The decision of the ILO, its partners and judges on all matters relating to the contest is final, and no correspondence will be entered into at any stage.

In addition to ensuring that competition submissions respect the requirements in section 1.1 on Entry Criteria and section 1.4 on Intellectual Property, submissions should also be aligned with the basic ethics of journalism, as described in the ILO toolkit for journalists on Reporting on forced labour and fair recruitment and the OHCHR toolbox (as mentioned below), all submissions will be judged on the following criteria:

a) Creativity

- Displays information on the situation of migrant workers and labour migration issues in an innovative fashion;
- Presents creative solutions to overcome labour protection and labour market integration challenges;
- Ensure multi-dimensional stories, including aspects around migrant workers' interaction with their local communities (friends, neighbours, colleagues, employers, family etc.) and other stories that serve to humanize them and not reduce them to their condition of migrant.

b) Accuracy:

- Gathers material using first hand sources and/or second hand sources that are properly referenced;
- Portrays a balanced reporting giving due consideration to the different points of view of the stakeholders concerned;
- Includes an English, French or Spanish translation which must be faithful to the original meaning if parts, or all, of the submitted entry are in another language;

Helps combat stereotypes, xenophobia or discrimination in the labour market through the use of terminology which conforms to the correct standards and values and by avoiding to report based on stereotypes.

c) Protection and non-discrimination:

- Protects individuals or groups in vulnerable situations, sources and other sensitive components of the story by not providing unnecessary information that could risk harming them (including visual identities, names, locations etc.);
- Media pieces should be non-discriminatory and/or promote non-discrimination.
- Uses a rights-based terminology;
 - Entries should be using non-discriminatory and non-stigmatizing terminology. For example, rather than referring to the term "illegal migration" or "illegal migrant," entries should rather use the following terms: "non-documented migrant workers", "migrant workers in an irregular situation", or "migrants in an irregular situation";
 - The Media Friendly Glossary, which is an annex of the above mentioned ILO toolkit for journalists, provides a list of rights-based terminologies and language that the UN supports.

d) Benefits of well-governed and safe labour migration:

- Highlights the benefits of well-governed and safe labour migration, including fair recruitment and/or raises awareness of the risks and dangers of irregular, unsafe and/or badly governed labour migration, including recruitment.
- Portrays migrants' contribution to the social and economic development of countries of origin and destination (e.g. filling labour and skills needs at all skill levels, contributing to the sustainability of social security systems, expanding the exchange of knowledge, technology, skills and commercial ties, and contributing to job creation as consumers of goods and services and tax payers, but also as micro-enterprise entrepreneurs) without overlooking the negative aspects of the labour market situation of migrant workers (e.g. often a hard reality of abuses, exploitation and violation of human and labour rights).
- Sheds light on success stories and positive practices, presenting, as much as possible the positive results of fair labour migration governance (e.g. fostering ILO standards, equality of treatment and non-discrimination principles, as well as labour market integration, recognition of skills, and labour protection of all migrant workers and their family members);

- Promotes positive aspects of labour migration or helps correct negative impressions and misperceptions on labour migration.
- Portrays fair recruitment as an important element of the commitment by the international community to reduce labour migration costs and prevent decent work deficits.

These criteria apply in particular to the following issues and thematic areas of labour migration:

- The focus could be on various aspects of decent work such as fundamental principles and rights at work, including freedom of association of migrant workers and their protection against discrimination, racism and xenophobia, social protection including health protection for migrant workers, their working conditions (particularly their wages, working time and occupational safety and health). The situation of migrant workers in an irregular situation and/or those working in the informal economy could also be a focus.
- How international recruitment practices impact migrant workers' lives, their effective enjoyment of decent work as well as their exposure to risks related to exploitation and abuse, gender-based violence, child and forced labour and trafficking in persons, and/or how labour recruitment across international borders, when properly regulated and governed can improve skills and job matching both in origin and destination countries and the effective functioning of labour markets.
- Illustrate how COVID-19 and other crisis affect international recruitment practices and migrant workers' lives, their effective enjoyment of decent work, without discrimination, including adequate working conditions, payment of wages, repatriation support and access to health care and social protection, as well as their exposure to risks related to exploitation and abuse, gender-based violence, child and forced labour and trafficking in persons.
- Show examples of: recovery measures; lessons learned; positive contributions of migrant workers during the pandemic, such as migrant care or health workers.
- Illustrate how labour recruitment across international borders when properly regulated and governed can improve skills and job matching both in origin and destination countries and the effective functioning of labour markets.
