At Work in Africa

Despite encouraging levels of economic growth, much of Africa continues to face persistent challenges of under- and unemployment, particularly amongst its burgeoning youth population, as well as high incidences of informality and challenges posed by lack of peace and security. Economic growth on its own, if concentrated in the hands of a few, or in an enclave economy, can be detrimental to a nation and may perpetuate insecurities or hinder development in post-conflict countries. The panel will discuss policies aimed at translating sustained economic growth with broad-based and job-rich outcomes to generate inclusive sustainable development. The African Union's transformative Agenda 2063 envisions that African economies will create shared growth, decent jobs and economic opportunities for all. Moreover, the Common African Position (CAP) on post-2015 development agenda which was adopted by African Heads of States and Governments reiterates that, "the post-2015 development agenda process should galvanize political will and international commitment for a universal development agenda, focused on the eradication of poverty and exclusion as well as the pursuit of sustainable inclusive development.

DAY 3 (Wednesday, 1 April)

10:00 – 11:30

Finding the Opportunities: Matching Education and Skills to Market Demands

This panel will focus on building innovation and competitiveness through targeted interventions and active labour market policies, particularly in the areas of entrepreneurship, apprenticeships and skills development. The session will explore why youth unemployment remains a major problem regardless of the level of development in a country. The session will also consider the implications of new technologies, in particular in the field of ICTs, on education, skills and training. The session will highlight practical solutions for addressing multiple development challenges by investing in women and youth as a fundamental business and economic growth strategy. It will also discuss effective ways for linking entrepreneurs to global supply chains.

General Debate

13:15 – 14:45

Side events

Organized by Member States, UN system, and civil society

15:00 – 16:15

Means of Implementation: Financing for Development and Partnerships for Decent Work

This session will address the relationship between fiscal policy, ODA and national development strategies. In many low income countries, limited resources require trade-offs in investment decisions. Since employment drives earnings and thus spurs demand, where could investments be targeted to generate the greatest jobs potential? How can revenue from natural resources be effectively leveraged to deliver maximum development impact to all? The panel will emphasize the importance of political will and showcase conducive national planning strategies which encompass the three pillars of sustainable development and the creation of decent work.
