18 years of age in itinerant trading or any other occupation carried on in the street or in places to which the public has access. The Committee notes with interest in this connection that Agreement No. STSS-074-2008 of 7 April 2008, pursuant to which section 8 of the Child Labour Regulations of 10 October 2001 has been amended and an extensive list of hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age has been adopted, bans minors under 18 years of age from itinerant trading (section 8-A(5)(e)) and non-itinerant trading in bars, taverns, billiards rooms and discotheques (section 8-B(6)(a)). The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government concerning the measures taken and the results obtained in the context of implementing the Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour to ensure that effect is given to the Convention in practice. It notes in particular that the labour inspectorate pays regular visits – eight inspections a month on average – to enterprises employing children. The Committee nevertheless notes that the Government provides no information on measures taken by the labour inspectorate to monitor the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information in its next report allowing it to ascertain how the system of medical examination for fitness for employment is applied to children and young persons working on their own account or on account of their parents, such as extracts of labour inspection reports and statistics of the number of infringements reported.

The Committee notes the Government's report, and the additional information provided by the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP), dated 4 October 2010.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the National Commission for the Gradual and Progressive Elimination of Child Labour (CNEGPTE) developed a second National Plan of Action for 2008–2015 in Honduras (Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour). The Committee also noted that, according to the 2006 statistics contained in a CNEGPTE document on the second Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour, 299,916 girls, boys and young persons aged between 5 and 17 years were economically active. Of these, 21.51 per cent were girls and 78.49 per cent were boys. Furthermore, 72 per cent of children engaged in work lived in rural areas, and 28 per cent in urban areas. Children worked principally in agriculture, forestry, fishing and domestic work (56.2 per cent); businesses, hotels and restaurants (24.4 per cent); manufacturing (8.2 per cent); construction (3 per cent); and transport, shops and distribution (1 per cent).

The Committee notes with interest the information provided in the Government's report on the measures taken to combat child labour. It observes that the Secretariat of Labour and Social Security launched an initiative in 2010 with a view to the establishment of a platform of indicators on the basis of which the implementation of the objectives of the Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Honduras could be evaluated. It notes that this Plan of Action has three objectives: (i) preventing school drop-outs; (ii) removing children from hazardous work and the worst forms of child labour; and (iii) ensuring the implementation of the provisions of the national legislation on child labour. For this purpose, the Committee notes that the Plan of Action is articulated around seven components, including: (i) family income, with the aim of promoting access to social protection services and improving the income of the families of children who are at risk; (ii) education, with the objective of promoting access to and retention in the education system or in non-formal education services; and (iii) research with the aim of broadening the necessary knowledge base to address the problem of child labour.

The Committee takes due note of the information provided in the Government's report on the measures adopted and the results achieved in the context of the implementation of the Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour. It observes that the Secretariat of Labour organizes training daily on rights and duties at work in relation to children and young persons and their legal representatives, and that, between January 2009 and April 2010, these workshops were attended by 2,528 participants. The Committee also notes that the labour inspectorate carries out regular inspections of enterprises which employ children at the average rate of eight inspections a month. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that Honduras has made significant progress towards the formulation of a roadmap to ensure that it is a country free of child labour and its worst forms, the strategic national framework based on the achievement of the objectives set out Decent Work in the Americas: An agenda for the Hemisphere, namely the elimination of the worst forms of child labour by 2015 and the eradication of child labour in all its forms by 2020.

The Committee notes the indication in the Government's report that a "child labour" module has now been integrated into household surveys. It notes the results of the 2010 household survey carried out by the National Institute of Statistics (INE), which are accessible on its website. According to the survey, 14.3 per cent of children and young persons between the ages of 5 and 17 years are engaged in an economic activity in the country, the great majority of whom live in rural areas (75.3 per cent). The Committee also notes that, according to UNICEF 2009 statistics, 16 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 14 years work in the country. While noting the Government's efforts, the Committee must express its concern at the large number of children who work and who are below the minimum age for admission to employment or work, and it urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. In this respect, it requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved through the implementation of the National Plan of Action for the Gradual and Progressive Elimination of Child Labour in Honduras (2008–15) and to provide information on the measures that are adopted following the formulation of the roadmap for the abolition of child labour by 2020. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, based in particular on statistics on the employment of children under 14 years of age, extracts from the reports of the inspection services and information on the number and nature of the violations reported and the sanctions imposed.

Article 2(1) and (4). Scope of application. The Committee previously noted that, under the terms of section 32(2) of the Labour Code, the authorities responsible for supervising work by persons under 14 years of age may permit them to work if they consider it indispensable in order to provide for their subsistence or that of their parents or brothers and sisters, and provided that it does not prevent them from following compulsory schooling. Furthermore, under the terms of section 2(1), agricultural and stock-raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than ten workers are excluded from the scope of the Labour Code. It also noted that the Regulations on child labour of 2001, in accordance with sections 4–6, only apply to contractual labour relations. The Government indicated in this respect that a draft revision of the Labour Code had been prepared which contained provisions to bring the national labour legislation into conformity with the international Conventions ratified by Honduras, and therefore to harmonize the provisions of the Labour Code and the Regulations on child labour of 2001 with the Code for Children and Young Persons of 1996. The draft text would also allow the application of the provisions on the minimum age for admission to employment to all children, whether they are engaged under an employment contract or work on their own account. The Committee observed that the majority of children under 14 years of age work in agriculture, forestry, hunting and fishing.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain information on the situation regarding the legislative process for the adoption of the draft revision of the Labour Code. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of Article 2(1) of the Convention, no one under the age specified shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, subject to the exemptions set out Articles 4–8 of the Convention. It also recalls that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and covers all types of employment or work, whether or not they are performed within the framework of an employment relationship or a labour contract, and whether or not the employment or work is paid. Observing that Honduras ratified the Convention over 30 years ago and that the question of the revision of the Labour Code has been raised for a number of years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no young person under 14 years of age is permitted to work and to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention also applies to children who work in agricultural and stock-raising undertakings which do not permanently employ more than ten workers and to those who work on their own account. It once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, although the net school enrolment rate at the primary level was relatively good, the net school attendance rate at secondary school remained low. It noted that, according to the information contained in the report of January 2008 on the ILO–IPEC project entitled "Eliminating Child Labour in Latin America (Phase III)", the objectives of the Education for All Plan in 2015 will not be achieved. It nevertheless noted that a preliminary draft of the General Education Act, which is to replace the Consolidated Act of 1966, has been submitted to the Directorate of Education. The new legislation would, among other provisions, establish that school is compulsory and free of charge for ten years, namely one year of pre-school and nine years of primary education. The Committee also noted that education is one of the components of the implementation of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Honduras through the specific objective of promoting access to education and ensuring school attendance.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide any information on progress in relation to the envisaged reform of the Consolidated Act of 1966. The Committee observes that, according to UNICEF statistics for 2009, the net school attendance rate for primary education is relatively good, at 80 per cent for girls and 76 per cent for boys, but remains fairly low at the secondary level with only 36 per cent of girls and 29 per cent of boys attending this level of education. It also notes that, according to the UNESCO Education for All Global Monitoring Report 2011, entitled "The hidden crisis: Armed conflict and education", although the school enrolment rate in secondary education has increased generally in the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean over recent years, the school enrolment rate at the secondary level in Honduras remains relatively low. Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee once again firmly requests the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the operation of the education system with a view to increasing school attendance rates among children under 14 years of age in compulsory basic education, and requests it to provide information on the measures adopted in this respect, particularly in the context of the National Plan of Action for the Gradual and Progressive Elimination of Child Labour in Honduras (2008–15). The Committee also expresses the firm hope that the preliminary draft General Education Act will be adopted in the near future and that it will contain provisions guaranteeing compulsory schooling up to the age of 14. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the Act once it has been adopted.

Article 3(3). Hazardous work from the age of 16 years. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, under the terms of section 122(3) of the Code for Children and Young Persons of 1996, young persons may be authorized to perform hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years provided that certain conditions are respected, namely that the young person has completed her or his technical education at the Technical Vocational Training Institute or a specialized technical institute covered by the Secretariat for Public Education. The Secretariat for Labour is also under the obligation to ascertain that the work assigned can be performed without prejudicing the health of the young person.

The Committee notes the Government's report and the information provided by the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP), dated 4 October 2010.

Articles 3(a) and (b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation, use of children for prostitution and for the production of pornography or pornographic performances, and penalties applied. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with satisfaction the adoption of Decree No. 234-2005 of 28 September 2005, reforming the Penal Code. It noted that the new provisions of the Code prohibit: the procuring of and international and internal trafficking of persons for commercial exploitation; the use of young persons under 18 years of age in public and private exhibitions or performances of a sexual nature and in the production of pornography; and the promotion of the country as a tourist destination for sexual activities. It however noted that, in its concluding observations of February 2007 on the Government's third periodic report (CRC/C/HND/CO/3, paragraph 78), the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) expressed concern that the commercial sexual exploitation of children is a common phenomenon in Honduras.

The Committee notes the information provided in the COHEP communication on the denunciations received by the Office of the Public Prosecutor between 2005 and 2009 concerning the economic exploitation of minors, child pornography and the procuring and trafficking of persons. It notes that most of the denunciations concerned the trafficking of persons between 2005 and 2007, and the procuring of persons for sexual exploitation in 2009. The Committee also notes the information provided in the Government's report concerning the number of crimes relating to the commercial sexual exploitation of minors reported in 2009. It observes that 28 cases of procuring of persons, 13 cases of trafficking of persons and 12 cases of child pornography were registered. The Committee further notes that, according to the information contained in a report on trafficking of persons in Honduras of 14 June 2010, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the authorities in Honduras have initiated prosecutions in 26 cases concerning the trafficking of persons or the commercial sexual exploitation of children, which have resulted in five convictions with sentences ranging between six and ten years of imprisonment. However, the report indicates that no investigations have been conducted and no prosecutions initiated concerning confirmed allegations of corruption relating to the trafficking of persons, even though certain local officials in the immigration services are reported to have been suspected of complicity in the trafficking of persons.

While noting that the national legislation prohibits the trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and the use of children for prostitution and for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances, the Committee observes that the information on the number of prosecutions and convictions for these crimes is not sufficient. Furthermore, it expresses concern at the allegations of corruption and complicity between those engaged in trafficking and law enforcers, and at the fact that no investigations have been conducted of these cases. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are carried out against persons engaged in the sale and trafficking of persons under 18 years of age for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation or who use persons under 18 years of age for prostitution, the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, as well as of officials who are accomplices in such acts, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied in practice. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions and convictions under Decree No. 234-2005 of 28 September 2005 amending the Penal Code.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the National Plan of Action to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Girls, Boys and Young Persons (2006–11) (National Plan of Action to Combat Commercial Sexual Exploitation) attached to the COHEP communication. It notes that, according to the communication, the National Plan of Action is built around various action components, including a component on prevention, one on the protection of victims and another on reintegration. The National Plan of Action accordingly envisages the establishment of procedures for the identification, referral and provision of assistance to children and young persons who are victims of trafficking, as well as the development of models, programmes and projects for comprehensive assistance to children and young persons who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation.

The Committee also takes note of the information contained in the report of June 2009 of the ILO–IPEC subregional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. It notes that, according to this information, the Government adopted a Protocol in 2008 for comprehensive assistance to children and young persons who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, a manual for the prevention of commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism sector was prepared and integrated into courses on tourism at the various universities. The report adds that 303 girls and boys benefited from the ILO–IPEC subregional project between November 2005 and April 2009. Of that number, 184 children, the great majority of whom were girls, were removed from commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking, and 101 girls and 18 boys were prevented from being engaged in these worst forms of child labour. The Committee observes that the ILO–IPEC subregional project was completed in April 2009. Noting that the ILO–IPEC subregional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children has been completed, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts and requests it to provide detailed information in its next report on the measures adopted in the context of the Protocol of 2008 for comprehensive assistance to children and young persons who have been victims of commercial sexual exploitation. It also requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved through the implementation of the National Plan of Action to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Girls, Boys and Young Persons in Honduras (2006–11), with an indication of the number of children who have, in practice, been removed from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, and who have benefited from social integration measures.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. 1. Street children. The Committee previously noted that, in its concluding observations of February 2007 (CRC/C/HND/CO/3, paragraph 74), the CRC, while noting the adoption of the National Plan of Action for the Social Integration of Children and Women dependant on the street, expressed concern at the high number of street children and at the lack of information in this respect.

The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report concerning the implementation of a project entitled “Mano Amiga”, targeting young persons living in the crematoria of Tegucigalpa and San Pedro Sula. It notes that 31,400 people between the ages of 14 and 30 benefited from assistance in the context of this programme. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to protect street children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of children removed from the streets and who benefited from rehabilitation and social integration measures, particularly within the framework of the “Mano Amiga” project.

2. Indigenous children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, in its concluding observations in February 2007 (CRC/C/HND/CO/3, paragraph 21), the CRC expressed concern at the lack of information concerning the most vulnerable groups, including indigenous children. The Committee noted with interest that a programme of action, with the objective of contributing to the prevention and removal of indigenous girls, boys and young persons from child labour, benefited 300 people between October 2007 and February 2008. The Committee also notes that, according to information available to ILO–IPEC, a study has been conducted in the country on indigenous children.

The Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the ILO–IPEC report of June 2010 on the project “Eliminating Child Labour in Latin America (Phase III)”, a programme of action was launched in May 2010 to prevent and eliminate work by indigenous children of the Lenca ethnic group in domestic service and in the agricultural sector. Observing that the children of indigenous peoples are often victims of exploitation, which takes on very diverse forms, and are a population at risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in this respect, particularly within the framework of the above programme of action.

Clause (e). Special situation of girls. Child domestic workers. The Committee previously noted that, according to the 2006 statistics contained in a document of the National Committee for the Gradual and Progressive Elimination of Child Labour (CNEGPE) on the second National Plan of Action for the Gradual and Progressive Elimination of Child Labour in Honduras (2008–15), a large number of children, particularly girls, are engaged in domestic work. It emphasized the fact that children engaged in domestic work, particularly young girls, are often victims of exploitation, which takes on very diverse forms, and that it is difficult to supervise their conditions of employment. The Committee, therefore, requested the Government to take effective measures in that respect.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain information on this subject. Considering that children engaged in domestic work are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures for the protection of children engaged in domestic work against the worst forms of child labour, taking into account the special situation of girls. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the measures adopted and the results achieved in this respect, with an indication of the number of child domestic workers who have, in practice, been removed from the worst forms of child labour and the specific rehabilitation and social integration measures adopted for these children.

Article 8. International and regional cooperation. Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the ILO–IPEC subregional project on the commercial sexual exploitation of children envisaged the strengthening of horizontal collaboration between countries participating in the project. It considered that cooperation between law enforcement agencies, particularly the judicial authorities and police forces, is indispensable to prevent and eliminate commercial sexual exploitation, and particularly the sale and trafficking of children for that purpose, through the collection and exchange of information and through assistance in the detection and prosecution of the individuals involved, and the repatriation of victims.

The Committee notes the reference by the COHEP, in its communication, to the adoption in 2006 of a Protocol on the repatriation of girls, boys and young persons who have been victims of trafficking. It notes that one of the objectives of the Protocol is to determine repatriation procedures for child victims of trafficking to Honduras or to other countries. Noting the absence of information on this point in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to promote cooperation with neighbouring countries and strengthen security measures at common borders with a view to combating the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the implementation of the Protocol on the repatriation of girls, boys and young persons who have been victims of trafficking, with an indication of the number of children repatriated to their countries of origin.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

India

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention (Revised), 1948 (No. 90) (ratification: 1950)

Articles 2(1) and 3(1) of the Convention. Period during which night work is prohibited for persons under 18 years. In the comments it has been making for many years, the Committee has pointed out that section 70(1A) of the Factories Act, 1948 as amended in 1987, prohibits the night work of adolescents under 17 years of age between 7 p.m. and 6 a.m., that is for a period of 11 consecutive hours, which is inconsistent with Article 2(1) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that in India, night work generally refers to working hours between 7 p.m. and 6 a.m. It further states that the proposed amendment to section 70(1A) of the Factories Act is still under the consideration of the Government. The Committee notes that according to section 71(b) of the Factories Act, no child (who has not completed 15 years) shall be employed or permitted to work in any factory during the night. For the purposes of this section "night" shall mean a period of at least 12 consecutive hours including the interval between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. It further notes section 70(2) of the Factories Act which states that an adolescent (person who has completed 15 years but not yet completed 18 years) who has not been granted a certificate of fitness to work as an adult shall be deemed to be a child for all the purposes of this Act. The Committee therefore observes that the period of night work of 12 consecutive hours is prohibited only to children under 15 years of age and does not cover adolescents under 18 years of age. The Committee recalls that Article 2(1) of the Convention, which defines the term "night" as a period of at least 12 consecutive hours read in conjunction with Article 3(1) of the Convention applies to both children and adolescents under the age of 18 years, irrespective of whether they hold a certificate of fitness to work as an adult or not. Noting with regret that, despite the request which it has repeatedly made for several years, no measures have been taken to give effect to the Convention on this point, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that the Factories Act is amended in line with Articles 2(1) and 3(1) of the Convention.

Articles 3(2), 4(2) and 5. Exceptions to night work in case of apprenticeships or vocational training, in case of emergencies, and where the public interest demands it. The Committee had in its previous comments noted that according to section 70(1A) of the Factories Act, the state governments may vary the prescribed time limits and authorize exceptions in case of emergency where the national interest so demands. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no provision in the Factories Act provides for exceptions to night work for the purpose of apprenticeship or vocational training. It also notes the Government's indication that as per section 5 of the Factories Act, in case of a public emergency the state government may exempt any factory or class or description of factories from all or any of the provisions of this Act, except section 67 on the prohibition of employment of children under 14 years. The Government further states that no such exemption was granted in any of the states so far.

Kenya

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1979)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had urged the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure the progressive abolition of child labour.

The Committee notes that according to the ILO–IPEC TACKLE project report, four action programmes have been implemented in Kenya under this project which resulted in the withdrawal of about 1,050 children from child labour who were enrolled back in schools or placed in skills training through apprenticeship, in addition to 351 children who have been prevented from dropping out of school and from entering into child labour. It also notes from the ILO–IPEC TACKLE project report that following the implementation of the Kenya Education Sector Programme (KESSP), the net enrolment rates at the primary level increased from 83.2 per cent in 2005 to 92.5 per cent in 2008. However, about 20 per cent of all primary school children do not complete the primary school cycle. The Committee further notes from the ILO–IPEC TACKLE project report that according to the 2009 National Census, nearly four million children of school-going age are out of school, which implies that the number of children in or at risk of child labour could be higher than the 756,000 reported in the 2008 Child Labour Analytical Report. The Committee expresses its concern at the high number of children who are not attending any school and are involved or are at risk of being involved in child labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the situation of child labour in the country and requests it to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the Convention, including, data on the number of children under the minimum age who are engaged in child labour, as well as extracts from the reports of inspection services and information on the number and nature of violations detected involving children and young persons.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee had previously noted that, under section 7(2) of the Children's Act, every child shall be entitled to free basic education which shall be compulsory. It had also noted the Government's statement that in order to address the gap between the minimum age for admission to employment (16 years) and the age of completion of compulsory schooling (14 years), the Government had waived the tuition fees for the first two years in secondary schooling. It had further noted the Government's indication that it has not envisaged adopting any legislation fixing the age of completion of compulsory education. In this regard, the Committee had noted the information provided by the Government representative of Kenya to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2006 concerning the application of Convention No. 138, that it had appointed a committee to review the Education Act with a view to modifying, inter alia, the age of completion of compulsory schooling. Recalling that this Convention had been ratified by Kenya more than 25 years ago, the Conference Committee had urged the Government to ensure that legislation addressing the gap between the age of completion of compulsory schooling and the minimum age for admission to employment or work would be adopted shortly.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it will endeavour to encourage dialogue among stakeholders with a view to setting the age of completion of compulsory schooling at 16 years. The Committee notes with regret that, despite the request which it has repeatedly made since 2002, no measures have yet been taken to give effect to the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to extend compulsory schooling up to 16 years which is the minimum age for employment in Kenya. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress made in this regard.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted the Government's statement that the list of types of hazardous work that had been approved by the stakeholders was undergoing the process of approval by the National Labour Board and thereafter adoption by the minister.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years has been approved by the National Labour Board and is currently awaiting to be published in the Gazette by the Ministry of Labour. The Committee notes that the draft document entitled "Determining the Hazardous Child Labour in Kenya: July 2008" prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Human Resources Development in consultation with the Central Organization of Trade Unions and the Federation of Kenya Employers, contains a comprehensive list of 18 types of hazardous occupations/sectors including: work in domestic households; transport; internal conflicts; mining and stone crushing; sand harvesting; miraa picking; herding of animals; brick making; agriculture; work in industrial undertakings; carpet/basket weaving; building construction; tannery; deep-lake and sea fishing; glass factory; matches and fireworks factory; urban informal sector; and scavenging with each sector further providing a list of various activities that are prohibited to children. Noting with regret that the Government has been referring to the adoption of this draft regulation on the list of types of hazardous work since 2005, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this regulation is adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to supply a copy thereof once it has been adopted.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work as from 16 years of age. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that the competent Minister had issued regulations in respect of periods of work and establishments where children aged at least 16 years may work, including hazardous work referred to in section 10(4) of the Children's Act. It had also noted the Government's statement that the Children's Act was being reviewed and that a copy thereof would be sent after adoption by the Parliament.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the regulations under section 10(4) of the Children's Act are adopted, and the copy will be provided. Observing with regret that the Government has been stating since 2005 that this regulation under section 10(4) of the Children Act has been issued by the Minister, the Committee strongly urges the Government to supply a copy thereof along with its next report.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. The Committee had previously noted that according to section 58(1) of the Employment Act of 2007, no person shall employ a child of between 13 and 16 years of age, other than one serving under a contract of apprenticeship or indentured learnership in accordance with the provisions of the Industrial Training Act, in an industrial undertaking to attend to machinery. Similarly, section 57 of the Employment Act exempts children between the ages of 13 and 16 years who are subject to the provisions of the Industrial Training Act relating to contracts of apprenticeship. The Committee had observed that, according to the Employment Act of 2007, children between 13 and 16 years of age are allowed to take part in apprenticeship programmes subject to the provisions of the Industrial Training Act. The Committee had once again noted the Government's indication that the Industrial Training Act was being amended to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is envisaged that during the amendment of the Industrial Training Act, consideration will be given to bring the legislation in conformity to the Convention. Recalling that Article 6 of the Convention authorizes work to be carried out in enterprises within the context of an apprenticeship programme by persons aged at least 14 years, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that children under the age of 14 years are not permitted to undergo an apprenticeship programme. In this regard, the Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the amendments to Industrial Training Act will be adopted in the near future thereby bringing it into conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. The Committee had previously noted that, according to section 56(3) of the Employment Act, the minister may make rules prescribing light work in which a child of 13 years may be employed and the terms and conditions of that employment. It had noted the Government's statement that the rules and regulations which stipulate the types of light work activities permitted to children under 13 years, and which prescribe the hours and conditions of such employment has not yet been completed.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that this regulation has not yet been adopted. The Committee therefore once again expresses the firm hope that the regulations determining the light work activities that may be undertaken by children of 13 years of age and the number of hours during which and the conditions in which, such work may be undertaken, will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee had previously noted section 17 of the Children's Act, which provides that a child shall be entitled to leisure, play and participation in cultural and artistic activities. It had also noted that the national legislation does not provide for permits to be granted to children participating in cultural artistic performances. The Committee once again notes the Government's information that consultations will be made with the social partners with regard to the granting of individual permits for artistic performances. The Committee notes with regret that despite its reiterated comments for many years, no measures have yet been taken by the Government to this effect. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that approval for young persons of below 16 years of age to take part in artistic activities is granted in individual cases, and that permits so granted shall prescribe the number and hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment or work is allowed. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on any progress made in this regard.

Kuwait

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a draft Labour Law amending Act No. 38 of 1964 on labour in the private sector (Act No. 38 of 1964) was being discussed by the national authorities. The Committee observed that the Government had been referring to the enactment of the draft Labour Law for a number of years, and expressed the firm hope that it would be adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that Act No. 6 of 2010 (Labour Code of 2010) has been adopted and promulgated in the Official Gazette No. 963.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. Street children and other self-employed children. The Committee previously noted that, according to the information in the summary record for the 1,301st meeting of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) on 24 January 2008, a member of the CRC noted that the number of street children and refugee children had recently increased significantly in Kuwait (CRC/C/SR.1301, paragraph 9). The Committee requested the Government to supply information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the application of the Convention to all types of work outside of an employment relationship.

The Committee notes that section 2 of the Labour Code of 2010 provides that its provisions apply to all workers in the private sector. It once again reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and that it covers every kind of employment or work, including work performed by children and young persons performed on their own account. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the application of the Convention to all types of work performed outside an employment relationship, such as street children and other self-employed children. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 3(1). Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee previously noted that under the terms of section 18 of Act No. 38 of 1964, the minimum age for admission to employment or work was 14 years, although the minimum age specified by the Government at the time of ratifying the Convention was 15 years. It noted the Government's information that section 18 of the draft Labour Law in the private sector has specified 15 years as the minimum age for admission to employment or work so as to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 19 of the Labour Code of 2010 provides that it is prohibited to employ persons who are below the age of 15 years.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee notes that, according to section 20(a) of the Labour Code of 2010, young persons aged from 15 to 18 years shall not be employed in industries or professions that are, by a resolution of the Minister of Labour, classified as hazardous or harmful to their health. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made by the Minister of Labour in elaborating a resolution, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, providing for a list of the industries and professions classified as hazardous or harmful to the health of children. It firmly hopes that this list, determining the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under 18 years of age, will be adopted without delay, in conformity with Article 3(2) of the Convention.

Article 9(3). Registers of employment. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to section 3 of Ministerial Decree No. 148 of 2004 regulating the employment of young persons between 14–18 years of age, the employer of these young persons shall keep an up-to-date record of the names, ages and date of employment, as well as the type of work, of his/her employees. It requested the Government to provide a copy of the model register used by employers.

The Committee notes the Government's information that there is no obligatory model register of employment in Kuwait, but that section 3 of Ministerial Decree No. 25 of 1975 on the employment of young persons provides that employers who hire young persons must keep a register of their names, ages and dates of employment, as well as of the types of work they are assigned.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that, with regard to national employment, labour inspections have not revealed the existence of contraventions concerning the employment of children and young persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the practical application of the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the practical application of the provisions of the Labour Code of 2010 relating to the employment of children and young persons, including, where relevant, those below the minimum age specified (15 years), extracts from the reports of inspection services and information on the number and nature of violations detected involving children and young persons.

Kyrgyzstan

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that section 124(1) of the Criminal Code prohibits the trafficking of persons, and section 124(2) specifies that trafficking in persons under 18 is an aggravated offence. However, the Committee noted the Government's indication to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in May 2006 that women and children are trafficked to Turkey, China and the United Arab Emirates for sexual exploitation, and that Kyrgyz citizens have been sold in Kazakhstan to work in tobacco (CRC/C/OPSC/KGZ/1, page 10). In light of this, the Committee requested the Government to take immediate and effective measures to apply section 124 of the Criminal Code and to provide statistical information on the practical application of this provision.

The Committee noted the information in the UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons that state authorities recorded six child victims of trafficking in 2005, and nine such victims in 2006. The Committee also noted the information in the 2008 report on human trafficking in Kyrgyzstan, available on the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (www.unhcr.org) (Trafficking Report) that indicates that the Government conducted 33 investigations relating to trafficking in 2007, and 92 such investigations in 2008. This report indicates that, in 2008, the Government prosecuted eight persons for this offence, of which six were convicted. However, this report also indicates that four out of the six offenders received suspended sentences, with two receiving sentences of 3–8 years' imprisonment. The Committee also noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations in relation to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (CRC/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraph 17), expressed concern that, in a number of cases, investigations and prosecutions had not been initiated (CRC/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraph 17), and that complicity by government officials with traffickers, and corruption, was impeding the effectiveness of prevention measures (paragraph 25). The CRC also expressed regret at the lack of statistical data, and the lack of research on the prevalence of national and cross-border trafficking and the sale of children (paragraph 9).

The Committee expressed its deep concern at allegations of complicity of low-level government officials with human traffickers, and at the lack of complete data on the prevalence of child trafficking in Kyrgyzstan. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure that persons who traffic in children for the purpose of labour or sexual exploitation are in practice prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the sale and trafficking of persons under the age of 18 is made available. In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for violations of section 124 of the Criminal Code. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 157(1) of the Criminal Code makes it an offence for a person to involve a minor in prostitution. Sections 260 and 261 of the Criminal Code make the enticement into prostitution an offence. Noting the Government's indication that the number of street children and children in risk groups forced into prostitution was rising, it requested the Government to provide information on the practical application of these provisions of the Criminal Code.

The Committee noted the information in the 2008 report on the worst forms of child labour in Kyrgyzstan (WFCL Report), available on the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees website, that child commercial sexual exploitation continues to be a problem due in part to the lack of legal regulation and oversight. This report indicates that children from rural areas (primarily girls) are trafficked from rural areas to Bishkek and Osh for commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations in relation to the OP-SC, expressed concern that in a number of cases of child prostitution, investigations and prosecutions had not been initiated (CRC/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraph 17). The CRC also expressed deep concern that child victims are often stigmatized and socially marginalized and may be held responsible, tried and placed in detention (CRC/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraph 21).

The Committee expressed concern that child prostitution continues in part due to the lack of legal oversight, and that children who are the victims of commercial sexual exploitation risk being regarded as criminals. It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children who are used, procured or offered for commercial sexual exploitation are treated as victims rather than offenders. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to child prostitution, in particular by supplying statistics on the number and nature of violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and sanctions applied. Lastly, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether the national legislation contains provisions criminalizing the client who uses children under 18 years of age for prostitution.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Children working in agriculture. The Committee previously noted that the Government had approved a detailed list of occupations or works prohibited for persons under 18 years, and had adopted regulatory instruments at the sectoral level prohibiting this group from being engaged in work related to the use and storage of pesticides. The Committee also noted that that section 294 of the Labour Code prohibits the employment of persons under the age of 18 years in work with harmful and dangerous conditions, including in the manufacture of tobacco.

Nonetheless, the Committee noted the indication in the WFCL Report that the use of hazardous child labour in the agricultural sector is widespread, particularly in tobacco, rice and cotton fields, and that these children face dangerous working conditions. The Committee also noted the indication in the WFCL Report that, in rural areas, regulations prohibiting children from engaging in such work are not strictly enforced. In this regard, the Committee noted the statement in the report of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (now the International Trade Union Confederation) for the World Trade Organization General Council on the trade policies of Kyrgyzstan of 9 and 11 October 2006, entitled "Internationally recognized core labour standards in Kyrgyzstan" that some schools require children to participate in the tobacco harvest, and that the income from this goes directly to the schools, not the children or their families. This report also indicates that, in some cases, classes are cancelled and children are sent to the fields to pick cotton. Lastly, the Committee noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 3 November 2004, expressed concern regarding the use of children as workers by State institutions, and in particular by State educational establishments (CRC/C/15/Add.244, paragraph 59). The Committee expresses its serious concern at the situation of school children who are required to engage in agricultural work in the cotton and tobacco sectors, often under hazardous conditions, and requests the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure that persons under 18 years of age are protected against this worst form of child labour, including through the enforcement of regulations prohibiting children's involvement in hazardous agricultural work.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Trafficking in children. The Committee previously noted that governmental departments, international agencies and the local media, in collaboration with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), conducted a high-profile awareness campaign on violence against women and trafficking in women and girls and its prevention. The Committee also took note of the Sezim Psychological Crisis Centre in Bishkek, which provided rehabilitation and reintegration services to victims of trafficking, including 30 children.

The Committee noted the information on the IOM website that its collaboration with the Government continues through the IOM programme entitled “Combating Trafficking in Persons in Central Asia: Prevention, Protection and Capacity Building”, which includes awareness raising and assistance for victims. The Committee also noted the information in the Trafficking Report that, while the Government provides no direct funding for shelters or medical assistance to victims, it provides space for three NGO-run shelters, and has improved its process for the repatriation of Kyrgyz nationals who are victims of trafficking. The Trafficking Report also indicates that the Government and NGOs identified 331 trafficking victims in 2007, and 161 victims in 2008. This report further indicates that 117 victims of trafficking received NGO assistance in 2008, 20 of whom were referred to these services by the Government. Observing the disparity between the number of trafficking victims identified, and the number of victims receiving assistance, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of child victims of trafficking, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard, and to supply information on the results achieved, including the number of victims of trafficking under the age of 18 who have participated in the repatriation process, and the number of children receiving rehabilitative assistance, shelter and other services.

2. Children engaged in hazardous work in agriculture. The Committee noted the estimation in the ILO-IPEC Technical Progress Report for the project entitled “Health and rehabilitation of working children in tobacco, rice and cotton fields in Osh and Jalalabat regions” of August 2006 (Agriculture TPR 2006), that child labour in the agricultural sector is quite common in Kyrgyzstan, and that, in the oblast of Jalalabat alone, it is estimated that 125,000 children are involved in agricultural production each year. The Agriculture TPR 2006 indicates that many of these children face work-related risks including injuries resulting from the use of heavy equipment, lack of clean drinking water in the fields, exposure to toxic pesticides, insects and rodents bites, and hazards related to tobacco production (skin irritation and intoxication). However, the Committee noted the statement in the Agriculture TPR 2006 that there is an understanding at the governmental level for the need to develop a comprehensive programme for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in the agricultural sector. The Committee also noted that various initiatives are being implemented to address this issue, such as the “Elimination of child labour in tobacco growing industry in Kyrgyzstan” project for 2010–12, implemented by the Agricultural Workers’ Union and supported by the ECLT Foundation (within the framework of the PROACT–CAR Phase II) and meetings organized by the ILO Bureau for Employers’ Activities on the role of employers in the elimination of child labour in agriculture in Kyrgyzstan.

Nonetheless, the Committee noted the information in the WFCL Report indicating that, during the cotton and tobacco harvesting season, children in southern Kyrgyzstan frequently miss school to work in the fields, often under hazardous conditions. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts to remove and rehabilitate children engaged in hazardous agricultural work, particularly in the cotton, tobacco and rice-growing sectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard, and the results achieved, including information on the number of children removed and rehabilitated.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Lebanon

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee previously noted that the Labour Code only applies to work performed under an employment relationship (by virtue of sections 1, 3 and 8 of the Code). The Committee reminded the Government that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and covers all types of employment or work, whether they are carried out on the basis of an employment relationship or not, and whether they are remunerated or not. It requested the Government to provide information on the manner in which children who are not bound by an employment relationship are covered by the protection provided for in the Convention. The Committee noted the information in the Government’s report that Chapter 2, section 15, of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, prepared by a tripartite committee, provides for rules governing “the employment or work of young persons”. The Committee noted the Government’s statement that the principles in this amendment therefore include all young persons, and not solely those bound by an employment relationship. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption in the near future of the draft amendments to the Labour Code relating to self-employed children or children in the informal economy, and to provide a copy, once adopted.

Article 2(2). Minimum age for admission to employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, at the time of ratifying the Convention, Lebanon declared 14 years as the minimum age for admission to employment or work and that Act No. 536 of 24 July 1996, amending sections 21, 22 and 23 of the Labour Code, prohibits the employment of young persons before they complete 13 years of age (i.e. beginning of 14 years). The Committee also noted the Government’s information that it intended to amend the Labour Code, to prohibit the employment or work of young persons before they complete 14 years (i.e. beginning of 15 years). The Committee noted the information in the Government’s report that section 19 of the draft amendment to the Labour Code prohibits the employment or work of persons under the age of 15 years. Noting that the Government specified a minimum age of 14 years at the time of ratification, the Committee drew the Government’s attention to the fact that Article 2(2) of the Convention establishes the possibility for a State which decides to raise the initially specified minimum age for admission to employment or work to notify the Director-General of the International Labour Office by means of a further declaration. This enables the age fixed by the national legislation to be aligned to that provided for at international level. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in the adoption of the draft amendments to the Labour Code.

Article 2(3). Compulsory education. The Committee previously noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 2002 (CRC/C/15/Add.169), while noting that basic education was free and compulsory until the age of 12, expressed concern about its implementation in practice. It noted the Government’s indication that Act No. 686/1998 relating to free and compulsory education in the primary phase has not so far been applied, due to the economic conditions of the country and the insufficient educational facilities. The Committee also noted that, according to the 2004 ILO-IPEC survey that in Lebanon, 18.9 per cent of children drop out of school at the elementary level (6–11 years), 22.8 per cent at the intermediate level (12–15 years) and 10.6 per cent at the secondary level. According to this survey, dropping out of school was a major contributing factor to the early participation of boys and girls in the labour market.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that 250 children (in three schools), who were at risk of dropping out, were assisted and given additional lessons through a programme entitled "Strengthening courses in basic subjects". The Committee also noted the information in the November 2008 report of the Minister of Education and of Higher Education submitted to UNESCO for the 48th International Conference on Education entitled "The Development of Education in Lebanon", that the Government intends to raise the age at which compulsory education ends, from the current 12 years to 15 years of age. The Committee further noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 8 June 2006 expressed concern that in primary education, parents are still charged for some costs of education despite the legal guarantee of free education, and that dropout rates have increased at this level while enrolment in secondary education declined (CRC/C/LBN/CO/3, paragraph 63).

The Committee was of the view that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour and it is important to emphasize the necessity of linking the age of admission to employment to the age limit for compulsory education. If the two ages do not coincide, various problems may arise. If compulsory schooling comes to an end before the young persons are legally entitled to work, there may be a period of enforced idleness. However, if young persons are legally entitled to work before the end of completion of compulsory schooling, children from poor families might be tempted to drop out of education and work in order to earn money (see ILO: Minimum Age, General Survey of the reports relating to Convention No. 138 and Recommendation No. 146 concerning minimum age, Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, Report III (Part 4(B)), ILC, 67th Session, Geneva, 1981, paragraph 140). Noting the Government's intention to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling to 15 years, the Committee reminded the Government that pursuant to Article 2(3) of the Convention the minimum age for admission to employment (currently 14 years) should not be lower than the age of completion of compulsory schooling. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to provide for compulsory education up until the minimum age for admission to work (which is currently 14 years, and will be 15 years with the adoption of the draft amendments to the Labour Code). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any new developments on this point.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that section 1 of Decree No. 700 of 1999 prohibits the employment of young persons before they complete 17 years of age (i.e. beginning of 18 years). The Committee also noted that Decree No. 700 of 1999 provides for a detailed list of the types of hazardous work in which it is prohibited to employ young persons. The Committee further noted the information in the Government's report that the National Committee to Combat Child Labour (NCCL) was formulating a statute on the worst forms of child labour which, in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention, prohibits the employment of children under 18 years in work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of children.

The Committee noted that section 20 of the draft amendments to the Labour Code prohibits the employment or labour of children before they reach 18 years in work which, by its nature or the conditions in which it is carried out, is likely to expose them to danger. The Committee also noted that the "Draft Decree on the prohibition of employing children before they complete 18 years of age in work which is likely to jeopardize their health, safety or morals" (Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work), was issued by Advisory Opinion No. 239 of the State Council on 26 May 2009 and will be promulgated following approval by the Council of Ministers. The Committee noted the Government's statement that the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work was formulated by the NCCL following the study entitled "Worst Forms of Child Labour – under 18 years old in Lebanon". The Committee further noted that section one of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work provides for the annulment of Decree No. 700 of 1999, and that section two contains a list of the worst forms of child labour prohibited for children under 18, including work with physical, psychological and moral hazards, and work that would limit the young persons' access to education and training. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption by the Council of Ministers of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work (as issued by Advisory Opinion No. 239 of the State Council on 26 May 2009).

Article 3(3). Authorization to undertake hazardous work from 16 years. The Committee previously noted that section 23(1) of the Labour Code prohibits the employment of young persons under 15 years of age in industrial projects and activities which are physically demanding or detrimental to their health, as set out in Annexes 1 and 2. The Committee observed that section 23(1) of the Labour Code was not in conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention, to the extent that it appeared to allow young persons from 15 to 16 years to perform hazardous work. The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that the draft amendment to the Labour Code includes the principles specified in Article 3(3) of the Convention.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that, by virtue of an order of the Ministry of Labour, section 20(3) of the draft amendments to the Labour Code authorizes employment or work in hazardous types of employment as of 16 years of age, under certain conditions. The Committee also noted that section 3 of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work contains a list of activities which may be authorized as of 16 years of age, on the condition that the health, safety and morals of young persons are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee observed that this list prohibits the employment of children under 16 years in work with chemical hazards, physical hazards, intellectual or social hazards, safety hazards (such as heights), some types of agricultural work, work in slaughterhouses, work in construction, work in transport, work in horse races, work in restaurants or hotels, or work in factories with more than 20 employees. The Committee expresses the firm hope that section 3 of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work, concerning the authorization of some types of hazardous work for persons between the ages of 16 and 18, will be adopted shortly and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Exclusion from the application of the Convention of limited categories of employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that section 7 of the Labour Code excludes from its application, and consequently from the scope of application of the Convention, the following categories of work: (a) workers in households in Beirut; (b) agricultural undertakings which are unrelated to trade and industry and which shall have their own legislation; (c) undertakings which only employ family members under the management of the father, mother or guardian; and (d) Government departments and municipal bodies with respect to daily and temporary workers not covered by the regulations governing officials. The Committee also noted the Government's reference to the draft amendments to the Labour Code which would regulate the first three of the abovementioned four excluded categories, by a decree issued by the Council of Ministers.

The Committee noted that section 2(2) of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work, submitted with the Government's report, prohibits, for persons under the age of 18, work with psychological hazards, including domestic work and work where the young person sleeps outside of the home. The Committee also noted that section 3(2) of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work, concerning work prohibited for children under the age of 16, prohibits the employment of a young person in agricultural work (including family undertakings) which requires a tractor, work involving sharp equipment, work involving high ladders or trees or the mixing or dispersal of pesticides and fertilizers and the picking or handling of poisonous plants (including tobacco). The Committee observed that, by virtue of these provisions in the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work, effect is given to the Convention with regard to the previously excluded categories of employment. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the provisions of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work relating to domestic workers and children employed in agricultural work (including family undertakings) will be adopted shortly and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. The Committee previously noted the information in the Government's report that section 16 of the draft amendment to the Labour Code provides for the definition of "training contract" and states that the minimum age to receive vocational training under a contract is 14 years, provided that conditions to safeguard the health, safety or morals of the young persons in question are respected. The Committee noted the Government's statement that amendments are still ongoing to the proposed draft amendments. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in adopting section 16 of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, fixing a minimum age of 14 years for entry into an apprenticeship, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 7. Light work. Following its previous comments, the Committee noted the information in the Government's report that section 19 of the draft amendments to the Labour Code provides that employment or work of young persons in light work may be authorized when they complete 13 years of age (except in different types of industrial work in which the employment or work of young persons under the age of 15 years old is not authorized), on the condition that such employment or work, by its nature or the circumstance in which it is carried out, does not jeopardize their development, health, safety or morals. Section 19 further states that this work should not weaken their capacity to benefit from instruction received, nor should it impact on their participation in vocational orientation and training approved by the competent authority. The Committee also noted the Government's statement that light work activities shall be determined by virtue of an Order promulgated by the Ministry of Labour. The Committee further noted that the Ministry of Labour set up a committee, pursuant to Memorandum 58/1 of 20 June 2009, which in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, shall formulate this statute, among other labour standards. In addition, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour, in coordination with ILO-IPEC, is preparing a study on the classification of occupations undertaken by working children, within the framework of the ILO-IPEC programme "Supporting the national strategy for the elimination of child labour in Lebanon, third phase", so as to formulate this statute on light work. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the formulation and adoption of a statute determining light work activities, in conformity with Article 7 of the Convention, following the adoption of the draft amendments to the Labour Code.

The Committee noted the Government's statement that the draft amendments to the Labour Code have reached an advanced stage and will be referred to the competent authority for its adoption in the shortest delay. The Committee also noted the Government's statement that some amendments are still ongoing to the draft amendments, to achieve additional conformity between its provisions and the provisions of Arab and international labour Conventions. Considering that the Government has been referring to the draft amendments to the Labour Code for a number of years, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the amendments are adopted in the near future. Furthermore, the Committee encourages the Government to take into consideration, during the review of the relevant legislation, the Committee's comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention and invites it to consider technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or similar to slavery. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the relevant Lebanese legislation does not specifically prohibit the trafficking of women and children. The Committee noted that the cooperation project, the "Anti-trafficking project", had been agreed upon by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and the Ministry of Justice (MoJ) to ensure the conformity of national legislation with the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air and with the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons especially Women and Children. According to the project document annexed to the Government's report, the existing Lebanese legislation was reviewed to identify gaps and formulate specific recommendations regarding necessary amendments and adoption of specific anti-trafficking legislation. The Committee noted that this legal review was sent to the MoJ for comments and clearance.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that the amendments to the Labour Code, prepared by a tripartite committee (which was set up by virtue of Order No. 210/1 of 20 December 2000), include provisions relating to the sale and trafficking of children. The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that section 33(a) of these amendments penalizes any person who participates, encourages or facilitates all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children. The Committee observed that it has drawn the Government's attention to the lack of legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children since 2005. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the draft amendments to the Labour Code relating to the prohibition of the sale and trafficking of all persons under the age of 18, as a matter of urgency.

Clauses (b) and (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that section 33(b) of the draft amendments to the Labour Code specifies that any person who participates, encourages, facilitates or incites anyone to use, procure or offer a child or young person for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances is liable to punishment under the Penal Code, in addition to the penalties imposed by the Labour Code. Furthermore, the Committee noted the Government's information that section 33(c) of the draft amendments to the Labour Code provides that any person who participates, encourages, facilitates or incites another to use, procure or offer a child or young person for illicit activities, especially for the production and trafficking of drugs, commits a penal crime under the Penal Code.

The Committee noted the Government's statement that the amendments to the Labour Code are in their last stages and they shall be referred to the competent authorities for adoption within the shortest delay. However, the Committee also noted the Government's statement in its report submitted under Convention No. 138 that further revision to the draft amendment to the Labour Code are still necessary. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the draft amendments to the Labour Code prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of persons under the age of 18 for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, and the use, procuring or offering of persons under the age of 18 for illicit activities.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that Decree No. 700/1999 prohibits the employment of young persons before they complete 17 years of age (i.e. beginning of 18 years) in dangerous activities enumerated according to their nature. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that the National Committee to Combat Child Labour (NCCL) was formulating a statute on the worst forms of child labour to amend Decree No. 700 of 1999 and supplement section 23(1) of the Labour Code.

The Committee noted that section 20 of the draft amendments to the Labour Code prohibits the employment of children under 18 years in work which, by its nature or the conditions in which it is carried out, is likely to expose them to danger. The Committee also noted that the "Draft Decree on the prohibition of employing children before they complete 18 years old in work which is likely to jeopardize their health, safety or morals" (Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work), was approved by Advisory Opinion No. 239 of the shura on 26 May 2009, and will be promulgated following approval by the Council of Ministers. The Committee further noted the Government's statement that the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work was formulated by the NCCL following the study entitled "Worst Forms of Child Labour under 18 years old in Lebanon".

The Committee noted that section 1 of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work provides for the annulment of Decree No. 700/1999, and that section 2 provides a list of the worst forms of child labour prohibited for children under 18, including work with physical, psychological and moral hazards, and work that would limit the young persons' access to education and training. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption by the Council of Ministers of the Draft Decree Prohibiting Hazardous Work for children under 18 as a matter of urgency and requests it to provide information on developments in this regard.

Considering that the Government has referred to these draft amendments to the Labour Code for a number of years and, given that Article 1 of the Convention obliges member States to take "immediate" measures to prohibit the worst forms of child labour, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the amendments are adopted as a matter of urgency. Furthermore, the Committee encourages the Government to take into consideration, during the review of the relevant legislation, the Committee's comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention and invites it to consider technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Lesotho

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. The Committee previously noted that the Programme Advisory Committee on Child Labour had endorsed the Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour (APEC) in 2008. The Government indicated that the APEC had been submitted to Cabinet for approval. The Committee also noted that the Children's Protection and Welfare Bill had yet to be adopted, and had urged the Government to take measures in this regard.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Children's Protection and Welfare Act was adopted on 8 June 2011. However, the Committee also notes the Government's indication that the APEC has not yet been submitted to Cabinet. The Government indicates that a review of the APEC is necessary to ensure that the recommendations are still relevant and that a tripartite stakeholder workshop will be convened by September 2011 in this regard. Observing that the APEC has been awaiting Cabinet approval since 2008, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the appropriate review, adoption and implementation of the APEC in the near future.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. Self-employment and domestic work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the provisions of the Labour Code excluded self-employment from its application. However, the Committee subsequently noted that the draft revision of the Labour Code contained a provision to apply the Labour Code's sections on the minimum age and related issues to self-employed children and children working in the domestic sector. While the Government indicated that efforts were being made towards the adoption of the draft revision, the Committee observed that the Government had been referring to the impending adoption of the draft revision to the Labour Code since 2006.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, pursuant to tripartite discussion at the National Advisory Committee on Labour, separate regulations will be promulgated on domestic work, and that this sector will not be regulated through the revised Labour Code. Moreover, the Committee notes that the revised Labour Code has been given to the Government's legal draftsmen in preparation for submission to Parliament. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the law does not currently provide for inspections to be carried out in the informal economy, hindering the detection of child labour. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the revised Labour Code provides the protection guaranteed in the Convention to children working on a self-employed basis and in the informal economy, and to ensure the adoption of the revised Code without delay. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the regulations developed on domestic work are consistent with the Convention with regard to the minimum age for admission to work, hazardous work and light work.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that primary education is not compulsory and that many children do not have adequate access to education. Additionally, the Committee noted the information from UNESCO's Education for All: Global Monitoring Report of 2010 that there were approximately 101,000 out-of-school children between the ages of 6 and 12. However, the Committee noted that a Bill introducing free and compulsory education (and including sanctions for parents if they did not send their children to school) was before Parliament. Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Bill.

The Committee notes with interest that the Education Act was adopted in 2010. The Committee notes that, pursuant to the Education Act, primary school is free and compulsory. However, the Committee observes that primary school is generally completed at the age of 13 years in Lesotho. Nonetheless, the Government indicates that the issue of linking the age of completion of compulsory schooling with the age of admission to work will be discussed with the Ministry of Education and Training. In this regard, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the importance of linking the age of admission to employment to the age limit for compulsory education; if compulsory schooling comes to an end before young persons are legally entitled to work, there may be a period of enforced inactivity or the early or premature entry into employment or work. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure compulsory education up to the minimum age of employment (of 15 years), and urges the Government to collaborate with the Ministry of Education and Training in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the Education Act, with its next report.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the elaboration and adoption of a list of hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under 18 in the very near future, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 230(2) of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act specifies the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18. This section states that the types of prohibited hazardous work include: mining and quarrying; portage of heavy loads; work in manufacturing industries where chemicals are produced or used; work in places where dangerous machines are used; work in places such as bars, hotels and places of entertainment; herding animals at cattle posts; and the production and trafficking of tobacco. The Committee also notes that section 230(4) of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act states that a person who contravenes this prohibition commits an offence and is liable to a fine not exceeding 20,000 maloti (LSL) (approximately US$2,150) or to a period of imprisonment not exceeding twenty months. Subsequent convictions will be punished with a minimum period of two years' imprisonment.

Article 6. Minimum age for admission to apprenticeship. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that, during the revision of the Labour Code, due consideration would be given to bringing the Labour Code into line with the requirements of Article 6 of the Convention. However, the Government also indicated that there was no regularized system of vocational and technical education, that no consultations had been held on this matter and that there was no minimum age for admission to apprenticeships.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that this matter will be taken up with the Ministry of Education and Training. In this regard, the Committee once again reminds the Government that pursuant to Article 6 of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to work in undertakings in the context of vocational training or an apprenticeship programme is 14 years. It therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, within the context of the draft revision of the Labour Code, to ensure that no child under 14 years of age is permitted to undertake an apprenticeship in an enterprise, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee previously noted that section 124(2) of the Labour Code permits the employment of children between the ages of 13 and 15 for light work in technical schools and similar institutions, provided that the work has been approved by the Department of Education. Subsequently, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the draft revision of the Labour Code includes a provision (proposed section 124(6)) which defines light work as work which is not likely to be harmful to the health or development of the child and does not affect the child's attendance in, or the child's capacity to benefit from, school.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the proposed section 124(6) of the revised Labour Code will only permit the performance of light work in technical schools and similar institutions. However, observing the significant number of children under the minimum age who are, in practice, engaged in economic activity (36 per cent of children aged 13 years and 38 per cent of children aged 14 years according to the most recent Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey), the Committee encourages the Government to consider regulating light work outside of technical schools to ensure that these children benefit from the protection of the Convention. If the Government decides to permit light work for children between the ages of 13 and 15 outside of technical schools, the Committee draws the Government's attention to Article 7(3) of the Convention, which states that the competent authority shall determine what is light work and shall prescribe the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment or work may be undertaken. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments with regard to the regulation of light work activities, particularly with regard to providing legal protection to children between the ages of 13 and 15 who are, in practice, engaged in light work outside of technical schools.

Parts III and V of the report form. Labour inspectorate and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that, according to the 2004 Lesotho Child Labour Survey, 23 per cent of the children in Lesotho are child labourers. The survey also indicated that children mainly work in agricultural activities followed by those who work as domestic workers. The Government indicated that the office of the Labour Commissioner carries out inspections in all commercial enterprises but not in the informal economy and private residences, which is where most child labour occurs.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is making efforts to conduct a new child labour survey, and that consultations were held with ILO-IPEC in June 2011 regarding technical assistance for this purpose. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that it is facing considerable capacity constraints which makes it difficult to extend inspection services to the informal economy, and that this is exacerbated by the lack of a legal basis to perform inspections in the informal economy. The Government indicates that inspection reports therefore only relate to commercial and industrial undertakings, and do not contain information on the number and nature of violations related to child labour. Noting the Government's indication under Article 2(1) that the adoption of the revised Labour Code is imminent, thereby providing the legal basis for carrying out inspections in the informal economy, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate to areas in which children work, particularly the informal economy. Furthermore, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to undertake a child labour survey, and to provide any up-to-date statistical information obtained in this regard.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously urged the Government to take immediate measures to ensure the adoption of legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act was enacted into law on 11 January 2011, and that section 5(1) and (2) of this Act prohibits the trafficking of children. Section 5(2) of this Act provides for a maximum penalty of life imprisonment or a fine of up to 2,000,000 Lesotho maloti (LSL) for this offence (approximately US$253,453). In addition, the Committee notes that section 2 of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act defines a child as a person who is under 18 years of age and defines trafficking to include the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring, sale, supply or receipt of persons, within and across the borders of Lesotho by means of the use of threat, force or other means of coercion, abduction, kidnapping, fraud or deception, the abuse of power, law or legal process or a position of vulnerability or debt bondage or the giving or receiving of payment to obtain the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Moreover, the Committee notes with interest that the Children's Protection and Welfare Act was adopted on 31 March 2011 and that section 67 thereof prohibits the trafficking of children (defined as all person under the age of 18, pursuant to section 3 of the Act).

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that street children were used by adults in illegal activities, such as housebreaking and petty theft. It also noted the Government's indication that there is no legislation that specifically prohibits the use, procuring or offering of a child under the age of 18 for illicit activities. However, it noted that the section 129A(3)(c) of the draft revision of the Labour Code prohibited the worst forms of child labour, including the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.

The Committee notes that section 18 of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act states that a child has the right to be protected from, inter alia, being involved in the production, trafficking or distribution of drugs. However, the Committee observes that this provision does not appear to explicitly prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for other illicit activities, nor does it provide for penalties for adults who engage in this practice. Regarding the draft revision of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government's statement that the Code is currently being prepared for presentation to Parliament and that it hopes that the draft revision of the Labour Code will be adopted early next year. Observing that the Government has been referring to the impending adoption of the draft revision of the Labour Code since 2006, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure its adoption in the near future, to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 for illicit activities.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Child domestic work. The Committee previously noted that, according to the 2004 Lesotho Child Labour Survey, girls performing domestic work face verbal, physical and, in some cases, sexual abuse from their employers, and that these children generally do not attend school. This survey also indicated that 17.4 per cent of all working children were paid domestic workers. The Committee further noted the Government's reference to the provision inserted in the draft revision of the Labour Code which provides for the protection of children engaged in domestic work. In addition, the Committee noted the information in the joint document produced by ILO-IPEC and the Ministry of Employment and Labour in 2006 entitled "Implementation Plan of the Programme towards the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in Lesotho" that girls as young as 12 years work as domestic workers, and that these children often work long exhausting days for low pay.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report submitted under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that, pursuant to tripartite discussions at the National Advisory Committee on Labour, separate regulations will be promulgated on domestic work, instead of regulating domestic work through the Labour Code. The Committee also notes the Government's statement in its report to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women of 26 August 2010 that domestic work is an unregulated sector and the rights of these workers are open to abuse (CEDAW/C/LSO/1-4, paragraph 68). The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that child domestic workers are protected from hazardous work. In this regard, it requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the regulations promulgated on domestic work prohibit hazardous work in this sector to all children under 18 years of age. It further requests the Government to provide a copy of these regulations, once adopted.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to ensure the elaboration and adoption of a list of hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under 18 years.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 230(1) of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act states that no child below 18 years shall be employed in any form of hazardous work, and section 230(2) specifies that hazardous work includes mining and quarrying; portering of heavy loads; work in manufacturing industries where chemicals are produced or used; work in places where dangerous machines are used; work in places such as bars, hotels and places of entertainment; herding animals at cattle posts; and the production and trafficking of tobacco. The Committee also notes that section 230(4) of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act states that a person who contravenes this prohibition commits an offence and is liable to a fine not exceeding LSL20,000 (approximately US$2,150) or to a period of imprisonment not exceeding 20 months.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee noted the comments of the Commissioner of Labour of 2 March 2008 indicating that child labour continues to be a problem in Lesotho, particularly with regard to under-age domestic workers and herders. The Committee also noted the information in the joint document produced by ILO-IPEC and the Ministry of Employment and Labour of 2006 indicating that the trafficking of children, commercial sexual exploitation, the use of children by adults in illegal activities and hazardous street work are all present in Lesotho. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that a child labour survey needs to be carried out in order to determine the nature, extent and trends of child labour in Lesotho, as the last such survey was carried out in 2004. The Government indicates that meetings were held with ILO-IPEC in June 2011 regarding technical assistance for this purpose. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to undertake a survey on child labour and its worst forms, to ensure that up-to-date statistical information on this subject is made available. It also requests the Government to provide, along with its next report, information on the number and nature of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed with regard to the worst forms of child labour. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Madagascar

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee takes note of the communication from the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (CGSTM) of 26 August 2011, as well as of the Government's report.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that, according to the National Survey on Child Labour (ENTE) of 2007, conducted by the National Bureau of Statistics in conjunction with ILO-IPEC/SIMPOC, in Madagascar more than one child out of four between 15 and 17 years of age (28 per cent) is economically active, that is 1,870,000 children. The participation rate in economic activity increases with age; while 12–15 per cent of children between 5 and 9 years of age are economically active, the rate rises to more than 30 per cent in the 10–14 years age group, and to 55 per cent in the case of children between 15 and 17 years. The problem is more acute in rural areas, where 31 per cent of children engage in some form of economic activity as opposed to 19 per cent in urban areas. Most economically-active children are found in agriculture and fishing and in most cases (two out of three) they work as home helpers. In the 5–14 years age group, 22 per cent engage regularly in an economic activity and 70 per cent attend school. The Committee had noted the adoption of the National Plan of Action against Child Labour in Madagascar (PNA), and the six action plans covering the rural sector, mining and quarrying, manufacturing, domestic service, catering and trade, and miscellaneous activities.

The Committee notes the allegations by the CGSTM that many underage children from rural areas are sent by their parents to large towns to work in the domestic sector. These children have to perform housekeeping activities that might be exhausting and sometimes have no clearly defined leave periods or working hours. Furthermore, these children have not necessarily completed their compulsory schooling.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the first phase of the PNA lasted two years and ended in 2009. The Government indicates that 2,098 children (of which 1,000 girls) received a formal education and 345 children (of which 182 girls) received a non-formal education. The current PNA is in its extension phase, i.e. it is extending actions instigated during the first phase in terms of staffing, beneficiaries and coverage. A policy plan for the second phase of the PNA has been drafted, which includes the following objectives: improving legal frameworks and making them effective; strengthening the efficiency of institutions, the capacity of stakeholders and the supervisory system; improving education and vocational training; and stepping up mobilization and awareness-raising campaigns. The Government also points out that before the end of 2011, certain activities will be undertaken to support the implementation and extension of the PNA strategies, especially the strengthening of regional structures, by setting up the Regional Committee for Combating Child Labour (CRLTE) in the Sava region in the north of the country; by adopting new legal texts on child labour; and by updating data banks on child labour. While taking note of the measures taken by the Government to combat child labour, the Committee feels bound to express its concern at the considerable number of children under the minimum age obliged to work, as well as at the conditions under which these children are exploited. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to step up its efforts to combat child labour and asks it to continue communicating information on the implementation of the PNA, as well as on the results obtained in terms of the gradual abolition of child labour.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that, according to a document published by the UNESCO International Bureau of Education, the age of completion of compulsory schooling was lower than the minimum age for admission to employment or work. Indeed, the Committee had pointed out that, according to this document, the official age for access to primary education was 6 years and the levels of compulsory schooling 5 years, thus making the age of completion of compulsory schooling 11 years. The Committee had noted the Government's indication that it was fully aware of the importance of compulsory schooling as a means of combating child labour. The Government had stated that several meetings had been held on this subject in order to give the matter of national education the place it deserved, but work remained to be done, in particular because of the political crisis currently affecting the country.

The Committee notes the CGSTM's allegation that the Government has not made any changes to solve the problem of the difference between the age of the end of compulsory schooling (11 years) and the minimum age of admission to employment (15 years).

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the gap between the age of completion of compulsory schooling and the minimum age of admission to employment or work was conceived in a spirit of family solidarity and that this system of education is better suited to the Malagasy family. However, the Committee expresses once again its opinion that compulsory schooling constitutes one of the most effective means of combating child labour and emphasizes the necessity to link the age of admission to employment or work and the age of completion of compulsory schooling. In cases where these two ages do not coincide, various problems can arise. If schooling ends before young persons are legally authorized to work, a period of enforced inactivity may occur or the young person may enter employment or work at too early an age. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take measures to ensure that the age of completion of compulsory schooling coincides with the age of admission to employment or work in Madagascar, in accordance with Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146). It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that a decree determining the conditions of work with respect to vocational training and apprenticeships would be examined by the National Labour Council (CNT), which is a tripartite body. It had also noted that, according to the Government, the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training was preparing various regulations on vocational training which were to be examined in 2006. The Committee had further noted that the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training was planning to submit to Parliament a bill on the National Employment Policy, in which further vocational training and apprenticeships were a priority objective. The Committee had noted the Government's statement that the abovementioned draft texts were before the CNT.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the draft texts on vocational training and apprenticeships were examined by the CNT but that, as a result of the political crisis and the closure of many enterprises, the CNT is not yet in a position to take any final decisions, and a number of its members want to re-examine the issue once the crisis is over. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to redouble its efforts and take the necessary measures to ensure that the bills on apprenticeship and vocational training are adopted at the earliest possible date. It again asks the Government to provide a copy of these texts once they have been adopted.

The Committee takes note of the communication from the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (CGSTM) of 26 August 2011, as well as of the Government's report.

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Street children. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's information that the Ministry of Labour and Social Legislation was continuing its programme of school attendance and training for street children in the context of the Public Investment for Social Action Programme (PIP). It had noted that the action of the PIP had been extended to the regional level, under the direction of the labour and social legislation services in each region, and that the "Manjary Soa" Centre, financed by the PIP, supported child victims of labour, in particular its worst forms, and offered them remedial teaching or vocational training.

The Committee notes the CGSTM's allegation that the number of street children has increased over the past two years. The CGSTM also indicates that the action taken by the Government to help them is still minimal.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the Ministry of Labour and Social Legislation is continuing to run programmes to reintegrate street children and those involved in the worst forms of child labour into school and occupations. The Government states that the programmes financed in the context of the PIP aim at withdrawing 40 children per year from the worst forms of child labour, i.e. 120 children over a three-year period. According to the Government, 105 children were supported by the programme during the 2009–11 period, of which 60 were reintegrated into the school system and 45 took up vocational training. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its concern that the number of street children has allegedly increased recently, and therefore requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that children living in the streets are protected from the worst forms of child labour, and rehabilitated and socially integrated. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the results obtained.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee had noted that, according to the National Survey on Child Labour (ENTE) of 2007, conducted by the National Statistical Institute in collaboration with the ILO–IPEC–SIMPOC, more than one in four Malagasy children aged between 5 and 17 years (28 per cent) is economically active, which amounts to 1,870,000 children in absolute terms. The rate of children aged 15–17 years who are involved in economic activity is 55 per cent, which can partly be explained by the fact that school is no longer compulsory for this age group. Furthermore, the majority of economically active children (82 per cent) are engaged in harmful work. In total, almost 1,534,000 children are involved in this type of work. Among children aged 15 years or more, approximately one in two economically active children (49 per cent) – 328,000 children – is engaged in harmful work, i.e. the worst forms of child labour. The ENTE also indicates that 23 per cent of economically active children in Madagascar aged 5 to 17 years – 438,000 children – are engaged in a dangerous activity. The sectors of agriculture, animal husbandry and fishing monopolize most of where harmful child labour is found, both in the rural sector and the urban sector (88 and 72 per cent, respectively). As opposed to the rural sector, child labour in the urban sector is characterized by the prevalence of domestic work (11 per cent) and of commerce and catering (10 per cent). Girls often work as domestic workers (17 per cent of girls aged 15 to 17 years, as opposed to 9 per cent of boys from the same age group), or perform activities in the sector of commerce and catering (respectively, 5 and 7 per cent of girls aged 10 to 14 years and 15 to 17 years).

The Committee notes the CGSTM's allegations that the political and economic crisis in Madagascar has resulted in even more under age children entering labour and employment. As regards the worst forms of child labour, the most affected sectors are mines, agriculture and manufacturing. The CGSTM states that children working in the mines (Llakaka) and in stone quarries do so under precarious and sometimes dangerous conditions. Furthermore, the worst forms of child labour exist in the informal sector and rural areas, which the labour administration services do not manage to cover.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the second phase of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labour in Madagascar (PNA) is geared, inter alia, towards improving legal frameworks, stepping up awareness-raising campaigns, harnessing funds for extending actions against child labour and its worst forms and updating databases on child labour as and when there is a need as the campaign advances. While noting the measures taken by the Government to combat the worst forms of child labour within the framework of the PNA, the Committee must express its concern at the situation and number of children under 18 years of age forced to undertake dangerous work, and urges the Government to redouble its efforts to eliminate these worst forms of child labour. It asks the Government to continue providing information on any progress made in this respect and on results achieved. Furthermore, the Committee asks the Government to continue providing information on the worst forms of child labour, and particularly studies and inquiries on this subject; information on the nature, extent and trends of these forms of child labour; the number of children covered by the measures giving effect to the Convention; the number and nature of violations reported; and the investigations, proceedings, sentences and penal sanctions. To the extent possible, all this information should be disaggregated by age and sex.

The Committee is raising other points in a request it is addressing directly to the Government.

Malawi

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, while many measures were being implemented by the Government to combat child labour through the ILO–IPEC project “Support to the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labour in Malawi”, the Government was moving slowly in the final adoption of the national policy and National Action Programme (NAP), even though these had been adopted at ministerial level. The Committee also noted that the Malawi Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey of 2006 indicates that approximately 33.6 per cent of all persons between the ages of 5 and 14 (1.4 million children) are involved in economic activity in Malawi.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's information that its National Child Labour Policy was finalized and that it has launched the NAP on Child Labour for Malawi (2010–16), in which the responsibilities of all stakeholders in the fight against child labour are well articulated. The priorities of the NAP include developing and improving the policy and legislative framework; building the capacity of the education sector; creating awareness and bridging the information gap on child labour; and building the institutional and technical capacity of service providers. Considering that the last comprehensive survey on child labour in Malawi was undertaken in 2002 and that no follow-up survey was done, it is also envisaged to conduct a national child labour survey and regularly update national child labour statistics in order to determine their trends and prevalence. Expressing its concern at the considerable number of children under 14 who are engaged in economic activity in Malawi, the Committee once again urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure the progressive abolition of child labour and the enforcement of the relevant legislation in the country. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the implementation of the NAP on Child Labour, and on the results achieved in terms of the progressive abolition of child labour. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the results of the national child labour survey when they are available.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Employment Act is applicable only where there is an employment contract or labour relationship and does not cover self-employment. The Committee therefore drew the Government's attention to possibilities for providing self-employed children the protection of the Convention, including the elaboration of legislation specifically to ensure children's rights or by strengthening the labour inspectorate in sectors where children are often self-employed, such as the commercial agricultural sector. Indeed, the Committee had noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 27 March 2009, expressed concern that many children between 15 and 17 are engaged in work that is considered as hazardous, especially in the tobacco and tea estate sector (which continues to be a major source of child labour) (CRC/C/MWI/CO/2, paragraph 66). In this regard, the Committee had noted that the Tenancy Labour Bill, a Bill which establishes a minimum age for employment in the tobacco sector and provides for frequent inspections of tobacco estates, had been finalized technically and was awaiting Cabinet approval (prior to submission to Parliament). Nonetheless, the Government had indicated that it has a considerable backlog of legislation to deal with.

The Committee observes that, within the framework of the NAP on Child Labour in Malawi, it is envisaged to vigorously promote the Tenancy Labour Bill for enactment. In this regard, the Government indicates that the forthcoming parliamentary sitting will likely discuss the Bill and adopt it, at which point a copy of the Tenancy Labour Act will be forwarded to the Committee. The Committee once again expresses its concern that the Tenancy Labour Bill has yet to be adopted and urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Bill at the next parliamentary sitting. It expresses the firm hope that, in adopting the Tenancy Labour Bill, the labour inspection component concerning children working in the commercial agricultural sector on their own account will be strengthened, and requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard along with its next report.

Article 3(1). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a discrepancy between article 23 of the Constitution, which provides for protection from dangerous work for children below the age of 16 years, and section 22(1) of the Employment Act, which, in accordance with the Convention, lays down a minimum age of 18 years for work that is likely to be harmful to their health, safety, education, morals or development, or prejudicial to their attendance in school. This issue was discussed at a tripartite meeting in 2005, where it was agreed by all social partners that there was a need to harmonize the provisions of the national laws. Subsequently, this issue was presented to the Malawi Law Commission for consideration, and the Commission recommended that the age stipulated under article 23 of the Constitution be raised to 18 years of age.

The Committee notes that the Government provides no information on that point in its report. Yet, according to the NAP on Child Labour, inconsistencies among various pieces of legislation relating to children, including the Constitution, remain an issue. Observing that the discrepancy between section 22(1) of the Employment Act and article 23 of the Constitution has been under discussion since 2005, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the NAP on Child Labour or otherwise, to ensure that the recommended amendment to article 23 of the Constitution is adopted in the very near future, in conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that a List of Hazardous Work for children has been finalized and that it is currently being processed for gazetting. Observing that the Government has been referring to the List of Hazardous Work since 2006, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft list of types of hazardous work is adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this list as soon as it is adopted.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers by employers. The Committee previously noted that section 23 of the Employment Act stipulates that every employer is required to maintain a register of persons aged below 18 years employed by, or working for, him/her. However, the Committee also noted the indication of the Malawi Trade Unions Congress (MCTU) that some estates did not have registers, particularly in commercial agriculture. The Committee noted the Government's indication that labour inspectors have demanded labour registers when inspecting any workplace and, where no such register exists, the owner is advised to purchase one which is available at the government press or any bookshop. The Government also indicated that the applicable parliamentary Act still did not have a model register, that the registers available at the government press are general and that employers use different formats. Nonetheless, the Government indicated that following discussions with the social partners, it was resolved to develop standard templates for various legislative prescriptions, including a model for a labour register. The Committee noted the Government's information that the draft model register would be finalized before the end of the year, and that this draft will be submitted to the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council for adoption.

The Government indicates that the modern register of employment will be in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention and will be submitted to the Committee as soon as it is produced. In this regard, the Committee once again reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 9(3) of the Convention, the registers kept by employers shall contain the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified wherever possible, of persons whom they employ, or who work for them, and who are less than 18 years of age. Observing that the Government has been referring to the model register of employment since 2006, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure its elaboration and adoption without delay. It once again requests the Government to supply a copy of the model register as soon as it is adopted.

Articles 3 and 7 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, although various penal provisions relate to the offences of abduction and trafficking, these provisions are not comprehensive. However, the Committee noted that the Child Care, Protection and Justice Bill, which was adopted on 28 June 2010, contains a definition of child trafficking and imposes a penalty of life imprisonment for convicted traffickers, and expressed the firm hope that the adopted version of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Bill prohibits the sale and trafficking (both internal and cross-border) of all persons under 18 years of age for the purposes of labour and sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes that section 179(1) of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act provides that a person who takes part in any transaction involving child trafficking is liable to life imprisonment. According to section 179(2), child trafficking means the recruitment, transaction, transfer, harbouring or receipt of a child for the purposes of exploitation. The Committee observes, however, that according to section 2(d) of the same Act, a "child" means a person below the age of 16 years. The Committee reminds the Government that by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, Member States are required to prohibit the sale and trafficking of all children under 18 years of age. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act is amended to extend the prohibition of sale and trafficking to cover all children under the age of 18, as a matter of urgency. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of this Act, including in particular, statistics on the number and nature of violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that the use, procuring or offering of young persons under 18 years of age for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances existed in Malawi and that national legislation did not appear to prohibit these worst forms of child labour. The Committee noted the Government's statement in its report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) of 17 July 2008, that, while there are no data available on the number of children involved in sexual exploitation, including prostitution and pornography, these are recognized problems in the country (CRC/C/MWI/2, paragraph 323). However, the Committee noted the Government's indication that it endeavoured to include such a prohibition in the ongoing review of labour laws, including the Employment (Amendment) Bill, which was going through a final round of examination prior to submission to the Ministry of Justice.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no new information on the adoption of the Employment (Amendment) Bill. It notes, however, the Government's statement that the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act prohibits the procuring or offering of boys and girls under the age of 16 years for the purpose of prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In this regard, the Committee observes that section 84(1)(d) only provides that a social welfare officer who has reasonable grounds to believe that a child is being used for the purposes of prostitution or immoral practices may remove and temporarily place the child in a place of safety.

The Committee reminds the Government that Article 3(b) of the Convention requires Member States to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the continued lack of regulation to prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and once again draws the Government's attention to its obligation under Article 1 to take immediate measures to prohibit the worst forms of child labour. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure the adoption of national legislation prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of both boys and girls under 18 years of age, for the purpose of prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, and to include sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions in this legislation. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 4(1). Determination of types of hazardous work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that a list of hazardous work for children is in the process of being finalized. Observing that the Government has been referring to the List of Hazardous Work since 2006, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft list of types of hazardous work is adopted as a matter of urgency. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this list as soon as it is adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing assistance for the removal of children from these types of work and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children engaged in hazardous work in commercial agriculture, particularly tobacco estates. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the summary outline for the ILO-IPEC Action Programme of 2007, entitled "Mzimba Project on Elimination of Child Labour", there were 734,845 child labourers working in the agricultural sector in Malawi, out of which 288,341 were working in hazardous occupations. It also noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 27 March 2009, expressed concern that many children between 15–17 are engaged in work that is considered as hazardous, especially in the tobacco and tea estate sector, which continues to be a major source of child labour (CRC/C/MWI/CO/2, paragraph 66). The Committee noted that ILO-IPEC was implementing several action programmes in the tobacco sector, which sought to withdraw children from hazardous work and reintegrate these children into formal and non-formal educational programmes, as well as to raise awareness about child labour in agriculture.

The Committee notes the Government's information that labour inspections have been undertaken in the tobacco sector, to help withdraw children from this sector, to rehabilitate and then to send them back to school. It further notes that, within the framework of the National Action Plan (NAP) on Child Labour, it is envisaged to improve awareness of child labour at all levels; prevent and withdraw children from such labour; and provide these children with educational opportunities. In this regard, the NAP on Child Labour indicates that the agricultural sector, including tobacco plantations and family farms, constitutes one of its sectoral priorities, as it accounts for 53 per cent of child labour in the country. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect children from hazardous work in the tobacco sector through measures taken within the framework of the NAP on Child Labour. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide concrete information on the number of children who have been thus prevented or withdrawn from engaging in this type of hazardous work, and then rehabilitated and socially integrated.

Clause (e). Special situation of girls. The Committee previously noted that, according to the Malawi child labour survey of 2002, all the child victims of commercial sexual exploitation were girls. Half of these girls had lost both of their parents, while 65 per cent of them did not attend school past the second year. The Committee also noted that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its concluding observations of 5 February 2010, expressed concern at the extent to which women and girls are involved in sexual exploitation, including prostitution, and the limited statistical data regarding these issues (CEDAW/C/MWI/CO/6, paragraph 24). It therefore requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to protect girls under the age of 18 from commercial sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government provides no information on this point in its report. It therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to prevent girls under the age of 18 from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation, and to remove and rehabilitate victims of this worst form of child labour, within the framework of the NAP on Child Labour or otherwise. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard, as well as information on the impact of these measures. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by age and sex.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malaysia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes the Government's report dated 14 September 2011, as well as the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 31 August 2011.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee previously noted that, at the time of ratifying the Convention, the Government had declared 15 years as the minimum age for admission to employment. However, the Committee noted that Children and Young Persons (Employment) Act of 1966 (CYP Act) provided that no "child" (defined as a person under 14 years of age, pursuant to section 1(A)) shall be engaged in any employment. In this regard, the Committee noted that, according to a Government representative of Malaysia at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2009, a tripartite technical committee was established, to, among other things, review the CYP Act and give consideration to raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work from 14 to 15 years. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the tripartite technical committee raised the minimum age for admission to employment or work to 15 years, and that the relevant amendments were adopted as soon as possible.

The Committee notes the statement in the communication of the ITUC that no one under the minimum age specified by the Government upon ratification (of 15 years) should be admitted to employment or work in any occupation.

The Committee notes that the Children and Young Persons (Employment) (Amendment) Act of 2010 (CYP Amendment Act) was adopted and has been in force since 1 March 2011. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the CYP Amendment Act amends the CYP Act to define a “child” as a person under 15 years of age, thereby raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work (pursuant to section 2(1) of the CYP Act) from 14 years to 15 years of age.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to and determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the relevant legislation did not contain any provisions prohibiting young people under 18 years of age from being employed in types of work likely to jeopardize their health, safety or morals. However, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that it would make the necessary recommendations to the tripartite technical committee so as to ensure that no one under the age of 18 years is authorized to perform hazardous work and that those hazardous types of work are determined in national legislation. Noting the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee strongly urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the tripartite technical committee seriously considered prohibiting hazardous work or employment to persons under 18 years of age, in accordance with Article 3(1) of the Convention, and to ensure that the determination of these types of hazardous work.

The Committee notes the statement in the ITUC’s communication that several provisions of the CYP Act are inconsistent with Convention No. 138, including that it does not specify a minimum age for admission to hazardous work.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that, pursuant to the CYP Amendment Act, the term “young person” is defined as a person between 15 and 18 years of age (pursuant to section 1A), and that pursuant to section 2(1) of the CYP Act, no child or young person (i.e. all persons under 18 years) shall be required or permitted to engage in any hazardous employment. The Committee also notes that section 2(5) of the CYP Act has been amended to state that no child or young person may be engaged in work underground, or in any employment contrary to the provisions of the Factories and Machinery Act, the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1994 or the Electricity Supply Act of 1990. Moreover, the Committee notes that the CYP Act has been amended to include section 2(6), which states that for the purpose of section 2, “hazardous work” means any work that has been classified as hazardous based on the risk assessment conducted by a competent authority on safety and health as determined by the Minister. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken, pursuant to section 2(6) of the CYP Act (as amended), to determine the types of work which constitute hazardous work prohibited to persons under the age of 18, following consultations with the organizations of employers and workers concerned.

Article 7(1). Minimum age for admission to light work. The Committee previously noted that section 2(2)(a) of the CYP Act allows children to be employed in light work which is adequate to their capacity, in any undertaking carried on by their family, but observed that no minimum age for admission to light work had been specified. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the CYP Act was reviewed and amended to provide a minimum age of 13 years for light work.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that there is no minimum age of 13 years for light work specified in the CYP Act (as amended), but that the general protection of such persons is stipulated in the Child Act 2001. However, the Committee observes that the Child Act 2001 does not appear to contain provisions relating to the minimum age for admission to light work, and instead provides for the general protection of children under 18 years of age. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that Article 7(1) of the Convention, provides for the possibility of admitting young persons to light work activities only from the age of 13 years. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take measures to establish a minimum age of 13 years of age for admission to light work, in conformity with Article 7(1) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 7(3). Determination of types of light work. The Committee previously shared the concern expressed by the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 25 June 2007, that the provisions of the CYP Act concerning light work permit, among other things, employment involving light work without detailing the acceptable conditions of performing such work (CRC/C/MYS/CO/1, paragraph 90). However, the Committee noted that the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards explained that, within the framework of the revision of the CYP Act, the tripartite technical committee would consider whether the competent authority could authorize the performance of light work, which would include a definition of light work and a limitation of working time. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the CYP Act was reviewed and amended to determine the types of light work, including the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment or work may be undertaken.

The Committee notes with interest that pursuant to section 3 of the CYP Amendment Act, the term “light work” is defined in section 1A of the CYP Act as any work performed by a worker: (a) while sitting, with moderate movement of the arm, leg and trunk; or (b) while standing, with mostly moderate movement of the arm. The Committee also notes that pursuant to section 5 of the CYP Act, no person under 15 shall work between 8 p.m. and 7 a.m. Section 5(c) of the CYP Act (as amended) further states that if a child is attending school, the time in school and work combined shall not exceed seven hours. Moreover, section 5(b) of this Act states that no child may work for more than three consecutive hours without a period of rest of at least 30 minutes, and may not work on any day without having had 14 consecutive hours of rest.

Parts III and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 25 June 2007, expressed concern that the enforcement of Convention No. 138 remained weak (CRC/C/MYS/CO/1, paragraph 90). It also noted that the CRC expressed its regret at the lack of a national data collection system and at the insufficient data on working children. However, the Committee noted the indication of the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards that the Malaysia peninsula alone has 300 labour inspectors, with every labour inspector carrying out between 25 and 30 inspections per month. The Government representative also indicated that, out of 30,084 complaints received on various labour issues, none of these cases related to child labour. Nonetheless, the Committee noted that the Worker members at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards indicated that issues remained, particularly with regard to children working on oil palm plantations, in the agricultural sector, and also with regard to children working in towns and cities.

The Committee notes the statement in the report of the ITUC, for the World Trade Organization General Council on the Trade Policies of Malaysia of 18 and 20 January 2010, entitled Internationally recognized core labour standards in Malaysia that child labour in Malaysia can be found primarily in rural areas in agriculture, where children often work along with their parents without receiving a salary. In urban areas, children work in restaurants, shops and small manufacturing units usually owned by family members. The ITUC further indicates in this report that the Government does not collect statistical data on child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Labour Department (under the Ministry of Human Resources) is taking the necessary measures to ensure that data on working children is collected. The Government indicates that it would like to consider engaging the technical assistance of the ILO to facilitate this data collection. Moreover, referring to its comments made under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), in 2010, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report submitted under Convention No. 81 that labour departments have been engaged in consultations with the police and the Immigration Department in respect of the employment of child workers, including on awareness raising among employers on child labour and the related legislation. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that up-to-date statistical data on the economic activities of children and young persons is collected and made available, including the number of children working under the minimum age of 15, and to provide this information in its next report. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate to better monitor children carrying out economic activities in the agricultural sector. It requests the Government to provide information on measures taken in this regard.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 17(1) and (2) of the Child Act of 2001 only refers indirectly to the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and that there appear to be no specific provisions that explicitly prohibit and punish such acts committed by persons other than the child's parents, guardian or extended family. The Committee noted the Government's information that the provisions of the Child Act need to be read together with other acts and regulations such as the Penal Code (Act 574), in which section 377E prohibits any person from inciting a child under the age of 14 years to any act of gross indecency with him or another person. The Committee observed that section 377E only extends this prohibition to the case of children who are under 14 years of age. The Committee noted the Government's information that the Ministry of Women, Family and Community Development (MWFC) is currently in the process of amending the Child Act, in the course of which the Government indicates that the issue of the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances will be given due consideration. The Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that, in the framework of the amendments to the Child Act, legislation is adopted to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, in accordance with Article 3(b) of the Convention, as a matter of urgency. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee had previously noted that section 32 of the Child Act of 2001 punishes anyone who causes or procures or allows any person under 18 years of age to be on any street, premises or place for the purposes of "carrying out illegal hawking, illegal lotteries or gambling, or other illegal activities detrimental to the health or welfare of the child". However, the Committee had noted that there seem to be no specific provisions which explicitly prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee noted the Government's information that the "other illegal activities detrimental to the health or welfare of the child" of section 32 of the Child Act include the use, procuring and offering of a child for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. As the Committee needs further information to assess whether section 32 of the Child Act can be applied effectively to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs, it requests the Government to provide information on the effect given to this provision in practice, including statistics on the number of persons prosecuted and found guilty under section 32 of the Child Act of using, procuring or offering a child under 18 years for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.

Clause (d) and Article 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the relevant legislation does not contain any provisions prohibiting young people under 18 years of age from being employed in types of work likely to jeopardize their health, safety or morals. It had noted the Government's referral to two prohibitions provided for in the CYP Act for children and young people: (i) managing or being in close proximity to machinery; and (ii) working underground. The Committee had observed that section 2(5) of the CYP Act provides that no child or young person shall be, or required or permitted to be, engaged in any employment contrary to the provisions of the Factories and Machinery Act, 1967, or the Electricity Act, 1949, or in any employment requiring them to work underground. It had noted, however, that section 1A(1) of the CYP Act defines a "child" as being any person who has not completed their fourteenth year of age, and a "young person" as being any person who has not completed their sixteenth year of age. The Committee had reminded the Government that, by virtue of Article 3(d) of the Convention, hazardous work constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and consequently shall be prohibited for children under 18 years of age. It had also recalled that Article 4(1) of the Convention states that the types of work referred to under Article 3(d) shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, taking into consideration relevant international standards, in particular Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190).

The Committee noted that, according to a Government representative of Malaysia at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference of June 2009, the Government would set up a tripartite technical committee composed of employers' organizations, workers' organizations, government agencies and other relevant agencies. Referring to conclusions made by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee noted that the Government indicated that it would make the necessary recommendations to the tripartite technical committee so as to ensure that no one under the age of 18 years is authorized to perform hazardous work and that those hazardous types of work are determined in national legislation. The Committee also noted the Government's information in its report that a proposal to include new provisions in the CYP Act to specify and determine the types of hazardous work and to prohibit the employment or work of persons under 18 years of age in these types of work is currently being reviewed by the Department of Labour. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take effective and immediate measures to ensure that the tripartite technical committee seriously considers the prohibition of the employment or work of persons under 18 years of age, in accordance with Article 3(d) of the Convention. Moreover, it firmly hopes that the determination of types of hazardous work to be prohibited to persons below 18 years of age will be reviewed and adopted by the Department of Labour after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, in accordance with Article 4(1) of the Convention. It urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the relevant legislation is adopted as a matter of urgency and requests it to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 5 and Article 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms and effective enforcement of the Convention. Labour inspectorate. The Committee had previously noted the concern expressed by the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 25 June 2007, that the enforcement of ILO Convention No. 182 remains weak. The Committee noted that the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards indicated that the Malaysia peninsula alone has 300 labour inspectors and every labour inspector carries out between 25 and 30 inspections per month. In 2008, the Department of Labour, under the Ministry of Human Resources, received a total of 30,084 complaints on various labour issues. The Government representative explained that all complaints and cases were scrutinized and that no cases relating to child labour occurred. However, the Committee noted that the Worker members at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards indicated that, while many rights were respected in Malaysia, many issues remained, particularly with regard to children working in the palm oil plantations, in the agricultural sector, but also those working in towns and cities. The Worker members further noted that, according to the National Commission for the Protection of Children in Indonesia, cases of forced labour of migrant workers and their children on plantations in Sabah involve an estimated 72,000 children. In light of the indication of the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards that Malaysia has one of the most effective labour inspectorates in the region, the Committee is of the view that Malaysia is in a position to ensure the effective enforcement of legislation giving effect to the Convention. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions giving effect to the Convention are effectively enforced. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard and to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied with regard to children engaged in the worst forms of child labour, particularly children working in the palm oil plantations, in the agricultural sector, and in the urban economy.

Article 6. Programmes of action. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that the National Policy on Children and its Plan of Action (NPAC) has been approved by the Government on 29 July 2009. The Government indicated that the NPAC will focus on children's survival, protection, development and social participation. A Technical Committee, chaired by the MWFC, will be established in order to coordinate and monitor the implementation of the NPAC. The Government further indicates that, although the NPAC is still in its infancy, its policy and plans are set to have considerable impact on the elimination of the worst forms of child labour by promoting and facilitating children's rights. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the implementation of the NPAC and on the results achieved with regard to the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in Malaysia.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Prevention of the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee had previously noted that, in its concluding observations of 25 June 2007, the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed regret that, according to estimates, 200,000 children of primary-school age are not attending school. The Committee on the Rights of the Child had also expressed concern at the regional disparities in the dropout rates and that many children, in particular boys, drop out from secondary education (CRC/C/MYS/CO/1, paragraph 73).

The Committee noted the Government's information that it is committed to ensure adherence to compulsory primary education and that basic education is free at both the primary and secondary levels. The Government indicated that several factors explain the majority of dropout cases in Government and Government-assisted schools, which are mainly related to the students' backgrounds and include poverty, attitudes toward education and students' health. Lack of infrastructural amenities, such as poor methods of transportation, also make it difficult for students to attend school, thus contributing to the dropout rates. The Committee noted that, according to the National Report submitted in accordance with paragraph 15(a) of the Annex to Human Rights Council Resolution 5/1 of 19 November 2008, Malaysia has formulated an Education Development Master Plan (EDMP) of 2006–10, which outlines Malaysia's initiatives in ensuring that all students receive fair and equal educational opportunities regardless of location, ability or ethnic background (A/HRC/WG.6/4/MYS/1/Rev.1, paragraph 34). Malaysia thus provides a comprehensive set of education support measures which include a textbook loan scheme, supplementary food plan, trust funds, scholarships, food assistance, transport assistance, monthly allowances for disabled students and tuition aid schemes. The Committee noted that, according to the UNESCO Education for All Global Monitoring Report of 2008 (UNESCO Report), Malaysia has made extraordinary progress in reducing the number of children not enrolled in education and universal primary education has been achieved. Indeed, the Committee noted that, according to the UNESCO Report, the net enrolment rate in primary education is 100 per cent. However, the Committee noted that, while the gross enrolment rate is 90 per cent at the lower secondary level, it is only 53 per cent at the upper secondary level. The Committee welcomes the efforts made by the Government and encourages it to pursue its efforts to improve the operation of the education system in the country, in particular by increasing school attendance at the secondary level and reducing school dropout rates. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard and the results achieved.

Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking. The Committee had previously noted that the Trafficking in Women and Children Report of the Human Rights Commission of Malaysia of 2004 shows that Malaysia is considered primarily a destination country for victims of trafficking. The findings of the report showed that, even if the trafficking involved mostly women over 18 years of age, a number of girls between 14 and 17 years of age were also reported to be victims of trafficking.

The Committee noted that, according to the Universal Periodic Review of Malaysia of 3 March 2009, the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act came into force in 2008 (A/HCR/11/30, paragraph 58). It also noted that, according to the UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons of 2009 (UNODC Report), a National Plan of Action to combat trafficking in persons was drafted in 2008. The UNODC Report further indicates that about 160 persons were convicted of "trafficking and abduction of children" between 2003 and 2006. Most of the persons convicted were involved in child trafficking for sexual exploitation, while two were exploiting children for forced labour. The Committee further noted that, according to the National Report submitted in accordance with paragraph 15(a) of the Annex to Human Rights Council Resolution 5/1 of 19 November 2008, Malaysia has set up three shelter homes to provide assistance and counselling to victims of trafficking in persons and established an Inter-Agency Committee on Protection and Rehabilitation of Trafficked Victims (A/HRC/WG.6/4/MYS/1/Rev.1, paragraph 92). Finally, the Committee noted the Government's information that the shelter home for child victims of trafficking for exploitative purposes has been operational since March 2008 and has, thus far, received 13 rescued children. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of children who have been withdrawn from trafficking and rehabilitated through the shelter homes established for that purpose and through the action of the Inter-Agency Committee on Protection and Rehabilitation of Trafficked Victims. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of the National Plan of Action to combat trafficking in persons to ensure that child victims of trafficking for labour or commercial sexual exploitation are withdrawn and then rehabilitated.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Migrant children, street children and child domestic workers. The Committee noted that the Worker member of Indonesia indicated, at the Conference Committee for the Application of Standards, that the Indonesian National Commission for Child Protection (INCCP) reported, after a 2008 fact-finding mission to the plantations in Sabah, Malaysia, that tens of thousands of migrant workers' children also worked in the plantations without regulated employment hours, which meant they worked all day long. Other sectors where migrant workers' children were often found were family food businesses, night markets, small-scale industries, fishing, agriculture and catering. The INCCP Secretary-General stated that the children of migrant workers born under these conditions were not provided with birth certificates or any other type of identity document, effectively denying their right to education. Furthermore, in Sabah, an unknown number of children begged in the streets; estimates ranged from a few hundred to as many as 15,000 children. The Worker members emphasized the need to devote particular attention to migrant children and to children employed as domestic workers. The Committee reminds the Government that migrant children, street children and child domestic workers are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour and requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure that these children are protected from the worst forms of child labour by withdrawing them from these vulnerable situations and rehabilitating them. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation. The Committee had previously noted that a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) between Malaysia and Thailand was proposed as a beginning to reduce the flow of young girls into Malaysia and allow for an exchange of information in order to monitor traffickers' actions. The Committee noted the Government's information that the MOU between Malaysia and Thailand has been suspended. The Committee noted that the Worker member of Indonesia at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards indicated that, in 2006, the Confederation of Indonesian Trade Unions established a partnership with the Malaysian Trade Union Congress (MTUC). Both parties signed an MOU to inform migrants from Indonesia going to Malaysia on the risks of migration, including the risk of their children becoming labourers. However, the Worker members noted that unions alone could not solve this problem and this problem could only be solved in a regional context. The Committee further noted that according to the National Report submitted in accordance with paragraph 15(a) of the Annex to Human Rights Council Resolution 5/1 of 19 November 2008, due to Malaysia's porous borders, the influx of migrants, trafficked victims and refugees is increasing despite pledges by source states that they have taken progressive measures (A/HRC/WG.6/4/MYS/1/Rev.1, paragraph 94). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take measures to cooperate with the neighbouring countries, particularly Indonesia and Thailand, and therefore strengthen security measures with a view to bringing an end to child trafficking for labour or commercial sexual exploitation and to the engagement of child migrants in the worst forms of child labour.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that the MWCD is conducting a pilot study to develop a database on street children in Sabah. The Government also indicated that it will initiate the creation of a database on the phenomena of child trafficking, the commercial sexual exploitation of children and street children in Malaysia. Furthermore, the Committee noted that, according to the National Report submitted in accordance with paragraph 15(a) of the Annex to Human Rights Council Resolution 5/1 of 19 November 2008, Malaysia is currently setting up a One Stop Information Centre on trafficking in persons which will provide comprehensive information on the statistics of traffickers and victims. The Committee requests the Government to provide the statistics compiled in the framework of the database on child trafficking, the commercial sexual exploitation of children and street children in Malaysia, as well as through the One Stop Information Centre on trafficking in persons. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to ensure that data on the number of children engaged in domestic work is available.

The Committee also strongly urges the Government to redouble its efforts and take the necessary measures to ensure that, during its review of the CYP Act by the tripartite technical committee set up for this purpose, due consideration is given to the Committee's detailed comments on the discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention, and amendments are made in this regard. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in the review of the CYP Act in its next report.

Finally, in response to the Government's request for technical assistance from the Office, the Committee requests the Office to take the necessary measures to respond positively.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Mali

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the National Survey on Child Labour (ENTE), conducted in 2005 by the National Directorate of Statistics and Information, in collaboration with the National Directorate of Labour and ILO-IPEC-SIMPOC, around two children out of three between the ages of 5 and 17 years are economically active, or just over 3 million girls and boys throughout the country. Of these, nearly 2.4 million children between the ages of 5 and 14, or 65.4 per cent of children between 5 and 14 years of age, are engaged in work. This phenomenon affects both girls and boys, in rural areas and in towns. The Committee noted that the phenomenon is more widespread in rural areas (68 per cent of 5–14 year olds) than in urban areas (59 per cent of 5–14 year olds). The Committee also noted that in 2006 Mali launched a Time-bound Programme (TBP) on the worst forms of child labour in collaboration with ILO-IPEC. The Committee further noted that, in the framework of the TBP, a programme of action was launched in 2009 for the preparation and design of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Mali (PANETEM) with a view to reinforcing the progress achieved over more than a decade of combating child labour and addressing the difficulties encountered.

The Committee takes due note of the technical validation of the PANETEM at the national level in April 2010 and its adoption by the Council of Ministers on 8 June 2011. The PANETEM covers a period of ten years divided into two phases: the first five-year phase (2011–15) focuses on the elimination of the worst forms of child labour (60 per cent of targeted children) and the second five-year phase (2016–20) on the abolition of all forms of unauthorized child labour (40 per cent of the targeted children). However, the Committee notes that, in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), the Government indicates that, in view of the delay in the adoption of the PANETEM, its implementation is envisaged in 2012. Observing with deep concern that a considerable number of children are engaged in work under the minimum age for admission to employment or work, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to combat child labour, and requests it to provide information on the implementation of the PANETEM and on the results achieved in terms of the elimination of child labour.

Article 2(1). 1. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government to the effect that children under 15 years of age working on their own account could be informed by the labour inspector covering their area of the risks involved in their work and the social security measures to be envisaged in the event of employment accidents. The Committee however noted the Government's indication that no specific measures have been adopted in Mali to allow labour inspectors to target more specifically children under 15 years of age engaged in an economic activity on their own account.

The Committee notes that absence of information in the Government's report on this subject. It once again reminds that Government that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and that it covers all types of employment or work, whether or not it is based on an employment relationship and whether or not it is paid. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to ensure that children who are not bound by an employment relationship, such as those working on their own account or in the informal economy, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. In this respect, it requests the Government to envisage the possibility of taking measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services with a view to ensuring such protection.

2. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under section 20(b) of the Child Protection Code, all children have the right to be employed as from 15 years of age, in accordance with the minimum age specified when ratifying the Convention. It noted, however, that pursuant to section L.187 of the Labour Code, the minimum age for the admission of children to employment in enterprises, even as apprentices, is 14 years, except with a written waiver issued by the Minister of Labour. The Committee also noted that section D.189-23 of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 issued under the Labour Code lists the loads that children between the ages of 14 and 17 years may not carry, drag or push, depending on the type of transport equipment, the weight of the load and the sex of the child. In this respect, the Committee noted the Government's indication that it undertook to take the necessary measures to amend section L.187 of the Labour Code, which will "lead to the raising of the minimum age for admission to employment".

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on this subject in its report. However, it observes that one of the principal aims of the PANETEM is to reinforce the respective legal framework and regulations in relation to combating child labour. In this context, it is envisaged to organize a national workshop for the revision of the Labour Code and its implementing texts with a view to harmonizing them with the legislative provisions for the protection of children. Expressing the firm hope that the relevant provisions of the Labour Code and of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 will be brought into harmony with the Convention so as to prohibit work by children under 15 years of age, the Committee requests the Government to take measures with a view to finalizing this revision in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee noted previously that Decree No. 314/PGRM of 26 November 1981 regulates school attendance and that the age of completion of compulsory schooling in Mali is 15 years. It noted the information provided by the Government according to which the implementation of phase II of the Sectoral Investment Programme for the Education Sector (PISE) would increase the number of classes and teachers in the poorest regions and improve the access to schooling for thousands of children, particularly in rural areas. The Committee also noted that Mali is one of 11 countries involved in the implementation of the ILO-IPEC project “Tackle child labour through education in 11 countries” (the TACKLE project), the overall objective of which is to contribute to the reduction of poverty in the least developed countries by providing equitable access to primary education and the development of knowledge amongst the most underprivileged members of society. Moreover, an integrated framework to cover the educational needs of the most vulnerable categories of children was being formulated with a view to the integration of these needs into phase III of the PISE. However, the Committee noted that, according to the Education for All Global Monitoring Report of 2008, published by UNESCO under the title Education for All by 2015: Will we make it?, although there has been substantial progress in the field of education, Mali is still far from achieving the objective of universal primary education by 2015, and will probably not achieve gender parity by 2015, or 2025. The Committee also noted the low school enrolment rate of children between 13 and 15 years of age, which shows that a number of children drop out of school before reaching the minimum age for admission to employment and that they enter the labour market.

The Committee notes that the TACKLE project has been extended up to 2013 and that its objective is to strengthen links between educational policies and measures to combat child labour with a view to giving vulnerable children and victims of child labour the opportunity to benefit from training and education. It also notes the Government’s indications that the third phase of PISE (PISE III) takes into account children with special educational needs. The Committee observes that, according to the table of data provided by the Government, the net school attendance rate in primary school rose from 56.6 per cent in 2005–06 to 60.9 per cent in 2007–08 and to 62.7 per cent in 2008–09. In secondary education, these rates are 23.5 per cent, 28.8 per cent and 30.7 per cent, respectively.

The Committee takes due note of the measures adopted by the Government in relation to education. However, it notes that the school attendance rates for primary education remain fairly low and that the low rates of school attendance in secondary education, compared with primary education, show that a significant number of children drop out of school after primary school. Considering that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country, particularly by increasing school attendance rates. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved, particularly though the implementation of the TACKLE project and of PISE III, and the results obtained.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years. The Committee noted previously that certain provisions of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 allow children to be employed in hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years. It noted the Government’s indication that the authorization of the labour inspector, which is required to employ young persons between 16 and 18 years of age, is a guarantee that these types of hazardous work are performed under healthy, safe and moral conditions. The Government indicated that section D.189-33 of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM establishes the requirement to ascertain that young persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years engaged in hazardous types of work have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity, in accordance with Article 3(3) of the Convention. However, the Committee noted that section D.189-33, which refers to the declaration that the employer has to make to the Employment Office for the recruitment of a child, does not make any reference to the instruction or vocational training that has to be followed by a young person over 16 years of age to be able to perform hazardous types of work. Noting the absence of information in the Government’s report on this subject, the Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to ensure compliance with the conditions set out in Article 3(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any developments in this respect.

Article 7. Light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 189-35 of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 allows exceptions from the minimum age for admission to employment in the case of boys and girls of at least 12 years of age for domestic work and light work of a seasonal nature. It noted the Government’s indication that it undertook to raise the minimum age for domestic work and light work of a seasonal nature from 12 to 13 years. It also noted that a draft order was being prepared to determine light work activities and the conditions for their performance.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any further information in its report on this subject. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to harmonize the national legislation with the Convention and to regulate the employment of children on light work from the age of 13 years. To this end, it once again hopes that the order respecting light work will be formulated and adopted in the near future.

The Committee also urges the Government to renew its efforts and to take the necessary measures to ensure that the revision of the legislation envisaged in the context of the PANETEM does not fail to take into account the Committee's detailed comments on the divergences existing between the national legislation and the Convention, and that amendments will be made in this respect.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. 1. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, although the Government had taken several measures to combat the sale and trafficking of children for the exploitation of their labour, the trafficking of children still constituted a problem in practice, even though it is prohibited by section 244 of the Penal Code and section 63 of the Child Protection Code. It noted that, in the summary prepared by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in accordance with paragraph 15(c) of the Annex to Human Rights Council Resolution 5/1 of 3 April 2008, the International Federation for Human Rights (FIDH) indicated that, even though no statistics are available, Mali is a transit country for the trafficking of women and children, and it therefore recommended that the Malian authorities strictly apply sections 240 et seq. of the Penal Code penalizing the trafficking of children, and that it improve the assistance provided to children who have been victims of trafficking (A/HRC/WG.6/2/MLI/3, paragraphs 13–14). The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the effect given in practice to the provisions respecting the sale and trafficking of children for the exploitation of their labour.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on this matter in its report. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure in practice the protection of children under 18 years of age against sale and trafficking and to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out, and that effective and sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the effect given in practice to the provisions respecting the sale and trafficking of children for the exploitation of their labour through the provision of statistics on the number of convictions and the penal sanctions imposed.

2. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the 2006 UNICEF report, talibés children originating from neighbouring countries, including Mali, are found on the streets of Dakar, who have been brought to the city by Koranic teachers (marabouts). These children are kept in conditions of servitude and are obliged to beg daily. The Committee also noted that the 2006 UNICEF report refers to the involvement of marabouts in the trafficking of children for the exploitation of young talibé workers from Burkina Faso in the rice fields of Mali. The Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of May 2007, expressed concern at the vulnerability of children living in the streets or who are engaged in begging, particularly to all forms of violence, sexual abuse and exploitation, as well as economic exploitation (CRC/C/MLI/CO/2, paragraph 62). The Committee noted that section 62 of the Child Protection Code defines begging as a sole or main activity of a dehumanizing nature and an obstacle to the rights of the child. It further noted that section 183 of the Penal Code provides that any person inciting a child to beg shall be liable to a sentence of imprisonment of from three months to one year. However, the Committee noted that, in the report of the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review of Mali of 13 June 2008, the representative of Mali indicated that begging by children in Koranic schools is an infringement of the law (A/HRC/8/50, paragraph 55).

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information on this matter in the Government's report. The Committee once again observes that, although the legislation is in conformity with the Convention on this point, the phenomenon of child talibés remains a cause for concern in practice. The Committee once again expresses serious concern at the use of these children for purely economic purposes. The Committee once again reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures shall be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency and, in accordance with Article 7(1) of the Convention, it shall take all necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including the provision and application of sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of marabouts who make use of children under 18 years of age for purely economic purposes are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed upon them. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to reinforce the capacities of the law enforcement agencies. It also requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent children under 18 years of age from becoming victims of forced or compulsory labour, such as begging, and to identify child talibés who are compelled to beg and remove them from these situations, while ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 229 of the Penal Code, under which inciting a girl or a woman, even with her consent, to debauchery or forcing her to engage in prostitution are punishable offences, applies only to female children. The Committee noted the Government's indication that it undertook to examine the question of bringing its legislation into conformity with the Convention and protecting boys from sexual exploitation, and particularly prostitution. The Government indicated that the measures taken in this respect consist of the adoption of Act No. 01-081 of 24 August 2001 concerning crimes related to minors and the appointment of magistrates to hear cases involving minors (Act No. 01-081). The Committee observed that not only do these provisions fail to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, but they also appear to punish the children concerned, making them criminally liable for their involvement in prostitution or illicit activities. The Committee observed that children who are used, procured or offered for prostitution are consequently not treated as victims and receive neither support nor protection.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on this matter in its report. It once again reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(b) of the Convention, the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures have to be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the national legislation prohibits the use, procuring or offering of boys under 18 years of age for prostitution.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. The Committee noted previously that Act No. 1986/18 on the punishment of offences involving poisonous substances and narcotics prohibits the cultivation, production, offering and sale of drugs, but not the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Government indicated that the measures taken in this respect consisted of the adoption of Act No. 01-081. However, the Committee observed that these provisions do not prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on this matter in its report. It once again reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures shall be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the national legislation prohibits the use, procurement or offering of children under 18 years of age for illicit activities, in particular for the production, offering and sale of drugs. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress achieved in this respect.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. 1. Monitoring committees. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that local monitoring committees (CLV) to combat child labour had been established in the circles of Kangala, Bougouni, Kolondiéba and Koutiala, that 344 monitoring committees are now operational in Mali and that their principal role was to identify potential victims of child trafficking, and to indicate cases in which children are the victims of trafficking and collect and disseminate data on the trafficking of children. Noting the absence of information on this subject in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of children who are prevented from becoming victims of trafficking or are removed from trafficking for labour exploitation as a result of the activities of monitoring committees.

2. National Committee to follow-up programmes to combat the trafficking of children. The Committee noted previously the Government's indications that the National Committee to follow-up programmes to combat the trafficking of children in Mali (CNS) is responsible for evaluating the action taken in the context of the implementation of programmes to combat the trafficking of children, for following the implementation of cooperation agreements signed by Mali to combat the trafficking of children and for learning from the experience acquired in this field in taking responsibility for child victims of trafficking. However, the Government indicated that, since it was established in 2006, the CNS was not operational, thereby creating a gap in the coordination of action to combat the trafficking of children in Mali. To overcome this problem, three meetings had been planned between September and November 2009, during which the programme and action of the CNS were to be determined and the annual work plan for 2010 adopted.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on this subject in its report. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the activities carried out by the CNS and their impact on the elimination of the trafficking of children for the exploitation of their labour.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and assistance for their removal from these worst forms of child labour. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, in the summary prepared by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in accordance with paragraph 15(c) of the Annex to Human Rights Council Resolution 5/1 of 3 April 2008, the FIDH indicated that there are no institutional facilities available in Mali to shelter, offer guidance to or assist young women who have been the victims of trafficking or sexual exploitation (A/HRC/WG.6/2/MLI/3, paragraphs 13–14). It therefore recommended the authorities of Mali to set up care and guidance facilities and to provide assistance for the return of girls who are victims of trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that one of the strategic focuses of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Mali (PANETEM), adopted in 2010, is the implementation of direct action to combat the worst forms of child labour, including trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted within the framework of the PANETEM project to prevent children under 18 years of age from becoming victims of sale or trafficking and to remove child victims from this worst form of child labour. It also once again requests the Government to envisage the establishment of care and guidance facilities and the provision of assistance for the return of child victims of trafficking, as recommended by the FIDH, with a view to ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Article 8. Regional cooperation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Government had signed bilateral cooperation agreements on the cross-border trafficking of children with Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Senegal. It also noted that, in addition to the Multilateral Cooperation Agreement to Combat Child Trafficking in West Africa, signed in July 2005, Mali had also signed the Abuja Multilateral Cooperation Agreement in 2006. It further noted that, in the context of the ILO-IPEC project to combat the trafficking of children, it was planned to reinforce the application of the bilateral and multilateral treaties signed by Mali. However, the Government indicated that, although the countries which signed agreements with Mali met periodically, they were more dynamic in their activities within the national territory than in terms of mutual international assistance. Indeed, the Committee observed that, in the Report of the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review of Mali of 13 June 2008, the representative of Mali noted that, with regard to trafficking in children, the main difficulties stemmed from the cross-border nature of the phenomenon (A/HRC/8/50, paragraph 54).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Cell to Combat Child Labour (CNLTE) represented the Ministry of Labour at the follow-up meetings to the Cooperation Agreement to Combat Trans-border Child Trafficking between Mali and Burkina Faso, held in Ouagadougou in March 2009, as well as the meeting between Mali and Guinea, held in Bamako in September 2010. However, it observes that the Government has not provided any information on the number of child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation or for labour who have been protected through the implementation of the multilateral agreements signed by Mali, or on the arrests that have been made as a result of the concerted action of the national border police. In view of the importance of trans-border trafficking in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take practical and effective measures for the implementation of the multilateral agreements signed in 2005 and 2006, particularly through the establishment of a system for the exchange of information to facilitate the discovery of child trafficking networks and the arrest of persons working in these networks. It also requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the follow-up meetings held in Ouagadougou in 2009 and Bamako in 2010.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mauritania

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee takes note of the communication from the General Confederation of Workers of Mauritania (CGTM) dated 22 August 2011, and of the Government's report.

Article 1 and Part V of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the indications of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), according to which the Ministry of Labour authorized, without exception, work by 13-year-old children in both the agricultural and non-agricultural sectors. The Committee had noted that, according to the study undertaken by the Government in 2004 in collaboration with UNICEF, entitled "Child labour in Mauritania", around 90,000 children under 14 years of age worked in the country, signifying an increase of around one third over four years. The study showed that poverty was responsible for child labour.

The Committee notes the allegations of the CGTM that, despite this worrying situation, the Government is not conducting any coherent and concerted policy to redress the situation. There is a department specifically dealing with children's matters, but none of the programmes developed in this department tackle the problem of child labour. Furthermore, the trade union organizations are not involved in these programmes.

The Committee expresses its deep concern at the large number of young children working out of personal necessity in Mauritania. The Committee urges the Government to take short or medium-term measures to bring about a gradual improvement in this situation, for instance by adopting a national policy aimed at abolishing child labour once and for all, in cooperation with the employers' and workers' associations concerned, and to provide information in this respect. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the way in which the Convention is applied in practice, by providing, for example, statistical data disaggregated by sex and age group on the nature, extent and trends of child labour and the employment of young persons working below the minimum age specified by the Government at the time of ratification, as well as extracts from the reports of the inspection services.

Article 2(3). Compulsory schooling. The Committee had previously noted the information provided by the Government to the effect that one of the methods to ensure the abolition of child labour was the adoption of Act No. 2001-054 of 19 July 2001, making basic education compulsory for children of both sexes from 6 to 14 years of age, signifying a minimum duration of schooling of six years. It had also noted that the parents were henceforth required, subject to penalties, to send children aged between 6 and 14 years to school.

The Committee notes the allegations of the CGTM that thousands of school drop-outs contribute greatly to the phenomenon of child labour in Mauritania and that children are often forced to leave school because of pressure from their parents.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, it is sparing no effort to improve the education system. In this respect the Government states that it is planning to organize a general education meeting (états généraux de l'éducation) in the near future. Furthermore, the Government indicates that the capacity of the labour inspections services has been strengthened and that they now have enough human resources to combat child labour effectively. A new labour inspectorate was also set up in 2010, which will help to cut child labour and help children enter economic and social life by providing training and apprenticeship programmes carried out in the formal and informal sectors.

While noting the efforts made by the Government, the Committee notes that, according to 2009 UNICEF statistics, 79 per cent of girls and 74 per cent of boys are in primary school, whereas only 15 per cent of girls and 17 per cent of boys are in secondary school. The Committee expresses once again its concern at the persistence of low school attendance rates, especially at the secondary school level. Considering that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee requests the Government to renew its efforts to improve the working of the education system, particularly by increasing the secondary school attendance rate, especially among girls. In this respect, it asks the Government to provide information on the outcome of the general education meeting, as well as on any improvements in the education system it might bring. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of children working under the minimum age who have been identified by the labour inspection services and integrated into the school system or in apprenticeships or vocational training, on condition that the minimum age requirements are respected.

Article 3(3). Authorization to employ children in hazardous work as from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 1 of Order No. 239 of 17 September 1954 (Order No. 239), as amended by Order No. 10.300 of 2 June 1965 respecting child labour (the Child Labour Order), unequivocally provides that “it is prohibited to employ children of either sex under 18 years of age on work that exceeds their strength, involves risks of danger or which, by its nature or the conditions in which it is carried out, is likely to harm their morals”. The Committee had nevertheless pointed out that this provision had established the general prohibition of employing young persons under 18 years of age on hazardous types of work, whereas other provisions, such as sections 15, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27 and 32 of Order No. 239 and section 1 of Order No. R-030 of 26 May 1992 (R-030), set forth exceptions to this prohibition for young persons between 16 and 18 years of age. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the performance of hazardous types of work by young persons aged between 16 and 18 was only permitted under strict conditions of protection and prior instruction in conformity with the provisions of Article 3(3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the allegation of the CGTM that children are exploited in dangerous work in large cities, as apprentices, in the bus transport sector, as deliverers of large amounts of goods and as garage workers.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, labour inspectors and supervisors ensure strict compliance of the provisions of the Orders in question. The Government also states that, if the need exists, measures are taken to guarantee that the performance of hazardous work by young persons between 16 and 18 years of age is only authorized if their health, safety and morals are fully protected and if they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. While taking account of the Government's information, the Committee notes that the national legislation still does not stipulate that the two conditions provided for under Article 3(3) of the Convention are a prerequisite for allowing young people aged 16 years and over to perform hazardous work, despite the fact that there seems to be a problem in practice in this respect. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that Orders Nos 239 and R-030 are amended so as to provide that hazardous types of work by young persons aged 16 to 18 years is only authorized in accordance with the provisions of Article 3(3) of the Convention.

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 154 of the Labour Code regulating the employment of children between 12 and 14 years of age in light work, no child over 12 but under 14 years of age may be employed without the express permission of the Minister of Labour, and only under certain conditions restricting the hours of this employment. The Committee had reminded the Government that Article 7(3) provided that, in addition to the hours and conditions of work, the competent authority should determine the activities in which light employment might be permitted for children between 12 and 14 years of age. The Committee had noted the Government's indication that it would take the necessary measures to determine the activities in which light work or employment by children might be authorized.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a copy of the provisions determining the activities in which light employment or work may be permitted for children will be sent to the Office as soon as they have been adopted. Observing that a significant number of children work under the minimum age for admission to employment in Mauritania, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring national legislation into line with the Convention and to regulate the employment of children engaged in light work from the age of 12 years. It expresses the firm hope that light work will be determined by the national legislation in the very near future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the communication of 22 August 2011 from the General Confederation of Workers of Mauritania (CGTM), and the Government's report.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Slavery or practices similar to slavery.

1. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Act No. 025/2003 of 17 July 2003 to suppress the trafficking of persons. The Committee also noted that, according to a UNICEF report on trafficking in persons with particular reference to women and children in West and Central Africa, in the streets of Dakar there are boy talibés from neighbouring countries, including Mauritania, who have been brought to the city by their Koranique masters (marabouts). According to the same report, there is also child trafficking inside Mauritania in which talibé children from rural areas beg on the streets of Nouakchott. The Committee observed that Mauritania appeared to be a country of origin for the trafficking of children for the purpose of exploiting their labour.

The Committee notes that in its concluding observations of 17 June 2009, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) expressed concern at reports of children being sold to work as jockeys in the Middle East (CRC/C/MRT/CO/2, paragraph 77). The CRC was also concerned to note that Mauritania's report contained no information on the extent of the trafficking or the measures taken to prevent such crimes. The Committee notes with regret the lack of information on this subject in the Government's report. The Committee once again expresses concern at the situation of child victims of trafficking, and requests the Government to step up its efforts to ensure that, in practice, children under 18 years of age are protected against the sale and trafficking of children for the purposes of sexual exploitation or exploitation of their labour. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the application of Act No. 025/2003 of 17 July 2003 to suppress the trafficking of persons in practice, including statistics on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations held, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

2. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 42(1) of Ordinance No. 2005-015 on the protection of children under penal law provides that the act of causing a child to beg or directly employing a child to beg is punishable by imprisonment of one to six months or a fine of 100,000 ouguiyas. The Committee nonetheless noted that a UNICEF study entitled "Child Labour in Mauritania" indicated that, according to a study of July 2003 by the National Children's Council (CNE), observations in the field suggested that street children tended to be beggars who give a daily account of their begging activities to their marabouts.

The Committee notes that, according to the CGTM, teachers in religious schools force children onto the streets to beg, exposing them to crime and the danger of assault on their integrity.

The Committee notes that in its concluding observations of 17 June 2009, the CRC expressed concern over the lack of protection for talibé children, who are forced by marabouts to beg in slavery-like conditions (CRC/C/MRT/CO/2, paragraph 73). The Committee also notes that in her report of 24 August 2010 to the Human Rights Council, the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery stated that although she had been informed that the Government was working with religious leaders to put an end to this practice, many did not consider forced begging to be a form of slavery (A/HRC/15/20/Add.2, paragraph 46). The Minister of Families, Children and Social Affairs nonetheless informed the Special Rapporteur of the collaboration between her and the Ministry of the Interior to address the issue of street children, some of whom are talibés in Nouakchott. There appears to be a specialized police force which is trained to work with children, and the services of the Minister of the Interior monitor madrassas to ensure that children are not encouraged to go begging for their religious teachers (paragraph 75).

The Committee nevertheless notes with regret that the Government provides no information on this matter in its report. It again notes with deep concern that children are being used for purely economic purposes, in other words children are being exploited for their labour by certain marabouts. The Committee again points out to the Government that, according to Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures must be taken as a matter of urgency to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour and that, in conformity with Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government must take all necessary steps to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including the provision and application of effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations are carried out and completed and that marabouts who use children under 18 years of age for purely economic purposes are effectively prosecuted and punished by effective and sufficiently dissuasive penalties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of talibé children identified by the special police unit and the services of the Minister of the Interior, and requests it to take the necessary steps to build the capacity of law enforcement bodies.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, according to information in the second periodic report submitted by Mauritania in July 2008 to the CRC (CRC/C/MRT/2, paragraph 88), a centre for the protection and social integration of children in difficult situations was established which targets street children, children forced to beg or children subject to economic exploitation.

The Committee notes that in her report, the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery indicates that the Ministry of the Interior informed her that talibé children are offered education or vocational training and provided with shelter (A/HRC/15/20/Add.2, paragraph 75). The Committee nonetheless notes with regret that the Government provides no information on this matter in its report. It also observes that in its concluding observations of 17 June 2009, the CRC likewise expressed concern at the lack of information on the measures adopted by Mauritania to identify and protect children working or living in the street (CRC/C/MRT/CO/2, paragraph 73). The Committee urges the Government to indicate the number of child victims of begging who have been removed from the street and rehabilitated and integrated into society, particularly by the centre for the protection and social integration of children in difficult situations or by the services of the Ministry of the Interior. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate any other effective time-bound measures taken to prevent children under 18 years of age from falling victim to forced or compulsory labour, such as begging, and to identify talibé children who are forced to beg, and to remove them from such situations, ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration.

Clause (e). Special situation of girls. Domestic employees. In its previous comments the Committee noted the Government's statement that most girls engaged in domestic work received little schooling or no schooling at all. Furthermore, according to the results of a survey on girls in Mauritania which was cited in a UNICEF study entitled "Child Labour in Mauritania", girls could be recruited as from 8 years of age, and 32 per cent of the girls questioned during the survey were under 12 years of age. The Committee noted that according to the second periodic report submitted by Mauritania to the CRC in July 2008 (CRC/C/MRT/2, paragraphs 247 and 255), two surveys had been under way for some time on child labour (including girls in domestic service) in Kiffa and Nouakchott "to determine the possibilities of educating and training these young workers and securing their social reintegration". It noted that the "El Mina Centre for Child Protection" in Nouakchott has been carrying out various activities since 2001 (training, literacy, hygiene, etc.) for girl domestic workers. A basic education pilot programme was also carried out in Dar Naim and a unit for "girls in difficult situations" was established.

The Committee notes that according to the CGTM, domestic work amounts to a daily workload of heavy chores for children, who are subjected to abuse from a very young age. Furthermore, the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) indicated in a report it submitted to the General Council of the World Trade Organization for the trade policy reviews of Guinea and Mauritania on 28 and 30 September 2011, many girls are forced into unpaid domestic service and are particularly vulnerable to exploitation. The Committee also notes that in its concluding observations of 17 June 2009, the CRC expressed particular concern at the situation of girls who work as domestic servants in exploitative slavery-like conditions (CRC/C/MRT/CO/2, paragraph 75).

The Committee notes with regret that the Government provides no information on this matter in its report. It again points out that small girls, particularly those employed as domestic servants, are often the victims of exploitation, which can take many different forms, and that it is difficult to supervise their conditions of employment in view of the clandestine nature of their work. It therefore urges the Government to take measures to ensure that children who are victims of exploitation in domestic work, particularly girls, are removed from this worst form of child labour and are rehabilitated and integrated in society, in particular through the activities of the El Mina Centre for the Protection of Children and the Dar Naim pilot project. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard. Lastly, it urges the Government to provide information on the development and conclusions of the two surveys under way in the country.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that according to the report of 24 August 2010 of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, children under 13 years of age work in all sectors of activity in Mauritania. In rural areas, enslaved children usually work taking care of the livestock, cultivating subsistence crops and performing domestic work and other significant labour in support of their masters' activities. Children live in slavery-like conditions in urban areas and are often found working in domestic households (A/HRC/15/20/Add.2, paragraphs 42 to 45). The Committee notes, however, that in its concluding observations of 17 June 2009, the CRC expressed particular concern at the lack of comprehensive documentation on the incidence of child labour and effective measures to ensure that children are protected from economic exploitation and the worst forms of child labour and that they can exercise their right to education (CRC/C/MRT/CO/2, paragraph 75). The Committee expresses concern at the situation of children engaged in hazardous work and in slavery-like conditions, and therefore urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure protection in practice for these children against this worst form of child labour. It also requests the Government to provide statistics of the nature, extent and tendencies of worst forms of child labour, particularly as concerns the sale and trafficking of children begging in the streets. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of the offences reported, investigations and prosecutions, and convictions and the penal sanctions imposed. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mauritius

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1990)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted with satisfaction that the Labour Act was amended in 2006 to raise the minimum age for employment to 16 years (section 3(a) of the Labour (Amendment) Act 2006) from the age of 15 years specified at the time of ratification. The Committee takes this opportunity to draw the Government's attention to the provisions of paragraph 2 of Article 2 of the Convention, which provides that any Member having ratified this Convention may subsequently notify the Director-General of the International Labour Office, by a new declaration, that it has raised the minimum age that it had previously specified. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would consider the possibility of sending a declaration of this nature to the Office.

Mexico

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children and penalties. In its previous comments the Committee noted the observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) referring to the trafficking of girls for sexual exploitation, including forced prostitution, within the country and abroad. It also noted that, according to a study carried out in six Mexican cities with the support of UNICEF, an estimated 16,000 boys and girls were victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Another study, conducted by ILO-IPEC, the Secretariat for Labour and Social Assistance and the National Social Sciences Institute, corroborated the figures referred to above and added that around 5,000 children were the victims of this form of exploitation in the Federal District of Mexico alone. The Committee also noted the adoption of the Act of 27 November 2007 concerning the prevention and punishment of trafficking in persons under 18 years of age for forced labour and/or sexual exploitation, and the establishment on 31 January 2008 of the Special Prosecutor's Office dealing with violence against women and trafficking in persons (FEVIMTRA), whose mandate includes providing assistance for the victims of trafficking in order to secure their collaboration in trials and obtain useful information for investigations. The Committee further observed that the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, who visited the country from 4 to 15 May 2007, indicated in his report of 28 January 2008 (A/HRC/7/8/Add.2) that the sexual exploitation of children is related to various forms of organized crime and clandestine circuits of the sex trade, where the vast amount of money generated by such activities, and corrupt connections with various bodies in the State sector, facilitate exploitation and frequently make it impossible to prosecute the perpetrators.

The Committee notes the information communicated in the Government's report to the effect that the National Centre for Planning, Analysis and Information to Combat Crime (CENAPI) attached to the Office of the Attorney-General of the Republic has developed the National System to Combat Trafficking in Persons (SINTRA) with a view to collecting information on human trafficking and other related offences. The Government's report also indicates that FEVIMTRA has conducted a total of 53 investigations into suspected trafficking activity, including 30 cases of labour exploitation and 19 cases of commercial sexual exploitation. Between June 2009 and May 2011, FEVIMTRA conducted 12 investigations into trafficking activity (six cases of trafficking of minors and six cases of trafficking of persons for sexual exploitation). Moreover, the Government's report refers to the first conviction secured by FEVIMTRA relating to trafficking for labour exploitation. The perpetrator was sentenced to nine years' imprisonment. However, the Committee observes that, according to information in a 2011 report on the trafficking of persons in Mexico, which can be consulted on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), few prosecutions are brought by the states, except the Federal District of Mexico. Many judges are reportedly unfamiliar with the legislation on human trafficking and prosecute cases of trafficking under other laws, such as rape or procuring, under which penalties are lower. The report also indicates that corruption among public servants, especially officials responsible for law enforcement in the states, or among immigration officers remains a source of serious concern.

While noting the Government's efforts to take practical action against the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age, the Committee expresses its concern at the small number of convictions secured for trafficking of children, in view of the extent of the practice in the country, at the major disparities among the various states regarding the enforcement of the laws concerning the sale and trafficking of children and at the allegations of complicity in trafficking on the part of public officials. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the elimination in practice of the sale and trafficking of children and young persons under 18 years of age by ensuring the thorough investigation and robust prosecution of the perpetrators of such acts, including state officials suspected of complicity, and the imposition of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed by the federal states for violations of the legal provisions concerning the sale and trafficking of children, and also pursuant to the Act of 2007 concerning the prevention and punishment of trafficking in persons.

Article 3(b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments the Committee noted that one of the strategic projects of FEVIMTRA was to create a database of information on the number and nature of offences relating to prostitution, sexual exploitation and sex tourism involving persons under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that FEVIMTRA has been tasked with establishing this database since July 2008, with the collaboration of 23 prosecutors from the federal states. It notes the Government's indication that only one investigation relating to child prostitution was initiated by FEVIMTRA compared with nine investigations into child pornography between June 2009 and May 2011. These investigations resulted in one conviction for child prostitution and three convictions for child pornography. However, the Committee observes that, according to information in the 2011 report on trafficking in persons, sex tourism involving children continues to increase in tourist areas such as Cancun and Acapulco and cities in the north, such as Tijuana and Ciudad Juárez. Moreover, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 7 April 2011 on the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, expressed concern at the high level of child sex tourism, especially in tourist areas (CRC/C/OPSC/MEX/CO/1, paragraph 27). The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to secure the elimination of the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, especially in the tourism industry, by ensuring the effective prosecution of the perpetrators of such acts. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed for violations involving child prostitution and child pornography.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of hazardous types of work. In its previous comments the Committee noted that certain provisions of the national legislation set the age of 18 years for admission to certain types of work which, by their nature and the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to harm the health, safety or morals of young persons. However, it also noted that, with the exception of those provisions, the general age established for admission to hazardous and unhealthy kinds of work is 16 years.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that a tripartite group of experts has been set up as part of the "Stop child labour in agriculture" project, conducted in collaboration with ILO-IPEC, in order to draw up a list of hazardous and unhealthy types of work prohibited for workers under 18 years of age. It notes that this list will be presented to the Occupational Hazard Prevention Sub-Committee of the National Advisory Committee on Occupational Safety and Health. The Committee recalls that, under Article 3(d) of the Convention, any work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children shall be considered one of the worst forms of child labour and shall, therefore, be prohibited for children under 18 years of age. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the list of hazardous and unhealthy types of work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age will be adopted in the near future, after consultation of the employers' and workers' organizations, in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the requirements of Articles 3(d) and 4(1) of the Convention, and requests the Government to send a copy of the list once it has been adopted.

Article 6. Programmes of action. Trafficking. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report concerning the adoption in January 2011 of the National Programme for the prevention and suppression of trafficking. It observes that the purpose of the programme is to provide an effective and comprehensive response at federal level to the problem of trafficking and has four objectives, namely to: (i) understand the causes and consequences of human trafficking in the country; (ii) prevent human trafficking and change cultural patterns of tolerance regarding sexual and labour exploitation; and (iii) contribute towards improving the enforcement of legislation regarding trafficking; (iv) provide comprehensive, high-quality care for victims of trafficking and their families and for witnesses. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in the context of the National Programme for the prevention and suppression of trafficking.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in, and removing them from, the worst forms of child labour, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the information in the Government's report concerning the various awareness-raising activities established in the context of the National Plan of Action for preventing, combating and eliminating the sexual exploitation of children, in which more than 82,000 girls and boys have taken part. It also notes the Government's indication that FEVIMTRA is running a centre that specializes in care for the victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The centre provides the following services for victims: (i) immediate medical care; (ii) legal aid; (iii) psychological and social support geared to the rehabilitation of victims; (iv) programmes of rehabilitation through work; (v) social integration programmes; and (vi) capacity-building programmes. The Government's report also indicates that between June 2009 and May 2011, FEVIMTRA provided assistance for 53 girls and 25 boys who were potential victims of trafficking. The Committee urges the Government to continue to take measures to remove children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, including under the National Plan of Action for preventing, combating and eliminating the sexual exploitation of children, as well as on the results achieved in terms of the number of children removed from this worst form of child labour and their subsequent rehabilitation and social integration.

Article 8. International cooperation. In its previous comments the Committee noted that the Government of Mexico had signed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) with the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador concerning the protection of women and child victims of selling and trafficking at the borders of these States.

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government to the effect that, further to the signature in 2007 of regional directives for the special protection of child victims of trafficking in cases of repatriation, a large number of child protection officers have been trained with a view to the creation of a regional protection model. In 2010 and 2011, a total of 60 child protection officers were trained in the Dominican Republic and 62 in Honduras. The Committee also notes that a bi-national study on trafficking between El Salvador and Mexico is in progress. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in the context of the MOUs signed with the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the bi-national study on trafficking between El Salvador and Mexico in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mongolia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that in 2002 the Government approved a National Programme of Action for the Development and Protection of Children for 2002–10 (NPA 2002–10). It noted that particular attention has been given to the issue of child labour in this document and that one of its objectives is to amend national legislation to ensure the protection of children. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the review and possible amendments to the Labour Code and the Law on the Protection of the Rights of the Child in order to better address the problem of child labour. The Committee noted in the Government's report submitted under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that the Labour Code has recently been amended. It also noted that the NPA 2002–10 is ongoing, as are a number of other projects and programmes, most of them dealing with the worst forms of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to supply a copy of the recently amended Labour Code. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the NPA 2002–10, or any other such programmes, aimed at ensuring the effective abolition of child labour.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. The Committee previously noted that the Labour Code, according to its section 4, covers relations governed by a labour contract, defined as a mutual agreement on work for pay between an employee and an employer (section 3(1)(3)). The Committee therefore noted that the Labour Code appeared to exclude work performed outside the framework of a labour contract and self-employment from its scope of application. In this regard, the Committee noted the Government's information that, according to the survey conducted by the Mongolian Employers' Federation in 2003, 54.3 per cent of employers involved in the survey had been employing children without a labour contract. In this regard, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the manner in which protection is given to children carrying out an economic activity that is not covered by a labour contract, such as work on their own account.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that, following an audit by the ILO on labour inspection in Mongolia, the Parliament approved a review of the Labour Code and state policy on informal employment. The Committee noted that the Government plans to revise the Labour Code to extend its scope of application in 2010. The Committee also noted the Government's statement that child protection is still weak in the informal sector. The Committee further noted the information in the Human Rights and Freedoms in Mongolia Status Report, issued in 2007 by the National Human Rights Commission of Mongolia, that approximately 6,950 children were working in the informal economy in urban areas (page 50). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, within the review of the Labour Code and the state policy on informal employment, protection is given to children carrying out work on their own account or in the informal economy. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on developments in this regard.

Article 2(3). 1. Age of completion of compulsory education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to section 109(2) of the Labour Code, a person aged 15 years may enter into a labour contract with the permission of parents or guardians. It noted however that, according to National Programme for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour in Mongolia (Phase II, ILO–IPEC Multi-bilateral Programme of Technical Cooperation of 9 April 2002, page 8), the new Law on Primary and Secondary Education was adopted on 3 May 2002. The Committee also noted that the Government indicated in its report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) that “the Law on Education provides that a child shall be provided a compulsory basic education up to 17 years of age” (CRC/C/65/Add.32 of 15 November 2004, page 19). The Committee observed that the minimum age of 15 years specified by the Government seems to be lower than the age of completion of compulsory schooling.

The Committee noted, in its concluding observations, that the CRC expressed concern “about some contradictory provisions of the domestic laws leaving children without adequate protection, e.g. the compulsory school age is 17, whereas the labour law allows children aged 14 and 15 years old to work 30 hours per week” (CRC/C/15/Add.264, 21 September 2005, paragraph 9). The Committee further noted in the Government's report submitted under Convention No. 182, that the Law on Education was amended in December 2006, and noted the Government's statement in its report to the CRC of 9 June 2009 that education is mandatory until the age of 16 (CRC/C/MNG/3-4 paragraph 280).

The Committee recalled that, pursuant to Article 2(3) of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to employment (currently 15 years) should not be lower than the age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee also considered that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour. If the age of admission to employment and the age limit for compulsory education do not coincide, a number of problems may arise. For example, if the age of completion of compulsory education is higher than the minimum age for admission to work or employment, children who are required to attend school are at the same time legally competent to work and may be tempted to abandon their studies. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the legislative provisions contained in the Law on Primary and Secondary Education, in the Law on Education or in any other legislation, fixing the actual age of completion of compulsory education and to supply a copy of the same. Noting that the minimum age for admission to employment appears to be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the minimum age for admission to employment in order to link it with the age of completion of compulsory schooling in conformity with Article 2(3) of the Convention.

2. Providing education for school drop-outs. The Committee noted that, according to the National Programme for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour in Mongolia (Phase II, ILO–IPEC Multi-bilateral Programme of Technical Cooperation of 9 April 2002, page 9), since the mid-1990s, school enrolment has been gradually improving and the school drop-out rate has reversed.

The Committee noted in the Government's report submitted under Convention No. 182 that the National Statistical Office with support from UNICEF carried out the "Random sampling research on groups with mixed indicators" in 2005–06. One finding of this research was that 90.2 per cent of children living in Ulaanbaatar are studying in secondary school versus only 76.1 per cent in the remote rural areas, mostly due to a high drop-out rate for children of herders, who need the assistance of their children in their family's livestock herding activities. The CRC expressed similar findings (CRC/C/15/Add.264, 21 September 2005, paragraphs 51–52). The Committee noted that the Ministry of Education, Culture and Science, with financial support from UNICEF, is implementing the "Circular for alternative training of primary, basic and complete secondary education" (Circular). This Circular, as well as the newly amended Law on Education both make explicit provisions for providing working children and drop-out children with educational services, including informal education. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the impact of the Circular, and any other measures taken, on providing educational services to both working and drop-out children as well as in increasing school attendance rates, in particular in the remote areas. It also requests the Government to continue providing statistical information on school attendance and school drop-out rates, in particular in rural schools.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee previously noted that, according to a national survey conducted by the National Statistical Office in 2000, quite a number of children under the specified minimum age for admission to employment are economically active in some way or another. The Committee recalled that Article 7(1) of the Convention provides that national laws or regulations may permit persons from the age of 13 to engage in light work, which is: (a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. The Committee also recalled that, according to Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine what is light work and shall prescribe the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment or work may be undertaken. Noting the absence of information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in respect of provisions to determine light work activities and the conditions in which such employment or work could be undertaken by young persons of 13 years or more.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee previously noted that section 25(6) of the Law on the Protection of the Rights of the Child provides that individuals and officials using a child in press and commercial advertising without the consent of the child or his/her parents, guardians, caregivers and conducting profit-oriented activities illegally using the name of the child will face a penalty of 20,000–30,000 tugriks with confiscation of their income and profit. The Committee recalled that, according to Article 8 of the Convention, the competent authority may, by permits granted in individual cases, allow exceptions to the prohibition of employment under the general minimum age, for such purposes as participation in artistic performances. Permits so granted shall limit the number of hours during which, and prescribe the conditions in which, employment or work is allowed. It requested the Government to indicate whether in practice children under the age of 15 years participate in artistic performances and, if so, to provide information on provisions of the national legislation which determine conditions of such work. The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that, pursuant to section 8.1 of the Law on the Protection of the Rights of the Child, a list of plays and performances which may adversely affect a child's health shall be developed and approved by Governmental officials responsible for health issues. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of this list, once approved.

Article 9(1). Penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to section 141(1)(6) of the Labour Code, if an employer forces minors to do work prohibited to them, or to lift or carry loads exceeding the prescribed limits, or has required employees under 18 years of age to work in a workplace that adversely affects their health and mental development, or in abnormal working conditions, or compels them to work overtime or during public holidays or weekends, the state labour inspector shall impose a fine on that officer of 15,000–30,000 tugriks. It also noted that section 25(5) of the Law on the Protection of the Rights of the Child provides for penalties for engaging a child in hazardous work stating "individuals forcing the child to beg and officials engaging the child in a work harmful for his/her health will face a penalty of 10,000–20,000 tugriks".

The Committee noted in the Government's report, submitted under Convention No. 182, that the penalties for breach of provisions found in the Criminal Code (such as human trafficking in children, involvement in pornography, sexual exploitation, drug trafficking) and other laws relating to children's rights are appropriate. However, the penalties imposed upon employers, parents and other representatives in connection with employment in hazardous work are weak. The Committee further noted the Government's indication that the fine imposed upon someone employing minors in prohibited work is insufficiently small to deter employers from resorting to the labour exploitation of minors. The Government indicated that much still remains to be done in relation to updating the legislation by imposing penalties, by ordering injunctions and ameliorating the penalty mechanism imposed upon parents and family members who allow the employment of children in the worst forms of child labour. The Committee encourages the Government to continue updating the legislation in this regard and requests it to provide information on any developments thereof. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a person found to be in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, in particular those in respect of hazardous work, is prosecuted and that adequate penalties are imposed. It asks the Government to provide information on the types of violations detected, the number of persons prosecuted and the penalties imposed.

Article 9(3). Registers of employment. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the national legislation does not appear to contain provisions on the obligation of an employer to keep and make available the registers of persons under the age of 18 whom he/she employs. The Committee reminded the Government that, in accordance with Article 9(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations or the competent authority shall prescribe the registers or other documents which shall be kept and made available by the employer containing the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified, wherever possible, of persons whom he/she employs or who work for him/her and who are less than 18 years of age. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate in which manner it ensures that employers shall keep and make available registers, which contain the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified whenever possible, of persons under the age of 18 years employed or working for them.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee noted in the Government's report submitted under Convention No. 182 that the National Statistics Office recently conducted the second National Child Labour Survey (2006–07) (NCL Survey). The Committee noted 621,500 children, of which 60.3 per cent were boys and 39.7 per cent girls, were covered in the NCL Survey and that at least 11.5 per cent worked at least one hour a week or were economically active. Though the survey has some shortcomings as it did not include homeless children, as well as those living in correctional labour colonies, orphanages and childcare institutions, it is nevertheless significant in creating the official and objective database. The prevalent sectors of work for children were: 84.6 per cent in agriculture; 5.1 per cent in services; 3.5 per cent in trade and industry; and 5.8 per cent in sweatshops. In relation to the employment relationship, the NCL Survey indicated that 93.1 per cent of working children work in household enterprises and are not paid, 9.2 per cent are self-employed and 1.7 per cent have a contractual relationship.

Another survey, conducted by the Mongolian Employers Federation in 2003, (Employers' Survey), reveals that labour standards in relation to children working in the formal sector are not always adhered to: 59.5 per cent of employers hiring children aged 14–18 years of age did not conclude any contracts and 29.2 per cent were employing the children on a wage or work performance contract. The main motives for not concluding a contract were not wanting to pay the social insurance premiums and other deductions (36 per cent) and the temporary nature of the employment (52 per cent). According to the reports submitted by employers and used in the Employers' Survey, 46 per cent of the children's conditions at the workplace were deemed "normal", 11.7 per cent were too hot, 21 per cent too dusty or with poor air circulation and 10.6 per cent were too noisy.

In addition, the Committee noted that the Population Training and Research Centre of the National University of Mongolia also carried out a survey which focused mostly on children aged 16–18 years of age working in the gold- and coal mining sectors in the Selenge and Tuv aimags (provinces). This survey indicates that most children started mining at an average age of 12, work an average of four hours per day in the winter, and an average of eight to nine and 10–11 continuous hours in the summer for children aged below 16 and 16–18, respectively. A total of 37.7 per cent of the children mining gold used mercury and 66.7 per cent of them work at home. Of these, 22.5 per cent have been involved in an accident in which 92.6 per cent have injured their legs, arms or their organs. Half of all children mining gold experience some form of health problem: 43.3 per cent suffer regularly from respiratory diseases, 41.7 per cent suffer from kidney and urinary disorders, 25 per cent suffer from orthopaedic illnesses and 23.3 per cent suffer from ear, nose and throat diseases.

