OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Current and future skills, human resources development and safety training for contractors in the oil and gas industry

Many workers in the oil and gas industry are employed through specialized services companies, and accidents are more prevalent for contract workers than for regular company employees. Safety training should focus on supporting preventive action and finding practical solutions. The ILO Guidelines on occupational safety and health management systems (ILO-OSH 2001) is an important instrument

APPLICATION OF STANDARDS

Conference Committee on the Application of Standards: extracts from the record of proceedings

The report of the Conference Committee is submitted for discussion by the Conference in plenary and is then published in the Record of Proceedings. Since 2007, with a view to improving the visibility of its work and in response to the wishes expressed by ILO constituents, it has been decided to produce a separate publication in a more attractive format bringing together the usual three parts of the work of the Conference Committee.

DECENT WORK

Decent work country profile: the Philippines

The Decent Work Country Profile for the Philippines aims to provide information on all the elements of decent work in the country by analyzing statistical and legal indicators within the framework of national labour and social policies, over the period 1995-2010 (depending on data availability). The purpose of the document is to give baseline information on the state of decent work in the Philippines, the progress made in decent work, and highlight the gaps that still remain, in both decent and its measurement.
