

► About the authors

Sukti Dasgupta is Chief, Employment and Labour Markets Branch with the ILO Office in Geneva. She previously worked in the ILO Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific in Bangkok and in the field offices in South Asia and East Asia. She holds a PhD in Economics from the University of Cambridge in the United Kingdom. She has published widely in the areas of employment, poverty and gender. She has extensive experience working with policy-makers on employment and labour market policies.

Juan Chacaltana is Senior Employment Policies Specialist with the ILO. He previously worked as Regional Economist with the ILO Regional Office for Latin America and the Caribbean and as Employment Specialist with the ILO Office for the Andean Countries. He also was the head of the ILO Formalization Programme for Latin America and the Caribbean and Head of the Interagency United Nations MDG Programme on Youth, Employment and Migration, with the participation of the ILO, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund and the International Organization for Migration in Peru. His most recent book is Políticas de Formalización en América Latina: Avances y Desafíos, co-edited with Jose Manuel Salazar-Xirinachs. He holds a PhD in Economics from the Catholic University of Peru and a Master of Science in Economics degree from Texas A&M University in the United States.

Azita Berar Awad is the former Director of the ILO Employment Policy Department and facilitator of the 2012 International Labour Conference discussion on the Resolution concerning the youth employment crisis: A call for action and initiator of the Global Initiative on Decent Jobs for Youth, which was adopted by the United Nations Chief Executive Board and launched in 2016 under the aegis of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

Sara Elder is the Senior Economist and Head of the Regional Economic and Social Analysis Unit in the Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific in Bangkok. She previously spent five years as Chief Technical Advisor on the ILO Work4Youth Project and more than ten years working in the area of labour market information and analysis in the Employment Trends Unit. She has written extensively on issues of labour market transitions of young people and labour market and employment trends.

Sriani Ameratunga Kring is a gender and employment policies specialist. She worked with the ILO for 15 years on informal economy, gender and employment, youth employment and migration issues before becoming an international consultant (seven years ago) in related fields. She has published a variety of reports, including on the future of work for women in Asia and the Pacific.

Luis Pinedo Caro is a labour economist, consultant and former ILO official. He holds a PhD in Economics from the University of Southampton and has several years of experience working on employment-related fields, such as global supply chains, the gig economy and the role of internships in promoting young people's employability. He recently developed an observatory on Syrian refugees in Turkey and has written a report on their living and working conditions.

Niall O'Higgins is a Senior Economist in the ILO Analysis Unit and Professor of Economics at the University of Salerno. He holds degrees from Trinity College Dublin, York University and Sheffield University and a PhD in Economics from the European University Institute in Florence, Italy. His research interests cover various aspects of labour and experimental economics. He is one of the main authors of the ILO biennial Global Employment Trends for Youth and is co-editing a book on internship. Other recent publications include a book on youth employment policy and papers in the European Economic Review, Cambridge Journal of Economics and B.E. Journal of Economic Analysis and Policy.

Janine Berg is a Senior Economist with the ILO in Geneva, where she conducts research on the economic effects of labour laws and provides technical assistance to ILO constituents on policies for generating jobs and improving working conditions. She is the author of several books and numerous articles on employment and labour market institutions and was the lead author of the recent ILO report Non-standard Employment Around the World: Understanding Challenges, Shaping Prospects. She received her PhD in Economics from the New School for Social Research in New York in the United States.

Maria Luz Vega Ruiz is a Senior Adviser for the ILO Research Department. Prior to joining the ILO in 1989 as an associate expert in labour law and labour legislation in Geneva, she worked as a labour and social security inspector with the Ministry of Labour and Social Security in her native Spain. She has a Diplome d'Etudes Superieures en Droit du Travail from the University of Geneva. In 2015–16, she worked as a Special Adviser for the Regional Office for Europe and Central Asia; in 2016–19 she was the Coordinator for the Future of Work Initiative. She has published more than 40 publications. Her main areas of competence are labour law, industrial relations, human rights, labour administration, labour inspection, occupational safety and health, international labour standards and the future of work.

Marcelo Cuautle Segovia is a Youth Employment Officer with the ILO Employment and Labour Markets Branch in Geneva. He joined the ILO in 2012 and has experience in labour market topics, including youth employment strategies, national employment policies and skills development. He coursed a Bachelor of Economics degree from the Autonomous University of Puebla in Mexico, completed a Civil Society Studies programme at the University of Texas at Austin in the United States and holds a Master of Science in Development and International Cooperation degree from the Institute of Political Studies in France.

Mariana Costa Checa is the co-founder and CEO at Laboratoria, an organization enabling people to develop the skills they need to work and thrive in the digital economy. With learning centres across Latin America, Laboratoria is working to build a more diverse, inclusive and competitive digital economy in the region that can create opportunities for all people. She has received multiple recognitions for her work as a social entrepreneur, including being named one of Peru's leading innovators by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the United States and one the world's most influential women by the BBC. She holds a Bachelor of Science in International Relations degree from the London School of Economics and a Master of Science in Public Administration degree from Columbia University in New York.

Felix Weidenkaff is an Employment Specialist with the ILO Decent Work Technical Support Team for Eastern and South-Eastern Asia and the Pacific. Previously, he worked in the ILO Employment Policy Department in Geneva, leading research, capacity-building and advisory services on evidence-based policymaking and programming and active labour market policies as well as partnerships for youth employment. Prior to joining the ILO in 2012, he worked in the Division on Investment and Enterprise of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. He holds a Master of Science in Development Studies from the London School of Economics and Political Science.

Marc Witte is a labour and development economist working at IZA Bonn. His work focuses on how social networks influence the labour market, in particular through job search and the hiring process. He has conducted several large-scale field experiments in Ethiopia and spent more than a year in Addis Ababa during and after his PhD research, which won the Best Paper Award at the Royal Economic Society Symposium of Junior Researchers in 2018. He received his PhD in Economics from the Department of Economics and the Centre for the Study of African Economies, University of Oxford. Before joining IZA Bonn, he spent one year at New York University in Abu Dhabi.

Florence Bonnet is a Labour Market and Informal Economy Specialist in the ILO WORKQUALITY Department in Geneva. Her work centres on improving working and living conditions in the informal economy, linking quantitative and qualitative methods to policies (including national diagnoses and international trends). Since 2016, her work has focused on the transition to formality. Previously she was responsible for statistics and monitoring and supporting the process of social protection extension in the ILO Social Protection Department (2006–14) and overseeing informal economy and social protection issues as part of the Research Department (2014–16).

Vicky Leung is an Informal Economy Officer in the Development and Investment Branch of the ILO Employment Policy Department in Geneva. Since joining the ILO in 2010, her work has focused on the transition to formality, especially on the use of digital technologies and youth, employment promotion and poverty reduction. She previously worked in the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in Geneva and the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Bernd Mueller is an Employment Specialist with the ILO Decent Work Team for Eastern and Southern Africa. He provides technical guidance and support to the Organization's members and constituents on designing and implementing employment creation policies and initiatives. He also is the ILO Regional Coordinating Specialist on employment matters in Africa. Before joining the ILO, he was a Rural Employment Specialist with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations