Background

In the past few years, labour mobilisation has been rapidly increased, especially when the economic opportunity is wide open under ASEAN Economic Community (AEC) since 2015. In fact, the total stock of migrant workers that have been moved between countries within the region is nearly 6.9 million in the ASEAN.\(^1\) In purpose to assure the protection of the rights of migrants workers, the ASEAN governments shall provide decent programme not only within the “pre-departure”, “during employment” and “post-departure” stages, but also they need to develop a protection programme in “return or reintegration” stage. Reintegration programme can be also considered as part of protection and promotion of the rights of migrant workers in the said stage.

In many cases, migrant workers are found to face both social and economic challenges after returning to their home country. Under this circumstance, they often ended up deciding to be reemployed as migrant workers. This situation commonly happened because they don’t have entrepreneurship skills and could not manage their financial they earned overseas, even some of returned migrant workers not posses any venture capital to start business.

Therefore, the implementation of reintegration programme for returned migrant workers aims to ensure that those migrant workers are able to secure their social and economic condition in their home country not only for themselves but also their families. This programme is designed to encourage and support migrant workers to well-sustain their living independently upon their returning.

Problematic cases also arise from returning migrant workers which were sent abroad by irregular procedures. Most of these workers return to their home countries with problem, even though workers that is sent abroad by regular procedure can also bring problems upon returning. So that reintegration programme should also cover not only for sustainability of the economy of the returning migrant workers but also intended to provide social assistance and health counseling for unlucky workers who need those kind of services.

In addition, the programme will serve the commitments of ASEAN as enshrined in the articles 13, 16 and 26 of the ASEAN Consensus on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights of Migrant Workers where the Sending State will develop a comprehensive reintegration programme for returned migrant workers and their families as well as an employment program for returned migrant workers taking into account their skills obtained overseas.

Through The ASEAN Compendium on Migrant Workers’ Education and Safe Migration Programme, AMS have share the existing safe migration programme for migrant workers. In relevant to this project, the programme of “Return and Reintegration” will be
