

FOURTH ITEM ON THE AGENDA

Possible groups of standards

1. At its 280th Session (March 2001), in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Legal Issues and International Labour Standards, the Governing Body invited the Office to prepare documentation which would enable the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards to examine the question of groups of instruments at its present meeting.¹ A list of possible groups of Conventions and Recommendations relating to particular subject areas is accordingly attached in the appendix. It includes indications as to the status of the instruments concerned, as a result of the work of the Working Party.
2. The request by the Governing Body follows on from a proposal that requests for reports on the application of Conventions submitted by member States under article 22 of the Constitution might be based on groups of Conventions.² The purpose of that proposal was to make the preparation and processing of these reports more efficient. It may be recalled that the concept of groups of standards divided by strategic objectives had been brought up for the first time in the context of the discussion on the implementation of an integrated approach to standards-related activities. During that discussion, the term “families” of standards had been used.³
3. However, in the light of recent consultations with constituents on the question of possible improvements to standards-related activities, it appears that the purpose and usefulness of grouping standards on the basis of strategic objectives needs to be specified and delimited. Firstly, this grouping provides a certain frame of reference for the organization of work within the Office in the area of standards-related activities. From the administrative point of view, it would help to provide an overview of the responsibilities in this area with regard to each of the four main sectors which were established when the Office was restructured to correspond to the four strategic objectives (fundamental principles and rights at work, employment, social protection and social dialogue). Nevertheless, a fifth section, entitled “specific categories of workers”, according to standard terminology, has been added for the sake of coherence. The subject areas covered in this section share the trait that, for operational purposes, they fall under the responsibility of only one sector, namely, the social dialogue sector,⁴ even though they relate to different strategic objectives.

4. The grouping set out in the appendix thus serves a practical purpose. It is self-evident that this grouping can exist in parallel with other groupings of standards, which serve different purposes. Furthermore, this grouping is far from being fixed. On the contrary, it can evolve at any time in the light of modifications in the division of responsibilities between the different sectors, and adjustments are always possible if they appear to be necessary and reasonable. Lastly, the distribution between the four strategic objectives does not mean that there is a sharp dividing line between standards grouped under each of these objectives, or indeed between the groups; clearly, most standards contribute to the realization of more than one objective at the same time, and some instruments could be placed in more than one group.
5. With regard to the regular reporting system, the attached list could eventually provide a basis for distributing as evenly as possible within the relevant cycle the groups of Conventions on which reports would be requested each year.⁵ As regards the integrated approach mentioned above, it must be noted that the group of standards to be examined should not be predetermined. This will depend on the subject chosen by the Governing Body for inclusion on the Conference agenda. In this respect, the usefulness of the attached list of groups of standards is that it can indicate how a given subject area is situated with regard to the strategic objectives and, from the point of view of internal administration, which sectors would be chiefly involved in the exercise.

Geneva, 16 October 2001.

⁴ Except for standards relating to workers in non-metropolitan territories. For the sake of simplicity and because they relate to different objectives, it was decided that they too should be grouped in this section under one subject area.
