Women in business and management: The business case for change

The report offers new insights into how gender diversity at the top improves organizational performance. These include how the many dimensions of an organization's policies, a gender-balanced workforce and a gender-inclusive culture, among other factors, move the needle for more women to hold decision-making power.

Work improvement for safe home: Action manual for improving safety and health of e-waste workers

The manual aims to assist e-waste workers in improving their safety, health, and working conditions. The manual shows many low-cost ideas that e-waste workers can easily adopt by using locally-available materials. The ideas are also useful for improving productivity and efficiency at their e-waste workplaces and can support the growth and sustainability of their businesses.

Practical guide: Managing industrial relations in the Workplace - Guidelines for middle level management

The Manpower Act No.13 of 2003 provides the legal basis for the industrial relations system in the company. It is important that the middle management whose normally the facilitator between the top management employers and the workers/trade union has good understanding about the laws and regulations as well as ensure good communication and relations at the workplace level. Ability to manage industrial relations can create an atmosphere of trust, promote participation and encourage consensus in enterprise level decision-making.

Future of work in Sri Lanka: Shaping technology transitions for a brighter future

The World of Work is undergoing a major transformation. The interaction of several complex drivers — technological advancements, demographic transitions, shifting political cultures and changing patterns of employment and production, among others — are heralding profound, and unprecedented changes for the way people work and live. Most scholarly attention and public anxiety has been focused on the impact of the so-called Fourth Industrial Revolution (4IR), which typically refers to a cluster of digitally-driven technologies such as artificial intelligence, intelligent automation and robotics, among others, in the world of work.