Finally, the Committee noted that the report "Understanding children's work and youth employment outcomes in Mongolia", issued in June 2009 by the ILO, UNICEF and the World Bank (through the Understanding Children's Work Project), indicates that 13.2 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 14 are engaged in economic activity and that 7.5 per cent of children between the ages 15 and 17 are engaged in hazardous work. The Committee also noted that, in its concluding observations, the CRC expressed concern "at the high rate of working children in Mongolia and the various kinds of negative consequences resulting from the exploitation of child labour, including the school drop outs and negative impacts on health caused by the harmful and hazardous work. The high number of child domestic and rural workers and children working in very harmful conditions in gold and coal mines give cause for serious concerns" (CRC/C/15/Add.264, 21 September 2005, paragraph 59). While noting the efforts made by the Government to combat child labour, the Committee expresses serious concern at the large number of children working under the age of 15, as well as the significant number of children engaged in hazardous occupations, and therefore strongly encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to improve the situation, including through the allocation of additional resources for the implementation of measures aimed at combating child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the situation of child labour in Mongolia and, in particular, to supply copies or extracts from official documents of inspection services. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the number and nature of the contraventions reported and penalties imposed.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Morocco

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of a National Action Plan for Children (2006–15) (PANE), a major component of which is devoted to combating child labour. In this regard, the Committee noted that the activities envisaged in the PANE include support for NGOs working to combat child labour and the preparation of a study on the working conditions of children. The Committee also noted that the PANE aims to remove children under 15 years of age from work situations at the rate of 10 per cent per year until 2015 and to improve the situation of needy families at the rate of 5 per cent per year. The Committee also noted that the issue of combating child labour had been included in other national social development strategies in Morocco, including the Government Declaration for the period 2007–11 and the National Human Development Initiative (INDH),

The Committee notes the Government's indications that significant efforts have been made during the first phase of the implementation of the PANE between 2006–10. The Committee observes, among other action, that a bill on domestic labour has been finalized, with the objective of determining the working conditions and terms and conditions of employment of domestic workers, and prohibiting the employment of girls under 15 years of age as domestic workers. The Government adds that the national study on the working conditions of children has not yet been undertaken, but that it is planned for 2012. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the aims of the INDH include prevention, protection and the integration of children as essential human capital for development. The fields of action covered by the INDH accordingly include projects in the field of education and training to improve learning, as well as projects for shelters intended for young homeless persons, street children, abandoned children and other needy children. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the implementation of the PANE and the INDH, and on the results achieved in terms of the progressive abolition of child labour. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the Act on domestic work, once it has been adopted. It also requests the Government to provide the findings of the national study on working conditions, when it has been completed. To the extent possible, the statistical data should be disaggregated by age and sex.

Article 2(1) and (3). Scope of application and compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 143 of the Labour Code, minors may not be employed or admitted to enterprises or the premises of employers before the age of 15 years, and it observed that the protection provided by the Labour Code does not apply to persons working on their own account. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Code does not protect children working on their own account, but that the latter are protected by the Dahir of 13 November 1963 on compulsory education, as amended by Act No. 04.00 of 25 May 2000, which requires parents to enrol their children at school and establishes penalties for refusal to do so. The Committee also noted that labour inspectors are only authorized by law to enforce the application of the labour legislation when there is an employment relationship. Consequently, labour inspectors do not carry out any supervision in the informal economy. The Committee however noted that an emergency plan had been adopted for the period 2009–12, consisting of 10 projects aimed at giving effect to the requirement to attend school up to the age of 15 years, including, in particular, the development of the pre-school level, equality of opportunity with regard to access to compulsory education and measures to reduce repetition and drop-out rates. However, the Committee notes that, according to the 2008 UNESCO report entitled Education for All by 2015: Will we make it?, although school attendance rates have increased significantly in Morocco (20 per cent), the rate of the repetition of the first year of primary school is one of the highest in the region and stands at 16 per cent.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the emergency programme is still being implemented in Morocco. It notes with interest the statistics provided by the Government, according to which the school attendance rate in primary school increased from 91.4 per cent in 2007 to 97.5 per cent in 2010 (for girls, the rate rose from 89.1 per cent to 96.3 per cent). It also notes that the school drop-out rate in primary school fell from 5.4 per cent in 2006 to 3.1 per cent in 2010. The Government adds that 38,197 children benefited from formal education programmes in 2010, compared with 33,177 in 2008. Noting the efforts made by the Government and considering that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to increase the school attendance rate, particularly for children under 15 years of age, so as to prevent them from working, especially on their own account and in the informal sector. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Article 2(1) and Part V of the report form. Minimum age for admission to employment and application of the Convention in practice. 1. Child workers in artisanal industries and other sectors. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the information provided by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) according to which child labour was common in informal artisanal industries. It also noted that, according to the report entitled "Understanding children's work in Morocco" (pp. 19, 20, 22 and 23), some 372,000 children aged between 7 and 14 years, representing 7 per cent of the reference group, were engaged in work, while for the 12 to 14 age group, 18 per cent of children were economically active. According to this study, 87 per cent of working children were in rural areas where they were working in the agricultural sector. In urban areas, children were engaged in the textile, commercial and repairs sectors.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the outcome of the activities undertaken with ILO–IPEC support as from 2010 is that: 12,192 children have been removed from child labour and 21,694 have been prevented from working. The Government adds that the activities of the National Office to Combat Child Labour resulted in 218 children under 15 years of age being removed from work in 2010 and that interventions by associations covered by agreements with the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training led to 249 children under 15 years of age being removed from work in 2009. The Committee once again reiterates its appreciation of the efforts made and the measures taken by the Government to abolish child labour, efforts which it considers to be a reflection of the political resolve to develop strategies to overcome these problems. However, the Committee observes that, by virtue of section 4 of the Labour Code, employers in purely traditional sectors, i.e. performing manual work, with the assistance of their partners, ascendants and descendants, and with a maximum of five assistants, at home or at another place of work, for the purpose of manufacturing traditional products for commercial sale, are excluded from the scope of application of the Code. The Committee therefore notes that children employed in informal artisanal industries, or formal artisanal industries involving five employees or less, do not benefit from the protection of the Labour Code and, consequently, from the application of the minimum age of 15 years. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the minimum age of 15 years is duly applied to all children working in artisanal industries. It requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat child labour and requests it to continue providing information on the implementation of the projects referred to above and any other relevant projects, as well as on the results achieved in terms of the progressive abolition of child labour.

2. Child domestic workers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the "Understanding Children's Work in Morocco" report, children working in urban areas were often employed in domestic work. The Committee also noted that, according to past observations communicated by the ITUC in response to the Government's report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), some 50,000 children, mainly girls, are employed in domestic work. Of these, about 13,000 are young girls under the age of 15 employed as servants in Casablanca, with 70 per cent of them under 12 years of age and 25 per cent under 10 years of age. In this regard, in its comment under Convention No. 182, the Committee noted that a bill on domestic work was elaborated and in the process of being validated by national authorities. This bill fills the current legislative gap and sets the minimum age for admission to this type of employment at 15 years, lays down conditions of work and establishes supervisory measures and penalties, including imprisonment, for persons employing children under 15 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report under Convention No. 182, that the process to adopt the bill on domestic work has been under way since June 2011. The Committee expresses the firm hope that this bill will be adopted as soon as possible. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous types of work. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Decree No. 2-10-183 of 16 November 2010 determining the list of hazardous types of work in which it is prohibited to engage certain categories of persons, including children under 18 years of age. This Decree replaces the Decree of 29 December 2004 and extends by over 30 the number of hazardous occupations prohibited for children, such as greasing operations, the use of certain machines, demolition work, glass melting, any work exposing them to ionizing radiations, the manufacture or transport of explosives, and other types of work.

Article 8. Artistic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Decree of 29 December 2004 prohibits the employment of any minor under 18 years of age as an actor or performer in public performances without the written authorization of the official responsible for labour inspection, following consultation with the minor's guardian. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that the Decree of 29 December 2004 does not establish the particulars of the authorization from parents and the labour inspector, nor the penalties to be applied in the event of violation, and that the law sets out details concerning working hours and conditions. In this respect, the Committee noted that section 145 of the Labour Code provides that "No minor under 18 years of age may, without the prior individual authorization in writing of the official responsible for labour inspection, granted following consultation with the minor's guardian, be employed as an actor or performer in public performances organized by enterprises, the list of which shall be determined by regulation. The official responsible for labour inspection may withdraw the authorization previously granted, either at his own initiative or at the initiative of any authorized person". The Committee however noted that this provision does not require that permits granted to minors under 18 years of age under the Decree of 29 December 2004 must limit the number of hours during which and prescribe the conditions in which such employment or work is allowed.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Code sets out all the detailed provisions concerning working hours and working conditions. The Government adds that the authorizations granted to minors to participate in artistic performances are not employment contracts and consequently do not contain details of working conditions. The Committee however reminds the Government that Article 8 of the Convention requires the permits granted to allow minors to participate in artistic performances to limit the number of hours during which and prescribe the conditions in which employment or work is allowed. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 8 of the Convention, so that permits granted to minors under 18 years of age allowing them to participate in artistic performances limit the number of hours during which and prescribe the conditions in which employment or work is allowed.

Article 9(1). Penalties. The Committee previously noted that section 151 of the Labour Code provides that the employment of a child under 15 years of age, in breach of section 143 of the Labour Code, shall be punishable by a fine of 25,000 to 30,000 dirhams (US$3,000 to $3,600), and that a repeat offence is subject to a term of imprisonment of six days to three months and/or a fine of 50,000 to 60,000 dirhams (US$6,000 to $7,200). It nevertheless noted that sections 150 and 183 of the Labour Code provide for a fine of between 300 and 500 dirhams (between US$36 and $60) for breaches of section 147 of the Labour Code (prohibiting the employment of children under 18 years of age in hazardous work) or section 179 (prohibiting the employment of children under 18 years of age in quarries or mines, or in work likely to hamper their growth). The Committee also noted that, before resorting to penalties, labour inspectors have to give advice and information to employers on the dangers to which child workers are exposed. Under the terms of sections 542 and 543 of the Labour Code, a labour inspector who detects a violation of the legislation provisions or regulations respecting health and safety, which poses an immediate risk to the health or safety of the workers, shall issue an order requiring the employer to take all the necessary measures immediately. If the employer refuses or fails to comply with the requirements set out in the order, the labour inspector shall immediately refer the matter to the president of the court of first instance, who may give the employer a deadline for taking all the necessary measures to prevent the imminent danger and may order the closure of the undertaking and determine, where appropriate, the necessary duration of the closure. The Committee observed that persons who employ children in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention are not generally prosecuted if such employment is brought to an end.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that the number of reports of employers in breach of the law increased from 803 in 2008 to 874 in 2009, and to 1,863 in 2010. The Government adds that the number of offences and violations rose from 67 in 2008 to 451 in 2009, falling back to 45 in 2010, and that reports have been drawn up and sent to the respective courts for decision. However, the Government does not indicate whether these reports of violations relate specifically to violations of the provisions giving effect to the Convention or whether penalties have been applied to the employers. The Committee once again reminds the Government that it is necessary to ensure the application of the Convention by means of penalties set out in the legislation. The Committee also once again observes that the penalties envisaged in sections 150 and 183 of the Labour Code, relating to the employment of children under 18 years of age in hazardous work, are still not adequate and sufficiently dissuasive to ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention relating to hazardous types of work, in accordance with Article 9(1), of the Convention, particularly when they are compared with the penalties envisaged in section 151 of the Labour Code, which are much more severe. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that any person who violates the provisions prohibiting the employment of children under 18 years of age in hazardous types of work is prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the type of violations detected by the labour inspection services, the number of persons prosecuted and the penalties applied.

Article 3 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Worst forms of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work. Child domestic labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the statement from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) to the effect that child domestic labour, performed under conditions of servitude, is common practice in the country, with parents selling their children, sometimes as young as 6 years of age, to work as domestic servants. The ITUC also indicated that some 50,000 children, mainly girls, are employed in domestic work. Of these, about 13,000 young girls under the age of 15 are employed as servants in Casablanca, with 70 per cent of them under 12 years of age and 25 per cent under 10 years of age. The Committee noted that section 10 of the Labour Code prohibits forced labour and that section 467-2 of the Penal Code prohibits the forced labour of children under 15 years of age. It further noted that a Bill on domestic work had been adopted and was in the process of being validated by the national authorities. The Bill sets the minimum age for admission to this type of employment at 15 years, lays down conditions of work and establishes supervisory measures and penalties, including imprisonment for persons employing children under 15 years of age. The Committee further noted that a specific list determining hazardous types of work prohibited in the domestic work sector would be drawn up and adopted pursuant to the future law on the conditions of employment and work of domestic workers.

Furthermore, the Committee noted that an initial qualitative and quantitative survey of girls under 18 years of age engaged in domestic work was undertaken in 2001 in the wilaya of Casablanca. According to the results of the statistical survey undertaken in 2001, nearly 23,000 girls under 18 years of age were working in the Greater Casablanca area as domestic workers, 59.2 per cent of whom were under 15 years of age. The Committee noted that the survey revealed that a significant proportion of these girls were uneducated, were subject to punishment in the course of their work, received beatings and/or were subjected to sexual abuse. The Committee noted that a second survey was planned in the Greater Casablanca area during the second half of 2010 with an extrapolation of the results and data at national level.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the specific list of hazardous types of domestic work will be drawn up and adopted in conjunction with the future law concerning the conditions of employment and work of domestic workers. The process to adopt this Bill has been under way since June 2011. The Committee also notes the Government's indications that the figures recorded by the 2001 survey have decreased significantly since then, owing to the efforts of the Moroccan Government in recent years, especially in seeking to reduce school drop-out rates and all other forms of social exclusion. As regards the second survey to be conducted with respect to girls engaged in domestic work in Casablanca, the Government indicates that the methodological report, which, among others, enables the target group to be identified and the survey to be planned and implemented, has been drawn up and that the survey itself is currently in progress. While noting the Government's efforts, the Committee recalls that young girls engaged in domestic work are often victims of exploitation and that it is difficult to supervise their conditions of employment due to the clandestine nature of such work. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Bill on domestic work and the list of prohibited types of hazardous domestic work are adopted and implemented as a matter of urgency. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to complete the 2010 survey on the situation of young girls engaged in domestic work in Casablanca and to send the Office a copy of the results with its next report.

Article 4(3). Periodic examination and revision of the list of hazardous types of work. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Decree No. 2-10-183 of 16 November 2010, establishing the list of hazardous types of work which are prohibited for certain categories of persons, including children under 18 years of age. The Decree replaces that of 29 December 2004 and increases to over 30 the number of dangerous occupations forbidden for children, including greasing work, the use of certain machines, demolition work, glass melting, any work involving exposure to ionizing radiation, and the manufacture or transport of explosives.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from these worst forms, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Child prostitution and sex tourism. In its previous comments the Committee expressed concern at the persistence of child prostitution and sex tourism involving young Moroccans and immigrants, particularly boys, despite an amendment to the Penal Code in 2003 making sex tourism a criminal offence. The Committee noted the Government's indications that the scourge of the sexual exploitation of children remains unseen and unrecognized in Morocco, and for this reason the Government is making every effort to tackle it.

The Committee also noted that child protection units (UPEs) had been set up in Casablanca and Marrakesh to provide better medical, psychological and legal assistance for children who have been the victims of violence or ill-treatment, including children who have suffered from sexual or economic exploitation. It further noted that, as part of the National Plan of Action for Children (PANE) for 2006–15, a preliminary study on the problem of the sexual exploitation of children was carried out in February 2007, with a view to formulating a national strategy to prevent and combat such exploitation.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that five UPEs have been set up since 2007, in Marrakesh, Casablanca, Tangier, Meknès and Essaouira. The Government indicates that, by the end of 2010, a total of 313 child victims of violence (including sexual exploitation) (131 girls and 182 boys) received assistance from the UPE in Marrakesh; 244 children (124 girls and 120 boys) were assisted by the UPE in Casablanca; and 88 children (41 girls and 47 boys) received assistance from the UPE in Tangier. Moreover, the Committee notes that the UPEs in Marrakesh, Casablanca and Tangier are being consolidated, and a plan for their further development in 2011–12 has been drawn up with a view to strengthening their operation and their structure.

Nevertheless, the Committee observes that the Government has not provided any information with regard to the national strategy to prevent and combat the sexual exploitation of children. The Committee therefore, urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that the national strategy to prevent and combat the sexual exploitation of children is implemented as soon as possible and to provide information on progress made in this respect. It also requests the Government to continue to supply information on the number of children prevented from engaging in prostitution or withdrawn from it through the UPEs. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to supply a copy of the preliminary study on the problem of the sexual exploitation of children which was conducted in February 2007, with a view to the formulation of the national strategy.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic labour. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the national programme to combat the use of young girls as housemaids (INQAD) as part of the PANE. It also noted that, as part of its strategic plan for 2008–12 and following implementation of the INQAD programme, the Ministry of Social Development, Family Affairs and Solidarity was planning to organize a second nationwide awareness-raising campaign to combat the use of young girls as housemaids and to prepare regional action plans. It further noted that, as part of the multi-sectoral programme implemented in collaboration with UNDP to combat gender-based violence by empowering women and girls in Morocco, ILO–IPEC launched an action programme to combat the use of young girls in domestic labour in the region of Marrakesh–Tensift–El Haouz for the period from 1 January 2009 to 31 December 2010. The Committee asked the Government to provide information on the results achieved in the context of the INQAD programme with regard to the protection of girls under 18 years of age working as housemaids.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the second campaign to raise awareness of domestic work involving young girls took place on 12 June 2010, on the occasion of the World Day Against Child Labour. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that, as part of the ILO–IPEC programme, a total of 1,306 children under 15 years of age and 478 children under 18 years of age have been withdrawn from child labour. The Committee encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts with respect to the identification, withdrawal and reintegration of girls under 18 years of age working as domestic servants who are subjected to economic or sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to continue to supply information on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mozambique

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). 1. Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee previously noted that section 63(1)(b) of the Child Protection Act requires the Government to adopt legislative or administrative measures to protect children against all forms of sexual exploitation, including prostitution. Section 63(2)(b) of the Child Protection Act states that the legislative measures adopted need to provide for rigorous sanctions. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the legislative or administrative measures that had been adopted pursuant to section 63 of the Child Protection Act.

The Committee notes with concern the absence of information on this point in the Government's report. However, the Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed deep concern that child prostitution is increasing in Mozambique, especially in the Maputo, Beira and Nacala regions, as well as in some rural areas (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 84). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of legislation, pursuant to section 63(1)(b) of the Child Protection Act, prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of a child under the age of 18 for the purpose of prostitution in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the relevant provisions, once adopted.

2. Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously noted that, although national legislation provided for the protection of children from being exposed to pornography, it did not prohibit the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. It also noted that section 63(1)(c) of the Child Protection Act states that the State must take legislative measures to protect children from all forms of sexual exploitation, including the exploitation of children in pornography or pornographic performances. Noting an absence of information on this point in the Government's report, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of legislation prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of children under the age of 18 for the production of pornography or pornographic performances, pursuant to section 63 of the Child Protection Act.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of the Law on Drugs No. 3/97, and noted that this legislation contained provisions relating to the use of minors for the production, transport, distribution and consumption of drugs. Considering that the Committee has been requesting a copy of the Law on Drugs No. 3/97, since 2005, the Committee urges the Government to provide a copy of this legislation, along with its next report.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Children in domestic service. The Committee previously noted that section 3 of Act No. 23/2007 of 27 August 2007 (Labour Law), provides for special regimes governing employment relationships in domestic work. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that regulations to implement the new Labour Law were under preparation, including regulations on domestic work. It further noted the Government's statement in its 23 March 2009 report to the CRC that domestic work is one of the most common types of child labour in Mozambique, and that children are frequently forced to work in this sector (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraphs 356 and 358).

The Committee notes that the Regulations on Domestic Work (No. 40) were adopted on 26 November 2008, section 4(2) of which prohibits employers from employing a person under 15 years of age in domestic work. However, the Committee observes that these regulations do not address the issue of hazardous domestic work of children. In this regard, the Committee recalls that children, and particularly young girls, engaged in domestic service are often victims of exploitation, and that it is difficult to supervise their conditions of employment due to the clandestine nature of such work. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to ensure that children under the age of 18 engaged in domestic work do not engage in hazardous work.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous types of work. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to section 23(2) of the Labour Law, employers shall not engage persons under 18 years of age in hazardous work, as defined by the competent authorities after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers. The Committee noted the information provided by the Government that, in the context of the legislative reform, work was being carried out on the formulation of specific legislation on this subject.

The Committee notes with concern the statement in the Government's report that no measures have been adopted to determine the types of dangerous work prohibited to persons under the age of 18. In this regard, the Committee once again reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 4(1) of the Convention, the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under the age of 18 shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, taking into consideration relevant international standards, in particular Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that regulations are adopted pursuant to section 23(2) of the Labour Law to determine the hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age in the near future. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of this legislation once adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Government had taken measures to improve the education system, particularly with regard to school attendance rates. It noted the information in the Government's reply to the list of issues of the CRC of 29 September 2009 that the gross rate of completion of primary education continued to rise, from 75 per cent in 2006 to 78 per cent in 2008 (CRC/C/MOZ/Q/2/Add.1, paragraph 55). However, the Committee noted that, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, the CRC expressed concern that one in five children remain deprived of education and that significant disparities in accessing education persist between provinces, particularly affecting the provinces of Niassa, Nampula and Zambezia (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 71). The CRC also expressed concern at the high prevalence of sexual abuse and harassment in schools which reportedly result in the refusal by some girls to go to school (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 73).

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, through the National Action Plan for Children (NAPC), a school attendance rate of 81 per cent was achieved, and a transition rate between (primary level 1 and primary level 2) of 77.1 per cent was reached. The Committee also notes the Government's statement in its report submitted under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that, with regard to girls entering and staying in education, the Government has undertaken various initiatives with educational authorities, including prioritizing access to grants for vocational courses, the appointment of female managers at various levels, and raising awareness among teachers and communities on the sexual abuse of girls. The Committee further notes the information in the 2011 UNESCO Education for All Global Monitoring Report that, since 1999, the net enrolment rate in the first year of primary education rose from 18 per cent to 59 per cent, and that over this same period, the percentage of girls composing the primary school population rose from 43 per cent to 47 per cent. Considering that education contributes to preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to improve the functioning of the educational system, particularly by increasing school enrolment rates and reducing school drop-out rates, with special attention to the situation of girls. It also urges the Government to address the regional disparities of access to education, to facilitate access to free and basic education to all children in Mozambique.

Clause (d). Reaching out to children at special risk. 1. Orphans and other vulnerable children (OVCs). The Committee previously noted that the Government had formulated a National Action Plan for Children, Vulnerable Children and Orphans (POA OVC), which aimed to provide six basic services to OVCs: health, education, nutritional/food support, legal and psychological and financial support. However, the Committee noted the statement in the Government's progress report for the UN General Assembly Special Session on HIV/AIDS of January 2008, that the number of children who had lost their parents to HIV/AIDS was estimated to reach 630,000 by 2010. The Government further stated in this report that HIV/AIDS orphans had very limited means of generating income, and thus often had to resort to risky coping strategies, such as transactional sex or hazardous child labour. In this regard, the Committee noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed concern that services for orphans and vulnerable children, including child heads of households, remained inadequate (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 67). The CRC also expressed serious concern at the situation of orphaned children being economically exploited by foster families (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 79).

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, between 2005 and 2009, actions were implemented through the NAPC to locate, document and reunite the families of orphaned, lost or abandoned children. The Government indicates that a total of 31,198 children were found and documented and that 6,690 of these children were integrated into their families. The Committee also notes the Government's statement in its report to the UN Human Rights Council for the Universal Periodic Review of 11 November 2010, that the impact of HIV/AIDS is a contributing factor to the continuation of child labour in the country (A/HRC/WG.6/10/MOZ/1, paragraph 97). The Committee further notes the information in the Government's country progress report to the UN General Assembly Special Session on the Declaration of Commitment to HIV/AIDS of 2010, that in 2009 there were approximately 1.3 million OVCs in the country. The Government indicates in this report that 357,905 of these children (27 per cent) were provided with at least three basic services through a combination of initiatives from the Government and civil society organizations. The Committee expresses its concern at the increasing number of children orphaned in Mozambique as a result of HIV/AIDS. Recalling that OVCs are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that such children are protected from these worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved, particularly with regard to increasing the number of OVCs with access to external support.

2. Street children and begging. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that many children live or work in the streets in Mozambique and that the exploitation of child beggars is increasingly frequent in several provincial capitals. However, the Committee noted the Government's statement in its report to the CRC of 23 March 2009 that, to address the increasing problem of begging, it had taken measures to reduce poverty, to increase social protection and to improve housing policies (CRC/C/MOZ/2, paragraphs 278 and 279). However, the Committee noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 4 November 2009, expressed concern that insufficient measures had been taken to address the situation of children living in the streets (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/2, paragraph 82).

The Committee notes an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. Recalling that children who live or work in these streets are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children living in the streets from these worst forms, and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on measures taken in this regard, particularly the number of street children reached through these initiatives.

The Committee encourages the Government to take into consideration the Committee's comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. In this regard, the Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Namibia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that, due to the absence of a specific provision on human trafficking in Namibia, no prosecutions or convictions were recorded for trafficking in persons during the reporting period. It therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 15 of the Prevention of Organized Crime Act (No. 29 of 2004) prohibits trafficking in persons, and notes that this Act came into force on 5 May 2009. The Committee also notes that section 1 of the Prevention of Organized Crime Act defines trafficking as the recruitment, transfer, harbouring or receipt of persons by means of threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability, or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the Prevention of Organized Crime Act, including statistics on the number and nature of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution or for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously observed that the prohibitions related to prostitution contained in national legislation (particularly in the Immorality Act 1988 and the Immoral Practices Act 1980) did not encompass the use, procuring or offering of all persons under the age of 18 for the purpose of prostitution or pornography. However, the Committee noted the information in the Action Programme to Eliminate Child Labour in Namibia 2008–12 (APEC 2008–12), that a draft of the Child Care and Protection Bill contained provisions prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in the report of the Working Group on the Universal Period Review of the UN Human Rights Council of 31 May 2011 that the Child Care and Protection Bill was approved by Cabinet in May 2011 and is due to be tabled in Parliament soon (A/HRC/17/14/Add.1, paragraph 5). The Committee also notes that section 176(1)(a) of the draft Child Care and Protection Bill prohibits the use, procuring or offering of a child for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee further notes the statement in the Government's report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child of 15 September 2011 that the criminal and sexual exploitation of children had occurred in the country both through children being prostituted, and through adults taking advantage of needy children by providing basic necessities in return for sex (CRC/C/NAM/2-3, paragraph 226). The Committee therefore expresses the hope that the draft Child Care and Protection Bill will prohibit the use, procuring and offering of all persons under the age of 18 for prostitution and pornography, and will be adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the Child Care Protection Act, once adopted.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that national legislation did not appear to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. It also noted that the 2007 ILO rapid assessment study "Children used by adults to commit crimes (CUBAC) in Namibia" indicated that approximately one third of children involved in crimes had been used by adults to commit such crimes.

The Committee notes that section 176(1)(b) of the draft Child Care and Protection Bill prohibits the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, including drug production and trafficking. Recalling that, by virtue of Article 3(c) of the Convention, the use of children by adults for illicit activities, including to commit crimes, is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the draft Child Care and Protection Bill in the near future.

Article 4(1). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to section 3(3)(d) and section 3(4) of the Labour Act, children between the ages of 14 and 18 are prohibited from performing the types of hazardous work listed in section 3(3)(d), including: (i) work underground or in a mine; (ii) construction or demolition work; (iii) manufacture of goods; (iv) work related to the generation, transformation or distribution of energy; (v) work related to installing or dismantling machinery; and (vi) any work-related activities which may place the child's health, safety, physical or mental health or spiritual, moral or social development at risk.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that a list of Hazardous Work (in terms of Conventions Nos 138 and 182) was finalized by the Towards the Elimination of the worst forms of Child Labour project (TECL), phase II, Project Advisory Committee on Child Labour, and that this list has been submitted to the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council for its consideration and recommendation to the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare. The Government indicates that supporting regulations for hazardous work will subsequently be developed, pursuant to this list. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the elaboration and adoption of regulations containing a determination of prohibited types of hazardous work. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the relevant regulations, once adopted.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Netherlands

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, pornography or pornographic performances. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that it was in the process of tightening sexual offences legislation by introducing stricter penalties for involvement in child pornography, criminalizing the sexual corruption of children and criminalizing the practice of grooming. The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's indication that this legislation which was intended to implement the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse came into force on 1 January 2010. It also notes the Government's information that the Bill to Regulate Prostitution and to Combat Abuses in the Sex Industry which raises the minimum age for prostitution from 18 to 21 years was approved by the Lower House of the Parliament and is currently before the Senate. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the newly adopted legislation which introduces stricter penalties for the provisions under the Dutch Criminal Code with regard to the offences related to child pornography, sexual corruption of children and grooming of a child for sexual acts.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Aruba

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138)

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Government of Aruba had made a commitment to ensure that all children receive compulsory education up to the age of 17 years. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the State Ordinance on Compulsory Education had not yet been approved.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the State Ordinance on Compulsory Education has still not been approved, partly due to the financial consequences of such a law. The Government indicates that the final draft of the Ordinance will be resubmitted to Parliament within the coming weeks and it trusts that this last draft will be adopted, at which point a copy of the ordinance will be submitted to the Office. The Committee trusts that the State Ordinance on Compulsory Education will be in conformity with Article 2(3) of the Convention. Considering that there is presently no specified age of completion of compulsory schooling in Aruba, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the State Ordinance on Compulsory Education is adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this Ordinance with its next report.

Article 3(1) and (2). Hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 17(1) of the Labour Ordinance provides that it is prohibited to cause women and juvenile persons to perform night work or work of a hazardous nature, which is to be described by a State decree. Section 4 of this Ordinance defines juveniles as persons who have reached the age of 14, but not yet the age of 18. The Committee had noted the Government's information that one of the tasks of the Committee for the Modernization of Labour Legislation (CMLL) is to fill the existing voids in the legislation, creating the State decrees (which are yet formalized) referred to in the Labour Ordinance. It had noted the Government's indication that the labour legislation review is still under way and that the state decree specifying the types of hazardous work prohibited to young persons under 18 years of age has not yet been enacted.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the CMLL has proposed to eliminate the need for the formal requirement of a decree to determine the types of hazardous work, and to allow the Director of the Labour Department to determine through official labour policy which types of work would fall under this category, which would then be published officially in the State Gazette. The Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Director of the Labour Department determine through official labour policy the types of hazardous work, as proposed by the CMLL, at the earliest possible date. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard in its next report.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the state decree provided for under section 16(a) of the Labour Ordinance allows exemptions for certain tasks which are necessary for the learning of a trade or profession, and can be done by children of 12 years or over who have completed the sixth class of primary school. It had also noted the Government's information that there were no instances recorded to indicate that children between 12 and 14 years of age are employed for training purposes. The Committee noted the Government's information that the state decree provided under section 16(a) of the Labour Ordinance has not yet been addressed in the CMLL.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the CMLL has proposed to eliminate the need for the formal requirement of a decree to specify the employment permitted for vocational education or technical training purposes, and to allow the Director of the Labour Department to do so through official labour policy, which would then be published officially in the State Gazette. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the Director of the Labour Department will specify the employment permitted for vocational education or technical training purposes under section 16(a) through official labour policy in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7. Light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that the state decree provided for under section 16(b) of the Labour Ordinance to specify certain tasks which can be carried out by children of 12 years of age and above, who have completed the sixth class of primary school, had not yet been addressed in the CMLL.

The Committee notes the Government's information that, in this case also, the CMLL has proposed to allow the Director of the Labour Department to determine the types of light work through official labour policy, which would then only need to be published officially in the State Gazette. The Committee once again recalls that Article 7(3) of the Convention requires that the competent authority determine the activities allowed as light work in which young persons between 12 and 14 years of age may be permitted to participate, and to prescribe the number of hours of work and the conditions of employment or work. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Director of the Labour Department will determine the types of light work permitted to children of 12 years and above, provided for under section 16(b) of the Labour Ordinance through official labour policy at the earliest possible date. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that control and enforcement of the labour legislation by the labour inspectors continues to be weak due to regulatory and financial challenges.

The Committee notes that the Government provides no new information on the practical application of the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice including statistical data on the nature, extent and trends in child labour and extracts from the reports of inspection services, information on the number and nature of contraventions reported and penalties applied. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee encourages the Government to take into consideration the Committee's comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. It requests the Government to provide any information on progress made in this regard and invites it to consider seeking technical assistance from the ILO.

New Zealand

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report. It also notes the comments made by Business New Zealand.

Article 3(d) of the Convention. Hazardous work. 1. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, by virtue of section 54(d) of the Health and Safety in Employment Regulations of 1995 (HSE Regulations), "every employer shall take all practicable steps to ensure that no employee under the age of 15 works in any area at a place of work under the control of that employer ... at any time when any work is being carried out in that area that is likely to cause harm to the health and safety of a person under the age of 15 years". It had observed that the prohibition did not extend to children under 18 years of age, as specified under Article 3(d) of the Convention.

The Committee also noted the allegation of the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) that in 2006, about 300 children under 15 years visited their local doctor for a work-related injury and that accident compensation entitlements and rehabilitation assistance were provided to between 1,000–2,000 children between the ages of 15 and 19. The NZCTU contended that there was widespread under-reporting of accident compensation claims and workplace accidents. In this regard, the Committee noted the Government's response that while it shared the concerns raised by the NZCTU with regard to the workplace injuries of children and young persons, which in some cases proved fatal, legislative protections existed to protect young persons. The Government also stated that it was aware of the under-reporting of accident claims and workplace injuries. The Committee further noted the information from the Government report on the prosecutions in 2007 and 2008 related to workplace injuries sustained by a 14-year-old child with partial amputation of three fingers on a snip saw; the death of a 12-year-old who fell from a truck; and a 17-year-old who had his fingers and wrist crushed by a pastry machine.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the existing legislative protections generally ensure that young people are not exposed to hazardous work and that employers have an obligation to ensure a healthy and safe working environment, as well as duties related to training and supervision. Business New Zealand also states that the existing legislative framework provides effective age thresholds for entry into work, particularly when read together with the obligation on all employers to provide their employees of whatever age, with a safe and healthy working environment. However, the Committee also notes the information in a research paper entitled "School children in Paid Employment – A summary of research findings" produced by the Department of Labour in September 2010 (DoL Report of 2010) according to which employers are not effective in raising schoolchildren's awareness of hazards, nor their rights, in the workplace as expected under the Health and Safety in Employment Act (1992). The DoL Report of 2010 states that one study found that a third of secondary school students indicated that their employers had not provided them with any information about workplace hazards. Moreover, this DoL Report of 2010 indicates that inadequacies in training and supervision of children in workplaces were also frequently reported. The Committee, therefore, notes with concern the information in the DoL Report of 2010 indicating that the existing legislative protections, which rely on the employer to protect children under the age of 18 from work place hazards, do not appear in practice to be fully and effectively protecting children from hazardous work.

Moreover, the Committee notes the information in the DoL Report of 2010 according to which injuries are a common and occasionally serious occurrence in school children's workplaces, with one-sixth of secondary school students in part-time work reportedly being injured at work in the past year. The DoL Report of 2010 states that while half of these injuries appear to be relatively minor, around a fifth of such injuries were severe enough to warrant a visit to a medical professional or hospital. Moreover, the DoL Report of 2010 indicates that children aged 15–16 were more likely to have had an injury than children aged 13–14, and that 20 per cent of working children of 16 years of age had had an employment injury. The Committee further notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 11 April 2011, expressed concern that children between the ages of 15 and 18 are allowed to work in dangerous workplaces (CRC/C/NZL/CO/3-4, paragraph 41).

The Committee must express its serious concern that children between 15 and 18 years of age are allowed, in law and in practice, to perform the types of work which are clearly hazardous, as previously acknowledged by the Government and supported by the Department of Labour's research. The Committee must, therefore, emphasize that, by virtue of Article 3(d), work which, by its nature and the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children under 18, constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee also recalls that Paragraph 4 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190) addresses the possibility of authorizing the employment or work of young persons as from the age of 16 under strict conditions that their health and safety be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to comply with Article 1 of the Convention, read with Article 3(d), to prohibit children under 18 years of age from engaging in hazardous and dangerous work. However, where such work is performed by young persons between 16 and 18 years of age, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that such work is only carried out in accordance with the strict conditions set out in Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190, namely that the health and safety of such young persons be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in that activity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

2. Self-employed children. The Committee previously noted that the HSE Regulations, which contain provisions for the employment of children in hazardous occupations, only apply to a "place of work under the control of that employer" (section 54). However, it noted the Government's statement that the provisions restricting the employment of children in hazardous work (15 years) and night work (16 years) under the HSE Regulations had been amended, in order to cover self-employed children working as independent contractors. It requested a copy of the Regulations, as amended.

The Committee notes that on 1 April 2009, the HSE Amendment Regulations came into force. In this regard, it notes that section 58A of the HSE Regulations has been amended to state that sections 58B to 58E (prohibiting injurious tasks, the use of machinery and the use of tractors) apply to a principal who engages a person under the age of 15 years as a contractor to do any work (except residential work), and that section 58F (prohibiting night work) applies to a principal who engages a person under the age of 16 years as a contractor to do any work (except residential work). The Committee, accordingly, notes that these amendments restrict young persons under 15 years who are working as independent contractors from working in hazardous workplaces or doing hazardous work, and persons under 16 from engaging in night work. The Committee observes that these revisions do not ensure the protection of persons between the ages of 16 and 18 working as contractors from engaging in hazardous work, but notes the statement from Business New Zealand that when contractors between the ages of 16 and 18 are working on an employer's premises, they are subject to the same safety and health constraints that apply to the employer's own employees. The Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 3(d) of the Convention, all persons under the age of 18, including self-employed workers, are entitled to be protected against types of work, which by their nature or the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to harm their health, safety and morals. Accordingly, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that all self-employed workers and independent contractors under the age of 18 years are protected from hazardous work. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Article 4(1). Determining the types of hazardous activities prohibited to persons under 18 years of age. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that children under 18 years cannot work in any restricted areas of licensed premises, such as bars, licensed restaurants or clubs. However, it also noted the Government's statement that, pursuant to sections 54–58 of the HSE Regulations, only employees under 15 years of age are prohibited from working in a number of high-hazard workplaces, such as in construction, logging and tree-felling operations, in work where goods are being manufactured and prepared for sale, in work with any machinery, lifting heavy loads or performing other tasks likely to be injurious to the employee's health, night work and driving or riding any tractor or heavy vehicles.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that research has found that children represent a significant proportion of farm injuries, with nearly one fifth of all injuries on farms occurring in children aged 15 and younger. The Government indicates that the majority of child fatalities occur on farms, most typically with regard to children aged 10–14 years riding in vehicles to shift stock, and that this was being addressed through a safety campaign on the subject of quad bikes. The Committee also notes that the DoL Report of 2010 identifies the construction, agriculture and hospitality industries as posing the most risk to young workers. The DoL Report of 2010 also identifies some types of work which are more dangerous to young persons: by volume, working in shops (including petrol stations and supermarkets) and working in restaurants, takeaway outlets and other eateries. These types of activities are the largest contributors to workplace injuries and account for 60 per cent of injuries to schoolchildren in regular part-time work. Noting that the DoL Report of 2010 identifies the sectors posing the most risk to young workers (construction, agriculture and hospitality), as well as the types of activities which are most injurious, the Committee reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 4(1) and (3) of the Convention, the types of work which, by their nature or the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children, shall be determined by national laws or regulations, and that this list shall be periodically examined and revised as necessary, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. Observing that the types of work most hazardous to young persons have been identified by the Government, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the determination of a list of types of hazardous work to be prohibited for all persons under 18 years of age, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Occupational safety and health service. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that the Department of Labour was continuing to investigate workplace practices relating to persons between 16 and 18 years of age engaged in hazardous work. The Committee requested information on the outcome of these investigations.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the monitoring of health and safety outcomes is becoming more systematic. The Government states that it is using the "serious injury outcome indicators" developed for the New Zealand Injury Prevention Strategy to monitor the performance in reducing serious injury for the population as a whole and for persons under 14. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that in May 2010 the Department of Labour launched an online toolkit entitled "My First Job" with a view to improving awareness on children's employment rights. The Government also indicates that in 2011, the Department of Labour released a new National Action Agenda, which is a strategic approach to reducing work-related injuries and fatalities that focuses on five sectors, including agriculture and construction.

While noting the programmatic measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes an absence of information regarding investigations carried out by the Department of Labour. Observing that children of 15 years and above are allowed to perform hazardous work, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of the investigations carried out by the Department of Labour on workplace practices related to persons between 15 and 18 years engaged in hazardous work.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that, during the period 2007–08, there were three prosecutions under the HSE Act and HSE Regulations regarding injuries sustained by young persons under 18 years at the place of employment.

The Committee notes the statement by Business New Zealand that the kind of work (and working conditions) about which the Committee is concerned are not found in New Zealand and that all work undertaken is subject to strict safety and health controls. It states that, until the age of 16, work can only be undertaken on a part-time or casual basis. Business New Zealand states that where serious workplace accidents occur, there has recently been a considerable increase in the penalties imposed on employers by the courts. However, the Committee notes the Government's statement that there have been no prosecutions in respect of the prohibition contained in the HSE Act or Regulations on engaging a young person under the age of 15 in hazardous work, despite the information in the DoL Report of 2010 that 17 per cent of students in part-time work under the age of 15 reported a work-related injury in the past year, some of which were serious injuries. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of workplace accidents and injuries involving all persons under 18 years of age, as well as the subsequent investigations and prosecutions, with its next report. It also requests the Government to supply statistics on the employment of children and young persons in hazardous work and extracts from the reports of inspection services as soon as this information becomes available. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by age and sex.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nicaragua

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes the comments of 30 August 2011 by the Trade Union Unification Confederation (CUS) and the Government's report.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted that according to a 2005 national study on child labour (ENTIA 2005), 239,220 children between 5 and 17 years of age were engaged in work in Nicaragua. Furthermore, the Committee noted with interest that according to the final evaluation report (October 2006) of the National Strategic Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and the Protection of Young Workers, child labour has fallen by around 6 per cent since 2000. It noted that a second National Strategic Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and the Protection of Young Workers (PEPETI 2007–16) was in preparation.

The Committee takes due note of the detailed information in the Government's report regarding the measures taken and results obtained in the implementation of PEPETI 2007–16. It notes with interest that numerous activities to raise awareness about the problems of child labour were carried out in 2009–10: an advertising spot was produced; leaflets on the rights of young workers were disseminated; information workshops on the worst forms of child labour were held and visits to schools and homes were organized in order to alert parents and children to the importance of education; and a literacy and school enrolment campaign was launched, targeting out-of-school children and young people. The Committee also takes due note of the results obtained under this programme, and notes that according to the Government's report, 11,128 at-risk children and young people, street children or children engaged in child labour, were integrated in to the education system in 2010. The Committee further notes that in December 2010 Nicaragua adopted a "roadmap" to make Nicaragua a country free of child labour and its worst forms, providing a national strategic framework for attaining the objectives laid down in "Decent work in the Americas: An agenda for the Hemisphere", namely the elimination of the worst forms of child labour by 2015 and the eradication of all forms of child labour by 2020, which was prepared with the support of ILO-IPEC. It notes that the strategic framework proposed by the "roadmap" covers six themes: poverty reduction, education, health, legal and institutional frameworks, awareness raising and social mobilization, and generation of knowledge and follow-up measures. The Committee observes, however, that according to UNICEF statistics for the years 2000–09, many children under 14 years of age are still involved in child labour (15 per cent). The Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to combat child labour and requests it to continue to provide information on the results obtained under PEPETI 2007–16 and under the "roadmap" to abolish child labour in all its forms by 2020. It also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the nature, extent and trends of the labour of children and young people under 14 years of age, in its next report. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and by age.

Article 2(1). Scope of application of the Convention. The Committee noted previously that Ministerial Agreement JCHG-008-05-07 on the implementation of Act No. 474 provides that the General Directorate of Labour Inspection shall be responsible for the implementation of Act No. 474 and the organization of a system of inspection for the prevention of child labour and its supervision in the formal and informal sectors. It also noted the Government's statement that in order to reinforce the labour inspectorate's work in the informal sector, and in particular to eliminate child labour, it had strengthened the inspection system through links with various governmental and non-governmental organizations.

The Committee notes that according to the CUS, the Ministry of Labour does not take adequate measures to ensure that effect is given to the provisions of the Convention in practice. The CUS also reports that children work in quarrying limestone at San Rafael del Sur, in coffee harvesting in the north of the country and in itinerant trading in the streets of Managua.

The Committee takes due note of the awareness-raising activities conducted by the Ministry of Labour to combat child labour. It also notes the statistics supplied in the Government's report on the inspection services' work supervising child labour legislation. It observes that in 2010, 624 inspection visits were carried out for this purpose, the number of such inspections having increased every year since 2007. The Government further indicates that 1,350 children and young people benefited in 2010–11 from an informal education strategy known as "educational bridges" under the programme "Coffee harvesting without child labour". The Committee further notes that following the adoption of Act No. 666 of 4 September 2008 on domestic work, which amends Title VIII, Chapter I, of the Labour Code, labour inspectors have the authority to visit homes that employ children and young persons as domestic workers. Thus, between 2009 and 2010, 577 children and young people were registered as domestic workers by the labour inspection services. Awareness-raising activities were also conducted to inform children and young persons working as domestic workers of their rights. While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government to strengthen and adapt the inspection services' capacities in the area of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that children working in limestone quarrying, coffee harvesting and itinerant trading likewise enjoy the protection established in the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government on the measures taken to improve the functioning of the education system. It observes in particular that primary and secondary education has been free since 2007 and that the Government has adopted a National Education Strategy (2010–15) and that it launched a national school enrolment campaign in 2010 which aims to make primary education accessible to all children. The Government's report also indicates that fast-track primary education (three years instead of six) is offered to children over 9 years of age in rural areas to facilitate their access to basic education. The Committee also notes the information in the Education for All: Global Monitoring Report 2010, "Reaching the marginalized", published by UNESCO the net primary enrolment ratio rose by 20 per cent over eight years, reaching 96 per cent in 2007. It nonetheless notes that 56 per cent of children enrolled in primary school drop out before reaching the last grade. The rate of children dropping out of the first year of primary education is also particularly high compared to the average rate of other countries in the Latin American and Caribbean region (26 per cent in Nicaragua as compared to the regional average of 4 per cent). The Committee further notes that pursuant to the 2006 Education Act, schooling is compulsory only to the age of 12. The Committee observes that the requirement set in Article 2(3) of the Convention is met to the extent that the minimum age of admission to employment or work (14 years) is not lower than the age of the end of compulsory schooling (11 years). It nonetheless takes the view that the age of admission to employment or work needs to be linked to the age at which compulsory education ends. Where the two ages do not coincide a number of problems may arise. If compulsory schooling ends before young people may lawfully work, there may be a period of enforced inactivity. The Committee therefore considers that it is desirable to ensure compulsory education up to the minimum age of admission to employment or work, in accordance with Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146). Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure compulsory schooling up to the minimum age of admission to employment or work of 14 years. It also requests the Government to continue to take steps to increase school attendance rates and reduce the school drop-out rates so as to prevent children under 14 years of age from working. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect.

Article 3(2). Determining types of hazardous work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Ministerial Agreement JCHG-08-06-10 of 19 August 2010, which replaces the list of hazardous jobs approved by Ministerial Agreement VGC-AM-0020-10-06 of 14 November 2006. It notes that under section 1 of the Agreement, hazardous work is prohibited for children and young persons under 18 years of age and that section 6 gives a detailed list of the types of work so defined. It notes that section 6 defines 36 types of different tasks prohibited for persons under 18 years of age, including a working day of over six hours (section 6(F)(3)), night work (section 6(F)(4)), work that interferes with school activities (section 6(F)(8)) and various hazardous jobs in agriculture. The Committee also notes that according to the Government, a series of activities have been developed in ten or so cities in Nicaragua to promote and publicize the new list of hazardous jobs.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (d). 1. Hazardous work in agriculture. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the adoption of Ministerial Agreement JCHG-08-06-10 of 19 August 2010, replacing the list of hazardous jobs approved by Ministerial Agreement VGC-AM-0020-10-06 of 14 November 2006. It notes with interest that the list sets out types of hazardous work carried on in the agricultural sector, such as tasks involving the use or handling of heavy machinery or tasks involving exposure to chemicals. The Committee also notes the statistics sent in the Government's report which show that the number of inspection visits carried out in the agricultural sector by the inspectorate responsible for child labour increased from 127 in 2009 to 163 in 2010. It also notes the statistics of the number of violations recorded and the penalties imposed and observes that between 2010 and the first quarter of 2011, 263 offences were reported, yet only four fines appear to have been imposed. The Committee further notes from information in a 2011 report on the worst forms of child labour in Nicaragua, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, that inspection visits for child labour in the agricultural sector are limited owing to a lack of resources and capacity. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that no children or young persons under 18 years of age employed in the agricultural sector are engaged in hazardous work, and to this end to take steps to build the capacity of the inspectorate responsible for child labour. It also requests the Government to provide information on the practical effect given to Ministerial Agreement JCHG-08-06-10 of 19 August 2010.

2. Domestic work by children. In its previous comments the Committee noted with satisfaction the adoption of Act No. 666 of 4 September 2008 on domestic work which protects young persons in domestic service by laying down recruitment and working conditions as well as penalties for abuse, violence or humiliation of these workers. The Act also requires the employer to notify such recruitment to the labour inspectorate and to promote and facilitate the education of these young domestic workers.

The Committee notes that according to the Government labour inspectors have the authority to visit homes in order to monitor the working conditions of children and young persons employed as domestic workers. It observes that following the adoption of Act No. 666, 577 children and young persons engaged in domestic work have been registered by the labour inspectorate and 11 children under 14 years of age have been withdrawn from such employment. The Committee nevertheless notes from the statistics supplied in the Government's report on child labour inspection in private households employing domestic workers, that the number of inspection visits fell from 76 to 13 between 2009 and 2010. The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to build the capacity of the inspectorate in charge of child labour so as to guarantee the protection laid down in Act No. 666 of 4 September 2008 for children and young persons employed in domestic service. It asks the Government to continue to provide information on the number of inspection visits carried out, the offences reported and the penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child labour in agriculture. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that according to the information sent in the Government's report, 2,626 children were withdrawn from labour and benefited from care in the departments of Jinotega and Matagalpa under the "Coffee harvesting without child labour" programme. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts and asks it to continue to provide information on the results obtained under the "Coffee harvesting without child labour" programme. Please also provide information on the measures taken to withdraw from labour children and young persons carrying on hazardous work in other agricultural sectors and on the measures taken to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Niger

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), of 31 August 2011, and the Government's reply to the ITUC's allegations, received on 14 November 2011.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee noted previously that the Labour Code does not apply to types of employment or work performed by children outside an enterprise, such as work performed by children on their own account. It noted the Government's indication that the broadening of the scope of application of the labour legislation to children engaged in an economic activity on their own account would require formal collaboration between the Ministries of the Civil Service, Labour, Mines, the Interior, Justice and Child Protection. In that respect, it reminded the Government that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and that it covers all types of employment or work, whether or not a contractual employment relationship exists.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a national survey of the informal economy will be organized by the National Statistical Institute (INS) in 2012 which will make it possible to measure the extent of the phenomenon of children working on their own account and will enable the labour administration to intervene more effectively in this field. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the INS survey of the informal economy is completed effectively in the very near future and that discussions on this matter are held between the Ministries concerned. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Article 2(3). Compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Ten-year Educational Development Programme (PDDE), drawn up in 2002, aimed at achieving an 80 per cent enrolment rate in primary school by 2012 and 84 per cent by 2015, with special emphasis on narrowing the gap between boys and girls.

However, the Committee noted that, in its concluding observations of 18 June 2009 (CRC/C/NER/CO/2, paragraph 66), the Committee on the Rights of the Child, while commending the major efforts made by Niger to expand access to primary education, as well as the increase in the access of girls to education, the building of new educational infrastructures in rural areas and the training programmes for teachers, expressed concern at the poor quality of the education system, the high drop-out rate and weak gender equity in education. The Committee also observed that the low rate of school attendance of children between 7 and 12 years of age shows that a significant number of children drop out of school well before attaining the minimum age for admission to employment and are on the labour market.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is continuing its ceaseless efforts in the field of education and that encouraging results have already been obtained in that respect. As a result, according to the Government, the growth in the gross school attendance rate in primary school, which was 57.1 per cent (47.7 per cent for girls and 66.7 per cent for boys) in 2006–07, rose to 67.8 per cent (58.6 per cent for girls and 77 per cent for boys) in 2008–09. However, the Committee notes that, according to the National Survey on Child Labour in Niger (ENTE) of 2009, 43.2 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 11 years and 62.5 per cent of children between the ages of 12 and 13 years in Niger are engaged in types of child labour to be abolished, at an age when they are supposed to be at school, as school attendance is compulsory up to 14 years. According to the ENTE, 22.8 per cent of children between the ages of 7 and 11 years and 23 per cent of children aged 12 and 13 years do not attend school because they consider that education is not useful, while 18.7 per cent of children between the ages of 7 and 11 years and 15 per cent of children aged 12 and 13 do not attend school because they assist with household work. Despite the efforts made by the Government, the Committee expresses its concern at the persistence of the low rates of school attendance. It observes that poverty is one of the primary causes of child labour and, when combined with a defective education system, prevents the development of the child. Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system and to take measures to enable children to attend compulsory basic education. It also requests the Government to continue taking measures to increase the school attendance rate and reduce the school drop-out rate, particularly for girls, with a view to preventing children under 14 years of age from working. The Committee further requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved.

Article 3(3). Authorization to employ young persons in hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Decree No. 67-126/MFP/T of 7 September 1967 authorizes the employment of young persons over 16 years of age in certain types of hazardous work. It also noted that health and safety committees have been established in enterprises and that they are responsible for training and awareness raising on safety. The Committee observed that these committees do not appear to provide adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. In this respect, the Government indicated that a distinction needs to be made between three categories of young persons: those whose activities are performed in the context of a formal school curriculum, namely students in technical and vocational training schools; those who work in the context of an apprenticeship contract, supervised by one or more professional adults with many years of experience in the trade; and those who are trained under the traditional system for learning a trade and whose superior/trainer has also been trained under this system of transmission of practical knowledge. With regard to the latter category, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the manner in which the health and safety committees ensure that the work performed by young persons does not jeopardize their health or safety.

Once again noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again recalls that, in addition to the requirement of training, Article 3(3) of the Convention allows employment or work by young persons as from the age of 16 years in hazardous types of work only on the condition that their health, safety and morals are fully protected. Observing that this matter has been raised on many occasions, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that enterprise safety and health committees ascertain that the conditions of work of young persons aged between 16 and 18 years do not jeopardize their health and safety. It once again requests the Government to provide information on this subject in its next report.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that studies were being conducted in the country, including the ENTE undertaken by the INS in collaboration with ILO-IPEC and in partnership with a consortium of NGOs, and that the Government would provide the findings of the ENTE when they were published.

The Committee notes the allegations by the ITUC that 46 per cent of children of school age are engaged in work under arduous conditions and perform types of work which exceed their physical capacities. Children also frequently work with their families in rural areas and participate in work in fields, crushing cereals, tending animals, seeking firewood and water.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its reply to the ITUC's allegations that the rate of 46 per cent alleged by the ITUC is only an approximate figure.

However the Committee notes that, according to the findings of the ENTE, children who were economically active in 2009 represented 50.4 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 17 years and that the phenomenon of child labour is more significant in rural than in urban areas. It also shows that in Niger girls are much more engaged in work than boys. Furthermore, 83.4 per cent of the children aged between 5 and 17 years who are economically active, that is 1,604,236 children, are engaged in types of work to be abolished (i.e. all types of work that are prohibited by the Convention). Of these, 1,187,840 children are involved in hazardous types of work. In other words, nearly two out of three children (61.8 per cent) between the ages of 5 and 17 who are economically active perform their work under hazardous conditions, with the rate being 63.6 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 11 years and 57.9 per cent of children aged 12 and 13. The findings of the ENTE also indicate that children engaged in the types of work to be abolished mostly work in domestic service (65.5 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 11 years and 44.5 per cent of children aged 12 and 13), trade (16.7 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 11 years and 21.7 of children aged 12 and 13), agriculture (12.8 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 11 years and 18.3 per cent of children aged 12 and 13) and industry (3.8 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 11 years and 6.2 per cent of children aged 12 and 13). The Committee expresses its deep concern at the high number of children engaged in work in Niger who are below the minimum age for admission to employment and work, and that the significant proportion of these children who work under hazardous conditions. It strongly encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the situation with regard to child labour in the country and requests it to continue providing information in its next report on the application of the Convention in practice, including extracts from the reports of the labour inspection services indicating the number and nature of the contraventions reported and the penalties applied. It requests the Government to provide statistical data in its next report disaggregated by sex and age group, on the nature, extent and trends of child labour and work by young persons under the minimum age specified by the Government when ratifying the Convention.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 31 August 2011, and the Government's reply to the ITUC's allegations received on 14 November 2011.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery. 1. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the comments of the ITUC reporting the existence in the country of the internal trafficking of girls for domestic work, as well as the trafficking of boys for economic exploitation and of girls for sexual exploitation. It also noted that, according to the information obtained by the high-level fact-finding mission (the mission), which visited Niger from 10 to 20 January 2006 at the request of the Conference Committee in June 2005, "Niger is certainly a transit country since its geographical location makes it a hub for trade between North Africa and sub-Saharan Africa," and that "Niger is both a country of origin and a country of destination for human trafficking, including the trafficking of children." The Committee noted that, when examining the second periodic report submitted by Niger on 20 November 2008 (CRC/C/NER/2, paragraphs 433–437), the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) observed that the national survey on trafficking in persons showed that, of the 1,540 households surveyed, 5.8 per cent answered that a member of the household had been a victim of trafficking and 29.4 per cent answered affirmatively that there had been human trafficking in their locality/village/neighbourhood. The Committee noted the Government's indication that a National Plan to Combat Child Trafficking had been drawn up and approved. It also noted that a Bill for the prevention, repression and punishment of trafficking in Niger had been drafted by the Niger Association for the Defence of Human Rights, but that the Bill on trafficking had still not been adopted by Parliament, and that accordingly the legal void persisted in that respect.

The Committee notes that, according to a report on trafficking of persons of 2011 (the 2011 trafficking report), available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Government appears to have adopted Ordinance No. 2010-86 to combat the trafficking of persons in December 2010, which consists of comprehensive legislation prohibiting all forms of sale and trafficking and establishing sentences of imprisonment of between ten and 30 years in cases where the victim is a child. However, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Trafficking has still not been adopted. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations conducted, prosecutions and convictions obtained, and the penal sanctions applied. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of this Ordinance with its next report. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Trafficking as soon as possible.

2. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. The Committee noted previously the indication by the ITUC that children are forced to beg in West Africa, including Niger. For economic or religious reasons, many families entrust their children from the age of 5 or 6 years to a spiritual guide (marabout), with whom they live until they are 15 or 16 years of age. During this period, they are entirely under the responsibility of the marabout, who teaches them religion and, in return, requires them to carry out certain tasks, including begging. The Committee noted that the existence of begging for purely economic ends had been acknowledged by those interviewed by the mission, including the Government, and that, in this form of begging, children are especially vulnerable since their parents, even though they are concerned for the children's religious education, are unable to provide for their subsistence. The children are, therefore, left entirely dependent on the marabouts. The Committee expressed serious concern at the use of children for purely economic ends by certain marabouts, particularly since, according to the information gathered by the mission, this form of begging seemed to be very much on the increase.

The Committee noted previously that a National Observatory to Combat Begging had been set up. It also noted with interest that Circular No. 006/MJ/DAJ/S/AJS of 27 March 2006 of the Minister of Justice of Niger, addressed to the various judicial authorities, calls for sections 179, 181 and 182 of the Penal Code, which punish begging and any person, including the parents of minors under 18 years of age, who habitually engage in begging, who cause others to beg or who knowingly make a profit from begging, to be strictly applied through the prosecution, without leniency, of any persons engaging in begging or using children for begging for purely economic ends. In this respect, the Committee noted the Government's indications that there had been some cases of the arrest of marabouts presumed to use children for purely economic ends. However, the Government indicated that in general they are released for lack of legal proof of their guilt.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that Niger has undertaken awareness-raising campaigns with a view to changing attitudes with the support of NGOs and development partners, including UNICEF. However, the Committee notes with concern the Government's indication once again in its report that marabouts who have been arrested for using children for purely economic ends have been released for lack of legal proof of their guilt. The Committee, therefore, once again notes with regret that, even though the legislation is in conformity with the Convention on this matter, the phenomenon of child talibés remains a cause of serious concern in practice. The Committee once again reminds the Government that, under Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures have to be taken as a matter of urgency to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour, and that under Article 7(1) of the Convention, it is under the obligation to take all the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including the provision and application of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penal sanctions. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of marabouts who use children under 18 years of age for purely economic ends are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied to them. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to reinforce the capacities of law enforcement agencies. The Committee also requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent children under 18 years of age from becoming victims of forced or compulsory labour, such as begging, and to identify child talibés who are compelled to engage in begging, remove them from such situations and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration.

Clause (d). Hazardous types of work. Children working in mines and quarries. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 152 of Decree No. 67-126/MFP/T of 7 September 1967 prohibits the employment of children in underground work in mines. However, it noted that, according to the information gathered by the mission, work by children in hazardous types of work, particularly in mines and quarries, existed in informal locations, that young children accompany their parents to informal sites and that they "become involved in the chain of production, whether in gypsum mines or salt quarries, sometimes performing small tasks to facilitate their parents' work or, in some cases, tasks that are physically hazardous for more than eight hours a day, every day of the week, running the risk of accident or disease". The Committee noted with interest that the Minister of the Interior had issued a circular strictly prohibiting the employment of children in mines and quarries in the areas concerned, namely Tillabéri, Tahoua and Agadez, and that the Minister for Mining had received directives to take this prohibition into account in drawing up mining agreements.

However, the Committee noted the Government's indication that no conviction had yet been handed down in this respect. It further noted that the review and modification of the list of hazardous types of work were carried out at a workshop held in Ayorou on 2 and 3 July 2009. In this respect, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the list of hazardous types of work was drawn up under the responsibility of the Ministry of Labour, in collaboration with the technical ministries and the employers' and workers' organizations concerned.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the list of hazardous types of work has been reviewed and improved by the Ministry of Labour, in collaboration with the technical ministries and employers' and workers' organizations. The Government adds that it will provide the Office with a copy of this list when it has been adopted. Expressing the hope that the list of hazardous types of work will extend the protection afforded by the Convention to children working in mines in the informal sector who are obliged to engage in hazardous types of work, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of this list in the very near future. It therefore requests the Government to provide a copy of the amended list of hazardous types of work with its next report. It also urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure the effective application of the national legislation for the protection of children against underground work in mines.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication by the mission in its report that "the labour inspectorate, which plays a key role in combating child labour and forced labour, is severely lacking in both the human and material resources needed to perform its duties". The mission recommended that a labour inspection audit be carried out to ascertain the exact nature and extent of the needs of the labour inspectorate in Niger. The Committee noted the Government's indication that it was making every effort to ensure that the audit was carried out in the near future.

The Committee notes the allegations of the ITUC that the inadequacy of resources means that the labour inspection services are very ineffective and that no inspections on child labour were carried out in 2010.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in reply to the ITUC's allegations that the labour inspection services have lacked resources for a long time, but that the Government has made significant efforts in 2011 to provide them with sufficient resources, and that these efforts will continue so that they are able to discharge effectively the duties entrusted to them.

The Committee notes that, in its report provided to the Office under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Government once again agrees to the audit being carried out. However, it notes with concern that the audit has still not been undertaken. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take the necessary measures to reinforce and adapt the capacities of the labour inspection services so as to ensure better supervision of children under 18 years of age who are engaged in the worst forms of child labour, including the implementation of the mission's recommendation. It once again requests the Government to provide information in this respect in its next report.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. 1. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the mission report that "parents hesitate to send their children to school when they see that such education affords no guarantee of a job, whereas the Muslim religious schools at least train children to be good Muslims or even teachers of the Koran, which explains why such schools are on the increase in Niger". The Committee noted the mission's recommendation that the operation "of the education system needs to be improved to ensure access for all to high-standard education". With regard to Koranic schools, the Committee noted that, in the context of the Franco-Arab education support project, measures had been taken for the restructuring of these schools. The Committee also noted that the Ten-year Educational Development Programme (PDDE), drawn up in 2002, aims to achieve an 80 per cent enrolment rate in primary school by 2012 and 84 per cent by 2015, with special emphasis on narrowing the gap between girls and boys. The Committee however noted that, in its concluding observations of 18 June 2009, the CRC expressed concern at the poor quality of the education system, the high drop-out rate and the weak gender equity in education (CRC/C/NER/CO/2, paragraph 66).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that several actions have been taken to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, including their school attendance. In this respect, the Government indicates that programmes of action have resulted, among other outcomes, in the enrolment in school of 922 children, including 440 girls in Komabangou, with a view to preventing them from becoming engaged in the worst forms of child labour. It also notes the school enrolment of 1,273 children in M'Banga; the support for the recruitment of teachers for primary schools in M'Banga, Komabangou and 16 satellite villages; and the implementation of the support project for the school enrolment of children and young school drop-outs in the rural community of Makalondi.

However, the Committee notes that, according to the National Survey of Child Labour in Niger of 2009 (ENTE), only 39 per cent of girls between the ages of 7 and 17 years engaged in a type of work that is to be abolished attend school, compared with 47 per cent of boys. Furthermore, the proportion of boys between the ages of 7 and 11 years who attend school is 56 per cent, compared with 48 per cent for boys aged 12 and 13 years, and 24 per cent for the 14–17-year age group. Among girls, these proportions are respectively 46.4 per cent, 28 per cent and 13 per cent. The ENTE also indicates that, among children engaged in forms of work that are to be abolished, 57.2 per cent do not attend school. The failure to attend school is of greater concern among children between the ages of 14 and 17 years who are engaged in hazardous types of work, 80.9 per cent of whom do not attend school. With regard to school drop-outs, 21.4 per cent of children between the ages of 7 and 17 years engaged in types of work that are to be abolished have dropped out of school, out of which 36.5 per cent of children between the ages of 14 and 17 years are engaged in hazardous types of work. The Committee therefore expresses its deep concern at the school attendance rates and the school drop-out rates of children who are compelled to work. Accordingly, considering that education contributes to preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the operation of the educational system, taking into account the special situation of girls. In this respect, it also requests the Government to ensure an increase in school enrolment rates and a reduction in school drop-out rates, and to adopt other measures for the integration of Koranic schools into the national educational system. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved.

2. Raising awareness and educating the public about the problems of child labour and forced labour. The Committee noted previously the recommendation made by the mission in its report that specific measures should be taken “to raise awareness among Koranic teachers and parents to prevent the ‘instrumentalization’ of begging by certain marabouts”. The Committee noted the information provided by the Government concerning the awareness-raising and training activities undertaken among those involved in combating child labour, and particularly its worst forms, including political decision-makers, employers, community leaders and traditional chiefs, police officers, magistrates, current or potential working children, parents, teachers, students and the public in general with regard to the problem of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the awareness-raising campaigns have succeeded in raising the awareness of the actors concerned with regard to the danger represented by this phenomenon. The Government adds that it is continuing awareness-raising activities, including for the population in general, with a view to changing attitudes. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the awareness-raising activities undertaken for traditional chiefs, civil society and elected local officials, and on their impact in terms of the number of children who have been prevented from begging for purely economic ends by certain marabouts.

Clause (b). Necessary direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the results of the implementation of the ILO–IPEC project for the prevention and elimination of child labour in artisanal gold mining in West Africa. It also noted that the measures for the social integration of victims of the worst forms of child labour removed from gold mines are provided free of charge by national associations and NGOs, with the support of technical ministries and partners, such as UNICEF.

The Committee notes the ITUC’s allegations that the use of children in gold, salt and gypsum mines and other forms of extraction persists. The ITUC indicates that these children have to work under deplorable conditions, with inadequate ventilation, the risk of rock falls and a lack of light, and that they are exposed to the consumption of alcohol and drugs.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the ILO–IPEC project has come to an end in Niger. The Government adds that, despite this, the schools built in the context of the project continue to enrol a significant number of students. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of children who are, in practice, removed from artisanal gold mines and then rehabilitated and socially integrated, particularly in schools built for that purpose. Furthermore, noting that the ILO–IPEC project has come to an end, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue taking measures to remove children under 18 years of age from these mines and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Article 8. Regional cooperation. The Committee noted previously that, in addition to the multilateral cooperation agreement to combat child trafficking in West Africa, signed in July 2005, Niger also signed the Abuja Multilateral Cooperation Agreement in 2006 and a bilateral agreement for the establishment of a mixed frontier control brigade between Niger and Nigeria. Following the implementation of these various cooperation agreements to combat trafficking in children, Niger has established 30 vigilance committees and widespread joint mobile brigades on all national frontiers. The Government added that child victims of trafficking have been intercepted in frontier areas. However, the Committee noted with deep concern the Government’s indication that those presumed guilty had been released by the police for lack of legal proof.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that no new cases of trafficking of children have been recorded since 2009. However, according to the 2011 trafficking report, the Government assisted in the repatriation of 89 child victims of trafficking to Mali, Nigeria, Burkina Faso, Benin, Cameroon and Liberia, and the return to their villages from Niger. Recalling that under Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government is under the obligation to take all the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons involved in the trafficking of children are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed upon them, in the context of the agreements concluded with other signatory countries.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the ENTE had already been undertaken by the National Institute of Statistics and that the findings would be provided to the Office when they were published.

The Committee notes that, according to the findings of the ENTE, 83.4 per cent of economically active children between the ages of 5 and 17 years, or 1,604,236 children, are engaged in types of work that are to be abolished. Of these, 1,187,840 children are involved in hazardous types of work and, as a result, 74 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 17 years engaged in types of work that are to be abolished do so under hazardous conditions. The gender distribution of children engaged in hazardous types of work shows that girls (31.2 per cent) and boys (31.1 per cent) are involved almost in the same proportions. The Committee also observes that children in rural areas (36.6 per cent) are more exposed than those living in urban centres (18.2 per cent) and in Niamey (7.5 per cent). Expressing its deep concern at the situation of children under 18 years of age engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to renew its efforts to ensure the protection of children from these forms of labour in practice, and particularly from hazardous types of work. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nigeria

Minimum Age (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 123) (ratification: 1974)

The Committee notes with regret for the fourth consecutive year, that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee recalled that for a number of years, it had been requesting the Government to indicate measures taken to give effect to the Convention (Article 4(5)), under which the employer shall make available to the workers' representatives, at their request, lists of the persons who are employed in work underground and who are less than two years older than the minimum age specified by the Government which is 16 years. The lists should contain the dates of birth of persons aged between 16 and 18 years and the dates at which they were employed or worked underground in the undertaking for the first time.

The Committee noted that under section 62 of the Labour Act, every employer is required to keep a register of all young persons in his employment with particulars of their ages, the date of employment and the conditions and nature of their employment and to produce the register for inspection when required by an authorized labour officer. The Committee further noted that under section 91(1) of the same Act, "young person" means a person under the age of 18 years and "industrial undertaking" includes mines, quarries and other works for the extraction of minerals from the earth. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that section 62 of the Labour Act is amended so that such registers may also be made available to workers' representatives, at their request. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Oman

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (d). Hazardous work. Camel jockeys. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed concern for the health and safety of children under 18 years of age involved in camel racing. The Committee noted that the Regulations on holding and organizing camel races in the Sultanate of Oman (Camel Race Regulations), issued by the Oman Equestrian and Camel Federation on 7 August 2005, stated that no jockey under 18 years of age would be allowed to take part in camel races. However, it also noted that section 2 of these Regulations stated that this minimum age would be reached progressively starting from a minimum age of 14 years, over four years starting from the 2005–06 season. In this regard, the Committee expressed the firm hope that the targeted minimum age of 18 years would be reached in the 2009–10 season, and that this age limit would be strictly and effectively enforced.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that, pursuant to the Camel Race Regulations of 2005, children under 18 years of age are not allowed to participate in camel races. Moreover, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report that new regulations were adopted, by virtue of Order No. 7 of 2009, on 18 September 2009. The Government indicates that section 9 of Order No. 7 of 2009 specifies that no camel jockey under 18 shall participate in a camel race and that the jockey must show an identity card prior to the race. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report that the use of robot camel jockeys was approved on 17 September 2009. The Government indicates that all camel races have since adopted the use of robot jockeys. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the regulations issued by virtue of Order No. 7 of 2009, with its next report.

Article 4. Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that Omani law provides that juveniles under the age of 18 may not be employed in mines and quarries or in hazardous work. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that a list of hazardous occupations prohibited to persons under the age of 18 was being prepared, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee expressed the firm hope that this list would be adopted as soon as possible.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the Ministry of Manpower has prepared, in collaboration with the social partners and other competent bodies, a list of hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under the age of 18. The Government indicates that this list is currently being revised for submission to the competent bodies. Noting that the Government has been referring to the pending adoption of this list since 2006, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a list determining the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under the age of 18 is adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this list, once adopted.

Article 7(1). Penalties. The Committee previously noted that Decision No. 30-2002 of 8 August 2005, of the Oman Equestrian and Camel Federation states that any person who violates the Camel Race Regulations shall be convicted by the courts. It also noted the Government's statement that the relevant bodies would promulgate regulations and a statute on penalties with regard to the use of under-age racing before the 2009–10 season.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that sanctions imposed on persons who are in violation of the prohibition of persons under 18 participating in camel races consist of a warning as well as depriving a person found in violation from participating in all races for one year. The Government indicates that if a second offence is committed, the sanction shall be doubled.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Pakistan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. The Committee previously noted that a national Time-bound Programme (TBP) for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour 2008–16 had been drafted in consultation with the stakeholders. It also noted the implementation of several ILO–IPEC projects, including projects entitled “Activating media to combat worst forms of child labour 2006–09” and “Pakistan earthquake – Child labour response”, in addition to the expansion of the national project for the rehabilitation of child labourers. It requested the Government to provide information on the impact of these projects.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that the ILO–IPEC project entitled “Combating abusive child labour II” has been launched. The objective of this project is the elimination of child labour, and two districts have been selected to pilot the project. The main activities of the project include: (i) establishing the Federal Child Labour Unit, and Provincial Child Labour Units, to increase institutional capacity to monitor the implementation of the national child labour programme; (ii) the creation of provincial and district coordination committees on child labour; (iii) withdrawing and rehabilitating child labourers in the districts of implementation; and (iv) sensitizing the community to child labour issues. The Committee also noted the ILO–IPEC information that the project “Activating media to combat worst forms of child labour” has been extended until the end of 2010.

The Committee further noted the information from the ILO–IPEC Technical Progress Report (TPR) of 10 March 2010 for the project entitled “Pakistan earthquake: Child labour response project” that 3,626 children were enrolled in rehabilitation centres through the project, and 632 children received vocational training. This TPR also indicated that between September 2009 and March 2010, ten seminars on child labour were conducted in target union councils. Participants included workers, employers and target community members (particularly the family members of working children). Over 700 individuals participated in these seminars organized in 24 rehabilitation centres of seven union councils (Kaghan, Mohandri, Kewai, Balakot, Ghanool, Shohal Mazullah and Garhi Habib Ullah). The TPR indicated that the project has contributed substantially to sensitizing the local communities on child labour issues. The Committee takes due note of this information, and requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken pursuant to the “Combating abusive child labour II” project, the “Activating media to combat worst forms of child labour” project and the “Pakistan earthquake – Child labour response” project. It also requests the Government to provide information on the status of the implementation of the national TBP 2008–16. Finally, it requests the Government to provide information on the impact of these initiatives, including the number of children reached through these programmes.

Article 2(2). Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee previously noted that, at the time of ratification, Pakistan specified 14 years as the applicable minimum age. The Committee also noted that a draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009 had been elaborated and that pursuant to section 16(a) of this draft Act, the employment of a child who has not attained 14 years of age is prohibited.

The Committee noted an absence of information in the Government's report with regard to progress made towards the adoption of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009, which prohibits the employment of a child below 14 years of age, is adopted in the near future and to provide a copy once adopted.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory education. The Committee previously noted the information provided by the Government in its report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) of 19 March 2009 (CRC/C/PAK/3-4, paragraph 361) that three of the four provinces, Federally Administered Areas (Punjab, North-West Frontier Province and Sindh) and the Islamabad Capital Territory have compulsory primary education laws. It also noted that the Islamabad Capital Territory Compulsory Primary Education Ordinance 2001, and the Punjab Compulsory Primary Education Act 1994, provide that parents shall ensure that their children attend primary school until the completion of their primary education. However, the Committee observed that, due to the definitions of “primary education” and “child”, compulsory education could finish between the ages of 10–14. The Committee underlined the desirability of ensuring compulsory education up to the minimum age for employment, as provided under Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146), and encouraged the Government to take measures in that regard.

The Committee noted an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. However, the Committee noted that the CRC, in its concluding observation of 19 October 2009, expressed concern that not all provinces have a compulsory education law and, where this legislation exists, it is often not properly enforced. The CRC further expressed concern that nearly 7 million of the estimated 19 million primary school-age children are out of primary school and about 21 per cent drop out, many of them in the early grades (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 78). The Committee expressed its deep concern at the significant number of children under the minimum age who are not attending school. Considering that education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to provide free and compulsory education to all children up to the minimum age for employment (of 14 years), and to ensure that, in practice, children are attending school. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to increase school enrolment rates and reduce school drop-out rates, and on the results achieved.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that pursuant to sections 2, 3 and 7 of the Employment of Children Act of 1991, the employment of children under 14 is prohibited in a variety of occupations. Section 12 of the Employment of Children Rules of 1995 also provides for types of work that shall not be performed by children under 14. The Committee observed that these provisions do not comply with the provisions of Article 3(1) of the Convention which sets 18 years as the minimum age for admission to hazardous work. However, the Committee noted that section 16(c) of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009 prohibited the employment of persons under 18 in any of the occupations and processes listed in Parts I and II of the Schedule (containing four occupations and 39 processes). The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this draft legislation was adopted.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that the Road Transport Workers Ordinance prohibits the employment of persons under 18 in road transport work. The Committee also noted that the Shops and Establishments Ordinance prohibits the employment of persons under 18 in night work. However, noting an absence of information from the Government on the status of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention, this draft Act, which prohibits the employment of persons under 18 in hazardous types of work, is adopted in the near future.

Article 9(1) and Part III of the report form. Penalties and the labour inspectorate. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the practical application of the penalties provided for in section 14 of the Employment of Children Act 1991. It also requested the Government to indicate any measures adopted to strengthen the labour inspectorate, particularly in the informal sector.

The Committee noted an absence of information on these points in the Government's report. However, the Committee noted the information in a 2008 report on the worst forms of child labour in Pakistan, available on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, that enforcement of child labour legislation is weak due to the lack of inspectors assigned to child labour, lack of training and resources, in addition to corruption. This report also indicated that, while authorities cite employers for child labour violations, the penalties imposed are generally too minor to act as a deterrent. The Committee also noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 15 October 2009, expressed concern that the ineffectiveness of labour inspection machinery reduces the likelihood of investigations into reports of child labour, and hinders the prosecution, conviction or punishment of those responsible (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 88). The Committee expresses its concern at the lack of capacity of the labour inspectorate to effectively monitor the legislation giving effect to the Convention and therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspectorate in this regard, including through the allocation of additional resources. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who violate the provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young people detected by the labour inspectorate, the number of persons prosecuted, and the penalties imposed.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, according to the National Child Labour Survey conducted in 1996, of the 3.3 million children aged between 5-14 years who were economically active on a full-time basis, 46 per cent worked 35 hours per week, while 13 per cent worked for 56 hours or more per week. The Committee requested the Government to provide recent statistical data on the application of the Convention in practice.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that, pursuant to the "Combating abusive child labour II" project, a second national survey on child labour will be undertaken. The Committee also noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 15 October 2009, expressed concern that the prevalence of child labour is extremely high and has increased in recent years due to growing poverty (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 88). The Committee expresses its concern at the high number of working children under the minimum age in Pakistan and therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve this situation, including through continued cooperation with ILO-IPEC. It also requests the Government to provide, in its next report, information from the second national survey on child labour.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the Government's report and the communication of the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF) of 31 August 2010.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. 1. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) indicating that human trafficking is a serious problem in Pakistan, including the trafficking of children. The ITUC also stated that women and children reportedly arrive from various countries in the region, many to be bought and sold in shops and brothels and that, in some rural areas, children are sold into debt bondage. The Committee observed that section 370 of the Penal Code prohibits the sale and trafficking of persons for the purpose of slavery and that, pursuant to sections 2(f) and 3 of the Prevention and Control of Human Trafficking Ordinance of 2002 (PCHTO), human trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation, slavery or forced labour is prohibited. However, the Committee also observed that a legal review of the PCHTO (undertaken within the framework of combating child trafficking for labour and sexual exploitation (TICSA project)) concluded that the definition of “human trafficking” in the PCHTO focuses on interstate trafficking and ignores trafficking within Pakistan, which is prevalent in the country. In this regard, a tripartite regional workshop made recommendations to amend the legislation.

The Committee noted an absence of information in the Government’s report on any measures taken pursuant to the legal review. It noted the information in a report of 14 June 2010 on the trafficking of persons in Pakistan available on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (Trafficking Report) that the Government secured convictions of 385 persons under the PCHTO in 2009, a substantial increase from 2008. Nonetheless, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 19 October 2009, expressed concern that Pakistan remains a significant source, destination and transit country for children trafficked for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and forced and bonded labour. The CRC also expressed concern at the growing number of children trafficked internally (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 95). Furthermore, the Committee noted the statement in the Trafficking Report that the lack of comprehensive internal anti-trafficking laws has hindered law enforcement efforts. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that trafficking within the country of persons under 18 is effectively prohibited in national legislation. The Committee also requests the Government to redouble its efforts to combat and eliminate both internal and cross-border trafficking of persons under 18. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved, particularly the number of persons convicted and sentenced for cases involving victims under the age of 18.

2. Debt bondage. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC’s indication that Pakistan has several million bonded labourers, including a large number of children. Debt slavery and bonded labour are mostly reported in agriculture, construction (in particular in rural areas), brick kilns and the carpet-making sector. The Committee also noted that the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act (BLSA) 1992 abolished bonded labour, and states that no one shall make an advance under, or in pursuance of, the bonded labour system or other forms of forced labour. The Committee further noted the operation of several measures within the national policy and plan of action for the abolition of bonded labour and rehabilitation of freed bonded labourers (National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour), and requested the Government to take measures to ensure the effective implementation of this policy.

The Committee noted the information in the Trafficking Report that, while provincial police in Sindh province freed over 2,000 bonded labourers in 2009 from feudal landlords, few charges were filed against the employers. The Committee also noted that the CRC, in its concluding observation of 19 October 2009, expressed concern that, despite legislation prohibiting bonded labour and the National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour, bonded and forced labour continues to occur in many industries and the informal sector, affecting the poorest and most vulnerable children (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 88). The Committee also noted the information in the Trafficking Report that the largest human trafficking problem in Pakistan is bonded labour, concentrated in the Sindh and Punjab provinces, and affects over a million men, women and children. The trafficking report further indicated that Pakistani officials have yet to record a single conviction under the BLSA.

The Committee expressed its deep concern at the persistence of children working in bonded labour, and reminded the Government that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, it is obliged to take immediate measures to prohibit and eliminate this worst form of child labour. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to combat and eliminate this worst form of child labour, and to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of the National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour in this regard. It also urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure that perpetrators of bonded labour are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

3. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee previously noted that the National Service Ordinance of 1970 prescribes a minimum age of 18 for compulsory enlistment in the armed forces. The Committee noted, however, the Government’s indication that children aged 16 and above may begin training prior to regular service if they are willing. The Committee also noted that the CRC expressed its concern that, in spite of legislation prohibiting the involvement of children in hostilities, there were reports of children being recruited forcibly to participate in armed conflicts, especially in Afghanistan and in Jammu and Kashmir. The CRC also expressed its concern about madrasas (Islamic schools) being involved in recruiting children under 18 years of age, including forcibly, to participate in armed conflicts (CRC/C/15/Add.217, 27 October 2003, paragraphs 62, 64(c), 67 and 68). The Committee requested the Government to take immediate measures to combat and eliminate the compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict.

The Committee noted an absence of information on this point in the Government’s report. However, the Committee noted that the CRC, in its concluding observation of 19 October 2009 expressed deep concern at reports of madrasas being used for military training, as well as instances of recruitment of children to participate in armed conflict and terrorist activities (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 80). The CRC expressed grave concern with regard to reports of forced under-age recruitment and training of children by non-State actors for armed actions and terrorist activities, including suicide attacks, and at the lack of preventive measures, including awareness raising, and physical and psychological recovery for children affected by armed conflict, in particular those who were recruited. Recalling that the forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to bring an end in practice to the forced recruitment of persons under 18 years of age by armed groups. In this regard, it requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that article 11(3) of the Constitution states that “no child below the age of 14 years shall be engaged in any factory or mine or any other hazardous employment”. Section 12 of the Employment of Children Rules of 1995 also provides for types of work that shall not be performed by children under 14. The Committee also noted that sections 2 and 3 of the Employment of Children Act of 1991 provide that children under 14 years of age shall not be employed in the occupations listed in Parts I and II of the Schedule of the Act, containing a detailed list of hazardous types of work that children shall not perform.

The Committee noted the statement in the communication of the PWF that a large number of children in Pakistan are employed in hazardous work, particularly in the brick kiln, glass and leather industries, and in the informal sector. Referring to its comments made in 2009 under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Committee noted that a draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009 has been elaborated. Pursuant to section 16(c) of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009, the employment of persons under 18 in any of the occupations and processes listed in Parts I and II of the Schedule (containing four occupations and 39 processes) is prohibited. The Committee recalled that under Article 3(d) of the Convention, children under 18 shall not perform work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm their health, safety or morals. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in conformity with Article 3(d) of the Convention, the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act 2009, which prohibits the employment of persons under 18 in hazardous types of work, is adopted in the near future.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. 1. Bonded labour. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indication that while the BLSA prohibits bonded labour, it remains ineffective in practice. It also noted that District Vigilance Committees (DVCs) were constituted to monitor the implementation of the BLSA but that there were reports of serious corruption within these committees. The Government indicated that efforts were being made to implement the BLSA with an Anti-Corruption Strategy and that within the framework of the National Policy for the Abolition of Bonded Labour, training workshops had been organized for key district government officials and other stakeholders to enhance their capacity and to activate the DVCs.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that DVCs report to the District Magistrate any cases of bonded labour being used in workplaces, and that DVCs engage in information sharing to this end. The Committee also noted the Government's statement in its reply to the list of issues of the CRC of 1 September 2009 that the DVCs have not been functioning properly. The Government indicated that it is in the process of restructuring the DVCs to improve their effectiveness and organizing orientation sessions for committee members. The Government further stated that there remain problems in the enforcement of the BLSA (CRC/C/PAK/Q/3-4/Add.1, paragraph 65). The Committee also noted the information in the Trafficking Report that police lack personnel, training and equipment to confront landlords' armed guards when freeing bonded labourers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of DVCs and law enforcement officials responsible for the monitoring of bonded labour, to ensure the effective implementation of the BLSA. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

2. Labour inspection. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indications that the number of labour inspectors is insufficient, that they lack training and that they may be open to corruption. The ITUC added that inspections do not take place in undertakings employing less than ten employees, where most child labour occurs. The Committee also noted the PWF's statement that the Government should take more effective measures to monitor the use of child labour in the informal sector with the cooperation of the "Independent labour inspection machinery". The PWF indicated that the governments of the two largest provinces of the country, Sindh and Punjab, apply a policy of not inspecting a business for one year following its establishment and that inspectors may not enter a workplace without prior permission from, or notice to, the employer. The Committee further noted that, according to the technical progress report of March 2007 for the ILO-IPEC project entitled "Combating child labour in the carpet industry", the ILO's external monitoring system was in place in each district of Pakistan for the independent verification of the child labour situation. In the case of the carpet weaving industry, 4,865 monitoring visits had been made to 3,147 workplaces in the project areas.

The Committee noted the statement on the ILO-IPEC summary for the project entitled "Combating child labour in the carpet industry" that the external child labour monitoring system was a significant achievement as the labour inspection system does not extend to rural areas where most of the child labour in the carpet sector takes place. The Committee also noted the Government's statement in its report to the CRC of 19 March 2009 that the Ministry of Labour is working with the Asian Development Bank to devise a comprehensive labour inspection and monitoring mechanism, which will include child labour monitoring (CRC/C/PAK/3-4, paragraph 580). Nonetheless, the Committee noted the statement in a report on the worst forms of child labour in Pakistan available on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (WFCL report) that enforcement of child labour laws is weak due to the lack of inspectors assigned to child labour, lack of training and resources, corruption, and the exclusion of many small workplaces and informal family businesses from the inspectorate's jurisdiction. The Committee further noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 19 October 2009, expressed concern that the ineffectiveness of labour inspection machinery reduced the likelihood of investigations of reports of child labour (CRC/C/PAK/CO/3-4, paragraph 88). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspection system to enable the labour inspectors to monitor the effective implementation of the provisions giving effect to the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including measures to train labour inspectors and provide them with adequate human and financial resources. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the development of a comprehensive labour inspection mechanism and its impact on the monitoring of the worst forms of child labour.

Article 7(1). Penalties. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indication that persons found guilty of violating child labour legislation were rarely prosecuted and that when prosecution did occur, the fines imposed are usually insignificant. The Committee noted the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) indication that, although child labour is prohibited by national legislation, child labour and its worst forms are still widespread. The Committee recalled that by virtue of Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government must take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the application of dissuasive sanctions.

The Committee noted an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. However, the Committee noted the statement in the WFCL report that the penalties imposed on persons who violate child labour laws are generally too minor to act as a deterrent. The Committee expresses its serious concern at the ineffectiveness of penalties for violations of child labour legislation and, therefore, urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who violate the legal provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Child victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the Child Protection and Rehabilitation Bureau (CPRB) was responsible for housing returned camel jockeys from the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and for facilitating their reintegration within their families and communities. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking effectively withdrawn and rehabilitated by the CPRB or other rehabilitation shelters.

The Committee noted the Government's indication in its report to the CRC of 19 March 2009 that, through the programme to return and reintegrate under-age camel racers (implemented as a collaboration between the Government, UNICEF and the UAE), a total of 331 former camel jockeys have been repatriated and have been reunited with their families through the CPRB. The Government further indicated that various rehabilitation programmes have been initiated for the rehabilitation of these children and these services were also provided to 361 self-returned former camel jockeys (CRC/C/PAK/3-4, paragraph 677). However, the Committee noted the indication in the Trafficking Report that this collaboration with the UAE and UNICEF came to an end in 2009. The Trafficking Report also indicates that while the CPRB continued to provide services to victims of trafficking, governmental officials continued to lack adequate procedures and resources for proactively identifying victims of trafficking among vulnerable persons with whom they came into contact, especially child labourers, women and children in prostitution, and agricultural and brick kiln workers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to remove, rehabilitate and provide for the social integration of child victims of trafficking. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the procedures for identifying child victims of trafficking and to ensure that these children are referred to the appropriate services. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

2. Child bonded labourers. The Committee previously noted that the European Union and the ILO were assisting the Government in the setting up of 18 community education and action centres for combating exploitative child labour through prevention, withdrawal and rehabilitation of former child bonded labourers. The Committee also noted that the Government had established a “Fund for the education of working children and rehabilitation of freed bonded labourers”. The Committee further noted that the 2007 ILO project to promote the elimination of bonded labour in Pakistan (PEBLIP) aimed to provide social and economic assistance to the families that have been released from bondage to help them re-establish their lives.

The Committee noted the information in the Government’s report that the PEBLIB project completed its first phase in 2007. Through this project, the ILO has provided technical assistance to the Ministry of Labour, and helped in capacity building of governmental officials and the judiciary. The Government also indicated that a series of awareness-raising material on bonded labour have been published. The Committee also noted the information in the Government’s report that through the “Fund for the education of working children and rehabilitation of bonded labourers”, free legal aid services have been established in Lahore, Peshawar, Karachi and Quetta. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the impact of the abovementioned measures on removing children from bonded labour and on providing for their rehabilitation and social integration.

3. Children working in the carpet industry. The Committee previously noted the ITUC’s indication that 1.2 million children were reported to work in the carpet industry, which is a hazardous industry. It also noted that, according to a baseline survey on child labour in the carpet weaving industry in the province of Sindh, there are an estimated 33,735 carpet weaving children, out of which 24,023 are estimated to be below 14 years of age. The Committee further noted that the Pakistan Carpet Manufacturers’ and Exporters’ Association and ILO–IPEC launched a project to combat child labour in the carpet industry in 1998 and that 11,933 children had been withdrawn from carpet weaving and enrolled in non-formal education centres.

The Committee noted the ILO–IPEC information that Phase III of the “Combating child labour in the carpet industry” project began in 2007, and will be completed in 2011. The project will be implemented in the provinces of Punjab, Sindh and the North-West Frontier Province (NWFP), and aims to impact the lives of 50,000 children, 60 per cent of whom are carpet weavers. The Committee also noted the information in the WFCL report that the national project on rehabilitation of child labour, implemented by Pakistan Bait-ul-Mal (an autonomous body established by the Ministry of Social Welfare and Special Education) continues to withdraw children between the ages of 4 and 14 from several sectors, including carpet weaving. Nonetheless, the WFCL report also indicated that a significant number of children continue to work in carpet weaving, and that these children suffer eye and lung diseases due to unsafe working conditions. The Committee therefore requests the Government to strengthen its efforts for the removal, rehabilitation and social reintegration of children working in the carpet-weaving sector. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken within the framework of the “Combating child labour in the carpet industry – Phase III” and the “National project on rehabilitation of child labour” project and on the results achieved.

Clause (d). Reaching out to children at special risk. 1. Child bonded labourers in mines. The Committee previously noted that, according to the rapid assessment studies on bonded labour in different sectors in Pakistan, some miners ask their children as young as 10 years of age to work with them in mines to lighten the burden of peshgi (i.e. any advance whether in cash or in kind made to the labourer). In Punjab and in the NWFP, children are usually assigned the job of taking donkeys underground and bringing them out laden with coal. These children are particularly vulnerable to sexual abuse by miners.

The Committee noted the information in the Government’s report to the CRC of 19 March 2009 that an action programme is being implemented in the coal mines of Shangla, as part of the national Time-bound Programme (TBP) for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour 2008–16. The Committee also noted the information in the final technical progress report for the ILO–IPEC project entitled “Supporting the TBP on the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in Pakistan” of 14 September 2008 (FTPR) that in the context of initiatives in Shangla, 250 children received health screening, 250 children were provided with literacy and numeracy classes and 150 children received technical and vocational skills training. The FTPR also indicated that a district education plan that addressed the educational needs of child labourer was developed, printed and widely disseminated. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary effective and time-bound measures to eliminate child debt bondage in mines as a matter of urgency.

2. Children working in brick kilns. The Committee previously noted that nearly half of children aged 10–14 working in brick kilns work more than ten hours a day without any safeguards and that working in the kilns is a particularly hazardous occupation for children. It also noted that, according to the rapid assessment studies on bonded labour in different sectors in Pakistan of 2004, workers in the brick kiln sector were not aware of the general legislation that applies to bondage. The Committee further noted that an ILO–IPEC project in several sectors resulted in 3,315 children being withdrawn from hazardous work, including in the brick kiln industry. The Committee requested the Government to pursue its efforts to protect children engaged in the brick kiln sector from hazardous work.

The Committee noted the Government’s statement in its reply to the list of issues of the CRC of 1 September 2009 that most of the bonded labourers in Punjab are confined to brick kilns. The Government indicated in this report that it is working to register brick kiln workers and issue them with national identity cards to facilitate their access to benefits (CRC/C/PAK/Q/3-4/Add.1, paragraph 68). The Committee also noted that the project entitled “Combating child labour through education and training (Support to the TBP: Phase II)” gives priority to children working in six specific sectors, including boys and girls working in brick kilns. The Committee further noted the information in the WFCL report that the national project on rehabilitation of child labour continues to withdraw children in this industry. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to protect children under 18 engaged in the brick kiln sector from hazardous work and forced labour. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and on the results achieved.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted the Government’s participation in several regional initiatives to combat trafficking. These included the signing of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation’s convention on preventing and combating trafficking in women and children for prostitution in 2002 (which committed signatories to the development of a regional plan of action and the establishment of a regional task force against trafficking) and a Memorandum of Understanding with both Thailand and Afghanistan to promote bilateral cooperation, including on the issue of human trafficking. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on progress achieved through these initiatives.

The Committee noted the information from the International Organization for Migration (IOM) that it has been working with the Government to combat human trafficking and smuggling. The IOM is currently conducting a counter-trafficking programme to create 18 district taskforces to combat human trafficking in vulnerable districts throughout the country which will identify trafficking victims, create referral mechanisms for support to victims and build a network between stakeholders in the local government, law enforcement and civil society. The Committee also noted the IOM's indication that its office in Islamabad is supporting the establishment of a trilateral dialogue between Pakistan, Afghanistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran on migration management within South-West Asia, to serve as a forum for discussion on developing comprehensive and compatible national and subregional migration management strategies. Nonetheless, the Committee noted the information in the Trafficking Report that transnational trafficking in the region persists and that persons, including children, are trafficked between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan, and to Pakistan from Afghanistan and Azerbaijan for the purpose of forced labour and prostitution. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to strengthen its regional cooperation efforts and to continue its collaboration with the IOM to combat the trafficking of persons under 18 years of age. It also once again asks the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in the launching of a regional plan of action and regional task force against trafficking. It also asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the Memoranda of Understanding signed with Afghanistan and Thailand, as well as of any other bilateral agreements on the elimination of child trafficking.

Part V of the report form. Practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that accurate data on the extent of the worst forms of child labour, including bonded labour, is essential to develop effective programmes to eliminate these worst forms. It encouraged the Government to undertake a nationwide survey to determine the extent of child debt bondage and its characteristics.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that, pursuant to the "Combating abusive child labour II" project, a second national survey on child labour will be undertaken. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this national survey includes an examination of the worst forms of child labour, including bonded labour, trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation and hazardous work. It also requests the Government to provide information from this national survey, once completed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Panama

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report. It also notes the comments from the Trade Union Convergence (CS) of 25 August 2011 and from the General Autonomous Confederation of Workers of Panama (CGTP) of 26 August 2011, as well as of the Government's reply dated 7 November 2011.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed its concern at the increasing number of children who were working in Panama and strongly encouraged the Government to redouble its efforts to combat child labour.

The Committee notes the concerns expressed by the CS and the CGTP about the increase in the number of children working in the country during the past few years, a situation which they believe reflects the inadequacy of the measures taken by the Government to ensure the abolition of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's reply that, according to the findings of the child labour survey of 2010, the number of children and young persons aged between 15 and 17 years engaged in economic activity has been reduced by 29,065. According to the Government, this drop in numbers is linked to the strengthening of the labour inspection services, which has led to the recruitment of 116 additional labour inspectors and the increase of inspection visits concerning child labour. The Government also states that the Bill on the protection of children and young people was approved by the National Assembly on 27 October 2011 and is waiting to be approved by the President of the Republic. Furthermore, the Committee takes due note of the detailed information in the Government's report concerning the measures adopted to ensure the abolition of child labour. It also notes that the Government, through the Committee for the Eradication of Child Labour and the Protection of Young Workers (CETIPPAT) is pursuing a policy to eliminate child labour with a view to reaching the objectives set forth in the "Decent work in the Americas: An agenda for the Hemisphere", i.e. to eliminate the worst forms of child labour from now until 2015 and to eliminate child labour from now until 2020. It also takes due note of the establishment, in February 2010, of the National Directorate against Child Labour and Protection of Young Workers (DIRETIPPAT), technical secretariat of the CETIPPAT, responsible in particular for supporting the elaboration and follow-up to the National Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour (2007–11).

The Committee notes the statistics sent by the Government on the progress made by the DIRETIPPAT and notes with interest that 2,716 children were withdrawn from their work between 2010 and 2011. It also notes that the Government adopted the 2011–13 programme to implement the "roadmap to make Panama a country free from child labour" in March 2011. This programme is intended to be a planning tool to facilitate the elaboration of short and middle-term actions to prevent child labour and its worst forms. Its main areas of action are poverty reduction, education and health. The Committee also notes the Government's information on the results of the Government programme of direct action for the prevention and elimination of child labour, carried out in collaboration with the non-governmental organizations FUNDESPA, Casa Esperanza and Fundación Telefónica in the nine provinces of the country. It observes that more than 1,500 children and young people engaged in child labour benefited from this programme in 2011. Finally, the Committee notes the findings of the third national survey on child labour enclosed with the Government's report, which, in addition to indicating the reduction in the number of working children aged 5 to 17 years who are working (which has dropped from 89,767 to 60,702), shows that children and young people mainly work in the agricultural sector, forestry, fishing, hunting and as itinerant traders. The majority of these children work in rural areas and come from indigenous communities. Furthermore, girls are more affected by child labour (75 per cent of girls recorded as opposed to 25 per cent of boys). The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the Government to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and strongly encourages it to pursue its efforts. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the results obtained in this respect, particularly in the context of the National Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide additional statistical information on the number of children under 14 years of age engaged in an economic activity and the number of children and young people under 18 years of age who are involved in hazardous work.

Article 3(3). Authorization to employ young persons from the age of 16 years onwards in hazardous types of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, although section 118 of the Labour Code and section 510 of the Family Code prohibit young persons under 18 years of age from undertaking hazardous work, this prohibition does not apply to work performed by minors in training establishments when the work is approved by the competent authority and carried out under its supervision. The Committee thus observes that a young person of 14 years of age may be authorized to carry out hazardous work in the context of a training programme, which is not in conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the exception under section 118 of the Labour Code is only authorized in the context of teaching or a vocational training course and is not in the context of a labour contract. The Committee nevertheless reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(3) of the Convention, the competent authority may, after consultation with the organizations of the employers and workers concerned, authorize the employment or work of young persons from the age of 16 years onwards on condition that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the corresponding branch of activity. It notes that in no event can children under 16 years of age be authorized to carry out hazardous work. Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that only young persons of 16 years and over, having received adequate specific instruction or vocational training, are authorized to carry out hazardous work, in accordance with the conditions provided for under Article 3(3) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect in its next report.

Part III of the report form. Labour inspection. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the statistics contained in the Government's report concerning the visits carried out by the labour inspection services and the penalties imposed. It notes that 2,262 inspections were carried out between August 2009 and June 2011, and that the number of visits is increasing each year. During these visits, the inspectors identified 70 children working under the minimum age of admission to employment or labour, among which were 37 girls and 33 boys. The Government also indicates that the National Directorate of Labour Inspection Services has elaborated a new support programme component, which provides for an increase in the number of inspectors specialized in the monitoring of child labour, of which there are now 130. It also notes that, when violations are reported, the labour inspection services carry out joint visits with the DIRETIPPAT in order to ensure that care is taken of the children withdrawn from labour.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the Government's report. It also noted the comments of the National Federation of Public Employees and Public Service Enterprises Workers (FENASEP) of 5 October 2009 and the Government's reply thereto of 10 February 2010.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b) and Article 7(1). Using, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances, and penalties. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to establish penalties for the violation of the prohibition on using, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that section 176-A of the new Penal Code, as amended by Act No. 26 of 21 May 2008, punishes pimping by penalties of up to ten years' imprisonment when the victim is under 18 years. It further noted that the new Penal Code punishes child pornography (sections 180, 181, 183–185) and sexual tourism involving children (section 186). The Committee also noted the Government's information that the penalties for child pornography and sexual tourism involving minors have been increased. Finally, the Committee noted the Government's information that 53 cases concerning child pornography were investigated between 2006 and 2009. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information of the practical application of the above provisions of the new Penal Code and of Act No. 22 of 2007, including statistics on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations carried out, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Articles 5 and 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms and effective application of the Convention. Labour inspectorate. Following its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that labour inspections had increased remarkably during the period 2006–08 where 1,830 violations were detected by the labour inspectorate. However, of the 1,830 cases, only eight resulted in penalties being applied to the offenders, while 31 were pending before the judiciary. According to the Government, this situation showed a lack of coordination between the activities of the labour inspectorate and the judiciary. The Committee noted that while the number of violations detected by the labour inspectorate was quite high between 2006 and 2008 (1,830 cases), the number of cases in which penalties were applied was low (eight cases). The Committee reminded the Government that, by virtue of Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government shall take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions of the Convention, including through the provision and application of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penal sanctions. It requests the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement agencies, in order to ensure that the perpetrators are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Street children. The Committee noted the FENASEP's comment that, according to the newspaper La Prensa, in Chiriquí there was a network which trafficked children to make them beg. By September 2009, 28 child beggars were identified in the urban area of David. The Committee noted the Government's information that the National Office for Children and Young Persons (SENIAF) created the Office for assisting and protecting street children in situation of exploitation, which is in charge of developing programmes to assist these children. It further noted the Government's information that 52 children and adolescents were removed from the street in 2008 and 57 in 2009. In 2009, 24 of the children who were removed from the street in 2008 and 39 of the children who were removed from the street in 2009, were selected for admission to the scholarships provided by the Institute for Training and Better Use of Human Resources (IFARHU) and the Committee for the Eradication of Child Labour and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (CETIPPAT). Moreover, one family was included under the "Opportunities" conditional cash transfer programme, which was aimed at helping families in situations of extreme poverty by providing them with financial allowances subject to the condition that children of beneficiary families attend school. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to remove children from the streets and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration, and to continue to provide information on the number of children removed from the streets and given education pursuant to the implementation of programmes and projects such as the abovementioned ones.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Papua New Guinea

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 31 August 2011 and the Government's report.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National plan of action and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Government had developed a "White Paper on Decent Work and Poverty Alleviation" and a national action plan on decent work and poverty alleviation, which were presented at a national tripartite workshop on 23 March 2005 but upon which no consensus had been reached. The Committee had also noted the Government's information that Parliament adopted in 2004 the Informal Sector Control and Management Act, which allows for people to engage in informal businesses for their living.

The Committee notes the ITUC's observations that child labour occurs in rural areas, usually in subsistence agriculture, and in urban areas in street vending, tourism and entertainment.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that, following revisions to the "White Paper on Decent Work and Poverty Alleviation", the Government endorsed the National Decent Work Policy in May 2010. Furthermore, the Committee notes that Papua New Guinea is one of the 11 countries that are part of a 2008–12 ILO–IPEC Time-bound Programme entitled "Tackling child labour through education" (TACKLE project), which contributes to the fight against child labour through its action programmes, research studies, legislative reviews and promotional programmes. Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's information that, following the National Child Labour Forum of 26–28 July 2011, a draft National Plan of Action on Child Labour (NPA) has been formulated and is being circulated for inputs from all the relevant stakeholders. The draft NPA intends to address issues of legislation and policy, enforcement and monitoring, data and information on child labour, accessibility to education, social security, awareness-raising and advocacy, and networking and collaboration.

However, the Committee notes the Government's statement that the Informal Sector Control and Management Act, while in place, is not appropriately regulated by the relevant bodies, such as the Department of Community Development and other management bodies. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that statistics and data sourcing remains a major loophole in the country and that no concrete or reliable information can be used or seen as a guarantee of a true depiction of the national situation of child labour. The Committee strongly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts, within the framework of the National Decent Work Policy, the TACKLE project and the NPA, once adopted, to combat and progressively eliminate child labour in the country. In this regard, it requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the NPA is effectively adopted in the near future. It also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Informal Sector and Management Act is effectively regulated by the relevant bodies in order to monitor and combat child labour in the informal sector. It further requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the situation of working children in Papua New Guinea is made available, including information on the number of children working below the minimum age and the nature, scope and trends of their work.

Article 2(1). Minimum age for admission to employment. The Committee had previously noted that, at the time of ratification, the Government of Papua New Guinea had declared 16 years to be the minimum age for admission to employment or work within its territory. It had noted that, by virtue of sections 18 and 103(1) of the Employment Act, 1978, no person under the age of 16 years shall be employed. However, the Committee had noted that section 103(4) of the Employment Act provides that a child of 14 or 15 years may be employed during school hours if the employer is satisfied that the child is no longer attending school. The Committee had also noted that, by virtue of sections 6 and 7 of the Minimum Age (Sea) Act, 1972, the minimum age to perform work on board ships is 15 and 14 years, respectively. It had reminded the Government that, by virtue of Article 2(1) of the Convention, no one under the age specified upon ratification shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations has undertaken a review of the Employment Act and that, once reviewed and amended, this Act will cater to the minimum age requirement. In this regard, the Government indicates that the initial assessment of the Employment Act is currently being undertaken, which will set the foundation for the review of its provisions towards the end of 2011 and into 2012. The Government also indicates that the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), which Papua New Guinea is in the process of implementing, will provoke the amendment of the Minimum Age (Sea) Act, with particular focus on sections 6 and 7. Noting that the Government has been referring to the review of the Employment Act and the Minimum Age (Sea) Act for a number of years, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that the proposed amendments are adopted in the near future. In this regard, it expresses the hope that the amended provisions will be in conformity with Article 2(1) of the Convention.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory education. The Committee had previously noted that education is neither universal nor compulsory in Papua New Guinea, and that the law does not specify a legal age for entering school or an age at which children are permitted to leave school. It had noted that the Education Department has developed a ten-year National Education Plan for 2005–15 (NEP) to enable more children to be in school.

The Committee notes the Government's information that, given the fact that neither universal nor compulsory education is available in Papua New Guinea, it continues to make sure that a least a considerable number of school children complete basic education by increasing the number of secondary schools as well as technical and vocational training centres. In this regard, it notes the Government's information that, by 2011, several outcomes have been reached through the implementation of the NEP, such as the establishment of a sufficient number of schools and the improvement of retention rates and of the quality of education, and that other outcomes would be implemented by 2014. The Committee also notes that the TACKLE project aims to contribute to poverty reduction by providing equitable access to basic education and skills development to the most disadvantaged sections of society.

The Committee notes, however, the Government's indication that the major objective of the NEP with regard to basic education is to ensure that every 6-year-old child enters the Elementary Preparatory Grade by 2012 and completes three years of basic education, and that relevant, affordable and quality education is provided to selected grade 8 through grade 10 graduates. The Committee therefore observes that the NEP seems to only intend to make basic education compulsory until the age of 9. Moreover, the Committee notes that according to the ITUC, the gross primary enrolment rate is 55.2 per cent, only 68 per cent of these children remain at school at the age of 10, and less than 20 per cent of the country's children attend secondary school. Furthermore, in its concluding observations of 30 July 2010, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern about traditional attitudes that constitute obstacles to girls' education and that the completion rate for girls is much lower than for boys. The CEDAW was also concerned that Papua New Guinea has not met its national targets for universal education and gender equality of the Millennium Development Goals (CEDAW/C/PNG/CO/3, paragraph 37). According to the UNESCO Education for All Global Monitoring Report of 2010, Papua New Guinea has a long way to go in order to achieve gender parity in primary education. Consequently, the Committee observes with concern that there remain a significant number of children under the minimum age of admission to work who are not attending school and, in this regard, it reminds the Government that it considers it desirable to ensure compulsory education up to the minimum age for employment, as provided under Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146). Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary measures, particularly within the framework of the NEP, to provide for compulsory education for boys and girls up to the minimum age of admission to employment of 16 years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the national legislation does not contain a determination of the types of hazardous work.

In this regard, the Committee notes the ITUC's information that while it is prohibited for children younger than 16 years of age to perform hazardous work, night work and work in mines, there is no list of hazardous occupations in Papua New Guinea. The Committee once again reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the types of hazardous work are determined either by the national legislation or the competent authority, in accordance with Article 3(2), of the Convention, and to provide information on the consultations held with organizations of employers and workers concerned on this subject.

Article 3(3). Admission to types of hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee had previously noted that certain provisions of the national legislation prohibit hazardous work for children under the age of 16 years.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the conditions of work for young people will be examined through the ongoing Employment Act review, which will be further deliberated by all national stakeholders in October and November 2011. It notes the Government's statement that the legislation relating to occupational safety and health is also going to be reviewed in a way to ensure that hazardous work does not affect the health and safety of young workers. The Committee expresses the strong hope that the review of the Employment Act and of the legislation pertaining to occupational safety and health will be completed as soon as possible. It also hopes that the amendments made to the legislation will include provisions requiring that young persons between 16 and 18 years of age who are authorized to perform hazardous types of work receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee had previously noted that section 103(2) of the Employment Act states that children between 11 and 16 years are admitted to employment, if the employer obtains a medical certificate of the child's fitness for that type of employment and written consent from their parent or guardian, provided that such employment: (a) is not prejudicial to attendance at school; and (b) is outside the hours prescribed for attendance at school. It had also noted that the Government was seeking ILO technical assistance in order to solve the inconsistency of the national legislation with Article 7 of the Convention, which specifies a minimum age of 13 to perform light work.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the review of the Employment Act will address the inconsistency of the section pertaining to the minimum age for light work with the Convention. The Committee expresses the hope that provisions of the Employment Act, once reviewed and amended, will ensure that the minimum age for light work is set at 13 and that children between the ages of 13 and 16 are only engaged in light work activities, in conformity with Article 7 of the Convention. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 9(3). Registers of employment. The Committee had previously noted that the Employment Act does not contain any provision requiring the employer to keep registers and documents of people under the age of 18 working for them. It had also noted that section 5 of the Minimum Age (Sea) Act provides for registers to be kept by people having command or charge of a vessel, which contains particulars such as the full name, date of birth and the terms and conditions of service of each person under 16 years of age employed on board the vessel. The Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention, employers are obliged to keep registers that shall contain the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified wherever possible, of people whom they employ or who work for them and who are less than 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government's information that this issue will be addressed within the review of the Employment Act and the Minimum Age (Sea) Act. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the obligation of keeping a register extends to all people below the age of 18 years and to provide information with regard to the progress made in ensuring that the Employment Act and Minimum Age (Sea) Act are in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention.

The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that, during its review of the Employment Act and of the Minimum Age (Sea) Act, due consideration is given to the Committee's detailed comments on the discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in the review of these Acts in its next report and invites the Government to consider seeking technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 31 August 2011 and the Government's report.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that, with respect to trafficking, the Criminal Code only provided protection to girls trafficked for the purpose of sexual exploitation. The Committee observed that there did not appear to be any similar provisions protecting boys or prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of labour exploitation. It noted the Government's indication that Papua New Guinea was embarking on a major legislative review and that issues such as gender and age would be at the forefront of this legislative review. The Committee further noted that women and children are trafficked within the country for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation and domestic servitude and that women and children from China, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand are trafficked to Papua New Guinea for forced prostitution and that men are trafficked to logging and mining camps for the purpose of forced labour. Moreover, the Committee noted that Government officials facilitate trafficking by accepting bribes to allow illegal migrants to enter the country or by ignoring victims forced into prostitution or labour.

The Committee notes the ITUC's observation that there are no legislative provisions prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of labour exploitation.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government confirms that there are no legislative provisions prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of labour exploitation. The Government indicates that the current amendments to the Employment Act will help address issues of trafficking of both boys and girls. The Committee observes, however, that the Government has been referring to a legislative review for a number of years. It recalls that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, the sale and trafficking of children for both labour and sexual exploitation, constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour, and that by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, all worst forms of child labour must be prohibited as a matter of urgency. In light of this situation, the Committee once again expresses its deep concern that comprehensive legislation prohibiting all forms of trafficking of both boys and girls has yet to be adopted. It also again expresses its concern regarding allegations of complicity by government officials in the trafficking of children. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to adopt legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of both boys and girls under 18, for the purposes of labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee also urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that perpetrators of human trafficking, and complicit government officials, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on progress made in this regard.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. The Committee previously noted that the relevant legislation does not specifically prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. It noted the Government's statement that the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations undertook, as part of the review process of the Employment Act, a scoping mission of the Employment Act, which concluded that where other legislation does not adequately address the worst forms of child labour, it is appropriate to fill these gaps through the Employment Act. The Committee also noted the Government's statement that the use and procuring of children for illicit activities is slowly rising.

The Committee notes the ITUC's allegation that the Dangerous Drugs Act does not specifically prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.

The Committee notes the Government's statement confirming that the current legislative reforms will prohibit the use, procuring and offering of children under the age of 18 for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. It observes, however, that the Government has been referring to these legislative reforms for a number of years. Recalling that, pursuant to Article 1 of the Convention, member States must take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that provisions prohibiting this worst form of child labour are adopted as soon as possible, within the framework of the Employment Act review. It once again requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard, and to provide a copy of the relevant legislation, once adopted.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of these types of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the legislation prohibits hazardous work, night work and work in mines for persons under 16 years of age. It also noted that apart from a definition of "heavy labour", the national legislation did not determine the types of hazardous work that were prohibited for children under 18 years of age. The Committee also noted the indication in the Government's report that the conditions of work for young people would be examined through the ongoing Employment Act review. It further noted the Government's statement that the review of the occupational health and safety related legislation has yet to begin, although the Government is in the process of consulting with the Government of Fiji for assistance in the process of the legislative review.

The Committee notes the ITUC's information that, while it is prohibited for children younger than 16 years of age to perform hazardous work, night work and work in mines, there is no list of hazardous occupations in Papua New Guinea.

The Committee notes the Government's information that section 96 of the Lukautim Pikinini Act, adopted in 2009, relates to provisions on harmful child labour and provides that a person who permits a child to be engaged in employment in conditions that: (a) are likely to be hazardous to the child; or (b) are harmful to the health or physical, mental, spiritual or social development of the child, is guilty of an offence. However, the Committee notes that there appear to be no provisions determining the types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, within the context of the ongoing legislative review, to ensure that provisions which determine the types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age are adopted in the near future, after consultation with the social partners. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made to this end and to provide a copy of the new legislation, once it has been adopted.

Article 5 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Monitoring mechanisms and the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that there were gaps and loopholes in the existing structures and monitoring mechanisms with regard to child trafficking, prostitution and children's involvement in illicit activities. The Committee also noted that, while the Department of Police and the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations are responsible for implementing and enforcing child labour laws, enforcement by these departments was poor due to a lack of resources and cultural acceptance of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's information that, during the Child Labour Forum of 26–28 July 2011, a draft National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour was elaborated. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, in the framework of the ILO–IPEC Time-bound Programme “Tackling child labour through education” (TACKLE project), many measures have been undertaken in order to combat child labour and its worst forms. Capacity-building workshops were conducted; three proposals for action programmes targeting the withdrawal and prevention of children in labour were discussed; child labour sensitization workshops were held at the University of Papua New Guinea; and child labour research was conducted in Port Moresby, with over 400 children participating. Moreover, the most recent study undertaken within the scope of the TACKLE project was conducted from December 2010 to February 2011 and pertained to street children and the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the national capital district of Papua New Guinea.

However, the Committee notes the Government's information that the incidence of worst forms of child labour continues to rise in the country. The Government also indicates that child prostitution, child exploitation, and the use of children for illicit activities, including the trafficking of drugs, are also increasing at a fast rate. The Committee notes the Government's information that several factors must be considered in the decision-making process to combat the worst forms of child labour, such as a greater collaboration between all stakeholders, the increase of enforcement and inspections in all industries, and awareness-raising in all media forms. The Committee, therefore, once again express its concern at the increasing incidence of the worst forms of child labour in the country, and at the weak monitoring mechanisms for the prevention of this phenomenon. It once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, including through the allocation of additional resources, to strengthen the capacity of the Department of Police and the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations in terms of monitoring and combating the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect and on the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to supply the results of the study on street children and commercial sexual exploitation of children and of the child labour research conducted in Port Moresby. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and by sex.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (e). Take account of the special situation of girls.
1. Child victims of prostitution. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the number of girls (some as young as 13) engaging in prostitution as a means of survival was a growing problem in both urban and rural areas. Moreover, the Committee also noted that the laws prohibiting prostitution were selectively or rarely enforced, even in cases involving children.

The Committee observes the Government's information that it is implementing a National Action Plan against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children 2006–11 (NPA–CSEC). However, the Government does not provide any other information on measures taken to ensure the enforcement of laws prohibiting prostitution and to protect children under 18 from this worst form of child labour. The Committee once again expresses its concern at the prevalence of the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Papua New Guinea and urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to persons under 18 to remove them from this worst form, and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of prostitution who have benefited from the implementation of the NPA–CSEC. It also once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that those responsible for the commercial sexual exploitation of children are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed.

2. “Adopted” children. The Committee previously noted that children who are informally adopted are sometimes trapped into situations characterized by long hours of work, lack of rest and leisure, lack of freedom of mobility, and a deprivation of the right to education and medical treatment. Young girls are particularly vulnerable to this and, when brought into a household as babysitters, their role is often transformed into overworked, unpaid or underpaid domestic servant. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that the practice of “adoption” is a cultural tradition in Papua New Guinea. The Committee observed that these adopted girls often fell prey to exploitation, as it is difficult to monitor their working conditions, and it requested the Government to provide information on measures taken to protect these children. In this regard, the Committee noted the statement in the Government's report that the work conducted by these adopted children will be taken into consideration during the Employment Act review.

The Committee notes the ITUC's observations that indebted families sometimes pay off their dues by sending children – usually girls – to their lenders for domestic servitude. The ITUC indicates that “adopted” children usually work long hours, lack freedom of mobility or medical treatment, and do not attend school.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Lukautim Pikinini Act, adopted in 2009, provides for the protection of children with special needs. A person who has a child with special needs in his care but who is unable to provide the services required for the upbringing of a child may enter into a Special Needs Agreement with the Family Support Service. Under these agreements, financial assistance may be provided. According to section 41 of the Lukautim Pikinini Act, the definition of a “child with special needs” includes children who have been orphaned, displaced or traumatized as a result of natural disasters, conflicts or separation, or children who are vulnerable to violence, abuse or exploitation. However, the Committee must express its concern at the exploitation of “adopted” children under 18 years of age who are compelled to work under conditions similar to bonded labour or under hazardous conditions. The Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure, in law and in practice, that “adopted” children under 18 years of age may not be exploited under conditions equivalent to bonded labour or under hazardous conditions, taking account of the special situation of girls. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on whether “adopted” children will be protected from exploitation and hazardous work within the framework of the Employment Act review. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of “adopted” children engaged in exploitative and hazardous work who have benefited from Special Needs Agreements. Finally, it requests the Government to provide a copy of the Lukautim Pikinini Act of 2009.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Paraguay

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the comments of 31 August 2011 by the National Union of Workers (CNT), and the Government’s report. It also notes the detailed discussion that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2011.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children and penalties. In its previous comments the Committee noted that according to a study on the trafficking of persons in Paraguay produced in 2005 by the NGO Grupo Luna Nueva, referred to in comments by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the trafficking of persons, including boys and girls, at both the international and domestic levels, is on the increase in the country. It noted with satisfaction that new provisions, sections 129b and 129c, introduced in the Penal Code by Act No. 3440/08, punish trafficking for the purposes of prostitution, slavery and forced labour by means of force, threats, deception or trickery, by prison sentences of up to 12 years. It also noted that the Legislative Committee of the Roundtable on Trafficking is reviewing a bill on the combating of trafficking, which would cover all relevant aspects, including prevention, investigation, penalties, assistance and the social rehabilitation of victims. The Committee noted, however, that according to the Attorney General’s Office, only 50 per cent of the cases of trafficking occurring between 2004 and 2008 have been brought before the judicial authorities, although action to combat trafficking in 2008 led to an increase in the number of cases reported that year. Furthermore, according to a 2009 report on the trafficking of persons in Paraguay, available on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, some government officials, including police, border guards and elected officials reportedly facilitated trafficking crimes by accepting payments from traffickers; other officials allegedly undermined investigations or alerted suspected traffickers of impending arrests. Despite the serious nature of these allegations, the Paraguayan authorities reportedly did little to investigate acts of trafficking-related corruption and there were no prosecutions related to official complicity in trafficking offences.

The Committee notes the draft bill to combat the trafficking of persons attached to the Government’s report. It notes with interest that the bill prohibits human trafficking, both inside the country and across international borders, for the purpose of sexual exploitation and forced labour, and punishes offenders of such crimes with prison terms ranging from ten to 25 years where the victim is a minor. It notes that the bill will shortly be submitted to the National Congress. Furthermore, the Government’s report indicates that according to information supplied by the Public Prosecutor’s special unit to combat the trafficking of persons and sexual exploitation, 101 cases were registered between 2009 and 2011, and proceedings are still under way in 86 of these. The Committee notes that more than 60 victims of trafficking under the age of 18 years have been identified in the context of these proceedings. It notes, however, that the Government’s report provides no information on the number of convictions for trafficking in these cases. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards expressed deep concern at the particularly weak application of the national legislation and at the allegations of complicity of government officials with traffickers. Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the elimination of the sale and trafficking of children and young persons under 18 years of age in practice, making sure that thorough investigations are undertaken and completed, and that persons committing such offences, including government officials suspected of complicity, are effectively prosecuted, and that effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are imposed on offenders. It requests the Government once again to provide information on the number of offences reported, investigations held, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed. Lastly, it asks the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress made in enacting the draft bill on trafficking.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution. The Committee noted previously that according to a communication from the ITUC, most child victims of prostitution in Paraguay are girls, but transsexual boys are also beginning to work in prostitution as from age 13 and are often victims of trafficking to Italy. It further noted that according to a study carried out by ILO-IPEC in June 2002 on the commercial sexual exploitation of girls and boys, and to the report of 9 December 2004 by the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (E/CN.4/2005/78/Add.1), two-thirds of sex workers are minors.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report to the effect that the Public Prosecutor's special unit to combat human trafficking and sexual exploitation registered 101 cases between 2009 and 2011 involving more than 90 girls and boys under 18 years of age who had fallen victim to commercial sexual exploitation. It nonetheless notes that the report supplies no information on the number of convictions obtained in these cases. The Committee notes that in its conclusions, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards shared the concern expressed, inter alia, by the Employer and Worker members at the large number of children under 18 years of age who are victims of commercial sexual exploitation in practice. Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of offences reported, investigations held, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed for breach of the provisions of the national law concerning the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. In its previous comments the Committee noted that the Government has taken several initiatives to prevent and punish the hiring of children for the purpose of drug trafficking, which included establishing in the police force special teams dealing with children, young persons and women. It nonetheless noted that the Government provided no information on the adoption of legislation to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, particularly drug production and trafficking.

The Committee notes with regret that, once again, the Government's report provides no information in this regard. It reminds the Government that according to Article 3(c) of the Convention, the use, procuring or offering of a person under 18 years of age for illicit activities and, in particular, for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in relevant international treaties, are among the worst forms of child labour and that, pursuant to Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures shall be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures as soon as possible to prohibit by law the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, particularly the production and trafficking of drugs. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect in its next report.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that according to comments from the ITUC, very few controls are carried out at borders, which makes it easy to transport children from Ciudad del Este or from Pedro Juan Caballero to Foz de Iguazú in Brazil, or from Encarnación and Puerto Falcón to Posadas and Clorinda in Argentina. The ITUC indicated that Argentine customs officers regularly apprehend minors who have crossed the border with Paraguay without being intercepted and either have no identity documents or have documents belonging to someone else. The ITUC also indicated that a number of Paraguayan officials from the Migration and Identification Department and the Immigration Department consider that they lack the authority to intervene in cases of trafficking and believe that the offence of human trafficking can be committed only in the country of destination of the victims. The ITUC also asserts that few cases of human trafficking are reported and even fewer instances of prosecution, due to the lack of awareness of the phenomenon among the public, and particularly among the police. Lastly, the ITUC asserted that the police lacks personnel specializing in investigations into the commercial sexual exploitation of children and that the law enforcement agencies do not clearly understand that children engaged in prostitution may be victims of crime and that, in practice, they are often treated as prostitutes and criminals. The Committee nonetheless noted that one of the objectives of the ILO-IPEC project "Combating the worst forms of child labour through horizontal cooperation in South America 2009–13" is to strengthen the labour inspectorate and step up action by other law enforcers such as prosecutors, judges and the labour courts.

The Committee notes the information submitted by the Government representative at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards to the effect that officials of the Ministry of the Interior have been trained to detect cases of commercial sexual exploitation, and to identify the offenders and the assistance to be provided to victims. The Government's report also indicates that in the context of the ILO-IPEC project "Combating the worst forms of child labour through horizontal cooperation in South America 2009–13", the Government of Paraguay has cooperated with Brazil to improve its telephone helpline system "FONOAYUDA" for reporting offences related to commercial sexual exploitation. Referring to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to build the capacity of law enforcement agencies, particularly the police, the judiciary and customs officials, to combat the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, and requests it to continue to provide information on the measures taken and the results obtained.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing children from becoming engaged in the worst forms of child labour, removing them therefrom and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee noted previously that a unit has been created within the National Committee for Childhood and Adolescence (SNNA) for the purpose of assisting child victims of trafficking pending their social integration. Furthermore, in order to prevent the trafficking of children and assist child victims of trafficking, SNNA regional offices have been created in the border departments of Alto Paraná, Ciudad del Este and Encarnación. The Committee also noted that two programmes have been launched with European Union support and in collaboration with ILO-IPEC. The first – Alas Abiertas – is aimed at eliminating the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children in the department of Encarnación and is carried out by the NGOs BECA and CECTEC. The second is aimed at eliminating the internal trafficking of children through the rehabilitation of child victims of trafficking and is implemented by the NGOs Luna Nueva and INECIP.

The Committee notes that at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Government representative stated that nationwide consultations have been conducted with a view to elaborating a second National Plan for the prevention of the commercial sexual exploitation of children and young persons. According to the Government's report, this document is currently being reviewed and will shortly be submitted for approval by the National Council for Children and Adolescents. The Government states that, in addition, the SNNA has renewed its campaign to combat human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents, with the support of ILO-IPEC. The Committee also takes due note of the information sent by the Government concerning the implementation of the BECA, CECTEC, Luna Nueva and INECIP programmes. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to withdraw child victims from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results obtained in the context of the National Plan to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. 1. Children working in domestic service – the “criadazgo” system. The Committee previously noted a communication from the ITUC indicating that according to a study carried out between 2000 and 2001, more than 38,000 children between the ages of 5 and 17 years worked in domestic service in the houses of others. The study also indicated that another group of children who are very vulnerable to exploitation – those engaged under the “criadazgo” system, live and work in the houses of others in exchange for food and board and education. The ITUC also indicated that a study conducted in 2002 by the Documentation and Studies Centre shows that nearly 60 per cent of children working in domestic service and children engaged under the “criadazgo” system are aged 13 years and under. According to the ITUC, in so far as these children do not control their conditions of employment, a majority of them work under conditions of forced labour. The Committee also noted that according to a study on child domestic work in urban and rural areas in Paraguay, carried out in 2005 in cooperation with ILO-IPEC, 11 per cent of children between 10 and 17 years of age worked in remunerated domestic service and while one third of these were employed as paid domestic workers, the other two-thirds were employed under the “criadazgo” system.

The Committee notes that at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Government representative stated that the Government was planning to take specific measures within the National Committee for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and the Protection of the Work of Young Persons (CONAETI) in order to protect children and adolescents working for others, and was committed to implementing strategies to remedy the use of children in domestic work. It nonetheless observes that the Government's report provides no information in this regard. It further notes that, in its conclusions, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards underlined the seriousness of the “criadazgo” system, deeming it a violation of the Convention. Consequently, the Committee once again urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children working as domestic servants or under the “criadazgo” system against the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on progress made in this regard, in terms of the number of children under 18 years of age who have been prevented from engagement in, or withdrawn from, the worst forms of child labour in the domestic work sector.

2. Street children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the CNT's assertion that many children work in the streets in order to meet the needs of their families. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government to the effect that the ABRAZO programme has benefited another 2,730 children in 2011, making a total of 4,530 children under 14 years of age to have benefited from the programme. It also notes with interest that, out of this total, more than 3,000 children have stopped working in the streets. The Government's report also indicates that a public policy proposal for social development (2010–20) was adopted in 2010, and that one of its priority objectives is to ensure that care is provided for 6,000 street children by 2013. Lastly, the Committee takes due note of the PAINAC programme, implemented by the SNNA, which aims to reduce the number of children and adolescents with no family links who live in the streets, and to set up emergency protection arrangements. According to the Government, the programme reached out to 463 children and young persons between 2009 and July 2011. While welcoming the measures adopted by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect street children engaged in the worst forms of child labour and to continue to provide information on results obtained under the ABRAZO and PAINAC programmes.

Furthermore, in accordance with the recommendation of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Peru

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the comments of 29 August 2011 from the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT) and the Government's report.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government to the effect that as part of the ILO–IPEC regional project on the elimination of child labour in Latin America (2006–10), a document on the policy and national strategy for the prevention and elimination of child labour (2011–21) has been elaborated and awaits adoption. The Committee further notes that the Government has taken a number of measures that contribute directly or indirectly to the eradication of child labour, such as the JUNTOS programme, which aims to promote schooling for children aged from 6 to 14 years from poor homes in rural areas by awarding cash benefits to families contingent on school attendance by the children. It takes due note of the information sent by the Government that 780,393 children and young people between the ages of 6 and 14 years benefited from this programme and that 98.9 per cent of these children have attended school regularly. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, the labour inspectorate visited 3,723 workplaces that employ children and young people and sanctioned 168 of them between January 2007 and March 2011. The Government's report further indicates that 10,066 children and young people were withdrawn from worst forms of child labour and hazardous work. Lastly, the Committee notes the study on the extent and characteristics of child labour (2007–08) attached to the Government's report on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182). It observes that according to the results of a survey on child labour conducted in 2007 which are reproduced in the abovementioned study, 33 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 11 years and 48.5 per cent of 12–13 year-olds carry on an economic activity. Of these children, 68.7 per cent of the 5–11 age group and 69.3 of the 12–13 age group are engaged in hazardous work.

While taking due note of the measures adopted by the Government to eliminate child labour, the Committee must express concern at the significant number of children under 14 years of age who are engaged in economic activity, particularly hazardous work. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to progressively eliminate child labour and requests it to send information on the measures adopted and results obtained through the implementation of the National Strategy for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2011–21). It also requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, including recent statistics on the employment of children and young persons, extracts from labour inspection reports showing the number and nature of offences reported and the penalties imposed.

Article 2(1). 1. Scope of application. The Committee notes that, according to the CUT, most children under the age of 14 who carry on an economic activity work in the informal economy, in particular as itinerant traders, shoe shiners, in markets or as domestic workers.

The Committee observes that according to sections 3 and 4 of the General Labour Inspection Act of 2006, labour inspectors are responsible for supervising child labour wherever it occurs including in private homes. The Committee notes from information in a 2011 report on the worst forms of child labour in Peru, available on the website of the High Commissioner for Refugees, 70 labour inspectors are specialized in the supervision of child labour and 100 inspectors received training in this area in 2010. The report nonetheless states that inspectors often lack the resources they need to carry out effective inspections. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspectorate so as to improve inspectors' capacity to identify instances of child labour in the informal sector and to guarantee the protection afforded by the Convention to children under 14 years of age carrying on an activity in the informal sector. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results obtained.

2. Minimum age of admission to employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 51(2) of the Children and Young Persons Code allows permission to work to be granted exceptionally to young persons aged 12 years and over. The Government indicated that permission for children aged from 12–14 to undertake paid work is at the discretion of the administrative authority, which seldom grants it. In view of the Government's statement that there are no regulations on light work but that in practice a significant number of children under the age of 14 years work, the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that no child under the age of 14 years may be allowed to work.

The Committee notes that, according the Government, a Bill to amend the Children and Young Persons Code is currently under examination by a Special Committee of the Congress of the Republic set up to revise the Children and Young Persons Code, and that it sets the minimum age for admission to employment or work at 15 years. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Bill to amend the Children and Young Persons Code will be adopted at the earliest possible date so as to guarantee that no child under the age of 14 years may be allowed to work. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age of admission to hazardous work and determining hazardous types of work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES of 20 April 2010 approving a detailed list of occupations and processes that are hazardous or harmful to the health and morals of young persons. It observes that the list sets out 29 types of work deemed to be hazardous by their nature or the conditions in which they are carried out, including work in mines and domestic work other than for the family. It observes that Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES was adopted pursuant to the 2001 Children and Young Persons Code and notes with satisfaction that section 3 of the Decree provides that the ban on hazardous work applies to children and young persons, defined as anyone under the age of 18 years pursuant to section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Code.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under section 57 of the 2001 Children and Young Persons Code, night work by young persons between 15 and 18 years of age may be permitted on an exceptional basis by a judge if it does not exceed four hours per night. The Government indicated that the Bill to amend the Children and Young Persons Code would amend section 57 of the Code so that exceptions to the ban on night work laid down in this provision may be authorized by a magistrate or else by the competent authority for young persons aged 16 years and over, instead of 15 years and over, on condition that the work does not exceed four hours per night during the period from 7.00 p.m. to 7.00 a.m.

The Committee notes that according to section B.8 of Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES of 20 April 2010 approving the list of hazardous types of work, night work by children and young persons between 7 p.m. and 7 a.m. which has not previously been authorized by a judge, is prohibited. It observes, however, that the draft revision of the Children and Young Persons Code has still not been adopted. It reminds the Government that according Article 3(3) of the Convention, the competent authority may, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, where such exist, authorize employment or work as from the age of 16 years on condition: (a) that their health, safety and morals are fully guaranteed; and (b) that they have received adequate specific training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Bill to amend the Children and Young Persons Code will be adopted as soon as possible so as to guarantee that only children and young persons over the age of 16 years may be authorized to carry on night work between 7 p.m. and 7 a.m. for a limited period of time and that the conditions laid down in Article 3(3) of the Convention are respected. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 3, clauses (a) and (b), and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children; forced labour; use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution; and penalties. In its previous comments the Committee noted that the Penal Code prohibits the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of labour exploitation or for sexual exploitation (section 153), and provides for prison sentences ranging from 12 to 25 years where the victim is under 18 years of age. It also noted the Penal Code prohibits and penalizes incitement to prostitution, procuring and sex tourism and provides for heavier penalties where the victim is under 18 years of age. The Committee further noted that two studies produced by ILO-IPEC in 2007, entitled “The demand side of the commercial sexual exploitation of children: a qualitative study in South America (Chile, Columbia, Paraguay and Peru)” and “Unforgivable: a study on the commercial sexual exploitation of children and young persons in Peru (Cajamarca, Cuzco, Iquitos and Lima)” that commercial sexual exploitation of children of both sexes exists in Peru, particularly in the bars and nightclubs of the old city centre of Lima. This worst form of child labour likewise exists in the tourist centres of Cuzco, Iquitos and Cajamarca.

The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government to the effect that the number of reported instances of children and young persons being trafficked for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation fell by 17 per cent between 2008 and 2009. It notes that the Ministry of the Interior set up a telephone hotline in 2010 for victims of trafficking and the calls are referred to the National Directorate for Criminal Investigations. The Government’s report indicates that between 2009 and June 2010, there were 212 instances of the sale and trafficking of children were reported and that 91 per cent of the victims were girls between 14 and 17 years of age. It notes, however, that the Government provides no information on the number of convictions and penalties handed down as a result of these reports. The Committee notes that according to the 2011 Trafficking in Persons Report-Peru, which is available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, boys and girls are victims of sex trafficking and forced labour in Peru. The department of Madre de Dios and the cities of Cuzco and Lima were identified as some of the main destinations for victims of commercial sexual exploitation. It also notes that forced child labour exists particularly in informal goldmines, among begging rings in urban areas and in cocaine production and transportation. The Committee further notes that according to information in the abovementioned report, although the Government has made efforts to combat the sale and trafficking of persons for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation, its efforts are inadequate in combating human trafficking for the purpose of forced labour. The report indicates that no convictions were recorded in 2010 despite an increase in the number of cases of forced labour in the country. Lastly, the Committee notes the allegations of the involvement of state officials referred to in the same report.

While noting the existence of legislative provisions that prohibit and punish the sale and trafficking of children and the use, procuring and offering of a child for the purposes of prostitution, the Committee expresses deep concern at the extent of the sale, trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children and young persons under 18 years of age. It accordingly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to secure the elimination of these worst forms of child labour in practice by ensuring that thorough investigations are conducted and completed and that persons committing such offences, including state officials suspected of complicity, are prosecuted, and that convictions are followed by effective and sufficiently dissuasive penalties. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of offences reported, investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed pursuant to the Penal Code, specifying whether the penalties applied under section 153 were for the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of sexual exploitation or forced labour.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. 1. Child labour in mines. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC's allegation that artisanal mines abandoned by large producers are being worked by families of Peruvian workers. Children work from the age of 5 and help their mothers to find rocks containing gold deposits. When they are older, they work with their fathers and sometimes dive into flooded shafts to extract ore. The children handle mercury, which is toxic, in extracting the gold from the rocks. They also transport ore outside the mines, carrying very heavy loads of stone and rock on their backs. The mines are located in unhealthy places and the children are therefore exposed to serious injury and harm. They breathe contaminated air and are exposed to soil and water contaminated with metals and chemicals. The mining industry is mostly concentrated in the regions of Madre de Dios, Puno, Ayacucho, Arequipa and La Libertad. The Committee also noted that according to an ILO-IPEC study of 2007 on girls in mining, both boys and girls are in practice engaged in hazardous types of work in small artisanal mines, with girls being frequently involved in extraction, transport and processing work. It also noted that according to information in a document on the National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2005–10) (PNPETI), an estimated 50,000 children work in artisanal mines in Peru.

The Committee takes due note of the adoption of the Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES of 20 April 2010 approving a detailed list of occupations and processes that are hazardous or harmful to the health and morals of young persons and prohibiting mine work for children and young persons under 18 years of age. It also notes General Directive No. 001-2011-MTPE/2/16 laying down general guidelines for the inspection of child labour. It further notes the information in the Government's report to the effect that 4,003 inspection orders were issued between January 2007 and April 2011 concerning child labour. It nonetheless observes that the Government's report does not specify whether such inspection applied to mine work. While noting the adoption of new legislative measures to prohibit mine work for children and young persons under the age of 18 years, the Committee must express its concern at the situation of the thousands of children engaged in hazardous work in mines in practice. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that these children enjoy in practice the protection laid down in national legislation, by strengthening the capacity of the labour inspectorate so as to secure the inspection of mining sites. It requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations undertaken, prosecutions, convictions and sanctions applied pursuant to Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES of 20 April 2010.

2. Child domestic work. The Committee previously noted that according to the ITUC, parents send their children to cities to work as domestic servants in order to help their families. As a rule, the children receive no pay, although the employer provides board and lodging. The ITUC reports that child servants work at least 12 hours a day and are at the disposal of their employers 24 hours a day. Many work with no rest and without so much as a day's leave. Very many children are victims of abuse and exploitation, such as insults and corporal punishment. There is also sexual abuse, albeit to a lesser extent. The ITUC also indicated that nationwide the number of domestic servants under the age of 18 years is estimated to be 110,000. The Committee also noted that a 2007 ILO-IPEC study on approaches to prevention and the vulnerability of children engaged in domestic work in families that live in rural and urban areas found that domestic work by children is widespread in the country.

