

Building Prevention Culture Among Young People

Steve Horvath, President & CEO

Phone: (905) 570-8094

E-mail: steve.horvath@ccohs.ca

Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety

XXXXXXXXXX

www.ccohs.ca

Young Workers + Prevention Culture

What We Thought We Knew

- Past Challenge:
Integrating safety into the educational system
- Current Challenge:
Applying the knowledge they have learned in school within the work environment

Applying the Knowledge Learned

- They are focused on the present day
- “In the moment” training
- Learning from each other by sharing information using their own channels
- Discussion, interaction, share ability – that’s how they learn

A poster titled "Workers in Canada have Three Basic Rights" with a sunflower background and a large green question mark. The poster is divided into three sections, each describing a basic right of workers in Canada. The top section is titled "Right to Know", the middle "Right to Participate", and the bottom "Right to Refuse". The poster also includes the text "Know your rights" in a stylized font at the bottom left.

Workers in Canada have Three Basic Rights

Right to Know
You have a right to know what hazards are present in the workplace, and be given the information, training, and supervision you need to protect yourself.

Right to Participate
You have a right to participate in keeping your workplace healthy and safe, which may include selecting or being a health and safety representative or committee member. You also have a right to report unsafe conditions and practices.

Right to Refuse
You can refuse work that you believe to be dangerous to yourself or your co-workers. When you exercise your right to refuse work, you must follow the proper procedure.

Know your rights

Final Thoughts

Thank You

www.ccohs.ca

Steve Horvath
President & CEO
CCOHS

1-800-668-4284

Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety

XXXXXXXXXX

www.ccohs.ca