Future of Work Briefing

Friday - 10 July
1:15pm to 2:30pm
UN Conference Room 6

Technology advancement, the organization of the work, production process and employment patterns will affect profoundly the world of work both in developed and developing economies. At same time, structural problems linked to informality, working poor, and lack of respect for fundamental labour rights persist in most countries.

To achieve the Post 2015 sustainable development objective of promoting full and productive employment and decent work for all, governments, business and social partners shall address both the traditional labour challenges and the impact of the technology transformations.

This event will update delegates on the most recent labour market trends and the future of work. It will also present the latest outcomes of the 2015 International Labour Conference, including the new ILO standard on informality.