The Committee notes the information from the Government to the effect that 3,641 domestic workers in Lima received training on their rights as workers in the course of 2010. Furthermore, it notes with interest that according to Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES of 20 April 2010 approving a detailed list of occupations and processes that are hazardous or harmful to the health and morals of young persons, domestic work by children and young persons under 18 years of age in the homes of others is treated as hazardous work. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to protect children engaged as domestic workers from hazardous work, and encourages it to take measures to strengthen the capacity of the child labour inspectorate to enforce Supreme Decree No. 003-2010-MIMDES of 20 April 2010 in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of inspection visits carried out, offences reported and penalties imposed, in its next report.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from such forms of labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a National Plan to Combat Forced Labour was produced in 2007 and applies to trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report indicating that a campaign for the prevention of human trafficking was launched in November 2009 and that in the course of it, the Ministry for Women and Social Development conducted a campaign entitled "More checks, fewer roads to exploitation", which aims to prevent the trafficking of children and young persons through the supervision of overland transport. The Government's report further indicates that the National Police Force has launched a plan of police operations to prevent and punish human trafficking, which involves the inspection of strategic locations. To this end, patrols are organized in cooperation with representatives of the Public Prosecutor and the local authorities in order to provide assistance to children and young persons in situations that put them at risk. According to the Government, children and young persons removed from these worst forms of child labour are placed in shelters run by the National Police Force, the Ministry for Women and Social Development and the judiciary. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to take immediate and effective measures to remove child victims from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of children removed from these worst forms of child labour following implementation of the plan of police operations organized by the National Police Force, together with information on the social integration measures afforded to such children.

2. Children working in mines. The Committee noted previously that according to the ITUC, in Peru there is no specific policy on the elimination of child labour in mines. It observed that the elimination of this worst form of child labour was one of the PNEPTI's objectives and asked the Government to provide information on the impact of measures adopted in this regard.

The Committee notes the information sent by the Government to the effect that a multisectoral working party has been created for the prevention and elimination of child labour in the informal mining sector and it consists of representatives of various Government ministries. The Committee also notes the results obtained in the course of implementing the PNEPTI and, in particular, that between 2006 and 2010, 10,066 children and young persons were withdrawn from hazardous work. The Committee also notes from information in a 2011 report on the worst forms of child labour, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, that inspections were carried out in the mining sector in 2010, during which 13 children were removed from work and channelled to the social services. The Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts to remove children carrying on hazardous work in mines from this worst form of child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of children removed from hazardous work in mines following inspection visits, together with information on the measures taken to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic workers. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, according to the ITUC, there are no programmes designed to help children working as domestic servants and that there are very few or no shelters that have the means to provide care for such children.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government to the effect that the Regional Directorate for Labour and Employment Promotion of Metropolitan Lima organized training workshops for domestic workers to alert them to their rights and the rights of children and young persons employed as domestic servants. It also notes that the Government has implemented various programmes to combat poverty ("Juntos", "Trabaja Peru" and "Jóvenes a la Obra"), which indirectly assist children and young persons working as domestic servants. It nonetheless notes that there appears to be no programme designed specifically to provide care for such children. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children working as domestic workers from the worst forms of child labour, and to provide information made in this regard in terms of the number of children under 18 years who have been prevented or removed from the worst forms of child labour in the domestic sector.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the 2007–08 ILO–IPEC study on the extent and characteristics of child labour, appended to the Government's report. It notes that according to the results of a child labour survey conducted in 2007 by the National Statistics Institute, the results of which are reproduced in the study, 3.3 million children aged between 5 and 17 years, i.e. nearly 42 per cent of children and young persons in that age group, are engaged in economic activity. Furthermore, the Committee notes with concern that 70 per cent of children and young persons who are economically active carry on hazardous work. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, including trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and hazardous work in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the nature and extent of, and trends in, these worst forms of child labour, indicating the number of children protected by the measures giving effect to the Convention, the number and nature of the offences reported, investigations undertaken, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed. To the extent possible all this information should be disaggregated by age and sex.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Philippines

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. Children working on their own account or in the informal economy. The Committee previously noted that the provisions regulating the minimum age of employment (section 139 of the Labour Code, section 4 of the Republic Act No. 9231, Amending R.A. 7610 and sections 1 and 4 of Order No. 18) did not appear to apply to persons working outside of a formal labour relationship. The Committee also noted the information from the Labour Force Survey of 2005 that there were approximately 155,000 self-employed working children aged 5–17. In this regard, it requested the Government to provide information on the manner in which self-employed children benefit from protection provided for in the Convention.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the Department of Labour and Employment issued a memorandum to all regional directors of the Department directing them to consistently conduct monitoring visits to informal sector activities in their region, in order to address child labour. The Committee also notes the information from ILO-IPEC on the Philippine Time-bound Programme (PTBP) phase II, that all regional offices implement a "Workers in the Informal Sector Augmentation Programme", and that 5 per cent of this programme's funding is earmarked for child labour amounting to 11.6 million Philippine pesos (PHP) (approximately US$265,476). The Committee further notes that a survey in four provinces entitled "Baseline Survey for the ILO-IPEC PTBP Phase 2" was completed in January 2011, which identified 9,350 children for withdrawal, prevention and protection from child labour through the PTBP. This survey indicates that in the province of Quezon, the majority of children identified were self-employed, while in the province of Masbate, 45 per cent of the children identified were self-employed. The survey also indicates that many children in the country are engaged in selling goods in the informal economy. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that children working in the informal economy or on a self-employed basis benefit from the protection of the Convention, including by taking specific measures to expand the reach and strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate to monitor child labour in the informal sector. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and on the results achieved.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that schooling is compulsory for children aged 6–12 years. The Committee also noted that the Government was implementing several measures to keep children in school and that school drop-out rates had decreased at both the elementary and secondary levels. However, it also noted the Government's indication in its report of 20 March 2009 to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC/C/PHL/3–4, paragraph 211) that serious concern remained about the increasing number of children who are not able to go to school, estimated at 4.2 million children.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that it is implementing various programmes to facilitate children's participation in, and completion of, school. The Government indicates that to keep students in the education system it implements initiatives called "Alternative Delivery Modes", which offer students an additional option to formal schooling, making schooling more inclusive and effective. These Alternative Delivery Modes include the Drop-out Reduction Programme and the Off-school Approach, designed to prevent drop outs and improve school completion. The Government also indicates that the Department of Education is taking several measures to improve the curriculum and integrate socially marginalized groups into the education system. Moreover, the Government indicates that it is implementing a project entitled "Tracking system for students at-risk for dropping out", which intends to establish country-wide indicators to track and address such at-risk students. In addition, the Committee notes the information from ILO-IPEC on the PTBP that the Department of Social Welfare and Development is implementing a Conditional Cash Transfer (CCT) programme, for which children's attendance in school is one of the conditions. The coverage of the CCT programme has recently been expanded from 1 million to 2.3 million beneficiaries.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that these initiatives contribute to increasing the number of children under the age of 15 who complete basic education. Nonetheless, the Committee must emphasize the necessity of linking the age of admission to employment (15 years) to the age limit for compulsory education (12 years). If compulsory schooling comes to an end before a young person is legally entitled to work, there may be an enforced period of inactivity. The Committee therefore considers it desirable to ensure that compulsory education is up to the minimum age for employment, as provided under Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146). Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling to 15 years. It also urges the Government to pursue its efforts to increase school enrolment and attendance rates among children under 15 years of age, and to continue to provide information on the results achieved in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that phase II of the PTBP for the years 2009–13, aiming to work towards a 75 per cent reduction in child labour, focused on agriculture, mining, fishing and domestic labour. However, it also noted, that according to the 2001 survey on children, out of 4 million economically active children aged 5–17 years, 246,000 children were between the ages of 5–9 years, and 1.9 million were between the ages 10–14 years. Moreover, the Committee noted that 2.3 million children were found to be working in the agricultural sector.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the Department of Labour and Employment, through its Bureau of Working Conditions, regularly conducts training for labour inspectors aimed at enhancing their capacity to enforce labour standards, including child labour laws and policies. The Government indicates that five such training sessions were held in 2010. The Government also indicates that, to reduce child labour in agriculture, it is implementing an Integrated Services for Migratory Sugar Workers Project, which aims to improve the socio-economic conditions of these workers and their families by, inter alia, facilitating access to social protection. The Government further indicates that the Philippine Labour and Employment Plan for 2011–16 recognizes that children remain vulnerable as they continue to work and engage in hazardous occupations. To address this, the Government has committed to take several measures to prevent and eliminate child labour, including by strengthening strategic partnerships, improving access of child labourers and their families to integrated services and establishing a child labour knowledge management system. Moreover, the Committee notes the information from ILO–IPEC on the PTBP phase II that the National Statistics Office is undertaking preparations for a National Survey on Working Children in 2011.

The Committee takes due note of the measures taken by the Government to combat child labour, but must once again express its concern at the high number of children under the age of 15 years working in the Philippines, particularly in the agricultural sector. It urges the Government to strengthen its efforts, within the framework of the PTBP phase II as well as through the abovementioned national measures and the labour inspectorate, to prevent and eliminate child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information from the National Survey on Working Children, once it is completed, particularly with regard to the number of children under the minimum age engaged in economic activity.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. 1. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years for labour and sexual exploitation is prohibited by several legislative provisions. However, the Committee noted the allegation of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that many children are easy targets for trafficking due to the common belief among parents that child domestic labour is the safest work for children. These children then find themselves in a situation of bonded labour where they are forced to endure exploitative work conditions because of the debts they have incurred. The ITUC further indicated that despite training to police and prosecutors on child trafficking, the number of successful prosecutions of trafficking to date was disappointing. Moreover, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 22 October 2009, expressed concern at the high number of women and children who continued to be trafficked from, through and within the country for purposes of sexual exploitation and labour, as well as at the low number of prosecutions and convictions of traffickers (CRC/C/PHL/CO/3-4, paragraph 78).

The Committee notes the information from the Government that the Department of Labour and Employment (DOLE) has issued Administrative Order No. 65 of 2011 to create the Steering Committee Against Trafficking in Persons to serve as an advisory body on policies and programmes to prevent labour-related trafficking of local and overseas Filipino Workers. This Steering Committee will seek to ensure compliance with the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act No. 9208 of 2003. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that it is imperative to foster and coordinate efforts between concerned government agencies, local governments and other partners, to ensure the effective prevention of the trafficking of children. In this regard, the Government indicates that it conducted orientation seminars for local officials throughout 2011 to raise awareness on the laws governing overseas recruitment and trafficking. The Government also indicates that it has proposed further orientations in regions where illegal recruitment and human trafficking are prevalent. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the DOLE has included, in the proposed Revised Rules and Regulations Governing Recruitment and Placement of Local Employment, a provision requiring recruitment and placement agencies to commit to not engaging in the recruitment or placement of children as provided by legislation prohibiting child trafficking.

The Committee takes due note of measures taken by the Government to combat trafficking in children but observes that this remains an issue of concern in practice. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children are carried out. It further requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed. Finally, it requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the provision of the Revised Rules and Regulations Governing Recruitment and Placement of Local Employment requiring agencies not to engage in the placement or recruitment of children, as prohibited by Acts Nos 9208 and 9231.

2. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to Act No. 7610, the compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years to serve in the Armed Forces of the Philippines (civilian units or other armed groups) is prohibited. However, the Committee noted the ITUC's comments of 30 August 2006, that numerous children under 18 years continued to take part in armed conflicts in the country: the New People's Army included 9,000 to 10,000 regular child soldiers, and children were reportedly being recruited in the armed opposition groups, in particular the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF). The Committee further noted the signature of an action plan by the MILF in July 2009, with concrete and time-bound steps to prevent the recruitment of children and promote their reintegration into civilian life. However, the Committee also noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 22 October 2009, expressed concern at the continued reports on the recruitment of children by armed groups to serve as combatants, spies, guards, cooks or medics (CRC/C/PHL/CO/3-4, paragraph 69). The CRC expressed further concern that children continued to join armed groups mainly due to poverty, indoctrination, manipulation, neglect or absence of opportunities, and at the lack of effective implementation of the legislation prohibiting the recruitment and use of children in hostilities, including no prosecutions for the recruitment or use of children in armed conflict (CRC/C/OPAC/CO/1 of 15 July 2008, paragraph 20).

The Committee notes the information in the Annual report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for children and armed conflict (SRSG) of 21 July 2011 that, pursuant to the action plan signed by the United Nations and the MILF in 2009, child protection efforts had been translated into concrete action by the MILF (A/HRC/18/38 paragraph 13). The Committee also notes the information on the website of the SRSG that the process of identifying child soldiers began in August 2010, and that by April 2011, approximately 600 children from the MILF had been registered by trained community members with the support of UNICEF. Efforts would be made to ensure that these children have access to basic services such as education, health and community programmes to prevent recruitment. The Committee further notes the information from the Annual report of the SRSG that, in April 2011, the SRSG met with high-level representatives of the Government Peace Panel of the National Democratic Front of the Philippines (NDFP–NPA) to support the negotiation and development of an action plan with the NDFP–NPA on the recruitment and use of children within its ranks. This report indicates that NDFP–NPA representatives agreed to continue the talks and to start negotiations on the provisions of an action plan (A/HRC/18/38, paragraph 46).

Lastly, the Committee notes that the SRSG has identified the Philippines as a country where the implementation of action plans has been delayed due to a lack of funding and where the reintegration of children formerly associated with armed forces and groups continues to be hampered by the lack of economic opportunities in already poor regions (A/HRC/18/38, paragraphs 18 and 19). The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that the practice of forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age in armed conflict is eliminated within the country. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. The Committee also requests the Government to pursue and support efforts to ensure that children under 18 years are released from the ranks of all armed groups within the country, and that these children are rehabilitated and reintegrated into their communities.

Article 3(d) and Article 4(1). Hazardous work and child domestic work. The Committee previously noted that children under 18 years of age are prohibited to perform the types of hazardous work listed in Department Order No. 4 of 1999 (section 3). However, it noted that, by virtue of section 4 of the same Order, persons aged 15–18 years may be allowed to engage in domestic or household service. In this regard, the Committee noted the ITUC's allegation that hundreds of thousands of children, mainly girls, worked as domestic workers in the Philippines and were subject to slavery-like practices. Particularly, these children were deprived of opportunities for education and isolated from their families, as 83 per cent of child domestic workers lived in their employers' home, and were given little time off. The ITUC underlined that the Domestic Workers' Bill (Batas Kasambahay), would be a vital step in addressing the abuse and exploitation of child domestic workers in the Philippines. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the Domestic Workers' Bill was under deliberation.

The Committee notes with interest the information in the Government's report that the Domestic Workers' Bill has been approved on its third and final reading in the Senate, and that this Bill sets the minimum age requirement for domestic workers at 18 years of age. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that through the ABK 2 Initiative Project (a project implemented by World Vision during 2007–11 to combat child labour through education), a total of 4,948 children in domestic labour were assisted. Lastly, the Committee notes that, within the framework of the second phase of the ILO–IPEC assisted Philippine Time-bound Programme (PTBP) (for the years 2009–13), targeted beneficiaries include child domestic workers. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure, in the very near future, the adoption of the Domestic Workers' Bill providing a minimum age of 18 years for domestic work. It also requests the Government to pursue its efforts, within the framework of the ABK 2 Initiative and the PTBP, to protect persons under 18 years from domestic work in the form of forced labour or hazardous domestic work, and to provide information on the results achieved.

Articles 5 and 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms and penalties. The Committee previously noted the establishment of the Inter-Agency Quick Action Team under the Sagip Batang Mangagagawa (SBM), an inter-agency mechanism to monitor and rescue children from the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the SBM Quick Action Teams conducted a total of 845 rescue operations and rescued a total of 2,980 child labourers from hazardous and exploitative work between 2003 and the first half of 2011. Moreover, the Government states that, through inspections, the DOLE removed two child labourers from a sugar cane farm in Batangas Province. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that charges have been filed against two persons with relation to the trafficking of 17 women and 1 minor in Cagayan de Oro City. The Government's report also contains information regarding the conviction of two persons for engaging a child in prostitution in two cases involving four children (both boys and girls). The Government indicates that one of the perpetrators was given a penalty of 10 to 12 years imprisonment for each offence. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that since 2003, the DOLE has permanently closed 26 establishments which had employed 113 children for prostitution or obscene performances. Taking due note of the significant number of children removed from the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that all persons found to be engaging such children in these worst forms are penalized with sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for all cases involving child trafficking, the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the engagement of children in hazardous activities.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Romania

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1975)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee noted previously that section 2 of the Labour Code stipulates that the Code applies only to persons employed under a work contract. It also noted that following instructions from the Government, the labour inspectorate supervises the working conditions only of persons hired under an individual work contract and has no authority as regards the work of the self-employed. The Committee recalled that the Convention applies not only to work performed under an employment contract, but to all types of employment or work, including self-employment.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that children involved in intolerable and hazardous work in the formal and informal sectors are identified, in various branches of activity, by professional bodies such as the labour inspectorate, social welfare and child protection, education, health and the police. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that Act No. 52/2011 of April 2011 regulates casual work done by day labourers in various sectors, including agriculture, hunting and fishing, cinematographic and audiovisual performances and productions, and cleaning and maintenance activities. The Government indicates that according to section 4(3) of the Act, no one under the age of 16 years may be engaged as a day labourer. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of children engaged in intolerable and hazardous work or in casual work, in the informal economy, who have been identified and withdrawn by the labour inspectorate and other competent professional bodies. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of Act No. 52/2011 with its next report.

Article 3(1) and (2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee noted previously that a National Guidance Committee had drafted a decision on work hazardous to children, and took note of the Government's statement that all those activities or types of work not covered by the draft were to be considered as light work able to be performed by young persons between 15 and 18 years of age. The Committee requested the Government to provide a copy of the decision on work hazardous for children as soon as it was adopted.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that Government Order No. 867/2009 on the prohibition of hazardous work for children has been adopted and been sent to Office. The Order bars children under 18 years of age from intolerable and hazardous work, which, by reason of its nature or the conditions in which it is performed, is liable to harm their safety, health, development or morals. The Committee also notes the detailed list of hazardous tasks appended to Order No. 867/2009, which sets out a full range of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under 18 years of age in a number of categories: work in which children are exposed to agents that are harmful to safety and health, such as physical, biological or chemical substances; work in which children are exposed to processes or activities that are harmful to safety and health, such as the handling of machinery, work with ferocious animals, construction work or work involving risk of accident; work in which children are exposed to conditions harmful to safety, health and morals, such as night work, underground work, work in cemeteries or work involving the production or sale of alcoholic beverages; and work preventing participation in some form of education.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee noted previously that Decision No. 161/2006 set forth the procedure for setting up a general register of employees and keeping it up to date.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government to the effect that Decision No. 161/2006 has been amended and supplemented by Government Order No. 37/2010. Under the Order, employers must transmit to the Territorial Labour Inspectorate information on the identity of each employee, the date of their employment, the duties/occupations they perform and the type of individual work contract. Furthermore, employers are required to transmit the employment register electronically to the Territorial Labour Inspectorate in the district where the headquarters or domicile of the employer is located, at the latest one working day before employment of the employee begins. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of Order No. 37/2010, together with a copy of the model employment register to be kept by employers pursuant to the Order.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information sent by the Government to the effect that during the period from 1 June 2009 to 31 December 2010, labour inspectors carried out 133,843 inspections to detect and combat undeclared work. As a result of these visits, 14,947 employers were penalized for employing undeclared labour, including 147 penalized for using the labour of young persons between 15 and 18 years of age without any legal form of employment. The labour inspectors thus identified 29,251 cases of persons working with no legal form of employment, including 196 young people between 15 and 18 years of age. Furthermore, the Government indicates that during the period under consideration, the Territorial Labour Inspectorates filed 53 complaints with the criminal prosecution authorities for breach of the statutory age of admission to employment. Of these, 40 gave rise to criminal investigations and for the other 13 criminal charges were not pressed. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts from reports by the inspection services, and the number and nature of offences involving children and young people. To the extent possible, the statistics provided should be disaggregated by age and sex.

Article 3 of the Convention. Clause (a). Worst forms of child labour. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced or compulsory labour. The Committee previously observed that Order No. 1/738 of 4 July 2004 prohibits child labour and the exploitation of children. It also observed that this regulation does not explicitly prohibit the forced or compulsory labour of children under 18 years. It noted that Ministerial Order No. 244 of 20/7/1430 (2009) on human trafficking, prohibits trafficking for the purpose of forced labour, but observed that this provision does not appear to prohibit forced labour that occurs independently of human trafficking. Referring to its comments made in its 2008 observation under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the Committee noted that migrant domestic workers are vulnerable to exploitation in their working conditions, such as the retention of their passports by their employers, which in turn deprives them of their freedom of movement to leave the country or change their employment. In this regard, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its concluding observations of 8 April 2008, expressed concern regarding the economic and sexual exploitation and ill-treatment of young migrant girls employed as domestic servants (CEDAW/C/SAU/CO/2, paragraph 23).

The Committee notes the Government's reference to section 61(1) of the Labour Code which prohibits employers from using workers to exact labour without the payment of wages. In this regard, the Committee once again refers to its comments made under Convention No. 29 in 2009, where it noted that section 239 of the Labour Code limits the penalties for this offence to monetary fines. Moreover, the Committee notes that section 7 of the Labour Code excludes domestic workers from its scope of application. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who commit offences with regard to the forced or compulsory labour of children not linked to trafficking are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied for cases involving the forced labour of children under the age of 18, particularly with regard to children engaged in domestic work.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution and pornography. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution or for pornographic performances was prohibited by the Holy Koran and the Prophet's Sunna, but observed that this did not appear to be contained in legislation. It also observed that Order No. 1/738 of 2004 prohibits child labour exploitation, but does not specifically prohibit the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years for prostitution and pornography. However, the Committee noted the Government's indication that draft regulations on child protection, containing provisions for the protection of children from maltreatment and neglect, including sexual, psychological and physical exploitation were being examined in the Majilis El Shoura. The Committee expressed the firm hope that these regulations would include provisions specifically prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

The Committee notes with concern an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that legislation specifically prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years for prostitution and for the production of pornography or pornographic performances is adopted in the near future.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Domestic and agricultural workers. The Committee previously noted that agricultural workers and domestic workers do not benefit from the protection laid down in the Labour Code.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the exclusion of agricultural workers and domestic workers from the provisions of the Labour Code does not justify or authorize exploitation of workers in these sectors. The Government states that the reason for such exclusions is the difficulty of applying the Labour Code to agricultural and domestic work. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the Ministerial Order No. 2839 of 1 October 2006 on hazardous types of work does not apply to the categories excluded by the Labour Code. However, the Government states that it pays attention to ensuring that children under the age of 18 avoid engaging in work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children. Recalling that the prohibition on hazardous work applies to persons under 18 years of age working in all sectors, including in domestic work and in agriculture, the Committee requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure that children working in these sectors do not engage in hazardous work. It requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

Articles 5 and 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms and penalties. 1. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted that sections 3 and 4 of Order No. 244 provide sufficiently dissuasive penalties for the offence of trafficking a person under 18. However, the Committee noted the information in the UNICEF report entitled "Preventing child trafficking in the Gulf countries, Yemen and Afghanistan" (UNICEF Trafficking Report), released in 2007, that a UNICEF rapid assessment survey estimated that tens of thousands of children, particularly boys from Yemen, are trafficked to Saudi Arabia for the purpose of labour exploitation each year. The Committee also noted that Saudi Arabia is a destination country for Nigerian, Pakistani, Afghan, Chadian and Sudanese children trafficked for the purpose of labour exploitation. The Committee requested information on the application of Order No. 244 in practice.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that, due to the recent promulgation of Order No. 244 in 2009, there have been no infringements detected of this law and no trials for perpetrators of human trafficking. It also notes the Government's statement that it intends to take measures to prosecute persons found in violation of child trafficking, regardless of their nationality. However, noting previous information that the trafficking of persons under 18 does occur in Saudi Arabia, the Committee expresses its deep concern regarding the lack of detection of cases of child trafficking by law enforcement bodies. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate measures to strengthen the relevant monitoring mechanisms to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders of child trafficking are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report, including the number of violations detected, prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied in connection with cases of trafficking of persons under 18 years of age.

2. Child begging. The Committee previously noted that the penalties provided in Order No. 1/738 for the offence of hiring children for the purpose of begging were not sufficiently effective and dissuasive.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that Order No. 1/738 does not impose sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties for the offence of hiring children for the purpose of begging. However, the Government states that using a child for the purpose of begging should be considered to be an act of human trafficking under Order No. 244. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that this issue is under examination by the competent bodies, due to the dangerous nature of the phenomenon. The Government states that a regulation is currently being examined which would guarantee the adoption of measures to ensure that persons who employ, import, or expose children under 18 to begging shall be prosecuted, and that sanctions shall be imposed. The Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 7(1), of the Convention, the Government shall take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the provision and application of penal sanctions. It accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, through the examination of this issue by the competent bodies, regulations are adopted containing sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties for persons who use, procure or offer children under 18 years for the purpose of begging. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the provisions adopted for this purpose with its next report, as well as information on prosecutions carried out in this regard and penalties imposed.

3. Employing children under 18 years as camel jockeys. The Committee previously noted that, according to the Royal Decree No. 13000 of 17 April 2002, a camel owner who employs a jockey under 18 years of age to participate in camel racing will not, in case of winning a race, receive the prize. While the Committee noted the Government's statement that a camel owner who employs a person under 18 is punished whether or not he wins the race, it observed that this did not appear to be specified in the text of the Royal Decree No. 13000. Moreover, the Committee observed that the penalties provided for in the Royal Decree No. 13000 did not appear to be sufficiently effective and dissuasive. It drew the Government's attention to its observation of 2006 made on the application by Qatar of Convention No. 182, in respect of the prohibition and elimination of the use of children under 18 years for camel racing as well as the use of robot jockeys.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that participants under 18 are prohibited from engaging in camel racing. The Government also states that measures are being taken so as to eliminate any violations of children's rights in this regard. The Government states that each jockey is required to furnish official documents attesting to their age (national ID, passport or residence permit), after which they will be issued a "jockey card", with a photo stamped with the particular festival's seal. The Government states that, before a race, the competent committees inspect the jockey card, matching the photo to the name on the ID. The Government also states that, pursuant to rules on animal care, robot jockeys are prohibited from races which are supervised by the National Guard. The Government also states that it endeavours to put a limit on any of the excesses which may occur in private races not supervised by the National Guard. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the instructions or regulations outlining the procedure for identification checks, the issuance of "jockey cards", and the verification of such cards prior to the race. It also requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken to ensure that children under the age of 18 are not engaged as camel jockeys in private races that are not supervised by the national guard. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the penalties imposed on persons found to be engaging children in camel racing, in addition to the preventive measures taken.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Measures taken to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and to provide direct assistance for their removal as well as for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Trafficking of children for labour or sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that there were reported cases of children trafficked from Bangladesh to the Middle East to work as camel jockeys, in addition to women under the age of 18 who were trafficked from Indonesia for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee noted the Government's information that numerous efforts were being deployed by the Government to eliminate the trafficking of children, including the adoption of new legislation on trafficking in persons. In this regard, the Committee requested a copy of Order No. 244.

The Committee notes that section 15 of Order No. 244 states that measures shall be adopted for victims of trafficking during investigations and prosecutions. These measures include informing the victim of his/her legal rights; referring the victim to a physician if he/she appears to be in need of medical or psychological care; admitting the victim to a medical, psychological and social rehabilitation centre if necessitated by his/her condition or age; admitting the victim to a specialized centre if he/she needs shelter; and providing police protection if necessary. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that, pursuant to Order No. 244, a committee to combat human trafficking crimes was established. The mandate of the committee to combat human trafficking crimes includes undertaking research, collecting information and undertaking informational campaigns as well as social and economic initiatives to prohibit and combat human trafficking. The Government further indicates that the committee to combat human trafficking crimes shall develop a policy which encourages the active search for victims, and the provision of training related to the identification of victims. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken to prevent the trafficking of children taken by the committee to combat human trafficking crimes, as well as on the policy developed to facilitate the identification of victims of trafficking. It further requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation or camel racing who have been identified and admitted to a shelter or a medical, psychological and social rehabilitation centre, pursuant to Order No. 244.

2. Street children and children engaged in begging. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the information in the UNICEF Trafficking Report that it is officially estimated that there are over 83,000 children selling small goods and begging on the streets of major cities in Saudi Arabia. It also noted that according to a UNICEF report entitled "Trafficking in children and child involvement in beggary in Saudi Arabia", the Ministry of Social Affairs established the Office for Combating Beggary, and that these offices employ social workers and inspectors, who cooperate with law enforcement agencies to undertake daily raids in areas where beggars are found, and arrest them. Once arrested, children under 15 are sent to the Shelter Centre in Jeddah. However, this UNICEF report indicated that the majority of persons involved in begging are foreign nationals, and if found to be undocumented or illegal residents, these children are deported within a period of two weeks from their arrest. The report also noted that there is no effort made to distinguish between trafficked and non-trafficked children. This UNICEF report further indicated that these children were not provided with psychological or legal assistance, and that there were few services for the rehabilitation and social integration of these children.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of Social Affairs has set up a Centre for Foreign Child Beggars in Mecca. The Government indicates that this Centre will welcome children who have been arrested by the competent bodies and provide them with social, health and psychological services until their parents can be identified by the competent authorities. Moreover, the Government indicates that work is underway to rent buildings for the establishment of similar centres in the governorates of Jeddah and Medina. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that several civil society institutions are represented in the Centre For Foreign Child Beggars, under the authority of the Charity Association, and that the Charity Association provides children with the necessary services until they have been reunited with their families or repatriated. The Committee further notes the Government's statement that it endeavours to distinguish between children who are trafficked and those that are not, in its handling of children engaged in begging. With regard to foreign children, the Government indicates that the police appoint investigators to carry out searches for their families. After their parents have been identified, the Government indicates that coordination is ensured with the repatriation units at the Passport Department to complete the procedures for their travel. The Government indicates that those children that cannot be identified are released and provided with guidance. Noting the significant number of children engaged in begging in Saudi Arabia, as well the number of children trafficked for this purpose, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to provide appropriate services to these children for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of children that have been provided services through the Centre For Foreign Child Beggars in Mecca, as well as those in Jeddah and Medina, once established. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of begging who have been provided with support for their repatriation and family reunification, as well as on the support provided to children whose parents are not identified.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Labour inspectorate and the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the information available in the UNICEF Trafficking Report that while trafficking of children remains a significant issue in Saudi Arabia, there is a severe lack of data on this topic.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it will take measures to complete available data on child trafficking, if the phenomenon is present in the country. It also notes the Government's statement that labour inspectors did not detect, during inspections, any cases which would require intervention and notification. The Committee once again expresses its concern at the lack of data available on the trafficking of children, and it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the worst forms of child labour, including child trafficking, the exploitation of children in commercial sexual exploitation and in begging, is made available. To the extent possible, all data provided should be disaggregated by sex and by age.

Senegal

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted that, according to a joint report by ILO-IPEC, UNICEF and the World Bank, entitled “Understanding Children’s Work and Youth Employment in Senegal”, of February 2010, in 2005 the number of children aged between 5 and 14 years who were economically active was estimated at more than 455,000, i.e. more than 15 per cent of children in this age group. The percentage is much higher in rural areas (21 per cent) than in urban areas (5 per cent). Agriculture is the sector that employs the largest number of children: 80 per cent of working children between the ages of 5 and 14 years are to be found in agriculture, and nearly 85 per cent of these are unpaid family workers. The report also indicates that child domestic labour is common and that nearly 22 per cent of children at work are involved in this activity in urban areas. Furthermore, children in the 5–14 age group employed as paid domestic servants have an average working week of 52 hours. The average working week for all economic activities engaged in by children aged from 5–14 years is 27 hours. The study also shows that more than 160,000 young persons aged between 15 and 17 years are compelled to engage in hazardous work.

The Committee notes that the Government once again states that it will send the Office information on any developments in the measures to combat child labour and particularly the impact of the programmes under way. However, the Committee observes with regret that the Government has, for a number of years, been stating that it will provide such information. Expressing deep concern at the situation of the many children under 15 years of age who work and at the number of hours devoted to this work, the Committee therefore urges the Government once again to strengthen its efforts to combat child labour, paying particular attention to children who are engaged in hazardous work including domestic work. It once again requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the number of children prevented from entering the labour market prematurely and the number of children withdrawn from work in the context of the action programmes under way.

Article 2(1). 1. Scope of application. In its previous comments the Committee noted that although the national legislation excludes all forms of self-employment by children, in practice poverty has facilitated the development of such activities among children (shoeshiners, street vendors), who engage in them illegally. It noted the allegations of 1 September 2008 submitted by the National Confederation of Workers of Senegal (CNTS) to the effect that even though children working on their own account can be regarded as traders, the minimum age is not respected in the informal sector. A number of activities in this area have been carried out by the Government in collaboration with ILO-IPEC with a view to withdrawing self-employed children from work.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that it affirms its political will to combat child labour, and to focus in particular on the case of children who work on their own account. The Government states that it will inform the Committee of any measures taken to this end and report on the results obtained. The Committee once again requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that children under the age of 15 years who work on their own account are withdrawn from this work. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end and on the results obtained in its next report.

2. Minimum age of admission to employment or work. The Committee noted previously that section L.145 of the Labour Code allows waivers from the minimum age of admission to employment by order of the Minister in charge of labour, taking account of local circumstances and the tasks to be performed. It noted the Government’s statement that the question of reform of the legislation is still under study.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the revision of the legislation is still under way. A study has begun to examine the consistency of domestic legislation with ILO fundamental standards, including those that concern child labour, and once it has been completed, a second phase will be devoted to amending the legislation in the light of the Convention’s requirements. The Government states, however, that time will be needed as the work cannot be done in the immediate future because the necessary financial resources are lacking.

The Committee reminds the Government that, according to Article 2(1) of the Convention, no one under the minimum age of admission to employment or work specified upon ratification of the Convention (15 years) shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, except for light work such as that authorized by Article 7 of the Convention. It also reminds the Government that Article 2(2) of the Convention allows the minimum age to be raised, but not to be lowered once it has been declared. Noting that the Government has been referring since 2006 to the revision of its legislation, the Committee once again urges it to take the necessary steps to ensure that the legislation is amended at the earliest possible date to bring it into line with the Convention by only allowing exceptions to the minimum age for admission to employment or work, such as the one provided for by section L.145 of the Labour Code, in the specific cases set out by the Convention.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments the Committee noted that section 1 of Order No. 3748/MFPTEOP/DTSS of 6 June 2003 on child labour provides that the minimum age for admission to hazardous work is 18 years. It noted, however, that according to Order No. 3750/MFPTEOP/DTSS of 6 June 2003 establishing the nature of hazardous tasks prohibited for children and young people (Order No. 3750), some tasks listed as hazardous may be carried out by persons under the age of 16. Thus, pursuant to section 7 of Order No. 3750, work in underground mining and quarrying is authorized for boys under the age of 16 years for light work such as sorting and loading ore, the handling and haulage of small wagons within the weight limits set by section 6 of the same Order, and the overseeing of handling of ventilation equipment. Furthermore, children of 16 years of age are allowed to perform the following tasks: work using circular saws provided that authorization in writing has been obtained from the labour inspector (section 14); the operation of vertical wheels, widgets and pulleys (section 15); operation of steam valves (section 18); work on mobile platforms (section 20); and the performance of perilous feats in public performances in theatres, cinemas, cafes, circuses and cabarets (section 21). The Committee reminded the Government that, according to Article 3(3) of the Convention, hazardous work, such as the tasks provided for in Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003, may be performed by young persons of over 16 years of age on the condition that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee also noted that the Government would undertake to amend all the provisions that are inconsistent with the Convention in the course of the current legislative reform, and to take account of the Committee's comments.

The Committee notes with regret the information provided by the Government to the effect that the legislative reform is still under way and that for financial reasons, there has been no noteworthy progress since the last report. Noting that the Government has been referring to the legislative reform since 2006, the Committee once again urges it to take the necessary steps to ensure that the legislation is amended at the earliest possible date so as to ensure that children under the age of 16 may not be employed in work in underground mining and quarrying. It also requests the Government once again to take the necessary measures in the context of the present legislative revision, to ensure that the conditions set in Article 3(3) of the Convention are fully guaranteed for young persons aged between 16 and 18 years engaged in the work provided for in Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard in its next report.

The Committee encourages the Government, in the course of revising the relevant legislation, to take account of the comments the Committee has been making on the discrepancies between the national legislation and the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this matter and invites it to seek technical assistance from the ILO if necessary.

The Committee notes the communication of 31 August 2011 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), and the Government's reply, dated 17 November 2011.

Articles 3, clause (a), and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children for economic exploitation; forced labour and penalties. Begging. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations on the second periodic report of Senegal of October 2006 (CRC/C/SEN/CO/2, paragraphs 60 and 61), expressed concern at the practices in Koranic schools run by marabouts who use talibé children on a large scale for economic gain by sending them to agricultural fields or to the streets for begging and other illicit work to earn money, thereby preventing them from having access to health, education and good living conditions. It noted the comments of the National Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Senegal (UNSA) indicating that the situation of street children is more worrying than ever because begging is on the rise, particularly in the country's large urban areas. It observed that, according to the joint report of November 2007 of ILO-IPEC, UNICEF and the World Bank entitled "Child begging in the Dakar region", in Dakar alone around 7,600 children are affected by the widespread phenomenon of begging. Talibés account for most of the child beggars (90 per cent). The Committee expressed its deep concern at the extent of the phenomenon of the use of talibé children for purely economic purposes in Senegal.

The Committee notes the comments of the ITUC indicating that the number of talibé children compelled to beg, consisting mainly of boys between the ages of 4 and 12 years, was estimated at 50,000 in 2010. The ITUC observes that most of these children live in isolated rural areas of Senegal or are victims of trafficking from neighbouring countries, including Mali and Guinea-Bissau. It emphasizes that these children in practice receive very little education and are extremely vulnerable, because they depend totally on their Koranic teacher or marabout. They live in unhealthy conditions and in poverty, and are the victims of physical and psychological abuse if they do not succeed in earning their financial quota through begging. With regard to the causes of the phenomenon, the ITUC explains that poverty alone cannot explain this form of exploitation, as the evidence tends to show that certain marabouts earn more through children begging than the income necessary to maintain their daaras (Koranic schools). The ITUC adds that there are no records of arrests, prosecutions or convictions of marabouts for compelling talibés to beg up to August 2010, when the Prime Minister announced the adoption of a Decree prohibiting begging in public places. Following this measure, seven Koranic teachers are reported to have been arrested and convicted to prison sentences under Act No. 02/2005 of 29 April 2005 to combat the trafficking of persons and similar practices and to protect victims. Nevertheless, these sentences are reported never to have been imposed. Indeed, the ITUC indicates that branch associations of Koranic teachers are reported to have condemned the application of Act No. 02/2005 and threatened to withdraw their support from the President in the elections in February 2012. In October 2010, the President therefore reversed the decision of the Government. Finally, the ITUC emphasizes the existence of ambiguity in the national legislation in Senegal in relation to the prohibition of begging, as section 245 of the Penal Code does not prohibit “the act of seeking alms on days, in places and under conditions established by religious traditions”.

The Committee notes that, in its reply to the ITUC’s allegations, the Government indicates that the Penal Code does not contain any ambiguity concerning the prohibition of begging in general, and particularly by children, and that Act No. 02/2005 is an integral part of the Penal Code. With regard to the application of the Act, the Government indicates that the issue of the publication of information on the prosecutions initiated will be examined with the Ministry of Justice with a view to determining its feasibility.

The Committee nevertheless notes with concern that, although section 3 of Act No. 02/2005 prohibits the organization, for economic gain, of begging by others or the employment, procuring or deceiving of someone with a view to causing that person to beg, or the exertion of pressure on a person to beg or to continue begging, section 245 of the Penal Code provides that “the act of seeking alms on days, in places and under conditions established by religious traditions does not constitute the act of begging”. It also observes that, from an initial reading of these two provisions in conjunction, it would appear that the act of organizing begging by talibé children cannot be criminalized as it does not constitute an act of begging according to section 245 of the Penal Code. The Committee further notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, in her report of 28 December 2010 submitted to the Human Rights Council following her mission to Senegal (A/HRC/16/57/Add.3), noted the inconsistency between section 3 of Act No. 02/2005 and section 245 of the Penal Code (paragraph 31). The Committee also notes that the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Family, in its concluding observations of 3 December 2010 (CMW/C/SEN/CO/1, paragraph 26), noted with concern that more than half of the children who are forced to beg in the Dakar region come from neighbouring countries and that the Government of Senegal has not taken any practical steps to end regional trafficking in children for the purpose of begging.

The Committee must once again express its deep concern at the large number of talibé children used for purely economic ends and the failure to give effect to Act No. 02/2005 in respect of Koranic teachers who make use of begging by talibé children for economic purposes, a situation which has led to the release of the seven marabouts convicted in 2010. The Committee reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures shall be taken as a matter of urgency to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour and that, in accordance with Article 7(1) of the Convention, all the necessary measures shall be taken to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including the provision and application of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penal sanctions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures, in law and practice, to ensure that persons engaged in the sale and trafficking of talibé children under 18 years of age for the purposes of economic exploitation, or who make use of these children for begging for purely economic purposes, are prosecuted effectively and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied to them. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to harmonize the national legislation so as to guarantee that the use of begging by talibé children for economic exploitation will be criminalized under section 245 of the Penal Code and under Act No. 02/2005. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this respect, and on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed on such persons.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Talibé children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the comments by UNSAS indicating that the measures taken in respect of talibé children were still inadequate. The Committee also noted that a partnership for the removal and reintegration of street children (PARRER) had been established in February 2007 and is made up of members of the Senegalese Administration, NGOs, the private sector, development partners, religious organizations, civil society and the media.

The Committee notes the ITUC’s comments indicating that the Government has adopted measures to promote a programme of modern daaras administered or regulated by the State. It further notes that the Government established the Inspectorate for daaras in 2008 to undertake the programme for the modernization of daaras and the integration of modern daaras into the public education system. It further notes that the Ministry of Education signed an agreement with PARRER for the development of a harmonized school programme for Koranic schools. This programme, financed by the PARRER, was launched in January 2011. Furthermore, at the beginning of the 2000s, the Government began to recruit specialized inspectors with the function of inspecting modern daaras.

In its reply to the ITUC’s comments, the Government indicates that it is engaged in improving the management and framework for the system of teaching in daaras. It adds that, within the framework of the Inspectorate of daaras, a number of actions are envisaged, particularly with a view to training Koranic teachers and talibés in the occupation of their choosing. It also plans to include certain actions in its strategy for the prevention of begging by children, such as the implementation of social protection measures in the areas of origin of migrant children, the establishment of programmes of conditional transfers for vulnerable families, support for the creation of income-generating activities for marabouts and the broadening of the teaching curriculum in Koranic schools with a view to facilitating the reintegration of young talibés into active life.

The Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur of 28 December 2010, the Care, Information and Counselling Centre for Children in Difficulties (the GINDDI Centre) in the Ministry of Education, has been responsible since 2003 for taking children off the streets and reintegrating them, and for providing psychological support and social assistance to girls and boys who are victims of trafficking (paragraph 68). Accordingly, in 2009, some 896 street children and child talibés were given refuge in the GINDDI Centre. However, the United Nations Special Rapporteur noted the absence of formal, harmonized procedures for assisting and supporting at-risk children, and a lack of social services at the community level (paragraph 67). The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to protect talibé children under 18 years of age from forced or compulsory labour, such as begging. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted, particularly in the context of the programme financed by PARRER, and the results achieved, with an indication of the number of talibé children who have been removed from the worst forms of child labour and who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration measures in the GINDDI Centre. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures adopted or envisaged in the context of the process of the modernization of the daaras system.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 101st Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Sierra Leone

Minimum Age (Industry) Convention (Revised), 1937 (No. 59) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

In its previous comments, the Committee had taken note of the draft Employment Act prepared with the ILO's technical assistance. The Committee noted the information provided by the Government that section 34(4) of the draft Employment Act provides that "no child under the age of 18 years may work or be employed to perform any work that is likely to jeopardize his/her health, safety, or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development, or to interfere with his/her education. No employer shall continue to employ such a child after being notified in writing by a labour officer that the employment or work is injurious to health or dangerous". The Committee observed that this section 34(4) of the draft Employment Act gives effect to Article 5 of the Convention. It once again expresses the hope that the new Act will be adopted in the very near future in order to ensure complete conformity of the national legislation with the Convention on this point. The Committee requests the Government to communicate the text of the new Employment Act as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

South Africa

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3(1) and (3) of the Convention. Minimum age and determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, through assistance from the ILO-IPEC project "Towards the elimination of the worst forms of child labour", the Government had drafted regulations on child labour in South Africa, and it expressed the firm hope that these draft regulations would soon be adopted.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the "Regulations on hazardous work by children in South Africa", on 15 January 2010, which include the Health and Safety of Children at Work Regulations (pursuant to the Occupational Health and Safety Act) and the Basic Conditions of Employment Act Regulations on Hazardous Work by Children. In this regard, it notes that, pursuant to sections 4–10 of the Health and Safety of Children at Work Regulations, no child worker may be allowed to work in jobs with respiratory hazards, in elevated positions, involving the lifting of heavy weights, in a hot or cold environment, in a noisy environment, involving power tools or cutting and grinding equipment. The Committee further notes that these Regulations define a child as a person under 18 years of age (pursuant to section 1(b)) and define a child worker as a child who is employed by or works for an employer for remuneration or works under the direction of an employer or another person (pursuant to section 1(c)).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Children's Act No. 38 of 2005, but observed that only certain sections of the Children's Act had come into force. It noted that the Act would not come fully into effect until after the finalization and adoption of the Children's Amendment Bill and its regulations. The Committee expressed the firm hope that the Children's Act, along with the Children's Amendment Bill, would soon be adopted.

The Committee notes that the Children's Act, 2005, as amended in 2007, came into force on 1 April 2010. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 284 of the Children's Act prohibits the trafficking of children or allowing a child to be trafficked. Section 1 of the Children's Act defines a child as a person under the age of 18, and defines trafficking to include the recruitment, sale, supply, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of children within or across the borders of the country.

Article 7(1) and Part V of the report form. Penalties and the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that the South African Police Services and the Department of Social Development were developing systems for compiling data related to the trafficking of children and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. It requested the Government to provide information from this data, as well as information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied under the Criminal Law (Sexual Offences and Related Matters) of 2007 with regard to the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the information in the Government report that through inspections, no child victims of trafficking, child slavery, commercial sexual exploitation and hazardous work have been identified. However, the Committee also notes the information in the Government's report that four cases of child trafficking were reported in the North West Province in 2010. The Committee further notes the Government's statement in its report to Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) of 24 March 2010 that law enforcement agencies and research institutions have identified South Africa as one of the countries in the region that is used by organized traffickers of human beings as a destination, transit and country of origin of victims, including child victims (CEDAW/C/ZAF/2-4, paragraphs 6.6 and 6.9). In addition, the Committee notes that CEDAW, in its concluding observations of 5 April 2011, expressed concern that statistics on the number of women and girls who are victims of trafficking for sexual and economic exploitation are not available and at the Government's failure to address the root causes of trafficking and prostitution (CEDAW/C/ZAF/CO/4, paragraph 27). The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of persons under the age of 18, and to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of perpetrators of these offences are carried out. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the worst forms of child labour, particularly trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, is made available and to provide this information in its next report. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour. Child victims of trafficking. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information the measures taken for the removal and rehabilitation of child victims of trafficking.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that two child victims of trafficking have been repatriated to Lesotho, and that the Department of Social Development is experiencing challenges with regard to the repatriation of two children to Mozambique. The Government indicates that these children are currently in temporary safe care. The Committee also notes the Government's reference to several provisions in the Children's Act providing for assistance to child victims of trafficking. In this regard, the Committee notes that section 286 of the Children's Act states that the Director-General of Foreign Affairs must facilitate the return to South Africa of a child victim of trafficking who is a citizen or permanent resident of the country, including by issuing the relevant travel documents, and, where necessary, funding an adult to escort the child for this return. Moreover, section 289 of the Children's Act states that a child victim of trafficking found in South Africa must be referred to a designated social worker for investigation, and must be placed in temporary care during this investigation. Such a child may then be assisted in applying for asylum, and may be authorized to stay in the country for care and protection. Section 290 of the Children's Act states that a child may not be returned to his or her country of origin without consideration being given to the availability of care in this country, the safety of the child, and the possibility that the child may be subject to harm or once again become a victim of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of children who have benefited from the support provided for in sections 286, 289 and 290 of the Children's Act, particularly the number of child victims of trafficking who have received care as well as assistance with regard to their repatriation.

Clause (d). Identify and reach out to children at special risk. Child orphans and other vulnerable children of HIV/AIDS (OVCs). The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that the Department of Social Development, in collaboration with the National Action Committee for Children affected by HIV/AIDS, had developed and implemented a second National Plan of Action (2009–12) for orphans and other vulnerable children of HIV/AIDS. The Committee also noted that there were an estimated 1.4 million HIV/AIDS orphans in South Africa.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's country progress report to the United Nations General Assembly Special Session on the declaration of Commitment to HIV/AIDS of 2010 that there are between 1.5 to 3 million child orphans in the country with one or both parents deceased. However, this report indicates that approximately 75 per cent of South Africa's OVCs received some form of support, through child support grants, foster care grants and care dependency grants, and that the school attendance rate of orphans between the ages of 10–14 was only one per cent lower than the attendance rate of non-orphans. While appreciating the measures taken by the Government to protect orphans and other vulnerable children, the Committee expresses its concern at the increasing number of children orphaned in South Africa as a result of HIV/AIDS. Recalling that OVCs are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts, within the framework of the National Plan of Action (2009–12) for orphans and other vulnerable children of HIV/AIDS to ensure that such children are protected from these worst forms. It requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Spain

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clauses (a) and (b). Sale and trafficking of children; use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, the production of pornography or pornographic performances. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the adoption of the Organic Law No. 5/2010 of 22 June 2010, amending the Penal Code. It notes with satisfaction that a new provision punishes persons involved in the sale and trafficking of children and young people under 18 years of age for purposes of forced labour or sexual exploitation on Spanish territory or bound for Spain, to prison sentences of from five to eight years (section 177bis). It also notes that section 187 now imposes a harsher sentence on persons promoting or facilitating the prostitution of persons under 18 years of age, as well as on the clients of this prostitution (one to five years' imprisonment), and provides for a harsher sentence when the victim is under 13 years of age (four to six years' imprisonment). Furthermore, it notes that, under section 189, as amended, persons using under-age children for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, or who produce, sell, distribute, offer or facilitate the production, sale or distribution of pornography involving minors shall be punished by a prison sentence ranging from one to five years and from five to nine years when the victim is under 13 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of sections 177bis, 187 and 189 of the Penal Code in practice, by providing, in particular, statistics on the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed under these provisions.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing children from being employed in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from such labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and sexual exploitation for commercial purposes. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government on the adoption of the third National Plan to combat the sexual exploitation of children and young persons (2010–13). It notes that this third National Plan takes up the main proposals that emerged from the evaluation of the second National Plan (2006–09), and takes account of the legislative amendments introduced into the Penal Code with respect to the sale and trafficking of children, child prostitution and pornography. It observes that this Plan provides for awareness-raising campaigns on the subject of sexual exploitation and sex tourism involving children, the improvement of detection systems and offender reporting systems, and the introduction of specific mechanisms to take care of the victims. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, since its adoption by the Council of Ministers in December 2008, the Comprehensive Plan against the trafficking of persons for sexual and commercial exploitation has become the major planning tool for dealing with trafficking for sexual commercial purposes. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts and requests it to continue providing information on the implementation of the third National Plan to combat the sexual exploitation of children and young persons, with respect to the number of children who have effectively been withdrawn from these worst types of labour and who have benefitted from rehabilitation measures and social integration.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. 1. Children of migrant families. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, action programmes to provide educational support to families in a situation of social vulnerability and exclusion – including migrant families with school-age children – are considered to be a priority. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations on 3 November 2010 (CRC/C/ESP/CO/3-4, paragraph 25), welcomed the approval of a Strategic Plan for Citizenship and Integration (2007–10), aimed at guaranteeing access to migrant students to mandatory education and which facilitates integration in the educational system. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and results obtained within the framework of the Strategic Plan for Citizenship and Integration to guarantee the access of migrant children to compulsory schooling and facilitate their integration in the educational system.

2. Roma children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the adoption of the Plan of Action for the Development of the Gypsy Community (2010–12). It notes that various measures aimed at improving children's access to education and retaining children in the school system are envisaged under this National Action Plan. The Committee nevertheless notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its concluding observations on 8 April 2011 (CERD/C/ESP/CO/18-20, paragraph 16), noted with satisfaction that the Government was continuing to adopt measures to improve the general situation of gypsies, but it was concerned by the difficulties still facing gypsy girls with regard to education. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results obtained, within the framework of the Plan of Action for the Development of the Gypsy Community, to guarantee the access to education of Roma children, paying particular attention to girls.

Parts IV and V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the statistics contained in the Government's report on the inspection activities relating to child labour which took place between 2009 and 2010. It notes that almost 700,000 inspection visits were made, and 38 offences for violations of the provisions on minimum age and 26 offences for violations of the provisions on the types of work prohibited to under-age children for reasons of occupational safety and health were reported during these two years. The Committee also notes that during the joint visits conducted by the labour inspection services at the provincial level and the national security forces between 2009 and 2010, 12 persons under 18 years of age were found to be the victims of sexual exploitation or forced labour.

Sri Lanka

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Article 2(2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee had previously noted the Government's information that the Ministry of Labour Relations and Foreign Employment was considering the possibility of extending the age for admission to employment to 16 years and that steps were being taken to consult relevant organizations/parties concerned. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether any amendment raising the minimum age for employment to 16 years has been made. In this regard, the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to the provisions of paragraph 2 of Article 2 of the Convention, which provides that any Member having ratified this Convention may subsequently notify the Director-General of the International Labour Office, by a new declaration, that it has raised the minimum age that it had previously specified. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would consider the possibility of sending a declaration of this nature to the Office, in case any amendment to the national legislation raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work to 16 years has been made.

Article 2(3). Compulsory education. The Committee had previously noted with interest the Government's indication regarding its proposal to extend compulsory schooling up to the end of senior secondary level or completion of grade 11, the year at which students normally attain 16 years of age. It had requested the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Education has taken steps to submit a Bill to the Parliament in respect of extending compulsory schooling up to 16 years of age. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Bill extending compulsory schooling up to 16 years will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard. It also requests the Government to supply a copy of the bill, once it has been adopted.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that a revised list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years will be adopted by Parliament very soon. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Regulation concerning the list of types of hazardous works prohibited to children under 18 years was adopted by Parliament and came into force on 20 August 2010.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Child Activity Survey conducted by the Department of Census and Statistics has been completed, and the report is yet to be published. It further notes from the Government's report that according to the Women and Children's Affairs Division, Department of Labour, in 2010, 179 complaints on child labour were received, out of which 17 cases were filed in the courts, two cases were settled, and ten cases were being heard. Likewise, during the first six months of 2011, 81 complaints were received, out of which six cases were filed in the court and are being heard. It also notes that in 2010, nine cases of child labour were reported with the National Child Protection Authority, and investigations are pending for three cases. The Committee observes that, while several complaints on child labour were registered at the Department of Labour, only very few cases have been subject to prosecution. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective enforcement of the provisions of the Convention, and accordingly requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that persons found to be in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that adequate penalties are imposed. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number and nature of violations detected, involving children, as well as the convictions and penalties imposed for such violations. It further requests the Government to supply a copy of the Child Activity Survey report, once it has been published.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee previously noted that sections 360A, 360B and 288A of the Penal Code, as amended, prohibit a wide range of activities associated with prostitution, including the prohibition of the use, procuring or offering of minors under 18 years for prostitution. It also noted the Government's information that prosecutions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children are carried out by the Department of Police and the National Child Protection Authority (NCPA) of Sri Lanka. It requested the Government to provide information on the penalties applied to offenders with regard to cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children.

The Committee notes the Government's information that in 2010, 37 cases of sexual exploitation of children were registered with the NCPA, out of which, 20 cases were brought before the court, and investigations were pending in seven cases. The Committee notes that according to the report of 27 June 2011 on trafficking of persons in Sri Lanka, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in 2009, the NCPA estimated that approximately 1000 children were subjected to commercial sexual exploitation within Sri Lanka although some NGOs believed the actual number to be between 10,000 and 15,000. Moreover, the Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 19 October 2010 (CRC/C/LKA/CO/3-4, paragraph 69) expressed concern that in spite of the magnitude of child sexual exploitation and notably high incidence of exploitation of approximately 40,000 children in prostitution, there are no comprehensive data available on child sexual exploitation and no central body to monitor the investigation and prosecution of child sexual exploitation cases. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the high number of children involved in commercial sexual exploitation. It accordingly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who commit this offence are carried out and sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information with regard to the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed on offenders in cases related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Clause (d) and Article 4(1). Hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that section 20A of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act (EWYPC Act of 2006), as amended by the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children (Amendment) Act No. 24 of 2006 (EWYPC Amendment Act of 2006), prohibits the employment of children under the age of 18 years in any hazardous occupation. It also noted that section 20A further provides that hazardous occupations in which persons under 18 years are prohibited from working shall be prescribed by the Minister. Subsequently, it noted the Government's indication that the list of types of hazardous work was being revised by a tripartite steering committee, and would come into force as Regulations under section 20A of the EWYPC Act of 2006 after adoption by the Parliament. The Committee expressed the firm hope that the list containing the types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years would be adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Hazardous Occupations Regulation containing the list of types of hazardous works under section 20A of the EWYPC Act of 2006 has been adopted and came into force on 20 August 2010. This Regulation contains a comprehensive list of 49 types of work prohibited to persons under the age of 18 years including: work involving the manufacture and use of pesticides and other dangerous chemicals; production, transport and sale of alcohol and tobacco; work involving slaughter of animals or cutting or chopping flesh of animals; work related to dangerous machines; work involving fishing in deep waters and diving; mining, quarrying or underground work; manufacture, transport or sale of explosives and fireworks; work related to manufacturing and smelting of metals, glass and brass; work involving use or handling of radioactive materials; work at dangerous heights; work involving lifting and carrying of heavy loads; work related to tanning of leather; work related to felling, collecting, chopping or logging of wood; work involving collection or disposal of garbage or sewage or scavenging of garbage; work related to spinning, weaving, and dying in the textile industry and manufacture of garments; work related to road construction; work related to the production of rubber sheets and latex; work near or around a kiln for the manufacture of tiles and bricks; night work; work on a vessel; work in clubs, bars, casinos, hotels, restaurants and eating houses; work involving acrobatic performances and other dangerous physical performances or handling of dangerous animals; and work involving the accompanying of tourists whether as guides or otherwise. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 20A of the EWYPC Act of 2006.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that it had developed a two-year National Action Plan to Combat Child Sex Tourism, 2006, led by UNICEF and the Sri Lanka Tourist Board. It also noted that within the framework of this project, several awareness-raising programmes were implemented in 2007 for hotel staff in high-risk areas, tourist van drivers and service providers, school children, teachers and tourist police officers. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the impact of this National Action Plan to Combat Child Sex Tourism.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the impact of the programmes conducted within the National Action Plan to Combat Child Sex Tourism has not yet been evaluated. The Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 19 October 2011, (CRC/C/LKA/CO/3-4, paragraph 71), expressed concern that Sri Lanka remains a common destination for child sex tourism, with a high number of boys being sexually exploited by tourists. The CRC also expressed concern that the police lack the necessary technical expertise to combat child sex tourism and that the Cyber-Watch programme to monitor the internet for child pornography and crimes related to child sex tourism was discontinued and the Cyber Crimes Unit closed due to lack of funding. The Committee expresses deep concern at the situation of children involved in child sex tourism. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat child sex tourism. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to enhance the functioning of the police in tracking and identifying children involved in child sex tourism and to ensure that perpetrators are brought to justice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard. The Committee finally requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Sex Tourism, once its evaluation has been completed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sudan

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Slavery and practices similar to slavery.

1. Abduction and the exaction of forced labour. The Committee previously noted the various legal provisions in Sudan which prohibit the forced labour of children (and abductions for that purpose), including article 30(1) of the Constitution of the Transitional Sudan Republic of 2005, section 32 of the Child Act of 2004, and section 312 of the Penal Code. The Committee also noted, in its previous comments under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the International Trade Union Confederation's (ITUC) allegations regarding cases of abduction of women and children by the Janjaweed militia, including some cases of sexual slavery. The Committee further noted the information contained in the ITUC's 2005 communication that the signing of a Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA) in January 2005 (and the adoption of the interim Constitution) provided a historic opportunity for the new Government of Sudan to resolve the problem of abductions, but that this would not automatically lead to an end of abductions and the exaction of forced labour. In this regard, the Committee noted, in 2009, that, according to the Report of Activities of the Committee for the Eradication of Abduction of Women and Children (CEAWC), submitted with the Government's report, that the CEAWC had successfully identified and resolved 11,237 of the 14,000 cases of abduction and reunified 3,398 abductees with their families. However, it noted the information from the Secretary-General of the United Nations (UN), in a Security Council report on Children and Armed Conflict in the Sudan, of 10 February 2009, that there had been many instances of child abductions reported in southern Sudan and Darfur in 2007, as well as continuing concerns about incidents of abductions in 2008 (S/2009/84, paragraphs 35–37).

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, in its conclusions adopted in June 2010 on the application of Convention No. 29 by Sudan, observed that there was no up-to-date information available on the activities of the CEAWC with regard to the number of victims identified or reunited with their families since 2008. In addition, the Committee refers to its comments under Convention No. 29 in 2010, where the Committee noted the Government's repeated statement that abductions have stopped completely, but observed with concern that this statement is in contradiction with other reliable sources of information.

The Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in its concluding observations of 10 October 2010, expressed concern over the abduction of children for the purpose of forced labour (CRC/C/SDN/CO/3-4, paragraph 78). The Committee also notes the information in the UN Secretary-General's Security Council report on children and armed conflict in Sudan of 5 July 2011 that while, within the three states of Darfur, allegations of the abduction of children have declined, there remain reports of this practice. Moreover, the Committee notes the information in the 13th periodic report of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Sudan of August 2011 that the Human Rights Component of the UN Mission in Sudan continued to receive reports of abductions, including of children (paragraphs 30 and 31). The Committee must once again observe that, while there appear to have been tangible steps to combat the forced labour of children, including the decline of reported abductions of children in the Darfur region, there is no verifiable evidence that the forced labour of children has been eradicated. Therefore, although the national legislation appears to prohibit abductions and the exaction of forced labour, these practices remain an issue of concern. In this regard, the Committee once again reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, forced labour is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. It strongly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the situation and to take effective and time-bound measures to eradicate abductions and the exaction of forced labour from children under 18 years, as a matter of urgency. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to remove children from situations of abduction and forced labour and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration, and to continue providing information on the results achieved.

2. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Government armed forces, including the paramilitary Popular Defence Forces (PDF), the Government-backed militias, the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and other armed groups, including tribal groups not allied to government or armed opposition groups, had forcibly recruited child soldiers in the north and the south of Sudan. The Committee observed that recruitment took place predominantly in Western and Southern Upper Nile, Eastern Equatoria and the Nuba Mountains, and that by 2004, an estimated 17,000 children remained in the government, SPLA and militia forces. However, the Committee noted that section 9(24) of the Sixth Protocol of the CPA of 2005 requires "the demobilization of all child soldiers in the span of six months as from the date on which the Comprehensive Peace Agreement is signed". Section 9(1)(10) of the Protocol considers the conscription of children a violation of the provisions of the Agreement. The Committee also noted that the Sudan Armed Forces Act was adopted in December 2007, which fixes the minimum age of recruitment at 18 years and criminalizes the recruitment of anyone under 18. Nonetheless, the Committee noted that the UN Secretary-General in his report on children and armed conflict in the Sudan of 10 February 2009, indicated that UN field monitors reported, inter alia, the recruitment and use of children by the SPLA, the presence of 55 uniformed children aged 14 to 16 years among Sudan Armed Force (SAF) and the recruitment and use of 487 children by various armed forces and groups operating in all three Darfur states (S/2009/84, paragraphs 9–17). The Committee, therefore, urged the Government to take immediate measures to end, in practice, the forcible recruitment of children into armed forces.

The Committee notes that section 43 of the Child Act of 2010, adopted in February 2010, prohibits the enlistment, appointment or employment of children in armed conflicts, in armed groups or their employment in armed operations. However, the Committee notes with concern an absence of information in the Government's report on measures taken to apply this provision, or the provisions of the Sudan Armed Forces Act with regard to the forcible recruitment of children in armed conflict.

The Committee notes the statement in the UN Secretary-General's report on children and armed conflict in Sudan of 5 July 2011, that the recruitment and use of children by SPLA was verified in the three transitional areas (Abyei, Southern Kordofan and Blue Nile States) during the period covered by this report (between January 2009 to February 2011), including approximately 800 children observed at the SPLA division headquarters in Samari, Blue Nile State (S/2011/413, paragraph 15). This report also indicates that, over the same period, 501 children (including six girls) were verified as being associated with at least ten armed forces and armed groups in Darfur (S/2011/413, paragraph 17). This report indicates that this represents a decline in the number of children associated with armed groups in Darfur, which may be partially due to ongoing intense advocacy with the armed forces and armed groups to raise awareness, resulting in commitments to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers. However, this report also indicates that the monitoring of the recruitment of children in armed groups continued to be seriously hampered by difficulties related to security, access to non-Government-controlled areas and movement restrictions imposed by the Government (S/2011/413, paragraph 17).

While noting the apparent decline of the number of children associated with armed groups in the Darfur region, the Committee must once again express its concern that children are still being recruited and forced to join illegal armed groups or the national armed forces in practice. It expresses its serious concern with regard to the persistence of this practice, especially as it leads to other violations of the rights of children, in the form of abductions, murders and sexual violence. In this regard, the Committee refers to the UN Secretary-General's call to the Government to take steps as a matter of urgency to address the continued presence of children in SAF and its associated forces (S/2011/413, paragraph 83). The Committee urges the Government to adopt, as a matter of urgency, immediate and effective measures, in collaboration with the UN bodies operating in the country, to put a stop in practice to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed groups and the armed forces. It also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of any persons, including members of the Government's armed forces, who forcibly recruit children under 18 years for use in armed conflict, are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed on offenders in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

Article 7(1). Forced labour. Penalties. The Committee previously noted that the Penal Code of 2003 and the Child Act of 2004 contained various provisions which provide for sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties of imprisonment and fines for anyone who commits the offence of the forced labour of children. However, the Committee also noted the ITUC's allegation that the impunity enjoyed by those responsible for abductions and the exaction of forced labour – illustrated by the absence of any prosecutions for abductions in the last 16 years – has been responsible for the continuation of this practice throughout the civil war and more recently in Darfur. In this regard, the Committee noted the Government's statement of November 2005 that all of the tribes concerned, including the Dinka Chiefs Committee, have requested the CEAWC not to resort to legal action unless the amicable efforts of the tribes are not successful, due to the following reasons: that legal action is very long and expensive; that it may threaten the life of young abductees; and that it will not build peace among the tribes concerned. The Committee considered that the lack of enforcement of the penal provisions prohibiting the forced labour of children under 18 years, while sometimes ensuring that victims are effectively retrieved, had the effect of ensuring impunity for perpetrators instead of punishing them. It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient penalties are applied to persons who engage children under 18 in forced labour, and to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

The Committee notes with concern an absence of information in the Government's report on the application of the relevant penalties in practice. Referring to its comments made under Convention No. 29, the Committee notes the Government's view that there is an argument for not pursuing prosecutions against those responsible for abductions and forced labour in the spirit of national reconciliation.

However, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 10 October 2010, expressed concern at the de facto impunity enjoyed by perpetrators of the abduction of children for the purpose of forced labour (CRC/C/SDN/CO/3-4, paragraph 78). In this regard, referring to its comments made under Convention No. 29, the Committee reiterates that the failure to apply penal sanctions with respect to perpetrators of the forced labour of children is contrary to this Convention and may have the effect of creating an environment of impunity for abductors who exploit forced labour. The Committee once again reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government shall take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including through the provision and application of penal sanctions. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the protection of children under 18 years of age against abductions for the exaction of forced labour, including by ensuring that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice on persons who commit this offence. It also requests the Government to provide information, in its next report on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child soldiers. The Committee previously noted that the UN Secretary-General, in his report on children and armed conflict in the Sudan of 10 February 2009, indicated that during the reporting period (1 August 2007 to 30 December 2008), almost 600 children formerly associated with armed forces and groups, under the CPA, as well as 12,000 other vulnerable children, were supported through reintegration programmes across the Sudan. It noted that the National Council for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (DDR) Coordination and the Northern Sudan DDR Commission were established by the CPA in February 2006, and that the reintegration of approximately 300 children had begun. However, although the CPA (signed in January 2005) had called for the immediate and unconditional release of all children from various fighting forces and groups within six months, the Secretary-General pointed out that children continued to be recruited and used by all parties to the conflict (S/2009/84, paragraphs 56–60).

The Committee notes that section 44 of the Child Act of 2010 provides that the competent body responsible for the demobilization and reintegration shall design programmes to help with the demobilizing of children in coordination with other bodies (military and security institutions, as well as armed groups), and endeavour to reintegrate these children socially and economically. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, through the Northern Sudan DDR Commission, efforts were deployed to provide psychological and social support as well as education and skills training to children. The Government indicates that several training programmes were organized for employees for the purpose of tracking children who were kidnapped and to ensure their reintegration. The Government also indicates that 78 specialists from the Ministry of Social Affairs and the Ministry of Education were trained on child protection, conflict resolution, social and psychological rehabilitation, as well as on the participation of community in the reintegration and rehabilitation process.

The Committee further notes the information in the UN Secretary-General's report on children and armed conflict in Sudan of 5 July 2011 that, following consistent advocacy efforts by the UN, the first demobilization of 88 children from SPLA in Kurmuk, Blue Nile State, was carried out on 14 May 2009. This was followed by the demobilization of an additional 140 children by 30 December 2010 (S/2011/413, paragraph 22). This report also indicates that, from February 2009 to February 2011, the Northern Sudan DDR Commission, with the support of the UN, registered 1,041 former child soldiers in Darfur. However, this report also indicated cases involving the re-recruitment of children (S/2011/413, paragraph 20). In this regard, the report of the UN Secretary-General states that the re-recruitment of children who have been separated from armed forces or groups is a real risk that can be addressed only through the provision of support for the long-term reintegration of children (S/2011/413, paragraph 89). The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to continue to take, in collaboration with the UN, effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed conflict and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, with particular attention to children at risk of re-recruitment. In this regard, it requests the Government to supply information on the number of children under 18 years of age who have been removed from armed forces, rehabilitated and reintegrated into their communities as a result of the ongoing disarmament, demobilization and reintegration efforts.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2006)

Article 1 of the Convention. Measures taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour. Following its previous comments, Committee notes with interest the Government's statement that it is preparing draft legislation for accession to the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138). The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in this regard, and to continue to provide information on progress made towards the ratification of Convention No. 138.

Article 3. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that Title XIV of the Criminal Code concerning sexual offences was amended in July 2009, and it requested a copy of the Code, as amended.

In this regard, the Committee with notes satisfaction that Act No. 122 of 29 July 2009, relating to further amendments to the Criminal Code on sexual offences, amends the Criminal Code to prohibit committing an immoral act with a person under 18 in exchange for payment (pursuant to sections 300 and 303a). The Committee further notes that section 303 of the amended Criminal Code prohibits inducing a person under 18 to commit immoral acts by, inter alia, the promising of money or property. In addition, the Committee notes that section 293 of the amended Criminal Code states that it is an offence to produce, distribute, exhibit, import, export, or possess images of sexual acts by persons under 18.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the Preparatory Working Group of the National Commission on Child Labour had formulated the draft Decree containing a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age. The Committee requested the Government to take measures to ensure the adoption of the draft Decree.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the State Decree on Hazardous Labour for Young Persons has been adopted. The Government states that this Decree contains a list of hazardous forms of work that are, or may be, hazardous for children and young persons. The Government states that this list will be reviewed periodically. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the State Decree on Hazardous Labour for Young Persons, with its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Swaziland

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the comments made by the Swaziland Federation of Trade Unions (SFTU) in a communication dated 30 August 2011, as well as the Government's report.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that the draft Employment Bill had been submitted to the Cabinet for approval. It had also noted that a draft National Action Programme on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour was elaborated.

The Committee notes the allegations made by the SFTU that there is no national policy or an action programme for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour and that there is no political will on the part of the Government to address the legislative as well as policy issues concerning child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the National Action Programme on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour is being considered by the Labour Advisory Board and will soon be submitted to Cabinet for adoption. It also notes the Government's statement that the draft Employment Bill was withdrawn from the Parliament as the social partners felt it necessary to incorporate further issues that had been left out. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Employment Bill will be adopted in the near future, taking into consideration the comments made by the Committee. It also expresses the firm hope that the National Action Programme on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour will be adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. Informal sector, including family undertakings. The Committee had previously noted that, pursuant to section 2 of the Employment Act, domestic employment, agricultural undertakings and family undertakings were not included in the definition of "undertaking" and therefore not covered by the minimum age provisions of section 97. It had further noted the Government's statement that the excluded categories of works would be considered while drafting the Employment Bill.

The Committee notes that according to section 11(1) of the draft Employment Bill a person may not employ a child under the age of 15 years, except in a family business, which in relation to the child means a business carried on only by a parent or guardian of the child. The Committee observes that the draft Employment Bill exempts family undertakings from the minimum age provisions. The Committee therefore reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and that it covers all types of work, including work in family undertakings, with the exception of light work, which can only be carried out under the conditions laid down in Article 7 of the Convention. The Committee also recalls that the Government has not availed itself of the possibilities of exclusion of limited categories of employment or work as envisaged in Article 4 of the Convention.

Moreover, the Committee notes that according to a report entitled "2010 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labour-Swaziland" available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, children are employed to pick cotton, harvest sugar cane and are engaged in herding in remote locations and domestic service. This report also indicates that children work as porters, transporting heavy loads in self-made carts, collecting fees and calling out routes while climbing in and out of moving vehicles. The Committee therefore observes that, in practice, children appear to be engaged in child labour in a wide range of activities in the informal sector. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children working in the informal sector, including in family undertakings, are entitled in law and in practice to the protection afforded by the Convention. In this regard, it requests the Government to take measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services to effectively monitor children working in the informal sector.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory education. The Committee had previously noted that according to article 29(6) of the Constitution of 2005, every Swazi child shall have the right to free education in public schools at least up to the end of primary school. However, the Committee had noted with concern that the primary schooling finishes at the age of 12 years while the minimum age for admission to employment is 15 years in Swaziland. Moreover, the Committee had also noted the concerns expressed by the Committee on the Rights of the Child at the high rates of repetition and school drop-outs, as well as the extremely low completion rates in schools.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has enacted the Free Primary Education Act of 2010 which contains provisions requiring parents to send their children to school until the completion of primary schooling. It also notes the Government's statement that the concerns raised by the Committee with regard to linking the school-leaving age with the minimum age for admission to employment which is 15 years will be considered in due course. The Committee notes that according to the UNICEF statistics for 2009, the net primary school enrolment rates for boys and girls were 82 per cent and 84 per cent respectively, while at the secondary level the net enrolment rates for boys and girls were 31 per cent and 26 per cent respectively. Moreover, the Committee notes that according to the "World Data on Education-Swaziland, seventh edition, 2010–11" compiled and published by UNESCO, of those who enter the education system, only about half of them complete primary education, and many take as long as 10 years to do so, due to high repetition rates. Both the repetition and drop-out rates are particularly high in the first four grades, and by fourth grade, nearly 20 per cent of pupils have dropped out. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the high drop-out rates and low completion rates at the primary level and at the low enrolment rates at the secondary level. Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to extend compulsory education up to the minimum age for admission to employment which is 15 years in Swaziland. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to increase the school enrolment rates at the secondary level for children up to the age of 15 years as well as to reduce the drop-out rates at the primary level. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments made in this regard.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that once the draft Employment Bill has been adopted, measures will be taken in consultation with the social partners to develop a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children and young persons as envisaged by section 10(2) of the draft Employment Bill. The Committee reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to determine the types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age pursuant to section 10(2) of the draft Employment Bill. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments made in this regard.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee notes that the restriction on working hours and night work as provided under section 11(2) of the draft Employment Bill, applies to children working in family undertakings. However, the draft Employment Bill does not appear to set a minimum age for light work, including work in family undertakings. The Committee notes that according to the joint ILO–IPEC, UNICEF and World Bank Report on Understanding Children's Work in Swaziland, 9.3 per cent of children between the ages of 5 to 14 years are engaged in child labour. The Committee recalls that Article 7(1) of the Convention provides that national laws or regulations may permit persons from the age of 13 to engage in light work, which is: (a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. The Committee also recalls that according to Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine the activities in which light work may be permitted and shall prescribe the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken. Noting that national legislation does not regulate light work and that a significant number of children under the minimum age are engaged in child labour, the Committee requests the Government to envisage the possibility of adopting provisions within the framework of the draft Employment Bill to regulate and determine the light work activities performed by children between 13 and 15 years of age in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that the labour inspection management was in the process of being computerized and that the data on child labour would be compiled and kept thereafter. The Committee notes the absence of information on this point in the Government's report. The Committee requests the Government to provide a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including available statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts from inspection services reports, and information on the number and nature of contraventions reported. It also requests the Government to supply a copy of the data compiled and kept on child labour, if any, by the new labour inspection management system.

Switzerland

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use or procuring of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 187 of the Penal Code penalizes any person who commits a sexual act with a child under 16 years of age. It noted that the Federal Council, in its report and message of 20 September 1999, indicates that section 187 establishes the age of sexual consent at 16 years, and that young persons between 16 and 18 years of age may engage in prostitution, provided that they do so of their own free will. The Committee also noted that section 195 of the Penal Code punishes any person who induces a young person (namely, a person who has not yet reached the age of 18 years) to engage in prostitution. The Committee considered that section 195 of the Penal Code covers the prohibition on procuring a child under 18 years of age for prostitution, in accordance with the Convention. However, it observed that, as regards the use of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution, Swiss penal law is not fully in conformity with the Convention inasmuch as section 187 of the Penal Code only punishes those who have committed acts of a sexual nature with children under 16 years of age. The Committee emphasized that it is necessary to make a distinction between the age of sexual consent and the freedom to engage in prostitution. It considered that, even though the national legislation (section 187 of the Penal Code) recognizes that a child of over 16 years of age may lawfully consent to a sexual act, the age of consent does not affect the obligation to prohibit this worst form of child labour. It also considered that the act of engaging in a sexual act with a child under 18 years of age for remuneration constitutes the use of a child for prostitution, whether or not the child consents.

The Committee noted the Government's indication that the issue of extending the culpability of persons who have recourse to the prostitution of young persons under 16 years of age to those who have recourse to the prostitution of young persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years was under discussion and that parliamentary interventions had already been submitted on the subject, in which the Federal Council considered that the prostitution of young persons under 18 years of age could be prejudicial to their sexual development, traumatize them and result in their psychological and social destabilization.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that on 16 June 2010 the Federal Council signed the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse (Lanzarote Convention). The amendments to the Swiss Penal Code which are needed to implement this Convention include the need to criminalize the use of persons between 16 and 18 years of age for prostitution. A draft report on the implementation and ratification of the Convention is being drawn up by the Federal Office of Justice. The consultation procedure should be opened as soon as possible after the summer break so that the message can be submitted to the Federal Assembly in 2012. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that in principle it is for the cantons to issue police regulations regarding the locations, hours and practice of prostitution. Some cantons are in the process of, or have already made their legislation more stringent and established penalties for operators of studios and escort services employing young persons between 16 and 18 years of age. However, their approach is not to criminalize clients for the use of persons under 18 years of age for prostitution but rather to impose certain obligations on the operators of studios and escort services. Other cantons have passed legislation on prostitution by providing that any person working as a prostitute must register with the authorities. If the authority receives information that a minor is engaging in prostitution, it is obliged to contact the parent or guardian concerned.

However, the Committee observes that, despite the fact that the Committee has been raising this issue for a number of years, the Swiss Penal Code has still not been amended so as to give full effect to the prohibition laid down in Article 3, clause (b), of the Convention. Therefore, in view of the fact that, under the terms of Article 3(b) of the Convention, the use of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution is considered one of the worst forms of child labour which, under the terms of Article 1, must be prohibited as a matter of urgency, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Penal Code in such a way that the use of a child between 16 and 18 years of age for prostitution is prohibited as soon as possible. It again requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any further developments in this regard.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography. The Committee previously noted that sections 135 and 197 of the Penal Code establish penalties for the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography. It noted the Government's indication that the term "child" used in section 197(3) of the Penal Code, which prohibits the manufacture of pornography involving children, applies to children under 16 years of age. However, the Committee noted the Government's indication that section 182 of the Penal Code may also be used to penalize the use of minors over 16 years of age for the production of pornography. It asked the Government to provide information on the application of section 182 so that it can assess whether this provision can be enforced effectively and thus prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a young person between the ages of 16 and 18 years for the production of pornography.

The Committee once again notes the Government's indication that statistics on criminal convictions do not make it possible to differentiate offences in terms of the type of trafficking or the ages of the victims. However, the Committee observes that, in any case, section 182 of the Penal Code provides that any person who engages in trafficking of a human being for sexual exploitation commits a criminal offence. It observes once again that this provision does not prohibit the use of a person under 18 years of age for commercial sexual exploitation, regardless of whether or not this person has been the victim of trafficking. The Committee, therefore, observes that there do not appear to be any provisions that prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child between 16 and 18 years of age for the production of pornography. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the amendments to the Swiss Penal Code which are needed to implement the Lanzarote Convention include extending the scope of section 197 of the Penal Code to protect young persons between 16 and 18 years of age from sexual exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures as matter of urgency to ensure that the use, procuring or offering of all children under 18 years of age for the production of pornography is prohibited in national law.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Syrian Arab Republic

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3(3) of the Convention. Admission to hazardous work as from 16 years of age. Agricultural work. The Committee previously noted that section 2 of Order No. 972 (of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour) of 7 May 2006 specifies a list of tiring jobs in the agricultural sector in which it is prohibited to employ children. This list includes: (1) all forms of irrigation except for drip irrigation; (2) crop harvesting and cutting fodder; (3) driving agricultural machinery, operating and maintaining water pumps by diesel engines; (4) working with and sprinkling agricultural pesticides, using chemical fertilizers and pruning; (5) carrying, pulling and transporting loads; (6) cultivating soil through the use of a manual plough; and (7) dispersing seeds in an area exceeding 2,500 square metres. However, the Committee noted that, pursuant to section 1, Order No. 972 only prohibits these listed activities for children under 15 years of age. In this regard, the Committee recalled that Article 3(3) of the Convention permits the performance of hazardous work, under very specific conditions, only from the age of 16 years.

The Committee takes note of the information in the Government's report on measures it intends to take to protect children working in agriculture. The Government indicates that it aims to establish a centre in 2011 for the rehabilitation of children in the agricultural region of the governorate of Dayr az-Zawr, through the National Programme for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour.

Nonetheless, the Committee observes that the authorized age to perform hazardous work in the agriculture sector remains at 15 years of age, pursuant to Order No. 972. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that by virtue of Article 3(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations or the competent authority may, after consultations with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, where such exist, authorize employment or work as from the age of 16 years on condition that health, safety and morals of the young persons are fully protected and that the young persons have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no child under the age of 16 is permitted to engage in hazardous work in the agricultural sector. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend Order No. 972 to prohibit hazardous types of agricultural activities to all children under 16 years of age.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, in collaboration with the ILO and UNICEF, it has undertaken an analytical study on the situation of child labour in the country. The Government indicates that a database is being developed, and measures are being taken to monitor the cases identified. The Committee also notes the statistical information from the 2006 "Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3 of the Syrian Arab Republic" that 5.4 per cent of all children between the ages of 5 and 14 are engaged in economic activity. This survey indicates that boys are much more likely than girls to engage in economic activity under the minimum age, with 10.3 per cent of boys aged 12 years, 14.9 per cent of boys aged 13 years and 22.9 per cent of boys aged 14 years engaged in economic activity. This survey further indicates that boys between the age of 5 and 14 who engage only in economic activity (and do not attend school) work an average of 30.8 hours per week. Moreover, the Committee notes the statement by the UNICEF country representative of 7 November 2010 that child labour is a serious issue in Syria (in a document available from the Integrated Regional Information Networks operated by the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs). The Committee must express its concern over the number and situation of children under the minimum age of 15 years who are engaged in economic activity and it urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the situation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information from the analytical study on child labour in the Syrian Arab Republic, once it is available, including up-to-date statistical information on the number of children and young persons who are engaged in economic activity.

United Republic of Tanzania

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (c). Use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that efforts would be made to bring about a prohibition on the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular the production and trafficking of drugs.

The Committee notes with interest that according to section 5(1)(a) of the draft Law of the Child (Child Labour) Regulations drawn up pursuant to section 157 of the Law of the Child Act No.21 of 2009 (Law of the Child Act), no child below the age of 18 years shall be employed in the worst forms of child labour, which include illicit activities. The Committee notes, however, that the draft Child Labour Regulations do not appear to establish penalties for the offences covered under section 5(1)(a) of the draft Child Labour Regulations. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to establish sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties for the offences related to the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft Child Labour Regulations will be adopted in the near future.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Prohibition and determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that the process of adopting a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years was under way.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour and Employment consulted with the stakeholders in July 2011 on the proposed regulation concerning the list of hazardous types of work. This proposed regulation will be submitted to the Labour, Economic and Social Council for comments and finally to the Attorney-General before it is finalized. The Committee also notes that according to section 82(1) of the Law of the Child Act, it is prohibited to employ or engage a child under 18 years in hazardous work which includes: going to sea; mining and quarrying; carrying heavy loads; manufacturing industries where chemicals are produced or used; work in places where machines are used; and work in bars, hotels and places of entertainment. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures, without delay, to adopt the regulation determining the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the regulation, once it has been adopted.

Article 6. Programmes of action for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour. The Committee notes the Government's information that within the ILO–Brazil Partnership Programme for the Promotion of South–South Cooperation, the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania has developed a National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour. This project is intended to increase awareness and knowledge among stakeholders and the public at large on the adverse impact of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, and its impact on eliminating the worst forms of child labour.

Article 7(1). Penalties. Noting that most of the monetary penalties mentioned in the Penal Code and the Employment and Labour Relations Act of 2004, were very low, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to review the monetary penalties prescribed for the offences mentioned under clauses (a)–(d) of Article 3 of the Convention.

The Committee notes with interest that sections 78, 79, 80, and 83 of the Law of the Child Act establishes penalties ranging from 100,000 shillings to 500 million shillings, in addition to imprisonment for the offences related to hazardous work, forced labour, prostitution and the sexual exploitation of children. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of these penalties in practice, including for trafficking in children under the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2008.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the Government's statement that at the primary level, a total of 8,441,553 children were enrolled in 2009, and a total of 8,419,305 children were enrolled in 2010. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that in 2011, 1,556,685 children are enrolled at the secondary level. According to the statistics provided by UNESCO, in 2009, 97 per cent of girls and 96 per cent of boys were enrolled in the primary school level and 102 per cent (gross intake rate to last grade of primary) of children completed a full course of primary schooling.

Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking in children. The Committee previously noted that according to the provisions under Part IV of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2008, the Government shall secure the protection, assistance and rehabilitation of child victims of trafficking and establish or designate centres for the protection and assistance of trafficking in persons (sections 19 and 20).

The Committee notes the Government's information that there are focal points in every police station to handle child victims of trafficking. Moreover, there are centres run by NGOs for the protection and assistance of child victims of trafficking. The Committee notes the information available in the ILO–IPEC report of 2010 on the project entitled "Support for the Time-bound Programme on the Worst Forms of Child Labour-Phase II" (ILO-TBP report of 2010) that Parliament has established an Anti-Human Trafficking Fund in order to finance the Anti-Trafficking Committee which focuses on providing protection and assistance to victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken by the Anti-Trafficking Committee for the removal of child victims of trafficking for sexual and labour exploitation as well as the measures taken for their rehabilitation and social integration, and the results achieved. It also requests the Government to indicate the number of child victims of trafficking who have been rehabilitated in the centres run by the NGOs.

Clause (d). Identify and reach out to children at special risk. Child orphans of HIV/AIDS. The Committee previously noted that according to the information contained in the Epidemiological Factsheet on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) of October 2008, over 970,000 children aged below 17 years were HIV/AIDS orphans in the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Committee notes the Government's information that it has created a conducive environment for the civil society organizations, private sector, and workers' and employers' organizations to actively participate in the fight against HIV/AIDS, to deal with the problem of child labour as well as to participate in the provision of education and vocational training to child victims and orphans of HIV/AIDS. The Committee also notes that according to the information available in the ILO-TBP report of 2010, the project has provided training and orientation to social partners and implementing agencies on the use of the ILO Handbook on Mainstreaming HIV/AIDS issues into child labour initiatives, together with a Training Manual on Child Labour and HIV/AIDS. The Committee notes, however, that according to the Epidemiological Factsheet on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), of 2009, more than 1,300,000 children aged below 17 years are HIV/AIDS orphans in the United Republic of Tanzania. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the high number of children orphaned by HIV/AIDS. Considering that children orphaned by HIV/AIDS are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that children orphaned by HIV/AIDS are prevented from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, in particular by increasing their access to education and vocational training. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

Thailand

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously requested a copy of section 287 of the Penal Code. In this regard, the Committee noted that section 287 of the Penal Code prohibits, inter alia, producing or making any document, drawing, print, picture, photograph, film or tape which is "obscene". However, the Committee noted the information in a document entitled "UNICEF urges quick government action on child pornography" of 11 October 2010, available on the UNICEF website, that reports indicate the open display and sale in the country of graphic sexual videos involving children. In this document, UNICEF urged the Thai authorities to bring to bear "the full force of the law" on those found to be producing, distributing or selling videos or any other material related to the sexual exploitation of children, and urged the Government to investigate where and how such videos are produced. Therefore, while noting that the production of child pornography appears to be prohibited in law, the Committee noted with concern that this worst form of child labour continues to be a problem in practice. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are carried out in practice for persons who use, procure or offer persons under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or pornographic performances. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on whether the involvement of children in non-recorded pornographic performances (such as live performances) is prohibited in law.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular, for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that while the production, importation, exportation, possession or consumption of narcotics is prohibited under the Narcotics Act of 1979, the use procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for this purpose did not appear to be prohibited. It also observed that, according to a rapid assessment conducted by ILO-IPEC in 2002, children as young as 10 years of age participate in drug trafficking, and the majority of these are children are between 12 and 16 years and are used to buy or sell drugs.

The Committee noted the Government's statement that, on this point, it was in the process of collecting information from relevant agencies. The Committee reminded the Government that pursuant to Article 3(c) of the Convention, the involvement of a person under 18 in illicit activities constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour, and that pursuant to Article 1 of the Convention member States are required to take "immediate" measures to prohibit these worst forms as a matter of urgency. Observing that Thailand ratified the Convention in 2001, and that the use of children in the production and trafficking of drugs appears to be a problem in practice, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to explicitly prohibit the use of children in the illicit activities in legislation as a matter of urgency.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the Royal Thai Police was in the process of establishing a specific unit responsible for combating trafficking of children and women (Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women), and it requested information on the measures taken by this Division with regard to combating the trafficking of children.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women has formed teams for the investigation of particular persons and locations suspected to be linked to human trafficking and the use of child labour. It has assigned police officers (at deputy commander or commander levels) to monitor and accelerate the investigation of human trafficking cases, while coordinating with other relevant agencies. The Government indicated that the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women has formed campaign teams to sensitize communities, villages and factories and has launched a campaign against human trafficking, in conjunction with other government agencies and private sector organizations. The Committee also noted the information in the Government's report that it had engaged in capacity building for officials to improve their understanding of the phenomenon and to ensure the efficiency of their anti-trafficking efforts. The Committee further noted the information in the ILO-IPEC Technical Progress Report on the second phase of the ILO-IPEC "Project to combat trafficking in children and women in the Mekong subregion" (TICW II Project) of 30 January 2008 (TICW II TPR) that "Operational Guidelines on identification of victims of trafficking in labour cases" had been developed, as a collaboration between the Ministry of Social Development and Human Security (MSDHS) and the Ministry of Labour as a coordinated response to cases of trafficking for the purpose of labour exploitation. The ILO-IPEC Technical Progress Report for the project "Support for national action to combat child labour and its worst forms in Thailand" of 10 September 2010 (ILO-IPEC TPR 2010) indicated that training was provided to labour inspectors and other key stakeholders on these Operational Guidelines in 2009. Nonetheless, the Committee noted the information in the UNODC report entitled "Global Report on Trafficking in Persons" of 2009 (UNODC Report) that the vast majority of foreign victims of trafficking identified between October 2006 and December 2007 were minors (76 per cent of trafficking victims) and that Thailand remained a source country of trafficking victims. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officials responsible for the monitoring of trafficking in children, including those in the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women and border control officials, to ensure the effective implementation of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken in this regard.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. 1. The ILO–IPEC TICW project and the National Plan on Prevention and Resolution of Domestic and Cross-border Trafficking in Children and Women (NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07). The Committee previously noted the launching of the TICW Project in 2000 and noted that within the TICW II Project (2003–08), the National Committee on Combating Trafficking in Children and Women launched the NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07. It requested information on the concrete impact of measures taken through these initiatives.

The Committee noted the information in the Government’s report that the implementation of the TICW II Project resulted in interventions in Phayao, Chiang Mai, Chiang Rai, Mukdaharn, and Bangkok. The Government indicated that the Chiang Mai Coordination Centre for the Protection of Children’s and Women’s Rights (Chiang Mai Coordination Centre) (under the MSDHS), developed a database on persons at risk for trafficking, as well the destination sites of vulnerable persons, and that this information was used by partnering agencies in the implementation of initiatives. The Government indicated that 306 community watchdog volunteers were trained in 124 villages in the Phayao Province, and efforts were made to include awareness raising on trafficking in a secondary school curricula. In this regard, the Committee noted the information from ILO–IPEC that within the context of the TICW II Project, the action programmes implemented included “Integrated hill tribe community development project for the prevention of trafficking in children and women (phase II)”, “Programme for the prevention of trafficking in children and women in Chiang Rai province”, “Strengthening the capacity of Ban Mae Chan School to launch a prevention programme on trafficking”, and “Trafficking in children and women for forced labour and sexual exploitation in Chiang Mai”. The Committee further noted the information in the Government’s report that combating the trafficking in persons was a top priority for the Government, and specific policies announced in this regard included capacity building, intelligence exchange between countries and awareness-raising campaigns. Observing that the NPA on Trafficking in Children and Women 2003–07 ended in 2007, and the TICW II Project concluded in 2008, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that comprehensive national efforts are undertaken to combat the sale and trafficking of persons under the age of 18. It requests the Government to provide information on any ongoing or envisaged national plans of action addressing this phenomenon, and on the implementation of these programmes.

2. Child commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that the Office of the National Commission on Women’s Affairs estimated that there were between 22,500 and 40,000 children under 18 years of age in prostitution (representing approximately 15–20 per cent of the overall number of prostitutes) in the country, and that these estimates did not include foreign children in prostitution. The Committee further noted that the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2004–09) included initiatives to address child prostitution, and requested information on the concrete measures taken in this regard.

The Committee noted the Government’s statement that it was in the process of collecting information from relevant agencies on this point. It also noted the information in the Government’s report that a National Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2009–14) was adopted in 2008. The Committee observed that although the commercial sexual exploitation of persons under 18 is prohibited by law, it remained an issue of serious concern in practice. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take comprehensive measures, including within the framework of the National Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2009–14), to combat this worst form of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete results achieved in combating the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Article 7(1) of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Penalties and the application of the Convention in practice. 1. Child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted that the enforcement of the existing penalties for the offences of child trafficking and child commercial exploitation were very ineffective. However, it noted the Government’s indication that, according to the statistical figures of the Office of the Court of Justice, in the period 2003–04 there were 823 prosecutions concerning the offences of procuring and trafficking children for the purposes of prostitution and sexual abuse under the Penal Code. It welcomed the Government’s efforts to develop a more comprehensive system of data collection and analysis of these offences, and requested that the Government provide statistical information on the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.

2. Trafficking. The Committee noted the information in the Government’s report that the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women undertook the collection and management of basic data. The Committee also noted the information in the Government’s report that interviews conducted by the police to determine whether foreign children were victims of trafficking revealed 112 suspected child victims of this worst form of child labour. However, the Committee observed that the trafficking of children remained a much broader phenomenon, noting the information in the UNODC Report that between October 2006 and December 2007, 416 child victims of trafficking were detected. Moreover, the Committee noted an absence of information on the number of persons investigated and prosecuted as a result of the identification of child victims of trafficking. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who traffic in children for the purpose of labour or sexual exploitation are carried out. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied in this regard, as well as any additional information from the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women on the prevalence of the trafficking of children. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

3. Commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee noted the information in the Government’s report from the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women that in 2006 two child victims of commercial sexual exploitation were reported, in addition to two offenders. The Government also indicated that there were no reported victims or offenders in 2007, and that in 2008, 23 child victims and 16 offenders were recorded. The Committee observed an absence of information on the penalties applied to these offenders, and observed that these figures appear to represent only a fraction of the number of children engaged in prostitution (with previous Government estimates indicating that tens of thousands of persons under 18 are victims of this worst form of child labour). In this regard, the Committee noted the information in the ILO–IPEC TPR 2010 that, within the framework of the ILO Project “Support for national action to combat child labour and its worst forms in Thailand”, a study had been conducted (by the Khon Kaen University) on the commercial sexual exploitation of children in three provinces in the Northeast of Thailand including Nong Khai, Udon Thani and Khon Kaen (which are major source areas for girls and women in prostitution within Thailand). The Committee requests the Government to provide information from the study conducted on the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Nong Khai, Udon Thani and Khon Kaen, with its next report. It also strongly urges the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that persons who engage in the use, procuring or offering of persons under 18 for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied with regard to the commercial sexual exploitation of persons under 18 years.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking. 1. Services for child victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted the various measures adopted by the MSDHS to assist child victims of trafficking, and noted that 3,062 foreign trafficking victims had been protected in Thai shelters and repatriated to their home countries.

The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that the specific policies to combat trafficking announced include measures to protect victims, such as the provision of assistance to those at risk of trafficking, the establishment of a fund to assist victims of trafficking and campaigns to eliminate discriminatory attitudes against victims of trafficking to facilitate their reintegration into communities. The Committee also noted the Government's statement that the Baan Kred Trakarn Protection and Occupational Development Centre was established, and a learning centre was developed as part of its holistic assistance to victims of trafficking. Services provided to trafficked women and children through these centres included the provision of basic necessities, education, vocational training and assistance with psychological recovery. The Government also indicated that the four Protection and Development Centres in Ranong, Pratumthani, Songkhla and Chaing Rai provide assistance, protection and rehabilitation services to victims. The Government further indicated that the Division on the Suppression of Offences against Children, Youth and Women coordinated with agencies involved in the rehabilitation and repatriation of trafficking victims. Lastly, the Committee noted the information in the Government's report that the National Policy and Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2009–14) included measures to integrate children back into society by preparing their families and communities for their return, to repatriate children in a manner consistent with their needs and safety, and to follow-up on their reintegration, following rehabilitation. The Committee takes due note of the measures implemented by the Government, and requests it to pursue its efforts to provide direct assistance to child victims of trafficking, with a view to ensuring that victims of trafficking under the age of 18 receive appropriate services for their rehabilitation and social reintegration with child participation.

2. Measures aimed at securing compensation for victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the Government had taken a number of measures aimed at securing justice and compensation for victims of trafficking, including children. It noted that the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act provides for the possibility for victims of trafficking to claim compensation from the offenders and the provision of funds amounting to 500 million baht for their rehabilitation, occupational training and development. The Government also indicated that the Accused Act, BE 2544 (2001) states that children who are deceived into trafficking, prostitution, or forced labour, shall receive compensation.

The Committee noted the Government's statement that it was in the process of collecting information from relevant agencies on this point. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to indicate in its next report the number of former child victims of trafficking who have received compensation either from the offenders or through funds set up by the Government under the Accused Act BE 2544 (2001) or the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation and bilateral agreements. The Committee previously noted several measures taken by the Government to combat trafficking at the regional level, including meetings of the Coordinated Mekong Ministerial Initiative against Trafficking (COMMIT). The Committee requested information on measures taken in this regard and on the concrete measures adopted under bilateral MOUs for the elimination of the interstate trafficking of children.

The Committee noted the statement in the Government's report that, pursuant to the MOU of the COMMIT signed in 2004, and following the review of the first Subregional Plan of Action (2005–07), member countries endorsed the Subregional Plan of Action for 2008–10. This subregional action plan focused on several particular areas, including training and capacity building, multi-sectoral and bilateral partnerships, re-enforcing legal frameworks, law enforcement, victim identification, protection and reintegration and cooperation with the tourism sector. The Committee also noted the information in the Government's report that the Government had signed an agreement with the Government of Viet Nam on bilateral cooperation for eliminating trafficking in persons on 24 March 2008, and that pursuant to this agreement, the two Governments had developed an Action Plan for 2008–09. The Committee further noted that, pursuant to MOUs to combat human trafficking with the governments of Cambodia (signed in 2003) and Laos (signed in 2005), cooperation projects had been formulated and some measures implemented, including a workshop on human trafficking for Laos–Thai border officials. The Government also indicated that it was in the process of initiating similar bilateral MOUs with the Governments of Myanmar, China and Japan. The Government further indicated that within the framework of the TICW II Project, technical assistance and support was provided for combating trafficking efforts related to the MOUs between Thailand and its neighbouring countries. Noting that cross-border trafficking remains an issue of concern in practice, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its international cooperation efforts with regard to combating the trafficking of persons under 18. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures implemented in this regard, and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously requested a copy of the Criminal Code, as amended in September 2009.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 418-a of the Criminal Code, as amended in 2009, prohibits the trafficking of persons, and that section 418-d prohibits the trafficking of juveniles. It notes that section 122(22) of the Criminal Code defines a juvenile as a person under 18 years of age.

Article 4(1). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that section 173(1) of the Labour Relations Law states that an employee under the age of 18 must not be ordered by the employer to carry out hard manual labour, works carried out underground or underwater, works connected with sources of ionizing radiations and other works which can have a harmful and dangerous impact on the health and development of the employee or works which are beyond their physical and psychological capacity. Section 173(2) states that the works referred to in section 173(1) shall be determined by the Minister in charge of labour affairs in coordination with the Minister in charge of health affairs. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on any determinations made on types of work deemed harmful, pursuant to section 173(2) of the Labour Relations Law.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that a draft regulation defining the activities prohibited for workers under 18 years of age has been developed and is in the process of being enacted. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the regulation contains a detailed list of jobs that are prohibited for persons under the age of 18. This list includes jobs that involve harmful biological or chemical materials (such as toxic, flammable, carcinogenic and explosive substances, lead and asbestos); jobs involving excess dust; jobs involving the slaughtering of animals; jobs in structures or facilities under construction; jobs with high-voltage related risks; and jobs at heights exceeding 1.5 metres. The Committee further notes that this draft regulation prohibits many activities for persons under the age of 18, including activities involving lifting and moving heavy loads which put undue strain on the limbs; activities in which a worker is on his feet for longer than four hours per shift; activities that are performed in strenuous positions; activities in extreme temperatures; and activities with high noise levels. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that this draft regulation, containing the list of types of work prohibited to persons under the age of 18, is enacted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this regulation, once adopted.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted the information in the 2009 UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons that the central police service operates a section dealing with trafficking and the smuggling of migrants, within the department for organized crime. It also noted that, in conjunction with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), the Government was providing training to law enforcement officials.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that, with the support of the IOM, two specialized training sessions were held on the subject of combating the trafficking of children in 2010. The Government indicates that 51 professionals participated in these training sessions, including inspectors from the Ministry of the Interior, social workers and labour inspectors from the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy, as well as public prosecutors and judges. However, the Committee also notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 23 June 2010, expressed concern that children are trafficked for various purposes to, from and within the borders of the country (CRC/C/MKD/CO/2, paragraph 75). The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to pursue its efforts with regard to strengthening the capacity of the relevant law enforcement bodies to ensure the effective monitoring and elimination of the trafficking of persons under the age of 18. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

Article 6. Programmes of Action. Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Children. The Committee previously noted that the Sub-group on Combating the Trafficking in Children (within the National Committee on Human Trafficking) had adopted the Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Children. The Committee also noted that, in conjunction with UNICEF, the Government had published an updated Action Plan to Combat Trafficking of Children for the period 2009 to 2012, and it requested information on measures taken in this regard.

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the implementation of the Action Plan to Combat Trafficking of Children during 2010 and 2011 and notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy pursued activities with regard to preventing human trafficking and protecting child victims of trafficking. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a comparative analysis on the subject of unaccompanied minors was carried out, to examine existing legislation, practices and mechanisms for protecting this vulnerable group. The Government also indicates that a National Helpline operates on a 24-hour basis and has received 247 calls related to human trafficking. In addition, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Prevention and Education Programme was implemented in 2010 and 2011, aimed at raising awareness, particularly among vulnerable populations, about human trafficking. Within this programme, in 2010, 2,000 educational leaflets were distributed, 15 workshops were held in primary and secondary schools to inform students about human trafficking and 200 high school students were trained to be peer educators on the topic. In 2011, the Government indicates that five workshops were held on human trafficking prevention for 170 students and that 1,250 copies of various preventive materials were distributed. Taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to continue its efforts to prevent and eliminate the trafficking of persons under 18 years of age, and to provide information on the results achieved in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, as well as for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted that, in 2007, the Government adopted Standard Operational Procedures for the treatment of trafficking victims, aimed at providing aid and protection to victims based on an institutionalised cooperative framework. It also noted that in 2005, the National Referral Mechanism (NRM) for victims of trafficking was established as a joint project of the National Committee on Human Trafficking and the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that activities related to the NRM have been implemented in coordination with the Centres for Social Workers, which include designated social workers in 30 cities and towns throughout the country. It also notes the information in the Government's report that, through the Coordinative Office of the NRM for human trafficking victims, trained staff are available 24 hours a day in order to provide assistance to victims identified by the police and non-governmental organizations. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that this assistance includes an initial assessment of the victim's needs, the organization of appropriate assistance including crisis intervention, psychological and social support, medical assistance and the provision of food and clothing, as well as the subsequent referral of each victim to a shelter for trafficking victims. Further measures taken through the NRM include the issuing of the necessary paperwork for the identified victims, the appointment of a special guardian for minors, an assessment of the possibility of returning to their family and the development and implementation of a customized re-socialization and a reintegration programme for child victims of trafficking. The Committee further notes the information in the Government's report that between 2006 and 2010, 89 child victims of trafficking including eight such victims in 2009 and ten in 2010 were identified. The Government indicates that in 2010, the NRM Office was active in 15 cases involving minors, out of which ten minors were identified as victims of trafficking. All ten victims were provided services in shelters. In addition, it notes the Government's indication that a legal representative is available to provide legal advice and representation on behalf of victims of trafficking in court appearances, and that these services were provided to ten presumed child victims of trafficking in 2010.

Lastly, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report that it has launched the Child Victims of Trafficking Centre, which aims to provide temporary accommodation to victims, to provide for their privacy and physical safety, and to provide an opportunity for such victims to recover physically, psychologically and socially. A child victim of trafficking may stay in the Centre for six months and that, during this time, social workers seek to find a long-term solution for the accommodation of the child. The Government states that, with the support of the ILO, training was provided the staff of this Centre.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Togo

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1984)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee noted the adoption of Act No. 2006-010 of 13 December 2006 issuing the Labour Code (the Labour Code of 2006) which repeals the Labour Code of 8 May 1974, as well as the adoption of Order No. 1464/MTEFP/DGTLs of 12 November 2007 determining the types of work prohibited for children, which repeals Order No. 15/MTAS-FP of 6 December 1958.

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government to the effect that a national policy for the protection of children and a five-year strategic plan (2008–13) were prepared in 2008 to serve as a reference framework for the preparation and implementation of child protection programmes. Among the expected results at the halfway stage of the implementation of the five-year strategic plan, the Committee observed that it is envisaged that 25,000 children and their parents in situations of extreme vulnerability will benefit from support and social assistance measures, with the strengthening of the capacities of 40 social centres and 14 education, activation and training centres for underprivileged young persons outside the school system. It is also expected that by 2013 a total of 2,400 children at risk between the ages of 12–17 years will benefit from a national programme of training, integration and assistance for the commencement of occupational activities. The Committee further noted that the Government is currently participating in a project to combat child labour through education implemented with the support of ILO–IPEC. It noted from the information provided by the Government in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that various action programmes have been adopted in the context of this project, including the implementation of measures to prevent the use of children as porters and for the removal and reintegration of 625 child porters from the markets of the city of Lomé and the protection and integration into the school system of 200 children removed from domestic work in the city of Lomé, as well as strengthening the capacities of community structures for the removal and social reintegration of 1,800 children engaged in hazardous agricultural work. According to the technical progress report for the project of September 2010, a total of 3,063 children have been prevented from working through the provision of educational services and 719 children were removed from work between the months of March and August 2010.

While taking due note of the measures adopted by the Government for the abolition of child labour, the Committee noted that, according to UNICEF statistics for the years 1999–2008, 29 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 14 years are engaged in work in Togo. According to the report of the quantitative survey undertaken in four economic regions of the country (Maritime, Plateau, Central and Lomé) in 2009–10 by the General Directorate of National Statistics and Accounting, which was attached to the Government's report under Convention No. 182, children principally work in the agricultural sector, household work and the urban informal economy. Moreover, the majority of children working in these three sectors are between 5–14 years of age. Expressing its concern at the number of children who work and whose age is lower than the minimum age for admission to employment or work, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat child labour, affording particular attention to children engaged in work in agriculture and the informal economy. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of children between the ages of 5–14 years who are prevented from prematurely entering the labour market and on the number of children removed from work in the context of the current action programmes.

Article 2(1). 1. Scope of application. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted with satisfaction that section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006 provides that children under 15 years of age may not be employed in any enterprise or perform any type of work, even on their own account. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged, including strengthening the capacities of the labour inspection services, with a view to ensuring the protection afforded by the Labour Code of 2006 to children who work on their own account or in the informal sector.

2. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee noted that, under section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006, the minimum age for admission to employment or work is set at 15 years, unless derogations are envisaged by order of the Minister responsible for labour. It noted the Government's indication that, in accordance with section 150 of the Labour Code, an order derogating from the minimum age for admission to employment has been prepared and is awaiting approval by the National Council for Labour and Labour Laws, which includes membership by employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide additional information on the nature of the exceptions covered by the Order derogating from the application of section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006 and requests it to provide a copy of the Order as soon as possible.

Article 2(2). Raising the minimum age initially specified. The Committee noted that Togo initially specified a minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years when it ratified the Convention. It noted with interest that section 150 of the Labour Code of 2006 provides that, "subject to the provisions respecting apprenticeship, children of either sex may not be employed in any enterprise or perform any type of work, even on their own account, before the age of fifteen (15) years". It drew the Government's attention to the fact that Article 2(2) of the Convention envisages the possibility for a State which decides to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work initially specified to notify the Director-General of the International Labour Office by a further declaration with a view to harmonizing the age established in the national legislation with that envisaged at the international level.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. Further to its previous comments, the Committee noted that certain provisions of Order No. 1464 authorize the employment of children from the age of 16 years on work likely to harm their health, safety or morals. For example, under section 9 of Order No. 1464, children may be engaged to operate vertical wheels, winches and pulleys from the age of 16 years, and section 11 authorizes the employment of young girls of 16 years of age on the external displays of shops and boutiques. The Committee also noted that section 12 authorizes children over 15 years of age to carry, drag or push loads of a weight of up to 140 kgs for boys of 15 years of age employed in transport by wheelbarrow. It also observed that no protection measures are envisaged relating to the performance of these types of work. The Committee reminded the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations may, after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, authorize the performance of hazardous types of work as from the age 16 years on condition that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure that the conditions set out in Article 3(3) of the Convention are fully guaranteed for young persons between 16–18 years of age engaged in the types of work covered by Order No. 1464. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation is in conformity with the Convention by guaranteeing that in no case may the performance of hazardous types of work be authorized for children under 16 years of age.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 24 August 2010 and the Government's report. It also noted the adoption of Act No. 2006-010 of 13 December 2006, issuing the Labour Code (the Labour Code of 2006), which repeals the Labour Code of 8 May 1974, and the adoption of Act No. 2007-017 of 6 July 2007 issuing the Children's Code (the Children's Code of 2007).

Article 3 of the Convention. The worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there was no provision in the current legislation prohibiting this worst form of child labour. It noted that Togo had prepared on 23 January 2003 a preliminary draft of a Bill to define the trafficking of children, which was awaiting adoption by the Council of Ministers, and that a draft Children's Code had been forwarded to Parliament in 2002.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the adoption of Act No. 2005-009 on the trafficking of children of 3 August 2005 (the Act on the trafficking of children). It observed that, by virtue of section 3 of this Act, the term "trafficking" is defined as the process by which any child is recruited or abducted, transported, accommodated or hosted, both within and outside the national territory, by one or more persons, for the purposes of her or his exploitation. Under the terms of section 2, the term "child" is defined as any person under the age of 18 years. The Committee also noted that those who engage in or are accomplices to the trafficking of children are liable to a sentence of imprisonment of five years (section 10) and that the penalty is doubled in cases where acts of the trafficking of children result in the death or disappearance of the victim (section 11). Section 11 also envisages the existence of aggravating circumstances which may result in the person committing the offence serving a penal sentence of ten years of imprisonment. This is the case, among others, where the victim of the trafficking is under 15 years of age at the time of the offence or where the child has been subjected to the worst forms of child labour. The Committee also noted that, under the terms of section 264(a) of the Children's Code of 2007, the sale and trafficking of children are considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour.

However, the Committee noted the allegations made by the ITUC to the effect that internal and international trafficking of children for domestic work exists in Togo. The internal trafficking affects children from poor and rural communities who are directed towards domestic work in towns, and particularly Lomé, or in fertile agricultural regions. Trans-border trafficking takes place, both from and towards Togo, from Nigeria, Gabon, Côte d'Ivoire, Burkina Faso, Niger, Benin and Ghana.

The Committee further noted the findings of the qualitative survey of the worst forms of child labour undertaken in 2009–10 by the General Directorate of Statistics and Accounting among 2,500 households in four economic regions of the country (Maritime, Plateau, Centrale and Lomé), which are appended to the Government's report. It observed that, according to the report of the discussion by the central region group, girls who are victims of trafficking are used for prostitution and domestic work, while boys are used as manual workers in plantations and quarries. The Committee noted the information provided in the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) Global Report on Trafficking in Persons of February 2009, indicating that, according to the Ministry of Labour of Togo, 1,758 victims of trafficking were identified in 2003 and 1,301 in 2004, most of whom were children. It noted that, according to the report, the number of investigations for trafficking in persons fell from 21 in 2005 (the year of the adoption of the Act on the trafficking of children) to nine in 2007. It observed that, of the nine persons investigated in 2007, six men were convicted of trafficking in persons, one for trafficking for sexual exploitation and the five others for trafficking for the purpose of slavery. The sentences received by these persons did not however exceed one year of imprisonment. The Committee also observed that, according to the indications contained in the report entitled "Trafficking in Persons Report 2010 – Togo" published on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, certain traffickers appear to obtain their release through the corruption of state officials. While taking due note of the measures adopted by the Government to combat the trafficking of children, the Committee expressed concern at the fall in the number of investigations conducted following the adoption of the Act on child trafficking, and with regard to the allegations of corruption from which certain traffickers benefit to evade justice. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons engaged in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions carried out and convictions obtained under Act No. 2005-009 on the trafficking of children.

Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous types of work. Child domestic work. The Committee noted the ITUC's communication reporting conditions of work which are hazardous and/or similar to forced labour encountered by many children engaged as domestic workers. According to the ITUC's allegations, there are thousands of child domestic workers in Togo, the large majority of whom are girls from poor and rural areas of the country, and who perform various potentially hazardous household tasks in private homes and may also be called upon to sell products in the street or in markets on behalf of their employers. These children work very long days (ten hours or more), frequently have no rest days and receive no or very little remuneration. They live in the house of their employers, are dependent upon the latter, and are isolated from their families, which makes them vulnerable to abuse and forced labour. Child domestic workers are also regularly subjected to verbal and physical violence and to sexual abuse, and are often deprived of education opportunities. The ITUC's communication also refers to a survey carried out in Togo between 2007 and 2008 of 61 girl domestic workers, which shows that the average age at which they enter into domestic service is nine.

The Committee noted that section 151(1) of the 2006 Labour Code prohibits forced labour, which is defined as one of the worst forms of child labour. It further noted that, in accordance with Order No. 1464/MTEFP/DGTLs of 12 November 2007 (Order No. 1464) determining the types of work prohibited for children, domestic work is considered to be a hazardous type of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age.

The Committee observed that, although the national legislation is in conformity with the Convention on this point, child domestic work performed under conditions similar to forced labour or under hazardous conditions remains a concern in practice. It reminded the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, work or employment of children under 18 years of age under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions are some of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, immediate and effective measures shall be taken to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that children under 18 years of age engaged in domestic work under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions benefit from the protection afforded by the national legislation. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide information on the application of the provisions respecting this worst form of child labour, including statistics on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking of children and child domestic work. The Committee noted the conclusions of the ITUC which recommends, inter alia, the implementation of measures to assist children engaged in domestic work to leave their work and to facilitate their rehabilitation. The Committee noted the information provided in the Government's report indicating that, in the context of the ILO-IPEC project to combat child labour through education, two workshops were organized in June 2009 with a view to the preparation of a plan of action on the trafficking of children and a plan of action to combat domestic work. According to the technical progress report of the project of September 2010, these sectoral action plans would have been adopted in December 2009. The Committee also noted that, in the context of this ILO-IPEC project, 126 children were prevented from entering domestic work and 22 were removed from this worst form of child labour between March and August 2010. All of them benefited from rehabilitation measures through education services. The Committee further noted that between June and September 2010, workshops were conducted for the training of labour inspectors on the issue of child domestic work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in the context of the plan of action on the trafficking of children and the plan of action to combat domestic work in terms of the identification, removal and reintegration of children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide copies of these plans of action.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking of children. 1. National Commission for the Shelter and Social Reintegration of Child Victims of Trafficking. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indications that a National Commission for the Shelter and Social Reintegration of Child Victims of Trafficking (CNARSEVT) was established in April 2002. The responsibilities of the CNARSEVT include: (i) organizing the repatriation to Togo of child victims of trafficking identified at the borders and in the various destination countries; (ii) coordinating the shelter and care (accommodation and health care) of repatriated child victims of trafficking; (iii) supervising the family and social reintegration of repatriated child victims of trafficking; (iv) centralizing information and statistical data on child victims of trafficking, sheltered and reintegrated at the national level; and (v) mobilizing the necessary resources for the repatriation, shelter and social reintegration of child victims of trafficking. The CNARSEVT has regional committees to discharge its functions. The Committee requests the Government to provide additional information on the activities of the CNARSEVT, including extracts of reports or documents, as well as the results achieved in terms of the number of child victims of trafficking who are repatriated, cared for and reintegrated.

2. Measures adopted in the context of various ILO-IPEC projects. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indications that, in the context of the implementation of the ILO-IPEC-LUTRENA project, the direct action taken for children and their families between 2001 and 2007 resulted in the removal of 4,038 children from trafficking and the reintegration in the school system of 173 children removed from this worst form of child labour. The Committee also noted the information contained in the Government's report indicating that four transitional shelter centres for children removed from trafficking have been established, that a system to shelter and refer children removed from trafficking has been created and that 165 vigilance committees have become operational in village communities. Furthermore, according to the technical progress report of September 2010 of the ILO-IPEC project to combat child labour through education, a total of 87 children, including 63 girls and 24 boys, were removed from trafficking between March and August 2010 and have benefited from educational services and training opportunities. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to take immediate and effective measures to remove child victims of sale and trafficking and requests it to continue providing information on the number of children who are, in practice, removed from this worst form of child labour and placed in transitory shelter centres.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation in relation to the sale and trafficking of children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government in its report indicating that several multilateral agreements have been concluded with neighbouring countries in the context of the measures to combat the trafficking of children. The Committee noted that Togo signed the Cooperation Agreement between Member States' Police Forces on Investigation in Criminal Matters adopted in Accra in 2003 by the Member States of ECOWAS, the Multinational Cooperation Agreement to Combat Child Trafficking of Abidjan (2005) and the Abuja Multilateral Cooperation Agreement to Combat Trafficking in Persons, especially Women and Children (2006). It also noted that Togo has concluded a quadrilateral agreement with Benin, Ghana and Nigeria on border crime. It further noted the Government's indication that discussions are under way with Nigeria for the signature of a bilateral agreement to combat the trafficking of children. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts and to take measures to cooperate with countries that are signatories to the multilateral cooperation agreements referred to above, thereby strengthening security measures on frontiers, with a view to detecting and intercepting child victims of trafficking and apprehending and arresting persons involved in networks engaged in the trafficking of children. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in the discussions for the adoption of a bilateral agreement with Nigeria.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Turkey

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the Government's report, in addition to the communication of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) dated 10 May 2011.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication of TÜRK-İS that no national policy was being pursued in Turkey to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and that the number of child workers was increasing. It noted the Government's statement that the framework for a national programme and policy for the elimination of child labour had been elaborated by the Child Labour Unit (CLU), in response to feedback received from various parties consulted, to create a wide-ranging and integrated national policy that is participative and time-bound. The Committee noted the information in the Government's report that measures to progressively eliminate child labour have been integrated into a wide variety of governmental initiatives and policies, including the Government's Ninth Five-Year Development Plan and the Ministry of Labour and Social Security's strategic programme for the years 2009–13. The Committee also noted that the issue of child labour is included as a priority in the Government's Joint Inclusion Memorandum with the European Union (EU), and that the EU has provided pre-accession assistance to address this phenomenon. In addition, the Committee noted that on 10 February 2009, the Government signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the ILO on the implementation of a Decent Work Country Programme, which includes the elimination of child labour as a priority. While taking note of these measures, the Committee observed the statement in the UNICEF draft country programme document of 5 April 2010 that, despite progress, child labour continues to be a serious issue in Turkey, particularly in the agricultural sector (E/ICEF/2010/P/L.6, paragraph 4).

The Committee notes the observations made by TÜRK-İS, according to which child labour in Turkey is found in the urban informal sector, in the domestic service, and in seasonal agricultural work.

The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, on the activities and measures it has adopted in order to combat child labour in Turkey. In particular, the Committee notes that the Ministry of Food, Agriculture and Livestock, in collaboration with related agencies and institutions, prepared a Rural Development Plan which covers the years 2010–13 and which aims to improve the working conditions and life standards of mobile seasonal agricultural workers. In this regard, significant measures are taken to prevent children from taking part in mobile seasonal agricultural work and to provide children of compulsory education age with access to education. Furthermore, a plan of action was prepared to remove children from child labour in seasonal agriculture in provinces where hazelnuts are produced, which is a sector where children accompany their parents and are exposed to unfavourable conditions that are not appropriate to their age and development.

Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of National Education is implementing, since 2008, the Programme of Raising Class Teaching (YSÖP) which introduces certain children aged 10–14 back to education, such as those who have been out of the education system due to economic or traditional reasons. The Committee observes that, with YSÖP, 28,559 students were introduced to schools between 2008–11, among which 7,677 in 2010–11 alone. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of Education has signed a Memorandum of Understanding in 2011 to enhance collaboration among agencies and institutions on the issue of providing children with access to quality education and removing the obstacles to access to education, including child labour. While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes with concern that child labour continues to be a problem in practice, particularly in the agricultural sector. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat child labour, including through the various measures mentioned above, and to continue providing detailed information on the results achieved.

Article 8. Artistic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 16 of the Civil Code provides that children under 15 years may appear in artistic performances with the consent of their family or legal representative. The Committee noted the statement by TÜRK-İS that a system regulating children's involvement in artistic endeavours is necessary, to allow for the monitoring and protection of these children. It noted the Government's indication that Chapter 19 (entitled "Social Policy and Employment") of the National Programme of Turkey for the Adoption of the EU Acquis (NPAA) (published in the Official Gazette of the Republic of Turkey on 31 December 2008 (No. 27097)), provides for the adoption of regulations in conformity with EU Council Directive 94/33, concerning the participation of persons under 18 in artistic activities. It also noted the Government's indication that preparatory technical work was completed in this regard. The Committee further noted that the Schedule of Legislative Alignment (table 19.4.1) of the NPAA indicates that amendments on the employment of children below the age of 18 in the field of fine arts is necessary, and shall be introduced in Turkish legislation by 2010 through the draft law amending Labour Law No. 4857 (page 210).

The Committee notes the Government's information that technical studies for the required amendments to Labour Law No. 4857 are completed but that a consensus on the details of the amendments has not yet been reached. In this regard, a project will be conducted in the second half of 2011 in order to decide what kind of authorization and monitoring mechanism should be established to provide the best protection for children involved in artistic performances. The Government indicates that conformity with the Convention on this point will be ensured through legal arrangements by the beginning of 2012 at the latest. Recalling that pursuant to Article 8(1) of the Convention, the competent authority may, by permits granted in individual cases, allow exceptions to the prohibition of employment under the general minimum age for such purposes as participation in artistic performances, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the forthcoming amendments will be in conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the relevant legislation with its next report.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that the third Child Labour Study (conducted in 2006 by the Turkish Statistics Institution (TSI) with ILO–IPEC support) indicated that, while the proportion of working children had dropped significantly, there remained 320,000 working children between the ages of 6–14 and 638,000 working children between the ages of 15–17 in 2006. The Committee noted the statement by TÜRK-İS that, while the number of working children has significantly decreased, there are still a number of children between the ages of 6–14 engaged in economic activity. TÜRK-İS indicated that to address this issue, poverty reduction is necessary and education should be encouraged.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the last Child Labour Force Survey is the one that was conducted by the TSI in 2006. There is no official updated data relating to the child labour force. However, the Government indicates that it is planned to update the child labour force data in collaboration with the TSI by the end of 2011 or beginning 2012. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the TSI conduct its research to obtain up-to-date information on the number of working children in Turkey. The Committee requests the Government to provide this information, particularly on the percentage of children below the age of 15 who are engaged in economic activity, in its next report. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and sex.

The Committee notes the Government's report, as well as the communication of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ), dated 17 May 2011, and the communication of the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TİSK), of 24 May 2011.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the indications of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), Turkey is a country of transit and destination for trafficked children, who are forced into prostitution and debt bondage. The Committee noted that the Children's Office (in the Commission for the Provinces) organizes a yearly course for its officials on combating the trafficking and sexual harassment of children. It also noted the information contained in the Global Report on Trafficking in Persons of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, according to which a second National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking was prepared in 2007 and was awaiting adoption. The Committee however expressed concern at allegations of complicity by law enforcement officers with human traffickers.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that 3,816 security officers responsible for surveys of children have been trained by the children's units on subjects relating to the Convention, including the trafficking of children. The Government adds that the second National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking was approved on 18 June 2009 and that it has entered into force. In the framework of this Plan, a Bill on foreign nationals and international protection has been prepared, which establishes measures applicable exclusively to child victims of trafficking. The Government also indicates that, according to the reports of the Office of the Attorney-General, there were 366 cases of trafficking in persons in 2009 and 347 cases in 2010, in which 3,912 and 2,842 presumed traffickers were involved, respectively, as well as 50 and 90 child victims of trafficking. Nonetheless, according to the reports of the criminal courts, only 16 persons responsible for trafficking involving victims under 18 years of age were found guilty and convicted in 2009, and five in 2010. The Government adds that 12 law enforcement officers presumed to have been involved in cases of trafficking were identified in 2009, and eight in 2010. However, the Government also indicates that specific sanctions are not envisaged for law enforcement officers, beyond the penalties established in section 80 of the Penal Code to punish persons found guilty of trafficking in persons, and administrative sanctions going as far as dismissal, in accordance with the provisions of the disciplinary rules of the police forces.

While taking due note of the measures adopted by the Government to combat trafficking, the Committee expresses concern at the low number of convictions in relation to the high number of presumed traffickers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that those responsible for the trafficking of children under 18 years of age, as well as complicit law enforcement officers, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied in practice. It requests the Government to continue indicating the number of persons found guilty and convicted in cases involving victims under 18 years of age. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the second National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking and the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration.
 1. Children working in the agricultural sector. The Committee noted previously that the protection afforded by the Labour Code does not cover children who work in agricultural undertakings employing fewer than 50 workers. It noted that, according to the Labour Inspection Board, 87 per cent of working children are employed in small enterprises with between one and nine workers. The Committee also noted that in 2006, 41 per cent of the 958,000 working children between the ages of 6 and 17 years were engaged in agriculture.

The Committee notes the indication by TÜRK-İŞ according to which one of the most important sectors in which children are engaged in hazardous work is seasonal agricultural work.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that Circular No. 2010/6 of the Prime Minister respecting the improvement of the social and professional life of nomadic seasonal agricultural workers and the project entitled "Improving the social and professional life of nomadic seasonal agricultural workers" (METIP project) envisage significant measures with a view to eliminating child labour in seasonal agricultural work and promoting their access to education. Furthermore, in towns producing nuts, where there is a high density of seasonal workers, a plan of action for the elimination of child labour in seasonal agricultural work for the production of nuts has been implemented. While noting the measures adopted by the Government, the Committee observes with concern that the engagement of children in hazardous types of work in the agricultural sector remains a problem in practice. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that children under 18 years of age are not engaged in hazardous types of work in the agricultural sector, particularly in seasonal agricultural work and the nut harvest. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the results obtained through the METIP project and Circular No. 2010/6 in terms of the number of children who have been removed from work in the agricultural sector and who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration services.

2. Children working in the furniture sector and other industrial sectors. The Committee previously noted that the results of the survey on the worst forms of child labour, contained in the Government's report, showed that, while generally the proportion of working children engaged in the furniture industry is fairly low, in some provinces a significant number of children continue to be engaged in this dangerous work. The survey indicated that, in the province of Çankiri, 5.1 per cent of the children surveyed worked in the furniture industry.

The Committee notes from the communication of the TÜRK-İŞ that the worst forms of child labour continue to exist in this sector, as well as in the auto mechanic industry.

In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that in the industrial sector children generally work in small enterprises and workshops for the repair and maintenance of cars, the production of furniture and shoes. The Government indicates that in 2009 the Labour Inspection Board conducted 639 inspections in furniture making, 143 inspections in shoemaking and 1,910 inspections in car repair workshops. In 2010, the number of visits in furniture-making and car repair workshops was 1,810. The Government indicates that, as a result of these inspections, the working conditions of 2,087 children and young workers have been improved, that no child under 15 years of age is employed in these sectors and that hazardous and arduous types of work are no longer performed by children and young workers. The Committee further notes that a project came into force in May 2011 in the furniture-making sector in Adana, Ankara, Çankiri, Eskişehir and Bursa with the objective of improving working conditions in enterprises, eliminating unlawful work by children and guiding children towards education. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures for inspections to be carried out in the furniture-making, shoemaking and car repair sectors with a view to ensuring that children under 18 years of age do not perform hazardous types of work in these sectors. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of children performing hazardous types of work in such workshops or enterprises who have been identified in this way and removed from such work. It also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the project that entered into force in May 2011 in the furniture-making sector in terms of the number of children who have been removed from hazardous types of work in the sector and then rehabilitated and socially integrated through educational measures.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Children living or working on the streets. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the TISK, nearly 10,000 children were working on the streets of Istanbul and nearly 3,000 in Gaziantep. They work under dangerous conditions without protection. It noted that, according to TÜRK-İŞ, work by children in the streets is one of the most dangerous forms of child labour in Turkey and that, while accurate estimates of children working in other sectors are available, the total number of street children remains unknown. The Committee also noted the results of the survey on the worst forms of child labour, contained in the Government's report, to the effect that, of the nearly 21,000 working children surveyed in the province of Van, 6.7 per cent were working on the streets. Other provinces with high proportions of children working on the streets include Erzurum, where 4 per cent of the nearly 28,000 children surveyed were found to be working on the streets, and Elazığ, where the figures are 6.7 per cent and 10,000 children, respectively. The Committee noted that since 1997, the General Directorate of Social Services and Child Protection (SHÇEK) has been operating 36 centres and six shelters in 28 different regions which offer rehabilitation services to children in difficulties, including those who work on the streets.

The Committee notes the indication by TÜRK-İŞ that the phenomenon of children working on the streets still exists in Turkey, but that there is a significant gap in statistics on this subject and that it is necessary to create a database on the phenomenon.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are now 37 centres for children and youth attached to the SHÇEK in 29 regions, offering various services and housing and health care assistance, education and guidance for children living or working on the streets. Through these centres, at the end of December 2010, 246 children had been removed from working in the streets and had returned to school, 948 children who were at risk of being engaged in work and in the worst forms of child labour were placed in school and 3,857 children were provided with support in the education system. The Government adds that, in 2009 and 2010, with the support of UNICEF, workshops on the "Service and evaluation model for departmental plans of action" were held in eight pilot towns. The objective of the workshops is to develop plans of action in all towns to reduce the number of children living or working on the streets. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that children under 18 years of age who live or work on the streets do not perform work which, by its nature, is likely to harm their health, safety or morals, and to continue indicating the results achieved. It also requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in the formulation of plans of action to reduce the number of children living or working on the streets, and the results obtained following their implementation.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, with technical support from the ILO and funding from the European Union, the Government had undertaken a study on the worst forms of child labour in seven provinces which covered 99,356 families in 103 districts and 330 towns. The Committee noted that the results of the study indicated the proportion of children in each of the provinces working in four hazardous sectors: work on the streets, tanning and shoemaking, furniture making and car repair. The Committee noted that of all the provinces surveyed, Van appeared to have the highest proportion of children working in these hazardous sectors (with 9.1 per cent of working children between the ages of 6 and 17 years working in one of the four sectors), followed by Elazığ (7.1 per cent) and Çankırı (6.2 per cent).

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) that it is planned to conduct a survey to update the statistics on child labour towards the end of 2011 or the beginning of 2012, as the last national study was undertaken by the Institute of Statistics of Turkey in 2006. Expressing the hope that the study on child labour in Turkey will include statistics on the worst forms of child labour, and particularly on hazardous types of work in street work, tanning and shoemaking, furniture making and car repairs, the Committee firmly encourages the Government to take measures to ensure that the study is conducted and completed within the envisaged time frame. It requests the Government to provide the results of this study with its next report. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number and nature of the contraventions reported and the investigations undertaken, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uganda

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

Article 1 and Part V of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Government acknowledges the problem of child labour in the country and recognizes its dangers. The Committee noted that, according to the 2005 Uganda National Household Survey, 31.1 per cent of children aged from 5 to 14 years were involved in economic activity (32.4 per cent of boys and 29.8 per cent of girls). The Committee noted that, according to the joint ILO–IPEC, UNICEF and World Bank report on understanding children’s work in Uganda of August 2008, an estimated 38.3 per cent of children aged 7 to 14 years, over 2.5 million children in absolute terms, were engaged in economic activity in 2005–06. Some 1.4 million children under the age of 12 years were engaged in economic activity, and 735,000 children aged less than 10 years were economically active.

In this regard, the Committee previously noted that a national policy on child labour (NCLP), designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and progressively raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work, was adopted in 2006. The policy includes awareness-raising measures, integration of child labour concerns in national and district-level programmes, stimulating collective action at all levels of society and providing a legislative and institutional framework for action against child labour. It had noted that the Government is cooperating with ILO–IPEC in the elaboration of a national action plan (NAP) in order to implement this national policy. The Committee noted that, in its report, the 2009 Technical Advisory Mission on Child Labour Issues (the mission) expressed concern that a NAP for the elimination of child labour had yet to be developed to implement the NCLP. In this regard, the Committee noted that many activities were undertaken to get the process for the NAP started again and that the target date for the NAP to be adopted and operational is March–August 2012.

The Committee notes that, according to information available at ILO–IPEC, a retreat was organized in September 2010 to discuss the NAP which brought together all the relevant constituents and stakeholders. As a result, the draft NAP was produced and its validation took place in March 2011. The final NAP is currently being worked on. In the meantime, the Committee observes that a Simplified National Child Labour Policy was elaborated and adopted in 2010 as a first step to towards raising awareness on the NCLP and child labour matters in Uganda. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Uganda Bureau of Statistics (UBOS), in collaboration with SIMPOC, has started conducting a standalone National Child Labour Survey in April 2011, which should provide up-to-date data disaggregated by sex, as well as statistics on the situation of child labourers. Once again, the Committee encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts in order to ensure that the NAP for the elimination of child labour is validated and adopted by the target date. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this NAP once it is adopted, as well as the results of the standalone survey of the UBOS, as soon as it is finalized. Finally, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the application of the Convention in practice, including recent statistical data on the employment of children and young persons. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and sex.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, pursuant to sections 2, 32(4) and 32(5) of the Employment Act of 2006, the list of types of hazardous work to be prohibited to persons below 18 years of age was drafted in consultation with the social partners. It noted that the draft hazardous list had been revised and approved during the top management meeting of the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development in May 2009, and that it would be gazetted after the drafting of an extra paragraph on light work. The Committee noted that, during its time in Uganda in 2009 the mission observed that the regulations necessary to implement the newly enacted laws in Uganda, including the Employment Act of 2006, were not being adopted or issued, partly due to the fact that the Labour Advisory Board (LAB) had not met for three years and that the adoption of regulations fell within the purview of the terms of reference of the LAB. The mission considered that the credibility of these newly enacted laws was at stake if they could not be implemented. The Committee therefore urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that they would be adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government’s information that the Employment of Children Regulations, adopted in 2011, contain the list of hazardous activities prohibited to children under 18 years of age. It observes that this list includes occupations in a variety of sectors, such as agriculture (harvesting and marketing of tobacco or tea, preparing the land of rice plantations, maize milling, fishing), construction (building and road work), mining (sand harvesting and stone crushing), the urban informal economy (market and street activities, motor garages and carpentry workshops), and in entertainment (waitressing and attending in hotels, bars, restaurants or casinos).

Article 7. Light work. The Committee had previously noted that according to section 32(2) of the Employment Act, a child under the age of 14 years shall not be employed except for light work carried out under the supervision of an adult person and which does not affect the child’s education. Light work, according to section 2 of the Employment Act, means work that is not physically, mentally and socially injurious to the child. The Committee noted that a list of light work activities had not yet been determined by the Ministry of Labour, but that an extra paragraph defining light work would be added to the draft list on hazardous work, after which the document would be gazetted. However, it noted that the Federation of Ugandan Employers indicated to the mission that a list of light work activities had not yet been determined by the Ministry of Labour, and that the adoption of a provision on light work also fell within the purview of the LAB. The Committee therefore requested the Government to take immediate measures to determine light work activities that may be undertaken by children between 12 and 14 years of age and the conditions in which, light work may be undertaken.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 4 of the Employment of Children Regulations provides that light work activities include such occupations as sewing, sweeping, cleaning the floor or organizing the house, washing clothes, making purchases at the market, looking for firewood and preparing family meals.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee had previously noted the absence of legislative provisions allowing the participation of children below the minimum age of 14 years in artistic performances. It requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged for the granting of permits, as well as the conditions subject to which permits are granted for children under the age of 14 years who participate in practice in artistic performances.

The Committee notes with interest that section 9 of the Employment of Children Regulations provides that an employer who wishes to employ a child in artistic performances shall apply to the Commissioner, and that the Commissioner shall issue such permits restricting the age, number of hours of work and conditions in which work in this apprenticeship is allowed, in accordance with Article 8 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee took note of the report of the Technical Advisory Mission (the Mission) on Child Labour Issues that was carried out in Uganda in July 2009.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. 1. Abductions and the exaction of forced labour. The Committee had previously noted that article 25:1 of the Constitution of Uganda stipulates that no person shall be held in slavery or servitude and that section 25:2 states that no person shall be required to perform forced labour. It had noted that the Penal Code punishes as offences abduction (section 126); detention with sexual intent (section 134); and abduction for the purpose of reducing to slavery (section 245). Moreover, section 5 of the Employment Act of 2006 states that anyone who uses or assists any other person in using forced or compulsory labour commits an offence. Finally, section 252 of the Penal Code provides that any person who unlawfully compels any other to labour against their will commits a misdemeanour.

However, in its previous comments under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the Committee had noted that the armed group Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) abducted children of both sexes, forcing them to provide work and services as concubines, these alleged activities being associated with the killings, beatings and rape of these children. The Committee had noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Uganda of 7 May 2007 (Secretary-General's report of 2007) (S/2007/260, paragraph 10), the figures from 2005 suggested that as many as 25,000 children may have been abducted since the onset of the conflict in northern Uganda in Kitgum and Gulu districts. However, the total number of abductions had significantly reduced since its peak in 2004. The total number of abductions in January 2005 was estimated to be approximately 1,500, significantly reducing to 222 over the first six months of 2006. Since September 2006, there had been no confirmed reports on the abduction of children in Uganda by the LRA. Moreover, the peace talks between the Government of Uganda and the LRA had officially opened on 14 July 2006 and the parties had signed a formal cessation of hostilities agreement in August 2006, which was extended until 30 June 2007. It was initially expected that the prospects of the signing of a peace agreement would mean a potentially significant increase in the number of children released by the LRA. However, despite repeated pleas by various stakeholders, the LRA had not released children from its ranks.

The Committee noted that, in its concluding observations for the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict of 17 October 2008, the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern over continued abductions of children living in border regions by the LRA, to be used as child soldiers, sex slaves, spies and to carry goods and weapons (CRC/C/OPAC/UGA/CO/1, paragraph 24). The Committee on the Rights of the Child was further concerned over the inhuman and degrading treatment of the abducted children. Moreover, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Uganda of 15 September 2009 (Secretary-General's report of 2009), the LRA has not knowingly operated in Ugandan territory since the cessation of hostilities in August 2006. Over the past four years, however, the LRA, including a substantial but unknown number of Ugandan children associated with its forces, has increasingly moved into neighbouring countries to establish additional bases; and children and their communities in the Sudan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic have been the victims of attacks that have claimed hundreds of lives and resulted in the disappearance of hundreds of children. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, 233 abductions of children by the LRA were documented by child protection partners between 1 December 2008 and 30 June 2009. The Secretary-General further indicates that efforts to sign a Comprehensive Peace Agreement with the LRA failed and, as a result, the LRA has increasingly become a regional actor. Since December 2008, LRA elements, operating in small groups, reportedly conducted attacks against several localities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, killing civilians, burning houses and abducting children and adults. In total, it is estimated that more than 1,000 civilians have been killed and several hundred abducted by the LRA since it increased its violent activities in 2008.

The Committee therefore once again expressed its deep concern at the situation of children abducted by the LRA and forced to provide work and services as informants, porters, hostages, as well as becoming victims of sexual exploitation and violence. It observed that, although national legislation appears to prohibit abductions and the exaction of forced labour, this remains a serious issue of concern in practice, in particular in the context of renewed violence and conflict. In this regard, the Committee once again recalled that, by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, the exaction of forced labour from children is considered as one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to eradicate abductions and the exaction of forced labour from children under 18 years, as a matter of urgency. In this regard, it requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of offenders are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It also urges the Government to take measures to cooperate with the neighbouring countries and accordingly reinforce security measures, particularly on the common borders with the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Central African Republic and Sudan, with a view to bringing an end to this worst form of child labour.

2. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee had previously noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007 (paragraph 5), Uganda is among the countries where parties to armed conflicts – the Ugandan People Defence Force (UPDF), the local defence units and the LRA – recruited or used children and were responsible for other grave violations. According to this report, it was estimated that, notwithstanding various peace agreements, up to 2,000 women and children may still have been held by the LRA within its ranks and had not been released. Regarding children recruited by the national military forces, the Secretary-General's report of 2007 indicated that the UPDF recruited young boys to serve in its armed forces, especially within the local defence units, which are UPDF auxiliary forces. The report of 2007 also indicated that during recruitment, age verification was rarely carried out. After training, many of these children were said to be fighting alongside the UPDF. Although the Government of Uganda incorporated, in 2005, in the Uganda People's Defence Forces Act, a provision prohibiting the recruitment and use of child soldiers, the lack of effective monitoring at the local level led to children continuing to join some elements of the armed forces. However, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007, the Government had committed itself to strengthening the implementation of the existing legal and policy frameworks on the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. Moreover, in December 2006, the UPDF agreed to undertake inspection and monitoring, including to verify age during the recruitment process. Furthermore, the Uganda Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting (UTF) had committed itself to working with the UPDF and the local defence units to ensure immediate and appropriate follow-up to remove any person under 18 years of age found within the UPDF and local defence units, including through referral to appropriate child protection agencies.

The Committee noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009 (paragraphs 3–7), on 16 January 2009, the Government of Uganda and the UTF signed an action plan regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda, which obligates the Government to prevent and end the association of children under the age of 18 with armed auxiliary forces; appoint focal points at the highest level of the Government on the implementation of the action plan; provide access on a regular and ad hoc basis to the UPDF and auxiliary facilities to the UTF to monitor and verify compliance; and promptly investigate allegations of recruitment and use of children and ensure the prosecution of perpetrators. Furthermore, the action plan identifies time-bound activities relating to children associated with the armed forces in Uganda. Among others, the measures include verification visits to all UPDF facilities and regular access to all relevant UPDF units by the UTF. In compliance with the action plan, the Government of Uganda and the UTF agreed upon a series of visits by the UTF to UPDF facilities in northern Uganda in early 2009, with a view to verifying that no persons under the age of 18 were present within, or recruited into, its ranks.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that no case of recruitment or use of children by the UPDF or its auxiliary forces has come to the attention of the UTF. Throughout its visits, the UPDF extended excellent cooperation to the verification team. Furthermore, the UTF observed the UPDF recruitment process in the northern districts of Uganda from 12 to 14 February 2009. It was noted that age requirements for recruitment into the UPDF, as set forth in existing laws and regulations, were strictly observed and followed by UPDF officers in compliance with the UPDF internal circular of February 2009 containing instructions on recruitment criteria. The Committee noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009, the UTF will nevertheless continue to monitor compliance of the UPDF within the action plan framework to ensure that continuous efforts are made to prevent the recruitment and use of children and that the implementation of the action plan continues.

However, the Committee noted that the LRA, whose leadership originates in Uganda and a significant number of whose forces are also from Uganda, remains listed on the Secretary-General's annexes to his reports on children and armed conflict because of the continued practice of recruitment of children within its ranks. Although LRA violations against children were originally reported solely under Uganda country situation reporting, the geostrategic situation of that group, which is expanding its armed activities to the wider region, has prompted the request of a strategy for increased regional joint capability to monitor and report on cross-border recruitment and use of children by the LRA. The UTF has therefore been engaged in consultations with the Resident Coordinator of the United Nations Country Team in Uganda, the United Nations Children's Fund headquarters and regional offices, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations missions in Sudan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, on appropriate steps to establish a subregional strategy to monitor and report on grave child rights violations committed by the LRA in the region.

The Committee welcomed the measures taken by the Government and the positive results it has registered with regard to the UPDF. However, it expressed its concern at the situation of children who continue to be recruited for armed conflict by the LRA. The Committee refers to the Secretary-General's call upon the Government of Uganda to prioritize the protection of children in its military actions against LRA elements, either on Ugandan territory or in joint operations in neighbouring countries (S/2009/462, 15 September 2009, paragraph 28). The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the situation and to take, as a matter of urgency, immediate and effective measures to put a stop in practice to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by the LRA. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a strategy for increased regional joint capability to monitor and report on cross-border recruitment and use of children by the LRA is adopted as soon as possible. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years for use in armed conflict are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children who have been affected by armed conflict. The Committee had previously noted that the orphans and vulnerable children policy includes interventions to mitigate the impact of the conflict on vulnerable children, especially by providing them with psychological support and with health-care services. It had also noted that a number of measures had been taken in order to rehabilitate children affected by conflict: (a) the psychological support programme for the care of children in conflict areas; (b) the creation of the National Core Group for Psychological Support, responsible for advocacy against abduction and conflict-related child abuse; and (c) the project implemented by Save the Children from Denmark and Sweden, in collaboration with the UPDF and Gulu Support Organization (GUSCO) with the aim of training officers in the UPDF's Child Protection Unit and promoting the observance of rights of children affected by armed conflict. Moreover, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2007 (paragraph 62), interim care centres, known as reception centres, were established in the north of Uganda in order to receive formerly abducted children, including those referred by the UPDF Child Protection Unit.

The Committee noted that, according to the mission report, the Ministry of Education and Sports (MoES) made interventions for child victims of armed conflict, as well as abducted children, and specialized schools have been built in the north of the country to give support and rehabilitate these children. Indeed, the Committee noted that, according to the report on Education Needs Assessment for Northern Uganda of February 2008 (ENA report) prepared by the Education Planning Department, the MoES has, among other things, provided psychosocial back-up support by training 50 trainers in psychosocial training, helped with the demobilization of 53 child soldiers, supported eight reception centres for former child abductees. The MoES has also constructed 27 learning centres with 114 classrooms in Kitgum, Pader and Lira for 6,000 displaced primary school children, as well as a primary boarding school at Laroo in Gulu with a capacity for 1,000 pupils. Furthermore, the ENA report indicates that many education provider organizations have contributed to the interventions of the MoES with a view to provide an interim response to the needs of northern Uganda in terms of education. The Committee also noted that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 2009, the action plan regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda signed by the Government of Uganda and the UTF on 16 January 2009 covers different areas of activities, including preventing the recruitment of children under 18 years for use in armed conflict and releasing and reintegrating underage recruits. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts and take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed conflict and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of children under 18 years of age who have been rehabilitated and reintegrated into their communities through these measures, in particular through the action of the MoES and through the activities undertaken under the action programme regarding children associated with armed forces in Uganda.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ukraine

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1979)

Article 2(1) of the Convention and Part IV of the report form. 1. Scope of application and labour inspection.

The Committee had previously noted the Government's information that the provisions of section 188 of the Labour Code, regulating the minimum age for admission to employment, as well as the provisions prohibiting the employment of children in hazardous work, apply to workers of all enterprises, institutions and organizations, irrespective of the forms of ownership, type of activity and sectoral affiliation. It had observed that since 2005 the Goznadzortrud (authority within the Ministry of Social Labour and Social Policy which monitors the compliance of labour legislation) had participated in the implementation of the ILO-IPEC project "Institutional development of labour inspection for participation in the System of Child Labour Monitoring (CLMS) in two pilot regions – Donetsk and Kherson regions". It had noted with interest the Government's information that CLMS developed in the Donetsk and Kherson regions would be replicated at the country level under the "National Plan of Action to implement the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child for 2006–16", adopted in June 2007.

The Committee had, however, noted the Government's statement that, the supervision of the use of child labour in the informal sector of the economy remained an outstanding issue which concerned, above all, the right of access to workplaces in the informal sector. According to the Government, the lack of criteria of evaluation of the presence of employment relations when using child labour in private garden plots or in the street did not provide the inspectors with the grounds to apply administrative sanctions. The basic problem, therefore, consisted in the development of a mechanism to collect evidence testifying to the fact that a child works for an employer in the absence of any written arrangements. It had noted the Government's information that the labour inspectors involved in the implementation of the ILO-IPEC programme in the Donetsk and Kherson regions were carrying out their activities to develop such a mechanism with the participation of the representatives of other supervisory bodies. The Committee had repeatedly expressed its hope that, in adopting the CLMS at the national level, the labour inspection component concerning children working in the informal sector would be strengthened.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not supply any additional information on the CLMS. Moreover, it notes, that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations (CRC/C/UKR/CO/3-4, paragraph 74, 21 April 2011), expressed concern at the high number of children below the age of 15 years working in the informal and illegal economy, in particular in illegal coal mines, as well as the extent of violations of labour law regarding the employment of children. It also expressed its deep concern at the challenges in identifying child labour in the informal sector, and at the lack of authority of the State Department for Supervision of the Observance of Labour Legislation to monitor the informal sector as well as child labour in the family. The Committee expresses its concern at the situation of children working in the informal and illegal economy and urges the Government to intensify its efforts to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services in the informal economy, in order to ensure that the protection established by the Convention is ensured for children working in this sector. It once again requests the Government to indicate any measures adopted or envisaged within the CLMS at the national level on improving the capacity of labour inspectors to detect cases of child labour in the informal sector with a view to removing these children from child labour, and the results achieved.

2. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee had previously noted that under section 188(2) of the Labour Code, children of 15 years of age may exceptionally be authorized to work with the consent of their parents or parent substitutes. The Committee had observed that the above provision of the Code allows young people to carry out an economic activity at an age lower than the minimum age for admission to employment or work specified by Ukraine upon ratifying the Convention, namely 16 years. It had also noted the Government's information that within the framework of the ILO-IPEC project "Declaration of the basic rights and freedoms at work", a draft Labour Code of Ukraine was being prepared the provisions of which comply with international labour standards. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures within the framework of the adoption of the new Labour Code, to ensure that no one under the age of 16 years may be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, in conformity with Article 2(1) of the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the new Labour Code, as soon as it has been adopted.

Articles 3(3) and 6. Authorization to perform hazardous work from the age of 16 and vocational training. The Committee had previously noted that according to the provisions stipulated under Order No. 244 of the State Labour Protection Inspectorate of 15 December 2003, the admission of minors to employment in hazardous occupations is allowed only when minors reach the age of 18 years. It had also noted that by virtue of section 2(3) of the Order of the Ministry of Health of Ukraine No. 46 of March 1994, persons under the age of 18 years pursuing vocational training may perform hazardous types of work for not more than four hours a day on condition that existing sanitary and health norms on labour protection are strictly observed. However, it had noted the Government's statement that there are no adopted norms providing a minimum age for the admission of children and young persons to training. The Committee had also observed that, children between 14 and 16 years are allowed to perform hazardous work during vocational training. It had reminded the Government that, according to Article 3(3) of the Convention, the competent authority may, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, authorize employment or work as from the age of 16 years on the condition that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that the young persons have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report on this point, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures within the framework of the adoption of the new Labour Code, to ensure that children who follow vocational training programmes or apprenticeships are allowed to perform hazardous work only from the age of 16 years, in conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention.

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. The Committee had previously noted that section 188(3) of the Labour Code provides that, in order to teach young people to work productively, students in general vocational and technical education or specialized secondary education having attained 14 years of age may perform light work during their leisure hours provided the consent of one of their parents or parent substitutes is obtained and on condition that it does not harm their health or interrupt their schooling. It had also noted the Government's information that the draft Labour Code provides that the list enumerating the types of light work which may be performed by children shall be approved by a specially authorized authority dealing with labour issues. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on any developments made in this regard. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again expresses the firm hope that provisions determining light work activities which may be performed by children from the age of 14 years will soon be adopted pursuant to the provisions of the draft Labour Code. It once again requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, and to provide a copy of the provisions determining the light work activities as soon as they have been adopted.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that an attempt was being made in the draft Labour Code to regulate the labour relations of young persons admitted to employment in the cinema, theatre and concerts. In this regard, it had noted the Government's information on the conditions and procedures to be followed for acquiring permission to employ children under 14 years for participation in artistic performances. The Committee had observed the absence of provisions limiting the hours of work and prescribing the conditions of work by children under 14 years for artistic performances. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again expresses the firm hope that in the process of adopting the draft Labour Code, the Government will take the necessary measures to limit the number of hours during which and prescribe the conditions in which children under 14 years may be granted permission to work in artistic performances as laid down under Article 8 of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments made in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the statistical reports of labour inspections provided by the Government with regard to the employment status of working children. According to this data, the labour inspectors inspected 441 enterprises during August–September 2010, and found 1,132 minors, including 28 children under 14 years of age, 134 children of 14 to 15 years, 144 persons of 15 to 16 years, and 826 persons of 16 to 18 years working in violation of the labour legislation. The Government's report indicates that children under 14 years of age who were found working (28 children) worked in the agricultural sector. Regarding the types of violations detected, the Committee notes the Government's information that 98 children were working without any labour contract, 16 children worked in heavy and harmful conditions; 74 children worked overtime; and 27 children worked without any wages. It further notes that the labour inspectors issued 274 instructions to employers to eliminate such violations, and 195 employers were brought to administrative liability. It also notes the Government's statement that the labour inspectors, in cooperation with the services on minors' affairs conducted 200 awareness-raising events of children and their parents. Having noted previously the Government's information that the Centre of Social Expertise of the Institute of Sociology of the National Academy of Sciences conducted a study on the use of child labour in six sectors of the informal economy (agriculture, street trade, work in mines, services sector, commercial sexual exploitation and illegal activities, including begging), and further noting that the Government has not provided any information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide statistical information on child labour gathered from the study. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of children found working by the labour inspection services, especially in the informal sector, and on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties applied.

The Committee notes that the draft Labour Code which has been under preparation since 2007 has not yet been adopted. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take all the necessary measures to bring the draft Labour Code into force, taking into consideration the above comments made by the Committee. In this regard the Committee invites the Government to consider seeking technical assistance from the ILO.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Worst forms of child labour and the application of the Convention in practice. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee observed that section 149 of the Criminal Code prohibits the sale and trafficking in persons for the purpose of sexual exploitation, use in the pornographic industry, engagement in criminal activities, peonage, adoption for commercial purposes, and use in armed conflict and labour exploitation. Subsection (2) provides for a higher penalty when this offence is committed against a minor. It also noted that section 150-1 of the Criminal Code provides for penalties for the offence of using or coercing a child for begging. The Committee, however, noted that, according to the ILO-IPEC publication entitled "Child trafficking – The people involved: A synthesis of findings from Albania, Republic of Moldova, Romania and Ukraine", 2005 (pages 14–15), Ukraine is not only a source country of trafficking victims but also an important transit route from other countries in the region. Moreover, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution, and child pornography of 24 January 2007 (A/HRC/4/31/Add.2, paragraphs 48–53), trafficking in children through and from Ukraine is a major problem. In respect of cross-border trafficking, girls are sent to the Russian Federation, Turkey, Poland, the Czech Republic, Italy and the United Arab Emirates (UAE). Boys are sent to the Russian Federation, Poland, Republic of Moldova, Turkey and Romania. Children trafficked across borders are exploited in street-vending, domestic labour, agriculture, dancing, employment as waiters and for sexual services. Trafficked children are obliged to work long hours (often eight hours a day) and frequently at night. Considering the seriousness of the problem related to trafficking in children, within and outside Ukraine, the Committee requested the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat and eliminate the trafficking of children under 18 years as well as to provide information on the practical application of the penalties laid down in sections 149, 150, 304 and 150-1 of the Criminal Code.

The Committee notes the Government's information that in 2009, a criminal activity of a transnational group which was engaged in the recruitment and trafficking of Ukrainian nationals to Turkey for sexual exploitation was uncovered. The Government's report further states that with a view to eliminating all criminal networks and blocking the channels of trafficking in persons, the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA) of Ukraine together with the law enforcement authorities of the Republic of Turkey arrested all members of this criminal group and liberated from sexual slavery the victims who were Ukrainian women. During the same period, another transnational organized criminal group which was engaged in trafficking in women to the UAE and other states for sexual exploitation was dismantled and the unlawful activity of 11 members of this group, including the nationals of Ukraine, Russian Federation, Iraq and the UAE was terminated.

With regard to the practical application of the provisions of the Criminal Code, the Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2009, 279 crimes including 42 crimes involving children were registered under section 149 of the Criminal Code; 41 crimes involving children were detected in 2010 and 11 crimes involving children were detected during the first five months of 2011. Similarly, in 2009, 15 criminal cases were registered under section 150 of the Criminal Code (exploitation of children), 14 cases in 2010, and 3 cases during the first five months of 2011. Furthermore, 1,904 cases involving children in a criminal activity/begging (section 304 of the Criminal Code) were registered in 2009, 1,993 cases were registered in 2010 and 1,104 cases were registered during the first five months of 2011. The Committee further notes the Government's information that with regard to section 150-1 of the Criminal Code (using or coercing a child for begging), 87 cases were reported in 2009, 94 cases in 2010, and 45 cases during the first five months of 2011. Nonetheless, the Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in its concluding observations of 21 April 2011 (CRC/C/UKR/CO/3-4, paragraph 80), remained concerned that Ukraine continues to be one of the largest source countries of trafficking in Europe, and expressed its regret at the lack of information on prosecutions of persons engaged in trafficking of children. While acknowledging the various efforts taken by the Government in the area of trafficking, the Committee observes that the trafficking of children still remains a major issue in Ukraine. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure in practice, the protection of children under 18 years of age from the sale and trafficking of children for labour or sexual exploitation. In this regard, it requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice, in accordance with the national legislation in force. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to supply specific information on the practical application of sections 149, 150, 304 and 150-1 of the Criminal Code, including statistics on the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee noted the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine's (FTUU) allegations that in Ukraine, children as young as 10 years old were involved in prostitution, pornographic activities and the sex industry. It observed that, although various provisions of the Penal Code prohibited the commercial sexual exploitation of children, it remained an issue of concern in practice.

The Committee notes the Government's information that in 2009, 1,012 crimes were registered under section 301 of the Criminal Code (importation, manufacturing, marketing and dissemination of pornographic articles) including 16 cases involving minors. In 2010, 10 cases involving minors and in 2011, three cases involving minors, were registered. Similarly, in 2009, 866 crimes including 16 cases involving minors were registered under section 303 of the Criminal Code (trading and involving persons in prostitution), in 2010, nine cases involving minors and, in 2011, eight cases involving minors were registered. The Committee further notes the Government's information with regard to the various institutional and practical measures taken by the MIA to improve the efficiency of the activities of the law enforcement bodies in terms of the prevention and detection of crimes against children. In 2011, the representatives of the MIA participated in an international workshop on the fight against spread of child pornography on the Internet, and in a training seminar entitled "Struggle against sexual exploitation of children – exchange of best practices", held by the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Republic of Moldova and the NGO "La Strada". In addition, the Committee notes the Government's statement that measures have been taken to identify the places of registration of the websites where child pornography is posted, and the persons who are responsible with the creation and updating of these sites. However, the Committee notes, the grave concern expressed by the CRC, in its concluding observations of 21 April 2011 (CRC/C/UKR/CO/3-4, paragraph 78), at the increase in the number of cases of sexual abuse, exploitation and involvement of children in prostitution and pornographic materials, and the alarmingly high number of Internet users of child pornography (5 million users per month). The Committee expresses its deep concern over the situation of children involved in prostitution and pornography and urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to eliminate the use, procuring or offering of children under the age of 18 for prostitution, the production of pornography and for pornographic performances. It also urges the Government to ensure that any person found guilty of committing an offence against minors under sections 301 and 303 of the Criminal Code is prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end and on the results obtained, particularly in terms of the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out and sanctions applied.

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking. The Committee noted that the ILO-IPEC programme on child trafficking entitled "Prevention and reintegration programme to combat trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation in the Balkans and Ukraine" (PROTECT CEE 2001-07), ended in 2007. It requested the Government to continue taking measures under other action programmes to remove children from trafficking and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government's report on this point. The Committee notes from the concluding observations of the CRC of 21 April 2011 (CRC/C/UKR/CO/3-4, paragraph 80) that a National Programme for countering Human Trafficking (2007-10) was adopted and implemented by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved pursuant to the implementation of the National Programme for countering Human Trafficking 2007-10, particularly with regard to the number of children removed from trafficking as well as the rehabilitation and social integration measures adopted for those children. It also requests the Government to provide information on any other action programmes established in terms of the elimination of trafficking of children.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee noted the Government's information that the organization "End Child Prostitution, Child Pornography and Trafficking of Children for Sexual Purposes" (ECPAT International), along with the non-governmental organization "La Strada-Ukraine", were implementing a project on the "Development of the national system of assistance of child victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation". The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the implementation of the ECPAT/La Strada-Ukraine project and its results.

The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government's report on this point. In this regard, the Committee notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 21 April 2011 (CRC/C/UKR/CO/3-4, paragraph 78), expressed concern at the extremely limited number of rehabilitation centres specifically dedicated to providing assistance to child victims of sexual exploitation. The Committee urges the Government to increase the availability and accessibility of rehabilitation centres to provide appropriate and effective services, including legal, psychological and medical services to child victims of sexual exploitation and trafficking. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

United Arab Emirates

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that Ministerial Order No. 5/1 of 1981, which lists operations that are dangerous, arduous or detrimental to health, and prohibits the employment of young persons in those occupations, applies to young persons under the age of 17. It also noted that the draft amended text of section 20 of the Federal Law No. 8 of 1980 (Labour Code) states that persons under the age of 18 years may neither be employed in exhausting tasks nor in tasks which, by their nature or the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to harm their health, safety or morals. Such types of employment shall be determined by virtue of a ministerial order, after consultation with the competent authorities. It further noted that the draft amended text of section 20 of the Labour Code would replace Ministerial Order No. 5/1 of 1981, and noted the Government's indication that the draft amendments to the Labour Code (containing the amended section 20) were going through the constitutional channels for its adoption. The Committee noted that while the Labour Code was amended by Federal Law No. 8/2007, these amendments did not include the drafted amended text of section 20.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the draft amendment to section 20 of the Labour Code is still in the process of being adopted by Parliament. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft amended section 20 is adopted in the very near future so as to ensure the prohibition of hazardous work for persons under 18 years of age. It once again requests the Government to keep it informed of any progress in this regard. Following the adoption of this amendment, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, following consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, the promulgation of a ministerial order to determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18, pursuant to the draft amended text of section 20.

Article 6. Minimum age for admission to apprenticeship. The Committee previously observed that, according to section 42 of the Labour Code, the minimum age to enter into an apprenticeship contract (defined as the contract whereby the employer undertakes to provide the employee full vocational training) was 12 years. It also noted the Government's statement that the draft amended text of section 42 of the Labour Code provided 15 years as the minimum age for being accepted in training or vocational education, and observed that this text was going through the constitutional channels in the State.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the draft amendment to section 42 of the Labour Code is still in the process of being adopted by Parliament. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft amended section 42 is adopted in the very near future. It once again requests the Government to keep it informed of any progress in this regard, and to provide a text of the amended provision as soon as it has been adopted.

Considering that the Government has been referring to the amendments to sections 20 and 42 of the Labour Code since 2003, the Committee again expresses the firm hope that these draft amendments are adopted in the near future, in order to bring national legislation into line with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any progress made in this regard and invites it to consider seeking technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). Slavery and practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that section 346 of the Penal Code prohibits the trafficking of children, and section 363 prohibits abetting, enticing or inducing a male or a female to commit prostitution. By virtue of Federal Act No. 51 of 2006, anyone who traffics a boy or girl under 18 years of age is liable to life imprisonment, and section 1 of this Act prohibits human trafficking for the purpose of exploitation, and defines exploitation to include all forms of sexual exploitation and prostitution. The Committee noted the 18 October 2009 statement by the UN Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography following her visit to the United Arab Emirates (UAE) (statement of the UN Special Rapporteur), that she received a low number of reported cases of the sale of children for the purposes of sexual exploitation. However, the annual report of the National Committee to Combat Human Trafficking in the UEA (NCCHT) (2008–09) indicated the continued existence of trafficking of children for this purpose.

The Committee notes the Government's information that, according to the NCCHT annual report of 2010–11, 58 cases of human trafficking and 152 victims were reported, and 169 perpetrators convicted. According to the database of the Ministry of the Interior and to the police records of 2010, there were eight notifications regarding 15 child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation who were between 13 and 17 years of age. The Government indicates that 13 people were convicted and several judicial sentences were rendered, while other cases are still being handled in court. However, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 5 February 2010, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women expressed its serious concern at the persistence of trafficking in women and girls into the UAE for the purposes of economic and sexual exploitation (CEDAW/C/ARE/CO/1, paragraph 28). The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies in order to ensure that persons who traffic in children for the purpose of sexual exploitation are in practice prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecution, convictions and penal sanctions applied for violations of the legal prohibition on the sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that Ministerial Order No. 5/1 of 1981, which lists operations that are dangerous, arduous or detrimental to health, and prohibits the employment of young persons in those occupations, applies to young persons under the age of 17. It also noted that the draft amended text of section 20 of the Labour Code states that persons under the age of 18 years may neither be employed in exhausting tasks nor in tasks which, by their nature or the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to harm their health, safety or morals. The Committee noted the copy of the draft amended text of section 20 of the Labour Code in the Government's report, and observed that section 20(3) prohibits the employment of persons under 18 years of age in hazardous work, and that such types of employment shall be determined by virtue of a Ministerial Order, after consultation with the competent authorities. The Committee further noted that the draft amended text of section 20 of the Labour Code would replace Ministerial Order No. 5/1 of 1981, but noted that, while the Labour Code was amended by Federal Law No. 8/2007, these amendments did not include the draft amended text of section 20.

The Committee notes that, in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Government indicated that the draft amendment to section 20 of the Labour Code is still in the process of being adopted by Parliament. It reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 3(d) of the Convention, work or employment in conditions that are hazardous are among the worst forms of child labour and are therefore to be eliminated as a matter of urgency, in accordance with Article 1. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the adoption of the draft amended text of section 20 of the Labour Code, on the prohibition of hazardous work for persons under 18, as a matter of urgency. Following the adoption of this amendment, the Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, following consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, the promulgation of a Ministerial Order to determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18, pursuant to the draft amended text of section 20. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. National Committee to Combat Human Trafficking (NCCHT). In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication in the Government's report that, following the adoption of Federal Law No. 15 of 2005, the Minister of Interior established the NCCHT. It noted that the NCCHT was presided over by the Under-Secretary of the Ministry of Justice, and included representatives of the Ministries of Interior, Foreign Affairs, Labour, Social Affairs, and the General Director of the Dubai Police, Zayed Corporation for Charity, and the Red Crescent. The Committee noted that the NCCHT meets frequently, and that during 2008–09, it took numerous measures to address the problem of trafficking.

The Committee notes that, according to the 2010–11 annual NCCHT report, the NCCHT continues to take such measures. In particular, the Committee notes that, through the adoption of Decree 240 of 2010, a committee for the protection of child victims of trafficking was created, which works in collaboration with the Virtual Global Taskforce, to protect children from trafficking through awareness-raising, Internet programmes, and training. Moreover, this committee established a comprehensive information database aiming to protect children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation through information sharing. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the impact of the measures taken by the NCCHT and the committee for the protection of child victims of trafficking on the elimination of the trafficking of children under 18 years for labour or commercial sexual exploitation.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted the allegation of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that the authorities of the UAE made no distinction between prostitutes and victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation, all of whom bear equal criminal responsibility for involvement in prostitution. The ITUC pointed out that trafficked persons were consequently not treated as victims and were not supported or protected. The Committee observed the Government's information that children in prostitution are sentenced to imprisonment and when they are foreigners (which is generally the case), they are repatriated to their country of origin. The Committee noted the Government's statement in reply to the ITUC's allegations that it considers persons who are exposed to sexual exploitation as victims who need protection and support through guidance and rehabilitation programmes. The Committee noted the information in the Government's report concerning the active work of various organizations in the UAE to provide support for the victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation, as well as of shelters for women and children who are victims of human trafficking. Nonetheless, the Committee noted that, in her statement of 18 October 2009, the UN Special Rapporteur noted that the age of criminal responsibility of 7 years of age was too low, and encouraged the Government to ensure that all persons who are sexually exploited be treated as victims and not as delinquents. She stated that these children should not be put in jail, but given access to adequate care, protection, rehabilitation, reintegration and repatriation.

The Committee notes the Government's information that, with respect to the criminal responsibility of minors, the penalties provided for by the Penal Code do not, in fact, apply to children aged 7 to 18 years. In their case, the penalties which are applicable are prescribed by Federal Act No. 9 of 1976 relating to delinquents and vagrants. Section 63 of this Act provides that "Any young person who has completed the age of seven years and not completed the age of sixteen years shall be prescribed the provisions contained in the Child Act". In this regard, the Government refers to the sentence handed down by the Upper Federal Court, No. 64/15 of 29 January 1994, which stated that if a young person between 7 and 16 years of age commits a crime as prescribed in the Penal Code or other penal laws, he/she shall be subject to one or more of the measures specified in section 15 of the Child Act. These measures include reprimands; mandatory vocational training; or placement in a place of treatment, rehabilitation centre, or a place of education or reformation. Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's statement that it has adopted a policy to handle the persons involved in trafficking crimes and treating them as victims by providing them with all means of support and family, health and psychological care. In this regard, the NCHT issued Decision No. 18/7 of 2010 on the organizational procedures to handle victims of human trafficking, which specifies the need by employees of the relevant institutions, as well the police authorities, to treat victims with dignity, safeguard their privacy and confidentiality. The Decision also specifies that shelters must provide all educational, psychological, legal, medical and social care to the victims, as well as seek to protect their rights. Observing that section 63 of the Federal Act No. 9 of 1976 only applies to children between 7 and 16 years of age, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that children between 16 and 18 years of age trafficked to the UAE for commercial sexual exploitation are treated as victims rather than offenders. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of all child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation under 18 years of age, and to provide information on measures taken in this regard. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the application of the provisions of Federal Act No. 9 of 1976 to child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that the statement of the UN Special Rapporteur indicated that there is a lack of an information system for gathering data on the sale and trafficking of children and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, in addition to a lack of analysis, recording, sharing of information, and reporting in this regard. The Special Rapporteur noted that the Government recognized the need for such a system and that it was in the process of establishing one.

The Committee notes the Government's information that one of the tasks of the Child Protection Centre is to create a statistical system in order to prepare a periodic report on child victims of crimes and provide these victims and their families with psychological and moral support. The Committee once again urges the Government to pursue its efforts to establish a system to record and collect data on the number of children engaged in the worst forms of child labour and to report on child victims of crimes. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide any other information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, in particular the sale and trafficking of children, studies and inquiries and statistical data on the number of children covered by the measures giving effect to the Convention. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that, under section 78 of Act No. 18.250 of 17 January 2008 concerning migration, any person who participates in any manner or by any means whatsoever in the procuring, transport, transfer, accommodation or reception of persons for forced labour or services, slavery or similar practices, servitude, sexual exploitation, abduction, removal of organs or any other activity that violates human dignity shall be liable to imprisonment of four to 16 years. Furthermore, section 81(b) provides that the penalty shall be increased where the victim is a child or a young person.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously noted that sections 1, 2 and 3 of Act No. 17.815 of 18 August 2004 concerning sexual violence, whether or not for commercial purposes, committed against children, young persons and persons with disabilities penalize the use, procuring or offering of minors for the production of pornography. It asked the Government to indicate whether these provisions also apply to the use, procuring or offering of minors for pornographic performances.

The Committee takes due note that, under section 4 of Act No. 17.815, any person who pays or promises to pay or offers any economic consideration in exchange to any minor or person with a disability, of either sex, to perform sexual or erotic acts of any nature shall be liable to imprisonment of two to 12 years. Moreover, it notes that section 5 provides that any person who contributes in any manner to the prostitution, exploitation or sexual slavery of minors or persons with disabilities shall be liable to imprisonment of two to 12 years.

Article 4(1) and (3). Determination and revision of the list of hazardous types of work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the revision of the list of hazardous types of work adopted in the context of Resolution No. 1012/006 of 2006 is awaiting approval from the executive authority. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the list of hazardous types of work will be adopted shortly and requests the Government to continue to provide information on this matter. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this list once it has been adopted.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2008)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the Government's reports dated 24 May, 1 August, 25 August and 12 September 2011. The Committee also notes the communication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 31 August 2010. The Committee finally takes note of the detailed discussions that took place at the 100th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011 concerning the application by Uzbekistan of Convention No. 182.

Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Forced or compulsory labour in cotton production and hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the various legal provisions in Uzbekistan which prohibit forced labour, including article 37 of the Constitution, section 7 of the Labour Code, and section 138 of the Criminal Code. It also noted that section 241 of the Labour Code prohibits the employment of persons under 18 years in hazardous work, and that the "List of occupations with unfavourable working conditions in which it is forbidden to employ persons under 18 years of age" prohibited children from watering and gathering cotton by hand. However, the Committee noted the assertion of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) that, despite the legislative framework against forced labour, schoolchildren (estimates ranging from half a million to 1.5 million schoolchildren) are forced by the Government to work in the national cotton harvest for up to three months each year. The Committee also noted ITUC's allegations that state-sponsored forced child labour continues to underpin Uzbekistan's cotton industry. The ITUC communication emphasized that this involvement is not the result of family poverty, but state-sponsored mobilization which benefits the Government. The ITUC further alleged that these children are required to work every day, even on weekends, and that the work involved is hazardous, involving carrying heavy loads, the application of pesticides and harsh weather conditions, with accidents reportedly resulting in injuries and deaths.

The Committee further noted the conclusions from several United Nations bodies regarding the continued practice of mobilizing schoolchildren for work in the cotton harvest. In this regard, it noted that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed its concern at the situation of school-age children obliged to participate in the cotton harvest instead of attending school during this period (24 January 2006, E/C.12/UZB/CO/1, paragraph 20), and that the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern at the serious health problems experienced by many schoolchildren as a result of this participation (2 June 2006, CRC/C/UZB/CO/2, paragraphs 64–65). Moreover, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women expressed its concern regarding the educational consequences of girls and boys working during the cotton harvest season (26 January 2010, CEDAW/C/UZB/CO/4, paragraphs 30–31) and the UN Human Rights Committee stated that it remained concerned about reports that children are still employed and subjected to harsh working conditions, in particular for cotton harvesting. The UN Human Rights Committee emphasized that the Government needed to ensure that its national legislation and international obligations regulating child labour are fully respected in practice (7 April 2010, CCPR/C/UZB/CO/3, paragraph 23). Lastly, the Committee noted the statement in the UNICEF publication entitled "Risks and Realities of Child Trafficking and Exploitation in Central Asia" of 31 March 2010 that the issue of seasonal mobilization of children for the cotton harvest in Uzbekistan was a growing concern (page 49).

The Committee notes the statement in the Government's report dated 12 September 2011 that the participation of children below 18 years of age in activities on a family farm is not an infringement of the Convention. The Government states that children cannot be involved in the cotton harvest for three months, as the harvest only lasts one month, and that the involvement of children in gathering cotton does not have a negative effect on their health or education. The Committee notes Government's indication that the Association of Farmers of Uzbekistan, the Council of Trade Union Federation and the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection adopted, in May 2011, the "Joint Statement concerning the inadmissibility of using forced child labour in agricultural works" (Joint Statement). The Joint Statement asserts that various false insinuations and fabrications by certain biased foreign enterprises and organizations and the media, concerning the alleged large-scale coercion of children to participate in the country's agricultural production, are aimed at undermining the high rating of Uzbekistan's agricultural produce, especially cotton, in foreign markets. The Joint Statement also indicates that virtually all cotton is harvested by farm owners who, in economic terms, have no interest in making extensive use of children for the harvesting of cotton. The Committee further notes the indication in the Joint Statement that it is appropriate to encourage the voluntary participation of children in economic activity, according to their capacity, but that this employment is permitted only outside of school hours and must not impede their full participation in general educational and vocational training programmes. The Joint Statement further indicates that agricultural producers, including farms, which employ children over the age of 15 years for work on a voluntary basis should assume the obligation to ensure fair pay, compliance with provisions for working time and rest periods, safe working conditions, nutritious food and any necessary medical care. The Committee further notes that the Joint Statement indicates that any form of coercion to force children to work by any party, including by the threat of penalties applied to them or to their parent, is inadmissible.

However, the Committee notes the more recent allegations of the ITUC dated 31 August 2011 indicating that, despite the Government's claim that almost all of the cotton in Uzbekistan is produced on private farms, the reality is rigid state control of all aspects of the cotton industry, whereby the forced mobilisation of children is organized and enforced by authorities, as channelled through the local administration. In this regard, the ITUC refers to a 2010 study which found that the mobilization of children during the cotton harvest by the central Government was systematic, utilized the school system, and left little room for choice on the part of children, their parents, school authorities and even farmers. The ITUC also alleges that approximately half of all cotton picked in Uzbekistan is the result of forced child labour, and that it is estimated that hundreds of thousands of children are forced out of school each year to pick cotton during school hours, to fill the shortfall in voluntary adult labour. The ITUC states that strictly enforced cotton quotas are set for each region by the central Government, and these quotas are subdivided to schools. Thus, headmasters are given quotas, which are passed onto students, dictating how much cotton each must harvest. The ITUC communication indicates that in 2010, daily quotas in some regions were between 25 to 40 kilograms for school children. The ITUC further indicates that school principals and teachers face dismissal if their students do not meet their share of the quota, and that parents have little choice but to allow their children to participate. Moreover, students who fail to meet their quotas or who pick poor quality cotton may be punished by beatings, detention, or told their grades will suffer, and that those who run away from the cotton fields or refuse to take part can face expulsion from school. Moreover, the Committee notes the allegations in the ITUC communication that forced child labour was used in the autumn 2010 cotton harvest with children receiving little pay, if any, despite working long hours, and that children can be left exhausted and suffering from ill health after weeks of arduous labour. In addition, the ITUC states that reports from at least nine of Uzbekistan's 13 regions confirmed that school children were forced to pick cotton in 2010: Andijan, Fergana, Jizzakh, Kaskadrya, Khoresm, Namangan, Surkhandarya, Syrdarya and Tashkent. Lastly, the Committee notes the statement in the ITUC's communication that state-sponsored forced child labour remains a profound and widespread problem in Uzbekistan, and that there is a vast disparity between the legal and policy situation, and the practice on the ground.

In addition, the Committee notes the recent information from UNICEF concerning the cotton harvest of autumn 2011. According to this information, the cotton harvesting began in Uzbekistan in the second week of September 2011 and was almost completed by the third week in October. During that time, two rounds of UNICEF observation visits in 12 regions were successfully completed. The Committee notes that UNICEF draws up an analysis of the findings which includes the following elements: (i) children aged 11–17 years old have been observed working full time in the cotton fields across the country; (ii) the mobilization of children has been organized by way of instructions passed through Khokimyats (local administration), whereby farmers are given quotas to meet and children are mobilized by means of the education system in order to help meet these quotas; (iii) in some instances, farmers also made a private arrangement with schools to pick their cotton often in return for material resources or financial incentives for the school; (iv) children were predominantly supervised in the fields by teachers; (v) in over a third of the fields visited, children stated that they were not receiving the money themselves; (vi) quotas for the amount of cotton children were expected to pick generally ranged between 20–50 kilos per day; (vii) the overwhelming majority of children observed were working a full day in the field and as a result, were missing their regular classes; (viii) children worked long hours in extremely hot weather; (ix) pesticides were used on the cotton crop that children spent hours hand picking; (x) some children reported that they had not been allowed to seek medical attention even though they were sick; and (xi) that the only noticeable progress towards the eventual elimination of the use of children in cotton picking was observed in the Fergana region.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, in June 2011, echoed the deep concern expressed by United Nations bodies, the representative organizations of workers and employers and non-governmental organizations, about the systematic and persistent recourse to forced child labour in cotton production, involving an estimated one million children. The Conference Committee emphasized the seriousness of such violations of the Convention. It urged the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure the effective implementation of national legislation prohibiting compulsory labour and hazardous work for children below the age of 18.

In light of the broad consensus among the United Nations bodies, the representative organizations of workers and employers and non-governmental organizations with respect to the continued practice of mobilizing schoolchildren for work in the cotton harvest, often under hazardous conditions, the Committee must express its serious concern regarding the Government's continued insistence that children are not involved in the cotton harvest in Uzbekistan. The Committee once again recalls that, by virtue of Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, forced labour and hazardous work are considered as the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of these worst forms of child labour, as a matter of urgency. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective time-bound measures to eradicate the forced labour of, or hazardous work by, children under 18 years in cotton production, as a matter of urgency. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard in its next report.

Articles 5 and 6. Monitoring mechanisms and programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that an interdepartmental working group had been established, and a programme approved, for on-the-ground monitoring to prevent the use of forced labour by schoolchildren during the cotton harvest. The Government further indicated that the supervision of labour legislation and regulations (including the prohibition on employing children in adverse working conditions) was carried out by the specifically authorized legal and technical inspections of the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection and trade union officials. However, the Committee noted an absence of information from the Government on the concrete results of this monitoring. Moreover, the Committee noted the IOE's indication that it remained uncertain as to whether the implementation of the measures adopted would be sufficient to address the deeply rooted practice of forced child labour in the cotton fields. It also noted the ITUC's statement that the monitoring of forced child labour needed to be completely independent.

The Committee observes that the Conference Committee expressed regret that, despite the Government's indication that concrete measures had been undertaken by the labour inspectorate regarding violations of labour legislation, no information was provided on the number of persons prosecuted for the mobilization of children in the cotton harvest or on the number of children.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that no information is available on the number of persons pursued for mobilizing children for cotton gathering because there are no persons, including government officials or private persons, who have committed such offences. The Government further states that it has received information from 12 regional governments stating that children were not involved in cotton harvesting in these regions. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that relevant instructions have been issued to the regions to avoid the use of forced child labour. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the Association of Farmers of Uzbekistan, the Council of Trade Union Federation and the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection implemented workshops in 11 regions between January and May 2011, to raise awareness among farmers on the inadmissibility of the use of child labour in agricultural works. The Government also indicates that more than 45,000 heads of farmers' households and 3,500 trade union activists have taken part in these workshops and discussions at the district level. In addition, the Committee notes the information in the Joint Statement that the enforcement of measures to prevent child labour on the part of the social partners is the responsibility of the Association of Farmers of Uzbekistan and the Council of the Federation of Trade Unions of Uzbekistan, and that enforcement on the part of the State is the responsibility of the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection. The Joint Statement also indicates that a special joint working group will be established by the Association of Farmers and the Council of the Federation of Trade Unions. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's statement that, in order to improve the legal labour relationships on farms, the State Labour Inspection has carried out monitoring covering more than 73,000 farms in 2010. The Government's report also indicates that 1,600 verifications were conducted in 2009 and 2010.

The Committee observes that the Government has taken significant awareness-raising and preventative measures regarding the mobilization of children during the cotton harvest. In the Committee's view, this would appear to amount to an implicit and tacit admission that such child labour occurs within the country. It also notes that the labour inspectorate appears to have undertaken a significant number of inspections on a considerable number of farms in 2010. However, the Committee notes with concern an absence of information as to whether any of the violations detected during these inspections pertained specifically to the worst forms of child labour, particularly the forced labour of, or hazardous work by, children under 18 years of age engaged in the cotton harvest. The Committee must, therefore, once again note with regret the absence of information from the Government on the concrete impact, if any, of the monitoring activities undertaken, pursuant to the Joint Statement, by the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection and the social partners. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to provide information on the concrete impact of the measures taken to monitor the prohibition of the use of forced and hazardous child labour in the agricultural sector. It also requests the Government to provide specific information on the number and nature of violations detected with regard to the mobilization of children under 18 to work in the cotton harvest.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. Forced or compulsory labour in cotton production and hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's assertion that children are not involved in the cotton harvest, but observed that it was carrying out a project with the assistance of UNICEF to address the situation of child labour in the cotton sector. The Committee, therefore, considered it essential that independent monitors be granted unrestricted access to document the situation during the cotton harvest. The Committee also noted the statements from the ITUC, the European Trade Union Confederation (ETUC), the European Trade Union Federation – Textiles, Clothing and Leather (ETUF-TCL), the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Association (IUF) and the European Federation of Food, Agriculture and Tourism Trade Unions (EFFAT), as well as the joint communication dated 22 November 2010 from the European Apparel and Textile Confederation (EURATEX) and the ETUF-TCL indicating that a mission must be carried out as soon as possible in order to address the practice of child labour in the cotton sector and to initiate steps towards its eradication.

The Committee notes the statement from the ITUC, in its more recent allegations, that the cotton fields are strictly patrolled by police and security personnel, in an attempt to prevent independent monitoring. The Committee also notes that the Conference Committee expressed its serious concern regarding the insufficient political will and the lack of transparency of the Government to address the issue of forced child labour in cotton harvesting. It urged the Government to accept a high-level ILO tripartite observer mission that would have full freedom of movement and timely access to all situations and relevant parties, including in the cotton fields, in order to assess the implementation of Convention No. 182. The Conference Committee also strongly urged the Government to receive this ILO high-level tripartite observer mission in time to report back to this Committee at its current session. Moreover, the Committee notes that the Conference Committee also strongly encouraged the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance, and to commit to working with ILO-IPEC.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report dated 12 September 2011, that it has demonstrated political will in its ratification of the Convention. Regarding ILO technical assistance or alternatively cooperation with ILO-IPEC, the Government indicates that there is a National Plan of Action on implementing Conventions Nos 138 and 182, and that such cooperation cannot be reduced only to the issues of forced labour of children in cotton harvesting. The Government also states that it is not necessary to invite a high-level observer mission to Uzbekistan on the use of child labour, and that this should not be considered as a refusal by the Government to cooperate with the ILO.

Finally, the Committee notes UNICEF's indication that according to its analysis of the observation visits undertaken in 12 regions from September to October 2011, that its findings are in no way indicative of the number of children working in the cotton harvest, nor can UNICEF verify that the situation as observed by UNICEF teams corresponds to all circumstances in all cotton fields. UNICEF underlines that such findings are snapshots that cannot replace substantive and independent monitoring under the auspices of the ILO, which UNICEF continues to advocate for.

The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has yet to respond positively to the recommendation to accept a high-level tripartite observation mission or to avail itself of ILO technical assistance. The Committee's concerns are reinforced by the evident contradiction between the Government's position that children are not removed from school for work in the cotton harvest, and the views expressed by numerous UN bodies and social partners that this worst form of child labour remains a serious problem in the country. It therefore considers an ILO mission to be both necessary and appropriate, to fully assess the situation of children's engagement in the cotton sector. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to accept a high-level ILO tripartite observer mission, and expresses the firm hope that such an ILO mission can take place in the very near future. It also strongly encourages the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1987)

Article 1 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted the statements of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) to the effect that child labour was widespread in the informal sector and in non-regulated activities in the country. According to certain estimates, some 1.2 million children were working, particularly in agriculture and domestic service and as street vendors, and more than 300,000 were working in the informal economy. It noted the Government's statement that, despite the lack of official statistics on the number of working children and young persons, it doubted the accuracy of the ITUC estimates in this area. However, it also observed that the Government itself did not provide any recent statistics on the total number of children working in the formal and informal sectors of the economy.

The Committee noted that the Ministry of Participation and Social Protection, in conjunction with the National Committee on the Rights of Children and Young Persons (IDENA), launched the "Neighbourhood children's mission", a programme aimed at guaranteeing the rights of children and young persons, especially those in situations of extreme poverty, in the context of the goals of the National Economic and Social Development Plan 2007–13. Among the activities implemented by the mission, the Committee noted the "Protecting the dignity of working children and young persons" (PRODINAT) programme, launched in 2008, which seeks to ensure young workers' labour rights and whose ultimate goal is to progressively abolish child labour and protect young people at work. It also noted that in 2008 the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Participation and Social Protection jointly participated in a project for ensuring decent conditions for people living and working in the garbage dumps on the outskirts of cities.

While noting the measures taken by the Government to ensure the effective abolition of child labour, the Committee expresses its concern at the lack of available statistics relating to the nature, extent and trends of child labour in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. The Committee therefore urges the Government once again to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the number of children and young persons under 14 years of age engaging in economic activity in the country are made available and requests it to supply this information as soon as possible. It also requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the number and nature of violations of the law reported by the inspection services.

Article 3(1). Age of admission to hazardous work. The Committee notes that section 96(1) of the Act of 1998 concerning the protection of children and young persons forbids the employment of young persons between 14 and 18 years of age in the types of work expressly prohibited by the law. However, the Committee notes that this Act does not specify which types of work are prohibited. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report whether the types of work referred to by section 96(1) of the Act of 1998 concerning the protection of children and young persons are types of work which, by their nature or the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of children and young persons under 18 years of age.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the National Institute for Occupational Hazard Prevention, Health and Safety (INPSASEL) had completed its study on the classification of types of work that are hazardous for children and young persons and that a multidisciplinary team would conduct further studies to determine, on a scientific basis and using test cases, what exactly is to be understood by "hazardous work". It also noted that IDENA was drawing up a preventive guide for the classification of hazardous types of work for children and young persons.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information on this subject. It notes with regret that no list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children and young persons under 18 years of age appears to have been adopted to date. Observing that the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela ratified this Convention more than 20 years ago and that no list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children and young persons under 18 years of age has been adopted to date, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures as soon as possible to ensure that such a list is adopted, after consultation of the employers' and workers' organizations concerned. It requests the Government to provide information in its next report on all progress made in this regard.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments the Committee observed that, under section 96(1) of the Act of 1998 concerning the protection of children and young persons, the national executive authority may, by decree, determine minimum ages higher than 14 years for types of work that are hazardous or harmful to the health of young persons. It also noted the Government's statement that INPSASEL was considering whether it was necessary to adopt a decree determining minimum ages higher than 14 years and that, once the list of hazardous types of work was adopted, minimum ages would be recommended taking into account the health and best interests of young persons. It finally noted the Government's indication that INPSASEL would take account in its research of the provisions of Article 3(1) and (3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report once again contains no information on the progress of the work of INPSASEL with regard to the adoption of a decree fixing minimum ages for the performance of hazardous types of work, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. It reminds the Government that, in accordance with Article 3(3) of the Convention, the employment or work of young persons between 16 and 18 years of age is only authorized under strict conditions relating to protection and prior training. It underlines the fact that this provision of the Convention constitutes a limited exception to the general rule of the prohibition on the performance of hazardous types of work by young persons under 18 years of age and should not be interpreted as an overall authorization to employ young persons in hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures as soon as possible to ensure that its legislation is amended so that hazardous work may only be authorized for young persons over 16 years of age subject to the strict conditions laid down by Article 3(3) of the Convention.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes the Government's report. It also notes the comments from the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), dated 31 August 2011, and the Government's reply, dated 30 November 2011.

Articles 3, clauses (a) and (b), and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children; use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution; and penalties. The Committee previously noted, in its comments under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) referring to the "widely reported" trafficking of women and children for prostitution. It also observed that, according to the information contained in the Government's second periodic report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in December 2006 (CRC/C/VEN/2, paragraph 187), child prostitution is one of the most serious problems confronting the country.

The Committee notes the statistics submitted in the Government's report relating to the number of cases of trafficking, prostitution and pornography involving children and young persons recorded between 2007 and 2010 by the Division for investigations and for the protection of children, young persons, women and the family at the Ministry of People's Power, Internal Relations and Justice. It observes that no cases of trafficking of children were reported in 2010, compared with four cases in 2009. As regards child prostitution, just one case was reported in 2010, compared with seven cases in 2009. The Committee also notes the information supplied in the Government's report on the convictions handed down in two cases involving sexual exploitation and pornography.

The Committee expresses its concern that the number of reported cases of trafficking and prostitution of children remains relatively low in view of the scope and persistence of this practice in reality. The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that persons who engage in the sale, trafficking or prostitution of children and young persons under 18 years of age are effectively prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the thorough investigation and robust prosecution of offenders are carried out, especially by strengthening the capacity of law enforcement bodies. It requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed.

Articles 3, clause (d), and 4(1). Determination of hazardous types of work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 96(1) of the Act of 1998 concerning the protection of children and young persons states that young persons between 14 and 18 years of age may not be employed in work prohibited by law. However, the Committee observes that this provision does not specify the nature of the work that is prohibited. The Committee also notes that the Government's report does not contain any information on progress made with regard to the adoption of a list of hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age. It notes with regret that no list appears to have been adopted to date. The Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 3(d) of the Convention, work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children constitutes the worst forms of child labour, and that, under Article 1, each Member which ratifies this Convention must take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. Furthermore, Article 4(1) provides that the types of work referred to under Article 3(d) shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, taking into consideration relevant international standards, in particular Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190). The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report whether section 96(1) of the Act of 1998 concerning the protection of children and young persons prohibits the employment of young persons under 18 years of age in hazardous work, in accordance with Article 3(d) of the Convention. Moreover, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children and young persons under 18 years of age is adopted as soon as possible. It also requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held with employers' and workers' organizations with a view to determining these types of work.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in, and removing children from, the worst forms of child labour, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the National Plan of Action against abuse and commercial sexual exploitation (PANAESC), the objectives of which include prevention of the sexual exploitation of young persons under 18 years of age, protection of young persons from such exploitation, and their rehabilitation. It also noted the adoption of the National Plan to prevent, combat and penalize the trafficking of persons and to assist the victims thereof (National Plan to combat trafficking).

The Committee takes due note of the various awareness-raising and training activities relating to the sale, trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. However, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not supply any information on the measures taken to remove children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It observes that, according to the information contained in a 2011 report on the trafficking of persons in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, available on the website of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), there are no reception centres that cater specifically for the victims of trafficking. The report also indicates that although trafficking victims receive medical care and psychological assistance, rehabilitation services appear to be lacking. The Committee firmly encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken in the context of PANAESC and the National Plan to combat trafficking and requests it to provide information in its next report on the number of children who have benefited from these measures.

Article 8. International cooperation. In its previous comments the Committee noted that the Government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, in conjunction with the government members and associates of MERCOSUR, was participating in the "Niño Sur" initiative for the defence of the rights of children and young persons in the region. The initiative aimed to raise public awareness of sexual exploitation, improve national legal frameworks, and exchange best practices to tackle issues related to victim protection and assistance. The Committee noted that a regional legislative database relating to the prevention of, and action against, the sale and trafficking of children for sexual exploitation had been established in this context. It also noted that proposals for cooperation with the Governments of Brazil and Uruguay aimed at eliminating the sale, trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children were being drawn up.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Committee on the Rights of Children and Young Persons (IDENA) has organized days relating to the comprehensive protection of children and young persons in border areas, in cooperation with Colombia. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to cooperate with neighbouring countries with a view to eliminating the sale, trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. It also requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the results achieved in the context of the "Niño Sur" initiative.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its conclusions on the Government's second periodic report of October 2007, had regretted the lack of information and data on the sexual exploitation and sale of children (CRC/C/VEN/CO/2, paragraph 74). It further noted that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its concluding observations of January 2006 (CEDAW/C/VEN/CO/6, paragraph 28), had requested the Government to include in its next periodic report a comprehensive assessment, based on appropriate studies, of the causes and extent of prostitution, as well as the trafficking of women and girls. The Committee noted that, as part of the annual workplan of the National Institute of Statistics, various activities were carried out in collaboration with UNICEF to ensure the visibility of children and young persons within national statistics. The Government indicated that a centralized national system was planned for reporting violations of the rights of children and young persons.

The Committee notes the allegation made by the CTV that there is no reliable data collection mechanism for evaluating the number of children involved in the worst forms of child labour. The Committee notes that, while statistical information relating to education was submitted in the Government's reply to the allegations of the CTV, no information has been provided concerning the number of children and young persons engaged in the worst forms of child labour in the country. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour are made available and requests it to send this information in its next report. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zambia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1976)

Articles 1 and 2(1) of the Convention. National policy and scope of application. The Committee had previously noted the International Trade Union Confederation's (ITUC) allegation that children are reported to be working in the unregulated economy. According to the ITUC, children are mostly found in agriculture, domestic service, small-scale mining operations, stone crushing and pottery. It had also noted the Government's information that a draft National Action Plan on Child Labour which included various measures for the elimination of child labour in the informal sector has been formulated. The Committee notes the Government's information in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that the National Action Plan on Child Labour was adopted along with the National Child Labour Policy in June 2011. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the implementation of the National Action Plan on Child Labour and the National Child Labour Policy and their impact on abolishing child labour, especially in the informal economy.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that a new Education Act of 2011 has been enacted by the Government which requires a parent of a child who has attained the school going age to enrol that child in an educational institution and to ensure that child's attendance at the institution (section 17(1)). It also notes that section 17(3) provides for appointing a committee to investigate the absence of any child from the educational institution and to issue a notice requiring the parent of that child to comply with subsection (1) within the prescribed period. Moreover, section 17(4) lays down penalties for the offences related to the failure to enrol a child in school, preventing a child from attending school or withdrawing a child from school. The Committee notes, however, that the Education Act of 2011 neither defines the school-going age nor indicates the age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee notes that according to section 34 of the Education Act of 2011, the Minister, may by statutory instrument, make regulations to provide for the basic school going age and age for compulsory attendance at educational institutions.

The Committee further notes the Government's information that it has established a comprehensive system of identifying poor and vulnerable children, assessing their needs and determining how best to meet their educational needs. The Government states that it has established bursary and scholarship schemes for the poor and vulnerable children, with special provisions for the needs of the girl child, orphans and children from rural areas. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the basic school enrolment rates have reached 94.2 per cent (an increase from 1,806,754 in 2000 to 3,510,288 in 2010), while the drop-out rates have been reduced from 4.6 per cent in 2000 to 2 per cent in 2010. It also notes from the Government's report that the proportion of orphans enrolled has increased from 11.1 per cent in 2002 to 18.5 per cent in 2010. The Committee takes due note of the various measures taken by the Government to improve the functioning of the education system. However, considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that regulations pursuant to section 34 of the Education Act of 2011 are adopted, defining the basic school going age and the age of completion of compulsory schooling up to the minimum age for employment, which is 15 years for Zambia. It also requests the Government to continue taking effective measures to improve the functioning of the education system, in particular by increasing the school enrolment rates and reducing drop-out rates, especially among children in the rural areas so as to prevent them from engaging in child labour.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that a "statutory instrument" was formulated to enforce the Employment of Young Persons and Childrens (Amendment) Act of 2004 (EYPC Act of 2004) as well as to serve as Zambia's hazardous work list. It had also noted that this "statutory instrument on hazardous work" prohibits work in a covered site in any of the following types of occupations: excavation/drilling; stone crushing; block/brick-making; building; roofing; painting; tour guiding; selling/serving in bars; animal herding; fishing; working in tobacco and cotton fields; spraying of pesticides, herbicides and fertilizers; handling farm machinery; and processing in industries.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of Labour and Social Security working in consultation with the Ministry of Justice has taken steps to finalize the Statutory Instrument on Hazardous Work before the end of 2011. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Statutory Instrument on Hazardous Work containing the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years will be adopted soon. It requests the Government to supply a copy thereof, as soon as it has been adopted.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee had previously noted section 4(A)(2) of the EYPC Act of 2004 which provides for a definition of "light work" for children aged between 13 and 15 years and section 4(5) which empowers the Minister to determine light work activities. Subsequently, it had noted Government's indication that once the Statutory Instrument on Hazardous Work had been adopted, it would determine light work activities. The Committee expresses the firm hope that once the Statutory Instrument on Hazardous Work has been adopted, the Government will take the necessary measures to adopt regulations pursuant to section 4(5) of the EYPC Act of 2004, to determine the light work activities which may be undertaken by children between 13 and 15 years of age as well as to prescribe the number of hours during which and the conditions in which such work may be undertaken.

Parts III and V of the report form. Labour inspectorate and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee had previously noted the Government's indication that due to lack of transport and communication services, the District Child Labour Committees (DCLCs) were not able to function effectively in the districts.

The Committee notes the Government's information that eight more DCLCs were created and that more funding provisions towards DCLCs administrative costs have been included in the 2012 budget. The Government report further states that during the period from 2009 to 2010, 35 specific child labour inspections were undertaken by the labour inspectors, and 360 children were withdrawn from child labour. Of these children withdrawn, 60 per cent were taken back to school and reintegrated while the remaining 40 per cent were empowered with the necessary skills to make them self-reliant. The Committee further notes the Government's statement that the revised labour inspection form will now enable the labour inspectors to collect and obtain sector-wise data on child labour, including those from the informal sector. The Committee notes, however, that according to the joint ILO-IPEC, UNICEF and World Bank report on Understanding Children's Work (UCW) in Zambia of May 2009, an estimated 1.3 million children between the ages of 5–14 years are involved in child labour, which implies 41 per cent of this age group, and an alarmingly high number of over 1.4 million children between the ages of 5–17 years are exposed to hazardous working conditions. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the high number of children involved in child labour and hazardous work. The Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts to abolish child labour in the country. It also requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to make the DCLCs effectively functional, including through the allocation of additional resources and funding. It also requests the Government to provide sector-wise data on child labour collected by the labour inspectors, as well as information on the number and nature of violations detected with regard to child labour, including in the informal sector.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Article 3 of the Convention and Part V of the report form. Worst forms of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the allegations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on the trafficking of children from Zambia to neighbouring countries for prostitution as well as on the kidnapping of Zambian children to perform forced labour in Angola. Further noting the nature and extent of internal trafficking in Zambia, the Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the practical application of the law concerning the prohibition of the sale and trafficking of children, as well as on the measures taken for the rehabilitation and social integration of child victims of trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that a victim support unit (VSU) was recently created within the Police Service following the police reform programme in order to make the police services efficient in preventing crimes. It also notes that a Human Trafficking Desk was established under the VSU to deal with crimes related to children, including sale and trafficking. The Committee notes the Government's information that the VSU has a stop centre in eight towns in the country where counselling, legal advice and health care services are provided for victims of trafficking. It also notes the Government's information that the Government is working with other NGOs such as the Young Women's Christian Association (YWCA), Women in Law in Southern Africa, CARE International Zambia and Gender in Development Division to provide shelters for child victims of trafficking. Moreover, the Government, with the help of UNICEF, is also attempting to establish a victim centre in each of the nine provincial capitals of Zambia.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that so far 19 cases of child trafficking were reported to the VSU, and in two cases the perpetrators were sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment, while in another case, an investigation is being carried out by the VSU and the girl in question has been placed in a safe home with the help of the International Organization for Migration. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of cases of trafficking of children reported to the VSU and on the prosecutions, investigations, convictions and penal sanctions applied in such cases. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been withdrawn and rehabilitated at the centres established by the VSU, and at the shelters established by the Government in cooperation with the NGOs and UNICEF.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that it had formulated a "Statutory Instrument on hazardous work" which would prohibit work in a covered worksite in any of the following types of occupations: excavation/drilling; stone crushing; block/brick-making; building; roofing; painting; tour guiding; selling/serving in bars; animal herding; fishing; working in tobacco and cotton fields; spraying of pesticides, herbicides and fertilizers; handling of farm machinery; and processing in industries. It expressed the hope that this Statutory Instrument on Hazardous Work would be adopted soon.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Ministry of Labour and Social Security working in consultation with the Ministry of Justice has taken steps to finalize the Statutory Instrument on Hazardous Work before the end of 2011. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Statutory Instrument on Hazardous Work containing the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 will be adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to supply a copy of same, as soon as it has been adopted.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking. The Committee previously noted the establishment of an Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking which aims to coordinate programmes on protection, prevention and prosecution on human trafficking issues, as well as to help in the development and revision of policies and legislation on human trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Home Affairs is in the process of appointing the nominees proposed by other ministries to the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the programmes on protection, prevention and prosecution concerning human trafficking coordinated by the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Human Trafficking, and the results achieved, in terms of the number of children prevented or withdrawn from trafficking and rehabilitated.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Child orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children. The Committee previously noted the ITUC's indication that since the number of Zambians dying of HIV/AIDS had increased, the number of orphans had also increased and that nearly all of these children were engaged in hazardous work. It also noted that according to the "Report on the global AIDS epidemic" published by the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) in July 2008, over 600,000 children aged below 17 years were HIV/AIDS orphans in Zambia.

The Committee notes the Government's information that within the National AIDS Strategic Framework of 2006–10, major steps have been taken towards the implementation and expansion of HIV/AIDS prevention response, which include social protection measures to help people and families affected by HIV/AIDS. It notes the Government's information on the various interventions carried out by the Government and the cooperating partners in this regard, which according to the Government have prevented vulnerable children from entering into the labour market. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has provided funds of about 11 billion kwacha (ZMK) (US$2,240,325) to the Public Welfare Assistance Scheme which is mandated to provide social protection to orphans, including primary and secondary education, food, health, shelter and clothing. It also notes the Government's information that it has implemented cash transfer funds targeting orphans and other vulnerable children (OVCs) in some districts of the country. Accordingly in the Eastern Province of Zambia, 688 people received cash to buy their basic necessities through the universal age-based scheme; a total of 1,167 households received ZMK40,000 through the social urban cash transfer scheme; and households with children received ZMK50,000 each. Similarly, in the Southern Province of Zambia, 4,042 people and 1,603 households have benefited through various schemes. It also notes from the Government's report that the proportion of orphans enrolled at the basic school level increased from 11.1 per cent in 2002 to 18.5 per cent in 2010. The Committee further notes that Zambia is a participating country in the ILO–IPEC project entitled "Tackling Child Labour through Education" (TACKLE) and started to implement four action programmes (APs) from 2010. Following the implementation of these APs, a total of 511 children have been prevented from child labour through education support; and 447 children have been withdrawn from child labour through formal education and skills training programmes.

The Committee notes that according to the Zambia Country Report of 31 March 2010 to the United Nations General Assembly Special Session on AIDS (UNGASS report) 15.7 per cent of orphaned and vulnerable children aged 0–7 years received free basic external support. The UNGASS report also indicates that the District AIDS Task Force and the District Welfare Assistance Committees have undergone training to deal with OVC issues and that a Parliamentary Caucus on children has been established to develop work plans and to design a pilot project to integrate issues of children, including OVCs. The Committee notes, however, from the UNGASS report that the OVC situation appears to be developing into a deepening crisis as funding and programming is failing to keep pace with the magnitude of orphans who need care and support. Moreover, the Committee notes that according to the Epidemiological Fact Sheet on HIV and AIDS of 2009 – Zambia (UNAIDS), over 690,000 children aged 0–17 years are orphans due to HIV/AIDS. While appreciating the measures taken by the Government to protect orphans and other vulnerable children, the Committee express its deep concern at the increasing number of children orphaned in Zambia as a result of HIV/AIDS. Recalling that children orphaned by HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect such children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken by the District AIDS Task Force, the District Welfare Assistance Committee and the Parliamentary Caucus on Children in protecting orphans and other vulnerable children, and the results achieved. The Committee finally requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the TACKLE project in preventing children/orphans affected by HIV/AIDS from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, including the number of children prevented and withdrawn from the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zimbabwe

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Labour Act of 2002 and the Labour Relation Regulations of 1997 do not apply to self-employed workers. The Committee also noted the allegation of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) that the informal economy is among the sectors where child labour is the most common. Moreover, the Committee noted the information from the 2008 ILO-IPEC Draft Rapid Assessment Survey on the worst forms of child labour in Zimbabwe (ILO-IPEC Rapid Assessment Survey) that a full 87 per cent of children surveyed were self-employed.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Children's Act [Chapter 5:06] prohibits parents and guardians from allowing their children to engage in employment, in addition to protecting all children from forms of ill-treatment, exploitation and neglect. In this regard, the Committee notes that section 10A(1)(a) of the Children's Act states that no parent or guardian of a child or young person of school-going age shall knowingly cause or permit the child or young person to absent himself from school in order to engage in employment for gain or reward (punishable by a fine not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars and/ or to imprisonment of a period not exceeding six months). The Government also indicates that it views children engaged in work on their own account as children in need of care and that there are specific mechanisms in place to ensure that such children are identified and put in places of safety. The Committee notes the Government's acknowledgement that, notwithstanding the comprehensive legal provisions that prohibit children from engaging in child labour, children are in practice found in employment situations. In this regard, the Committee reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity, including the informal sector, and that it covers any type of employment or work, whether or not it is performed on the basis of an employment relationship and whether or not it is remunerated. Noting the large number of children working on their own account as identified in the 2008 ILO-IPEC Rapid Assessment Survey, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that children working outside an employment relationship, particularly on those working on their own account or in the informal economy, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the existing mechanisms which reach out to these working children and on the specific measures taken to strengthen such initiatives.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, while section 5 of the Education Act of 1996 states that it is the objective for primary education to be compulsory for every child of school-going age, in practice, primary education is neither free nor compulsory and that the quality of education is low. The Committee also noted the ZCTU's allegation that very young children engaged in work to pay for their school fees. Moreover, the ZCTU indicated that school drop-outs are a common phenomenon. In this regard, the Committee further noted the statement in the draft Five-Year National Programme for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour of April 2009, from the Ministry of Labour and Social Services, that the number of school drop-outs had been constantly increasing in recent years, affecting girls disproportionately. Lastly, the Committee noted the Government's indication that it had launched various programmes, such as the Basic Education Assistance Module (BEAM), aimed at ensuring that children attend school.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it has put in place measures to ensure that all rural primary school students do not pay tuition fees, and that this is a step towards the reintroduction of free education in Zimbabwe. The Government indicates that it is committed to achieving basic education for all, by removing obstacles and ensuring that all children have access to education. The Government states that it is taking appropriate measures in this regard, such as the payment of grants and subsidies to schools. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that it has continued to increase its funding for the BEAM.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the Education Act was amended in 2006 to provide that primary education shall be compulsory for every child. However, the Committee observes that the Education Amendment Bill (to amend the Education Act), passed by the Senate in 2006, did not appear to address the issue of compulsory education. In addition, the Committee notes that, according to information from the 2011 UNESCO Education For All: Global Monitoring Report, primary education lasts from 6 to 12 years. The Committee therefore observes that the age at which compulsory schooling ends is two years below the current minimum age for admission to work of 14 years of age. Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to adopt legislation which would fix the age of completion of compulsory schooling at 14, in line with the minimum age for admission to work. The Committee also encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to strengthen the functioning of the education system and to provide information on the impact of these programmes with regard to increasing school attendance rates and reducing school drop-out rates. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Education Act, as amended in 2006, with its next report.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. The Committee previously noted that section 11(1)(a) and (3)(b) of the Labour Act of 2002 permit the employment of apprentices from the age of 13 years. The Committee observed that permitting the employment of apprentices from the age of 13 years, pursuant to the Labour Act, was not in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that this matter is currently being considered in the context of the ongoing labour law reform process, with a view to raising the minimum age for admission to apprenticeship in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the principle of raising the minimum age for admission to apprenticeships has been adopted by the social partners. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts within the framework of the ongoing labour law reform process, to ensure the establishment of a minimum age of admission to apprenticeship of no lower than 14 years of age, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. The Committee previously noted that section 3(4) of the Labour Relations Regulations establishes that children over 13 years of age may perform light work where such work is an integral part of a course of education or training and does not prejudice their education, health and safety. The Committee also noted that quite a number of children below 13 years of age were economically active; the 2004 labour force survey indicated that 406,958 children aged 5–14 were engaged in work for at least three hours per day. The Committee further noted the Government's statement that it intended to consult with the social partners with a view to amending its legislation so as to detail the types of light work which may be undertaken by children from the age of 13 years and the conditions in which such work may be undertaken.

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that it is envisaged to include in the labour law reform process a determination of the types of light work that may be performed by children. The Government indicates that the revision of Statutory Instrument 155 of 1999 giving the schedule of light work will be done after the revision of the principal Act. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts, within the reform process, to ensure a determination of the types of light work that may be performed by children from the age of 13 years. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the ZCTU's allegations that, despite legislation applying the Convention, there is lack of enforcement due to the incapacity of labour inspectors. The ZCTU indicated that when breaches of the relevant legislation were detected, the cases took more than a year to be processed, both at the Department of Labour, and in the courts of law. The ZCTU further indicated that children in Zimbabwe often start work below the age of 13. The Committee also noted the information from the 2004 labour force survey that 42 per cent of children between the ages of 5–14 years were involved in economic child labour. The Committee further noted the information in the ILO–IPEC Rapid Assessment Survey that 68 per cent of child agricultural workers surveyed and 53 per cent of child domestic workers surveyed were 14 years old or younger. The Government indicates that it intended to address these sectors through the implementation of phase II of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Project. The Committee expressed its deep concern at the allegations of weak enforcement of child labour legislation, and at the large number of children under the age of 14 who are found to be working, especially in the agricultural sector and in household activities.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is currently strengthening existing programmes to reach out to children engaged in child labour. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that phase II of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Project is not yet underway, but that this phase will focus on the agricultural and domestic sectors. Lastly, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Zimbabwe Statistics Agency has recently concluded the labour force survey of 2011, and that these results will be communicated to the Office once available. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts, within phase II of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Project, to reduce the number of children under the minimum age who are engaged in economic activities, especially with respect to children working in the agricultural sector and domestic services. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information from the 2011 Zimbabwe labour force survey, when it becomes available, on the number of children below the minimum age who are engaged in economic activities.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously observed that Zimbabwean legislation only covered cross-border trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation. However, the Committee noted that Zimbabwean children were trafficked internally, and were trafficked to other states for both forced agricultural labour and domestic servitude, in addition to sexual exploitation. The Committee also noted the statement of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) regarding the existence of trafficking of children to other countries in the region, such as Botswana and South Africa. In this regard, the Committee noted that according to the 2009 UNODC Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, no prosecutions or convictions were recorded for trafficking in persons during the recent years, due to the absence of a specific provision on human trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is fully committed to preventing and combating trafficking, should the phenomenon be present in the country. The Government indicates that it will embark on an exercise to determine the extent of the phenomenon in the country. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that it is in the process of discussing comprehensive legislation to deal with human trafficking in all its facets, including the trafficking of children. However, the Committee observes that the Government has referred to similar forthcoming legislation since 2005. Moreover, the Committee notes the information on the website for the Zimbabwean Parliament that, as of 31 August 2011, legislation concerning trafficking had not yet been introduced in Parliament. Recalling that Article 1 of the Convention requires member States to take immediate measures to prohibit the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency, the Committee expresses its concern that comprehensive legislation has yet to be adopted to prohibit the internal trafficking of persons under 18, or their trafficking for the purpose of labour exploitation. Accordingly, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that legislation prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children (including internal trafficking) for both labour and sexual exploitation is adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard, and to provide a copy of the relevant legislation, once adopted.

Article 4(3). Periodic examination of the list of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that a revision of the list of types of hazardous work was being contemplated under the Project on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour in Zimbabwe (WFCL Project).

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the revision of the list of types of hazardous work has not yet been undertaken, and that this is envisaged to take place under phase II of the WFCL Project. Observing that the Government has been referring to the imminent revision of the list of types of hazardous work since 2003, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the appropriate examination and revision of the list of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted that Zimbabwe faced a decline in its net enrolment and completion rates of primary education, due to ongoing socio-economic challenges. The Committee also noted the ZCTU's contention that school drop-outs are a common phenomenon in Zimbabwe. In this regard, the Committee noted that the Government had introduced the Basic Education Assistance Module (BEAM) in 2001, with the primary objective of reducing the number of drop-outs and of reaching those who had never been to school due to economic hardship. According to information from UNICEF, the BEAM was revitalized in 2009 and had supported over 550,000 children in 5,400 primary schools. Nonetheless, the Committee noted the information in the ILO-IPEC Rapid Assessment Survey on the worst forms of child labour in Zimbabwe (Rapid Assessment Survey), conducted in September 2008, that 70 per cent of the children surveyed had dropped out or never attended school.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it is taking steps towards the attainment of universal primary education. The Government indicates that it envisages several measures in this regard, including reintroducing free primary education, providing school lunches, improving the quality of education and ensuring a predictable and adequate state budget for education. The Government also indicates that it has waived tuition fees for children enrolled in rural schools, and that only levies are charged for these children. The Government indicates that such levies for needy children are paid for by the BEAM. However, the Committee also notes that, according to the UNESCO Education for All Global Monitoring Report of 2011, there remain 224,000 out-of-school children between the ages of 6 and 12. Considering that education contributes to preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts, including through the BEAM, to ensure access to free basic education to all children in Zimbabwe. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard, particularly with respect to addressing the financial barriers to education, with a view to increasing school attendance rates and reducing drop-out rates.

Clause (d). Identify and reach out to children at special risk. 1. Orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children. The Committee previously noted that many children in Zimbabwe are orphaned due to HIV/AIDS and that most of these children find themselves involved in the worst forms of child labour. In this regard, the Committee noted the ZCTU's allegation that the HIV/AIDS pandemic has contributed to the phenomenon of child poverty and child labour, as the number of child-headed families increased. The Committee also noted that the Government had launched the Orphans and other Vulnerable Children National Action Plan (OVC NAP) in 2004, which seeks to ensure that these children have access to education, food, health services, and that they are protected from abuse and exploitation.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that it has made significant efforts over the years to curb the spread of HIV/AIDS and to provide anti-retroviral therapy for those infected. The Committee notes that Zimbabwe has developed a National Orphan Care Policy, which provides a package of basic care and protection for orphans. The Government further indicates that it has continued to register a gradual decline in HIV prevalence, dropping nearly 10 per cent between 2001 and 2009. The Committee also notes the information in the Government's report to the UN General Assembly as a follow-up to the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS of April 2010 that approximately 21 per cent of households with OVCs received basic external support in 2009. This report indicates that more than 800,000 OVCs were provided with food or nutritional assistance support in 2009, while 219,874 OVCs were provided with school-related assistance.

Taking due note of the measures taken to provide assistance to orphans and other vulnerable children, the Committee notes the Government's indication that HIV/AIDS remains a leading cause of the worst forms of child labour in the country. In this regard, the Committee notes the information from the Multiple Indicator Monitoring Survey Preliminary Report of August 2009 that one in four children in the country are orphaned by HIV/AIDS. The Committee therefore requests the Government to pursue and strengthen its efforts, within the framework of the OVC NAP, to protect children orphaned by HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved.

2. Street children. The Committee previously noted that, according to official estimates, there were approximately 5,000 street children in Harare, the majority of whom were boys between the ages of 14 and 18. It also noted that the number of street children had increased in recent years. Moreover, the Committee noted the information from the Rapid Assessment Survey revealing that 63 per cent of the street children surveyed were orphans, and the average age that these children began living on the streets was 10 years. The Rapid Assessment Survey indicated that begging was the source of livelihood for 45 per cent of these children.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, among other programmes for OVCs, it has put in place the street children fund which provides for the needs of more than 12,000 children living or working in the streets. The Government indicates that this programme supports the reintegration of street children with their families to ensure that this process is smooth and sustainable. The Government indicates that 7,253 children (6,959 boys and 1,203 girls) have been reunited in a family environment since 2007. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to protect children under 18 years living and working on the streets from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved in this regard, within the framework of the programme for OVCs and the street children fund.

3. Children engaged in mining activities. The Committee previously noted the ZCTU's statement that one of the worst forms of child labour most common in Zimbabwe is work in the mining sector, where children scavenge for minerals to survive. The Committee also noted the information in the Rapid Assessment Survey that 11.6 per cent of the children surveyed were engaged in mining work and that children were mostly self-employed boys between the ages of 15 and 17 (though most had started below the age of 14). The Rapid Assessment Survey further indicated that 67 per cent of children working in this sector use chemicals (including mercury, cyanide and explosives), and approximately 24 per cent of these children work for more than nine hours a day. The Committee expressed its serious concern at the situation of children working in hazardous conditions in mines, and requested the Government to take measures, within the framework of phase II of the WFCL Project, to protect children working in mines in hazardous conditions.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that phase II of the WFCL Project has yet to be implemented, and notes that the Government provides no information on other measures taken to reach out to children engaged in hazardous work in mines. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to prevent children from engaging in hazardous mining activities, and to remove and provide rehabilitative services to those children currently engaged in this worst form of child labour. It once again requests the Government to provide information on effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Article 5 and Part V of the report form. Monitoring mechanisms and the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the ZCTU's contention that land invasions had caused the displacement of farm workers and their families, causing children to engage in illicit activities, including prostitution. The ZCTU further indicated that the relevant enforcement mechanisms need to be enhanced, and that there is a strong need to address the underlying causes of the worst forms of child labour, particularly poverty and to provide a comprehensive social system. The Committee also noted that the Rapid Assessment Survey indicated that of the children interviewed, 18 per cent were engaged in prostitution and 23 per cent were engaged in illicit activities. The Rapid Assessment Survey also indicated that poverty was the major push factor for the worst forms of child labour and that children engaged in these activities because there were no immediately viable alternatives through which to support themselves or their households. The Survey concluded that, while many of the legal provisions on the worst forms of child labour are sufficiently up to date, this legislation lacked enforcement.

The Committee notes the Government's statement, in response to the ZCTU's allegations, that the land reform exercise is not the cause of children engaging in the worst forms of child labour. The Government indicates that the leading causes are poverty and the negative effects of the HIV/AIDS pandemic. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that efforts are being made to strengthen labour inspections so as to identify and deal with incidents of child labour. The Government indicates that it will take measures to ensure that the provisions giving effect to the Convention are adequately enforced. Regarding the phase II of the WFCL Project, the Government indicates that the tripartite partners have concluded work on the Project, but that it has faced serious challenges with respect to resource mobilization. The Government indicates that it remains committed to eliminating the worst forms of child labour through various child protection strategies which are already in place, and that it plans to set aside resources within the 2012–13 national budget to start key initiatives within the phase II of the WFCL Project.

The Committee once again expresses its concern at reports of the weak enforcement of provisions giving effect to the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat the worst forms of child labour, including through strengthened enforcement of the relevant legislative provisions and measures to address the roots causes of this phenomenon. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including through the allocation of resources, to ensure the implementation of phase II of the WFCL Project. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken, and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equality of opportunity and treatment

Afghanistan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Afghanistan's Decent Work Country Programme covers the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. However, the Government does not give any specific information on measures taken or envisaged to include provisions in the Labour Law which would reflect the concept of equal remuneration for "work of equal value". The Committee recalls the importance of providing for the right of men and women to receive equal remuneration for "work of equal value" in order to allow a broad comparison between jobs performed by men and women that may be different but nonetheless of equal value, and that legislative provisions that do not give expression to the concept of "work of equal value" hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination. The Committee also recalls that the definition of remuneration should include not only the ordinary basic or minimum wage or salary but also any additional emoluments whatsoever, payable in cash or in kind, as stipulated in Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take steps to adopt specific legislative provisions explicitly providing for equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value and to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Public service. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a salary scale has been established in Annex I of the Civil Servants Law, taking into consideration the social situation as well as the national economic development, and the financial situation of the Government. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that the method used to set salary scales must be free from gender bias and that it is important to ensure that there is no direct or indirect discrimination in the selection of factors for comparison, the weighing of such factors and the actual comparison carried out. In order to better assess the method used to establish the salary scales in the public service, the Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information concerning the method and factors used to determine salary scales for public service employees, and to forward the latest version of the Civil Servants Act as well as its annexes.

Raising awareness of the principle of the Convention. The Committee welcomes the Government's efforts to continue raising awareness of the principle of the Convention through various measures including organizing training programmes for government officials, workers, employers, judges and civil society, disseminating material on equal remuneration for women and men and organizing workshops for the gender units of ministries on women workers' rights under the Labour Law. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information on awareness raising activities carried out to promote the principle of the Convention, including information on the impact of such activities on reducing the gender pay gap. Please also provide information on the content of the training offered to government officials, workers, employers, judges and civil society.

Article 4. Cooperation with the social partners. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that a tripartite consultative group has been established, comprising government officials, and representatives of workers' and employers' organizations, which actively discusses issues relating to the implementation of the Labour Law and international labour standards in the country. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the activities and recommendations of the tripartite consultative group with respect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and on reducing the gender pay gap.

Statistics. The Committee asks the Government to provide statistics on the earnings of men and women by sector and occupation, and any statistics or analysis on the gender pay gap.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. In response to its previous request to the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Labour Law, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Law is under review. The Government also indicates that one of the main objectives of a project launched under the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) for Afghanistan is to reform the labour laws, and that recommendations will be made in this context regarding amendments needed to bring the Labour Law into compliance with international labour standards, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. Recalling that the prohibition of discrimination in section 9 of the Labour Law is very general, the Committee urges the Government to take the opportunity of the current labour law reform process to amend the law to prohibit direct and indirect discrimination covering all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, namely race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, as well as any other grounds determined in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, in accordance with Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention, and to provide information on steps taken in this regard. Please also provide specific information on the role of the social partners in this process. Recalling the terms of the National Action Plan for Women of Afghanistan (NAPWA), the Committee asks the Government to provide information on progress made to amend or repeal the laws that impair women's potential to fulfil their social and economic rights and duties.

Civil service. Recalling its previous comments on the Civil Servants Act adopted in 2008, the Committee notes that the Government refers to section 9(1) of the Labour Law which prohibits discrimination in recruitment, payment of salary and allowances, and selection of a profession, as well as section 10 of the Civil Servants Act, prohibiting discrimination in recruitment based on the grounds of sex, ethnicity, religion, disability and physical deformity. The Committee recalls the importance of ensuring that civil servants are protected against discrimination based on at least all the grounds enumerated in the Convention and in all aspects of employment and occupation. Noting that a copy of the Civil Servants Act was not attached to the Government's report as indicated, the Committee asks the Government to forward a copy so that it may examine its provisions in light of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to clarify whether the provisions of the Labour Law are applicable to civil servants covered under the Civil Servants Law, and if so, to specify the inter-relationship between section 9 of the Labour Law and section 10 of the Civil Servants Act.

Article 1(1)(b). Disability. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the Law on Rights and Benefits of People with Disability, which according to the Government provides for equal rights for persons with disabilities in terms of social, economic, political, cultural, educational, recreational and athletic participation in the society (section 15). The Committee asks the Government to forward a copy of the Law on Rights and Benefits of People with Disability and to provide information on measures taken in order to implement section 15 of the Law.

Article 5(1). Special measures of protection. Work prohibited for women. The Committee notes that the list of physically arduous or harmful work prohibited for women to be established under section 120 of the Labour Law, is still under preparation. The Government indicates generally that the list will not include prohibitions based on stereotyped assumptions. The Committee recalls that protective measures which are aimed at protecting women generally because of their sex or gender, based on stereotypical perceptions about their capabilities and appropriate role in society, are discriminatory and contrary to the Convention. Noting the absence of details regarding prohibitions set out in the list to be established under section 120 of the Labour Law, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that any restrictions on the work that can be done by women is strictly limited to maternity protection. The Committee also asks the Government to forward a copy of the list once it is adopted.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1997)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Protection from Discrimination Law (No. 10221, 4 February 2010) which prohibits discrimination in a range of areas, including employment, education and the provision of services. The Committee notes in particular that discrimination is prohibited on a wide range of grounds, namely gender, race, colour, ethnicity, language, gender identity, sexual orientation, political, religious or philosophical beliefs, economic, education or social situation, pregnancy, parentage, parental responsibility, age, family or marital condition, civil status, residence, health status, genetic predispositions, restricted ability, affiliation with a particular group or “any other reason” (section 1), many of which are additional grounds, as foreseen in Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention. The Law also defines direct and indirect discrimination (section 3) and covers all areas of employment, including job advertisements, recruitment and the treatment of employees in the workplace (section 12). The Committee also notes that the Law establishes the position of Commissioner for Protection from Discrimination (section 21) which has a broad mandate, including to examine complaints, perform administrative investigations, impose administrative sanctions, sensitize and inform the population about the principle of equality and non-discrimination and monitor the application of the Law (section 32). The Committee notes further that complaints of violations of the Law can be brought by persons or groups of persons claiming to have been discriminated against, or from organizations acting on behalf of such individuals or groups, with their written consent (section 33). For cases of violations of the Law brought before the court, section 36 provides for the shifting of the burden of proof once the plaintiff submits evidence upon the basis of which the court may presume discriminatory behaviour. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the Protection from Discrimination Law, including the activities carried out by the Commissioner for Protection from Discrimination and the number and nature of complaints examined and the outcome thereof, as well as details regarding any proceedings brought before the court pursuant to the Law.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with regret that for a number of years, the Government's reports have failed to respond to the points raised in the Committee's comments. The Committee once again emphasizes that this prevents it from assessing the progress made with regard to the practical application of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure that its next report contains information in reply to all the issues raised by the Committee.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee recalls that in previous observations it referred to the comments submitted by the National Union of Angolan Workers (UNTA) related to cases of age discrimination. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in this respect that the maximum age for eligibility to work in the public service is 35 years and that enterprises shall submit requests to employment centres for the workers they need. With respect to the maximum age requirement of 35 years, the Committee considers that such a requirement is likely to be indirectly discriminatory against women as it may particularly affect women wishing to enter or re-enter the labour market following an absence for maternity and child rearing. In this respect, the Committee encourages the Government, in collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations, to take measures to ensure that women are not indirectly discriminated against in access to employment due to the maximum age requirement. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that some resolutions were adopted in order to ensure women's participation in the management of private and public entities and that a Gender Project is being implemented with the assistance of the ILO. The Government further indicates that in 2009 there were 319,003 employees in the public sector, of which 107,164 were women, and that there are no statistics concerning the informal economy. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply statistical information and hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to improve the collection of such data so as to include information on the representation of men and women in the different industries and occupations, as well as indications as to the representation of women in decision-making positions and the share of men and women considered to work in the informal economy.

The Committee further notes that the Government's report contains no reply to certain points raised in its previous comments. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read in relevant parts, as follows:

Discrimination in practice. The Committee notes that, although the Government has put in place legal provisions concerning discrimination in employment and occupation, including sections 3 and 268 of the General Labour Act No. 2/00, discrimination continues to occur in practice. In its report the Government states that violations of the non-discrimination provisions occur particularly in the private sector where imbalances in the participation in decision-making positions and a tendency to exclude women during and after maternity can be observed. The Government previously reported that gender-based discrimination also exists in the informal economy. As noted by the Committee previously, there is also a significant gender imbalance in the judiciary and as regards management positions in the civil service.

In its report, the Government states that it was difficult to measure the incidence of gender-based discrimination as women do not file petitions or complaints due to shortcomings in the "legal culture". The Government also states that it has made efforts to raise awareness of legal matters, particularly among women, by expanding information and education programmes on women's rights, using different national languages and various forms of communication. Efforts were also being made to address discriminatory cultural and traditional practices still prevailing in the country, which, for instance, lead to unequal access of girls to education. The Government, in a very general manner, also refers to the National Strategy and Strategic Framework to Promote Gender Equality and the Rural Growth and Development Programme which includes a programme for the economic empowerment of women. The report refers to the preparation and use of gender-disaggregated data, although such data has not been provided.

- (ii) The Committee encourages the Government to continue and intensify its efforts to raise awareness and understanding of the principle of non-discrimination and the related legislation among men and women, and requests the Government to indicate the specific activities carried out to this end. Given the reports of discrimination based on sex and pregnancy in the private sector, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to enhance the capacity of the labour inspectorate and other competent authorities to identify and address discrimination in employment and occupation. Please also provide information regarding whether the competent authorities have addressed any such cases, and if so, the results thereof.
 - (iii) The Committee considers that the Government should take specific and proactive measures to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of women in the civil service, including the judiciary, and it asks the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in this regard, including measures to ensure that women have access to management positions on an equal footing with men.

Antigua and Barbuda

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1983)

National extraction and social origin. The Committee recalls that the Constitution prohibits discrimination in respect of "race, place of origin, political opinions or affiliation, colour, creed or sex" (article 14(3)), whereas the Labour Code prohibits discrimination on the basis of "race, colour, creed, sex, age or political beliefs" (section C4(1) et al.). No provision is made, however, for an explicit prohibition of discrimination on the basis of national extraction or of social origin. Concerned over this omission in the application of the Convention, the Committee has for many years been requesting the Government to consider adding these grounds to those in the Labour Code upon which discrimination is prohibited, and to indicate the manner in which workers are protected from discrimination on such grounds in practice. Noting the persistent lack in the Government's report of information regarding any steps taken to ensure and promote the application of the Convention with respect to these grounds, the Committee recalls once again that where provisions are adopted in order to give effect to the principle contained in the Convention, they should include all the grounds of discrimination laid down in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention (General Survey of 1988 on equality of opportunity and treatment, paragraph 58). Moreover, even as the relative importance of the problems relating to each of the grounds may be different for each country, when deciding on the measures taken it is essential that in implementing a national policy attention be given to all the grounds. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take concrete steps to include a specific reference to the grounds of national extraction and social origin in the legislation, in accordance with Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. It also asks the Government to monitor carefully any emerging forms of discrimination in law and practice that may result or lead to discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of social origin and national extraction, and to report on the progress made in this regard.

Argentina

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) of 31 August 2011, which refer to the lack of national policies on equality of opportunity and treatment in employment, with the exception of policies relating to gender equality and the integration of workers with disabilities. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA) of 31 August 2011, referring to the precarious situation of domestic workers and unregistered workers, as well as various legal provisions which establish the requirement to be of Argentinean nationality to gain access to employment. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations in this regard.

Equality between men and women. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Women's Council works jointly with ministries and enforcement agencies in the field of labour. The Government also refers to the Social Insurance Inclusion Plan (Decree No. 1454/2005), under which retirement pensions were introduced for housewives, from which 1,219,000 women have benefited up to now, and the Universal Child Allowance, which has a direct impact on women, including those who are pregnant from the 12th week of pregnancy. However, the Committee observes that the Government has not provided information on the matters raised in its previous observation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact in practice of the framework agreement "Social dialogue for equality of treatment and opportunities for women and men in the working environment", and the activities undertaken by the Coordination Unit for Gender Equity and Equality of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in reducing the remuneration gap between men and women, and on the differences that exist between men and women in terms of career and employment opportunities, including in non-traditional sectors.

Domestic workers. The Committee notes the CTA's indication in its comments that most domestic workers are not registered, have lower levels of protection than other workers, work longer hours and have far fewer hours of weekly rest. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Bill on workers in private households prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security has been approved by the Chamber of Deputies and is currently being examined by the Senate. The Bill envisages placing workers in the sector (98.5 per cent of whom are women) under equal conditions with other workers so that they can benefit from maternity leave, employment stability, family allowances and coverage for employment accidents. The Committee hopes that the Bill will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect. The Committee also draws the attention of the Government to the recently adopted Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189) and Recommendation No. 201.

Undocumented workers. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the impact in practice of Act No. 26476 of December 2008 establishing procedures for the regularization of employment relations and the promotion and protection of registered employment, and of the Employment Regularization Plan and the other measures adopted by the Government to promote the regularization of unregistered workers with a view to reducing their vulnerability and improving their conditions of work.

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislation. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee notes the amendments of 24 June 2010 to the Labour Code, and the Government's indication that the Law on Remuneration of 2001 has been repealed. In response to the Committee's previous comments regarding uncertainty in the meaning of the concepts of “salary”, “wage”, “remuneration” and “payments”, the Government indicates that the terms “payments for work” are defined by the concept of “wage” which according to the Government, fully corresponds to Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Government also indicates that although the Labour Code does not enumerate in an exhaustive manner what is included in the term “wage”, various public services define the elements included in “wages” in their specific legislation. The Committee also notes that in the amendments to the Labour Code, “salary” is defined as being “remuneration paid to the worker against the performed work defined by the law, other legal acts of the labour contract” (section 178). The Committee notes that no amendments have been made to section 172 of the Labour Code and therefore recalls its previous comments in which it noted that section 172(2) of the Labour Code, providing for equal pay for the same or equivalent work between men and women did not reflect fully the principle of “work of equal value” which also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to include a clear definition of remuneration in the Labour Code, particularly ensuring that it includes any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker’s employment as provided in Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to take steps in order to include a provision in legislation specifically providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, thus allowing for comparisons beyond the same or similar work.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Australia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes the observations of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) of 31 August 2011.

Legislative developments. Federal. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Fair Work Act, 2009, and the various improvements in protection from discrimination at work, and notes that as of 1 January 2010, the States, with the exception of Western Australia, have referred their industrial relations powers to the Commonwealth. Thus the Fair Work Act now applies to all employers and employees in Victoria, the Northern Territory and the Australian Capital Territory; to private sector employers in New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia and Tasmania; local government employers in Tasmania; and national system employers and employees in Western Australia. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that it has launched the Human Rights Framework, with the anti-discrimination consolidation project as a key element, with a view to streamlining five Commonwealth anti-discrimination acts into a single comprehensive law. The Committee welcomes the recent enactment of the Sex and Age Discrimination Legislation Amendment Act 2011, as a result of which the Sex Discrimination Act now makes specific reference to Convention No. 111, includes breastfeeding as a ground of discrimination, and extends protection against direct discrimination on the ground of family responsibilities to both women and men in all areas of employment, rather than limiting it to dismissal as was previously the case. On the issue of workers with family responsibilities, the Committee refers to its comments under the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156). The Committee notes that the ACTU indicates that the majority of the recommendations made in the report of December 2008 of the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs regarding the effectiveness of the Sex Discrimination Act, have been referred to the Attorney-General and the Department of Finance and De-regulation for consideration as part of the project to harmonize the anti-discrimination legislation. Noting the aim of the harmonization project to “remove unnecessary regulatory overlap, address inconsistencies across laws and make the system more user-friendly”, the ACTU states that it has serious reservations about the capacity of the process to deal adequately with the Senate Committee’s recommendations, which the ACTU considers go to substantial reform of the legislation, and in this context calls for a more robust consultation process and for a review aimed at rendering the legislation more effective by addressing all the recommendations of the Senate Committee. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that a review of the Equal Opportunity for Women in the Workplace Act, 1999, and the Equal Opportunity for Women in the Workplace Agency (EOWA) is ongoing, and that it will lead to modernizing the coverage of the Act to better reflect the goal of gender equality through encompassing women and men, particularly in relation to caring responsibilities, explicitly referring to pay equity, and requiring employers to report on the gender composition of their boards. The ACTU calls on the Government to ensure in the review process that “streamlining” of the equal employment opportunity (EEO) reporting process does not compromise the quality of data collected in the reports, and indicates that the role foreseen for employee representatives to participate in the reporting process and to sign off on reports should be taken seriously, and steps need to be taken to ensure they are truly independent and adequately resourced. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application of the Fair Work Act with respect to the implementation of the principles of the Convention. The Committee also requests information on the progress made in the anti-discrimination consolidation project and other initiatives under the Human Rights Framework, as they relate to non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation, including specific information on the consultation process and the implementation of the Senate Committee’s recommendations. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the status of the adoption of the amendments to the Equal Opportunity for Women in the Workplace Act, and to reply to the issues raised by the ACTU in this respect.

Legislative developments. State. The Committee notes that the Equal Opportunity Act, 1984 of Western Australia was amended pursuant to Act No. 2 of 2010, to include breastfeeding and bottle feeding an infant as prohibited grounds of discrimination. The Committee also notes that the Equal Opportunity Act, 1995 of Victoria was replaced by the Equal Opportunity Act, 2010 which came into force in August 2011. ACTU raises concerns regarding the changes to the Victoria Act, in particular with respect to the extension of the “permanent exceptions” in the Act, enabling discrimination by faith-based groups and schools, and the limitations on the powers of the Victorian Equal Opportunities Commission. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on new or revised legislation on non-discrimination and equality of the States and territories, as well as information on its application in practice. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the new Equal Opportunity Act, 2010 of Victoria, and to respond in particular to the concerns raised by the ACTU.

Discrimination on the basis of race, colour and social origin. Indigenous peoples. The Committee previously noted concerns regarding the Northern Territory Emergency Response (NTER), which resulted in restrictions on the rights of indigenous peoples to land, property, work and remedies. The Committee had also noted activities in the extractive sector affecting indigenous peoples’ rights to land and livelihoods, as well as difficulties related to the Native Title Act, 1993, for the recognition of traditional lands. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that since 31 December 2010, aboriginal peoples affected by the NTER have been able to bring proceedings under the Racial Discrimination Act before the Australian Human Rights Commission. With respect to the five year leases, resulting in compulsory acquisition of townships which had been held under the title provisions of the Native Title Act, the Government replies that the leases were necessary for urgent delivery of government services and capital investments to remote indigenous communities, that all pre-existing rights, titles and interests on aboriginal lands are preserved under the leases, and that the Government is committed to the payment of fair rent to traditional aboriginal owners, and that traditional aboriginal owners may negotiate for continuing access to land and engagement in traditional occupations. The Government also states that national consultations will begin soon with people in remote indigenous communities, service providers, employers and other stakeholders on how to improve participation and employment services, with a view to putting in place new arrangements by 2013, which will focus on maximizing local employment. The Committee also notes the NTER Evaluation Report of November 2011, prepared pursuant to the National Partnership Agreement for Closing the Gap in the Northern Territory. The report finds that new measures to improve enrolment and attendance at school and the extent and sustainability of the economic base are needed, with education and jobs being critical to the well-being of the communities. It concludes that employment remains low and narrowly based, and access to jobs remains a key problem for communities and a challenge to the sustainability of improvements. The report also concludes that a number of the measures, including those related to the employment projects and changes in land tenure, are likely to have contributed to people’s feeling of loss of freedom, empowerment and community control. In the report “Leading practice agreements: maximizing outcomes from native title benefits” of November 2010, the Committee notes that the Australian Human Rights Commission makes a number of recommendations, including regarding the need for improved consultation and cooperation with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples before adopting or implementing any legislative or administrative measures relating to native title reforms. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to address the findings and conclusions of the NTER Evaluation Report, as well as the recommendations of the Australian Human Rights Commission. The Committee also asks the Government to provide specific information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that indigenous peoples have access to land and resources to allow them to engage in their traditional occupations. Please also provide detailed information on any concrete measures to address discrimination against indigenous peoples due to the NTER with respect to employment and occupation, and access to remedies. Please also provide information on any cases brought under the Racial Discrimination Act related to the NTER.

Equality of opportunity and treatment of indigenous peoples. The Committee notes from the 2011 report of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Social Justice Commissioner, “Constitutional Reform: Creating a nation for all of us” that there is bipartisan political support to recognize specifically Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples in the Constitution. The Committee also notes the range of initiatives being undertaken in some of the states and territories to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of indigenous peoples and address discrimination. The Committee notes in particular the Queensland Indigenous Women’s Strategy to support indigenous women’s economic prosperity and leadership opportunities and capabilities. The Committee also notes that pursuant to the Victoria Aboriginal Economic Development Agenda, a range of initiatives are being undertaken to improve the economic and development outcomes of indigenous peoples, including through the indigenous jobseekers programme, which has resulted in 230 indigenous jobseekers being placed in employment since the programme began in May 2010. The programme also includes the engagement of aboriginal employment brokers, establishing an aboriginal employment resource centre and providing scholarships linked to employment. Victoria has also enacted the Traditional Owner Settlement Act 2010, providing for settlement of claims under the federal Native Title Act. The Government also states that the Office of the Commissioner for Public Employment of the Northern Territory is running a project focusing on capacity building and leadership training for indigenous women in the workforce. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken by all the States and territories to address discrimination and promote equality in employment and occupation of indigenous peoples, and to indicate the results achieved. Noting that no information has been provided regarding the impact of the measures previously noted being undertaken at the federal level, including with regard to the “Closing the Gap” targets, the Indigenous Employment Programme, the Commonwealth Indigenous Economic Development Strategy, the new Community Support Programme or the Job Network, the Committee asks the Government to provide specific information in this regard, as well as information on any other federal initiatives aimed at promoting equality of indigenous peoples and addressing discrimination against them. Please also provide information on the status of the process to recognize specifically Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples in the Constitution.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1990)

The Committee notes the comments by the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) of 31 August 2011.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Fair Work Act (FWA), 2009, one of the stated objectives of which is assisting employees to balance their work and family responsibilities and protecting against unfair treatment and discrimination (section 3). It notes that as of 1 January 2010, all the States, with the exception of Western Australia, have referred their industrial relations powers to the Commonwealth. Thus the FWA now applies to all employers and employees in Victoria, the Northern Territory and the Australian Capital Territory; to private sector employers in New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia and Tasmania; local government employers in Tasmania; and to national system employers and employees in Western Australia. The Committee also notes with interest the adoption of the Paid Parental Leave Act, 2010, which came into force in January 2011, providing Australia’s first statutory paid parental leave scheme. The Committee also welcomes the recent enactment of the Sex and Age Discrimination Legislation Amendment Act 2011, as a result of which the Sex Discrimination Act now makes specific reference to Convention No. 156. The Committee also notes the adoption of the New South Wales Industrial Relations (Public Sector Conditions of Employment) Regulation 2011, which includes unpaid and paid parental leave in the guaranteed minimum conditions of employment for the public sector. The Committee welcomes the legislative developments, and asks the Government to continue to provide such information, including with respect to all the States.

Article 1 of the Convention. Definitions. The Committee notes that section 17 of the FWA now defines “child” to include an adopted child or step-child; section 12 of the FWA defines “immediate family” to mean “a spouse, de facto partner, child, parent, grandparent, grandchild or sibling” of the employee or of a spouse or de facto partner of the employee.

Article 3. Non-discrimination. The Committee notes that the FWA provides a general prohibition of an employer taking any “adverse action” against an employee or prospective employee on various grounds including family or carer’s responsibilities (section 351(1)). It also provides that “modern awards” (legal instruments setting minimum terms and conditions for national system employees in particular industries and occupations) and enterprise agreements must not include terms that discriminate against an employee, including based on family or carer’s responsibilities (sections 153(1), 195(1)). The Committee also notes that the recent amendments to the Sex Discrimination Act extend protection against direct discrimination on the ground of family responsibilities to both women and men in all areas of employment. The Government indicates that draft amendments to the Sex Discrimination Act concerning indirect discrimination were not adopted, and that the Government will consider the issue of indirect discrimination on the ground of family responsibilities in the context of its consolidation of Australia’s anti-discrimination laws. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that there is little case law to date with regard to discrimination on the basis of family responsibilities. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the FWA and the Sex Discrimination Act, as well as any relevant State legislation, and to provide summaries of judicial or administrative decisions addressing discrimination for the reason of family or carer’s responsibilities, and any exceptions permitted. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the status of the consolidation of the anti-discrimination legislation project as it relates to the Convention, including any progress in addressing indirect discrimination on the ground of family responsibilities.

Article 4. Parental leave. The Committee notes section 70 of the FWA, which provides both eligible parents with separate periods of up to 12 months of unpaid parental leave, with a right to request an extension of up to an additional 12 months unpaid leave. The Government indicates that the FWA introduced one concept of unpaid parental leave, instead of maternity, paternity and adoption leave, and that under the Paid Parental Leave Act, the Paid Parental Scheme (PPL) provides from January 2011 that a primary claim may be made by the mother of the newborn child or the parent of the adopted child with payments at the rate of the national minimum wage for a maximum of 18 weeks; secondary claims, and in exceptional circumstances, tertiary claims may also be made (section 54). The Government also indicates that it has announced the introduction of paid paternity leave from January 2013 providing eligible fathers or parents caring for a child born or adopted with two weeks’ pay at the national minimum wage. In this connection, the Committee notes the concerns raised by the ACTU in the context of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No.100), that the PPL scheme does not require employers to top-up the minimum wage payment to full income replacement level, and that the right to request an extension to unpaid parental leave pursuant to section 76 of the FWA lacks a right of appeal against an employer's unreasonable refusal. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the leave entitlements in practice, including statistical information disaggregated by sex, on the number of beneficiaries of leave entitlements, as well as the number of requests that have been refused by employers concerning the extension of unpaid leave. Please also provide information on the progress concerning the introduction of paid paternity leave.

Carer's leave. The Committee notes that section 96 of the FWA entitles an employee (other than a casual employee) to ten days paid personal/carer's leave for each year of service, in order to care for a member of the employee's immediate family or household who requires care or support due to personal illness, injury or unexpected emergency, or if the employee is not fit for work because of a personal illness or injury; section 102 of the FWA entitles an employee to two days unpaid carer's leave for each occasion when a member of the employee's immediate family or household requires care or support due to personal illness, injury or unexpected emergency. In this connection, the Committee notes the comments by the ACTU that carer's leave provisions should be extended in terms of length, scope of coverage and eligible persons. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of sections 96 and 102 of the FWA, including the number of beneficiaries of paid or unpaid carer's leave, disaggregated by sex. Please also provide information on whether consideration is being given to extending the length, scope of coverage and eligible persons of carer's leave.

Working arrangements. The Committee notes that section 65 of the FWA provides a right for eligible employees to request flexible working arrangements, such as changes in hours of work, patterns of work and location of work. It also notes the Government's indication that it established the Fresh Ideas for Work and Family Grants Program to support Australian small businesses to implement practices that help employees balance their work and family obligations, such as work from home arrangements, as well as to improve employee retention and productivity. In this connection, the Committee notes the concerns raised by the ACTU that the right to request a change to working arrangements is limited to employees with caring responsibilities for pre-school children or children with a disability under the age of 18, and there is no right to appeal against an employer's refusal. The ACTU indicates that women continue to bear the greatest share of childcare, and that one of the most significant barriers to carer's maintaining a connection to the paid workforce is lack of flexible working hours. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 65 of the FWA, including the statistical information disaggregated by sex, on the number of beneficiaries of various working arrangements and measures to assess the effectiveness of the legislation. It also asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that such working arrangements assist workers with family responsibilities to enter, re-enter and remain in the workforce, including in small and medium-sized businesses.

Article 5. Childcare and family services and facilities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Child Care Management System was introduced during the 2008–09 financial year, which enables the Government to gather more information from the childcare sector about usage and affordability of childcare facilities. The Government also indicates that from July 2008 it increased the childcare rebate from 30 per cent to 50 per cent of out of pocket childcare costs, and increased the maximum payment per child per year. It further indicates that substantial ongoing support to childcare services is being provided in areas of need, including rural and remote areas. For example, it has been agreed that 38 child and family centres, which will address the needs of indigenous families and their young children, will be established. The Committee asks the Government to provide specific information on the demand for childcare services in comparison with availability, in order to allow the Committee to assess the progress made over time in ensuring sufficient coverage. It also asks the Government to clarify whether the childcare services in areas of need including rural and remote areas are aiming at providing childcare facilities and services for workers with family responsibilities. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of services and facilities that exist to assist workers with family responsibilities regarding other dependent members of their family.

Article 6. Information and education. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Fair Work Australia and the Office of the Fair Work Ombudsman were established; the Fair Work Ombudsman appoints Fair Work Inspectors, and promotes compliance with legislation, including through education, information and assistance. The Fair Work Ombudsman has developed a number of Best Practice Guides to assist small to medium-sized businesses in implementing best practice initiatives, including best practices on work and family and parental leave. The Government also indicates that the Australian Human Rights Commission, which replaces the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission, is responsible for conducting activities which covers barriers to equality, and has been given 6.6 million Australian dollars over four years (2010–14) to expand its information and community education role.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that one of the striking findings of the "Work and Family Balance in Regional Victoria Pilot Project" was a lack of legislative awareness, particularly by employees and managers, in respect of relevant employment regulations; and that the project outcomes provide a much-improved knowledge base for policy making and programme development to support, as well as to monitor, good work and family balance. With regard to Queensland, the Government indicates that as part of the Work and Family Project, the "Better Work Life Balance Questionnaire" has been developed as an online e-survey, which can be used by any organization to help evaluate and improve work-life balance policies and practices. The Committee asks the Government to provide specific information on the awareness raising activities conducted by the Fair Work Ombudsman and the Australian Human Rights Commission, for workers and employers concerning measures to reconcile work and family responsibilities, including leave entitlements, and working time arrangements in the relevant employment regulations. It also asks the Government to provide information on the impact of projects in Victoria and Queensland on State policy and practice in terms of helping individuals reconcile their work and family responsibilities as well as information on any similar projects and programmes in other states.

Article 7. Vocational guidance and training. With regard to the “Parents returning to work program”, which was initiated by Victoria, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that to date over 10,500 individual grants have been made available to parents, and that the last projects will be completed in December 2011. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that from January 2005 to June 2007 the “Back to work: parents and carers program” of Queensland provided 1,889 people with assistance including job search help, job placement, a contribution to childcare or carer costs, and training, etc. and 787 people found jobs. The Government adds that other initiatives such as the “Community Jobs Plan” aim to provide opportunities for work on a range of public works, with an emphasis on participants gaining training, competencies and work skills in activities which will lead to employment opportunities relevant to local labour market demands. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on initiatives that enable workers with family responsibilities to re-enter the labour market after a period of leave.

Part V of the report form. Statistics. The Committee notes section 61 of the FWA, which provides that the National Employment Standards (NES) are minimum standards which apply to the employment of employees, and that they cannot be excluded by enterprise agreements; the NES includes requests for flexible working arrangements, parental leave and related entitlements, and carer’s leave. It also notes the Government’s indication that the Workplace Agreements Database shows that of 9,352 agreements approved under the FWA until December 2010, covering an estimated 1.3 million employees, 86.9 per cent of the agreements, covering 96.6 per cent of the employees, contain one or more family-friendly or flexible work provisions, including leave entitlements and working time arrangements; 25.5 per cent of the agreements, covering 67.5 per cent of the employees, contain one or more parental or child caring provisions that are additional to those provided in the NES; 83.8 per cent of the agreements, covering 93.9 per cent of the employees, contain one or more flexible working hours, flexible access to leave or flexible working arrangements provisions that are additional to those provided in the NES; and 94.6 per cent of the agreements covering 98.3 per cent of the employees, provide for job-sharing, part-time or casual engagement. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the incidence and types of family friendly provisions in enterprise agreements. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that workers in low-paid, part-time or casual jobs, who are predominantly women, are not unfairly disadvantaged compared with other workers with respect to work-family entitlements in the context of enterprise agreements.

Barbados

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1974)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the observations by the Barbados Workers’ Union (BWU), dated 31 August 2011, expressing disappointment at the time it has taken to enact legislation with respect to sexual harassment and employment rights. The BWU also indicates that the Employment Rights Bill will address discrimination in employment and occupation based on union status, HIV/AIDS status, disability, military and civic obligations imposed by law, pregnancy, race, colour, gender, marital status, religion, age, political opinion, national extraction, social origin or indigenous origin, or where the employee is responsible for the care and welfare of a child or a dependent family member. The Committee notes that it has been commenting for many years that the existing legislation does not provide full legislative protection against discrimination as defined under the Convention and that, in this context, the Government has been referring to the Employment Rights Bill since 2004. The Committee asks the Government to take steps without further delay to ensure full legislative protection against direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation, for all workers, on all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, namely race, sex, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Committee welcomes the additional grounds of discrimination, as foreseen in Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention, that appear to be included in the Employment Rights Bill, and asks the Government for information on the status of the process for the adoption of the Bill.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1973)

Principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that article 48 of the new Constitution refers to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value and it asked the Government to provide information on the steps taken and the legislation adopted under this provision. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the preliminary draft amendment to General Labour Act provides that “the State, through the Ministry of Labour, shall promote the inclusion of women in work and shall guarantee the same remuneration as for men for work of equal value.” The Government also indicates that the National Plan of Action for Human Rights includes among its actions “formulating and implementing a cultural campaign for equal work, equal wages, equal opportunities and equal rights.” The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the legislative progress of the preliminary draft amendment to the General Labour Act and to provide a copy of the latest version of it. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in the context of the implementation of the National Plan of Action for Human Rights with a view to the application of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with interest the full and extensive legislation adopted since the approval of the National Constitution on 7 February 2009. The Committee notes in particular the Act to combat racism and any form of discrimination, No. 045 of 8 October 2010, and its regulatory decree (Supreme Decree No. 0213); the “Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez” Education Act No. 070; Supreme Decree No. 0012 of 19 February 2009 regulating the conditions for the employment stability of mothers and fathers with children who work in the public and private sectors; Supreme Decree No. 0521 on subcontracting; and the Act extending the agrarian reform at the community level. The Committee observes that the above legislation is pertinent to the application of the Convention. The Committee will examine the conformity of this legislation with the Convention and the other pending matters together with the Government’s next regular report. The Committee requests the Government to provide copies of any new legislative or administrative provisions relating to the application of the Convention.

Botswana

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Legal protection from discrimination. Recalling its previous comments regarding the legal protection from discrimination available under the Constitution, the Committee notes with satisfaction that its section 15 was amended in 2004 to include the prohibited ground of sex. The Committee requests the Government to take steps so that protection from discrimination based on social origin is also ensured, and to provide information on any cases regarding discrimination in employment and occupation decided by the courts. Recalling its previous comments regarding section 15(4)(e) of the Constitution which allows differential treatment by law where this is “reasonably justifiable in a democratic society”, please indicate how this provision has been and is being applied in practice.

The Employment Act. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Employment Act is being amended. Recalling its previous comments noting that the Employment Act currently only prohibits discrimination in respect of termination of employment contracts, the Committee hopes that the Government will take this opportunity to include more comprehensive provisions to prohibit direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation, including with regard to recruitment and selection, all terms and conditions of employment, and training. Please indicate any further developments in this regard.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Public Service Act was amended in 2000 to include new provisions on sexual harassment. Section 32(1) declares sexual harassment to constitute misconduct. A definition of sexual harassment is set out in section 32(2). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases that have been brought under these provisions. Noting the Government’s indication that most institutions in the private sector have not yet put in place policies on sexual harassment, the Committee recommends that the Government includes similar provisions in the Employment Act.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that it has adopted a gender mainstreaming strategy to ensure that a gender perspective is included in all policies and programmes; gender audits have been carried in a number of ministries, including the Ministry of Labour and Home Affairs. The Department of Women’s Affairs has continued its awareness-raising activities on gender equality issues. A review of all laws that discriminate against women is still ongoing. While there is no explicit policy on affirmative action, the Government has nominated women to decision-making positions and allocated special funds to promote women’s participation in economic and income generating activities. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide more detailed information on the specific measures taken or envisaged to promote and ensure equality of opportunity of men and women in employment and occupation, including access to vocational training and access to credit. Please also provide statistical information available on women’s participation in the labour market (public and private sectors), including self-employment, as well as their share in the informal economy. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures it takes to eliminate customary practices that are detrimental to women’s equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, such as the practice of legal guardianship by men over unmarried women.

The situation of indigenous peoples. The Committee recalls that discrimination as set out in Article 1 of the Convention covers discrimination against indigenous peoples and that the national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment to be adopted and implemented in accordance with Article 2 should include measures to eliminate discrimination against these peoples. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including measures to promote and facilitate the ability of indigenous peoples to pursue their traditional occupations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bulgaria

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

Access to education, training and employment. Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of national extraction or religion. The Committee welcomes the detailed information, including statistics, provided by the Government regarding training and employment programmes, including measures taken with a view to promoting self-employment, for persons from the Roma community and on the results achieved in terms of participation in these programmes. The Committee notes that measures have been taken in order to improve the skills of Roma people and to support Roma entrepreneurs. In addition, employees from the Employment Agency have received specific training to work with representatives of the Roma community and other ethnic minorities.

The Committee notes with interest the measures taken to monitor the programmes and measures aimed at promoting equal access to employment, training and education of the members of the Roma community. It notes the Government's indication that the monitoring of the implementation of the National Action Plan (NAP) on the initiative "Decade of Roma Inclusion 2005–15" is carried out by an interdepartmental working group which prepares on a regular basis a monitoring report identifying the remaining challenges. The following main challenges were identified for Roma people in the field of employment: high unemployment rate (in particular long term unemployment), high number of discouraged persons, need to broaden the scope of active employment measures for long term inclusion, high number of persons working without a formal employment contract, and lack of initial capital to start a family business. The monitoring report also contains recommendations, focusing on the need to improve the coordination between the various institutions and municipalities for joint action, the creation of a Coordinating Council to monitor the implementation of the NAP, and continuation of the collection and analysis of comparable data to monitor the progress made.

With respect to access to education, the Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the various measures that are being taken with a view to removing Roma children from special kindergartens and schools and integrating them in the school system. According to the Government, the number of integrated schools has increased from 262 in 2006–07 to 298 in 2007–08 and activities are carried out on a permanent basis to facilitate mutual adaptation of Roma children and other children in their new educational environment and to build positive attitudes among all children, parents and teachers.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to take concrete measures to foster equal opportunities of Roma people, particularly with respect to access to employment and education and to provide information thereon, including statistical information concerning their situation in the labour market. The Committee also requests the Government to continue and intensify its efforts to assess and to monitor the progress made in this respect, and to provide information on measures taken further to the recommendations of the monitoring reports. The Government is asked to provide information on the measures taken to promote equal access to employment and occupation in the public and private sectors of persons from other ethnic, religious and linguistic minority groups, in particular persons from Turkish origin, Bulgarian-speaking Muslims (Pomaks) and persons of Macedonian origin.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Burkina Faso

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous comments the Committee emphasized that the Labour Code, 2004, did not clearly reflect the principle of the Convention even though it explicitly established the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, since it also provided for equal wages for workers regardless of their sex "given equal conditions of work, vocational qualifications and output" (section 175). This led the Committee to recall the importance of ensuring that the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value also applies to situations in which men and women work under different conditions or, have different qualifications, and nevertheless perform work of equal value. In its previous observation the Committee had noted that the Labour Code was being revised. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 028-2008/AN of 13 May 2008 issuing the Labour Code, section 182 of which retains the same provisions as the former Labour Code with regard to equal remuneration for men and women. It therefore notes that the Government has not taken the opportunity afforded by the elaboration of a new the Labour Code to bring these provisions fully into conformity with the principle of the Convention.

The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that experience has shown that the requirement of "equal conditions of work, skill and output" can provide a pretext for paying women lower wages than men (General Survey of 1986 on equal remuneration, paragraph 54) and that the emphasis should rather be placed on the nature and value of work, which necessitates a comparison of tasks on the basis of objective and non-discriminatory criteria. Referring to its general observation of 2006, in which it spells out the meaning of the concept of "work of equal value", the Committee emphasizes that it is essential to compare the value of the work done in different occupations, which may involve different qualifications and skills, responsibilities or working conditions but which are nevertheless of equal value. The Committee considers that the coexistence in the Labour Code of 2008, of provisions on the one hand establishing equal remuneration for all workers irrespective of their sex “given equal conditions of work, vocational qualifications and output” and provisions on the other hand stating that “the determination of wages and the fixing of rates of pay must respect the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value” may lead to confusion or conflict in the application of the principle of the Convention in practice, in view of the different criteria adopted. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to bring section 182 of the Labour Code of 2008, into full conformity with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value established by the Convention and to supply information on any measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Burundi

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that both article 57 of the Constitution and section 73 of the Labour Code provide for equal remuneration for equal work, which falls short of fully reflecting the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value as set out in Article 1 of the Convention. In its report, the Government states that there is no obstacle to reflecting the principle of the Convention in the national legislation. Noting the Government’s willingness to bring article 57 of the Constitution and section 73 of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures as soon as possible and to indicate in its next report the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the comments on the application of the Convention made by the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU) dated 30 August 2008, to which the Government has not as yet replied. It requests the Government to provide its comments regarding the issues raised by COSYBU.

Discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction. In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to address discrimination in employment between different ethnic groups. In reply, the Government once again refers to the 2005 Constitution, and to the Arusha Agreement. As previously noted by the Committee, article 122 of the Constitution prohibits discrimination based, inter alia, on an individual’s origin, race, ethnicity, sex, colour and language. The Committee also notes that, pursuant to article 129(1) of the Constitution, 60 per cent and 40 per cent of the seats in Parliament are reserved for Hutus and Tutsis, respectively. Similar provisions also exist for government positions. In its report, the Government also asserts that ethnic discrimination in employment and occupation no longer exists. As the elimination of discrimination and the promotion of equality is a continual process, and cannot be achieved solely through legislation, the Committee finds it difficult to accept statements to the effect that discrimination is inexistent in a given country. It stresses the need for the Government to take continuing action with a view to promoting and ensuring non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation. The Committee therefore reiterates its request for information on any specific measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment, irrespective of ethnic origin, in respect of employment in the private and public sectors, including awareness-raising activities and measures to promote respect and tolerance between the different groups. It also reiterates its request for information on the activities of the newly established public service recruitment commission with a view to promoting equal access to public service employment of different ethnic groups.

The Committee notes that, despite the provisions of article 7 of Protocol I to the Arusha Agreement which provides for the promotion of disadvantaged groups, notably the Batwa, the Working Group of Expats on Indigenous Populations/Communities of the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights (Report of the Research and Information Visit to the Republic of Burundi, March–April 2005, page 31) reports that this particular group continues to suffer from strong negative stereotypes and racial harassment by other segments of the population. While taking note of the Government’s very general statement that measures have been taken in the field of education, the Committee observes that, according to the African Commission’s Working Group, the Batwa’s access to education is well below the national average. The illiteracy rate among the Batwa is estimated to be over 78 per cent. The Committee urges the Government to take all measures necessary to ensure equal access of the Batwa to education, vocational training and employment, including through reviewing and strengthening relevant national laws and policies and ensuring their full implementation. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to combat stereotypes and prejudice against this group. The Government is requested to provide detailed information with regard to these matters in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Cambodia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1999)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Definition of remuneration. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the definition of “wage” set out in section 103 of the Labour Law of 1997 excludes health care, legal family allowance, travel expenses and benefits granted exclusively to help the worker do his or her job, and asked the Government to indicate whether consideration is being given to revising the definition of “wage” in the Labour Law to ensure that it meets the requirements of Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government’s report does not contain any up to date information in this regard. Recalling that the broad definition of “remuneration” enshrined in Article 1(a) of the Convention captures all elements that a worker may receive for his or her work, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to amend the Labour Law in order to bring it in line with Article 1(a) of the Convention.

Article 1(b). Work of equal value. With regard to section 106 of the Labour Law, which provides for equal wages for “work of equal conditions, professional skill and output ... regardless of their origin, sex or age”, the Committee had asked the Government to take steps to ensure that full legislative expression is given to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, providing not only for equal remuneration for workers who perform the same jobs, have the same skills and work under the same conditions, but also applying to situations where men and women perform work of a different nature, that is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that at present, the Government is not considering amending the Labour Law. Recalling the importance of giving full legislative expression to the concept of “work of equal value”, in order to address effectively direct or indirect pay discrimination that results from the undervaluing of work performed predominantly or exclusively by women, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

Cameroon

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes the communication from the Confederation of United Workers of Cameroon (CTUC), dated 20 October 2011. The Committee asks the Government to communicate its comments in this response.

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. For several years the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the fact that section 61(2) of the Labour Code makes payment of an equal wage to all workers, regardless of their origin, sex, age, status and religious belief, contingent on “equal conditions of work and skill” and that it therefore does not give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee notes the Government’s commitment to amending section 61(2) of the Labour Code when the Code is revised. It notes, however, that the report contains no information as to when the reform of the labour legislation is to be conducted. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary steps in the near future to amend section 61(2) of the Labour Code so that it reflects the principle laid down in the Convention, and asks the Government to provide specific information on the measures taken to this end and on progress made in the Labour Code revision process.

Article 2(2)(c). Collective agreements. In its previous comments the Committee pointed out that section 70 of the CAMRAIL collective agreement is discriminatory in that it provides for the grant of travel allowances only to the wife and children of a worker and not to the husband of a CAMRAIL female worker. The Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the provisions of the CAMRAIL collective agreement observe the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that it is in the process of taking the necessary measures to ensure that the clauses of the CAMRAIL collective agreement observe the principle laid down in the Convention. Pointing out once again that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women laid down in the Convention applies not only to wages but also to all related benefits, the Committee asks the Government to specify the measures taken, in cooperation with the social partners, to ensure that the discriminatory clauses of the CAMRAIL collective agreement are revised, and to indicate, more generally, the action taken to encourage the social partners to examine collective agreements in the light of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Please also provide copies of relevant extracts of collective agreements.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1988)

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that it is revising the Labour Code and its enabling texts in full and that the revised legislation will contain provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on each of the criteria listed in the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the Labour Code includes provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, at all stages of employment and occupation, and asks it to provide specific information on progress in the revision of the labour legislation.

Discrimination based on sex. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's assurance that any provision which has the effect of destroying or impairing equality of opportunity or treatment for women in employment and occupation will be repealed. It notes, however, that the Government gives no indication of progress made in the process of revising the legislation. It further notes that in its concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee stated that it remains concerned that women are vulnerable to discrimination under customary law, and at the prevalence of stereotypes and customs in Cameroon which are contrary to the principle of equality of rights between men and women. The UN Human Rights Committee considers that Cameroon should strengthen and pursue its efforts to address discriminatory traditions and customs through education and awareness-raising campaigns (CCPR/C/CMR/CO/4, 4 August 2010, paragraph 8). Noting this information, the Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to remove from the legislation the provisions that have the effect of discriminating against women in employment and occupation, and asks it to provide information on the measures taken to this end. The Committee also asks the Government to take steps to combat stereotyping and prejudice regarding the respective roles of men and women in society so as to remove obstacles to the employment of women. The Committee also requests the Government to provide specific information on the status of the work in process on the Bill for the prevention and punishment of violence against women and discrimination based on sex, and to send a copy of it as soon as it has been adopted.

Article 2. National policy on equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee notes the Government's statement that there is no discrimination whatsoever on grounds of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion or social origin in Cameroon. It notes that the Government merely indicates that it will take the necessary steps to prepare and implement the national policy on equality. Pointing out that no society is completely free of discrimination, the Committee again asks the Government to take the necessary steps as soon as possible to declare and pursue a national policy on equality including programmes of action and specific measures to promote equality of opportunity and treatment without distinction as to race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin, and to address discriminatory practices in employment and occupation. The Government is also asked to provide information on progress made in declaring and pursuing this policy and on the results obtained.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Canada

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes the observations provided by the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC) referred to in the Government's report.

Discrimination on the grounds of political opinion and social origin. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures with a view to the amendment of the Canadian Human Rights Act (CHRA) and the legislation of specific provinces and territories, to include the grounds of political opinion and social origin as prohibited grounds of discrimination, the Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any indication that steps have been taken in this regard with respect to the CHRA, or to the legislation of the territories or most of the provinces concerned. The Committee further recalls its previous comments in which it noted that the CLC had expressed concern at the rise in social inequalities in Canada, and that a research paper released in 2009 by the Canadian Human Rights Commission concluded that adding the ground of "social condition" to the Canadian Human Rights Act would extend protection to the most marginalized and vulnerable groups in society, providing them with better access to legal recourse.

The Committee notes that although there still has been no change at the provincial and territorial levels in terms of adding social origin or political opinion as grounds of discrimination, the Manitoba Human Rights Commission has recommended the inclusion of "social disadvantage" or "social condition" to the Human Rights Code, thus encompassing "social origin" based on Canadian legislation and jurisprudence. The Committee further notes that the New Brunswick Human Rights Commission has developed and published a Guideline on Political Belief and Activity intended to raise awareness on individuals' rights and responsibilities under the New Brunswick Human Rights Act. In the jurisdiction of Newfoundland and Labrador, the Human Rights Act, 2010 was adopted, which, as was the case under the previous legislation, prohibits discrimination on a range of grounds, including social origin and political opinion.

Recalling that the ground of social origin or "social condition" is only covered by the legislation of Quebec, Northwest Territories, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, and that political opinion continues to be absent from the federal legislation, as well as from the legislation of Alberta, Ontario, Saskatchewan and Nunavut, the Committee once again urges the Government to amend the CHRA and to take the necessary measures with a view to amending the legislation of the relevant provinces and territories, to include social origin or "social condition" and political opinion as prohibited grounds of discrimination in employment and occupation, and to provide information on the concrete steps taken in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the inclusion of “social condition” as a prohibited ground of discrimination in the Manitoba Human Rights Code, and encourages the Government to take this opportunity to take measures to have the ground of political opinion also included.

Gender equality in employment and occupation. The Committee notes the CLC’s comments relating to section 13(5) of the Canada Post Corporation Act, which states that a mail contractor is not deemed to be a dependent contractor or an employee within the meaning of the Canada Labour Code. The CLC considers that this discriminates against women as they account for 71 per cent of the rural and suburban mail carriers, and the composition of dependent contractors is predominantly women. The Committee also recalls its previous comments noting concerns regarding the restructuring of the Status of Women Canada (SWC), resulting in the closure of a number of the SWC’s regional offices, thus making access to the services of the SWC more difficult for women, particularly in remote and rural areas. The Committee notes that the Government considers that there has been no negative impact due to the restructuring of the SWC on women’s access to programmes and services regarding employment and occupation, and that numerous projects have been funded addressing women’s economic security and prosperity with a specific focus on supporting women in non-traditional occupations. The Government indicates that in 2011, the SWC launched the Blueprint Projects which aim, inter alia, to help community-based organizations improve financial and growth opportunities for women business owners, increase recruitment of women in non-traditional work, and retain and promote women in non-traditional and under-represented sectors. The Committee also notes that the SWC continues to promote sustainable gender-based analysis (GBA) which must be conducted by federal departments with respect to all policies and programmes to ensure that the outcomes benefit both women and men. The Committee further notes that under the New Brunswick Wage Gap Initiatives, various initiatives and projects have been launched in order to promote non-traditional career options of both women and men, and that Ontario has launched training programmes to increase the representation of women in non-traditional fields of employment, that benefited 450 women between 2009–11. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the exclusion pursuant to section 13(5) of the Canada Post Corporation Act on women in terms of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation and to indicate whether any measures are being taken to address the issues raised by the CLC. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken under the Blueprint Projects with respect to the increase of women’s representation in non-traditional work and to provide information on the outcome of GBA conducted in federal departments. The Committee also asks the Government to continue providing information on measures taken to promote women’s access to occupations that have been traditionally dominated by men, including in the provinces and territories, and to provide information on the impact of such measures in increasing women’s representation in traditionally male-dominated occupations.

National policy. The Committee notes that the CLC considers that there is a need for a more structured national policy which would encompass unifying principles for all jurisdictions, express goals to be achieved and provide for holistic approaches for integrating workplace developments. The CLC also notes that a better oversight is needed to ensure that regulatory reforms, labour market changes and technological innovations are made with the aim to reduce inequalities. The CLC notes in particular that part-time and temporary work should be systematically examined as well as income inequalities, especially for women, young workers and economically marginalized groups, and that the social partners should be involved in all processes dealing with the promotion of equality of opportunity in employment and occupation. The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether any steps have been taken or envisaged to address the issues raised by the CLC, including with respect to the need for a more structured national policy and to indicate how the social partners collaborate in this process.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Central African Republic

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1964)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Application in law of the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value. The Committee refers to its previous observation in which it noted with regret that the new Labour Code (Act No. 09.004), because it limited equal wages to jobs involving “equal working conditions, skills and output”, did not give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It had therefore asked the Government to amend the relevant provisions of the Labour Code. Noting that the Government’s report does not contain any information on measures envisaged or taken in this respect, the Committee asks the Government once again to take the necessary steps to amend sections 10 and 222 of Act No. 09.004 issuing the Labour Code so as to provide explicitly for equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on any measures taken to this end.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to amend the national legislation in order to ensure that it at least covers discrimination on the basis of all the grounds listed in the Convention, including a prohibition on any discrimination based on race or colour. While noting the Government's statement that it faces difficulties which prevent it from revising the Constitution accordingly, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that these grounds could be included in the provisions of the Labour Code concerning discrimination (sections 6 and 7), which in their current wording cover sex, age, nationality, membership or non-membership of a trade union, trade union activity, and the origin and opinions (particularly religious and political) of the worker, or that regulations implementing the Labour Code could be adopted to also cover race and colour before any revision of the Constitution is undertaken. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to adopt legislation, or revise existing legislation or expand the provisions of the Labour Code so that at least all the grounds on which discrimination is based, which are prohibited under the terms of Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, are expressly covered by the national legislation, and to supply information on the measures adopted in this respect.

Discrimination on the basis of sex. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the incompatibility of section 9 of Ordinance No. 006/PR/84 of April 1984 issuing regulations on trading with the provisions of the Convention and has asked the Government to take the necessary steps to repeal this provision. In view of the lack of any reply from the Government on this point, the Committee requests the Government to state whether the 1984 Ordinance is still in force and, consequently, to clarify whether a husband still has the right to object to the commercial activities of his spouse. If so, it urges the Government once again to repeal section of the Ordinance because of their discriminatory nature with regard to women.

Sexual harassment. In view of the lack of information in the Government's report on the measures taken or contemplated to combat sexual harassment in the workplace, the Committee is bound to repeat its request in this respect, referring once again to its general observation of 2002, in which it emphasizes that sexual harassment undermines equality at work by jeopardizing the integrity, dignity and well-being of workers and is harmful to enterprises by weakening the foundations of the employment relationship and reducing productivity.

Article 1(1)(b). Additional grounds of discrimination. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 019/PR/2007 of 15 November 2007, protecting the rights of persons living with HIV/AIDS. This Act contains provisions which define the denial of access to employment for HIV-positive persons as a discriminatory act (section 22), prohibit screening for HIV in relation to obtaining employment, promotion, training or benefits (section 36), guarantee employment to any employee who is living with HIV as long as he or she is capable of working, and guarantees the offer of acceptable replacement work (section 36), and prohibit any penalty or dismissal on the basis of the worker's HIV status (section 38). The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the implementing decrees provided for in section 64 of the Act No. 019/PR/2007 have been adopted, particularly as regards the abovementioned provisions relating to the right to work (sections 32–41) and, if so, to provide a copy of the decrees. The Government is also requested to provide information on any measure taken or contemplated to ensure the effective implementation of these legislative provisions against discrimination towards, and stigmatization of, persons living with HIV and AIDS, for example awareness-raising campaigns on equality at work intended for workers' and employers' organizations, labour inspectors, magistrates and the general public.

Also noting, according to the information contained in the report drawn up by the Ministry of Education in October 2008 on the development of education, that an Act on the protection of disabled persons has been adopted, the Committee requests the Government to send a copy of it to the Office and indicate the steps taken to ensure in practice the equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation for disabled persons.

Article 2. National policy to promote equality. Access to education and vocational training. As regards education and training, on which actual possibilities of access to employment and occupation in both the public and private sectors depend, the Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 016/PR/06 of 13 March 2006 issuing guidelines for the Chadian education system, which focuses on combating the exclusion from education of groups considered the most vulnerable, namely girls living in rural areas, nomadic and lake-dwelling groups, street children, physically disabled persons, refugees and displaced persons, child domestic workers, child herders and child soldiers. The objectives of this Act include "ensuring equitable access to high-quality education for all Chadian children" and "promoting schooling for girls by removing stereotypes and other socio-economic and cultural obstacles to the full development of girls and women in terms of the education process".

The Committee also notes, according to the abovementioned report on education, that incentives aimed at making school attendance more attractive to girls are provided for in the "National plan of action for education for all" and that experimental action has been taken in four pilot areas to promote schooling for girls, such as awareness raising on a large scale with regard to gender issues, grants to communities to undertake income-generating activities, waiving school fees and no age limits on school enrolment for girls, etc.

Welcoming the efforts made and the desire shown by the Government to achieve greater equality in the area of education and training, the Committee hopes that the planned measures to promote equal access to education will be implemented in the near future and that the abovementioned experimental measures can be extended throughout the country in order to rectify the inequalities which exist in practice. It requests the Government to supply information on the results achieved, in the context of the various mechanisms established, with respect to schooling and access to vocational training for girls and women, particularly those living in rural areas. Please also provide information on any measure taken or contemplated to combat discrimination on grounds other than sex in education and vocational training, including the results achieved.

Article 3(d). Employment in the public sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide as detailed information as possible on the measures taken or contemplated to promote and guarantee equality of opportunity and treatment in the public sector, including the results achieved by these measures in terms of employment, promotion and training of women within the public service. The Government is also requested to supply all available statistical information on the numbers of men and women employed at different levels in public service and, more generally, in the public sector.

Part V of the report form. Practical application and statistics. The Committee notes that in reply to its request for statistics the Government indicates that it will soon give labour inspectors the means to gather information relating to the situation of workers on the ground. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken to equip labour inspectors with the appropriate resources and to supply the statistical information thus obtained on employment in the private and public sectors, disaggregated by sex, and also any statistical information available on employment in the informal economy, in order to enable an evaluation of the effect given to the Convention in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Chile

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the observations made by the National Association of Public Employees (ANEF), the Association of Employees of the Women's National Service, the College of Teachers of Chile AG, the National Confederation of Business and Services, and the Confederation of Unions in the Banking and Financial Sector of Chile, dated 15 September 2011. The Committee asks the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to Act No. 20348 of 2 June 2009 protecting the right to equal remuneration and adding section 62bis to the Labour Code, under which employers are required to comply with the principle of equal remuneration for men and women who perform the same work. On that occasion, the Committee asked the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged to reflect fully in the legislation the principle of the Convention. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that Chilean legislation refers to the principle of "the same work" as the labour market is strongly segregated by gender and, in general, women do not perform the same work as men. The Government adds that during the parliamentary discussion of the Act, reticence was expressed with regard to the term "work of equal value", because the interpretation of that phrase would not be completely clear. For that reason, the term "same work" was preferred. In this respect, the Committee considers that the system established contributes to the persistence of the gender pay gap and of occupational segregation on grounds of gender, with certain jobs being performed basically or exclusively by women, and others by men, in accordance with custom or historical attitudes. The Committee recalls that occupational segregation tends to result in the undervaluation of "women's work" in comparison with that performed by men and that to address this segregation it is essential to take into account the concept of "work of equal value", which allows a broad scope for comparison. The application of the principle of the Convention is not confined to comparisons between men and women who work in the same establishment or enterprise, but allows a much broader comparison to be made of work performed by men and women in different locations or enterprises, or with different employers. The Committee therefore again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 62bis of the Labour Code with a view to guaranteeing equal remuneration for men and women, not only in situations in which men and women perform equal or similar work, but also in situations in which they carry out different work, but which is nevertheless of equal value.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1994)

Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of: Act No. 20137 which increases to seven days the leave entitlement of a worker for the death of a child and to three days in the case of the death of either an unborn child or a father or mother, and grants protection against dismissal for up to one month for such workers; Act No. 20367 granting three days' leave to a mother in the event of adoption (irrespective of maternity leave), thereby establishing equality with the three days' leave granted to fathers; Act No. 20482 improving the manner in which use can be made of paternal leave for the birth of a child; and Act No. 20166 granting mothers the right to a break at work to feed their children. The Committee also notes with interest the practical measures adopted by various mining enterprises in relation to equality of opportunities for men and women with family responsibilities, which include: the holding of workshops on parental responsibility, the establishment of rooms for the expression and storing of breast milk, the promotion of the use of parental leave and measures for the protection of pregnant women. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of these provisions, including statistical data disaggregated by sex on the number of workers benefiting from these measures, and on other enterprises or sectors which have established similar measures.

Article 5. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the impact of the new legal provisions on the number of child-care facilities, to extend the right to use crèches to the children of working fathers and to provide information on the supervision of compliance with the requirement to provide child-care facilities. In this respect, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, there has been a great increase in the number of crèches and kindergartens and that employers can comply with the requirement to provide crèches either by establishing one in the enterprise or by paying the costs of the crèche to which the woman worker takes her children. The Committee also notes the adoption of Act No. 20399, granting entitlement to use crèches to men and women workers when they have been granted the personal care of a child under two years of age. Entitlement to use a crèche is also granted to male workers in the event of the death of the mother. The Committee requests the Government to continue making efforts to extend the benefit of child-care facilities to working fathers, as envisaged in the Convention, and to provide statistical data on the crèches and kindergartens established. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the supervisory measures adopted with a view to ensuring that enterprises comply with the requirement to provide crèches for the children of workers. The Committee also requests the Government to report any other measures adopted, that are compatible with national conditions and possibilities, to take account of the needs of workers with family responsibilities.

Article 8. Noting that the Government has not provided specific information on the application in practice of Acts Nos 19670 and 20047 respecting the extension of the protection against dismissal enjoyed by mothers to biological fathers and to adoptive fathers and mothers, the Committee reiterates its request to provide such information.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Colombia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes the observations of 30 August 2011, of the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) concerning the persistence of a marked wage gap between men and women, and reporting that few women are employed in the rural sector and that there is no objective job evaluation mechanism, owing in part to the absence of regulations to Act 1258 of 2008. The Committee asks the Government to send its comments in reply.

