Training of Trainers: Start your business for social entrepreneurs

About the Start Your Business for Social Entrepreneurs programme

This training programme consists of a set of interrelated training packages for emerging and existing social entrepreneurs with limited or no previous exposure to small business management training. It enables potential and existing entrepreneurs to identify social business ideas and develop a business plan for implementing the selected social business idea. The product range for social entrepreneurs covers the Generate Your Social Business Idea (GYSBI) and Start Your Business for Social Entrepreneurs (SYBSE) training programmes.

Background

In its endeavours to develop and support social businesses and to sustain the social economy, the ILO have developed a range of capacity-building programmes including Generate Your Social Business Idea (GYSBI) and Start Your Business for Social Entrepreneurs (SYBSE)

The universal challenges including - unemployment, exclusion, inequality, poverty and environmental changes has made it obligatory to rethink the way we do business. An outcome of this new paradigm has been the emergence of social enterprises - businesses with primarily social objectives – as part of a growing “social economy” that also includes the economic activities of cooperatives, community and voluntary organizations. Cooperatives, including mutual societies in the insurance and finance sectors, are estimated to employ over 100 million people around the world. In the European Union, about 10% of companies and 6% of total employment are estimated to be within the social economy. In addition, the social economy is a significant player not only in terms of jobs and GDP, but also in providing other social and societal benefits. It often provides stable local jobs as well as an opportunity to reintegrate vulnerable groups into society and into the world of work as well as being a means to address societal challenges through entrepreneurial solutions. The ILO thus aims to develop an international community of practice by offering this Training of Trainers programme to eligible Social

Business Development Practitioners.
