A quantum leap for gender equality: For a better future of work for all

This "culmination report" brings together the learning and insights gained in the context of the Initiative. All the findings of the Initiative indicate that, while there are many paths to addressing gender equality in the world of work, they must ultimately all unite to reinforce each other. Reaching this significant point in the journey is both rewarding and humbling. It is rewarding since today we know much more about the gender gaps in the world of work and what fuels them.

Breaking gender barriers in the world of work

The ILO has worked closely with the Bangladesh Government to help achieve gender-sensitive policy aims and to correct the many gender imbalances throughout the world of work. In 2014, the Canadian Government teamed up with the Government of Bangladesh and the ILO to fund the Bangladesh Skills for Employment and Productivity (B-SEP) Project, to reach out women of all ages – not just youth – especially in remote and marginalized areas with skills training in non-traditional (male-dominated) occupations, followed by assistance with finding jobs that rely on those skills.

Exports to jobs: Boosting the gains from trade in South Asia

The book breaks new ground by examining the impact of turning to more exports on wages, jobs, and the creation of more regular jobs in South Asia. Traditionally, economic research on the relationship between globalization and labour markets has focused on the impact of falling tariffs or rising imports. This report uses a novel way to estimate the relationship between exports and their effect on labour markets.