Article 1 of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee has, for a number of years, been asking the Government to amend the provisions of the legislation that are more restrictive than the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value laid down in the Convention, namely: section 5 of Act No. 823 of 10 July 2003 establishing rules on equal opportunities for women; and section 143 of the Substantive Labour Code. The Committee understands that a bill is under preparation in the Seventh Committee of the Chamber of Representatives “to establish mechanisms to promote affirmative action for wage equality between men and women in Colombia” (Bill No. 015 of 2010). The Committee observes that section 1 of the Bill provides that the purpose of the law is to prevent and combat any unwarranted differential in pay between men and women engaged in the same job, occupation or post with identical functions. Section 4 of the Bill refers to “mandatory guiding criteria for employers regarding payment of equal wages for equal work for men and women”. The Committee notes that these provisions are more restrictive than the principle of “equal remuneration for work of equal value” laid down in the Convention. It recalls that in its general observation of 2006, it emphasized that the concept of “equal value” is essential to addressing occupational segregation, where men and women often perform different jobs under different conditions, and even in different establishments, since it permits a broad scope of comparison. “Work of equal value” includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, the “same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value (general observation of 2006, paragraph 3). The Committee asks the Government to report on the progress through Parliament of Bill No. 015 of 2010 and to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation adopted gives full effect in law to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value laid down in the Convention.

Articles 3 and 4. The Committee notes that the Government provides information on the adoption of an Agenda for equality at work, consisting of an express commitment made by the unions to gender equality in enterprises, in order to strengthen the role of women and to carry out specific measures to ensure their effective inclusion in the labour market. The Agenda sets out 12 strategies that include wage equality, and was signed in March 2009 by 17 country-level unions and 17 private enterprises, and these were joined in June 2010 by 22 unions belonging to the Inter-Union Committee of Valle del Cauca. As a result of the Agenda, an inter-union gender committee was established to pursue the objectives set, and in 2010 an “gender equity model” was adopted with a view to reducing the wage gap. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of these and similar measures and on their impact in reducing the wage gap and in giving effect to the principle of the Convention.

The Committee notes that although it contains some general information, the Government’s report does not reply specifically to the pending issues referred to below:

Article 1 of the Convention. Remuneration. The Committee notes that the Government’s report does not supply any information on the Committee’s comments regarding the communication of 15 August 2007 from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) concerning the narrow definition of remuneration in the legislation. The Committee asks the Government once again to take the necessary steps to ensure that account is taken not only of the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary but also of “any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker’s employment” to ensure equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to include information in this respect in its next report.

Article 2. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 1257 of 4 December 2008 establishing standards regarding awareness raising, prevention and penalties relating to violence and discrimination against women. The Committee also notes the reform of the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, the adoption of Act No. 294 of 1996 and of other provisions. In particular, section 12 establishes that the Ministry of Social Protection will promote the social and economic recognition of the work of women and will implement mechanisms for enforcing the right to equal remuneration. The Committee hopes that the planned mechanisms will include effective measures to ensure equal remuneration for work of equal value and not only for equal work, in order to effectively address pay discrimination against women. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on these mechanisms and their implementation.

Research and statistical information. The Committee notes the information supplied in the Government's report on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), concerning the research undertaken to compare the income of men and women in the private sector with a view to making progress in identifying possible reasons for the persistent wage gaps in the country. The Committee would welcome further information on the results of, and follow-up to, research on the gender wage gap. The Committee asks the Government once again to supply statistical information to the extent possible, in accordance with its 1998 general observation, namely with regard to:

- (i) the distribution of men and women in the public sector, the federal and/or state civil service, and in the private sector by earnings levels and hours of work (defined as hours actually worked or hours paid for), classified by: (1) branch of economic activity; (2) occupation or occupational group or level of education/qualification; (3) seniority; (4) age group; (5) number of hours actually worked or paid for; and, where relevant, by (6) size of enterprise and (7) geographical area; and
- (ii) statistical data on the composition of earnings (indicating the nature of earnings, such as basic, ordinary or minimum wage or salary, premium pay for overtime and shift differentials, allowances, bonuses and gratuities, and remuneration for time not worked) and hours of work (defined as hours actually worked or paid for), classified according to the same variables as the distribution of employees (subparagraphs (1) to (7) of paragraph (i) above).

Monitoring of application. The Committee asks the Government once again to supply information on the inspection unit's activities in relation to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

Discrimination on the basis of race, colour or social origin. The Committee notes the Government's general reference to various measures to promote fundamental rights and also to technical studies, investigations, plans and policies, adopted with a view to preventing discrimination in access to employment, such as the strategy entitled "Towards a national decent work policy in the context of fundamental rights" and the "Strategy to promote dignified and decent work, from a corporate social responsibility perspective, for vulnerable population groups in Colombia". However, the Committee observes that the Government does not provide specific information concerning the content of these plans and their impact in practice. The Committee requests the Government to send specific information on the abovementioned measures and plans and their impact on the elimination of discrimination in access to employment and occupation on the basis of social origin, race, colour or physical characteristics. It also requests the Government to take steps to ensure that no investigations into the social background of job candidates are carried out which result in discrimination on the basis of social origin and that measures are taken to prohibit discriminatory vacancy announcements. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any administrative or judicial proceedings relating to allegations of discrimination on the basis of the abovementioned criteria.

People of African descent and indigenous peoples. The Committee notes the observations from the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) of 30 August 2010, referring once again to discrimination in access to employment and training suffered by Afro-Colombian and indigenous peoples. The Committee notes the report of the independent expert on minority issues of 25 January 2011 (A/HRC/16/45/Add.1), which refers, in particular, to discrimination in access to quality education, employment and participation in the economic and political life of the country and also the disproportionate poverty and displacement from their lands suffered by many Afro-Colombians. According to the report, the scant amount of statistical information that exists with respect to these peoples hampers the adoption of adequate government policies. The report states that the estimated rate of illiteracy among the Afro-Colombian population is 30 per cent (double the national average). Their poor level of education reduces their opportunities for employment, which is largely restricted to the informal sector, domestic work (in the case of women) and other unskilled jobs. Even though the Government has adopted a series of measures and plans in relation to the Afro-Colombian peoples, the independent expert considered that they were insufficiently enforced and urged the Government to adopt general anti-discrimination legislation which lays down civil and criminal penalties. In this regard, the Committee notes the 2010 study (No. 3660) produced by the National Council for Economic and Social Policy (CONPES) concerning the policy to promote equal opportunities for the Black Afro-Colombian, Palanquera and Raizal peoples and also the 2010–14 development plan for the Black Afro-Colombian, Palanquera and Raizal communities, entitled "Towards a multi-ethnic and pluricultural Colombia with democratic prosperity". The Committee notes that the CONPES study evaluates the programmes implemented from 2002 to 2010 and makes a series of time-bound recommendations to various state bodies and institutions relating to education, training and employment for Afro-Colombian peoples. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken on the basis of CONPES study No. 3660 and their impact on the situation of the Afro-Colombian peoples. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether similar studies have been produced or specific education and training measures have been adopted for indigenous peoples and, if so, to supply information on their impact on access to employment and occupations for the indigenous peoples.

Discrimination based on sex. In its previous comments the Committee noted the information supplied by the Government concerning anti-discrimination measures adopted as part of national development programmes and the programmes promoted, inter alia, by the Ministry of Social Protection, the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development and the National Training Service. The Committee notes that the CUT and CTC indicate in their observations that women are more heavily affected than men by unemployment, that they receive considerably lower wages, that they occupy less-skilled jobs, that they constitute the majority of workers in the informal sector and that they occupy only a small proportion of high-level posts. In this respect, the Committee notes that the Government provides information indicating that: (i) the Presidential High Council for Women's Equality reached an agreement with UN Women for the follow up of judicial decisions concerning women's labour and social security rights; (ii) the Javeriana University organized a course on women and gender addressed to public officers as well as managers from the private sector; (iii) in the framework of the UNIDOS programme, financial credits have been granted to women in situations of extreme poverty or having been displaced; (iv) the National Programme for the promotion of women entrepreneurs was developed; and (v) measures have been taken in order to include and retain women in the world of labour such as the Labour Equality Agenda and the National Public Policy for gender equality. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the practical implementation of these programmes, policies and measures, and on their impact on the discrimination against women in employment and occupation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to give effect to the Equal Opportunities Act (No. 823 of 2003), especially as regards employment training for women in both urban and rural sectors, and on measures taken to ensure that rural women have access to land ownership or possession, agrarian credit, technical assistance, and agricultural training and technology, as provided for in section 3 of Act No. 823 of 2003. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide statistical information on the situation of women and men in the labour market and on their distribution in the various economic occupations, posts and sectors.

Indigenous women. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on action in favour of indigenous women formulated by the Presidential Office for Equal Rights for Women and the results achieved with regard to education, vocational training, employment and occupation.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes Act No. 1010 of 2006, whereby measures are being adopted to prevent, correct and penalize harassment in the workplace and other forms of harassment within the employment relationship. The Committee observes that section 2 of the Act refers to sexual harassment as abuse in the workplace which takes the form of violence against the sexual freedom of the worker. The Act provides that the existence of sexual harassment is presumed if certain circumstances are fulfilled. The Act lays down the obligation to prevent harassment through specific measures and establishes penalties for persons directly responsible for harassment and for employers who have not taken the necessary steps to prevent it. However, pursuant to section 3, a wide range of attenuating circumstances are set out, including emotional state, excusable passion, family links, evident or hidden provocation or "any other similar circumstances". The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which Act No. 1010 of 2006 guarantees in practice adequate protection against both quid pro quo and hostile working environment sexual harassment. Observing that section 3 sets out a wide range of attenuating circumstances in the event of proven harassment in the workplace, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the full protection of victims is ensured in such circumstances. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on administrative and judicial proceedings instituted in relation to sexual harassment and to indicate whether the Act applies to workers in associated cooperatives.

Finally, observing that the Government's report contains very little information on the questions under consideration despite explicit requests in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to send a detailed reply to these questions in its next report.

Comoros

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes the observations made by the Workers' Confederation of Comoros (CTC), received on 1 September 2011, in which the organization states that, given that section 97 of the Labour Code has still not been revised, it is difficult to assess the extent of its application in enterprises with respect to remuneration because there is no wage scale to which employers might refer. The Committee invites the Government to submit any comments it would like to make in reply to the observations of the CTC.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that it has not received the Government's report. It therefore feels bound to reiterate its previous observation, which reads as follows:

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, in the context of the draft revision of the Labour Code, particularly section 97, the draft section on equal remuneration states that "all employers must ensure equal remuneration for the same work or for work of equal value". The Committee also notes the communication from the Comoros Employers' Organization (OPACO) dated 1 September 2009, which states that the revision of section 97 of the Labour Code has not yet been carried out. It notes the Government's reply referring the OPACO to its report. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the progress of the legislative work relating to the revision of the Labour Code and hopes that the new Labour Code, giving full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, will be adopted in the near future. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the role of the social partners in the process of the revision of the Labour Code and to send a copy of the new Code once it has been adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will do its utmost to take the necessary measures in the near future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2004)

Article 2 of the Convention. National policy. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption in June 2008 of the National Policy on Gender Equity and Equality (PNEEG) to ensure equality in employment and occupation. It also noted that the Employers' Organization of Comoros (OPACO), in a communication received on 1 September 2009, indicated that it had not been informed of the elaboration of such a policy and regretted that no measures had been taken to prevent the exclusion of women from certain jobs and occupations. The Committee takes note of the Government's brief comments to the effect that an action plan has been drawn up to introduce measures implementing the PNEEG. The Government also states, in reply to OPOCO's observations, that equality in employment is guaranteed in enterprises and that the promotion of social dialogue is part of the Government's action plan for 2011–15 to ensure effective collaboration with the social partners with a view to achieving perfect social concentration and cohesion. In this respect, workshops designed to strengthen the capacity of employers' and workers' organizations have been held throughout the country. Taking note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on the awareness-raising and training activities carried out or planned with the social partners, within the framework of the implementation of the PNEEG. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the action plan implementing the PNEEG and, more specifically, on the measures taken or envisaged to promote equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women in respect of access to education, vocational training, wage and non-wage employment and working conditions (including remuneration, promotion, and security of tenure). The Government is asked to forward a copy of the PNEEG and the action plan.

Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any reply to its previous comments in this regard. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to elaborate and apply a national policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, irrespective of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Costa Rica

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1960)

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee has been referring for a number of years to article 57 of the National Constitution, which establishes that "the wage shall always be equal for equal work under identical conditions of efficiency", and to section 167 of the Labour Code, which provides that "quantity and quality shall be taken into account when determining the level of the wage for each type of work. Equal wages shall be paid for equal work, performed in the same job and under equal conditions of efficiency and time ...". The Committee recalls that these provisions do not give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value established in the Convention. The Committee recalls that the concept "work of equal value" includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for "equal", the "same" or "similar" work, that it does not require work to be performed in the same conditions or with the same efficiency, and that it encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. Noting that the Government provides no specific information on this matter, the Committee again asks it to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation so as to give full legislative effect to the principle of the Convention, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1962)

Sexual harassment. The Committee refers to its previous comment in which it noted the existence of problems regarding the effectiveness of procedures for handling complaints of sexual harassment and the reluctance of victims to bring complaints for fear of reprisals. In this regard, the Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Act No. 8805, amending Act No. 7476 against sexual harassment in employment and teaching, which came into force on 28 April 2010. The Committee notes that the new Act applies to both the public and private sectors, lays down clear rules of responsibility regarding the prevention of sexual harassment and above all establishes a detailed complaints procedure. In general, the procedure is launched at the level of the workplace but, according to the circumstances, may also be commenced by bringing a complaint before the National Directorate for Labour Inspection when the person committing the harassment is the victim's employer. The Act applies to sexual harassment committed by a superior, or by a person whose rank is lower or the same. The Act also provides for preventive measures for the protection of the victim.

As regards implementing measures, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Women's Ombudsman has launched educational initiatives to raise awareness and provide legal training with a view to preventing and penalizing sexual harassment; an inter-institutional commission was established for monitoring the legislation and this body has held meetings for public institutions concerning implementation and training; follow-up activities were held regarding the drafting and amendment of internal regulations concerning sexual harassment and institutional policy in 170 public institutions with a view to facilitating the processing of complaints. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, one year after the adoption of the Act, 48 per cent of public institutions have regulations concerning sexual harassment. The Committee also notes that in 2009–10 a total of 111 complaints were brought while in 2010–11 (following the implementation of the new Act) 209 complaints were filed with the Women's Ombudsman. The Government indicates that this increase in the number of complaints might correspond to greater awareness of the issue and the dissemination of the new Act. The Committee also notes all the educational and awareness-raising initiatives implemented by the Gender Equality Unit at the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of the Act against sexual harassment in employment and teaching, on the measures to raise awareness of this issue and on the impact of such measures.

Côte d'Ivoire

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Access to the public service. Legislation. For many years the Committee has been asking the Government to take the necessary steps to revise section 14(2) of Act No. 92-570 of 11 September 1992 issuing the General Public Service Regulations in order to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The provision in question states that “specific arrangements may be made, on account of physical fitness requirements or constraints inherent in certain functions ... to reserve access [to the public service] for candidates of one or other sex”. The Committee notes in this connection the observations made by the General Confederation of Enterprises of Côte d'Ivoire, received on 15 December 2010, to the effect that the Government should take account of the Committee's comments and section 14(2) should simply be repealed, insofar as entry to the public service is by competition which is open to candidates of both sexes. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government acknowledges that this provision is discriminatory and expresses its commitment to repealing it as soon as the Act issuing the General Public Service Regulations is revised. The Government also states that, according to the texts in force, there are no longer any public sector jobs which are prohibited for women and the fact that women are under-represented in the public service is due not to legal obstacles but to social and cultural factors which the Government is addressing actively. While noting the Government's undertaking to repeal section 14(2) of the Act issuing the General Public Service Regulations, the Committee observes that the Government again refers to a possible revision of the Public Service Regulations but gives no indication as to when such a process is to begin. It asks the Government to take the necessary steps to repeal, in the near future, section 14(2) of Act No. 92-570 of 11 September 1992 issuing the General Public Service Regulations, and to specify the timetable set for the revision process.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Croatia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Anti-discrimination legislation. The Committee notes the adoption of the Anti-Discrimination Act on 9 July 2008 (Official Gazette 85/08), which defines and prohibits direct and indirect discrimination “in all its manifestations” (sections 2 and 9(1)), both in the private and in the public sectors. The Act provides protection against discrimination on the grounds of race or ethnic affiliation or colour, gender, language, religion, political or other belief, national or social origin, property, trade union membership, education, social status, marital or family status, age, health condition, disability, genetic heritage, native identity, expression or sexual orientation (section 1), thus covering all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention as well as a number of additional grounds pursuant to Article 1(1)(b). With regard to the grounds of pregnancy and maternity, the Committee notes that the new Labour Act, adopted in December 2009, prohibits an employer from refusing to employ and from dismissing a pregnant woman (section 67(1)) and the Gender Equality Act of 15 July 2008 (Official Gazette 82/08) provides that “less favourable treatment of women for reasons of pregnancy and maternity shall be deemed to be discrimination”. The Gender Equality Act also prohibits discrimination in relation to “balance between professional and private life” (section 13(1)(6)).

The Committee notes that the Anti-Discrimination Act creates a category of “more serious forms of discrimination” which includes multiple discrimination and repeated and continued discrimination, and provides that such elements should be taken into account by the courts when determining the compensation for the victim and the fine for the perpetrator. The Committee notes further that this Act covers, inter alia, work and working conditions; access to self-employment and occupation, including selection criteria, recruitment and promotion conditions; access to all types of vocational guidance, vocational training, professional improvement and retraining; education; and social security, including social welfare, pension and health insurance and unemployment insurance (section 8). The Labour Act also prohibits explicitly direct and indirect discrimination “in the field of labour and labour conditions, which includes selection criteria, employment and promotion requirements, vocational guidance and training, additional training and retraining” (section 5(4)).

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legal and practical measures taken or envisaged to implement the relevant anti-discrimination provisions of the Labour Act, the Anti-Discrimination Act and the Gender Equality Act with regard to equal opportunities and treatment in employment and occupation. It further asks the Government to indicate the manner in which the provisions regarding the most serious forms of discrimination are being applied in practice.

Articles 2 and 3. Gender equality in employment and occupation. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the new Gender Equality Act on 15 July 2008. The Act provides for sanctions – fines from 1,000 to 1 million Croatian kuna (HRK) – in case of violation of its substantive anti-discrimination provisions (sections 31–38). It also provides for the adoption of action plans for promoting and ensuring gender equality on the basis of an analysis of the status of men and women every four years (section 11(2)) and specifies that all employers, whether public or private, shall “incorporate anti-discrimination provisions and measures with a view to achieving gender equality in their acts” (section 11(5)). Furthermore, according to this Act, social partners shall, in the course of collective bargaining and in collective agreements, comply with the provisions of the Act and measures aimed at ensuring gender equality (section 11(6)). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation of section 11 of the Gender Equality Act, including on any action plans adopted and implemented and on measures taken by public and private employers to ensure gender equality and their impact on the employment of men and women.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the measures taken with a view to strengthening women’s entrepreneurship within the framework of the National Policy for the Promotion of Gender Equality 2006–10. It further notes that statistics published by the Central Bureau of Statistics in 2010 show that the Croatian labour market is highly gender segregated. In 2008, men represented more than 70 per cent of the workers in agriculture, forestry and fishing, mining and quarrying, manufacturing, energy and supply, construction, transportation, and more than 55 per cent in public administration, whereas women represented more of 70 per cent of the workers in education, health and social services, and financial and insurance activities. In this respect the Committee welcomes the repeal of the Ordinance on jobs not permitted for women (Official Gazette 44/96) further to the entry into force of the new Labour Act on 1 January 2010 and the absence in this new Act of a general provision on jobs which women must not perform, unlike in the former Labour Act in its section 63(1). As regards the nature of jobs performed by women, the Committee notes that, according to the Government’s report, despite the lack of official statistics, unofficial data show that there are only 6 per cent of women in managerial positions in the private sector. While encouraging the Government to pursue and strengthen its efforts to support women’s entrepreneurship, the Committee asks the Government to take measures to address effectively the horizontal and vertical occupational segregation between men and women in the labour market, including measures aimed at promoting women’s access to a wider range of jobs and providing them with a wider choice of educational and vocational opportunities. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to that end, including measures taken to improve the access of women to posts of responsibility and management positions, both in the private and the public sectors, and their impact. As regards the public sector, the Committee requests the Government to provide more specific information on the number and proportion of female civil servants and civil service employees in posts of responsibility.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the Roma. The Committee notes the measures taken in 2007 and 2008, pursuant to the National Programme for the Roma/Action Plan for the Decade of Roma Inclusion, relating to the employment and training of persons belonging to the Roma national minority. The Committee welcomes in particular the production and dissemination of a leaflet, both in Croatian and in Roma language, explaining the rights and obligations of unemployed persons and providing guidelines on job search. The Committee notes that the Croatian Employment Service implemented special programmes, which included an education component, in which 436 persons participated (2007–08). The Committee further notes that according to the data provided in the Government’s report at the end of 2008, 4,390 members of the Roma community were registered with the Employment Service. The Committee estimates that this number does not reflect the total number of unemployed persons of the Roma minority – the total Roma population being estimated by the authorities to be between 30,000 and 40,000 persons. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the main obstacle for the members of the Roma minority to access employment is their low level of education. In this respect, in its report following his visit to Croatia in April 2010 (CommDH(2010)20, 17 June 2010), the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe called upon the authorities to eliminate any tendency of segregation of Roma pupils and to reinforce their pre-school education in order to increase the currently extremely low percentage of Roma pupils who have completed elementary school education. He also encouraged the adoption of targeted professional training measures. The Committee can only but emphasize the importance of education and vocational training to improve future access to the labour market and asks the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure equal access to education, including pre-school education, for Roma children, without discrimination. The Committee further asks the Government to strengthen its efforts to promote employment opportunities and to ensure equal treatment of the Roma in employment and occupation, including by adopting specific measures concerning the employment of Roma women. Please also provide specific information on the work of the Commission for the Monitoring of the Implementation of the National Programme for Roma with respect to non-discrimination in employment and occupation, as well as any available recent statistics on the number of men and women from the Roma community in the labour market, in particular the estimated levels of employment, unemployment and self-employment.

Article 3(d). Access of minorities to employment under the control of a national authority. In the absence of a reply by the Government on this matter, the Committee reiterates its requests for information on the following:

- (i) the efforts made by the Government to promote and ensure access by members of national minorities to public employment in the framework of the Civil Service Employment Plan;
- (ii) the progress made in achieving recruitment targets concerning minorities; and
- (iii) the current ethnic and gender composition of the civil service.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3 of the Convention. National policy. The Committee notes that the National Policy for the Promotion of Gender Equality (2006–10) adopted by the Croatian Parliament on 13 October 2006 refers to Croatia's obligations under the Convention, among other relevant United Nations and ILO instruments. The Committee notes with interest that the Policy sets out a number of specific measures promoting the sharing of family responsibilities between men and women and increasing the availability of childcare services as a means of achieving effective equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women workers. The Committee requests the Government to include in its next report information on the implementation of the National Policy on the Promotion of Gender Equality, as it relates to the application of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Cuba

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1954)

Article 1 of the Convention. Work of equal value and legislation. The Committee has been referring for a number of years to the fact that section 99 of the Labour Code of 1984 provides that workers receive equal pay for equal work without any distinction whatsoever, especially on the basis of sex, and that this is more restrictive than the principle established in the Convention, since it does not reflect the concept of "equal remuneration for work of equal value". The Committee recalls the need for the legislation to reflect the principle of the Convention since legal provisions that are narrower in scope are likely to hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination against women. Noting that the Government's report does not contain any additional information in this respect, the Committee again asks the Government to establish in its legislation the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value and to provide information on any developments in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to send information on the measures taken or contemplated to promote understanding of the principle of the Convention and to strengthen the capacity of all the parties concerned to identify, detect and address violations of this principle.

Czech Republic

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 99th Session, June 2010). The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010 and the resulting conclusions of the Conference Committee, which addressed the following issues: (1) the new non-discrimination legislation; (2) the outstanding issues with regard to the follow-up to the representations under article 24 of the ILO Constitution (November 1991 and June 1994) regarding Act No. 451 of 1991 (the Screening Act); (3) the situation of the Roma in employment and occupation. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide full information on all the issues raised and urged it to accept an ILO technical assistance mission in order to enable it to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention without further delay. The Committee notes that a detailed report from the Government was received in November 2010 and a further report was received in September 2011. The Committee also notes that an ILO mission took place from 26–29 April 2011. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the report of the mission and its conclusions were briefly discussed by the Working Group of the Council of Economic and Social Agreement for cooperation with the ILO on 24 August 2011 and would be submitted to the plenary session of the Council in October 2011.

The anti-discrimination legislation. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to provide full information on the new Anti-Discrimination Act (Act No. 198/2009) to the Committee of Experts to enable it to assess whether it provided adequate protection against discrimination on all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, as well as on effective enforcement and monitoring mechanisms, and to ensure that the level of protection previously provided would not be decreased, in particular with respect to discrimination on the basis of family responsibilities, marital or family status or membership or activity in political parties, trade unions or employers' organizations. The Committee recalls that the new Labour Code (Act No. 262/2006) prohibits all forms of discrimination in labour relations but does not specify any prohibited grounds, unlike the previous Labour Code which prohibited discrimination on the basis of sex, sexual orientation, racial or ethnic origin, nationality, citizenship, social background, family background, language, health condition, age, religion or confession, property, marital or family status, family responsibilities, political or other conviction, membership of or activity in political parties or movements, trade union or employers' organizations. However, the new Anti-Discrimination Act prohibits direct and indirect discrimination based on race, ethnic origin, nationality, sex, sexual orientation, age, disability, religion, belief or opinions. In addition, the Employment Act (No. 435/2004) prohibits any form of direct or indirect discrimination of persons exercising their right to employment on the same grounds as the former Labour Code.

The Committee notes from the 2010 Government's report and the information provided to the mission that protection against discrimination is provided under the Constitution (articles 1, 4 and 10), the Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms (articles 1 and 3) which forms part of the constitutional order under article 3 of the Constitution, the Labour Code, the Employment Act and the Anti-Discrimination Act. According to the Government, the Anti-Discrimination Act, which was primarily adopted to implement European Directives on discrimination and equality, has to be read within the overarching framework of the constitutional legal order, in particular the Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms, which contains an open list of grounds of discrimination. It is also possible to claim discrimination on the basis of the grounds that are not expressly covered by the Anti-Discrimination Act, by applying other legislation or international agreements which are directly applicable in the country according to the Constitution. According to the Czech-Moravian Confederation of Trade Unions (CMKOS), the removal from the Labour Code of the list of prohibited grounds and the narrower set of grounds prohibited under the Anti-Discrimination Act has resulted in diminishing the protection of workers against discrimination, in particular with respect to family responsibilities, marital or family status or membership or activity in political parties, trade unions or employers' organizations. In addition, the CMKOS stated that the Government intended to revise the list of prohibited grounds in the Employment Act and reiterated this statement in the observations that were communicated with the Government's report in September 2011. In this respect, the Government indicated that the amendment of the Employment Act had not yet been adopted and was envisaged with a view to avoiding unnecessary duplications in legislation and not to limiting the list of discriminatory grounds.

The Committee notes from the mission's report that there is consensus that interpretation by the courts would be required to ensure clarity that all the prohibited grounds of discrimination contained in the various legal instruments can be directly invoked and are justiciable. The Committee also notes the mission's recommendation that the tripartite constituents consider taking advantage of the legislative texts currently under consideration to include in the revision of the Labour Code the list of prohibited grounds currently in the Employment Act so as to ensure legal clarity and certainty concerning protection against discrimination in all areas of employment and occupation. The mission also recommended that promotional and awareness-raising tools be developed and disseminated to clarify the full list of grounds of discrimination that are prohibited under the existing constitutional legal order and the other legislative texts, and that appropriate training for all concerned should be given due consideration.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the labour legislation reform, to include in the Labour Code a provision listing the prohibited grounds of discrimination to ensure legal clarity and certainty concerning protection of workers against discrimination in all areas of employment and occupation and to ensure that at least all the grounds previously enumerated are included. It also asks the Government to take appropriate measures to foster awareness of all the legal provisions on discrimination, including how they interact, and the legal procedures available for redress among workers, employers and their organizations, as well as labour inspectors, judges and officials dealing with non-discrimination and equality issues in employment and occupation. The Government is requested to provide information on any measures taken in this respect. Please also provide information on any administrative or judicial decisions applying and interpreting the legal provisions on discrimination in the field of employment and occupation, as well as on the practical application of the various non-discrimination provisions, including how they interact.

Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Screening Act. With respect to the follow-up to the two representations under article 24 of the ILO Constitution (November 1991 and June 1994) regarding the Screening Act, the Committee notes that the Conference Committee, recalling its position and that of the Committee of Experts that the provisions of the Act violated the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of political opinion, contrary to the Convention, strongly urged the Government to amend or repeal the Act without further delay. The Committee recalls that in a judgment handed down in 1992, the Constitutional Court of the Czech and Slovak Republic stated that most provisions of the Screening Act were in conformity with Convention No. 111 and the State had the right to determine the requirements for appointment to high office and other functions of decisive importance in the interests of its own security. It notes further that, in a second judgment in 2002 by the Constitutional Court of the Czech Republic, the Court stated that the Act was setting prerequisites for working in State services and supplementing the absence of a law on civil service and therefore its existence was still necessary. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report on the implementation of the Screening Act, including the statistical data on screening certificates issued from 2007–10.

The Committee notes that the ILO mission was provided with detailed information on the rationale for the adoption of this Act, in particular, the historical and political contexts which led to its adoption. Detailed information was provided to clarify the scope of application of the Screening Act, according to which the Act applies to limited categories of persons occupying managerial positions in the public service and state enterprises. The Committee also notes from the report of the mission that work is under way to adopt a new Public Service Law to replace the Service Act (Act No. 218/2002) that was adopted in 2002 but which has not yet entered into force. The Committee also notes the mission's recommendation that the opportunity be taken in the context of the ongoing preparations for a new Public Service Law to clearly specify and define the functions in respect of which screening would be required, and be in accordance with Article 1(2) of Convention No. 111.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to clearly specify and define the functions in respect of which screening would be required in the law that will be adopted on the public service. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in drafting and adopting the new law, and to supply a copy of the law once it is adopted. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Screening Act and the positions concerned, including statistical information on the screening certificates issued and the appeals lodged against a positive certificate.

The situation of the Roma in employment and occupation. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, while noting that steps had been taken aimed at the social inclusion of the Roma, remained concerned that measures had not yet led to verifiable improvements for the Roma in employment and occupation and urged the Government to take measures to develop improved means to monitor the situation of the Roma, including through the collection and analysis of appropriate data, with a view to demonstrating the achievement of real progress with respect to equal access of the Roma to education, training, employment and occupation.

The Committee notes the detailed information in the Government's report regarding various programmes and projects which are being implemented with a view to improving employment and education of members of the Roma community. It notes, in particular, the establishment of the Agency for Social Integration in Roma Localities created to ensure effectiveness of individual measures at the local level. The Committee also notes that a report on the situation of Roma communities in the country, including with respect to their situation in the labour market, is prepared annually and submitted to the Cabinet. According to the Government, in 2009, the report referred to the marginalization of Roma people on the labour market due to the economic crisis and emphasized the disadvantages suffered by members of this community, such as their lack of qualifications, their low level of education and their lack of professional experience. As a result, the issues identified were put on the agenda of the Government Council for Roma Community Affairs for action.

With respect to the collection of data to monitor the progress made regarding the situation of the Roma population in employment and occupation, the Committee notes from the report of the mission that, according to the Act on national census, the collection of data on ethnic origin should be voluntary and as a consequence there is no mandatory registration regarding Roma ethnicity. However, even though there is no empirical data, there is expert knowledge of the situation of the Roma population, through regional coordinators, and the number of people in the Roma community was estimated at 183,000 in 2010. The mission was also informed of a specific scheme developed by a non-governmental organization called "Ethnic Friendly Employer" which grants a label to enterprises employing members of ethnic minorities. The Committee notes that the mission recommended that proactive measures to promote social inclusion and tolerance be vigorously continued, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations, and that their impact be monitored.

The Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts to promote employment of the Roma population in the public and the private sectors, with a particular focus on the employment of Roma women, and to continue to take measures to promote equal opportunity in education and vocational training for Roma children and youth. It requests the Government to continue to assess the impact of the measures taken and to ensure that any progress made in the employment situation of the Roma population is not reversed by the economic downturn or the lack of appropriate funding, including with respect to the activities of the Agency for Social Integration in Roma Localities and the Government Council for Roma Community Affairs. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to take proactive measures to promote social inclusion and tolerance, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations, and to provide information on the "Ethnic Friendly Employer" scheme. Noting that a national census is taking place in 2011, the Committee requests the Government to provide statistics, disaggregated by sex, on the number of persons who identify themselves as members of the Roma community and their situation in employment, including self-employment, and any estimates thereof received from the regional coordinators for Roma affairs.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value and application of the principle to all aspects of remuneration. The Committee recalls that section 86 of the Labour Code, which provides that with equal conditions of work, vocational qualifications and output, the salary is equal for all workers, irrespective of origin, sex or age, is not in conformity with the Convention, which requires measures to promote and ensure equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It recalls its previous concerns that the Labour Code currently provides for equality only in respect of the salary (section 86) and accommodation and accommodation allowances (section 138), and that the term "remuneration" as defined in section 7(h) includes additional payments, such as commissions, payments in kind, bonuses, etc., whereas it is provided that transport allowances, family allowances, accommodation and accommodation allowances and health care are not considered part of the remuneration. In this context, the Committee had drawn the Government's attention to the Government's obligation under the Convention to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is applied to all aspects of remuneration, as broadly defined in Article 1(a), and that women and men should have the right to equal remuneration not only where they have the same working conditions, vocational qualifications and output, but also where they have different vocational qualifications and when they work in different working conditions, so long as the work performed is of equal value. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it has taken due note of the Committee's comments and will take them into consideration in the context of a future revision of the Labour Code. The Government also envisages defining a wage policy which takes account of all the elements of remuneration. Recalling its 2006 observation which calls on States which have not yet done so to ensure that their legislation fully reflects the principle of the Convention, the Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into line with the Convention with a view to ensuring that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women is fully reflected in the legislation and that it applies to all the elements of remuneration, as defined in Article 1(a) of the Convention. It hopes that this will be done in the very near future. The Committee also asks the Government to provide further details of the wage policy, which it hopes will cover all elements of remuneration.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes from the third joint report of seven United Nations experts on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (A/HRC/16/68, 9 March 2011) that the human rights situation in the country remains of serious concern, especially in the east of the country. The Committee notes particularly the concerns expressed with respect to sexual violence against women, including systematic and mass rape, and related impunity, as highlighted in the most recent report submitted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (A/HRC/16/27, 10 January 2011). The Committee notes that the recommendations to the Government in the report include repealing all provisions of law that discriminate against women, denouncing publically and unequivocally all forms of violence against women, and ensuring that the judicial system brings the perpetrators of such violations to justice promptly and impartially. The Committee notes that according to the report, sexual violence remains widespread despite the Government's efforts to stop it and the phenomenon is rampant throughout the country and affects thousands of women. The recent mass rapes committed in Walikale territory exemplify this scourge. The Committee further notes that the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights considers that the situation of women will remain precarious as long as the State fails to tackle in earnest the social roots of sexual violence, i.e. women's inferior social, economic and political status in Congolese society. The Committee recalls that the objective of the Convention, notably equality of opportunity between men and women in employment and occupation cannot be achieved in a general context of serious human rights violations and inequality in society. Considering the serious concerns raised regarding the human rights situation and its particular effects on women due to their inferior economic and social status in society, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to address the inferior position of women in society reflected in sexual violence against women and discriminatory laws, which it considers has a serious impact on the application of the principles of the Convention. In this context, the Committee also urges the Government to create all the necessary conditions to give effect to the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's very brief report in reply to its previous observation, in which it raised issues relating to the legislative prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation, discrimination based on sex, and discrimination based on race or ethnic origin.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee recalls that, although section 1 provides that the Labour Code applies to all employers and all workers, with the exception of state public services, regardless of race, sex, civil status, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, the Labour Code contains no provisions prohibiting and defining discrimination in employment and occupation. Act No. 81/003 of 17 July 1981 on the conditions of service of career members of the state public service also lacks anti-discrimination provisions. The Committee notes that the Government repeats its statement that it will include provisions prohibiting and defining indirect and direct discrimination in employment and occupation, including in respect of recruitment, once it has been determined when the revision of the Labour Code will take place. The Committee urges the Government to make progress in this regard and asks the Government to indicate all steps with a view to including provisions in the Labour Code and Act No. 81/003 defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination, in all aspects of employment and occupation, on at least all the grounds enumerated in the Convention.

Discrimination based on sex. The Committee previously noted that certain provisions of the Family Code, of Act No. 81/003 of 17 July 1981, on the conditions of service of career members of the state public services, and of the Legislative Ordinance No. 88-056 of 29 September 1988, respecting the activities of magistrates, constituted discrimination on grounds of sex in employment and occupation contrary to the Convention. The Committee recalls that sections 448 and 497 of Act No. 87/010 of 1 August 1987, enacting the Family Code, appear to indicate that, in certain cases, a woman has to obtain the authorization of her husband to take up salaried employment, whereas no such obligation is imposed upon the husband. In relation to jobs in the public service, section 8 of Act No. 81/003 of 17 July 1981 and section 1(7) of Legislative Ordinance No. 88-056 of 29 September 1988 provide that a married woman must have obtained the permission of her spouse to be recruited as a career member of the public service or appointed as a magistrate. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Statute of magistrates will be communicated in its next report and that the Statute of the public administration has not yet been promulgated. The Committee having previously noted that the modification of the abovementioned texts was under way, requests the Government to make progress in bringing the abovementioned provisions, including those in the Family Code, into conformity with the Convention and to provide the amended texts, as soon as possible.

Discrimination based on race or ethnic origin. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not reply to the Committee's previous comments regarding the socio-economic situation of the Batwa, and discrimination faced by the Batwa in employment and occupation. The Committee had noted in this context the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, of 17 August 2007, expressing concern that "pygmies" (Bambuti, Batwa and Bacwa) are subjected to marginalization and discrimination with regard to the enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights, in particular their access to education, health and the labour market. CERD also expressed concern that the rights of these groups to own, exploit, control and use their lands, their resources and communal territories – which are the basis for the exercise of their traditional occupations and livelihood activities – are not guaranteed (CERD/C/COD/CO/15, 17 August 2007, paragraphs 18 and 19). The Committee urges the Government once again to take measures with a view to ensuring equality of opportunity and treatment of the Bambuti, Batwa and Bacwa in employment and occupation, and to indicate the steps taken in this regard. The Government is also requested to indicate the measures taken to ensure that these indigenous groups enjoy their right to engage in their traditional occupations and livelihoods without discrimination.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Djibouti

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. ... The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation and enforcement of section 137 of the new Labour Code, including information on the measures taken or envisaged to raise awareness of these provisions among workers and employers and their representatives and public officials responsible for the enforcement of the labour legislation. In this regard, the Committee also asks the Government to provide information on whether any cases concerning section 137 have been dealt with by the responsible authorities and the manner in which they have been resolved, including any remedies provided or sanctions imposed.

Article 2(c). Collective bargaining. The Committee notes from the Government's report that salaries in the private sector are determined by way of collective agreements. Section 258 of the new Labour Code provides that collective agreements may determine the salary applicable to each occupational category. Section 259(4) provides that collective agreements cannot change the modalities of the application of the principle of "equal salary for equal work", irrespective of the origin, sex or age of the worker. The Committee notes that section 259 is not in conformity with the Convention as it refers to equal salary for equal work rather than to equal salary for work of equal value, and is also at variance with section 137 of the Labour Code. The Committee asks the Government to take the steps necessary to amend section 259(4) to bring it into alignment with the provisions of section 137 and to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to provide examples of collective agreements, as well as indications as to how the agreements implement the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominican Republic

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee notes the observations received on 31 August 2011 from the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD), reporting that although more women than men undergo higher education, there is a 27 per cent wage differential between men and women. The Committee asks the Government to send its comments on this matter.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments in a number of important aspects. It is therefore bound to reiterate its previous observation on the following matters:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the tripartite committee appointed by the Labour Advisory Council in July 2007 had drafted an amendment to section 194 of the Labour Code with a view to including in the legislation the concept of equal remuneration for men and women for "work of equal value". The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide any information on the progress made with this draft text. It recalls that it has been commenting on this subject for many years and that section 194 in its current wording does not give full effect to the Convention as it does not include the concept of "work of equal value".

The Committee also notes that, in the same way as section 194, section 3(4) of Act No. 41-08 of 16 January 2008 on the public service provides for: "equal wages for equal work, in terms of capacity, performance and seniority, irrespective of the person performing the work". Similarly, article 62(9) in fine, of the new Constitution, adopted on 26 January 2010, lays down that

“the payment of equal wages for work of equal value is guaranteed, without discrimination based on sex or other grounds and under identical conditions of capacity, effectiveness and seniority”. The Committee notes that by defining the concept of “work of equal value” in terms of “identical conditions of capacity, effectiveness and seniority”, the constitutional definition of the concept appears to be narrower than the term used in the Convention, as it should be possible to compare jobs carried out under different conditions, but which are nevertheless of the same value. The Committee notes with regret that the Government did not take the opportunity of these legislative and constitutional reforms to reflect the principle of the Convention fully.

The Committee wishes to refer in this respect to its 2006 general observation in which it emphasizes that the concept of equal remuneration for “work of equal value” includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, the “same” or “similar” work, and urges governments to take the necessary steps to amend their legislation to provide not only for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also to prohibit pay discrimination that occurs in situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the amendment of section 194 fully reflects the principle of the Convention and is adopted by the National Congress in the very near future, and to provide a copy once it has been adopted. The Committee also requests the Government to provide fuller information on wage inequalities in the public sector and on the measures taken to bring section 3(4) of Act No. 41-08, the wording of which is identical to that of section 194 of the Labour Code, into full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to adopt the necessary measures in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes the observations of 31 August from the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers’ Unions (CASC) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD), according to which the Labour Code does not afford domestic workers the same rights and benefits as other workers and does not provide for sufficient sanctions against acts of discrimination in general; foreign workers, mainly Haitians and Latin Americans, are paid less than Dominican workers in the construction sector; and there are instances of age-based discrimination in access to employment. The abovementioned organizations also refer to other matters already under examination by the Committee, namely pregnancy and HIV/AIDS testing as a condition for access to employment and the persistence of sexual harassment cases in all sectors, including the export processing zones. The Committee asks the Government to send its comments on these matters.

The Committee takes note of the discussion held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in 2008. It reminds the Government that in its previous comments it noted with regret that its report contained no response to the matters raised by the Conference Committee. The Committee notes with deep regret that such information is once again absent from the Government’s report. The Committee must therefore repeat its previous observation on the following points:

Discrimination on the grounds of colour, race and national extraction. The Committee recalls that it has been raising concerns for a number of years regarding discrimination against Haitians and dark-skinned Dominicans. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee called on the Government to address the intersection between migration and discrimination, and in particular to ensure that migration laws and policies and their implementation did not result in discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction. It noted in this respect that all migrant workers, including those in an irregular situation, must be protected from discrimination in employment and occupation. The Conference Committee also noted the Government’s intention to establish a tripartite committee to follow up the recommendations made jointly by the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and the Independent Expert on minority issues. The Committee notes the wide range of recommendations of the Special Rapporteur and the Independent Expert, including in particular with respect to developing a national action plan against racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia; establishing an independent institution with authority to combat all forms of discrimination; adopting comprehensive legislation to combat racial discrimination; collecting relevant socio-economic data; ensuring that migration laws and their implementation protect the right to non-discrimination; monitoring sectors such as agriculture and construction, where many Haitians and Dominicans of Haitian descent are employed; targeting multiple discrimination facing minority women, particularly those who are black or of Haitian heritage (A/HRC/7/19/Add.5; A/HRC/7/23/Add.3, 18 March 2008, paragraphs 118–121, 126–128 and 131–132). The Committee urges the Government to take concrete measures without further delay to ensure the effective application of the Convention, in law and in practice, with respect to the grounds of race, colour and national extraction, and in this context to ensure that all migrant workers, including those in an irregular situation, are protected from discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the tripartite committee to follow up the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur and the Independent Expert has been established, and the progress achieved in implementing the recommendations, in particular those noted above.

Discrimination based on sex. The Committee has been raising concerns regarding the persistence of cases of discrimination based on sex, including pregnancy testing and sexual harassment, and the lack of effective application of the legislation in force, and has raised the issue of pregnancy testing as a requirement to obtain or keep a job in export processing zones. It notes in this regard the Government’s indication to the Conference Committee that the Secretary of State for Labour had created an office responsible for monitoring gender policies in the field of employment, and the Gender Office had submitted a draft amendment to the Labour Code to the Labour Advisory Council with a view to improving labour legislation regarding medical examinations prior to or during employment. Regarding sexual harassment, the Government indicated that the Labour Code was being amended to make sexual harassment a criminal offence carrying a severe penalty. The Conference Committee, while noting this information, questioned the adequacy of the legislation and the complaints mechanisms to address such discrimination, and called on the Government, in collaboration with the workers’ and employers’ organizations, to take additional steps to strengthen protection against discrimination in law and in practice, and in particular to ensure that complaints mechanisms were effective and accessible for men and women working in enterprises where no unions existed. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the existing anti-discrimination legislation is effectively applied, and in this context to take proactive measures, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, to prevent and investigate both sexual harassment, and the requirement of pregnancy testing as a condition for obtaining or maintaining employment. The Committee also asks the Government to take the necessary measures to reinforce the sanctions for sexual harassment and mandatory pregnancy testing as well as the dispute resolution machinery related to discrimination in employment and occupation, to ensure that it is effective and accessible in practice to all workers, including those in export processing zones. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the status of the adoption of the proposed amendments to the Labour Code regarding sexual harassment and pregnancy testing;
- (ii) measures taken to support and protect victims of sexual harassment and pregnancy testing, including facilitating access to complaints procedures;
- (iii) awareness raising regarding discrimination, including sexual harassment and pregnancy testing, and building the capacity of labour inspectors, relevant government authorities, and the judiciary to detect and address violations in this regard;
- (iv) any specific measures taken to improve the detection of sexual harassment and pregnancy testing in export processing zones; and
- (v) any cases of sexual harassment or pregnancy testing reported to or detected by the labour inspectorate and any relevant administrative or judicial decisions, including the remedies provided and the sanctions imposed.

HIV testing. Regarding its previous comments relating to HIV testing as a condition to be hired or keep a job, and the lack of enforcement of the prohibition of such testing, the Committee notes the Government's indication to the Conference Committee that involuntary HIV testing is prohibited in all enterprises, there is an HIV/AIDS technical unit within the labour inspectorate, and regular inspections are carried out but no cases concerning discrimination have been reported. The Committee requests the Government to reinforce its efforts to address HIV testing as a condition to be hired or to keep a job in practice, including taking measures to protect workers who lodge complaints, stepping up enforcement by labour inspectors, and building their capacity to detect and address such violations. Please provide detailed information of measures taken in this regard, as well as with respect to any cases of involuntary HIV testing reported to or detected by the labour inspectorate, and any relevant court or administrative decisions.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures in the near future.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 101st Session and to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Ecuador

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the adoption of the new Constitution in September 2008 following its approval by referendum. The Committee notes with interest that article 11(2) of the Constitution includes new grounds on which discrimination is prohibited, including migration and being HIV positive. It also notes that article 43 provides that the State shall guarantee that pregnant women are not discriminated against on grounds of pregnancy in the educational, social and labour fields. The Committee further notes that article 47(5) of Constitution recognizes the right of persons with disabilities to work under conditions of equality of opportunity with a view to developing their capacities and potential, through policies for their integration into public and private entities. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to give effect to these provisions.

Article 2 of the Convention. National equality policy. The Committee notes that Executive Decree No. 1733 (Official Bulletin No. 601 of 29 May 2009) abolished the National Women's Council (CONAMU) and established the Transition Commission to determine the public institutions that will guarantee equality between women and men, and which is entrusted with responsibility to prepare draft legislative reforms for the establishment of the National Gender Equality Council. The Committee notes that, in addition to the CONAMU, changes have also been made to the Council for the Development of the Peoples and Nationalities of Ecuador (CODENPE), the Afro-Ecuadorian Development Corporation (CODAE), the Council for the Development of the Coastal Montubio People (CODEPMOC), the Council for Children and Young Persons (CNA) and the National Disability Council (CONADIS). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of this process of transition and on the institutions established in accordance with articles 156 and 157 of the new Constitution which are entrusted with responsibilities related to guaranteeing equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation.

National policy on gender equality. The Committee notes the concern expressed by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women in its concluding observations of November 2008 about the high rates of women's underemployment and unemployment, especially in rural areas, and cases of gender discrimination in the workplace, including dismissals relating to maternity, and discriminatory labour practices against women, especially indigenous and migrant women and those of African descent (CEDAW/D/ECU/CO/7, 7 November 2008, paragraphs 34–36). The Committee once again requests information on the results achieved in the prevention and eradication of work by women under conditions of exploitation which, as noted by the Committee in its previous comments, was one of the objectives of the Equal Opportunities Plan 2005–09 (PIO). The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the policies and programmes intended to ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for women, especially indigenous women, migrant women and women of African descent, and their impact.

Promoting the access of women to public sector employment. With reference to its previous observation, in which it noted with interest the conclusion of a Framework Inter-institutional Cooperation Agreement with a view to ensuring that effect is given to the principles of equality and equity between men and women in the processes of institutional modernization and the re-evaluation of work in public institutions in Ecuador, the Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, in the context of the above Agreement, gender was included in the Integrated Human Resources Information System (SIIRH) developed by the National Technical Secretariat for the Development of Human Resources and Remuneration in the Public Sector (SENRES) and the study "Public employment in Ecuador: A gender view" was published. It notes that the Transition Committee has also worked to introduce gender as a cross-cutting issue in the law and standards issued by the SENRES with the objective of promoting the access of women to public employment. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the introduction of gender as a cross-cutting issue in the standards issued by the SENRES with the objective of women gaining access to public employment and the impact of this measure. Noting that the Framework Inter-institutional Cooperation Agreement expires in December 2009, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures envisaged to continue ensuring the application of the principle of the Convention in the public sector. The Committee also refers to its comments on the application of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100).

Legislation. The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government, the draft amendment of the Cooperatives Act is before the National Assembly. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee urges the Government to take this opportunity to repeal section 17(b) of the Regulations of the Cooperatives Act, under which married women require the authorization of their husbands to be members of agricultural housing and family garden cooperatives. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect in its next report.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Gender and Youth Unit of the Ministry of Labour is preparing a compendium on sexual harassment in the fields of education, labour, politics and domestic work which includes basic definitions, practical cases, national and international legislation and the contact details of support bodies and organizations. The Committee also notes the draft constitutional proposal of February 2008 to discourage situations of harassment, which involves the termination of officials who commit repeated offences of sexual and psychological harassment and abuse of authority. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact that this compendium has had in terms of preventing sexual harassment in the working environment and to provide information on other measures that are being adopted to raise awareness of the harmful effects of harassment at the workplace. The Committee invites the Government once again to take appropriate legislative measures to prohibit sexual harassment in employment and occupation which include both quid pro quo and hostile work environment harassment.

Afro-Ecuadorian peoples. The Committee notes that the National Development Plan 2007–10 contains a component with the objective of combating historical disparities which hinder the human development of Afro-Ecuadorian persons. It notes that according to the statistics contained in the Plan, the racial prejudice index against Afro-Ecuadorian persons is 75.9 per cent. It also notes that, according to the living conditions survey of 2006, while a white person can obtain average monthly income from employment of US$316.60, an Afro-Ecuadorian person only obtains US$210.80. With regard to the urban unemployment rate, the Committee notes that it is 11 per cent for Afro-Ecuadorian persons, compared with a national average of 7.9 per cent, and 17.5 per cent for Afro-Ecuadorian women. It further notes that 92.8 per cent of Afro-Ecuadorian persons do not reach university level. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results and impact of the various types of action envisaged in the plan referred to above, including the application of affirmative action measures, the development of the "Work without discrimination" programme and the action taken to promote and increase the access of young Afro-Ecuadorian persons to university. The Committee also requests information on the measures promoted, as envisaged in the Plan, to monitor and punish any act of racial discrimination against Afro-Ecuadorian persons on the labour market.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the future.

Ethiopia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

Legislation. Grounds of discrimination. For a number of years, the Committee has been raising concerns regarding the absence of legislative protection against discrimination on the grounds of social origin and national extraction, particularly with respect to the Labour Proclamation No. 377/2003 and the Federal Civil Service Proclamation No. 262/2002. The Committee notes the adoption of the Federal Civil Servants Proclamation No. 515/2007. However, the Committee notes that the new Federal Civil Servants Proclamation still does not include social origin or national extraction as prohibited grounds of discrimination. The Committee recalls that where legal provisions are adopted, they should include at least all the grounds of discrimination specified under Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, and asks the Government to take appropriate measures to amend the Federal Civil Servants Proclamation and the Labour Proclamation, with a view to including social origin and national extraction as prohibited grounds of discrimination.

Scope of application. The Committee had previously noted the importance of amending the Labour Proclamation, with a view to explicitly providing that workers and candidates for employment, including citizens and non-citizens, are protected against discrimination. The Committee notes that the Government generally reiterates reference to provisions of the Constitution and the Labour Proclamation, stating that there is no form of distinction, exclusion or preference in law or in administrative practice, or in practical relationships in employment and occupation, including employment service (whether public or private). The Committee recalls that, for the purpose of achieving the objectives of the Convention, it is important to acknowledge that no society is free from discrimination and that continuous action is required to address it, including the review and revision of laws. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take steps to ensure that workers and candidates for employment, including non-citizens, are protected against discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Additional grounds of discrimination. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Proclamation to provide for the right to employment of persons with disability, No. 568/2008, which prohibits discrimination against persons with disabilities in recruitment, promotion, placement, training, transfer and other employment conditions. The Proclamation also requires preference to be given to workers with disabilities to occupy a vacant post or participate in training, and provides that affirmative action to create equal opportunities for persons with disabilities is not discrimination (sections 4 and 5). It also acknowledges the multiple discrimination faced by women with disabilities, and places specific responsibilities on the employer in this regard (section 6). The right to institute an action for infringement of the provisions of the Proclamation can be brought by those claiming their rights have been violated, by an association of persons with disabilities, the trade union, or at the initiative of the body entrusted to implement the Proclamation (section 10). The Committee also notes that section 13(1) of the Federal Civil Servants Proclamation No. 515/2007 provides that there shall be no discrimination among jobseekers or civil servants in filling vacancies through recruitment, promotion transfer or deployment, including on the grounds of disability and HIV and AIDS. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the Proclamation to provide for the right to employment of persons with disability, including any affirmative action measures taken, and any cases of discrimination brought before the courts. Please also indicate whether a body has yet been established to implement the Proclamation. The Committee also asks the Government to provide any information on the application of section 13(1) of the new Federal Civil Servants Proclamation, in particular with respect to cases alleging discrimination based on disability or HIV and AIDS and the results thereof.

Education and training. The Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government that the gross enrolment rate for primary education has reached 90.7 per cent for girls and 97.6 per cent for boys, and among the total enrolment in technical and vocational education and training in 2008–09, 50 per cent were girls. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the Micro and Small-scale Enterprises Development Policy, Youth Development Package, Women's Development Package and other measures are in place aimed at employment creation and income generation in particular for youth and women. In this connection, the Committee notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern regarding regional disparities and low enrolment rates of women in general education, as well as in traditionally male dominated fields of technical and vocational education. It called on the Government to take measures to ensure enrolment, retention and completion of women and girls at all levels of education, and to encourage women and girls to choose non-traditional fields of education and careers (CEDAW/C/ETH/CO/6-7, 27 July 2011, paragraphs 30 and 31). Recalling the importance of vocational training and education in determining the actual possibilities of gaining access to employment and occupations, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to address unequal access of women to training and education at all levels, including statistical data on the participation of men and women in the various courses, and the results achieved through such measures. The Committee also requests information on the impact of policies with respect to employment creation and income generation.

Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race and colour. Indigenous communities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the development policy and strategy for the pastoral areas is envisioned under short- and long-term perspectives; in the short term the needs of pastoralists will be clearly reflected in all national policy and planning frameworks; in the long term the livelihood of pastoral communities will be stabilized through the facilitation of gradual and voluntary transition toward permanent settlement. The Government also indicates in general terms that so far the results observed in the pastoral areas show the policy and strategy are moving in the right direction in improving the livelihood of the pastoralists. The Committee asks the Government to indicate to what extent consideration is given to the land-based pastoralists' livelihood and way of life in establishing and implementing the national policy and planning frameworks, with a view to tailoring them to pastoralists' specific needs. It also asks the Government to indicate how the traditional land rights of pastoralist communities are safeguarded under the national policy, particularly in the context of private land ownership and large-scale industrial farming projects that could be or are being implemented in rural areas. Please also provide any information on the role of the pastoralist communities in the process of development and implementation of the national policy and planning frameworks, as well as the long-term strategy.

Follow-up to the recommendations made by the Tripartite Committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution). The Committee recalls its previous comments having noted that the proceedings of the Ethiopia Eritrea Claims Commission were at the phase of determining damages. The Committee also notes that the final award for damages claims was rendered on 17 August 2009, while the Claims Commission, in its decision of 27 July 2007, recognized that each State party had full authority to determine the use and distribution of any damages awarded to it. The Committee further notes the Government's indication in its latest report that all cases were entertained and the claims were already settled by the Ethiopia–Eritrea Claims Commission. The Committee has not yet, however, received any details regarding whether and, if so, how the award of the Claims Commission of August 2009 has been distributed to benefit individual workers. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide specific information on the actual relief or remedies granted to the workers displaced following the outbreak of the 1998 border conflict.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011 and the resulting conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, while noting that the People's Charter for Change, Peace and Progress provided a good basis for further action to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, urged the Government to ensure that the principles contained therein were translated into concrete action and called upon the Government: (i) to amend or repeal all racially discriminatory laws and regulations, including the Education (Establishment and Registration of Schools) Regulations, 1966; (ii) to effectively address discriminatory practices; (iii) to ensure equality in employment, training and education for all persons of all ethnic groups. The Conference Committee urged the Government to provide detailed information on the concrete action taken to implement the People's Charter and the National Sexual Harassment Policy, and the results secured by such action, in the public and private sectors. It also urged the Government to take such measures in consultation with the social partners. The Conference Committee noted concerns regarding the difficulty in exercising the right to freedom of association in the country, and called upon the Government to establish the conditions necessary for genuine tripartite dialogue, with the assistance of the ILO, with a view to addressing the issues related to the implementation of the Convention.

Noting the Government's indication that an anti-discrimination law was to be adopted, the Conference Committee asked the Government to provide information regarding this law. It also asked the Government to take concrete measures to promote gender equality in the public and private sectors, given the low labour force participation of women and their high unemployment levels. With respect to the exclusion of government employees, including teachers, from the scope of Employment Relations Promulgation No. 37 of 2007 further to its amendment by the Employment Relations (Amendment) Decree 2011 (Decree No. 21 of 2011) and thus from its non-discrimination provisions, the Conference Committee urged the Government to ensure that government employees had the same rights to non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation as other workers covered by the Employment Relations Promulgation, and had access to competent judicial bodies to claim their rights and to adequate remedies. The Conference Committee asked in particular that the impact of Decree No. 21 be reviewed in this context. The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received, and thus there is no reply to the conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Committee asks the Government to provide information regarding the issues raised by the Conference Committee.

In addition, as the Government's report has not been received, the Committee must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

National policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee notes with interest the adoption on 15 December 2008 by the National Council for Building a Better Fiji (NCBBF) of the Peoples Charter for Change, Peace and Progress, which aims to build a society based on equality of opportunity for all Fiji citizens and on peace. The Charter, which was drafted on the basis of the findings and recommendations contained in the Report on the State of the Nation and the Economy (SNE Report) and after consultations held throughout the country, proclaims that equality and dignity of all citizens, respect for the diverse cultural, religious and philosophical beliefs, social and economic justice, equitable access to the benefits of development, and merit-based equality of opportunities for all shall be leading principles and aspirations. The Charter also sets out key measures and actions to be taken, such as the promulgation of an Anti-Discrimination Act, the development of education, vocational training and job placement, the promotion of multicultural education and the gradual phasing out of institutional names that denote racial affiliations, and the elimination of racial and inappropriate categorization and profiling in government records and registers. Other measures also include the increase of the participation of women at all levels of decision-making, the enactment of a code of conduct for public servants and persons who hold statutory appointments, the reform of the public sector, including the removal of any political interference and the compulsory training of civil servants, the development of cooperation between the Government and the private sector, and the introduction of a national minimum wage. The Charter also contains specific measures concerning indigenous peoples and their institutions. In this respect, the Committee notes that the NCBBF made a number of recommendations in the SNE Report, such as the need to promulgate legislation prohibiting discrimination based on race, religion and sexual orientation, as well as legislation protecting the rights of minority ethnic groups (Indians, Pacific Islanders, Chinese, European and landless Fijians), especially with the view to improving access to land. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the measures envisaged in the Peoples Charter for Change, Peace and Progress to prohibit and eliminate discrimination, in particular racial discrimination, and to promote equal opportunities for all in relation to access to education, vocational training and employment in both the private and the public sectors.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes with interest the adoption by the Government of the 2008 National Policy on Sexual Harassment in the Workplace, which was developed in consultation with the tripartite social partners. It notes in particular that the Policy provides for a definition of sexual harassment and a list of acts that constitute sexual harassment, and establishes the employer's responsibilities: every employer must have an internal written policy and a grievance procedure on sexual harassment at the workplace, which are to be developed by both staff and managers (paragraph 5.1). The Committee further notes that the Policy highlights the consequences of sexual harassment not only for the victim but also for the entire staff and the enterprise itself and describes the complaint mechanisms available under the Human Rights Commission Act 1999, section 154 of the Penal Code and Part 13 of the Employment Relations Promulgation 2007. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the 2008 National Policy on Sexual Harassment is implemented at the workplace level, indicating in particular any internal written policies adopted and grievance procedures put in place and any preventive measures taken by employers. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on cases of sexual harassment identified by or referred to the labour inspectorate or any disputes concerning sexual harassment brought before the competent bodies, either under the Human Rights Commission Act 1999, section 154 of the Penal Code or Part 13 of the Employment Relations Promulgation 2007.

Equal access to education and training. The Committee notes that the People's Charter for Change, Peace and Progress contains numerous proposed measures to ensure access to education for all, including the establishment of a statutory body for community and non-formal learning, the strengthening of early childhood education – especially in rural areas – the enhancement of skills and vocational training and the promotion of entrepreneurship training, the facilitation of job placement in partnership with the private sector and the introduction of a grant system. The Committee further notes that the SNE Report emphasizes the need for the education system to include the teaching and understanding of various cultural groups in order to foster unity and to develop an inclusive based education system.

The Committee understands from the information in the SNE Report and the provisions of the People's Charter that the education system will undergo an extensive reform. As a consequence, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the system established under the Education (Establishment and Registration of Schools) Regulations, 1966, providing that in the admission process preference may be given to pupils of a particular race or creed, will still be in force. If so, the Committee reiterates its previous request for information on the application of these provisions in practice and for statistical information on the number of schools applying race or creed as an admission requirement as well as the number of pupils enrolled in these schools. Please also provide information on the implementation of the reform of the educational system, in particular on the measures taken to ensure the equal access of boys and girls, men and women from all ethnic groups to education and vocational training and their results.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

France

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

... Non-discrimination and equality of opportunity and treatment. Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the amendment of article 1 of the Constitution by an Act of 23 July 2008 and the adoption of Act No. 2008-496 of 27 May 2008 issuing various provisions adapting the national legislation to community law in the field of combating discrimination, which implements and completes the transposition of five European Directives and amends the Labour Code, among other texts. Article 1 of the Constitution now explicitly provides that "the law shall promote the equal access of women and men to electoral mandates and elected functions, as well as to professional and social responsibilities". Furthermore, following the adoption of Act No. 2008-496 of 27 May 2008, the Labour Code refers to the definition of direct and indirect discrimination in employment given in that Act (see below L.1132-1 and L.1134-1) and includes provisions specifying the conditions in which differences of treatment are possible without infringing the principle of the prohibition on discrimination (sections L.1133-2 and L.1142-2). The Act, which applies to all public or private persons, including those engaged in a self-employed activity, also provides that the instruction to discriminate constitutes discrimination and contains provisions on the protection of victims and the witnesses of discriminatory acts against any retaliatory measures, the burden of proof and moral or sexual harassment. Noting this information, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of article 1 of the Constitution and the provisions of Act No. 2008-496 of 27 May 2008 in practice.

Discrimination on the basis of race and national extraction. The Committee notes that in 2009, "origin" was the ground of discrimination referred to most often in complaints concerning employment received by the High Authority to Combat Discrimination and Promote Equality (HALDE) and that a high percentage of the deliberations of this body also concern this ground. It also notes that, according to a report published in November 2010 by the National Institute of Statistics and Economic Studies entitled "France – Social portrait 2010", during the period between 2005 and 2008, on average 86 per cent of French men aged between 16 and 65 years and 74 per cent of women had a job when both of their parents were of French birth, whereas the employment rate was 65 per cent among men and 56 per cent among women where at least one of their parents was an immigrant originally from a Maghreb country. The study emphasizes that these disparities are not entirely due to discrimination, but recalls that recent surveys have shown the existence of discrimination on the basis of "origin" during recruitment.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning awareness raising and the training of public and private actors on the prevention of discrimination, particularly in the public employment service, temporary employment agencies, consular chambers managing training, enterprises which have signed partnerships and trade union organizations. In its report, the Government also mentions preventive activities carried out by the commissions for the promotion of equal opportunities and citizenship at the departmental level and mentions the existence of town contracts which include measures to combat racial discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that ownership by local actors of measures to combat discrimination still needs to be broadly established. With regard to measures to combat discrimination in recruitment faced by young persons with immigrant parents, the Government indicates that activities have been carried out focusing on three areas: measures to support young persons in their search for employment, particularly through sponsorship, support for the creation of enterprises or skills development; raising the awareness of enterprises of the need to diversify their recruitment; and combating professional down-grading by seeking a better match between qualifications and employment levels for higher education graduates.

Emphasizing the particularly important role of workers' and employers' organizations in promoting equality in employment and occupation, the Committee notes that the Inter-Occupational Agreement on Diversity in Enterprises, which was signed in 2006 by the social partners and made obligatory in 2008, provides for the implementation of action focusing on the commitment of managers of enterprises, awareness raising and combating stereotypes. The Committee also notes that in May 2009, an action programme and recommendations on diversity and equal opportunities were drawn up by the Commissioner for Diversity and Equal Opportunities and that it contains a list of measures to be taken to promote equal opportunities in education and employment. Finally, it notes from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) that France is drawing up a national plan to combat racism (CERD/C/FRA/CO/17-19, 27 August 2010, paragraph 9). The Committee hopes that the national plan to combat racism will include a section on employment and occupation, including education and vocational training, developed in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, and asks the Government to provide information in this regard.

The Committee also notes the report of the United Nations independent expert on minority issues following her visit to France in September 2007. Noting that members of minority communities are confronted with serious racial discrimination, she issued a number of recommendations, such as the need to establish more severe penalties so that they are sufficiently dissuasive in cases of discriminatory practices and the importance of putting in place robust affirmative action policies to counter the effects of long-term discrimination (A/HRC/7/23/Add.2, 4 March 2008, paragraphs 78 and 79). Furthermore, the CERD noted with regret in its concluding observations that "notwithstanding recent policies to combat racial discrimination in housing and employment, persons of immigrant origin or from ethnic groups ... continue to be the target of stereotyping and discrimination of all kinds, which impede the integration and advancement at all levels of French society" (CERD/C/FRA/CO/17-19, 27 August 2010, paragraph 13).

Noting this information and the numerous measures and schemes established at both the national and local levels to combat discrimination on the basis of race, national extraction or ethnic origin, the Committee expresses concern at the fact that these measures do not appear to be producing sufficient results and requests the Government to strengthen its action to combat effectively discrimination on the basis of race or national extraction and to actively promote equality in employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics allowing the Committee to assess the impact of the measures to promote equal opportunities and treatment in employment, including in education and vocational training, irrespective of race or national extraction. The Government is also requested to provide information on the following points:

- (i) any measures taken to promote tolerance and respect among all members of the population and to combat the persistent stereotypes and prejudices suffered by persons from an immigrant background or members of ethnic groups, including in the overseas departments and regions;
- (ii) the follow-up to the action programme and recommendations of the Commissioner for Diversity and Equal Opportunities in Employment and Occupation;
- (iii) the measures taken to combat discrimination on the basis of race, national extraction and ethnic origin in employment in the context of the future national plan to combat racism; and
- (iv) the action taken by the social partners to implement the Inter-Occupational Agreement on Diversity in Enterprises made obligatory in 2008 and to promote collective bargaining on this issue.

Promotion of equality of opportunity and treatment in the public service. The Committee notes that a Charter for the promotion of equality in the three branches of the public service was signed in December 2008 by the Minister responsible for the public service and the President of HALDE. The aim of the Charter is to establish recruitment conditions that are tailored to needs without discrimination, make career paths more dynamic, raise the awareness of and train employees of the administration and disseminate good practices. The Committee notes that the first assessment of the implementation of the Charter, given in the annual report on the state of the public service (Policies and practices 2009–10), shows progress in the mobilization of Ministries and the start of social dialogue, the opening up of the public service following the establishment of various integrated preparatory classes (CPI) and the development of mentoring mechanisms, and several good practices to encourage professional development. The assessment also shows a poorer mobilization with regard to human resources management and access to training, as well as weaknesses relating to the establishment of diagnostic assessments on existing inequalities and alert mechanisms. The Committee notes that, according to the recommendations made by HALDE on this matter, there is a need to continue and intensify the efforts made, particularly with regard to training and informing staff to help them to identify potentially discriminatory situations and for the identification of sources of discrimination, the necessary procedures to verify the objectiveness of decisions, support for the victims of discrimination and overall follow-up of the measures taken. The Government also indicates that it has implemented a system of allowances for diversity aimed at persons preparing for a competitive entrance examination (categories A and B) and a scheme ("the Pact") providing poorly qualified young persons with alternative training with a view to obtaining employment in category C. The Committee also notes that, in its report, the United Nations independent expert on minority issues considers that the public sector must lead by example in promoting and ensuring equality and that the Government should undertake more aggressive strategies to increase the number of people with immigrant background in the public service, particularly the police, civil service and the judiciary, and that these efforts should be evaluated on the basis of results or outcomes (A/HRC/7/23/Add.2, 4 March 2008, paragraph 86). Noting the efforts made not only to combat discrimination in the public service, but also to promote equal opportunities and treatment, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of these measures and schemes, including the Charter of 2008, as well as of any action plan adopted to promote equality in employment and occupation, the obstacles encountered and the evaluation of the overall results of these measures, including appropriate statistics, on access by all to the public service without discrimination on the basis of any of the grounds prohibited by the national legislation and the Convention.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the comments communicated in May 2010 by the National Union of Scientific Researchers and the National Autonomous Union of Sciences concerning the career reorientation programme following a restructuring established under Act No. 2009-972 of 3 August 2009 on mobility and career paths in the public service. The trade union organizations emphasize the potentially discriminatory nature of the programme which would allow changes of jobs and even of employer within the public service without competitive entrance examinations. Noting the Government's reply received in November 2010, according to which the career reorientation programme is based on ongoing dialogue between the administration and the employee concerned, the Committee requests it to ensure that the implementation of this programme in the event of a restructuring of the public service does not give rise to discriminatory practices prohibited by the legislation and the Convention.

Discrimination on the basis of religion. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to provide information on the application of Act No. 65 of 17 March 2004 and its implementing circular of 18 May 2004 concerning the prohibition of wearing in public schools any conspicuous religious signs or apparel on pain of disciplinary measures including expulsion. In the absence of a reply from the Government on this point, the Committee is bound to repeat its request to provide information on the following points:

- (i) any court ruling or administrative decision concerning the application of the above legislation;
- (ii) the numbers of boys and girls who have been expelled from school on the basis of the Act; and
- (iii) the measures taken to ensure that the pupils who have been expelled nonetheless have adequate opportunities to acquire education and training.

The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that the application of this Act does not have the effect of reducing the opportunities of girls to find employment in the future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Gambia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination in employment and occupation. Legislation. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it pointed out that the provisions of the Constitution regarding discrimination did not include any reference to the prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation and only concerned discriminatory treatment by public officials (section 33(3)). The Committee had also noted that the Labour Act 2007 neither defines nor prohibits discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of any of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, except in the case of dismissal and disciplinary action (section 83(2)). The Committee notes that the Government provides no response to its request regarding the need to amend the legislation. The Committee recalls once again that, although general constitutional provisions regarding non-discrimination are important, they are generally not sufficient to address specific cases of discrimination in employment and occupation, and comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation is generally needed to ensure the effective application of the Convention, based on at least all the grounds of discrimination listed in Article 1(1)(a) and in all areas of employment and occupation. The Committee asks the Government to take steps in order to include legislative protection against direct and indirect discrimination at all stages of employment and occupation based on, as a minimum, all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, namely, race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Committee also asks the Government to include in legislation provisions establishing dissuasive sanctions and appropriate remedies in cases of discrimination. Please provide specific information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Georgia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee has for a number of years been raising concerns regarding the absence of legislation giving full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that while the Labour Code of 2006 in section 2(3) contains a general prohibition of discrimination in labour relations, and article 14 of the Constitution provides broadly for equality before the law, neither refers specifically to the principle of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government refers to the adoption on 26 March 2010 of the Law on Gender Equality, providing a broad legal framework for gender equality, including prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination in labour relations (section 6). However, the Committee notes with regret that, once again, the Government did not take the opportunity to include a specific provision giving full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that while general non-discrimination and equality provisions are important, they will not normally be sufficient to give effect to the Convention, as they do not capture the key concept of “work of equal value”. This concept encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature but is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee notes that legal provisions that do not give expression to the concept of “work of equal value” hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination. The Committee also notes that pursuant to section 12 of the Law on Gender Equality, the Council for Gender Equality is established, which is mandated to analyse legislation and draft proposals for overcoming gender inequalities. The Committee urges the Government to take concrete steps in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, with a view to ensuring full and effective implementation of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide information in this regard, including any proposals made by the Council for Gender Equality.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Law on Gender Equality on 26 March 2010, which promotes equality between women and men in a range of areas namely: employment; general, vocational and higher education; health care; social protection; family relations; access to information; and in the political sphere. Section 6 expressly prohibits both direct and indirect discrimination in employment, with a specific prohibition of sexual harassment. The Committee also notes that section 7 of the Law guarantees equal access to general, vocational and higher education, and obliges the State to ensure equal conditions in receiving general, vocational or higher education by women and men in all educational institutions “including participation in the implementation of educational and scientific processes”. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the Law on Gender Equality with respect to non-discrimination and equality between men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any cases dealt with by the courts or administrative bodies regarding the application of the Law on Gender Equality. Please also provide information on any measures taken to prevent and address sexual harassment in employment and occupation in practice.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee had previously noted section 2(3) of the Labour Code, which prohibits discrimination “in employment relations”, and asked the Government to indicate whether the provision covered direct and indirect discrimination, and discrimination at the stage of recruitment and selection. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that section 2(3) of the Labour Code, prohibits both direct and indirect discrimination. The Committee also notes that the Government again states that the Georgian legislation protects the population from any kind of discrimination, referring to article 14 of the Constitution, sections 2(3) and (4) of the Labour Code, section 142 of the Penal Code, and non-discrimination provisions contained in a number of other laws. With respect to discrimination at the stage of recruitment and selection, the Committee notes the Government’s statement that the Georgian legislation does not need to be amended since, according to the Government, the Labour Code ensures adequate protection against any kind of discrimination in labour relations including recruitment and selection processes. The Committee further notes that the Government has no information concerning cases lodged before the court under the Labour Code. Noting that the Government again states that the legislation is intended to cover both direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation, including discrimination in respect of recruitment and selection, the Committee asks the Government to consider taking steps to clarify the existing non-discrimination provisions of the Labour Code by including a specific definition and prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination at all stages of employment and occupation, including the recruitment and selection stage, and to provide information in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to take steps to raise the awareness of the judiciary, labour inspectors and other public officials, as well as the public in general regarding the prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation, and to provide information on any relevant cases addressing discrimination.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ghana

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee had asked the Government to provide information on the progress made with a view to amending section 68 of the Labour Act 2003, which provides only for equal pay for equal work, so as to ensure full conformity with the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value set out in the Convention. Section 10(b) of the Labour Act is expressed in the same terms. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that due to a change of government, the Committee’s comments in this respect are still being examined by the new Minister responsible for Labour. With reference to its previous comments and recalling its 2006 general observation on the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures in the near future with a view to amending sections 10(b) and 68 of the Labour Act 2003 in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention.

Remuneration in the public sector. The Committee notes that the job evaluation exercise undertaken to determine the value of all public sector jobs, one of the objectives of which is to ensure that jobs within the same job value range are paid within the same pay range, was completed in April 2009. As a result, a single spine pay structure was adopted. The Committee also notes that the ultimate goal for the National Job Analysis and Evaluation Exercise, as set out in the briefing notes on the public sector pay policy attached to the Government’s report, “was to enable government to reward its employees in accordance with the principle of “equal pay for equal worth” consistent with article 24(1) of the 1992 Constitution of Ghana and section 10(b) of the Labour Act”. Both the Constitution and the Labour Act refer however to “equal pay for equal work”. The evaluation has been made on the basis of four main job factors (knowledge and skill, responsibility, working conditions and effort) which were subdivided into 13 sub-factors and it has used the point factor method. The Committee notes that during the consultative workshop held in May 2009 on the single spine pay policy, the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs and the Ghana Trade Union Congress agreed that the policy should be implemented, as of 1 January 2010, while efforts are being made to address concerns and challenges that may arise from its implementation. It also notes that the unions and associations were to submit outstanding issues or concerns to the Fair Wages and Salaries Commission. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value will be duly taken into account and recognized as an explicit objective in the implementation of the public sector pay policy. It also asks the Government to provide information on the implementation process of this policy, including on the issues dealt with by the Fair Wages and Salaries Commission and the steps taken by this Commission to ensure full application of the principle of the Convention in the public service. The Government is requested to provide a copy of the single spine pay policy and of the single spine pay structure adopted.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Greece

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes the observations made under article 23 of the ILO Constitution by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in communications dated 29 July 2010 and 28 July 2011, as well as the Government's reply to the GSEE's first communication, received on 16 May 2011. The Committee also notes the discussion that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) with regard to the application by Greece of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). It notes that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it was working on arrangements with the ILO for the visit of a high-level mission proposed by the Committee of Experts to facilitate a comprehensive understanding of the issues raised by the GSEE in its comments concerning the application of 12 Conventions ratified by Greece, including the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100). The Conference Committee also considered that contact with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union (EU) would assist the Mission in its understanding of the situation [Provisional Record No. 18, Part II, pages 68–72]. The Committee takes note of the report of the high-level mission which visited the country from 19 to 23 September 2011 and held further meetings with the European Commission and the IMF in Brussels and Washington, DC, in October 2011, on the basis of the request made by the Conference Committee.

Impact of the measures on the application of the Convention. The Committee recalls that in its 2010 observations the GSEE had expressed the view that the measures implemented in the framework of the structural reforms had an impact on the application of the Convention as they entail a far-reaching reform in the area of wages and the related system of collective bargaining, social security and security of employment, which could result in increasing discrimination in pay. The GSEE was also concerned that the combined effect of the financial crisis, the growing informal economy and the implementation of structural reform measures adversely affected the negotiating power of women, and would lead to their over-representation in precarious low-paid jobs. The GSEE further drew attention to the possible deterioration of wages of domestic workers and workers in agricultural undertakings, excluded from the scope of the labour law protection. The Committee notes that in its 2011 communication the GSEE expresses concerns that following new legislative reforms the minimum protection level of some workers is being significantly weakened while the risk of abusive practices against them has increased, particularly for working women, and workers, men and women, in flexible forms of employment, as well as those workers not protected by the labour law, including domestic workers.

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government to the high-level mission on the range of legislative measures taken in the framework of the support mechanism since May 2011, notably Act No 3845 of 6 May 2010, Act No. 3846 of 11 May 2010, Act No. 3863 of 8 July 2010, Act No. 3899 of 17 December 2010, Act No. 3986 of 1 July 2011 and Act No. 3996 of 5 August 2011. It also notes the Act No. 3833 of 15 March 2010 on the "Protection of the national economy – Emergency measures to tackle the crisis", adopted prior to the establishment of the support mechanism, and that on 27 October 2011, Parliament adopted Act No. 4024 of 27 October 2011 "Provisions concerning pensions, the common pay-scale and grading system [in the public sector], the labour reserve and other provisions for the implementation of the mid-term fiscal strategy 2012–15". With respect to the effects of the abovementioned measures on equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in the labour market in general, the Committee refers to its comments on the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111).

Impact on the gender pay gap in the public sector. The Committee notes that the abovementioned measures taken in the framework of the support mechanism subsequently introduced substantial wage reductions in the wider public sector, froze new recruitment in the core public sector and reduced recruitment on the basis of private law contracts and external collaboration contracts. It notes the information in the report of the high-level mission that Act No. 3986/2011 and Act No. 4024 of 27 October 2011 introduce and further define the system of "labour reserve" in the core and wider public sector, and that pursuant to Act No. 4024/2011 the "labour reserve" is a form of retrenchment and concerns those employees who work in the public sector under private law contracts without limit of time, as well as those employees in public entities that had been affected by Act No. 4002 of 22 August, 2011 abolishing and merging a number of public entities. Employees placed in the labour reserve receive 60 per cent of the base salary for one year. The Committee notes from the information received during the high-level mission that in the public sector, wages have been reduced through legislative measures by at least 20 per cent, while taxation and social security contributions have increased. Pensions are also being reduced. The Committee also notes that according to information received from the Office of the Ombudsman during the high-level mission, of the 770,000 employees in the wider public sector registered in a recent census, the vast majority were women and that the measure of the labour reserve was likely to have an impact on female unemployment. The Committee further notes from the report of the high-level mission that Act No. 4024 of 27 October 2011 also introduced a new public service statute, a new job classification and a new harmonized wage scale resulting in wage cuts of up to 50 per cent in certain cases. With a view to assessing the impact of the measures taken in the framework of the support mechanism on the application of the Convention in the public sector, the Committee asks the Government to provide full information, disaggregated by sex, on the distribution of men and women in the various occupations of the core and the wider public sector and the corresponding levels of remuneration, allowing an assessment of the evolution of the gender pay gap since 2009, as well as statistics of the number of male and female employees who have respectively been dismissed or who have been put in the “labour reserve”. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the new public service statute, new job classification and wage scales and on the specific method that has been used for the evaluation of the different jobs with a view to ensuring the application of the principle of the Convention. Please collect and provide information on the distribution of female and male employees in the new job classification and wage scales of the public service.

Gender pay gap in the private sector. The Committee notes that Act No. 3846 of 11 May 2010 on “financial management and responsibility” institutionalized a range of flexible forms of employment including telework, part-time work, subcontracting by temporary employment agencies, rotation work, suspension of work, etc., while providing certain safeguards. The Committee notes from the high-level mission report that wages are reportedly reduced significantly through the replacement of fixed term employment contracts paid at the full rate, by part time, rotation and other flexible forms of employment with lower pay. According to unpublished data collected and provided by the labour inspectorate during the high-level mission, for the period January–September 2011, part-time work had increased by 5 per cent and rotation had increased by 12 per cent; rotation work introduced in agreement with the parties had increased by 430 per cent, while rotation work introduced unilaterally by the employer had increased 1,192.39 per cent in relation to 2010. On average, wage reductions in the private sector due to the introduction of various forms of flexible employment are, according to the labour inspectorate, approximately 30 per cent. The Committee notes from information by the Office of the Ombudsman received during the high-level mission, that women have been identified as the ones most often offered flexible forms of employment, notably part-time or rotation employment – which reduced wages. After the adoption of Act No. 3846/2010, part-time work had grown exponentially and in many cases, flexibility had been introduced without sufficient safeguards for the most vulnerable, or safeguards which had been introduced by law were not effectively enforced. Especially working mothers returning from maternity leave have been offered part-time and rotation work, reducing their levels of pay. While full statistical and sex-disaggregated data still have to be provided on the use of part-time work, rotation work or flexible forms of employment, the Committee is nevertheless concerned at the reportedly disproportionate impact of the legislative measures regarding flexible forms of employment on women’s levels of pay. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to monitor the evolution and impact of the austerity measures on the remuneration of men and women in the private sector with a view to determining the most appropriate measures to avoid a widening of the gender pay gap and address existing wage differentials between men and women. To this end, the Committee also asks the Government to collect and provide comprehensive information on the following:

- (i) statistics disaggregated by sex, showing an evolution of the levels of remuneration of men and women in full-time and part-time employment, in the various economic sectors, industries and occupations, with an indication of the economic sectors and industries most affected;
- (ii) the number of men and women, in particular working mothers returning from maternity leave, who have suffered from pay reductions due to a change in their working arrangements (forms of employment, i.e. part-time work, suspension of work, rotation work or subcontracting by temporary employment agencies) with an indication of the number of workers upon whom the employer has unilaterally imposed the conversion of employment with full pay to rotation work or part-time work with lower pay; and
- (iii) information, disaggregated by sex, showing an evolution of the wage levels of domestic workers and workers in agricultural undertakings.

Articles 2(2)(c) and 4. Collective agreements and cooperation with social partners. The Committee recalls the Government’s previous indication that it was promoting social dialogue and collective bargaining as a means of improving the remuneration in occupations and sectors predominantly employing women. The Committee notes that according to the GSEE the national general collective agreements had provided a fundamental institutional guarantee of equality between men and women as regards minimum standards of wages and conditions of work, and contributed significantly to restraining the gender pay gap in Greece. The Committee notes that the high-level mission took note of the important link between collective bargaining and wages and noted that the basic reference wage in Greece is based on the national general collective agreement in force. The Committee also notes that the high-level mission received information that sectoral agreements used to have provisions aimed at promoting equal pay for work of equal value. Recalling that collective agreements have been a principal source of determining rates of remuneration, the Committee refers to its comments on Convention No. 98 and calls upon the Government to bear in mind that collective bargaining is an important means of addressing equal pay issues in a proactive manner, including unequal pay that arises from indirect discrimination on the ground of sex.

Developments on equal pay legislation and enforcement. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that Act No. 3896/2010 transposing Directive 2006/54/EC of the European Parliament and the Council (Recast Directive) replaces the previous legislation regarding equality (Act No. 3488/2006 and Act No. 1414/1984) and enhances the principle of equal remuneration for men and women. The Committee recalls the need for effective enforcement of the legislation applying the Convention. The Committee notes that Act No. 3896/2010 strengthens the competencies of the Greek Office of the Ombudsman (Gender Equality Department) to address gender equality, including equal pay, and to collaborate with the labour inspectorate, including during mediation, joint inspections and provision of advice. The Committee notes from the Special Report of the Office of the Ombudsman on equal treatment of men and women in employment and labour relations (November 2009) that 25.99 per cent of the cases regarding unfair treatment related to pay. The Committee notes from the high-level mission report that the labour inspectorate is entrusted with supervision of the legislation on equality between men and women (section 2(2)(g) of Act No. 3996/2011), but does not appear to have the ability to address effectively equality cases. The Committee refers in this regard to the comments made on the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) and recalls the importance of adequate training programmes for labour inspectors to increase their capacity to prevent, detect and remedy instances of wage inequalities between men and women. The Committee asks the Government to indicate on how it is working with the Office of the Ombudsman to monitor and ensure the application of the Convention, and the results achieved, and to collect and provide information on the number and nature of cases regarding pay discrimination between men and women handled by the Office of the Ombudsman, as well as information on instances of wage inequalities between men and women detected and remedied by the labour inspectorate and cases handled by the courts.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1984)

The Committee notes the observations made under article 23 of the ILO Constitution by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in communications dated 29 July 2010 and 28 July 2011, as well as the Government's reply to the GSEE's first communication, received 16 May 2011. The Committee also notes the discussion that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) with regard to the application by Greece of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). It notes that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it was working on arrangements with the ILO for the visit of a high-level mission proposed by the Committee of Experts to facilitate a comprehensive understanding of the issues raised by the GSEE in its comments concerning the application of 12 Conventions ratified by Greece, including the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Conference Committee also considered that contact with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union (EU) would assist the Mission in its understanding of the situation [Provisional Record No. 18, Part II, pages 68–72]. The Committee takes note of the report of the high-level mission which visited the country from 19 to 23 September 2011 and held further meetings with the European Commission and the IMF in Brussels and Washington, DC, in October 2011, on the basis of the request made by the Conference Committee.

Impact of the measures on the application of the Convention. Further to its observations on the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Committee recalls that in its 2010 communication the GSEE had expressed the view that the reforms introduced by the measures taken in the framework of the support mechanism have a direct impact on the application of Convention No. 111 and are likely to lead to an increase in multiple discrimination on the grounds of gender, ethnic or racial origin, age, family responsibilities or disability. The Committee notes that in its 2011 communication the GSEE expresses concerns that following new legislative reforms the minimum protection level of some workers is being significantly weakened while the risk of abusive practices against them has increased particularly for working women and workers with family responsibilities, workers in flexible forms of employment, and workers not protected by labour law, including domestic workers and workers in agricultural undertakings. The Committee refers to its comments on Convention No. 100 regarding detailed information noted by the high-level mission on the range of legislative measures taken prior to and in the framework of the support mechanism since March 2010.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Equality between men women in the public sector. The Committee notes that the abovementioned measures have a major impact on employment in the wider public sector, froze new recruitment in the core public sector and reduced recruitment on the basis of private law contracts and external collaboration contracts. The Committee notes that according to the information received from the Office of the Ombudsman during the high-level mission, of the 770,000 employees in the wider public sector registered in a recent census, the vast majority were women. The high-level mission also noted that the Government has announced the dismissal of 30,000 public employees and that this measure was likely to have a high impact on female unemployment. Regarding Act No. 3986 of 1 July 2011 and Act No. 4024 of 27 October 2011 introducing and further defining the system of "labour reserve" as a form of retrenchment in the core and wider public sector, the Committee refers to its comments on Convention No. 100 and notes that this measure is also likely to have an impact on female unemployment, in particular public sector employees with family responsibilities. The Committee further notes that from the report of the high-level mission, that Act No. 4024 of 27 October 2011 introduced a new public service statute and a new job classification. Recalling that pursuant to Article 3(d) of the Convention the Government is required to implement equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women in respect of employment under the direction of a national authority, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures, in cooperation with the social partners and the Office of the Ombudsman, to monitor closely the impact of the measures taken in the framework of the support mechanism on male and female employment in the public sector, so as to address any direct or indirect discrimination based on sex. To this end, the Committee also asks the Government to provide information, disaggregated by sex, on employment in the various occupations of the core and wider public sector, with an indication of the number of male and female workers that have been placed in the labour reserve, the number of dismissals, and the sectors most affected. The Committee also asks the Government to provide further details on the new public service statute.

Equality between men and women in the private sector. The Committee recalls that Act No. 3846 of 11 May 2010 on “financial management and responsibility” institutionalizes a range of flexible forms of employment while providing certain safeguards. The Committee refers to its comments on Convention No. 100 in which it already noted the exponential growth of part-time work and the significant increase in rotation work after Act No. 3846/2010, especially the dramatic increase of the number of full-time contracts of employment that have been unilaterally converted by the employer into rotation contracts. The number of cases of workers already in a job having their working arrangements changed had increased by 110 per cent. The Committee notes from information provided by the Office of the Ombudsman during the high-level mission that women, especially pregnant women and mothers, were very much affected by the recent legislative measures introduced in order to increase flexibility in the labour market, especially measures enabling employers to unilaterally convert full-time contracts into contracts for reduced-term rotation work. The law provided for consultations with the workers but this did not appear to have taken place in practice. The Committee also refers in this regard to its comments on the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156). The Office of the Ombudsman had also observed, since May 2008, a constant and dramatic increase of complaints concerning unfair dismissals due to pregnancy or maternity leave and sexual harassment. The Committee further notes from the report of the high-level mission and that on 9 November 2011 overall unemployment was at 16.7 per cent, with 20.3 per cent female unemployment and 42.9 per cent youth unemployment (Eurostat data). However, according to the information received from the Office of the Ombudsman during the high-level mission a large part of women had joined the ranks of the «discouraged» workers who are not accounted for in the statistics. Small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), which constituted an important source of female and youth employment, had been closing down on a massive scale. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures, in cooperation with the social partners and the Office of the Ombudsman, to monitor the evolution and impact of the austerity measures on equality of opportunity and treatment in private sector employment with a view to determining the most appropriate measures to address any direct or indirect discrimination based on sex with respect to access to employment and occupation, terms and conditions of work, and security of employment. To this end, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) statistical data, disaggregated by sex, on the number of workers employed in full-time and part-time employment and on the number of workers who have had their working arrangements changed (into part-time work, rotation work, etc.). Please indicate in this regard the number of workers whose full-time contracts have been unilaterally converted by the employer into contracts for reduced-term rotation work;
- (ii) statistical data, disaggregated by sex, showing an evolution of employment, in the various economic sectors, industries and occupations, with an indication of the economic sectors and industries most affected.

Impact of the measures with respect to other grounds. The Committee recalls Act No. 3304/2005 on the “Implementation of the principle of equal treatment regardless of racial or ethnic origin, religious or other beliefs, disability, age or sexual orientation”, protecting against discrimination on these grounds in employment and occupation. The Committee also previously noted the Integrated Action Plan for the social integration of vulnerable groups (Roma and Greek Muslims), and the Integrated Action Plan for the integration of third-country nationals legally residing in the Hellenic territory (2007–13). The Committee hopes, however, that the Government will make every effort to ensure that the action taken and progress achieved to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of certain religious or ethnic minorities such as Roma and Greek Muslims as well as migrant workers, will not be adversely affected, and asks the Government to monitor carefully the impact of the austerity measures on the employment situation of ethnic and religious minorities as well as migrant workers who are particularly vulnerable to the impact of the economic crisis, and to indicate the specific measures taken in this regard. Please also provide information on the specific measures taken or envisaged, including those in cooperation with the social partners and the Office of the Ombudsman, to address discrimination against certain minorities, including Roma and Greek Muslims, as well as migrant workers, on the grounds of the Convention.

Enforcement. The Committee recalls the need for effective enforcement of the legislation applying the Convention. The Committee notes from the information provided by the Government that with respect to gender equality, Act No. 3896/2010 replaces the previous legislation (Act No. 3488/2006 and Act No. 1414/1984) and establishes a new regulatory framework regarding equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee welcomes that the mandate of the Office of the Ombudsman (Gender Equality Department) to monitor and address gender discrimination in the public and private sector has been strengthened, including the collaboration with the labour inspectorate and social partners. The Office of the Ombudsman also has the mandate to continue its mediation efforts on complaints related to gender discrimination cases which are pending before the courts. The Committee notes, however, from the information received during the high-level mission that while the labour inspectorate is entrusted with the supervision of the legislation on equality between men and women (section 2(2)(g) of Act No. 3996) the disproportionate impact of the crisis on women is reportedly exacerbated by the inability of the labour inspectorate to effectively address equality cases; delays in the administration of justice also discourage workers from having recourse to the courts. With respect to Act No. 3304/2005, the Committee recalls that the Office of the Ombudsman examines complaints for alleged violations of the principle of equal treatment by public services, while the labour inspectorate monitors the implementation of the Act in the fields of occupation and employment, with respect to cases other than those falling within the competence of the Office of the Ombudsman. The Committee refers to its comments on the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) noting that the labour inspectorate appears to be primarily focused on detecting undeclared work (social security contribution collection), while more priority should be given to non-discrimination. The Committee asks the Government to provide data on the progress made as well as the obstacles encountered in monitoring and enforcing effectively the application of the national non-discrimination and equality legislation. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the specific activities of the Office of the Ombudsman, including those in collaboration with the labour inspectorate and the social partners, to promote and ensure the application of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to provide detailed statistics on the nature and number of violations of the national non-discrimination and equality legislation detected by the labour inspectorate based on the grounds of the Convention, as well as complaints handled by the Office of the Ombudsman and the courts. Noting that the Office of the Ombudsman is to publish data on the impact of the crisis in its 2011 report to be issued in January 2012, the Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the report which it hopes will contain full information on the impact on discrimination and equality in employment and occupation and on obstacles encountered in effectively enforcing the legislation and the principles of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes the observations made under article 23 of the ILO Constitution by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in communications dated 29 July 2010 and 28 July 2011, as well as the Government's reply to the GSEE's first communication, received on 16 May 2011. The Committee also takes note of the discussion that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) with regard to the application by Greece of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). It notes that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it was working on arrangements with the ILO for the visit of a high-level mission (HLM) proposed by the Committee of Experts to facilitate a comprehensive understanding of the issues raised by the GSEE in its comments concerning the application of 12 Conventions ratified by Greece, including the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156). The Conference Committee also considered that contact with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union (EU) would assist the Mission in its understanding of the situation [Provisional Record No. 18, Part II, pages 68–72]. The Committee notes the report of the HLM which visited the country from 19 to 23 September 2011 and held further meetings with the European Commission and the IMF in Brussels and Washington, DC, in October 2011, on the basis of the request made by the Conference Committee.

Impact of the measures on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the majority of measures in the framework of structural reforms that impact on gender equality, including workers with family responsibilities, have been addressed under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), and the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and it refers to its comments on these Conventions for a more detailed analysis. The Committee notes that in its 2010 communication the GSEE expressed general concern at the effect of the austerity measures on the situation of workers with family responsibilities, including increasing the burden of family responsibilities on women due to gender stereotypes and as a result of uneven sharing between men and women of child and family care responsibilities. The Committee notes that in its 2011 communication GSEE expresses further concerns that the risk of abusive practices against workers with family responsibilities may have increased. The Committee refers to its comments on Convention No. 100 regarding the detailed information noted by the high-level mission on the range of legislative measures taken prior to and within the framework of the support mechanism since March 2010.

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Needs with regard to terms and conditions of employment, childcare and family care services. The Committee recalls that the national general collective agreement and certain sectoral agreements contained provisions aimed at safeguarding the rights of workers with family responsibilities, which could be undermined due to the impact of the measures taken in the framework of the support mechanism on industrial relations and collective bargaining. With respect to collective bargaining the Committee refers to its comments on Convention No. 98 and recalls that the GSEE expressed concern that in undermining sectoral agreements, such provisions would also be affected. The Committee recalls the importance of measures taken to promote social dialogue and tripartite cooperation in order to strengthen the laws, measures and policies giving effect to the Convention. With respect to Act No. 3863/2010 on the “New social security system and relevant provisions”, the Committee notes that the GSEE expressed concern that the drastic increase in the retirement age of women could adversely impact on working mothers of minors, especially in the light of inadequate and inefficient public social care support for mothers and working parents. While welcoming, generally, measures to equalize the retirement ages for men and women, the Committee recalls the importance of measures aimed at providing adequate, affordable and accessible childcare and family care services, as means to assist male and female workers to reconcile work and family responsibilities and to remain in the labour market. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in providing sufficient, accessible and affordable childcare services and facilities, including for children up to three years of age, for working parents, both men and women, and parents wishing to enter or re-enter the labour force, as well as statistical information on the number of existing childcare facilities (private and public) and their capacity.

Articles 6, 7 and 8. Measures to enable re-entry and remaining in the labour market, educational programmes, and termination of employment. The Committee notes that of Act No. 3896/2010 (section 20) and Act No. 3996/2011 provide specific protection against unfair dismissals and extend to 18 months the period of time during which working mothers cannot be dismissed after their return from maternity leave. Despite these protective provisions, the Committee notes from the information provided by the Office of the Ombudsman during the high-level mission that working mothers returning from maternity leave have in particular been offered part-time and rotation work. Mothers returning from maternity leave were asked to work one day per week whereas the other workers continued regular work (or worked more days in the week). The Committee also notes, however, that according to the Office of the Ombudsman, it was very difficult to find in favour of the employee in a dispute on this matter because it was virtually impossible to verify whether the decision was based on a true decrease in economic activity. Low skilled female workers were the most affected by this situation. The Committee recalls that Article 7 of the Convention provides for the adoption of measures to enable workers with family responsibilities to become and remain integrated in the labour force, as well as to re-enter the labour force after an absence due to those responsibilities. The Committee emphasizes that promoting the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities as a matter of concern to men and women is crucial for making progress in achieving effective gender equality, as envisaged in Article 6 of the Convention. It also draws the attention of the Government to the importance of addressing gender stereotypes regarding roles of men and women with respect to family responsibilities, so that working mothers are not automatically considered for rotation work and part-time work. The Committee, therefore, calls upon the Government to make every effort to ensure that the progress achieved by previous action taken to address the needs of workers with family responsibilities in respect of access to free choice of employment, vocational training, terms and conditions of work and social security, as well as childcare and family services, will not be reversed. The Committee encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to promote a broader understanding of the principle of gender equality and awareness of the rights and needs of workers with family responsibilities, and to address gender stereotypes regarding the role of men and women with respect to family responsibilities. The Committee also asks the Government to monitor carefully the impact of the austerity measures on the employment situation of both male and female workers with family responsibilities and provide information, disaggregated by sex on the number of workers with family responsibilities affected by rotation employment and part-time work, including working mothers returning from maternity leave, whose contracts have been converted into part-time contracts and on whom the employer has unilaterally imposed rotation employment or part-time work. The Committee asks the Government to collect and provide information on cases of direct or indirect discrimination, including termination of employment, concerning family responsibilities that have been handled by the Office of the Ombudsman, the labour inspectorate services and the courts.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Grenada

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Discriminatory Minimum Wage Order. The Committee previously raised concerns regarding the discriminatory nature of the Minimum Wage Order SRO 11 (2002), which provides different wages for female and male agricultural workers. The Committee noted previously that the Grenada Employers' Federation and the Grenada Trade Union Council had agreed with the Committee's comments and that the Department of Labour had proposed an amendment to provide for the same wage rate for male and female agricultural workers. The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to the Committee's previous observation on this matter and, therefore, it must urge the Government to take steps, without further delay, to ensure that the Minimum Wage Order no longer provides different wages for male and female workers. The Committee also asks the Government to provide a copy of the revisions once they are adopted. Please also provide copies of any other minimum wage orders currently in force for the various trades, industries and occupations, as well as information on the criteria used for fixing the applicable minimum wages.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guatemala

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1961)

Gender wage gap. The Committee notes the statistics supplied by the Government, revealing that the wage for women is approximately 90 per cent of that of men. Noting that these statistics show that the wage gap between men and women has increased from 6 per cent in 2009 to 10 per cent in 2011, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures envisaged within the framework of the National Policy for the Advancement and Development of Women and the Equal Opportunity Plan (2008–23) and the Institutional Strategic Gender Plan to reduce the gender wage gap. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing up-to-date statistics on the rates of remuneration for men and women in the various sectors of activity, disaggregated by occupational category and job, to enable the Committee to evaluate the progress achieved.

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee has been referring for a number of years to the importance of adopting measures to give legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In this connection, the Committee notes the Government's statement that the Committee for the Analysis and Examination of the implementation of obligations arising from ILO Conventions has been set up, and is due to function until 31 December 2011. The Committee notes that the Government provides information on the training activities carried out by the Department for the Advancement of Women Workers, stating that the disseminated documents refer to the principle of equal remuneration for equal work performed with respect to equal conditions, efficiency and seniority. In this respect, the Committee refers to its 2006 general observation, indicating that the concept of "work of equal value" includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for "equal", the "same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee notes that the principle of equal remuneration for equal work performed with respect to equal conditions, efficiency and seniority is more restrictive than the principle of the Convention. The Committee therefore stresses the importance of reflecting fully the principle of the Convention and asks the Government to provide information on any progress made by the Committee for the Analysis and Examination of the implementation of obligations deriving from ILO Conventions with respect to the adoption of measures giving legislative expression to the principle of remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee encourages the Government to request technical assistance from the Office in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

Discrimination on ground of pregnancy. The Committee has for many years been referring to the discriminatory practice of requiring pregnancy testing and dismissing pregnant women, particularly in the maquila sector and the public administration. The Committee referred in particular to the hiring of workers under item 29 of the General Budget of Revenue and Expenditure which allowed the dismissal of pregnant women. The Committee notes that the Indigenous and Rural Workers' Trade Union Movement of Guatemala (MSICG), refers to this matter in its observations of 28 August 2009, which the Committee noted in its previous observation. The Committee notes in this connection the Government's statement that various protective measures and inspection procedures (Ministerial Decision No. 128-2009) have been adopted to verify and investigate reports of incidents of dismissals due to pregnancy or during the period of breastfeeding. The Government also sends statistical information on the number of reports of such dismissals and the action taken on them. It observes that the Government refers to numerous cases of failure by employers to comply with inspectors' decisions, and indicates that most cases were resolved through conciliation between the parties. Given that discrimination based on pregnancy is a serious form of sex discrimination, the Committee urges the Government to continue to take specific measures, in consultation with the social partners, to secure effective protection for women against discrimination due to pregnancy in access to employment and retention of jobs, and against reprisals for reporting discrimination, including measures to raise awareness among judges, lawyers, labour inspectors and bodies responsible for enforcing the relevant provisions. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any cases alleging discrimination based on pregnancy and the results thereof, including any remedies provided or penalties imposed. It further requests the Government to provide information on the penalties imposed on employers for failure to comply with the decisions of labour inspectors in these cases and to send specific examples of such instances together with details of the outcome of conciliation proceedings arising from reports of such discrimination.

Discrimination on grounds of race and colour. Indigenous peoples. The Committee notes the Government's statement that under the Programa de Gratuidad and the Mi familia progresa programme, scholarships have been granted which allow access to education for indigenous children living in poverty, as well as access to other social and health benefits. The Government also refers to the strengthening of bilingual education, deemed to be more effective than monolingual education, and an increase in the budget allocated to it. The Government also reports on the training and awareness-raising activities conducted by the Department for Indigenous Peoples. The Committee observes, however, that the Government provides no information on the specific measures adopted in the area of employment and occupation to reduce the disparity between indigenous and non-indigenous persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue to adopt specific measures in education, including measures to promote bilingual education, and to provide information in this regard. Please also provide information on the measures and policies adopted or envisaged to address the gaps between indigenous and non-indigenous persons in employment and occupation and in working conditions, indicating in particular the impact of such measures on narrowing such gaps.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guinea

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee recalls its previous comments regarding section 20 of the Order of 5 March 1987 on the general principles of the public service, which prohibits discrimination only on the basis of philosophical or religious views and sex. Recalling that where legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of non-discrimination contained in the Convention, they should include all of the grounds set forth in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, the Committee asks the Government to amend section 20 and to indicate the steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Legislation. The Committee recalls that section 9 of the Prevention of Discrimination Act No. 26 of 1997 imposes the obligation on every employer to pay equal remuneration to men and women performing work of equal value, while section 2(3) of Equal Rights Act No. 19 of 1990 provides for "equal remuneration for the same work or work of the same nature", which is a narrower concept than that required by the Convention. Further, the Committee recalls that section 28 of the 1997 Act stipulates that the Act shall not derogate from the provisions of the Equal Rights Act of 1990 but that the Government previously stated that the 1997 Act takes precedence over the 1990 Act. In light of the fact that section 2(3) of the 1990 Act falls short of the requirements of the Convention, the Committee remains concerned about the inconsistency between the above provisions concerning equal remuneration. Noting that no progress has been made concerning this matter for a number of years, the Committee asks the Government once again to amend the legislation in question with a view to ensuring that it is in accordance with the Convention and to avoid any uncertainties as to the interpretation of the provisions concerned, for instance, through expressly providing that the 1997 Act, in case of conflict, takes precedence over the 1990 Act. The Committee asks the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Application in practice. The Committee recalls its previous comments asking the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote and supervise the application of the equal remuneration provisions of the Prevention of Discrimination Act. The Committee also recalls the communication received from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU, now International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC)), of 30 October 2003 which was forwarded to the Government on 13 January 2004 and again on 1 June 2006, and to which the Government has not yet replied. The ICFTU raises concerns regarding the promotion and effective enforcement of equal pay legislation. In this context, the Committee notes the Government's statement that there were no cases of male and female workers receiving different pay for the same work and that it was a long established fact that men and women received equal remuneration both in the public and private sectors. The Committee draws to the Government's attention the fact that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value does not merely require equal pay for the same or equal work but also equal pay for different work that is nevertheless of equal value, as established on the basis of an objective evaluation of the content of the work performed. The absence of differential wage rates for men and women, while necessary in order to apply the Convention, is not sufficient to ensure its full application. Concerned that the Government's report indicates misunderstandings as to the scope and meaning of the Convention's principle, the Committee considers that training concerning the principle of equal remuneration for labour inspectors and judges, as well as workers' and employers' representatives is essential to effectively ensure the application of the Convention. It asks the Government to indicate in its next report any measures envisaged or taken to ensure the application of the equal pay legislation and the Convention through training and awareness raising and to indicate any steps taken to seek the cooperation of workers' and employers' organizations in this regard. Further, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on any judicial or administrative decisions relating to the equal pay provisions of the Equal Rights Act No. 19 of 1990 and the Prevention of Discrimination Act of 1997.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted the communication from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU, now International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC)) pointing to the low representation of women in traditionally male-dominated areas of work, the weak labour force participation of Amerindian women, and the lack of effective procedures dealing with complaints of discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's reply that more and more women are undergoing training and are entering areas of work that had previously been dominated by men. Women are now engaged in technical fields including working as electricians, mechanics and masons, and they make up a large percentage of employees of security firms. Women also represent the largest portion of graduates of the University of Guyana. The Government refers in this regard to statistics showing the number of women in areas of study that were traditionally male. However, these statistics were not attached to the Government's report. The Government concludes that persons are free to choose whatever field of occupation they desire and that the various branches of education are accessible to all.

The Committee notes the developments on women's employment and training mentioned by the Government but wishes to point out that without reliable statistics disaggregated by sex or any other information on the participation of women, as compared to men, in a wide range of occupations and vocational training courses, it is difficult for the Committee to assess whether progress has been made in achieving the objectives of the Convention. The Committee recalls that while some women may in theory be free to choose the occupations or training courses they desire, discrimination often flows from social stereotypes that deem certain types of work as suitable for men or for women. As a result, persons may apply for jobs based on work deemed to be suitable for them, rather than on actual ability and interest. Such stereotypes channel women and men into different education and training and subsequently into different jobs and career tracks which may not be in keeping with their ability or interest. Lastly, the Committee recalls the importance of effective complaints procedures to enforce legislation on non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to provide in its next report information on the following points:

- (i) statistical data disaggregated by sex on the participation of men and women, including Amerindian women, in the various occupations and sectors of the economy as well as their participation in vocational training courses;
- (ii) the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that policies and plans under its control are not reinforcing stereotypes on the roles of men and women in employment and occupation;
- (iii) the measures taken or envisaged, including in the area of vocational training and education, to encourage women to consider a wider choice of trades and occupations; and
- (iv) the measures taken to ensure that the existing complaints procedures allow for effective implementation of the legislation prohibiting discrimination in employment, including on the measures taken or envisaged to prevent delays in litigating complaints. Please also indicate whether any cases alleging discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention have been brought to the courts, and the outcome thereof.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Honduras

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1956)

Article 1 of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee has been referring for many years to the need to amend section 44 of the Equal Opportunities for Women Act (LIOM), which establishes the requirement for equal wages for equal work. In this respect, the Committee notes that on 3 December 2008 Regulations under the Act were adopted, but that the Regulations do not contain any provision expanding section 44. The Committee however observes that strategic objective 1.3 of the IInd Gender Equality and Equity Plan, 2010–22, refers to the right to equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee once again asks the Government to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate any measure adopted in accordance with the IInd Gender Equality and Equity Plan, 2010–22.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read, in relevant parts, as follows:

Objective job evaluation. Articles 2 and 3. The Committee notes that, in relation to the objective evaluation of jobs, the Government refers only to evaluations relating to those seeking jobs, and not evaluations of jobs in themselves. The Committee further notes the indication by COHEP in its communication that it is not aware of public or private initiatives undertaken for the purpose of the objective evaluation of jobs. The Committee also notes COHEP's concern regarding the absence of a job classification system for the civil service, in accordance with sections 12 to 15 of the Civil Service Act, and their indication that there are significant wage disparities in the public sector. According to COHEP, the absence of a harmonized national classification of occupations with tripartite approval makes it difficult to undertake comparisons between jobs and it is not feasible to establish a comparison of the value of the various tasks. The Committee notes that, according to COHEP, at the end of 2006, an inter-institutional working group was established, composed of representatives of the Secretariat of State for the Labour and Social Security Offices, the National Institute of Statistics, the National Institute of Vocational Training, the Secretariat of State for the Education Office, the Honduran Export Processing Association (AHM) and COHEP, to undertake the revision and harmonization of existing classifications.

The Committee asks the Government to take steps to ensure progress is made in developing a national classification system, based on objective and non-discriminatory criteria free from gender bias. The Government is also asked to provide specific information on the progress made in formulating a job classification system for the civil service, and to undertake an examination of the nature and extent of any wage disparities between men and women in the public sector. Please also provide information on the progress made by the inter-institutional working group in undertaking the revision and harmonization of existing classifications.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

National Solidarity Plan for Anti-Crisis Employment. The Committee notes the observations of 31 August 2010 by the Single Confederation of Workers of Honduras (CUTH), the General Federation of Workers (CGT) and the Workers' Central Union of Honduras (CTH). It also notes the observations of 31 March 2011 by the CUTH and the CGT. On 22 August 2011 the CUTH, the CGT and the CTH sent a further joint communication. In all three communications the abovementioned federations referred to the National Solidarity Plan for Anti-Crisis Employment, adopted by Decree No. 230-2010 of 4 November 2010 which, they allege, will introduce flexibility in minimum conditions in work relationships and lead to the casualization of wage employment owing in part to the reduction of workers' wages and benefits. Lastly, the Committee notes the CUTH's observations, received on 19 September 2011, on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the communication of the Government, received 30 November 2011, indicating that the National Solidarity Plan for Anti-Crisis Employment is part of the Government's programme for 2010–14 and is temporary in nature. Its objective is the eradication of poverty and increasing employment opportunities for the population; to maintain existing jobs, avoid an increase in unemployment and under-employment, and promote capacity building and vocational training. While acknowledging that it is important to adopt specific measures to overcome the current economic and financial crisis and remedy the prevailing unemployment situation, the Committee draws attention to the importance of closely monitoring how the legislative measures adopted to address the crisis are affecting the employment situation of groups that are particularly vulnerable to discrimination so as to deal appropriately, on the basis of the criteria laid down in the Convention, with all direct and indirect discrimination that may arise in employment and occupation. The Committee also considers it essential to ensure that progress achieved through previous measures to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women and for certain minority ethnic groups such as indigenous peoples is not affected. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations on all the abovementioned comments and, in particular, to provide information on the impact of Decree No. 230-2010 on equality and non-discrimination policies. So that it may examine the Decree's impact on equality more thoroughly, the Committee asks the Government to send statistical information on the employment and unemployment rates, employment by economic activity or sector in the public sector and the private sector, wage rates and the number of lay-offs.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Indonesia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1958)

Gender wage gap and occupational segregation. The Committee had previously noted from the statistical data of 2008 that wage inequalities existed in each region. The Committee notes from the statistics provided by the Government that, in February 2011, a wide gender wage gap was observed in many sectors, including in the agriculture, forestry, hunting and fishing sector, where the gender wage gap was 48.4 per cent, and in the mining and quarrying sector which recorded a gender wage gap of 44.3 per cent. The statistics also reveal that occupational segregation persists in Indonesia and women continue to be under-represented in higher paying jobs and senior management positions. The Committee also notes that in order to disseminate the Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) Guidelines of 2005, the Government established a tripartite task force by Decree No. 60/SJ/111/2011 on 16 March 2011, which, inter alia, has the responsibility of mapping out preventive measures on discrimination in the workplace. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures taken by the tripartite taskforce in order to disseminate the EEO Guidelines of 2005, and more particularly to address the gender wage gap in the private and public sectors, and the impact thereof. Recalling that wage inequalities are related to the segregation of men and women into certain sectors and occupations, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to improve the access of women to a wider range of job opportunities at all levels, including sectors in which they are currently absent or under-represented, with a view to reducing inequalities in remuneration that exist between men and women in the labour market.

Legislation. The Committee has been noting for a number of years that the Manpower Act (No. 13/2003), does not provide for equal remuneration for work of equal value, but rather contains a general equal opportunity provision ("any manpower shall have the same opportunity to get a job without discrimination" section 5) and a general equal treatment provision ("every worker/labourer has the right to receive equal treatment without discrimination from their employer" section 6), and in this regard provides less protection than the previous Manpower Act of 1997. The Committee recalls that these provisions, while important, are not sufficient to give effect to the Convention, as they do not include the concept of "work of equal value". The Committee notes that the Government again merely refers to the existing provisions, without providing information on any steps taken in consultation with social partners to give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value in the Manpower Act. In the context of the wide gender wage gap and the occupational gender segregation, as well as the lack of other measures to fully apply the Convention, the Committee considers that giving full legislative effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is of particular importance to ensuring effective application of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to take steps in order to review and amend the current legislation, including the Manpower Act (No. 13/2003) in order to give explicit legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for women and men for work of equal value and to provide information on any consultations held with social partners in this regard.

Discriminatory provisions. The Committee previously noted that Decree No. 37 of 1967 and Decree of the Minister of Agriculture No. 418/KPTS/EKKU/5/1981 provide for disparate treatment between men and women in relation to payment of employment-related benefits and asked the Government to clarify whether and how these instruments have been revised. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Decree No. 37 of 1967 was amended and that the rules contained in the Decree are no longer applicable. The Government, however, does not indicate clearly whether Decree No. 37 of 1967 has been repealed and does not provide any information on revisions or amendments of Decree No. 418/KPTS/EKKU/5/1981. The Committee also previously expressed concern over the possible discriminatory impact of section 31(3) of the Marriage Act (No. 1/1974) on women's employment-related benefits and allowances, which provides that the husband is the head of household. The Committee notes that the Government is currently conducting a study on the Marriage Act (No. 1/1974), involving all the stakeholders. The Committee asks the Government to indicate clearly whether Decree No. 37 of 1967 has been repealed and to provide information on any measures taken to revise or repeal Decree No. 418/KPTS/EKKU/5/1981. The Committee further asks the Government to provide information on the results and impact of the study being conducted on the Marriage Act (No. 1/1974) and to take measures in order to ensure that women do not face direct or indirect discrimination in practice with respect to family allowances and employment-related benefits.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

Discrimination on the grounds of race, colour and national extraction. Transmigration programmes. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Act No. 40 of 2008 concerning the Elimination of Racial and Ethnic Discrimination under which the National Human Rights Commission (Komnas HAM) is responsible for supervising efforts aimed at eliminating all forms of racial and ethnic discrimination, including through monitoring and assessing government policies considered a potential cause of racial and ethnic discrimination. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of all ethnic groups of the population, including indigenous peoples, irrespective of race, colour and national extraction but rather refers to article 28(i)(2) of the Constitution which provides for a general prohibition of discrimination based on "any grounds whatsoever". The Committee asks the Government once again to provide information on the practical application of Act No. 40 of 2008, including any relevant administrative and judicial decisions. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate whether the Komnas HAM has taken or envisaged any measures to monitor the effectiveness of government policies aimed at eliminating racial and ethnic discrimination faced by different ethnic groups, including indigenous peoples, and whether the effectiveness and alleged discrimination of transmigration programmes have been evaluated. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged by the Government, at national and regional levels, to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of all ethnic groups of the population, including indigenous peoples, irrespective of race, colour and national extraction, and on the results of such action.

Discrimination based on political opinion. The Committee has for many years been requesting clarification from the Government on section 18(1) of the Recruitment of Civil Servants, Government Regulation No. 98/2000 of 10 November 2000, section 8 of Regulation No. 5/1999, and section 2(2) of Regulation No. 37/2004, providing for dismissal of civil servants upon becoming members and/or leaders of political parties. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under section 8 of Regulation No. 5/1999, permanent civil servants who become members of political parties keep benefiting from their political rights and do not lose their civil servant status but rather remain on a "temporary pause". The Committee also notes that the Government indicates that the provisions of Regulations Nos 98/2000 and 37/2004 cannot be amended as they are a result of national agreements aimed at ensuring that public servants remain neutral with respect to political opinion. The Committee recalls that while it may be admissible for the responsible authorities to bear in mind the political opinions of individuals in the case of certain limited higher level posts which are concerned directly with developing government policy, it is contrary to the Convention for such conditions to be laid down generally for all civil service employment. The Committee also recalls that under the Convention, protection against discrimination based on political opinion extends to membership in political organizations or parties. The Committee again requests the Government to take steps in order to amend Regulations Nos 5/1999, 98/2000 and 37/2004 in order to ensure that workers are not discriminated against based on political opinion and that any limitations on prohibitions on becoming members and/or leaders of political parties are limited to the inherent requirements of the job, as strictly defined.

Iraq

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1963)

Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee recalls its previous comments, drawing the Government's attention to the need to revise section 4(2) of the Labour Code to give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value, as the provision limits equal remuneration to work of the same nature and the same volume performed under identical conditions. The Government had previously indicated that section 4 of the draft Labour Code provided for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and that the draft text would be discussed by the State Consultative Council. The Committee notes that the Government does not refer in its most recent report to any progress made in revising the Labour Code, stating generally that there is no discrimination in work undertaken by men and women, in law or in practice, and that the value of the work is determined by the occupation. The Committee again draws the Government's attention to the fact that, in applying the principle of the Convention, jobs that are of an entirely different nature must be able to be compared to determine whether the jobs are of equal value. This is particularly important given the occupational sex segregation, which characterizes the Iraqi labour market. The Committee stated in its general observation of 2006 that legal provisions that are narrower than the principle as laid down in the Convention hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination against women at work, because they do not give expression to the concept of "work of equal value". Noting from the Government's report under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), that the revision of the Labour Code appears to be ongoing, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that in the revision process, full legislative expression is given to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, without limiting it to work of the same nature and same volume performed under identical conditions, and ensuring that the principle applies to all workers, whether skilled or unskilled. Please provide specific information on the steps taken and progress made in this regard.

Ireland

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning article 41.2 of the Constitution of Ireland which provides that "the State recognises that by her life within the home, woman gives to the State a support without which the common good cannot be achieved" and that "the State shall, therefore, endeavour to ensure that mothers shall not be obliged by economic necessity to engage in labour to the neglect of their duties in the home". The Committee expressed concern that these provisions might encourage stereotypical treatment of women in the context of employment, contrary to the Convention and requested the Government to consider reviewing them. In this regard, the Committee notes that the All-Party Oireachtas Committee on the Constitution revisited the issue of article 41.2 of the Constitution in its Tenth Progress Report of 2006, concluding that a change of these provisions was desirable and recommending amendments. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made with regard to the recommended revision of article 41.2 of the Constitution with a view to eliminating any tension between this provision and the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation.

Article 1(2). Inherent requirements of the job. The Committee recalls that section 2 of the Employment Equality Act provides that "persons employed in another person's home for the provision of personal services for persons residing in that home where the services affect the private or family life of such persons" are not considered employees under the Act as far as access to employment is concerned. The term "personal services" includes "but is not limited to services that are in the nature of services in loco parentis or involve caring for those residing in the home" (section 2). The Committee notes that these provisions deprive certain domestic workers from protection against discrimination in respect of access to employment. Noting from the Government's report that this exception is meant to balance the competing rights to respect of one's private and family life and to equal treatment, the Committee notes that these provisions, in practice, would appear to have the effect of allowing employers of domestic workers to make recruitment decisions on the basis of the grounds listed in section 6(2) of the Act, without such decisions being considered discriminatory.

The Committee recalls that the Convention is intended to promote and protect the fundamental right to equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation and that it only allows for exceptions from the principle of equal treatment as far as they are based on the inherent requirements of the particular job. It therefore considers that the right to respect for one's private and family life should not be construed as protecting conduct that infringes on this fundamental right (including conduct consisting of differential treatment of candidates for employment on the basis of any grounds covered by Article 1 of the Convention where this is not justified by the inherent requirements of the particular job in question). The Committee also notes that the definition of personal services affecting private or family life contained in section 2 of the Act appears to be broad and non-exhaustive, and open for extensive interpretation. The Committee considers that the exclusion of domestic workers from the protection against discrimination in respect to access to employment, as currently provided for in section 2, may lead to discrimination against these workers contrary to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of these provisions, including information on any relevant administrative or judicial decisions. It also requests the Government to indicate whether it is considering amending the relevant parts of section 2 of the Employment Equality Act to ensure that decisions concerning the recruitment of all domestic workers cannot be based on any of the grounds contained in section 6(2) of the Act except where this is justified on the basis of inherent job requirements.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Jamaica

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1975)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Legislation. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that it has been asking the Government for a number of years to take steps to revise section 2 of the Employment (Equal Pay for Equal Work) Act 1975 as it does not give full legislative expression to the concept of “work of equal value” set out in the Convention, and it is limited to comparing “similar” or “substantially similar” job requirements. The Committee recalls that “equal remuneration for work of equal value” includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, the “same” or “similar” work, and encompasses in addition work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the review of the Employment (Equal Pay for Equal Work) Act 1975 is still in process. The Committee again urges the Government to take this opportunity to revise section 2 of the Act, in order to incorporate in the legislation the concept of “work of equal value” and give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and asks the Government to provide specific information of progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Jordan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1966)

National Steering Committee for Pay Equity. The Committee notes with interest the official launching of the Jordanian National Steering Committee for Pay Equity in July 2011. The Committee notes that the National Steering Committee for Pay Equity (NSCPE) is co-chaired by the Ministry of Labour and the Jordanian National Commission for Women, and includes representatives of workers’ and employers’ organizations, as well as of civil society organizations. The Committee notes that the NSCPE’s mandate is to promote cooperation among its members in implementing a pay equity national action plan and to coordinate activities aimed at achieving pay equity for work of equal value. In this regard, two subcommittees have already been established, namely a legal subcommittee focusing on enhancing policies and legislation for equal pay and on making recommendations regarding legislative amendments; and a research subcommittee focusing on conducting in-depth research on pay-based discrimination to inform policy and programmes. The Committee asks the Government to provide information concerning the measures taken by the NSCPE to develop and implement a pay equity action plan, including specific information on the work of the various subcommittees. The Committee welcomes the initial focus on addressing legislation, and asks the Government to provide the NSCPE with all the necessary support to carry out its mandate.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Additional allowances in the public service. The Committee recalls that section 25(b) of the Civil Service Regulations No. 30 of 2007 provides that a male public service official is entitled to a family allowance regardless of whether or not his wife works in a governmental institution, and that a female public service official is entitled to such an allowance only if she is the “breadwinner” or if her husband is deceased or has a disability. The Committee had expressed concern that under the legislation female public servants would in practice be disadvantaged with respect to family allowances. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that there have been no amendments to the Civil Service Regulations, and that the Government will provide information on any revisions or amendments. The Committee notes that no information is provided on the practical application of section 25(b) of the regulations. The Committee asks the Government to take the opportunity afforded as a result of the legislative review being undertaken by the NSCPE to review and revise the provisions of the Civil Service Regulations No. 30 of 2007 so as to ensure that female public service officials are treated on an equal basis with male public service officials with regard to all allowances, including family allowances, and to continue to provide information in this regard.

Article 1(b). Work of equal value. The Committee notes that for a number of years it has been pointing out that the provisions of the Constitution do not give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that section 23(ii)(a) of the Constitution provides that workers shall receive wages commensurate with the quantity and quality of the work, and that the Labour Code does not include any provisions of particular relevance to the principle of the Convention. The Committee notes that although the Labour Code was amended in 2010 (Act No. 26/2010), the opportunity was not taken to include a provision incorporating the principle of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to work closely with the NSCPE to develop appropriate amendments to the Labour Code or to draft other legislation, with a view to giving full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, without further delay. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that such legislation covers not only situations where men and women are performing the same or similar work, but also where they carry out work that is of an entirely different nature but is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee further asks the Government to indicate how in practice it is ensured that the criteria used to determine levels of earnings are free from gender bias.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)
(ratification: 1963)

National policy and legislation. Prohibition of discrimination based on all the grounds listed in the Convention. The Committee recalls that in implementing a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation with a view to eliminating discrimination in accordance with Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, attention should be given to all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a). The Committee notes, however, that for a number of years, the Government has persistently failed to provide information on measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, and to address de facto inequalities which may exist with respect to the grounds covered by the Convention, other than sex. The Committee notes that in its most recent report, the Government, referring to sections 6 and 23 of the Constitution and section 2 of the Labour Code, merely states that the provisions of the law apply to all workers regardless of sex, nationality, race, colour and religion and that any other rights and privileges specified in the law apply to all workers without discrimination. The Committee notes that sections 6 and 23 of the Constitution guarantee for all Jordanians the right to work and their equality before the law without discrimination based on race, language and religion, and that section 2 of the Labour Code defines a “worker” as being a “any person, male or female, who performs work in return for wages or who is attached to an employer, and under his order, including young persons, and persons who are under probation or training”. The Committee must observe, however, that the above provisions fall short of effectively prohibiting discrimination on the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) and with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation. The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the importance of reviewing continually the protection afforded by the national legislation to ensure that it remains appropriate and effective. In the absence of a clear legislative framework, the Committee asks the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure effective protection, in law and in practice, against discrimination in employment and occupation with respect to the grounds of race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion and social origin. In this regard, and recalling that providing for effective legislative protection against discrimination is an important step in implementing a national equality policy, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to adopt legislative provisions specifically prohibiting and defining direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention and in all areas of employment. The Government is further requested to indicate all measures taken to address any de facto inequalities that may exist with respect to the grounds covered by the Convention in respect of access to vocational training and guidance, access to employment and particular occupations, including recruitment, as well as with respect to all terms and conditions of employment.

Access of women to the civil service. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been pointing out the persistence of occupational segregation of women in the civil service and has pointed out that the criterion of seniority, when applied for purposes of promotion into higher posts, should not lead to indirect discrimination against female civil servants. The Committee had urged the Government to take effective steps to address occupational gender segregation, and to address the issue of women having an insufficient number of accumulated years of experience and knowledge. The Committee notes from the statistics provided by the Government, which unfortunately do not provide an indication of the particular year they cover, that women continue to be underrepresented in the civil service, especially at higher levels, such as in leading posts where they account for only 10.1 per cent of workers at that level, and in supervisory posts, where they represent 37.9 per cent of workers, the majority of whom are in the education sector (60.45 per cent). The Committee notes that the Government once again does not provide information on the specific steps taken to address occupational segregation, to ensure an equitable application of the criterion of seniority and to promote women to higher level posts, but rather indicates that the Civil Service Regulations ensure equal opportunities for men and women in all positions, including in high-ranking, leading and supervisory posts and that the criteria used to appoint officials in the civil service ensures equality between men and women. The Committee stresses that the Government has the obligation, under the Convention, to address both direct and indirect discrimination based on sex, with respect to employment and occupation in the civil service. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take immediate and effective steps to address occupational gender segregation in the civil service, including taking measures to overcome the problem of women having an insufficient number of accumulated years of experience and knowledge, and to promote women to higher level posts. Please continue to provide up-to-date statistics on the distribution of male and female employees in all posts of the civil service enabling the Committee to make an assessment over time of the progress made in promoting access of women to all levels of the civil service.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the fact that the right to equal remuneration set out in section 7(2) of the 1999 Labour Act was narrower than the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value set out in the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes that the new Labour Code of 2007 contains the same provision in section 22(15) providing that the employee shall have the right to "equal payment for equal labour without any discrimination". In addition, section 7(1) prohibits sex discrimination in the exercise of labour rights.

The Committee recalls its general observation of 2006 in which it emphasized that the concept of "work of equal value" includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for "equal", the "same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee urged countries still retaining legal provisions that are narrower than the principle of the Convention to amend their legislation to ensure that it not only provides for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also prohibits pay discrimination that occurs in situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value.

The Committee notes that the Government has failed to take these comments into account when adopting the Labour Code of 2007. It also notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women had similarly called on Kazakhstan to introduce legislative provisions on equal pay for work of equal value (CEDAW/C/KAZ/CO, 2 February 2007, paragraph 24). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, providing for the right of men and women to equal remuneration for work of equal value. It asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Law No. 223-IV of 8 December 2009 on State Guarantees on Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Men and Women. The Law states the main objectives of the state policy to ensure equal rights and opportunities for men and women (section 3) and outlines the competence of Government, and the central and local executive bodies regarding, among others, the development and implementation of the state policy, and the development of regional programmes and proposals to improve legislation and promote the observance of equal rights and opportunities for men and women (sections 6–8). The Law further guarantees equal access to the public service for men and women (section 9) and equal rights and equal opportunities in the context of labour relations (section 10), and in education and training. It also provides that gender equality shall also be ensured through the equal sharing of responsibilities between men and women in the upbringing of children (section 11). The Committee asks the Government to provide full information on the practical application of the Law of 2009 on State Guarantees on Equal Rights and Equal Opportunities of Men and Women, including the specific measures taken to ensure equal access to the public service. Recalling the adoption of the Strategy for Gender Equality 2006–16, the Committee also requests the Government to provide full details, including statistics disaggregated by sex, on all the measures taken to implement the Strategy, and on the results achieved.

The Committee further notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee notes that the new Labour Code, which was adopted on 15 May 2007, includes a number of provisions which give effect to the Convention. Section 4 declares the prohibition of discrimination to be the principle of the labour legislation of the Republic of Kazakhstan, while section 7 sets out this prohibition in more detail:

- section 7(1) provides that everyone shall have equal opportunities to exercise their rights and freedoms in the sphere of labour;
- section 7(2) provides that no one may be subjected to any discrimination in exercising their labour rights based on sex, age, physical disabilities, race, nationality, language, material, social or official position, place of residence, attitude to religion, political convictions, tribe or social stratum or membership of public associations; and
- section 7(3) provides that differences, exceptions, preferences and restrictions determined by requirements inherent in the nature of the work or dictated by the state's concern for people in need of increased social and legal protection, do not constitute discrimination.

The Committee notes that these provisions cover all prohibited grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a), of the Convention, except the ground of colour. It also notes that section 7(2) also includes a number of additional grounds, as envisaged in Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention (such as age, physical disability, tribe and membership in a public association). The Committee regrets that the ground of citizenship, which was included as a prohibited ground in the previous Labour Code has been removed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the above provisions, including information on any activities undertaken to make these known and information on the number, nature and outcome of discrimination cases dealt with by the courts or the labour inspectorate. In the absence of such information, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to collect such data, and to indicate the measures taken to that end. The Committee recommends that the prohibited ground of colour is added to section 7(2).

Equality of men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee notes with interest that the new Labour Code grants paid leave to adoptive parents (either the mother or the father) to care for a newly born adopted child (section 194) and unpaid childcare leave until the child reaches the age of three at the parents' choice, either for the father or the mother (section 195). The Committee welcomes these measures, in particular those that are available to women and men on an equal footing, and requests the Government to provide information on the extent to which this entitlement is being used by men and women.

However, the Committee notes that under section 187 of the Labour Code the employer is prevented from either engaging in night work or overtime work women with children under the age of seven years and other persons bringing up children under the age of seven years without a mother, or sending them on business trips or to perform rotational work, without their written consent. Under sections 188 and 189, fathers have the right to child-feeding breaks and to part-time work only in respect of children without a mother. The Committee notes that, in accordance with the principle of gender equality, measures aimed at facilitating the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities should be available on an equal footing for women and men. Provisions which reflect an assumption that caring for a child is the primary role of women prolong and reinforce gender inequality in society and the labour market. The Committee therefore requests the Government to amend these provisions accordingly.

Special measures of protection. The Committee notes that, under section 186(1) of the Labour Code, it is prohibited to engage women to perform heavy work or work under harmful and hazardous working conditions. Under section 186(2), it is prohibited for women to lift and move manually weights in excess of the maximum standards established for them. The list of jobs for which it is prohibited to engage women and the maximum weights for women to lift and move manually shall be determined by the state labour authority in agreement with the health authorities. The Committee recalls that special protective measures for women should be limited to safeguarding maternity, and should be proportional to the nature and scope of the protection needed. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the list referred in section 186 of the Labour Code for examination by the Committee.

Practical application. The Committee notes that the Government has not yet replied to a number of requests for information made by the Committee with regard to the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide the following:

- (i) detailed information on the specific measures taken to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of women and men in employment and occupation, including measures to promote women's access to occupations and employment in areas where they are currently under-represented, including within the civil service;
- (ii) statistical information on the participation of men and women in the labour market (private and public sectors), branch of economic activity, occupational group and status of employment;
- (iii) information indicating how the principle of gender equality has been integrated into the programmes and measures to promote employment, including statistical information on the number of women who have benefited from employment promotion measures;
- (iv) statistical information on the position in the labour market of men and women belonging to ethnic or religious minorities, including information on their participation in employment in the civil service; and
- (v) information on the measures taken to plan and implement activities to raise awareness of the principles of equality, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations as envisaged under Article 3(a) and (b) of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Kenya

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes with interest the promulgation on 27 August 2010 of a new Constitution which includes a comprehensive Bill of Rights and contains numerous provisions providing protection against discrimination, including provisions that the State or a person "shall not discriminate directly or indirectly against any person on any ground, including race, sex, pregnancy, marital status, health status, ethnic or social origin, colour, age, disability, religion, conscience, belief, culture, dress, language or birth" (article 27(4) and (5)), thus broadening the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination. The Constitution also aims at promoting equality and diversity and it requires the State to take legislative and other measures such as affirmative action programmes and policies "designed to redress any disadvantage suffered by individuals or groups because of past discrimination" (article 27(6)). It creates a National Human Rights and Equality Commission, one of the functions of which is to promote gender equality and equity generally and to receive and investigate complaints (Part 5). The Committee further notes that the Constitution expressly states that the values and principles of public service include, inter alia, representation of Kenya's diverse communities and affording adequate and equal opportunities for appointment, training, advancement, at all levels of the public service, of men and women, the members of all ethnic groups, and persons with disabilities (article 232(1)(h) and (i)). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the provisions of the 2010 Constitution on non-discrimination and equality, in particular on any legislative or practical measures taken or envisaged providing for affirmative action in favour of disadvantaged groups of the population and on any measures taken or envisaged to promote equal opportunity and treatment for all in the public service, including in the police and armed forces, and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Republic of Korea

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes the comments from the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU), attached to the Government's report.

Gender wage gap. The Committee recalls the high and persistent overall gender wage gap, especially when comparing data on the hourly total wages of regular and non-regular male and female workers. The Committee notes from the statistics provided by the Government that in 2009 the average monthly wages of female permanent workers in establishments with five or more full-time workers remained 33.5 per cent lower than men's, with the gender wage gap (monthly wages) for women in their forties and fifties amounting to 40–45 per cent. The Committee welcomes the comprehensive data, disaggregated by sex, on hourly wages, and disaggregated by industry and occupation compiled in the 2009 Survey Report on Labour Conditions by Employment Type. The data show that when comparing hourly regular wages of male and female regular and non-regular workers, female non-regular workers earn 70.7 per cent of male non-regular workers and 48.6 per cent of male regular workers. When comparing data on the wage structure of permanent workers, according to occupation, the Committee notes that for most occupations, the total wage gap between men and women is largely over 30 per cent, and is particularly high for health, social and religion related occupations (46 per cent) in which women represent 80 per cent of the workers, and for education, professional and related occupations (40 per cent). Women represent 42 per cent of the clerks where the gender wage gap is 37.8 per cent; for service workers, where women constitute 61 per cent of the workers with the majority in hairdressing, wedding and medical assistance services, or cooking and food service occupations, the gender wage gap is 31 per cent. With regard to industries, the Committee notes that women are concentrated in manufacturing (which is the largest industry) with a gender wage gap of 36.8 per cent, in human health and social work activities (42 per cent wage gap), accommodation and food services (27.3 per cent wage gap), education (43 per cent wage gap), business facilities and support services (35 per cent wage gap), financial and insurance activities (36 per cent wage gap) and wholesale and retail trade (34.5 per cent wage gap). In the electricity, gas, steam and water supply, where women only represent 11 per cent, the total gender wage gap is as high as 45.8 per cent.

The Committee notes the comments by the FKTU that about 70 per cent of the non-regular workers are women and that to find trends in the gender wage gap one should look at the wages of all male and female workers, including non-regular workers. The Committee notes that in 2009, the hourly wage gap between regular and non-regular workers was the highest in wholesale and retail trade, manufacturing, and human health and social work, all industries employing a large number of women. With respect to occupations, the wage gap between regular and non-regular workers was 53.1 per cent for sales workers and 37.2 per cent for clerks and 27 per cent for service workers, where women also represent a high proportion among the workers. The Committee further notes that in a communication regarding the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) also draws attention to data from Statistics Korea (March 2010) indicating that the ratio of female to male wages was 61.6 per cent in 2010. Wages of male non-regular workers were 47.9 per cent of male regular workers' wages, while female non-regular workers earned only 38.3 per cent of what male regular workers earned. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to collect and provide comprehensive data on the hourly wages of men and women, regular and non-regular workers, according to industry and occupation, so as to enable a continual assessment of the evolution of the gender wage gap with a view to determining appropriate measures to address wage differentials between men and women. Given the particularly high gender wage gap in certain sectors and occupations in which women are predominantly employed, the Committee asks the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the wages in these sectors and occupations are not set on the basis of gender-biased undervaluation of the work performed in these sectors.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value – comparing remuneration of jobs of a different nature. The Committee recalls that the Ministry of Labour's Equal Treatment Regulation (No. 422), limiting the possibility of comparing work performed by men and women to "slightly different" work, appears to unduly limit the full application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention. It also recalls that the Supreme Court in its ruling of 14 March 2003 (2003DO2883) accepted the restrictive understanding of the concept of work of equal value in Regulation No. 422. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Equal Treatment Regulation was revised on 22 June 2010 to add non-discrimination in recruitment and hiring, wages and other money and valuable goods, education, assignment and promotion, and retirement age, retirement and dismissal. The Committee points out however that the prohibition of sex-based discrimination in wages will normally not be sufficient because it does not include the concept of "equal pay for work of equal value". The Committee recalls that the principle of the Convention encompasses work of an entirely different nature which is nevertheless of equal value. Given that the amendment of Regulation No. 422 does not appear to broaden the restrictive scope of comparison and given the very wide and persistent gender wage gap, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to amend Regulation No. 422 with a view to bringing it in to full conformity with the Convention, and to report on the progress made in this regard.

Application in job-based wage systems. The Committee notes the results of the research conducted by the Ministry of Labour emphasizing the importance of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, and the use of job evaluation, in the context of job-based pay systems. Attention is drawn to wage discrimination between men and women or between regular and non-regular workers that may result from job-based pay schemes when jobs are separated according to gender and employment status, or in the case of partial job-based pay schemes in which wages are also determined by other factors (years of consecutive service, performance, etc.). The research confirms the shift towards job-based pay schemes since the adoption of the Act on the Protection, etc., of Fixed-term and Part-term Employees. However, it also draws attention to the introduction of a separate job category system linked to job-based pay schemes by some employers, thus creating job categories to which only men or women are assigned resulting in gender discrimination in terms of hiring, recruitment, assignment and so on. The Committee further notes that the Workplace Self-check Manual for Equal Pay for Work of Equal Value is being distributed to employers to use on a voluntary basis, and to prevent unfavourable treatment of workers in terms of employment and wages. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the follow-up given to the findings of the research on job-based wage systems, including measures to address the assignment of men and women to separate job categories. Please indicate the number of enterprises that have adopted job-based wage systems and in which sectors, and the number that have undertaken objective job evaluation exercises to this end. Given the very high and persistent gender wage gap, the Committee also asks the Government to provide further details on any other measures taken to promote the application of the principle of the Convention at enterprise level in the context of human resource management and pay systems, and to indicate the results secured by such action.

Application of the principle beyond enterprise level. The Committee recalls that the reach of comparison should be as wide as allowed by the level at which wage policies, systems and structures are coordinated (General Survey of 1986, paragraph 72). The Committee notes that, according to the FKTU, no progress has been made with respect to measures taken or envisaged in this regard and that it is necessary to institutionalize the application of equal remuneration for work of equal value at industry as well as enterprise level. The Committee asks the Government to indicate any steps taken to promote and ensure the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value beyond the level of the enterprise, and to report on the progress made in this regard.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the Government's statement that since the Supreme Court's ruling (2003DO2883) no court decision has been given on the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It also notes the Government's indication that guidance and inspection has continued to ensure compliance with the principle of equal pay for work of equal value, and that in April 2010, a team was set up by the Korea Labour Foundation to promote discrimination-free workplaces in six regions through counselling of women and fixed-term workers on various forms of discrimination in the workplace, and education of workers and employers on how to prevent it. In 2009, inspection covered 1,272 workplaces with female workers resulting in the detection of 5,679 violations, almost all of them settled through administrative proceedings resulting in redress. However, out of these, only one violation concerned wage discrimination while 4,737 violations were classified as "other violations" and were apparently unrelated to discrimination issues. The Committee further notes that, according to the FKTU, the legislation is not being strictly enforced. The Committee asks the Government to take additional measures to improve the enforcement of the legislation concerning equal pay and to increase the capacity of the labour inspectorate to detect and address cases of wage discrimination. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the specific activities of the labour inspectorate, the training they receive and the nature and substance of the cases addressed. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the results of the counselling and educational activities launched by the Korea Labour Foundation that specifically relate to promoting the application of the principle of the Convention. Please also continue to provide information on any new court decisions regarding the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as guaranteed under the Equal Employment Act.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2009 and the resulting conclusions of the Conference Committee. It also notes the observations from the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU), attached to the Government's report, and the communications from the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), as well as the Government's reply thereto.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Migrant workers. The Committee recalls the importance of ensuring the effective promotion and enforcement of legislation to ensure that migrant workers are not subject to discrimination and abuse, contrary to the Convention. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee concluded that the issue of protecting migrant workers from discrimination and abuse required the Government's continued attention and requested the Government to pursue, and where necessary, to intensify efforts in this regard. It had also called on the Government to review the functioning of the current arrangements for workplace changes, and the proposals in the Bill amending the Act on employment, etc. of foreign workers, in consultation with workers' and employers' organizations, with a view to determining how best to achieve the objective of reducing migrant workers' vulnerability with regard to abuse and violations of their labour rights.

The Committee notes that section 25(1)(4) of the amended Act on employment, etc. of foreign workers allows a change of workplace when “the working conditions or the workplace are different from the terms of the labour contract and in case it is difficult to maintain a labour contract in a context of conventional wisdom due to unfair treatment by the employer, such as violations of the working conditions”. The Committee further notes that the possibility for workers under the Employment Permit System (EPS) to change their workplace remains limited to a maximum of three times, but that pursuant to section 25(4) a change of workplace which is requested due to “a reason not attributable to the foreign worker (section 25(1)(2))” would no longer be counted among the total of the three changes permitted. The Committee understands that a Constitutional Court decision of September 2011 ruled that restricting migrant workers to three changes of workplace within a work permit issued under the EPS did not violate their freedom of occupation under the Constitution. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that since the entering into force of section 25(1)(4) on 10 December 2009, the total number of transfers granted from January to March 2010 was 16,315, with 13,443 transfers for reason of cancelation or refusal of work permit (section 25(1)(1)), 2,768 due to business shutdown, closure, etc. (section 25(1)(2)), 16 due to the fraudulent acquisition of a work permit (section 25(1)(3)), and 49 due to unfair treatment (section 25(1)(4)). The Committee notes that according to the KCTU, the explanations provided in the Manual of the Ministry of Employment and Labour regarding the situations covered by section 25(1)(4), in practice, cover the most common problems arising at workplaces employing migrant workers. The KCTU states that, therefore, as they constitute violations of the law on the part of the employer, they should not be counted among the total of workplace transfers. The KCTU further expresses concern that in practice migrant workers are still dependent on the employer notifying a change in workplace (notification of change of workplace), and workers who wish to change workplaces due to labour law or rights violations face severe difficulties because of their employers’ refusal to make the proper notification. The FKUTU considers that the conditions for change of workplace under section 25 are still too strict and suggests that procedures should be in place respecting migrant workers’ desire to transfer workplaces when renewing or extending their labour contract. The Committee requests the Government to confirm whether section 25(1)(4) would provide a direct basis for migrant workers to request a transfer in the case of discrimination and to clarify whether such requests would be counted among the total of transfers permitted or would fall under the exception provided by article 25(4) of the Act on employment, etc. of foreign workers. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the number of migrant workers that have successfully applied for a change of workplace during the reporting period, indicating the reasons for granting such a change. Please indicate all measures taken to raise awareness among workers and employers, as well as the migrant workers support centres, about the new provisions in the Act on employment, etc. of foreign workers, and the procedures for dispute settlement and redress, including the rule that changes of workplace not attributable to the migrant workers would not be counted against them. The Committee also asks the Government to assess on a regular basis whether in practice the EPS allows for appropriate flexibility for migrant workers to change their workplaces so as to avoid situations in which they become vulnerable to abuse and discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention, and to report on any measures taken in this regard.

With regard to the enforcement of the anti-discrimination provisions in respect of migrant workers, the Committee notes that the Conference Committee had recommended that the Government further strengthen the enforcement of the labour legislation, including through labour inspection, to protect migrant workers’ labour rights. The Government indicates that additional migrant support centres have been created and that the number of complaints filed by foreign workers with local labour offices was 4,181 in 2008, 5,234 in 2009 and 2,058 by the end of May 2010, most of which were resolved through guidance. During 2009 and the first half of 2010, 6,210 workplaces were inspected among which 1,736 were found committing violations. The Committee notes that the large majority of the violations related to the employment permit (2,393 violations in 2009, and 1,529 in 2010). In 2009 and 2010, 160 violations related to working conditions, including wages; 115 violations related to non-respect of the minimum wage; and 173 violations related to violations of the Immigration Control Act. The Committee notes the information on the complaints about discrimination and human rights violations submitted by foreign workers to the National Human Rights Commission, between March 2008 and June 2010, all of which were either rejected or dismissed. The KTUC draws attention to the low number of inspections of workplaces that employ foreign workers (5–6 per cent of roughly 75,000 workplaces) and states that there is a large amount of evidence of labour law violations at workplaces employing migrant workers, including differences in pay in violation of section 6 of the Labour Standards Law, and numerous cases of sexual harassment of women migrant workers left unaddressed. The KCTU draws attention to the importance of sending female inspectors to workplaces where women migrant workers are employed and undertaking systematic investigation and supervision of implementation of measures to prevent and remedy sexual harassment and abuse. According to the FKUTU the emphasis of guidance and inspection efforts on investigating illegal employment makes it difficult to reveal and detect discrimination against immigrant workers and violations of their working conditions. The ITUC, concerned by reports that abuse and discrimination persist against migrant workers, states that complaints by migrant workers of changed working conditions upon arrival and wage inequality highlights the need for collective representation to ensure that similar conditions of work apply to all categories of workers. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation protecting migrant workers from discrimination and abuse is fully implemented and enforced, including measures to address more effectively sexual harassment of women migrant workers, and to report on the action taken in this regard. Please continue to provide information on the number of inspections of enterprises employing migrant workers and the number and kind of violations detected and the remedies provided, as well as the number, content and outcome of complaints brought by migrant workers before labour officers, the courts and the National Human Rights Commission.

Equality of opportunity and treatment of women and men. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee called on the Government to step up its efforts and to seek cooperation with the employers' and workers' organizations, to increase the low level of women's participation in the labour market and reduce the gender pay gap. With respect to the gender pay gap, the Committee refers to its observation on the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100). The Committee notes from the Government's report that the number of workplaces subject to an affirmative action scheme has further increased and that out of the 1,607 workplaces subject to the scheme in 2009, 902 were required to submit a plan and to report on its implementation by March 2011. The proportion of female managers in workplaces with 500–1,000 workers and those with more than 1,000 workers rose to 13.62 and 14.84 per cent respectively in 2009. However data from the 2009 Survey on Labour Conditions and Employment Type confirm the occupational gender segregation of the labour market and the low representation of women among managers overall (8.2 per cent). With regard to the public sector, the Government provides data indicating that the proportion of female public officials rose from 38.8 per cent in 2006 to 41 per cent in 2009, without giving further information on the position of men and women in the different occupations and levels of the public service. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved following the adoption and implementation of affirmative action plans in the public and private sectors, and to indicate whether this has led to an improvement of women's participation in a wider range of jobs including those in which they are under-represented. Please provide statistical data, disaggregated by sex, on employment at the different levels and occupations in the private and public sectors. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate the measures taken, in cooperation with the workers' and employers' organizations, to promote and ensure gender equality in opportunity and treatment, and the results secured by such action.

Discrimination on the basis of sex and employment status. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee requested information concerning the difficulties encountered with the enforcement of the Act on the protection, etc. of fixed-term and part-time employees (Act No. 8074 of 21 December 2006), which prohibits discriminatory treatment of these workers based on their employment status. It also requested information on whether trade unions were authorized to bring complaints on behalf of victims of such discrimination, and called on the Government, in consultation with the workers' and employers' organizations, to improve the legislative protection against discrimination based on employment status, which disproportionately affected women. The Committee notes that according to the Government an opinion survey of May 2008 indicated that 73 per cent of the large companies and 46.1 per cent of the medium-sized companies had improved treatment of fixed-term workers since the Law came into effect. It also notes from the Government's report that in March 2010 the number of fixed-term (contingent) and part-time workers protected by the Act on the protection, etc. of fixed-term and part-time employees of 2006 was 3,202,000 and 1,525,000 respectively, representing 19.3 and 9.2 per cent of the total wage workers. The KCTU and the ITUC continue to express concern at the increasing wage discrepancy between regular and non-regular workers (with an overall wage gap of 46.2 per cent in 2010), poor working conditions and the low participation rate of non-regular workers in various social insurances. With regard to the wage gap between regular and non-regular workers of 46.2 per cent, the Government states that when factors such as gender, age, the length of service and number of working hours are controlled, the wage gap is 15.7 per cent (2009 Survey on Labour Conditions and Employment Type). The KCTU and the ITUC are also of the view that dispatched and subcontracted workers should be covered by the prohibition of discrimination in the Act, and insist on the importance of authorizing trade unions to bring complaints on behalf of fixed-term, part-time and dispatched workers under the existing anti-discrimination legislation. The Committee notes the Government's reply that it goes against the adversarial system under the litigation procedure law to authorize trade unions to bring complaints on behalf of their members. The Committee notes that from 1 July 2007 until 31 May 2010, a total of 2,280 cases were filed with the Labour Relations Commission to seek redress, of which 2,216 cases were handled. A correction order was issued for 125 cases; 494 cases were settled through mediation or arbitration; 693 cases were rejected or dismissed; and 904 withdrawn. The Government further indicates that the amendments to the Act on the protection of fixed-term and part-time employees, which would extend the period for fixed-term workers from two to four years and the amendment of the Act on the protection, etc. of dispatched workers, have yet to be discussed in the General Assembly, and that it will consult workers and employers with a view to resolving differences regarding these amendments. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the importance of allowing trade unions to bring complaints as it reduces the risk of reprisals and is also likely to serve as a deterrent to discriminatory action.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee also expressed concern that the large majority of non-regular workers were women. In this regard, the KCTU states that measures to eliminate discrimination based on gender and employment status have been insufficient and that discrimination on the basis of employment status is particularly severe for women resulting from the fact that 70 per cent of women in the labour force are non-regular workers; the quality of women's employment has also deteriorated as jobs were created by expanding part-time work after the current economic crisis. The Government states that the purpose of the Act is not so much to achieve gender equality but to reduce undue discrimination against fixed-term and part-time workers. The Committee refers to its observation on the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156), noting that women account for 74.2 per cent of those in part-time jobs, including in the public sector. Given the high proportion of women among non-regular workers, especially in part-time jobs, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that employment and labour market policies promoting predominantly female occupations as suitable for part-time jobs constitute indirect discrimination based on sex, and need to be effectively addressed under the Convention.

The Committee asks the Government to continue to examine the nature and extent of discrimination against fixed-term and part-time workers, particularly women, on the basis of employment status. Considering the particular vulnerability of non-regular workers to discrimination, the Committee asks the Government to consider taking serious steps to allow trade union representation with respect to complaints on behalf of fixed-term, part-time and dispatched workers under the existing anti-discrimination legislation. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on all the steps taken to ensure the effective enforcement of Act No. 8074 of 2006 generally, including information, disaggregated by sex, on the number and nature of complaints filed with the Labour Relations Commissioner regarding discrimination based on employment status, and their outcome. Please provide information on the progress made regarding the amendments of the Act on the protection, etc. of fixed-term and part-time employees and the Act on the protection of dispatched workers. The Committee urges the Government to make special efforts to address direct and indirect discrimination based on sex of fixed-term and part-time workers, and to ensure the effective enforcement of the Act on the protection, etc. of fixed-term and part-time employees of 2006, particularly in industries and occupations in which women are predominantly employed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the communication received on 29 August 2011 from the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU), and the observations by the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) and the Korea Employers' Federation (KEF), annexed to the Government's report, as well as the Government's replies received on 30 August 2011 and 26 October 2011, respectively.

Article 3. National policy. The Committee notes with interest the legislative measures to give effect to the provisions of the Convention, in particular, the adoption of the Act on the Promotion of the Economic Activities of Career-break Women, etc. No. 9101 of 2008, and the Act on the Promotion of Creation of Family-friendly Social Environment No. 8695 of 2007, as last amended in 2010. It notes that, under the Career-break Women Act, the term "career-break women" is defined as those who want to be employed, among women who have discontinued their economic activities for such reasons as pregnancy, childbirth, childcare or taking care of their family member (section 2); the State and local governments shall establish comprehensive measures to promote the economic activities of career-break women, employers shall make efforts to create a working environment for promoting the economic activities of career-break women (section 3), and the Minister of Gender Equality and Family and the Minister of Labour shall establish a basic plan on the promotion of economic activities of career-break women (section 4). The Committee also notes that, under the Family-friendly Social Environment Act, the State and local governments shall establish and implement comprehensive policies necessary to create a family-friendly social environment (section 3), which is defined as an environment where members of society are able to harmonize work and family life, and the responsibility of raising children and supporting family can be shared at the social level (section 2(1)); employers shall endeavour to create a family-friendly working environment (section 4), which is defined as a working environment where a family-friendly system helps workers to harmonize work and family life (section 2(2)); and the Minister of Gender Equality and Family shall formulate basic plans every five years for creating a family-friendly social environment (section 5). With regard to the family-friendly company certification system under the Act (section 11), the Government indicates that 65 companies were granted certification as of the end of May 2011, and that these certified companies are being provided with various incentives such as additional points when evaluating business for government procurement, and a preference is given in loan support for industrial accident prevention facility expenses.

The Committee further notes the amendments to the Act on Equal Employment and Support for Work-Family Reconciliation No. 3989 of 1987, including section 6-2, which provides that the Minister of Labour shall establish a basic plan on the realization of equal employment and the reconciliation of work and family life. In this regard, the Government indicates that it established the Second Basic Plan for Healthy Family (2011–15) and the Second Basic Plan on Low Birth Rate and Aging Society (2011–15), and is making efforts to foster a family-friendly social climate and an environment favourable toward childbirth and childcare. The Government further indicates that more efforts are being made to foster an environment favourable for workers with dependants by planning to enact the "Smart Work Promotion Act". The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the Career-break Women Act and the Family-friendly Social Environment Act, as well as the Second Basic Plan for Healthy Family (2011–15) and the Second Basic Plan on Low Birth Rate and Aging Society (2011–15), in the context of workers with family responsibilities. It also asks the Government to provide information on the process of enacting the Smart Work Promotion Act. Please also continue to provide information on the initiative to promote family friendly corporate management, including the family-friendly company certification system, and the results achieved.

Article 4. Leave entitlements for men and women workers with family responsibilities. The Committee had previously noted that the Equal Employment Act 1987 provides childcare leave for a maximum of one year before the child turns three. It notes the Government's indication that, according to the amendment in February 2010, the child's age has been extended up to six years of age, and that male and female workers may each take a year of childcare leave, thus amounting to a total of two years for a married couple. The Government indicates that from January 2011, a worker covered by employment insurance has been granted childcare leave of 30 days or more with childcare leave benefits of 40 per cent of the monthly wages; employers are given subsidies to ease the burden due to granting childcare leave or working hour reductions, and to support the use of a substitute workforce. The Committee also notes that section 18-2 of the Equal Employment Act introduced three days paternity leave for a worker whose spouse gives birth. The Government indicates that, under the Second Basic Plan on Low Birth Rate and Aging Society, the Government has drawn up an amendment Bill to change the unpaid paternity leave of three days to paid leave, and if necessary, extend it to 5 days (2 days unpaid). The Committee further notes the statistical information provided by the Government indicating that the rate of childcare leave benefit recipients (men and women) compared to the number of maternity benefit recipients significantly increased from 42.5 per cent in 2008 and 50.2 per cent in 2009, to 55.1 per cent in 2010 (a total of 41,732 workers). However, the statistical information also indicates that less than 2 per cent of the childcare leave beneficiaries are men. The Government states that the number of men taking childcare leave is not high but is rapidly on the rise. In this regard, the Committee notes the comments from the KCTU that, when compared to the number of total newborns, the childcare leave usage rate remains low (7.8 per cent in 2009 and 8.7 per cent in 2010); men's childcare leave usage rate stands at 2 per cent (out of those who took maternity leave), and when compared to the number of total newborns, it is 0.17 per cent in 2010. In response, the Government indicates that the level of childcare leave benefits has continued to be raised within the available budget and that the Amendment Bill to the Equal Employment Act, which would grant the childcare leave to non-regular workers, was submitted to the National Assembly in September 2011. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the leave entitlements in practice, including statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on the number of beneficiaries of such entitlements. Noting the very low number of male beneficiaries of childcare leave, and recalling the importance of equitable sharing of family responsibilities between men and women, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the underlying causes of the low number of men taking childcare leave, and to take measures to promote the exercise of childcare leave particularly by men, as well as to indicate the results achieved by such measures. Please also provide information on the progress of adopting the Amendment Bill to the Equal Employment Act.

Working time arrangements. The Committee notes section 19-2 of the Equal Employment Act, which provides that the employer may grant a reduction of working hours instead of childcare leave, if a worker is eligible to ask for childcare leave pursuant to section 19(1) of the Act; according to section 19-5, an employer shall make efforts to take measures including adjusting business opening and closing time, restricting overtime, adjusting working hours and other measures necessary to support childcare or the worker. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Employment and Labour is in the process of seeking to provide the right to reduced working time during childcare periods through the amendment of the Act. In this connection, the Committee notes the statement of the KCTU that, a worker entitled to a reduction of working hours may still work from 27 up to 42 hours a week, thus nullifying the effect of the working-hour reduction. In this regard, the KEF states that the use of the shorter working time for childcare is very low, and employers and workers are not willing to accept a flexible working hour system for fear of losing teamwork and increased workload for co-workers. In response, the Government refers to section 19-3(3) of the Equal Employment Act prohibiting overtime work, but allowing overtime work not exceeding 12 hours a week, if the worker makes an explicit request.

The Committee had previously asked the Government to provide information on any measures taken to address excessive overtime work which is an obstacle to reconciling work and family responsibilities. It notes the Government's indication that the Working Hours and Wage System Improvement Committee was established and operated to discuss ways to improve practices and systems related to working hours from June 2009 to June 2010, and the tripartite agreement for improving long working hour practices and advancing work culture was adopted in June 2010. The Government states that it devised "comprehensive measures for improving long working hours" in December 2010, and has been carrying out the measures including the flexible working hour system and working hour saving system. It also indicates that it is seeking to adopt flexible working hours at all public institutions. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the use of the flexible working hour system and working hour saving system, including statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on the number of beneficiaries of such systems, as well as their impact on employment of both female and male workers with family responsibilities and their ability to reconcile work and family responsibilities in practice. Recalling that paragraph 18 of the Workers with Family Responsibilities Recommendation, 1981 (No. 165), emphasizes the importance of the progressive reduction of daily hours of work and the reduction of overtime, the Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the process of amendment to the Equal Employment Act with a view to providing the right to reduced working time during childcare periods. Please also provide information on the trends in the average number of hours worked by men and women, and on any measures taken to address excessive overtime work.

Part-time work. The Committee recalls that section 7(1) and (2) of the Act on the Protection, etc. of Fixed-term and Part-time Workers provides for the moving of workers with family responsibilities from full-time work to part-time work, and vice versa. In this connection, the Committee notes the statement of the KCTU that, while part-time work is promoted by the Government as a priority measure to spread the flexible work system within a variety of childcare working-hour reduction systems, female workers account for 74.2 per cent of part-time jobs, which shows that the gender gap in part-time jobs is significant. The KCTU also states that the Government mainly presents female-dominant occupations as jobs suitable for part-time work, aggravating the trends of women taking non-regular jobs, and maintaining that women are mainly responsible for family duties. The Committee also notes that according to the FKTU most public servants working part-time are female, and most of the workers who fill the vacancies due to the shift to part-time work are also women. The Committee notes the Government's response with regard to the protection of part-time workers and measures supporting companies employing them. The Government indicates that "decent part-time jobs" promoted by the Government are regular jobs, and that the only difference between full-time and part-time workers would be the shorter working hours in order to balance work with family responsibilities. The Committee recalls that the assumption that the main responsibility for family care and the household lies with women, thus reinforcing stereotypical attitudes regarding the roles of men and women and existing gender inequality, runs counter to the objectives of the Convention, and draws the Government's attention to the Committee's comments made under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Committee asks the Government to indicate how the Fixed-term and Part-time Workers Act has facilitated the moving of workers with family responsibilities from full-time work to part-time work, and vice versa, with an indication of the number of men and women using this option and the number of women moving back to full-time work. Please also indicate how the issue of female concentration in part-time work is addressed in the context of reconciling work and family responsibilities.

Article 5. Childcare and family services and facilities. The Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government and the KEF indicating that the number of childcare facilities has increased 30 per cent (23.1 per cent for public facilities) from 29,233 facilities (1,643 public facilities) in 2006, to 38,021 facilities (2,023 for public facilities) in 2010; the capacity of childcare facilities rose 21.6 per cent (19.4 per cent for public facilities) from 1.28 million children (129,000 for public facilities) in 2006, to 1.56 million children (154,000 for public facilities) in 2010; and for the employees at small and medium sized enterprises and smaller businesses, the Government established and has been operating 24 public childcare facilities. The number of government-fostered childcare service providers is likely to increase from around 7,000 persons in 2010 to 10,000 persons in 2011. The Committee further notes that the Enforcement Rule of the Infant Care Act was amended in 2006 to include working married couples who may preferentially use public childcare facilities, thereby increasing the access to childcare facilities for workers. In addition, it notes the Government's indication that at-home childcare services are provided, and the service was drastically expanded in 2011; the number of households receiving the support is expected to reach 32,000 in 2011, from 13,000 households in 2010. According to the Government, the number of children receiving government support for expenses spent on childcare facilities rose 52.3 per cent from 577,000 children in 2006 to 879,000 children in 2010, and therefore the cost borne by parents is constantly decreasing. With regard to the childcare facilities established by employers according to section 21 of the Equal Employment Act and section 14 of the Infant Care Act, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2010, the maximum amount of subsidies for workplace childcare facilities and loans was raised, and grants are provided when a new childcare facility is built. The Government indicates that as of the end of 2010, there were 401 workplace childcare centres (total for both private and public).

The Committee notes the statement of the KCTU that childcare policies are mainly aimed at providing childcare grants to low-income families, therefore such policies are not targeting working parents. It also states that only 5.2 per cent of childcare facilities are run by the central and local governments, therefore constant expansion of public centres is needed. Among children using the facilities, 69.2 per cent (795,121) are given childcare benefits, however, when compared to the total preschool children, the figure drops to 29.5 per cent, leaving about three fourths of children without access to the benefits. According to the FKTU, the proportion of public childcare centres has never exceeded the 5 per cent range since 2003. It points out that if the Government continues to take a market-based approach that allows for profit private childcare centres to act as main service providers, the public nature and stability of such a protection scheme will not be guaranteed, and there will be limited control of the cost burdens on service users. Regarding workplace childcare centres, 41 per cent of the workplaces which are required to set up a workplace childcare centre do not fulfil the obligation. In response to the observations by the FKTU, the Government states that it is providing support for the establishment of public childcare centres to ensure the public nature of childcare and to establish childcare infrastructure, and that it has also provided, since July 2011, private childcare facilities that are recognized for their excellence with subsidies for their operation expenses. The Government also adds that subsidies for childcare expenses are provided to all households in the lowest 70 per cent of the income scale, and to the highest 30 per cent, taking into consideration the necessity for childcare; from March 2012, a programme will be introduced providing all households with a five-year-old child with childcare subsidies regardless of their income levels. Recalling the importance of ensuring that family services and facilities meet workers' needs and preferences, the Committee asks the Government to continue to provide detailed statistical information on the availability of and accessibility to affordable childcare services and facilities including their utilization that would allow the Committee to assess the progress made over time. It also asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that sufficient public childcare services are provided, and that the cost incurred by employers in order to provide childcare facilities would not adversely affect the employment of workers with family responsibilities.

Article 11. Employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee notes the observations by the KEF that several legal reforms have been made rapidly without sufficiently gathering public opinions, and that even company welfare systems, which should be decided by agreement between workers and employers have been legislated. The KEF also considers that the policy is one of overprotection, including the measures in the "Second Basic Plan for the Low Birth Rate and Aging Society”, such as releasing the list of companies which do not install company-based childcare facilities, extending paternity leave to five days, guaranteeing the right to request working time reduction for childcare, introducing family nursing care leave system, and expanding the scope of miscarriage or stillbirth leave. The KEF indicates that strengthened protection regulations can increase the employment cost of female workers and as a consequence, this would be detrimental to female employment. In response, the Government indicates that the Work-Family Reconciliation and Female Employment Promotion Committee, in which workers, employers and the Government participated, was established and operated from November 2008 to October 2009, having collected and discussed views from various groups concerning the issues of work-family balance and female employment. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the mandate and activities of the Work-Family Reconciliation and Female Employment Promotion Committee. It also asks the Government to provide information on any other measures taken to promote social dialogue and tripartite cooperation in order to strengthen the laws, measures and policies giving effect to the Convention, and on the manner in which workers’ and employers’ organizations have exercised their right to participate in the design and implementation of such measures, including through collective bargaining and the adoption and implementation of workplace policies on work and family reconciliation. Please also indicate measures taken, with the cooperation of workers’ and employers’ organizations, to ensure that the legislation and its practical application would not have a negative impact on the employment of workers with family responsibilities.

Parts III and V of the report form. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that there is no notable information available on relevant judicial or administrative decisions. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any cases or disputes handled by courts and the National Labour Relations Commission, involving issues relating to workers with family responsibilities.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1977)

Legislation. For a number of years the Committee has been asking the Government to give full legal expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that section 56 of the draft Labour Code now provides that “the principle of equal remuneration for men and women shall apply without discrimination for work of equal value i.e. equal, the same or similar work. Discrimination shall be prohibited not be allowed if the work is different, even if it is of equal value”. The Committee recalls that the concept of “work of equal value” implies a broad scope of comparison including but going beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same”, or “similar work”, and encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee considers that in referring to “equal, the same and similar work”, the wording of the draft provision continues to lack clarity as to whether it would allow a comparison to be made between work performed by men and women containing entirely different types of tasks, skills, responsibilities or working conditions. The Committee asks the Government to address the ambiguity in section 56 of the draft Labour Code with a view to ensuring that it permits a broad scope of comparison also encompassing work performed by men and women that is of an entirely different nature, and giving full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes the observations of the Association of Industrialists, annexed to the Government’s report.

Legislative prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation. For a number of years, the Committee has been encouraging the Government to take the opportunity in the context of revision of the Labour Code to introduce a comprehensive prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation based on all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that section 1 (definition of wage earner) of the draft Labour Law specifies “... without any discrimination whatsoever as to race, colour, sex, religion, national extraction, political opinion and social origin, which is likely to invalidate or weaken the application of the principle of equal opportunity or treatment in employment and occupation”. Draft section 35 (protection of women against discrimination) specifies that “... all legal provisions which regulate work without discrimination, or distinction in the same work shall apply to working women, with respect to wages, conditions of recruitment, promotion, and vocational training for the reasons mentioned in section 1 of this law ...”. The Committee must once again point out that the mere inclusion of a non-discrimination clause in the definition of “wage earner” does not offer effective protection against discrimination and falls short of prohibiting discrimination in employment and occupation as defined in the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to take the opportunity to insert a separate provision prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on any progress made in the adoption of the draft Labour Law.

Domestic workers. For a number of years, the Committee has been following the measures taken by the Government to address the lack of legal protection of domestic workers, many of whom are female migrants, due to concerns regarding potential discrimination against these workers on the basis of sex as well as other grounds such as race, colour or ethnic origin, contrary to the Convention. The Committee recalls that “domestic servants employed in private houses” are excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Code of 1946 (section 7(1)) and that contractual relations between domestic workers and private individuals employing them to perform domestic work in their residence are governed by the Law on obligations and contracts. The Committee had previously welcomed some measures taken by the Government to improve the employment situation of female migrant domestic workers, including the establishment of a National Steering Committee (2006), Decision No. 70/1 of 9 July 2003 and Decision No. 13/1 of 22 January 2009 relating to employment agencies for foreign domestic workers, and the publication of a standard contract of employment for foreign domestic workers in 2009.

The Committee notes that section 5(1) of the draft Labour Law continues to exclude “Servants and whoever is of a similar standing performing housework and living in the homes of their employers”, from its scope of application – which would in practice largely concern foreign domestic workers due to their contractual obligation to reside in the employer’s home. The Committee also notes that a comprehensive draft Law on the regulation of domestic workers is being discussed and considers this an opportunity to improve protection of domestic workers, nationals and non-nationals, against discrimination and to regulate their working conditions in their own right. The Committee notes in this regard the Government’s decision to wait for the outcome of the deliberations on the draft ILO instruments on domestic workers in June 2011 before continuing the examination of the draft law, with a view to bringing its national legislation into conformity with international standards. Noting the adoption of the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), the Committee asks the Government to review the draft Law on the regulation of domestic workers, which it hopes will include a specific provision expressly prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination of domestic workers in all aspects of their work. Please provide information on any progress made in the adoption of the draft Law.

Gender pay gap. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the differential in men’s and women’s average gross hourly earnings had continued to increase from 13.2 per cent in 2002 to 17.1 per cent in 2006 and to 20 per cent in 2007 (Eurostat). The Committee notes from Eurostat that, despite another increase in 2008 (21.6 per cent), the gender pay gap significantly decreased in 2009 to 15.3 per cent. It notes however from the data provided by the Government that the labour market remains highly segregated between men and women, the latter being concentrated in health care and social work (84.6 per cent), accommodation and catering services (79.3 per cent) and education (78.6 per cent). The Committee further notes the various measures taken within the framework of the national Programme on Equal Opportunities for Women and Men (2005–09) and the extensive study carried out to assess its impact on the situation of men and women in all spheres of life, including on the labour market, where some positive developments were noted as regards the reduction of gender stereotypes and changes in traditional attitudes towards women in employment. The Committee notes with interest that one of the main objectives of the third National Programme on Equal Opportunities for Women and Men (2010–14) is the reduction of the gender remuneration gap, with a particular focus on analysing and addressing the causes of pay discrimination, such as horizontal and vertical occupational segregation on the labour market and vocational training counselling based on stereotypes, through a greater involvement of the social partners in gender equality issues in employment and occupation. Welcoming the efforts made by the Government to promote equal opportunities for men and women, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to further reduce the gender pay gap and implement the National Programme on Equal Opportunities for Women and Men (2010–14) with respect to equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide statistics on the distribution of men and women in the different sectors of the economy and their respective levels of earnings.

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Objective job evaluation. Cooperation with workers’ and employers’ organizations. The Committee welcomes the Government’s indication that workshops were organized in 2006 and 2007, and were planned for 2009, to introduce the methodology for the appraisal of jobs and job positions to representatives of trade unions and financial and human resources managers of private enterprises, and notes that a survey on the implementation of this methodology may be carried out in the future. The Committee notes further that the Programme for Strengthening Social Dialogue (2007–11) includes the promotion of the conclusion of branch and enterprises collective agreements, which would include provisions on remuneration. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to promote the use of the methodology for the appraisal of jobs and job positions among workers, employers and their organizations and on the implementation of such methodology by enterprises, including the outcomes of any surveys carried out in this respect. The Committee further asks the Government to provide information on any collective agreements concluded at the branch or enterprise levels containing provisions reflecting the principle of the Convention.

Madagascar

Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that section 53 of Act No. 2003-044 of 28 July 2004 issuing the Labour Code contains provisions that are more restrictive than those of the Convention, as it limits the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value to persons in the same job and with the same vocational qualifications. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a revision of the labour legislation, including the Labour Code, is now envisaged, but that it has not yet been carried out. The Government adds that the Committee's comments concerning section 53 will be taken into account in the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee trusts that the Government will soon be in a position to take the necessary measures to bring section 53 of the Labour Code into full conformity with the Convention by guaranteeing equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and allowing for a comparison between work of a completely different nature, and asks the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this respect.

Collective agreements. The Committee recalls that, in its ruling of 5 April 2007, the Court of Appeal of Antananarivo found to be discriminatory clause XII of the Air Madagascar collective agreement concerning air crew and commercial personnel establishing the retirement age for air crew at 50 for men and 45 for women. The Committee welcomes the revision of the collective agreement concerned and notes that the new collective agreement, concluded on 28 April 2010, provides that the retirement age for air crew without distinction on grounds of sex is 55 years, beyond which age employees who wish to continue working are incorporated into the ground personnel. According to the Government, the retirement age for all personnel of Air Madagascar is 60 years, but it may be brought forward to 55 years for women staff "under the conditions envisaged by the National Social Welfare Fund (Caisse nationale de prévoyance sociale (CNAPS)) and at the request of the person concerned" under the terms of clause 64(1) of the above collective agreement. Noting this information, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the reasons why the possibility of taking retirement at 55 years of age envisaged by the new collective agreement of 28 April 2010 is solely open to women staff and it asks the Government to provide a copy of the collective agreement. The Committee also asks the Government to provide copies of collective agreements containing clauses giving effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Article 1 of the Convention. Provisions prohibiting discrimination. For several years, the Committee has been emphasizing that neither the Labour Code nor the Civil Service Statute prohibit discrimination on all the grounds covered by the Convention and it has requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee noted previously that the Labour Code penalizes any discriminatory treatment on the basis of race, religion, origin, sex, trade union affiliation and political opinion or membership of workers (section 261) and that the Civil Service Statute provides that there shall be no discrimination on grounds of sex, religion, opinion, origin, parentage, wealth, political conviction or trade union affiliation (section 5). It also noted that, according to the Government, the term "origin" used in the above legislation refers to the concept of national extraction within the meaning of the Convention. The Committee notes once again the Government's indication that the texts concerned are under examination and that measures will be taken to harmonize the Labour Code and the Civil Service Statute with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures in the near future to add the ground of colour to the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination in the Labour Code and "race" and "colour" to those prohibited by the Civil Service Statute, in accordance with Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. It also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which discrimination on the basis of social origin is addressed. Furthermore, with a view to completing the legislative measures protecting workers against discrimination, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to envisage the inclusion in the Labour Code and the Civil Service Statute of provisions defining and explicitly prohibiting all discrimination, including indirect discrimination. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to amend the legislation in this respect.

Night work. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the communication from the Confederation of Malagasy Workers (CTM), dated 28 May 2008, in which the Confederation alleges the violation of Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention, in view of the fact that section 5 of Act No. 2007-037 on export processing zones (EPZs) expressly provides that the provisions of the Labour Code prohibiting night work by women are not applicable in EPZs. The Committee notes that special protective measures for women should be limited to safeguarding maternity and should be proportional to the nature and scope of the protection required. The Committee notes that Madagascar has ratified the Night Work Convention, 1990 (No. 171), calling for protection of both men and women working at night. The Committee notes the large number of women working in EPZs. The Committee asks the Government to examine what other measures would be necessary so as to ensure that women and men can access employment on an equal footing, such as improved health protection of both men and women, adequate transportation and security, as well as social services and other measures to assist the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities, and to provide information in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to prevent exploitative working conditions and abuses in EPZs and ensure protection against discrimination of workers in EPZs.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malawi

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1965)

Application of the principle in the public service. The Committee has been raising concerns for a number of years regarding the male and female denominations in the civil service job grading and salary structure. The Committee recalls that such terminology reinforces stereotypes as to whether certain jobs should be performed by men or women, and may therefore result in the undervaluing of those jobs with a typically female denomination. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report once again does not address this issue. The Government merely states that remuneration is determined in accordance with grades irrespective of gender, without referring to how the grades themselves are determined. The Government also indicates generally that it would ensure that equal remuneration is recognized not only for women and men performing the same job, but also for men and women performing jobs of different nature but which are, nonetheless, of equal value. The Committee urges the Government to take concrete steps to ensure that gender-neutral terminology is used in the civil service grading system and salary structure, and to provide information in this regard. The Committee asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that the grading structure in the public service is free from gender bias, and to provide specific information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that men and women receive equal remuneration for work of equal value when performing jobs of a different nature which are nonetheless of equal value.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the low percentage of women holding managerial posts in the public service, and asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to retain women in the public service with a view to encouraging their advancement towards decision-making positions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a baseline survey on women in the public sector, the formal sector and the informal sector is being undertaken, which is intended to result in the elaboration of a Charter on Gender, which would enable women to "understudy" women in decision-making positions to prepare them for higher level positions. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the elaboration of the Charter on Gender, in particular with respect to the measures envisaged to promote greater access of women to higher level positions, and on any other action taken in this regard.

Application of the principle in rural areas and the informal economy. In response to its previous comments regarding the wage disparities between men and women in rural areas, the Committee notes the Government's indication that sensitization and awareness-raising activities on equal pay are being intensified, and that training targeting the agricultural sector has been organized for labour inspectors and agricultural extension officers. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the contents and results of the awareness-raising activities on the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value in the agricultural sector. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the training for labour inspectors and agricultural extension officers, as well as details of any case of violation detected by the inspectors and officers relevant to the principle of the Convention. Please also provide information, as previously requested by the Committee, on the measures adopted to facilitate the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities and the equal sharing of family responsibilities, including between men and women rural workers. Noting the Government's indication that the Charter on Gender will enable women to move from the informal to the formal economy, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1965)

National equality policy. The Committee notes the Government's general statement that there is no discrimination as regards vocational training, or employment and occupation, based on a person's race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin, and that all recruitment is solely merit-based. The Committee recalls that, for the purposes of achieving the objectives of the Convention, it is important to acknowledge that no society is free from discrimination and that continuous action is required to address it. The Committee also recalls the obligation under the Convention to declare and pursue a national equality policy with a view to eliminating any discrimination in employment and occupation on all the grounds enumerated in the Convention. Recalling that in assessing whether a country has declared and is pursuing a national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment in accordance with the Convention, the Committee is guided by the criteria of effectiveness, and under Article 3(f) there is an obligation to provide information regularly on measures taken to promote equality and also to indicate the results secured by such action, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this regard in its future reports.

Access to education and vocational training. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is no discrimination in vocational training, and that the Technical, Entrepreneurial and Vocational Education and Training Act, 1999, is designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of occupational and vocational training. The Government also refers to the development of a National Gender Policy in this context, as well as to the training of labour officers dealing with placement, and states generally that these measures have yielded positive results. The Committee recalls that vocational training and education have an important role in determining the actual possibilities of gaining access to employment and occupation, including access to less traditionally or typically "female" professions. The Committee, therefore, asks the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to address unequal access of women to training and education at all levels, including through the National Gender Policy and the training of placement officers, and the results achieved through such measures, including whether they have led to women gaining access to traditionally "male" jobs, and higher level positions.

Access to soft loans and credit facilities for rural women. The Committee understands that from 2004–09, under the women's economic empowerment programme, an average of 500 business groups have been formed and trained per year, and 600 rural business groups with more than 20 members obtained grants worth 80 million Malawian Kwacha (MWK) from UNDP Malawi while others received MWK60 million from the African Development Bank as loans. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the number of men and women in rural areas that have benefited from soft loans and credit facilities. Please also provide further information on the measures taken or envisaged to facilitate access to soft loans and credit facilities for rural women, such as dissemination of information regarding soft loans and credit facilities, or any training provided on business management and various production skills.

Statistics. The Committee notes that the Government is still not in a position to provide statistical information on the participation of women in training and education. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its concluding observations of 5 February 2010, expressed concern at the lack, or limited availability of data disaggregated by sex (CEDAW/C/MWI/CO/6, 5 February 2010, paragraphs 44 and 45). Recalling the importance of appropriate data and statistics in determining the nature, extent and causes of discrimination, and to monitor the impact of measures taken, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to collect and analyse statistical information, disaggregated by sex, regarding participation in education, vocational training, and at the various levels in the different sectors and occupations in both the public and private sectors, including in the informal economy if possible.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malaysia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1997)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Application in law and practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the review of the country's labour law and policies is regularly considered by the Ministry of Human Resources in particular in order to provide "equitable protection for workers regardless of gender". The Committee also recalls its previous comments noting that in 2006 the Cabinet Committee established three inter-agency committees to review, among other things, the Federal Constitution and the rules and regulations related to employment with the objective of ensuring that they do not contain gender discriminatory provisions. In this regard, the Committee once again notes that the Constitution, the Employment Act and the Wages Council Act do not reflect fully the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value; and emphasizes that provisions that are narrower than the principle as laid down in the Convention hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination against women at work.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that section 18 of the Industrial Relations Act, 1967 (Act 177), which provides for conciliation in cases of trade disputes would allow a trade union to lodge a complaint relating to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. However, the Government indicates that no complaints have been reported to the Director General for Industrial Relations. The Committee considers that it is unclear how this provision could provide for a right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee notes once again the Government's indication that in practice there is no discrimination in remuneration between men and women performing jobs of the "same nature and category". The Government also indicates that no complaints related to equal remuneration have been dealt with by the Department of Labour of the Ministry of Human Resources for a total of 11,044 cases; but that the principle of equal remuneration is promoted through statutory inspections by the Department of Labour and the Department of Industrial Relations. The Committee considers from the indication given in the Government's report that there may still be some misunderstanding regarding the meaning of the provisions of the Convention, their scope and application in practice. In this regard, the Committee again refers the Government to its 2006 general observation and recalls that the protection under the Convention goes beyond equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work and includes the comparison of remuneration received by men and women in jobs that are of an entirely different nature, but are nevertheless of equal value.

Finally, the Committee notes from the Government's report that the Department of Labour of the Ministry of Human Resources initiates knowledge enrichment programmes, seminars, workshops on labour and industrial laws and practices at both regional and district levels. Gender sensitization and equal remuneration regardless of gender are among the issues addressed through these initiatives. The Committee asks the Government as follows:

- (i) to review the legislation, in consultation with the social partners, with a view to incorporating expressly the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to indicate whether any steps have been taken or envisaged by the inter-agency committees with a view to giving legislative expression to the principle of the Convention;
- (ii) to take steps to increase the ability of judges, labour inspectors and other relevant public officials, such as members of the inter-agency committees established by the Cabinet Committee on Gender Equality, to better identify and address issues related to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value;
- (iii) to take appropriate measures to raise awareness among workers, employers and their organizations, as well as public understanding of the principle of the Convention, and to provide specific information as to how the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is promoted through the initiatives undertaken by the Department of Labour of the Ministry of Human Resources; and
- (iv) to provide information on any steps taken and results achieved regarding these points.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malta

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1968)

Legislative developments. Indirect discrimination. The Committee notes with interest the 2009 amendments to the Equality for Men and Women Act, pursuant to which a new section, 4A, has been added, providing that "indirect discrimination may be proved by any means of evidence including statistical evidence". The Committee considers that such provisions facilitate proof of indirect discrimination and access to appropriate remedies. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the new section 4A of the Equality for Men and Women Act, including any cases brought alleging indirect discrimination and the results thereof.

Grounds of discrimination. Social origin. For a number of years, the Committee had been pointing out the lack of legislation to address discrimination on the ground of social origin. The Committee notes that the Government has still not provided any information on the measures taken or envisaged in law or in practice to address discrimination on the ground of social origin. The Committee therefore once again asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect, and to take the necessary measures to ensure protection against discrimination on at least all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention.

Sex discrimination. With regard to the period of employment service of female employees accumulated prior to the time they were required to resign due to marriage, the Committee asked the Government to indicate how many women were still in service whose pensionable remuneration would be negatively affected by the fact that they had been forced to resign due to marriage prior to 1980. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has once again not provided a reply on this issue. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take necessary measures to address the issue that the period of service before marriage is not recognized for the purposes of calculating pensions, thereby placing re-employed women at a distinct disadvantage.

Sexual harassment. The Committee had previously asked the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 9 of the Equality for Men and Women Act, which defines sexual harassment in employment and occupation. The Committee also observes that section 29 of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act prohibits sexual harassment. In addition, the Committee notes that, the public service has issued "Guidelines on what constitutes sexual harassment and on the procedures to be adopted in cases of sexual harassment", which deals with, inter alia, training, assistance for victims and complaint procedures. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the public service guidelines on sexual harassment, including the impact on preventing and addressing sexual harassment. Please also provide information on the number of complaints lodged pursuant to section 9 of the Equality for Men and Women Act, and section 29 of the Employment and Industrial Relations Act, as well as the remedies provided and/or penalties imposed. The Committee also requests information on measures taken or envisaged to raise awareness on sexual harassment, both quid pro quo and hostile environment, in the private sector.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mauritania

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

Article 2 of the Convention. Application of the principle. Legislation and collective agreements. Follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Committee, 98th Session, June 2009). The Committee takes note of the discussion held in June 2009 in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the conclusions of the Conference Committee. It notes in particular that the Conference Committee had urged the Government to amend the Labour Code and Act No. 93-09 of 18 January 1993 on the public service so as to give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, in both the private and public sectors. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee had urged the Government to examine the causes of the very high remuneration gap that existed between men and women in the country, and to take the necessary measures, including through a broader range of opportunities for education and training, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, to reduce this gap, including in the informal economy, and to increase women's opportunities to access a wider range of jobs and occupations, including those with higher levels of remuneration. Finally, the Conference Committee had stressed the importance of reinstating social dialogue between the workers' and employers' organizations to give effect to the Convention.

In its previous observation, the Committee had taken note of the comments made in 2008 by the General Confederation of Workers of Mauritania (CGTM), which had emphasized the marginalization still suffered by women in Mauritania, pointing out that their wages were on average 60 per cent lower than those of men. The Government states that the revision of the Labour Code is ongoing and that the Committee's concerns will be taken into consideration during this process. The Government has also decided to put in place a permanent consultation and social dialogue framework and to take the necessary steps to improve the social partners' understanding of the principle of the Convention so that it might be fully reflected in collective agreements. In this respect, the Committee notes that the Government requests the Office's assistance in training the social partners on the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value.

While noting the Government's commitments and its request for technical assistance, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as soon as possible and in collaboration with the social partners, to amend the Labour Code and Act No. 93-09 of 18 January 1993 on public officials to ensure that both these pieces of legislation reflect the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, a principle that extends beyond the principle of "equal pay for equal work". The Committee asks the Government to provide specific information on legislative developments in this area. It also asks the Government to specify whether the social partners envisage revising clause 37 of the general collective labour agreement of 13 February 1974, which also confines the application of the principle of equal remuneration to equal work.

Application of the Convention in practice. Noting that the Government's report does not give any information on this point, the Committee, referring to the conclusions of the Conference Committee in this respect, asks the Government to undertake an examination of the causes of the wage discrepancy between men and women with a view to taking the necessary steps to remedy the situation.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1963)

Article 1 of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of race, colour, national extraction or social origin. With respect to discriminatory practices in recruitment and occupation to which slaves, former slaves and descendants of slaves are exposed, as raised previously by the Free Confederation of Mauritanian Workers (CLTM), the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the implementation of the Programme for the Eradication of Remnants of Slavery (PESE). It notes in particular that the PESE has carried out more than 1,000 activities, such as establishing businesses, which have benefited 93,000 persons in the target villages, and that 45,000 casual jobs have been created. The Committee also notes that, in her report published in 2010, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, refers to a programme started in 2008 by the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training to provide microcredit to ex-slaves so that they can set up small businesses (A/HRC/15/20/Add.2, 24 August 2010, paragraph 77). This report also mentions that former slaves find themselves back in slavery as a result of discrimination, lack of education or vocational training and lack of the means to find an alternative livelihood, or end up in service and manual labour positions in urban areas (ibid., paragraphs 36 and 51). On the issue of the continuing existence of slavery and slavery-like practices, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the Committee's 2010 observation under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), in which it highlighted the importance of a global strategy to combat slavery and its vestiges. The Committee considers that, in the context of the global strategy, it is important that measures be taken to address the discriminatory practices, in particular those resulting in former slaves finding themselves back in slavery. The Committee requests the Government to take measures, including in the context of the global strategy, to combat slavery as well as discrimination, especially on the ground of social origin, and the stigmatization to which certain segments of society are exposed, in particular former slaves and descendants of slaves. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of such measures, as well as regarding the measures taken to improve access to education, vocational training, employment and various occupations. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on all measures to educate and raise awareness on the issue of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment, in order to overcome prejudices based on race, colour, national extraction or social origin, and to promote tolerance among workers, employers, their respective organizations and the general public.

*Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO). With regard to the situation of black Mauritanian workers of Senegalese origin who, in terms of their employment, have suffered the consequences of the conflict with Senegal in 1989, the Committee is continuing to examine the action taken on the recommendations adopted in 1991 by the Governing Body with regard to a representation made by the National Confederation of Workers of Senegal (CNTS) under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. In this respect, the Committee had noted in its previous comment that on 12 November 2007 the Mauritanian Government, the Senegalese Government and the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had signed an agreement on the voluntary return of Mauritanian refugees to Senegal. In its report, the Government indicates that income-generating programmes, linked particularly to livestock farming, setting up businesses and developing cooperatives, have been implemented to benefit the repatriated families. It also states that the census launched in 2010 on state officials and employees who had been victims of the events in 1989 will enable these persons to recover their rights and be fully involved as Mauritians in the country's development process. Taking note of these indications, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims of the events of 1989 identified as a result of the ongoing census and on the follow-up to this procedure, particularly on the measures taken to:

- (i) reintegrate the persons concerned into the public service or to compensate them as well as their dependants;*
- (ii) improve their chances of training and employment in the private sector; and*
- (iii) implement the agreement of 2007, through the National Agency to Assist and Integrate Refugees, with respect to employment and occupation.*

The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to prevent discrimination against these persons in employment and occupation, particularly when they are recruited.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mexico

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the observations submitted by the National Union of Workers (UNT) on 30 August 2011, which refer to the lack of regulation prohibiting discrimination against women with respect to remuneration and the need to improve the collection of statistics with a view to better assessing the pay gap. The Committee asks the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, although no amendments have been made to the Federal Labour Act for the inclusion of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, the Mexican Standard for Equality at Work between Women and Men (NMX-R-025-SCFI-2009) of 2009 has been adopted which establishes the conditions for any organization with workers in its service to be able to obtain certification and the label proving that its labour practices comply with equality and non-discrimination between women and men. The Standard includes indicators, practices and actions to promote equality of opportunity between women and men, and broadens the concept of equal wages for equal work to "equal wages for work of comparable value". According to the Government, the objective of this provision is for women engaged in "female" occupations to earn the same as men engaged in "male" occupations where the qualifications, effort, responsibilities and conditions of work are comparable. In this respect, the Committee observes that, although the adoption of Standard No. NMX-R-025-SCFI-2009 promotes compliance with the principle of equality between men and women and constitutes progress in relation to the principle of equal wages for equal work, it is not clear if the concept of "comparable work" is being used in a manner synonymous with "work of equal value". Furthermore, the Standard referred to is not of general application, but is intended for those organizations that wish to obtain certification that their labour practices are in compliance with equality between men and women, and therefore from this point of view may also be of more restricted application. Recalling that the concept of "work of equal value" is the cornerstone of the Convention and is applicable to all workers, the Committee once again asks the Government to take measures to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention. Please also provide information on the measures adopted and on the impact in practice of the Mexican Standard for Equality at Work between Women and Men, and on how "comparable work" is being determined in this context.

Gender wage gap. The Committee notes the statistical data provided by the Government, which show that the wage differences that exist between men and women in the labour market are largely influenced by the unequal distribution of workers between the various branches and occupations, working hours, educational level and the existence of low pay in activities where there is a high proportion of self-employment. The average gender wage gap in terms of average income fell from 32.4 per cent in 2008 to 29.3 per cent in 2009. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing detailed statistical data on the wages of men and women. The Committee also invites the Government to carry out studies on the reasons underlying the wage gap between men and women, and to adopt proactive measures so as to address more effectively the structural causes of the wage gap. The Committee asks the Government to provide information in this respect.

Mongolia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the comments of the Mongolian Employers' Federation (MONEF) and those of the Confederation of Mongolian Trade Unions (CMTU), which were incorporated in the Government's report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Work of equal value. Recalling that it has asked the Government to take measures for the adoption of legislation to ensure equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value in both the public and private sectors, and noting that the Law on Gender Equality has been adopted by Parliament in 2011, the Committee notes with regret that, according to the information given by the Government in its report, section 2 of the Law, as drafted, provides only for equal opportunities for men and women to receive the "same compensation for the same work". It also notes from the Government's report that the employer shall pay the "same compensation to male and female employees performing the same work". The Committee, therefore, points out that the provisions of the Law on Gender Equality, as drafted, which are similar to section 49(2) of the 1999 Labour Code, do not give expression to the concept of "work of equal value" in accordance with the principle of the Convention. The Committee recalls its 2006 general observation emphasizing that legislation should not only provide for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also address situations where men and women perform work of a different nature that is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee further notes the comments of MONEF indicating that the term "same work" provided by section 49(2) of the Labour Code does not correspond to the concept of "work of equal value" laid down in the Convention, and that the Code does not provide a methodology for calculating compensation. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that full legislative expression is given to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information in this regard. Please also forward a copy of the newly adopted Law on Gender Equality. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on any activities undertaken by the National Committee for Gender Equality to promote the principle of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Morocco

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1979)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Application of the principle of the Convention in the private sector. The Committee notes that according to the Government, the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training has embarked upon a process of the institutionalization of equality between men and women in the employment, vocational training and social protection sectors. The Committee nevertheless notes that, according to a document entitled "Assessment of the situation with regard to equality/equity in the employment, vocational training and social protection sectors", which was prepared to facilitate the implementation of the process referred to above and published in June 2010, the wage gap was 5.5 per cent in the export sector and 40.3 per cent in "other sectors" in 1999 (9.6 and 28.9 per cent, respectively, in 1993). The study also shows that these wage gaps are essentially due to discrimination (the unexplained component of the wage gap). The Committee further notes that, in its previous report, the Government indicated that the Code of Practice on equality in employment, prepared with ILO support, would be made available to enterprises wishing to establish a vocational equality strategy, and notes that the Government has not provided further information on this subject. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged, within the framework of the process of the institutionalization of equality between the sexes, or in any other context, with a view to eliminating wage discrimination between men and women in the private sector and ensuring compliance with the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, including in relation to the formulation and implementation of methods for the objective evaluation of jobs. The Government is also requested to provide information on the dissemination in enterprises of the Code of Practice on equality in employment and to indicate whether, and to what extent, vocational equality strategies, including a component on equal remuneration, have been established at the enterprise level.

With reference more specifically to wage discrimination between men and women in the textile sector and the informal manufacturing sector, in which women workers are more numerous, the Committee notes once again that the Government's report does not contain information enabling it to assess whether measures have been taken to combat the wage disparities reported in 2003 by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, now the International Trade Union Confederation. With a view to providing a basis for an adequate evaluation of the nature, extent and causes of wage disparities between men and women and the progress achieved in the application of the principles of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to provide the fullest possible information on the measures adopted to combat wage disparities, as well as the available data on the distribution of men and women and their remuneration levels in the textile sector and the informal manufacturing sector.

Supervision of application. Labour inspection. The Committee notes that according to the Government's report, the system for the centralization of data does not produce statistics on violations of section 346 of the Labour Code, which prohibits any discrimination in relation to wages between men and women for work of equal value. However, it notes the Government's further indication that a system for the disaggregation of violations by sex is currently being established and that it will make available relevant data concerning equal remuneration between men and women, as well as on women's work in general. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to provide specific information on the inspections carried out by the labour inspectorate in relation to equal remuneration, the violations of section 346 reported by labour inspectors and the penalties applied, particularly in the textile sector and the informal manufacturing sector.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1963)

Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women in employment and occupation, including vocational training. The Committee welcomes the carrying out, in 2010, of an assessment of the situation of equality/equity in the employment, vocational training and social protection by the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training and the development of the Strategic Medium-Term Programme for the Mainstreaming of Equality and Gender Equity (2011–15) in these areas based on the findings of the assessment. In this respect, the Committee notes that the activity rate of women between 2006 and 2008 decreased from 27.1 per cent to 26.6 per cent. It also notes the existence of significant horizontal and vertical occupational segregation (particularly in rural areas), the importance of women's employment as family help in rural areas and of unpaid work by women (31 per cent of working women and 84 per cent of women in rural areas) and the high rate of unemployment among women graduates. With regard to vocational training, the assessment undertaken by the Ministry shows a low participation rate of girls from rural areas (22 per cent of trainees), gaps between men and women in relation to training levels, a strong concentration of young girls in a small number of subjects in training, the low diversification of training supply for girls and the difficulties experienced by women who have received vocational training in entering the labour market. The Committee notes that the Strategic Programme, which includes 14 projects, is focused around four main areas: (1) the mainstreaming of equality between men and women, thereby placing this principle at the heart of the preparation, implementation and evaluation of policies, programmes and political decisions; (2) the implementation of measures intended to integrate equality between men and women into the vocational training system; (3) the improvement of knowledge of gender gaps and constraints with a view to the adoption of the appropriate corrective measures; and (4) the promotion of the access of women to positions of responsibility and decision-making bodies. The Committee further notes that it is planned to involve workers' and employers' organizations in the implementation of this programme.

In its previous comments, the Committee also referred to the National Strategy for Equality and Gender Equity between the sexes adopted in 2006, the Strategic Plan 2008–12 for the promotion of women's rights, the gender dimension and equality of opportunities and the National Emergency Plan on Vocational Training, which envisaged numerous measures to combat discrimination based on sex, including measures to combat sexist stereotypes and to promote equality in vocational training and employment.

Welcoming the political will and the efforts made by the Government in relation to equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women in employment and occupation, the Committee requests it to provide information on the implementation of the employment component of the National Strategy for Equality and Gender Equity, the Strategic Plan 2008–12, the National Emergency Plan on Vocational Training and the Strategic Medium-Term Programme for the Mainstreaming of Equality and Gender Equity (2011–15). Noting that evaluation mechanisms, including indicators, are planned, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information, including statistical data, on the results obtained and the impact of the measures adopted within the framework of the policies referred to above in terms of the access of women to employment in the public and private sectors, the diversification of employment opportunities, the supply of training and the improvement of working conditions.

Textile and apparel sectors. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the achievements in the textile and apparel sectors of the Decent Work Programme, which was completed in 2008. It notes in particular the production of six guides on the use of the Labour Code for the Moroccan Association of Textile and Apparel Industries (AMITH) and the adaptation of ten training modules based on the provisions of the Labour Code, as well as the training of 60 trade union leaders on globalization, and the reactivation of the Moroccan Joint Textile–Apparel Committee. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which and the extent to which the achievements of the Decent Work Programme have resulted in an improvement in access to further vocational training, working conditions and remuneration for women engaged in the textile and apparel sectors, and particularly to combat precarious forms of employment and all types of discrimination, including wage discrimination. The Government is also requested to continue providing information on the tangible measures adopted to prevent discrimination and, where appropriate, remedy it in the textile and apparel sectors.

Equality of opportunity and treatment with respect to ethnic origin. In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government to study the employment situation of the Berber (Amazigh) population with a view to ensuring that the Convention is being effectively applied in law and practice to all groups of the population. The Committee notes that the Government, after recalling the legal framework applicable to racial discrimination, states that all studies or examinations of the employment situation in Morocco cover all groups of society, irrespective of their origins, and that the measures adopted in this respect do not exclude any group of the population. In this respect, the Committee notes the concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination that “some Amazighs continue to suffer racial discrimination in accessing employment [...], especially if they do not speak Arabic” (CERD/C/MAR/CO/17–18, of 27 August 2010, paragraph 11). To enable the Government to take appropriate measures to combat discrimination affecting the Berber (Amazigh) population, the Committee encourages it to gather and analyse data on the situation of this group of the Moroccan population in employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted to ensure that the Berber, and particularly those who do not speak Arabic, do not suffer discrimination in employment and occupation and that they benefit from equality of opportunity and treatment with other groups of the population.

Cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the Social Responsibility Charter, of which the component on human rights envisages the prevention of any discrimination and the promotion of equality of opportunity for men and women, and the creation of a “Corporate Social Responsibility” label by the General Confederation of Moroccan Enterprises (CGEM), attributed to enterprises which respect the principles set out in the Charter. Noting that, according to the Government's report on the application of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), 29 enterprises have received this label, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted by CGEM and the enterprises concerned to prevent, monitor and address any form of discrimination and to promote equality of opportunity, and to continue providing information on the granting of the “Corporate Social Responsibility” label.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Namibia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2001)

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted that the prohibition of unfair dismissal in section 33 of the Labour Act 2007 omitted the grounds of HIV and AIDS, degree of physical or mental disability and family responsibilities, which are listed in the general non-discrimination provision of the Labour Act (section 5). The Committee notes that one case was filed on the basis of section 5 and that many cases were filed and solved through conciliation concerning section 33 of the Labour Act. In order to ensure that there is no discrimination on the basis of HIV and AIDS, the degree of physical or mental disability and family responsibilities, the Government indicates that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare regularly conducts inspections at the workplace and that workers can lodge complaints with the Office of the Employment Equity Commissioner, the Office of the Labour Commissioner and the Office of the Ombudsman, though it does not appear that any cases on the grounds of HIV and AIDS, physical or mental disability or family responsibilities have yet been brought before these bodies. The Committee asks the Government to consider including specific provisions prohibiting dismissal based on the grounds of HIV and AIDS, degree of physical or mental disability and family responsibilities, with a view to ensuring consistency between sections 5 and 33 of the Labour Act. The Committee also asks the Government to provide specific information on the practical measures taken in order to protect workers against unfair dismissal based on these grounds including information on cases brought before the Office of the Employment Equity Commissioner, the Office of the Labour Commissioner, or the Office of the Ombudsman, as well as on the steps taken to raise awareness of the available remedies.

Article 1(1)(b). Sexual orientation. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted with regret that the Labour Act no longer prohibited discrimination based on the ground of sexual orientation, which had been the case under the previous legislation of 1992, and with respect to which the Government had indicated that it was covered by the Convention pursuant to Article 1(1)(b). The Committee notes that the Government refers to article 10 of the Constitution which prohibits discrimination based on sex, race, colour, ethnic origin, creed, and social or economic status, adding that inspections at the workplace are conducted in order to ensure that no discrimination takes place and that workers are treated equally, regardless of their sexual orientation. The Committee notes from the Report of the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review of the United Nations Human Rights Council that while the Constitution outlaws discrimination of any kind, since independence, no cases of discrimination on the basis of sexual preference or orientation have been addressed by the courts (A/HRC/17/14, paragraph 21). The Committee recalls that where no cases or complaints are being lodged, this is likely to indicate a lack of an appropriate legal framework, lack of awareness of rights, lack of confidence in or absence of practical access to procedures, or fear of reprisals. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that workers have the same level of protection against discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation as provided under section 5 of the Labour Act with respect to other grounds, and to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard.

Articles 2 and 5. Implementation of the national policy and affirmative action. The Committee notes from the 2008–09 annual report of the Employment Equity Commission (EEC) that the representation of previously disadvantaged groups because of race in management positions remained static. While accounting for 6 per cent of the total number of employees, those previously advantaged (whites), comprised 58 per cent of executive directors. The previously disadvantaged (blacks) comprised 28 per cent of executive directors, improving their share of representation by 2 per cent. Women accounted for 41 per cent of persons in managerial positions and 42 per cent of persons promoted to managerial positions. As to persons with disabilities, the Committee notes that they are under-represented at almost every level of employment, accounting for 0.5 per cent of the total workforce. The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the Government to raise awareness and to better implement affirmative action in employment and occupation, including, organising visits by the EEC at the workplace to provide information on affirmative action to relevant employers and workers, attending to complaints received and verifying the information contained in affirmative action reports received from relevant employers. The Government also indicated, however, that the shortage of staff remained a very serious constraint in the enforcement of the Affirmative Action (Employment) Act. The EEC indicates in its report that many complaints received alleged racial discrimination, and more specifically preference of non-Namibians above qualified Namibians by employers, referring to employers' non-compliance with section 19 of the Affirmative Action (Employment) Act, obliging employers to give priority to candidates from designated groups (namely, disadvantaged persons because of race, women, and persons with disabilities). The Committee notes that 100 cases of non-compliance were filed against employers during the review period 2008–09. The Committee asks the Government to continue providing information on the application of the Affirmative Action (Employment) Act, including information on the impact it has had on the representation of designated groups in management positions, and specific information on cases of non-compliance or discrimination by employers brought before the Court. Please also provide specific information on the affirmative action plans, and on the possibility to increase the number of staff with a view to better enforcement of the Affirmative Action (Employment) Act. The Committee reiterates its request for information on measures taken to ensure and promote equality of opportunity and treatment of persons from designated groups in respect of access to vocational training with a view to fostering both their career advancement and their access to a wider range of jobs.

Nepal

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1976)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee recalls that article 13(4) of the interim Constitution, which provides that there shall be no discrimination with regard to remuneration and social security between men and women for the same work, is not in conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated statement that Rule No. 11 of the Labour Regulations, 1993, provides for equal remuneration for all irrespective of gender or sex for work of equal value. The Committee, however, notes that Rule No. 11 provides for equal remuneration between men and women for work of the same nature and therefore does not reflect the principle of the Convention which also encompasses work of a different nature but nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to ensure that the Convention's provisions are taken into account in the preparation of Nepal's future Constitution and hopes that it will guarantee the right of men and women to equal remuneration not only for equal work but also for work of equal value, in accordance with the Convention. Recalling that new labour legislation is currently under preparation, the Committee also urges the Government to ensure that the future labour legislation gives full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1974)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not provide any information on the progress made with respect to the preparation and adoption of the new labour legislation and the Sexual Harassment at the Workplace Bill. The Committee however understands that the draft labour legislation is still under preparation and that the Sexual Harassment at the Workplace Bill has not yet been submitted to the Parliament. In this respect, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern about the widespread prevalence of sexual harassment in the workplace (CEDAW/C/NPL/CO/4-5, 29 July 2011, paragraph 29). The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the new labour legislation includes provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation, including recruitment, on all the grounds covered by the Convention, and promotes equality, including through proactive measures. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Sexual Harassment at the Workplace Bill is submitted to the Parliament for its consideration and adoption, and requests it to provide information on steps taken in this respect. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in adopting the new labour legislation.

The Committee notes with interest the ratification of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), by Nepal. The Committee recalls that it provides important elements for overcoming discrimination against indigenous and tribal peoples and ensuring their equality of opportunity and treatment.

The Committee notes however that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments on the following points. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous observation, which read, in relevant parts, as follows:

Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, irrespective of sex, ethnicity, indigenous origin, religion and social origin. The Committee notes that the Minister of Finance, in his budget speech in September 2008, highlighted that pervasive socio-cultural and economic discrimination and inequality on the basis of class, caste, region and gender had become a serious problem of the country and that it was urgent to properly address the demands raised by various oppressed castes, women, Dalits and indigenous and ethnic groups. The Minister announced a number of measures targeting these groups. The Committee also notes from the Government's report that the current interim plan emphasizes the empowerment of women and marginalized groups, including through access to gainful employment. The adoption of a new National Employment Policy and employment generation programmes are envisaged under the ILO Decent Work Country Programme (2008–10) which stresses that all outcomes of the Programme should reach marginalized women, young people, Dalits, indigenous people (Janajati) and other minorities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the progress made in adopting a National Employment Policy and the measures taken to ensure that it adequately addresses the situation of women, Dalits and indigenous peoples, in line with their rights and aspirations; and
- (ii) the specific programmes and projects aiming at promoting equality of opportunity and treatment of women, indigenous peoples, Dalits and other marginalized groups, including information on the outcomes of these programmes. In this regard, please provide statistical information on the position of men and women in the labour market, as well as statistical information indicating the progress made in addressing discrimination and inequality faced by Dalits, indigenous peoples and other marginalized groups.

Article 3(d). Civil service. The Committee notes that according to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Mashehis, Dalits, Janajatis and other marginalized groups continue to be severely underrepresented in most state and civil service structures, including courts, law enforcement agencies and local authorities (A/HRC/7/68, 18 February 2008, paragraph 50). The High Commissioner also reports that a Civil Service Bill adopted in August 2007 reserved 45 per cent of posts for women, Madhesi, Janajati/Adivasi, Dalits and disabled persons and that quotas of posts for women and marginalized groups have been established in the Nepal police and armed police force regulations. The Committee requests the Government to provide the texts of the laws and regulations providing for reservations and quotas of posts for women and marginalized groups in the civil service, including the police. It also asks the Government to provide information on the specific steps taken by the Civil Service Commission to implement these provisions and to indicate the number of men and women from target groups that have been admitted to the civil service during the reporting period.

Discrimination based on political opinion. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning sections 10 and 61(2) of the Civil Service Act which provide that "moral turpitude" constitutes a ground for exclusion or removal from the civil service. The Committee concluded that there are no criteria established to determine what constitutes "moral turpitude". Given the vagueness of the term "moral turpitude" and the resulting possibility that it could be applied in an arbitrary manner leading to discrimination based on political opinion, the Committee had expressed the hope that these provisions would be repealed in the context of the recent amendments to the Civil Service Act. Regretting that no information has been provided by the Government on this matter, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether sections 10 and 61(2) of the Civil Service Act have been repealed.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Netherlands

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes the observations on the Government's report by the Confederation of Netherlands Industry and Employers (VNO–NCW) and the Federation for Small and Medium-sized Business (MKB–NL), as well as the communication of the Netherlands Trade Union Federation (FNV).

Measures to address the wage gap and differences in remuneration of part-time workers. The Committee recalls its previous comments noting an average gender wage gap of 18 per cent and the need for targeted action to address the gender wage gap given that in the present national context men are usually working full time and women part time, and that some provisions in collective agreements excluding part-time workers from receiving certain bonuses, lead to inequalities between men and women. In this connection, the Committee had noted that various studies and research indicated that equal pay should be addressed in a wider context and that a Task Force Part-Time Plus had been established with the aim of making it easier for workers to combine work and care responsibilities and to encourage women, who wish to work more hours, to do so. Research undertaken on differences in remuneration and its underlying causes in various sectors had also indicated that the uncorrected difference in remuneration remained relatively high. Other research on the extent to which differences in remuneration could be tracked back to emancipation, discrimination, and sociological or economical factors was expected to propose solutions for addressing remuneration differences. The labour inspectorate was also undertaking research on differences in remuneration.

The Committee notes that the Task Force Part-Time Plus presented its final report on March 2010. It contained recommendations on how to increase the level of participation of women in the labour market with a view to reducing pay differences, and these have been brought to the attention of the social partners. The Government states that assessing the impact of the Task Force will require the monitoring, among others things, of collective agreements regarding flexible work arrangements. The Committee notes that the FNV reaffirms that part-time work is a well-known cause of the gender pay gap and states that the Task Force Part-Time Work Plus recommended that tax policies that support women to work more hours should be more widely reported and that the Government should explore how Dutch fiscal and income legislation supports or undermines women working more paid hours; legislation should also be improved where necessary. Other recommendations included exploring the possibilities of better paid parental leave and improving childcare, during school periods as well as holidays, and enabling working people to exercise the legal right to work within flexible working hours. The FNV agrees that the social partners should be involved in implementing these recommendations but states that the Government has to take action where it is the most obvious and appropriate actor. With respect to research by the Labour Inspectorate on differences in remuneration, the FNV criticizes the methodology used in assessing the part of the gender pay gap that is due to discrimination between men and women. The FNV suspects that discrimination is more important in influencing the gender pay gap than is acknowledged by the Government, and notes that the fact that the gender pay gap is greater in the higher echelons is left unexplained.

The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to implement, in cooperation with the social partners, the recommendations of the Task Force Part-Time Plus, including an assessment of their impact on reducing differences in remuneration between men and women relating to part-time work. The Committee also asks the Government to provide the results of any other research or studies undertaken regarding differences of remuneration and the solutions proposed, as well as indicating any action undertaken to monitor provisions in collective agreements concerning flexible working hours. The Government is also requested to provide information on the methodology used by the Labour Inspectorate to assess the gender pay gap, including the part that is due to discrimination based on sex. Please also continue to provide information, including statistics, on the evolution of the gender pay gap in the public and private sectors, covering full-time and part-time workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes the communication of the Netherlands Trade Union Federation (FNV).

Discrimination based on social origin. The Committee recalls that social origin does not figure among the prohibited grounds of discrimination set out in the Equal Treatment Act and that the Government considers that this ground is covered by article 1 of the Constitution prohibiting discrimination “on any grounds whatsoever”. The Government also indicated previously that discrimination based on social origin was sufficiently covered by indirect discrimination based on other grounds such as race, nationality, religion or personal convictions, gender or civil status, covered by the Equal Treatment Act. The Committee also noted, however, that an explicit inclusion of social origin in the equal treatment legislation would lighten the burden of proof for persons alleging direct discrimination on the basis of social origin. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that since the Netherlands is a party to Protocol No. 12 of the European Convention on Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the express prohibition of discrimination based on social origin contained in these instruments has been incorporated into Dutch law, thereby removing the need for its explicit inclusion in the Equal Treatment Act. The Committee asks the Government to examine the prevalence of direct and indirect discrimination based on social origin in employment and occupation, including whether effective complaints mechanisms and legal remedies exist to address it and to provide specific information in this regard. Please also indicate whether the Equal Treatment Commission (ETC) is competent to handle cases of direct and indirect discrimination based on social origin in employment and occupation and, if so, provide information on any cases handled by the ETC and the courts addressing discrimination based on this ground.

Equality of opportunity and treatment (ethnic minorities). The Committee previously noted that the Government was undertaking a number of projects and initiatives aimed at removing impediments faced by “non-Western minorities” in the labour market but that, despite positive trends, the labour force participation of non-Western minorities continued to be precarious and that discrimination inhibited their access to the labour market and their ability to secure permanent employment. In this context, the FNV had indicated that clear government policies and measures to eliminate discrimination were lacking and had requested data on the quality and sectors of employment with a view to assessing the effectiveness of the measures taken.

The Committee welcomes the detailed statistics provided by the Government on the quality and level of employment of non-Western minorities and native Dutch in 2009. It notes that according to the data the unemployment rate of non-Western minorities continued to be 7 per cent higher than that of native persons, and for men and women belonging to non-Western minorities, the gap with male and female native persons was 7.8 and 6.1 per cent respectively, with Moroccan men and Turkish women having the highest unemployment gap. The employment rate of non-Western minorities was 14.4 per cent lower than native persons (54.7 per cent against 69.1 per cent) and their share in flexible jobs was 7.4 per cent higher than for native persons. The number of Turks and Antilleans/Arubans working in flexible jobs was particularly high (16.8 and 17 per cent respectively) with almost 22 per cent of the employed Turkish women working in a flexible job (against 8 per cent of the employed native women). The share of non-Western minorities working on an elementary or lower occupational level was 47 per cent compared to 28 per cent for native workers, with the highest gap for Turkish and Moroccan workers (55 per cent) and lowest for Surinamese workers (38 per cent). The Committee notes that the share of non-Western minorities aged 15–64 years with an educational level not higher than the International Standard Classification of Education (ISCED) level 2 was 49 per cent compared to 30 per cent for native Dutch. About 60 per cent of the Turks and Moroccans had an educational level not higher than ISCED level 2. Turkish and Moroccan women had the highest education gap. With regard to sectors of economic activity, almost 20 per cent of the workers of non-Western origin are in the hotel and catering industry – with an over-representation of “other non-Western minorities”, whereas Moroccans and Turks are over-represented respectively in the business sector (temporary employment agencies) and manufacturing, except construction.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that some of the obstacles faced by non-Western minorities are directly related to their origin including discrimination and a below average command of the national language. The Government also states that the employment gap between non-Western minorities and native Dutch grew in 2009 and that factors behind the unemployment of people from ethnic minorities include poorer educational qualifications, inadequate knowledge of the language, traditional male–female roles and demographics (many young people have flexible employment contracts). The Committee notes that the Government continues to take various initiatives targeting young people and women from ethnic minorities, as well as refugees. It notes the employment plans for vulnerable young people in large cities, the creation of promotional teams to improve the image of young persons among employers and the Youth Unemployment Action Plan set up in 2009 to lessen the effects of the economic crisis, and which includes explicit activities for young people from ethnic minorities. With regard to ethnic minority women, the Committee notes the initiatives involving local authorities to improve employment participation of women belonging to ethnic minorities, including the “1001 Kracht” (1001 Power) approach designed to encourage women in this group to participate more actively in society and the labour market through voluntary work, the pilot schemes to encourage women from ethnic minorities to move from voluntary work to work, and a Guide based on these initiatives developed in 2008, as the basis of training courses with and for 23 local authorities. The Government also provides information on the projects aimed at assisting refugees in finding employment (Refugees job offensive and securing jobs offensive (2010–11)) and the “status-holders project”. The Committee notes that the FNV, while acknowledging the measures taken during the period 2008–10 to increase the employment of young people from ethnic minorities, considers that specific targets are often lacking as well as instruments to measure the effectiveness of the programmes.

The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information, including statistics disaggregated by sex, on the results achieved of the various measures to improve the employment situation of non-Western minorities, and in particular workers of Turkish and Moroccan origin, and to address the underlying causes of the high unemployment rates of these groups. Please also indicate any measures taken or envisaged to seek cooperation with the social partners to set specific targets in the context of projects and programmes aimed at eliminating discrimination on the basis of race, colour and national extraction, and to measure the effectiveness of these programmes.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes the communication dated 31 August 2011 from the Netherlands Trade Union Federation (FNV).

Article 4. Leave entitlements for men and women workers with family responsibilities. The Committee recalls that the Work and Care Act of 2001 provides for pregnancy and maternity leave, paternity leave, parental leave, emergency and other short-term leave to care for a sick child, foster child, partner or parent at home, and long-term leave to care for a partner, child or parent with a life-threatening illness. It notes the statistical information provided by the Government that the taking up of emergency leave by women is slightly higher than that of men (34 per cent versus 29 per cent of total employees); for short-term leave, 12 per cent of women compared with 10 per cent of men, but in 2009 it was almost equal, as 36,000 female employees and 35,000 male employees took short-term leave; the actual use of long-term leave by female employees is twice as high as that of male employees (4 per cent compared to 2 per cent); parental leave was taken substantially more by female than by male employees in 2009 (41,000 female employees and 19,000 male employees); the number of men taking parental leave was 10,000, having almost doubled in 2009, and the number of men using their entitlements is sharply increasing. The Government indicates that research shows that parental leave is one of the least favoured instruments by parents, as compared to flexible working-time arrangements and better school hours; therefore the Government sees no reason to select parental leave as an instrument to be promoted. In this connection, the Committee notes the observations by FNV that long-term care leave is hardly ever used, because it is unpaid and conditions are rigid; there are only two options: six weeks’ full-time leave or 12 weeks’ half-time leave. According to the FNV, parental leave is largely unpaid although it allows a tax reduction of a maximum of 50 per cent of the minimum wage during the period of leave. The FNV further indicates that the Government has submitted a draft law to the Parliament to make long-term care leave and parental leave more flexible, and to allow workers to take parental leave in parts. However, the Government is proposing to abolish the tax reduction during parental leave. The FNV considers that long-term care leave and parental leave should be paid leave, and that two days' paid leave for fathers after childbirth is far too short, thus it should be increased to ten days of paid leave. Recalling the importance of equitable sharing of family responsibilities between men and women, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to address the underlying reasons for the low take up of the leave as raised by the FNV. It also asks the Government to provide information on the draft law with regard to long-term care leave and parental leave, and progress made in its adoption, as well as on whether any consideration is being given to additional paid leave for fathers after childbirth with a view to taking into account the needs of employees. Further, please continue to provide information, disaggregated by sex, on the number of employees exercising their right to the various leave entitlements under the Work and Care Act.

Article 5. Childcare and family services and facilities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that research into the use of informal and formal childcare services was conducted by Statistics Netherlands (CBS) in 2009, showing that for couples who both work full time or have part-time jobs of 24–35 hours per week, formal childcare services are becoming increasingly important. It also notes the Government's indication that informal childcare services are being used less and less; since the adoption of the Childcare Act in 2005, childcare arrangements are no longer provided for in collective agreements, and the employers' mandatory contribution constitutes almost one third of the total costs of the childcare services. In this connection, the Committee notes the observations by the FNV that, due to the adoption of the Childcare Act, some of the informal childcare arrangements have been formalized, thus decreasing the use of informal childcare. The FNV states that the costs of childcare are uncertain due to change in regulations; the quality of childcare facilities is not always good and the monitoring of the quality is insufficient; in certain parts of the Netherlands, long waiting lists still exist; and for these reasons, many parents are still making use of informal childcare. It also states that the contribution by the employers to the costs of childcare is not one third, but 22 per cent only. It further states that, due to a lack of good quality and affordable facilities, women choose to work in small part-time jobs, which hinders their careers and prevents them from acquiring financial independence. Recalling the importance of ensuring that family services and facilities meet workers' needs and preferences, the Committee asks the Government to provide statistical information on the availability of affordable and accessible childcare services and facilities including their utilization that would allow the Committee to assess the progress made over time, including: (i) the number of workers with family responsibilities making use of the existing child and family care institutions; (ii) the number and age of children requiring care; and (iii) any studies or surveys assessing whether the Childcare Act in fact responds to the specific needs and preferences of workers with family responsibilities of both low- and middle-income groups for childcare services and facilities. It also asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken to ensure the quality of childcare facilities and services. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of services and facilities that exist to assist workers with family responsibilities regarding other dependent members of their family.

Article 7. Vocational guidance and training. The Committee recalls its previous requests regarding measures to assist women to enter, re-enter and remain in the labour force. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no reliable figures are currently available regarding the number of women with family responsibilities participating in the Working–Learning Project who have been placed and remained in the labour market. It notes the Government's indication that 3–4 per cent of women working less than 27 hours, and 14 per cent of those working 28–34 hours would like to have full-time employment (35 hours or more), according to the Dutch Labour Force Survey. The Government adds that, since 50 per cent of women working 12 hours or more were already working part time even before taking on care responsibilities for children, for a substantial proportion of women, a return to full-time employment is not relevant. It further indicates that the Taskforce Part-time Plus, which was established by the Government to encourage an increase in the working hours of women, concluded that the main factor for the strong preference of women to work part time lies in the broad social acceptance and availability of part-time work, in combination with social pressure on women to work part time, in particular in terms of care responsibilities. In this connection, the Committee notes the observations by the FNV that, according to some research, employers invest more in full-time workers, still largely men, and less in part-time workers who combine work and family responsibilities. With regard to the economic sectors for which collective agreements allow employers to deviate from the Working Hours (Adjustment) Act, the Committee notes the Government's indication that most provisions in collective agreements which are in deviation of the Act are in favour of employees; in 2009, however, two agreements were found which limited the right of employees to increase their working hours: one requires positive performance of the employee, and the other allows the employer not to take the employee's request into consideration. The Committee asks the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged to address the issues of female concentration in part-time work, and to improve educational and training opportunities for part-time workers, with a view to improving the possibilities of full-time employment and job security of workers with family responsibilities through strengthening their occupational qualifications, as well as the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

New Zealand

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the comments by the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) and by Business New Zealand (Business NZ) attached to the Government's report.

Work of equal value. The Committee has been commenting for a number of years on the fact that the Employment Relations Act, 2000 (ERA), the Human Rights Act, 1993 (HRA), and the Equal Pay Act, 1972 (EPA), limit the requirement for equal remuneration for men and women to the same and similar work, which is more restrictive than the concept of "equal value" provided in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no laws or regulations concerning the Convention were enacted or amended during the reporting period. The Government does not, however, provide any information, as previously requested by the Committee, to indicate that the legislation concerning equal remuneration is being interpreted to apply the broader concept of work of equal value. Business NZ indicates that, in practice, men and women receive the same pay for the same work.

The Committee notes that the NZCTU expresses concern at the continuing lack of legislative mechanisms to operationalize and implement the principle of equal pay for work of equal value. It also points to the closure of the Pay and Employment Equity Unit and the termination of its work programme, as well as the discontinuing of pay investigations, as discussed below, as bringing to an end, and indeed undermining, any progress in this area. The Committee also notes the Government's acknowledgement that improvements in the gender pay gap have been slow, with very little change in the pay gap over the last decade. The Committee notes further that women are concentrated into lower paid sectors. In the context of the continuing gender pay gap and occupational gender segregation, as well as what appears to be a recent rolling back of measures aimed at promoting pay equity, the Committee considers that giving full legislative effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is of particular importance to ensure the effective application of the Convention. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take steps to give full legislative effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on the specific measures taken in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any judicial decisions relating to the principle of the Convention.

Applying the principle in the public service. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the gender pay gap is wider in the public service than in the private sector (at 15 per cent and 11 per cent, respectively, in 2009), and that no information is available regarding why this difference exists. The Committee recalls that pay and employment equity reviews and response plans had been undertaken in the 39 departments, and that the findings of the reviews carried out by mid-2008 indicated the following: a gender pay gap ranging from 3 to 25 per cent, higher starting rates and performance pay for men, an under-evaluation of women's work, an under-representation of women in management and their concentration in administrative and clerical work with limited career paths, difficult career advancement for part-time workers, and workplace cultures that limited women's contributions. It notes the Government's indication that: the Five-Year Plan of Action on Pay and Employment Equity, and the pay and employment equity reviews in the public sector concluded in 2009; that the State Services Commission has a statutory responsibility to promote, develop and monitor equal opportunities policies and programmes for the public service; and that the Ministry of Women's Affairs has taken on a policy and advisory role with respect to gender and pay equity issues.

In this connection, the Committee notes the observations of the NZCTU that: due to the disestablishment of the Pay and Employment Equity Unit and the discontinuation of the pay and employment equity reviews, pay investigations that had been undertaken for two female-dominated occupations (special education support workers and social workers) were immediately affected; and that the discontinuation of the pay investigations removed policies and processes which underpinned a strategic and comprehensive approach to improving pay and employment equity. In response, the Government indicates that it has pledged continued support for the implementation of the public service departments' pay and employment equity response plans, excluding pay investigations, and is currently focused on providing support for public service chief executives, boards of trustees and chief executives in the public education and health sectors to ensure that they continue to address and respond to any identified gender inequalities. The Committee asks the Government to take measures to identify and address the underlying causes of the wider pay gap in the public service. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken by the State Services Commission and the Ministry of Women's Affairs, with a view to the promotion and application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value in the public service, and the impact thereof. Please also provide information on any action taken to implement the recommendations made by the pay and employment equity reviews, as well as the results achieved by the implementation of the public services departments' pay and employment equity response plans.

Job evaluation in the private sector. The Committee recalls the need for governments to promote objective job evaluation methods in both the private and public sectors to ensure gender equality in the determination of remuneration. It notes the Government's indication that the Equitable Job Evaluation Tool is currently available for employers both in the public and private sectors through the Department of Labour's website; for receiving the toolkit, employers are required to report back on the results from their usage of the tool. The Committee also notes the comments by Business NZ that the value to be attributed to a job is a highly subjective concept, with the value to be attributed to a particular job likely to vary depending on the biases of the person carrying out the evaluation. Business NZ also states that any arbitrary re-evaluation, if accompanied by a requirement to pay more as a consequence, can only lead to job loss. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on any measures taken to promote the use of the Equitable Job Evaluation Tool both in the public and private sectors, and on any other measures taken to ensure that the value of jobs is determined objectively and free from gender bias. It also asks the Government to provide information on awareness-raising activities, with the cooperation of the social partners, concerning the concept of “work of equal value” and the importance of using objective job evaluation free from gender bias.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)
(ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the communication from the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU), Business New Zealand (Business NZ), and the Government’s reply thereon. With respect to the NZCTU’s observations concerning migrant workers under the Recognized Seasonal Employer (RSE) scheme, the Committee notes that the issues raised primarily relate to inequalities with respect to social security, remuneration, accommodation and trade union membership covered by the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97). As some of the issues have been addressed by the Committee in its observation of 2007 on Convention No. 97, the Committee will examine the NZCTU’s observations on the RSE scheme together with the Government’s next report on that Convention.

Access to employment and vocational training – Maori and Pacific Island people. The Committee recalls its previous observation addressing issues relating to the occupational segregation of Maori and Pacific Island people into certain occupations and their generally lower education, qualifications and skills levels. It notes the Government’s indication that the unemployment rate for Maori was 13.3 per cent in the year to March 2010, which was 4.5 per cent points above its 2009 level; when compared with the unemployment rate for all people which was 6.4 per cent in March 2010, the rate for Maori has increased more sharply. In 2010, Maori were still most commonly represented in the occupational groups of plant and machine operators and assemblers, and service and sale workers. With regard to the public service, in 2009 the representation of Maori and Pacific Island people was 16 per cent and 7.4 per cent, respectively. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that provision of employment and training opportunities to Maori and Pacific Island people continues to be an area of high priority, in particular by the Tertiary Education Commission, aiming at achieving equality in employment and vocational training; the priorities for the Tertiary Education Strategy 2010–15 make specific reference to youth and under-represented groups, including Maori and Pacific Island people; in 2010, changes were introduced to the Ministry of Social Development’s Training and Opportunities Programmes aimed at improving work skills, by putting a more explicit focus on improving literacy and numeracy skills. The Government adds that the Pacific Economic Action Plan, which was launched in 2007, and the work of which places an ongoing emphasis on developing the skill of the Pacific workforce, has been reviewed and as of May 2010 was in the final stages of being updated. However, participation of Maori and Pacific Island people remains low in industry training (as of 2009, 17.2 per cent of the total trainees were Maori, 6.9 per cent were Pacific Island people), and particularly in the Modern Apprenticeship Scheme (as of 2009, 14.22 per cent of the total apprentices were Maori and 3.08 per cent were Pacific Island people). While acknowledging the Government’s continued commitment to improving the education levels of Maori and Pacific Island people and to increasing their training and employment opportunities, the Committee asks the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged to address the continuing inequalities faced by Maori and Pacific Island people in the labour market. It also asks the Government to provide information on the results achieved so far, as well as any improvements made to the various strategies, programmes and initiatives used to improve the skills levels and sustainable employment for men and women belonging to Maori and Pacific Island communities. Please also provide detailed information on the Pacific Economic Action Plan, once its update has been completed.

Access to employment and vocational training – women. The Committee notes that, while there has been some progress, the participation rates of women in courses provided by industry training organizations (ITOs) and in the Modern Apprenticeship Scheme remain low (29.2 per cent and 11.67 per cent, respectively). It also notes the Government’s indication that the low proportion of women participating in industry training is due to complex historical factors related to traditional employment patterns and the segmentation of the labour market; industries that had long-standing apprenticeship traditions tended to be male dominated. The Government is currently developing policy projects and sector initiatives to address participation rates by women in vocational training; however, the numbers of women enrolled in male-dominated trades has changed little, and the Government continues to be mindful of this fact and of the need to encourage young women of all backgrounds to consider these trades as viable areas of training and employment. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any results achieved by its efforts to extend industry training and the Modern Apprenticeship Scheme to industries in which women predominate and to encourage women’s enrolment in courses where their participation is particularly low, as well as the results achieved by the Equal Employment Opportunities Commissioner and the Industry Training Fund to promote diversity and to promote equality of opportunity and treatment with respect to the vocational training courses offered to men and women. With respect to occupational segregation, the Committee also refers to its comments on the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nicaragua

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes the communication from the Confederation of Trade Union Unification Confederation (CUS) from Nicaragua dated 30 August 2011 concerning acts of discrimination on the ground of political opinion. According to the CUS, 21,000 workers from the public sector were dismissed because they were not members or did not share the ideology of the political party of the Government in power. Moreover, 28 trade unions have ceased to exist. The CUS also alleges discrimination against disabled workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide comments thereon, including information on any relevant cases.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Nigeria

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex with regard to employment in the police force. The Committee previously considered that sections 118–128 of the Nigeria Police Regulations, which provide special recruitment requirements and conditions of service applying to women, are discriminatory on the basis of sex and thus incompatible with the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee urged the Government to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention. The provisions in question provide the following:

- Section 118 excludes women who are pregnant or married from being eligible for seeking for enlistment in the police force. It also provides for a minimum age for enlistment of 19 years, while men can apply as of 17 years (section 72(2)(b)). The minimum height requirement of 1.67 metres applies to men and women.
- Section 119 provides that a specified form shall be used for the fingerprinting of women candidates and that the medical examination of women candidates shall take place at the Police College immediately prior to enlistment.
- Section 120 provides that women candidates shall be interviewed in the presence of a woman police officer and that interviewing officers shall bring to the attention of the women candidates the provisions of these Police Regulations governing the duties of women police, and the miscellaneous conditions of service attaching to women police (as laid down in sections 123–128).
- Section 121 lists the duties that women police officers are permitted to perform, such as investigation of sexual offences against women and children, attendance when women and children are being interviewed by male police officers, searching, escorting and guarding women prisoners; school crossing duties; and crowd control, where women and children are present.
- Section 122 provides that women police officers may, in order to relieve male police officers from these duties, be employed in clerical duties, telephone duties and “office orderly duties”.
- Section 123 provides that women police officers shall not be called upon to drill under arms or take part in any baton or riot exercise.
- Section 124 requires women police officers wishing to marry to make a written request for permission to the police commissioner, providing the name, address and occupation of the person she intends to marry. Permission will be granted for the marriage if the intended husband is of good character and the woman police officer has served in the force for a period of not less than three years.
- Section 125 provides that a married woman police officer shall not be granted any special privileges by reason of the fact that she is married, and shall be subject to posting and transfer as if she were unmarried.
- Section 126 provides that a married woman police officer who is pregnant may be granted maternity leave, while section 127 provides that an unmarried women police officer who becomes pregnant shall be discharged from the force.
- Section 128 regulates the wearing of make-up as well as jewellery and hairstyles.

In its report, the Government expresses the view that sections 118–128 are not discriminatory. The Committee recalls that the Convention defines as discriminatory any distinction, exclusion or preference made on the basis of sex or other prohibited grounds which have the effect of nullifying and impairing equality of opportunity in employment and occupation. The Committee considers that sections 118–128, taken together, reflect an outdated and gender-biased approach as regards the role of women in general, and as members of the police force, in particular. The criteria and provisions relating to pregnancy and marital status contained in sections 118, 124 and 127 constitute direct discrimination. As regards the limitation of the duties that women police officers are permitted to perform, the Committee recalls that Article 1(2) provides that any distinction, exclusion or preference in respect of a particular job based on the inherent requirements thereof is not deemed to be discrimination. Whether or not a distinction is based on inherent job requirements and is thus acceptable has to be determined on an objective basis, free from gender bias. The Committee considers that sections 121, 122 and 123 are likely to go beyond what is permitted under Article 1(2). A common height requirement for men and women is also likely to constitute indirect discrimination against women.

Recalling that each Member for which this Convention is in force, in accordance with Article 3(c), is under the obligation to repeal any statutory provisions which are contrary to equality of opportunity and treatment, the Committee once again urges the Government to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, and to indicate the measures taken to this end in its next report.

The Committee trusts that the Government, in collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations, will take the necessary measures to ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of women in the police force. It encourages the Government to have regard to the guidance concerning equality issues set out in the Guidelines on social dialogue in public emergency services in a changing environment, adopted by the ILO Joint Meeting on Public Emergency Services: Social Dialogue in a Changing Environment in January 2003.

Noting that the Government's report does not reply adequately to most of the Committee's previous comments, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that full information on all the pending issues is provided in its next report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Pakistan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

Legislation. The Committee recalls its previous comments stressing that provisions intended to give effect to the Convention should give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and asking the Government to continue its efforts to put in place legislation giving effect to the Convention and to ensure that the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act is in full conformity with the Convention. It also recalls that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value applies to both the public and private sectors. The Committee notes from the Government's report under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) that the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act will be sent to the provinces for consideration. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that legislation giving effect to the Convention provides for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, allowing comparisons of jobs which are of an entirely different nature, but which are nevertheless of equal value, and that the equal remuneration principle applies both in the public and private sectors, as well as to all aspects of remuneration, as broadly defined in Article 1(a) of the Convention. It also asks the Government to provide information on any progress made toward the adoption of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act, and a copy of the Act, as soon as it is adopted.

Minimum wages. The Committee recalls its previous comments that the tripartite nature of the Provincial Minimum Wages Board, while important, does not in itself ensure that wage rates for categories of work predominately performed by women are not set at lower levels than the rates for work predominantly performed by men, where the work performed by men and women is, in fact, of equal value. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the same wages apply to the same job for men and women. The Committee recalls that there is a tendency to set lower wage rates for sectors predominantly employing women, and due to such occupational segregation, particular attention is needed in setting sectoral minimum wages to ensure that the rates fixed are free from gender bias. The fact that the same wages apply to the same jobs for men and women is not sufficient to ensure that the wage determination process is free from gender bias. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide information on how it is ensured that the setting of minimum wages is free from gender bias, and to indicate any steps taken in this regard in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations, in order to promote and ensure the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee also asks the Government to provide copies of the minimum wage notifications currently in force, and to indicate in which of the occupational groups covered women tend to be predominantly employed.

Awareness raising and training. The Committee notes the Government's indication that various training programmes are being initiated in collaboration with the ILO, and employers' and workers' organizations; in particular, the Skill Development Council provides training on gender and women in various trades. The Government also indicates that the National Vocational and Technical Training Commission (NAVTEC), the Technical Education and Vocational Training Authority (TEVTA) and other provincial organizations are working in the field to strengthen the capacity of female workers so that their remuneration does not remain less than that of men. The Committee asks the Government to provide more detailed information on the training activities provided by the Skill Development Council, the NAVTEC and the TEVTA, including the number of courses and participants, disaggregated by sex, and the results achieved in terms of participants finding appropriate employment. It also asks the Government to provide examples of the training materials used as regards the principles of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Further, please indicate any activities specifically implemented for employers, and whether any of these activities have addressed the issue of objective job evaluation.

Cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee had previously noted that the Government had closely cooperated with the employers' and workers' organizations in the preparation of the Labour Protection Policy (2006), and that as a follow-up to this policy, the Government had started studies on a number of important issues, including the links between working and living conditions and productivity, labour protection in the informal economy, and the effectiveness of the labour administration. It notes the Government's indication that the studies were forwarded to the provinces for implementation and legislation. However, the Government does not indicate whether the issues relating to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value have been examined in the context of these studies. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on how it is ensured that, when the provinces implement and legislate in respect of the studies, issues relating to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value are effectively addressed, with the cooperation of employers' and workers' organizations.

Statistical information. The Committee notes the Government's indication that statistical information on the levels of remuneration of men and women working in the different sectors of the economy is rarely collected by the relevant authorities. Recalling that statistical information on the levels of remuneration of men and women working in the different sectors of the economy is needed to allow an adequate assessment of the nature and extent of the remuneration gap between men and women, as well as to monitor progress with regard to promoting and ensuring respect for the principle of equal remuneration, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to compile and analyse such statistical information.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the provincial wages inspectors and payment of wages authorities have dealt with cases relating to wages and payment of wages to the workers in general, and it is proposed that a study in this regard may be initiated in consultation with the ILO. The Government also states that no court of law or tribunal has given a decision involving the question of principle relating to the application of the Convention. The Committee also recalls the comments from the Pakistan Workers' Federation (PWF) stressing the need to amend the relevant legislation with a view to ensuring its effective enforcement by the labour inspection services, to which no reply has been provided by the Government. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any cases dealt with by the competent bodies including the labour courts, concerning the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, as well as any progress made with regard to initiating the study concerning the principle under the Convention. It once again encourages the Government to take appropriate measures with a view to strengthening the mechanisms to enforce the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, including the provision of training for the labour inspectorate and for judges, as well as awareness-raising activities for the general public, and to indicate the measures taken in this regard.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Legislation. Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee had previously recalled the importance of adopting non-discrimination and equality legislation in order to give effect to the Convention, and that constitutional protection alone, while being important, may not be sufficient in terms of granting effective protection against discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee had also asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken with a view to including provisions on non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation in the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act will be sent to the provinces for consideration. It also notes the Government's continued reference to the Constitution of Pakistan, that all citizens have equal opportunities in private and public employment, and that the provisions of the law are fully implemented. The Government again states that there is no complaint on record from any industrial or commercial undertaking regarding discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee recalls that for the purpose of achieving the objectives of the Convention, it is essential to acknowledge that no society is free from discrimination thus continuous action is required to address it and that the absence of complaints of discrimination is not an indication of an absence of discrimination but rather may be a reflection of the absence of an appropriate legal framework. It also recalls that the Convention aims at the protection against discrimination in employment and occupation of all workers, both citizens and non-citizens. The Committee asks the Government to take steps to ensure that the Employment and Service Conditions Act includes provisions expressly defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination, in all aspects of employment and occupation, for all workers, on at least all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. It also asks the Government to continue to provide information on any progress made in the adoption of the draft Employment and Service Conditions Act, and to provide a copy of the Act as soon as it is adopted.

Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. The Committee recalls its previous request for information concerning the National Gender Reform Plan, which according to the Government provides for measures to increase women's employment in the public sector, and the 10 per cent quota system in government employment at the federal level. It notes that the Government's report does not contain any detailed information in this regard. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the implementation of the public sector quota system, including statistical information on the distribution of men and women in the different government departments, jobs and positions.

The Committee notes that according to the Labour Force Survey 2010–11 the labour force participation rate (refined) was 68.7 per cent for men and 21.7 per cent for women (70 per cent for men and 27.6 per cent for women in the rural area; and 66.4 per cent for men and 10.7 per cent for women in the urban area). The Committee notes that the gender differential as regards labour force participation continues to be high, both in the rural area and the urban area. With regard to the employment status of men and women, the Committee notes that the percentage of women in the category of unpaid family workers remains high in 2010–11 (63.4 per cent). Women remain concentrated in unskilled elementary occupations or craft and related trade work. In this context, the Committee notes the observations by the Pakistan Workers

Federation (PWF) in their communication dated 30 July 2010 stressing the need for measures to enable women to move from the informal to the formal economy, including extending social security and minimum wages, and training and education for rural women. The Government reiterates in general terms that the labour standard is implemented equally for all workers without any discrimination based on sex and that all citizens without any discrimination have equal access to employment in a factory and to vocational training institutions. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the specific measures taken to promote and ensure women's equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation in the public sector, and the specific measures taken to enable women to move from the informal to the formal economy, as well as statistical information indicating the progress made in enhancing their participation in the labour market both in rural and urban areas. Recalling that vocational training and education have an important role in determining the actual possibilities of gaining access to employment and occupation, it also asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to promote equal access of women and girls to education and training at all levels, including in the context of the National Education Policy, as well as up-to-date statistical information in this regard.

Sexual harassment. The Committee recalls its previous request for information on the effective implementation of the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act, 2010. It also recalls the observations by the PWF referring to some shortcomings in the implementation of this Act. The Government replies that committees are to be established at the workplace to implement the Act. The Committee notes that the preamble to this Act refers to the protection of women from harassment at the workplace, while the definition of "complainant" means a woman or man who has being aggrieved by an act of harassment (section 2). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged under the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act so as to protect men and women equally against sexual harassment. It also asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the Act, including the number and nature of workplace committees established, and its impact on preventing and addressing sexual harassment. Please also provide information on the number of complaints lodged with the Ombudsperson or with the Inquiry Committee, pursuant to section 8 of the Act, as well as the remedies provided and sanctions imposed. The Committee also requests information on measures taken or envisaged to raise awareness on sexual harassment, both quid pro quo and hostile environment, in the public and private sectors.

Discrimination against minorities. The Committee recalls that the 5 per cent quota for employment of minorities in federal government employment according to the Cabinet decision of 20 May 2009, is to apply to any person who is "a non-Muslim" as defined in article 260(3)(b) of the Constitution, which includes a person belonging to any of the Scheduled Castes. It notes that the Government does not provide any further details on the progress made in implementing the 5 per cent quota. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in implementing the quota for employment of minorities including those belonging to any of the Scheduled Castes in federal government employment, including statistical information on the number of minority members employed, disaggregated by sex and minority group, and according to government departments, jobs and positions. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information detailing who is considered to belong to the Scheduled Castes, including whether they are non-Muslim.

The Committee had asked the Government to provide information on any developments with regard to the reconstitution of the National Commission for Minorities. It notes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this regard. The Committee therefore once again asks the Government to provide information on any developments with regard to the reconstitution of the National Commission for Minorities. It also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of schemes and programmes to promote and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment for minorities in training and education, and also to provide information on any other measures taken to promote access of minorities to employment and occupation, including self-employment.

Discrimination based on social origin. In its previous comments, the Committee had recommended that a prohibition of discrimination based on social origin, including caste, be included in the legislation. The Committee notes the Government's general statement that the Constitution ensures equal rights to all citizens including minorities, and persons belonging to different castes and social origin. Recalling the persistent de facto segregation and discrimination against Dalits, and the need to take effective measures toward the elimination of such discrimination in employment and occupation, the Committee asks the Government to take measures to promote and ensure non-discrimination and equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, irrespective of social origin, including caste, through legislation and other appropriate measures, and to provide specific information in this regard.

Discrimination based on religion. The Committee recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have expressed concern for many years over the impact of the discriminatory legal provisions and administrative measures on the enjoyment of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of religious minorities, in particular the members of the Ahmadi minority. It recalls certain provisions of the Penal Code relating to offences relating to religion ("blasphemy laws"); in particular, section 298C of the Penal Code singles out the members of the Ahmadi minority. It also recalls that Muslims applying for a Pakistani passport must sign a declaration to the effect that the founder of the Ahmadi movement is an impostor, which is designed to prevent members of this movement from obtaining passports identifying them as Muslims. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information in response to the Committee's previous requests concerning the necessary steps to review the discriminatory legal provisions and administrative measures. The Committee urges the Government to take decisive action to review and amend the discriminatory legal provisions and administrative measures, and to actively promote respect and tolerance for religious minorities, including the Ahmadi, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard. It also asks the Government to provide information on the employment situation of religious minorities, including those defined in section 260(3)(b) of the Constitution as "a person belonging to the Christian, Hindu, Sikh, Buddhist or Parsi community, a person of the Qadiani Group or the Lahori Group who calls themselves "Ahmadis" or by any other name, or a Bahai". It further asks the Government to provide information on any other measures taken or envisaged to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for religious minorities, including the implementation of the 5 per cent quota for employment of minorities in federal government employment.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Papua New Guinea

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 31 August 2011.

Legislative developments. The Committee had been asking the Government to provide information on the status of the Industrial Relations Bill and the review of the Employment Act 1978, including the revision of sections 97 to 100 of the Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the sixth and final draft of the Industrial Relations Bill prohibits direct and indirect discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, sex, religion, pregnancy, political opinion, ethnic origin, national extraction or social origin, and actual or perceived HIV or AIDS status, against an employee or applicant for employment or in any employment policy or practice. The Government states that the Bill is being worked on by the State Solicitor's Office, Department of Justice and Attorney General, and it anticipates that the Bill will be enacted in 2011. The Government further indicates that developments concerning the review of the Employment Act will be communicated to the Office in due course. The Committee also notes that the Decent Work Country Programme for 2009–12 has set labour law reform as a priority. The Committee hopes that the Industrial Relations Bill will be adopted in the near future, and requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard, and to forward a copy of the text once it is adopted. It also asks the Government to provide information on any progress made concerning the review of the Employment Act, with a view to aligning the provisions on discrimination with the Industrial Relations Bill and to bring them into conformity with the Convention.

Discrimination on the ground of sex in the public service. The Committee recalls its previous comments regarding the discriminatory impact of section 36(2)(c)(iv) of the Public Services (Management) Act 1995 allowing calls for candidates to specify that "only males and females will be appointed, promoted or transferred in particular proportions", and section 20.64 of General Order No. 20 and section 137 of the Teaching Services Act 1988 concerning restrictions for female teachers with respect to certain allowances. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that no progress has been recorded with regard to amending the discriminatory provisions applying to the public service, and that the consultations with the relevant government agencies, to which the Government made reference in its 2009 report, have not yet started. Recalling its previous comments regarding the discriminatory impact of these provisions, the Committee urges the Government to take expeditious steps, to review and amend the provisions in order to bring them in line with the requirements of the Convention.

Discrimination against certain ethnic groups. The Committee notes that according to the ITUC there has been an increase in violence against Asian workers and entrepreneurs, who are blamed for "taking away employment opportunities". The ITUC also states that throughout 2009 and 2010, many Asians had been attacked and Asian enterprises looted. The Committee asks the Government to investigate the allegations of discrimination against Asian workers and entrepreneurs including incidents of violence and to provide information on the results of such investigations. The Committee also requests information on the practical measures taken to ensure protection in the context of employment and occupation, against discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, or national extraction, as well as on any measures taken or envisaged to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of members of different ethnic groups in employment and occupation.

Additional grounds of discrimination. HIV and AIDS. The Committee notes the HIV and AIDS strategy 2011–15, which includes prevention, counselling, testing, treatment, care and support, and systems strengthening. The Committee further notes the observations of the ITUC that there are no laws prohibiting discrimination against persons living with HIV and AIDS, and that there have been reports of some companies firing persons living with HIV and AIDS. The ITUC also indicates that the Business Coalition against HIV and AIDS has assisted companies to develop HIV and AIDS policies at the workplace. The Committee asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that discrimination in employment and occupation based on actual or perceived HIV and AIDS status is effectively addressed in the implementation of the HIV and AIDS strategy 2011–15, and the results achieved by such measures. The Committee also once again asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the HIV and AIDS

Management and Prevention Act No. 4 of 2003, including regarding the activities of the National AIDS Council Secretariat.

Disability. The Committee notes the observations of the ITUC that persons with disabilities face discrimination in accessing employment and social services. The Committee asks the Government to reply to the issues set out in the communication of the ITUC regarding discrimination faced by persons with disabilities, and to indicate any steps taken to address these matters.

Sexual orientation. The Committee notes the observations by the ITUC that lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender persons face discrimination in employment. The Committee asks the Government to reply to the issues set out in the communication of the ITUC regarding discrimination faced by lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people, and to indicate any steps taken to address these matters.

National equality policy. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is no concrete or fully detailed document setting out the employment policy. The Government also states that it is verifying if the Occupational Skills Certification Policy exists. The Committee notes that the Government's report still does not contain any further information on the national policy specifically addressing discrimination on all the grounds enumerated in the Convention. With regard to discrimination based on sex, the Committee notes that the Medium Term Development Plan 2011–15 includes sections on gender, and that in Papua New Guinea Vision 2050 (published in November 2009), gender is positioned as one of the seven “Strategic Focus Areas”: “Human Capital Development, Gender, Youth and People Empowerment”. However, the Committee notes that none of the sections of these plans or strategies seem to specifically address the issue of gender equality in employment and occupation. Recalling that a national policy under Article 2 of the Convention necessarily includes the adoption and implementation of concrete and proactive measures aimed at the promotion of equality in employment and occupation in respect of at least all the grounds under the Convention, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide full particulars on the concrete measures taken or envisaged to ensure and promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation on all the grounds enumerated in the Convention.

Restrictions on women's access to certain jobs. The Committee recalls that sections 98 and 99 of the Employment Act prohibit the employment of women, inter alia, in heavy labour and during the night. The Government's report contains no new information in this regard. The Committee asks the Government to take steps to ensure that protective measures for women are limited to maternity protection. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on how it is ensured that, in practice, women can have access to all jobs and occupations on an equal footing with men. The Committee also requests information on any awareness-raising activities to rectify stereotyped perceptions regarding women's capacities and roles in society.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Qatar

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1976)

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislation. The Committee recalls that the provisions in the Constitution (article 35) and the Labour Law No. 14 of 2004 (sections 93 and 98) are considerably narrower than the principle set out in the Convention as they do not cover discrimination based on political opinion, national extraction and social origin and only protect against discrimination in certain aspects of employment. The Committee notes the Government's persisting assertion that the legislative framework is sufficient and effective to ensure observance of the principle of non-discrimination on any basis whatsoever, and that in referring to the term “person” the definition of workers in section 1(5) of the Labour Law covers all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Instead of inserting a non-discrimination provision in the Labour Law, the Government proposes to increase awareness raising and better understanding of its meaning, aims and objectives. The Committee considers that section 1(5) falls short of effectively prohibiting discrimination on all the grounds of the Convention and notes the absence in the Government's report of any information demonstrating that effective protection and avenues of redress are being provided in accordance with the Convention. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the importance of reviewing continually the protection afforded by the national legislation to ensure that it remains appropriate and effective and provides for adequate means of redress and legal remedies for cases of discrimination on all the grounds set out in the Convention, and with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation. In the absence of a clear legislative framework, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to provide effective protection, in law and in practice, against discrimination on all the grounds of the Convention, including political opinion, national extraction and social origin, and to ensure that effective avenues of redress exist to address complaints of discrimination based on these grounds, for both public and private sector workers. The Government is also requested to indicate how protection against discrimination on the grounds covered by the Convention is being ensured, in practice, with respect to access to vocational training and guidance, access to employment and particular occupations, including recruitment, as well as with respect to all terms and conditions of employment. The Committee further asks the Government to provide full information on the action taken in this regard and results achieved of such action, as required by Article 3(f) of the Convention.

Non-discrimination of migrant workers. Practical application. The Committee notes that according to estimates of the National Statistics Authority provided by the Government in its National Report to the United Nations Human Rights Council, expatriate workers represented, in September 2009, 84 per cent of the population (A/HRC/WG.6/7/QAT/1, 19 November 2009, page 3). The Committee had previously welcomed the attention given by the Government to the situation of migrant workers but had also expressed concern that the sponsorship system in place provides employers with the possibility to exert disproportionate power on migrant workers, which was likely to increase their vulnerability to abuse and discrimination. The Committee had also noted the need to establish effective and accessible mechanisms within the Labour Department to settle disputes between migrant workers and their sponsors.

The Committee notes the adoption of Law No. 4 of 2009 regulating the entry and exit of expatriates in Qatar and their residence and sponsorship, revoking Law No. 3 of 1963 on the entry and residence of aliens in Qatar and Act No. 3 of 1984 on the regulation of the sponsorship of the residence and exit of aliens. It notes that section 22 of the Law allows the transfer of a migrant worker to another employer with the written consent of both the new and the previous employer, and after having obtained the approval of the Ministry of Labour for those workers to whom the Labour Law applies. Section 12 authorizes the Minister of Interior to transfer a migrant worker, temporarily or permanently, without the employer's consent, in case of a lawsuit between the sponsor and the worker, and in the event of abuse by the employer or if public interest so requires. In the case of workers covered by the Labour Law, the Minister of Interior approves the transfer upon the worker's request and with the consent of the Ministry of Labour. The expatriate worker continues to be dependent on the sponsor's permission to leave the country temporarily or permanently (section 18).

The Committee further notes that a Labour Relations Department was set up by virtue of Order No. 35 of 2009 to receive and take speedy decisions regarding complaints and to disseminate publications intended for workers in coordination with the relevant embassies, as well as providing guidance and counselling. The Higher Council of the Judiciary also has special units to examine law suits initiated by workers with a view to speeding up decisions. According to the Government, the Human Rights Department has continually handled complaints arising out of labour relations between sponsors and workers and the Ministry of Interior approved a large number of requests regarding the transfer of workers on the basis of evidence of existing abuse. Efforts have been made by the Government to monitor the application of the labour legislation and to provide information, assistance and counselling to migrant workers.

While welcoming the Government's efforts to improve the protection of workers under the sponsorship system and to establish more effective complaints and dispute settlement mechanisms, the Committee remains concerned that the limitations imposed on the cases in which transfer of a worker to another sponsor is allowed, as well as the requirement to obtain permission of the sponsor, continues to place the worker in a vulnerable situation. Given the high number of migrant workers in the country and the current legislative framework regarding employment discrimination, the Committee considers it important that the Government keeps the operation of the sponsorship system under review with a view to assessing whether appropriate flexibility to change workplaces is being provided in practice to all migrant workers in cases of abuse and discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention. The Committee is concerned that under the present system migrant workers suffering abuse and discriminatory treatment may refrain from bringing complaints out of fear of retaliation by the employer, or because of uncertainty as to whether this would lead to a change of sponsor, or to deportation. At the same time, filing a lawsuit or bringing a complaint to establish abuse by the employer is a requirement for being granted permission to change the workplace. The Committee, therefore, asks the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken, including by the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC), the Labour Relations Department and the Human Rights Department to address discrimination of migrant workers on the grounds set out in the Convention, including through providing accessible and effective complaints procedures and counselling and legal assistance to migrant workers. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to allow for appropriate flexibility for migrant workers to change their sponsor which may assist in avoiding situations in which migrant workers become vulnerable to discrimination and abuse. In this regard, please indicate the number of migrant workers, including domestic workers, that have successfully applied for a change of workplace during the reporting period, indicating the reasons for granting such a transfer. Please also provide particulars of those workers who have applied for transfer and been refused and the grounds for such refusal. The Committee asks the Government to monitor closely the application of Law No. 4 of 2009 and to examine the extent to which it may give rise to discriminatory practices against migrant workers based on the grounds of the Convention, and to provide information on the findings and any follow-up. Please provide information on the number and nature of complaints relating to employment discrimination, including harassment and sexual harassment, submitted by migrant workers and in particular domestic workers, to the NHRC, the Human Rights Department and the Labour Relations Department, as well as the outcome of these cases and remedies provided. Noting that in 2007 non-Qatari women constituted 100 per cent of the workers in household services and that the Bill on domestic workers is still being prepared, the Committee asks the Government to take all the necessary measures to protect migrant domestic workers against discrimination on the grounds of the Convention, in law and in practice, and hopes that the bill on domestic workers will soon be adopted and will be in conformity with the principle of the Convention. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the recently adopted Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), and Recommendation No. 201.

Equality between men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee notes that in September 2009, the total population (nationals and non-nationals) of the State of Qatar was 1,623,724, of which 1,248,668 (75.7 per cent) were male and 375,056 (24.3 per cent) were female. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the overall economic activity rate of women rose from 27.5 per cent in 1986 to 49.3 per cent in 2007 and that the percentage of economically active women out of the total of Qatari women rose from 30.3 per cent in 2004 to 34.6 per cent in 2007. The data also indicate an increase in the concentration of Qatari women in the teaching profession and in occupations of an educational nature, and in clerical occupations in Government ministries. In 2007, women represented 49.7 per cent in specialized occupations (compared to 40.8 per cent in 2004) while their percentage in clerical occupations decreased from 42.7 in 2004 to 28.8 per cent in 2007. In 2007, 43.4 per cent of the economically active women were employed in the household sector with the majority in household services, where non-Qatari women represent 100 per cent of the workers.

The Committee recalls the concentration of women in certain courses of training and educational institutions, with no women enrolled in some courses while in others they constituted 100 per cent of the student population. It also recalls the need for more proactive measures to address discriminatory practices in job advertisements and hiring, and to eliminate stereotyped assumptions by employers of women's and men's suitability for certain jobs and to encourage women to apply for posts traditionally or exclusively held by men. The Committee had previously requested information on the implementation of economic and education components of the General Strategy for the Family, and its impact on achieving equality between men and women with respect to access to a wide range of training courses, jobs and occupations, including posts of responsibility. The Committee notes the Government's statements that the elimination of certain old traditions regarding certain jobs for men and women needs time and effort and that it is undertaking great efforts to raise awareness and address traditions and standardized assumptions in this regard. The Committee notes that apart from the pilot programme carried out by the High Council for Family Affairs to promote women's empowerment in management of small enterprises, the Government provides no further information on the measures taken to implement the General Strategy for the Family; no specific information has been provided either on the concrete measures taken, and their impact, to address discriminatory advertising and hiring practices and assumptions by employers of women's and men's suitability for certain jobs. The Committee, however, notes with interest the ratification by Qatar on 26 April 2009 of the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women. Noting the Government's commitment to improve women's participation in the labour market and to make an effort to gather and communicate the requested information as soon as possible, the Committee asks the Government to ensure that its next report contains full information on the implementation of the General Strategy for the Family and its impact, as well on the measures taken to address stereotypical views of what jobs are appropriate for women and men with a view to addressing discriminatory practices in advertisement and hiring. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the findings of the studies undertaken by the High Council for Family Affairs on the barriers that hinder women from reaching leadership positions, and to provide information on all measures taken to address the concentration of women in certain occupations and training courses. Please provide up-to-date statistics, disaggregated by sex and origin, showing the evolution since 2007 regarding the proportion of men and women in the various sectors of activity and at each level within the various occupations in both the private and public sectors.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the establishment of the Labour Inspection Department by Order No. 35 of 2009 to monitor the implementation of the regulations protecting workers, undertake workplace inspections and provide advice and counselling to employers. The Committee further notes that the Government's report again does not contain information on complaints submitted by Qatari workers and migrant workers to the courts, or to the Labour Relations Department, the Human Rights Department and the National Committee of Human Rights that specifically relate to discrimination in employment and occupation on any of the grounds set out in the Convention. The Committee recalls that the absence of complaints relating to employment discrimination does not necessarily indicate the absence of such discrimination in the country. The Committee asks the Government to provide specific information on how the labour inspection department monitors discriminatory practices by employers, and the outcome of these activities. The Committee also asks the Government to provide detailed information on the specific measures taken by the various government Departments and the NHRC to promote equality of opportunity and treatment and non-discrimination in employment and occupation with respect to all the grounds covered by the Convention, and information on the nature and number of complaints received by these bodies regarding discrimination, and the remedies provided and sanctions imposed.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1973)

Discrimination based on political opinion – inherent requirements of the job. In its previous observations, the Committee had drawn the Government's attention to section 50 of Act No. 188/1999 on civil servants, as amended and reissued in 2004, which provides that "to hold public office a person shall meet the following conditions: [...] (j) shall not have been carrying out an activity in the political police as defined by the law". It had requested the Government to supply information on what constituted an "activity in the political police" and on the application of section 50 of the Act in practice. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the provision in question, i.e. section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 in its updated version, should be interpreted in the context of the Emergency Ordinance No. 24/2008 concerning access to an individual's personal file and the disclosure of the Securitate as the political police. According to the Government, the applicable legislation no longer mentions "political police" but now refers to "employees of Securitate" and to "collaborators of Securitate". Ordinance No. 24/2008 defines an "employee of Securitate" as being "any person having served as officer or non-commissioned officer in the Securitate or Militia, including as an undercover agent, with responsibility in security matters between 1945 and 1989, conducting activities that suppressed or restricted freedoms and fundamental rights"; and a "collaborator of Securitate" as being "any person having provided information, in whatever form, such as notes and written reports, as well as oral reports recorded by security employees denouncing activities and behaviour hostile to the totalitarian communist regime, which sought to restrict freedoms and fundamental rights". Furthermore, the Committee notes that an appeal was lodged with the Constitutional Court against the provision of Act No. 188/1999 in question, and that the Court dismissed the claim that it was unconstitutional in 2006 (Ruling No. 41/2006 of 24 January 2006). The Committee nevertheless considers that, in view of the fact that it applies to all posts in the public service, the exclusion provided for under section 54(j) is not adequately defined or limited and might cause discrimination in employment based on the person's political opinion. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 on civil servants is revised, to ensure that the requirements for being a candidate for a civil service post are based on the skills required for a specific job, in the strict sense of the term, in accordance with Article 1(2) of the Convention. Meanwhile, it asks the Government to provide information on the application of this article in practice, particularly on the number of persons whose candidature to a civil service post might have been set aside under section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1956)

Application in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that article 19(3) of the Constitution provides for men and women to enjoy "equal rights and freedoms and equal opportunities". The Committee also notes that, pursuant to article 37(3), everyone shall receive "remuneration for labour without any discrimination whatsoever and not below the minimum wage established by federal law". The Committee further recalls that, pursuant to section 3 of the Labour Code (Federal Law No. 197-FZ of 2001), everyone shall have equal opportunities in realizing their labour rights and may not be subject to restrictions with regard to these rights or receive any advantages on the grounds of sex in particular; and that, under section 22, the employer shall ensure equal payment to employees for work of equal value. While noting the relevant legal provisions, the Committee remains concerned about the application of these principles in practice particularly in light of the level of women's earnings in comparison with men's. Indeed, the Committee notes from the statistical information provided by the Government the existence of a wide gender wage gap, with the average wages of women amounting in 2009 to 65.3 per cent of those of men. In addition, the Committee notes the deep concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations, concerning the deterioration of the situation of women in employment, and noting, in particular, that they represent the overwhelming majority of workers in lower level and low-paid jobs in the public sector, that they face discrimination in the private sector, and that their share of high-paid jobs in that sector is low (CEDAW/C/USR/CO/7, 16 August 2010, paragraph 36). According to the report submitted by the Government to CEDAW, hidden discrimination against women and their vertical and horizontal segregation remain serious problems in the economic sphere (CEDAW/C/USR/7, 9 March 2009, paragraph 75). The Committee recalls that stereotypical attitudes regarding the roles of women and men in society result in occupational segregation as well as gender-biased undervaluation of the work performed by women. In order to address such occupational segregation and differences of remuneration between men and women in employment, the Committee refers the Government to its 2006 general observation and to the importance of promoting objective and analytical methods for the evaluation of jobs and to cooperate with workers' and employers' organizations to promote the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that a special task force on gender equality was established in 2010 in the Ministry of Public Health and Social Development. The Government indicates that the participation of social partners is planned and that issues relating to equal pay for work of equal value will be discussed. The Committee asks the Government as follows:

- (i) to provide information on the measures taken by the special task force on gender equality with a view to promoting and ensuring equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value;
- (ii) to take steps to address occupational segregation and the inequalities in remuneration existing in practice between men and women, including specific measures to address stereotypical attitudes with a view to reducing inequalities in remuneration, and to continue to seek the cooperation of the social partners in this regard;
- (iii) to provide information on measures taken to promote the development and use of objective job evaluation methods.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the absence of information concerning equal remuneration cases dealt with by the competent administrative and judicial authorities. In this regard, it stresses that the lack of court cases regarding equal remuneration or wage discrimination is likely to indicate a lack of awareness of or access to the rights and procedures and of the existing remedies under the law, or fear of reprisals. The Committee, therefore, asks the Government to take appropriate measures to raise public awareness of the relevant legislation, the procedures and remedies available related to the principle of the Convention. It also asks the Government to consider providing specific training on the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value to judges, labour inspectors and other relevant public officials. Please continue to provide information on equal pay cases dealt with by the competent administrative and judicial authorities.

The Committee recalls its observations of 2009 and 2010 which addressed the following issues: (1) Resolution No. 162 adopted by the Government on 25 February 2000 which contains a list of industries, occupations and work from which women are excluded; (2) the enforcement of the Labour Code's non-discrimination provisions; (3) equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women; and (4) equality of opportunity and treatment of ethnic minorities and indigenous peoples.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 99th Session, June 2010). The Committee noted the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2010. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee had raised concerns regarding Resolution No. 162 of 25 February 2000 which excludes women from being employed in 456 occupations and 38 branches of industry, and section 253 of the Labour Code, which provides that the employment of women in arduous work and work in harmful or dangerous conditions shall be limited. The Conference Committee had noted that Resolution No. 162 and section 253 of the Labour Code went beyond protecting women's reproductive health and broadly restricted their access to occupations and sectors that involve equal health and safety risks to men and women, and it had urged the Government to take steps to revise section 253 of the Labour Code and Resolution No. 162 to ensure that any limitations on the work that can be undertaken by women are not based on stereotyped perceptions regarding their capacity and role in society and are strictly limited to measures to protect maternity. The Conference Committee had asked the Government to ensure that the planned review of the existing system of health and safety protection addressed the need to provide a safe and healthy working environment for both men and women, and one that would not lead to measures hindering women's participation in the labour market. The Conference Committee had also asked the Government to take measures to address the legal and practical barriers to women's access to the broadest possible range of sectors and industries, as well as at all levels of responsibility, and it had urged the Government to take measures, through tripartite consultation, to ensure non-discrimination and promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for all groups protected under the Convention, including ethnic minorities. Such measures should include strengthening the legal framework, which should address direct and indirect discrimination and the burden of proof, and provide for effective remedies in discrimination cases. The strengthening and establishment of appropriate mechanisms to promote, analyse and monitor equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation should also be part of these measures.

The Committee notes the Government's report, received on 18 November 2011, in Russian. The Committee will examine this report as soon as the translation becomes available.

Rwanda

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 regulating labour in Rwanda. It notes that the new Act refers to the present Convention in its Preamble and that it contains a definition of the expression "work of equal value" (section 1.9). However, it notes that this definition is too narrow to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention since it refers to "similar work", and further, that the new Act contains no substantial provisions prescribing "equal remuneration for work of equal value". Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government mentions in its report article 11 of the Constitution which prohibits any discrimination in general, and notes that article 37 of the Constitution specifies that "every person having equal competence and capacity shall have the right, without any discrimination, to equal pay for equal work". Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not taken the opportunity to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value within the meaning of the Convention.

While it is important to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex in employment, this is not sufficient to ensure the full application of the principle of equal remuneration pursuant to the Convention. Referring to its general observation of 2006, in which it clarifies the meaning of the concept of "work of equal value" under the Convention, the Committee would like to stress that, whilst this concept encompasses the concept of "equal", "the same" and "similar" work it also goes beyond that because it encompasses work which is of an entirely different nature but which is nevertheless of equal value. The concept of "work of equal value" therefore allows for a much broader comparison to be made between jobs performed by men and women in different places or sectors, or between different employers. It therefore allows pay discrimination to be combated more effectively where men and women traditionally perform work that is of an entirely different nature but which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1981)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislative developments. Scope of protection of workers against discrimination. The Committee notes that section 12 of Act No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 regulating labour in Rwanda extends the protection afforded to workers covered from all the grounds of discrimination prohibited under Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention as well as from other grounds (Article 1(1)(b)). Section 12 of that Act prohibits any discrimination, either directly or indirectly, in the course of employment intended to deprive workers of equality of opportunity and treatment where such discrimination is based on: (1) race, colour, origin; (2) sex, marital status or family responsibilities; (3) religion, beliefs or political opinions; (4) social or economic conditions; (5) national extraction; (6) handicap; (7) previous, current or prospective pregnancy; and (8) any other form of discrimination. The Committee also notes that the new Act establishes general penalties in the case of the violation of its provisions (section 169), namely two months' imprisonment and/or a fine of 50,000 to 300,000 Rwandan francs. It notes, however, that, in the French version of the Act at least, direct or indirect discrimination is prohibited only "during the course of employment" and that this prohibition does not therefore cover all stages of employment and occupation, particularly recruitment. The Committee also notes that section 12 appears to prohibit acts done with an intention to deny equality of opportunity and treatment, which would be more restrictive than the definition of discrimination set out in Article 1 of the Convention under which intent is not required. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to prohibit discrimination during access to employment or to an occupation. It also requests the Government to clarify whether intent is required for an act to constitute discrimination under section 12 of Act No. 13/2009. The Government is also requested to provide information on the application of section 12 of the Act, in practice and to specify, in particular, whether any appeals have been lodged on the basis of any one of the prohibited grounds of discrimination and whether penalties have been imposed under section 169 of that Act.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 59/2008 of 10 September 2008 on the prevention and punishment of gender-based violence, section 24 of which establishes punitive measures in the case of "sexual harassment of a subordinate" imposed on "any employer or any other person who uses his or her position to harass a subordinate by way of orders, intimidation and terror for the purpose of sexual pleasure". It also notes the inclusion in Act No. 13/2009, of provisions prohibiting "gender-based violence" in employment (section 9), that is "any act of a physical, psychological or sexual nature directed at a person or likely to damage their property on the grounds of their sex" which "infringes their rights and affects their integrity". Section 9 of Act No. 13/2009 also prohibits moral harassment at work, either directly or indirectly, which is defined as "any act of harassment at work of any origin, either external or internal to the enterprise, which manifests itself in particular through behaviour, words, intimidation or anonymous written communications designed to have an adverse effect on the dignity of a worker in the workplace, endanger his or her job and constitute an obstacle to his or her work". The Committee welcomes the adoption of these new legislative provisions which, when combined, appear to cover the two essential elements of sexual harassment at work as defined in its 2002 general observation, namely: (1) any physical, verbal or non-verbal conduct of a sexual nature and other conduct based on sex affecting the dignity of women and men, which is unwelcome, unreasonable and offensive to the recipient; and a person's rejection of, or submission to, such conduct is used explicitly or implicitly as a basis for a decision which affects that person's job (quid pro quo); and (2) conduct that creates an intimidating, hostile or humiliating working environment for the recipient (hostile work environment). However, in order to ensure adequate protection for men and women workers and to clarify the legal regime applicable to this discriminatory practice, the Committee requests the Government to consider taking the necessary measures to adopt a clear and precise definition of sexual harassment in the workplace, ensuring that this definition covers both quid pro quo and the creation of a hostile working environment. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to prevent this form of gender-based discrimination in the workplace, particularly in the context of the national gender policy adopted in 2004 (education programmes, awareness-raising campaigns on preventive measures and appeal mechanisms, etc.).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1978)

National equality policy. For many years, the Committee has been calling on the Government to take measures to declare and pursue a national equality policy as required under Article 2 of the Convention, addressing at least all the grounds set out in Article (1)(1)(a). Terms of reference had been provided by an ILO high-level mission on the development of a national equality policy, including regarding the establishment and mandate of a multi-stakeholder task force. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour shall communicate with the relevant bodies, including the Human Rights Commission, with a view to examining the setting up of a working team responsible for the preparation of a national equality policy. The Government also expresses its desire for ILO assistance in this process. Trusting that the multi-stakeholder task force will be established in the very near future, the Committee urges the Government to take concrete measures, without further delay, to develop and implement a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, with a view to the elimination of any discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin. Please provide specific information on the steps taken in this regard, including with a view to securing ILO technical assistance. Noting that no information has been provided on the status of the national survey on the situation in the country with regard to discrimination on all the grounds set out in the Convention, and the establishment of an action plan, the Committee again requests the Government to provide this information.

Legislation. The Committee notes that the Government provides no information in response to the concerns raised previously regarding the absence of specific provisions prohibiting discrimination in employment and occupation. In the light of the serious concerns regarding discrimination in employment and occupation which have been raised by the Committee for many years, as well as by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to include as part of its national equality policy, legislation specifically prohibiting discrimination, both direct and indirect, in the public and private sectors, on all the grounds set out in the Convention, covering all workers and all aspects of employment, and ensuring effective means of redress. Please provide specific information on the concrete steps taken in this regard.

Scope of protection. The Committee had previously asked the Government to provide information on how domestic workers, agricultural workers, part-time workers, and "incidental, seasonal and temporary workers", are effectively protected against discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that some provisions of the Labour Code apply to casual, seasonal and temporary workers, and that the rules for the regulation of part-time work are to be issued by the minister. The Government indicates further that domestic workers and similar workers, though excluded from the scope of the Labour Code, are able to complain to special committees and then to the courts if necessary. With respect to the adoption of the regulation on domestic workers and similar workers which was under preparation, the Committee notes that the Government states that it has been submitted to the Cabinet of Ministers for adoption. Noting the general information provided by the Government in this context, the Committee again requests detailed information regarding how in practice domestic workers, agricultural workers, part-time workers, and incidental, seasonal and temporary workers can bring a claim of discrimination in employment and occupation, whether any such claims have been filed, and if so, how they have been addressed. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the status of the adoption of the regulation on domestic workers, and to provide a copy once it has been adopted. Please also provide specific information on any rules adopted for the regulation of part-time work. The Committee also again urges the Government to ensure that any new legislative non-discrimination provisions cover all workers, including those who are presently excluded wholly or partially from the scope of the Labour Code.

Equal opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee had noted previously the significant occupational sex segregation of the Saudi labour market, with women being concentrated in education, health and social work. It had also noted that although the legislative prohibition of women and men working together had been repealed, there was very little awareness of this change. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Employment Policy has been adopted, which addresses the expansion in employment opportunities of women. The Committee also notes the adoption of the Ninth Development Plan (2010–14), according to which, by the end of 2008, women's labour force participation was 11.5 per cent. Women constituted only 12.8 per cent of total Saudi employment, with 77.6 per cent of total female employment in the education sector. The unemployment rate was 6.8 per cent for men and 26.9 per cent for women. The objectives of the Development Plan include, "[increasing] the overall participation rate, particularly that of females, in an effort to enhance economic empowerment of women"; "promoting participation of women in economic activity, and providing the facilities required to increase their participation"; and "consolidating and enhancing qualitative progress in education of Saudi girls at all stages of education". The Committee also notes the Government's acknowledgement in its report that while there is a rising trend in women assuming leadership positions, there is a need to be more proactive in increasing job, educational and training opportunities for women. The Government also provides information on training initiatives, indicating that in 2009 there were more than 55,000 female trainees in the areas of technical and vocational training at government and non-governmental centres and institutes. Noting that the Government refers to training programmes for occupations “which suit women”, the Committee recalls the importance of avoiding stereotyped assumptions in training and employment with respect to women’s suitability and capability for certain jobs as this will limit their employment opportunities. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken pursuant to the Ninth Development Plan and the National Employment Strategy to increase the labour market participation of women, including the training and facilities provided, as well as the measures taken to improve education for girls to expand their future employment opportunities, and the impact of such measures. The Committee also asks the Government to take concrete measures to address occupational sex segregation, with a view to providing opportunities for women in a wider range of sectors and occupations, including higher level and decision-making positions, and in those areas that have been traditionally dominated by men, and to provide information on the results achieved. Please also provide specific information on the measures taken, as requested previously by the Committee, to ensure that workers and employers and their organizations are aware that the law no longer prohibits women and men from working together, and the specific steps taken to address de facto workplace segregation. The Committee also requests information on the establishment, mandate and activities of the Higher National Committee for Women’s Affairs.

Sexual harassment. The Committee previously raised concerns regarding the absence of legislation addressing sexual harassment, and the particular vulnerability of domestic workers to such harassment. The Government replies in very general terms that it does not tolerate cases of molestation of female workers, including female domestic workers, and that anyone who sexually molests a female worker would be subject to legal sanctions. The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that sexual harassment in employment and occupation is not limited to crimes of a sexual nature, to which the Government appears to be referring, and covers a wider range of situations. The Committee notes that without a clear definition and prohibition of both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment, it is doubtful whether sexual harassment in all its forms is being effectively addressed. The Committee, therefore, asks the Government to take steps to include a provision in the Labour Code defining and explicitly prohibiting sexual harassment, in line with its 2002 general observation on this topic. With respect to domestic workers, the Committee also asks the Government to take the opportunity of the preparation of the regulation on domestic workers to address specifically the issue of sexual harassment, as these workers are particularly vulnerable to such harassment, and again asks the Government to provide information regarding any steps taken in this regard.

Restrictions on women’s employment. The Committee recalls the protective measures set out in section 149 of the Labour Code, confining women to jobs that are “suitable to their nature”. The Committee notes that the Government provides no reply to its request to amend section 149 with a view to ensuring that any protective measures are strictly limited to maternity protection. In reply to the Committee’s request for clarification of the meaning of “suitable to them” in the Order of 21 July 2003 approving women’s participation in international conferences suitable to them, the Government states that it refers to conferences that are suitable to the specialized work undertaken by women or any conference which is specifically for women. The Committee also notes from the report of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, that the criteria governing work that can be undertaken by women remains regulated by paragraph 2/A of Council of Labour Force Order No. 1/19M/1405 (1987) (A/HRC/11/6/Add.3, 14 April 2009, paragraph 29). Paragraph 2/A sets the following criteria for women to work: (a) the need for the woman to work; (b) permission of her guardian; (c) suitability of the work to a woman’s nature and not distracting with regard to her household and marital duties; (d) sex-segregated workplace; and (e) women’s compliance with notions of dignity and modesty and Islamic dress code. The Committee recalls that protective measures applicable to women’s employment which are based on stereotypes regarding women’s professional abilities and role in society, violate the principle of equality of opportunity between men and women in employment and occupation and should be repealed. Concerned at the legal framework which places severe limitations on women’s employment, the Committee urges the Government to amend section 149 of the Labour Code, and repeal paragraph 2/A of Council of Labour Force Order No. 1/19M/1405 (1987), with a view to ensuring that any protective measures are strictly limited to maternity protection. The Committee also asks the Government to amend the Order of 21 July 2003 approving women’s participation in international conferences suitable to them, to ensure that women are able to participate in international conferences in the course of employment and occupation on an equal footing with men.

Discrimination against migrant workers. The Committee must note with regret that the Government once again provides no response to its previous comments and those of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, raising concerns regarding discrimination against migrant workers. The Committee notes, however, from the report of the Special Rapporteur referred to above, which highlights the risk of exploitation and abuse of migrant workers due to the kafala (sponsorship) system, that the kafala system was recently under review by the Ministry of Labour (ibid., paragraphs 63–65). The Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to address the issues of discrimination and exploitation of migrant workers, including providing legal protection to migrant workers against discrimination on all the grounds enumerated in the Convention, as well as accessible dispute resolution mechanisms. The Committee also asks the Government to provide specific information on the review of the kafala system being undertaken by the Ministry of Labour, including the methodology being used, any resulting conclusions or recommendations, and follow-up. The Committee again urges the Government to follow up in a concerted manner issues relating to discrimination of migrant workers, including examining the occupations in which migrant workers are employed, their conditions of employment, and the particular situation of female domestic workers; and to make addressing discrimination against migrant workers an important component of the national equality policy.

Discrimination based on religion. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the State has started to encourage and promote the values of religious tolerance, including the adoption of national dialogue involving all citizens regardless of creed, and attempting to address hatred and violence against non-Muslims. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken to encourage and promote religious tolerance, and the results achieved. Please also provide information on specific measures taken to address discrimination based on religion in employment and occupation.

