Labour Statistics and Labour Market Information and Analysis in the Pacific

Pacific Island Countries (PICs) are facing a number of labour market opportunities and challenges, including employment growth and skills development, among others, in order to absorb the increasing labour force in a context of increasing poverty, international labour migration, and climate change. Reliable, timely labour statistics and labour market information and analysis (LMIA) are critical for governments and employer and worker organizations to design, implement, and monitor and evaluate national, regional and local policies and programmes to address the opportunities and challenges.

A first for the Pacific technical training course on LMIA was held in Noumea, New Caledonia (28 November - 2 December). The course is tailor-made for the Pacific on labour statistics and LMIA, and was developed by the ILO Department of Statistics with the support of ILO Offices in Bangkok and Suva, in close consultation with SPC’s Statistics for Development Programme. It’s development is based on a capacity-building needs assessment and is a outputs-oriented, participatory workshop that combines theoretical presentations, and group and country-specific practical work.

Revitalising workers organisations in Samoa

A strategic planning and capacity assessment workshop for workers representatives was held in Samoa in October. Ross Wilson, former President of the NZ Council of trade Unions facilitated the workshop which identified many issues for workers. These included workplace issues - such as the lack of support for workers facing termination of employment, discrimination or disciplinary action; and national issues - including the need to be more active and influential when it comes to influencing the reform of labour laws. With these issues in mind the workers decided to launch a support network for workers: Leo o Tagata Faigaluega - Voice of Workers. In December the ILO has sponsored the development of systems, promotional materials and a training programme for workers wishing to become advocates for Leo o Tagata Faigaluega. The International transport Workers federation (ITF) is also sponsoring a support person, Deborah Taase, to assist the network to get up and running. Membership of the network will be open to all workers. There will be a link to the launch in the next newsletter.

TACKLE Program initiated a SCREAM Camp for Street Children in Child Labour (Fiji)

The camp was conducted by local trainers from the NGO sector through the support of the ILO TACKLE staff, European Union, Youth Inc Fiji and National Youth Council of Fiji. This pioneer SCREAM camp brought together 35 young people from informal settlements around Suva city who are engaging in some form of Child Labour. These were the first ever camps organized in Fiji whereby young people came together to discuss child labour and children’s right issues in an open inclusive fun platform.

All the young people who participated highlighted that they are now more aware of their rights and have developed a concern for the exploitation of children in Fiji and around the world. They have written articles for school magazines and local publications, created works of art, developed dramas, songs, poems, journal articles and talked to friends and relatives about the issue of child labour. The participants of the SCREAM Camp have formed a network among themselves to support each other and to act as a safety need for other children who need support.

Making future development practitioner’s sensitive to child Labour issues through formal tertiary training course

Findings from the TACKLE Child Labour Surveys in Fiji and PNG, and anecdotal evidence of child labour in the Pacific region highlight the growing concern of children entering into child labour, and the need for development practitioners in the Pacific to be educated on child labour and its impacts, and on the relevant national laws governing children’s work.

The University of the South Pacific (USP), as a Pacific regional organization, provides a good avenue to equip future practitioners with a sound conceptual understanding of child labour, and enhance their practical and theoretical skills to address CL in the region. Students from over 14 countries in the Pacific region, as well as international exchange students, study at USP. The Development Studies Programme in particular at USP, has experience in child labour having led Fiji’s first research study of child labour in informal and squatter communities.

The course on Child Labour and Development was developed as a result to encourage future development practitioners to affect change, and ensure a safe and healthy childhood to all. The Child Labour and Development Course involves a blend of theory and practice, participatory teaching methodologies, panel discussions, and field work.

Through consultation with the Project Advisory Committee (PAC) which includes the tripartite partners Plus, a basic Child Labour course incorporated within the wider development issues was developed. The course was tested throughout year 2010 for its suitability within the Postgraduate programme. The course began in the 2nd Semester of 2011 and the course coordinator marketed the course at the beginning of the semester to get the minimum roll of 10 students enrolled.

ILO wants law reviewed

THE International Labour Organisation has urged the government to give priority to the review of the Employment Act. International Labour Organisation (ILO) technical adviser Caroline Scott, who facilitated a two-day review conference, encouraged the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations to be committed to the review. Scott said it was important that the review committee be made up of members who were not just experts but committed to completing it. She said experiences from the 10-year Industrial Relations Bill must be identified, considered and evaluated to successfully complete the review of the act. “Think carefully of who will be in the committee to do the work; you must be committed to finish this job,” she said. http://www.ilo.org/suva/WCMS_169337/lang--en/index.htm

Research and data

The ILO publishes research on important labour market trends and issues to inform constituents, policy-makers and the public about the realities of employment in the globalized economy and the issues facing workers and employers in developing, transition and industrialized economies. Labour statistics and data play an essential role in the efforts of member States in achieving decent work for all and for the ILO’s support of these efforts. Statistics and supporting databases are needed for the development and evaluation of effective policies and to assess progress towards the goal of achieving decent work for all. The ILO supports member States in the collection and dissemination of reliable, up-to-date, gender- and age-disaggregated labour market statistics based on international standards and definitions. More broadly, the ILO collaborates with national ministries, statistical offices and social partners in the development of Labour and Social Trends reports.