Dispute resolution and human rights mechanisms. The Committee previously raised concerns regarding the inadequacy of the dispute resolution mechanisms in addressing issues of discrimination, including for migrant workers. The Committee notes that the Government again indicates that there have been no complaints of discrimination in employment and occupation. The Government also indicates that the Human Rights Commission is carrying out a national programme to disseminate a culture of human rights, including raising awareness through media, lectures, symposia and publications aimed at changing cultural and social stereotypes with a view to eliminating discrimination. The Government also indicates that the Ministry of Justice has drafted a strategy for the development of the judiciary, proposing the establishment of specialized women's units at the justice departments and within justice bodies, to receive women's claims, and staffed by female administrative staff, women specializing in the sharia, and female legal counsellors. A unit providing for mediation regarding issues concerning women has also been proposed. The Government also refers to Royal Decree No. 8382/mb of 28/10/1429 (2008) which provides for the establishment of women's units in courts and justice secretariats under the supervision of an independent women's administration; procedures to address delays that jeopardize women's rights and stop violence against them because of a lawsuit, and the adoption of sanctions; addressing women's complaints and seeking a clear and sound manner of receiving, investigating and resolving such complaints; and increasing women's awareness of their rights through media. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken by the Human Rights Commission to raise awareness regarding discrimination, particularly regarding any activities addressing specifically discrimination in employment and occupation. Please also provide information on the measures taken to implement the strategy for the development of the judiciary and Royal Decree No. 8382/mb. The Committee also requests the Government to clarify whether it is envisaged that women will be included on the Human Rights Commission and the courts, having the same status and responsibilities as men, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the number and nature of complaints brought before labour inspectors, labour dispute commissioners, the Human Rights Commission or the courts regarding discrimination, and the outcome thereof. The Committee also once again urges the Government to take measures to ensure that those involved in dispute resolution and enforcement, including labour inspectors, labour dispute commissioners, judges and members of the Human Rights Commission, receive appropriate training regarding non-discrimination and equality issues.

Senegal

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1967)

Article 2 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 23 September 2003 and the National Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Senegal (UNSAS) of 16 October 2006, which emphasized the gender segregation in the labour market, the high rate of illiteracy among women and the low school enrolment rate of girls. It also noted the launching of the National Strategy on Gender Equality and Equity (SNEEG) in December 2007. The Committee notes that according to the Government's brief report, the SNEEG is currently being disseminated to the actors concerned, and particularly to state institutions and civil society. The Government indicates that in the context of the implementation of the SNEEG, the Act on Gender Parity in Electoral Lists was adopted in 2010 and the number of women in the Government rose following the latest Government reshuffle. It also emphasizes that many awareness-raising and training activities on equality, including workshops and conferences, are carried out with the active participation of workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee further notes that a plan for the implementation of the SNEEG for 2009–15 was adopted in March 2009 and that it includes a number of measures to increase economic power and autonomy of women (Effect 3), with the particular objectives of: (1) women gaining access to factors of production and financial resources; (2) women obtaining the technical and managerial skills necessary to carry on their economic activities; and (3) women having more time to devote to production activities. Among these measures, the Committee observes that it is first envisaged to draw up an assessment concerning the access of women to resources and production factors, and an evaluation of needs for the reinforcement of the capacities of active women. It also notes that the drafting and implementation is envisaged of a plan and a programme for the reinforcement of facilities to lighten the work of women. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the measures under the SNEEG in relation to access to resources and factors of production, including land and vocational training, with an indication of their impact on gender segregation in the labour market. The Committee also requests the Government to provide any available information on the impact of the plan and the programme for the reinforcement of facilities to lighten the work of women on the development of women's training and employment for women.

Statistics. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to provide statistical data on the activity rates of men and women in the private and public sectors, as well as in the informal economy, and on their participation in vocational training. Noting the Government's indication that such statistics are not available, the Committee trusts that the Government will soon be in a position to provide such statistical data, and requests it to take the necessary measures for the compilation and analysis of such data on employment and training, which are indispensable to identify any discrimination between men and women and to evaluate the measures adopted to overcome it.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Serbia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

Implementation of the non-discrimination legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with interest the adoption of the Act on the Prohibition of Discrimination (Official Gazette No. 22/09) in April 2009 as well as the observations made by the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS) and the Trade Union Federation "Nezavisnost" that despite the enactment of legislation, discrimination continues to occur in practice. The Committee has earlier requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote awareness of, implement and enforce the provisions relating to discrimination in employment and occupation contained in the Labour Code and the Act on the Prohibition of Discrimination. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this respect. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to implement the anti-discrimination legislation. Furthermore, recalling the importance of concrete and practical measures to promote awareness and understanding of the non-discrimination legislation among workers and employers, their organizations, labour inspectors and judges as well as the public at large, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the promotional and training activities undertaken on the anti-discrimination legislation and on the number, nature and outcome of employment discrimination cases addressed by the labour inspectorate and the Commissioner for Equality and the judiciary, including on remedies provided and sanctions imposed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sierra Leone

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Lack of national policy. The Committee regrets that the Government does not provide any new information in respect to the Convention's application. Since Sierra Leone has ratified the Convention, the Government has consistently reported that no legislative or administrative regulation or other measures existed to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and the Government has failed to provide information on any measures taken in this regard. In its latest report the Government repeats the general statement that it had a broad-based policy which ensured jobs for all who apply and are willing to work, regardless of sex, religion, ethnicity or political opinion. The Committee is therefore bound to recall that under the Convention, Sierra Leone has the obligation to declare and pursue a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation, with a view to eliminating discrimination regarding vocational training, access to employment and particular occupations, as well as terms and conditions of employment.

In connection with the above, the Committee recalls that articles 7 to 9 of the 1991 Constitution establish economic, social and educational objectives for the State that potentially promote the application of the Convention. Article 15 guarantees the right to equal protection of the law irrespective of race, tribe, place of origin, political opinion, colour, creed or sex, and article 27 of the Constitution provides constitutional protection from discrimination. The Committee considers that these provisions may be an important element of a national equality policy in line with the Convention, but recalls that provisions affirming the principles of equality and non-discrimination in itself cannot constitute such a policy. As stated in the Committee's 1988 General Survey on the convention, the national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment should be clearly stated and should be applied in practice, presupposing state implementation measures in line with the principles set out in Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention and Paragraph 2 of the accompanying Recommendation No. 111.

While being aware of the many challenges the Government is facing in the process of consolidating peace, the Committee encourages the Government to give serious consideration to the application of the Convention in law and practice as an integral part of its efforts to promote peace and social and economic stability. The Government is requested to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to promote and ensure equal access to technical and vocational training, public and private employment, as well as equal terms and conditions of employment, including through educational programmes and cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee also reiterates its previous requests to the Government to provide information in particular on the measures taken to ensure equality in employment and occupation between women and men and among members of the different ethnic groups.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Slovakia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted that section 119a(2) of the Labour Code, as amended in 2007 by Act No. 348/2007 Coll., defines work of equal value as being work of the same or comparable complexity, responsibility and difficulty, carried out under the same or comparable working conditions and producing the same or comparable capacity and results of work for the same employer. The Committee notes further that section 119a(3) provides that if a system of job evaluation is used, it must be based on the same criteria for men and women and without sex discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that objective job evaluation, when implemented by the employer, allows a comparison of different jobs using objective criteria, which calls for a wage adjustment once the different jobs have been evaluated as having comparable value. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that no information on disputes and court rulings on the application of section 119a of the Labour Code is available. The Committee notes that while the Labour Code permits objective job evaluation with a view to comparing different jobs, section 119a does not appear to give a right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, going beyond the same or comparable work. The Committee recalls that the principle of the Convention requires equal remuneration for jobs which are of an entirely different nature, including those with different complexity, responsibility and difficulty, and carried out under entirely different conditions, and producing different results, but which are nevertheless of equal value. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide information on how it is being ensured that workers have the right to claim equal remuneration for work of equal value, for jobs of an entirely different nature. Please also provide information on the practical application of section 119a of the Labour Code, including any judicial or administrative decisions and the outcome thereof. The Committee also requests information on any measures taken to promote objective job evaluation pursuant to section 119a, and to ensure that the process is free from gender bias.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Discrimination on the basis of race and national extraction. The Committee notes the different measures and programmes taken under the Medium-term Concept of the Development of the Roma National Minority in the Slovak Republic (2008–13) to address the difficulties encountered by the Roma in employment and education. It particularly notes the launching of social enterprises as an important tool for improving employment opportunities of the long-term unemployed Roma, and that a programme has been developed by the Plenipotentiary Government Office for Roma Communities to address the lack of education of Roma children. However, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Roma continue to be affected by unemployment and discrimination in the labour market because of their lack of qualifications; and that the educational situation of Roma children remains problematic, in particular, with regard to the fact that a considerable number continue to be placed in "special" schools. In this connection, the Committee recalls that section 8(a) of the Anti-Discrimination Act, 2004, as amended by Act No. 85/2008, provides for temporary compensatory measures to eliminate forms of social and economic inequalities or disadvantage faced by persons belonging to vulnerable groups; and notes that no information has been given by the Government relating to such measures concerning Roma in employment and education. However, the Committee considers that such positive measures could assist in addressing the de facto inequalities affecting members of minority groups, including the Roma, thus giving effect to the national policy referred to in Article 2 of the Convention (see General Survey of 1996 on equality in employment and occupation, paragraph 73). The Committee also notes that, according to the Medium-term Concept of the Development of the Roma National Minority in the Slovak Republic (2008–13), comprehensive statistical data disaggregated by ethnicity must be made available in order to assess results under the Medium-term Concept. The Committee considers that such information is crucial for assessing progress and ensuring effective monitoring of the measures taken with respect to employment and occupation.

The Committee notes that the Advisory Committee on the Framework Convention for the protection of national minorities was informed by the Slovak National Centre for Human Rights (NCHR) that the majority of complaints received on the ground of ethnicity are lodged by persons belonging to the Roma minority, which is particularly affected by discrimination in the labour market regarding recruitment procedures (Council of Europe, ACFC/OP/III(2010)004, 18 January 2011, paragraph 41). In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to increase its efforts to address the continuing discrimination faced by the Roma in employment and occupation, and particularly asks the Government to:

- (i) provide information on any temporary compensatory measures taken aimed at eliminating social and economic inequalities or disadvantage faced by the Roma population, pursuant to section 8(a) of the Anti-Discrimination

Act, as well as information on the steps taken to raise awareness and understanding of the concept and objectives of such measures;

- (ii) provide information on the steps taken to promote the participation of the Roma, on an equal footing with other parts of the population, in education and training at the various levels, including any positive measures to address the segregation of Roma children into “special” schools;
- (iii) take the necessary steps, in the context of the Medium-term Concept of the Development of the Roma National Minority in the Slovak Republic, to gather statistical information on the situation of Roma in employment and education;
- (iv) continue to provide information on the results achieved in realizing the objectives and obtaining the targets set out in the Medium-term Concept of the Development of the Roma National Minority in the Slovak Republic, as well as on any other achievements regarding policies aimed at eliminating discrimination against Roma in employment and education.

Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the National Strategy for Gender Equality (2009–13) was adopted on 8 April 2009 by Resolution No. 272. The Strategy indicates that it constitutes the foundation for decision-making at all levels and formulates basic targets and goals for the achievement of gender equality. The basic objective is to create an environment, effective mechanisms, tools and methods for the implementation of gender equality in all areas of society. In this regard, the Committee particularly notes the following means to be used to achieve this objective: the adoption of legislative and non-legislative measures; the creation of a system of analytical, monitoring and control mechanisms to systematically determine the effectiveness and efficiency of adopted measures; the promotion of information and awareness of gender equality issues; and the elimination of gender stereotyping. The Committee also notes the adoption in 2010 of the National Action Plan for Gender Equality (2010–13) by Resolution No. 316, which is the implementation document of the National Strategy for Gender Equality. The Action Plan sets specific tasks and provides for systematic activities with a view to promoting the development and implementation of the basic objective of the National Strategy. The Committee further notes from the Government's report that the Minister of Labour, Social Affairs and Family, in cooperation with other responsible ministers and organizations, is to submit summary reports annually on improvements made in the area of gender equality.

While welcoming these initiatives, the Committee notes from the information provided in the National Action Plan that some obstacles continue to hinder equality of treatment and opportunities between men and women: gender equality is not considered as a priority issue to be addressed in the public administration; and the inadequacy of staff and administrative capacity necessary to carry out gender analysis and evaluate the impact of the proposed measures related to gender. The Committee also notes from the information provided by the Government to the Seventh Council of Europe Conference of Ministers responsible for Equality between Women and Men, that strong gender stereotypes persist, particularly causing gender imbalances in decision-making, gender segregation in the field of education which is thus transferred to the labour market, inequalities in the level of wages, and unbalanced share of family responsibilities and childcare between men and women (Seventh Council of Europe Conference of Ministers responsible for Equality between Women and Men, 7 May 2010, page 6). The Committee encourages the Government to continue to take steps to overcome the obstacles faced by women in employment and occupation, and to provide information on the following:

- (i) the concrete measures taken or envisaged to implement the National Strategy for Gender Equality (2009–13) and the National Action Plan for Gender Equality (2010–13), including measures promoting women's access to a wider range of training and jobs, and the results achieved;
- (ii) the concrete steps taken to increase public awareness regarding gender discrimination in the labour market, as well as information on any steps taken or envisaged to increase awareness and understanding on gender equality in the public administration; and
- (iii) updated statistics on the distribution of men and women in the various economic sectors and occupations, in the public and private sectors, as well as the last summary report on gender equality.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

South Africa

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2000)

Article 1 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee notes the Government's indication that given that the Government, in consultation with the social partners, was in the process of reviewing the Employment Equity Act (EEA), a decision had been taken in 2009 not to include a provision covering equal pay for work of equal value in the amended EEA regulations. The Committee also notes that in the process of amending the EEA, a draft provision dealing specifically with equal pay for work of equal value has been included in Chapter 2. The Committee further notes that, while the EEA amendments are underway, equal pay for work of equal value has been implemented in the Director-General's Review System, emanating from sections 43, 44 and 45 of the EEA, which empower the Director-General of Labour to do an in-depth assessment of compliance and make recommendations. The Committee, welcoming the Government's intention to include the principle of equal pay for work of equal value in Chapter 2 of the EEA, hopes that the term “pay” will be defined broadly to cover all elements of remuneration, as defined in Article 1(a), and asks the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard. Please provide specific information on how the principle is included in the Director-General’s Review System, such as methods of implementation, monitoring of the Director-General’s recommendations and regarding any cases on this matter which have been referred to the Labour Court.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1997)

Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention. HIV/AIDS status. The Committee notes with interest the decision rendered by the Labour Court of Johannesburg in February 2011 (Allpass v. Mooikloof Estates, Case No. JS178/09), awarding the complainant compensatory damages for unfair dismissal and discrimination on the grounds of his HIV status, and making specific reference to the Convention, and to the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200) as a recognition of the impact of discrimination based on real or perceived HIV status and its increasing prevalence. The Court also refers to the notion of “inherent job requirement”, included in Article 1(2) of the Convention, pointing out that the Committee has emphasized the need for a strict interpretation of this notion. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on judicial and administrative decisions concerning discrimination in employment and occupation based on HIV/AIDS status. The Committee also reiterates its request for information concerning the South African Defence Force Policy on HIV/AIDS status, which was to be revised following the decision rendered by the High Court of Pretoria in May 2008. The Committee also once again asks for information concerning the National Strategy Plan on HIV/AIDS (2007–11), including measures adopted under this plan to prevent and address discrimination in employment and occupation based on HIV/AIDS status.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Spain

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1967)

Legislative and administrative measures. The Committee notes the legislative and administrative measures adopted by the Government to promote equality. The Committee emphasizes in particular the provisions amending the legal system currently in force, under the terms of Basic Act No. 3/2007 of 22 March on effective equality between women and men, which it noted in its previous observation. These provisions include: the amendment of the general electoral system, the amendment of Act No. 1/2000 on civil procedures which provides for the reversal of the burden of proof; the amendment of the Workers’ Charter (providing that instructions to engage in discrimination shall be void, establishing the possibility of adopting affirmative action for members of the under-represented sex and adopting measures to improve the balance between work and family responsibilities, among other substantive measures for the recognition of equality), and the amendment of the Labour Procedures Act. The Committee also notes the amendment of the Public Employment Statute, the Self-employment Statute and the system of public equality institutions, as well as the establishment of the Equality Label granted to enterprises which stand out for their good practices in relation to equality. Finally, the Committee notes the collective agreements containing measures to promote equality, the provision respecting the registration and deposit of collective agreements with a view to establishing a database, as well as the Employment and Collective Bargaining Agreement 2010, 2011 and 2012, which emphasize that collective agreements shall include among their objectives compliance with the principle of equality. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application and impact in practice of Basic Act No. 3/2007 on effective equality between women and men, and particularly on the equality plans adopted in the context of enterprise collective bargaining and their impact on the implementation of the Convention.

Discrimination based on race, colour, religion and national extraction. The Committee notes with regret that once again the Government’s report does not contain information on this subject. The Committee notes the report on the development of racism and xenophobia in Spain, prepared by the Spanish Observatory on Racism and Xenophobia, which refers principally to the situation of immigrants in the country and emphasizes the interaction between attitudes of intolerance and situations of economic and employment crisis. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the activities carried out by the Spanish Observatory on Racism and Xenophobia and the Council to Promote Equality of Treatment and Non-discrimination with regard to Racial and Ethnic Origin. The Committee particularly requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures, programmes and plans of action to promote equality of opportunity and treatment and address discrimination in employment and occupation based on race, colour, religion and national extraction. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on awareness-raising and educational programmes established to promote greater tolerance towards members of minority groups, and especially immigrants, persons of non-European origin and the Roma.

Observations made by the Trade Union Confederation of Workers’ Commissions (CC.OO.). In its previous observation, the Committee noted the observations made by the CC.OO. expressing concern as regards affirmative action measures in enterprises with fewer than 250 workers, the delay in the establishment of the Council on the Participation of Women in the Ministry of Equality and the difficulties faced by foreign women in gaining access to the labour market due to the fact that they work in the informal economy. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (1) with regard to affirmative action measures in enterprises with fewer than 250 workers (see the Equality Act), the Equality Label has been established and subsidies are available for the preparation and application of equality plans; (2) Royal Decree No. 1791/2009 determines the operation, competence and composition of the Council on the Participation of Women, a joint consultative and advisory body composed of representatives of women's organizations and associations; and (3) with regard to the access of foreign women to the labour market, Orders Nos TAS/3698/2006 and TAS/711/2008 regulate the registration of non-Community foreign workers with public services and employment agencies, a guide has been prepared for public administrations on how to address the integration of immigrant women and an analysis has been published of the labour market situation of immigrant women, methods of integration, sectors with employment opportunities and enterprise initiatives. These studies will provide a basis for the preparation of more effective legal, policy and strategic measures to address the issue. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the concrete proactive measures adopted in enterprises with fewer than 250 workers, and the measures adopted with a view to achieving the integration of immigrant women into the labour market and their impact in practice.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the following:

- (i) the Strategic Plan for Equality of Opportunities (2008–11) and its impact;
- (ii) the regular evaluation report on the impact of Basic Act No. 3/2007 of 22 March on effective equality for women and men, undertaken in accordance with the fifth final provision of the Act; and
- (iii) the report evaluating the impact of Basic Act No. 1/2004 respecting comprehensive protection measures against gender violence.

Statistical information. The Committee notes the statistical information attached to the Government's report, particularly on the numbers of self-employed workers and the proportion of workers with contracts without limit of time and fixed-term contracts disaggregated by sex. The Committee further notes the positive trend in the activity rate of women. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing statistical information relevant to the application of the Convention.

Labour inspection. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the activities undertaken by the labour inspection services during the period 2008–10. It notes in particular the increase in scheduled inspections and those undertaken following complaints by workers, the number of workers affected, the types of violations committed and the penalties applied to the enterprises concerned. The Committee also notes the campaign carried out in the hotels, financial institutions, commerce, textiles, metallurgy and cleaning sectors with a view to identifying wage discrimination, the findings and the penalties applied. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the activities carried out by the labour inspection services with a view to the application of the Convention, and particularly the results of the 2010 campaign on wage discrimination.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1985)

Articles 3 and 9 of the Convention. Measures to apply the Convention in order to create effective equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women workers. The Committee notes with interest the legislative provisions adopted, agreements and court decisions handed down with a view to achieving substantive equality of opportunity for men and women workers. It notes in particular Basic Act No. 3/2007 on effective equality between men and women, which is the result of intensive civil, social and political dialogue. The Committee also notes that section 44 of the Act provides that the right to reconcile personal, family and working life shall be granted to men and women workers so that family responsibilities are assumed in a balanced manner and all discrimination based on the exercise of this right is avoided. The Act also contains a number of provisions giving effect to the Convention, namely: the establishment of paternity leave, to be extended to four weeks as from 2010, and the extension of special leave in the event of disability of a child under the age of majority, or premature birth; the possibility of shortening the working day; improvement in the leave of absence regime and improvements in the systems for breastfeeding infants under nine months old. The Committee also notes the information sent by the Government to the effect that under the Act, during such leave, employees are entitled to take part in training courses organized by the Administration, to return to work in the same job and to benefit from any improvement in working conditions to which they would have had access during their absence. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the improvements introduced by the Act have been incorporated in the Workers' Statute, the Basic Public Employment Statute, the Third Single Agreement for Employees Engaged in the General Administration of the State and the Government–Trade Unions Agreement for the Public Service in the framework of the social dialogue 2010–12. The Committee notes that under the latter agreement, the First Plan for Equality between Men and Women in the General Administration of the State and its Public Bodies was approved. The Committee also notes the legal provisions adopted in order to establish active employment policies. It asks the Government to continue to send information on the implementation in practice of all these provisions, particularly Basic Act No. 3/2007 and the agreements adopted under it, including information on how the measures adopted have affected the application of the Convention.

Other members of the immediate family. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 39/2006 to promote personal autonomy and care in respect of persons in a situation of dependence, the aim of which is to improve the quality of life of dependent persons as well as of their carers and family members. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, it is hoped that effective implementation of the Act will contribute in the medium and long term to increasing the rate of women's participation in the labour market. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the Act, including statistical data on the persons benefiting under it.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sri Lanka

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the comments by the Lanka Jathika Estate Workers' Union (LJEWU) which were attached to the Government's report.

Article 1 of the Convention. Legislation on equal remuneration. In response to its previous comments regarding the absence of legislation providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there have been no developments in this regard. The Committee is concerned that particularly in such a highly gender segregated labour market (see comments with respect to the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)), the absence of an explicit right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value undermines the implementation of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the rights regarding wages arising from the Wage Boards and collective agreements appear to be limited to equal wages for the same or substantially the same work, which is narrower than the principle set out in the Convention. Recalling its 2006 general observation, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to give full legislative effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on measures taken in this regard.

Additional emoluments. The Committee had noted previously the practice by certain employers in rural areas of providing workers with payments in kind, such as meals, which were only provided to male workers. The Committee notes that the Government again indicates that there are no legal provisions for payment of wages in kind, but acknowledges that most of the workers in the plantation sector are provided with free housing. The Committee recalls that the purpose of the broad definition of "remuneration" enshrined in Article 1(a) of the Convention is to capture all elements that a worker may receive for his or her work including additional allowances paid in kind, such as meals and housing facilities. The Committee again asks the Government to take measures to ensure that in practice all emoluments, whether in cash or in kind, are granted or paid without discrimination based on the sex of the worker, and to provide specific information on steps taken in this regard.

Article 2. Wage boards. The Committee recalls that wage rates are set for a number of sectors through the wage boards. While specific rates based on gender no longer appear to be set in the wage board ordinances, the Committee notes that classification of wages in various trades is differentiated based on the classification of categories such as "unskilled", "semi-skilled" and "skilled". The Government has not provided any information in response to its previous request regarding how it is ensured that in determining minimum wages rates, the work performed by women is not being undervalued in comparison to that of men who are performing different work and using different skills, and that the procedures adopted are free from gender bias. The Government has also not provided any statistical information regarding the number of women and men in the different categories of the various sectors and trades, as previously requested, which would assist the Government and the Committee to assess the nature and extent of wage inequalities. The Committee recalls that there is often a tendency to set lower wages for sectors predominantly employing women, and therefore that special attention is needed in setting sectoral wages to ensure that the rates fixed are free from gender bias. The fact that the minimum wage rates no longer distinguish between men and women is not sufficient to ensure that the process is free from gender bias. The Committee also notes that, in defining different jobs and occupations in the wage board ordinances, sex-specific terminology remains in use in many cases, reinforcing stereotypes regarding whether certain jobs should be carried out by men or women, and thus increasing the likelihood of wage inequality. For example, terms such as "chemical men" and "machine women" are used, as well as "bleaching operatives (males)" and "mending operatives (females)", and should be avoided. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the specific criteria used to determine wage rates fixed by the wage boards. Please also provide information on the concrete steps taken to ensure that rates of wages fixed by the wage boards are based on objective criteria, free from gender bias, so that the work in sectors in which women are predominantly employed is not being undervalued compared to sectors in which men are predominantly employed. The Committee also asks the Government to ensure that gender-neutral terminology is used in defining the various jobs and occupations in the wage board ordinances. The Committee also urges the Government to compile and analyse statistics on the current wage rates for men and women in the different categories of the various sectors and trades to enable it to gain more detailed knowledge of the nature and scope of the remaining wage inequalities and to be able to assess progress made in addressing such inequalities.

Wage policy. The Committee previously noted the Government's intention to review the wage policy, to simplify the procedures for wage setting, and to establish a national minimum wage. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Cadre and Salary Commission is mandated to determine and revise the cadre and salary structure in the public service. The Committee also notes the statement of the LJEWU that these commissions hear the views of trade unions before recommending rates of pay. The Committee notes further that the public administration circulars on restructuring of public service salaries, appended to the Government's report, do not indicate if or how the principle of the Convention is taken into account in the wage determination process. The Government also states that "no discriminative policy exists in the public service except in a few blue-collar jobs". With respect to the private sector, the Government states that tripartite consultations are continuing in the context of the National Labour Advisory Council, including with regard to a national minimum wage and developing a national wage policy, but no final decision has been taken. Noting the Government's acknowledgement that there is a discriminatory wage policy with respect to some public service jobs, the Committee asks the Government to provide further details regarding such policies and to take steps to abolish them. It also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made in developing a new wage policy, and to provide information on how the policy will promote and ensure the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value in both the public and private sectors.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes the observations by the Lanka Jathika Estate Workers' Union (LJEWU) attached to the Government's report.

Legislative protection. The Committee recalls its previous comments, urging the Government to make every effort to introduce provisions in the legislation ensuring that all men and women, citizens and non-citizens, are effectively protected from discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation on at least all the grounds enumerated in the Convention. In its reply, the Government continues to refer to the constitutional provisions, but does not indicate any further progress in introducing specific legislative provisions. Recalling that general constitutional provisions regarding equality, while important, have generally not proven to be sufficient in order to address specific cases of discrimination in employment and occupation, the Committee again urges the Government to take steps to introduce specific legislative provisions ensuring that all women and men, whether citizens or non-citizens, are protected against discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation on at least all the grounds enumerated in the Convention, and to provide information on progress made in this regard. The Committee also once again asks the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken to protect, in practice, citizens and non-citizens against discrimination on the basis of sex, race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin.

Equality of opportunity between men and women. The Committee notes from the 2010 Labour Force Survey Annual Report of the Department of Census and Statistics, that the labour force participation of women is 31.2 per cent compared to 67.1 per cent for men. Only 15.6 per cent of working age women has employee status, compared to 36.4 per cent of men. In the Labour Force Survey, it is confirmed that "the occupational profiles of women and men are quite distinct", with a high proportion among "skilled agricultural and fishery workers". The Committee had also noted previously the under-representation of women in many areas of employment, and their concentration in self-employment and unskilled work, often in the informal economy, and in export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the range of measures taken by the Department of Labour and the Board of Investment, concerning conditions of employment and other facilities in the EPZs, as well as information on a range of gender-related activities including planned training and awareness-raising of the Gender Bureau under the Ministry of Labour Relations and Productivity Promotion. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to effectively address occupational sex segregation, and the impact of such measures, including with respect to women in the informal economy, and in EPZs. It also asks the Government to provide information on any other measures taken to increase female labour force participation including increasing access to higher level posts. Please also provide information on the status of the adoption of the Women's Rights Bill, as well as details of the Five-Year National Action Plan for 2010-14, and any information on its implementation.

Sexual harassment. The Committee had previously raised concerns regarding the absence of effective protection against sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Government again refers to the voluntary "Code of Conduct and Procedures to address Sexual Harassment at the Workplace", introduced by the Ceylon Chamber of Commerce and the Employers' Federation of Ceylon, indicating that the Code is considered as a milestone in Sri Lankan efforts to prevent sexual harassment at the workplace. The Government also indicates that a case of unjustified termination of service could be brought before the Labour Tribunal based on sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Government has not given any indication that it intends to include a specific provision preventing and prohibiting sexual harassment in the labour law, as recommended by the Committee. The Committee recalls that clear definitions, encompassing quid pro quo and a hostile environment harassment, and appropriate responses in terms of remedies and complaints mechanisms under national laws, are important in addressing sexual harassment, which is a serious form of sex discrimination. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take steps to include specific legislative provisions prohibiting and preventing sexual harassment in employment and occupation. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of the Code of Conduct on sexual harassment, including its impact on preventing and addressing sexual harassment. Please also provide information on any complaints lodged, the remedies provided and sanctions imposed by the judicial or administrative authorities relating to sexual harassment, including in the context of unjustified termination. The Committee also requests information on measures taken or envisaged to raise awareness on sexual harassment, both quid pro quo and hostile environment, in the public and private sectors.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sweden

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1962)

Gender wage gap and occupational segregation. The Committee notes from the Government's report the persistence of the gender wage gap, which amounted to 15.8 per cent in 2008. In this connection, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the gender wage gap is in part due to the following: women and men are found in different professions, sectors and positions; the presence of women in part-time employment; gender stereotypes which influence the choice of study and training programmes; parenthood which reduces women's employment rate; and the higher rate of sickness absences for women. The Committee also notes the Government's efforts to address pay differentials and occupational segregation in employment, including by means of a gender equality bonus, tax relief for household services to improve equal sharing of parental duties, rehabilitation guarantee to facilitate the return to work of women on sick leave, inquiries analysing gender segregation in the choice of education and measures aiming at encouraging entrepreneurship among women. These measures introduced by the Government in 2009 are part of a long-term strategy for gender equality in the labour market and the business sector. Furthermore, the Committee notes the setting up of a programme on women's career development with a view to improving the career opportunities of women employed in the public sector; as well as two national programmes aimed at increasing the number of women on company boards. The Government also refers in its report to the provisions of the Discrimination Act, according to which employers are required to take active measures to promote equal opportunities at the workplace (Chapter 3, sections 1–13). It particularly underlines the provision requiring employers to endeavour to prevent differences in pay and other terms of employment between women and men who perform "work which is to be regarded as equal or of equal value" (Chapter 3, section 2); and encouraging them to promote equal balance of women and men in different types of work and categories, by means of education, training, skills development and other appropriate measures. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to address the gender wage gap and occupational segregation in employment including on the impact of the long-term strategy for gender equality. Please also provide information on the implementation of active workplace measures under the Discrimination Act as well as any developments in following up the recommendations of the Government commission regarding changing and strengthening the rules on active measures. Please continue to supply statistical information on the distribution of men and women in the different sectors of economic activity, occupational positions and their respective levels of remuneration.

Wage-mapping. The Committee notes that under the Discrimination Act, employers must carry out wage mapping every three years in order to identify, remedy and prevent unfair gender differences in pay and other terms of employment (Chapter 3, section 10). The employer is then to assess whether existing pay differences are directly or indirectly associated with gender. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the implementation of Chapter 3, section 10, of the Discrimination Act, and particularly to indicate the consequent wage adjustments implemented. Please also continue to provide information on the activities carried out by the Office of the Equality Ombudsman.

Collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes with interest the measures taken by the Equality Ombudsman to assist the social partners in meeting their statutory requirements under the Discrimination Act: (i) the Ombudsman has compiled a manual which describes, inter alia, for social partners the methods of drawing up equal opportunity plans, wage-mapping, and preparing analyses and plans of actions; (ii) training programmes have been conducted for management and union officials on active measures with a view to creating equal rights and opportunities at the workplace, including by means of collective agreements; and (iii) a network of representatives of social partners has been established to create a platform for sharing ideas and knowledge, including on the new legislation and discrimination cases in employment. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations with regard to the principle of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Switzerland

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Anti-discrimination law. In its previous observation the Committee noted that on 23 March 2007 a motion was tabled in Parliament to draft a law on equal treatment for the purpose of preventing or eliminating all forms of discrimination based on sex, skin colour, ethnic origin, religion, philosophical conviction, age, disability or sexual identity. The Committee notes that by a decision of 21 September 2009 the National Council dropped the motion on the grounds that the applicable law was sufficient to ensure protection against discrimination. The Committee recalls that the Federal Constitution contains a general provision to the effect that no one shall suffer discrimination on grounds, inter alia, of origin, race, sex, age, language, social position, mode of life, religious, philosophical or political conviction or on grounds of a corporal, mental or physical disability (article 8). The Federal Act on equality between men and women prohibits direct and indirect discrimination against workers on grounds of sex, including in respect of pregnancy, civil status or family situation (section 3) and the Act on equality for persons with disabilities seeks to prevent, reduce or eliminate inequalities affecting persons with disabilities, in particular in the area of training and further training. As regards to discrimination on other grounds, the protection afforded to workers is derived from section 328 of the Code of Obligations, “Protection of the worker’s personality”, section 28 of the Civil Code on unlawful affront to the personality, and section 261bis of the Penal Code establishing racial discrimination as a criminal offence.

The Committee is of the view that, although important, the provisions of the Constitution have on the whole been insufficient to remedy specific situations of discrimination in employment. The same is true of the provisions in the Penal Code which could prove difficult to enforce in dealing with discrimination in employment. Furthermore, given the persistence of discrimination the Committee considers that generally comprehensive legislation on anti-discrimination is necessary if the Convention is to be applied effectively. The Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention to a number of features noted in the national laws it has examined in the past few years, which may make an effective contribution to addressing discrimination and promoting equality in employment and occupation: coverage of as many workers as possible; a clear definition of direct or indirect discrimination; prohibition of discrimination at all stages of employment; explicitly assigning supervisory responsibilities to competent national authorities; providing dissuasive penalties and appropriate means of redress; shifting or reversal of the burden of proof; protection against reprisal; the possibility to take affirmative action; adoption and implementation of policies or plans on equality at the workplace; collection of relevant data. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to re-examine the possibility of taking legislative measures to define and prohibit discrimination based on at least all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, at all stages of employment, including in vocational training and recruitment and in terms and conditions of employment, so as to afford workers effective protection against discrimination and enable them to assert their rights effectively. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any such measures taken to reinforce the legal framework pertaining to discrimination in employment and occupation.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment without distinction as to race, colour, national extraction or religion. The Committee points out that in its previous comments it encouraged the Government to introduce in the legislation an express prohibition on racial discrimination in employment and occupation so as to afford workers better protection against discriminatory practices and thus move towards full application of the principles of the Convention. The Committee notes that in June 2009 the Service to Combat Racism (SLR) published a legal guide on racial discrimination, which deals among other matters with racial discrimination in the world of work, citing examples and pointing out available remedies. On the matter of recruitment by private employers, the Committee notes that the guide stresses the difficulty of proving discrimination in the absence of any witnesses, the complexity of civil proceedings and the lack of clarity as to the legal consequences of discrimination in practice. On the matter of recruitment by public employers, the guide states that in the absence of express rules on the subject, in the event of discriminatory conduct in the course of job interviews, it is difficult to know how candidates are to defend themselves. Regarding the legislation to protect workers against discrimination based on race, colour, national extraction or religion, the Committee notes the Government’s statement that no legislative measures are envisaged in the area of contractual relationships established under private law. The Committee also notes that, in a study published in 2010 on the law against racial discrimination, the Federal Committee against Racism (CFR) indicates that the lack of any express ban on racial discrimination is the cause of considerable legal uncertainty, particularly as regards indirect discrimination. The CFR likewise points out that the lack of any provisions in private law and administrative law is an incentive for victims to resort to penal law, which sanctions only the most serious and public cases of discrimination and omits the most subtle or less visible forms, particularly in the world of work. Noting recommendations made by the Federal Committee against Racism in the study published in 2010, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the action taken to follow up on them, more particularly the recommendation for an in-depth examination of the “anti-racism legislation”, including the problems of multiple discrimination, the inclusion in the legislation of a ban on direct and indirect discrimination in work relationships between individuals and the establishment of effective instruments for enforcement. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the awareness raising and information measures taken to prevent discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, national extraction or religion and to promote tolerance.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Syrian Arab Republic

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes that the Human Rights Council condemned and expressed profound concern at the grave and systematic human rights violations in the Syrian Arab Republic (Resolution by the Human Rights Council at its 17th special session on the human rights situation in the Syrian Arab Republic, 23 August 2011 - A/HRC/S-17/2) and regretted the lack of progress made in the political reform process. The Committee recognizes that without an inclusive, credible and genuine dialogue conducted in an environment without fear and intimidation, and without effective protection of human rights, the implementation of the Convention is seriously hindered, if not rendered impossible. However, given that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments, it is bound to repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the adoption of a new Labour Law (No. 17/2010), section 75(a) of which provides that the employer shall apply the principle of "equal pay for work of equal value" to all workers without any discrimination, including discrimination based on gender. Section 75(b) then defines "work of equal value" as "work that requires equal scientific qualifications and professional skills, as attested by a work experience certificate". While welcoming the specific reference to "work of equal value" in the new Labour Law, the Committee is concerned that the definition in section 75(b) may unduly restrict the application of section 75(a), as it does not appear to allow a comparison of jobs requiring different qualifications and skills, which are nonetheless of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 75 of the new Labour Law, including any administrative or judicial decisions. Please also provide specific information regarding the scope of comparison permitted under section 75(b), and in particular whether it is possible to compare jobs of an entirely different nature, requiring different qualifications and skills, to determine whether they are of equal value under section 75(a).

Application in practice. The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information in response to its previous observations regarding concrete measures taken to determine the nature, extent and causes of inequalities in remuneration that exist in practice, in order to identify specific measures to address these inequalities. The Committee once again urges the Government to undertake studies to determine the nature, extent and causes of inequalities in remuneration existing in practice between men and women for work of equal value in the public and private sectors, and to identify specific measures to address these inequalities. Please also provide full information on the occupational classification system referred to in the previous report, including information on the criteria used to ensure that this classification system is free from gender bias.

Thailand

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the comments of the National Congress of Thai Labour (NCTL).

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee notes that the Government states in very general terms that sections 15 and 53 of the Labour Protection Act (LPA), protect men and women in conformity with the principle of the Convention. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it urged the Government to amend section 53 of the LPA in order to ensure that legislation provides for equal remuneration for men and women not only for equal, the same or similar work, but also for different work which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee notes that the Government has not taken any steps to amend section 53 of the LPA. The Committee recalls that provisions that are narrower than the principle laid down in the Convention hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination, because they do not reflect the concept of "work of equal value". The Committee notes however that the Government plans to conduct a study on the understanding of the principle of the Convention and has taken steps to improve awareness of the concept of "equal remuneration for work of equal value" through publicising the Committee's general observation of 2006. The Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 53 of the LPA in order to include the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value explicitly. Please also provide information on the results achieved through the study and the activities undertaken to publicise the principle of the Convention.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1991)

Anti-discrimination legislation. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Law on Prevention and Protection against Discrimination on 8 April 2010, which entered into force on 1 January 2011. The law, which applies to both the public and the private sectors, covers, inter alia, work, labour relations and education. It defines and prohibits direct and indirect discrimination based on “sex, race, skin colour, gender, belonging to a marginalized group, ethnic origin, language, citizenship, social origin, religion or confession, other types of belief, education, political belonging, personal or social status, mental and physical disability, age, family or marital status, property status, health condition or any other ground established by the law or by ratified international agreements”, thus covering all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention as well as a number of additional grounds pursuant to Article 1(1)(b). The law also makes provision for addressing victimization and creates a category of “more severe forms of discrimination” which includes multiple, repeated or prolonged discrimination. It also provides for the adoption of affirmative action measures until actual equality is achieved and sets out the procedure to be established regarding discrimination claims being brought before the Commission for Protection against Discrimination and before the courts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legal and practical measures taken to implement the 2010 Law on prevention and protection against discrimination with respect to the prohibition of discrimination and its exceptions in the fields of employment and occupation, in particular any affirmative action measures taken to achieve equality in employment and occupation and any special protective measures taken in favour of certain categories of persons. It further asks the Government to indicate the manner in which the provisions regarding the “most severe forms of discrimination” are being applied in practice, and to provide any information on judicial or administrative decisions handed down in this respect.

Trinidad and Tobago

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1997)

Assessment of the gender pay gap. The Committee recalls that in 2007 women earned 80.3 per cent of men’s monthly income (average and median), and that the gender wage gap was highest in the occupational group of service and sales workers (47 per cent) and legislators, senior officials and managers (39.4 per cent). The Committee notes the Government’s indication that according to the Central Statistical Office’s Continuous Sample Survey of the Population for the year 2009, women dominated the lower income groups, while men dominated the higher income groups; the total number of persons earning less than Trinidad Tobago dollars (TTD) 500 per month is 5,392, two-thirds of whom were women. Within the income brackets of TTD500–999, TTD1,000–1,499 and TTD1,500–1,999, the majority were women, while men fell within the higher income brackets between TTD2,000–2,999 and TTD15,000 or over. The Government also indicates that approximately 21 per cent of men were employed in agriculture, forestry, hunting and fishing, while approximately 23 per cent of women were employed in the wholesale and retail trade, restaurants and the hotel industry. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to address the persistent gender pay gap, and the occupational segregation of men and women. It also asks the Government to continue to provide detailed statistical information on the earnings of men and women according to occupational group and industry, as well as on an hourly basis, if possible.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislation. Recalling that the Equal Opportunity Act, 2000, contains no specific provisions regarding equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and noting that the Government provides no response to its previous requests in this regard, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and to provide information in this regard.

Collective agreements. The Committee previously asked the Government to provide information on the progress made in removing sex discriminatory clauses from collective agreements. Noting that the Government once again has not replied to this request, the Committee urges the Government to provide this information in its next report. It also asks the Government to provide the report of the Joint Working Party on Reclassification regarding all the jobs in the bargaining unit represented by the National Union of Government and Federated Workers, which has still not been received.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1970)

Legislation. Equal Opportunity Commission. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the functioning of the Equal Opportunity Commission established by section 26(1) of the Equal Opportunity Act, 2000, which commenced operation in April 2008 with the appointment of the first commissioners. The Commission is divided into six units. Its legal officers were appointed in October 2009 and the investigative officers in January 2010. From April 2008 to August 2011, it received 503 complaints, 380 of which have been resolved and completed, 19 are currently being conciliated or mediated and 24 are waiting to be filed at the Equal Opportunity Tribunal. Eighty complaints are currently being investigated. The Commission has also held panel discussions on the promotion of equality with a special focus on employment, disability and gender. The Committee further notes that the Commission has suggested some amendments to the Equal Opportunity Act, 2000, and that the Equal Opportunity (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill, 2011, has been drafted which has been reviewed by the Law Review Commission and is currently due to be debated in Parliament before the end of 2011. The Committee notes that the Bill includes age and HIV and AIDS as prohibited grounds of discrimination and eliminates the condition of intention for the establishment of direct or indirect discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on any developments concerning the adoption of the Equal Opportunity (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill, 2011, as well as on the activities undertaken by the Equal Opportunity Commission, including the complaints dealt with, and those referred to the Equal Opportunity Tribunal.

Discrimination based on sex. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments expressing concern about the discriminatory nature of the provisions of several government regulations, which provide that married female officers may have their employment terminated if family obligations affect their efficient performance of duties (section 57 of the Public Service Commission Regulations; section 52 of the Police Commission Regulations; and section 58 of the Statutory Authorities' Service Commission Regulation). It also noted that a female officer who marries must report the fact of her marriage to the Public Service Commission (section 14(2) of the Civil Service Regulations). With respect to section 14(2) of the Civil Service Regulations, the Committee had taken note of the Government's view that this provision is not considered discriminatory in Trinidad and Tobago, as it is an administrative matter related to the practice of women changing their names upon marriage. The Committee had also noted the Government's indication that steps were being taken so as to amend the Civil Service Regulations to require notification of name change of both men and women. Noting that the Government's report does not refer to this issue and given the serious nature of the matter, the Committee urges the Government once again to take the necessary action to bring the regulations concerned into conformity with the Convention, and to indicate in its next report the specific steps taken, the progress made and any difficulties encountered in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Tunisia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes that a constituent assembly was elected on 23 October 2011. In this context, the Committee hopes that, in the process of legislative reform that would be expected to accompany the adoption of the new Constitution, the matters on which it has been commenting for many years will be taken into account so as to ensure the full conformity of the legislation with the Convention. Noting that the Government's report does not contain information in reply to its previous observation, the Committee recalls that it read as follows:

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. National policy relating to discrimination on grounds other than sex. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has once again failed to provide any details on the measures adopted to combat discrimination on grounds of race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion and social origin in the context of a national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its indication that under article 6 of the Constitution all Tunisians have the same rights and the same duties and are equal before the law. It also notes the Government's indication that the competent services of the Ministry of Employment and the Vocational Integration of Youth have not reported any case of discrimination based on race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin in relation to employment and occupation, and that no complaints have been registered by the administrative services or the courts.

The Committee once again reminds the Government that constitutional provisions providing for equal protection under law are not sufficient in themselves to ensure the full application of the Convention. Similarly, the fact that the authorities have not received any complaints does not mean that there is no discrimination in the country. The Committee considers that this may on the other hand indicate that the victims either have an inadequate knowledge of the relevant legal provisions and dispute resolution procedures available, or fear possible reprisals by the employer. The Committee also wishes to emphasize once again that Article 2 of the Convention requires the Government to declare and pursue a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment with a view to eliminating any discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of the criteria set out in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to:

- (i) consider in the context of a national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment adopting legislation explicitly prohibiting discrimination based on race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion or social origin, and to take concrete measures to eliminate such discrimination in practice;
- (ii) take measures to raise awareness in the public and among the social partners of the principles set out in the Convention and the legal provisions relating to equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation;
- (iii) take measures, for example in the form of studies, to evaluate the effectiveness of dispute resolution procedures, including any difficulties of a practical nature encountered by men or women workers in obtaining legal redress for discrimination based on any of the grounds set out in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

United Kingdom

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the majority of the provisions of the Equality Act 2010, which the Government indicates brings together nine major pieces of discrimination legislation and approximately 100 statutory instruments, came into force in October 2010, with some provisions, including those related to the public sector equality duty, scheduled to enter into force in April 2011. Legislation that has been repealed as a consequence of the adoption of the Equality Act includes the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, the Race Relations Act 1976, the Sex Discrimination Act 1986, and the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

The Committee notes with interest that the new Act addresses discrimination on the basis of an expanded range of grounds (protected characteristics set out in section 4), namely age, disability, gender reassignment, marriage and civil partnership, pregnancy and maternity, race, religion or belief, sex, and sexual orientation, a number of which are additional grounds as foreseen in Article 1(1)(b) of the Convention. Discrimination on these grounds is prohibited in access to employment, promotion, transfer, training, terms and benefits, facilities or services, dismissal or any other detriment, as well as occupational pensions; also with respect to contract workers; and in the context of employment services, which include vocational training and guidance (sections 39–41, 55–56 and 61). The Committee also notes that positive action is provided for in relation to recruitment and promotion (sections 158–159). The Act also provides that workers' and employers' organizations must not discriminate with respect to membership, benefits, facilities and services (section 57). The Committee notes further that the existing race, disability and gender equality duties have been brought together under the Equality Act, and there is now a single equality duty for public bodies, covering all the protected characteristics listed above, with the exception of marriage and civil partnership (section 149(7)). Pursuant to section 149, a public authority must have due regard to the need to eliminate discrimination, harassment and victimization; advance equality of opportunity; and foster good relations between those who share a protected characteristic and those who do not. It also allows for affirmative action. Pursuant to section 153, a Minister of the Crown, the Welsh Ministers and the Scottish Ministers may by regulation impose duties on a public authority, and section 155 provides for the possibility of imposing duties on a public authority that is a contracting authority in connection with its public procurement functions through regulations. The Committee also notes that the public sector equality duty "does not confer a cause of action at private law" (section 156). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Equality Act 2010 as it relates to employment and occupation, including practical measures taken, the number and nature of cases brought and the results achieved. Please also provide information on the adoption of relevant regulations under the Act, including with respect to Wales and Scotland. The Committee also requests information on the application and impact of the public sector equality duty, including its application in the context of public procurement, as well as specific information on how the equality duty is monitored and enforced. The Committee also asks the Government to provide specific information on the role of the Government Equality Office, the Equality and Human Rights Commission and the Women and Work Commission in the implementation of the Act. Noting the Government's indication that it is considering how to implement the new equality duty in a way that is best for business, public bodies and the public, the Committee asks the Government to provide specific information on steps taken in this regard.

Review of Equality Act and austerity measures. The Committee notes from the report of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) that in the context of the austerity measures adopted in response to the current economic downturn, the measures envisaged under the Equality Act are under scrutiny, and CERD expresses concern that some of the State's achievements in the fight against inequality and discrimination are under threat of being diluted or reversed (CERD/C/GBR/CO/18-20, 14 September 2011, paragraph 13). The Committee urges the Government to monitor carefully the impact of the austerity measures on the employment situation of groups particularly vulnerable to the impact of the economic crisis, so as to address effectively any direct and indirect discrimination that may occur in employment and occupation on the grounds set out in the Convention. The Committee further hopes that the Government will make every effort to ensure that the measures envisaged under the Equality Act and progress achieved through previous action taken to address discrimination and promote equality of opportunity and treatment will not be adversely affected by the austerity measures, and asks the Government to provide information in this regard.

Northern Ireland. The Committee notes that the Equality Act is not applicable in Northern Ireland. The Committee also notes from a report of the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland of January 2011, that it considers that as a result of the enactment of the Equality Act, vulnerable and marginalized individuals in Northern Ireland have less protection against unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimization than those in Great Britain, and there is a need to streamline and modernise Northern Ireland equality law. The Commission provides a number of proposals for legislative reform in this context. The Committee also notes that while the Government provides information on the composition of the workforce by religion, no information is provided with respect to the Committee's previous comments. The Committee has for a number of years raised concerns regarding the Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order, 1998, which excludes teachers from the protection against discrimination on the ground of religious belief, thus constituting a hindrance to the equal opportunity and treatment of schoolteachers in Northern Ireland. The Committee again urges the Government to take steps to ensure that the applicable legislation no longer includes the exemption with regard to discrimination against schoolteachers on the ground of religious belief and asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard, as well as information on the following:

- (i) the follow-up given to the proposals for legislative reform of the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland, including improving protection against discrimination based on colour or nationality; and
- (ii) the implementation of the Race Equality Strategy for Northern Ireland.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uruguay

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1989)

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Act No. 18561 of 18 August 2009 concerning sexual harassment at work and in teaching relationships. In keeping with the 2002 general observation, the Act contains standards relating to the prevention of and penalties for such acts and covers both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment (section 2). The Act also imposes the obligation on the State to formulate and implement awareness-raising, education and supervision policies for the prevention of sexual harassment, establishes obligations for the employer in the event of a complaint, provides for measures to protect victims and witnesses against reprisals in the wake of the complaint (section 12) and lays down penalties. The Labour and Social Security Inspectorate-General (IGTSS) is the competent body in the public and private spheres for monitoring compliance with the Law. The Government adds that various activities, including for ministry officials, public enterprises and departmental supervisory bodies, have been undertaken by the Tripartite Commission on Equality of Opportunity and Treatment in Employment (CTIOTE) and by the National Institute for Women, to raise awareness and disseminate the Law and materials for dissemination have been produced. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application and impact of Act No. 18561 concerning sexual harassment, the number of complaints filed on the basis of the Act and the outcomes thereof.

Article 1(1)(b). Other legislative measures. Persons with disabilities. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 18651 of 19 February 2010, which establishes a comprehensive protection system for persons with disabilities aimed, inter alia, at ensuring their occupational reintegration and at avoiding exploitation and discriminatory, abusive or degrading treatment. The Act also provides that the State will provide assistance in vocational training to persons with disabilities and will provide incentives for bodies that employ them. In addition, the State, government departments, autonomous entities, decentralized services and non-State associations are obliged to fill at least 4 per cent of vacancies with persons with disabilities who meet aptitude criteria for the posts concerned. The Committee requests the Government to send information, including statistics, on the impact of Act No. 18651 in practice.

Part III of the report form. Complaint procedures. In its previous observations, the Committee referred to the observations of the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers – Workers’ National Convention (PIT–CNT) concerning the need to establish flexible complaint mechanisms to resolve disputes involving discrimination at work. The Committee asked the Government to provide an assessment of the operation of existing complaint procedures within the IGTSS, indicating whether these procedures provide for the reversal of the burden of proof and protection against reprisals. The Committee observes that the Government’s report does not contain any information in this respect. The Committee therefore again requests the Government to undertake an assessment of the operation of existing complaint procedures within the IGTSS, indicating whether these procedures provide for a reversal of the burden of proof and protection against reprisals, and to continue to provide information on the complaints of discrimination lodged and the outcome thereof.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1971)

Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee has been referring for some years to the observations made by the National Single Federation of Public Employees (FEDE–UNEP) and the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV) concerning threats, harassment, transfers, the worsening of working conditions and the dismissal of employees of the Central and Decentralized National Public Administration due to their participation in the collection of signatures to initiate a referendum to revoke the public offices assigned by popular election. The names of the workers who signed the proposal for a referendum were, according to the trade union organizations, published prior to their dismissal on a list on the Internet (known as the Tascón list), which was used as a source of information for reprisals. According to the observations made by the CTV in 2007, such reprisals continued despite the indication by the President of the Republic that the list should be discarded. The Committee has also been referring since 2007 to: (1) the observations made by the CTV concerning the dismissal of 19,500 workers from Petróleos de Venezuela (PDVSA) which, according to the CTV, were motivated by political reasons; (2) the pressure exerted on public officials to join the political party established by the President of the Republic; and (3) the requirement for soldiers and officers to shout the slogan “fatherland, socialism or death”, under the menace of the threat by the President of the Republic that anyone not prepared to do so must resign.

In this respect, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the dismissal of workers from the PDVSA consisted of a labour measure adopted against a group of workers on the basis of their failure to discharge their work-related duties and violations of the national Constitution and laws. According to the Government the active and flagrant participation by this group of workers in disputes, sabotage and unlawful paralysis of the oil industry was noted by the competent bodies of the State. The Government adds that it has the necessary measures to avoid any discriminatory act or practice against citizens and that there is a legal framework as well as bodies entrusted with remedying and penalizing failure to comply with the legal and constitutional provisions prohibiting discrimination. The Government refers once again to article 67 of the Constitution and indicates that it is not compulsory to belong to a political party. In this respect, the Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has confined itself once again to reiterating its previous comments and has not provided additional information. The Committee notes in particular that, although the Government indicates that the events which occurred in the PDVSA were the subject of an investigation by State bodies, it does not indicate precisely which body undertook the investigation, nor does it attach a copy of the findings of the investigation. The Committee has indicated that, in protecting individuals against discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of political opinion, the Convention implies that this protection shall be afforded to them in respect of activities expressing or demonstrating opposition to established political principles, since the protection of opinions which are neither expressed nor demonstrated would be pointless (see the General Survey of 1988 on equality in employment and occupation, paragraph 57). The Committee once again strongly urges the Government to:

- (i) take all the necessary measures to conduct an independent investigation into the alleged acts and to provide specific information on its findings; and
- (ii) take concrete measures to ensure that workers in both the public and private sectors are not subjected to discrimination due to their political opinions, and to provide information on the results achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Viet Nam

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1997)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Definition of remuneration. The Committee notes that in its previous comments, the Committee sought clarification from the Government as to whether the equal pay provisions of the Labour Code and the Law on Gender Equality covered all aspects of remuneration as defined by Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee had also recommended that in the context of future legislative revisions, a clear definition of remuneration in line with the Convention be included and that the principle of equal remuneration be applied to all components of remuneration. The Committee notes that no clear definition of remuneration in line with Article 1(a) of the Convention has been included in the draft Labour Code, despite the Committee’s recommendations. The Committee recalls once again, the importance of defining remuneration in broad terms, encompassing not only “the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary” but also “any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker’s employment”, in order to fully apply the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to introduce a provision in legislation defining remuneration in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention and to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value is applied in respect of all components of remuneration.

Article 1(b). Work of equal value. The Committee has previously raised concerns that the provisions of the Labour Code (section 111) and the Law on Gender Equality (section 13) which provide for equal remuneration for equal work, are narrower than the Convention, which provides for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes that under the Convention, men and women performing jobs of a different nature, which are nonetheless of equal value, should also receive equal remuneration. The Committee had urged the Government in the context of the planned comprehensive revision of the Labour Code, to take the opportunity to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee notes the Government’s response indicating that it has not taken the opportunity of the revision process to include a provision giving full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention because it considers it to be difficult to define equal value for jobs of a different nature. In terms of how to determine equal value, the Committee draws the Government’s attention to Article 3 of the Convention which presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions. The Committee also recalls that different methods of job evaluation can be developed, and that for the purpose of ensuring gender equality in the determination of remuneration, analytical methods of job evaluation have been found to be most effective (see General Survey of 1986, paras 138 to 142). The Committee again urges the Government to take measures in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and encourages the Government to seek ILO assistance in this regard.

Assessment of the gender wage gap. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted that in the public sector, the average monthly income of women amounted to 92 per cent of men's, while in the private sector and in the foreign invested sector it accounted, respectively, for 75.9 per cent and 65.5 per cent of men's income. The Committee also previously noted the findings of the Viet Nam Country Gender Assessment of 2006 according to which the gender wage gap existing in the country resulted from sex-based labour market segregation due, inter alia, to "widespread discrimination against women in recruitment" and the "low value attached to women's work in particular sectors". The Committee notes from the statistics provided by the Government that during 2007 and 2008, women accounted for 49.3 per cent of the total workforce and represented approximately 50 per cent of workers in most sectors of economic activity. The Government states that this is evidence that sex-based discrimination in recruitment and employment is not problematic. No information is provided on the evaluation of the gender wage gap or measures taken or envisaged to address the wage gap. The Committee once again urges the Government to take appropriate measures to reduce the gender wage gap and address its underlying causes and asks it to provide information on the implementation of such measures. With a view to monitoring and addressing the gender wage gap, the Committee asks the Government to collect and provide more specific statistical data, disaggregated by sex, on the distribution of men and women in different sectors of economic activity, occupational categories and positions and their corresponding earnings both in the private and public sectors.

Parts III and IV of the report form. Enforcement. The Committee notes with interest that training to detect unequal pay for men and women, for judges, labour inspectors and other labour officials has been incorporated in the general programmes of dissemination and education of the Labour Code and that specific training on the Convention was provided in 2008 and 2009 on those in provincial labour departments. The Committee notes the Government's indication that out of the 799 enterprises inspected during 2007–10, no cases of violations of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value were registered. The Committee recalls that the absence of complaints does not necessarily mean that the Convention and the national legislation are effectively applied and is more likely to indicate a lack of awareness of the rights, a lack of confidence in or absence of practical access to procedures, or fear of reprisals. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the training offered to judges, inspectors and other labour officials, as well as information on the impact of such training on detecting and addressing unequal pay. Please provide any information on decisions handed down by courts of other competent bodies with regard to the application of the Convention as well as on any violations detected by or brought to the attention of the labour inspectorate services, the sanctions imposed and the remedies provided.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1997)

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Labour Code is in the process of being amended. The Committee notes that section 9(1) of the draft Labour Code prohibits discrimination based on the grounds of gender, race, social class, belief or religion, and omits the grounds of colour, national extraction and political opinion. The Committee further notes that the prohibition only covers discrimination in employment, the labour relationship and work, and does not cover all aspects of employment and occupation included in the Convention, namely access to vocational training and education, vocational guidance and placement services, recruitment, advancement, security of tenure of employment, remuneration for work of equal value, and terms and conditions of employment. The Committee asks the Government to take the opportunity of the legislative revision process to include provisions in the Labour Code explicitly defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, namely sex, race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, in all areas of employment and occupation. Please provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Sexual harassment. The Committee welcomes the Government's intention to include a specific provision concerning sexual harassment in the Labour Code which is in the process of being revised. The Committee notes however that section 9(2) of the draft Labour Code prohibiting "sexual harassment against employees" does not provide a definition of sexual harassment and does not indicate whether both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment are covered. The Committee also notes that measures are being taken to raise awareness on sexual harassment, such as launching an information campaign with the participation of the media. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the adoption of section 9 of the draft Labour Code, prohibiting sexual harassment, and encourages the Government to take steps in order to include a clear definition and prohibition of both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment in employment and occupation. The Committee also asks the Government to provide more information on the information campaign and other measures taken to raise awareness on sexual harassment amongst workers, employers and their organizations. Please also indicate the relevant procedures and remedies which are currently available under the legislation to address complaints of sexual harassment.

Restrictions on women's employment. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted that labour laws and regulations are revised on a yearly basis, including the list of occupations from which women are barred. The Committee notes that the Government has provided a list of draft revisions to be brought to Circular No. 3/TT-LB of 28 January 1994, setting out the harmful and dangerous jobs from which women are barred while removing some occupations, the list also adds four new occupations from which all women workers would be barred (operator of cement packing machine, cleaner of a cylinder in a cement factory, operator of a production and bottling of HCl acid and operator of equipment for drying, liquefying and bottling). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Circular needs to be revised to prohibit the employment of women when jobs adversely affect female workers more than male workers, as is the case when a female worker is pregnant or feeding a small child, and the harmful or dangerous factors may adversely affect the child. The Government also indicates that the possible use of the general criteria of a job "not suitable to the mental and psychological setting of female workers" is being studied and clarified. The Committee considers that such broad and general restrictions based on a job "not suitable to the mental and psychological setting of female workers" would be discriminatory and contrary to the Convention. The Committee recalls that protective measures for women should not go beyond maternity protection, and that those aimed at protecting women generally because of their sex or gender, based on stereotypical perceptions about their suitability, capabilities and appropriate role in society are contrary to the Convention and constitute obstacles to the recruitment and employment of women. The Committee also notes that provisions relating to the protection of persons working in harmful or dangerous jobs should be aimed at protecting the health and safety of both women and men at work. The Committee asks the Government to take measures in order to ensure that in the upcoming revision of Circular No. 3/TT/LB of 28 January 1994, it is made clear that the restrictions are limited to women who are pregnant or nursing. The Committee also asks the Government to ensure that in the revision of the Labour Code, any protective measures for women are limited to maternity protection.

Discriminatory recruitment practices based on sex. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted the discriminatory practices affecting women in recruitment, such as giving preference to male job applicants and discouraging female applicants by establishing requirements prohibiting marriage and pregnancy during a certain period following recruitment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that measures have been taken to put an end to the discriminatory practices affecting women in recruitment and employment, such as the inclusion of section 32 in the draft of the revised Labour Code prohibiting employers to "force the worker to comply with such obligations which limit his/her legitimate rights" when an employment contract is being concluded. The Committee also notes that Decree No. 55/2009/ND-CP of 10 June 2009, regulating administrative sanctions on violations of gender equality, sets out in section 8(2)(a) a fine of 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 Vietnamese dong (VND) for employers who "refuse or limit the employment of male or female due to gender reasons, except such that support gender equality, dismiss an employee for gender reasons or pregnancy, maternity leave or having children". The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress of the adoption of section 32 of the draft Labour Code and on the practical application of section 8(2)(a) of Decree No. 55/2009/ND-CP of 10 June 2009, and to take measures in order to monitor their application and to effectively eliminate discriminatory recruitment practices affecting women.

Discrimination based on political opinion, colour and national extraction. The Committee notes the Government's repeated statement that no discrimination on the basis of political opinion, colour and national extraction exists in Viet Nam. The Committee notes the Government's indication that article 5 of the Constitution prohibits discrimination based on political opinion and article 54 provides for the right to vote without discrimination based on certain grounds, including national extraction. The Committee also notes that section 9(1) of the draft Labour Code, which prohibits discrimination on certain grounds, omits the grounds of colour, national extraction and political opinion. The Committee emphasizes once again that combating discrimination is an ongoing process and that the absence of discriminatory provisions in the law, and the fact that no complaints have been raised with the authorities, are not indications of the absence of discrimination. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any practical measures taken to ensure full application of the Convention with respect to equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of political opinion, national extraction and colour.

Discrimination based on religion. The Committee notes that section 9 of the draft Labour Code includes the ground of religion in the prohibition of discrimination. The Committee had previously requested information on the application of section 8 of the Ordinance No. 21/2004/PL-UBTVQH11 which prohibits discrimination on religious grounds, and more particularly with respect to persons whose religion was not recognized under section 16 of the Ordinance. The Government indicates that Decree No. 22/2005/NP-CP provides detailed instructions on the implementation of the Ordinance. The Committee also notes that Directive No. 01/2005/CT-TTg was adopted by the Prime Minister on 4 February 2005 concerning Protestantism, prohibiting in section 2 attempts to force people to follow or to abandon a religion. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that approximately 85 per cent of the population follow a religion, which accounts for 25 million people and that 32 religious organizations have been recognized by the Government. The Government also indicates that the main religions in Viet Nam are Buddhism (10 million followers), Catholicism (6 million), Cao Dai (2.4 million), Hao Hao Buddhism (1.3 million), Protestantism (1.5 million), Islam (1.5 million), Tink do Cu sy Buddhism (1.5 million) and Baha'i (7,000). The Committee asks the Government to provide more specific information on Decree No. 22/2005/ND-CP and to indicate whether it gives any instructions on applying section 16 of Ordinance No. 21/2004/PL/UBTVQH11 setting the conditions for religions to be recognized, and to indicate whether any religious organizations have been refused recognition. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the application of Directive No. 01/2005/CT-TTg and to indicate any further measures taken to protect persons against discrimination in employment and occupation.

Measures affecting individuals who are justifiably suspected of, or engaged in, activities prejudicial to the security of the State. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted that persons upon whom a ban under section 36 of the Penal Code has been imposed have the right to appeal the decision within 15 days of the date of conviction and that courts had issued various verdicts banning persons from holding certain posts, practising certain occupations or doing certain jobs. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in practice, bans can be imposed when the court judges that the continuation of the work by the convicted person may cause a danger for the society, and that this could be the case in about 100 acts criminalized by the Penal Code, such as acts to infringe life, health, dignity of a person, acts to infringe freedom of citizens, drug-related crimes, acts to infringe public order and security or acts to infringe juridical activities. The Committee asks the Government to provide information related to the verdicts banning persons from holding certain posts, practising certain occupations or doing certain jobs, the offences in connection with which such bans have been imposed and the number and nature of the appeals lodged and the outcomes thereof.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Yemen

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

National policy on equality of opportunity with respect to political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Committee regrets to note the Government's failure to reply to the Committee's repeated requests for information on the measures taken to adopt and implement a national policy with respect to all the grounds set out in the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate steps to collect and provide detailed information on all the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that no discrimination on the basis of political opinion, national extraction and social origin occurs in employment and occupation in accordance with Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite consultation

Bangladesh

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1979)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report received in September 2011 in reply to its 2009 observation. The Government recalls that it has constituted the Tripartite Consultative Council (TCC) in conformity with the Convention. It further reports that the TCC is currently composed of 60 members having equal representation from employers' organizations, workers' organizations and government. The Labour and Employment Minister is the Chairman of the TCC. All issues related to labour including wages, employment conditions and child labour, as well as labour standards, are discussed in the TCC. Decisions are taken through consultation and actions are taken per agreement. The Committee notes that the Government has formulated the National Child Labour Elimination Policy, 2010, which was discussed in the TCC. It also notes that the Government has declared a minimum wage for the Ready Made Garments (RMG) sector following tripartite consultations. The Government indicates in its report that a tripartite committee has been formed to review the Bangladesh Labour Act, 2006. The next TCC meeting will discuss the revised Labour Act, once it is finalized. The Committee requests the Government to provide a report containing more detailed information on the effective consultations held by the Tripartite Consultative Council on the matters relating to international labour standards listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention. In this respect, the Committee hopes that the next report will include information on reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations covered by the Convention.

Burundi

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2007 observation which read as follows:

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government stated in a brief report received in November 2007 that it has prepared a note on Conventions to ratify or denunciate. This note has been transmitted to the Burundi Employers Association (AEB) and the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU). The result of these consultations will be communicated to the ILO. Referring to its 2006 observation, the Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide detailed information on the content and results of tripartite consultations held during the period covered by the report, on questions concerning international labour standards, and in particular on the reports to be made to the ILO as well as the re-examination of unratified Conventions and of Recommendations (Article 5(1)(c) and (d)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Chad

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2009 observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 5(1) of the Convention. Consultation mechanisms and effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in October 2009. The Government refers to a Higher Committee for Labour and Social Security which is tripartite in composition. The Committee notes the Government's statement that no information is available on the consultations held during the period covered by the report on each of the items set out in Article 5(1). The Committee refers to the comments that it has been making since its examination of the first report and expresses the conviction that the Government and the social partners should endeavour to promote and strengthen tripartism and social dialogue on the matters covered by the Convention. The Committee refers to the 2008 Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, which reaffirms that "social dialogue and the practice of tripartism between governments and the representative organizations of workers and employers within and across borders are now more relevant to achieving solutions and to building up social cohesion and the rule of law through, among other means, international labour standards". The Committee therefore hopes that the Government's next report will contain detailed information on the consultations held on all the items covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention, and on the other points raised in its previous observations in relation to Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Chile

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1992)

Effective tripartite consultations. With reference to its 2009 observation, the Committee notes the Government's detailed reply received in September 2011. The Government recalls that there are no provisions in national law establishing rules to determine the most representative organizations in the light of international labour Conventions. In the context of the Convention, the Government considers the various organizations which by their number, sectoral representation and influence in local matters can be considered representative organizations and influential actors in labour matters in the country. The Government indicates that it has invited to comment on reports on the application of ratified Conventions the Confederation of Production and Trade (CPC), the National Confederation of Micro, Small and Medium-sized Enterprises of Chile (CONAPYME), the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT), the Autonomous Central Union of Workers (CAT) and the National Union of Workers (UNT) (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention). The Government indicates that it has the firm intention of continuing effective tripartite consultations with the most representative national bodies of workers and employers, but not exclusively with any one of them. The Committee refers to its 2009 observation in which it indicated that by using the phrase "representative organizations" in the plural, the Convention invites governments to include in the procedures those representative organizations which have indicated their interest in participating in the tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to include information in its next report on the effective tripartite consultations held with the representative organizations concerned in relation to international labour standards which are required by the Convention (Articles 2 and 5).

Article 5(1)(b). Tripartite consultations prior to the submission to the National Congress of the instruments adopted by the Conference. The Government indicates in its report that it has complied strictly with Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee refers to its observation on the obligation of submission envisaged in article 19(5) and (6) of the Constitution of the ILO in which it indicates that 28 instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference are awaiting submission. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effective consultations held with the social partners concerning the proposals made to the National Congress on the occasion of the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

China

Hong Kong Special Administrative Region

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (notification: 1997)

Article 3 of the Convention. Choice of workers' representatives. The Committee notes the Government's report dated July 2011 including information in response to its 2009 observation. The Government indicates that the Labour Advisory Body (LAB) aims to ensure effective tripartite consultation according to the most appropriate methods for the local circumstances of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR). The Government also recalls the notification of application with modification registered by the ILO on July 1997, regarding the application of Article 3 of the Convention, which states: employers and workers are represented by six members on each side on the LAB. Five of the employers' representatives are freely nominated by their respective associations and five workers' representatives are elected on a biannual basis by workers' trade unions in a secret ballot. The remaining members are direct appointees of the Chief Executive. The Government further indicates in its report that all registered employees' unions are allowed to participate in LAB and free to elect their representatives in accordance with transparent and well-tested methods that are deemed the most widely representative of the various workers' views.

Article 5. Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the Committee on the Implementation of International Labour Standards (CIILS) was consulted on the subjects listed in Article 5 and has duly replied to the comments made by the Committee of Experts. The Committee also notes that a tripartite team including representatives of the CIILS and the LAB was set up to attend the 98th and 99th Sessions of the Conference. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the activities of both the CIILS and the LAB on the matters concerning international labour standards as well as examples on the manner in which Article 5 is being implemented.

Colombia

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1999)

Strengthening of social dialogue and tripartite consultations. In the report received for the period ending May 2011, the Government indicates that, in accordance with the new structure established by Act No. 1444 of May 2011, the Ministry of Labour envisages stimulating and promoting the development of an industrial relations culture based on dialogue, conciliation and the conclusion of agreements which consolidate social and economic development, increased productivity, the direct resolution of individual and collective labour disputes and dialogue concerning wage and labour policies. The Government indicates that, in accordance with the above, full effect will be given to Convention No. 144. Nevertheless, the report does not contain information on the tripartite consultations held on each of the points enumerated in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee once again expresses its conviction that the Government and the social partners should endeavour to take tangible measures to promote and reinforce tripartism and social dialogue on matters relating to international labour standards covered by the Convention. The Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) made comments which were forwarded to the Government in September 2011. In their comments, they proposed to the Government that a labour agenda should be prepared and agreed upon specifically including the determination of dates for the discussion of international labour standards and for seeking their ratification. The Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on the manner in which the Government and the social partners have held “effective” consultations on international labour standards, as required by the Convention (Article 5(1)). The Committee recalls that the 2008 Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization identifies Convention No. 144 as one of the most significant instruments from the viewpoint of governance.

Tripartite consultations prior to submission to the Congress of the Republic of the instruments adopted by the Conference. With reference to its previous comments, the Government indicates in the report that it is a matter of serious concern that Conventions and Recommendations have not been submitted. The Committee notes that the Government intends to bring the matter to the Committee for Dialogue on Wage and Labour Policies to analyse the most expeditious manner of complying with the constitutional obligation of the submission of Conventions and Recommendations to the Congress of the Republic. The trade union organizations confirm in their comments that the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference have not been submitted to the Congress of the Republic for discussion nor put before the Committee for Dialogue on Wage and Labour Policies. The Committee refers to its observation on the obligation of submission envisaged in article 19(5) and (6) of the Constitution of the ILO. The Committee observes that 34 instruments adopted by the Conference are awaiting submission. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the effective consultations held with the social partners concerning the proposals made to the Congress of the Republic on the occasion of the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference (Article 5(1)(b)).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Côte d'Ivoire

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1987)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. Training. The Committee notes the communication of the General Confederation of Enterprises of Côte d'Ivoire (CGECI), which was forwarded to the Government in January 2011. It also notes the Government's replies to the 2009 observation, which were received in June 2011, and which include the report of the Tripartite Committee on ILO Matters. During the meeting of 20 December 2010, the Tripartite Committee discussed issues related to Article 5 of the Convention and also discussed the updating of its list of members. The representative of a workers' organization expressed the hope that all the members of the Committee would receive training so that they could discharge their duties appropriately. The CGECI expressed the hope that the Committee would operate on a regular basis, which the Government also confirmed in its report. The Committee invites the Government to provide detailed information on the “effective consultations” held during the period covered by the next report. It would welcome examining precise and detailed information on the consultations held on each of the issues set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention. It invites the Government to provide information on the arrangements made, possibly with ILO assistance, for the financing of any necessary training of participants in the consultation procedures on international labour standards required by the Convention (Article 4(2)).

Submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference. In its communication, the CGECI indicates that it has not been informed or consulted concerning the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference. The Government indicates that the process of submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference was initiated in November 2009. The Government adds that the instruments concerned were the subject of tripartite consultations. The Committee hopes that the process of the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1996 and 2011 will soon be completed and that the Government will provide precise and detailed information on the proposals submitted to the National Assembly, as required by Article 5(1)(b) of the Convention.

Czech Republic

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2000)

Effective tripartite consultations. Questions arising out of article 22 reports. The Committee notes the replies to the 2010 observation submitted by the Government in the report received in August 2011. The Government indicates that in order to provide enough time to social partners to assess the reports on the application of ratified Conventions, all reports were prepared by the Government by 31 July 2011 and sent to the most representative organizations of workers and employers for consultation on 5 August 2011. Comments of the social partners were discussed at the tripartite meeting for the cooperation with the ILO of the Working Team of the Council and Economic and Social Agreement on 24 August 2011. A period of 12 working days was provided for report assessment. The Committee notes with satisfaction the efforts in implementing measures to achieve the best possible procedures in promoting effective consultations required by the Convention. It invites the Government to continue to report on measures taken to promote tripartite consultations on international labour standards and on any follow-up to recommendations derived from such consultations.

Re-examination of unratified Conventions. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that the ratification of the last governance Conventions – the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) – was registered in March 2011. The Committee notes that the issue of ratifying the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), and the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), was discussed in two meetings in 2011. The tripartite meetings did not reach an agreement. The Government expresses its intention to use the reporting obligations pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution as a suitable opportunity to gain practical experience from other ILO Members, as well as to obtain opinions from the supervisory bodies. The Government adds that the issue of ratifying Conventions Nos 151 and 154 should be included in the agenda of the Working Team of the CESA at a later stage. The Committee would welcome the Government to include information in its next report on Convention No. 144 on any other consultations held to re-examine the prospects of ratification of unratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention).

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 2 and 5(1) of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. In its observation of 2010 the Committee noted the ministerial orders adopted after consultation of the National Labour Council in order to apply the Labour Code and the reports of the extraordinary meetings of the National Labour Council held in July 2005 and March 2008. The Government also indicated that in September 2007 a new forum for the social partners was opened in the form of the Standing Committee on Social Dialogue, in order to discuss economic and social issues. In a brief report received in June 2011, the Government indicates that it will provide relevant information in the future on the effective submission to Parliament of the 28 instruments adopted at the 13 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2010. The Committee refers the Government to its observation of 2011 concerning the obligation of submission established in Article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the ILO Constitution, in which it notes that the 30 instruments adopted by the Conference have still not been the subject of this submission. It requests the Government to report on any consultations held with the social partners concerning the proposals made to Parliament on the occasion of the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to announce further progress on tripartite consultations held on each of the matters relating to international labour standards covered by the Convention.

Article 3. Choice of employers' and workers' representatives. The Committee recalls that trade union elections were held for the fifth time between October 2008 and July 2009. It requests the Government to indicate who were the employers' and workers' representatives chosen for the purpose of tripartite consultations covered by the Convention and to state the manner in which it was ensured that they were freely chosen by their representative organizations.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Djibouti

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its 2008 direct request, which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 3(1) of the Convention. Participation of representative organizations. The Committee notes the Government's first report on the application of the Convention received in May 2008. It notes in particular that, under section 215 of the Labour Code, the representative nature of trade union organizations shall be determined by the result of professional elections. According to the Government, the first professional elections are due to be held in 2008. Referring to the issues concerning freedom of association dealt with by the Committee on Freedom of Association, as well as its comments on the application of Convention No. 87, the Committee requests the Government to specify the manner in which the representatives of employers and workers were chosen, enabling them to freely undertake the tripartite consultations required by Convention No. 144.

Article 4(2). Financing of training. The Committee noted that two tripartite workshops have been organized, one with the assistance of the ILO in March 2008 and the other in cooperation with the Arab Centre for Labour Administration and Employment in November 2007. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to indicate in its next report the arrangements made for the financing of the necessary training of participants in the consultative procedures.

Article 5(1)(c) and (e). Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Government indicates that, in accordance with section 3 of Decree No. 2008-0023/PR/MESN of 20 January 2008 regulating the organization and operation of the National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training, the Council may give technical and legal advice on the proper implementation or possible denunciation of the international labour conventions to which Djibouti is a party. In the annex to the report, the Government has forwarded the recommendations made by the participants in the tripartite workshop held in March 2008. The recommendations show in particular that the Government was encouraged to ratify Conventions Nos 135 and 158. Furthermore, in its comments on Convention No. 96, the Committee of Experts invited the Government and the social partners to consider ratifying Convention No. 181. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held in the National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training on each of the matters relating to international labour standards referred to in Article 5(1) of the Convention. Please also indicate whether tripartite consultations have been held on the ratification of Conventions Nos 135, 158 and 181.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Fiji

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1998)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report received in May 2011. The Government indicates that the Employment Relations Advisory Board (ERAB) convened five meetings in 2010, three of which were special board meetings to discuss issues relating to the country's national minimum wage. It also indicates that all government policies that are raised through the ERAB are dealt with on a tripartite basis as required under section 8(1) of the Employment Relations Promulgation 2007. The ERAB is composed of two women, a representative from the Fiji National Council of Disabled Persons (FNCDP), along with representatives from the government, employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee also recalls the ratification in January 2010 of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129). The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the consultations held on each of the matters relating to international labour standards set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, indicating the nature of any reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations.

Grenada

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Tripartite consultations required under the Convention. The Committee notes that the brief statement contained in the report submitted by the Government in November 2009 does not provide any information on the consultations required on the Convention. It must invite again the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure effective tripartite consultations within the meaning of the Convention, including detailed information on the consultations held by the Labour Advisory Board on each of the subjects concerning international labour standards listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guinea

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the following matters raised in its 2006 direct request, which read as follows:

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In a report received in May 2005, the Government recalled that, with a view to holding tripartite consultations on matters relating to ILO activities, it established an Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation (CCTLS) in 1995. However, the Government recognized that this body has met rarely since its establishment and that there has been no tripartite dialogue on the items on the agenda of the Conference. The Government indicated that this situation is due, among other factors, to the lack of reaction of the social partners. Furthermore, the Government reported that, following a tripartite workshop on international labour standards held in October 2004, the Department of Employment and the Public Service renewed the officers of the CCTLS and relaunched legislative activities. The Committee expresses again the firm hope that the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on the measures adopted to ensure effective tripartite consultations on the matters covered by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide reports regularly containing detailed information on the consultations held on all the subjects covered by Article 5(1), including precise information on the activities of the Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation.

Article 4. Financing of training. The Government indicated that there are no specific arrangements for the training of participants. However, when training is initiated at the national level by the competent authority in the context of social consultations, it is generally tripartite in nature. In this respect, the Committee recalls that, where training for participants in the consultations proves to be necessary to enable them to perform their functions effectively, its financing should be covered by appropriate arrangements between the Government and the representative organizations (see General Survey on tripartite consultation, 2000, paragraphs 125 and 126). It requests the Government to take measures for this purpose and to describe in its next report, where appropriate, the content of these arrangements (Article 4(2)). Finally, the Government indicated that a training programme was envisaged in the context of the Regional Programme for the Promotion of Social Dialogue in French-speaking Africa (PRODIAF), but that, in the absence of any reaction by the social partners, it was limited to activities initiated by the Ministry of Employment and the Public Service and carried out at the national level. The Committee requests the Government to describe in its next report the training activities undertaken in relation to international labour standards. It also requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in the implementation of the PRODIAF programme in relation to the necessary training for participants in the consultation procedures, as required by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations which read as follows:

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the brief replies supplied by the Government in May 2006 to its 2003 direct request. It refers to its previous comments and recalls again that certain subjects covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention (replies to subparagraphs (a), submissions to the National Assembly (b), reports to be made to the ILO (d)) involve annual consultation, while others (re-examination of unratified Conventions and of Recommendations (c), proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions (e)) call for less frequent examination. The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the frequency of consultations and to provide any reports or recommendations resulting therefrom (Article 5(2)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Indonesia

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1990)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in August 2011 to its 2009 observation. The Government indicates that the National Tripartite Cooperation Institution in Indonesia has conducted consultations regarding international labour standards which resulted in the signing of the Indonesian Jobs Pact 2011–14 (IJP) in April 2011. The Government also intends to discuss the comments made by the Committee of Experts regarding the Trade Union/Labour Union Act (Law No. 21 of 2000) regarding the application of Conventions Nos 87 and 98. The Committee notes with interest that the IJP is a commitment by government, employers and workers representatives based on the Decent Work Agenda and the 2008 Social Justice Declaration. The four pillars of the Organization are the basis for its implementation, as part of the effort to achieve the Millennium Development Goals by Indonesia. Under the IJP, the social partners intend to strengthen the National Tripartite Institution (LKS Tripnas) and the regional tripartite institutions by holding regular workshops/seminars at the national, provincial, and district/city level involving appropriate resource persons from the constituents and independent experts. The Committee expresses its hope that as part of the progress made under the IJP, the Government will be in a position to provide in its next report on Convention No. 144 detailed information to demonstrate how the tripartite consultations on international labour standards required by the Convention are actually held in practice. The Committee once again requests the Government to report on the effective consultations held by the National Tripartite Cooperation Institution as required by Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Ireland

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1979)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last report received in October 2005. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, including particulars on the effective tripartite consultations held on replies to questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the Conference, proposals made on submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference, re-examination of unratified Conventions and Recommendations, questions arising out of the report to be made on the application of Conventions, denunciation of Conventions (Article 5(1) of the Convention).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2003)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Consultation mechanisms and effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2011 indicating that, by virtue of Section 43 of the Labour Code, Regulation No. 21 of 2010 was promulgated and established the mandate of the Tripartite Committee for Labour Affairs. The Committee notes with interest that this tripartite committee is responsible for ensuring consultations with respect to the matters related to international labour standards. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held by the Tripartite Committee for Labour Affairs on all matters related to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Kazakhstan

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2000)

Consultation procedures and effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the report submitted by the Government in January 2011 for the period ending in August 2010 which contains an overall description of social dialogue in the country. The Committee recalls once again that the Convention specifically requires the implementation of procedures that ensure effective consultations concerning the measures to be taken at the national level with regard to international labour standards (Article 2(1) of the Convention). The Committee asks the Government to describe in its next report the procedures that ensure consultations on international labour standards, and to provide information on the consultations held on each of the matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee is also once again obliged to draw the Government's attention to the serious failure to submit to Parliament the 34 instruments adopted by the Conference from 1996 to 2011, and hopes that it will be able to provide information on the prior tripartite consultations held with the social partners in this respect (Article 5(1)(b)).

Malawi

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1986)

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes a brief report received in June 2011. The Government indicates that the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council, the Social Dialogue Council, and the Wages Advisory Council ensure effective tripartite consultations. The Tripartite Labour Advisory Council is in charge of advising the Ministry of Labour on all employment-related issues. The Committee refers to its 2008 and 2010 observations and again asks the Government to submit a report containing detailed information on the tripartite consultations held on each of the matters related to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention. It also requests the Government to include information on the nature of any reports or recommendations made as a result of such consultations.

Article 5(1)(c) and (e). Prospects of ratification of unratified Conventions and proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled that the ILO Governing Body recommended the denunciation of Conventions Nos 50, 64, 65, 86, 104 and 107 concerning indigenous workers and the ratification of the most updated instrument, the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169). In the Committee's 2005 direct request on the Underground Work (Women) Convention, 1935 (No. 45), the Government was invited to give favourable consideration to the ratification of the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), which shifts the emphasis from a specific category of workers to the safety and health protection of all mineworkers, and in turn to denounce Convention No. 45. The Committee again invites the stakeholders concerned to hold tripartite consultations to re-examine unratified Conventions – such as Conventions Nos 169 and 176 – in order to promote, as appropriate, their implementation or ratification and to denounce outdated Conventions.

Mozambique

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1996)

Consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2011, which reproduces the information sent in the previous report. The Government lists the subjects to be dealt with in tripartite consultations without specifying those that were actually addressed during the period covered by the report. It again states that it is very difficult to ensure that the social partners receive the necessary training to participate in tripartite consultations. In view of the foregoing, the Committee points out that the Government may seek technical assistance from the Office regarding the provision of detailed information, allowing the Committee to ascertain, as the Convention requires, that tripartite consultations are actually carried out on international labour Conventions in accordance with Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the content and results of the consultations held on the subjects covered by the Convention.

Nigeria

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since its last replies in August 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report including information in reply to the points raised in the previous observations, which set forth the following matters:

Consultations with representative organizations. The Committee noted that the Nigeria Employers Consultative Association (NECA) and the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC) are consulted at the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) level with regard to some matters covered by the Convention. The Government further indicated that the National Labour Institutions Bill, which makes provision for the NLAC, was before the National Assembly. The Committee reminds the Government that it is important for employers' and workers' organizations to enjoy the right to freedom of association, without which there could be no effective system of tripartite consultation. It asks the Government to report on the results of the legislative reform and its impact on the improvement of consultations with representative organizations that enjoy freedom of association, as required under this Convention.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee recalls that the tripartite consultations covered by the Convention are essentially intended to promote the implementation of international labour standards and concern, in particular, the matters enumerated in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide full and detailed information on the tripartite consultations dealing with:

- (a) the Government's replies to questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the International Labour Conference and the Government's comments on proposed texts to be discussed by the Conference; and
- (b) questions arising out of reports to be made to the International Labour Office under article 22 of the Constitution of the Organization.

Prior tripartite consultation on proposals made to the National Assembly. The Committee recalls that the instruments adopted at the 95th Session of the Conference were submitted to the National Assembly for noting on 21 August 2006. The Government further stated that there was no tripartite consultation as there was no request for their ratification. The Committee points out that, for those States which have already ratified Convention No. 144, effective prior consultations have to be held on the proposals made to the competent authorities when submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference (Article 5(1)(b)). Even if the Government does not intend proposing the ratification of a Convention, the social partners must be consulted sufficiently in advance for them to reach their opinions before the Government finalizes its decision. The Committee trusts that the Government and the social partners will examine the measures to be taken with a view to holding effective consultations on the proposals made to the National Assembly when submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference, as required by the Convention.

Operation of the consultative procedures. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether, in accordance with Article 6, the representative organizations have been consulted in the preparation of an annual report on the working of the consultation procedures provided for in the Convention and, if so, to indicate the outcome of these consultations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Saint Kitts and Nevis

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2000)

Tripartite consultations required under the Convention. In reply to the 2010 observation, the Government states in its report received in September 2011 that it regrets not having any specific information on the tripartite consultations held regarding questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the 100th Session of the Conference (June 2011). The Government also states that many of the tripartite meetings during the 2009–10 period focused on the necessary steps for formulating a Labour Code. The Committee notes that the ILO subregional team assisted the Government in drafting a Labour Code. In May 2011, the National Tripartite Committee met to discuss the HIV component of the Decent Work

Country Programme with the participation of ILO team specialists. The Committee reiterates the importance of holding tripartite consultations on international labour standards as required by the Convention. It asks the Government to provide in its next report the information on the tripartite consultations held on questionnaires concerning items of the agenda of the Conference and on the preparation of reports on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(a) and (d)). The Committee also invites the Government to include information on the tripartite consultations held, especially within the National Tripartite Committee on International Labour Standards. It further requests the Government to provide examples of any reports or recommendations made as a result of the consultations held under the established procedures.

Sao Tome and Principe

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations which read as follows:

Mechanisms for tripartite consultations and the consultations required by the Convention. In a brief report received in March 2007, the Government refers to the tripartite consultations carried out through the National Council for Social Dialogue. The Government also indicates that the National Council meets regularly. The Committee refers to its previous observations and once again invites the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the National Council is involved in the consultations required by the Convention and to provide particulars of the consultations held on each of the matters on international labour standards referred to in Article 5(1) of the Convention, including information on the reports or recommendations made on international labour standards as a result of such consultations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Serbia

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2005)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending in August 2011. It also notes the comments submitted by the Serbian Association of Employers and by the Trade Union Confederation Nezavisnost forwarded by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in August 2011. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the remarks of the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS) indicating that there was no progress in connection with the functioning of the Economic and Social Council tripartite consultations system. The Government reiterates in its report that, within the framework of the regular reporting on the implementation of ILO Conventions, it submits all reports prepared to the social partners for opinion. The views of the social partners are then submitted to the ILO along with the reports. The Government also reports on the tripartite consultations held through the Economic and Social Council to prepare the participation of the delegates to the International Labour Conference. Nezavisnost observes that the Government's report does not include information on the work of the consultative mechanisms or exact information on the activities of the Economic and Social Council – questions which are essential indicators of the observance of the matters listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention. Nezavisnost also indicates that the report does not contain information on the results achieved from tripartite consultations. The Serbian Association of Employers claims that it received the reports on the application of ratified Conventions on a very short deadline, and therefore was unable to provide any comments. The Committee requests the Government to include further information in its next report on the operation of the consultation mechanism, specifying the activities of the Social and Economic Council of Serbia on each of the matters related to international labour standards listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Government is also requested to indicate the frequency of consultations held and the nature of any reports or recommendations made by the Economic and Social Council as a result thereof (Article 5(2)).

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Sierra Leone

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observations which read as follows:

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's report supplied in June 2004 indicating its commitment to promote tripartite consultation throughout the country as well as supporting the tripartite delegation to the International Labour Conference. The Committee hopes that the Government and the social partners will examine how the Convention is applied and that the Government's next report will contain indications on any measures taken in order to implement effective tripartite consultation in the sense of the Convention (Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention).

The Committee recalls that the Office has the technical capacity to help strengthen social dialogue and support the activities that governments and employers' and workers' organizations undertake for the consultations required by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Turkey

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1993)

Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's report received in December 2010 for the period ending May 2010 and the information provided by the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TİSK) and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ). The Committee notes that the Tripartite Consultative Committee met numerous times from 2008 to 2010 in order to discuss, among other items, legislative amendments arising out of points related to the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d) of the Convention). In this regard, TİSK indicates that at a meeting held on 28 January 2009, in view of the global economic crisis, it was decided that the Government and the social partners should meet more regularly throughout 2009 to assess the situation. The matters discussed at the Tripartite Consultative Committee included the revision of the operation of private employment agencies. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report updated information on the tripartite consultations held on the matters covered by the Convention (Article 5(1)). In this regard, the Committee invites the Government to provide information relating to the examination of the ratification of the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), and the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), which might result in the denunciation of the Underground Work (Women) Convention, 1935 (No. 45), and the Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96), (Article 5(1)(c) and (e) of the Convention).

Uganda

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the application of the Convention since June 2004. The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide a report, including information in reply to the following points raised in 2004:

The Government indicated that the application of this Convention continues to depend on active tripartite participation, and that consultations were undertaken particularly at the time of revision of the national labour legislation. It also stated that training on the procedures and content of international labour standards might increase the effectiveness of tripartite consultation. The Government stated that it has received technical and financial assistance from the ILO to hold seminars and workshops on consultative procedures. The Committee invites the Government to report on any progress achieved in the field covered by the Convention, following the assistance received from the Office.

Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide details on the consultations regarding international labour standards covered by the Convention (Article 5(1)).

Article 5(1)(c) and (e). The Committee recalls that the ILO Governing Body has invited States which are parties to certain Conventions that Uganda has ratified to contemplate ratifying the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), and denouncing Conventions Nos 50, 64, 65 and 86. States parties to the Underground Work (Women) Convention, 1935 (No. 45), were invited to contemplate ratifying the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176). Please indicate if tripartite consultations are envisaged on this matter.

Article 6. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate whether the representative organizations were consulted with regard to the production of an annual report on the operation of the procedures covered by the Convention and, if so, to state the outcome of these consultations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 144 (Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, Congo, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Estonia, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Gabon, Guatemala, Iceland, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Liberia, Mongolia, Namibia, Netherlands: Aruba, Nicaragua, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Trinidad and Tobago, Yemen, Zambia).

Labour administration and inspection

Angola

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the annual inspection report for 2009, containing figures on the staff of the labour inspection services, estimated data of workplaces liable to inspection, statistics of inspection visits, violations and penalties imposed and of industrial accidents as well as other instructive information on the activities of the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT), such as on preventive measures in the area of occupational safety and health.

The Committee notes an ongoing reform of the labour inspection system and a relevant plan for 2010–14. Further, it notes that, following a request by the Government for technical assistance and an assessment of the situation of labour inspection in the country by a multidisciplinary team of the ILO in March and April 2010 in response to this request, various recommendations were made. These recommendations relate to the need for legislative reforms, particularly as regards safety and health, the conditions of service (remuneration, career prospects) and powers of labour inspectors (with a view to relieving them of additional functions, such as mediation or conciliation), classification of breaches of labour law according to their gravity and determination of appropriate sanctions, as well as the obligation of notification to the labour inspectorate of cases of occupational accidents and diseases, and the need to ensure the application in practice of the relevant legal provisions. In addition, the Committee notes recommendations for improved initial and regular training of labour inspectors; initiation of proactive inspection visits through check-lists and computerized registers of workplaces and other useful data; the promotion of collaboration with the social partners and other bodies, such as the National Institute for Social Security (INSS), as well as the strengthening of coercive enforcement mechanisms. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the ILO informed of the steps taken in the framework of the ongoing reform, particularly in relation to the recommendations made by the ILO, and communicate a copy of any relevant texts or document.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Argentina

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 12 October 2010 and the attached documentation. It also notes the comments by the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA) dated 31 August 2010 and 1 September 2011. The Committee also notes the comments of the General Confederation of Labour (CGT RA) dated 29 October 2010. The Committee requests the Government to communicate any comment or information it deems relevant with regard to the comments by the CTA dated 1 September 2011.

Cooperation in the context of MERCOSUR. The Committee notes with interest that according to the Government's report, the joint inspection operations in the context of MERCOSUR have continued and have been well received among the social partners in the region. Observing that the trade unions in Argentina asked for the inclusion of controls in relation to occupational safety and health and the work environment in the context of the MERCOSUR Regional Labour Inspection Plan (PRIM) and that the proposal was well received by the representatives of other countries, the Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on the joint activities carried out in the framework of this plan and especially on their impact on the national labour inspection system. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on any progress made in the formulation and implementation of the training plan for labour inspectors in the context of the PRIM.

Articles 3(1)(a), 4 and 10 of the Convention. Supervision and control of labour inspection by a central authority and labour inspection staff. According to the CTA, uniform criteria have not been established throughout the country for labour inspection, nor has appropriate legislation been adopted with a view to carrying out effective uniform controls throughout the national territory. Despite the fact that Act No. 25877 establishing the Integrated Labour Inspection and Social Security System (SIDITYSS) authorizes the central Government to exercise functions shared with the provinces with respect to labour inspection, this has not had any significant effect in practice and the Ministry has been relegated to a secondary position of supervision, support and assistance. According to the trade union, the inefficiency of labour inspection is due to exclusive powers being conferred on the provinces, in addition to the scarce material resources assigned to the provincial offices and the inadequate number of inspection staff employed there. According to the CTA, the lack of effective public policies in labour inspection is due to the enormous pressure exerted by local economic influences and the major national or multinational enterprises, which allows them to operate in an "exclusion zone" inside their establishments and carry out their own inspection and supervision of working conditions. The CTA also indicates that the persistently high number of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease are evidence of the breakdown of enforcement of the standards relating to risk prevention and health protection in the workplace.

The CGT, for its part, points out that the inspection system in Argentina continues to experience major difficulties since it lacks a central authority and despite the fact that Act No. 25877 established a system of cooperation between the provinces and the federal State, the effectiveness of inspection activities is showing no sign of improvement, in a country with an informal employment rate of 37 per cent. The union also indicates that the effectiveness of controls varies enormously between provinces since many of them have an insufficient number of labour inspectors and some even have only one inspector.

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that each of the 23 provinces and the autonomous city of Buenos Aires has an administrative body dependent on the provincial executive which is responsible for labour inspection within its jurisdiction. The provincial authorities have competence for monitoring general working conditions and for enforcing occupational safety and health (OSH) standards and the terms of collective labour agreements. The Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MTEYSS) is responsible for supervising activities within the remit of the federal authority (ports, airports, multinational enterprises), activities comprising tasks spanning various jurisdictions, such as inter-provincial passenger and cargo traffic, and river, maritime and land transport. The Ministry also has competence for controls relating to social security contributions. Responsibility for OSH at national level lies with the Supervisory Authority for Occupational Risks (SRT), which also secures the enforcement of the obligations of the occupational hazard insurance companies. According to the Government, the Federal Labour Council drives general inspection policies according to the principles of coordination, cooperation, shared participation and shared responsibility. With regard to the number of inspection staff, the Government indicates that the number of inspectors currently stands at 320 and that the SRT has 67 inspectors, not including the staff specifically assigned to each province and the autonomous city of Buenos Aires. It adds that through Decision No. 670/10, the Ministry of Labour launched a competition in 2010 with a view to filling 300 vacancies.

The Committee reminds the Government that the objective of the Convention is to ensure the functioning of a coordinated and effective labour inspection system throughout the territory, under the supervision and control of a central authority. Where legislation provides for the distribution of inspection powers between a federal or central authority and provincial authorities, it is necessary to guarantee the establishment of an inspection system in each province or one covering more extensive jurisdictions or regions and to ensure the necessary resources for the functioning of such structures (see Article 4(2) of the Convention and paragraph 140 of the 2006 General Survey on labour inspection). The Committee requests the Government to supply further information on the manner in which effect is given to Article 4 of the Convention with respect to the structure and operation in practice of the labour inspection system, especially on the steps taken to ensure coordination between the federal and provincial inspection authorities. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on the impact of the launching of a competition in 2010 by the MTEYSS on the number of inspection staff and their geographical distribution in the various provinces.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would also provide information on the manner in which labour inspectors verify the information contained in reports relating to self-inspections undertaken by enterprises.

Articles 3(1)(a), 16, 18 and 24. Supervisory function of labour inspectors; frequency and scope of inspections; penalties. The CTA deplores the fact that the national, provincial and municipal authorities have not taken the necessary steps to stop the illegal practices of unregistered work (whereby employers leave substantial numbers of workers devoid of any protection in terms of social benefits). The union emphasizes the fact that the legal framework provided for by Act No. 24013 of 1999 (Employment Act) – one of the objectives of which is to put a stop to these practices through the establishment of an incentive scheme for employers who are willing to make amends and rectify their practices in this respect and the imposition of harsher penalties for uncooperative employers is insufficient inasmuch as it has not been accompanied by inspections undertaken with the care and frequency required by the Convention.

With reference to its previous comments on Article 18 of the Convention, the Committee notes with interest the information supplied by the Government in relation to the increase in the amounts of fines imposed for infringements of social security standards, with a reduction in the amount of penalties if the situation is rectified within a specific period and with subsidies for employer contributions for employers who create new jobs that are duly registered. It also notes with interest the various agreements signed between the MTEYSS and trade unions for combating undeclared work and ensuring effective inspection of working conditions and child labour, in the context of the “Integrated employment promotion plan: More and better work” and the “National plan for the regularization of work” (PNRT). The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the frequency and scope of inspections undertaken, including in cases where one single establishment is concerned. It also requests information on the impact of these measures on the implementation of legislation concerning conditions of work and the protection of workers, including undeclared workers and statistics on infringements of labour legislation detected by labour inspectors, specifying the relevant provisions and the penalties imposed.

Article 5. Cooperation between the inspection services and other institutions and collaboration with employers and workers. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, in the context of the “National plan for the regularization of work” (PNRT), Ministry of Labour officials visited the federal courts in the interior of the country to explain the workings of the Ministry, and the judicial authorities empowered ministry officials to act as ad hoc judicial officers in the execution of judicial tasks. It also notes that, according to the CGT RA, cooperation between the judicial system and the administration has improved as regards the collection of fines imposed for infringements of labour legislation. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to send information on the steps taken or contemplated to promote cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the judiciary.

The Committee also notes that the SRT has been signing agreements with the provinces and with the autonomous city of Buenos Aires, with a view to conducting joint inspections and providing economic resources for the reinforcement of local labour inspection. The SRT has also signed agreements with the trade unions, with a view to providing economic resources for the training of union leaders and workers, and to developing projects and actions aimed at improving working conditions and the working environment. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the inspections carried out jointly by the SRT and the autonomous city of Buenos Aires, and by the latter and the provincial delegations pursuant to the abovementioned agreements, and also on the impact of such collaboration with regard to the objective pursued by these agreements. It also requests the Government to provide information on any projects launched in the context of collaboration between the SRT and the trade unions, and on the results thereof.

Article 6. Stability of employment and conditions of service of labour inspectors. In reply to the Committee's previous observation concerning the remuneration and prospects for career advancement of labour inspectors as compared to those of other public servants with similar duties, the Government reiterates that inspectors and controllers are covered by Act No. 25164 of 1999 on public employment at national level. It also indicates that the inspectors, perceive an average salary of 4,862.44 pesos (ARS) (about US$1,206.55). The Government adds that under Decision No. 670/10, mentioned above, the profiles for the posts of labour and social security inspector and territorial planning analyst were established, and their tasks, requisite qualifications and conditions of promotion were specified.

The CTA alleges that in the city of Buenos Aires labour inspectors do not enjoy the guarantees needed to perform their duties. It indicates that this situation has been affirmed by various court decisions and refers to the case of a labour inspector recruited under a service provider scheme who was dismissed and lodged an appeal for reinstatement and definitive incorporation into the permanent staff of the local public administration. According to the CGT RA, however, progress has been made in this sphere since the passing of MTEYSS Decision No. 670/10 marks the start of a selection procedure for labour inspectors, the goal of which is to ensure stability of employment.

The Committee requests the Government to send to the ILO a copy of Ministry of Labour Decision No. 670/10 and to supply information on the steps taken to ensure that labour inspectors benefit from working conditions in accordance with the principles of stability and independence laid down by Article 6 of the Convention.

Articles 7(3), 11(a) and 18. Resources allocated to the inspection services and in-service training for labour inspectors. According to the Government, the MTEYSS provides its staff with an induction/re-induction course and another series of courses designed to improve their qualifications. The Committee observes that the Government's report contains information on the courses given to Ministry of Labour staff, in particular training on the supervision of cargo and passenger transport and the maritime, river, lake and port sectors. The Government further indicates that the SRT also provides its inspectors with refresher workshops.

In its previous comments the Committee noted that, according to section 34 of Act No. 25877 of 2004, the MTEYSS is required to allocate all proceeds from fines imposed for breach of the labour legislation to improvement of the labour inspection service and asked the Government to indicate the expenditure items of the labour inspectorate to which these resources are assigned. The Committee notes that according to the information supplied by the Government, the budget headings of the labour inspectorate which benefit from the allocation of fines collected for infringements of the labour legislation are those which ensure its ordinary operation (e.g. consumer goods (including paper, spare parts and fuel), technical and professional services, tickets and travel allowances, machinery and equipment etc.).

The Committee notes that according to the CTA, the lack of training of inspection staff combined with the inadequacy of the material resources allocated to the regional offices constitute one of the obstacles to the establishment of effective labour inspection. The CGT RA also stresses the importance of giving specific training to inspectors and equipping the inspection services with computing equipment in order to achieve a better level of performance.

With reference also to its comments under Articles 3(1)(a), 4 and 10 of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the distribution of the budgetary resources of the labour inspection services throughout the central and provincial structures and the material means at their disposal including transport facilities.

The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would provide detailed information on the training courses given to labour inspectors performing their duties in the various provinces, including the frequency, number of participants, subjects covered and duration.

Article 9. Collaboration of technical experts and specialists in some inspections falling within the remit of labour inspectors. In relation to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report contains a list of staff of the Department of Inspections and Preventive Programmes at the SRT, including architects, graduates in OSH, chemical engineers and mechanical engineers. The Committee requests the Government to describe the modalities for collaboration with technical experts and specialists at the level of the provinces and any cooperation with the SRT in this respect.

Article 14. Notification of the inspectorate regarding industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. In reply to the request for information on the manner in which effect is given to the present Article of the Convention, the Government indicates that the corresponding statistics are being compiled on the basis of notifications made and can be consulted on the SRT website at: <http://www.srt.gov.ar/data/fdata.htm>.

Articles 20 and 21. Obligation to publish and send an annual report. The Committee draws the Government's attention to its general observation of 2011 on the importance of drawing up and publishing an annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate. It reminds the Government of the central inspection authority's obligation to publish and send to the ILO, in accordance with Article 20 of the Convention, an annual general report containing the information required in each clause of Article 21(a)–(g) and the possibility, if necessary, of seeking technical assistance from the ILO for this purpose. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of progress made in this field.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes the Government's report received at the Office on 23 November 2010. It also notes the comments made by the General Confederation of Labour (CGT RA) in a communication dated 29 October 2010.

The Committee observes that the CGT RA, in the comments made in relation to the application of various Conventions ratified by Argentina, includes a copy of a communication from the Argentine Union of Rural Workers and Dockworkers (UATRE) addressed to the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MTEYSS) [Ministry of Labour], which contains observations with regard to the Government's compliance with the present Convention.

As regards the issues related to the present Convention, the Committee refers the Government to its observation concerning the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and raises the following points specifically relating to labour inspection in agriculture.

Lack of information on the functioning of the labour inspection services in agriculture. The UATRE states that it asked the Ministry of Labour to improve rural inspection activities by allocating adequate human resources, but no progress has been observed in this area at national level. The trade union also states that the establishment of the National Register of Rural Workers and Employers (RENATRE), aimed at monitoring the payment of employers' contributions to the integrated unemployment benefit system, has resulted in the registration of 800,000 workers.

The Committee notes that the Government does not supply the detailed information requested of it in a previous observation concerning the manner in which all provisions of the Convention are given effect in practice. The Committee hopes that the Government will send information in its next report on: (a) the number of labour inspectors exercising their functions in agriculture (disaggregated by provincial authority, if possible) (Article 14 of the Convention); (b) the material means (offices, transport facilities) at the disposal of each provincial authority (Article 15) to ensure that labour inspectors can perform their duties, in accordance with Article 6(1)(a) and (b); (c) the specific training given to labour inspectors to ensure the effective discharge of their functions related to prevention and control as provided for in Article 9(3) (including frequency, number of participants, subjects covered and duration, and preferably with a breakdown of the training activities organized for inspectors in the various regional offices); and (d) the manner in which collaboration is ensured between technical experts and the labour inspection services, especially in the provincial offices, in accordance with Article 11.

Articles 6(1)(a) and 24. Enforcement function of the labour inspectorate; adequate and effectively enforced penalties. The Committee observes that, according to information published on the website of the MTEYSS (<http://www.trabajo.gov.ar>) concerning labour inspection activities in 2010 and 2011, it appears that inspections have been restricted, at least during the aforementioned years, to checking the labour register. The Committee also notes, from the documentation attached to the report on Convention No. 81, the various agreements signed between the MTEYSS and the trade unions for combating undeclared work and ensuring effective inspection of conditions of work and child labour, in the context of the "Integrated employment promotion plan: more and better work" and the "National plan for the regularization of work" (PNRT). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the enforcement activities of the labour inspection in agriculture, including with regard to child labour, and to send statistics relating to violations of the labour legislation found, stating the legal provisions concerned and the penalties imposed, and copies of court decisions relating to the latter.

Articles 17 and 19. Preventive control and notification of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease. In reply to the Committee's previous comments in this respect, the Government indicates that the provincial authorities conduct on-the-spot routine inspections or inspections resulting from complaints using qualified staff when occupational accidents or diseases have been brought to their attention. The Committee observes that, according to statistics placed on the website of the Supervisory Authority for Occupational Risks (SRT), there was a substantial increase between 2008 and 2009 in accidents in the workplace in provinces such as Tucumán, a major global producer of lemons, and Jujuy, which, according to the same data, accounts for 65 per cent of the workforce in agriculture.

The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that labour inspectors are associated with the preventive control of new plant, new materials or substances and new methods of handling or processing products which appear likely to constitute a threat to health or safety (Article 17) and to send a copy of any relevant legal text. It also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which effect is given to Article 19 of the Convention, concerning the notification to the labour inspectorate of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease (paragraph 1), or the association of the labour inspection services in agriculture with any inquiry into the causes of the most serious accidents or diseases that have affected a number of workers or had fatal consequences (paragraph 2).

Articles 26 and 27. Obligation to publish and send an annual report. The Government indicates that the statistics relating to occupational accidents and diseases compiled by the SRT can be consulted on <http://www.srt.gov.ar/data/fdata.htm>. The Committee observes that the statistics contained in the different reports that appear on the SRT website do not appear to distinguish between occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease.

The Committee refers the Government to its comments under Articles 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of progress made in ensuring that the central labour inspection authority publishes and sends to the ILO, in accordance with Article 26 of the Convention, an annual report on the work of the labour inspection services in agriculture, either as a separate report or as part of its general annual report, containing the information required in Article 27(a)–(g). The Committee also reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Belgium

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1957)

Articles 3(1)(a) and (2) and 5 of the Convention. Extension of the areas of legislation covered by the inspection services. For several years the Government has been emphasizing that it gives priority to the combat of cross-border fraud among the objectives of the labour inspectorate in the sphere of action against illegal work and social fraud. The Committee had asked the Government in this framework to clarify whether non-declaration by the worker was an offence for which the worker incurred liability, to indicate the manner in which the same protection was secured to foreign workers having irregular status in terms of the right of residence as to other workers who were employed in breach of regulations, and to clarify the possible role of the inspection services in this respect.

The Government indicates that the Framework Act of 23 December 2009, which amended the Act of 30 June 1971 concerning administrative fines, introduces an additional administrative fine for which the worker himself is liable, in the event that the latter exercises an activity, as an employee, self-employed person or official, that is not declared by his employer alongside another (declared) primary activity. Nevertheless, the application of this penalty requires prior establishment of the fact, via a separate report, that the employer knowingly employed, for the provision of an undeclared activity, the worker whose primary activity is declared and requires the employer to be reported on account of this infringement. It also declares that, in the event of the illegal occupation of foreign workers, it is customary practice for the labour inspectorate to draw up a report against the employer, in view of the particular seriousness of this type of infringement. Furthermore, if the employer does not comply with the obligation to declare the occupation of the worker (whether foreign or not) to the National Social Security Office (DIMONA declaration), the labour inspectorate of the Federal Public Service (SPF) for social security systematically proceeds with regularization of the situation and, if the employer does not make the payments, he becomes liable to criminal or administrative and civil penalties. The inspection services also examine the conditions of work of foreign workers in relation to the regulations concerning action against human trafficking and against economic exploitation, with a view to providing protection. Foreign workers in an irregular situation which, in the opinion of the labour inspectorate, may be one involving economic exploitation, are subject to specific provisions relating to their residence status in the country and may be entitled to social assistance and other social benefits.

In its previous comments the Committee had noted the establishment of a Labour Research and Information Department (SIRS), with regard to action against illegal work and social fraud. The SIRS consists of two bodies, namely, the General Assembly of the Partners and the Federal Guidance Office, which contain representatives of the Attorney-General's Office and the four inspection services, and also of other public institutions, and representatives of the employers and workers.

The text which founded the SIRS has been modified and integrated into the Act of 6 June 2010 establishing the Social Penal Code. The SIRS is a department which depends on the Ministers of Labour, Social Affairs, Justice, the Minister responsible for self-employed workers and the State Secretary responsible for the coordination of action against fraud. Its mission consists of coordinating at federal level the activities of the various inspection services entrusted with the combat of social fraud and illegal work. The Government indicates that the activities of the inspection services in the context of SIRS account for a maximum of 25 per cent of their overall work.

The Committee recalls that, as indicated in the 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraphs 76–78, the labour inspection systems established in accordance with the Convention should perform the labour inspection functions which are defined in Article 3(1) with the main objective of enforcing the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers. The Committee has emphasized that the primary duty of labour inspectors is to protect workers and not to enforce immigration law. Efforts to control the use of migrant workers in an irregular situation often require the mobilization of considerable resources in terms of staff, time and material resources, which inspectors can only provide to the detriment of their primary duties. The Committee also underlines the fact that, with the exception of a few countries, only the employer is held accountable for illegal employment as such, with the workers involved in principle being seen as victims. The fact that the labour inspectorate in general has the power to enter establishments without prior authorization allows it more easily than other institutions to put an end to abusive working conditions of which foreign workers in an irregular situation are often the victim, and to ensure that workers benefit from recognized rights. In these circumstances, the function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all the workers if it is to be compatible with the objective of inspection. This objective can only be met if the workers covered are convinced that the primary task of the inspectorate is to enforce the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and protection of workers.

Noting that, according to the Government, the labour inspection activities performed in the framework of the SIRS represent a quarter of its overall work, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of these activities on the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers (Article 3(1)(a)). The Government is requested to communicate, in particular, information on the number of infringements detected, the legal provisions concerned and the measures taken as well as the sanctions imposed. Also noting that, under section 2 of the Social Penal Code, a strategic plan and an operational plan must be drawn up each year in the context of action against illegal work and social fraud, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the content of these plans.

Also drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the cooperation provided for in Article 5(a) of the Convention is designed to strengthen the means for enforcing the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers (Articles 2 and 3(1)), the Committee requests the Government to state the manner in which the labour inspectorate controls the discharge of the obligations of employers (such as payment of wages and other benefits with respect to work that has been done) with regard to foreign workers in a situation which is irregular but does not come under the heading of human trafficking or evident exploitation. It asks the Government to explain the procedure followed in these cases and the role of labour inspectors in this procedure, especially in cases where these workers are facing expulsion from the country pursuant to the immigration laws.

With regard to its previous comments concerning the adoption of the new code of conduct for labour inspectors in the context of action against illegal work, the Committee notes that under section 61 of the Act of 6 June 2010 establishing the Social Penal Code, the King shall establish the code of conduct for labour inspectors further to an opinion from SIRS. The Committee requests the Government to send the ILO a copy of the text of the code of conduct for labour inspectors in the context of action against illegal work, once it has been adopted.

Communication of the judicial action taken on cases referred by labour inspectors. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that the labour inspectorate systematically receives information in writing on the action taken with regard to infringements reported by the service and that the GINAA and e-PV IT projects relating to the creation of a database on the action taken on infringements and to improved collaboration between the labour inspectorate and the judicial authorities, would probably be operational during 2011. The Committee requests the Government to send information on the progress made in this matter and the results on the functioning of the labour inspection system.

Articles 17 and 18. Progressive decriminalization of violations of certain provisions of the labour legislation. With reference to its previous comments on this issue, the Committee notes that the Social Penal Code introduces amendments to criminal legislation on labour matters, such as the reorganization of the scale of penalties, systematic use of administrative fines and less recourse to judicial proceedings. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of this reform on the development of the level of adherence to the legal provisions concerning the conditions of work and the protection of workers.

Articles 20 and 21. Content of the annual labour inspection report. With reference to its general observation of 2010 on the importance of annual inspection reports, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the guidance given by the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), as regards the way to present and disaggregate the information contained in this report. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that annual inspection reports are written and published in such a way as to enable an overview of the functioning of the labour inspection system. The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that these reports contain information on all the subjects covered by Article 21(a)–(g) of the Convention.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1997)

Referring to its comments under Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to the following issues.

Article 6(1)(a) and (3) of the Convention. Enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and combating illegal employment. In its previous comments the Committee asked the Government to indicate the legal action taken as a result of the infringements identified relating to undeclared work against the employers concerned and the practical consequences of the identification of such offences for workers who are not registered with the social security system and who are in an illegal residence situation.

The Government indicates in its report that, for the labour inspectorate (responsible for the enforcement of labour legislation), combating undeclared work comes under the tasks assigned in accordance with Article 6(1)(a) of the Convention, since regular declaration by the employer of workers who he employs gives the latter entitlement to the full range of social security rights. During inspections targeting illegal or undeclared work and also those undertaken to combat the trafficking of persons, the inspectorate takes action not only to identify offences relating to irregular or undeclared employment but also to enforce the legal provisions relating to conditions of work, both in terms of workers' health and safety and in terms of the labour regulations (pay scales applicable to the sector of activity, observance of hours of work, public holidays, etc.). The Government specifies that the inspection services responsible for monitoring social security provisions ensure systematically that the work done by workers found in a given workplace, even in the event of employment in breach of the regulations, is duly and completely declared to the National Social Security Office (ONSS), so as to ensure that these workers enjoy the related social benefits. When an irregularity is observed, the inspectors proceed to regularize the situation by sending a specific form to the ONSS, on the basis of which the ONSS can calculate and claim from the employer the amount of social security contributions which have been unpaid as a result of the undeclared employment and thus ensure that the workers concerned enjoy the social rights which are their due as a result of their employment.

It results from the statistics sent by the Government that, of 1,557 inspections carried out in agriculture between June 2008 and May 2010, 1,223 took place in the context of combating undeclared work. In this context, inspections focused on the employment of foreign workers, part-time work and social documentation. In most cases the inspectorate draws up an infringement report, mainly with regard to the employment of foreign workers and social documentation, and reports the facts to the judicial authorities.

With regard to the protection of pay, hours of work and the application of collective agreements, the Committee notes that during the 2008–10 period only 254 out of 1,557 inspections were concerned with these matters. According to the Government, the figures relating to the reports of violations show that the labour inspectorate achieves compliance with the regulations in a large number of cases.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of enforcement activities targeting violations coming under the heading of undeclared work on the level of activity and the scope and effectiveness of the enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work, and the protection of workers including workers who are illegally resident.

In particular, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the manner in which the labour inspectorate ensures the discharge of employers' obligations (such as the payment of wages and other benefits owed) with regard to foreign workers in an employment relationship who are in an illegal residence situation, in cases where such workers are facing expulsion from the country pursuant to immigration laws.

Articles 26 and 27. Publication of information on labour inspection in agriculture. While noting the information provided by the Government in its report on the activities of the labour inspection and their results, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would take the necessary measures for the publication, in a separate part of the general report of the social inspection, of an annual report on the work of the inspection services in agriculture, containing information required by items (a)–(g) of Article 27.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1973)

Multilateral technical cooperation project (FORSAT/ILO). The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government on the FORSAT/ILO project to strengthen labour administration services which lasted until April 2007. It notes that, the most noteworthy contributions of this project as far as labour inspection is concerned, are the proposals relating to: the update of the Labour Inspection Regulations; the separation of labour inspection functions and conciliation and mediation functions; model forms, reports on inspection activities, periodic inspection summaries, summonses, inspection records and inspection orders; model work stoppage orders and notifications of violations and proposed penalties; and an analysis of the situation concerning penalties. The project also included proposals for improving the Ministry of Labour's business register and information exchange and enhancing institutional collaboration. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the follow-up to the proposals that emerged during the development of the FORSAT/ILO project.

Articles 19, 20 and 21 of the Convention. Periodical reports and publication and communication of an annual report on the work of the inspection services. The Committee notes with interest that the Labour Statistics Bulletins appended to the Government's report under Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) contain statistics on industrial accidents and cases of occupational diseases, disaggregated by department. The Government indicates that the regional and departmental authorities prepare monthly reports that are submitted to the General Directorate of Labour and Occupational Health and Safety, but that an annual report is not published as yet, owing to the fact that data collection and registration is done manually, which makes it difficult to process the information in a timely manner. The Committee requests the Government to communicate in its next report information on any progress made towards the publication and communication of an annual report within the time limits and in the form prescribed by Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

The Committee takes note of the Government's wish to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office for designing and implementing an electronic system for labour inspection activities and invites it to make a formal request to the Office in that regard.

Part V of the report form and article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution. The Committee once again observes that for years the Government has not been indicating in its reports the representative organizations of employers and workers to which copies of the reports have been communicated. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that this obligation to communicate is enshrined in article 23 of the ILO Constitution. It requests the Government to ensure that this information is included in future reports on the application of Convention No. 81.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bulgaria

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1949)

Articles 3(2) and 16 of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. The Committee notes that the number of inspections carried out in 2009 was according to the Government more than double the inspections carried out the previous year and the number of violations found was 26 per cent higher, as a result of the increase in the number of inspections. The Government attributes this increase to significant improvements in the organization, preparation, execution and reporting of the inspections as well as the reduction of the duration of a single inspection. The Government also reports that the labour inspectorate has at its disposal facilities in 30 locations and 143 motor vehicles of which 38 are off-road vehicles. Each labour inspector has an average workload of 588 enterprises and 7,250 "insured persons" and is provided with a notebook, mobile internet and mobile phone with limited calls covered by the budget of the General Labour Inspectorate Executive Agency (GLIEA).

The Committee notes with interest from the Annual Report of the GLIEA that in 2009, emphasis was placed on ensuring wage payment in the context of the economic crisis and that consequently, delayed payments of wages and other remuneration were settled in the order of 39 million Bulgarian leva (BGN).

The Committee also notes however from the Government's report that the control on the compliance with the provisions of the Employment Promotion Act was also aimed at the lawful employment of foreigners. According to the 2009 activity report of the GLIEA, this control appears to take place on certain occasions with the involvement of representatives of the Ministry of the Interior following alerts that foreign citizens perform work without a permit. The Committee also notes that article 7(2) and (3) of the Labour Inspection Act sets out certain conditions under which joint investigations can be carried out with other agencies.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide details on the nature and scope of the activities carried out by the labour inspectorate in the area of controlling undeclared work and in particular the employment of irregular foreign workers, including information on the detected violations and the legal provisions concerned as well as the legal proceedings initiated, remedies applied and sanctions imposed. It requests the Government to specify the impact of the activities of the labour inspectorate focused on undeclared work in relation to the enforcement of provisions on conditions of work and the protection of workers, including undeclared workers.

In particular, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the manner in which the labour inspectorate ensures the enforcement of the employers' obligations with regard to the rights of foreign workers in an irregular situation, such as the payment of wages and social security benefits for the period of their effective employment relationship, especially in cases where such workers are liable to expulsion from the country; and asks the Government to provide information on the number of cases where workers found to be in an irregular situation have been granted their due rights.

The Committee also requests the Government to describe the method and nature of the joint investigations carried out by the labour inspectorate with other agencies including the Ministry of the Interior.

Burkina Faso

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1974)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Further to its previous comments, in which it drew the Government's attention to the need to adapt the activities of the inspection services to the specific features of the agricultural sector, even if these services cover other economic sectors, the Committee notes that nothing appears to have been done in this respect. Moreover, the Government has not been able to provide information, as requested, on the geographical distribution of agricultural undertakings and the workers employed therein. In the absence of such data, no assessment of the extent to which the Convention is applied is possible, either by the national authorities with a view to improving its coverage, or by the ILO supervisory bodies with a view to fulfilling their function in this respect. As the Committee emphasized in its previous observation, an appreciation of the effectiveness of the labour inspection system in agriculture is necessarily based on knowledge of the needs in this area and on the periodical updating of the relevant information.

The obligation for inspection units to provide periodical reports on their activities in agricultural undertakings (Article 25 of the Convention) is designed specifically to enable the central inspection authority to follow, supervise and adjust their activities, as well as to allow information on the items listed in Article 27, which are specific to the agricultural sector, to be included in the annual general report on inspection activities required by Article 26. For more than ten years, no report of this nature has been transmitted to the ILO and no data on the number of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection has ever been provided.

With reference to the Government's indication of the predominance of child labour in agriculture and stock-raising, and that projects to combat this phenomenon mean that labour inspectors are taking on an important role in this field, the Committee suggests that it should take advantage of the implementation of these projects to set in motion measures to revitalize the activities of the labour inspection services in agricultural undertakings. It notes that no information has been provided by the Government in this respect.

The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to ensure that the labour inspection services have access to data on the number and geographical distribution of agricultural undertakings and the workers employed therein, and to specify the geographical distribution of labour inspectors who in practice discharge their duties in agricultural undertakings.

Once again reminding the Government that, when the economic situation of a member State does not allow it to fulfil adequately the requirements of a ratified Convention, it may have recourse to international financial cooperation and the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which effect is given in law and practice to each of the provisions of the Convention and to keep the ILO informed of the difficulties encountered and the measures adopted to resolve them.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Burundi

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Primary duties of labour inspectorates. In its previous comments the Committee had observed that labour inspectorates' activities focused mainly on dispute resolution issues, instead of activities aiming at the enforcement function provided for by Article 3(1) of the Convention. Its appreciation was based on the reports on 2000 and 2001 first-quarter labour inspection activities, showing also the performing of a huge amount of administrative tasks. The Committee notes that five out of the nine inspectors are entrusted with collective dispute resolution issues, only three others dealing with control of conditions of work, though all of them have participated in a seminar organized by the Programme for promoting social dialogue in African French-speaking countries (PRÓDIAF) on proceedings relating to labour dispute resolution, during the first quarter of 2006. This information confirms that labour inspection continues to be taken off its main role to be put on labour dispute resolution missions.

According to the Government, the absence of a special status, the lack of means of transport, of qualifications and of technical equipment seem to have led to a lack of confidence from the employers towards labour inspectors.

The Committee once again stresses that it is necessary for labour inspectors to focus on the enforcement of legal provisions on labour conditions and protection of workers while engaged in their work (Article 3(1)) and that any further duties entrusted to them should not interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary in their relations with employers and workers (paragraph 2). It also recalls the Government's obligation of the competent authority to take measures to make available to labour inspectors the necessary means, such as transport facilities where no appropriate public transport facilities exist and reimbursement of any travelling and incidental expenses which may be necessary for the performance of their duties (Article 11). It expresses the hope that appropriate financial support will soon be granted through international cooperation to this end. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate any steps taken and any progress achieved in this regard and communicate in the nearest future any available report on labour inspection activities in industrial and commercial workplaces, concerning the application of legal provisions on conditions of work and protection of workers.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Central African Republic

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 09-004 of 29 January 2009 establishing the Labour Code chapter II of which concerns labour inspection and gives effect to many provisions of the Convention.

Articles 3(2), 10, 11 and 16 of the Convention. Duties of labour inspectors and human and budgetary resources of the labour inspection service. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the application of the Convention poses a problem in so far as the resources which should be available to labour inspectors for the performance of their duties are mostly lacking. Notwithstanding section 319(2) of the Labour Code, under the terms of which labour inspection services must have premises that are suited to their needs, the Government states that no significant measures have actually been adopted to this end. In particular, some offices lack even the most essential items, namely, doors, lights, chairs and tables, and are inaccessible when it rains because of flooding. Furthermore, according to the Government's report, no transport facilities have been established for inspectors since the ratification of the Convention and, apart from the transport expenses which they cover in the course of their duties, labour inspectors themselves pay the costs of communications, reprographics, printing, etc., necessary for the performance of their duties. The Government also states that out of the 53 inspectors, only 18 are assigned to enforcement duties. Some inspectors and controllers who were recruited in 2010 and 2011 are engaged in internships within the technical departments.

The Committee notes with concern the description that the Government has made of the situation faced by the labour inspection services, both from the point of view of human resources and material means. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided the information requested on any steps taken to obtain the technical assistance of the Office and to seek resources through international financial cooperation to improve on this situation.

The Committee urges once again the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance, including in order to obtain support in its search for the necessary funds in the framework of international cooperation, with a view to the progressive establishment of a labour inspection system which meets the requirements of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any formal step taken to this end.

Chad

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Further to its previous comments, the Committee once again notes with concern that the information sent by the Government is the same as that already received in April 2005 and 2006, and that the reports on the work of the inspectorate and the local inspection offices announced time and again in the Government's reports as being attached have still not been sent. Consequently, while noting that between 2005 and 2009 the number of labour inspectors rose from 15 to 23, the Committee is bound to draw the Government's attention once again to the commitments it made when it ratified the Convention, and accordingly to urge it to provide the Office with up to date information on the legislative and practical measures taken or envisaged to apply the Convention, and on any difficulties encountered.

Legislation. The Committee once again asks the Government to take steps for the adoption of texts giving effect to the provisions of the Labour Code on the powers and duties of labour inspectors and controllers and for the enactment of the draft decree issuing regulations governing labour inspectors and controllers to which the Government has been referring for many years. Please report any progress made in this regard.

Article 10 of the Convention. Increasing the numbers and qualifications of the labour inspectorate. The Committee requests the Government to specify the context in which the number of labour inspectors was increased and to indicate whether measures have been taken or are envisaged for the training of the staff of the inspectorate, either to update their skills or to give them further training to enable them to perform their duties effectively. Please describe any such measures and indicate their impact in terms of the achievement of the objectives of labour inspection.

Articles 11 and 16. Material resources and transport facilities made available to labour inspectors for the performance of their duties. Noting the information contained in an earlier report about possible financial support in the context of international cooperation, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on any developments in this matter in recent years and on any progress made in providing the labour inspection services with material resources for their work, particularly transport facilities, so that they are able to implement workplace inspection programmes. If the Government has been unable to obtain financial support, the Committee asks it to indicate the obstacles encountered and the measures envisaged for this purpose.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the International Labour Office of an annual report on labour inspection activities. Further to its previous comments, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the central labour inspection authority publishes and sends to the ILO an annual report, in accordance with these provisions of the Convention and with section 469 of the Labour Code, and to provide information in this respect.

While aware of the financial difficulties that are preventing the strict application of the relevant provisions of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide all the information and documentation that is currently available on the legislation covered by the Convention (Articles 2, 3(1)(a) and 21(a)) and on the work of the inspectorate and the results achieved (Article 21(c)–(g)), to enable the Committee to assess the situation and provide useful recommendations for the progressive application of the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

According to the information sent by the Government, a special appropriation for labour inspection will not be introduced in the budget until after the meetings to prepare the budget for the 2009 financial year. The Committee nonetheless notes that the labour administration has embarked on a diagnosis of the labour inspection services with a view to determining their budget and its inclusions in the 2009 national budget. It asks the Government to provide information on the results of this evaluation as soon as they are available.

The Committee notes that the Government has submitted a request for the inclusion in the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP), currently under preparation, of an application for technical assistance to gradually train enough labour inspectors to cover the entire territory. ILO support has also been sought to train two labour inspectors at the National School of Administration (ENA) of Madagascar. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of results of these steps. It trusts that it will take all necessary steps to obtain, particularly in the context of the future DWCP, support and assistance from the ILO for the development of an efficient labour inspection service.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Congo

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1999)

Absence of practical information to enable the Committee to assess the operation of the labour inspectorate in relation to the provisions of the Convention and relevant national laws. The Committee notes that the report provided by the Government on the manner in which the Convention is given effect in law to a large extent reproduces the report received in 2008.

The Committee notes the updated information regarding the number and geographical distribution by category of labour inspection staff. It notes, by comparison with the data given in the report received from the Government in 2008, a substantial reduction in labour inspection staff, in particular labour inspectors (from 75 to 55) and principal controllers (from 96 to 72). The Committee recalls that, according to Article 10, in order to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the labour inspectorate, the number of labour inspectors must be determined with due regard to the importance of the duties which inspectors have to perform, in particular the number, nature, size and situation of the workplaces liable to inspection; the number and classes of workers employed in such workplaces; the number and complexity of the legal provisions to be enforced; the material means placed at the disposal of the inspectors; and the practical conditions under which visits of inspection must be carried out.

While the laws and regulations concerning labour inspection and its mandate and prerogatives are available, it must be noted that there are no numerical data on other areas defined in Article 10 and, as the Government admits, there are no specific measures for giving effect to the provisions of Article 11 concerning the material conditions of work of labour inspectors, who do not have access to the transport facilities required for them to carry out their duties. The Committee notes, on the other hand, that according to the Government, inspectors' travel and related costs are reimbursed by the competent authority on presentation of invoices, which was not always the case, according to the report received in 2008.

With regard to the tools needed to assess the operation of the labour inspection system in practice, namely, the reports on inspection activities (Article 19) and the annual report of the central inspection authority, which under the terms of Articles 20 and 21 has to be published and transmitted to the ILO, the Committee notes with regret that none of the regional labour inspection activity reports referred to by the Government as having been transmitted to the Office since the date of ratification of this Convention has actually been received to date. Furthermore, the Government has not communicated a copy of Decree No. 2009-469 of 24 December 2009 concerning the organization of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security.

The Committee notes, however, that the Government is preparing a memorandum with a view to improving the functioning of the labour inspection service and that the Labour Code is currently being revised, in particular with regard to the powers and prerogatives of the labour inspectors.

The Committee also notes that the Government refers for the first time to a draft text on the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors (Article 6), which was supposedly drawn up in 2000 and submitted to the ministry responsible for the civil service. According to the Government, the final examination of that draft will depend on the revision now under way of the general civil service statutes. The Committee notes that this document has not been received by the Office, although according to the Government it was transmitted.

The Committee once again requests the Government to provide in its next report all the available information needed to assess the application of the Convention in law and in practice. This information should cover, among other matters: (i) the up-to-date geographical distribution of public officials responsible for labour inspection as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention; (ii) the geographical distribution of workplaces liable to inspection or, at the least, those for which the Government considers that the conditions of work require specific protection from the labour inspection services; (iii) the frequency, content and number of participants at the training courses provided for labour inspectors during their career; (iv) the level of remuneration and conditions for career advancement in relation to other public officials with comparable responsibilities; (v) the proportion of the national budget allocated to the public labour inspection services; (vi) a description of the cases in which inspectors visit enterprises, the procedure followed and the transport facilities that they use for this purpose, the activities that they carry out and their outcome; and (vii) the proportion of supervisory activities carried out by inspectors in relation to their conciliation duties.

The Committee also requests the Government to communicate a copy of any inspection activity reports originating from regional directorates, including the reports cited in the Government's reports sent to the ILO in 2008 and 2011; a copy of the draft or final text of the regulations relating to the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors; copies of the proposed amendments to the Labour Code, and of the memorandum which was reportedly sent to the ILO and is intended to improve the functioning of the labour inspection service.

In order to establish a labour inspection system that will respond to the social and economic goals which are the object of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to make every effort to adopt the measures needed to implement the measures described in the Committee's general observations made in 2007 (concerning the need for effective cooperation between the labour inspection service and the judicial system), in 2009 (concerning the need for statistics on industrial and commercial workplaces subject to labour inspection and the number of workers covered, and 2010 (concerning publication of the content of an annual report on the functioning of the labour inspection system). The Committee recalls once again the possibility of obtaining technical assistance from the ILO and of requesting, within the context of international financial cooperation, financial assistance in order to give the necessary impetus to the establishment and operation of the labour inspection system, and would be grateful for any information on progress made and difficulties encountered.

Costa Rica

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the comments of the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN), dated 22 August 2010, as well as the Government's reply dated 30 March 2011. The Committee also notes the new comments of the CTRN, dated 31 August 2011 which were transmitted to the Government on 22 September 2011. The Committee requests the Government to communicate any information or comment that it may deem appropriate in that regard so as to enable the Committee to examine these comments at the next session.

Articles 3(1)(a) and (2) and 5(a) of the Convention. Labour inspection, economic crisis and collaboration of inspection services with the social partners. In its 2009 observation, the Committee had noted the comments of the CTRN and the Labour Union of the National Bank of Costa Rica (SEBANA), denouncing the incompatibility of a Bill "for the protection of employment in times of crisis", that had been supported by the Government and entrepreneurs, with the Decent Work Country Programme, since it had been drafted without any consultation with the social partners, in particular with regard to the right of employers to reduce workers' wages. Moreover, the Committee had noted with concern that, pursuant to Directive No. 004-009, a labour inspector would be designated in order to verify whether, upon the employer's request, there was a necessity to reduce working days or wages or adopt any other measure affecting workers' rights during a period of up to six months, as well as whether the request was supported by all the workers, and to submit a report to the regional chief, who would transmit it to the National Directorate of the Labour Inspectorate, so that a decision could be taken in accordance with the law and the directives issued for that purpose by the higher administration of the ministry.

The Committee notes that, by the end of January 2011, the Bill "for the protection of employment in times of crisis" was before the Economic Affairs Commission of the Legislative Assembly and had not been submitted before the Plenary for its discussion nor convoked for analysis, nor subjected to a consultation with the social partners. Furthermore, the Committee notes with interest that Directive No. 007-09 issued by the National Directorate and the Chief Legal Adviser of the General Labour Inspectorate suspends Directive No. 004-09 of 24 March 2009 until a legal framework permitting, supporting and sustaining eventual changes in working time, reduction of wages or of any other entitlement is in place. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the adoption process of the Bill "for the protection of employment in times of crisis" and, in particular, on the role of inspection within that framework.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP) and the trade union confederations have been requested to forward a list of possible candidates for the National Advisory Council in order to bring it into operation as a tripartite body on labour inspection. The Committee also notes that, in order to bring the Council into operation, the Management Unit of the National Directorate of the Labour Inspectorate included within the objectives of the Institutional Plan of Operations for 2010 the fostering of instances of participation and social dialogue to improve compliance with the labour legislation. Recalling that the issue of the composition of the National Advisory Council has been addressed in its comments since 2004, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon be able to give an account in its next report of the composition of the Council and the commencement of its work and requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of any progress in this regard.

Articles 3(2), 10, 11, 16 and 21(c). The CTRN alleges that, in addition to the fact that the inspectors' volume of work has increased due to the increase in the number of workers, the amount and complexity of the legislation whose application they have to supervise since the implementation of the transfer of competencies from the inspectorate to the regional offices (established by the Plan of Transformation and by Regulation No. 28578). Moreover according to the CTRN, a greater volume of administrative work has been generated, which has been undertaken by the labour inspectors, due to the fact that regional offices lack clerks and bailiffs. The Union mentions an assessment made by the National Directorate of the Labour Inspectorate in March 2006 where it was stated that one of the obstacles to the inspection work was the fact that the transfer of competencies towards regional offices was not accompanied by the transfer of the necessary resources, in the manner foreseen, and reiterated that inspectors devoted a great part of their working day to conciliation. Owing to that situation, inspection visits were not performed with the required regularity and their number had suffered a steady decrease since 2004. The CTRN also highlights that this 2006 assessment mentioned the scarcity and restrictions to the use of regional offices' vehicles, the inadequacy of the travel budget, the difficulties in obtaining travel allowances, as well as other shortages.

The Committee notes that according to the Government's report, as of April 2011, the total number of labour inspectors was 102, approximately half of whom were assigned positions at the Central Regional Office which groups the provinces of San José, Cartago, Heredia and the cantons of Puriscal and Los Santos. The Committee notes that the efforts made by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security between 2008 and 2010 to staff regional offices, particularly with more inspectors, have not been successful, owing to the implementation of austerity policies and the reduction of the state budget in the wake of the international financial crisis. The Government outlined the steps taken vis-à-vis the Ministry of Finance for the creation of 15 additional posts for support staff to assist labour inspectors and conciliators, and refers to the need to hire at least 27 more inspectors in order to be able to meet the needs of the regional offices.

The Government also indicates that: (i) the Ministry of Labour and Social Security endeavours to ensure that labour inspectors devote as much time as possible to their duties to ensure good coverage; (ii) with the support of phase III of the "Cumple y Gana" Project, it has been possible to equip all the inspectors with computers; (iii) the relocation of the office is in process; and (iv) the acquisition of six vehicles has been planned for the transportation of inspectors.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide in its next report information on the number of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection, together with their geographical distribution; the number and category of workers employed in such undertakings (men, women, and young people); the number of vehicles available for labour inspectors or the transport facilities that they may benefit from in the course of duty, together with their geographical distribution; as well as any other useful information for the evaluation, by the competent authority, of the needs of the labour inspection in regard to human resources (inspectors and administrative staff), material means, means or facilities of transport.

Noting with interest that the Government has requested ILO technical assistance with a view to carrying out an evaluation of the labour inspection system to be followed by a plan of action, the Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of all progress made in this respect.

Articles 5(a), 17 and 18. Cooperation between labour inspection services and the judicial system. The Committee notes with interest the information that, in the course of the year 2010, the Advisory Unit of the National Directorate of the Labour Inspectorate sent an official communication to the judicial authorities, to coordinate actions in the labour sphere. The modalities for cooperation through the judicial school are being explored. Similarly, joint activities have been projected for the analysis of labour issues by the Supreme Court of Justice and the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. Furthermore, the Government indicates that, in order to accelerate the administration of justice, a Bill on the reform of the labour procedure had been introduced before the Legislative Assembly.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of the progress made towards strengthening the cooperation between the labour inspection and the justice system in particular with a view to accelerating the administration of labour justice. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any measure adopted to improve enforcement and sanction mechanisms for labour law infringements in accordance with Articles 17 and 18 of the Convention.

Article 12(1)(a) and (b). Right of inspectors to freely enter workplaces. The Committee notes that the Government transmits part of Directive No. 23-2008, by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security of 31 July 2008, which contains the new Handbook of Procedures of the Labour Inspection. It notes that the latter does not provide a response to the comments made since 2003 with regard to the scope of the right of inspectors to enter workplaces covered by the Convention. Consequently, and noting that labour inspectors are authorized under section 24(i) of Decree No. 28578 of 3 February 2000 (Regulation on the Organization and Services of the Labour Inspectorate) to visit workplaces during the daytime and night-time, while the right to enter freely at night workplaces liable to inspection is limited by section 89 of the Organic Act of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to workplaces in which night work is carried out, the Committee urges the Government to take the appropriate measures without further delay in order to bring its national legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention in that regard, so that labour inspectors are authorized to enter during the night into all workplaces liable to inspection, regardless of their working hours. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of all developments in this regard.

Articles 12(2) and 15(c). Notification of the inspector's presence when carrying out an inspection and efficiency of supervision and principle of confidentiality. The Committee emphasizes since 2004, the need to set out in the legislation the right of labour inspectors to refrain from informing the employer or his representative of their presence where they consider that such notification may be prejudicial to the effectiveness of the inspections. The Government indicates that it acts in conformity with the Handbook of Procedures of the Labour Inspection, which specifies that, whenever possible, the inspection will be initiated with an interview of the employer or his or her representative in order to indicate its scope, objectives and possible consequences. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that indicating the objectives of the visit when it originated in a complaint or a denunciation constitutes an obstacle to the principle of confidentiality enshrined in Article 15(c). The Committee requests the Government to endeavour to take the appropriate measures without further delay in order to grant inspectors the right to abstain from notifying their presence to the employer or his or her representative at the beginning of the inspection visit, when they consider that such notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to take the appropriate measures for the modification of the Handbook of Procedures of the Labour Inspection in accordance with the principle of confidentiality of complaints provided for in Article 15(c) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the comments of the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN), in a communication dated 22 August 2010, as well as the Government's reply dated 30 March 2011. Considering that they refer both to the present Convention and to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee draws the Government's attention to its comments made under the latter and requests the Government to communicate any information that it may deem relevant with regard to the labour inspection in agricultural undertakings.

The Committee also notes the new comments of the CTRN, dated 31 August 2011 which were transmitted to the Government on 22 September of 2011. The Committee requests the Government to communicate any information or comment that it may deem appropriate in that regard, so as to enable the Committee to examine these comments at its next session.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Croatia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1991)

Article 3(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Functions of the system of labour inspection. The Committee takes note of the communication of the State Inspectorate Act 2008 (OG 116/08 and 123/08) adopted in the framework of the Plan of Short-term and Long-term Measures to Combat the Grey Economy. It notes, however, that the text of this Act has been translated too late to be examined during the current session of the Committee. The Committee will examine this text together with the next report of the Government.

Article 3(2). Additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors. The Committee has noted in previous comments that one of the priorities of the labour inspectorate since 2005 has been to combat undeclared work including by foreigners without a work permit. It notes from the Government's latest report that, in 2008–09, labour inspectors responsible for labour relations focused their activities on the enforcement of the Aliens Act in addition to legislation related to conditions of work and the protection of workers such as social security, child labour, hours of work, wages, etc. In 2008, out of 2,215 cases of illegal employment detected, 880 concerned aliens working in contravention of the provisions of the Aliens Act (in 2009, out of 1921 cases, 605 concerned aliens). In the previous period (2006–07), around half of the reported cases of illegal employment concerned aliens working without a permit. In such cases, labour inspectors have been conferred the powers to impose a temporary ban on business operations under the Aliens Act and to bring these cases to the courts. General statistical information is provided in this regard without specifying how many court decisions concern in particular the employment of foreigners in violation of the Aliens Act and whether such decisions also enable foreign workers to recover the wages owed to them for the work performed or specifying the role of labour inspectors in this regard.

Referring to its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection (paragraphs 75–78), the Committee recalls that Convention No. 81 does not contain any provision suggesting that any workers be excluded from the protection afforded by labour inspection on account of their irregular employment status. The primary duty of labour inspectors is to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers and not to enforce immigration law. To be compatible with the protective function of labour inspection, the verification of the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all workers. Furthermore, since the human and other resources available to labour inspectorates are not unlimited, the major role sometimes assigned to labour inspectors in the area of illegal employment would appear to entail a proportionate decrease in inspection of conditions of work. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the activities of the labour inspectorate targeted at the enforcement of the Aliens Act do not prejudice the exercise of its primary duty to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers, and to describe the role of the labour inspectorate and the justice system in ensuring the discharge of the employers' obligations with regard to the statutory rights of foreign workers found to be illegally employed, such as the payment of wages and any other benefits owed for the work performed in the framework of their employment relationship, including where they are liable to expulsion or after they have been expelled.

Article 5(a). Effective cooperation between the inspection services and other government services and public institutions. In its report, the Government indicates that high detection rates of irregularities in the area of labour relations has been the fruit of cooperation between labour inspectors and other inspectors, primarily from the Ministry of the Interior. The Committee requests the Government to specify the nature of this cooperation and the categories of the other inspectors involved in operations aimed at combating undeclared work.

Articles 5(a), 17 and 18. Institution of legal proceedings and enforcement of adequate penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the high rate (58 per cent) of cases in which the legal proceedings initiated by labour inspectors were declared inadmissible by the misdemeanour courts due to the expiration of the statute of limitations. It notes that this rate has now decreased to 36.5 per cent, due primarily to the adoption of the Misdemeanours Act (OG107/07) which modified the statute of limitations as of 1 January 2008.

Furthermore, pursuant to its previous comments concerning the insufficient level of the penalties imposed, the Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, the decisions rendered by the Courts almost never order restitution for unjust enrichment and therefore are often not proportionate to the gravity of the offence.

With reference to its 2007 general observation on the importance of cooperation between the labour inspection system and the justice system, the Committee requests the Government to indicate any additional measures taken or considered with a view to accelerating the examination of cases referred by labour inspectors to the courts and ensuring the effective enforcement of adequate and sufficiently dissuasive penalties. It would be grateful if the Government would continue to indicate the progress achieved or difficulties encountered in this regard.

With reference to its comments under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), on the role of the labour inspectorate in the protection of the rights of men and women to equal remuneration for work of equal value, the Committee requests the Government to indicate any awareness-raising activities carried out by the labour inspectorate in this area and once again urges the Government to ensure that legal provisions establishing adequate penalties in the case of violations of section 83 of the Labour Act, 2009 concerning equal remuneration are adopted and are effectively enforced.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cuba

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1954)

Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee notes with interest the information contained in the annual inspection report according to which, during 2010, priority was given to training and educational activities for labour inspection personnel through masters' degrees, diplomas, postgraduate courses, communication, information technology and languages. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the number of labour inspection staff who benefited from such training, the areas and educational institutions concerned, and the impact of these training activities on the operation of the labour inspection system.

Articles 12 and 15(c) of the Convention. Restrictions on the principle of the freedom of access of labour inspectors to workplaces liable to inspection and the principle of confidentiality. The Committee recalls that its previous comments related to sections 11 and 12 of the Regulations of 2007 on the system of national labour inspection, which establish the requirement for inspectors, at the beginning of each inspection visit, to present to the employer a copy of a written inspection order by the National Inspection Office, indicating the subjects and purpose of the inspection. In its report, the Government indicates that confidentiality with regard to complaints and their source is maintained in those provisions and that notification is not given prior to surprise inspections, for which reason it considers that the legislation is not contrary to the Convention, and that the inspection order does not constitute prior notice, but only notification of the presence of the inspector at the time that the inspection begins. The Committee reiterates that the obligation of labour inspectors to present to the employer, when they enter the establishment, not only the corresponding credentials, as provided for in Article 12(1), but also an order to conduct the inspection, is in total contradiction with Articles 12(1) and (2) and 15(c) of the Convention, and makes it impossible to guarantee the confidentiality of complaints and their sources (Articles 12 and 15(c)). Moreover, the Committee draws the Government's attention once again to Article 12(2), according to which labour inspectors should be authorized to abstain from notifying the employer of their presence during an inspection visit if they consider that such notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties. The Committee therefore urges the Government to ensure the adoption without further delay of the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with Articles 12(1) and (2) and 15(c) of the Convention in this respect. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of any relevant legal text as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cyprus

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Functions of the labour inspection system in the area of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes with interest from the 2009 annual report a number of practices which deserve to be highlighted and particularly the activities carried out by the labour inspectorate responsible for occupational safety and health in schools to raise public awareness from an early age concerning occupational safety and health issues, as well as the promotion of safety committees at the workplace and the participation in the European Safety and Health at Work Campaign with the slogan "Healthy workplaces – Good for you. Good for business", which emphasizes the financial value to enterprises of beneficial conditions of work for workers. The Committee also notes with interest the information on the inspection campaigns targeting certain branches of activity, such as construction. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of the impact of these activities, for example, in terms of reduced accident rates, etc.

Articles 3(1) and (2), and 5(a). Functions of the labour inspection system and effective cooperation with other public and private institutions including the courts. The Committee notes from the annual reports for 2007, 2008 and 2009 that there has been an important increase in the number of visits by the labour inspectorate responsible for labour relations and in the number of corresponding cases brought to the courts in collaboration with a Public Prosecutor assigned for special duties to the Ministry of Labour and Social Insurance. The Committee also notes, however, that, in 2009, almost half of the inspection visits carried out by the inspectorate responsible for labour relations (2,568 out of 5,431 visits) were related to the question of undeclared and illegal work, including by undocumented migrant workers. The inspection visits in question demonstrated that 24.49 per cent of the 8,858 workers occupied in the workplaces inspected were undeclared and that 11 per cent of these workers were foreigners from third countries, and many of them were irregular residents. Moreover, 72 out of 123 cases brought to the courts by labour inspectors in 2009 concerned undeclared and illegal work. The Committee understands from this information that the main priority of the labour inspectorate in the area of labour relations is to combat undeclared work, inter alia, by verifying the residency status of foreign workers.

The Committee recalls that, under Article 3(1)(a), the primary function of labour inspectors is to secure the enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, such as provisions relating to hours of work, the payment of wages, the prevention of child labour, the promotion of freedom of association, etc. As indicated in the General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection (paragraphs 77–78), the Convention does not contain any provision suggesting that any workers be excluded from the protection afforded by labour inspection on account of their irregular employment status. With regard to foreign workers in particular, the Committee has stated in unequivocal terms that “the primary duty of labour inspectors is to protect workers and not to enforce immigration law”. In conclusion, the Committee recalls that, to be compatible with the protective function of labour inspection, the verification of the legality of employment by labour inspectors should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all workers, including undocumented ones. This objective can only be met if the workers covered are convinced that the primary task for the labour inspectorate is to enforce the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers.

The Committee also recalls that, under Article 3(2), additional duties that are not aimed at securing enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers should be assigned to labour inspectors only in so far as they do not interfere with their primary duties or do not prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with workers. Since the human and other resources available to labour inspectorates are not unlimited, the major role assigned to labour inspectors in the area of illegal employment would appear to entail a proportionate decrease in inspection of conditions of work. Consequently, the Committee of Experts has welcomed in paragraph 78 of its 2006 General Survey the initiative of certain governments to relieve the inspectorate of the task of policing illegal employment and transfer it to another body.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would take the necessary measures to ensure that the additional duty of verifying the residency status of foreign workers is entrusted to a body separate from the labour inspectorate so that labour inspectors can focus on their main function which is to secure the enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers. The Committee also requests the Government to specify the applicable legal provisions, the types of violations and the nature of the sanctions imposed by the courts in cases concerning undeclared work. It would be grateful if the Government would provide copies of legal decisions ordering the payment of outstanding wages to workers, including undocumented foreign workers, who were found to be in an illegal employment relationship for the period worked, and details on any remedial measures taken, in accordance with the law, in order to ensure that workers found to be in an illegal employment relationship are regularized in their employment. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would specify the types of violations involved in the 51 cases decided by penal courts in 2009, which did not relate to the issue of undeclared employment.

Articles 14 and 21(g). Notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease and relevant statistics. The Committee notes with interest the texts communicated by the Government, notably the National Strategy on Safety and Health at Work for the period 2007–12 as well as the Safety and Health at Work (Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Notification) Regulations of 2007. The latter requires the notification to the Department of Labour Inspection of all accidents to employed and self-employed persons, arising out of their employment or occurring during their normal travel between home and their workplace, and all accidents occurring to any person not at work when those accidents are related to a place of work or a work activity (accidents to be reported are those which cause physical or mental harm as a result of which the worker is unable to perform the usual work for more than three days). The Government also indicates that, in order to minimize the under-reporting of accidents, close and continuous cooperation has been developed between the Department of Labour Inspection and the Social Insurance System which led to an increase of notified accidents by almost 50 per cent since 2002. The Committee also notes, however, that the statistical data provided in the 2009 annual report on the numbers of occupational accidents notified between 2003 and 2009, shows that the recent measures have not yet produced an impact. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of further measures taken to improve the reporting of occupational accidents and of any progress noted in this regard.

With regard to the recording of cases of occupational disease, the Government indicates that only a few cases were notified during the reporting period. In its previous comments, while welcoming a number of measures to improve the recording of occupational diseases, the Committee had also noted that, in view of the insufficient number of occupational physicians in the country, it would take some time before an accurate pool of such statistics would be established.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to supply information on any measures taken or envisaged with a view to improving the notification rate of cases of occupational disease and enabling the inclusion of the most accurate possible statistical data in future annual reports on the work of the labour inspection services. It also once again requests the Government to describe the functioning in practice of the notification and recording system established by the Safety and Health at Work (Occupational Diseases Notification) Regulations of 2007, and indicate any measures taken or envisaged to increase the number of occupational physicians.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1968)

Articles 4, 5, 7, 10, 11, 20 and 21 of the Convention. Administrative decentralization and labour inspection. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report that labour inspection is a function that is considered to be an integral part of the national public service. The Government adds that it has prepared a draft Decree containing general provisions governing officials and managerial staff in the General Labour Inspectorate, and that this draft text has been submitted to the Prime Minister for signature. It adds that it undertakes to make the labour inspectorate a General Directorate and, at the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference, it referred to the reform of the General Labour Inspectorate into a specialized service enjoying administrative and financial autonomy to increase its effectiveness.

While noting these developments, the Committee also observes that the Government has not provided any documents enabling the Committee to assess the manner in which effect is given to the provisions of the Convention throughout the country. In particular, no report on the work of the inspection services has been received. With reference to previous comments, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the risk of the weakening of the labour inspection system following the decentralization of the respective functions and responsibilities, if this decentralization is not accompanied by the effective transfer of the necessary resources for the functioning of the decentralized labour inspection services, to guarantee the protection of the workers covered by the Conventions throughout the national territory. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide a copy of the Decree issuing general provisions governing officials and managerial staff in the General Labour Inspectorate as soon as it has been adopted, and to provide detailed information on the announced reform of the General Labour Inspectorate and the organizational plan of the labour inspection system at both the national and provincial levels. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide copies of any texts or documents, including any report on the activities of the labour inspection, which would enable the Committee to assess the manner in which effect is given to the provisions of the Convention in practice.

Articles 3(2), 6 and 15(a). Integrity, independence and impartiality of labour inspectors. In reply to the Committee's previous comments concerning the allegations of corruption of labour inspectors exercising parallel activities made by the Confederation of Trade Unions of Congo (CSC), the Government indicates that, in accordance with Act No.81-003 of 17 July 1981, labour inspectors cannot perform a second job. The Committee also notes with interest that with a view to improving their status and conditions of service, a permanent bonus has been awarded for special duties to labour inspectors and controllers. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide clarifications on the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors at both the central and provincial levels and to transmit copies of the relevant legal texts. Please also indicate the percentage increase in the permanent monthly bonuses provided to labour inspectors and whether this increase covers the staff of the labour inspection in all the provinces of the country. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the disciplinary procedures and sanctions applicable in the event of violations of Act No. 81-003 of 17 July 1981 on the prohibition of the exercise of a parallel activity by labour inspectors.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Re-establishment of the exercise of the right to organize. The Committee notes that the work of the National Labour Council in 2004 gave rise to the adoption, among other regulatory texts on workers' right of representation, of Ministerial Order No. 12/CAB/MIN/TPS/VTB/053/2004 of 12 October 2004 lifting the suspension of trade union elections in enterprises and establishments of all types. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the impact of this Order on industrial relations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Djibouti

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

In its previous comments, the Committee referred to comments made by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) in 2007 calling for an urgent review of the labour inspection system and the strengthening of its resources. In the absence of any recent statistics on the working of the labour inspectorate, the Committee also asked the Government to report in as much detail as possible on the following matters: (i) the supervision of working conditions and the protection of workers in enterprises in export processing zones excluded from the scope of the new Labour Code by section 1 of the Code; (ii) the impact of the conciliation work carried out by labour inspectors on the volume and quality of their inspection duties (Article 3(2) of the Convention); (iii) human resources and means of action of the labour inspectorate in relation to the requirement of Article 16 that workplaces shall be visited as often and as thoroughly as necessary; and (iv) the need to give effect to Articles 20 and 21 concerning the requirement that the central inspection authority shall publish and communicate to the ILO an annual general report on the work of the inspection services.

On the basis of the information sent by the Government, the Committee wishes to draw attention to the following points.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Supervision of working conditions and protection of workers in industrial and commercial establishments in export processing zones. The Committee noted in its previous comments that, under section 1 of the Labour Code, the Code applies throughout the national territory except in export processing zones (EPZs) which are governed by special legislation. According to the Government, not only are the EPZs beyond the competence of the labour inspectorate but the legislation applying to them, which has prompted objections in the country, grants excessive privileges to employers at the expense of the workers. The Government explains that supervision of the enterprises allowed to operate in EPZs is the responsibility of the ports and EPZs authorities, which also issue visas for foreign workers and deal with any disputes regarding the election of staff delegates in the zones. The Committee notes, however, that pursuant to section 31 of the EPZ Code issued by Act No. 53/AN/04 of 17 May 2004, "the Djibouti Labour Code governs labour relations in the export processing zones", and that the legislation on EPZs available at the ILO contains no provisions on this subject. The Government is asked to indicate whether section 31 of the EPZ Code has been repealed and if so, to provide the relevant text, and in any event to provide copies of the texts governing the working conditions and protection of the workers occupied in establishments in the EPZs together with the legal provisions respecting their enforcement.

Articles 3(1)(a) and (b), and 17. Need to ensure a balance between the enforcement and advisory functions of labour inspection. According to the Government, the work of inspection services pertaining to labour legislation focuses largely on persuasion and information. The Committee nonetheless notes that the national legislation contains, as the Convention requires, a whole set of legal provisions that also enable inspectors to prosecute those who are in breach of the law on working conditions. In paragraph 279 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, the Committee pointed out in this connection that although advice and information can only encourage compliance with legal provisions, it should nonetheless be accompanied by an enforcement mechanism enabling those guilty of violations reported by labour inspectors to be prosecuted. In keeping with its assertion that no labour legislation, however developed it may be, can exist for long without an effective labour inspection system, the Government should ensure that the inspection system is able to make use of all means of action available to it under the law to attain its objectives. A balance between the advisory and enforcement roles of the inspection services would, without doubt, contribute to reducing the number and scale of labour disputes. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take the appropriate steps to ensure that, where necessary, inspectors exercise in practice the authority conferred by Article 17 of the Convention, to which section 196 of the Labour Code gives effect, themselves to initiate legal action before the competent jurisdiction against those who breach labour laws and regulations, on the basis of the provisions of Title IX of the Code which defines offences and establishes the penalties applying to them.

Article 3(2). Accumulation of tasks assigned to labour inspectors and its impact on the volume and quality of their inspection duties. In its observations of 2007, the UGTD expressed the view that in future the duties of the inspectorate should encompass conciliation and prevention. The Committee drew the Government's attention in this connection to Article 3(2), which places restrictions on the additional duties that may be required of labour inspectors, and asked the Government to send the Office information on the manner in which observance of this provision is ensured. The Government acknowledges that workplace inspection has its shortcomings. Furthermore, the data the Government provided on the work of the inspectorate in the area of occupational safety and health are slight in comparison with those pertaining to the settlement of individual and collective labour disputes. The Government nonetheless hopes that in future, the labour inspection service will be able to conduct three visits a week. The Committee notes this information with concern, observing that it bears out the UGTD's assertion that the labour inspection system needs to be reviewed and strengthened so that it can perform its duties fully. It furthermore regrets that it has not been informed of the number of workplaces subject to inspection and is therefore unable to assess the extent to which the needs for inspection are covered. Observing that the time and energy that labour inspectors spend in attempting to settle collective labour disputes interfere with the performance of their primary duties, the Committee suggests, in paragraph 74 of its General Survey mentioned above, that conciliation or mediation in collective labour disputes be entrusted to a specialized body or officials. It notes in this connection that section 181 of the new Labour Code in fact provides for the establishment of an arbitration council to hear collective labour disputes that conciliation has failed to settle. It notes, however, that the Council will hear the dispute only after the labour inspector or labour director has attempted conciliation and referred the matter to it within eight full days (section 180 of the Code). The Committee reminds the Government of the specific warning in Paragraph 8 of Recommendation No. 81 that "the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes" and it urges the Government to envisage taking steps to relieve inspectors of their role as preliminary conciliators in labour disputes. It would be grateful if the Government would also take measures to ensure, as required by Article 16 of the Convention, that the strength of the inspectorate is sufficient to cover the workplaces liable to inspection and send the Office information with as much supporting documentation as possible on all progress made in this matter and on any difficulties encountered.

Articles 10, 11 and 16. Reinforcement of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes that in order to reinforce the labour inspection system, the Government plans to create four new sections of the inspectorate, two in the capital and two in the interior of the country, and to take advantage of technical support from the ILO Subregional Office in Addis Ababa to organize a training course for labour controllers and the single labour inspector at the ILO International Training Centre in Turin. It also notes that the Government is examining possibilities for cooperation between the labour inspectorate and the competent medical and technical institutions, and that a tripartite workshop on Convention No. 81 was to be organized by the ILO subregional office in 2008. The Committee hopes that the Government will not fail to keep the ILO informed of any developments relative to any of these matters.

Further to its previous comments, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide the most recent data available on the number and geographical distribution of the workplaces liable to inspection (including mines and quarries), the number of workers employed therein and the transport facilities available to the labour inspector and labour controllers for duty travel.

Such information is essential to the central inspection authority in evaluating the human and material resources needed in order to attain the objectives of labour inspection and hence to estimating the funding of the inspectorate in the national budget.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication, communication and content of the annual inspection report. While taking note of the table of statistics attached to the Government's report on the work of the inspection services, the Committee observes that it covers a period of five years and that, in terms of activities and results, it is not sufficiently specific or relevant to be of use in evaluating the operation and efficiency of the labour inspection system. The Committee is therefore once again bound to ask the Government to take the necessary measures for the publication of an annual inspection report, as provided in section 192 of the Labour Code, within the time limits prescribed in Article 20 and containing the information required by Article 21. Emphasizing that such a report is an essential tool in evaluating the efficiency of the inspection system and in identifying the resources required for its improvement, in particular through appropriate budgetary estimates, the Committee requests the Government to pay due attention to the indications in Part IV of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81) as to the level of detail that would be appropriate in the information required by clauses (a) to (g) of Article 21 of the Convention. It recalls that it may request ILO technical assistance for this purpose.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominican Republic

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee notes the Government's report, which was received at the office on 6 October 2010. It also notes the comments made by the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC), the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD), which were dated 31 August 2010.

Articles 3, 10, 16 and 23 of the Convention. Number of labour inspection staff for the effective discharge of labour inspection duties. According to the trade unions, the number of labour inspectors is insufficient to guarantee the effective discharge of inspection duties. In its previous comments the Committee noted the announcement of a competition to fill 12 labour inspector posts in order to add to the current staff of 178 serving inspectors. It also asked the Government to indicate any changes in numbers and geographical distribution of inspectors and to provide figures in respect of the replacement of inspectors who had retired. The Committee notes that the Government does not reply to the points raised by the unions or to its previous comments. It draws the Government's attention to paragraph 174 of the 2006 General Survey on labour inspection in which it emphasizes that measures should be taken to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, taking into account the importance of the duties which they have to perform, in particular: the number, nature, size and situation of the workplaces liable to inspection; the number and the range of categories of workers employed in such workplaces; and the number and the complexity of the legal provisions to be enforced. The Committee would therefore be grateful if the Government would supply: (i) up-to-date information on the number of labour inspectors and their geographical distribution; (ii) details of the distribution of activities and duties entrusted to labour inspectors, in both central and regional offices, in relation to the inspection duties defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention; and (iii) any available information on the number and geographical distribution of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection and the workers employed therein. If such information is unavailable, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to identify and register such workplaces, so as to ensure the programming of inspection visits and to keep the ILO informed of any developments in this respect.

Articles 6 and 15(a). Conditions of service and integrity, independence and impartiality of labour inspectors. The unions regret that lack of integrity on the part of labour inspectors continues to be widespread, even though they acknowledge that the situation has seen some improvement in recent years. They also point out that inspectors put pressure on workers to renounce their claims or enter into agreements that are detrimental to them, in order to avoid disputes and preserve jobs. The Committee notes that the Government does not comment on this matter in its report. The Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 6 of the Convention, the inspection staff shall be composed of public officials whose status and conditions of service are such that they are assured of stability of employment and are independent of changes of government and of improper external influences. It wishes to emphasize, with reference to the 2006 General Survey, paragraph 204, that it is vital that the status, levels of remuneration and career prospects of inspectors be such that high-quality staff are attracted, retained, and protected from any improper influence. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take all the necessary steps to ensure that the remuneration and conditions of service of labour inspectors are in conformity with the principles laid down by Article 6 of the Convention. Moreover, the Committee observes that section 438 of the Labour Code prohibits labour inspectors from having any direct or indirect interest in the enterprises under their supervision. The Committee requests the Government to send a copy of any legislative provisions adopted pursuant to section 438 of the Labour Code, especially as regards the penalties applicable to any labour inspector who violates the prohibition contained in section 438. It also requests the Government to supply information on complaints made against labour inspectors on grounds of conduct contrary to the principles laid down in Article 15 of the Convention and on action taken further to such complaints.

Articles 7 and 8. Training of labour inspectors and mixed nature of inspection staff. The unions highlight the lack of skill and sensitivity on the part of inspectors regarding matters concerning the rights of women workers, such as discrimination, sexual harassment and violence, and concerning freedom of association, since inspectors have been reluctant to report violations relating to dismissals or other acts of anti-union discrimination, arguing that the workers concerned were not protected by trade union immunity. With regard to these points, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that, according to Article 7 of the Convention, subject to any conditions for recruitment to the public service which may be prescribed by national laws or regulations, labour inspectors shall be recruited with sole regard to their qualifications for the performance of their duties and shall be adequately trained for the performance of their duties. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the qualifications that labour inspectors must possess (Article 7(1)) and to specify the manner in which it is ensured that labour inspectors receive adequate initial and subsequent training for the effective performance of their duties (Article 7(3)). It also requests the Government to provide information on the training activities for labour inspectors in particular in the areas of non-discrimination and freedom of association, giving details of frequency, number of participants, subjects covered and duration.

Furthermore, reminding the Government that, according to Article 8 of the Convention, both men and women shall be eligible for appointment to the inspection staff and, where necessary, special duties may be assigned to men and women inspectors, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the proportion of women who perform labour inspection duties and to specify whether they are assigned special duties, such as the inspection of workplaces where the staff are predominantly women or young people.

Article 11. Equipment and transport facilities for labour inspectors. The trade unions deplore the inadequacy of the computer equipment and transport facilities made available to labour inspectors. According to the unions, the inspectorate had 221 computers and ten vehicles for a total of 33 provinces in 2009. The Committee had noted in its previous comments that four new vehicles had been made available to inspectors for duty travel and had asked the Government to provide information on the impact of this measure on inspection activities and their results. The Committee observes that the Government has not replied in its report to the comments made by the unions or to its previous comments in this regard. With reference to the 2006 General Survey, paragraph 238, the Committee emphasizes that for a labour inspectorate to carry out its functions effectively, its staff must be given the necessary resources to perform their tasks and to ensure that their role and the importance of their work receive due recognition. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps to ensure that labour inspectors have the necessary material means to perform their duties. It requests the Government to supply information on the office equipment provided for the inspection services, in both the capital and the regions, and on the accessibility thereof to all persons concerned (Article 11(1)(a)), and also on the transport facilities made available to inspectors at all offices (Article 11(1)(b)), and on the reimbursement of travelling expenses incurred by labour inspectors in the performance of their duties (Article 11(2)).

Article 18. Effective enforcement of adequate penalties. The trade unions also allege that labour inspectors allow themselves to be intimidated by the executives, directors and security personnel of certain enterprises, who prevent them from entering the workplace and from establishing violations denounced by workers or trade unions. The Committee reiterates the comments it has been making since 2007, in which it noted the Government's intention to consult the social partners within the framework of the Labour Advisory Council with a view to establishing financial penalties for obstructing labour inspectors in the performance of their duties. The Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that effect is given to the provisions of this Article of the Convention, according to which adequate penalties for obstruction of labour inspectors in the performance of their duties must be provided for by national laws or regulations and effectively enforced. Reiterating its previous comments on this matter, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that a method is devised promptly to review the amount of the fines imposed so that they remain dissuasive despite any monetary fluctuations and to ensure that these penalties are effectively enforced.

Furthermore, noting that the Government's report does not reply for the second time in succession to its previous observation, the Committee is bound to repeat the following parts thereof:

Article 12(1)(a) and (b). Right of labour inspectors to enter any workplace freely. The Committee notes that, in response to its previous comments, it is planned to amend the national legislation so that, as provided by the Convention, inspectors will be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection and to enter by day any premises which they may have reasonable cause to believe to be liable to inspection. The Government is requested to provide information on any progress made in the amendment process envisaged to this effect or to communicate a copy of any text adopted.

Article 12(1)(c)(iv). Testing of substances and materials used or handled. Further to its previous comments concerning the usefulness of giving a legal basis to the prerogatives of labour inspectors, the Committee hopes that measures will be taken to give effect to this provision of the Convention under which labour inspectors must be empowered to take or remove for purposes of analysis samples of materials and substances used or handled, subject to the employer or his representative being notified of any samples or substances taken or removed for such purpose. It asks the Government to keep the ILO informed of any progress made in this respect and to communicate a copy of the new occupational health and safety regulations which were due to be adopted in 2006.

Article 14. Notifying the labour inspectorate of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee once again asks the Government to take measures to determine the cases in which the labour inspectorate must be informed of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease and to keep the Office informed in this respect. It would be grateful if the Government would also indicate progress in the drafting of a schedule determining and classifying occupational diseases.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual inspection report. The Committee once again notes that, despite repeated requests, no annual inspection report of the kind provided for by the Convention has been received by the Office. The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office to create the necessary conditions to enable the central inspection authority to publish and communicate to the Office a report on the work of the inspection services under its control. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary steps to this effect and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures in the very near future.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Egypt

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1956)

Article 3(1)(b) of the Convention. Labour inspection and child labour. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on the present Convention and on the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), concerning the awareness-raising activities on child labour which have been undertaken, including national and local seminars. The Committee notes with interest from the Government's report that awareness-raising seminars were held at schools, high schools and colleges on the matters related to occupational safety and health like the preparation of an emergency plan, crisis management and fire responses. Referring also to its comments under Convention No. 138, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on measures adopted to reinforce the role of the labour inspectorate in the field of child labour. With reference to Paragraph 7 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation 1947 (No. 81), it requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted with a view to organizing the broad dissemination of information by the labour inspection services, through media accessible to the majority of the population (radio, television, the written press and cars equipped with megaphones) on the harm caused by child labour and the proceedings envisaged by the law against users of child labour. The Committee also requests information on the number of violations reported by labour inspectors and the sanctions applied (the amount of fines and other measures, such as the suspension of operations, imprisonment or other administrative or judicial measures) in the field of child labour, and particularly in high-risk sectors.

The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to provide information on any measure adopted in this respect and that it will ensure that statistics of the inspection services on cases of violations and the sanctions applied are published regularly, broadly disseminated and communicated to the ILO.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

France

French Polynesia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81)

The Committee notes that the transfer of the labour inspectorate pursuant to the Statute of Autonomy of French Polynesia was completed on 1 January 2009. It notes national Act No. 2010-5 of 3 May 2010 concerning labour inspection in French Polynesia. The Committee notes with interest that, under section LP 83-12 of this Act, labour inspectors now have the power to take, in accordance with Article 13(2)(b) of the Convention, any measures aimed at ensuring health protection, including the temporary stoppage of work or activities, in cases of serious risk defined in 11 situations listed in the text. Their decision is of immediate application and is not suspended if the employer makes use of the right of appeal to a higher authority (section LP 83-24 of the Act). The Committee requests the Government to provide information and statistics in its next report on the impact of this new power of direct injunction by labour inspectors on the level of compliance by employers with the legal requirements and prescriptions relating to the safety and health in workplaces characterized by a high rate of accidents.

The Committee further notes with interest that the abovementioned Act has replaced, by administrative fines, the system of penalties envisaged in the legal provisions relative to the obligation to submit a declaration prior to recruitment and to combat clandestine work, as well as in Decision No. 2000-130 APF of 26 October 2000, as amended, on professional divers and establishing specific protection measures for workers engaged in a high pressure environment and the organization of their vocational training (Chapter II of Act No. 2010-5). According to the explanations provided by the Government, this change is aimed at mitigating the near absence of repression by penal courts, the length of the procedures, and the very low amounts of the penalties imposed. Crimes as well as certain infringements still remain under penal court jurisdiction. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would supply examples of judicial decisions rendered before the adoption of Act No. 2006-20 of 28 November 2006 in cases of violation of the abovementioned legislation and administrative fines imposed since then, as well as information on the impact in terms of the evolution of the level of observance of this Act.

The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would indicate if it is intended to extend the new system of penalties to other matters relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work in order to reinforce the dissuasive effect of the repressive measures taken by labour inspectors, or if steps have been taken or envisaged to promote an effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system to the same end, as recommended in the general observation of 2007 under this Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to send the ILO a copy of Order No. 616 CM of 5 May 2009 establishing the labour inspection service of French Polynesia. It would be grateful if the Government would also provide information on the procedure for the adoption of the decision on the conditions for nomination to the positions of head of department, head of inspection and supervisors, referred to in its report received in November 2010.

Articles 3(1)(a) and (2), and 5(a) of the Convention. Additional duties assigned to controllers. Action against undeclared work. The Committee notes national Act No. 2006-20 of 28 November 2006 concerning the obligation of a declaration prior to recruitment and the action against undeclared work. With reference to its previous comments on this issue, the Committee notes that, according to the annual inspection report for 2009, the work of the labour inspectorate focused in priority on action against undeclared work and on measures to prevent falls from height in the construction and public works sector.

According to the information in the Government's report received in 2008, since few cases are recorded of employment of foreigners without official papers owing to the geographical situation of the country, undeclared work is primarily the result of non-declaration of employees to the Social Security Fund (CPS), and controls made in this context generally lead to the regularization of the situation and not to dismissal of the employee. In the event of termination of the employment relationship under Act No. 2006-20 of 28 November 2006, workers employed in breach of the regulations are entitled to lump-sum compensation equivalent to six months' wages, unless the application of other legal provisions would lead to a more favourable solution in accordance with national Act No. 2006-20 of 28 November 2006. However, the Government indicated in its report of 2008 that nothing has been undertaken to facilitate the implementation of this right. In the same report, the Government indicated that action against undeclared work was henceforth the subject of a meeting within an informal committee under the auspices of the Public Prosecutor and the labour inspectorate, with the participation of the monitoring service of the CPS, the gendarmerie, the police and the border police, and that common action was organized on a quarterly basis.

The Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of infringements reported in the context of action against undeclared work relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers, the legal provisions concerned, the penalties imposed and the corrective measures taken (for example, to guarantee the payment of the minimum wage and social benefits for work actually done). The Government is also requested to state in what manner the labour inspectorate ensures, in accordance with section L.341-6-1 of the Labour Code, and in the relevant provisions of the abovementioned Act No. 2006-20, that employers' obligations are discharged with regard to work done by foreign workers who are illegally resident, where such workers are facing expulsion or removal from the country and to specify the number of regularizations for undeclared workers to the CPS.

The Committee requests the Government to also describe the procedure for the collaboration between the labour inspectorate, on the one hand, and the gendarmerie, police and border police, on the other, in the context of the informal committee which is responsible for action against undeclared work and to supply details of the joint action undertaken by this committee and the impact thereof.

Conciliation duties. With regard to its previous comments concerning the discharge of conciliation duties by the labour inspectorate in addition to their primary duties, the Committee notes with interest that, even though the regulations in force assign to controllers the task of taking action to resolve labour disputes, since 2006 all individual disputes has been handled by labour service staff and that action in cases of collective disputes has come within the competence of the labour director. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any measures taken or contemplated to ensure that the regulations in force are amended so that controllers are discharged of the duty of intervening in the resolution of labour disputes. The Government is also requested to continue to keep the ILO informed of the impact of relieving labour inspectors from conciliation duties on the exercise of their primary duties (inspection activities relating to conditions of work) and the protection of workers while engaged in their work.

Article 5. Effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and other government services and collaboration with social partners in the area of occupational safety and health. The Committee notes that cooperation is continuing between the labour inspection service and the Social Security Fund (CPS), especially its risk prevention service. In particular, it notes with interest that: (i) a guide for evaluating the main occupational hazards has been produced and disseminated; (ii) nine enterprises have been supported and monitored in this process; (iii) an information pamphlet on noise has been produced and disseminated; (iv) cooperation between occupational physicians and doctors in public health is planned with a view to improved prevention in the remote islands; and (v) the setting up of a hazard database continued in 2009 and related projects were expected to be completed in 2010. The Committee also notes that the inspection service is participating in training for trade unionists who are members of occupational safety and health committees and for new enterprise chiefs, and that a labour inspection council with an advisory function, the structure and operation of which are due to be fixed by the Council of Ministers, has been established under the auspices of the labour minister. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of all progress made through cooperation inter-institutional and collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Gabon

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1972)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention and Part IV of the report form. Pursuant to its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the annual activities report of the General Inspectorate for Hygiene and Occupational Medicine for 2010, and the activities report of the General Directorate for Labour, Manpower and Employment for 2010, which were attached to the Government's report.

The Committee notes with interest that, following the Government's request, the ILO has conducted a diagnostic study of Gabon's labour administration and inspection systems, and that recommendations have been made regarding the organization and strengthening of labour inspection. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate all the measures adopted or envisaged in order to implement the recommendations made in the context of the ILO's diagnostic study, as well as any practical difficulties that may have been encountered.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Germany

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1955)

Articles 7 and 10 of the Convention. Shared training network between six federated states (Länder). The Committee notes with interest that in order to retain professional competences in a situation where the number of labour inspectors is decreasing due to budgetary constraints, six Länder (Mecklenburg-Pomerania, Saxony, Saxony-Anhalt, Brandenburg, Thuringia and Berlin) have joined forces to create a shared training network designed to provide uniform training to labour inspectors on the basis of a harmonized curriculum. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the training provided to labour inspectors (content, participation, frequency, duration) in the framework of the shared network and on the impact of such training on inspection activities in the individual Länder.

Ghana

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. Right of labour inspectors to enter freely workplaces liable to inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that section 124(1)(a) of the 2003 Labour Act, which limits the timing of workplace inspections to "working hours", is not compatible with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. It notes the Government's indication that the above provision of the Labour Act is sufficient to uncover clandestine moves by employers. Referring to its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection (paragraphs 268–271), the Committee wishes to recall that the conditions for the exercise of the right of free entry to workplaces laid down by the Convention are intended to allow inspectors to carry out inspections, where necessary and possible, to enforce the application of legal provisions relating to conditions of work. The protection of workers and the technical requirements of inspection should be the primordial criteria for determining the appropriate timing of visits, for example to check for violations such as abusive night work conditions in a workplace officially operating during the daytime, or to carry out technical inspections requiring machinery or production processes to be stopped. It should be for the inspector to decide whether a visit is reasonable and inspections should only be carried out at night or outside working hours where this is warranted. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to remove the restriction on the right of labour inspectors to enter freely workplaces from section 124(1)(a) of the Labour Act of 2003 and to keep the ILO informed.

Article 3(1) and Articles 17 and 18. Inspection duties. Enforcement of legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers. Legal proceedings and provision of adequate penalties for violation of legislation. In its previous report, the Government indicated that it wishes to encourage compliance with legal provisions through the promotion of a social partnership attentive to the mutual interests of employers and workers, rather than through legal proceedings against employers who have committed a violation. The Committee requested the Government to provide practical information on any mechanisms established to that effect and to specify the role of labour inspectors in this regard. It notes that, in its report of 2008, the Government only reaffirms that it wishes to promote partnership and compromise between employers and workers. The report provides no information on the findings of the labour inspectors during the visits that they conducted in workplaces throughout the country in 2007, nor on any actions undertaken following such inspections. The Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to paragraph 280 of its General Survey, in which it emphasizes that, even if the credibility of any inspectorate depends to a large extent on its ability to advise employers and workers on the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions within its remit, it also depends on the existence and implementation of a sufficiently dissuasive enforcement mechanism, the functions of enforcement and advice being inseparable in practice.

The Committee requests the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure that legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers are effectively enforced through legal proceedings where necessary. It further requests the Government to provide information on the violations reported by labour inspectors and the fines imposed to employers in accordance with section 38 of the Labour Regulations adopted in 2007, during the reporting period, and to specify the value of a "penalty unit" and the manner in which such value may be revised to remain dissuasive in the event of monetary inflation. The Government is also requested to indicate the measures taken to ensure that such penalties were effectively enforced.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Periodical reports and annual report on the work of the labour inspection services. While noting the information on the number of inspections carried out in 2007 and during the first quarter of 2008, the Committee emphasizes that, by virtue of the ratification of the Convention, the Government undertook to ensure that practical measures would be taken to centralize information required under Article 21, with a view to preparing an annual labour inspection report, the main purpose of which is to serve as a basis for the periodical assessment by the central inspection authority of the adequacy of the available resources in relation to needs and, consequently, to determine priority areas of action. The Committee requests the Government take measures rapidly to establish the conditions in which the central labour inspection authority can collect data on the activities of the services under its control with a view to publish an annual report on the work of the inspection system containing information on the following subjects:

- (a) relevant laws and regulations;
- (b) staff of the labour inspection services (including the number, geographical location and distribution of inspectors by gender and by category);
- (c) statistics of workplaces liable to inspection (number and geographical distribution) and the number of workers employed therein (men, women, young persons);
- (d) statistics of inspection visits (unannounced, scheduled and follow-up visits, visits following a complaint, etc.);
- (e) statistics of violations and penalties imposed (number of violations reported, legal provisions concerned, types of sanctions imposed, etc.);
- (f) statistics of industrial accidents (number of fatal and non-fatal accidents); and
- (g) statistics of cases of occupational disease (number and causes by industry and occupation).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Greece

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee takes note of the comments made under article 23 of the ILO Constitution by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in communications dated 29 July 2010 and 28 July 2011 as well as the Government's reply dated 16 May 2011. It also takes note of the discussion that took place at the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) with regard to the application by Greece of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). It notes that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it was working on arrangements with the ILO for the visit of a high-level mission proposed by the Committee of Experts to facilitate a comprehensive understanding of the issues raised by the GSEE concerning the application of 12 Conventions ratified by Greece including the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81). The Conference Committee also considered that contact with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union (EU) would assist the mission in its understanding of the situation (Provisional Record No. 18, Part II, pages 68–72).

The Committee takes note of the report of the high-level mission which visited the country from 19 to 23 September 2011 and held further meetings with the European Commission and the IMF in Brussels and Washington, DC, in October 2011, on the basis of the request made by the Committee on the Application of Standards.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to the labour inspectorate. The Committee takes note of the detailed information provided by the Government to the high-level mission on the reform of the labour inspectorate (SEPE) which has taken place in the framework of the structural reforms introduced since May 2010, notably through the adoption of Act No. 3996 of 5 August 2011. It notes from the report of the high-level mission the Government's indication that in order to avoid any abuse of workers' rights, the role of the SEPE is the necessary complement to the introduction of a wide range of measures to render the labour market more flexible and competitive.

The Committee notes that according to the comments made by the GSEE in July 2010, the measures implemented in the framework of the structural reforms have led to a significant increase in precarious work without any parallel measure to strengthen the SEPE so as to ensure effective protection for workers. The GSEE refers to statistical data released by the SEPE, which show a marked trend towards individualized contracts and the unilateral modification by the employer of working terms under the threat of dismissals, as well as a trend for the abolition of full-time work and the imposition of reduced term rotation work. The GSEE also refers to the absence of sufficient numbers of qualified inspectors and the required infrastructure (e.g. office and transport facilities, adequate means of communication and record-keeping) and the consequent need for sufficient budgetary allocations to ensure the provision of effective inspection services.

The Committee notes from the high-level mission report that even though the mechanism to support the Greek economy provides for the strengthening of the SEPE and funds have been provided for that purpose, the reform of the labour inspection system appears to be primarily focused on detecting undeclared work (social security contribution collection) and migrant workers. It notes in this regard that in the framework of the reform introduced by Act No. 3996, the SEPE has been entrusted with additional functions some of which, the Committee understands, were previously carried out by social security inspectors, such as the control of undeclared work. The SEPE has also been entrusted with the control of the legality of the employment of foreign workers from third countries, as well as enhanced conciliation functions.

1. Control of undeclared work. The Committee notes that the high-level mission took note of a wide prevalence of undeclared work which raises questions as to the governance of the entire labour market. The high-level mission expressed the view that the SEPE's indication that undeclared work represented 29 per cent in targeted sectors (while studies from research institutes refer to 60 per cent) is indeed alarming and that this issue clearly needs to be addressed. It considered that priority should be placed on issues like ensuring wage payment and more generally the protection of wages, as well as non-discrimination and other labour rights especially in the informal economy.

The high-level mission identified in its report a potential problem of non-payment or delayed payment of wages in full, as well as a widespread tendency in the informal economy to replace terms of employment set through collective agreements (especially at sector level) by individual contracts (largely oral) providing for lower pay, even lower than the floor set by the national general collective agreement. It noted furthermore that women, especially working mothers after their return from maternity leave, were identified as the ones most often offered flexible forms of employment, notably part-time or rotation employment – which has been promoted by the structural reforms – with reduced wages and that the disproportionate impact of the crisis on women was reportedly exacerbated by the stance of the SEPE which seemed reluctant or unable to play a role in gender discrimination cases, e.g. by imposing fines. The Committee refers in this regard to its comments under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156).

The Committee notes that according to article 2(2)(a)(iii) of Act No. 3996, the functions of the SEPE include the supervision of the implementation of social security legislation concerning workers' social security coverage, undeclared work and illegal employment. The Committee notes with interest among the recent innovations introduced by Acts Nos 3996/2011 and 3863/2010 in this framework the labour stamp, to ensure that social security contributions are paid for occasional work, and the obligation to pay wages electronically via bank accounts to ensure the automatic deduction of social security contributions. The Committee considers that these measures can be an effective guarantee of the payment of wages and social security contributions and can be of great help in reducing the incidence of undeclared work and illegal employment. It notes, however, from the report of the high-level mission that these measures had not yet produced effects at the time of the mission. There was need for awareness raising on the labour stamp to promote its use, while the Ministerial Decision for the entry into force of the electronic payment of wages had not yet been issued.

The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the activities carried out by the SEPE in the framework of the implementation of Act No. 3996/2011 and their results (number of workplaces inspected, violations found, sanctions imposed) as well as the impact of these activities on reducing undeclared work.

Noting that article 24 of Act No. 3996/2011 introduces incentives (80 per cent reduction of fines imposed) to persuade employers to discharge their obligations for the payment of outstanding wages and benefits due to workers in a timely manner, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the impact of this provision on the level of compliance with the relevant legal provisions in general, as well as on the regularization of undeclared workers. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary awareness-raising measures to promote the use of the labour stamp, as well as the necessary legal and practical steps for the implementation of the electronic system for the payment of wages, and to keep the Office informed in this regard.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that according to article 2(2)(g) of Act No. 3996, the SEPE is entrusted with the examination of the implementation of the principle of equal opportunity and treatment for men and women at work. The Committee notes in this regard from the report of the high-level mission that the Ombudsperson has made suggestions on ways to improve the cooperation between this authority and the SEPE in relation to gender discrimination cases. First, according to the Ombudsperson, even though Act No. 3488/2006 establishes an institutionalized cooperation scheme between the two bodies on gender discrimination matters, the practical aspects of this cooperation have not been standardized through circulars or instructions, which leads to confusion. There is therefore a need to clarify the relatively new competencies and roles of the SEPE and the Ombudsperson respectively. Second, according to the Ombudsperson, labour inspectors need training on gender discrimination issues notably in the form of seminars comprising a theoretical and a practical part, so as to become more aware of relatively new concepts concerning discrimination issues. Noting that according to the high-level mission report, priority attention should be placed on non-discrimination in the framework of the activities of the SEPE, the Committee requests the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged in order to strengthen the cooperation with the Ombudsperson in the area of non-discrimination, such as through the issuance of circulars delineating roles and responsibilities and training made available to labour inspectors.

2. Control of legality of employment of migrant workers. The Committee notes that, according to article 2(2)(a)(iv) of Act No. 3996, the SEPE is entrusted with the control of the legality of the employment of third country nationals. Article 2(2)(b) of the Act authorizes the SEPE to investigate, discover, identify and prosecute, in parallel, and independently from other authorities and organizations, those who violate the provisions which are supervised by the SEPE.

The Committee would like to recall that, as indicated in paragraphs 76–78 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection with regard to the increasing tendency to link inspections to clandestine work and irregular migration, the primary duty of labour inspectors is to protect workers and not to enforce immigration law. Efforts to control the use of migrant workers in an irregular situation require the mobilization of considerable resources in terms of staff, time and material resources, which inspectorates can only provide to the detriment of their primary duties. Moreover, the function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all workers if it is to be compatible with the objective of labour inspection. This objective can only be met if the workers covered are convinced that the primary task of the inspectorate is to enforce the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and protection of workers and not immigration law. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the manner in which effect is given to article 2(2)(b) of Act No. 3996, which empowers the SEPE to investigate and prosecute those who violate the provisions which are enforceable by the SEPE including the provisions concerning the legality of employment of migrant workers.

The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the functions of enforcing immigration law (legality of employment of third-country nationals) are dissociated from those of controlling the observance of workers' rights and are not entrusted to labour inspectors and to keep the Office informed of progress made in this regard.

Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken by the SEPE to ensure the discharge by the employers of their obligations with regard to the statutory rights of foreign workers in an irregular situation, such as the payment of outstanding wages and other benefits due for the work accomplished during the employment relationship, particularly in cases where these workers are liable to expulsion.

3. Conciliation functions. The Committee notes that according to article 2(12) of Act No. 3996, the SEPE is entrusted with providing advice, if requested by employers and workers, in the conduct of collective bargaining and in the resolution of individual and collective disputes. In addition, the Committee notes that article 3(1), (4), (5) and (6) of Act No. 3996/2011 gives to senior labour inspectors in the local offices of the SEPE throughout the country conciliation functions in relation to collective and individual labour disputes, and provides that the central authority exercises similar functions in case of national level labour disputes which may disturb industrial peace and deregulate labour relations and have a serious impact on the national economy. The Committee notes in this regard that, by virtue of Act No. 3899/2010, the scope of unilateral recourse to arbitration of collective disputes has been limited to the issue of wages which may probably lead to an increased need for conciliation of collective labour disputes on non-wage matters.

The Committee also notes that, according to article 3(7) and (9) of Act No. 3996/2011, the conciliator should aim on the one hand, at ensuring the strict implementation of the applicable legislation and, on the other hand, at bringing the views of the parties closer together, by proposing solutions for reaching an agreement which the parties can accept, so as to ensure a quick resolution of disputes and industrial peace in the best interest of employers and workers.

The Committee would like to underline that the two functions of inspection and conciliation are often incompatible in the sense of Article 3(2) of the Convention, according to which any further duties which are entrusted to labour inspectors should not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties (enforcement and advice) or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the guidance provided in Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), according to which "the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes". The Committee emphasizes in paragraphs 72–74 of its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection the importance of avoiding overburdening inspectorates with tasks, which by their nature may be understood as incompatible with their primary function of enforcing legal provisions. It recalls that the time and energy that inspectors spend on seeking solutions to collective labour disputes is often at the expense of their primary duties and that carrying out supervisory functions more consistently would lead to better enforcement of the legislation and hence a lower incidence of labour disputes. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the functions of conciliation are separated from those of inspection. It would be grateful if the Government would provide information on any progress made to this end and in the meantime, to indicate the categories and number of labour inspectors who carry out the advisory and enforcement functions of the labour inspection provided for in Article 3(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention compared to those who carry out conciliation functions.

4. Potential ILO technical assistance. The Committee would like to emphasize the crucial role of the labour inspection function in times of crisis in ensuring that workers' rights are respected so that the crisis does not serve as a pretext for lowering labour standards and the need to strengthen the resources and means of action of the labour inspection system if it is to achieve the economic and social goal assigned to this public function.

The Committee notes that the need to strengthen the governance of the labour inspection system, build capacities and ensure probity of the labour inspectors emerged in discussions between the high-level mission and its interlocutors at the national and international levels and that the high-level mission identifies these areas as potential targets for ILO technical assistance. Noting with interest the suggestion of the high-level mission for an objective needs assessment of the labour inspectorate to be followed by ILO support in mutually agreed areas, as well as the indication of the European Commission to the high-level mission that there is room for the assistance of the ILO in the areas within its mandate, including labour inspection, the Committee invites the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in the area of labour inspection and to provide information to the Office on the steps taken in this regard.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee takes note of the comments made under article 23 of the ILO Constitution by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in communications dated 29 July 2010 and 28 July 2011, as well as the Government's reply dated 16 May 2011. It also takes note of the discussion that took place at the Committee on the Application of Standards during the 100th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2011) with regard to the application by Greece of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). It notes that the Conference Committee welcomed the Government's indication that it was working on arrangements with the ILO for the visit of a high-level mission proposed by the Committee of Experts to facilitate a comprehensive understanding of the issues raised by the GSEE concerning the application of 12 Conventions ratified by Greece, including the present one. The Conference Committee also considered that contact with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union (EU) would assist the mission in its understanding of the situation (Provisional Record No. 18, Part II, pages 68–72).

The Committee takes note of the report of the high-level mission which visited the country from 19 to 23 September 2011 and held further meetings with the European Commission and the IMF in Brussels and Washington, DC, in October 2011, on the basis of the request made by the Committee on the Application of Standards.

Article 3 of the Convention. Matters regulated through direct negotiations between employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee notes that the Government replies to the comments made by the GSEE in relation to the scope of Article 3 of the Convention according to which particular activities in the field of national labour policy may be regulated by having recourse to direct negotiations between employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee refers in this regard to its comments under Convention No. 98.

Articles 4 and 9. Coordination and control within the system of labour administration. The Committee notes that the high-level mission report raises questions as to the coordination of policies pursued in parallel in the framework of the structural reforms in the areas, for example, of collective bargaining, wages, social security and employment policies. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in detail the steps taken to ensure the effective coordination of the functions and responsibilities of the system of labour administration in the context of the current reforms and the control of the activities carried out by any parastatal agencies as well as regional or local agencies to which particular labour administration activities may have been delegated.

Article 10. Status, material means and financial resources of the labour administration staff. The Committee notes that, according to the high-level mission report, retrenchments and wage reductions have affected the public sector in the current context. It also notes that a particular area of concern raised by the European Commission was the inefficiency of the labour administration and the lack of capacity to run operational programmes under the European Social Fund in a results-based manner, taking into account that 50 per cent of these funds were devoted to human resource development and another major portion to education and life-long learning. While being fully aware of the difficulties the country is currently facing, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of the impact of the public sector reform on the status, material means and resources of the staff of the labour administration with regard to the requirements established in Article 10 of the Convention.

The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the steps taken or envisaged to elaborate and run operational programmes under the European Social Fund in a results-based manner. It reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2012.]

Guatemala

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee takes note of the comments made by the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala (MSICG) in a communication of 30 August 2010, transmitted to the Government on 15 September 2010.

Articles 3, 10 and 16 of the Convention. Labour inspection system. The Committee takes note of the report of the high-level mission which visited Guatemala in May 2011 with regard to the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). In particular, it takes note with interest of the information provided by the General Labour Inspection according to which a special unit of the labour inspection has been set up in order to address issues related to the maquila sector. Inspections are taking place and the number of complaints has fallen even though there are still complaints in this sector. The economic benefits of enterprises (tax exoneration) can be revoked if violations of labour rights are observed. This has led to an improved supervision. Twenty-two investigations were carried out, benefits were withdrawn from four enterprises and 18 took measures to comply with labour laws following the indication by the Ministry of the Economy that they would no longer qualify for special benefits. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the activities of the special unit of the Labour Inspectorate on the maquila sector and its results (number of visits, violations found with indications of the legal provisions concerned and action taken).

The Committee notes that, according to the MSICG, the inspectors do not perform their tasks adequately and their actions are not persuasive, while the data show that the budget of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare (MTPS) with regard to the Labour Inspectorate has been significantly reduced and that between 2009 and 2010 the number of inspectors employed fell from 197 to 185. The MSICG also denounces the fact that the duty of supervision of the labour inspectors has been replaced by the duty of conciliation and that it is common for inspectors to impose conciliation, a practice which has fostered impunity and weakened the effectiveness of the legislation, the application of which pertains to labour inspectors. According to the MSICG, the establishment of conciliation as a priority of the inspectorate, rather than supervision and verification of the facts reported, allows employers the necessary time to hide or plant evidence and may lead to the workers being deprived of the evidence necessary to lodge claims with the labour courts given that, in most cases, such evidence is to be found in documents, registers and situations that can only be verified by a labour inspector and to which the individual affected by the violation has no access. The MSICG also alleges that the inspectors display bias towards employers when performing their duties.

The Committee notes Circular No. 02-2011 issued by the General Labour Inspectorate and addressed to those inspectors performing conciliation duties, in which it is stated that once the conciliation mechanisms have been exhausted, the labour inspector has to fulfil his/her inspection functions. The Committee highlights that under section 281(e) of the Labour Code, labour inspectors must intervene with regard to any labour-related difficulties or disputes arising between employers and workers, or purely between employers or purely between workers, in order to prevent such difficulties or disputes from developing or to bring about an out-of-court settlement should they arise. According to the information provided by the Government, in 2010 the labour inspectors intervened in a total of 942 conciliation procedures relating to enterprises covered by the Promotion and Development of Export and Maquila Activities Act, while over the same period they carried out a total of 412 inspections targeting the same type of enterprise. Apparently, of these 412 visits, only 81 were carried out on the initiative of the General Labour Inspectorate, with the remaining 331 being performed as the result of denunciations.

The Committee refers the Government to paragraph 69 of its 2006 General Survey concerning labour inspection and yet again states that the primary duties of labour inspectors are complex and require time, resources, training and considerable freedom of action and movement, and that any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors should not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. Noting moreover that the functions of dispute resolution are often incompatible with the function of controlling the strict application of the law, the Committee calls the Government's attention also to Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), according to which the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes.

The Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the actual number of active labour inspectors and their geographical distribution, specifying how many of them perform duties within the scope of conciliation and the percentage of their working time that is devoted to this duty. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would specify the criteria on the basis of which inspection visits are programmed.

The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged both in law and in practice with the aim of dissociating the duty of supervision from that of conciliation and to relieve labour inspectors of duties other than those provided for in Article 3(1) of the Convention which could prejudice the authority and impartiality, including those relating to conciliation.

Articles 5(a), 12(1)(a) and 18. Free access of labour inspectors to workplaces liable to inspection, cooperation between the inspection services and the police, and penalties for obstructing labour inspectors in the performance of their duties. The Committee also notes that according to Ministerial Agreement No. 106-2011 issued by the MTPS in application of section 281(e) of the Labour Code, inspectors can request the assistance of the police should they be refused entry to workplaces, or should their lives and safety be in danger in certain circumstances such as: (i) when cases of under-age labour in circumstances considered to be the worst forms of child labour are denounced; (ii) in cases where the closure or possible closure of enterprises must be verified, in particular, those instigated by enterprises which enjoy the benefits provided for by the Promotion and Development of Export and Maquila Activities Act; (iii) when situations arise that, in the opinion of the General Inspector of Labour, the General Sub-Inspectors of Labour or the departmental or municipal delegates of the Ministry, constitute emergencies; and (vi) more generally, when the circumstances require it.

The Committee notes, however, that the final paragraph of section 4 of the aforementioned Agreement states that should the agents of the National Civil Police Force refuse to accompany the inspector, the General Inspector of Labour must forward a certified true copy of the report referring to this event to the Ministry of the Interior within three days of its receipt, for the purposes of the relevant legal proceedings. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of any measures adopted or envisaged with the aim of raising the awareness of the police concerning the importance of collaboration with the labour inspection services in the cases referred to with a view to guaranteeing access for labour inspectors to workplaces liable to inspection and to ensuring the protection of inspectors when their lives or safety are in danger within the framework of the exercise of their duties. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would: (i) provide information on the impact of the cooperation of the police concerning compliance with labour legislation; (ii) transmit copies of inspection reports which refer to collaboration between police officers and labour inspectors in the exercise of their duties; (iii) specify the number of judgments handed down for obstructing labour inspectors in the performance of their duties and send copies of examples of such judgments.

Articles 5(a), 20 and 21. Inter-institutional cooperation for the exchange of information, the register of enterprises and the annual inspection report. General observations 2009 and 2010. The Committee notes with interest that the Government signed the Inter-Institutional Framework Agreement on the exchange of information between the Ministry of the Economy and the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare in the framework of Decree No. 29-89, the Promotion and Development of Export and Maquila Activities Act, allowing the exchange of information and thus facilitating supervision by the General Labour Inspectorate. The Committee also notes with interest that, according to the Government, thanks to the technical cooperation project “Cumple y Gana”, a registration system (SIL) was implemented at the General Labour Inspectorate involving the establishment as of 2010 of a register of commercial enterprises which enjoy the benefits granted by the Promotion and Development of Export and Maquila Activities Act which contains all the information required under Articles 20 and 21 of the present Convention. The Committee notes however that, although the Government has provided documents concerning the register of the enterprises covered by Decree No. 29-89, it has not sent the annual report on the work of the inspection services, despite the undertaking it made to this effect in its 2010 report. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the creation of the register of enterprises on the efforts made by the central authority to fulfil its obligations under Articles 20 and 21 with a view to publishing and transmitting to the Office an annual report on the work of the inspection services under its control within the time period envisaged by Article 20 and containing information on each and every one of the points listed under Article 21. The Committee draws the attention of the Government to the useful guidelines set out in the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), with regard to the details and presentation of the information that must be contained in the annual report on inspection. Referring to its 2009 comments, the Committee requests the Government to send information on developments concerning the agreement on the exchange of data between the MTPS, the tax authorities and the Chamber of Commerce.

Articles 6 and 15(a). Conditions of service of labour inspectors, and professional code of ethics. With regard to its 2009 comments, the Committee notes with interest that the MTPS requested the ILO to provide technical support with the aim of drawing up draft regulations both for the MTPS and the General Labour Inspectorate and a study on the reclassification of posts and salaries (with the intervention of the Civil Service Office). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on developments concerning the elaboration of the draft regulations as well as the results and eventual recommendations made in the study on the reclassification of posts and salaries of the labour inspectorate.

Furthermore, the Committee notes with interest Ministerial Agreement No. 118-2011 of the MTPS which contains the Code of Conduct of the General Labour Inspectorate. The Committee observes that this Code contains fundamental principles and duties which must be observed by labour inspectors in the exercise of their functions and the commitment made by the General Labour Inspectorate to: (i) establish employment conditions which recognize the value of its staff and encourage appropriate behaviour and an honest environment; (ii) organize and facilitate opportunities for vocational development and to improve the competences of its staff; (iii) foster a culture based on professional and ethical behaviour; and (iv) ensure that the actions of the inspectors are carried out on the basis of the ethical principles of honesty, neutrality, objectivity and fairness. The Committee also notes that this Code envisages the establishment or appointment by the MTPS of an administrative unit responsible for receiving and processing denunciations concerning failure to comply with the principles and values contained in the Code which must be decided upon by the General Labour Inspectorate. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted with the aim of implementing the undertakings referred to in the Code of Conduct relating to the specific conditions of service of labour inspectors. The Committee also requests the Government to specify how the independence of labour inspectors is guaranteed in the framework of the said Code.

Article 7. Training of labour inspectors. With reference to its comments under Convention No. 87, the Committee underlines that the technical assistance of the ILO is necessary, among other things, for the training of labour inspectors in the area of freedom of association and hopes that this assistance will be provided in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of all progress made in this regard. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would specify whether the training programmes for labour inspectors have been implemented, including the specific programme on occupational safety and health, which it had announced would be agreed on with the technical institutes and universities.

Articles 10, 11 and 16. Human resources, financial and material means of the labour inspectorate and coverage of supervision needs. In its 2009 comments the Committee took note of the Government's announcement of a thorough review of the material needs of the inspectorate carried out to provide the competent authorities with objective information to be taken into account in determining an appropriate budget for its effective operation. The Committee requests the Government to send information on the results of the abovementioned review concerning the material needs of the labour inspectorate, as well as on the measures adopted or envisaged from a legal and practical point of view to meet those needs. Moreover, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would specify the impact of these measures on the strengthening of human resources (with regard to inspection staff numbers) and the means of action (mainly means of transport and office equipment).

Articles 17 and 18. Adequate penalties and their effective application. In its 2009 comments the Committee noted that the action plan drawn up by the Government and the ILO included the recommendation, arising from the analysis of the labour inspection, to envisage the possibility of defining an administrative procedure allowing the General Labour Inspectorate to impose penalties subject to a right of appeal for employers and to supplement the legislation with a legal provision defining the specific offence of obstruction of labour inspectors in the performance of their duties and establishing the corresponding fine. The Committee requests the Government to send information on the measures adopted or envisaged so as to implement this recommendation of the abovementioned action plan and to supplement the legislation in the manner described and on any difficulties encountered concerning its implementation.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the comments made by the Indigenous and Rural Workers' Trade Union Movement of Guatemala (MSICG), sent to the Government by the Office on 15 September 2010. The Committee asks the Government to refer to its comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), in so far as they also concern the application of this Convention. The MSICG asserts that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare has refused to supervise compliance with the legislation in more than 90 plantations about which there have been complaints, or to establish coordination with the organization for that purpose. The MSICG also alleges that the Ministry has refused to carry out visits to verify the violations of freedom of association and other labour rights, such as payment of minimum wages, that the organization has itself reported since 2008 in connection with 71 plantations. The MSICG further alleges that the Ministry published the whereabouts of the offending workplaces and some of the issues which were to be checked. According to the MSICG, in most cases the inspectors did not visit the plantations, and when they did, they met only with the employers.

Articles 3, 4, 6(1)(a) and (b), 9(3), 15 and 21, 27(d) and (e). Supervision of working and living conditions in agricultural undertakings, training of labour inspectors in agriculture, financial resources and transport facilities available to inspectors in agriculture. The Committee notes the tables pertaining to the operational plans for ex officio inspection visits conducted in plantations located in various jurisdictions in the period 2009–11. It notes with interest that owing to the food crisis prevailing in some departments in Guatemala, the labour inspectorate devised a programme for support to the national food security policy, which consisted of operations to verify compliance with the law in agricultural and agro-export undertakings, the aim being to secure their compliance with the requirement to pay the minimum wage and other statutory benefits so that workers and their families are able to afford the basic food basket. It also notes a number of operational plans showing schedules of inspection visits for the agricultural sector which appear to pertain to the period 2008–10. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide general information on inspections carried out for the purposes of supervision and provision of technical information and advice in agricultural undertakings including banana plantations, and the results of these visits, including supervision of compliance with the legal provisions pertaining to freedom of association, the penalties imposed and their execution. The Committee also once again asks the Government to indicate whether labour inspectors have verified the evolution in working conditions in the agricultural undertakings covered by the collective labour agreements sent to the Office, which expired in 2008 and 2009.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of the operations conducted in support of the national food security policy, specifying the contraventions reported and the penalties imposed. Lastly, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would specify the criteria taken into account in scheduling regular inspection visits to agricultural undertakings and would indicate the frequency with which scheduled regular visits are carried out in one and the same undertaking, and the scope of such visits.

With regard to its comments of 2009 on special training for inspectors in agriculture, the Committee notes the Government's statement that the purpose of the training activities is to provide inspectors with varied training as part of a diploma course, the training being provided with the cooperation and support of a foundation and other institutions. The Government also mentions a masters course in the administration of human resources and labour legislation, which ended in 2009 and which was organized thanks to an agreement concluded with the Universidad Galileo de Guatemala. The Committee notes that according to the table included in the Government's report, the one-day training courses organized for labour inspectors between August 2009 and January 2010 covered the following topics, in particular: the basics of administration; work ethics; service to users, mercantile law and notarial law.

With regard to the financial and material resources available to inspectors in agriculture, the Committee observes that the General Labour Inspectorate has to apply to the Ministry's financial authorities for the resources, official vehicles and fuel needed for each inspection campaign.

The Committee stresses that the specific nature of work in the agricultural sector involves specific risks for the workers (for example, risks related to the handling and use of chemicals and agricultural machinery), and requires special skills that labour inspectors must be able to acquire or perfect through appropriate training (Article 9(3)), transport facilities that take account of the distance and remote location of agricultural undertakings, and adequate equipment for measurement and analysis (Article 15). The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measurements without delay to ensure that labour inspectors in agriculture receive initial training and further training suited to the duties they perform and which covers the human, environmental and technical aspects of their work, and requests it to report to the Office any progress made in this regard. It would also be grateful if the Government would: (i) describe the transport facilities assigned specifically to labour inspectors in agriculture (indicating their geographical distribution); (ii) explain the procedure for refunding to labour inspectors in agriculture the travel costs incurred in the performance of their duties and to provide a copy of the relevant claim form. The Committee again asks the Government to send any documents illustrating the manner in which inspection visits are carried out in agricultural undertakings (standard form, records of inspections, etc.).

Articles 6(1)(a), 12(1), 15 and 16(1)(c)(iii). Inter-institutional cooperation in the area of preventive control. The Committee notes that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare and the Guatemalan Social Security Institute (IGSS) have signed an inter-institutional agreement for joint inspections. The agreement provides that the schedule of joint inspection visits shall be set giving priority to areas which, according to a preliminary study, show a higher incidence of problems in worker-employer relations, social welfare, occupational safety and health and compliance with labour provisions in general, with an emphasis on the payment of IGSS contributions. Noting that approval from the Board of the IGSS was required in order to execute the agreement, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether such approval was obtained. Furthermore, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide specific quantitative information on the joint inspection visits eventually held in this context, particularly in agricultural undertakings, indicating the number of undertakings concerned, the number of workers they employ, and the contraventions reported (indicating the legal provisions concerned).

Noting that the Government has not replied to the request the Committee made in 2009 regarding inspectors' participation in preventive controls, the Committee again asks the Government to send with its next report copies of the relevant legal provisions together with any other document relating to this matter, including statistics, and of the recommendations made by the IGSS, the measures ordered and the court proceedings initiated in this context.

Article 19(1). Notification to labour inspectors of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes with interest that since 2010 the General Labour Inspectorate has had an electronic labour information system (SIL), in which all the particulars of employers are recorded. According to the Government, this is to serve as a base for compiling data, including notifications of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease in agriculture, and is to be supplemented in accordance with instructions issued by the General Directorate of Social Welfare, with technical advice from the ILO. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in setting up the register of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease and in making it available to labour inspectors in the various regions of the country so that they may use it as a basis in performing their preventive duties.

Articles 26 and 27. Annual report on the work of the labour inspection services in agriculture. The Committee notes that the annual labour inspection report has not been sent. It requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the SIL and the register of enterprises on the efforts made by the central authority to comply with its obligation under Articles 26 and 27 to publish, as a separate report or as part of its general annual report, and to communicate to the Office, an annual report on the work of the labour inspection services in agriculture, within the time limit prescribed under Article 26, and which contains information on each and every one of the items listed at Article 27. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the useful guidance contained in the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Recommendation, 1969 (No. 133), as to the amount of detail and the presentation of the information to be included in the annual inspection report.

Guinea

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Resources of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes with concern that the information provided by the Government in its report for the period ending June 2005 reveals that the labour inspectorate suffers from a persistent shortage of resources. It notes, in particular, that retired labour inspectors are no longer being replaced and that the inspection services as a whole suffer from a lack of computer equipment and transport facilities. It notes, moreover, that labour inspectors have not received any training since 2000. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to furnish the labour inspectorate with the resources it needs to operate effectively, in particular in order to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient (Article 10 of the Convention), that they are furnished with the material means and transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties (Article 11) and that they receive adequate training for the performance of their duties (Article 7(3)). The Government is requested to transmit information on any progress made in this regard in its next report.

Publication of an annual report. The Committee notes that no annual inspection report has been transmitted since that covering the period of 15 October 1994 to 15 October 1995. Referring to its previous requests, it once again requests the Government to take any appropriate measures with a view to the fulfilment by the central inspection authority of its obligation to publish and transmit to the International Labour Office an annual report in accordance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Guinea-Bissau

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee takes note of the comments on the application of the Convention by the National Union of Workers of Guinea (UNTG-CS), sent with the Government's report.

Articles 3, 7, 10, 11 and 16 of the Convention. Comments by workers' organizations. The UNTG-CS considers that it is necessary to build the financial, technical and material capacity of the inspection services so as to optimize the performance of their supervisory duties, and to reinforce the authority of the courts so that they in turn are in a position to ensure that the provisions are better applied.

The Government indicates that the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT) is having serious difficulty in carrying out its functions: (1) the numbers of inspectors are too low; (2) their facilities are cramped and are therefore an impediment to the confidentiality needed for the proper discharge of the inspectors' duties; and (3) only one vehicle is available, so inspectors lack the mobility they need to meet the demands of the labour market.

The Committee also notes that, according to the Government's report, the IGT consists of 16 inspectors and provides conciliation services for employers and workers for the settlement of disputes. The Committee is bound to stress in this connection that the main role of the labour inspectorate is to enforce the legal provisions on conditions of work and the protection of workers. It also points out that according to Article 3(2) of the Convention, if duties other than those set in this provision are entrusted to labour inspectors, they shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. Furthermore, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the obligations laid down in Articles 7 and 11 of the Convention under which the competent authority shall make the necessary arrangements to furnish labour inspectors with adequate training for the performance of their duties, offices suitably equipped in accordance with the requirements of the service and accessible to all persons concerned, and the transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties in cases where suitable public facilities do not exist, and to reimburse to labour inspectors any travelling and incidental expenses which may be necessary for the performance of their duties. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take measures to ensure that the primary duties of labour inspectors pertain to the supervisory functions set forth in Article 3(1) of the Convention; and to ensure that measures are promptly taken to provide labour inspectors with adequate financial and material resources to cover their needs, including training, so that they may discharge their functions effectively. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would inform the Office of any such measures to this end, including in the context of international cooperation, and to point out any difficulties encountered. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office should it so wish.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guyana

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Obligation to report pursuant to article 22 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes the communication by the Government, in reply to its previous request, of the circulars (notices) of 18 March 2005 designating the authorities which must be notified of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease, in relation to Article 19 of the Convention. It also notes the communication of the annual report for 2004 from the Industrial Relations Department of the Ministry of Labour, containing brief information on labour inspection activities in the agricultural sector. However, the Committee notes that no detailed report on the application of the Convention has been sent for more than ten years. The Committee therefore requests the Government to supply, in its next report under article 22 of the ILO Constitution, all the information required by each part of the Convention report form.

Articles 26 and 27 of the Convention. Objectives and content of the annual report on the work of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes that, despite the high number of strikes in sugar plantations and agriculture in 2004 and their socio-economic impact (227 strikes resulting in the loss of 82,880 workdays and wages amounting to 129,061,000 dollars) the labour inspectorate only performed six inspections for the whole sector. The Committee considers that these figures testify both to poor conditions of work and lack of vigilance on the part of the inspection authorities responsible for monitoring conditions of work in agricultural undertakings. In any event, they call for the adoption of measures to curb the deterioration of the social climate, particularly by means of inspection activities and initiatives to provide employers and workers with information. However, the Committee notes that the Government has not supplied any information indicating that such measures have been taken or are envisaged. It also notes that the content of the report does not allow any assessment to be made of the level of coverage of the labour inspection system in relation to worker protection requirements in the sector, these needs not being defined, particularly with regard to occupational safety and health. The significant lack of statistics relating to inspection visits (Article 27(d)) and violations (clause (e)) and the total lack of information regarding the laws and regulations giving effect to the provisions of the Convention (clause (a)), the number of staff of the labour inspection service (clause (b)), the number of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection and the number of persons working therein (clause (c)), and also the lack of statistics with respect to penalties imposed (clause (e)), occupational accidents, including their causes (clause (f)) and occupational diseases, including their causes (clause (g)), make it impossible for the Committee to perform its role of monitoring the practical application of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that the requirement to publish an annual report on inspection activities and send it to the ILO serves an important purpose at both the national and international level. It is an essential tool for evaluating the operation of the labour inspection system and for making improvements to it, with the participation of employers and workers and their respective organizations (Articles 26 and 27). The Committee invites the Government to refer to paragraphs 320–328 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection and requests it to take the necessary measures, if need be with technical assistance from the Office, to enable the central labour inspection authority to include all the information required by each of clauses (a) to (g) of Article 27 in the annual report on its work.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Honduras

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the comments of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP) 6 October 2010, as well as the Government's reply. It also notes the comments of the Honduran United Confederation of Workers (CUTH), dated 31 August and received by the Office on 19 September 2011 respectively, as well as the Government's reply dated 9 November 2011.

Legislation. In its comments of 2008, the Committee had noted that the draft revision of the Labour Code was being discussed by the Government and the social partners. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on progress made in the aforementioned revision process.

Articles 3, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11 and 16 of the Convention. Functioning of the Labour inspection system. The COHEP notes that: (i) the staff of the Labour Ministry is insufficient and does not have the qualifications necessary for the carrying out of labour inspection visits in workplaces; (ii) the budget allocated to the labour inspection is insufficient; (iii) the inspection services do not have access to vehicles or petty cash; (iv) according to the data provided by the General Labour Inspectorate, its activity has been focused on special inspections or on complaints received, which represent between 80 and 90 per cent of the inspections carried out in the last few years; (v) the inspection has salary limitations due to the low ranking of inspectors within the civil service and the fact that anyone who can read and write is hired; (vi) inspectors have a biased attitude towards the worker and the General Labour Inspectorate does not always respond to requests by employers to check worker wrongdoings; (vii) although section 629 of the Labour Code stipulates that labour inspectors will have the assistance of technical experts during inspections, in practice multi-purpose or multidisciplinary inspections are not carried out.

The Government states that: (i) the General Labour Inspection currently has 108 inspectors at the national level, 22 of which are lawyers, ten are interns and 76 have a title of secondary education; (ii) all the organs of the State, including the ministries, must comply with the provisions of the national budget and do not have the right to exceed the limits set in the budget; (iii) the central headquarters of the General Labour Inspectorate has sufficiently equipped units and four vehicles are distributed among the different regional units, even though there is no budgetary allocation to cover travel expenses for labour inspectors, and in the regional units in the rest of the country there is a lack of logistical support and budget to cover transportation costs; (iv) regular general inspections are carried out, at six-month intervals; (v) General Labour Inspection officials are governed by the Civil Service Act and its regulations and, although they do not have their own statute, they enjoy job security, as it is unusual for them to be dismissed when governments change; (vi) recruitment of labour inspectors is carried out once candidates have passed the examination provided for in the aforementioned legislation; (vii) the project aimed at strengthening public administration systems to ensure the inspection service is professional, unified and polyvalent, undertaken by the ILO with the financial cooperation of USDOL, conducted a study into posts and salaries and standardized the posts of inspectors I, II and III into two categories of inspectors and supervisors; (viii) the Ministry of Labour and Social Security has occupational doctors and safety and health technical experts, who have responsibility for monitoring compliance with legal provisions in the area of occupational health and safety through visits to workplaces.

The Committee highlights that the issue of establishing the budget share allocation for the functioning of the labour inspection system, so as to take into account the clearly specified needs and requirements of the Convention, has been raised in its comments since 2006. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the actions and measures taken, with ILO technical assistance, to carry out a needs assessment of the labour inspection services in the areas of human resources and training, and financial and material resources, and to ensure that the budget share allocation for labour inspection within the national budget is set in proportion to the priority that must be accorded to labour inspection. It also requests the Government once again to provide precise information on the arrangements for the use of the vehicles (four) allocated to the different regional units for labour inspectors while performing their professional duties.

The Committee also points out that for a number of years it has been asking the Government to ensure that legal provisions are adopted rapidly to guarantee that the conditions of service of inspection staff are such as to ensure they have job security and that they are independent of any changes in government and of any improper external influences. The Committee requests the Government once again to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to complement national legislation with the inclusion of specific legal provisions to guarantee inspection staff job security and independence of any changes in government and of any improper external influences.

Articles 12(1)(a) and (2) and 18. Free access for labour inspectors to workplaces liable to inspection. In its comments of 2006, the Committee had noted that, according to the Government, the Ministry of Labour and Social Security had taken firm measures to extend the right of health and safety inspectors to enter workplaces. In the Inspection Protocols and Labour Inspection Handbook of Procedures, attached to the Government's report form, the Committee finds, however, that the situation has failed to progress sufficiently in practice in that regard. It therefore draws the attention of the Government to the provisions of the Convention pursuant to which the labour inspectors who are provided with proper credentials must be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice, at any hour of day or night, any workplace liable to inspection (Article 12(1)(a)) and, on the occasion of an inspection visit, they must notify the employer or his representative of their presence, unless they consider that such a notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties (Article 12(2)). The Committee also highlights that pursuant to Article 18, national legislation must set forth appropriate penalties, which must be effectively applied in cases where labour inspectors are obstructed in the performance of their duties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that both law and practice are brought into line with the requirements of the Convention in that regard.

Furthermore, noting that the Government has not responded to its previous comments on the number of joint visits carried out by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, the Human Rights Commissioner, the Minister for Security and the Procurator General, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would specify the purpose of, and nature of, the participation of each of the above authorities in these inspections.

Article 14. Notification of occupational diseases to the labour inspectorate. The Committee recalls that, the need to complement legislation through a provision stipulating the obligation to notify cases of occupational disease to the labour inspection services has been addressed since the 1990s, and draws the Government's attention to paragraph 118 of its Labour Inspectorate General Study of 2006, in which the importance of establishing a systematic information mechanism to enable the labour inspectorate to have access to the data necessary to determine which activities present a risk and the categories of workers most at risk, and to investigate the causes of occupational accidents and diseases in workplaces and companies under its control. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that national legislation provides for the conditions and the manner in which cases of occupational disease should be notified to the labour inspectorate.

Article 15. Obligations and limits to be respected by labour inspectors. The Committee notes with interest the ministerial decision attached to the Government's report which contained the Labour Inspectorate's Code of Ethics and was signed on 28 June 2011. It notes that the text includes the expression of values and commitments to which all members of the labour inspectorate must adhere and in particular those prohibiting them from accepting any gifts, presents, subscriptions, favours, gratuities, promises or special advantage and rejecting any kind of direct or indirect offering of bribery, sale or financial profit from workers or employers that might interfere with the fulfilment of their duties. The Committee notes, however, that this text does not take on board the comments that the Committee has been raising since the 1990s concerning the need to specifically prohibit labour inspectors from having any direct or indirect interest in undertakings under their supervision. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that specific provisions are adopted without delay establishing the prohibition of labour inspectors from having any direct or indirect interest in undertakings under their supervision, pursuant to Article 15(a) of the Convention.

Articles 17 and 18. Appropriate penalties. COHEP considers that the penalties provided for in article 625 of the Labour Code are obsolete, hence they have not been amended since its entry into force. According to the Government, the aforementioned article of the revised Code sanctions the offences listed below with fines varying between 50 and 5,000 lempiras, depending on the individual circumstances of each case, its recurrent character and the capacity of the offending company to pay: (i) non-respect of the orders issued by labour inspectors, within the limit of their legal authority; (ii) obstructing the fulfilment of the duties that labour inspectors are legally entitled to carry out; (iii) physical and psychological aggression towards labour inspectors; (iv) violation by employers of the legal provisions that are not subject to any special penalty. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of the revised text of article 625 of the Labour Code referred to by the Government in its report form.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Periodical reports and drawing up and publication of an annual inspection report. The Committee notes with regret that since the ratification of the Convention in 1983, no annual report on the activities of the inspection services has been communicated, as stipulated in Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that the local inspection units produce periodical reports on the results of their activities, as stipulated in Article 19, and that these reports enable the central inspection authority to produce an annual report in accordance with Articles 20 and 21. In that regard, the Committee reminds the Government of the guidance provided in Part IV of Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), on how the information required under Article 21 may be broken down.

Labour inspection and child labour. In its comments of 2006, the Committee had noted that inspectors specializing in child labour were operating in Tegucigalpa and San Pedro de Sula and had requested the Government to specify why it had decided to appoint child labour inspectors to carry out duties in these locations, and to provide information on the results of their activities. As the Government has not made this information available, the Committee requests it once again to communicate it and to provide statistical information on the number of visits carried out by labour inspectors, in particular in these regions, the offences found and penalties imposed, and on the advice and information that may have been provided on the matter to employers and workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Hungary

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes the observations made by the workers' representatives of the Tripartite National ILO Council of the Ministry of Social Matters and Labour, which were attached to the Government's report, and the Government's reply to these observations.

Article 3(1)(b) of the Convention. Labour inspection functions in the area of technical information and advice. The Committee notes that, in reply to a request for further information by the workers' representatives of the Tripartite National ILO Council, the Government indicates that the advisory functions envisaged in Article 3(1)(b) of the Convention are exercised only by Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) inspectors, through the Labour Protection Information Service and the Labour Protection Consultancy Service in regional labour inspectorates, while inspectors entrusted with labour matters do not provide advice to employers and workers.

The Committee recalls that in conformity with Article 3(1)(b) of the Convention, the functions of labour inspectors should include the supply of technical information and advice to employers and workers concerning the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, in so far as such provisions are enforceable by labour inspectors. The Committee notes that since under section 3 of Act No. LXXV of 1996, labour inspectors are entrusted with the supervision of legal provisions in a number of areas beyond OSH (such as employment contracts, employers' records, equality of treatment, the employment of women, young persons and people with disabilities, working time, the protection of trade union rights etc.), labour inspectors should be able to provide technical information and advice to employers and workers concerning the most effective means of complying with these legal provisions. While taking due note of the information provided by the Government on the promotional campaigns carried out by the labour inspectorate in the area of OSH, the Committee also recalls that as indicated in paragraph 99 of its General Observation of 2006 on Labour Inspection, while it is very important to make a special effort to carry out promotional campaigns to promote compliance with legal provisions on OSH, this approach should also include other important aspects of conditions of work, such as hours of work, leave, protection of wages, prohibition of discrimination, equality of remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and equality of treatment and protection of vulnerable categories of workers.

The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged so that inspectors in the area of labour matters are also entrusted with the function of providing technical information and advice to employers and workers in line with Article 3(1)(b) of the Convention, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard, including any promotional campaigns to promote compliance with legal provisions in areas other than OSH.

Please also indicate whether OSH inspectors can provide information and advice during inspection visits or only exercise these functions through the Labour Protection Information Service and the Labour Protection Consultancy Service.

Articles 7(3), 9, 10, 13 and 14. Association of duly qualified technical experts and specialists in the work of the labour inspectorate. Labour inspection activities aimed at the prevention of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes the observations made by the workers' representatives of the Tripartite

National ILO Council with regard to OSH inspectors not having the requisite expertise to detect potential hazards that lead to occupational diseases, particularly in relation to chemicals, and order measures to eliminate them. They consider that labour inspection reports do not reflect potential hazards and do not allow for the investigation of the causes of occupational diseases. They also consider it alarming that, in this context, the labour inspectorate employs external experts only for the investigation of fatal work accidents.

The Government indicates that all OSH inspectors have the requisite technical and/or occupational health and hygiene qualifications and have taken part in courses related to chemicals. The Government provides information on the length of training and the number of participants in training courses for OSH inspectors in 2008 and 2009, without indicating the content of such training, except in one case (training on asbestos). Taking into account the qualifications and training of labour inspectors, the Government is of the view that it is only necessary to associate external experts (such as experts in forensic medicine) in the work of the labour inspectorate in specific cases. The Government particularly refutes the allegation that hazards potentially leading to occupational diseases are not appropriately prevented and investigated. In this regard, the Government refers to Decree No. 27/1996 (VIII.28) NM of the Ministry of Welfare on the reporting and investigation of occupational diseases and cases of increased or high exposure (DRIOD), which empowers the Hungarian Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (HIOSH) to order the communication of additional data through examination by the OSH Inspectorate, the conduct of further examinations under its own responsibility, or the employment of external experts if it comes to the conclusion that data provided in a report on a suspected case of an occupational disease is not complete or that there are inconsistencies (section 5(8) of DRIOD No.27/1996). The Government adds that the existence of an occupational disease is determined by the social security body in a final decision following the procedure described in the above Decree.

The Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to paragraphs 196–198 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection where it is indicated that, in order to be effective, the inspection of workplaces must permit the detection of potential hazards so that measures can be determined to eliminate or reduce them as far as possible. Such inspections often require a high level of expertise and are thus a matter for specialist technical advisers. Inspectors must collaborate with such technical advisers or experts in order to carry out technical inspections for which their own qualifications are not sufficient as provided for in Article 9 of Convention No. 81. The Committee also recalls that as indicated in paragraph 198 of its General Survey, national conditions permitting, it would be desirable that such technical advisers or specialists be integrated into the labour inspection teams.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information and data on the application in practice of legislation on the investigation of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease (number of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease reported to the labour inspectorate, number of investigations of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease, findings and follow-up measures including sanctions imposed).

The Committee requests the Government to provide information and data on the preventive action taken by the labour inspectorate with a view to remedying defects observed in plant, layout or working methods which labour inspectors may have reasonable cause to believe constitute a threat to the health or safety of the workers including measures with immediate executory force in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers as provided for in Article 13 of the Convention.

The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the training provided to labour inspectors in the area of OSH during the next reporting period (content, duration, frequency and number of participants, etc.). Noting that according to the Government the highest number of occupational diseases had been caused by chemicals and biological agents in 2007 and 2008, the Committee asks the Government to provide in particular information on any related training provided to labour inspectors. If available, please send a copy of any legislative text (including any administrative decision or circular) on training arrangements for OSH inspectors.

Articles 10 and 16. Number of labour inspectors and effectiveness of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes that the workers' representatives of the Tripartite National ILO Council deplore the insufficient numbers of inspectors. In this regard, it notes the information in the Government's report showing a significant decrease in the total number of labour inspectors from 696 in 2008 to 538 in 2011, including a decrease in the number of inspectors entrusted with labour matters from 415 in 2008 to 338 in 2011 and a decrease in the number of OSH inspectors from 281 in 2008 to 200 in 2011. While noting the Government's indication that the number of labour inspectors satisfies efficiency requirements, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the reduction in labour inspectors on the work of the labour inspectorate. It would be grateful if the Government would carry out an evaluation of the needs of the labour inspection system in terms of human resources, both in the areas of OSH and labour matters, in the light of the criteria set in Article 10 of the Convention, in particular the number of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein, as well as the material means at their disposal.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Israel

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1955)

Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention. Publication of an annual labour inspection report. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that according to the Government, the Labour Inspection Division communicates to the ILO every two years a report on its activities, and publishes this information at a later date in the form of a “summary report” in Hebrew, in the framework of the general publications of the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Labour as required by the Freedom of Information Act. The Committee takes note of the latest summary report published in 2009 with regard to the activities of the Labour Inspection Division in the year 2006 as well as the information provided by the Government on the activities of the Labour Inspection Division in 2009. The Committee notes that these reports consist of a list of the basic laws and regulations which apply in this area, as well as seven statistical tables on the total number of labour inspection staff, employed persons by sector of activity, inspection visits, tests made by the National Laboratory, fines imposed, injuries registered, and fatal accidents notified, broken down by sector of activity.

The Committee notes with interest the communication of an exhaustive and in-depth analysis of the evolution and causes of deadly accidents at work in the most hazardous sectors over a period of ten years. It also notes that despite the reduction in the number of labour inspectors and inspection visits, most of the 37 newly created posts have been earmarked for intensification of controls in the area of occupational safety and health.

The Committee emphasizes, as it did in its general observation of 2010, the essential importance it attaches to the publication and communication to the ILO within the prescribed time limits, of an annual labour inspection report as this tool offers an indispensable basis for the evaluation of the results of the activities of the labour inspection services and, subsequently, the determination of the budgetary and other means necessary to improve their effectiveness. It emphasizes that according to Article 20 of the Convention, the report has to be published within a reasonable time after the end of the year to which it relates and in any case within 12 months and has to be communicated to the ILO within a reasonable period after their publication and in any case within three months. Moreover, according to Article 21, the annual report should contain, at the very least, up-to-date information on the following subjects: the field of the legal and material competence of the labour inspection services (legal provisions defining their organization and powers); the human resources and institutional logistical and material means available to the institution; its field of personal competence (enterprises, establishments and other workplaces liable to inspection, as well as the workers occupied therein); its means of operation (inspections, notifications of violations or non-compliance, technical advice and information, observations, warnings, the initiation or recommendation of prosecutions, the imposition of penalties); finally, occupational risks (through data on industrial accidents and cases of occupational diseases). The Committee recalls that extremely valuable guidance on the presentation and analysis of this information is provided in the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the labour inspection authority publishes an annual report within the time limits prescribed by Article 20 of the Convention and containing detailed and up-to-date information on the subjects reflected in Article 21. The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would communicate the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act which relate to the publication of an annual labour inspection report.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Italy

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the Government’s report, which was received at the Office on 23 September 2010. It also notes the comments from the Italian General Confederation of Labour (CGIL) dated 25 May and 20 September 2010, which were sent to the Government on 27 July and 28 September 2010, respectively.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Impact of monitoring and sanctioning of illegal employment and undeclared work on inspection of conditions of work. The Committee notes that the annual activity reports on inspections in the areas of labour and social security of the Ministry of Labour, Health and Social Policy for 2007, 2008, 2009 and 2010 show that labour inspection is essentially concerned with monitoring the legality of employment, including that of migrant workers.

The Government points out that, in view of the current economic and social structure of the national labour market, in which employment of foreign workers is constantly increasing, it is inevitable that inspection work also has to focus on the control of the establishment of appropriate and lawful employment relationships with citizens of non-EU countries and of new EU Member States.

The CGIL indicates that the role of the inspection unit of the Carabinieri attached to the Ministry constitutes an important and particularly pertinent component of the strategy to coordinate various inspection activities and that this unit has always focused on the strict observance of the rights of workers, particularly minors. However, it considers that the “Extraordinary Plan” for combating undeclared and illegal work in the four regions of the south of the country has major defects and gaps in terms of the coordinated use of resources and, in particular, the allocation of additional resources, given that it is based on the transfer to southern Italy of labour inspectors working in other regions and is therefore detrimental to their inspection work in those areas.

The Committee recalls once again that the role assigned to labour inspectors as Carabinieri of the criminal police may severely jeopardize the performance of their primary duties as defined by the Convention, namely to ensure the protection of workers. It refers once again to paragraph 78 of the 2006 General Survey on Labour Inspection according to which the primary duty of labour inspectors is to protect workers and not to enforce immigration law. Given the potentially large proportion of inspection activities spent on verifying the legality of immigration status, the Committee has emphasized that additional duties that are not aimed at securing the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers should be assigned to labour inspectors only insofar as they do not interfere with their primary duties and do not prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. The Committee has also emphasized that the attribution of police functions to the labour inspection is not conducive to the relationship of trust needed to create the climate of confidence that is essential to enlisting the cooperation of employers and workers with labour inspectors. It must be possible for inspectors to be respected for their authority to report offences, and at the same time to be approachable as preventers and advisers.

The Committee has therefore emphasized that the function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all the workers if it is to be compatible with the objective of the labour inspection. This objective can only be met if the workers covered are convinced that the primary task of the inspectorate is to enforce the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers. The Committee observes in this regard that in the framework of the European Union, Directive 2009/52/EC also provides for minimum protective standards for third-country nationals in illegal employment situations such as the establishment of effective national mechanisms to recover outstanding wages and other benefits due as a result of their employment relationship.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to re-establish labour inspectors in their duties defined by the Convention and limit their cooperation with the immigration authorities to an extent that is compatible with the purpose of the Convention. It urges the Government to ensure in this regard respect for the rights and working methods attached to the function of the labour inspection which are radically different from those of other officials entrusted with the task of combating illegal employment and immigration. Please keep the Office informed of all progress made towards this end.

The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would indicate the manner in which the labour inspectorate ensures the discharge of employers' obligations with regard to foreign workers in an irregular situation, from the point of view of residence status (payment of wages and other benefits owed) for work done, in cases where such persons are liable to expulsion from the country by the authority responsible for controlling illegal immigration.

Article 4. Supervision and control by a central authority. The Committee notes that the CGIL criticizes a government initiative which seeks, firstly, to centralize choices with regard to inspections to be carried out and the evaluation of the results within the Ministry of Labour (which, in the opinion of the CGIL, deprives inspectors of their authority) and, secondly, to sign "protocols" with various associations representing enterprises and their consultants stating that any "abnormal conduct" by inspectors must be indicated. The Committee requests the Government to communicate to the Office any comments it considers appropriate with regard to the points raised by the CGIL. It would be grateful if the Government would indicate in particular the basic criteria used for the determination of inspection visits to be carried out and for the evaluation of their results and to send copies of models of the protocols mentioned by the CGIL.

Article 11. Labour inspection resources. The Committee notes that, according to the CGIL, cuts in public expenditure since 2008 have resulted in major restrictions on inspection work, to the extent of blocking the possibility for inspectors to use their own means of transport, as provided for in Act No. 122/10. The Committee requests the Government to give details on the evolution of the budgetary and other resources allocated to the labour inspectorate in the framework of the national budget and provide further information on transport facilities made available to labour inspectors for the performance of their duties and on procedures for the reimbursement of travel and other expenses.

Articles 5(a), 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual inspection report. Statistics of industrial and commercial workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein. The Committee notes that the annual inspection reports sent to the Office contain general information on the number of enterprises inspected, the number of labour inspectors and also on infringements and penalties imposed. However, they do not contain any information on workplaces liable to inspection or on industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy, in cooperation with the social security institutions, is preparing databases to assist with the rationalization and coordination of inspection work.

With reference to its general observations of 2009 and 2010 concerning the establishment of a register of workplaces liable to inspection and the publication of an annual inspection report, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the annual labour inspection report is published by the central authority. It also requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any steps taken or contemplated, including by means of inter-institutional cooperation, to ensure that the annual report contains detailed information on each of the points listed in Article 21. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the indications contained in Part IV of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), regarding the appropriate level of detail for information required by Article 21(a)–(g) of the Convention.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1981)

With reference to its observation concerning the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee wishes to raise the following points.

Article 6(1)(a) and (2) of the Convention. Detrimental impact of the monitoring and sanctioning of illegal and clandestine work on the discharge of the primary duty of monitoring conditions of work. The Committee notes the Government's indication that inspection in the agricultural sector normally forms part of the ordinary inspection activities of the Provincial Labour Directorate or of special interventions by the Directorate-General of Inspection, particularly in the south, where most of the seasonal work requiring intensive labour for cultivation and harvesting work is concentrated. Such interventions are designed to put a stop to the use of illegal intermediaries, known as caporali, for the hiring of workers and the use of workers in an illegal or unauthorized situation and, at the same time, to protect workers and prevent them from being exploited. In this context, one of the objectives of inspection is to verify the payment of social security and insurance contributions and also to combat the widespread phenomenon of fictitious employment relationships in agriculture.

The Committee emphasizes once again that, even though there is no question that measures are necessary to put a stop to the phenomenon of unauthorized migration, the role given to labour inspectors at the workplace in this field runs the risk of seriously jeopardizing the achievement of the main goal of the Convention, namely the protection of workers with regard to conditions of work which are in breach of the applicable legal provisions. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to re-establish labour inspectors in their duties defined by the Convention and limit their cooperation with the immigration authorities to an extent that is compatible with the purpose of the Convention. It urges the Government in this regard to ensure respect for the rights and working methods attached to the function of the labour inspection, which are radically different to those of other officials entrusted with the task of combating illegal employment and immigration.

The Committee would also be grateful if the Government would indicate the manner in which the labour inspectorate ensures the discharge of employers' obligations (payment of wages and other benefits owed for work done) with regard to foreign workers in an irregular situation from the point of view of residence status in cases where such persons are liable to expulsion from the country by the authority responsible for controlling illegal immigration. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of all progress towards this end and all difficulties encountered, if any.

Articles 26 and 27. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual inspection report. The Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments on Articles 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81.

Kenya

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 5(a) and 21(e) of the Convention. Effective cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system. The Committee notes that it is envisaged to promote effective cooperation between the labour inspection system and the justice system with a view to encouraging due diligence and attention in the treatment by judicial bodies of violations reported by the labour inspectorate. In this regard, the Government indicates the development of procedural rules and regulations for the industrial court which complete the recently reviewed and adapted labour legislation. The Committee asks the Government to keep the ILO informed of any developments in terms of strengthening the above cooperation and, where applicable, to send a copy of any law or regulation adopted governing the legal procedure of the industrial court.

Article 2(1) and (23), and Article 3(1), of the Convention. Scope of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that Legal Notice No. 227/1990, which exempted establishments located in export processing zones (EPZs) from the application of the health and safety legislation, is now null and void and that the provisions of the Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act apply to all workplaces, including those in EPZs.

It further notes that the services of the Department of Occupational Safety and Health carried out a total of 4,117 occupational safety and health inspections during the 2008–09 financial year. Although it indicates that the Department monitored the activities of the safety and health committees established under section 9 of the OSH Act and trained 5,150 labour inspectors, the Government explains that it cannot provide information on the number of occupational safety and health committees established in industrial and commercial establishments in EPZs due to the limited capacity of the data-capturing system which does not segregate different workplaces. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of the court ruling which found Legal Notice No. 227/1990 to be null and void and if it would continue to keep the ILO informed of further inspection visits carried out by occupational safety and health officers. It requests the Government to make every effort to improve the data-capturing system with a view, among other objectives, to the disaggregation of data by industrial and commercial establishments, and to communicate the missing information in the near future.

The Committee notes that the categories of workers to be exempted from the scope of the Labour Institutions Act on labour administration and inspection, as provided for by section 4(3) of the Act, are to be specified by relevant rules and regulations. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO duly informed in this regard and to communicate a copy of any relevant rules and regulations.

Articles 10, 11 and 16. Adequate means of action and working conditions of labour inspection staff. Having expressed its concern at the persistent lack of labour inspection staff, office equipment and means of available transport facilities, the Committee regrets that, according to the Government, no progress has yet been made in this regard. Although fully aware of the difficulties that the country faces in the ongoing global recession and food crisis, the Committee nevertheless encourages the Government to do its utmost to seek international financial assistance to enable it to ensure sustainable resources for the effective functioning of the labour inspection services and to keep the ILO informed of any measures taken and the results achieved in this respect.

Article 14. Reporting and investigation of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes the description by the Government of its investigation procedure with regard to occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease: after reporting to the Director of the Occupational Safety and Health Services (DOSHS) through the relevant accident reporting form (DOSHS 1), occupational safety and health inspectors are sent to visit the scene of the accident, where they interview witnesses as well as the victim of the accident and collect other necessary evidence. The relevant report drafted following accident investigations constitutes the basis for action such as, where appropriate, improvement or prohibition notices, training, advice or prosecution. While the possibility to set up a tribunal to investigate occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease is foreseen in section 128 of the OSH Act, the Government sees no need to constitute such a tribunal as the DOSHS has been entrusted with the investigation of these cases. Noting the indication that, in the years 2008 and 2009, a total of 291 accidents were investigated, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would indicate the number of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease reported in comparison with the number of investigations actually conducted, as well as the action taken following these investigations (improvement or prohibition notices, prosecutions and penalties imposed).

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the obligation set out in Article 22 of the OSH Act for medical practitioners to notify occupational diseases to the Director of the OSH Services is not functioning in a satisfactory manner in practice as medical practitioners, despite an existing list of 40 occupational diseases in the second schedule to the OSH Act, are not adequately sensitized, bearing in mind the complexity of diagnosing occupational diseases. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to sensitize medical practitioners (e.g. through awareness campaigns, the distribution of brochures or the organization of training sessions). Drawing the Government's attention to the possibility of ILO technical assistance to this end, the Committee would be grateful if it would indicate any steps taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual report on labour inspection activities. The Committee notes that no annual report has been received, although the Government mentions an annual ministerial report under these Articles. It had noted in its previous report the obligation under Article 42(1) of the Labour Institutions Act for the Commissioner for Labour to prepare and publish, not later than 30 April of each year, a report on the activities undertaken in his/her department. The content of the report, as set out in Article 42(2), includes the information required under Article 21 of the Convention. It also noted that Article 25 of the OSH Act provides for the development and maintenance of an effective programme of the collection, compilation and analysis of occupational safety and health statistics covering occupational accidents and diseases, as well as the existence of an accident database where information sent through the DOSHS 1 form is entered. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in establishing a system to give effect to the requirements of Article 25 of the OSH Act in practice and any difficulties that have been encountered.

It urges the Government to ensure that an annual report, containing all the information and statistics on labour inspection activities required by Article 21 of the Convention, is published and communicated to the ILO.

Labour inspection and child labour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has not yet provided the child labour division with any budgetary allocation due to financial constraints. However, it notes that under the Time-bound Programme for the elimination of child labour implementation with ILO-IPEC, training sessions have been organized for the labour inspectorate in the area of project management, strategic management, capacity building on child labour issues and the training of trainers. The Committee requests the Government to ensure, where applicable within the framework of international financial cooperation, that adequate resources are rapidly made available. It asks the Government to specify the content of the above training of labour inspectors, the number and function of the participants and the duration of the training, and to provide information on any further training in this regard, as well as on its impact on the level of observance of legal provisions relating to child labour.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 6(1) of the Convention. Scope of labour inspection: Supervision of conditions of work in agricultural undertakings. The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government pursuant to its previous requests. It notes that the scope of the 2007 Labour Institutions Act and the 2007 Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act also cover agricultural workers.

The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, Legal Notice No. 227/1990 which exempted establishments located in export processing zones (EPZs) from the application of the health and safety legislation, is now null and void and that the provisions of the OSH Act apply to all workplaces, including those in EPZs. The Committee would be grateful if the Government could indicate in its next report the measures taken to ensure the enforcement of occupational safety and health provisions and the results achieved, including with regard to the prevention of occupational risks linked, inter alia, to the use of agricultural equipment, pesticides and other chemical substances.

Articles 14 and 15. Lack of adequate personnel and appropriate means of transport. The Committee notes once again the indication by the Government that there is still no specific budgetary allocation for labour inspection in agriculture and the Department still suffers from serious staff shortage as no new staff has been engaged since 1994. The budgetary allocation has instead been reduced owing to the prevailing economic slowdown and food crisis being experienced in the country. The Committee notes meanwhile the Government's commitment to take the necessary measures to remedy the situation once the economic situation improves.

The Committee considers that it would be unfortunate if the current context of global economic crisis led to a further deterioration of the conditions of work and the protection of workers through inter alia, a weakening of the entity entrusted with securing the enforcement of legal provisions in a sector of vital importance such as agriculture. The Committee emphasizes that the Global Jobs Pact adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 98th Session (June 2009) makes specific reference to the ILO standards relevant to labour inspection as part of a strategy of exit from the global economic crisis, a strategy aimed at preventing a downward spiral in labour conditions and building the recovery.

The Committee recalls that, according to Article 14 of the Convention, arrangements should be made to ensure that the number of labour inspectors in agriculture is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of their duties and that such numbers should be determined with due regard for, inter alia, the material means placed at the disposal of the inspectors. Moreover, Article 15 provides that labour inspectors should be furnished with the transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties. The Committee cannot emphasize enough the importance of ensuring adequate and appropriate means of action, in particular transport facilities, to labour inspectors, as the mobility of supervisory staff is a prerequisite for labour inspection, especially in agricultural undertakings which are by their nature far from urban centres and, in addition, often spread over large areas lacking public transport facilities.

Finally, with reference to its general observation of 2009, the Committee emphasizes that the absence of data on the number of agricultural undertakings liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein represents an insurmountable obstacle for any assessment of the rate of coverage by labour inspection services in relation to their scope, as defined in national legislation, and makes it impossible to evaluate the budgetary resources to be allocated to this public function, either for the determination of the appropriate number of labour inspectors or the necessary material resources and transport facilities for the discharge of their functions (Articles 14, 15 and 21) or the provision of specific training (Article 9).

Referring to its 2009 general observation, the Committee once again urges the Government to carry out an objective assessment of the situation by identifying the agricultural undertakings liable to inspection (number, activity, size and location) and the workers engaged therein (number and categories), with a view to enabling an adequate setting of priorities for action and provision of relevant financial resources, in the framework of the national budget and/or a request for international financial assistance to the same end. It requests the Government to indicate in its next report any measures adopted in relation to the above and the results achieved.

Articles 25, 26 and 27. Periodical and annual reports. The Committee notes that no annual report has been received and that, for a number of years, it has been noting with concern the persistent lack of specific data on labour inspection activities in the agricultural sector. The Committee notes from the Government's report that disaggregated data on the activities of the labour inspectorate in agricultural undertakings, including in EPZs, are still not available, primarily due to lack of personnel, and that the Government envisages a formal request to the ILO for technical assistance with a view to improving data collection and management.

While regretting the persistent lack of progress in this area, the Committee notes that section 42 of the Labour Institutions Act, 2007, which applies to agriculture, provides that the Commissioner for Labour shall prepare and publish, not later than 30 April each year, an annual report on the activities undertaken in his/her department, the content of which largely corresponds to Article 27 of the Convention. Furthermore, section 25 of the OSH Act, which also applies to agriculture, provides for the development and maintenance of an effective programme for the collection, compilation and analysis of occupational safety and health statistics covering occupational accidents and diseases, as well as the existence of an accident database where information sent through the DOSH1 form is entered.

The Committee emphasizes that disaggregated data on labour inspection activities in the agricultural sector, including in EPZs, can provide national authorities with a regular means of assessing the extent to which the available means match requirements, and constitute an invaluable and regular source of practical information and numerical data that is indispensable for the evaluation of the application of the Convention. The Committee also notes that such data can be reflected either in the general labour inspection annual report or in a separate report.

The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to give effect in practice to sections 42 of the Labour Institutions Act, 2007, and section 25 of the OSH Act, with a view to improving data collection and management and publishing an annual report on the work of the inspection system in agriculture, including in EPZs, either as a separate report or as part of its general annual report. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the measures taken in this regard. It reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance aimed at establishing the conditions in which the Department of Labour can collect data on the activities of the inspection services under its control.

Labour inspection and child labour in agriculture. In response to the Committee's previous comment concerning the measures taken to reduce child labour and the results of these measures, the Government mentions several measures, such as the establishment of a child labour division which acts as liaison between labour inspectors and the National Steering Committee which is the apex body; the development of a child labour policy and a national plan of action that seeks to progressively eliminate worst forms of child labour by 2015; capacity building workshops for inspectors on child labour issues; the development of a child labour monitoring system and data bank on child labour issues; the strengthening of institutional structures that deal with child labour especially in the district and local levels; and the building of partnerships and sharing of information with other government agencies at the district level.

Noting that there is no specific information as to labour inspection activities on child labour in agriculture, the Committee once again recalls, with reference to its general observation of 1999, that labour inspectors can play an important role in: (i) identifying and registering the child workforce in agricultural undertakings; (ii) establishing an educational framework for this population; (iii) identifying specific problems of children and young persons who are exposed to a high risk of accidents and occupational diseases due to the use of complex machines and chemical products; and (iv) finding appropriate solutions to the above. Also referring to its 2009 observations under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), and the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), respectively, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the activities of the labour inspectorate concerning child labour in agriculture as well as examples of enforcement activities and the progress achieved.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

Republic of Korea

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee takes note of the comments by the Korea Employers' Federation (KEF) and the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) received with the Government's report along with the Government's reply thereto, as well as the comments by the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) which were received at the ILO on 29 August 2011 and were communicated to the Government on 6 September 2011. The Committee requests the Government to make any observation it deems appropriate with regard to the comments made by the KCTU.

Article 3 of the Convention. Functions of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes that according to the FKTU, the field labour inspectors focus on subjects which should be normally left to autonomous collective bargaining, like the implementation of the provisions of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Adjustment Act (TURLAA) concerning the maximum limits imposed on paid time off for full-time union officials and the establishment of a single bargaining channel among trade unions in a framework of trade union pluralism. According to the FKTU, labour inspectors misuse their administrative capacity on pursuing government policy and neglect to inspect employers' compliance with labour standards, occupational safety rules and collective agreements. The Government responds that labour inspectors can give guidance on collective bargaining and on preventing and settling labour disputes, as part of their duties; they thus provide guidance on the paid time-off system and the bargaining representative system for multiple unions which took effect on 1 July 2011, in order to prevent any violations.

The Committee recalls that according to paragraph 80 of its General Survey of 2006 on Labour Inspection, it is important to ensure – when the role assigned to labour inspectors in the field of industrial relations takes the form of close supervision of trade union activities so as to ensure that they do not exceed the limits laid down by legal provisions – that this supervision does not involve acts of interference in these organizations' legitimate activities. It also recalls that the primary role of the labour inspectorate, pursuant to Article 3(1) and (2), is to monitor the conditions in which work is performed, and that any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors should not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide further information on the nature of the activities carried out by the labour inspectorate for the implementation of legal provisions concerning freedom of association and collective bargaining and to specify the proportion of these activities in relation to those focused on conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work.

Articles 10 and 16. Number of labour inspectors and inspection visits. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous comments, the Government provides information according to which, the number of inspection visits has continued to increase in the period 2009–10 amounting to 19,881 visits on labour matters and 27,415 visits on occupational safety and health (OSH), while the total number of labour inspectors as of 31 May 2011 was 1,413. The Government adds that the total number of workplaces and workers in 2008 amounted to 1,422,261 workplaces and 12,448,992 workers. The Committee notes that the FKTU criticizes the scarcity of inspection personnel and indicates that on the basis of the above statistics, it would take approximately 50 years to inspect all workplaces.

The Committee recalls that according to Article 10 of the Convention, the number of labour inspectors should be sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate in light of the number of workplaces liable to inspection, the number of workers employed therein, the number and complexity of the legal provisions to be enforced as well as the material means placed at the disposal of the inspectors and the practical conditions under which visits of inspection must be carried out in order to be effective. Moreover, according to Article 16, workplaces should be inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide an evaluation of the needs of the labour inspectorate in human resources in light of the criteria provided in Article 10 of the Convention and indicate the proportion of the national budget allocated to labour inspection and the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as necessary. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the distribution of labour inspectors by region, category and level of qualification.

Article 5(a), 17, 18 and 21(e). Effective enforcement and cooperation between the labour inspection services and the justice system. The Committee notes from the Government's report that only 127 violations of labour law and 1,782 violations of OSH legislation were brought to justice in 2010, while 16,905 and 21,298 cases respectively were treated through administrative action. It notes that the FKTU criticizes this practice as ineffective in preventing industrial accidents and states that most violations detected by the labour inspectorate are petty offences with extremely few cases of judicial treatment. The Government answers that the number of cases that go through judicial process may be low since most employers comply with the correction orders issued by labour inspectors. In cases of special inspection or when the same violation is committed again in three years, more severe actions such as immediate judicial action or imposition of negligence fines are taken. The Government indicates that it plans to reorganize the electronic document system of labour inspection so as to systematically manage the history of labour law violations by employers and allow for closer cooperation with the public prosecutors and the courts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the nature of the violations detected by the labour inspectors with reference to the legal provisions concerned and the types of corrective measures ordered. It would also be grateful if the Government would provide further information on the nature of the cases brought to the justice system (specifying the legal provisions concerned and the number of workers affected), as well as the duration and outcome of the judicial proceedings (convictions pronounced, penalties imposed, etc.).

The Committee also requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of progress made in setting up the electronic document system and to provide an evaluation of its impact, once it is established, on the cooperation with the justice system and the observance of the legal provisions pertaining to conditions of work and the protection of workers.

Article 5(a) and (b). Cooperation between the labour inspection services and private institutions and collaboration with employers or their organizations. The KEF refers to an “E-self Evaluation System” allowing employers to check their practices and correct any violations of legal provisions by themselves, as well as the “Self-Improving Working Condition Program” carried out in alliance with private institutions in order to enhance the effectiveness of labour inspection and encourage voluntary compliance. According to the KEF, private institutions involved in this programme measure the compliance of companies with labour laws and present ways to improve their working conditions so that small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) with little information on labour law can observe the laws voluntarily. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the operation in practice of the “Self-Improving Working Condition Program”, in particular, the procedure for the authorization by the labour inspectorate of the private enterprises which carry out the programme, the manner in which they are supervised by the labour inspectorate, their functioning (scope of activity, safeguards of independence, the costs associated with their services, their availability to small and medium enterprises, etc.) as well as their impact on increasing compliance with legislation on conditions of work and the protection of workers in individual workplaces. Please also provide details on, and indicate any assessment of the impact of the “E-self Evaluation System”.

Articles 5(b), 13 and 14. Collaboration of the labour inspection with employers and workers and their organizations in the area of OSH. The Committee notes that according to the statistical information provided by the Government, the number of industrial accidents has increased between 2008 and 2009, while the number of occupational diseases has decreased. The Committee requests the Government to provide details on the preventive activities carried out by labour inspectors in the area of OSH in line with Article 13 of the Convention including measures with immediate executory force taken in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers, and to describe the procedure in force for the recording and notification of industrial accidents and occupational diseases.

Also, recalling the indications provided in Paragraphs 4–5 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81) with regard to safety committees or similar bodies, the Committee requests the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged to reinforce the prevention of industrial accidents in cooperation with employers and workers and their organizations.

Articles 12(1)(a) and (b) and 15(c). Right of inspectors to enter workplaces freely, confidentiality of complaints, and period of time when inspections are carried out. The Committee’s previous comments concerned the need to bring section 17 of the Work Manual for Labour Inspectors, which provided that inspections should be subject to a ten-day prior notice to the employer, in line with the provisions of Article 12 of the Convention which provides that inspectors provided with proper credentials should be able to enter freely and without previous notice any workplace liable to inspection. The Committee notes that according to the FKTU, an inspection system allowing for unannounced inspections to take place without advance notice has still not been introduced in practice. It also notes that according to the Government, the Work Manual for Labour Inspectors was amended in April 2010 to allow for unannounced inspections of workplaces; as a result, currently, notice of inspection is given only for regular inspections while occasional and special inspections may be conducted without advance notice. According to the Government, in 2010, 6,294 unannounced inspections took place, on the basis of which 17,577 cases of violations were detected in 4,724 workplaces; of these workplaces, 48 were brought to justice and 4,676 received administrative action.

The Committee notes that if regular inspections are always carried out with advance notice, it is very difficult, in case of inspection visits carried out pursuant to complaints, to avoid giving any intimation to the employer of the fact that a visit takes place consequent to a complaint, as required by Article 15(c) of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to communicate the amendment to section 17 of the Work Manual for Labour Inspectors and to indicate the manner in which the confidentiality of complaints is maintained in case of inspection visits carried out pursuant to complaints. Furthermore, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the percentage of unannounced inspections carried out pursuant to complaints.

The Committee also observes from the Government’s report that labour inspections normally take place during the day, and that, while inspections may be conducted at night when necessary, there are no separate statistics on these inspections. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would collect the relevant statistics and provide an indication of the percentage of labour inspection visits carried out at night.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual inspection report. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government on the content of the 2009 White Paper on Employment and Labor (published in 2010) as well as its indication that an electronic register of workplaces has been set up and that it is examining the possibility of coordinating this system with the electronic document system of the Korean Worker's Compensation and Welfare Service. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would continue to provide a summary of the information contained in the White Paper and keep the ILO informed of developments related to the creation of the electronic registry of workplaces and its impact on the work of the labour inspection.

Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) (ratification: 1997)

Articles 4, 6 and 10 of the Convention. Organization and functions of the system of labour administration and material means allocated. In its previous comments the Committee had welcomed the extension of the functions of the system of labour administration and the substantial increase in the share of the national budget allocated to the labour administration system during the 1999–2005 period. The Committee again notes with satisfaction the information sent by the Government to the effect that the Ministry of Labour was renamed the Ministry of Employment and Labour in July 2010 and extended its operations to include job creation and skills development; in addition, the Ministry's budget currently represents 4.2 per cent of the total Government budget and has shown a regular increase of 7 per cent per year since 2006. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the priorities established by the Ministry and their impact on, firstly, the national labour policy and the effective operation of the labour administration system. The Government is also requested to send an updated organization chart of the Ministry of Employment and Labour.

Article 7. Extension of the functions of the labour administration to workers who are not employees. In its previous comments the Committee asked the Government to clarify which workers belonged to the “non-standard workforce” category and to indicate the reasons why the issue of the extension of the protection of the labour administration system to these workers, brought before the National Assembly in November 2004, was excluded from the Roadmap for Industrial Relations Reform. The Committee notes the Government's indication that workers engaged in non-traditional forms of work are not covered by the labour legislation because they are not considered as being in an employment relationship. The Government refers to the examples of golf caddies, private teachers, insurance agents and concrete truck owner-drivers, and adds that the protection of this category of workers is the subject of discussions between representatives of the Government and those of the employers and workers.

In this context, the Committee notes the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2602 concerning subcontracted workers in the metallurgical industry who, because of their status, are deprived of the legal protection established by the Trade Union and Labour Relations Adjustment Act (TULRAA) [see 359th Report of the Committee, paragraphs 342–370]. This case is concerned with “illegal dispatch”, a form of false subcontracting which disguises the existence of an employment relationship. The Committee notes with interest in this regard, the decision of the Supreme Court of 22 July 2010, which considered that anyone who has worked for more than two consecutive years in a factory is not subcontracted but “illegally dispatched” and therefore must be considered as a worker directly employed by the enterprise. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide details of the categories and number of workers engaged in non-traditional forms of work (“non-standard workforce”) and also on any measures taken or contemplated, to favour, in the light of the abovementioned Supreme Court decision, the progressive extension of the protection of the labour administration system to categories of workers who are not, in law, employed persons.

Part VI of the report form. The Government indicates that it has not received any comments from the employers' and workers' organizations further to sending them its report. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate any observations made by the employers' and workers' organizations within the tripartite labour administration bodies, or, if applicable, in other contexts, regarding the application in practice of the provisions of the Convention or the application of legislative or other measures giving effect to the provisions of the Convention, and also any remark on such observations that the Government considers relevant.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Latvia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1994)

Articles 3(1), (2) and 10 of the Convention. Principal labour inspection functions and inspection staff. The Committee notes that according to the 2010 Annual Report of the State Labour Inspectorate (SLI), the main priorities of the SLI until 2013 are to combat unregistered employment and reduce the number of fatal accidents and accidents causing severe health problems at work.

In its report, the Government indicates that as a result of structural changes introduced in 2009 and 2010, the number of staff in the State Labour Inspectorate (SLI) was reduced to 211 in 2009, including 139 inspectors, and 163 in 2010, including 112 inspectors. It is indicated that all inspectors deal with both labour law and labour protection issues except for 14 inspectors in the Sector for Reduction of Unregistered Employment of the Riga Regional SLI. The number of workplaces subject to inspection was 92,347.

The Committee notes that labour inspection visits aimed at combating unregistered employment amounted to 3,264 in 2010 out of 10,477 inspections in total. Even though this represents a 34.6 per cent decrease in inspections compared to 2009, the number of persons found to be involved in unregistered employment increased by 51 per cent compared to 2009. Moreover, it is reported that the SLI plans to inspect repeatedly and annually at least 5 per cent of the enterprises in risk of unregistered employment.

The Committee requests the Government to specify the sanctions imposed if the labour inspectors discover cases of unregistered employment and the manner in which the labour inspectorate ensures the enforcement of employers' obligations with regard to the statutory rights of irregular workers for the period of their effective employment relationship.

Articles 3(1)(b) and 14. Notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes from the 2011 Annual Inspection Report that the total number of accidents was reduced by 1.3 per cent in 2010 compared to 2009, and that serious accidents were reduced by 6.3 per cent (164 in 2010, 175 in 2009) while lethal accidents decreased by 28 per cent (23 in 2010, 32 in 2009). It notes in particular that occupational accidents decreased in the construction sector by 61 per cent within four years (256 accidents in 2007 and 99 in 2010) and that the SLI carried out national inspection campaigns in particular industries (e.g., wood-processing and construction) and organized the European Week (EW) information campaign related to the maintenance of healthy and safe workplaces.

The Committee also notes that according to the Government, Cabinet Regulation No. 950 on Procedures for investigation and registration of work accidents was adopted on 25 August 2009, substituting Regulation No. 585 of 9 August 2005, so as to simplify the procedure for the investigation and registration of work accidents, and facilitating the process of their investigation by the inspectorate and employers. The SLI, according to paragraphs 10 and 11 of the Regulation, shall control how an employer investigates and registers accidents and is entitled to conduct an additional investigation of the circumstances of an accident if new facts regarding the accident have come at the disposal of the Inspectorate. Paragraph 20 stipulates that medical treatment institutions shall provide detailed information to the SLI regarding the work accidents which took place in the previous month. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would describe the procedure for the notification, registration and investigation of work accidents under Regulation No. 950, particularly in relation to the role of the labour inspectorate in this framework.

Additionally, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on any preventive activities carried out by the SLI in the area of occupational safety and health including the adoption of measures with immediate effect in case of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers (Article 13(2)(b) of the Convention).

The Government is also requested to provide details concerning the procedure for the recording and notification of cases of occupational disease, and furnish statistics of diseases and the measures taken to prevent them.

Article 6. Status of the labour inspection staff. The Committee takes note of the Government's reply to its previous comments, to the effect that employees of the SLI do not perform control and supervision functions, but rather support functions.

The Government also reports that the Law on Remuneration of Officials and Employees of the State and Self-Government Authorities which was adopted on 1 December 2009 and came into force on 1 January 2010, aims to ensure equal remuneration for officials and employees of State and local government authorities, including of the SLI. The Committee also notes the high levels of staff turnover in the SLI indicated in the Government's report (37 per cent in 2009 and 23 per cent in 2010). The Committee requests the Government to specify the conditions of service of labour inspectors and in particular, their wages, including allowances, in relation to other types of officials performing similar duties, e.g., social security and tax inspectors, pursuant to the entry into force of the Law on Remuneration of Officials and Employees of the State and Self-Government Authorities.

Articles 18 and 21(d) and (e). Labour inspection enforcement activities and relevant statistics. While taking due note of the statistical information provided by the Government on the number of inspection visits, violations found, cases brought to the courts and outcome of the judicial examination as well as penalties imposed, in reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Committee observes nevertheless, that the data provided only refers to aggregate numbers and does not allow for an analysis of the impact of the activities of the labour inspectorate on the application of legislation on conditions of work and the protection of workers. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures so as to ensure that the annual labour inspection reports include detailed information on inspection visits (such as their regional distribution, purpose and frequency) and violations found (legal provisions to which they relate, nature of penalties imposed) as well as the outcome of judicial and administrative proceedings and its impact on the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and protection of workers while engaged in their work.

Noting with interest, that according to the Government, the SLI is in the process of implementing, as of 2012, a project on "Improvement of the Information System of the State Labour Inspectorate and Introduction of E-services", in order to provide statistical information related to the survey of undertakings, fines imposed, accidents, occupational diseases, etc. the Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of progress made in the introduction of the information system and its impact.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1994)

With reference to its comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to the following points.

Articles 6(1)(b) and 13 of the Convention and Paragraphs 2 and 14 of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Recommendation, 1969 (No. 133). Preventive activities in the field of occupational safety and health in agriculture. The Committee notes with interest the Government's reference to several preventive activities in the field of agriculture in 2011 with a view to reducing the number of fatal accidents, including preventive inspection visits in agriculture aimed at raising awareness (through training on labour protection, risk assessment, mandatory health examinations, safe working methods and the use of personal protective equipment, etc.); a seminar on occupational safety in agriculture aimed at the prevention and reduction of specific risks organized in cooperation with the European Agency for Safety and Health at Work (EU-OSHA); cooperation with the "Farmers' Parliament" (FI) which is according to the Government the most influential organization of agricultural producers; and the preparation of information materials on the most essential issues relating to labour protection in agriculture, which will be distributed to the members of the FI. The Committee asks the Government to report in further detail on the preventive activities in agriculture, for example, the number of training courses provided by labour inspectors during inspection visits and the number of workers covered; any seminars held in the field of occupational safety and health in agriculture and their duration and the number of participants; as well as information on any collaboration with organizations representing workers in the agricultural sector, and their impact on the number of fatal and serious work accidents.

Articles 9(3) and 15. Specific training in agriculture for labour inspectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no specific training exists for labour inspectors in the area of agriculture, but that the training system of the State Labour Inspectorate ensures the competence of inspectors to perform inspections of undertakings in all sectors and that individual inspectors have relevant education and previous experience in the field of agriculture. The Committee recalls once again that the specific characteristics of work in the agricultural sector involve specific risks for workers, for example, risks related to the handling and use of dangerous chemicals and pesticides as well as agricultural machinery and therefore require that inspectors keep abreast of developments in this field through continuous and adequate training. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide further information on how it is ensured that the training provided for labour inspectors enables them to acquire and maintain the technical knowledge necessary to perform their duties adequately in the agricultural sector (training provided in relation to agricultural subjects, and its proportion in the new training system referred to in the Government's report under Convention No. 81). The Committee would also like to draw the Government's attention to Paragraphs 4–7 of Recommendation No. 133 on the minimum qualifications needed by labour inspectors called upon to work in the agricultural sector.

Articles 15(b) and 21. Transport facilities for labour inspectors in agriculture and inspection visits. The Committee's previous comments concerned the need to enable labour inspectors to carry out inspections of agricultural undertakings in accordance with Article 21 as often and as thoroughly as is necessary notably through sufficient transport facilities and the refunding of transport costs. The Committee notes in this regard that the number of inspection visits in agriculture seems to have increased (308 visits in 2006 against 384 visits in 2010), while the number of workers in agricultural undertakings seems to have decreased (88,400 in 2006 against 82,500 in 2010). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information on the availability of transport and other facilities at the labour inspection services that take account of the distant and remote nature of agricultural undertakings, as well as any equipment for measurement and analysis at the disposal of labour inspectors.

Articles 26 and 27. Annual report on labour inspection in agriculture. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, while it has not yet been technically possible to include separate information by sector in annual labour inspection reports, the information on labour inspection activities in agriculture required under Article 27 of the Convention will be included separately in the labour inspection report for 2011. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that the implementation of an electronic database at the State Labour Inspectorate, as of 2012, also mentioned under Convention No. 81, will provide the technical possibility to acquire most of the data requested under the Convention. It also notes the indication that information on the number of workplaces in agriculture and the workers employed therein is currently available from the Central Statistics Bureau (CSB). The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of the progress made in the introduction of this system and its impact on the elaboration and publication of an annual report on labour inspection activities in agriculture.

Lebanon

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors in connection with union matters. For many years the Committee has been asking the Government to take steps to limit intervention by labour inspectors in the internal affairs of trade unions and confederations solely to cases of complaints which might be addressed to them by a significant number of members. The issue was raised by the Committee with regard to section 2(c) of Decree No. 3273 of 26 June 2000, under the terms of which the labour inspectorate has the power to monitor vocational organizations and confederations at all levels in order to check whether the latter, in their operations, are exceeding the limits prescribed by law and by their rules of procedure and statutes. The Committee stated in a direct request of 2002 that such powers were tantamount to the right to interfere in the internal affairs of professional organizations. The Government then announced that an amendment to the Labour Code would settle the issue. However, Memorandum No. 35/2 of 12 April 2006 from the Director-General of the Ministry of Labour reproduced the criticized provision using identical wording.

Section 163(3) of the version of the draft Labour Code submitted to the ILO in 2007 for opinion stated that the Labour Inspection and Occupational Safety and Health Department of the Ministry of Labour would be responsible for monitoring the application of laws, decrees and regulations relating to terms and conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, including the provisions of ratified international and Arab conventions and, more specifically ... "(3) to conduct inquiries further to complaints relating to trade unions and confederations at all levels".

In its 2009 report, the Government indicates that this provision is contained in section 161(3) of the current version of the draft Labour Code and will have the effect of removing any power from the labour inspectorate to monitor trade union affairs, as this power would be assigned to the trade union council. It explains that the powers of the labour inspectorate with regard to occupational organizations will therefore be limited to the examination of complaints submitted to it by the latter. Since the current wording of the text in no way lends itself to such an interpretation, it is essential, in order to avoid any ambiguity in this regard, for the drafting to be reviewed in the appropriate way. Noting that the draft amendments to the Labour Code have been under discussion for more than ten years, the Committee requests the Government, pending the definitive adoption of the Code, to contemplate cancelling, in the forms provided for by law in such matters, the provision of Memorandum No. 35/02 of 12 April 2006 of the Director-General of the Ministry of Labour under the terms of which labour inspectors retain the power to monitor trade union activities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Luxembourg

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending 30 June 2010, and also the annual reports of the Labour and Mining Inspectorate (ITM) for 2007, 2008 and 2010 received at the ILO on 21 April 2011. It notes with interest the publication, on the website <http://www.itm.lu/itm-rapport-annuel>, of the annual reports starting with the report for 2004, which provides an overview of the changes in the operation of the labour inspectorate in each area.

The Committee also notes with interest the inclusion in the annual report of the Code of Ethics for the labour inspectorate, adopted on 11 June 2008 and presented as a document that seeks to enable the ITM, as an organization, and its staff to apply quality standards in the sphere of professional and ethical conduct.

The Committee also notes with interest the establishment of the ITM Help Centre in October 2009. This is an online service at national level providing advice and assistance designed to answer any questions that may arise for employees and employers regarding the national legislation. According to the information contained in the annual inspection report for 2010, the Help Centre, which is accessible on the website www.guichet.lu, has already enabled members of the labour inspectorate, who work on a decentralized basis in regional agencies, to provide a coordinated focus for users and to deal with investigations in enterprises.

Articles 3(1)(a) and 5 of the Convention. Methods for controlling the conditions of work of posted workers. The Committee notes that the Labour Code, adopted pursuant to the Act of 31 July 2006, was amended in particular by the inclusion of new provisions through the Act of 21 December 2007 concerning the reform of the Labour and Mining Inspectorate (ITM). The amended version of the Labour Code came into force on 13 June 2011.

The Committee notes with interest the amendment of section 142-3 of the Code, under which foreign enterprises operating in Luxembourg without being permanently established there and employing one or more workers are now required to send to the ITM, as soon as possible (and no longer at the request of the ITM, as was the case under the former provisions), the documents referred to in section 142-2 concerning the enterprise and the workers employed in it. The Committee understands that this legal amendment will give the ITM the possibility of inspecting the conditions of work of the employees concerned as soon as the enterprise commences operations in Luxembourg, and thereby prevent any attempted abuse to the detriment of workers employed for short periods.

However, the Committee notes in the annual report of the ITM for 2010 that 30 injunctions for non-compliance with the new section 142-3 were issued, including nine by officials of the Luxembourg Liaison Office for Posted Workers (BLLD) (an entity resulting from the amalgamation of the Department for Posted Workers and Action against Illegal Work (SDTI) and the Luxembourg Liaison Office), and 21 by officials of the excise administration. The BLLD has a promotional and organizational role within the Inter-Administrative Task Force against Illegal Work (CIALTI), a variable and non-institutionalized structure capable of mobilizing officials from six to eight ministries or administrations and which thereby makes an active contribution, according to the annual report, to the “crackdowns” on worksites or in enterprises already referred to in the previous comments of the Committee. In 2010, a total of 17 interventions relating to “organized undeclared work” during weekends and three “after-work” interventions (i.e. between 17.00 hours and 21.00 hours) were implemented. The interventions related to undeclared work and also to overtime. The annual report also indicates that, in the context of the activities of the ASCAB division of the Customs and Excise Administration undertaken in cooperation with the ITM, a total of 792 inspections took place, during which 204 infringements were reported and penalized. A total of 48 penalties were imposed for undeclared work, and eight reports were drawn up for infringements of the legislation relating to posted workers. The Committee further notes that the cross-border cooperation in which the BLLD participates seeks to take effective action against the numerous and increasingly ingenious variations in illegal work, and to make a specific contribution to the prevention of occupational accidents and diseases among migrant workers.

The Committee requests the Government to clarify the role of ITM inspection staff in the preparation and implementation of “crackdowns”.

Referring to its comments of 2007 which were repeated in 2010, and noting that the Government has not supplied the requested information regarding the situation of foreign workers found as a result of inspections to have irregular status, especially as regards the protection of rights deriving from their status as employees during their actual period of employment, the Committee requests the Government to provide this information.

The Committee requests the Government to state the manner in which cross-border cooperation on controlling the posting of workers contributes to the prevention of accidents and cases of occupational disease among migrant workers.

Articles 2 and 3. Scope of application of the Convention and duties of labour inspection staff. Former section L.611-1 of the Labour Code stated that “without prejudice to other duties arising from the legal, regulatory or administrative provisions, the ITM shall be responsible in particular for: (i) enforcing the legal, regulatory, administrative and collective agreement-derived provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, such as provisions relating to hours of work, wages, safety, health and welfare, the employment of children and young persons, equality of treatment between women and men, protection against sexual harassment in the workplace, and other connected matters, in so far as such provisions are enforceable by the Labour and Mining Inspectorate [...]”. This provision was in full conformity with Articles 2 and 3(1) of the Convention as regards the scope of the Convention and the duties of the labour inspectorate (focusing on conditions of work and the protection of workers).

The Committee notes that, under the terms of the new provisions on this matter (section 612-1 of the Code), the ITM is responsible in particular for enforcing the legal provisions “including those” relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers, which, at least according to the letter of the provision, relegates the inspection tasks of the labour inspectorate as defined by Article 3(1) of the Convention to a secondary level of competence. It notes that labour inspection staff are responsible for a number of other duties unconnected with the duties defined by Article 3, such as surveillance and monitoring of the marketing and use of products in the country (lifts, pressure appliances in general, gas appliances, lifting appliances), which draw substantially on the human and logistical resources of the inspectorate.

In its General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, the Committee emphasized that primary inspection duties (enforcement of the legal provisions as established in Article 3(1); provision of technical information and advice to employers and workers and their organizations; contributing towards improving the relevant legislation) are complex and require time, resources, training and considerable freedom of action and movement (paragraph 69). It reminds the Government once again that, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention, any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to re-establish the labour inspectorate, on the basis of law, in its primary duties, as defined in Articles 2 and 3(1) of the Convention, and to provide information on the measures taken or contemplated towards this end.

It also requests the Government to indicate the proportion of time and resources devoted by labour inspection staff to the performance of other duties as compared with the time and resources devoted to the duties defined in Article 3(1).

Article 12(1) Scope of inspectors’ freedom to enter workplaces liable to inspection. The Committee notes that, under the terms of section L.614-3(1), subsection 1 of the new Code, “If there are legitimate grounds or sufficient evidence to consider that it is necessary to enforce the legal provisions coming within the competence of the Labour and Mining Inspectorate in worksites, workplaces and buildings and also their respective outbuildings, members of the labour inspectorate must be able to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any such location that is liable to inspection.” The same provision also states that “Inspection or search activities undertaken on the spot must respect the principle of proportionality with regard to the grounds for such activities.” The Committee notes that this provision signifies a regression with regard to the previous national legislation. In fact, Section 13(1) of the Act of 4 April 1974 concerning the reorganization of the Labour and Mining Inspectorate, which was in line with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention, had been maintained by virtue of section 612-1(1) of the Act of 31 July 2006, which provided that “inspection personnel equipped with the relevant documents of authorization shall be empowered: (1) to enter freely and without previous notice [workplaces liable to inspection]”.

The Committee considers that the fact that the new Code makes inspections subject to the existence of sufficient evidence or legitimate grounds restricts, in a way which is contrary to the Convention, the scope of labour inspectors’ right to enter workplaces liable to inspection. The only condition that should be attached to this right, in accordance with Article 12(1), is the obligation for labour inspectors to be equipped with proper credentials. The fact that a workplace is liable to inspection is sufficient reason in itself for the full exercise of this right in order to ensure moreover, an effective application of Article 16, according to which workplaces shall be inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions. The Committee also wishes to emphasize that recognition of inspectors’ right to enter workplaces freely as defined by the Convention also enables labour inspectors to ensure that they discharge their obligation of confidentiality with regard to the source of any complaint and also as regards preventing the establishment of any link between the inspection and a complaint (Article 15(c)).

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to restore in the legislation the right of labour inspectors to freely enter workplaces liable to inspection, as provided for in Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention, and to indicate the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Madagascar

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee takes note of the comments made by the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SAIT) in a communication dated 26 August 2011. The Committee requests the Government to communicate any observation it deems appropriate in relation to these comments.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to the Committee’s previous comments, merely reiterating the content of its reply to the observation under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81). It acknowledges however that the application of the Convention is encountering difficulties and attributes these to the lack of specific training on labour inspection in agriculture in the training programme for labour inspectors at the National School of Administration (ENAM). The Committee refers in this respect to the Government’s report sent to the ILO in 2009, in which it stated its intention to include a course specialized in this area in the training programme of this school. The Government had added that contacts had been made with those responsible in the ministry concerned but that work had been suspended because of the country’s political crisis. The Committee notes once again the Government’s good intention to ensure respect for the provisions of the Convention, accompanied by a request for assistance from the Office for this purpose.

The Committee therefore invites the Government to formalize its request for technical assistance by providing the Office with all the relevant information at its disposal concerning the actual situation of labour inspection in agricultural enterprises, its resources, structure, logistical means, and available transport means and facilities. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the number of inspectors assigned to duties in the agricultural enterprises and on the nature of these duties, on the capacities of the labour inspectorate to establish, in collaboration with other competent public administration bodies, a national register or local registers of agricultural enterprises, including free zone enterprises. Finally, the Government is asked to send the most recent available data on the number and geographical distribution of agricultural enterprises, as well as on the number of workers engaged in these enterprises.

Referring to the comment of the SAIT in which it indicates that it is fully prepared to assume its share of responsibility in efforts to attain the Decent Work Agenda, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide in its next report information on the measures taken to begin, with the support of the social partners, the necessary procedures for gradually establishing a labour inspection system in agriculture.

The Committee finally asks the Government to provide information on the steps taken with the Ministry responsible for ENAM to introduce a training module on labour inspection in agricultural enterprises in the training programmes for student-inspectors.

Malawi

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains vague information on the application of the Convention. The report indicates in particular that a total of 1,169 labour inspections have been carried out and 1,413 visits have also been made to various workplaces. It is also indicated that approximately 40 inspectors and 46 assistant labour inspectors are distributed in every one of the 28 districts of Malawi. While taking due note of this information, the Committee notes that the Government does not reply to the Committee's previous comments. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 4(1) of the Convention. Need to re-establish a central authority entrusted with control and supervisory powers in the labour inspection system. According to the Government's vague indications in reply to the observation made by the Committee on the basis of the recommendations of an ILO technical mission which visited the country in May 2006: (1) the labour inspection system is in the process of being developed in consultation with social partners; (2) the Ministry has already started putting in place measures to come up with a labour inspection policy and set guidelines, and a meeting was held in 2009 to kick-start the process; (3) the Ministry has placed emphasis on the planning of inspections, and sweeping inspections have been carried out in the major cities, while some joint inspections with labour inspectors and safety and health inspectors have been undertaken, for example in the northern region of the country; (4) the functional review of the Ministry, under which the Inspection Services Unit is to be strengthened to enable it to set annual targets and conduct inspections in the field, is awaiting approval; and (5) the Ministry has undertaken supervisory visits to field offices and organized some training for inspectors, including those responsible for occupational safety and health with a view to developing an integrated inspection system.
